Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Assuming that an author by further research has come to the conclusion that he does not care to have a certain edition republished, can he be protected against the republishing of such edition?

Mr. DOHERTY: We have already moved an amendment to provide that the second edition or subsequent editions shall not be published without the consent of the author.

Section agreed to.

On section 14—license to publish books in serial form.

Mr. HOCKEN: This clause nullifies what has been done in the preceding clause. It reads:

> If the publication of a book is lawfully begun as a serial elsewhere than in His Majesty's Dominions or in a foreign country to which section 4 of this Act applies, and the owner of the copyright has refused to grant a license to any person—

That is to say, the author may start printing the book as a serial in the United States or in Great Britain; then there will be no right for any publisher in Canada to get a license to print the book, and what we have done in the preceding clause, we are undoing with these words. What should be done is to make the clause read in this way:

> If the publication of a book is lawfully begun as a serial elsewhere than in Canada—

And strike out the words: "His Majesty's Dominions or a foreign country to which section 4 of this Act applies." Then the two clauses would harmonize. If you are going to be consistent, the words that I have mentioned ought to be struck out. I would like to know what the minister says about the matter.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am disposed to think there would be no objection to accepting the suggestion of the hon. member. Of course, I am frank enough to say that what we have in contemplation in the Bill is to make a distinction between countries which come into the Copyright Union and those which do not. The clause as it reads is following on that general line of action. On the other hand, I quite realize that it is, perhaps, fair that where a work is published as a serial, say in England, there should be a possibility of a paper in this country publishing it. I am trying to think what ground of objection there could be. I do not know to what extent this Bill will expose us to difficulty in Great Britain. As I pointed out earlier in the treatment of this matter, it is important that we should make such a law as in Great Britain will be found to give British authors as full protection as their law gives us. I do not know whether this would afford ground for the suggestion that we are not giving them as full protection as they give us, because I do not think they have any licensing system at all, and their author under their system is interfered with in no way by any right recognized in the publisher. I feel so strongly that the thing is unobjectionable that I would have no objection to accepting the amendment, and in the event of further consideration revealing any objection to it, I will speak to the hon. gentleman and the matter might, perhaps, be adjusted in the Senate. In the meantime I will accept the amendment. I beg to move to amend subsection (1) of section 14 by striking out these words in the second and third lines of the section: "His Majesty's Dominions or a foreign country to which section 4 of this Act applies," and by substituting therefor the word "Canada."

Mr. EULER: Should the deleted clause not begin with the word "elsewhere"? It is the word "elsewhere" that makes all the trouble.

Mr. DOHERTY: The clause as amended will read "elsewhere than in Canada." If a book is started as a serial in Canada, I do not understand the suggestion to be that there should be a license.

Mr. MOWAT: Has the minister appreciated the trouble we may have in having this Bill accepted by Great Britain? We shall have to have their concurrence in joining the Berne Convention, which is the protection, all over the civilized world, of authors. May not the minister by striking out these words and making the provision apply everywhere, foster a feeling of opposition which may give us great difficulty in dealing with the British Government? My recollection is that that was in our minds when we drew the clause in this way. What we endeavoured to protect a serial magazine man from was this: The United States is the place to which the Canadian author will go, and at times he is not able to publish his work in a Canadian magazine, because when he asks the American magazine publisher for the right to publish in Canada he is met with a somewhat curt refusal. The American Magazine publisher will say to him: Our magazine is published in Canada, and I will not give you those rights. The Canadian magazine publisher, who has been striving for years to build up a good business and to give Canada as good a magazine as can be got elsewhere, feels that it is a great hardship that he is not able on fair terms to the author to get a license to publish these articles. The magazine men feel very keenly over this. One magazine after another in Canada has gone into bankruptcy simply because the publishers could not get past this impediment put in their way—and no doubt quite properly from the point of view of business—by the American publishers. That was the idea underlying this clause, and I would ask the minister to hesitate before he extends it to Great Britain.

Mr. HOCKEN: All I have in mind is that we should not allow the publication of a book as a serial in the United States publication to prevent a license being issued in the Dominion of Canada. The minister assures me that the clause as it stands has that effect, and upon his assurance, therefore, I remove my objection to the clause. I did not desire to do anything more than provide that a man cannot write a book and start it as a serial in the United States in order to escape the licensing clauses of his Act, and on the minister's assurance that that point is covered, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. DOHERTY: There can be no doubt that that is the effect. I said that there was a reason which I could not think of at the moment, and it is the provision in the Berne Convention that serial stories published in the newspapers or periodicals of one of the countries belonging to the Union may not be reproduced in the other countries without the consent of the author. I move for leave to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. EULER: I was quite in agreement with the minister when he made his amendment, although there was a little misunderstanding as to just which words were being withdrawn and which inserted. If the clause remains as it is in the Bill you will be violating a principle with regard to the serial printing of a story that you observe in the case of the completed book. My understanding of a principle that was to be observed in this Bill was this: that where a Canadian author prints his work in book form in the United States it should become possible for a Canadian publisher to obtain a license to print that book in Canada. I think that is correct, and if that is correct with regard to the story in book form, is it not intended that the same principle shall apply to the book when printed in serial form? It seems to me that the wording of the section prevents that. It says:

> If the publication of a book is lawfully begun as a serial elsewhere than in His Majesty's Dominions or a foreign country to which section four of this Act applies.

I would think that section 4 will conceivably apply to the United States when it joins the Berne Convention. If so, the United States will be exempted entirely from this provision and the Canadian publisher will not be able to get a license.

Mr. DOHERTY: When the United States joins the Berne Convention—up to the present time she has not done so, and she has given no indication of doing so—she would come under this express provision of the Berne Convention, which escaped my mind at the time I proposed the amendment:

> Serial stories, tales and all other works, whether literary scientific or artistic, whatever their object, published in the newspapers or periodicals of one of the countries of the Union may not be reproduced in the other countries without the consent of the author.

Now when the United States, if she ever does, comes into the Berne Convention she will come under that provision. But we are legislating, of course, for the existing condition of affairs, and as things stand today, this clause we are considering has the effect precisely of enabling licenses for serial stories to issue in Canada where a story is published as a serial in the United States. It would also be true of any other country not in the Union, but I think for practical purposes the country we are interested in is the United States; it would hardly be desirable to insert any particular country, but we get a practical result by saying "elsewhere than in countries that belong to the Union."

Mr. EULER: Does the minister then state that this disability on the part of the American publisher will disappear if the United States joins the Berne Convention? If the United States joins the Berne Convention, will or will it not then be possible for the Canadian publisher to publish in serial form under license the work of a Canadian author which has been published in that form in the United States?

Mr. DOHERTY: If the United States should join the convention, then it will be for us to consider what legislation we ought to make in view of the altered conditions. If that should happen, and we want to continue this privilege, we will have to consider whether we had not better legislate to continue it even though that country has come into the Union. That will involve our considering what we then ought to do about adhering to the convention. But we are making a law now to meet the conditions that exist at present, and as conditions now exist, this gives to our publishers the right to obtain a license to publish these things as serial stories where they are published as serial stories in the United States. No doubt there will be a different situation if the United States changes its position and we will then have to consider what we ought to do about it.

Mr. EULER: Does the discrimination remain as against the Canadian publisher as compared with the British publisher or publishers in other parts of His Majesty's Dominions merely because of the fact that they belong to the Berne Convention?

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not know that we analysed just what was the reason why, but the fact is that they do belong to the Berne Convention, and the fact is with regard to all countries belonging to the Berne Convention, if they wish to adhere to it, that we cannot enact this legislation as applicable to them. The same reason applies to Great Britain and the dominions as applies to all other countries who are in the Berne Convention, and therefore it was not necessary for us to consider whether there was any additional reason why we should do it with regard to the British dominions.

Mr. EULER: Is it true that under the Berne Convention there is a distinction with regard to the publication of books printed as a whole, and those printed merely as serials.

Mr. DOHERTY: There is an express provision that serials shall not be reproduced without the consent of the author.

Mr. EULER: That does not apply to books?

Mr. DOHERTY: There is no such express provision with regard to books.

Amendment withdrawn.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Is it intended to make the language of this section conform to the amendment which has already been agreed to by the committee with regard to section 13? Perhaps it is worth while to adopt the same language as that already added to section 13, to provide that the license may, in the discretion of the minister, be granted to any person in Canada.

The CHAIRMAN: Sir Robert Borden moves to amend section 14 by inserting after the word "may," in the forty-first line—

[Mr. Doherty.]

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I do not move an amendment, Mr. Chairman, because I am not sufficiently familiar with the Bill as a whole to judge whether this should be done. I am merely making the suggestion to the minister.

Mr. DOHERTY: As I understand it, whether we confer the discretion or not, the minister would be expected, unless there were substantial reasons to the contrary, to grant the license where all the conditions were fulfilled. However, I do not see any objection to giving him discretion in the matter. I move, first, that subsection 2 be amended by striking out the word "shall" in the first line, and substituting the words "may, in his discretion."

Amendment agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: It will also be necessary to move the amendment suggested by the right hon. member for King's (Sir Robert Borden), with regard to subsection 1, to conform with the amendment just proposed.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think so.

The CHAIRMAN: Sir Robert Borden moves to amend section 14, subsection 1, by inserting after the word "may," in the forty-first line, the words "in the discretion of the minister."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 47—Acts of United Kingdom.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): What Acts of the United Kingdom are in force in Canada with regard to copyright?

Mr. DOHERTY: The Act of 1842 and the Act of 1886 are both in force in this country, predominantly over our legislation where they differ from our Act of 1889.

Section agreed to.

On section 49—Adherence to Convention of Berne.

Mr. RINFRET: If sections 13, 14, and 15 do not conform to the Berne Convention, I should like the minister to state that the Government will rather abandon those sections than fail to adhere to the convention.

Mr. DOHERTY: If those sections are at variance with the convention, we shall have to come back to the House, because the law of this country would put the Government in a position where it could not consistently adhere to the convention, and we should have to decide the question then. After the best examination I have been able to give to the matter myself, I am disposed to believe that there is nothing inconsistent with the convention of Berne in these sections. There is no question of formalities at all. I may say in confirmation of that, that I had the question put—not directly myself but through a gentleman in this country who was very much interested in the copyright question, and entirely from the author's point of view—to those who are in charge of the bureau in connection with the convention, and I am in possession of a very interesting letter, which I will be pleased to communicate to the hon. gentleman, in which the opinion is expressed—not because the writer is enthusiastic for these clauses but because he thinks it is so—that whereas a clause which was in the Bill as originally introduced and which required the filing of a declaration, which clause has disappeared, would be a violation of the provision that there must be no formality, that these licensing clauses are not a violation of that provision. In any event the proper time to consider and decide upon the course to be adopted should these clauses be considered a violation of the convention, will be when, if ever, the objection is raised by some other party to the convention. I may add that though it does not go so far, the British Copyright Act provides for the issuing of a license in one case, and if it may be done in one case, why the principle is the same. It is provided by section 12 of our own Act, which is copied from the British Act, that at any time after the death of the author if the owner of the copyright does not republish or allow republication, a license may be ordered to be granted to other people to do it. The principle is conceded there and nobody has ever questioned that the British legislation was in conformity with the convention.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Before we pass section 49 I wish to ask a question in regard to the convention of Berne. I understand that the convention of Berne establishes a bureau, such as the postal convention established, an international bureau under the direction of the Swiss Government. As the convention of Berne has already been revised and as the status of Canada has been somewhat altered, are we to understand that in any future convention to be convened at Berne that Canada shall be represented as Canada or shall we be represented through His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the Emperor of India? Furthermore in the conventions which are held, according to the regulations made or provided for in the instrument, will Canada be officially invited to those meetings at Berne as she is invited to the postal convention?

Mr. DOHERTY: The question the hon. gentleman puts to me I am not in a position, perhaps, to answer very positively at the moment. It is to be borne in mind that the convention we are now dealing with is a convention that was passed in 1908. The form in which the stipulation is made there is very different from the method in which more recent treaties have been entered into. The convention at that time was entered into without any special reference to Canada and it contains a provision that contracting countries shall have the right to adhere to the convention at any time for their colonies or foreign possessions.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What number is that?

Mr. DOHERTY: Section 26, page 32. I do not think the particular form in which the convention would be executed will necessarily be governed by that particular provision. I presume that "His Majesty would adhere in behalf of Canada" in whatever form would be thought proper; and I would be disposed to think in view of the recent practice introduced and carried out now in quite a few cases we would have an adherence by His Majesty on behalf of Canada that would put us in the position of being one of the countries members of the union. However, I would have to look into that question a little to see how it should be worked out to attain that end before giving a positive answer.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Before the Bill passes I want to enter my protest against the enactment of clauses 13, 14 and 15. I regard them as an unjustifiable interference with the rights of the Canadian authors. At the present time the Canadian author has a right to copyright in Canada and the United States. He has a right to go to the American publisher and say "I have copyrighted this book or serial in Canada and no one can publish it without my consent" and he is able to sell the right to publish in the United States for the best price he can get. This right we are taking away from the author. He can no longer go to an American published and say "I can give you the sole right to publish this serial or this book," because he is up against this statute which enables some one in Canada to come in and interfere with that right and to publish such book or such serial and sell it not only in Canada but also in the United States. My hon. friend from Parkdale (Mr. Mowat) has said the Canadian magazine publishers are now put to considerable inconvenience because they cannot secure the author's consent. But does not the right of publication belong to the author? We will say that my hon. friend has a gold watch and that I have not got any and it is inconvenient for me and I would like to have his watch. If I ask for a license to go and take his watch from him my hon. friend would protest very strongly. I think the foundations on which this legislation is based are unjust and I desire to go on record as opposed to it.

Mr. MOWAT: If the law was that I should not carry a gold watch unless I gave inquirers the time, then it would be fair to say that my hon. friend from Guysborough would have the right to ask me the time. It is a sort of compromise. Copyright exists only by statute, and if we pass such a statute then we have the right to say, "Now, as a reasonable compromise in view of your getting that copyright you are not to take away the rights enjoyed by other citizens."

Mr. LEMIEUX: My right hon. friend will notice that Article 1 of the revised Berne Convention reads:

> The contracting States are constituted into a Union for the protection of the rights of authors over their literary and artistic works.

Then Article XX provides:

> The Governments of the countries of the Union reserve to themselves the right to enter into special arrangements between each other, provided always that such arrangements confer upon authors more extended rights than those granted by the Union, or embody other stipulations not contrary to the present Convention. The provisions of existing arrangements which answer to the above-mentioned conditions shall remain applicable.

I should like to know if there are special privileges which the adhering nations' colonies or dominions will not have.

Mr. DOHERTY: I would not so understand it. The present parties make a Convention and stipulate certain rights and obligations for the members of this Union, and among other things they stipulate that the contracting countries shall have the right to accede to the present Convention at any time for their colonies or possessions. That implies, in the first place, that the accession of the countries mentioned (the contracting parties), does not necessarily involve their colonies at all, and it provides for a method by which those colonies, so treated distinctly from what may be called the mother countries, may adhere to the Convention. I would understand that when any country adheres to that Convention it adds itself to the list of parties who have made the Convention, and that therefore it would form a member of the Union which these original adherents had formed.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What is the meaning of "reserve to themselves" in Article XX?

Mr. DOHERTY: The governments of the countries forming the Union reserve to themselves certain rights.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It applies to those who adhere?

Mr. DOHERTY: I would think that would be the accepted understanding, that when countries parties to the Convention admit another country, that other country becomes an additional member.

Mr. FIELDING: The wording of Article XXVI of the Berne Convention which my hon. friend has referred to is interesting:

> The contracting countries—
>
> One of which is Great Britain.
>
> —shall have the right to accede to the present Convention at any time for their colonies or foreign possessions.

I should like to know whether my right hon. friend considers Canada a "colony" or "foreign possession" of Great Britain.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not consider Canada to-day is a colony of Great Britain.

Mr. FIELDING: Oh, my!

Mr. DOHERTY: The hon. gentleman should not ask me a question for the purpose of creating a situation where he can exclaim, "Oh, my!" to the answer. If he thought enough of my view to be willing to ask for it, he might perhaps control and conceal his contempt. At the time, back in 1908, people were not giving as much attention perhaps to correct designations as I hope we are to-day and I do not know whether there is any great importance to be attached to it. The hon. gentleman has my answer as to Canada's present status. I do not think that will embarrass her standing in the Convention

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to join with the member for Guysborough in taking exception to sections 13, 14 and 15.

The CHAIRMAN: If we are to return to those sections which were passed long ago, I must ask the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. LEMIEUX: That is true, but we passed them very rapidly.

The CHAIRMAN: I am not calling the hon. member to order, but simply pointing out that unanimous consent is necessary for him to return to those sections.

Mr. HOCKEN: There was pretty good discussion on sections 13 and 14, and I do not think we ought to go back to them. I am opposed to it, anyway.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will reserve my remarks until we get to the preamble.

The CHAIRMAN: There is no preamble.

Mr. RINFRET: We have done our very best to expedite the passage of this Bill, and I think we should show courtesy to the leader of the Opposition and allow him to make a statement.

Mr. LANCTOT: If you want to stay here two weeks more, go ahead.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think, Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly in order in speaking on clause 50, which deals with the day when the legislation shall come into force. I think the possible effect of this measure as it now stands may be to discourage altogether original publication in Canada by Canadian authors. An author takes his work to a Canadian publisher, who says, "Our market is somewhat limited, and we cannot undertake to publish your book." Then the author goes to the United States, and the American publishing house say, "We have a large market and we will accept your book." If the book sells well, then the Canadian publisher claims his right to step in and publish the book in Canada, although originally he refused to accept it from the author. The point I wish to draw to the attention of the committee on behalf of the author is that if this Bill passes in its present form, when he goes to the American publishing firm and tries to make a contract, the author is likely to be told, "We would be glad to allow you such-and-such a royalty, but we cannot do so because the possibility of sale is restricted by reason of the copyright law in Canada." As hon. members are aware, the royalty increases as the sales run up. The effect of this enactment, it seems to me, would be to take from the author a substantial part of the remuneration to which he would be entitled. For example, assuming that a Canadian author has a contract with an American publishing house under which he is to get a royalty, say, of 15 per cent on the first 2,000 copies of his book, increasing to 25 or 35 per cent on additional copies, if the law as it stands to-day was preserved, the whole market where that book was sold would be taken into account in the additional royalty which the author receives. If this bill is passed and Canadian firms, for example, are privileged to start the publication of a book at any time they think best, the author may be kept at the lower rae of royalty so far as his contract with an American firm is concerned. I think that authors have a hard enough struggle as it is to make anything out of their writings, to get any adequate remuneration for the effort they put forth, and in an enactment of this kind we should aim primarily at protecting them.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I do not quite understand why the minister in considering the terms and conditions cannot take into account all that my hon. friend has said.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I give my right hon. friend an example from my own experience in connection with the publication of a book?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am taking as correct everything that my hon. friend has said.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I can illustrate the point I have in mind in this way: a firm in the United States accepts a book from a Canadian author and allows him 15 per cent royalty on the first 1,500 copies, 20 per cent on all copies between 1,500 and 2,500, and then 30 per cent on additional copies sold. The firm makes that contract in the expectation of having a large market. As it is a book by a Canadian author, they take into account the possibility of its sale in Canada. Once the point of 1,500 is reached the author commences to get his royalty on a 20 per cent basis; when 2,500 is reached he gets his 30 per cent, and he gets it in virtue of sales in Canada as well as of sales in the United States. But if this law as it stands goes into effect what will happen? He may conceivably be kept at the 15 per cent royalty.

The minister when considering how much he will allow the author when a Canadian firm undertakes the publication, will say: The company in the United States is giving a 15 per cent royalty; we will allow the Canadian publisher his contract with the author on the same basis and the author will thereby be kept on the 15 per cent basis. Whereas if the author were free to have his contract carried out by the American publishing house as to sales generally, instead of getting 15 per cent on his books he might be getting 30 per cent on the greater proportion of the sales. I can see that that may be the effect in practice. It may not amount to much in the case of some persons, but in the case of most authors a difference of a few hundred dollars here and there is a quite important matter.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I still do not see why the minister cannot take that all into account when he fixes the rate of remuneration.

Mr. HOCKEN: My understanding of the Bill differs from that of the hon. leader of the Opposition. An author may write a book and sell it to an American publisher. The American publisher can print it in the United States or he can print it in Canada as well, and the gross sale is just as large as if the printing were all done in the United States. Therefore the proportionate increase in royalty that there would be under the old condition should prevail under the new condition. He gets the Canadian market; if the author wants the book published here, it is published here. This licensing clause is only to provide that when the author will not publish in Canada, somebody else may do so, paying him reasonable compensation. I cannot see that the author's rights are injuriously affected; on the contrary, I think they are adequately protected. If we had the same law that they have in the United States, the Canadian author could not get a copyright until his book was set in type and printed and the copy laid before the Secretary of State in Ottawa, but under this law the type can be set in the United States, and plates can be made and sent to Canada if the author wants to publish the work in this country. If the author will not publish it in Canada and if his American publisher will not do so, then some one in Canada may say: I will publish the book and pay the royalty determined by the minister. Surely there is nothing unfair in that. The author is entirely protected, if I understand the Bill correctly.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported with amendments.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the Bill be read the third time?

Mr. DOHERTY: I have had urgent requests from gentlemen in the Senate that the Bill should reach them at the earliest possible moment, as they would like to have time to go into it. It would be well, therefore, if the Bill could be read the third time now.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All right.

Mr. DOHERTY moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. LEMIEUX: May I express the hope that as the Canadian law is now to be changed, when the next convention meets Canada appear on her own behalf as she does in the postal convention?

Mr. DOHERTY: I am sure that if any effort be needed to bring about that result—and I do not think there would be any difficulty in the way—the effort will not be wanting. Of course, I cannot assure my hon. friend of what will happen, but I have every reason to believe that when we adhere to the Convention we shall be recognized when the meeting is held as we are recognized everywhere else when we meet the other nations of the world.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 214, (from the Senate) for the relief of Ernest Joseph Wismer.—Mr. Mowat.

Bill No. 215, (from the Senate) for the relief of Carman Adams.—Mr. Mowat.

OLEOMARGARINE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 205, to amend the Oleomargarine Act, 1919.

Mr. J. A. ROBB (Chateauguay-Huntingdon): Before this Bill is read the second time I should like to repeat what I pointed out to the minister when the resolution was under consideration a few days ago. While consenting to the admission of oleomargarine during the war, at a time when dairy products were very high, I can see no good reason why we should continue the admission of oleomargarine into this country. The minister will recollect that it was the policy of Canada for many years, under both Liberal and Conservative administrations, to prevent the admission of oleomargarine into Canada on the ground that it was a detriment to the dairying interests of this country. During that period the dairying interests of Canada made wonderful progress, so much so that we were able to put our products, not only butter and cheese, but bacon and beef, into the markets of the world. To the dairying industry we owe directly the production of such important foodstuffs as butter and cheese, but that industry is also the basis for the production of meats: bacon, beef, veal and poultry products. It also helps to fertilize the soil. The greater the dairy industry; the more cattle there are, the better will be the crops. While grain growing may be profitable temporarily, it takes away the fertility of the soil, while on the contrary, the production of dairy products and the raising of cattle and swine contribute not only to the national wealth but to the fertility of the soil, so that we produce more grain.

War conditions have passed and the price of dairy products is down to about normal. The price of butter is not high; the price of cheese is not high; indeed, if the price keeps on going down, the cost of production will be greater than the selling price. Under such conditions it might be well for the minister to make haste slowly in the way of granting concessions for admission of oleomargarine into this country. Under present regulations manufacture is permitted up to the month of August of this year and sale up to the month of March of next year, so that those who have been importing oleomargarine and those who have been manufacturing oleomargarine in this country will have ample time to dispose of their stocks. I am told —and I am making this statement so that the minister may correct me if I am wrong —that there are only two firms manufacturing oleomargarine in Canada, and although oleomargarine comes in free of duty, its importation is surrounded by so many restrictions that the manufacture of oleomargarine in this country is practically a monopoly. The minister admits certain ingredients used in oleomargarine free of duty; that is refunds of duty are allowed. The statement was made the other day by the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) that an immense sum of money had been refunded by the customs to importers of oleomargarine.

I have no desire to delay the House at this time when we are trying to dispose of business and to close up, but I should like the minister to take into serious consideration the question of extending the rights to import oleomargarine or to manufacture oleomargarine in Canada. The time has now arrived when we should revert to the old conditions under which the dairy industry of this country was so well built up. During the Budget debate we heard much from my hon. friends opposite as regards protection to the farmer. So far as I know, the farmer is not asking for any special protection on his products, but this is a case where we can give him a fair protection by prohibiting the importation and manufacture of a product that enters into serious competition with his product.

There is another feature of this matter that I should like to direct to the attention of the minister. After all, oleomargarine, according to a statement of what it contains, is an adulteration, manufacturers of oleomargarine contending that it contains about 70 to 75 per cent of farm product; there is some butter and milk used in its manufacture. We have laid down as a principle that there should be no adulteration in certain farm products. We have recently had that before us in the question of maple products, where an attempt was made to go back oo legislation introduced two or three years ago, and it was the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Agriculture that we should not admit of any reaction in this matter, but that we should keep these products pure. That should apply to butter as well as maple products. I submit these considerations to the minister, and I hope he will not press his Bill at this time.

Mr. J. H. SINCLAIR (Antigonish and Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say just a few words in regard to this Bill before it is read the second time. My hon. friend (Mr. Robb) has expressed my views pretty clearly in regard to it. The importance of the dairy industry, of course, will be admitted by everybody; it is of vast importance to the country; it is a growing industry, and we should be very careful not to take any steps that would in any way check or interfere with it. I have been sent a circular letter by Mr. D'Arcy Scott, Secretary-Treasurer and General Counsel of the National Dairy Council of Canada, dated the 21st of the present month, and containing the following resolution:

That this Council strongly disapproves of the efforts of manufacturers and vendors of oleomargarine to present that article in such shape, appearance and colour as to attempt to deceive purchasers into the belief that they are actually getting butter or an article with the same food values as butter. This Council is of the opinion that to remove the unfairness of the competition of oleo with butter, and to prevent deception and dishonesty, strict regulations in addition to those now in effect should be passed by the Government of Canada providing for a standard colour of oleo other than the colour of butter, the printing on the container of each package of oleo a statement of the ingredients used to make up the oleo and the proportions of each ingredient. Also that no dairy products be allowed to be used in the manufacture of oleo sold in Canada.

No action whatever has been taken to comply with this resolution.

Then it goes on to say:

The manufacture and sale of oleo in Canada was prohibited prior to December, 1917, when the prohibition was temporarily suspended by Order in Council under the War Measures Act. Since the armistice the suspension of the prohibition against oleo has been extended from year to year by legislation. The suspension will expire on September next unless Parliament passes further legislation.

We are now proposing by this Bill to admit the manufacture and importation without restriction. This appears to be an unfortunate time to pass a law permitting importation and manufacture of oleomargarine in competition with the butter industry. Last year we sold as much as 6,000,000 pounds of butter in the United States; but owing to recent legislation in that country imposing a duty of six cents a pound on Canadian butter, it is very unlikely that we shall be able to make equally great sales to the United States when this legislation comes into force. That should be considered. The price of butter has dropped very low; the industry is not in a prosperous condition at present, and if there ever was a time when we should be careful as regards legislation, it is at present. The price of butter is back to almost its pre-war level, and the prospects are that it will go still lower in the future. I do not consider that it is at all necessary to continue the manufacture of oleomargarine in Canada when butter can be secured so cheaply, and I therefore wish to place myself on record as being in entire agreement with what my hon. friend from Huntingdon had just said in regard to this matter. I shall vote against the Bill.

[Mr. J. H. Sinclair.]

Mr. EDWARDS: I have opposed the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine in Canada from the very first, and in opposing it to-day I am simply in line with what I have done in the past. I am glad that the hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), who is disposed occasionally to drop a few free trade sentiments and to give more or less vociferous applause to free trade sentiments dropped by someone else, is alive to the effect of what the imposition of the six cents duty on butter now being imposed by the United States Government will be so far as that market for our producers is concerned. The duty used to be two or two and a half cents, and now they have raised it to six cents. The effect will be to exclude Canadian butter from the American market. I think it was intended to have that effect, and it certainly will have that effect.

Let us look for a moment at the conditions prior to the adoption of the Order in Council which permitted the admission of oleomargarine into Canada and its manufacture here. I could understand action along that line having been taken previous to the time when it was taken. In 1914, for instance, we imported over 7,000,000 pounds of butter, and exported only 1,250,000 pounds; in 1915 our imports were pretty nearly 7,000,000 pounds, and our exports 2,700,000 pounds; in 1916 our imports were 4,300,000 pounds, and our exports 3,400,000 pounds. In all these years, according to the import and export figures I have just quoted, we were not producing a sufficient quantity of butter in Canada for our home requirements and in those years the argument could have been advanced that was advanced later, that we were not making enough butter to supply the home demand, that the price was inordinately high, and that therefore the poor man was being deprived of an essential article of food. In 1917, however, our imports of butter were 997,000 pounds, and our exports were pretty nearly 8,000,000 pounds: that is to say, according to our import and export figures, we not only produced enough butter in Canada to supply the home market, but we had a surplus and had to look for a market for that surplus in other parts of the world. It was at that time, on December 10, 1917, that the Order in Council was passed permitting the importation of oleomargarine into Canada and its manufacture in this country. At that time the argument that was advanced by the then Minister of Agriculture, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), was that the price of butter was so high that many poor people in this country were unable to buy it. He justified—and in this he was backed up by many other hon. gentlemen in the House—the admission into Canada and manufacture here of oleomargarine on the ground that the fats necessary for sound physical health were not obtainable at a reasonable price in Canada in the form of butter. That argument was accepted by the Government and, I must say, by an overwhelming majority of members on both sides of the House. If that was the only argument advanced, and I am not aware at the moment of any other argument having been put forward, that argument does not hold good to-day.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Did my hon. friend state since when there had been a surplus of butter in this country?

Mr. EDWARDS: The figures I gave showed that up to 1916 we were not producing enough butter to supply the home demand, but that in 1917 we imported only 997,000 pounds of butter while we exported 7,900,000 pounds. I take those figures to indicate that we were producing enough butter not only to supply the home demand, but to leave over a good surplus. That was the year in which the Order in Council was passed, for the reasons I have stated. Now in 1918 we imported only 443,000 pounds of butter, while we exported pretty nearly 5,000,000 pounds. In 1919 our imports of butter were less than 2,000,000 pounds, while our exports were over 13,500,000 pounds. In 1920 our imports of butter were 397,000 pounds, while our exports were over 17,600,000 pounds.

I wish that my hon. friend would pay attention to the figures I am now about to give. I have stated that according to the import and export figures from 1917 up to 1920 we were producing in ever-increasing quantities more butter than we required for our home consumption. That of itself would have a tendency to push the price of butter down to a reasonable figure in this country, and in consequence of the surplus we had to look all over the world to find a market for it. Now, in 1918 we imported into this country 2,262,514 pounds of oleomargarine. Every pound of that, in my judgment, replaced a pound of butter and forced our farmers and dairymen to look elsewhere for a market for that quantity of butter. In 1919 our imports of oleomargarine were 4,217,000 pounds, and in that year we exported over 13,000,000 pounds of butter. In 1920 our imports of oleomargarine amounted to pretty nearly 7,000,000 pounds, and in that year we exported some 17,000,000 pounds of butter. Now, it is claimed that the Government were justified in allowing oleomargarine to enter this country because of the high price of butter at the time the Order in Council was passed, and that the high price was due to scarcity of supply. But the figures show that at the time the Order in Council was passed there was no scarcity. But consider the matter on the basis of price. Let us see what the average price of butter was from 1914 on. According to the Montreal Gazette the average price of butter per pound for 1914 was 27.6 cents; 1915, 29.4 cents; 1916, 34.2 cents; 1917, 39.9 cents; 1918, 47 cents; 1919, 58.9 cents; 1920, 55.8 cents. Those who oppose my view of this matter may argue that the price of butter, notwithstanding the importations of oleomargarine, is constantly going up. Well, let us take late reports, because, if it is fair for those who favour the importation of oleomargarine, to quote the prices of butter notwithstanding the importation of this article, surely they will not object to my quoting the prices of butter also and arguing that there is no need, in view of those prices, to allow the manufacture and importation of oleomargarine at the present time. I take the dairy produce market report for the week ending May 7, 1921, and I find that butter, No. 1 grade, was sold in Montreal at 28⅜ cents a pound. Six hundred and sixty packages were sold at this rate. On No. 2 butter, a bid of 25 cents was refused; but in that week, butter sold as low as 26⅜ cents a pound. That is very much below what butter was selling at—and below the price fetched by oleomargarine—all through 1919 and 1920. Let us take the report for the week ending May 21. In Montreal, butter sold at 25½ cents, and 25¼ cents a pound, and at St. Hyacinthe, and other places, as well as in Toronto, the same prices obtained. In view of these prices, which have been maintained pretty steadily for some considerable time, there is no good argument which can be adduced in favour of the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine. In my judgment, butter is selling to-day at a price which does not enable the dairyman and the farmer to come out anywhere near even. That is my well-considered judgment in the matter; and in view of the immense amount of money which is invested in the dairy industry, and the large sum of capital invested in buildings, stock, etc., as well as the number of people directly interested in the success of the industry in Canada, I think that this Government, or any other, should give very careful consideration to the business and do everything possible to help it along. If this House agrees with me that at the present prices, and the prices that have obtained for some months past, the dairyman is not making ends meet, then I appeal to the Government that this is not a proper time at which to pass a permanent measure granting for all time, in this country, the right to import oleomargarine and to manufacture that product here. Whatever arguments may have been advanced in favour of its importation and manufacture in times past, when butter sold at a high price, I certainly contend that to-day the dairy industry should receive consideration at the hands of the Government, and that this Bill should not be pressed. With the action of the Government last session in giving a year's extension to the Order in Council, as was also done the year before, I know that the great majority of members on both sides of the House agreed. Very well, I did not agree, but I was in a hopeless minority. However, if the Government feel that there should be an extension of time for another year, and can assure us that the present price of butter is only temporary, while I would object to the passage of this Bill, as I have done before, I would frankly say that it would not be as bad as passing the Bill and making the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine a permanent thing.

I know it may be argued by some that Canada is the only country which up to the present time has not definitely allowed the importation and manufacture of this article. The United States and other countries have allowed its importation and manufacture. Well, that is their affair; but I do not think that conditions in this country are on all-fours with conditions in the United States, in Denmark, or in any of the other countries which permit the manufacture and importation of oleomargarine. Of course, opinions may reasonably differ in that regard, and I am only giving my personal view of the matter.

I want to say again, what I said in speaking on the Budget, that I fail to understand how one can defend the free importation of oleomargarine into Canada. If the question were asked why we have a duty of 4 cents a pound on butter, the answer, I presume, would be that it is for the protection of our dairymen in Canada. Well, if that is true, how can we justify the importation free of duty of oleomargarine which certainly comes into the country in direct competition with butter —for every pound of oleomargarine takes the place of a pound of butter. To be consistent, we should take the duty off butter, which is something I suppose my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) would agree with.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Sure.

Mr. EDWARDS: Or, in the alternative, we should place a duty on oleomargarine at least equal to the duty which is now imposed on butter coming into the country. That is the course I would take if this article were allowed to come into the country. Considering the large amount of money invested in the dairy industry, the importance of that industry to the Dominion, the number of people directly interested in it, and other reasons which could be advanced, in my judgment this is not an opportune time to place on the statute book of the country an Act which would allow the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine for all time to come. To be consistent with the course I have taken on previous occasions, and also with my own conscientious views in this matter, which have not changed a particle, I must express my opposition to the measure, and, in fact, to the whole principle of allowing oleomargarine into this country at the present time, or permitting its manufacture here.

Mr. W. F. KAY (Missisquoi): I must enter a protest against the Bill which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie) is asking the House to pass. I am very sorry that the minister felt obliged to introduce this Bill, in view of the present condition of the dairy industry in this country. I feel sure that, were he left to use his own judgment in the matter, he would have dropped the Bill. At any rate, I give him credit for that feeling. The dairy industry is the most important of all the agricultural industries in Canada, and this Bill strikes a very serious blow at it. At the present time, the price of butter is below the pre-war price; it is so low, indeed, that the dairyman is producing butter at a good deal below cost. I need not tell the House that if this condition continued for any length of time the only course open to the dairy farmer would be to stop dairying. When that time arrives—although I hope it will not come—a Bill of this kind might then be necessary and appropriate because we would all have to eat oleomargarine. Another very serious fault of the Bill is that it permits the adulteration of butter. Oleo is largely made from butter, milk and cream, and I protest most emphatically against any regulations which permit the adulteration of the product of that great basic industry the dairy industry. If the regulations were so framed as to require oleomargarine to be manufactured solely from vegetable and animal oils there would not be the same objection to the proposal; but unfortunately the department has allowed the manufacturers of oleo to use from 20 to 25 per cent of butter, milk and cream in the production of this article, and therefore it is without any doubt an adulteration of butter. In a very short time the Canadian dairyman will be deprived of his export markets entirely. The United States, who were large consumers of our butter, are putting on a duty of 6 cents a pound which will be prohibitive. As to the British market it is flooded with butter. That commodity was formerly under the control of the Government but decontrol has now been carried out and hundreds of tons of butter have been thrown on the market there. Consequently any possibility of our exporting butter at the present time to England has gone. The arguments advanced by the hon. member for Chateauguay-Huntingdon (Mr. Robb) and the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) are very good and I wish to endorse them thoroughly. I will not detain the House any further at the present moment.

Mr. JOHN BEST (Dufferin): I heartily agree with the views of my hon. friend from Frontenac. Like that hon. gentleman I opposed this Bill on a former occasion, and the reasons for doing so at that time were not as good as the reasons for opposing it to-day. On the former occasion I pointed out that other articles that were protected were just as high in price as butter. I am a protectionist, a moderate protectionist, and I believe the farmers of Canada have just as good a right to protection as other classes have. The argument has been advanced that the poor man and the poor woman in the past could not afford to buy butter. The statement probably was true, I am not disputing it, but if you are going to remove the protection from butter why not do it also in the case of the boots and clothing that the poor man and the poor woman wear?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BEST: I am not arguing for a moment that the duties in any instance should be removed, I want protection to be maintained in every direction. What I say is that the importation of oleomargarine ought to be prohibited and in that I am consistent; I want protection on everything that the farmer has to sell. But my friends across the way, who pretend to defend the farmer, have never raised their voice to have the farmer protected—I never heard them say a word in the past in favour of doing that. It is argued now that because butter is so cheap, oleomargarine will not be bought. If that is the case why allow oleomargarine to come into Canada or be manufactured here. I cannot see why any sane man should go on manufacturing oleomargarine if he finds no sale for it. Butter is now selling at local points—I am not speaking of sales in the city—for 25 cents a pound and in some cases for less. I do not think there is any excuse for the poor man or the poor woman not buying butter under present conditions—with the wages they are paid now they can well afford to buy butter which proportionately has gone down in price more than wages have. We have been trying in Canada to build up a dairy industry and we have succeeded fairly well; but unfortunately we are permitting the importation of millions of pounds of oleomargarine, and the consumption of every pound of that product in the Dominion means one pound less in the consumption of butter. Why should we allow that? I believe in fair play to all classes. We have several industries in this country, but the agricultural industry is the one that deserves to be protected above all others. Yet the present Bill means taking away the protection so far as butter is concerned. How are we in this northern country—where the farmer has to put up buildings that will cost him from three to four thousand dollars to house his cattle for six or seven months in the year—to compete with farmers in the southern states, and in other countries, where they do not have to put up such buildings at all—where they have summer all the year round? We cannot meet such competition without protection. I am for protection for the farmer and I wish to see that he gets fair play because in this country he is up against handicaps such as they have not to contend with in the country to the south and in other lands similarly situated.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not protect the poor people?

Mr. BEST: Why certainly. We might just as fairly lower the duty on underwear as lower the protection in the case of butter. I don't see any difference in principle. If we are going to help the poor man why not start in with his feet? Take the protection off boots and shoes, then off clothing, and progress until you reach his stomach.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BEST: But I am not advocating taking duties off. What I am advocating is keeping the duty on, and protecting the farmer by not allowing oleomargarine to enter, or be manufactured in, this country. I contend that I am quite consistent as a protectionist in arguing that oleomargarine should not be permitted to come in free or be manufactured in Canada. Now, my hon. friends opposite seem to think, judging from their interjections, that I find fault with protecting boots and shoes, and clothing, and that I am against protection. Not by any means, but I do think that we have a just right to protect the most basic industry we have in the Dominion, and that is agriculture. If we are going to permit the importation and sale of oleomargarine when there is no sale for our butter what are our dairymen going to do? As one hon. gentleman opposite said, under this policy the dairy industry would dwindle away, and that if the farmers of this country cease to keep cows we would have to have something to take the place of butter. In such a case as that I would not blame them; but the farmer at the present time certainly cannot make anything out of selling butter at 25 cents a pound. A few years ago, before this legislation was enacted, the farmer could buy a binder for $150 but he has to pay $300 to-day for it. That enhanced price is not due to protection because the duty only amounts to 12½ per cent, but everything else has gone up in proportion. The farmers of this country are certainly going to protest if they are not protected as they should be, and I believe this to be one of the worst pieces of legislation, from the farmer's standpoint, that could be introduced into the House. I think the minister probably is sincere in thinking that this legislation is going to benefit the poor, but I appeal to him to see to it that the farmers are not discriminated against in this way. During the war they were appealed to to keep more cows and hogs, and they did, but now the war is over and the prices of farm products are declining those farmers are left with their stock on their hands. I hope the minister will see his way clear to withdraw this Bill, because I am not going to be inconsistent —I am not going to vote for a measure that I have spoken against.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I hope to follow my almost invariable custom of taking only a little time in expressing my views on this question. That is the more easy, because I have on two previous occasions supported the minister very heartily in his temporary legislation on this subject. My hon. friend (Mr. Best) who has just resumed his seat finds fault with his fellow-farmers in that they do not apply for protection for their industry. I do not think he quite gathers what is the breadth of view of the Progressive party upon this subject. We believe that we have a policy which, in supporting all industries according to the principles of justice, right and freedom, will support our industry and build up the whole country better than his policy will build it up. We are just as friendly to the farmer as he is, but we think—as no doubt he thinks—that we are more enlightened in the methods by which we would promote the interests of the agriculturists.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose to advocate my view by a reference to general principles—by a reference to the interests of the nation as opposed to the interests of any class, and in doing so I plead with my hon. friend to give me credit for being, if not a good dairyman, at least a good Canadian. The local view is: Help a certain industry, and take the first road to that end; the national argument is: Look to the good of the nation and you will help everybody. Let us take the question of trade at the present time. What is going to happen to this country with its diminishing trade if we have a Minister of Finance going around and telling our people not to import commodities, and if his efforts are followed up by the Government putting obstacles in the way of that importing? I will tell my hon. friend and this House what will inevitably happen. If you prevent the importation of commodities, you will prevent the exportation of commodities; you will decrease your national trade and diminish your national prosperity. I do not want to labour this point any further, for I have argued it so often. It is the very element of sound economics. I ventured, in the short debate we had on reciprocity in the early part of this session, to express the view, which I repeated in the debate on the Budget, and which I will now re-state: that there is nothing the world needs so much at present as the facilitation in every possible way of international commerce. If I may, I should like to buttress my opinion by a quotation from a speech which Mr. Asquith delivered in the British House of Commons about two weeks ago. He delivered it with the evident agreement of three-quarters of the assembly, according to some descriptions of the speech, though in the Imperial House of Commons they do not always vote as they think. He used in his inimitable style this language, which I should like to give to this House for its serious consideration and as having a very direct bearing upon this measure:

> What the world wants is the freest and fullest production and interchange of commodities. That is the only way in which to stabilize exchange.

Now, Mr. Asquith is not only a great statesman and a great lawyer, but he is a very great economist, and I commend those words not only to this House but to the whole of this nation and—if my voice could reach—to the world. What the world wants at present more than anything else to relieve its economic troubles is a free and full production, which can only take place if you have a free and full exchange.

Why, what has happened on this very subject? I listened with the greatest interest to what my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) said just now, and if I rightly followed his facts, he proved that since we had had free importation of oleomargarine the production of butter had gone ahead by leaps and bounds. He proved that past all possibility of contradiction. Now, it may be said, how has that been brought about? In the simplest possible way. For every pound of oleomargarine you introduce into this country you must send something out in payment; and I submit to the intelligence of this House that if you send butter out it is no loss to the nation. Just imagine a Parliament that has on its hands a bankrupt railroad wanting to restrict, first, the carrying of strawberries, then the carrying back of exports, the things that would pay for the strawberries, and next the members of the same Parliament getting up and wanting to restrict oleomargarine coming in and, of necessity, thus restricting the going out of what pays for it! If you carry that process far enough, your bankrupt railway is with you to stay; you can back your engines into the yards to rust and leave your men tc be unemployed.

This is a very serious matter at this time. I am glad indeed to look into the frank, full face of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie). I am sure that one of these days he will join the Progressive party—and when we have the condition of affairs that we see in this House, why, we have got to look for recruits. If my hon. friend the leader of the official Opposition had been in his place I would have offered him my sincere sympathy. Although his sterling henchmen by moving his amendment to the Budget lined up the whole of this side of the House in favour of a lower tariff, yet at a moment's notice his chief whip leaps from the free trade camp and comes out a full-blown protectionist, and he is followed by other members on the same side. I am surprised at these hon. gentlemen so soon breaking away from sound doctrine. I look, as I say, with pleasure into the face of my hon. friend the minister, and I hope he will stand to his guns, because if trade is declining, no sensible and rational legislature will take measures to make it decline further. That is the whole argument in a nutshell from the point of view of trade. We have had a great surplus of butter production since we had free oleomargarine, we have been exporting butter, and I want to submit to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, especially to my hon. friend from Frontenac, that it is no misfortune to the country to have a large export of dairy products. It has been said that the price of butter has fallen. Well, I am a broad enough farmer, I want to tell my hon. friend from Dufferin, to rejoice in that. I will tell him why—and I am still arguing on national grounds. Only a handful of men—

Mr. BEST: Will my hon. friend—

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): The hon. gentleman does not need to ask me any questions; he will get the full gospel before I am finished with him. There are only a handful of people in the country producing butter. No butter worth the name is produced in Montreal or Toronto; no butter worth the name is produced in any of our large cities. Only a handful of people, I say, are engaged in producing butter, but we nearly all eat it, and my interest is on behalf of the people who eat the butter.

Mr. BEST: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Would he glory as much in a similar reduction of the price of wheat? Only a comparatively small number of people are engaged in the production of wheat.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I have always believed in free wheat, and I am glad that on this matter—

Mr. BEST: I am speaking about the price. Does the hon. gentleman want the price down?

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I believe in cheap things—certainly. I believe in cheap beef. I took $70 for steers last fall that I would have got $120 for the fall before. I want my hon. friend to understand the difference between the shallow, contracted Tory view and the broad Liberal view. My view is the Liberal view; my Liberalism is of the spirit. If you get your beef cheaply, I am then in the position to turn round to you and say: You are buying beef from me at nominal prices, you are buying hides from me at one cent a pound; in the name of conscience, try to give me cheap boots too. We all use beef, butter, boots and a hundred other things, and it is therefore a clear benefit to the whole community to have these things cheap. There is not an hon. gentleman in this House who, when he goes to purchase does not haggle for the very best price and the very best bargain he can get and thus by his own action in everyday life he argues his belief in cheap goods. Now, that is my answer to my hon. friend, and I hope it is honest; I hope it is full, and I am not at all sure that it is not convincing. If my hon. friend believes in dear things, then I should like him to stand up and get looked over as a curiosity, because certainly all the women of the country would be against him, and, I think, most of the men.

Mr. BEST: Did the hon. member ask a question? Did he ask me to stand up? I certainly do say that I am in favour of high-priced farm products.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Well, perhaps it is my method of appeal. I feel very much in earnest in the matter, but I know that the hon. gentleman can always stand up manfully for what he believes,—he may be a little mixed in his belief, but he is always ready to stand up for it. The question of price, Mr. Speaker, does not affect my thinking at all. What I am looking for is international commerce, and, in addition to that, the freedom of the subject. The Liberalism in which I was raised meant freedom; the word itself means freedom. For the life of me I cannot understand the thinking of people in this great, free, democratic country of Canada who say that for the sake of imaginary help to a few people engaged in a certain industry, the teeming populations of Hamilton, Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver and Winnipeg should be prevented from buying oleo if they want to buy it. The most sacred right a man has is to sell his labour to the best advantage, and when I buy oleo or anything else I sell my labour for it, whether I am a workingman or not. None of us has any right to what we do not labour for either by our heads or by our hands, or is not given to us by bequest. When I buy oleo or anything else I sell my labour, and I claim the sacred right to sell that labour and to buy the product of it in the cheapest market, in the best market—in short, in any market that suits me. If a man in Montreal wants to buy oleomargarine, what right has anyone from Huntingdon, even if he is a member of Parliament, to object to his buying it? I cannot understand it, on the grounds of the liberty of the subject. The fundamental objection to protection is that it is an interference with the liberty of the subject, because it is an interference with a man's selling his labour, where he can do it without breaking any moral law, to the best advantage.

Something has been said about the fertility of the soil. Well, I would be very sorry if the introduction of oleo interfered with the fertility of the soil. We have such boundless acres of fertile land in this country that that argument has a very small effect on my mind. I know what the argument is; there is nothing in it, however. I should like to submit to my hon. friends on this side who talk about the fertility of the soil that the huge increase of the dairy industry which my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) proved has taken place does not make against the fertility of the soil. It would be too much, Mr. Speaker, to expect that a case which was supported by my hon. friend from Frontenac on one side of the House and by my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) on the other would be logical in all the elements of argument that were produced.

Mr. EDWARDS: Let me tell my hon. friend that I did not support it as he asserts. It is just my hon. friend's failure to understand the fundamentals in connection with the matter.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Well, I never expect my hon. friend, either in speech or in interruption, long to fail to descend to personalities. I am very sorry, of course, that my understanding was weak. I followed my hon. friend carefully and when I did not think I was understanding him fully I got him to amplify his statement. But of course we all have to work, whether we be working in this House or in York-Sunbury, with as much intelligence as the Lord has given to us.

Mr. EDWARDS: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I must ask my hon. friend to observe the ordinary courtesies of debate. I promise to be brief.

Mr. EDWARDS: Does my hon. friend understand what ordinary courtesy is?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): The hon. gentleman has just come out of a discussion down in New Brunswick and he actually wants to get into another here, against the rules of the House.

Mr. EDWARDS: Always ready.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I thought he would have learned, Sir—

Mr. SPEAKER: I must remind the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) that he has already spoken. The hon. member for Red Deer has the floor and has asked not to be interrupted.

Mr. EDWARDS: I understood he was discussing oleomargarine and not Frontenac.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I was discussing also the arguments which have been used in this debate, and I was saying—and I think I was well within the rules of parliamentary debate when I did so—that I hardly expected that an argument would stand well which was supported on one side of the House by my hon. friend from Frontenac and on the other side of the House by my hon. friend from Guysborough. I do not for a moment want to commit to my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards), but he would be the first to admit that he does not find himself in very general agreement with the hon. gentleman from Guysborough, and I was simply expressing the playful opinion that one might expect that a debate supported from these very opposite quarters was likely to show disagreement in the argument. And there is disagreement in the argument. My hon. friend from Frontenac proved that the dairy industry was going forward by leaps and bounds. My hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) to my right said that they feared for the fertility of the soil if oleomargarine was introduced. I thought the facts of one hon. member contradicted the position of the other. The point is a small one. I do not think we are suffering very much from the want of fertile soil in Canada. I do not want to extend my remarks; I think I have said enough to indicate where I stand. I believe in conferring the benefit of freer trade wherever it is possible to do it. It has been clearly possible to do it in this case without hurting the industry in question. It is a great boon, or the people think it is a boon to large masses of the people in our cities, and I trust the minister will stick to his guns and give the people engaged in this industry in Canada some security in following it by knowing where they stand in the matter, and at the same time promote international commerce between us and the great nation to the south of us to at least this small extent. I am perfectly sure that it is along those lines, rather than along the lines of further restrictions, that we are going to take the best road to solve our difficulties of high cost of living, unemployment, lowering of trade, general depression and want of prosperity from which we are suffering at the present moment.

Mr. GEORGE BOYCE (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, while I have no objection to any person using oleomargarine, if he wishes to do so, I have very strong objection to its coming into this country free of duty at this or any other time. Possibly a year or so ago, when butter was 70 or 75 cents a pound, there might have been some excuse; but at the present time when butter is down to 25 or 30 cents a pound, I do not see that any excuse can be urged on the ground of poor people requiring a cheap article. Whatever may be said about the quality of this article, I for one have no great fancy for it; I never ate any of it, and I would not do so if I could avoid it, because I do not think that, being made of grease, it is of any benefit to our farmers. I would not buy it. The minister should proceed very carefully at the present time because the farmers of this country are passing through a serious crisis. I speak as one who should know a little about farming because I have been a farmer all my life; I know fairly well the wants of farmers and what suits them. If you do away with the dairy industry, you hurt agriculture to a greater extent than is possible in any other way that I know of. Some one said that dairying or cattle-raising was not of very much benefit to the soil. I am glad to say that that gentleman did not live in Ontario, because, if he did, he would tell a different story, as this is of the greatest possible assistance to farming. Cattle-raising is one of the mainstays of the farmer in Canada. In Great Britain, Germany, Italy and other countries, a farmer would not think of putting in a crop without the addition of fertilizer; but in this Canada of ours, at least in this section of it, it is impossible for us to get fertilizers, and the next best thing is cattle-raising, and the dairy industry. Let me tell the House that the dairy production of Canada in a year amounts to $250,000,000. We export over $258,000,000 worth of cattle, and our other agricultural exports amount to over $365,000,000. The number of livestock, milk cattle, and dairy cattle, in this country is over 20,000,000. That is a very large number, and this stock is of great benefit to our farms in putting them in better condition for raising other agricultural products. Some may think that a very high valuation has been placed on this livestock, but the valuation which is not too high at all, amounts to over $1,296,000,000. That is something that ought to be looked after very carefully and not injured in any way. The farm lands of Canada are valued at $2,792,000,000; the buildings which we must have in connection with the farms are valued at $927,000,000, and the value of the implements amounts to about $387,000,000. Altogether, the value of what is connected with farming and the dairy industry, which is the mainstay of the farm, amounts to about $9,000,000,000, which would pay the national debt of this country four times over. Anything that represents such an enormous amount of value, and especially something upon which all of us, city people as well as country people, depend for our living—because we are all as anxious for good crops as the farmers are—deserves to be protected as well as possible. I trust the minister will not do anything which will injure the dairy production of this country. If the dairying industry is hurt, another thing that is going to be handicapped is the production of ice cream and condensed milk. As a body of Canadians we ought to do all that we possibly can to foster the dairy industry, because it must be admitted, according to the agricultural returns, that it is one of the greatest benefits that we have in the Dominion of Canada. If we throw obstacles in the way of that industry, we are going to hinder the progress of the country at a time when we should do everything in our power to meet the national debt which has accrued in years gone by. The money has to be raised; it must be paid, and no one is more willing to assist in paying that debt than the Canadian farmer.

[Mr. Boyce.]

At Six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. A. M. DECHENE (Montmagny): (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the legislation with which we are now dealing is more important than it might appear at first glance. Shall we allow the sale of oleomargarine or other substitutes of butter? Such is the question which we have to settle.

The Government, through the Minister of Agriculture, favours that sale. Shall we follow them in that course? As far as I am concerned, I do not think that we should do so, and for many reasons. What strikes me first is the time chosen for bringing down such legislation. I object to the practice of the Government in trying, on the very last days of a session, to shove through any legislation of a more than doubtful intrinsic value. In the present circumstances, do they want to avail themselves of the unfortunate tendency of this House to pass a Bill without giving it the full consideration it ought to receive? I am rather inclined to think so. I do not know for whose benefit this legislation will be enacted, but I am satisfied that it is not to foster the dairying industry of this country that this legislation is asked, because that industry will be the very first to suffer from the sale of these substitutes of butter. Besides, the consumer pays as much for substitutes as for butter, and it therefore cannot be in the interests of the latter that this Bill is introduced, as it will be of no benefit to the great mass of people.

However, somebody must be interested in keeping those products on the market. The manufacturer and the importer would be the only parties interested. This, I understand, is an excellent reason for the hon. Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues to allow, henceforth, the importation into this country, as well as the sale and even the manufacturing of oleomargarine, butterine and other similar products. It is, as in the past, a discriminating legislation in favour of the manufacturer and of the Government's friends. I see nothing there but a law for the benefit of a few privileged people, a law absolutely Tory in its character. This is already enough to satisfy me that the Bill is unsound and contrary to the best interest of the country as a whole; nay more, it directly affects the material interests of the Canadian people and is detrimental to the dairy industry, which is the very basis of national prosperity; it affects everything connected with agriculture, and its depressing influence will be felt more and more by the farming community of this country. What would we have gained in working for half a century to improve our farming and our dairy products, so as to place them on the markets of the world, if we now try to maintain in our midst a destroying germ introduced during the war, a germ which will contribute to checking our progress in the dairy industry, and I say it without hesitation, a germ of death?

We have established in this country, with great pains and with great effort, a Canadian herd of considerable value. When we consider that this herd is at present valued at about $1,296,602,000, we necessarily wonder why Canada, a country so naturally peaceful, should maintain a herd of so considerable a value. The reason is very simple, the herd is the soul of the farm; without it, a farm cannot be maintained even in a fairly good agricultural condition. Let my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) say what he likes, the fertility of the soil depends, to a great extent, on the herd, and the fertility of the soil, coupled with the fact that our farms are kept in good condition, means the enriching of the farming community and of more than half the population, and the enriching of that class really means the enriching of a country as a whole. If you introduce into your legislation a principle which is destructive or likely to check the improvement or the enriching of the farming community, you introduce by the very fact, a principle which is apt to destroy the prosperity of the nation. Considering the enormous debt which we are saddled with and which we will be called upon to pay within a pretty short delay, a debt which weighs mainly on the farming community, how can we expect those people to carry their burden if, first of all, we impede their production?

Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock, I was alluding to the value of the Canadian herd, to the great amount of work necessitated during the last fifty years to establish that herd, and I was referring also to its general importance. I think there are others also who acknowledge the importance of the Canadian herd. The hon. minister himself (Mr. Tolmie) laid great stress on the value of that herd as well as on the means by which we should try to increase it and give it an additional value if possible, when he brought down, this year, the Estimates pertaining to agriculture. In fact, if we refer to those Estimates, we find that of the sum of $4,502,139.50 voted for agricultural purposes in 1920-21, two important items have been exclusively applied to improving and maintaining the national herd. We find, in this vote, $1,410,000 exclusively reserved for the care of the Canadian herd. We find, moreover, a sum of $1,000,000 intended for the improvement of that herd or, in other words, two millions and a half, out of four millions and a half, exclusively devoted for these purposes. Therefore, the hon. minister himself understands how important it is for this country to have an important herd and one of the best. But, Mr. Speaker, what would be the use of having such good herds if they were merely to supply food, to supply butchers' meat? Evidently, the thought by which the hon. minister is guided in the very administration of his department extends further. He knows that, to every good farmer, the herd is foremost and that large sums of money are voted to keep it foremost. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the usefulness of the national herd is so well understood, if it is admitted that this herd must be beneficial to the farmer, by all means it must necessarily be admitted that the main object of a herd, for a farmer, is surely to warrant the operation of the dairy industry.

And if the dairy industry be the very basis, the foundation of Canadian farming, why do they come and ask this House for the continuance of evils we had to endure during the war? For you will agree with me that the trade in oleomargarine, butterine and every other substitute for butter is an evil brought upon us by war, an evil which we were able to exclude and which, it seems, is liable to implant itself anew among us, for reasons still unknown. We should not permit oleomargarine and other substitutes for butter to be imported into Canada, to be manufactured on a large scale and often sold in a fraudulent manner; I say fraudulent because traders often sell to their customers oleomargarine and other substitutes as if they were real butter, though they are but a camouflage.

The introduction of this product on our market, the permission to manufacture it on a large scale would also have another result, besides dissuading our farmers from keeping good herds of cattle. Observing that the possession of a first-class herd upon his farm is not calculated to bring him a sufficient income, and that every product which might hinder the development of that herd is admitted to the market just like the natural, the pure product, the farmer will of course desert that industry and we shall soon see the butter, cheese, condensed or evaporated milk factories jeopardized. Let us bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that we have in this country 3,282 factories of butter, cheese and milk by-products in which up to date a capital of more than $25,388,026 has been invested. Should the time come when no profits will be derived from the sale of butter and cheese, these factories will certainly close their doors, so that the farmer's son will be incited to leave the paternal roof and go into the cities where he may at least expect a better living without having to work for a paltry income. People often complain that young men turn away from the fields. Why? Because, often enough, work of a farmer doesn't bring as much money apparently as the workingman can earn in the cities, and because life is less cheerful and pleasures are wanting in the country.

If you suppressed whatever advantage there may be in the dairy industry, what will remain to keep the farmer's son at home? We who are living in country places know that every month or every fortnight the butter or cheese maker pays to the farmer for his milk and cream a sum of money which is brought home and accumulated monthly. This adds enchantment to life and incites the young farmer to grow fonder of rural life. Therefore, by doing away with that advantage you offer those young men a further excuse for leaving the paternal roof.

Somebody said a moment ago that we should let everybody buy what he wants according to his taste. An hon. gentleman was asking the fiery member from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) whether or not he would consent to the sale of wheat as he would like butter and cheese to be sold. My hon. friend answered that he was in favour of the complete freedom of trade. Since they are in favour of the complete freedom of trade would it be wise to open our doors to every kind of produce which might come from abroad and over which we have for a number of years deliberated with as much wisdom as sternness?

Under the circumstances I think we ought to be satisfied with our natural product and to keep for ourselves the already restricted market we have. At the present time we have large quantities of butter and cheese. On the first of January, 1921, our stock of butter and dairy produce amounted to 14,271,382 pounds; we had 11,078,000 pounds of cheese and 412,962 pounds of oleomargarine; we had almost two pounds of cheese and three pounds of butter per capita in store in this country, a large quantity which shows that production has now reached its maximum, and unless we pay attention to it, butter and cheese-making is going to be materially reduced for some years to come, so that farmers will have to change their ways, that is improving their herds, their lands and their produce.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Agriculture has agreed with the departments of agriculture in the various provinces that they would attend to the registration of milch cows, so as to remove from the herds unsatisfactory cows and to know what quantity of milk is given by each animal. In former years the farmers had no confidence in the efficiency of that cow-testing method. The Quebec and Ontario governments lent a hand and immediately we witnessed a material increase in the number of tested cows and at the same time a greater quantity of milk given by each animal. Last year, the quantity of milk in each province was already large. In 1919, there were 22,517 registered animals; 10,374 in Quebec, 4,214 in Ontario and 2,714 in Nova Scotia—mentioning only these three provinces. In 1920, in the province of Quebec, the number of cows exceeded 35,000. I regret that I have not the figures relating to the other provinces. Quebec may now boast of having more than 50,000 tested cows.

Therefore the farmers in the provinces which are more interested in this movement will know how to increase their output of milk and fat; but if on the other hand, substitutes for butter and cheese which would submit them to a ruinous competition were allowed on the market, they will have the right to ask us whether we are justified in advising them to do what they are doing and we shall then see the good work done so far set at naught.

Those are some of the reasons that ought to guide us when we are considering this Bill. According to me, the reasons I have mentioned as briefly as possible are peremptory and I have no hesitation in saying that the proposed legislation will have disastrous consequences all over the country and that we ought to oppose it. I am of the opinion that members of this House should take a greater interest in the development of the country than in the passing of a Bill granting favours to a few only, and that they ought to join hands with the opponents of this measure.

Therefore I beg the hon. minister to desist in furthering this legislation.

Hon. Mr. TOLMIE: I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion that has taken place. Some of it has been to the effect that the butter situation has been seriously affected by allowing oleomargarine to be manufactured and imported into this country. This is not backed up by figures. As a matter of fact, the output of our dairy products has greatly increased during the period in which the manufacture and importation of oleomargarine has been permitted. We also find that in such countries as Denmark, which produces the highest quality of butter in the world, and which depends for its prosperity upon the production of butter, the people of that country consume no less than forty-four pounds of oleomargarine per head per year. Oleomargarine has been recognized as a very wholesome article of food all over the world and Canada is the only country at the present time that has any restrictions on its manufacture, importation or sale. It has proven a boon to the poor man during the periods when butter has been at a very high price and we find that lately, since butter has come down in price to the point where it is now only a few cents above oleomargarine —in the city of Ottawa to-day oleomargarine is selling for only 7 cents a pound less than butter—the consumption of oleomargarine is almost nil. There is nobody in the country who has any taste for good butter who will buy oleomargarine if good butter is to be purchased at a reasonable price, and that is the case all over the world. I do not propose to take up any more time at present. I rose simply to say that as there seems to be a good deal of difference of opinion as to the length of time to which we should extend this provision I am willing, as we are nearing the end of the session, and we wish to avoid a long discussion, to extend this provision for the manufacture, sale and importation of oleomargarine for another twelve months, if that meets with the approval of the House.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Shelburne and Queen's): I am very sorry that the minister has announced this change of front. A year ago when he was dealing with this subject I ventured to express the hope that he would then deal with it as a permanency, or otherwise he was simply postponing trouble. Now the trouble has come. I do not think there is any justification for placing restrictions on the manufacture, sale and importation of oleomargarine. It did not need any statistics, which have been so freely given this afternoon and evening, to show us the importance of the dairying industry. It is a very great industry, one of the natural industries of the country, and if there is any industry of Canada that can stand on its feet and live and flourish irrespective of outside considerations, and that simply asks for a fair field and no favour, it is the dairying industry. It is for the moment under a little temporary depression, but not more so perhaps than some of our other industries. There has been a rapid decline in the price of butter and cheese, more rapid perhaps than the decline in the price of the articles which the dairyman requires, and in that respect the dairying industry is for the moment suffering, but that is only a temporary condition. The dairymen of this country are producing something that the country wants; they are producing something perhaps of as good a quality as any other country in the world produces, and under these conditions I do not think there is any fear for the dairying industry. I have never been able to see how the dairying industry was mixed up with oleomargarine. I quite agree in what the minister has just said, that when people can get good butter at a moderate price they do not want oleomargarine under any condition.

The real question in this matter is this: Is oleomargarine a legitimate article of commerce? That is the whole question. If it is not a legitimate article of commerce let us bar it out. If it is a legitimate article of commerce, why should we interfere with it at all? This is not a tariff Bill. I am not discussing whether there should be a duty on oleomargarine. If anybody wants to put a duty on oleomargarine I shall not quarrel with him. It is as legitimate a subject for taxation as butter, and I have no doubt that the manufacturers of oleomargarine in this country would be exceedingly pleased to have a duty. But that is not the question to-day. The question is: Is this a legitimate article of commerce? The whole world outside of Canada answers that question: Yes, it is a legitimate article of commerce. Twenty or thirty years ago when oleomargarine was first banned it was not so regarded. Perhaps in those days—it is a good many years ago, and I am not so familiar with conditions then—margarine was a cheap and nasty product which we had better do without. I do not know whether the prohibition originally came because the article was in itself unwholesome or as a protection to the dairying industry. If it was unwholesome in the early days it is not so now. The minister has stated that oleomargarine is not unwholesome, but that it is a healthful article of food: It is not as good as butter, nobody pretends that. If it is a wholesome article of food, what justification is there for barring it out? If there was justification thirty years ago, that time had passed long before the recent years in which this matter has come up for discussion. So long as good butter could be obtained at a reasonable price, nobody paid any attention to this matter. If the question had been raised at any time during the last ten years, no good reason could have been found for banning oleomargarine.

Every country in the world except Canada recognizes that it is a legitimate article of commerce. One is reminded of the old story of the juryman who complained that he had never seen such stupid men in his life as the eleven others. The opponents of oleomargarine are in just that position. The whole world except Canada says: Oleomargarine is all right, let us buy it, and sell it if we can. But we are going to decide in Canada, against the judgment of the whole world, that it is not a legitimate article of trade, and it seems to me that that is not a position that can be maintained at all. We are told now that oleomargarine has been adulterated. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker; it is being adulterated by being mixed with butter. Well, adulteration implies the deterioration in quality of an article, and the creation of something inferior by the addition of a poorer substance, and you could not possibly adulterate oleomargarine by putting good butter into it. That argument is absolutely fatuous. It seems to me that the question we have been discussing is wholly a mistaken one. The sole question is this: Is it a fair article for general trade? That is all. I cannot believe that there is any danger to the dairy industry from the sale of oleomargarine. The question is much less important to-day than it was a year ago. I grant you that to-day it is not very material whether this Bill passes or not, for the people are not going to use oleomargarine in Canada if they can get good butter at a reasonable price, and but for the principle involved in the Bill, I would not raise my voice in the matter at all. If my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie), decides on an extension of time for another year, he is only putting off the responsibility for some other minister. This Bill, as introduced in the House, is a sound Bill. It recognizes that oleomargarine is a legitimate article of trade, and says that its sale shall not be forbidden, as has been done in the past. Put all the regulations you like around its sale, and take every precaution which you think will in any way prevent fraud. If you have not sufficient regulations to ensure that the article is properly stamped, and advertised to the public as oleomargarine, then make your regulations stronger. I will support the minister in anything that will guard against fraud, and whatever provisions he thinks are necessary to this end, I will commend; but do not commit the folly of prohibiting the importation and manufacture of this article when the whole world says that it is only an ordinary legitimate article of trade. The question of free trade does not enter into the matter at all. The Bill is not a tariff Bill. If you want to put a duty on oleomargarine, put it on by all means; I will not quarrel. It is quite as legitimate a subject for duty as is butter, and if you want to tax butter and tax oleomargarine as well, I shall not object. But that is not the question. The question is: Shall we or shall we not permit oleomargarine to be sold and manufactured? Some one says that no harm is done by the sale of oleomargarine if you grant this extension of time for a year, while others contend that even if you stop it, no injury will be done. Well, injury will be done to the people who have invested their money in whatever apparatus is necessary for the manufacture of oleomargarine. There are several factories in Canada, although I have not the pleasure of knowing any one connected with any of these factories and cannot say how they are individually affected; but if men have been induced to put money into factories for the manufacture of oleomargarine and are kept in suspense from year to year, it is certainly not fair to them. It would be far better to prohibit the manufacture and sale of this article at once, and have done with the question; but the idea of giving a few months' permission to people to manufacture the article, and then having the question raised a year hence, is an unfortunate mistake. I hope the minister will stand by his guns, because the Bill is a good one and I will support it.

Mr. H. M. MOWAT (Parkdale): Those who have so far taken part in the debate seem to be gentlemen who have come from the farm and are interested in the dairy industry. But there is another important class who wish to be heard in the matter, and that is the inhabitants of the cities. There is a very large demand for oleomargarine in the cities at times when the price of butter is as high as it was a few months ago, ranging from 65 to 70 cents. The mere fact that, fortunately for them, the price of butter is temporarily down, does not affect the principle of this Bill. The Dairy Industry Act of 1914, section 5, says:

> No person shall manufacture, import into Canada, or offer, sell, or have in his possession for sale, any oleomargarine.

If this Bill were defeated, that section I have just read would again come into force and interfere with business as it is at present carried on. I have received about twenty letters of protest from dealers, and I think it is only proper, now that the Bill is being discussed, that I should record the opinions expressed in those letters. I shall read them as I have them here:

> I am taking the liberty of asking you to do anything you can to prolong the life of oleomargarine in Canada.
>
> Arnold Bros.,
> Butcher & Grocers.

> If Oleomargarine were to be removed from the Canadian market I think it would work an actual hardship on a great many people who have been consistent users of this product.
>
> J. G. Pond,
> Grocer and Fruiterer.

> We would like to go on record as being absolutely opposed to the discontinuance of the sale of oleomargarine in Canada.
>
> Philbrook Bros.,
> Butchers.

> As I am one of many retail merchants in your constituency who sell this produce, would like to urge your support of the Bill.
>
> A. Snyder,
> Grocer.

> I have several customers who use oleomargarine all the year round and I do not see any reason why the people who wish it should not be able to buy oleomargarine as well as any other food product on sale in the retail stores.
>
> Frank H. Ball,
> Groceries and Fruit.

> Think it will work a hardship on some of the consuming public who buy oleomargarine for cooking and eating purposes.
>
> Lyndroute Groceries, Ltd.

> Have just heard that oleomargarine legislation is being considered at this session and as I have some customers who use this product at certain times of the year when butter is high, I would like to ask your support on any measure permitting the permanent sale of this product.
>
> A. E. Maundrell,
> Meats and Provisions.

> A number of my customers at some seasons find it a hardship to pay the high price of butter, and on their behalf I would like very much to have your support of any measure making the sale of oleomargarine a permanent matter.
>
> Alex Dury.

> I have customers who at some seasons of the year use this product exclusively on account of the high price of butter.
>
> G. Ferguson,
> Butcher and Grocer.

> I have a constant demand for it from a certain class of my customers.
>
> R. L. Love,
> Butcher.

> I find that there is quite a sale for oleo, and if the public as a whole are deprived of the privilege of buying it, it would work a hardship in many cases.
>
> C. Barrett,
> Grocer.

> Will you kindly lend your support to help the passage of any bill before the House which would permit the continuous sale of oleomargarine in Canada?
>
> John Sherriffs.

> Our customers buy this product because it effects a big saving in their household expenses. Oleomargarine is a clean and wholesale food product and as such we think it has a distinct place among other food products in Canada.
>
> Cook Bros.,
> Grocers.

As I understand it, the Dairy Industry Act, passed in 1914, was framed with the distinct object of providing that the manufacture of butter, cheese, and other dairy products should have certain restrictions and safeguards for the protection of the people, and this section with regard to the importation of oleomargarine was merely a little clause thrown in at the time by way of extra precaution. At that time, oleomargarine was a very different product from the article now sold; it was not surrounded by the protection of inspection now provided by the Department of Agriculture. It was entirely different from the oleomargarine now on the market. It seems to me, therefore, that it would work a great hardship on the business of the country if, by the defeat of this Bill, the Act of 1914 were revived, absolutely preventing the importation and sale of oleomargarine. But there is another reason why I think we should be at fault in not supporting the Bill, and that is the fact that the women are almost unanimously in favour of it. Those women who are engaged in the dairy business might probably, like those of our friends who have spoken against the measure, be opposed to the importation and sale of oleomargarine; but the ordinary woman in the country who belongs to Farmers' Institutes and kindred societies, does not believe that the sale of this article has any adverse effect on the dairy industry. Indeed, I have received a letter which shows that women's societies of this class are very much in favour of this legislation. I know, as a matter of fact, that the National Council of Women favour this Bill, and other bodies that support it are the Montreal Women's Club, the Housewives' League, the Catholic Social Service Guild, the Catholic Women's League, the Montreal Board of Trade, the Jewish Council of Women, the Local Council of Women, and the relief branches of the Salvation Army. Now that we have given the women of the country a voice in the direction of public affairs, by conferring upon them the right of the franchise, we should depend upon them to keep us properly advised in matters of this kind, because they are the buyers of the food for the family, and they know more about this sort of thing than any honourable gentleman who has spoken in the House on the subject to-day. They know what is good, and what is healthful in the way of food, and I do not think that any restrictions, such as would exist if this Bill were defeated, should be placed on the housewives and the home managers of Canada. For these reasons, and on behalf of the consumers not particularly engaged in the dairy business, I hope that this Bill will carry. The minister suggested to-night that he should limit the period of its importation for one year. I am inclined to agree with my hon. friend for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) that we should settle the principle now. If we are beaten it cannot be helped, but I do not think we will be beaten. To go back to the old legislation will be a distinctly retrograde step, and I hope the minister will not consider it.

[Mr. Mowat.]

Mr. J. W. KENNEDY (Glengarry and Stormont): The question now under discussion is of considerable importance to the people of this country, both consumers and producers, and I am inclined to think it affects the consumers to a much greater extent than it affects the producers. It has been argued that to allow the importation, manufacture and sale of oleo in Canada is a menace to the dairy interests of this country. With that view I cannot agree. I do not think that the permission to sell oleo in Canada, or to manufacture it, is a very serious menace, or in fact a menace at all, to the dairy business. The matter works out in this way: Ever since 1917 Canada has been exporting large quantities of butter, principally to the British market. The price of that exportable surplus has been determined on the British market where it has to go into competition with the butter of all other countries, and also with oleomargarine. The price of butter in Canada is, to a very large extent, determined by the price received for our exportable surplus. If the price in Canada falls below the price received for the exportable surplus, then the supplies of butter will be drawn away from our Canadian markets to go into our export trade occasioning a shortage which will enhance the home price to meet the price of the export trade. In the same manner, if the price on the Canadian markets rises above the export price, then the butter will be drawn away from our export trade until we will have no exportable surplus whatever. But as long as Canada has an exportable surplus of butter the price on our home markets will be largely determined by the price received on the British market, and the butter which is sold there is sold, and has always been sold, in competition with oleo. Therefore it is quite inconceivable that the admission of oleo into this country is going to affect the price received on the British market for our butter, and that price largely determines the price of Canadian butter on our Canadian markets. There may be slight variations, due to local causes which are of a more or less temporary character, but in the main that argument holds good. So that while we are now selling our butter in competition with oleo, it would not be any benefit to the dairymen of this country to have oleo excluded from our markets. In brief, my argument is, that to admit oleo into Canada for sale on the Canadian markets is not going to depress the price we receive for our Canadian butter; and to exclude it from our markets is not going to enhance the price in the Canadian markets, because the price paid for butter is in no way determined by the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. As I say, the price is determined by market conditions the world over, and the cost of production in Canada is not taken into account. I therefore think that much of the argument advanced against the measure which the Minister of Agriculture proposes is wide of the mark.

It has been said that oleo during the last two years has been displacing a large quantity of Canadian butter in the Canadian home. That is quite true, but it is unfortunate more from the standpoint of the Canadian consumer than from the standpoint of the Canadian producer, because the consumer is made to believe he is buying and using a substitute for butter, something which will give him an equivalent food value for butter, which contention I, of course, dispute. Very extensive investigations have been carried on by nutrition experts throughout Canada and the United States, as well as in Europe, and, although opinions differ, I am inclined to think the result of their conclusions would be that there are certain elements of nutrition—very essential to the growth of the human body and the maintenance of human vigour—present in butter and dairy products which is entirely absent from oleomargarine. So that the continued use of oleo instead of butter might, over a long course of years, be considered more or less of a detriment to the public health. That is a question which I commended to the consideration of the minister last year, and, I think he might well investigate that question more fully in the next twelve months during which he proposes to permit the importation of oleomargarine into Canada.

The statement has been spread broadcast throughout this country, and it has I think been repeated in this House on several occasions, that the sale of oleo is going to be a great boon to the Canadian people. Now I think that argument has been altogether over-estimated. Oleomargarine may be an advantage in certain times when the price of butter is very high, but when you figure out the amount of butter used by the average family, and figure out the difference in price between butter and oleo, and the actual financial advantage, I think the real advantage is very small indeed and has been very much over-estimated. Now while the dairymen of this country are quite ready to accept the competition of the manufacturers of oleo at any time, they do expect that that competition will be fair and above board, and that such manufacturers will not be permitted to impose something on the Canadian people as a substitute for butter which is not butter and which is not as good as butter. In view of this fact I would like to draw the attention of the minister to some of the restrictions the dairymen of this country would like to have imposed on this article, and in doing so I would suggest that those restrictions be embodied in this Bill. They should be covered by statute and not left to be a matter of regulation by the department. I think we should recognize the responsibility of Parliament in this matter, and insist that these restrictions be incorporated in the statute and not left altogether to the department. In the first place everybody knows that butter has a well recognized standard colour, although certain markets, of course, demand certain variations in that colour. Oleo is placed in the market largely with the view of taking the place of butter, and the manufacturers of the product have done all they can to imitate butter as to colour. It is true that they are prohibited by regulation from placing any colouring matter in the materials they put into oleo, but they get around that by including in their oleomargarine articles which in themselves are coloured and which give the product practically the same colour as butter.

The dairymen and consumers of this country have every right to expect that the minister will provide in his Bill that the manufacturers of oleomargarine shall not imitate the colour of butter in their product so that at a glance oleomargarine may be distinguished from butter. They might also rightly expect the minister to provide that on every package of oleomargarine its ingredients shall be printed or stencilled. This is not an unreasonable request, because it is already required in regard to commercial feeding stuffs. It will be remembered that in the Act passed last session providing for the regulation of the sale of certain commercial feeding stuffs, manufacturers were required to stencil their packages not only with an analysis of the chemical contents but with the proportions of the various ingredients. If the department is so solicitous for the welfare of our animals, surely they should be equally solicitous for the welfare of our people.

Then another thing which we have always considered more or less unfair is that although the Dairy Standards Act requires that nothing but butter fat shall be allowed to enter into the manufacture of butter, yet in the manufacture of oleomargarine it is permissible to use large quantities of butter and milk, these products of the dairy being mixed with other fats or oils. This practice, I think, is rather unfair to our dairymen, and they are quite justified in asking that no dairy product whatever be allowed to be used in the manufacture of oleomargarine. If the people of Canada want to use oleomargarine on their table, we are prepared to meet the competition of the manufacturers of oleomargarine, but we do object to meeting unfair competition by reason of their being able to use some of our products in the manufacture of oleomargarine, whereas we are prohibited—and quite rightly so—from using anything but butter-fat in the manufacture of butter.

These few suggestions I commend to the consideration of the minister during the next twelve months, so that before he decides to make this measure permanent he may consider the advisability of prohibiting by statute the practices that I have alluded to.

Mr. S. F. GLASS (East Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I do not very often claim the indulgence of the House, but I desire to say a few words on the subject now under consideration. I agree with a good deal of what the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Kennedy) has said. In my opinion our trouble at the present time is not so much the fact that oleomargarine is being manufactured and distributed, but the indefinite position in which it stands. In 1918 when the then Minister of Agriculture, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar), introduced a similar Bill he said:

> Now, I want to draw attention to the fact that the Order in Council with regard to oleomargarine sets out that it is to be regarded as a war measure. In the preamble we find these words:
>
> "Such regulations to be in force and to have effect for the period during which the present abnormal conditions continue, the conclusion of such period to be determined by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, as provided in the said regulations, and as a war measure only."

The Bill which he introduced permitted the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine under certain regulations, and I find the complaint in the country generally has not been so much against the manufacture of this article under the rigid restrictions imposed by the department, but that the sore touch all through has been that although a duty is imposed on the farmer's butter, yet this substitute, which is admittedly an inferior article, has been admitted free.

Prior to the expiration of that Act notice was given that it would be extended for another year, and the hon. gentleman who now occupies the position of Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie) when introducing the Bill in 1920 for that purpose said:

> Now, so far as the extension of time is concerned, it appears that the condition that prevailed when the Act was first passed to offset the high price of butter still obtains. Oleo is used to a very great extent by large numbers of poor people in the large cities and also in the country, and I consider that at the present time it is advisable to at least extend the Act for one year, and during that period to watch very carefully what measure might be adopted to put down the fraudulent use of oleo as butter. It is the intention of the department during that period to accumulate from other countries as much information as possible as to what is being done along this line, and to do their very best to apply this Act rigidly.

Now, Sir, the dairy industry of this country contributes a very large part of our agricultural production. The record I have here for 1919 shows that the value of the produce of the dairy for that year amounted to no less a sum than $251,526,201; and looking over the lists provided by the department, I find that the dairy interests of Western Canada have been increasing their production very rapidly, and that during the past five years the production has almost doubled. Therefore, our concern in this matter is not confined to the provinces of the East, it is a matter of very great concern to the provinces of the West.

I take it, Sir, that the people who represent this industry are entitled to some consideration. The hon. member who last spoke made several suggestions, almost all of which are embodied in the circular from the National Dairy Council of Canada, which was read this afternoon by the hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair). Now, Sir, who compose this National Dairy Council? Do they represent the interests of the great dairying industry? I find that from the Atlantic to the Pacific the dairy interests are linked up in this one great organization. In it are included the Ontario Milk and Cream Producers' Association, the Dairymens' Association of Western Ontario, the Dairymens' Association of Eastern Ontario, the Dairymens' Association of the Province of Quebec, the Montreal Milk Producers' Co-Operative Agricultural Association, Canadian Milk Distributers' Association, Canadian Ice Cream Manufacturers' Association, and so on. In the West we have the provincial dairymen's associations of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, and the Fraser Valley Milk Producers' Association. Coming back to the East, we have the New Brunswick Dairymen's Association, the Nova Scotia Dairymen's Association and the Prince Edward Island Dairymen's Association. It will be seen, therefore, that almost all the large dairy interests from the Atlantic to the Pacific are represented.

Now let me point out—and I say this by way of commenting on the suggestion that the minister has made to-night—that it may be all very well to let this matter stand for another year, to let it remain in its present unsettled condition, but personally I do not believe that is the best policy. There is a way of dealing with this matter, and dealing with it once and for all. I think the people are tired of the pussyfooting on this Bill; they want some definite policy on the part of the Government, something that will let them know definitely where they stand. This circular, a copy of which, no doubt, the Government has received, sets forth the views of the dairymens' associations—and I think they are reasonable views. I gather from a reading of the letter that they have become reconciled to the continuance of the manufacture of oleomargarine in Canada, but they ask that certain further restrictions be imposed, and I want to point out what they are. If they are reasonable, it seems to me that this matter should be disposed of once and for all, in such a way as to create satisfaction among these men—because there is an alternative which will suit them—and at the same time to be fair to the farmers who produce the butter; let oleomargarine, which comes into Canada free, pay a duty just as butter does I wish to read again the resolution adopted by the National Dairy Council at its annual meeting in Toronto last month and to make some comments as I go along. The resolution says:

> That this Council strongly disapproves of the efforts of manufacturers and vendors of oleomargarine to present that article in such shape, appearance and colour as to attempt to deceive purchasers into the belief that they are actually getting butter or an article with the same food values as butter. This Council is of the opinion that to remove the unfairness of the competition of oleo with butter, and to prevent deception and dishonesty, strict regulations in addition to those now in effect should be passed by the Government of Canada providing for a standard colour of oleo other than the colour of butter, the printing on the container of each package of oleo a statement of the ingredients used to make up the oleo and the proportions of each ingredient. Also that no dairy products be allowed to be used in the manufacture of oleo sold in Canada.

The hon. gentleman who preceded me has pointed out that the dairymen have said: We do not allow butter to be adulterated. We have thrown around that other staple agricultural product, maple sugar, all the necessary protection, and the people of this country endorse the action of the Government in that record. But we say, on the other hand: You may adulterate your oleomargarine with butter. The member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) I think, pointed out that you cannot adulterate an inferior thing with a better thing. I have not the strict definition of adulteration, but I think that adulteration might very well come under the head of blending these two entirely different articles of food to bring about a cheaper average. Be that as it may, that is the thing to which objection is taken; that is the thing which the Dairymen's Council of Canada would like this Government to correct. Is it or is it not reasonable? I cannot see any earthly objection to it. It is bad enough for these people to use milk in churning up their greases without their taking our standard creamery butter and using it in the manufacture of their product. The Canadian manufacturers of oleomargarine issued a circular a couple of years ago in which they asked the question: "What is margarine?" Then they went on to describe what it was. When you examine the ingredients of margarine you find that it certainly does contain a very large amount of pure dairy products. I quote from the circular of the Canadian manufacturers of margarine:

> Oleomargarine is a distinct product made of the following ingredients:
> Products of Canadian farms:—70 to 75 per cent.

They desire to point out that in the manufacture of this product they are using materials which are the product of the farm to the extent of 75 per cent. The circular goes on:

1. Oleo oil—separated from the crude edible beef fats of the abattoir so as to produce a soft fat. This has resulted in increasing the value of all beef fats. Its manufacture is safeguarded under rigid Government inspection so that it is a perfectly wholesome product. It is to the interest of every farmer to have oleo oil produced in Canada.

2. Neutral lard—separated from the crude, edible lard of hogs in such a manner as to eliminate the objectionable taste of ordinary lard. This also increases the general value of lard. It is produced under rigid sanitary inspection.

3. Milk—the fats are churned with milk under the most rigid sanitary inspection.

Note—only the finest creamery butter containing no artificial colour is permitted to be used.

Other products:—25 to 30 per cent.

1. Vegetable oils such as peanut, cocoanut and cottonseed oils. These must be of a quality to pass rigid Government inspection.

2. Salt is the only other product added.

These products are mixed together and churned in factories under the direct inspection of officers of the Department of Agriculture. Thus a distinct product is obtained which, by the excellence of the process of extraction and manufacture, has turned into a palatable form those fats, etc.

The people of this country have used oleomargarine during the last few years, including the last years of the war, and no one denies that it does contain 9 p.m. good food substances. But that is not what is the trouble. The trouble has been that we did not take the proper stand in the first place. It may have been all right to regard it as a good article of food in wartime, under proper safeguards, so that it could be sold on its merits, but, as I say, objection has arisen owing to the indefinite policy which has been pursued in reference to the matter. The importation and manufacture has been extended for a year and then for another year; no definite and permanent policy is adopted, and a state of uncertainty exists. It would have been far better if we could have faced the music and settled the thing once for all. I think it is possible for the minister to deal with this matter so that it will not be a recurring nightmare in this House and a continual source of irritation throughout the country. The National Dairy Council, as I have pointed out, prefer that oleomargarine should not be manufactured to compete with their butter. But they say, in concluding the letter to which I have referred:

It is submitted there is now no necessity or justification for the continuance of the manufacture or sale of oleo in Canada—

That is the opinion they express, for what it may be worth. The letter goes on:

[Mr. Glass.]

—but if it is the intention of Parliament to legalize the manufacture and sale of oleo in Canada after September 1st next, then I beg to ask in the name of this Council that the conditions set out in the above quoted resolution be made applicable.

The minister, no doubt, has a copy of this letter, and I hope, when he is speaking further on this legislation, he will be able to tell us whether there is any reasonable, consistent objection to the request or demand, as it may be, contained in this letter of the National Dairymen's Council. If that suits this representative body of dairymen in this country, surely it should be satisfactory to members of this House, because no matter what may be the wishes of individual farmers, that is the opinion of a great national body representing the dairy industry from the Atlantic to the Pacific. They set forth in their letter what they want, and it will be far better for the minister to frame legislation to meet the conditions set forth by them and to settle this thing once for all. Moreover, the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), before he brings down his Revenue Bill for the third reading, should have it definitely settled that butter which is produced in this country is not going to have a duty imposed against it when exported to the United States while oleomargarine is allowed to come into Canada free. There is nothing right, consistent, logical or reasonable in such a situation as that, and the Government cannot justify it. They will get over the difficulty, if the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance will come together on this subject and definitely decide that they are going to remedy this injustice. As the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's said earlier in the evening, there is no objection to that being done, and the request cannot reasonably be refused. The whole trouble can be avoided and definitely settled by dealing with the matter along the lines that I have suggested.

Mr. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise chiefly to say that I regret very much that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie) has decided to modify his Bill. I think he should go on with it just as he has it framed now. I particularly disagree with him in the contention that one of the reasons why we should modify the Bill is in order that Parliament may prorogue at a fixed date. That principle has controlled this House entirely too much in past years. If it is in the interest of this country that the oleomargarine question, as well as many other questions, should be settled definitely once for all, I do not think that the Government, with or without consent of the Opposition, should fix in advance a definite date when Parliament should prorogue. The House should rise only when its business has been properly completed, without regard to the personal desires of any one.

Regarding the question of oleomargarine, I should like to say a few words from the point of view of the consumer. There can be only two legitimate reasons why this Bill should not be accepted. One is that oleo in itself is unhealthful and unfit for use, and the second is that it is sold in such a manner as to deceive the public. I do not believe either of these conditions applies in this case. It has been pretty well established—it is admitted, I think, on all hands—that oelo is quite healthful and fit for consumption, and in the second place, it is the law, that all oleomargarine must be sold with the imprint of the commodity upon the wrapper.

I have no fault to find with the suggestion that has been made by the hon. member for Glengarry and Stormont (Mr. Kennedy) and others that the package itself should bear the name and, perhaps, the proportion of the ingredients that enter into the manufacture of oleomargarine. That is not an unfair provision. But if the article in itself is unobjectionable; if as the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) has said, it is a proper article of commerce, I do not see that this House has any right whatever to interfere with the choice of the individual with regard to its purchase. If a man wants to eat a tallow candle, he has a perfect right to do so, provided it will not do him an injury. I remember, in my youthful days when butter was occasionally so scarce and expensive that people spread lard upon their bread, and it is quite within their private right to do that if they so desire. There is entirely too much interference with personal liberty at present, and I have no particular commodity in mind when I say that. If the housewife desires to use oleomargarine, that is her right. We are told that butter is so cheap now that it makes little difference whether we permit the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine; people will buy butter in any event. In that case, then no harm is done to the producer of butter. But we have no guarantee whatever that in six months from now butter may not be at a very high price, and this question may become an important one again. We have to-day in our cities a great deal of unemployment. It is much more serious than it was during the war, and men have much less money with which to buy the necessaries of life than they had a year or two years or even three years ago. You can imagine a man in one of the larger or smaller cities who works, perhaps, three days a week. He has to make the little bit of money he earns reach just as far as he possibly can. He goes into a store and asks for oleomargarine. He knows what he is doing; he knows what he wants; he is satisfied to get oleomargarine because he can buy it a little cheaper than butter, and he tells the storekeeper that he wants oleomargarine. Who has the right to say to him that he shall not be allowed to buy oleomargarine because somebody wants to force him to buy butter? That position is absolutely unreasonable and untenable. It is just as unjustifiable as, for example, a case of this kind. We will say a woman with her little children goes into a store. The only kind of stockings that she can afford to buy for the little ones is cotton stockings. She would prefer to have them in wool or silk, but she has not enough money to pay for them. But the merchant says to her: "I am not going to sell you cotton stockings because to do so would hurt the wool or silk stocking business."

During the war the price of meat in Ontario was extremely high and it is so still, as a matter of fact. At that time the Government of Ontario stepped in and brought fish from James bay and sold it to the people at from 10 to 15 cents a pound. That was a great relief to the people in the cities and towns of Ontario. It would have been just as reasonable in that case for the stock-raisers to have made a complaint and demand that the people should not be allowed to consume fish because that hurt the business of the sale of meat and the raising of cattle. Or, we will say, some genius invents a practical method of heating our houses very cheaply with electrical current and the men who own coal mines interfere and say: "You must not be allowed to do that because it will injure our business of producing and selling coal." These instances may appear far-fetched, but I contend that they are absolutely on all fours with the contention to prohibit the importation or manufacture of oleomargarine. I would raise no objection if it were thought well to place some restrictions upon the importation of oleomargarine. I can see some reason in that; but I do not see what possible excuse there can be for prohibiting the manufacture of it in this country and the sale of it to our people if they want to buy it, provided always that the article is fit for use, is perfectly healthful and is not put up in such a way as to deceive the public. I am going to support the Bill, but I would again suggest to the minister that he do not limit its operation, but go right ahead and remove once and for all the restrictions on the manufacture, at least, of oleomargarine in this country.

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I have listened with a good deal of interest to the arguments advanced in connection with the Bill now before the House. I look at it possibly from a different angle from most of the speakers who have taken part in this debate. The last speaker (Mr. Euler) rather scouted the idea of the manufacture of oleomargarine being any interference with legitimate business, and pleaded for greater freedom in its manufacture. It is a remarkable thing that after over three years of experience with this commodity, the manufacture and importation of which has been provided for by legislation extended from year to year, with the assurance that the license would terminate when butter had reached a reasonable price, we have not yet had any explanation from those who ought to be in a position to know as to what really constitutes what is sold as oleomargarine in this country. We have in the Government service a large staff of officials who are supposed to be watching the manufacture of this article. Yet we have never had, to my knowledge, at least, any statement from the department as to just what constitutes oleomargarine. I quite agree with the statement that has been made that the consumer is entitled to know what he is paying for. He does not know that at the present time when he is buying oleomargarine. I must take exception to the statement that has been made by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), who said there could be no question of adulteration in connection with this commodity. My understanding of adulteration is that it is to falsify, by the admixture of baser ingredients of a lower value, and that is the very thing that is taking place in connection with the manufacture of oleomargarine, because to the butter which it contains are added these other ingredients. We had before the Committee on Agriculture a few weeks ago a Bil to permit the adulteration of maple products. That Bill was entertained by hardly one member of the committee, if I remember rightly. I think the Bill now before us might very well have been referred to that committee, but it has come upon us so suddenly, I suppose—it has only adorned the Order Paper since March 4—that we have not had time to think out the proper course to pursue.

Milk fat which enters into the manufacture of oleomargarine differs from other fats in that it contains certain life-giving substances that are essential to promote the growth of the young. Science so far has not yet been able to discover any other source from which the equivalent milk fat can be derived. Every one recognizes its value, and there are certain people who by reason of the fact that oleomargarine contains milk fat want to enter upon its manufacture, and mix with it baser ingredients purely with a view to commercial gain. That is exactly what is being done with oleomargarine, and I do not think it is fair. I do not think the Government are justified in again coming before the House with this measure without giving us some idea of what enters into the manufacture of oleomargarine in this country.

I have not opposed the importation or manufacture of oleomargarine. I have been consistent in that respect, and I hope I shall continue to be so. I have a very distinct recollection of a general election that was held in 1878. The arguments which were then advanced made a profound impression on my mind, and I remember many of them to this day. I thought when I read the speech from the Throne at this present session those who were engaged in the manufacture of dairy products were going to be protected as other people were to be protected. I think they are entitled to protection. In 1911, when the reciprocity question was before the people of this country, I had in my mind the arguments that were advanced thirty years ago, and the position the Canadian people were placed in when the reciprocity pact with the United States was abrogated by that country in 1866. We then had to develop other channels of trade. I believe that if we had entered into an arrangement with the people of the United States in 1911, it would not have had one particle of influence upon their putting into effect the tariff arrangement they have recently adopted, whereby a duty of six cents a pound is placed on our butter going into that country.

It is stated that oleomargarine is being manufactured in other countries, and that we are the only country in the world that has restrictions on its manufacture. That statement has not been substantiated. It is merely a bald statement, and I take exception to any such statement as that. There are safeguards provided in nearly every other country where oleomargarine is manufactured. I do not know of any other country in which the same pains were taken as in Canada to see that the manufacturers of this article were given the great privileges they were given under the Order in Council of 1917. Under that Order in Council the manufacturers have the right to get a license from the Government to mix whatever they see fit with butter, and they are given the exclusive right to do these things, because it is specifically mentioned that no factory where butter is being manufactured will be permitted to do anything of the kind. My hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) would surely not consider that the freedom for which he was contending. Our dairymen, who are engaged in the manufacture of a legitimate article of food, which has a standing and reputation all over the world, are debarred from mixing anything with butter, and particularly anything that goes into the manufacture of oleomargarine. But the Government say to the manufacturers of oleomargarine: We will give you a license to manufacture this stuff, and you can put in practically anything you see fit.

I wish to refer to a statement that has been sent out, and which doubtless every hon. gentleman has received. It is of the same character as other statements that have been issued for years by the manufacturers of this article, and it is absolutely false and misleading. Within the covers of the four sheets in which it is contained there is very little truth to be found. It says, in words that have been quoted here to-night, that oleomargarine is a product that is used to-day in practically every civilized country of the world, the gross per capita consumption being actually in the most important dairy countries. It states that Denmark in 1916 used fourty-four pounds per head of the population, and so forth, and goes on to say that 70 to 75 per cent of the ingredients of this article are obtained from the livestock products of the Canadian farms. It also refers to what has been said with regard to the value of the products which go into oleomargarine. It informs us that oleomargarine is made of pure, highly refined beef and pork fats, creamery butter and fresh milk. As a matter of fact, this fresh milk is fresh skimmed milk, and that was made quite clear by the general manager of the largest company manufacturing this article in Canada. They are permitted to incorporate about 14 per cent of skimmed milk, and to add a culture and other ingredients, all of which are mixed together and worked up in the churns in the factories, in order that the article may appear to be really a dairy product. This statement says that the justice of the manufacturers' request for permanent legislation permitting the production of oleomargarine lies in the simple fact that there are large quantities of animal fats produced in Canada which, in justice to the producers of beef cattle, and the manufacturers of livestock products, should be made up into the most palatable and valuable form possible. A few days ago, when we were putting through the Budget resolutions, which exempted oleomargarine and these ingredients from the sales tax, I pointed out that enormous quantities of this stuff were being brought into the country. I have a statement from the Customs Department, for eleven months of the past year, which shows that there were imported from the United States during that period, the following products: lard compound, 27,647 pounds; oleo oil,—this is the Canadian beef fat which they claim is to enter into this product—1,714,562 pounds; cotton seed oil, 889,208 pounds; cocoanut oil, 701,995 pounds; besides peanut oil, corn oil, nucoline, stearine, salt, and beef fats, or a total of 3,680,350 pounds. We put through legislation two years ago by which we refunded to these manufacturers 99 per cent of the duty collected on these ingredients that go into the manufacture of this article of food, and for the eleven months I have mentioned that total duty amounted to $138,367, which was turned back to those manufacturers who bought so largely in the United States.

Now, I do not intend to take up any more time of the House; I can make my position clear in a very few minutes. I want to point out, however, that, according to a statement which was submitted in the United States Congress, France does not even permit the retailer to dispose of butter and oleomargarine, and to-day, I will venture to say, a very large proportion of this article of food is being sold to and consumed by people in Canada who are under the impression that they are using butter. When you find it difficult to keep butter on the knife, particularly in cold weather, you can readily understand that it has not the consistency of real butter, but is really oleomargarine. When a manufacturer is supposed to turn out a good article, and is surrounded with regulations to ensure the purity of that article, being prohibited from mixing that article with something else, I do not see why some one else should be given a license to purchase this superior article, mix it with an inferior product and place it on the market without anything to show what it really is. It is contended that the wrapper must indicate the nature of the article, and it is also said the word "oleo" has to be put on the covering. As a matter of fact, however, immense quantities of this stuff are bought up and placed in many boarding houses in the country, and there is good reason for the belief that it is coloured and worked over and placed on the tables of the country as butter. I object to the unfairnes that is practised in connection with this article.

There is no article of food, or, for that matter, anything else, in connection with which there has been so much deception and fraud as has been practised in the United States, or in any other country where the manufacture of oleomargarine is permitted. I believe that in the United States, apart from the export business, the manufacturers are not permitted to put up oleomargarine in containers of less than ten pounds; and in Germany, I understand, no dairy produce is permitted to be incorporated in it. Many manufacturers of margarine in this country are also opposed to the mixture of butter with this article, and I think that if it is to be sold at all it should sell on its own merits, and on its merits alone. If that is done you will get a better article of food than you are getting to-day, because there are many articles used now in the manufacture of oleomargarine that are made palatable simply by being churned in milk, to which culture has been added, giving it a wholly artificial flavour. Now, we have a Health Department in this country, and analysts without number in connection with our departments of Government. Why have they not analyzed this article and given us a statement which might guide us to-day in dealing with this measure, which seeks to make permanent the manufacture of this oleomargarine? Would not that be reasonable? Is it not something which the people are entitled to know? If this is such a splendid article of food, why is it that there is no one to-day who is in a position to tell us what really goes into the manufacture of this article. Why should it be left to me to bring here a statement from the Customs Department showing what actually transpired in this country during the past year? The Minister of Finance will advise the people of this country to buy home-made articles, and to see that money is not sent to the United States; and yet we refund to manufacturers, who buy these ingredients in the United States, the duty that was collected on this article of food.

I have been a consistent protectionist for many years, and I am a consistent protectionist to-day, but I may say here and now that if the business in which I am engaged, and others also, is going to be singled out and not protected, if it is going to be subjected to the most unfair and contemptible process of competition, it is possible for the mind of man to conceive of, I am not going to follow any such policy as that. In view particularly of conditions at the present time, and of the strenuous years that are confronting us, I say it is absolutely necessary that we should have a protective policy in this country. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) may quote Asquith, and other men in the United Kingdom as to what we should have under freedom of trade. But we have not freedom of trade, nor are we in a position to demand freedom of trade no matter how much we would like to have it. We must face conditions as they are, and with the great country to the south raising a tariff barrier against us such as they are doing, it is absolutely essential that the farmers of Canada should have the same degree of protection that the manufacturers have had for years and which they are entitled to have now

I do not believe that we can have a well-balanced community unless we adopt the policy of give and take. I believe that our prosperity in this country depends more on a prosperous farming community than it does on anything else. We have induced 25,000 of our returned men to go upon the land, and they have obtained loans from the Government in order to carry on. I have pointed out in the past that I was afraid many of these men would curse the day they ever accepted a loan from the Government and went on the land, and when I said that I believed I knew what I was talking about. Are you going to put those men in the position to-day that many engaged in the dairy business are in? Are you going to put them in the position of producing an article at less than cost? The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Kennedy) pointed out that the price of butter, or of dairy products, in this country cannot be fixed by the Canadian people at the cost of production plus a reasonable profit—it has to be fixed on the markets of the world. The argument of the manufacturers of implements, of clothing, of boots and shoes, or anything else in this country is that they cannot go on manufacturing unless they do so at a profit, and that it is important and essential that they should be able to do so. They point to the fact that they have men engaged in these industries, that they provide a home market for our produce, and that in that way great benefit results to the community. I quite agree with that argument. At the same time, however, I want to point out that the farmer cannot go on manufacturing butter or cheese, or anything of that kind, unless he does so at a profit. Hon. gentlemen understand the movement that has been going on for a number of years past from the farm into the town and the city. To such a degree has this been going on that you will find, even this year, that almost all the men who are walking the streets of our towns and cities are out of employment. Never, during all the years I have been engaged in farming, have I found it so difficult to get farm help as during the present year. Never, during all my experience, have I found farm help as scarce as it is at the present time, and I want to say this: You will find if the present prices continue, if the deflation—which has come in advance as far as the products of the farmer are concerned; deflation has reached the farmer before any one else—if deflation continues you are going to have conditions in regard to which I can only say, "God help this country."

I intend to move when we go into committee on this Bill that no dairy produce shall be used in the manufacture of oleomargarine. I am in favour of allowing the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine in Canada, but I would only permit it to enter this country subject to a duty as other articles are subject, and I think that is the proper course to take. As to extending this privilege for the year, we were told in 1917 after it had been adopted by Order in Council and then submitted to Parliament, that it was a temporary measure introduced by the Government in order to overcomme the difficulty the poor people had in getting butter or a "spread" for their bread, and that when the period of deflation had arrived we would go back to the old condition of affairs. Now the proposition is to continue the privilege for a further period. When the price of butter on the wholesale markets of this country has reached within a fraction of 25 cents a pound we are asked to continue it for another year. Just one year more! Yes and when that year has expired it will be a case of granting another year or "You have had it so long now you might just as well make it permanent". Those are the arguments that have been put up to us and which we have had to meet in the past. Who is getting all this rebate in connection with this commodity? I notice that one company who had a license from the Government to manufacture this article has received during the past two years $171,-906 of rebate in connection with the articles which they were importing and putting into the manufacture of this stuff. What a howl would be raised by some hon. gentlemen sitting in this House if some article they were manufacturing was taken and the label removed from it and some parts of it were used in the manufacture of another article? They would not be so submissive as they are to-day. I do not like it, and it is not a pleasure for me to speak as I am doing in connection with this matter, but I am going to be consistent even though the Government are not consistent upon this subject. I believe in protection. I believe in protecting particularly the interest of the farmers of Canada, as well as those who are engaged in other industries. I belive it is essential for the prosperity of this country that that should be done; and I am of opinion that if we do that, if we pull together as we should and adopt a policy of give and take—a little here and a little there—we will soon overcome our difficulties. But if we are going to send our money out of the country and buy something cheap where we can get it—just as there was laid on the markets of the city of Toronto during the Spring butter from Argentina, badly mottled butter, which was churned in a factory in that city and placed on the markets of Canada—why, it is an altogether different matter. A process such as that is contrary to the Dairy Standards Act. There is a clause in that Act which prevents anything of the kind being done but our inspectors did not carry out the law. The fact that this was done was published in all the newspapers at the time. Where was the staff of inspectors that are paid to superintend the manufacture of oleomargarine? It is one thing to appoint inspectors and apparently another thing to enforce the regulation. There is no reason why we cannot have an analysis made by the Health Department that is supposed to be regulating the food products of this country. Where have they been that they have not submitted a statement to us in connection with this matter? We should prohibit the incorporation of dairy produce in this stuff. Then I assure you you will get a better article of food than you are getting to-day. Because oleomargarine can be manufactured and placed on the market much cheaper than is the case to-day in this country, and it will be a more wholesome food, if not so palatable, than the article which they are now producing. It is by reason of the palatability of the ingredients that this article is made attractive.

Do you imagine for a moment it is from philanthropic motives that large manufacturers such as the Harris Abattoir people and the Swift Canadian Company, who are the only two manufacturers in this country so far, want the privilege of manufacturing this product? Why beef tallow is worth about three cents a pound at the present time, and skim-milk is worth possibly twenty-five cents a hundred pounds or a quarter of a cent a pound. They are permitted to incorporate as high as 14 per cent of skim-milk in this product and place it on the market. With tallow fixed up by the stearine being extracted from it they are enabled to place this cheap commodity on the market. You may say, "Oh, it does not cost us within ten, fifteen or twenty cents of the price of butter, and consequently we will purchase it." But you have not the faintest idea as to the value of the article you are purchasing. Its composition ought to be stamped on the label, as is the case when we are purchasing fertilizers or foodstuffs, for there is infinitely greater reason why the nature and proportion of the ingredients of oleomargarine should be disclosed on the package. I would go further and put a stop to the deception which is practiced in the colouring of this article. Mr. McLean, general manager of the Harris Abattoir Company, made the statement on oath before a committee of this House a short time ago that the manufacturers overcome the difficulty of the colour by buying up large quantities of June butter—which, as is well known, has a very high colour—and by adding it to the other ingredients a colour is imparted to the article which makes it resemble butter and so deceive the people. The manufacturers of oleomargarine are very clever in that particular as they are in many other respects.

I might refer to certain other practices in the manufacture of this article, but I will not do so for the present. I think the Government would be well advised to deal with the matter now and embody the conditions to which I have alluded instead of staving it off for a few months longer.

Mr. H. A. FORTIER (Labelle): (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this measure to extend for another year the sale of oleomargarine, and I wish, before the House, to support my attitude by word and vote. Such a legislation is prejudicial to the agricultural interests of the country. It is also, Mr. Speaker, an insult to the good taste of the citizens of this country. We were told, when this legislation was introduced some years ago, that it would be of a temporary character only, that it was intended for war times and no longer, and that as soon as normal conditions would return, the Government would deem it their duty to recall it.

In fact, when this legislation was introduced, the price of butter was very high and it was feared that it would be impossible, at a later time, to take advantage of this commodity which was greatly needed. That is why the Government of the time, following the example set by the governments of other countries, thought it advisable to bring up this legislation which was decidedly of a temporary nature. Now that normal conditions have returned, that the war is over, we would do well to abolish it. Canada is known amongst other countries as an essentially agricultural country and it would certainly be prejudicial to her good reputation, and her agricultural interests, to maintain such legislation. What will other countries think if Canada is not able to produce enough butter for home consumption, if she is obliged to resort to such a substitute, such a subterfuge? Should we have recourse to such an expedient, were we to maintain such a substitute, instead of the pure food, we would certainly be giving Canada a poor certificate in the eyes of other nations.

Those who have spoken before me and have supported this Bill, have been the mainstays of this Bill, have thought proper to support their request for such legislation by so-called petitions which have been signed in certain parts of the country and also by women's associations. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that these petitions were prepared some time ago; when the price of butter was still very high, almost as high as those we had to pay of late years. One need not go back very far, indeed, to find that prices were comparatively high. A month ago, two months ago, at the very time when such petitions might possibly have been signed, the price of butter was very high. But now that this price has been greatly reduced—the price is really very low—legislation to replace butter by a substitute owing to the high cost of the former cannot be justified.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am in favour of pure food when there is a question of such a commodity as butter, and I object to all substitutes. We may be rather inclined to-day to replace the pure food by the substitute that is unfortunately too often introduced on the market. Substitutes to-day have been manufactured even for olive oil, and if we continue to allow substitutes to replace necessary food, first-class commodity, like butter, we are opening the door to absolutely harmful legislation.

I do not intend to speak at length and to repeat the excellent reasons which have already been advanced in opposition to this Bill by those who have preceded me. I have always declared myself in favour of agricultural interests; I have always done so in this House and will so continue when occasion arises to stand in defence of these interests. If there exists an industry which has progressed with great difficulty in this country, it is the dairy industry. I remember, years ago, the campaign which was undertaken throughout the provinces so as to establish this dairy industry which has become the principal agricultural industry and has been the main cause of the prosperity of our farmers. Many an expenditure has been made in the province of Quebec to promote this industry; many a grant has been given by the different governments, federal as well as provincial; many an endeavour has been made by our statesmen, so as to impress on the minds of the people the desire to improve the dairy industry. Now that we have obtained this result, that this industry has been largely developed, I think we would give it its death blow were we to say: The butter which you produce, which is so fresh and white, resembling somewhat our clover blossoms and which has the fragrance of our fields, this butter, we do away with. Why? Because we prefer a substitute which is nameless, this kind of oleomargarine which should never be seen on our tables.

Mr. Speaker, I stand in defence of our agricultural interest and in so doing I am protecting all classes of society. I do not think any one would rise in this House on behalf of the working class to defend oleomargarine. On the table of the poor, as well as on the table of the rich, good butter is demanded to-day, such butter as can be produced in the country, at a reasonable price. It is said: The price is very low, at present, but it might be raised later. That is possible. I do not know what the fluctuations of the market are, but the price of butter is now the same as in prewar times, and future fluctuations will not be such that the poor labourer cannot get good butter. Therefore I am in favour of good butter and shall certainly vote against the hon. minister's Bill.

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I must offer my congratulations to my hon. friend who has just preceded me (Mr. Fortier), and also to my hon. friend from South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) who has pleaded so eloquently the cause of good butter and the rights of the farmers. It does not appear to me, Sir, that the Government are very anxious to see this measure pass, but that they are rather acting upon the demands made by some interests—quite legitimate, doubtless—and in the meantime are willing to leave this question absolutely free to all members without giving any recommendation for or against. When the resolution which preceded this Bill was introduced last Saturday it was my intention to oppose it, but the Prime Minister said then that the adoption of the resolution would in no way be interpreted as general assent to the measure or to the principle embodied in it. I therefore take this opportunity to express as strongly as I can my opposition to this Bill.

I have tried to inform myself as to the facts and circumstances in connection with the sale of oleomargarine in Canada during the last few years. I may be mistaken in my understanding of the situation—if so, I wish to be corrected. But my information is that up to the year 1917 the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in Canada had been prohibited. I take this first fact as an argument in favour of the contention which I now make. There must have been good reasons for prohibiting the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine prior to 1917, and I maintain that those reasons still exist. This product was allowed to be placed upon the market because of the exceptional circumstances which then prevailed. The Government, making use of the powers vested in them by the War Measures Act, passed an Order in Council in 1917 to allow the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in Canada. At that time and on several occasions since it has been argued by the Government and by members of the House that this Order in Council was passed as a war measure in order to place at the disposal of the people a certain article of food at a reduced price. We all know that at that time the consumption of butter, sugar and other articles of food had been limited, and it was therefore thought proper to permit the use of oleomargarine. For my part, I thought the course then taken was a wise one. But there came a time when Orders in Council were no longer of avail and in order to permit the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine the Government had to pass a Bill.

So far as I am aware, the first Bill ever passed in this country to allow the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine was the Bill which became chapter 24 of the statutes of 1919, second session. This enactment is entitled "An Act to Permit the Temporary Importation, Manufacture and Sale of Oleomargarine in Canada." Now, I submit that the title of the Bill in itself indicates the extent to which it was supposed to go. I insist on that word "temporary," because it was made clear to the House at the time that the measure was only a temporary one; that there was never any question of passing a law of a permanent character to allow the importation, manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. But it was argued when that Bill was passed that a year or so after the war the price of foodstuffs had largely increased and that an enactment of this kind, temporary in its character, would be of benefit to the country. I am ready to say, Sir, that even at that time I would not have strenuously opposed the Bill, although I was in principle always against the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in this country. So much for 1919. Then last year, 1920, this legislation was supplemented by another Bill extending until the month of October, 1921, the period during which the manufacture and sale of this product might be carried on in Canada, and we are now considering a Bill to make a further extension of another year.

10 p.m.

The question is: Is it necessary or expedient that we should at this time allow the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine for a year from next October? In order to answer that question, one must consider the actual condition of the dairy industry at the present time. Last year, in the month of May, butter was selling at 55 cents wholesale; in May of this year butter has been sold wholesale at as low as 26½ cents—the price to-day wholesale is 28 cents. Therefore, Sir, the best quality of creamery butter is selling to-day at exactly 50 per cent less than the price which prevailed a year ago. I may say also that a year ago oleomargarine was selling at about 35 or 40 cents a pound. Now, if twelve months ago such an inferior and doubtful product as oleomargarine was selling at 35 or 40 cents a pound, I say that this year the public have the means to pay 28, 30 or 32 cents a pound, whatever the retail price may be, for good butter. The reasons which prompted the action of the Government in 1917, 1919 and 1920 to permit the manufacture and sale of this product do not exist to-day. The main reason was the high cost of living, but to-day the price of butter does not contribute to the high cost of living. We must, therefore, give to butter the same standing that it had before this war measure was passed in 1917; in fact, so far as that product is concerned we are in the same position to-day that we were in prior to the war.

The prohibition of oleomargarine is for the benefit of both the producer and the consumer. To permit the manufacture and importation of it is unjust alike to the farmer and to the consumer, or poor man. It is unjust to the farmer because this article of food, which is an inferior article, is sold in direct competition with butter, the product of the farmer. It is unjust to the consumer or poor man, because oleomargarine is a product of doubtful origin; it is a product of which we have no complete analysis; it is a product, the value of which as food, and particularly as a healthful food, is very doubtful. At the present time, would the farmers of the United States allow Canadian manufacturers to ship oleomargarine into that country to be sold in competition with butter? We know what the Americans are doing at the present time to encourage the farming community in that country. To-day the greater part of the oleomargarine consumed in Canada comes from the United States, so that what I have said is one more reason why that product should not be allowed to enter Canada. Therefore, the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine should be prohibited for the sake of the farmer and also for the sake of the consumer or poor man, because it is more advantageous for the consumer or poor man to buy butter at the price at which it can be bought to-day than to use the secondary or inferior product which is called oleomargarine.

This House has been detained long enough upon this subject, and it is not my intention to speak further upon this point. I might have other considerations to offer, but I do not think it is worth while to offer them, because hon. members already have their minds pretty well made up in regard to this matter. The only thing which we have to do is to endeavour to dispose of the Bill in such a way that it will be set aside and the manufacture and sale of this article will be forever prohibited in this country after the month of October next. Consequently, in order to bring the discussion on this subject to a definite and practical point, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), to strike out the word "now" in the main motion and to add at the end of the motion the words "this day six months."

Mr. R. J. MANION (Fort William and Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take up two or three minutes of the time of the House in speaking to this question. When this subject originally came up, I think, in 1918, I had the pleasure of supporting the then minister in bringing in the resolution which is practically the same as the one now before the House. I should like to say at the outset that if I at all believed that permission to bring in or manufacture oleomargarine would do any real injury to the farming or dairy industry of this country, I should feel inclined to oppose this legislation on general principles, because I think every member in this House will admit that our farming industry is necessarily the backbone of the country. But I do not believe the importation or manufacture of oleomargarine will do that. I well remember, in my various visits to England, that oleomargarine was used to a great extent in that country. I also vividly remember that, during service in the line, the soldiers of all the Allies that I had anything to do with, were using oleomargarine, and so far as I know they found it as useful and as palatable to them in the form manufactured in England as butter.

The question of food value has been taken up by various speakers on this subject, and while I will not dispute for a moment the statements that oleomargarine has not so good a food value as butter, at the same time I submit, so little of either of those materials is used in the dietary of the ordinary man, woman or child, that a slight difference in the food value is not of much importance. I agree with those who state that this material should be distinctly marked as oleomargarine; that by no stretch of our laws should anybody be permitted to sell oleomargarine as butter, not because I think that this article might necessarily do any harm to the purchaser, but because it would be a form of deception which should not be permitted to be practised by any manufacturer or dealer in this country.

The main reason why I think, particularly at the present time, the manufacture or importation of oleomargarine will do no harm to the dairy industry is because of the prevailing price of butter. I do not believe any Canadian will buy oleomargarine when he can buy butter in the neighbourhood of 30 or 35 cents a pound. Therefore, I submit that no harm will be done to the dairy industry, and I believe other speakers have given to the House figures showing that since the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine has been allowed in this country, the manufacture of butter has increased. The main thing which I wish to point out is that oleomargarine is sold very widely in the dairy shops of England, and people in that country on many occasions cannot tell oleomargarine from butter. I had the experience of sitting many times in hotels and restaurants in which we disputed whether we were using oleomargarine or butter, and what was considered a good food over there—and no one disputed the fact that it was a good food—should not do any harm if used by the people of this country.

I believe that the principle is right that you cannot prevent the manufacture of a food unless that food can be shown to be injurious to the people who might use it. In these few words, I wish to put myself on record. My constituency is not a city one entirely; I have in it dairies which from their standpoint have opposed the manufacture and importation of oleomargarine and I have no quarrel with them. But at the same time, looking at the matter from the broader standpoint of the good of the people in general, I think the minister is quite correct in bringing in this Bill. I also wish to support him in, for the time being, limiting it to a year. The reason why he modified it to a certain extent and limited it to a year was in order to get, so far as he could, what was best suited to the largest group in this House, and my opinion is that our laws should be introduced in such a way as to meet the view of the great majority who believe that those laws are in the best interest of the country.

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (George Etienne Cartier): Since I have had the honour of occupying a seat in this House, for the last three or four years we have had an annual oleomargarine day. Yesterday we had Empire Day. The difference between Empire Day and oleomargarine day is that on Empire Day we have a holiday and the House is not sitting, but on oleomargarine day we have to sit and listen to such a discussion as has taken place this afternoon and evening. It seems to me it is somewhat beneath the dignity of Parliament for hon. members to be discussing this question annually. We have an annual discussion—we have not reached it yet this year, and I am beginning to hope we may not—on navigation freight rates by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong). For years we have had an annual flax day, and now we have our annual oleomargarine day. Seeing the House is shortly to prorogue we were hoping we might escape this, but perhaps for the sins we have committed during the year we are obliged to do this day's penance. I have looked up the definition of the word oleomargarine and I find this:

> Consists of a mixture of oleo oil, with neutral lard, frequently with the addition of vegetable oil, usually cottonseed oil, the whole being churned with milk, salted, and worked like butter. Sometimes a small amount of butter is also added.

It seems to me that as lard forms one of the ingredients of oleomargarine I should be the only person in this House to object to it, but I am broad enough to be willing to discuss this thing from the purely Christian standpoint, if I may use the expression. If I want to use oleomargarine, and am willing to put my soul in danger by the use of it, what business is that of anybody else? I have in my division quite a large number of Christian voters, who perhaps prefer oleomargarine to butter. Some people have such a perverted taste and palate that they may like oleomargarine, but is there any person here who will tell me that if my palate is perverted to that extent, I must not use it? We have introduced in this country within recent years laws prohibiting the importation, sale and manufacture of liquor—which laws are in vogue—in every province except the good old province of Quebec. We protested against such a law, and we in Quebec have a law of our own, which is satisfactory not only to us, but to all the visitors from neighbouring provinces. Now this Parliament is beginning to encroach on the food of the people. Where is this going to lead us? The hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) made a long harangue this evening and declared that it was not good for anybody to eat oleomargarine. Other hon. gentlemen coming from districts where there is a large farming community also told us that oleomargarine is very deleterious, that it is dangerous, that it is poison, and that we ought to eat butter. I ask myself this question: Would the hon. member for South Oxford or other hon. members who have spoken in this debate against the use of oleomargarine have the same views if they represented city divisions? I wonder if they would. Personally, I consider that these proposed restrictions are an encroachment on the liberty of the citizen. We have the right to eat whatever we want, and if it suits us to use oleomargarine, we will use it. I think it is absurd for hon. gentlemen who talk here every day about freedom and liberty and freer trade and fairer trade to assert here to-night that that is all right in a thereotical way, but when it comes down—

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Would my hon. friend favour the dairymen being permitted to mix these commodities with the butter, and to place the product on the market?

Mr. JACOBS: Certainly, if the label clearly indicated what the mixture was. If I want to use a mixture of that kind, why should I not be allowed to do so? One of the members for Toronto, speaking on this question a couple of years ago, told us that oleomargarine was quite as wholesome as butter, providing the ingredients which comprise the article were wholesome when they went into its manufacture. I understand that the hon. gentleman was city Health Officer for Toronto, and that is the information we have on his unimpeachable authority. There is nobody who would suggest for a moment that the ingredients of oleomargarine are deleterious. It is simply a question whether we are going to bar the importation of this article in order to send up the price of butter. Speaking for myself, I am against any such action. Butter is strong enough to stand on its own feet, and I refuse to have butter forced down my throat if I want to use oleomargarine.

Mr. G. W. ANDREWS (Central Winnipeg): Had it been my privilege to speak before you left the Chair at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I should then have been in a position to congratulate my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture on being better late than never, but in view of his remarks since six o'clock I can only hope that it will be my privilege to congratulate the members of the House as a whole on passing the Bill as it was originally brought down.

I have listened with a great deal of sympathy to the remarks of hon. gentlemen who are opposed to the measure. For nearly seven years it was my job to milk cows week days and Sundays, and to sell the product in the form of butter, and I have no hesitation in saying that it was the toughest job that I have ever done in the way of trying to make an honest dollar. Butter, in proportion to the amount of labour put into it, is, I believe, and has been for years, the cheapest and the most valuable product that is sold in Canada, and I believe that if it were sold at double its present price it would still be the cheapest food product in Canada. When one compares a glass of milk at five or ten cents with a glass of this temperance stuff that is put up at the same money—why, there is no comparison. I have often thought that if milk was advertised in the same way these other products are, there would be a fortune in it for some one.

Having said that with regard to butter and milk, I want to say a word for oleomargarine, because it has been my privilege to eat quite a lot of it, and I have found it very palatable and wholesome. Like my hon. friend from Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion) I have seen the time when Canadians sat around a table eating oleomargarine for a week, and there were no complaints that it was not butter they were eating. The point I really desire to make was made this afternoon by my hon. friend the member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding). It is this—and I can only emphasize it: If I have not the price to buy good butter I am mighty glad to buy good oleomargarine, and if I have the price to buy good butter I will never buy oleomargarine. That, I believe, is the view of the great majority of the constituents I have the honour to represent. I shall have great pleasure in supporting the Bill as it was originally brought down.

The hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Glass) asked the Government to take a definite stand on this matter and settle it once and for all. The hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) repeated that request. I also ask the minister to settle this matter once for all, but for different reasons. With the permission of the House I shall read a short extract from a letter I have received this month from one of my constituents:

> I was lead to expect the new Margarine Act was in course of preparation and would be put in force shortly. The local papers have given us no information on the subject, and my people are anxious to commence operations as soon as the new Act becomes operative.
>
> Will you be good enough to advise me when you expect the new Act will pass the House, so that I may advise my people?

That refers to the building of something like a $300,000 factory in Winnipeg. To-day, when we are so anxious to start building operations to bring down the cost of the commodities of life and to give employment to those who are out of work, I would ask hon. members, is this any time to postpone either of these desirable objects for a year?

Mr. P. R. Du TREMBLAY (Laurier-Outremont): The only objection I have to the legislation before the House is that it is not to be permanent. This food, which is the subject of discussion, is either good or bad; if it is bad, the consumption of it should be prohibited, and if it is good, then its sale should be permanent. I do not see why we should prevent the sale of this article which, I understand, is subjected to the inspection of an officer appointed by the Government. A large number of peop'e in the cities and towns, rich and poor alike, use oleomargarine. According to figures I have, margarine is sold to-day at between 18 and 20 cents, and butter at 35 cents; and when butter was sold at 60 cents, the price of margarine was 35 cents. This shows that there has always been a difference between the prices of these two articles of food a difference which is quite appreciable to the consumer. It is contended by some that people do not like margarine. That is not so; on the contrary, it is becoming more and more popular, and it seems to me to be unjust that poor people who cannot afford butter should be denied the privilege of buying this commodity, which is certainly a desirable article. I do not think the Government has any right to limit its sale to a period of only one year. The very fact that they allow its sale at all is recognition that the food is good, and if oleomargarine has good food value—and I do not think there can be any doubt about this—it should not be kept out of the market. It was stated a few moments ago that most of the oleomargarine used in Canada is bought from the United States. That is probably due to the fact that in that country the sale of this article is permanent; but in Canada the business men dare not enter on any large scale into this enterprise, because the Government to protect a certain class, are now making it known that next year the importation and sale of margarine will be prohibited. I repeat that the only part of this legislation to which I object, and I object to it strongly, is that it is to be applicable for only one year. This food should be placed on the market in open competition with every other article.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend is under the impression that this legislation is only for one year. The Bill, upon which we are voting, makes the importation and sale of oleomargarine permanent, but the minister has intimated that he may limit it to one year later on.

Mr. DuTREMBLAY: I am glad the member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), has corrected me. I was under the impression from a remark made by some hon. member, that it was only for one year.

Mr. J. A. LEDUC (Westmount-St. Henry): I did not intend to speak on this question, but as I know something about butter and oleomargarine, perhaps it is my duty to place my views before the House. I represent a city constituency, and I think it is only right that, especially after having received letters from housewives from every part of the city of Montreal, I should ask the Government to pass some legislation permitting the sale of oleomargarine. For every hundred boxes of butter sold during the war, twenty-five boxes of oleomargarine were sold, and of that proportion I have not heard, so far, one complaint respecting the quality of margarine. This article is, and should be, subject to the same inspection as any other kind of food; the federal inspectors have a perfect right to inspect it. The fact that no complaint has so far been made in regard to the quantity that has been sold up to the present time, shows that it is in every respect a good article of food, and the Government should not prevent those who cannot afford butter from buying this cheaper food, which is perfectly wholesome. I know of many people who cannot pay 60 and 65 cents for butter, but who were only too anxious, when that article was selling at those prices, to buy margarine at 35 cents; and I myself have eaten margarine on the trains coming from Montreal to Ottawa, when we had to pay $1.50 for meals.

Mr. JACOBS: Is that the Canadian National?

Mr. LEDUC: The Grand Trunk and the Canadian National. Now, oleomargarine, if it is properly put up and has passed a strict inspection, is a perfectly palatable food and should be placed on the market for those who cannot afford to buy butter. It has been pointed out that while some people could not afford butter at 60 cents a pound, they are able to buy it at 30; and this week, it is true, we have been able to buy butter at 28 cents a pound wholesale. But that does not say that six months hence butter will not be sixty cents a pound again, as soon as exportation starts. When that happens, what will those people do who cannot afford butter, if we prohibit the sale of margarine? The member for Joliette (Mr. Denis) says that every one can afford 30 cents a pound for butter. That may be so; but consider the question of wages in connection with this. When men were earning $6 and $8 a day, butter at 60 cents a pound did not mean as much to them as butter at 30 cents a pound does now, when wages are so much lower than they were at that time. I hope the Bill will pass, because we must protect not only one class; we must consider the welfare of those who cannot make butter for themselves, or who cannot afford to pay the high prices of butter. The question is asked, why do not people buy butter in quantities now that it is cheap? Well, every one knows that in the cities to-day poor people cannot afford to buy, because they cannot keep more than one pound of butter at a time. So they buy a pound of oleomargarine every day just as they require it, because it is freshly manufactured and sold in a fresh state. Those people who, in former years, were able to buy a tub of butter in the fall and were able to keep that butter during the whole winter cannot do so to-day. The modern dwellings of the great mass of city residents are so constructed that they have no place in which to store food products; in fact they are so short of accommodation that they frequently have to put articles under the bed. The dwellings and apartments of the toilers of to-day give no opportunity to buy food products ahead in any quantity, because they simply cannot be stored under conditions that will enable them to be kept without deteriorating. Butter and oleomargarine are articles which will quickly deteriorate unless they are kept at a proper temperature. So the mass of consumers find the better plan to buy these commodities by the pound as they need them each day. For the reasons I have given I am going to vote for this Bill.

Mr. FRANK S. CAHILL (Pontiac): I find myself in rather an awkward position in reference to this Bill. Being a Liberal, and in favour of freedom for commerce as well as freedom for the individual, I am compelled to vote for the measure. It is one of the first Bills brought in by this Government that I really feel like voting for. Now that an amendment has been moved to the measure I shall be placed in the position of having to vote for the Government. However, I have the satisfaction of voting for the first good Bill introduced by them and in opposition to some of my hon. friends on the other side. I wish to say that I represent a purely agricultural constituency and I do not believe that the people I represent would ask me to penalize those of the Canadian public who wish to use oleomargarine. If they do entertain such a view and it causes any of them to vote against me I shall have to take the consequence. With me it is not a matter of expediency, it is a case of doing what I believe to be a right thing for the country as a whole. I think the Minister of Agriculture showed bad judgment this evening when he announced that he would limit the operation of the Bill to one year. I think he should have had the courage to stand by the Bill in the form in which he presented it. True, there has been a certain amount of criticism from hon. gentlemen opposite, but from past experience the minister might have known that a Bill presented by the Government would carry. I think therefore the minister should have stood by it and seen that it passed the House. I shall have the compensating advantage in my course that I shall be voting against some of the worst Tories on the Government side.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Gaspé and Maisonneuve): I have the happy privilege of representing an urban and a rural constituency, but it so happens that in both cases my electors consume perhaps as much oleomargarine as they do butter. As long as there is a good and really serious inspection of that commodity I do not see why the people should be prevented from using it. In these days of the high cost of living when there is even a few cents difference in the value of food products it is a matter of some importance. Although there has been of late a marked decrease in that cost, we still suffer from the high prices, and I believe that when such products as oleomargarine are properly inspected the people should not be prevented from using them if they choose to do so. I quite sympathize with my friends from the province of Quebec who have spoken this evening against the use of oleomargarine. It must be remembered that to-day Quebec is the banner province in dairy production. A year or so ago we secured the first prize at the Toronto Annual Exhibition, and even although last year the first prize went to the West it was discovered by the Minister of Agriculture in Quebec that the gentleman who had won the prize was a former student of the St. Hyacinthe Dairy School. From that point of view I quite sympathize with my hon. friends who uphold the exclusion of a product other than butter. We must not forget, however, that we must have some consideration for the masses of the people. I have always supported free food in this House, and under the present circumstances I feel that I would not be doing my duty toward the vast mass of the consumers of Canada if I did not give them the liberty of selecting the food of their choice, provided that food is adequately inspected.

Mr. THOMAS HAY (Selkirk): I wish to say that I am not opposed to the manufacture of oleomargarine in Canada, but I am opposed to the unfair competition to which it subjects dairymen of this country. The ingredients used in the manufacture of oleomargarine are allowed to enter the country free and, mixed with butter, to enter into competition with the Canadian butter makers, which I think is unfair. If the Bill passes in its present form I think it will work a great injury to the dairy interests of Canada. In a very short period, if prices remain as low as they now are, the Canadian butter makers will be put out of business and then the manufacturers of oleomargarine will have a monopoly of the Canadian market. I think that would be the final result if the Bill were to pass as it is now framed. I would respectfully suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that a fairly heavy duty be placed on ingredients entering into the manufacture of oleomargarine. We have a duty against imports of butter, and I see no reason why a duty should not be placed on the ingredients referred to. I think it is only fair to the dairy producers that this should be done. I noticed in an article in the Free Press of yesterday that Manitoba is becoming a large producer of dairy products, and that something like 6,000,000 pounds of butter were produced in that province in the year 1920. In my opinion the Bill in its present form would seriously affect the manufacture of butter in the province of Manitoba, in fact in the whole of Canada. I am not looking at this question from a purely local point of view; I am viewing it from a national standpoint, and I believe that as a nation we would suffer from this legislation unless some safeguards are thrown around the manufacture of dairy products in this country. I therefore feel that the minister should take these facts into consideration in dealing with this measure.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Before submitting the question, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that the exception by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Hay) is well taken. The manufacturers of oleomargarine are permitted to import all the ingredients under a duty of only one per cent. It has been stated by the advocates of the manufacturers of oleomargarine that about 70 to 75 per cent of it consisted of ingredients produced in this country. Well, by having a protective tariff on those ingredients you could ensure that condition of affairs. But it would not suit the manufacturers as well as the present arrangement, because of the fact that they are now enabled to buy in a foreign country all those ingredients with the exception of butter. When butter was 66 cents a pound, as it was a little while ago, there was a tariff of only six per cent. At 33 cents a pound that tariff would be at the rate of 12 per cent. In other words, when the price doubled the tariff was reduced by one-half. In connection with the tariff on other articles manufactured in this country there is an ad valorem duty, and therefore when the price doubles the tariff also doubles. That is the difference in the treatment of the two articles under our tariff, and it is absolutely unfair. We ought to have an ad valorem duty on butter.

As a matter of fact about $250,000,000 worth of dairy products were produced in this country last year, and only about one-fifth was exported. So there is no closing our eyes to the fact that our home market is by long odds the most valuable one our farmer has. At the same time I realize the importance of the consumer getting his food as cheaply as possible. These large exports of butter during the past few years have been entirely due to the enormous expansion of the dairy industry. In the county from which I come, where the first cheese factory in Canada was established, I have witnessed successive transformations. First it was largely a butter manufacturing county; after that the farmers went almost entirely into the manufacture of cheese, and as Ingersoll cheese it was well known all over Great Britain; those cheese factories one after another gave place to the condenseries and powder factories as a result of the British Government controlling the price of cheese during the war. Now, there is a tendency to again open up many of the cheese factories, for the reason that the farmers after experiencing both conditions realize the importance of having a well balanced system of farming.

The butter-making industry to my mind is the most important branch of agriculture that we have to-day, although we are not carrying it on at all in our county. I suppose nine-tenths of the farmers of my constituency purchase butter, and I am not too sure but what lots of them purchase oleomargarine. Therefore, when I take exception to this measure it is not by reason of the fact that there is any great demand from my constituency—I want that distinctly understood—but it is the principle involved, and it is also because of the fact that every drop of the milk we are selling to the condenseries goes off the farm. As a result of that system of farming there is an enormous drain on the fertility of the land; but with the system of dairying whereby butter is manufactured you have the essentials to sus-cessful agriculture. The raising of cattle, hogs and other live stock is the only way in which the fertility of the soil can be maintained and farming carried on successfully. To-day our people are very largely purchasing commercial fertilizers, and I am not too sure, even with the high price they have been obtaining for condensed milk and powder and ice cream—because there are factories where the milk is converted into ice cream—that they have any advantage. As I pointed out, many of our farmers are going back to the manufacture of cheese again, and I believe that many more would welcome butter-making factories if they were established in that district. The places where you will find the best system of agriculture carried on are where cattle and hogs are being raised. There is no closing our eyes to the fact that we have a difficult period ahead of us, and I am satisfied that live stock is the only salvation for our farmers in the future, and that therefore we must encourage by every means in our power successful development along these lines. I believe this measure is a retrograde movement, and I am absolutely opposed to the principle involved in encouraging adulteration, because, as I pointed out before, the present system is really enabling these people to adulterate oleomargarine.

What about the original manufacturers and importers of oleomargarine? Two years ago I received a letter, but I did not quote it when this matter was last before the House. It is dated October 8, 1919, and is from Mr. H. D. Marshall, Canadian sales agent of "Kingnut" butter. It reads:

I read with considerable interest the item in this morning's Citizen, giving an account of the discussion in the House yesterday regarding the extension of the permit for the sale and importation of oleomargarine in Canada.

I was particularly interested in the stand which you took regarding the use of June butter in the manufacture of oleomargarine.

Permit me to say from the standpoint of one who is largely interested in the sale of oleomargarine, that I heartily approve of the stand which you take.

The admixture of butter with oleomargarine does not improve the quality of the oleomargarine, and certainly does not add anything to the value of butter. This practice is one which I would like to see stopped, and the oleomargarine industry placed on its own legs to stand or fall on its merits. The admixture of butter into oleomargarine is the result of a popular demand from dealers to give them an article which they can place before the consumers as nearly representing butter as possible.

My contention is that oleomargarine is a commodity which can be used as a spread for bread, but does not and should not and should not be made to interfere with the business of manufacturing and selling butter.

It is evidently too late for any action to be taken on this during the present session, but if at the next session of the House you feel disposed to bring this topic up again, you can rest assured that you will have the hearty co-operation and support of at least one who is largely interested in the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine.

This Kingnut butter, or margarine, is manufactured very largely in the United States, and also, I believe, in Canada, and, as I have said, this letter was sent to me by the Canadian sales agent here. I cannot support any measure that will discriminate against the freedom of the individual, and, as has been pointed out by several hon. members who have spoken, that is what this measure does. The dairy industry is one of the most laborious in this country. While an eight-hour day is being agitated for in connection with other activities, those who are engaged in the dairy industry find it necessary to put in twelve or fourteen hours a day. It is not intimated in the measure now before us that any change in the regulations is contemplated, and in view of all these considerations there is only one course for me to pursue. I am not in favour of preventing the manufacture or importation of this product, and if I had any assurance that anything better would be adopted I would be inclined to vote accordingly. But there is no assurance from the Government that these most iniquitous regulations will be removed and the monopoly cease which is now enjoyed by two of the large packing houses in this country—companies which have received a rebate of nearly a quarter of a million dollars during the last year and a half in connection with this matter. I contend that these regulations in their present form are not in the interests of the public and since they are to remain I am compelled to vote for the amendment.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Denis), which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs.

Baldwin,	Fraser,
Béland,	Gauvreau,
Boivin,	Kay,
Brouillard,	Lafortune,
Casgrain,	Lanctôt,
Chisholm,	Léger,
Déchêne,	Marcil (Bonaventure),
Delisle,	Marcile (Bagot),
Demers,	Mayrand,
Denis,	Pelletier,
Desaulniers,	Robb,
Fafard,	Séguin,
Fortier,	Sinclair (Antigonish
Fournier,	and Guysborough),

Stein, Tobin,
Sutherland, Trahan,
Thompson (Hastings), Truax—33.

NAYS

Messrs.

Allan, Lapointe,
Anderson, Leduc,
Andrews, Lemieux,
Argue, Lesage,
Arthurs, Long,
Ballantyne, MacKelvie,
Ball, Mackie (Edmonton), Best, Mackie (Renfrew),
Blair, Maclean (Halifax),
Blake, Maclean (York),
Bolton, MacNutt,
Bonnell, McCoig,
Boyce, McCrea,
Boys, McCurdy,
Brien, McDermand,
Bristol, McGibbon (Muskoka),
Buchanan, McGregor,
Bureau, McIsaac,
Cahill, McMaster,
Calder, McQuarrie,
Caldwell, Manion,
Campbell, Martin,
Casselman, Meighen,
Chaplin, Mewburn,
Charlton, Michaud,
Charters, Middlebro,
Clark (Bruce), Molloy,
Clark (Red Deer), Morphy,
Clements, Mowat,
Cockshutt, Munson,
Cooper, Myers,
Cowan, Nesbitt,
Crerar, Nicholson (Queens, P.E.I.),
Cronyn, Nicholson (Algoma),
Crowe, Papineau,
Currie, Pardee,
Davidson, Peck,
Davis, Pedlow,
Doherty, Prevost,
Douglas (Strathcona), Redman,
Douglas (Cape Breton S. and Richmond), Reid (Grenville),
Drayton (Sir Henry), Reid (Mackenzie),
DuTremblay, Rinfret,
Edwards, Ross,
Fielding, Savard,
Finley, Scott,
Foster (Sir George), Shaw,
Foster (York), Simpson,
Fulton, Smith,
Gervais, Spinney,
Glass, Steele,
Green, Stevens,
Guthrie, Stewart (Hamilton),
Halladay, Stewart (Lanark),
Harold, Thompson (Weyburn),
Harrison, Thompson (Yukon),
Hay, Thomson (Qu'Appelle),
Henders, Tolmie,
Jacobs, Tremain,
Johnston, Tweedie,
Kennedy (Glengarry and Stormont), White,
King, Wigmore,
Knox, Wilson (Wentworth),
Lalor, Wilson (Saskatoon),
Lang, Wright—130.

[Mr. Sutherland.]

PAIRS

(The list of pairs is furnished by the Chief Whips).

Messrs.

Tudhope, Proulx,
Griesbach, Euler.

Mr. EULER: I was paired with the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Griesbach). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Main motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House thereupon went into committee on the Bill, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On clause 1—manufacture, importation and sale permitted.

Mr. MANION: I beg to move to amend clause 1 by substituting for the new section three therein proposed, the following section:

Notwithstanding anything contained in the Dairy Industry Act, 1914, chapter 7 of the Statutes of 1914, or in any other statute or law, the manufacture in and importation of oleomargarine into Canada shall be permitted until the 31st day of August, 1922, and the offering for sale, the sale, and the having in possession for sale of oleomargarine, shall be permitted until the 1st day of March 1923.

In other words the amendment is to the effect that this legislation holds good for one year.

Mr. FIELDING: It is much to be regretted that the Government has spoiled a good Bill by encouraging this amendment. There is no reason in the world why we should shilly-shally with this thing from year to year. If oleomargarine is a bad thing, let us put the ban on and stop it; but this bringing in a Bill, as the minister has done this year, to provide that oleomargarine shall be treated like any other article of commerce, and now because the Bill has met with a little criticism to postpone, as he is doing, a final decision for another year, is not wise politics; it is not good statesmanship; it is not commonsense. Let us settle the thing and be done with it, and not go on in this way for another year.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I find myself in absolute agreement with what has fallen from the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding). There is no defence in logic for the course which the Government are taking. What is the reason? Was this Bill not thought out before it was brought down to the House? Do the Government confess that they have so ill-considered the principle of the Bill that it is changed on account of a slight waft of opinion on their side?

No reason is offered for the change. As my hon. friend has just said, it is good or it is bad to introduce oleomargarine into this country. If it be good, why do it for a year? Many things were done temporarily during the war, but the war is over, and there is no argument that I know of for any action along temporary lines. If there is, I am subject to correction, and I shall be glad to hear the correction. It is not done out of principle; it is done out of party expediency to meet the views of certain kickers on the other side of the House. Having made that protest, I do not know that there is any need to talk any further. the Government's action is strong confirmation of the view of those that think this Government has outlived its mandate and ought to go to the country—strong confirmation indeed. Is there any subject upon which they take a definite stand? I dare say they would answer: On the principle of protection. Well, even that stand is taken outside of the House, and not in it. My right hon. friend spoke on that subject the other day, and never put up an economic argument. He keeps those for outside of this House. On a dozen other things, as I have indicated before, this Government has committed acts of infanticide, and this is an addition to the number. Here is perhaps the strongest personality in the Government, whom we all respect, or did, as a really strong man, coming down with a Bill which presumably he has thought out with the care which he bestows on every detail of his departmental work. At the end of the session, after he has had four months of a session to think about it and a year since the question was last before the House, he brings before us the considered proposition of a government that professes to have a mandate to rule this country, and in one afternoon he changes his opinion and says: We will try it for just another year. Well, an Englishman naturally sympathizes with the bottom dog, and when peoples are so weak in their support, why, my sympathy naturally goes out to them. But there is a duty for hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and my duty is to protest that we have in this the last evidence of weakness on the part of the Government and a strong argument why they should cut the painter, take their courage in both hands, and go to the country with their principle of protection or any other policy they have, and give the country a chance. Then we shall get a Government that really governs in this country. This Government does not govern. If I wanted to prove to any visitor to Ottawa for the first time that this Goveernment does not govern, I would take him to the Plaza and show him the method of recording time here. He would look on one side and see a clock arranged by the railway company, showing two o'clock in the day. He would look at another clock, arranged by the municipality of Ottawa, and see that it was three o'clock. He would naturally say: What is the Government of the country doing? I should have to reply: Oh, they take the time from the municipality when they are looking that way, and from the railway company when they are looking the other way. I do not want to go over all these acts of infanticide again, but they are getting too numerous for this country to have the slightest further patience with the Government, and they call on the Government to take at least one resolute action, and that is to go and get a breath of fresh popular air in their sails and see how it suits their constitution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I hold in my hand the Canada Gazette, under date of October 25, 1917. Dealing with this matter, the Order in Council provides:

> Whereas attention is drawn to the abnormal demand for butter due to war conditions and to the very great probability that such abnormal demand and consequent high prices will prevail for this product for some time to come.

Then, after referring to the regulations, it provides:

> Such regulations to be in force and to have effect for the period during which the present abnormal conditions continue, the conclusion of such period to be determined by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, as provided in the said regulations, and as a war measure only.

Mr. Chairman, I contend that the period of deflation in the price of butter has arrived, and that the regulations contained in this Order in Council are no longer justified. I have pointed out that I do not take exception to the importation or manufacture of this article of food. What I did object to was the regulations contained in this Order in Council. I therefore beg to move in amendment to the amendment, seconded by the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Smith), to add at the end of the section the following words:

> provided that no oleomargarine shall be imported into Canada or manufactured in or sold, offered for sale or had in possession for sale in Canada which contains any milk or cream or any product of milk or cream.

This will do an injustice to no one, and will be a protection to those engaged in the industry.

Mr. BEST: I think it ill becomes any hon. member to get up in the House and read a lecture to the Government and to hon. members as to how they should vote, as my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) has just done. I can tell him that if the members sitting around him vote as he wants them to at the snap of his finger, the members on this side of the House have minds of their own and they vote as they see fit. Judging by the way the hon. member for Red Deer talks in this House, one can imagine that if he had the powers the Czar of Russia had some years ago, he would be much more intolerant than the Czar himself. This is not the first time that the hon. member for Red Deer has read the riot act to the Government and to hon. members on this side of the House; yet I do not think there is a member of this House who talks as much one way and votes the opposite way as the hon. member for Red Deer. I voted the way I did because I understood the measure was to be extended for one year, and I trust that when I vote as I see fit the hon. member for Red Deer will not find fault with me.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): The hon. member has totally misrepresented what I said. My remonstrances were naturally directed to the Government, and I hope in parliamentary language, for not standing by their Bill. I said nothing about how my hon. friend or any one else in the House voted. There is a total misunderstanding or a total misrepresentation of what I said, and I must ask my hon. friend to accept my disavowal. I never made a single remark about the way he voted; my remonstrance was addressed entirely to the Government, to whose ranks my hon. friend does not yet belong.

Mr. BEST: I do not know any hon. member who talks as much one way and votes another as the hon. member.

Mr. Du TREMBLAY: I am opposed to the amendment because it is unfair to the people of the country, and to the freedom of trade. If this legislation is to be made applicable only for one year, you will discourage the manufacture of this food in Canada, and as I said before, if this food is wholesome there is no reason why its sale should not be permanently permitted, subject to proper inspection by the officials of the Government. No doubt the Government will accept this amendment to please the farmers. They are trying to please everybody in the country, but they will succeed in pleasing none. The Bill, as first introduced, would allow the permanent manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in Canada. Why change that principle now? It is said that this article is mostly bought from the United States now. Well, that will continue to be the case if permanent legislation is not passed here, because no business man will invest in the manufacture of this oleomargarine in Canada without some assurance of permanence and stability. The Minister of Agriculture should stand by his Bill to-night and not be intimidated by any suggestions as to what the consequences may be. He cannot deceive the farmers of the country; if he changes his attitude they will know very well it is for political purposes, and he will not attain the end he has in view. The amendment should not be sustained.

Mr. EDWARDS: When this matter was first introduced into the House in 1918, it was brought forward by the then Minister of Agriculture, the member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar). At that time it received the endorsation and approval of practically every member in the House, and certainly of the member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark). The war ended on November 11, 1918, and in 1919 it was thought necessary to pass legislation to authorize the continuance of the manufacture and importation of oleomargarine. At that time the member for Red Deer did not raise his voice in protest, and say that the matter should be settled at once. He found no fault, as he does now; he approved of an extension for the year. Another year went by and we came to 1920, and again, in his estimation, it was perfectly all right to extend the period for another year, and there were no charges against the Government of vacillation. It was quite right, in his estimation, to extend the period for one year. Now, however, all of a sudden, a change has come over the spirit of his dreams, and it is an undoubted evidence of weakness on the part of the Government that they should ask the House to do exactly what he approved of doing on two different occasions in two former years. What is responsible for this sudden change on the part of the member for Red Deer? On a former occasion he had not a word of disapproval for the extension of time, and, of course, that settled it. When the matter had the approval of the member for Red Deer it was perfectly proper, irrespective of what any other member might think. Now it has his disapproval; it is bound to be wrong; he undertakes to read the House a lecture, and gets off some of his talk about protection and free trade, and mandate, etc.

In speaking on this Bill this afternoon I said that I had opposed from the start, on principle, the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine, but I found myself in the first instance in a hopeless minority. That was certainly true in 1919; and again in 1920 practically the whole House was in favour of extending the time for another year. I said this afternoon that while I should like to see the importation and manufacture of this article prohibited, I thought that it was well that, if in the judgment of the House—and I was influenced by the fact that on two former occasions the vast majority of the members were in favour of it—an extension for one year should be permitted, legislation should be passed to that end; and I said that I would rather see an extension granted for another year than see a permanent measure put through.

What can be said in favour of an extension for a year? There is this that might be said. While you can point to prices which have obtained for butter during the last two or three months as being so low as to give the producer of butter no profit, at the same time, others who favour the manufacture and importation of oleomargarine might say that this is only a temporary condition, and might plead for an extension for a year until we found out for certain whether these low prices would continue, or whether they would get back to their former basis. That is something the Government might urge in justification of their attitude in extending the time. On that ground, and because I understood from the remarks of the minister this afternoon that, instead of putting a permanent measure through, he was disposed to extend the time for another year, I voted with the Government on the Bill. I am in entire accord with the amendment to the amendment. I agree with my hon. friend from Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), that the manufacturers of oleomargarine should not be permitted to make use of butter or cream in order to give some degree of respectability to the article they are trying to sell in competition with the makers of butter. For that reason, I shall vote for the amendment to the amendment, because I think that it is an improvement on the Bill and will allow the manufacture of oleomargarine for another year, when conditions and prices may adjust themseves. The acceptance of the amendment of the member of Oxford is something which the Government could do without injury to the Bill; in fact it would add strength to it.

Mr. FIELDING: I am no advocate of rash legislation If this were a new matter which the House was considering for the first time I could see some reason for temporizing with it, such as my hon. friend who has just spoken has advanced. But, as I pointed out we have had this question before us now for three years. Therefore the Government know all about it. It is not a case where they need further information. They have had all the opportunity possible for learning what are the ingredients that enter into oleomargarine. They have had every opportunity to learn whether it is a wholesome or unwholesome product; there is absolutely no more to learn. We know as much about it to-day as can be learned in the course of another year. It is for that reason I protest against the Government temporizing with the question. If there was something more to be learned, if some reason was indicated for postponing this question again, it would be a different matter. But twelve months hence, especially if there be an election pending, we shall have this same story again and somebody will be trying to postpone the question for another year. It is a most unreasonable thing. If oleomargarine is a bad product, if its importation, manufacture and use is objectionable, or against the interests of the farmer, let us say so and settle the question once and for all. If oleomargarine is open to all the objections that hon. gentlemen have urged so strenuously the Government are doing a great wrong in continuing it for another year. Let the question be dealt with to-day without any further shilly-shallying; let the Government deal with it as they would deal with anything else.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not have the advantage of being in the House during the discussion this afternoon, but I think I shall say something in reply to the statements of my hon. friend for Shelburne and Queen's. This Bill has been, in virtually the same form, before this House on, I think, two previous occasions. In the Bill as introduced by the Government in the first place, a stipulated time was fixed for the law to remain in effect, for the reason that there were at that time very special circumstances affecting the production and consumption of butter in Canada, necessitating, as it was deemed, some cheaper substitute because the poor and the labouring classes in this country, particularly those two, could not afford butter at the higher price being paid for it. Those were the special circumstances that had to do with the limited time that was fixed in the Bill. That measure was followed by the Bill providing for an extension. When the Bill was introduced this time the Government felt that there was no further reason for a limited time, and that in accordance with the best public policy oleomargarine should be admitted without limitation of time, of course under the restrictions that are provided for by the regulations and such further regulations as might be called for. In that form the Government would prefer the measure to pass. I understand that the Minister of Agriculture this evening—in view of very considerable opposition in the House to the Bill passing in that form; the ground being taken that the special circumstances that surrounded the production and sale of butter have in great degree passed away and that consequently there should be no permanent prohibition of the importation of oleomargarine—under those circumstances the Minister of Agriculture stated that rather than see a prolonged discussion of a subject of this kind when we hope to end the session shortly and rather than imperil the Bill in any way, he would accept it in the form in which it passed before. Of course, I am prepared that lectures shall be read by the hon. member for Red Deer, but I am not very seriously alarmed by the accusation that because the Government under such circumstances accepts an amendment to a Bill, it consequently commits infanticide and abandons its principles. The Government does not do that at all. We are now, as we hope, very close to the end of the session. We would prefer the Bill as it is, but if it meets the wishes of the House better in the amended form we would rather have that than delay the session too long or imperil the legislation,—that is all. For those who are fearful as to the authority of a Government that admits an amendment, I would commend them to look around to a capital not very far from here, where they will find very close friends of their own who seem not at all concerned when they introduce legislation, and, if hostility appears, even on the part of the Opposition, ignominiously abandon it on very short notice, where such hostility is not merely an accident arising toward the end of a session but seems to be the regular practice. However that is not the case here. The Government's position is this: We prefer the Bill as it is. We believe, though, in view of the opposition, that we should accede to that amendment rather than imperil the measure and we propose to accept the amendment if it is the will of the House. We prefer the Bill in the shape in which it is. We think ourselves that the time has come when oleomargarine should be admitted. I am sorry that opposition to the Bill developed on this side of the House, or on either side; but under the circumstances, as we are nearing the end of the session, we felt it was better, rather than that there should be prolonged discussion, that the Bill should pass in a form which leaves the matter just as it is for another year, when, under the circumstances of that time, the House can again decide what it wishes.

Mr. FIELDING: The Prime Minister tells us that he and the Government prefer the Bill as it is. He did not give us a chance to vote for the Bill as it is. Before we reached a division on the question, when the matter was still pending, the Minister of Agriculture volunteered the statement that the Government were going to abandon the Bill as it is, and under this amendment we had no chance to vote for the Bill as it stands to-day.

Mr. MORPHY: The amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford appeals to me for a reason which I think has not yet been suggested to the House. Canada at times exports large quantities of butter to outside markets and has done so for years. It is quite well known that difficulties have been created in the past, both in regard to cheese and butter products by reason of the mixing of an inferior article with the genuine product. Now we propose in this Bill to probably permit the adulteration of butter by the mingling with it of oleomargarine. I believe the farmers and producers, and the dairymen of this country, are proud of the products they have produced in the past, both as regards cheese and butter, and are endeavouring to excel in the superiority of these articles to-day and for the future. Now if it is going to be permitted in Canada to mix butter with oleomargarine and sell it under the name of oleomargarine the result may probably be that some of it will be so near butter that it will be hard to distinguish from the genuine article, but nevertheless a taint may be produced in it and in some way it may be shipped out of the country and thus injure the market for Canadian butter. I think that is a very dangerous expedient to favour in the interest of the dairy producers of this country. There is no question to my mind that in the United States frauds in oleomargarine assumed enormous proportions and I fear that in the case of Canadian butter when shipped abroad there will from the possibility of its manipulation and the likelihood of oleomargarine being mixed with it, be a tendency to vitiate the high standard of Canadian butter, to lower that standard in the markets of the world, and thereby bring injury to the butter producers of Canada. Therefore I propose to vote for the amendment to the amendment of my hon. friend for South Oxford.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It seems to me that this amendment to the amendment is neither logical nor reasonable. If, as we are told, 25 per cent of oleomargarine is composed of butter, then to that extent its use makes a market for butter. If on account of the high price of butter—fortunately it is not so at the present time—it ever happens that some people are unable to buy it, they will buy oleomargarine and thus be able to indulge in butter to the extent of 25 per cent. The opponents of the Bill say that oleomargarine is not a wholesome article of food. If that be so, why should they make it worse by preventing the use of 25 per cent of dairy products in its manufacture? I think those two reasons are sufficient to justify my voting against the sub-amendment.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): The hon. member for Dufferin (Mr. Best) said that he voted for the Bill because of the fact that there was a certain amount of oleomargarine manufactured in the country which had not been sold, and he wished to give its owners an opportunity of selling it. My hon. friend evidently has not looked at the statute, because, as I understand it, under the present law the sale of oleomargarine is legal until March 1922. Therefore there was no need for my hon. friend to vote for the Bill on the ground he stated.

My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture does not seem to be very certain about the Bill itself or he would not have accepted the amendment. His attitude justified me and other gentlemen on both sides of the House who voted against the Bill, because if he was sure it was a good measure he would have stood by it and it would become law. The Prime Minister is in the same position. He prefers the Bill as it is. But although he has a sufficient majority at his back to put the Bill through, he hesitates, for some reason or other which I am unable to understand.

I am opposed to the Bill for certain reasons, principally because the Government have given no assurance to our butter makers that they will frame regulations to prevent oleomargarine being confused with butter. That is one of the main reasons, I am informed, for the opposition from our dairy people. They complain that the product which is put on the market is neither oleomargarine nor butter, but a kind of adulterated butter, and it is often sold to people who do not know the difference between the two articles. That is unfair to our butter makers, and if the department had made regulations to remove that uncertainty I would not have the same opposition to the Bill. The Dairy Association of Canada has made a proposal—which apparently the minister has not taken any notice of—that some steps be taken in regard to the colour of oleomargarine to make it impossible to palm it off as butter. In order that that may be brought about I intend to support the amendment of my hon. friend from South Oxford, as, if carried, we will have either pure margarine or pure butter.

Mr. GLASS: The amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford embodies practically the main features of the request of the National Dairymen's Association to the Government as recited by the hon. member for Guysborough this afternoon and repeated by me later. Like the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's, I do not like this temporising, for I think it creates unrest and dissatisfaction, and heaven knows at the present time our farmers have enough anxiety and worry over the very sudden deflation of the commodities they produce. I have no doubt that the views of the Dairymen's Association have been placed before the Government, and I should like to see those views given effect to and the measure made permanent.

To fully satisfy the needs of our dairy industry the Minister of Finance should also remove the unjust discrimination against butter in favour of oleomargarine.

The manufacturers of oleomargarine have stated that about 75 per cent of its constituent parts is made from products of the farm. The hon. member for South Oxford says that that is not so. At any rate there is no doubt that a very large proportion of the ingredients are the by-products of the farm, and naturally that makes a market for what otherwise would to some extent command a much lower price. Therefore to that extent it is to the interest of farmers that these fats may be used to manufacture a commodity that brings a better price.

I certainly think the amendment is entirely in accord with the sentiments I expressed on the floor of the House, and with the wishes of the National Dairymen's Association, and I trust the Government will see fit to accept it. I am satisfied that the measure would be far better if it were made to apply permanently, not only to allay unrest and anxiety on the part of our farmers, but also on the part of the manufacturers of oleomargarine, because as the hon. member for Winnipeg pointed out, the institution which contemplated starting the manufacture of oleomargarine in the West will no doubt hesitate unless they have some certainty of a permanent market.

Mr. CAHILL: A few minutes ago I supported this Bill, and to that extent the Government, but I must confess that I then had no idea that the Government were going to be so wobbly as to turn tail and run from their own Bill. I am afraid that I cannot follow them any further in their backsliding. But I would ask the minister now how far he proposes to go with this amendment and the amendment to the amendment. What is the Government's well-considered policy on this Bill at the present moment?

Mr. TOLMIE: I cannot agree with the amendment to the amendment as submitted by the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland). In the first place, if we adopted his suggestion we would not have what is known as oleomargarine in this country at all. While the National Dairy Council is an organization we all respect and one which is doing a great deal of good, an organization which may represent to a considerable extent the great dairy interests of this country, still we must not forget that there are hundreds of thousands of beef cattle in this country raised on the ranch and on the farm, and that the men who produce these cattle have every right to market their products to the very best possible advantage. In the average beef steer slaughtered in our packing houses there are ten or twelve pounds of stearine, ten or twelve pounds of oleo oil, and some tallow. The stearine is usually used for shortening in baking and the oleo oil is at present being used in the manufacture of oleomargarine. All this manufacture is carried on under the most careful supervision, and this oleo is secured only from what are known as the edible fats of the animal carcass. We do not permit the manufacture of oleomargarine in the ordinary creamery or dairy, because it would be quite impracticable; we would have to maintain an army of inspectors to carry on the necessary inspection and supervision. The manufacture of oleo is permitted only in the packing houses of the country where we maintain a corps of skilled meat inspectors who see that all the various operations are properly carried out. In addition to the inspection of the oleo and of the fats from which the oleo is made, there is also the inspection of the vegetable oils. The milk and butter used in the manufacture of oleo must either come from tested cows, showing that the animals are free from tuberculosis according to the tuberculin test, or must be pasteurized, showing that there is no possibility of the oleo being contaminated by the use of tuberculous milk or butter in its manufacture. Under these conditions I do not see why the manufacturer of oleo should be prevented from adding good clean butter and milk—articles that are more expensive, and, as our friends claim, more nutritive than the article which he produces in the abattoir—and thus to improve the quality of the product which he is turning out. One hon. gentleman, I think it was the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Kennedy), referred to the nutritive value of the various products, and I think quite properly said that milk is perhaps one of the very best products for growing children or growing animals. By the addition of this milk and butter, then, we make that spread which the poor man is compelled to use for his family when butter gets too high in price. This product is better in quality than it would be if it was made from straight oleo or straight vegetable oil. I do not think we should refuse the poor man this cheap spread for his bread in place of the dripping, pork or beef, which has often been used in this country in the past. I do not think he should be refused the right to purchase all the oleo he wishes to use at the cheaper price, provided the product is made under careful inspection.

Now, with regard to the imported oleo, the animal oleo comes in here with a certificate from the Bureau of Animal Industry at Washington, which is the same as our Health of Animals Branch here, showing that the product has been manufactured under careful supervision. Vegetable oleos made from straight oils are accompanied by a certificate from the Bureau of Chemistry at Washington showing that these articles have been prepared under proper conditions. So that this oleo is perfectly safe from a health standpoint; it is considered very wholesome indeed, and by the addition of butter it is made more palatable than it would otherwise be. Some one has suggested that we should provide that oleo shall be made of a colour foreign to its natural colour. I hold in my hand a sample jar containing oleo prepared in the Harris Abattoir in the middle of winter; hon. members can see that it is of a distinct yellow colour, and I think it would be unfair to ask the manufacturers of this oleo to dye the product pink, or blue which is entirely foreign to its natural colour. Now, what do we find so far as the application of our regulations is concerned? I may say for the benefit of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) that our regulations are already very strict.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Will the minister say whether there is any butter in the sample which he showed to the committee?

Mr. TOLMIE: No, this is natural oleo from the Harris Abattoir, and the colour is its natural colour. No colouring matter is allowed to be used in the manufacture of oleo. No colouring is allowed to be sold or given away with the package of oleo. The brand "oleo" in prominent letters must be clearly placed on the side of each package of oleo—that is, right on the article itself. We do not permit the words "butter", "dairy", "creamery", or the name of any breed of cattle to be placed on any package or any advertising matter for the purpose of selling oleo. In addition to that, we are at present considering a change of the shape of the packages in which oleo is sold. I hold in my hand the ordinary package in which butter is sold, and also a narrower, flatter package. It is suggested that the oleo manufacturers be compelled to sell their products in a narrow package of this kind. This practice has been followed in Denmark for some time, with very satisfactory results.

Now, let us see what the manufacturer of good butter has to fear from the manufacture and sale of oleo in Canada. There is no possibility of oleomargarine ever being a competitor of good butter. As I said this afternoon, once a person has got the taste of good butter he will not be satisfied with oleo. But there are several brands of bad butter with which oleo actually comes in competition. I think it was the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) who said this afternoon that when it comes to a comparison between good oleo and bad butter, we would rather have the good oleo. Now, the following is the result of the application of the law by the inspectors of the Health of Animals Branch and the Dairy Branch during the years 1919 and 1920. In 1919 there were 8 convictions under the oleo law, and 111 convictions for the manufacture of bad butter. In 1920 there were 12 convictions under the oleo Law and 128 convictions for the manufacture of bad butter, showing that the maker of good butter has not so much to fear from the oleo manufacturer as he has from the man who tries to sell inferior butter.

Mr. ROBB: If the minister will allow me, in order to make his comparison correct he should give the committee the number of manufacturers of butter as compared with the number of manufacturers of oleo.

Mr. TOLMIE: I cannot give that. But some hon. gentlemen have suggested that oleo is doing a great deal of harm to the manufacturers of butter. I may say that from December 1, 1917 when the importation of oleo was first permitted, to September 30, 1920, there were imported 15,373,334 pounds of oleomargarine. During the same period we manufactured in this country 22,463,727 pounds, or a total of 37,837,061 pounds of oleomargarine manufactured and imported. In the same period we consumed in this country 600,000,000 pounds of butter, so that oleomargarine did not play a very important figure in those years. Since permission was given for the manufacture, importation and sale of oleomargarine, the manufacture of butter and dairy products generally in this country has gradually increased.

Mr. SMITH: Being a farmer myself, mixing amongst them, and seeing many consumers of oleomargarine, I have never heard any desire expressed that this Bill should go into operation. I venture the assertion that no Order in Council would have been passed in 1917, and no Bill would have been passed by this House at a later period, had butter been at the same price at which it is to-day. The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) says that this is either right or wrong. I have no use for the Bill; I think it is wrong, and, therefore, I propose to support the amendment for one year because we shall be able to have another whack at the matter in that time. When I say that I have no use for the Bill, my reason is because oleomargarine—whether it is manufactured here or imported, does not make much difference—must take the place of so much butter. Farmers are going to have hard enough times during the next twelve or eighteen months, and this is one of the means of making times a little harder for them. I should like to have supported the amendment of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Denis) for the six months' hoist, but I felt there was such a strong feeling in the House that a Bill of some kind should go into operation, that I thought it was better to vote for the amendment for one year.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Has the minister considered the proposal of the Dairymen's Council to give oleomargarine some distinctive colours that it cannot be confused with butter?

Mr. TOLMIE: I thought I had made that quite clear. I drew the attention of the committee to the natural colour of oleo oil, and I said that I could see no reason why any one should want to make it a distinctive colour which would be a great handicap to selling it in the market. The butter maker is permitted to colour his winter butter, which is very light, and to make it like June butter, but we refuse to give a similar permission to the manufacturer of oleomargarine. Some go so far as to object to his mixing good butter with oleomargarine and to permitting him to buy butter in June, although by so doing he is improving the quality of his product and making it more palatable. When we consider that this article is used by families whose fathers do not earn very large salaries and who are compelled to use the cheaper product, I think the manufacturer should be permitted to make that product as palatable and as good in quality as possible. Our experience—and I have kept in very close touch with the situation since this Oleomargarine Bill first came before the House—has been that as butter has gone down in price, the consumption of oleomargarine has lessened in proportion. This information was given only this afternoon by an official of the Dairy Commissioner's branch. He says that the average price of butter in Ottawa to-day is 35½ cents and the average price of oleo is 28½ cents, showing an advantage in favour of butter of seven cents a pound, and there is no sale at all for oleomargarine. That has been the situation. As I said a moment ago, no one who has once acquired the taste of good butter will waste time on oleo if good butter is to be obtained.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Am I right in assuming that the manufacturer of oleo is allowed to mix it with butter and sell it as oleo?

Mr. TOLMIE: He adds from 20 to 25 per cent of butter to the oleo, vegetable oils, neutral lard and so forth.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Would the minister have any objection to the manufacturer of butter mixing butter with some other oleo product and selling it as butter?

Mr. TOLMIE: That would not be permitted under the Dairy Act. We do not allow the manufacture of oleomargarine in the ordinary dairies and creameries of the country, because it would be almost impossible to keep track of the business. The manufacture is carried on only in establishments where there are regular inspectors who carry out the Meat Inspection Act. All that work is carried on under the closest supervision.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Would the minister, for the benefit of my health, kindly inform me what are the respective nutritive qualities of butter and oleomargarine?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Does that make the hon. member any healthier?

Mr. TOLMIE: The general argument is that milk and butter are better for growing animals and children, although I might point out that the adult who consumes oleomargarine, while not obtaining quite as much nutritive matter as he would obtain if he were consuming straight butter, also consumes many other articles of food which make up for that loss. Our Canadian army used oleomargarine altogether when at the front, and I never heard of Germans complaining of any lack of "pep" on the part of our men.

Mr. ROBB: I am going to vote for the amendment to the amendment, because I can find in the regulations nothing that will prevent manufacturers of oleomargarine, if they wish to do so and prices got about equal, from mixing 75 per cent of butter instead of 25 per cent, and the result might be that they would gradually displace the manufacture of butter and, to that extent, injure the dairy trade.

Mr. BUREAU: Are there as many calories in oleomargarine as in butter?

Mr. TOLMIE: No, there are more in butter than in oleomargarine.

Mr. GLASS: The minister was good enough to say that the department were giving some consideration to changing the form of the package in which oleomargarine may be sold. May we reasonably hope that this consideration will develop into definite action in the matter? That is a point that the Dairymen's Council felt strongly on, namely, of having a differently shaped package entirely, so that you would get it away from the butter form. That has been the complaint since oleomargarine was first placed on the market, and if the Government carry out that idea, a serious grievance will be removed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: We have heard a great deal about the splendid qualities of the ingredients that go to make up oleomargarine. The general manager of the Harris Abattoir gave evidence before a committee of this House with reference to the matter. This question was put to him by my colleague to my left (Mr. Nesbit:

Q. You do not churn it with the first milk?—A. Yes, it is churned with skimmed milk, fresh skimmed milk.
Q. I understood it was fresh milk?—A. No.

It is skimmed milk that is used, and it is well known that there is not much substance left in skimmed milk, whether it comes from tested cows or not. As far as tested cows are concerned, if there were any defects in the milk, they would come off with the cream. Now just a word or two with regard to colouring. This witness also admitted that they purchased highly coloured June butter to make their product more palatable. This was the evidence:

Q. The law expressly forbids colouring to be put in margarine, and you endeavour to get round this by purchasing June butter which is highly coloured, to deceive the public?—A. You are entitled to your interpretation of the facts.
Q. Is that not a fact? You realize that if it was sold without any colouring?—A. It would not be so palatable; it would be like eating lard.

So you see that the object is to deceive the people, and that is the reason I have moved the sub-amendment which is now before the committee, so that people will know exactly what they are purchasing. We should have information before this committee to-night as to the ingredients of the oleormargarine that is on the market to-day, and that has been for some time past. That information has not been supplied to the House. Consequently I feel that we are justified in seeing that dairy produce is not placed in the position that was referred to by the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Morphy) and by the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Robb), where these people would be able to purchase butter when it was cheap and possibly incorporate eighty per cent of it in their product, thus making it a greater competitor with butter than it is to-day.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I rise to a point of order. The vote on the second reading of the Bill very clearly expressed the view of the House upon the principle of the Bill. The Minister of Agriculture has stated that the amendment to the amendment if adopted would mean that oleomargarine could not be made in this country. Therefore, the amendment to the amendment is a complete reversal of the principle enunciated by the House to-night, and I submit that it should be ruled out of order. I have very grave doubts whether the amendment itself is in order, but I do not raise that point.

The CHAIRMAN: The sub-amendment reads as follows:

Provided that no oleomargarine shall be imported into Canada or manufactured in or sold, offered for sale or had in possession for sale in Canada which contains any milk or cream or any product of milk or cream.

When the sub-amendment was moved, it was certainly in order. The statement has since been made by the Minister of Agriculture that according to some scientific information which he has received it would be impossible to make oleomargarine that would be saleable under the conditions mentioned in the sub-amendment. It would, I think, create a very bad precedent if information of this nature was relied upon by the chairman in deciding a matter of parliamentary procedure. The information given to the House by the hon. minister was evidently for the purpose of informing and directing hon. members in the matter of their votes, and not for the purpose of directing the chairman in his decision upon a point of order. I have no hestiation in ruling that the sub-amendment is in order.

Amendment to the amendment negatived; yeas, 17, nays, 78.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. ROBB: I beg to move as section 2 of the Bill the following:

2. Section seven of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following words "and are also marked or labelled with a statement of the ingredients and the proportion of each ingredient used in making the oleomargarine contained therein."

Mr. TOLMIE: That would not be practicable at the present time, as far as our present information goes. We have been considering this matter, and have it under consideration now, and are gathering as much information as we can possibly get on it. These ingredients may vary in proportion to one another at different times. For instance, in hot weather probably less of the lard oils are used than at other times. The cheapness of a certain quality of butter might mean the inclusion of a larger percentage of butter than was usual when prices were higher. The ingredients vary according to the market price and the supply available. I do not think there are any two factories that make their product on exactly the same formula. The formula varies in all packing houses to a certain extent, but at the present time we are giving very careful attention to that particular point, and if we decide that it is practicable to apply such regulations, the Act will permit us to do so.

Mr. KAY: Is it not true that in the United States they have to put the ingredients on the package?

Mr. TOLMIE: I cannot give an exact answer to that question, but I do not think that it is so; it has never been brought to my attention.

Amendment negatived on division.

Bill as amended reported.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

House again in committee on Bill No. 138, to amend the Criminal Code,—Right Hon. Mr. Doherty.—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

[The Chairman.]

On section 1—definition of "feeble-minded."

Mr. DOHERTY: The purpose of this section is to make it an offence to carnally know a feeble-minded female, and the first sub-division of the section gives the definition of feeble-minded persons. In the words of the section:

"Feeble-minded persons" means persons in whose case there exists from birth or from an early age, mental defectiveness not amounting to imbecility, yet so pronounced that they require care, supervision, and control for their own protection, or for the protection of others.

There is a provision which is added as clause 302 (a), that every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for five years who has illicit connection with any girl or woman who is feeble-minded. We have it on the testimony of a large number of persons, who take an active interest in the protection of women and children, that there is a widespread habit, on the part of men, of taking advantage of the feeble-mindedness of females who may have reached the age of consent or got beyond that age, to have illicit intercourse with them; and it seems to be a proper protection of these unfortunates who, while not being absolutely imbecile, have not been favoured by nature with ordinary mental capacity.

Mr. JACOBS: I think the statistics show that at least four-fifths of fallen women are found to be feeble-minded. There is nothing here to show that the person who has connection with a feeble-minded girl or woman, and who is unaware of the fact that she is feeble-minded, is to be differentiated from the person who has that knowledge. Where is the protection for such a person?

Mr. DOHERTY: Of course, there will have to be evidence establishing the feeble-mindedness of the woman concerned, and I think that if you can adduce facts that demonstrate the existence of feeble-mindedness on her part, those facts in themselves would make it palpable to any person coming in contact with such a woman that she was feeble-minded.

Mr. JACOBS: But it is a scientific fact that practically all women of this character are feeble-minded, or they would not be in that state.

Mr. DOHERTY: The hon. member overlooks the definition of feeble-mindedness contained in the section. No doubt there may be degrees of feeble-mindedness, but the definition calls for something that goes further than mere feebleness of mind. It will not be sufficient to prove that the person is feeble-minded in the ordinary sense of the word, and in the sense in which I think the hon. member uses it when he speaks of a large majority of a certain class of people being feeble-minded, and of persons coming in contact with them not being aware of the fact. The feeble-mindedness defined in the section I have just read is of such a degree that, I think it is not unfair to assume, it would be quite evident to any one dealing with a person of the mentality therein described.

Mr. JACOBS: But there is a question of knowledge on the part of the person having connection with the feeble-minded person. Take the case of a fallen woman who has become an ordinary street-walker, and who, in the course of her peregrinations, meets a man and takes him to a house of assignation. How is this man, on a mere cursory acquaintance with this woman, to know that she is feeble-minded?

Mr. DOHERTY: The acquaintance is very apt to be cursory under the circumstances.

Mr. JACOBS: How is he to know that she is feeble-minded?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): We might assume that those people for whom my hon. friend has so much sympathy should have some responsibility placed upon them before they undertake to get into trouble. But there is another point in connection with this section that bothers me somewhat. A feeble-minded person is described as one who is not necessarily an imbecile, but whose mental defectiveness is so pronounced that she requires care, supervision, and control for her own protection, and for the protection of others. It seems to me that my hon. friend has not been very guarded in the terms he uses. Is there in the criminal law of any other country whatever a section of this description? It seems to me that the words my hon. friend uses there are capable of various interpretations by different judges; I doubt very much whether any two judges would give the same interpretation. I think you might almost assume that almost any of these women are persons who require care, supervision and control. I think it is probably because they have not had the amount of care, supervision and control that they should have had that they have gone astray. Perhaps there are not so many of us that have had the care, supervision and control that we should have had.

Mr. BELAND: The hon. gentleman, of course, is speaking for himself.

Mr. THOMSON: I will leave my hon. friend out. However, I seriously think the words are not well chosen, and that there will be a wide range of interpretation given to them. I have not any phraseology to suggest to my hon. friend such as would better fit the case, but I think the words at present in the section are unsuitable and dangerous to have there.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not in a position to say precisely the states in which there is such a definition, but I am informed that a similar provision does exist in certain of the states and that this is the definition that is given. I would like to point out that you must have two things combined: you must have a feeble-mindedness that gives rise to the necessity of care and supervision and so forth. The mere fact that care and spervision would be good for somebody would not put that person in this class. You must prove that the person has been subject to feeble-mindedness from birth or subject from an early age to mental defectiveness, not amounting to imbecility but so pronounced that she requires, care, supervision and control. Now I am sure that the hon. gentleman, when he suggests that many of us require, care, control and supervision, even if we were prepared to admit it, would not expect us to admit it was feeble-mindedness that made such necessary; it might be propensities of another description. I do think, with all respect, that no judge would err with that definition before him and having it put clearly before him that the things that he requires to have proved are, that from birth and from an early age the persons suffered from mental defectiveness not amounting to imbicility, but of such a character as to make care, control and supervision necessary. It has to be pointed out that it will not be sufficient to prove that care and supervision would be good for that person, or that because that person may be addicted, say, to drink that control and supervision would be a good thing to bring him, or her, within the class of feeble-minded persons. It must be established that there was a mental defectiveness that was the source of this need of care and supervision; and it does not seem to me that we are putting before the courts anything in the nature of a specially difficult matter to deal with in asking them to ascertain whether the facts laid down in that definition do or do not exist. Of course those facts will have to be established by evidence as all other facts require to be established. I feel very strongly that nobody is being exposed, in view of that definition of feeble-mindedness, to be convicted under this section under circumstances that he could not very well be held responsible for. The difficulty is, I would not say conjured up, but—like certain letters that have been heard here—really imaginary, and I think we might very safely leave those who might be prosecuted for this offence to be dealt with by the court. If you should have a case where the party would be in a position to show lack of knowledge, or so forth, I think we could safely leave it to the court to mete out under those circumstances so small a punishment as might be suitable to the offence. We have always to remember that a gentleman to whom this law is going to be applied is a gentleman who comes before the court in the position of having undoubtedly had illicit connection with some female; and while it might not be desirable to make that offence punishable as a crime, still if it did happen that the gentleman who did permit himself to have this illicit connection did make a mistake and did not pay sufficient attention to know that the victim was a feeble-minded person, I do not think he would be the object of great commiseration if he did get some mild punishment to make him realize that when you do take a chance of that kind you are taking a very serious chance.

Mr. JACOBS: Does my hon. friend call five years imprisonment mild punishment?

Mr. DAVIS: I submit that the negative feature in this adds nothing to the definition. In that lies the difficulty, and the provision would be very much clearer if the words "not amounting to imbecility" were struck out. The provision would then read:

> "feeble-minded persons" means persons in whose case there exists from birth or from an early age mental defectiveness so pronounced that they require care, supervision and control for their own protection or for the protection of others.

Mr. DOHERTY: I think the reason for inserting the words in question is that there already exists a provision covering the case of a man having illicit connection with an imbecile woman, and that the purpose of making the distinction is, I apprehend, because the present offence is not treated as being as grave and subject to as serious punishment. I am not able to lay my hand on the section at the moment but that section exists without doubt.

Mr. PARDEE: Is it section 216?

Mr. DOHERTY: Section 219 reads:

> Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to four years' imprisonment who unlawfully and carnally knows or attempts to have unlawful carnal knowledge of any female idiot or imbecile, insane or deaf and dumb woman or girl under circumstances which do not amount to rape, but where the offender knew or had good reason to believe,

And so forth. With regard to the observation about punishment, and in view of the difference, I think we might substitute four for the five years.

Mr. PARDEE: Why in face of section 219 does the minister think it at all necessary to add this amendment. That section already reads more strongly than this amendment, and you are endeavouring to so word the latter that the greatest doubt would prevail and expert evidence would have to be given as to whether the woman was or was not feeble-minded. She might be feeble-minded along one line and perfectly sane along other lines, and I think the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Blake) will back me up in that statement. Now you are taking from a clear-cut well-defined section and you are endeavouring to surround it with such difficulties that when a case comes before a judge to decide whether the accused is guilty or not guilty medical evidence will have to be had first on one side and then on the other, that the girl is compos mentis in all but one thing, or non compos mentis all down the line. A man might be enticed by a female who appeared perfectly sane and able to take care of herself, he commits this offence, and then you make it a matter of expert testimony whether he has committed an unlawful act or not. I have no sympathy whatever for the man who knowingly seduces a woman who is feeble minded and appears so—punish him as severely as you like; but here in section 219 you have the offence laid down perhaps even stronger than this amendment in its definiteness:

> Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to four years' imprisonment who unlawfully and carnally knows or attempts to have unlawful carnal knowledge of any female idiot or imbecile, insane or deaf and dumb woman or girl under circumstances which do not amount to rape.

You cannot make it stronger than that unless you get yourself into a maze of technicalities, and I submit to the minister that he had much better leave the section as it stands.

Mr. DOHERTY: Section 219 remains just as it is—

Mr. PARDEE: Quite so.

Mr. DOHERTY: —and under it there is the same necessity of proving the insanity. The purpose of this amendment is to make it an offence to have illicit connection with girls or women who are not insane but are feeble minded as defined. This creates a new offence. It does not alter the offence which is created under section 219. I observe, however, that in the latter section there has been borne in mind what the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier suggested, that there should be some provision for knowledge on the part of the person accused, and I think that probably it might be proper to make the same provision in connection with this offence. I would be prepared to amend this clause by adding similar words which would meet the objection made by the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier, and would go a long way to obviate the other objections that have been suggested.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): I am in full sympathy with the minister's desire to provide adequate punishment in these cases, but I still think that his terms are very indefinite. In his explanation of this section it seemed to me he was leaving the impression that feeble mindedness was part of the definition. As a matter of fact it is not feeble mindedness that we are defining; mental defectiveness is the term used. That is just as vague as the other terms we are referring to. As I said before, we all require "care, consideration and control." I am not sure that we are not all more or less mentally defective.

Mr. JACOBS: This time you are talking of the Farmers' party?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): We will accept the Farmers' party, if you like. But there is a certain amount of mental defectiveness about everybody. No man is effective in every particular. I should like to see the minister formulate something which will be a little more definite.

Mr. BLAKE: I think this Bill might be interpreted as a measure to legislate people into heaven. It seems to me it leaves itself open to almost any interpretation that any magistrate or judge might put upon it. one authority has said that all people are insane, but some are worse than others, and we send them to an asylum. If you examine medical jurisprudence you will find the dipsomaniac described as a man who wants to drink every "pub" dry. We describe him as a drunkard. The Jack the Ripper type has a homicidal mania but he may be very clever otherwise. I think it is conceded by medical experts that all the girls in the red light district can be classified as nympho-maniacs. They are feeble minded—mentally defective—and this clause here could be construed by any severe magistrate to ban illicit intercourse entirely. I think the section does not meet the requirements for describing feeble minded persons. Every woman of ill fame may be regarded as a nympho-maniac, and therefore is classed in our medical jurisprudence as one of the insane class, and as such could be so regarded under this section.

Mr. DOHERTY: In view of the observations which have been made and the manifest differences of opinion which exist, I suggest that we let this clause stand and go on with the other clauses of the Bill.

Mr. BUREAU: Instead of standing we had better rise.

Mr. DOHERTY: Of course, it is necessary, preliminary to standing, that we should rise. But there are many clauses of this Bill which I think we could dispose of, and perhaps we might consider dropping entirely those that are very contentious.

Section stands.

On section 2—"Recorder's Court" included in definition of "justice."

Mr. DOHERTY: I beg to move that section 2 be dropped. The provision was proposed at the instance of the municipal authorities of Montreal. I have had communications from the Attorney General of the province in which he enters objection to the passing of the clause. I do not think it would be proper for us to pass it until these two authorities who are directly concerned in it have come to a conclusion.

Section dropped.

On section 3—provision respecting instructions to jury in cases of seducing girls between 16 and 18, seducing female employees, carnally knowing girls between 14 and 16.

Mr. DOHERTY: The section itself dealt with the age of consent and likewise made it a criminal offence for an employer in a factory or business establishment of that kind to seduce a girl or woman occupying the position of servant. The amendment extended the provision so as to cover, among other classes, domestic servants, who were not previously covered. The Senate passed the amendment but added a proviso to the effect that in cases of seducing girls between 16 and 18 or seducing female employees or carnally knowing girls between 14 and 16, the judge might instruct the jury to the effect that if they thought it was more the fault of the girl than of the person accused they might acquit him. Now, that provision strikes at the principle of the thing. The principle of the law is that the girl below the age of consent is incapable of consenting and under this proviso made by the Senate, if the jury is told that this girl whom the law assumes to be incapable of consenting may have been more at fault than the party charged, he may thereupon be acquitted. As I say, it is a proviso that goes far toward destroying the effect of the provision itself, and as the House has already come to the conclusion that the law ought to stand without that proviso, it is only logical that we should adhere to the legislation as we enacted it. Of course, it is within the power of the Senate to adhere to what they enacted, in which event our amendment will prove ineffective.

Mr. BUREAU: The section of the Act says that on the trial of any offence under sections 4, 5 or 8 of the Act the trial judge may instruct the jury that if in their view the evidence does not show that the accused is wholly or chiefly to blame for the commission of the offence they may find a verdict of acquittal. Now, we might by this Bill strike out the clause in the section of the Act which deals with the age of consent and let the others remain.

Mr. DOHERTY: I would be prepared to accept that suggestion.

Mr. McMASTER: I seems to me absurd that a man should be acquitted in a case of that kind. It might be quite proper that his punishment should be very much modified by reason of the lessening of the moral obliquity, but it does not seem to be logical to acquit him.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—prohibition respecting concealed weapons extended to pistols, etc.

[Mr. Doherty.]

Mr. ARTHURS: It is a very grave mistake, I think, to put the word "ammunition" in that clause. It would deprive a man of the right to buy a few cartridges at any time. I think it is uncalled for.

Mr. DOHERTY: We will let that stand.

Mr. ARTHURS: I would like to see the clause itself pass, because we did something last year that we did not intend to do. We passed an act whereby it was made unlawful for a man to have in his possession any kind of rifle, pistol, shot-gun or firearm of any kind. It was intended to apply to aliens but the effect has been that any man is now liable to penalty if he has any of these things in his possession. I am desirous that the clause should pass, but I think that the word "ammunition" should not be used as it appears in the clause.

Mr. DOHERTY: It will be found that clause 5 has not the effect of adding to the severity of the law; on the contrary, it seeks to correct what was an over-severity in the provision as it was passed. It is to reduce the severity of the law, not to increase it.

Mr. CURRIE: The effect of the word "ammunition" being in the provision is that a man is allowed to have a pistol at home, but he is not allowed to carry any ammunition home. That is absurd. If the word "ammunition" is struck out, the provision will be all right.

Mr. BUREAU: I should like to point out that we have been here since two o'clock in the afternoon and it is now twenty minutes after one o'clock. The minister should move that the committee rise.

Mr. CURRIE: This is a very important clause for our consideration; it involves thousands of people, and it will not take five minutes to put it through. This is the most important clause in the whole Bill. If you want to stop it and drop the thing, all right; you must take the responsibility.

Mr. BUREAU: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister of Justice or the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) is in charge of the Bill. We are asking the Minister of Justice to move that the committee rise and I think we are making a fair demand. We have been sitting here since two o'clock in the afternoon, and it is now twenty minutes past one. We ought to consider this measure after we come fresh from bed to-morrow.

Mr. DOHERTY: Although I may be in charge of the Bill, the hon. member for North Simcoe has the same right to express his view of the question whether we ought to proceed as the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) has. I think, however, we all desire to adopt that course that will be most conducive to business being put through promptly and at the same time receiving proper consideration. If hon. gentlemen feel that it is not consistent with those requirements that we should continue this morning, I have no desire to insist against the wish of the committee generally. If that be the wish of the committee, I would have no objection to the committee rising and reporting progress. I would be glad to be able to report more progress before we rise, but I do not desire to insist against the general wish of the committee.

Mr. CURRIE: When did it come about in this House that a member is not allowed to speak before a committee? The hon. member for Three Rivers knows that he was out of order when he made such a charge. He has no right to check me; I am just as old a member of this House as he is. My concern in this Bill is this: I introduced a Bill in the House covering these clauses; the Minister of Justice agreed to take my Bill, and I dropped it like a gentleman, in order to save the time of the House I did not force it through. Having regard for that, I think the least the committee could do would be to have regard for me because I did not spend two or three days arguing over the Bill. Now, when it comes before the House, somebody wants to block it.

Mr. BUREAU: I do not want to block it, but I do not want to be commanded by my hon. friend.

Mr. DOHERTY: Supposing we just forget the suggestion of commands. I am sure the hon. member for North Simcoe had no wish to issue any orders. We want to proceed in good humour and to consult each other's views as to what is desirable. If it is the general desire of the committee that the committee should rise, I move that the committee rise, report progress and beg leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

On motion of the Right Hon. Mr. Doherty the House adjourned at 1.25 a.m. Thursday.

Thursday, May 26, 1921.

The House met at Two o'clock.

FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (Finance Minister) presented further Supplementary Estimates required for the public service for the year ending March 31, 1921, which were referred to the Committee of Supply.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT, 1918, AMENDMENT

Hon. Mr. SPINNEY presented the third and final report of the Special Committee to which was referred Bill No. 122, to amend the Civil Service Act, 1918.

Mr. BUREAU: Have any amendments been made to the Bill by the committee?

Mr. SPINNEY: Yes, there are some amendments to the Bill.

Mr. FIELDING: I presume that the Bill will be reprinted as amended.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT

Right Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): I beg leave, subject to the approval of the House, to introduce a Bill, and I ask the House to waive the requirement of previous notice. The purpose of the Bill is to ratify and confirm certain proceedings in connection with plebiscites that have taken place under part 4 of the Canada Temperance Act. As the House is doubtless aware, there is pending presently before the Supreme Court an action in which the proceedings in the province of Alberta are attacked. Numerous constitutional grounds are invoked, and of course with those this Bill is not concerned. But I understand, that it is further claimed that there was an irregularity in the original proclamation ordering the plebiscite, the alleged irregularity consisting in the fact that that proclamation did not state a specific day on which the prohibition would come into effect if the vote of the people was favourable to it. The proclamation stated that the prohibition would come into effect, in the event of the vote being favourable, on a day to be fixed by a subsequent Order in Council. Our law officers were then, and still are, of opinion that the proclamation in its present form is sufficient; but in view of the obvious, I think I may say, prejudice to the general public interests if the case should be determined upon this mere question of regularity, and determined in a sense adverse to the validity of the election, it seems to us wise that that minor question should be removed subject to such conditions, of course, as will do no injustice to the parties in the case whatever be the event of the judgment. The Bill contains two clauses. The first clause deals with this particular question of the proclamation, and the second clause is one of general application analogous to a clause already existing in the general Elections Act, substantially providing that no mere defect of form shall invalidate any order given under the Canada Temperance Act pursuant to a plebiscite, unless it appears that the result of the vote has been, by reason of the irregularity complained of, materially altered. This last clause, as I say, is analogous although not in identical words, to a similar clause, proceeding upon the same principle contained in the general Elections Act, and I think it is a clause which will commend itself to the judgment of the members of this House. Taking this particular instance, should it happen that the result of the present proceedings should be a judgment setting aside all that has been done upon the ground of what is claimed to be an irregularity, the country would find itself in this position, that it would be necessary to begin all over again; incur the entire expense of the plebiscite, and furthermore with the prospect—more than the prospect, I think one might say the certainty—that we would have, in connection with the constitutional question involved, the now pending action, which has now reached the Supreme Court, to be gone all over again. All this would entail considerable expense to the parties, and more especially to the country, and would attain no substantial advantage or benefit for any one. It is not, from what we can ascertain, probable that a judgment will be rendered before Parliament prorogues, and if a judgment comes after prorogation, and resting upon this alleged irregularity, there would be no opportunity to take any action for a long period of months, and there would certainly be no opportunity then, by any action that would be taken, to obtain a judgment upon the constitutional questions in the present case. We would then find ourselves with an interregnum of indecision. We might possibly ratify the plebiscite at that time, but it would still be subject to attack upon the constitutional grounds that are invoked. From every point of view it seems to be desirable that the matter should be dealt with upon these important constitutional points, and that we should run no risk of its going off upon a mere question of formality, and of a judgment being rendered which, if it rests solely upon that question of formality, will leave all the parties interested, and the country, in the position I have indicated, and subject both to very heavy costs.

[Mr. Doherty.]

Mr. FIELDING: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Unless the right hon. gentleman gets the unanimous consent of the House he cannot proceed. Is it the pleasure of the House that the right hon. gentleman should have unanimous consent to introduce this Bill?

Mr. FIELDING: I ask the privilege of putting a question. Is it the intention of the right hon. gentleman to legislate people out of court?

Mr. DOHERTY: We propose not to legislate them out of court, but the effect of our legislation would be to determine that particular question.

Mr. FIELDING: Instead of the court determining it?

Mr. DOHERTY: The court would decide what is regular under the existing law, the effect of the Bill would be to modify the law so as to obviate the necessity of deciding that question. So far as the particular parties in the case are concerned, their one interest in its being done now or later is in regard to the costs they have incurred, and the Bill specially provides that the court shall determine, whatever may be its ultimate decision, as to the question of costs.

Mr. BUREAU: Does that apply to pending cases?

Mr. DOHERTY: It does not say so in express words.

Mr. BUREAU: It is not unanimous.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) objects. Therefore the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Doherty) not getting unanimous consent, his further proceeding would be out of order.

Mr. FIELDING: Give notice. I do not object now, but I will later on.

Mr. DOHERTY: I had reason to believe that it would not be objected to.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT

On motion of Hon. J. A. Calder (Minister of Immigration and Colonization) Bill No. 212 (from the Senate) to amend the Dominion Lands Act, was read the first time.

NORTH WEST TERRITORIES ACT AMENDMENT

On motion of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen (Prime Minister) Bill No. 213 (from the Senate) to amend the North West Territories Act, was read the first time.

LAKE OF THE WOODS AND OTHER WATERS

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister) moved that Bill No. 216 (from the Senate) respecting the Lake of the Woods and other waters be read the first time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When this measure was before the House on a previous occasion the right hon. Prime Minister mentioned that it was in connection with concurrent legislation on the part of the Ontario Government. I understand that that legislation has not been proceeded with. Under the circumstances, is it the intention of the Government to proceed with this Bill?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The previous Bill, already passed, was intended to be concurrent with legislation by the province of Ontario which did not go through, so our former Bill is valueless. The present measure is designed to hold the situation in the meantime, until, if it should come to pass, the Ontario Legislature enacts the concurrent legislation contemplated.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

PENSIONS TO EX-CIVIL SERVANTS.

Mr. POWER:

1. Is the Government aware that a large number of ex-Civil Servants receive pensions on a scale altogether incommensurate with the present high cost of living?

2. Is it the intention of the Government to increase these pensions?

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister):

1. It has never been the policy of this country to supply all ex-civil servants with pensions sufficient to keep them; indeed, many have no pensions at all. The cost of living is rapidly declining.

2. The Government has no proposals to this end.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—TRAIN SERVICE

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure):

1. Has the Management of the Canadian National Railways received an application from the Campbellton Board of Trade asking for improved local train service eastward to Bathurst, New Brunswick, and westward up the Matapedia Valley?

2. If so, what action, if any, will be taken?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1. Yes.

2. Request will be carefully considered.

JOSEPH MARCIL—PENSION

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure):

1. Referring to question answered on April 29th by the Honourable Minister of Finance regarding pension paid to Joseph Marcil, is the amount allowed permanently fixed, or is the case still under consideration?

2. Has the Patriotic Fund investigated the case of L. T. Marcil, the father of the above-mentioned soldier?

Hon. Sir HENRY DRAYTON:

1. The amount is not permanently fixed. The award of pension in this case will be determined by the Board of Pension Commissioners when Mr. Marcil is discharged from treatment which he is now receiving under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment.

2. The Patriotic Fund was raised by private subscriptions, and consequently is a private fund administered by a board who are in no way responsible to Parliament or to the Dominion Government. The honorary secretary of the fund considers it would not be advisable to disclose its dealings with those to whom assistance has been given.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—SHUNTING ENGINES

Mr. BUREAU:

How many shunting engine hours have been absorbed at Saskatoon during the month of April, 1921, by the Canadian Northern Railway?

2. How many shunting engine hours have been absorbed at Saskatoon during the month of April, 1921, by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1 and 2. Total engine switching hours of Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways at Saskatoon during the month of April were 2,358 hours and 15 minutes. This includes the time occupied assisting passenger trains into and out of Saskatoon and in making transfers between Canadian National and Grand Trunk Pacific, which will be eliminated when new facilities are provided. Figures for Grand Trunk Pacific could not very well be separated from Canadian Northern as staffs have been amalgamated into one operating unit.

HAMILTON-BRANTFORD HIGHWAY

Mr. WILSON (Wentworth):

1. What was the estimated cost of that completed portion of the Hamilton-Brantford highway, lying between Paradise road and Binkley's Corners?
2. What is the width of this road?
3. Was it let by public tender, and if so, what tenders were received?
4. Did the lowest tenderer get the contract?
5. What wages per day were paid for teams, labourers, trucks, truck drivers and road inspectors on that completed protion of the Hamilton-Brantford highway?
6. Has there been any reduction made in these wages from those paid last year?
7. What was the price paid for stone?
8. Does the Government allow the use of prison-cracked stone on roads which they have approved?
9. What system of inspection has the Dominion Department of Public Highways respecting these roads?
10. How does the Dominion Department of Public Highways verify the expenditures of the Department of Public Works of Ontario on highways?
11. What is the mileage of provincial highways in the county of Wentworth and the estimated cost of same?
12. What is the estimated cost, contract price, length, width and kind of road on the provincial highway, which starts at the residence of the Minister of Public Works of Ontario, to the top of the mountain at or near the town of Dundas.
13. What amount of money has been spent on that portion of the Hamilton-Brantford highway between the T. H. & B. railway tracks and the village of Ancaster?
14. What is the route of the Dundas street highway through the county of Wentworth?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1. $122,000.00.

2. The width of the road grade and pavement is 30 feet

3 and 4. Tenders were invited for a cement concrete pavement 15 feet wide; 4 were received and the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer, the Ontario Department undertaking to supply cement. After awarding the contract to J. O. Johnson, the Ontario Department was notified by the cement dealers that the necessary cement could not be supplied. It was then decided by the Highways Department to change the character of the construction from cement to bituminous surfacing, and tenders were invited from the Standard Paving Company, of Ottawa, who declined to bid, and the Warren Bituminous Paving Company, of Toronto, and the tender of the Warren Bituminous Paving Company was accepted. The tenderers for the 15-foot cement concrete pavement were as follows: J. O. Johnson, $61,008.50; H. L. Symons, $81,020.00; Engineers & Contracts Company, $87,986.00; Frid Construction Company, $121,802.00.

5. The Ontario Department of Highways reports that the following wages were paid: Foreman, $6.50 per day (and board); roller engineer, $7.50 per day; other engineer, $7.00 per day; rakermen, $6.50 per day (and board); labourers $6.00 per day; 5-ton trucks, $50.00 per day (including driver); 2-ton trucks, $22.50 per day (including driver); teams, $10 00 per day (including driver).

6. Yes.

7. Prices paid per ton at quarry: screenings, 90 cents; 2 inch stone, $1.25; 1 inch stone, $1.45.

8. This point has not come up yet as none has been used to date.

9. The work is inspected by departmental engineers.

10. By the inspection of departmental engineers and checking of expenditures by departmental auditor.

11. The provincial department reports that the mileage of provincial highways in the county of Wentworth is 64 miles. The estimated cost is $2,654,640. The estimated cost of the mileage under agreement under the Canada Highways Act is $887,126.

12. The Ontario Department of Highways state that no provincial highway starts at the residence of the Minister of Public Works for Ontario. The road referred to, while not under agreement, is reported by the Provincial Highways Department as being a section of the Dundas-Kitchener road, the estimated cost being $81,153.00, the distance 3½ miles, the width of the pavement 20 feet, contract price $2.18 per sq. yard for surface. Base almost completed last year by day labour.

13. $123,850.00.

14. From the town line between East Flamboro and Nelson townships, westerly along Dundas street to Clappison's Corners at junction of Hamilton-Owen Sound road.

INLAND REVENUE COLLECTOR—ST. HYACINTHE

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

1. On what grounds has Doctor A. P. Cartier been dismissed as Dominion Revenue Collector at St. Hyacinthe?
2. What is the name and the age of the person who was appointed in his stead?

Hon. Mr. WIGMORE:

1. The retirement of Mr. A. P. Cartier was due to the amalgamation of the Department of Inland Revenue with the Department of Customs.

As a result of this reorganization the services of a considerable number of employees of the Inland Revenue Department were rendered unnecessary and their retirement has been authorized accordingly in the public interest.

2. No person has been appointed in his stead.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. CHARTERS:

1. What departments of the Government have placed orders for leather boots during the past six months?
2. Were tenders called for the manufacture of these boots on the army last?
3. If not, why has a new last been adopted?
4. Who was the expert who advised adoption of the new last for boots for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?
5. Has the Financial Comptroller of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police received any protests in this matter, and, if so, on what grounds?

JUDGE SNIDER'S REPORT

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Maisonneuve—Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, on various occasions some of my colleagues and myself have asked the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) when we may expect the Judge Snider report. That report is about due, and I hope my right hon. friend will see that it be laid on the Table without our having to press further for it.

Right Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): I understand from the Acting Secretary of State (Sir Henry Drayton), to whom it would come, that the final report has not as yet been received.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: (leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when I brought up this matter the other day I mentioned that the report we were asking for was an interim report made some time ago which council has already approved. When may we expect to have that interim report laid on the Table?

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): I stated that having regard to the circumstances I did not think it would be fair, pending the consideration of matters that were involved in that interim report, to place it on the Table before the final report was made. I do not think that it would be fair to those affected by it, because I understand that the subsequent consideration touches subjects referred to in the interim report.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Can the right hon. gentleman fix a date when we may expect to have that report?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would very much like to have the report before the session ends. I will see if I cannot get in touch with Judge Snider or, if not, with Col. Biggar. I will do everything in my power to have the report hurried along.

INCOME TAX ACT CONSOLIDATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) is in his seat I should like to ask him if it is his intention this session to proceed with the Bill which has been on the Order Paper since February 19 entituled "An Act to consolidate the Income Tax Act"? I asked the same question about two weeks ago, but the minister was not in his seat at the time.

Hon. Sir HENRY DRAYTON (Minister of Finance): It is hoped, Mr. Speaker, that some progress may be made in connection with the Bill. There is one clause of real importance which will not be at all contentious, but I think we may as well drop any contentious clauses at the present time. I am anxious to reduce some of the penalties which are to be found in the Act.

TARIFF AND THE YOUNG EMERGENCY BILL

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Maisonneuve—Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, with your leave and with the leave of the House, I should like to put this question to the Minister of Finance. It is rumoured that in view of the Young Emergency Bill he may introduce new tariff resolutions before the end of the session. I should like to know if the report is true.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (Minister of Finance): The report as yet has not reached me, Mr. Speaker, and I certainly have no proposals to make to the House at present.

OLEOMARGARINE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Minister of Agriculture) moved the third reading of Bill No. 205, to amend the Oleomargarine Act, 1919.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Shelburne and Queen's): Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to delay the House for many minutes, but I really think this Bill should not pass its final stage without a brief comment upon the extraordinary position which the Government have taken in relation to it. The question whether oleomargarine is a legitimate article of trade and commerce was long ago answered by all the world, with one exception, and that exception was the Dominion of Canada. While the rest of the world has decided that oleomargarine, whatever its merit may be as a foodstuff, is a legitimate article of trade and commerce, Canada has declined hitherto to reach that conclusion. The Government, however, have not declined; the Government have come to the conclusion that Canada should not isolate herself from the rest of the world, from the rest of civilization. The Government, from their own testimony, have come to the conclusion that oleomargarine is a legitimate article of trade and commerce. It is not a new question; the Government have had it before them for some years, and after years of discussion they decided that the ban should be removed and the article allowed to be traded in the same as any other. But, while the Government tell us that is their conclusion, unhappily they have not the courage to stand by it. Unfortunately, while the House was ready to support them, while many on this side were ready to support them, the Government suddenly lost all faith in their own Bill. Now, for those hon. members representing farming communities who thought that in the interests of their farmers they should oppose this Bill, one can have profound respect. As for those members who opposed the Bill very warmly and then voted for it, I do not care to make any comment. But the attitude of the Government in the matter is a most extraordinary one. They tell us they have reached the conclusion that there is no further ground for putting a ban on oleomargarine, yet they are going to pass a Bill which will permit the importation, manufacture and sale of this product for one year only and bring about another fight in another year. The Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) said last night that he was satisfied with the Bill as originally introduced. Well, if the Government held that view why did they change it? As to hon. gentlemen on that side who opposed the Bill, the Government should have known better than to take them seriously. The Government should have known very well that when it came to a division those hon. members would stand loyally by them. But at the first sign of opposition the Government suddenly threw up their hands—it is the old story of Davy Crockett and the coon: "Don't shoot; I'll come down". When the House was ready to support the Bill, when everything pointed to a settlement of this long-standing question, hon. gentlemen pursued this extraordinary course. It was an exhibition of indecision, of weakness and of folly which will not inure to the credit of the Canadian Government.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

House again in committee on Bill No. 138, to amend the Criminal Code—Right Hon. Mr. Doherty—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the House was last in committee upon this Bill clause 1 had been allowed to stand and clause 2 had been dropped, clauses 3 and 4 had been adopted and we were considering clause 5.

Mr. JACOBS: I understand that clause 5 incorporates in the Bill the legislation which was introduced by the member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie). Am I correct in that?

Mr. DOHERTY: The wording is not identical, but I think the same purpose is sought to be attained. I understand, however, that the hon. member for North Simcoe desired to move an amendment. I do not understand it to be of material consequence, but as he is not in his seat at the moment, and as I should like to afford him an opportunity at all events of putting his proposed amendment before the committee, perhaps we might let this clause stand and go on with the others in the meantime.

Mr. ARTHURS: I do not think that clause 5 as it stands is nearly as definite as was the Bill introduced by the hon. member for North Simcoe. Last year this House passed an amendment to the Criminal Code which was not very well understood by members of the House who were then present. It was understood that the amendment would make it illegal for a foreigner or alien to have firearms in his possession. Unfortunately this amendment did not so apply; it makes it illegal for any person, any Canadian, to have in his possession a gun, rifle, cannon or anything of that kind, without a permit.

In the majority of cases this permit is to be issued by officers who are stipendiary magistrates, police magistrates, or chiefs of police. As the law stands at present the permits are valid only within the jurisdiction of the officer who issues them. That means that if a man starts out on a hunting trip, say, from Ottawa and has to go through various counties in the province of Quebec, he may be arrested for having arms illegally in his possession the moment he leaves Ottawa, and at any time thereafter unless he gets a permit from each district through which he passes having jurisdiction in such matters. I do not think that was the intention of Parliament at all, and I would say that we should simply repeal clause (aa), the provision I complain of, and put nothing in its place.

Mr. McGIBBON (Muskoka): I would like to endorse what the member for Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs) has said. The amendment of last year has created a great deal of annoyance and hardship and I would like to see the provision removed before the end of this session.

Mr. DOHERTY: There will be discussion upon this section, so I suggest again that the clause stand and we may go on with those sections which do not give rise to discussion.

Section stands.

On section 6—illicit connection with Indian women:

Mr. JACOBS: In what respect is a change being made?

Mr. DOHERTY: This is to make it an offence for any white man to have illicit connection with an Indian woman.

Mr. JACOBS: Was that not the law before?

Mr. DOHERTY: Illicit connection between a man and a woman is not a crime save in certain particular cases—as regards girls of certain ages and so forth. This is to make fornication of a white man with an Indian woman an offence. It is proposed in response to the strong urge of Indian agents and persons responsible for conditions upon reserves. It is represented that the consequences of illicit connection between the squaw and the white man which, I regret to say, is reported as being exceedingly prevalent, are most disastrous upon the reserves and to the tribes. As I have said it is represented to us that there ought to be special legislation that would enable efforts to be made to mitigate or, it is hoped, entirely to suppress this regrettable practice.

Mr. JACOBS: Does this apply to cases of Indians living on reserves, or otherwise? Or to both?

Mr. DOHERTY: As the clause stands, it applies to any Indian woman. It is not specially limited to a woman on a reserve, and if it is a good disposition, even though the abuse be more evident upon the reserve, I think there is no need to limit the disposition to the particular places where we see the evidence of the evil consequences.

Mr. JACOBS: It applies without "reserve."

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. JACOBS: Would it apply to half-breeds?

Mr. DOHERTY: I have not before me the Indian Act which, I understand, contains a clause defining the status of a half-breed. It would depend upon the definition whether a half-breed is to be treated as an Indian or not. In certain cases he is treated as an Indian. It would apply to whoever, under the law, is an Indian and to nobody else.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Last year we passed an Act for the compulsory enfranchisement of Indians. When the Indian acquires a certain standard of living or civilization, the law provides now that he may be enfranchised against his will. When this process is adopted with regard to Indians, will this clause apply to Indian women after they have been enfranchised under the law passed last year?

Mr. DOHERTY: No, and I am quite prepared to amend the provision by making it read: "with any unenfranchised Indian female."

Mr. JACOBS: Why should the change be made? Does enfranchisement increase their mentality, or make them more virtuous, or otherwise?

Mr. DOHERTY: No, but it puts them on the footing of the every-day, ordinary citizen. We must treat them as Indians or as non-Indians, and if by enfranchisement we make them non-Indians for all other purposes, I hardly think we should continue to treat them as Indians for this one particular purpose.

Mr. JACOBS: The question would then become one of—When is an Indian not an Indian?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. JACOBS: When he is enfranchised.

Mr. BUREAU: This clause is objectionable in another way. I think it provides an inducement for blackmail. As the clause stands, there is nothing to prevent any Indian female laying a charge against a white man and having her buck Indian coming behind her for the few dollars and holding up the white man. I think the clause will do more harm than good. We do not want to give the buck Indian an opportunity, by such legislation, to take money out of white people's pockets.

Mr. DOHERTY: I suppose that is a possible evil. It is a thing that may occur with regard to crime of any nature. You may have combinations to charge people falsely with offences. If you are dealing with the case of an innocent man, I should think it would be difficult to establish a case. If you are dealing with the case of a guilty man, even though the purpose of those who are prosecuting is to get money, the fact remains that he is guilty of an offence of a nature which, it would appear if representations made are correct, there is a special necessity for endeavouring to suppress.

Mr. PARDEE: What are the representations for this legislation?

Mr. DOHERTY: The representations are that there is a practical disregard on the part of white men of any obligation to respect these Indian women, and on the other hand the Indian women are, perhaps, not as alive as women of other races in the country to the importance of maintaining their chastity, and so forth. What is pointed out, I understand, is not so much the consequences to the individual Indian woman, as the consequences to the tribe as a whole of the prevalence of this apparently recognized practice or malpractice.

Mr. BUREAU: I do not think the evil that this legislation is intended to check is going to be equal to the dangers to which this clause is open. As a rule, Indian women, particularly out in the West, have their bucks to look after them, and they are pretty jealous of and able to look after their women. We are going to legislate for human beings; we are going to pass a law that is going to expose the white man to be the victim of an Indian woman. The better method would be to have legislation on the reserve and to see that the Indians are properly looked after by the people in charge of the reserve. Let them educate the bucks to look after their own women. That would be more humanitarian than to entice them to learn new tricks to hold up the white man and blackmail him.

Mr. JACOBS: Blackmail is a white man's offence. I do not think it can be found to any extent amongst others than white people, so that there is not much danger of that.

Mr. BUREAU: We do not want any legislation that will engender that evil amongst the Indians.

Mr. PARDEE: Having regard to what has been said by my hon. friend (Mr. Bureau) as regards the Indians, I am bound to say that I deprecate this proposed legislation. More harm than good will result from it.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not in any sense absolutely tied up to this legislation. I was endeavouring to meet the views of those who seemed to be in the best position to judge.

Mr. BUREAU: Who are they?

Mr. DOHERTY: The officers of the Indian Department in charge of the reserves. It seems to me that the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) is arguing against this Bill from totally different premises. In the first place he suggests the buck Indian coming behind his squaw, joining with her to prosecute the white man in order to get some money out of him. In the next place he says that the buck Indian is so jealous of his wife that there is no need to afford her any other protection. The hon. member must have two buck Indians in mind, a different buck Indian for each speech. However, if the sense of this committee is that there should be a further examination of this provision, I shall not insist on pressing it through at the present time. On the other hand, for myself I feel disposed, from representations made to me, to think that this is good legislation, and I would not like to drop it unless I felt that the sense of the committee generally was against it

Section dropped.

On section 7—falsely registering at hotels, etc., as man and wife:

Mr. PARDEE: Is not this the clause that was dropped by the Senate last year?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. JACOBS: It was dropped by the Senate for three successive years. The department seems to overlook the fact that the Senate is not in agreement with the Commons on this question.

Mr. DOHERTY: Our experience has been that the Senate has not been in agreement with the Commons on certain questions, but that they have had respect for the perseverance of the Commons, and have come to agree on being given repeated opportunities of seeing the error of their ways. I think that this House, having already more than once committed itself to the desirability of this provision, would be only acting consistently in passing it again. We have had experience of rejection by the Senate of certain provisions at one or more sessions and of the Senate finally, perhaps because of our importunity, yielding and passing the legislation.

Mr. JACOBS: By the process of attrition, I suppose—wearing them out.

Mr. DOHERTY: Contrition.

Mr. JACOBS: I opposed this measure when it came up three years ago; I opposed it when it came up two years ago; I opposed it last year, and I have not seen anything to change my views since. The question of blackmail would often arise in such a case, if it does not in the case of the Indian woman. The clause before the committee reads:

> Every one is guilty of an offence and liable upon summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding five hundred dollars or six months' imprisonment, who at any hotel, boarding or lodging house, whether by registering in any book kept in such hotel, boarding or lodging house, or otherwise, represents or pretends that a woman or man is his wife or husband, as the case may be, knowing the same to be untrue, and the onus of proof of the absence of knowledge shall be upon the person accused.

I would direct the attention of the committee to this curious clause. It is no offence for a man and a woman to cohabit. They can live together for thirty years in open adultery to the scandal of the whole community, and that is not an offence under our law, nor is it made an offence under this clause; but as soon as they register at an hotel they are liable to a fine of $500 or six months' imprisonment. Is not that absurd? Make the act of cohabitation an offence and I might be willing to support it, but to make that act of registration an offence seems to me to be absurd on the face of it. The people may be perfectly respectable citizens and commit no offence so long as they cohabit in their house, but as soon as they register at an hotel, a crime is committed. I should like to know what is the crime of registration? If the law will condone living together in open concubinage and adultery, why will it not overlook the offence of registration? Suppose this lady and gentleman want to paper their house and have to move out in the meantime to a boarding house or a hotel. Under this clause they are liable to six months' imprisonment for moving out of their house. The legislation is absurd, and the whole tenor of it is in the direction of bringing our law into ridicule and contempt. I understand that it is being promoted and fostered by some hysterical woman's society, who think they can make people virtuous by act of Parliament. I am opposed to this clause.

Mr. DOHERTY: If the hon. gentleman suggests that we should pass a law making cohabitation or adultery an offence, that is one question. My hon. friend did not quite commit himself as to whether he would support such legislation. The evil that is sought to be struck at here is the utilization of places of public resort, like hotels, boarding or lodging houses, for the purpose of committing the sin of adultery. It is represented that this is applicable on the large lines to a class of cases quite different from that which the hon. member suggests; that is to say, it affords opportunity for what I might call casual cohabitation—

Mr. JACOBS: Accidental.

Mr. DOHERTY: Accidental cohabitation of people who have no permanent liaison of any kind between them. It is a public scandal when it becomes a matter of general knowledge that a certain hotel in a community is a place where any couple can go and register as man and wife, and have all the liberties thereto pertaining. It does seem to me that that is an evil distinct from—I do not say a greater evil than—the sin of adultery itself. This provision has been urged, I might say, by people who are neither women, nor, so far as it is possible for me to judge, hysterical, and whose work is practically constantly connected with the endeavour to suppress offences against morality. They look upon the immunity which at present exists in this case as being very detrimental to the general morals of the community in which this practice prevails.

Mr. PARDEE: Is not this legislation just about on the same line as the Mann Act which was passed in the United States some years ago? Perhaps the right hon. gentleman knows that that Act has been a most fruitful source of blackmail, to such an extent that it has been condemned even in the States where it was originally in force. In the face of that experience, I do not see why we in this House should endeavour to pass legislation which has failed hopelessly in the United States. There is no question that this legislation will lead to the results far worse than the supposed crime that it is intended to stop. The right hon. gentleman has said that this House has assented to this clause once or twice before. The last time this Bill went through the House was at the end of the session, when nobody paid any particular attention to it. So far as I am concerned, I distinctly object to this class of legislation. I think it leads to offences which are far worse than the evil intended to be cured, and for that reason I stoutly oppose this clause.

Mr. DOHERTY: This is another clause in respect of which I am quite in the hands of the committee. I have heard no expression of opinion favourable to the clause, and I desire to call attention to that on the part of hon. gentlemen who have sat silent. If there be any view favourable to the clause, I think it ought to express itself. I do not want personally, alone, to stand for insisting on a provision of this kind, if the committee generally are against it.

Mr. GORDON: There are very many reasons, I think, why this clause should be passed, particularly in view of the many travellers who come to our summer resorts in Ontario, and I suppose in the other provinces, in the summer. Couples travelling in this way from the United States and from the cities of Canada will put up at hotels, and they become practically a nuisance to the people who are spending the summer in the community with their children. It is not the class of people that should go to these summer resorts or, for that matter, to any of the hotels, and it seems to me that unless something is done to prevent a recurrence of this, matters will become worse. The summer season is prolific in that sort of thing, and, while I do not suppose that summer resorts are subjected to this trouble to any greater extent than any other class of hotel, yet I think that this practice is increasing, and something along the line proposed should be adopted in order to stop it.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: I support the minister in this matter, and I shall vote for the law he proposes because I think it is necessary. I have considerable experience of what passes in Montreal, having been Crown Prosecutor for sixteen years now. I have consulted the magistrates and they are all of the opinion that this law is absolutely necessary. As the member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) says, it is too bad to see people living in immorality, and I will add that we should do everything we can to curtail the practice. We should try, if we can, to keep the hotels and boarding houses, as far as possible, free of this sort of thing. In the light of my experience gained in Montreal, I can do nothing but vote for this law.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): In a great many of these matters, it is very essential that governments and legislative bodies should draw a clear distinction between crime and sin. I come from a country where law is administered, as I think it is throughout the British Empire, with the utmost care and rigour; but law is for the repression of crime, especially crime committed against other people. It is not the function of government to cure sin; preachers and gospels have been labouring with sinners ever since the fall of man, and that is their function. I repeat, it is not the function of governments to cure sin. There are only three possible things we can do with the sinner, whatever the sin. You could hang him or her, but that would be a very drastic cure for most sins, and I am afraid we should find it difficult to procure executioners. And you could confine all sinners; but there, again, you would be met with the difficulty of finding gaol space and gaolers. If you do not hang them, and you do not confine them, then it follows that the sinners must live somewhere; and where governments have made tremendous blunders, blunders leading to enormous evil difficult to calculate, is that they have tried too much to make regulations as to where these people should live. I think the point raised by my hon. friend from George Etienne Cartier was well taken, namely, that the real crime that is being raised in this Act is the "crime" of registration. In effect it is said: Adultery is all right, but you must not associate it with spring cleaning,—and that is the whole thing with the minister. The minister admits that he cannot do anything with adultery; but if adultery be associated with spring cleaning, necessitating the removal of people for the time being to somewhere else than where they were before, then they immediately become protégés and clinical clients of my right hon. friend. I hope the minister will not extend his operations too far in this handling of sinners from the legal point of view. If he did, he could begin in comparatively near proximity to himself, and find some eligible subjects for his paternal solicitude. I honestly think that this paternalistic legislation has gone a little bit too far, and this law might very well wait for a while.

Section negatived on division

On section 8—driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated made an offence.

Mr. JACOBS: What is the meaning of the term "intoxicated" in this section?

Mr. DOHERTY: I think the courts have frequent occasion to determine when a man is intoxicated or drunk, and I do not fancy there is any more difficulty in deciding when the driver of an automobile is intoxicated than there is in establishing the drunkenness of any person not so engaged. If my hon. friend thinks the word "drunk" would be more clear, I shall insert it. I have a recollection of a policeman who was charged with being drunk on duty, and who pleaded that he might have been personally intoxicated, but that he was not officially drunk. I do not know whether my hon. friend would make any such distinction.

Mr. JACOBS: There are different degrees of drunkenness. There are cases where a man may be slightly intoxicated, but not to a sufficient extent to interfere with his driving a motor vehicle, while in other cases, he might be so affected as not to be able to handle the wheel at all. We should mention the degree of intoxication from which he is suffering before making it an offence.

Mr. BELAND: Twenty glasses.

Mr. DOHERTY: Does not the hon. member think that if a man came before the court and the evidence was that, although he had something to drink, he was not so intoxicated as to affect his control over a motor vehicle, the court would hold, under those circumstances, that he was not intoxicated or drunk?

Mr. JACOBS: My experience with courts leads me to think that we should not leave too much to the discretion of the court.

Mr. DOHERTY: I would not leave too much, but I think we ought to leave a little.

Mr. JACOBS: Yes, a little.

Mr. DOHERTY: We are leaving very little in this instance. There are similar provisions imposing penalties, I think in some of the provinces.

Mr. GORDON: In Ontario.

Mr. DOHERTY: I would point out the great gravity there is in a man driving a motor vehicle while in such a state as not to be able to control himself, to say nothing of the vehicle, and thus exposing the lives of the population. The dangers to which we are all exposed do not come so much from our own carelessness as from the carelessness of others, and this is true in the case of accidents in connection with motor vehicles. In connection with the Ticket of Leave Act, and other legislation of that kind, I have been startled at the frequency of offences in which people are killed or seriously maimed because of carelessness in the driving of motor cars, and under those circumstances it is, in my judgment, a very serious offence for a man, in any degree of intoxication that affects his perfect carefulness, undertaking to run a motor car. I do not think that the proposed penalty is too great.

Section agreed to.

On section 9,—Age that consent of child no defence in indecent assault raised from 14 to 16.

Mr. BUREAU: What is the purpose of raising the age limit?

Mr. DOHERTY: It is simply to assimilate the case of indecent assault with the case of illicit connection. The law previously fixed at 14 the age limit at which it was an offence to have connection with a girl. It has been raised with the consent of the Senate to 16. Now with regard to cases of indecent assault, where the consent is no defence, when the law stood that the completion of the act of illicit connection, regardless of consent, was a crime only with regard to girls under fourteen, then it was logical and consistent that the age limit with regard to cases of indecent assault in which consent would not be a defence should be fourteen. But having raised the age with regard to the grave offence referred to it would only be consistent to make the same alteration with regard to indecent assault.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Whipping added to punishments for rape.

Mr. DOHERTY: As the law stands at the present time we have the anomalous situation that you may whip a man for attempting to commit rape, but you may not whip him if he succeeds.

Mr. JACOBS: Except that he is imprisoned for life.

Mr. DOHERTY: He may be imprisoned for life, but he may not be whipped, whereas for the mere attempt he may be whipped.

Mr. McKENZIE: There is one thing I would like to say about the punishment of whipping before this section is passed. The courts, both here and in the Old Country, hear appeals in the most serious criminal offences. A man is found guilty by judge and jury of murder, nevertheless he has the right of appeal and he has a chance of escaping; but whenever a whipping is applied there is no good talking about an appeal, and there may not be a chance of getting a stay of proceedings. I am opposed to whipping at all on that ground. I am strongly with the Minister of Justice as to any reasonable punishment, but I take that objection to whipping. If the whipping is once applied there is no remedy for it, there is nothing you can do about it. I am told by those who have seen flogging or whipping that it is a most beastly thing, and on principle I must register my protest against it.

Mr. DOHERTY: There will always be applications to remit that penalty. We have numerous applications to remit the whipping even when there is no request to remit the imprisonment. These applications are always very carefully considered and there is, of course, that remedy.

Section agreed to.

On section 11—Provision respecting carnally knowing girl between 14 and 16.

Mr. BUREAU: How will the section read now?

Mr. DOHERTY: In 1920 this House raised the age.

[Mr. Doherty.]

Mr. BUREAU: You have at present the provision that the girl must previously be of chaste character and now you are striking that out?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: Will you explain the reason for striking it out?

Mr. DOHERTY: For the same reasons that we did not put it in when we passed the law. The section as it was passed by this House was that:

> Everyone is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for five years who carnally knows any girl under the age of 16 and above the age of 14 not being his wife, and whether he believes her to be above the age of 16 or not.

The Senate modified that provision by inserting a requirement that the girl should have been of previous chaste character. Now that is a requirement that has existed in connection with other offences of a similar nature and which has given rise to a very great deal of difficulty in the application of the law. It has involved, necessarily involved, in every case of this kind an investigation into the chastity of the girl who has been the victim. Whatever you may say, when you are dealing with girls under sixteen, the man who takes the responsibility of having illicit connection with a girl under that age, might, I think, very well be subjected to some measure of punishment without an investigation of the entire past life of the girl concerned.

Mr. JACOBS: What if the man is fifteen or sixteen years of age or less?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, young boys.

Mr. DOHERTY: Well if he is fifteen or sixteen years of age he has not done a very virtuous thing has he?

Mr. JACOBS: I am ready to admit that, nor has she.

Mr. DOHERTY: And the court will consider all these circumstances in the measuring out of the punishment. We have got to make a general law, and the one question that we are concerned with now is, whether the existence of the offence should turn upon the previous chastity of the girl. As I have said, in the application of the law a situation is created where a girl, who has been wronged in this way, must submit, if she consents to a prosecution, to being brought before the court and humiliated by all sorts of endeavours to find out whether or not she has, at any previous occasion or time, misbehaved herself, all for the purpose of trying to procure the escape from punishment of a person who admittedly has been guilty of a sin. I would not like to arouse the indignation of my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark), but after all if the law should not suppress sin—and I quite agree we might have, as in our charitable operations perhaps, to begin at home if we are going to absolutely suppress sin—I do not think the law should feel called upon to surround it with protection. And if the man indulges in the sin of illicit connection with a young girl, should the legislature feel particularly called upon to protect him from the possible consequence resulting from the fact of the youth of the girl concerned and protect him by really subjecting that girl to an imposition before a public court? I must say that, supposing the result of that imposition was to establish that at some previous time or on some previous occasion she had forgotten herself, I do not see that it would be a very serious mitigation of the offence of the man.

Mr. BUREAU: I see the justness of the remarks made by the minister. On the other hand he knows, as I do, that there are girls who, at the age of sixteen, are fully developed and look much older than they really are. Supposing a man goes into a house of ill-fame or a house of assignation and meets one of these girls and has illicit connection with her—commits a sin to use the words of my hon. friend—it would not be fair that such a man should be brought before the court and accused of carnally knowing a girl under the age of sixteen, when the girl was not of chaste character previously but was known to be a prostitute. It is not fair, under such circumstances that that man should be held up before the law and found guilty of a crime.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not quite sure that even if a woman be a prostitute there is not such a public interest in preventing young girls being polluted under the age of sixteen as to justify making it an offence for any man who contributes towards the making of young girls prostitutes who are below that age. That is the case with the man which the hon. member places before us.

Mr. BUREAU: No, he finds her there.

Mr. DOHERTY: Well, if he and men like him did not go to houses of prostitution, or if they drew the line at girls under sixteen, there would not be the encouragement to those girls to resort to that unfortunate profession, if I may so call it.

Mr. BUREAU: How is he going to know if she looks like a girl of twenty?

Mr. DOHERTY: I think it is fair for him to take his responsibility. He can satisfy himself.

Section agreed to.

On section 12—minimum sentence for stealing automobile:

Mr. McMASTER: What is the section that shall not apply?

Mr. DOHERTY: I understand that section 1035 would leave to the magistrate the discretion of imposing a fine. The other modification in the law affected by this section is to wipe out the maximum penalty. There was a maximum penalty of two years' and a minimum of one year's imprisonment. There did not seem to be any very good reason why a man stealing an automobile should get a lighter punishment than he was liable to get for the theft of some other article.

Mr. JACOBS: Why such active sympathy for the owners of automobiles?

Mr. DOHERTY: Not at all.

Mr. JACOBS: We declare the sentence for stealing an automobile shall not be less than one year's imprisonment. There does not seem to be any money penalty.

Mr. DOHERTY: This amendment is not introduced because of sympathy for automobile owners, but we have had brought home to us in the strongest possible way that the stealing of automobiles is exceedingly prevalent, and there is therefore greater cause for energetic measures to suppress crime that is prevalent than perhaps may be necessary in the case of offences that are of rare occurrence.

Mr. JACOBS: I suppose the committee will see that I am not the owner of an automobile.

Mr. DOHERTY: Neither am I.

Mr. JACOBS: Why not make the offence similar for those who steal a horse and buggy? We know cases of young men who steal an automobile for a joy ride, and the automobile is either brought back or left by the roadside. A magistrate may decide that as a case of ordinary theft and the young men will be sent down for one year without the option of a fine. The latter portion of the section says that the sentence shall not be suspended without the concurrence of the Attorney General. Why should we interfere with the judge in the discharge of his duty to take into consideration the circumstances in each particular case? Surely we ought to have confidence in our judiciary.

Mr. DOHERTY: Under the law as it stands the judge has indefinite discretion to suspend. There are numerous other cases where he is not empowered to suspend sentence without the assent of the Attorney General. With regard to the question of the hon. member, why not make the penalty similar for the theft of a horse and buggy? —I have no reason to give except that I have already indicated, that there appears to be a special necessity to impress upon a large class of people who look upon the automobile as fair game the seriousness of what they are doing. I think it is generally recognized that one of the things you must consider in determining the degree of severity of punishment is the greater or less necessity for repression of the crime as evidenced by the greater or less prevalence of that crime.

Mr. JACOBS: Why should not the judge be given discretion in districts where the offence is not prevalent? If, for instance, in Toronto or Montreal, automobile stealing is prevalent, then the judge recognizing that fact sees that a heavy penalty is imposed. But take, for instance, the district of Three Rivers, where no such thing as theft is known—and some person falls from grace, a stranger to that district, the same sentence ought not to be meted out to the offender as would be the case in a district where the offence has become prevalent. I urge upon the committee that the courts should be given discretion to deal with these cases as in the past.

Mr. McGIBBON (Muskoka): I think we all ought to be in sympathy with the object which this Bill hopes to attain, but personally I do not think it is wise to enact legislation which is going to facilitate the branding of people as jail-birds. It is a serious thing for a man to be put in jail—more serious probably than many of us realize; and when you make the crime of stealing an automobile such that there is no option but for the accused to serve a term in jail, I think the sentence is altogether out of proportion to the crime. If he is there for only a week, he and his children are branded for the rest of their natural lives as jail-birds. I endorse the sentiment of the last speaker (Mr. Jacobs) that some discretion surely ought to be left to the judge in these cases.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): I think the remarks of the hon. member for Muskoka are quite in point, taken in connection with the fact that a great number of these automobile thefts are committed innocently. I do not think we should limit the discretion of a judge to consider favourable circumstances in the case of a boy who goes out for a joy-ride with somebody else's automobile. That is theft undoubtedly, and under this amendment he cannot escape with less than a year's imprisonment. I think the minister would be well advised to reconsider the section.

Mr. CURRIE: I have not a great deal of sympathy with the boy who takes an automobile and drives off with it! We have had those cases in Toronto. For the first year the magistrates treated them merely as joy-rides and let the boys off; from that the boys graduated to stealing cars, and finally they graduated into these bandits who are driving about the country shooting and robbing people. There have been half a dozen of these serious cases lately, and if you look up the records of the youths involved, some of whom have been sentenced to be hanged, you will find they were up before the magistrates in the first place on the charge of stealing automobiles for joy-rides. At first the magistrates and judges were all inclined to think that taking a man's automobile from in front of his house or store was like borrowing his garden rake or hose, but when somebody suggested that while the car was borrowed the borrower was using up the gasoline, and therefore stealing it, a conviction was obtained for the theft of the gasoline. Hardly a night passes in Toronto without there being four or five cars stolen. Cars are taken off by men who use them in connection with their operations in burglarizing banks and robbing the tills in the stores of merchants in small towns. The only way to stop a wave of crime of that kind is by drastic legislation. A nice little joy-ride is very often the first step toward a criminal career. A young fellow may take a car out, drive around in it for a while and then leave it where he got it; the owner comes out and wonders what is the matter with it. Then the next time a young fellow takes a car he gets drunk, perhaps, and smashes it. And all this time the law is saying to this fellow: Oh, you are all right, we will not touch you. The gang of thugs that have been terrorizing Ontario is made up of boys some of whom are hardly out of their teens; and these fellows have been stealing automobiles for five or six years. A law of this kind will teach these people that they must leave motor cars alone, and you will find that much of this crime will cease.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: It seems to me that the penalties provided by this clause are not too severe. If it is established that the accused is guilty, sentence may be suspended as provided by the Act. The new section says that sentence shall not be suspended without the concurrence of the Attorney General or his agent or of the counsel acting for the Crown in the prosecution of the offender. That means, however, that if the judge has the consent of the Attorney General or his agent he may suspend sentence. The case will be carefully examined, and if it is evident that the sentence should be suspended, the accused can be given fair play. It will be ascertained whether or not the automobile was taken as a joke; everything in favour of the man will be examined into. As the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) has contended, the proposed amendment is not too severe. There are too many cases of stealing automobiles, and we must try to put a stop to it. I am in favour of this law; it is only just.

Mr. DOHERTY: I may point out to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson) that if he got just such a case as he supposes then we would have section 285B to deal with. If it was established that the act was a mere boyish freak, the judge would have absolute discretion to go as low as he liked in the way of punishment.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): As a matter of fact it is theft though, according to the definition of theft in the Code, is it not?

Mr. DOHERTY: We must read the definition of theft, but we must read also the section dealing with special cases. I think it is generally recognized that a disposition dealing with a special case makes an exception to a general disposition. Section 285B says:

> Everyone who takes or causes to be taken from a garage, stable, stand or other building or place, any automobile or motor car with intent to operate or drive or use or cause or permit the same to be operated or driven or used without the consent of the owner shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding $500 and costs or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding twelve months or to both fine and imprisonment.

I do not think, therefore, that there is any danger that the really harmless boy will get harshly treated under this law. I may point out that just the other day we were passing on a murder case in connection with which the first operation was the perfectly harmless thing that the hon. gentleman speaks of—the borrowing of somebody else's automobile for the purpose. I simply mention this more recent case; we have had several such instances. The borrowed automobile is becoming one of the tools of trade of the burglar and the hold-up artist. I hope hon. gentlemen will not allow themselves to be carried away with the sympathetic appeal of the odd case of a boy who may perhaps by mistake be convicted of stealing but who always has the opportunity of appealing to a very lenient and clement Solicitor General and Minister of Justice. I hope hon. gentlemen will not do that and forget the importance of impressing on the criminal population the seriousness of the offence of really stealing an automobile.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Are the offenders any more liable to be caught under the penalty provided in this Bill than under the present penalty?

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not think they are more liable to be caught. But the whole theory of the criminal law is that it deters people from committing offences by providing penalties and punishments.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It is the certainty of the punishment rather than the extent of it which deters.

Mr. DOHERTY: The certainty is of great importance, and we strive as far as possible to get it. But if you have certainty of punishment and the punishment itself is inadequate, you do not get very much effect. There is no disposition that we can put in this statute that will make it certain that the criminal will get caught; that we have to leave to the vigilance of those who are charged with the enforcement of law.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): If I were satisfied that the minister's interpretation of the law was correct, I would not object to the clause as it stands. I have a distinct recollection of prosecuting in a somewhat similar case under a section placed some time ago in the Criminal Code; perhaps the minister will remember it. I cannot quote it exactly at the moment, but it refers to the keeping of stray animals. I raised the contention in that case that it was theft. The judge before whom I was acting, and who, I think, was one of the brightest judges we have ever had in Canada, expressed himself as absolutely clear that it was theft and that the man could be prosecuted for theft, notwithstanding that in this other section it is dealt with in another way. This is a repetition of what I have suggested. This judge may be wrong and the minister may be right; but I have grave doubt whether my right hon. friend is right, and, therefore, I do not like the clause as it stands. I believe, that strictly according to law, that boy could be prosecuted under this section, and he must be sentenced for one year unless the Crown prosecutor or the Attorney General agrees. I suppose it is likely that where a case is such as I have mentioned, the Crown prosecutor or the Attorney General would agree.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: Not agree, but recommend.

Mr. McMASTER: Concurrence.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): As long as there is concurrence, that is all that is required.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: Once a man is found guilty, the judge has no right to suspend sentence, but he has a right to consult with the Crown prosecutor or agent of the Crown, and then if the case is a fair one, the Crown prosecutor or agent of the Crown will recommend suspension of the sentence. The law is perfectly correct.

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. member (Mr. Thomson) is assimilating the crime of stealing an automobile with that of stealing a horse and buggy. There is all the difference in the world between the two. There are regular organizations of automobile thieves. They have places where they can take a car, run it into a garage, take the number off the engine, stamp on another number and get the car away to the United States. I had a case of a stolen car, and that car was found six months afterwards in a garage in New York where demonstrations were being made for technical schools. Automobile stealing is an organized trade, the same as that of counterfeiting. Insurance companies which insure automobiles against theft will tell you that it is the best organized system of robbery there is on the continent. It is spreading all the time. Another thing which my hon. friend forgets is that a man who steals an automobile is not going to loaf around the street corners; he goes full speed with it, and he may kill any one on the road. Therefore, by trying to stop this automobile stealing business, you are protecting human life. I am not in favour of too drastic measures, but this is an evil that is spreading. In the city of Three Rivers, I must say that automobile theft has come to be a fashion, not that the people of that city steal automobiles, but we have visits from people from Montreal. There have been automobiles stolen in Three Rivers, a distance of 96 miles from Montreal, and on a telephone message being sent to Montreal, two hours afterwards the automobile was traced in that city. That shows the danger to which men, women, children, horses and so on are exposed on the road between Three Rivers and Montreal. This is an evil that ought to be stamped out. If judges are too kind-hearted, we might bring in the Attorney General or his representatives, of whom we have two worthy ones in this House, and we have had an expression of views from one who, for a number of years, has been a representative of the Attorney General in Montreal. We can trust such officials as they are to see that justice is meted out and that no injustice is done. May I add for the information of the hon. gentleman, that in the Criminal Code there is a provision that for stealing a cow a man is liable to go to penitentiary for fourteen years?

Mr. McMASTER: Not to exceed fourteen years.

Mr. BUREAU: I know that, and he cannot run away with a steer so fast as to endanger the life of people along the road very much.

Mr. STEWART (Hamilton West): Coming from a city of the size of Hamilton in which automobile stealing is prevalent, I would be neglecting my duty if I did not say a word or two in regard to this legislation. We have a provision now by which those who steal automobiles may be hauled up and fined, and sent to jail if they do not pay the fine. There is five times as much stealing of automobiles as there was a year ago, and this crime is increasing very rapidly. I have an automobile which I keep in a good barn at the back of my house. I have had the panels pulled out of the door twice while I have been in bed and the police have chased the thieves away. It is pretty nearly impossible to keep a $5,000 or $6,000 automobile without scalawags trying to break in one's doors to get it away. It is absolutely necessary that something should be done to stop these people from doing that sort of thing. We are neglecting our duty if we do not change the law, and I think that if the law provided that automobile thieves could be lashed, we would put more terror into them.

Mr. McMASTER: This is a very bad clause. I have no objection to the penalty being increased if the law is not severe enough; but to pass a statute which says that a judge, no matter what the circumstances may be, shall not have within himself the right to suspend sentence or to give a sentence of less than a year, seems to me a serious reflection upon the judiciary of the country.

Mr. BUREAU: A judge in certain cases must sentence a man to be hanged.

Mr. DOHERTY: In cases of stealing from the post office or the mails, a judge has to give not less than three years.

Mr. McMASTER: Probably the same argument which I make here would apply to that.

Mr. DOHERTY: This is not a solitary case.

Mr. McMASTER: That would not affect my argument, which is that you will not deter people from crime by providing heavy penalties. When there was, on the statute books of the Old Country and probably of this country, the death penalty for half a dozen or a dozen crimes, there was more crime than there is now. When a man could be hanged for sheep-stealing, sheep-stealing was more common than it is to-day. It is not the severity of the penalty; it is the certainty of the penalty that is required. This is a move in the wrong direction. Let people who steal automobiles be punished as severely as the judge with whom the application of the law is left deems best, but do not tie the judge's hands in a case which may easily come up where a light sentence should be imposed. Let me give a specific instance, an imaginary case, a hypothetical case.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Keep to the old word "imaginary."

Mr. McMASTER: All right, I will imagine this case. A young man, the only support of a widowed mother, steals a car. He just wants a joy-ride. He is caught. He repents. He is really sorry.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. McMASTER: People repent sometimes and are really sorry. A judge, convinced that the young man is really sorry, might think it wise to impose a penalty much lighter than a year's imprisonment, but under this provision his hands are tied unless he gets the consent of the Crown prosecutor. I believe this clause is a mistake and that it will not have the desired effect.

Mr. CURRIE: The hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) touched the very point when he said that what is required in the law is the certainty of the penalty. That is what we are providing here. I have in my mind at the moment, magistrates who for months and years would not fine because they would never get into an automobile themselves; they looked upon them as gewgaws, something outrageous, that people should not have—they themselves would rather walk to the court. If an automobile got smashed up, that was all right; it was something that was not necessary in the first place, according to these magistrates. Now we must prevent the idiosyncrasies of the judges from interfering with the penalty in this way. We must have a fixed penalty, and that is what the law is providing. I think the law is a good one, and the hon. member who has just sat down has given us the very reason why we should pass the section.

Mr. BUTTS: I have always been very much opposed to this idea of leaving it in the power of the judge to pass a sentence with his right hand, and to suspend that sentence with his left. I know of a case right down in my own part of the country, in the constituency of my hon. friend across the harbour, the hon. member for North Cape Breton and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie), where a young man was walking abroad in the streets of North Sydney with four suspended sentences upon his shoulders at the one time. One sentence was for stealing an automobile, another was for shooting his own brother through the lungs so severely that four doctors were required to save him. In spite of the four sentences that were on his shoulders at the one time, he was walking abroad just the same as any law-abiding citizen.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: What were the other two sentences?

Mr. BUTTS: Perhaps I had better not mention them, but if my hon. friend wants to know, the third sentence was for an attempt to commit rape. In spite of his four sentences, politics kept this young man walking the street.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Shame!

Section agreed to.

On section 13—persons under 21 and guilty of theft liable to be spanked:

Mr. JACOBS: I should like to have from the minister his definition of the word "spanked" before we go any further.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: My hon. friend ought to remember what happened to him in his youth.

Mr. JACOBS: It is so long ago that I have forgotten.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am sorry my hon. friend's memory is so short. My right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce or myself might be excused if we had forgotten, but not a young man like my hon. friend. The hon. member will find the information he wants on page 10. It is as follows:

(1) Whenever spanking may be awarded for any offence the court may sentence the offender to be once, twice or thrice spanked within the limits of the prison, under the supervision of the medical officer of the prison, or if there be no such officer, or if the medical officer be for any reason unable to be present, then, under the supervision of a surgeon or physician to be named by the Minister of Justice in the case of prisons under the control of the Dominion, and in the case of other prisons by the attorney general of the province in which such prison is situated.

(2) The number of the strokes shall be specified in the sentence; the offender shall be spanked upon the bare buttocks; and the instrument to be used shall be a leather strap not longer than eighteen inches or wider than two and one-half inches or narrower than one inch or thicker than one-quarter of an inch.

(3) No female shall be spanked.

Mr. JACOBS: Now that women have the vote, I do not see why they should be deprived of this privilege.

Mr. DOHERTY: If the hon. member chooses to move an amendment we shall be pleased to consider it.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I would like my hon. friend to cut that section out and keep it in his vest pocket.

Mr. BUREAU: I had understood that spanking was slapping with the open hand, but I find by the dictionary that to spank is:

to strut, to stalk; comp. Sc. Spang, to leap.

Mr. EDWARDS: That is French.

Mr. BUREAU (reading):

to move with a quick lively step:

That is not French. It may be Irish:

to slap or smack, as with the open hand.

The latter is what I understood spanking to mean, but it seems that we are going to go back to the Middle Ages and use leather straps of a certain width and length on the bare buttocks. That is something that I thought pertained only to animals, so I took the trouble to look it up in the dictionary, and I find this:

Buttock, the rump, or the protuberant part of an animal behind.

I did not know that by legislation we were seeking to consecrate the protuberant part of an animal behind to human beings. But, leaving aside the dictionary definition, Mr. Chairman, I think it is ridiculous legislation to provide that a boy of twenty, who is pretty well grown, and very often well developed, should be put across a man's knees and spanked. I do not think we ought to put such legislation upon our statute books. It is taking us back to the Middle Ages. We might just as well erect stocks in our public squares and have people fastened down to them to be insulted by every passer-by. I think it is ridiculous legislation. I am in favour of whipping for rape. I think that is the greatest crime; I think it is much worse than murder for a man to take hold of an innocent girl and assault her; I am in favour of whipping for that offence, but not for theft. In England in the old days they used to hang a man for stealing a sheep. We do not want to go back to those days, but here we are starting to spank boys of nineteen and twenty years of age for theft. I say that we might just as well go back to the instruments of tortue in the olden days. I am opposed to this section. I do not say that it was inspired by hysterical persons, as my hon. friend from George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) has suggested, but it is certainly hysterical legislation.

Mr. JACOBS: If we pass legislation dealing with the rump, we shall be under the imputation, it seems to me, of being a Rump Parliament. This is what we might call the Joker in the entire Bill as presented by the minister. I think it is beneath the dignity of Parliament to declare that people up to twenty-one years of age shall be spanked. We have had in this Parliament men twenty-one years of age, and under this section they would be liable to be taken out and spanked.

Mr. DOHERTY: Perhaps they deserved it.

Mr. JACOBS: I have not had the long parliamentary experience that my hon. friend has had. The definition of "spank" in the dictionary I have before me is this:

To strike with the open hand, as to spank a small boy.

That is practically what it is. We have all of us had spanking in our early days—some of us not as often as we should have had perhaps, on the principle that if you spare the rod you spoil the child—but I cannot understand how a rule of this kind, inserted in our criminal law, is going to help the situation. If a boy is guilty of stealing, he ought to be dealt with as a thief. The younger boy under sixteen is sent to the reformatory under the Juvenile Delinquents Act. We have a system in our law whereby children under a certain age may not be tried in public, but in private by a Juvenile Delinquents Court judge, and they are thus removed from the bad influences of police or general criminal courts where older offenders are tried. It is the tendency of newer legislation to bring these children up by kindly methods, and to make them see the error of their ways, treating them generally in such a way that their outlook upon the world will be of an honest and kindly nature. But to take a boy to prison, and give some person other than his father or mother the right to punish him by applying the rod in a prison yard, seems to me, as my hon. friend from three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) says, to be going back to the old days. We should change our views in the matter of penalties to be imposed upon criminals, particularly young boys, and I for one am not in favour of this legislation. I should be inclined to ask the committee to strike it out.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: I would suggest that the punishment be made applicable to the second, instead of the first, offence.

Mr. DOHERTY: I say, in response to hon. gentlemen who talk about going back to ancient days—

Mr. JACOBS: The Middle Ages.

Mr. BUREAU: They may be flogging returned soldiers at that rate, for some unfortunate offence, if the age is fixed at 21. The thing is brutal.

Mr. DOHERTY: I had expected that if there was a fault to be found with this legislation, it would be as respects the novelty of the punishment for the offence. Punishment that involves nothing in the nature of keen physical suffering people have found very amusing, and a subject to be facetious about, and that is the great value of it. If you take the budding embryonic Jesse James, who is out to be a hero among his fellow youngsters, and send him to a reformatory or a gaol, to associate with criminals, and he comes back and tells his tale, he is a hero—

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Ti-Noir Desjardins, for instance.

Mr. DOHERTY: Let us keep to the particular case—but if he comes back with the glorious story to tell, that he got a spanking, then he is not a hero among his companions; and I think that the real value of this punishment is that it takes the dignity out of the profession of crime. I have an estimate of the application, more or less legal, of the results of this sort of punishment in quite a number of cases, under the order of a judge who has dealt very largely with that class of criminals, and he has certified in the strongest terms that it is most effective.

Mr. BUREAU: Where is this spanking in force?

Mr. DOHERTY: In Ontario; it has been done, as I said, more or less legally.

Mr. GORDON: Illegally.

Mr. DOHERTY: Well, more or less illegally, then; perhaps more illegally than legally. But what we are concerned with is its effect in dealing with juvenile delinquents. I do think it is a matter of first importance to make them realize, in their earlier years, that there is no glory to be got out of crime, and I think that the real value of this legislation is that it does put these children—and after all they are only children—in the position of being ridiculous in the eyes of their companions.

Mr. JACOBS: It brutalizes them.

Mr. DOHERTY: Brutalizes them? Why, I may say that in my school days boys were strapped, and I hope, at least, that we were not brutalized thereby.

Mr. GORDON: There was good reason for it then.

Mr. DOHERTY: Well, we are assuming, in the present case, that the punishment will be applied only when there is good reason. I do myself, in all earnestness, think that this would be a very useful adjunct to present methods of correction. It involves nothing that could brutalize any one, and after all, it is a means of correction that has been applied from time immemorial to all the children of succeeding generations.

Mr. LAPOINTE: By the State, or State officials?

Mr. DOHERTY: Not necessarily by the State, or State officials, but it has been applied in the educational systems of different countries for long periods of years.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It has been abandoned by most countries.

Mr. DOHERTY: Personally, I think it is a question whether it was an improvement to give it up. At all events, however that may be, a punishment of this kind, which inflicts no real physical suffering of any gravity, but does bring the child to realize that he is being treated like a foolish child, and not like an heroic defier of the laws of society, would be a really great advantage, and in addition I have the testimony of the results of its application, coming from a judge for whose opinion I have great respect. I submit the clause to the consideration of the committee. For myself personally I believe it to be a good clause, and one that sooner or later, when this committee has got more accustomed to the proposal and has thought it over a little more quietly, will come to be the law of the country, to its great advantage. I am not disposed to insist upon it if the committee thinks that it comes too suddenly and is not prepared just yet to pass it; nor shall I insist on maintaining the age fixed at 21. If it would make it more acceptable, I would fix the age at 18, at which children may be treated under the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

Mr. JACOBS: The minister knows very well that we are adopting now, in the treatment of juvenile delinquents, a method of kindly treatment. He knows that we try to make them realize that they are of some use in this world even though they may have fallen, and that there is an opportunity for them to rise. Contrast that with this system of half-flogging, taking a young boy into the prison yard and having the sentence inflicted by the gaoler or some person under his instructions. It is a most brutal suggestion, and I am surprised that a kindly-hearted man like the Minister of Justice should promote legislation of this kind in this House.

Mr. GORDON: For the last fifteen or sixteen years I have had a good many cases to defend in the Juvenile Courts. As the minister has said, there have been cases of this kind of treatment imposed upon young prisoners in the province of Ontario, usually, I think, with the consent of the father, the consent being obtained by the magistrate insisting that it be given. There is a precedent for this, as the minister has suggested. I think that probably this follows the old system of whipping at the cart's tail; and there was another method adopted at the same time for the same class of offence, that of standing the prisoner in the pillory, and putting a split stick on his tongue until sunset. And this is just about in the same class as that legislation. Now, I submit that it is a dangerous thing—particularly with a first offender—that a young boy, perhaps a timid, frail, nervous youngster, should be slugged by some big burly policeman with his belt and buckle, and everything that is attached to it, while the rest of the policemen stand around and view the exhibition. I think it is something we should not do. It does not seem to be fair and just, in view of the public feeling that has been aroused and has culminated in a sentiment as a result of which boys are now treated in a different way. Even if formerly a ball and chain was attached to their ankles, nowadays they are given the benefit, if it is at all possible, in the case of first offenders, of a suspended sentence; then afterwards if it is shown that the efforts to save them have been fruitless a more rigorous treatment is carried out. I for one, after some fifteen or sixteen years of criminal practice, such as you would have in an Ontario city, must say that I think this legislation is being asked for chiefly by the Chief Constables Association of Canada. We have heard it advocated, and I am altogether opposed to it. I think public opinion is opposed to such treatment, particularly in the case of a first offender. It appears to me that we are descending to a point that cannot be justified in view of what the people think at the present time. The effort should be made to make the young boy better, instead of humiliating him and making him feel discouraged, and that he has nothing to live for. Because he will feel that way after an ordeal such as this, which is half-brother to the cat-o'-nine-tails system.

Mr. DOHERTY: I would have no objection to limit the clause to second offences and reduce the age to eighteen. Nevertheless I do not at all share the view that there is anything inhuman, or anything cruel, or anything brutalising in this punishment. I would like to point out to the hon. gentleman who has just sat down that he has given a very unfair description of what is proposed to be done. The section specially provides to make impossible such conduct on the part of the "brutal constable" with his "belt and buckle," and all the rest, surrounded by other brutal policemen.

Mr. JACOBS: The constable will wield the strap.

Mr. DOHERTY: He will wield the strap but he will do it under the supervision of qualified physicians named precisely for the purpose. Every protection will be taken to see there is no brutality. I am quite willing to admit that there is argument to be made against this proposition, but it is beyond me to realize how arguments can be based upon the suggestion of brutality. That, I think, is carrying the thing very much too far. There is room for difference of opinion, that I am prepared to concede. However, I am not disposed to insist on passing this legislation at the present time, because it is a new proposal; but I have confidence that when people will have given a little reflection to it,—and eliminated from their minds the effect of the pictures we have had to-day of a condition of affairs that will never exist under the law if it is passed—it will have a better reception. Under the circumstances I beg to withdraw the clause, and that also involves the withdrawal of clause 28.

Motion agreed to, clauses 13 and 28 withdrawn.

On section 14—marks used on public stores.

Mr. McKENZIE: What is the affect of that?

Mr. DOHERTY: There are in the section a number of marks indicating the property of the Militia Department or other departments. The marks "P. W.", for example, indicate the property of the Public Works Department.

Mr. McKENZIE: Why should the marks on public property be a matter that must be dealt with in the Criminal Code?

Mr. DOHERTY: It is for the purpose of enabling them to be identified. The legal affect of the section in question has not been modified in the slightest degree. There is only one additional kind of mark. The provision is that the marks specified in this section in that behalf may be applied in, or on, any public works to denote His Majesty's property in such stores. There is a provision as to unlawfully applying these marks, a provision making it an offence to obliterate marks from public stores, and a provision making the unlawful possession, sale, and so forth, of public stores bearing these marks an offence. The effect of this is merely to give to the stores of the Public Works Department the same protection that the law already extends to Government property in connection with other departments.

Section agreed to.

On section 15—three card monte, etc., forbidden.

Mr. JACOBS: I understand that this legislation is the result of a judgment handed down by a judge of our Court of Appeal?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes. It reproduces the provisions of a Bill introduced by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Lafortune) and deals with what is a growing evil to-day in the city of Montreal. As the result of a judgment of the courts, that under the law three card monte was not per se a gambling game, all the experts in three card monte have swarmed into Montreal and they are really pillaging the unsuspecting citizens of that town at a rate that is something appalling. I do hope —in order that I may be able to return home in safety with my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier and my hon. friend from Georges Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs)— that the House will pass this section.

Mr. CANNON: What would be included in the term "any similar game"? And who would decide?

Mr. DOHERTY: The court will have to decide.

Mr. CANNON: The provision against playing three card monte or inducing other people to play is all right, but adding the words "or any similar game," is, I think, rather dangerous and leaves it to the interpretation of any judge whatsoever. He would have to be a card expert, otherwise his decision would not be of much value.

Mr. DOHERTY: I understand that the principle of three card monte consists in a sleight-of-hand trick which may be operated just as well with other things as with cards. I may say that I was under the necessity of calling upon a very distinguished member of this House to give me an illustration—

Mr. JACOBS: May we have his name, please?

Mr. DOHERTY: —in order that I might be inspired with a proper horror of the game. As I understand, what is sought to be struck at is not only this particular game with cards, but any game on a similar principle which involves betting upon a guess which a man makes as to the result of some sleight-of-hand trick. I would not think that the court would find it very difficult to determine what under those circumstances was meant by a "similar game." It is absolutely impossible of achievement to try in advance to define all the possible ways by which that kind of swindle can be carried on.

Mr. McKENZIE: Why does not the minister make the game criminal wherever it is played?

Mr. DOHERTY: The supposition is, of course, absolutely impossible to entertain, but suppose my hon. friend and his neighbour and myself chose to sit down in the quiet of his home and fool away our time in guessing at each other's endeavours to place the cards here and there, I do not see what evil would come to the public. What we are trying to repress is the evil of playing this game in public places and so inducing others to participate. I may say that the provision was drafted by my hon. and learned friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Lafortune) who has had a long experience in the criminal courts and has had an opportunity of familiarising himself with this trouble in the city of Montreal. If we can make provision against the public carrying on this game we will have struck at an evil that calls for repression. We have no evidence that there is any need of interfering with private amusements.

Section agreed to.

On section 16—penalty of whipping for robbery and assault with intent to rob:

Mr. DOHERTY: I have had this particular provision urged on me from numerous quarters because the crime of robbery with violence is increasing with alarming rapidity, and not infrequently it results in the death of the person sought to be robbed. It has been impressed upon me by authorities in different parts of the country that we should endeavour by every means to repress that particular form of crime. It has been pointed out, although I have not been able to verify the figures, that in the adjoining states where a similar law has been consistently applied good results have become apparent.

Mr. JACOBS: While I do not wish to oppose this clause, I must express my disapproval of extending this severe punishment any further. I understand that under the law garroting is punishable by whipping, and I suppose robbery with violence may be considered a similar offence. I would point out to the minister that in the case of section 13, which was dropped, we were proposing to sentence young thieves to be whipped, and now under this section when they become older thieves they are to be flogged. Both sections seem to be steps in the same direction.

Mr. DOHERTY: The youngsters were only to be spanked; these thieves are to be whipped.

Section agreed to.

On section 17—fraudulently burning any chattel over $25 in value:

Mr. JACOBS: What has occasioned the insertion of this section?

Mr. DOHERTY: It is at the request of the Attorney General of Ontario, who points out that the crime of arson can only be committed with regard to the burning of something in the nature of real property. There does not seem to be any good reason why it should not be susceptible of being committed by the burning of chattels or movable things. I think the cases that specially brought it to his attention were the burning of automobiles.

Mr. JACOBS: Burning the mortgage of a church when the debt is paid off, for instance.

Section agreed to.

On section 18—penalty for injuring, etc., oil well extended to gas wells:

Mr. DOHERTY: This is simply applying to gas wells the section which already applies to oil wells.

Section agreed to.

On section 19—docking animals forbidden:

Mr. JACOBS: That is a most unusual clause.

Mr. DOHERTY: These three sections, 19, 20 and 21, all have to do with cruelty to animals. They are introduced at the suggestion and very earnest request of the various societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals. They have been submitted to the careful consideration of the professional men in the Department of Agriculture and meet with their approval. It may further be said that their effect is in some measure to bring our provisions with regard to cruelty to animals up to date, if I may use the expression. At all events, these amendments put us on a level with the progress that has been made in recent years in Great Britain and in most of the other Dominions in regard to such legislation. I think any one examining our present provisions will find that they hardly come up to what in the judgment of the present day would constitute cruelty to animals. While I have spoken of these clauses as urged upon us by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, I may say that they do not by any means grant all that was asked. We have tried to avoid extremes and to content ourselves with putting our legislation on a footing of equality with the legislation prevailing in the countries to which I have referred.

Mr. JACOBS: I am surprised to learn that legislation of this kind has originated in Great Britain. I know it is a habit in England to have the tails of horses docked. I can understand that the provision may have been suggested by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, but I would point out that sometimes societies of that kind are not to be relied upon; they often allow their hearts to run away with their heads. Is the minister in a position to say when this law was introduced in Great Britain?

Mr. CLARKE (Wellington): Would this provision interfere with the docking of lambs' tails, an operation which is carried on in the spring on pretty nearly every farm in the country?

Mr. DOHERTY: I find that the animals to which the present provision of the Act applies are "any dog, bird, beast or other animal, not being cattle", etc. In the definition of "cattle" I find that the term includes "any horse, mule, ass, swine, sheep or goat," and so on. Apparently "cattle" does include "horse;" therefore, as cattle are excluded from this section, it would not apply to horses.

Mr. JACOBS: Then horses may be docked under this new legislation?

Mr. DOHERTY: There is no prohibition.

Section agreed to.

On section 22—metal tokens used as money forbidden.

Mr. JACOBS: What is the meaning of this provision?

Mr. DOHERTY: I understand the purpose is this: the existing sections had the effect of prohibiting the issuing of coins having a money value or redeemable in money. This is to extend it to the issuance of coins redeemable in goods.

Mr. JACOBS: Has any abuse existed which makes it necessary to have new legislation on this matter?

Mr. DOHERTY: The legislation is asked for by the Finance Department. I fancy they must have found necessity for it in connection with their dealing with the question of coinage generally.

Mr. MORPHY: It seems to me that part of this clause is rather confusing and hard to understand. It says:

> Provided, however, that such intent shall not be necessary to constitute such offence in case such coin or token is made or issued with the intention (the disproof whereof shall lie on the accused) of entitling the holder thereof—

Meaning, I assume, the person who is disposing of the false token.

> —to receive therefor, to the extent of the value denoted thereon, goods or merchandise from the person so charged as aforesaid.

Well, suppose that the person parted with a false token denominated in value $5 and got half that value in goods, the crime would still be there but it is not provided for. If I understand the clause aright, before a crime could be committed, one would need to have the exact value of the goods represented by the token. I should like the minister to say whether or not the section would not be abortive without some further amendment.

Mr. DOHERTY: I would not be quite disposed to agree with the hon. gentleman's interpretation. If a coin, or certificate, or any document entitles me to obtain "to the extent of", that puts a limit to what I can possibly obtain, but within that limit I may obtain by it anything less. As regards the words:

> Of entitling the holder thereof to receive therefor, to the extent of the value—

The question is not what he actually gets ultimately; the question is whether this is a coin which entitles "the holder thereof to receive therefor, to the extent of the value denoted thereon, goods or merchandise." It will not be affected by the question whether he gets goods or merchandise to the whole amount. If the coin itself entitles him to get goods to the extent of $5, then the issuing of it is an offence without regard to whether he succeeds or not in getting that amount.

Section agreed to.

On section 23—reading deposition on preliminary inquiry.

Mr. JACOBS: What change is made by the proposed new section 684? It seems to be our law at present.

Mr. DOHERTY: The new portion of the first subsection consists of the words:

If the evidence has not been taken in shorthand—

Section 684, as at present, applies the same rule without distinction whether evidence has been taken in shorthand or not. This amendment makes the rule applicable only when evidence has not been taken in shorthand. This is to obviate the inconvenience, when evidence is taken in shorthand, of reading over from the shorthand notes all that has been said. It is to be remembered that we are dealing with a case of evidence taken in the presence of the accused.

Mr. JACOBS: When evidence is taken in shorthand before the courts in Montreal the case is enlarged for two, three or four days until the evidence is written out. Then the prisoner is asked to plead.

Mr. CANNON: Where a preliminary investigation is taken, either by a judge himself or by some one else in longhand, the depositions can be signed and the judge can give his decision immediately. When the depositions are taken in shorthand, they have to be transcribed and signed, according to the law, before the judge decides whether there is ground or not for trial, whereas, now, according to this amendment, the decision can be given immediately before the notes are transcribed.

Mr. DOHERTY: I understand the reading over which is in contemplation is the reading over which would take place when a man is called upon to say whether he has anything to say.

Mr. CANNON: The evidence is not read over when it is taken in shorthand.

Mr. DOHERTY: The effect of this will be to dispense with the necessity of reading over the evidence where it has been taken in shorthand.

Mr. JACOBS: The second part of the section does not seem to change in any way whatever the old rule with regard to the words to be addressed to the prisoner.

Mr. DOHERTY: The only reason for the second subsection being inserted, as I understand the matter, is that it has come to be the practice, when you amend a section, to repeal the whole section and to substitute the amending section. There is some trifling alteration, I am informed.

Mr. McKENZIE: What is the change in the first subsection? It looks like the old law to me.

Mr. DOHERTY: We have inserted in the subsection the words "when the evidence has not been taken in shorthand." Under the existing provision, whether evidence was taken in shorthand or longhand, it is required that before the prisoner is called upon to plead, the evidence shall be read over to him. There is a purpose in that reading over where the evidence is taken, not in shorthand, but in longhand, because I understand then the prisoner is called upon to sign the deposition.

Mr. JACOBS: He is asked "having heard the evidence", and he has not heard the evidence.

Mr. DOHERTY: He has sat in court and has heard the evidence.

Mr. JACOBS: When he has sat there, yes.

Mr. DOHERTY: When evidence is taken in shorthand, it is quite impossible that he should be asked to sign the shorthand notes.

Mr. McKENZIE: The law provides now that he need not sign if the evidence is taken in shorthand.

Mr. DOHERTY: Then, what is the purpose of reading it all over to him? He has sat there and listened to it all. This is simply, as I understand it, to obviate the necessity of going through an operation that produces no useful results.

Mr. McKENZIE: What is the law now?

Mr. DOHERTY: The law now is, that whether the evidence be taken in shorthand or longhand, it must be read over, unless with the consent of the accused.

Mr. McKENZIE: In my experience, I have never met with any difficulty at all. We always got along splendidly. The notes were taken down in shorthand, and there seemed to be no trouble about the matter. Perhaps we took too much for granted in not requiring the reading over of the evidence when taken in shorthand.

Mr. DOHERTY: Unfortunately, the law as it stands requires that. Perhaps it is observed in some places and, perhaps, in others people, seeing the futility of the law, do not try to observe it. I confess I am not familiar with the proceedings in the particular situation that is in question. My learned friend from Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) who has, I think, considerable experience in the carrying on of criminal cases, and my learned friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Lafortune) who also occupies the same position, might be able to put more clearly before the committee just what happens. What I understand to be the purpose of this modification was to produce this result: whereas at present, whether taken in shorthand or in longhand the evidence has to be read over if you want to comply with the letter of the law—

Mr. PARDEE: Is it not to avoid the trouble of a motion being made because the evidence had not been read over?

Mr. DOHERTY: Because the shorthand notes were not read over to the prisoner.

Mr. JACOBS: This only applies to depositions taken in longhand.

Mr. DOHERTY: The provision is that the magistrate without regard as to how the evidence is taken down, shall ask the prisoner whether he wishes the depositions to be read, and unless the accused dispenses therewith, he shall read or cause them to be read again. Where the evidence has been taken in shorthand, the magistrate now has to do that. The effect of this amendment will be to reduce the application of the section to cases where the evidence has been taken in longhand.

Section agreed to.

On section 25—prosecution for officers stealing fares to be tried summarily only with consent of accused.

Mr. JACOBS: What officers?

Mr. DOHERTY: Conductors, and so forth, stealing fares.

Mr. JACOBS: "Officials" is what is meant?

Mr. DOHERTY: Officials is probably the word that was intended. We had last year a special provision made for dealing with this offence of stealing fares, which formerly used to be dealt with under the statute which deals with receiving secret commissions. It was found that applying that law gave rise to great difficulty, and it was thought better to deal specifically with the offence of stealing fares. In dealing with it, a provision was made under which there might be a summary proceeding, but no provision was made as to who was to have the option as to whether the case should be summarily proceeded with. The purpose of this section is to give the option to the accused, which seems to be right.

Section agreed to.

On section 26—conviction of keeper prima facie evidence of premises being a disorderly house.

Mr. JACOBS: I am against this new rule being inserted in our legislation. I thought the old British rule was that a person is innocent until he is proven guilty. Here we are providing that it is only necessary to say that on one previous occasion the party was guilty, to give prima facie evidence that he is guilty a second time. That is a wide departure from the rule in criminal law, except in some special and particular cases. I should like to know why this new rule is sought to be introduced.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not think the hon. gentleman has exactly seized the purpose of the clause. The effect of the clause is that where a party who is keeping a particular house is convicted of being the keeper of a disorderly house, that house will prima facie be presumed to be a disorderly house. We want to avoid this somewhat anomalous condition, where prosecutions are directed against one person for keeping a disorderly house, and against another person for being an inmate of that disorderly house. Surely when it has once been established on the conviction of the keeper that she is the keeper of a disorderly house, it does not seem an unfair thing that you should not have to begin all over again, when you start to prosecute a frequenter of that house, to prove that it is a disorderly house. There might be some exception if you were making it conclusive proof, but we are only making it prima facie evidence, leaving it to the frequenter to disprove, if he can, that it is a disorderly house.

Mr. JACOBS: It is contrary to the principle of our criminal law.

Mr. DOHERTY: Our criminal law creates a good many exceptions from the principle, and this seems to be a very rational one.

Mr. GORDON: The minister knows, I suppose, that frequently these houses are found to be such by the magistrate on character evidence alone, without any specific act ever being proven. That makes it very dangerous for persons who may be ignorant of the character of the house—for boarders or lodgers, for instance. Of course, it is a different matter with persons who are not there innocently. Convictions have been made right along —I think this is one of the cases where there is no election—on the evidence of a policeman, or perhaps two policemen, as to the reputation of the house. Upon that evidence the magistrate will impose a penalty, and give the house that reputation.

Mr. DOHERTY: This section does not affect the question of whether a person may or may not be innocently in a disorderly house. I do not understand that it would affect any right that now exists in a person found in a disorderly house to establish his ignorance or anything else which may justify him. This is limited exclusively to the question whether that is a disorderly house, and the effect of the enactment is to say that when it is once decided that that house is a disorderly house, then, when you have occasion to prove that with regard to some other individual than the one in whose case that question was decided, you will start with the prima facie idea that what was decided against the keeper of the house was well decided, and you will not have to begin all over again to prove in the case of a frequenter or inmate that it was a disorderly house. I would say that this was a very objectionable provision if it were to the effect that the conviction shall be conclusive evidence that it is a disorderly house, but it is only prima facie evidence. It is only a question of throwing the burden of proof on the party found in the house that has just been decided to be a disorderly house. The frequenter may rebut that, if he can. The cases in which this question arises are very numerous. A woman is arrested for keeping a disorderly house, and half a dozen girls and men are also arrested for being inmates of a disorderly house, the house being one and the same house. What happens is that you proceed to try the keeper, and it is absolutely essential to the conviction of the keeper that it should be decided that that is a disorderly house.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: It is open to the accused to prove the contrary?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes. All that this does is to dispense with the prosecutor who has got a judgment that it is a disorderly house from beginning all over again to prove that it is a disorderly house when the case of an inmate or frequenter comes before him, and it leaves it perfectly open to the accused to disprove that it is a disorderly house, or to establish his ignorance, lack of knowledge, or anything else. That is all the effect it has.

Mr. JACOBS: But we are dealing with the disorderly house itself. My objection is that this reverses all the principles of our law, and I do not see why we should go out of our way in this particular case to do any such thing as that. We ought to consider these rules of law as sacred. They have stood the test of hundreds of years, and we should make no change now.

Mr. DOHERTY: This section says that when it has been proved that the house is a disorderly house, it will not be necessary to begin all over again and establish the fact once more. What universal principles that is overriding I must confess I am at a loss to know.

Mr. JACOBS: It shifts the burden of proof to the other side.

Mr. DOHERTY: When the Court has then and there decided that there is sufficient evidence that the house is a disorderly house, it is provided here that the Court will not have to begin over again, hear all the same evidence, and decide once more that the house is disorderly. But we say to any second person who is to be tried that if there is anything which he can put forward to rebutt that evidence upon which the Court has just found that it was a disorderly house, he can bring it forward and it will be heard. It is only a question of saving a useless repetition.

Mr. JACOBS: Sometimes these seemingly "useless repetitions" are very valuable.

Mr. DOHERTY: And sometimes a too rigid adherence to general principles involves hardship.

Mr. TWEEDIE: The objection I see to the section is this. A frequenter may be tried at one time, the person charged with keeping a disorderly house having been tried the week before. The person charged as a frequenter may have had no knowledge whatever of the previous prosecution, And when he or she is brought up a week later to answer the charge of being a frequenter of the house, without any knowledge whatever of the former proceedings, there is thrown upon that person the burden of proving that the place in which he or she had been was not a disorderly house. The offences and the persons charged being different, there is a possibility that the hearings may be entirely separate, and a man charged with being a frequenter might have no knowledge whatever of what had taken place in connection with the prosecution for the keeping of the disorderly house.

Mr. DOHERTY: There is force in what the hon. gentleman points out. I do not think it turns so much on the point of different dates of trial, as on the question of the time at which the offence is charged as having been committed. I move to amend the section by adding at the end thereof the words:

As against any person charged with being or having been an inmate or frequenter of such house.

That is the case that is sought to be got at.

Mr. CANNON: I do not think that this provision should be enacted, because you might have separate trials.

5 p.m.

Mr. DOHERTY: The trials may be separate, but the amendment applies to offences that are all committed at the same time. I do not refer to the time of trial but to the time at which it is charged the offence was committed.

Mr. TWEEDIE: I do not agree with the amendment, because a person charged with keeping a disorderly house may have been convicted so often that he or she is ready to plead guilty and pay the fine. Such a person might not be keeping a disorderly house at all, but possibly might want to have some other person convicted of being an inmate of a disorderly house and so would plead guilty to the offence, and the person charged with being a frequenter is not entitled to take any part in the proceedings against the person charged with keeping the disorderly house. He is not a party to the prosecution; he cannot open his mouth, or direct the course of the trial; and the evidence upon which the fact of keeping the disorderly house is established may be flimsy in the extreme. But the person charged with keeping the disorderly house will plead guilty, and then the alleged frequenter is bound by the evidence in those proceedings; whereas, if he were a party to the prosecution, he might be able to set up facts which would entirely disprove, at the time of the prosecution for keeping the house, that it was a disorderly house at all.

Mr. DOHERTY: I would agree with the hon. member, if we were holding the party who is charged as an inmate as being absolutely bound by the finding of the court. But we are not proposing to do that. We are leaving it absolutely open to him to submit every proof that he might have given had he been a party to the first trial. We are closing no door upon him at all. We are merely saying that we will not require the prosecution to bring again all the evidence upon which the court at that previous trial established that the house was a disorderly one. I think that any one who has had occasion to know anything about prosecutions for offences in connection with disorderly houses realizes that it is one class of offence that is surrounded with the greatest possible difficulty of proving the facts. I have not had much to do with that class of case, but I have had occasion to be present in court, when everything made it absolutely obvious that the house was a disorderly one, you had only to look at the people to know what kind of house they came out of, and yet there was great splitting of hairs before the court about the evidence as to whether the house was a disorderly house or not. And this is, not infrequently, in cases where a week before these same women and the same inmates, with regard to the same house, had been before the court, when all the evidence had been gone through and the court had then been satisfied that the house was a disorderly one. All that is sought now is to establish a prima facie presumption that will throw the burden of proof upon the people implicated. I hope that the amendment, worded in accordance with the suggestion of the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Tweedie), will be accepted, for I do not think it is objectionable.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Doherty moves to amend section 26 by adding at the end thereof the following words:

As against any person charged with being or having been at the same time an inmate or frequenter of the said disorderly house.

Mr. JACOBS: Who asked for this legislation?

Mr. DOHERTY: It came from the people who have charge of prosecuting cases of this kind in the city of Montreal.

Mr. CANNON: The Minister of Justice told me he intended to have that amendment applied only in cases where several people were arrested at the one time, and then if the proceedings at the first trial were against the proprietor and he was convicted of being the owner of a disorderly house, that conviction could be used against the other prisoners as being prima facie evidence that the House was a disorderly house. I may be mistaken but from my reading of the amendment it does not mean that. It means that the conviction could be used against any person charged with being an inmate of that house two months or six months afterwards.

Mr. DOHERTY: I think that, subject to the criticism of my hon. friend the new wording I have drawn will make clear what we are all agreed we want to get. That is if we add to the clause the words:

as against any person charged with being or having been at the same time—

Now I think that can only refer back to the same time at which the keeper was found to be the keeper——an inmate or frequenter of the said disorderly house.

I think what we want to get at is this. It is found that this woman was on July 15, the keeper of a disorderly house because she kept that disorderly house. If it be proved that John Jones on July 15 was in that house you do not need to prove again that it was a disorderly house. I think the words I have drawn mean that. If it can be made any more clear I shall be glad to accept any suggestion that will produce that result.

Mr. McKENZIE: Although I hate to take up the time of the House, I ask a moment to suggest that it is a dangerous principle to introduce into the criminal law to take for granted that any trial, or any decision, at which the prisoner was not necessarily present, or to which the prisoner was not necessarily a party to, should be a basis for his conviction in a subsequent trial. I think the whole proceedings of his trial from the bottom up should take place in his presence. In this case we are taking for granted that some trial at which he was not present at all, and of which he did not necessarily have any knowledge, shall be the basis for his conviction. I am entirely opposed to any system of criminal law, under which the whole business as to the man's criminality shall not be tried and threshed out once and for all in the presence of the prisoner.

Mr. PARDEE: Is there any very great reason why this section should be put in? I thoroughly agree with what the hon member for North Victoria (Mr. McKenzie) and the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) have said. It appears to me to be a most unfair phase of criminal law, if I may use the expression, that you should make a man liable for something he never had a chance to prove himself innocent of. Innumerable instances would arise where the whole thing may be proved to have been planned against some one for some particular purpose. The proceedings under which that man is found guilty of the offence may be conducted in his absence and the throwing upon him of the onus of proving his innocence is wrong in law.

Mr. DOHERTY: May I point out it is not said that the man is "prima facie" guilty. All that is said is that this house is a disorderly house. It still remains to be proved that he was there, and that he was there at the time at which the convicted person was found to be the keeper of such disorderly house. Frankly it does seem to me that the absolutely strict adherence to principle with regard to offences of this kind, creates an almost absolute impossibility of getting a conviction, notwithstanding the fact that it is a matter of public notoriety that these establishments exist and that people do frequent them. I confess I have difficulty in seeing that there is any such awful burden thrown on the man, without, as the hon. gentleman says, a chance of his disproving it. It is absolutely open to him to disprove it if he can. The only fact involved is the presumption that that house is a disorderly house—everything else to be proved.

Mr. McKENZIE: Those are two definite and distinct offences. One person is tried for keeping a disorderly house. Very good. All the evidence necessary for proof of that offence will be produced before the court, and the person's guilt or innocence found as the evidence may show. That is one thing. Now you start with another man for being a frequenter of a disorderly house, a separate and distinct offence. In that case it is incumbent upon the Crown to prove that the house was a disorderly house in the first instance, and that, knowing it to be a disorderly house, this man frequented it. Those are the two main points in his case. We must not suppose for one moment that the evidence is not ascertainable again. It is much better that there should be some burden of proof thrown upon the Crown and that they should be obliged to produce those witnesses who in the first instance were able to prove that this was a disorderly house. The case may be tried before another judge who has no knowledge of the first trial, yet under this law it would only be necessary for the prosecutor to produce a statement that some time ago—

Mr. DOHERTY: No, at the very moment.

Mr. McKENZIE: I do not care how long ago; that some time ago this woman was found guilty of keeping a disorderly house. Therefore we start with the premise that the accused frequented this disorderly house with knowledge that it was a house of ill-fame. For centuries it has been the principle that the onus is upon the Crown to prove that a man is guilty. Do not let us get away from that principle.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: When a man is brought before the court to answer the charge that he frequented a house of ill-fame the proof is made by five or maybe ten witnesses, in the presence of all the parties interested, and the court then pronounces that it is a house of prostitution. I am satisfied that this amendment is good, for it is not necessary to repeat the proof already given, and it seems to me that justice is done when the same judge in the same court has already received that proof. To recommence that proof would be a loss of time and a waste of money, and absolutely useless.

Mr. CANNON: If the amendment as proposed by the Minister of Justice meets the case explained by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier there is no doubt it is absolutely correct and every hon. member will support it. But unfortunately I do not understand the amendment in that way, and I do not think the amendment to the amendment introduced by the Minister of Justice would meet that case. As it reads now the amendment is open to very serious criticism. As hon. members have already stated, we lay down the principle that an accused person may be presumed to be guilty, although under the general law, such a person is presumed to be innocent until proven guilty. If the minister draws his amendment to meet the case explained by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier I shall have no objection whatsoever, although as I say, the amendment is open to very serious criticism.

The CHAIRMAN: The amendment now reads:

> As against any person charged with being or having been at the same time an inmate or frequenter of the same disorderly house.

Mr. McKENZIE: Being there is one thing and being tried is another.

Mr. DOHERTY: While I do not share the apprehension of hon. gentlemen, and while it does seem to me that the amendment in its present form nine times out of ten would be applied in cases which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier foresees, I have no objection to add the following:

> Where the persons so charged are tried or to be tried by the same court—

I cannot say at the "same time," because one person has to be tried after another, and it may take more than a day to try them all. But if we state there that they are to be tried "by the same court" I think we have done sufficient. After all, it is the affair of these inmates and frequenters, whether they chose to stay in court while the keeper of the disorderly house is being tried, and I do not think they are exposed to any very great danger.

Mr. McKENZIE: The Minister of Justice will see at once that if you say "the same court" it does not necessarily follow that it would be the same judge, because the personnel of the court changes.

Mr. DOHERTY: Under the circumstances I abandon hope of meeting the requirements of hon. gentlemen. I am satisfied that in amending the clause as I suggest I am going as far as a man can go. From the outset I concede that this involves an exception from the general principle. But our Criminal Code is full of exceptions from that general principle, and why this committee should be so excited with regard to this particular kind of offence and the class of people who get convicted of it, I am at a loss to understand. For instance, there exists an exception to the general principle that will make me liable to be convicted of stealing because stolen goods are found in my possession until I make proof to the contrary. I am exposed to that, and nobody gets excited. But that we should attach this importance to seeing that no presumption is created against a person charged with this class of offence, one of the most difficult to establish by direct and positive proof—well, it seems to me regrettable that this Parliament should be so careful about this particular class of offender. I have tried to go as far as I possibly can to meet the suggestions and requirements. But, if the same court, even if it be not the same judge, has found with regard to the same house on the same day that that house was a disreputable house, I conceive that on the abstract theories and principles that is not res adjudicata against the inmate. If it was, we would not need a provision of the law to cover it. But there are cases where the absolute insistence on abstract principles have worked the most absolute injustice and the greatest failures of justice and have afforded no protection of people deserving of protection. I do feel that the words I have suggested are ample tc cover any possible grievance, but if they do not meet the views of those whose views I am trying to meet, personally I would not think they were necessary at all.

Mr. LAFORTUNE: If the accused in a case of this kind says that the crime was not committed; if he has other evidence to adduce or can make further proof, he is not prevented from doing so. It is a simple presumption, and if he wants to go into other proof he has a right to do it.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Now could we not have a vote? We have spent hours on this thing and we have had all possible explanations. Can we have it decided now, and go on?

Mr. McKENZIE: Is the closure applied? If so, I will have to sit down, but if not, then we have the right to discuss the matter. I do not understand why the Minister of Justice should take these amendments under his wing and hug them to his heart as if they were his own offspring and then get mightily offended if anybody says anything against them.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not offended. If the hon. gentleman is under that impression he is greatly mistaken.

Mr. McKENZIE: I have been a great many years in the House of Commons with the Minister of Justice, sitting opposite him most of the time, and I can tell by this time when he is just a little hot under the collar, if he will permit me.

Mr. DOHERTY: Sometimes you tell it when it is not so.

Mr. McKENZIE: I notice that this is one of the cases where the right hon. gentleman is quite ready to browbeat us out of the House, if possible. Now, I have not the slightest sympathy with the subject matter that we are discussing. I would say to any Minister of Justice that if he wants to keep out of trouble, if he wants to avoid wasting time in this way, he will stand behind the grand old principles of the criminal law of England, one of which is that every subject is regarded as innocent until proved guilty, and it is up to the party who lays the charge against him to establish his case. That is an easy position for the Minister of Justice to take, and if he takes it nobody will find fault, but we have been tampering and tinkering and meddling with that principle in this House ever since I came here. We have been getting bolder all the time, and now this grand old principle is disappearing altogether. A man happens to be innocently in a house where he is taking a glass of whisky or a glass of beer, perhaps playing a game of billiards. After he leaves, the people who live there are found to be guilty of keeping a disorderly house, and six months afterwards that conviction may be put up against that man as prima facie evidence of his being a frequenter of that house. He may know nothing about it; he may have forgotten that he ever was there, but it is brought to his memory and that is prima facie evidence of his being guilty of frequenting a house of ill-fame. I say that in accordance with the principles of justice and fair play, in such a circumstance the whole case should have to be proved to the hilt. That is the principle I am fighting for; that is the principle I would always stand for. Why does any minister of Justice wish to tamper or interfere with the liberty of the subject? If we must be forced to swallow these things by a vote, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) has suggested, or by closure, all right, but as long as we have the liberty of speech we shall take advantage of every opportunity to submit our views to cool-headed men who will pass judgment upon them as they would upon evidence.

Mr. JACOBS: I suggest that the clause be dropped.

Mr. MORPHY: I think there should be a limit to the time within which such prosecution should be brought. I rather agree with the hon. member for North Cape Breton that under the provision as it stands a prosecution might be brought any length of time afterwards and one charged with an offence under the section placed in a very unfair position.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am under the impression that there is a time limit for bringing prosecutions in regard to all offences of this nature.

Mr. MORPHY: I should think it should be shortened in this case. If the time limit is thirty days for ordinary cases it should be made five in this.

Amendment (Mr. Doherty) agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 29—offender under suspended sentence may be placed on probation:

Mr. MOWAT: This is a new provision, and I think something should be said in regard to it. It introduces the principle of probation in addition to that of suspended sentence. As the law stands now, the magistrate or judge may give a suspended sentence, but the delinquent goes back to his old surroundings, and the attention of the public should be drawn to the change. Probation has been said by a writer to be "The greatest forward step in a generation in the rational and humane treatment of delinquents." I may point out that the advantages of probation extend not only to keeping the man away from his old associates but to giving him material help. In United States cities where this system has been tried, these are some of the advantages which they get from a probation system:

Finding new living quarters for the family.
Sending children to the country.
Securing homes.
Arranging for loans.
Teaching mothers how to care for their children.
Securing credit from landlords.
Improving housing and living conditions.
Securing legal advice.
Taking probationers to places of amusement and libraries.
Finding better boarding places; guaranteeing payment of board.
Securing salary increases.
Placing girls in trade schools for special training.
Having board of health improve sanitary condition.
Giving personal instruction to probationers preparing for examinations.

All these advantages have been found to come from adopting this system. Another statement which I might cite from the same author is as follows:

Probation is the outgrowth of a more humane spirit, of a better understanding of what society owes to those who go wrong. It is a realization that the debt is not all on one side, an appreciation of the fact that it is better to reclaim a man than it is to make a physical and moral wreck of him.

In New York this result has been found from the system of probation:

As to the results of probation, our records show that 75 per cent of all those placed on probation make good. Many lives that might have been marred have been remade by probation. Many youthful offenders who might have become confirmed criminals have been saved. Many homes have been rescued from destruction. Many women have been lifted from the depths of despair and millions of dollars have been saved to them and their little ones and the community which might have been wasted through prison sentences, loss of jobs and the consequent neglect that flows from incarceration of the family's bread winner.

That is the idea that pervades the principle of probation. By convicting a man or a woman, especially in the younger years, you may place them on the downward career towards crime. By sending them to a kindly but authoritative probation officer, if he brings into operation these ameliorating facts which I have spoken of, these people may be saved for society and society may be saved the expense of treating them continually as criminals. The idea has been studied by a judge who has now become an experienced and capable judge, being the senior judge in York County, Ontario, which has a very large criminal business. He has visited several different cities of the United States with a view of finding out how this can best be brought about and what are the advantages of the courts of probation in that country. Judge Coatsworth has, in a pamphlet presented to the Ontario Government, made a report on that and he comes out strongly in favour of probation. Another book on the Inferior Criminal Courts Act of the city of New York, which I have been sent by promoters of this idea and which is very large and which I will not quote from, shows how the system works there. This movement is supported by these societies of men and women who take up work voluntarily in the large cities especially, work which we ought to do, but which we do not do and which we leave to them. The list which I have here does not contain names of those of a class which I was sorry to hear described by an hon. gentleman here to-day as "hysterical women." These are essentially business men and women and they do an immense amount to help society in all kinds of community work. If the hon. gentleman who used that expression would realize that the use of such a term might deter any woman or man from continuing in this work simply because they are so described in Parliament, he would be the last person to use the term again. For the purpose of showing what a large number of persons are interested in this work and to draw the attention of the public to the question of probation, I read a few of the fifty or sixty names in order to show that this system has the approval of them all:

Council for Service of the Church of England in Canada; Associated Catholic Charities; St. Vincent de Paul Children's Aid; Catholic Big Sisters; Catholic Big Brothers; Toronto, Catholic Women's League; Knights of Columbus, Toronto Council; Women's Auxiliary Church of England; National Council of Women.

Then there are the different societies of the Methodist Church and the Presbyterian Church.

Toronto Boys' Work Board; Canadian Boys' Work Board; Salvation Army; Big Sister Association; The Great War Veterans' Association of Canada; the Big Brother Movement, Incorporated; Federation for Community Service; Women's Patriotic League; National Boys' Work Committee, Y.M.C.A.

In view of the fact that these represent a class which, I say, are doing a most important work in citizenship in Canada, I hope the attention of the country generally will be drawn to this provision of probation which, I am glad to see, has the approval of the committee. I am sure the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Lafortune) will bear me out in saying that this system of probation has been found to work well. As he knows what occurs in another city, I am sure he would approve of this provision.

Section agreed to.

Section 31 stands.

On section 32—commencement of Act:

Mr. LAFORTUNE: I think it is of great importance that this Act should come into force at once.

Mr. DOHERTY: It is usual in amendments to the Criminal Code to allow a certain period before they come into force, in order that the magistrates may become aware of the changes in the law, and have the statutes at their disposal, and so forth, and in order that people may have some chance not to get convicted before they have an opportunity of finding out what changes have been made in the law. There is however a pressing necessity that the amendment with regard to three-card monte come into effect at once, and I therefore move to withdraw section 32. The Bill will then come into force on the day it is sanctioned.

Section withdrawn.

On section 33—forms:

Mr. McKENZIE: Is any material change made in the forms?

[Mr. Mowat.]

Mr. DOHERTY: The change consists practically in this, that we are doing away with the necessity of repeating several times in the same instrument the name of the accused, for instance, the place he resides, and the place of trial. I may say that we are making this provision for simplified forms at the request of magistrates in Ontario who have pressed it upon us for a long time. The proposed changes have been carefully gone over, and I am assured by the Parliamentary Counsel that I am quite correct in saying that there is no substantial change. The changes are what I have mentioned, dispensing with unnecessary repetitions, and reducing the number of blanks that have to be filled up, with the name of the accused, the place of the offence, and matters of that kind.

Mr. McKENZIE: If my memory serves me, there is a provision in the Act that the forms provided in part 25 or forms to like effect shall be sufficient. Does that same provision apply to the new forms?

Mr. DOHERTY: These forms are purely permissive, in any event.

Section agreed to.

On section 1—definition of "feeble-minded":

Mr. DOHERTY: We had some discussion of this last evening. This is really an addition of a class of persons to the class of insane or idiot or imbecile persons provided for in section 219, and I am afraid that I would have to concede that the sentiment of the committee, so far as it was then expressed, was rather adverse to the acceptance of this clause. To be quite frank, I would have felt doubtful whether by the committee as then composed the clause would have been adopted. I do not know just what the frame of mind of hon. gentlemen who are now present is. Personally, I am disposed to believe that the provision is a desirable one, but it is a disposition of a class that I would not feel called to insist upon if the sense of the committee were adverse to it.

Mr. McKENZIE: Do I understand that the minister is dropping this clause?

Mr. DOHERTY: Has the hon. member any views of the question?

Mr. McKENZIE: This is the first time I have seen it; it is certainly a very difficult question.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am prepared to concede this, that it involves the introduction into our law of something that is quite new. I quite realize the desire to give the proposition consideration before arriving at a conclusion, though from the representations that have been made to me, and from what study I have been able to give the matter myself, I am disposed to believe that this would be a useful disposition of law. I must say, however, that I was not encouraged last evening by the views expressed by gentlemen whose opinions I respect—of course, I respect the opinions of all members of the committee, but some gentlemen who expressed their views last night had the particular qualification of being members of the profession to which the hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. McKenzie) and myself belong, and which perhaps entitled their views in a matter of this kind to greater weight than those of men who have not that advantage. Perhaps, under the circumstances, it might be well to give this section further consideration, and in view of what I have already said, I therefore move for leave to withdraw this clause.

Section 1 withdrawn.

On section 5—prohibition respecting carrying concealed weapons extended to pistols, etc.:

Mr. DOHERTY: I move to amend subclause 1 of clause 5 by striking out at the end thereof the words "ammunition that can be used in any pistol or revolver."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DOHERTY: I move to further amend section 5 by striking out subsection 2 in its entirety.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DOHERTY: I move to amend section 5 by striking out from subsection 4 in lines 22, 23, and 24, the following words:

Or ammunition for any weapon named or included in such proclamation.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I move in amendment to add as clause 11a of the Bill, the following:

11a. Section three hundred and twenty of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following words:

"provided he also publishes at the same time—

"(a) any facts, extenuating circumstances or argument which the person likely to be injured by such defamatory matter has set up before such court or at such enquiry; or

"(b) if no such facts, extenuating circumstances or argument have been made known or made at the time of such publication, then a statement giving such person's explanation or version of the matter."

Section 320 states that newspapers may publish evidence taken in court even though that evidence may be defamatory. Sometimes a complainant files his complaint in court, and the evidence which is given in court is very defamatory to the defendant or the accused. It is published in the newspapers, and some people who read the report form a premature opinion of the case. When, later on, the evidence of the accused is given in court, and is published in the newspapers, it frequently happens that those who have read the complainant's evidence do not read the testimony brought forward by the other side, and they retain the opinion previously formed, which is very damaging to the accused. I know of cases where evidence of the complainant has been published, but the evidence of the defence has not been given to the public. I am aware of a case which occurred about three or four years ago where a man was brought before the court and acquitted, but a certain unscrupulous newspaper, to injure him, published the evidence of the complainant alone. My idea is to provide that the evidence of the complainant shall not be published without the publication, at the same time, of the evidence of the defence; and where the defence is not made at the same time as the complainant's case is before the court, the newspapers shall not publish the evidence of the complainant without the consent of the other party. This is only fair to those who are brought before the courts, where there is a serious complaint laid against them, and I think it should be made an offence for a newspaper to publish only the evidence of one side, the evidence of the complainant.

Mr. CURRIE: What does the hon. member think of newspapers that publish the contents of writs? Certain newspapers make it a habit to hold up people to blackmail by publishing the contents of writs. Some one issues a writ against you charging you with owing money, and so forth, and sends the writ to the newspapers to have it published. I think that something should be done to put a stop to this. For $2.50 I can go and get a writ and charge my hon. friend with owing me $10,000, and have that writ published in the newspapers, and there is no recourse. There should be a stop to that sort of thing; it is a favourite method of blackmail.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: There is much in what the hon. gentleman says, and I have no objection to supporting an amendment to that effect.

Mr. FIELDING: There is another kind of injustice. A great wrong is done in the case of election petitions. A petition is filed in which a man is accused of nearly all the crimes in the calendar, and it is published by a hostile newspaper. In nine cases out of ten, the charge is not sustained; it is not brought forward. In the meantime, however, the public is informed that the man is everything but a thief, and I do not know what remedy he has. This is a grave injustice, and many a member of Parliament has suffered therefrom.

Mr. CURRIE: I have personal experience of that. When I ran my first election, there were fourteen writs against me, and not one of them was proceeded with. Nevertheless, the contents of those writs were published, the object being to keep the voters from voting for me. Not one of them had the slightest foundation in fact, and they were never brought forward; yet they were published.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: They never hurt a hair of your head.

Mr. CURRIE: No.

Mr. DOHERTY: We are dealing with the proceedings of courts, which are essentially public. It is considered, and rightly so, that one of the great guarantees of pure administration of justice is that the proceedings of the courts should all go on in the eyes of the public. Of course, every one cannot be present in court to hear and see.

But everybody would have a right to be there and to hear and to see, and it follows that any man has a right to tell his neighbours when he goes out from the court what it was he heard in court. In the same way the man who has a sheet of paper and a bottle of ink can sit down and write a letter or tell anybody what he saw or heard in the court; and the man who has a printing press and a newspaper has just the same right to tell the people that he can reach. Now, we cannot deprive the people of that right without curtailing the publicity of our court proceedings.

As regards what has been said about election petitions there is no doubt there is a frightful abuse, but the abuse is not in the fact that the newspapers make public the petition—the abuse consists in the fact that it is open to people to make reckless charges in an election petition, as it is in fact, and I do not know how it is going to be prevented. At the present time the law requires that there should be an affidavit with the petition, in which the petitioner swears to his sincerity and so forth. Still I believe it is a matter of public knowledge that you can go and buy in a law printer's office a printed form of an election petition which contains, of course, an allegation that a man has violated every section of the statute. That is the election petition. Now it is very difficult to say, if a man may make that election petition and make it a proceeding of the court, that the newspaper would not be entitled to publish it. I am not making that observation without seeing the difficulty of dealing with the subject. Though there may be a real grievance result from it we have got to bear in mind what I said at the outset, that the publicity of the court proceeding is something that has always been considered to be, perhaps not absolutely essential, but a very valuable feature in connection with our system of the administration of justice.

Now with regard to the particular amendment that is suggested, I would be disposed to think that the present section might well be amended by having a proviso to require that the report with which the defamatory matter was concerned should be complete—

Mr. CURRIE: Not ex-parte.

Mr. DOHERTY: Should be complete and should tell everything.

Mr. MORPHY: Both sides should be set forth.

Mr. DOHERTY:—but that does not entirely meet the case. Because: Take a prolonged trial. The prosecutor makes his case first, and he may take a week. Now it is a serious matter to suggest that you will prevent newspapers day by day publishing what went on in the court. Of course in the prosecutor's case will be set forth everything that can be said against the accused, and that will go to the public day by day unless you intervene to prevent it, and the paper cannot in advance report the defence that is going to be made. Even so, it will be of very little advantage after all for the newspaper to accompany the report of what actually did take place in court with the statement that the defendant said he was going to prove something else later on. It is not easy—

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: If, at the same time that the evidence for the prosecution is published there is a statement by the accused regarding his case, it would certainly mitigate the damages that the publisher would incur. That is the reason why I have put the second proviso in my amendment.

Mr. DOHERTY: There may be some truth in that, but if what I started out by saying be true, and I think it is—the court is a public place, and every man has the right to go and hear and see what goes on there, and a right to communicate that to all his neighbours by whatever means of communication he may have at his disposal—if that be true, then it does not seem to me to be quite clear that we have a right to impose upon that man the obligation of inserting something that the accused party chooses to come and say to him. What the ordinary man reads and looks for is a report of what happens in the court. I do not know that he wants interjected into it—here, there and everywhere,—what the defendant says, that he is going to prove this is not true, and after all that is substantially all the defendant can say. I would be prepared if we could do so to frame a proviso that would require that the report made should be a complete report of what transpired.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: That would be only an ex-parte report just the same, it would be only the evidence of the complainant.

Mr. DOHERTY: As long as it is impossible to simultaneously take the evidence of the complainant and the evidence of the defendant, I am afraid the defendant will have to suffer the consequences of the fact that the complainant's evidence is given first. The defendant will get his innings when he comes to give his evidence and he will publish it. But it does not really seem to me to be practicable to require that every time a newspaper publishes the day's proceedings in court it must be compelled to publish another statement in which the defendant says that when it comes to his turn he is going to prove all sorts of things. After all, has not the public got some sort of judgment? Does it not know this is the plaintiff's case and that the defendant is going to get his chance? I know that people do not always read all the report, and unfortunately the public is very apt to believe sensational accusations and never look at the defence. I would suggest that we allow the Bill to be passed as it stands. I will consult with the hon. gentleman in the meantime and if we can possibly agree upon the amendment before the Bill goes to its third reading I will allow the measure to be sent back to committee and put the amendment in.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle): The point raised by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) is more important than this amendment. I think you would easily stop people from issuing the pleadings which the hon. member refers to and the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) also. Those things can be stopped, but I do not see how you can stop the publishing of evidence where the case is actually under trial.

At Six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Mr. Chairman, during recess I had a conversation with the Minister of Justice and the deputy minister, who both agreed and admitted that the amendment embodied a very good reform, but ata the same time there was some objection to the amendment and they asked me to withdraw it, which I will do. But I should like to remind hon. members that as the law now stands advantage may be taken of it to the detriment of an absolutely innocent person. As I pointed out before six o'clock, an hon. member of this House was charged with a very serious offence about two months ago. The charge was laid by political opponents evidently to injure his reputation. He was brought before the courts in Montreal, and the evidence of the complainant, which was of a damaging nature, was reported by the Canadian press in every paper in Canada. The malice behind the charge was so apparent that the judge who presided at the trial dismissed it without even hearing the defence, and the hon. member was honourably acquitted. The news of the acquittal in the form of a few lines was published in only a few newspapers, and some of the journals which had published the complainant's evidence at length did not even insert the announcement that the hon. member had been acquitted. In fact La Minerve, a paper subsidized, I believe, by this Government, although it published the evidence of the complainant conspicuously, hardly mentioned the acquittal. As the law stands there is no redress, and the press can publish damaging evidence without also publishing any announcement of the accused being honourably acquitted or stating what his defence is.

This was the reason for my moving the amendment. I hope the Minister of Justice will remember his promise and so amend the law that in future newspapers will be prevented from giving publicity to such damaging evidence against innocent parties. On this understanding I beg leave to withdraw my amendment.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. MOWAT: It seems to me we made a slip this afternoon in regard to section 19. We have made it an offence to dock or injure—

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Parkdale desires to return to the consideration of clause 19. This of course can only be done by unanimous consent. Shall the hon. member have leave to discuss the clause?

Some Hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MOWAT: Kennel keeping is an important industry in which a large amount of money is invested. By this section we have made it an offence to dock or injure the tails of dogs, which would mean that a kennel which had imported a $5,000 pedigreed dog would be prevented from docking the tails of that dog's progeny. No self-respecting dog of a certain class wishes to have his tail long; he wants to have it cut. An airedale or fox terrier with a long tail would be absolutely out of the prize list in the New York dog show. Therefore I think the minister should reconsider this section; otherwise he will have deputations from every kennel in the country asking why he is putting such a law in force. There is no cruelty in docking a dog's tail. Anybody who has kept dogs knows that it is done two or three weeks after the puppy is born. The puppy may give a little squeal, but the next minute he is licking your hand. I think it would be a great pity to spoil our pedigree dogs by enacting that their tails should not be docked.

Mr. DOHERTY: I have to admit that I am not so absolutely well acquainted with the desires of dogs in this respect as the hon. member seems to be. As I said in dealing with the section, the suggestion came to us from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and I assumed they had knowledge of the subject. We submitted the section to the consideration of the experts in the Department of Agriculture who were accustomed to dealing with animals. Of course, if the provision has the effect that the hon. gentleman suggests, perhaps we might exclude dogs from the application of the amendment. I move, therefore, to amend clause 19 by adding the words "The present amendment shall not apply to dogs".

Mr. MURPHY: I understood that the suggestion of the hon. member for Parkdale in giving to the Minister of Justice an interpretation as to the feelings of the dog, had reference only to cutting the dog's tail. The suggestion of the hon. member was I understood, in the way of correcting an omission, or an oversight in the Bill. May I suggest that the hon. gentleman has omitted to say anything about the feelings of the dogs with reference to clipping its ears?

Mr. DOHERTY: Our provisions do not deal specifically with the clipping of ears. However, I will let the hon. member for Parkdale, who is an expert on the subject, answer the question.

Mr. McKENZIE: How will the section as amended read?

Mr. DOHERTY: It will read as follows:

> Everyone is guilty of an offence . . . who wilfully kills, maims, docks, injures the tail of, wounds, poisons or injures any dog, bird, beast, or other animal, not being cattle, etc.

In the revision of the statute I suppose it would have to be inserted in the original section that the words "docks, injures the tail of" do not apply to dogs, but for the purpose of an amending Act I think it is sufficient to couple the amendment with the declaration that the present amendment does not apply to dogs.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On the title:

Mr. BUREAU: Before the title is carried I would like to move an amendment to clause 605, which provides that in the district of Montreal the Clerk of the Peace or Deputy Clerk of the Peace shall have all the powers of a Justice under Parts XIII and XIV and under sections 629 to 643 inclusive. I should like the clause to read:

> In the districts of Montreal and Three Rivers.

That will give the jurisdiction of a justice to the Deputy Clerk of the Peace, the reason being that the district magistrate in Three Rivers has to go to Arthabaska and La Tuque. We are three days or six days per month without a district magistrate, and there is nobody to replace him. Business is therefore delayed and I may say that I am moving this amendment upon a petition signed by all the members of the Bar of the district of Three Rivers. I have submitted it to the Minister of Justice, and there is no objection on the part of the authorities. I therefore move: to amend the Bill by inserting after clause 22 as clause 22A of the said Bill the following words:

22a. Section six hundred and five of the said Act is amended by substituting for the words "In the District of Montreal" in the first line thereof the following words "In the Districts of Montreal and Three Rivers."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should like to obtain the unanimous consent of the committee to refer for a minute to an item in clause 24. This clause, which refers to fees, was not discussed. I should like to refer to the witness' fee of one dollar per day while attending trial. The minister surely does not think that amount is adequate compensation for a day attending trial.

Mr. DOHERTY: The amount, if I am not mistaken, is double the amount which was previously allowed.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It seems to me it is just the same, but I am not sure.

Mr. DOHERTY: I may say that the modified fees were made upon suggestions that came to us and that we accepted.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have known witnesses to spend from three days to, perhaps, two weeks attending trials, and the minister knows that a dollar will not much more than pay for a meal in many places and not that much in many others.

Mr. DOHERTY: The former tariff allowed witnesses 75 cents for each day attending trial. The present tariff allows one dollar.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It is not necessary to point out that that is utterly inadequate. I do not presume it is the intention to pay the full cost to each witness, but the amount is so far short of the actual cost that some change should be made.

Mr. DOHERTY: On the other hand we have to consider a little the litigants who have to pay these costs. What change would the hon. gentleman suggest? If we made the fee $1.50, that would be double the previous fee and witnesses have got along all these years with 75 cents.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have heard many complaints on that score. The actual expense witnesses in the country would be put to would be anything from $3 to $5; in the cities, the expense would be greater than that. Two dollars would be the very minimum for each day attending trial.

Mr. DOHERTY: To meet the hon. gentleman's suggestion, which probably has some weight behind it, if we may return, as I presume we have returned, to section 24, I would move to amend section 24 by inserting in lieu of "one dollar," the words "two dollars," so as to provide that the fee of the witness shall be $2 per day while attending trial.

Mr. McKENZIE: I notice that the fees were enlarged both as to travelling and attendance. Formerly, a witness got only ten cents a mile for travelling; now he gets 15 cents, and instead of 75 cents a day he get $1 a day. I rather think the amounts should be left as they are. There is an increase of 25 cents on the day's attendance and 5 cents a mile on travelling. If a man comes any considerable distance, he gets 15 cents a mile. As the minister mentioned, the fees were always made small so as to make it possible for the poor man to go into court and get justice. If the fees are made large, he will not be able to pay them, and he will have to waive his rights in court. I would be disposed to leave the fees as they are.

Mr. DOHERTY: I have not any very strong feeling on the subject; but my attention being called to the matter by the hon. member, (Mr. Campbell) it seems to me that as regards the average man who is called as a witness, his day is worth more than $1.50 to him. I do not think we will do any real injustice if we leave it at $1 or make it $1.50. If the hon. gentleman will consider this matter from the witness' point of view, it is certainly pretty hard for a man who is earning $5 a day to have to sacrifice his day for a dollar in order to be of service to his neighbour, or, if you will, to the administration of justice. In our civil courts, witnesses' taxation fees, when I last knew of them, certainly exceeded one dollar a day. They were a dollar a day when I first began to practise law many years ago, and I must confess that I was surprised to find that they were so small still. On the other hand, we must consider the tax that is put upon the unfortunate litigant who has to pay these fees.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It may happen that the time of a witness who has no interest in the case will be more important than that of the litigant. Why should he be compelled to pay $2.50 to $3 a day to help out one of the litigants?

Mr. McKENZIE: I am sure the Minister of Justice would like to have uniformity in the law as much as possible. I am not familiar with the fees in the other provinces; but in the province from which I come, in a civil suit, the witness gets one dollar a day and ten cents a mile for travel. By this proposed legislation we are going to create the anomaly that if two witnesses are travelling ten miles, one going to a criminal court and the other to a civil court, the one going to a civil court gets $1 a day and ten cents a mile for travel and the other going to a criminal court gets $1.50 a day and fifteen cents a mile for travel. There is bound to be trouble. I would like to have uniformity, at least as far as our province is concerned. If it is left as it is in this schedule, there will be no great trouble, but if the change is made the man who goes to the criminal court will be 50 cents per day, and 5 cents per mile, to the good.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The situation is the other way around in Manitoba.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And in Ontario too.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THE PRINTING OF SENATE BILLS

SPECIAL COMMITTEE'S REPORT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate, transmitting for the information of this House an extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of Canada, of Tuesday, May 24, 1921, as follows:

The Senate,
Committee Room No. 251,
Monday, May 23, 1921.

The Special Committee appointed to consider and report upon the method of printing Senate Bills beg leave to make their first report as follows:

"Your committee recommend that all Bills which propose to amend or repeal any existing statute shall, when first printed, have in parallel columns the sections of the Act proposed to be repealed or amended, and the sections as it is proposed to amend them, showing in brackets the words to be deleted in the existing Act, and showing in brackets the words to be added by said amendment."

N. A. BELCOURT,
Chairman.

The said report was adopted.

CUSTOMS TARIFF, 1907, AMENDMENT

On the motion of Sir Henry Drayton (Minister of Finance) Bill No. 199, to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907, was read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 5—imported goods to be marked, stamped, branded or labelled.

Mr. PEDLOW: I would like the minister to give the committee some further information on his clause. When the resolution was under discussion a few days ago I took the liberty of raising some objections to the provisions of this clause, and I was under the impression that the minister would have some further explanation to make at this stage. I should like to know what conclusions he has arrived at in the meantime.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am afraid I am not in a position to withdraw the clause. We still think it is proper that the marking should be done. I do not know that I can go further than I went before as regards the grounds on which we think it ought to be done, but I certainly undertake that in the regulations that are drawn up we shall try to be reasonable, and my hon friend need have no fears that the marking will have injurious results.

Mr. PEDLOW: It is only fair to this committee that we should have same idea as to the provisions that will be enacted in regard to this feature of the tariff. I had hoped that the committee would be given a specific list of the merchandise that would be branded by the Customs Department. The range of merchandise that comes through the Customs Department is a very wide one, and the number of items which it will be possible to brand without injury is very limited. It ought to be practicable for the minister or his officials to frame some specific list for the information of importers; otherwise importers will, as heretofore, place their contracts abroad, and will have nothing to guide them along these lines. I appeal to the minister to submit for the consideration of the committee, a specific list of items which they intend to have branded. The question should not be left to the discretion of the officials of the department, because they have not the technical knowledge of merchandise that would enable them to come to a proper decision as to the items that can be marked without injury. Furthermore, if the question is left open, there may be two opinions as to the possibility or the desirability of branding certain merchandise. A merchant might place a contract with a British manufacturer and decide that it was neither possible nor desirable to brand the goods, and when they arrived at the Customs Department, the officials might have an entirely different opinion about the matter. Consequently under this resolution, the first step that would be taken would be to penalize the merchant to the extent of 10 per cent additional tariff on the goods imported. Then the shipment would be held up until the point had been threshed out by the Customs Department. I see room for grave difficulty in connection with this provision. As a matter of fact, there is no real advantage to be gained by this proposal. The assigned reason is that it will make it clear to purchasers just what class of goods they are getting, and where they have been manufactured. Well, I submit that the real consideration, after all, in any purchase, is value and service, and 99 per cent of purchasers care not one whit where the goods they buy are made; all they desire to know is that the goods are of a certain quality and are good value for the money they pay. If the goods are reliable, and meet with their approval, that is all that should be expected. To go beyond that and enact this proposed legislation will only create hardship and friction, and, in my opinion, the minister will experience a great deal more trouble in connection with this provision that he was beset with during the past year in the enforcement of the luxury tax. That tax was only a small matter compared to the possible results of this provision, from the point of view of the trouble which the minister and his officials will be faced with.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think I can say anything more than that no goods will be marked that will be injured. The first thing that will be done will be to get out a proper list of articles to be marked, and to say how they shall be marked. This Act is exactly the same as Acts that have been adopted and have been in force in other countries.

Mr. McMASTER: What other countries?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The United States, for instance.

9 p.m. Mr. PEDLOW: Have you a copy of their Act?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I read their Act the other night.

Mr. PEDLOW: That Act as you read it the other night did not give a list of the commodities that were branded. I think their Act does.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Our Act just follows theirs.

Mr. PEDLOW: Does that Act not enumerate the articles that must be branded? How will the purchaser of merchandise ever know what is required of him by the Customs Department under this resolution? You are really enacting a law with which it is impossible to comply.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think there is much force in the contention of my hon. friend from Renfrew. I have received a letter from a firm in Quebec city which imports a certain class of goods, and from that letter I desire to quote the following extract:

> We understand that this ruling does not mean that the containers or packages of the items are to be stamped, but each individual item. We have been wondering if this ruling is going to be rigidly enforced with respect to Calendars, Pictures, Calendar Pads, Blotters. Fans, and such other items that we sell you from time to time, for it will mean that such articles, where it is possible, will have to be run through the press for an extra printing, thereby, of course, adding considerable to the cost of the goods, and in some cases it will be practically impossible to apply the ruling, for instance on Calendar Pads. The putting of such an imprint on Calendar Pads and Pad Covers and other small items would not only be impracticable, but in some cases it would really add an additional cost which would be more than the actual cost of the goods themselves.

I wish to draw to the attention of the minister what is stated in this letter, and I shall be glad if he will give some explanation that will allay the fear of these gentlemen.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Perhaps the minister will allow us to have a little say on this subject in committee; I make that suggestion in perfect good faith. Possibly the minister in one speech could answer ten interpolations from this side or the other. I am not satisfied personally with the answer which my hon. friend has made to the speech of the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow). All the answer that was vouchsafed my hon. friend was that this is being done in other countries, and the country particularly mentioned is the United States. Well, that is no justification whatsoever for the expedient being adopted by the Parliament of Canada. We are governing Canada, and the fact that something is done in the United States, or Britain, or Timbuctoo, is no satisfactory reason as to why it should be done here. I should like the minister to tell us, if he borrowed the expedient from the United States, where he borrowed the reasons for its being proposed to be put into operation here. What is the object of this marking? What is the reason for it? Will additional expense be incurred by some one by the marking, and if so, by whom? Who will discharge the expense? All additional trouble in this world means additional expense.

If there be trouble and expense in connection with trading, it makes the article traded in more expensive, more costly, and it is to that extent an embarrassment to trading when we want it to be freer, when we want to do something to stop the rot that is taking place in the trade of Canada. When my hon. friend is answering I should like him to tell us what effect he thinks this marking will have upon the trade of the country. What is the object or the reason for it? Will it incur expense; will it mean employing more government officials; what will be its effect upon trade? Is it not clearly a continuation of bureaucratic practices somewhere which we had to have recourse to of necessity during the war, perhaps, but which we would be better without now. I had occasion to tell the Government and the House the other day that we do not need a Government to help trade, we do not need a Government to interfere with trade. If people are left alone they will trade, it is natural to them to do so. Now I have put my questions specifically to the minister, and I hope in answering them he will let the United States alone and reply to these specific questions.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was just waiting for a moment to see if there were any other questions so that I might be able to adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend from Red Deer. Perhaps there are other hon. gentlemen who desire to ask questions.

Mr. DAVIS: Is there not also an ambiguity about the proviso which reads:

> That all goods imported into Canada after the date of the coming into force of this section which do not comply with the foregoing requirements—and so on. Well, there are two requirements, and one is that goods capable of being stamped shall be stamped. But goods which are not capable of being stamped are classed under this proviso. Therefore I think the wording of the proviso should be made clearer than it now is. Otherwise it would, in my opinion, preclude all goods whether they were stamped or whether they were not stamped, whether they were capable of being stamped or incapable of being stamped.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps I had better answer the last question first. I submit to my hon. friend that the clause is very clear:

> That all goods imported into Canada which are capable of being marked, stamped, branded or labelled without injury, shall be marked.

I think that is fairly clear, but if there is any doubt about it let us make it absolutely clear. My idea is that if we add any more language to the section we may somewhat becloud what would appear to me to be a pretty clear sentence.

Then my hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Lapointe) points out the difficulties in regard to the marking of printed matter. Well, the answer to him pretty nearly answers my hon. friend from Red Deer. I should say, in the first instance, that there is no difficulty whatever about branding books, calendars, and so forth, showing where they are made. The name of the printer is usually shown, and I do not know that the additional words are going to be a very great burden. I would not think so. If marking and printing can be done easily I think it can be done easily by people in the printing business. I might further point out—and this is a question which I know the hon. gentleman from Red Deer will be much interested in—that the printers, and the printers' unions, who were particularly desirous of having this done, illustrated the fact that they were subject to the competition of printers in other countries who were getting approximately —I am not sure of the exact figures—one-tenth of their wages. They said "If we are to be subject to that competition let the Canadian people at least know where they are buying these articles from." Cigar bands, and the like, in connection with which there is a good deal of printing in Canada are subject to competition of that class from abroad; and I will tell my hon. friend from Red Deer that I certainly desire to protect Canadian printers against a standard of living at least ten degrees below that of the Canadian labour man. That is one of the reasons for this provision.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend does not mean competition from the United States, I am sure.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was certainly not referring to labour in the United States; I was not referring at all to the United States. As a matter of fact, the points in connection with which this claim was—rightly or wrongly and I believe rightly—made by Canadian labour were Japan on the one side and the Continent on the other. There is no complaint about the United States in connection with printing. That was one reason why we thought marking should be done. I will tell my hon. friend another reason why we thought it necessary. We thought it would be a good thing to make it just a little more difficult to impose a fraud on the public than it now is—just a little bit. I have an idea, for example, that the public, when they think they are buying an English knife, should get an English knife. I do not know whether that will appeal to my hon. friend from Red Deer or not, but it did appeal to me.

Mr, CLARK: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It does not appeal to my hon. friend?

Mr. CLARK: No, because I would like to take care of myself in buying a knife; I do not want my hon. friend to help me at all in making such a purchase.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not intend to legislate for one minute for people who have the knowledge of cutlery that my hon. friend has. I am thinking of the Canadian public who, perhaps, do not know just exactly the different brands of steel and the different kinds of manufacture quite as well as my hon. friend may. Now those were the two main reasons why this was done and why we are standing on it. I am very glad that my hon. friend points out that we should not consider what is being done in other countries including the United States. Simply because a thing is done in England does not mean that it is a good thing to be done here. I entirely agree with my hon. friend that our fiscal policy must be dictated by the needs and interests of the Canadian nation, rather than by what England finds it pays her to do. The only reason why I referred to the United States was to illustrate the practical working out of the measure. Over there they do not bring down a Bill with a long list of names, saying exactly what is to be done with every one of the articles named. They simply bring in a declaration that articles which can be marked without injury, shall be marked so as to show the country of origin.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): I understand the minister to say that when the article is already marked it will not be necessary to mark it again. That is, if there are words on the book or the article that is imported from the United States, or some other foreign country, into Canada, which indicate where it came from, it will not be necessary to mark it specially. For example, the Government distribute penholders to members, and I happen to have one on my desk which I got from the distribution office. I find that it is marked "Eagle Pencil Company, New York".

Mr. CHISHOLM: New York?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): New York. I presume an article of that description which already bears an indication of where it was made will not have to be marked again. I can understand, however, where there will be great difficulty, and I sympathize with the view taken by my hon. friend from South Renfrew. If the minister is to issue a special list for the use of importers so that they will know what goods are to be marked, he will have to be very careful in its compilation. For some time I have no doubt great trouble will arise through this regulation. The clause seems to require that the goods themselves be marked, not the wrapper or container. But supposing you get a bundle of white silk ribbon, to mark it in many places would damage it and render it practically useless.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You could not mark that at all.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): That may be one of the class of articles that would be exempt. At the same time the importer might not know that, and if it was left to the discretion of the customs officer the latter might raise difficulties with the importer. The penalty is very severe—unnecessarily so for a regulation of this kind which is entirely new in this country. It strikes me that levying a penalty of $1,000 for omitting to place this mark on goods that may not be worth ten cents is ridiculous. There is no reason why we should frighten people with penalties of this kind, for it is no crime to import goods, and I cannot understand why the minister should want to levy such a heavy fine on a trader who omitted to comply with this regulation.

I also favour the proposal made by my hon. friend from South Renfrew that in place of advertising the country where the goods are made, as for example on this penholder, it would be better to say that it was made in Canada. If we are going to put a stamp on imported goods there is no necessity why we should advertise and build up the trade of foreign countries. Such a regulation as this would be a very fine advertisement for the United States. For example, if I buy a pair of boots from a merchant in Canada and they fit me, and I want another pair of the same make, if I find on the soles of those boots that they were made in New York or Boston that is the best sort of advertisement the American manufacturer can have. They have realized that in England, where they started this idea some time ago I understand, and they changed their regulations, which now, instead of requiring the country of origin to be marked, directs that all imported goods shall be marked "not made in England." That seems to be a very reasonable regulation. I have not heard the minister say that he would accept it, but for the life of me I cannot understand why we should go to the trouble and expense of advertising foreign countries and helping them to sell their goods.

Mr. NESBITT: The section reads:

> That all goods imported into Canada which are capable of being marked, stamped, branded or labelled, without injury, shall be marked, stamped, branded or labelled, etc.

So this would not apply to silk ribbons or to any other goods that might be injured by stamping or marking. The section does not provide that goods have to be branded to indicate the place of manufacture, but merely to indicate the country of origin. So if goods are made in Germany they must be branded "made in Germany," and likewise goods made in England or any other ountry would be similarly branded to indicate the country of origin. There is no reason why goods should be branded to indicate the particular town or city from which they come; but I may tell my hon. friend from Guysborough that very few manufactureres who are not ashamed of their goods do not now mark them not only to indicate the town or city where they are made but the company who manufacture them.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): They do it for the advertisement.

Mr. NESBITT: Absolutely; and it is no hardship on anybody who imports goods to mark on them the country of origin. We need not wonder about the cost. No one can calculate the cost of marking these goods, because the men who take a pride in their products will mark them, unless they are trying to evade and deceive, and that is what we want to avoid and what we should avoid.

Mr. PEDLOW: I discussed this proposition at considerable length when the resolution was before the committee, but it seems to me I will be compelled to cover pretty much the same territory again—

Some Hon MEMBERS: No, no; please.

Mr. PEDLOW:—to emphasize the point I endeavoured to emphasize on that occasion. The member for North Oxford seems to think that if imported goods are branded the consumer will be assured of getting the proper quality of merchandise.

Mr. NESBITT: He would soon know from the brand.

Mr. PEDLOW: That, in the opinion of the Minister of Finance, is only one of the features. When the resolution was before us a few days ago he laid particular stress on the fact that it would enable the consumer to understand and to know just exactly where the merchandise was manufactured. There is a good deal in what the hon. member for Guysborough said in that connection, and much more than appears on the surface. If this Bill passes in its present form, it will mean that the trade of Canada will be forced to advertise on their counters the merchandise of foreign countries. That is one of the weakest parts of this section. It will compel our importers to distribute advertising matter for Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Czecho--Slovakia, Italy, the British Isles, and other countries. I insist that if the minister must have a provision of this kind he should follow the British system and have all imported goods branded, "Not manufactured in Canada". That is the system in force in the British Isles, all their imported goods are branded "Not manufactured in the British Isles," and I do not think we can make any mistake in following their example. The merchants and manufacturers there took exception to a provision similar to this, and the law was changed accordingly. This is a very unwise proposition to force on the business of this country. In the first place it requires that all goods which are capable of being marked must be marked in a conspicuous place. It still leaves the question of what is a conspicuous place open for debate between the importer, the maunfacturer and the customs officials. Supposing the importer does his level best to comply with the requirements of this Bill, and his shipment of goods arrive in the customs office, each article duly marked in his judgment in compliance with the Act, and the customs officer says. "These are not branded in a conspicuous place. I will hold up this entire shipment and will penalize you to the extent of 10 per cent to start with." Then, the next thing is that the goods will not be allowed to leave the Customs office until they have been branded under the supervision of the customs officials. This may mean a delay of weeks and months in the case of perishable merchandise, and after they are released, even though they have not been injured by branding or stamping, they may be out of date and considerably depreciated in value. I do wish the minister and his deputy would give real consideration to this view; it is a view that they cannot escape. Take the law that was passed last year in regard to manufacturers collecting the luxury tax. All hon. members know the difficulties that arose in that regard. The minister assured the member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) and the member for Beauce (Mr. Béland) that harness makers, blacksmiths and tailors would not be classified as manufacturers; yet we know what happened. These trades were put to enormous trouble during the year; they were made to pay a license fee and compelled to collect sales tax as manufacturers, although they were not manufacturers and although the minister assured us on the floor of the House that they would not be so considered. An expensive lawsuit has resulted; it was decided against the Government only last week, and the Minister of Finance assures me that the Government have had to pay the costs. Now, here is cause for any number of lawsuits and any amount of trouble.

Why, you cannot get two men in the same line of business who have the same ideas as to the branding of merchandise. How, then, can you expect a proper decision when the conflict of opinion is between a government official and an importer? You cannot find in Webster's dictionary any words adequate to describe the character of this provision. It provides that the goods must be marked in a conspicuous place. Well now, that is pretty plain language, and I know from experience the interpretation that the customs officials will give to it. Take the line of the merchandise I mentioned the other day, silk stockings, which we import in large quantities. The only conspicuous place on a silk stocking is the leg; the toe would not be considered by the minister's officials as a conspicuous place. He says that the marking on the toe will be accepted by him, but we know from our experience of last year that the inland revenue officers will have a different opinion in the matter. Moreover, the customs officers themselves will have different opinions in different parts of the country and there will be no end of trouble, no end of turmoil from one end of Canada to the other. It is impossible, I say, to make this Act workable. Then, it is provided that the goods must be marked in detail; every item in the package must be marked. I appeal to the hon. gentleman's common sense; I do submit that this provision will cause an immense amount of trouble and will involve expense which will add to the cost of the merchandise and increase the price to the consumer.

I have already called attention to the penalty clause providing that 10 per cent shall be added to the cost of the merchandise if in the judgment of the customs officer it fails to comply with the requirements of this Act. Mr. Chairman, this Act has not been properly thought out. I do not like to use the word, because I have the highest admiration for the minister, but it seems to me to be a half-baked measure; it has not run the gauntlet of careful criticism and consideration. An Act of this kind, if it is to be enforced, should be worked out by men who are experienced in this line of work and who know what they are talking about; men who can say what lines of merchandise can be branded and what lines cannot be branded without destroying or depreciating their value. The penalty clause read by the minister the other night as being in operation in United States is slightly different from that which is adopted here. In fact, the omission of one word makes a big difference. If the provisions contained in the third section of this paragraph are insisted on, it leaves the matter in such a position that no one importing merchandise can escape the penalty, and it is a very severe one—a thousand dollars or a year's imprisonment or both. The penalty applies to any person who violates any of the provisions relating to the marking, stamping, branding or labelling of any imported goods. That is, if a man fails to have the merchandise marked, or if he fails to have it marked in the place where the customs officer thinks it should be marked; if he fails to do a thousand and one little things which he is liable innocently to omit to do—because he has nothing to guide him in this Act; there are no definite instructions—then he is liable to this heavy penalty. In the United States Act which was read by the minister a few nights ago the word "fraudulently" was used after the word "shall" in the third line. I think that is only a reasonable provision. If a man innocently violates the Act, he is liable to penalty, though he may not have had the least intent of breaking the law. I really think the House will have gone insane if it endorses this provision. This part of the Act should be deleted entirely, or further consideration given to it before it becomes law.

Mr. McMASTER: I do not propose to delay the committee to any considerable extent in the few observations which I wish to make concerning this Bill. But I do not wish this part of the Bill to pass without registering a most emphatic protest. I want to remind the Minister of Finance that last year he passed a luxury tax provision, and he did so in spite of the expert advice given him by the member for South Renfrew. He proceeded along the line of error and finally had to admit the error by taking off the luxury tax in the middle of the Christmas season. Now, I have some respect for the out-and-out protectionist, although he is making a mistake—the man who comes out in manly fashion and says: "I am going to raise the tariff; I think it is a good thing for the country." I can respect his sincerity and his courage, although I may have a very unfavourable opinion of his economic knowledge and judgment. But this sort of protection, this sort of pin-prick protection—not only am I opposed to it economically, but I have little respect for that sort of proceeding. I wish I could shake this Government out of its smug self-satisfaction, because I think that if I did I would be conferring a benefit on the country. The Minister of Marine is spending millions of dollars of the people's money for what? With the ostensible purpose of increasing Canada's trade. This is just a comparison I am making—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member in discussing this clause, is certainly not in order in making a comparison between the conduct of the minister in charge of the present legislation and that of the other ministers of the Government.

Mr. McMASTER: Well, without making any comparison at all between these gentlemen, I submit to the committee with all confidence that what the Minister of Finance is doing, no doubt unwittingly and perhaps with the best intentions in the world, is tripping up commerce, pushing pins into commerce, interfering with commerce. You will never make Canada prosperous by interfering in this underhand and small way with the trade of the country. It will cost money to do what is here provided, and that cost will have to be met by some one. The only way by which we shall return to economic prosperity in this country is by freeing trade, not by putting shackles upon it and not by tieing it up with small threads in this way. The minister has read Gulliver's Travels. He will remember that when Gulliver came to Lilliput, he was asleep and the Lilliputians tied his brawny arms and strong legs up with little threads, and finally he was unable to move. That is what the minister is doing with commerce—tieing it up with small, mistaken interferences with the right of people to carry on their business in their own way.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I have listened with very great patience to my hon. friend's reply to a very small portion of the questions that I put to him, and I have heard another very explicit charge against this proposed legislation from the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow). I want to tell the minister—and I hope he will keep quite cool while I try to get my difficulties in this matter solved by him—that so far I am much more impressed with the objections of the hon. member for South Renfrew than I am by the explanations of the minister. I asked the minister very politely, if somewhat emphatically, the reason for this legislation, and the only reason that he gave was that he would like to protect the Canadian public in buying their knives. I am very grateful to him that he excluded me from his tender care. I want to assure him that a large number of the Canadian public would be willing to free him from further trouble in their case. The minister and I have diametrically opposite views as regards how people trade. When I go to buy a calf from a neighbour, the matter is one between my neighbour and me, and I do not want the minister to come and help me to buy my calf and my neighbour does not want him to help him to sell it. In the wider field of international trade a condition of mutual trust is to be found on a larger scale as between the importer and the exporter, then between the importer and the retailer, and finally between the retailer and the customer. Human beings have been so constituted that whether they be exporters, importers, retailers or customers, on the whole they are better doing their own business in the world than being helped by petty little details arranged by the Department of Finance and consented to by the minister pro tem. That is my view of trade on general principles. I hope I have been explicit and clear enough, and that the minister will understand me.

I addressed a number of other questions which my hon. friend failed to pay any attention to ; in fact, he seemed to be very anxious to get back at me and make it a debating point. That is the easiest thing in the world to do; but that is not worth while if we want to facilitate the business of the House and to get away from here some little time before Christmas. This is not a matter of debate between the minister and myself; it is a matter of his clearing away our doubts about the propriety of this legislation. The hon. member for South Renfrew is, I understand, a merchant; he understands about trade; he is not a lawyer, and I believe he could give the minister points in the matter of trade and then not lose. My hon. friend stakes his commercial reputation on the statement that this is going to give rise to an infinity of trouble in trade. Is that the minister's object? Does he believe the hon. member? Let me ask the minister to give me some guidance in this matter. Who is going to make the examination for the marks on the various articles imported? Where is that going to be done? Perhaps the minister can answer that without leaving his seat.

Mr. CURRIE: In the customs house.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Then every parcel has to be opened and every article examined. The Minister of Customs has an assistant now, but I would rather not deal with the assistant; I want to deal with headquarters. Supposing, however, the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) is well informed, I think, in his assertion, there is prima facie evidence that the hon. member for South Renfrew understands the matter. He says that there will be a great deal of trouble. I put this to the minister, that if the articles in question are only a gross of pairs of stockings—and that would not be a large import—and every stocking has to be marked on every toe, who is going to look at the toes of the stockings for the marks?

Mr. PEDLOW: The mark has to be in a conspicuous place.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I understood the other day that my hon. friend got from the minister the concession that it had not to be in a conspicuous place; that it was to be on the toe. I would like to know if he has found out from prospective wearers if they want the toes of their stockings marked at all. I should like to know if he has endeavoured to find out what effect this is going to have on business. I am going into details to show my hon. friend calmly and reasonably what the situation will be, and I hope he will imitate my tone and temper. I hope he will explain to me who is going to do this marking. The hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) gets up and utters three sentences of an explanation and then wanders out into the lobby thinking he has settled the whole matter. As a matter of fact, he has not settled anything, but has merely given an opinion.

To return to the question which my hon. friend did not answer, this is all trouble—trouble to the markers in the country from which the goods come, and believe me, English traders want to be paid for their trouble, and their customers will pay them. The importer brings the material in, but he sells it to the retailer. The profit is secure to all the dealers, and the whole thing comes upon the poor consumer at the finish. That is the Government's panacea and has been from the start for improving the trade conditions of Canada. If there is any financial trouble, the recipe of the Government has been: "Give the consumer another clout on the head." That is the recipe of the Government for improving our trade conditions. That is the way in which this will operate. Even if the minister will not protect me in the buying of a knife, if he excludes me from the benefits of his tender care bestowed upon the general public there will be trouble on the American side and on the British side wherever he enacts that these marks shall be made, and the Canadian people will pay for it. If I am wrong in this, the minister has left me wrong, because he did not answer my question when I first asked it. I have, therefore, had to explain to him in more detail what my difficulties are and have had to ask the question twice: Will this be an additional expense, and who will pay it? As regards this marking, is it not going to be a real obstacle in the way of trade? I do not care to use the language of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster)—not that there was anything particularly harmful—but I want to be careful not to irritate my hon. friend's feelings at this period of the session. I do not want to talk about pin-pricks. I am not trying to pin-prick anybody; I am trying to see whether this is going to increase the trade of Canada and the comfort of the Canadian people or to decrease both, and for the life of me I cannot see but that it will be baneful in its effects. I cannot see the benefit of this legislation; I do not believe the minister is called upon to protect the whole of the Canadian people in buying all of these articles. I have, however, asked him the question: Will it increase the expense of the trading operation, because nobody contends that the stocking will be better for wearing on account of the mark? The whole tendency would be for it to be worse at that particular point, because there would be the wear caused by putting on the mark, and so with the various other articles. Will not this examination, which my hon. friend from North Simcoe says will be carried out, not lead to the increase of Government officials? Is the whole thing not an unnecessary interference of Government with an operation that would be on the whole better left in the hands of the people themselves, who, after all, when they grow up do not want to be treated as children. If ever I met a people in the world who insist upon their whole manhood and womanhood after they have grown from their 'teens, it is the Canadian people. I hope I have made my points clear and not taken too much time about it, and I hope that when the minister answers this time he will cover the whole ground, so that I shall not need to say anything more.

Sir HENRY DAYTON: I will try and do so. I do not know that I will try to emulate my hon. friend, because if I did so I am afraid I should have to engage in a little bit of scolding that would be entirely beyond my powers. I have taken notes as accurately as I could of my hon. friend's questions, and the first question to be answered is: Will this increase the expense of the operation? There is no doubt about one thing and that is that sometimes the very cheapest of all commodities, cheap sacks, and cheap bags, for instance, are all marked with the name of the maker, often the trade-mark, usually the address, and very often the country. If my hon. friend wants to find something that is cheaper than anything else, let him look at a cheap jack-knife. Even that is marked. If my hon. friend goes down the street to-day and buys a pair of socks—I refer to socks because my hon. friend specializes on stockings—he will find that the cheapest sock he can buy carries its trade-mark.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Does my hon. friend propose a mark in addition to that?

Mr. CURRIE: Keep quiet; let the minister answer.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): My hon. friend must keep quiet. This is between the minister and me. I would like the hon. member for Simcoe not to waste the time of this committee. The minister and I are trying to get through, and I would like to call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that the hon. member for Simcoe, without rising in his place, is behaving in a most disorderly manner, interrupting his own minister, and obstructing the business of the House.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: As I was saying, on the cheapest sock you can buy, you will find the name clearly stamped. Now I do not think it would cost very much more, the name and trade-mark being already there, to add the name of the country.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Am I to understand that the minister proposes a mark in addition to that which the maker puts on?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I certainly propose one thing, and one thing only, and that is that the name of the country of origin shall be shown. I am not interested in trade-marks; I am not interested in names and addresses; I am interested in one thing only and that is that the Canadian public shall know from whom they are buying. It is, of course, a usual thing to have more or less trouble when a change is made, but I may tell my hon. friend that so far I have received only one letter objecting to what is being done. I may tell him another thing. Either he or the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow) stated that we were compelling the advertising of foreign goods in Canada by this marking. Now, so far, the manufacturers, for whom my hon. friend professes fears, have not made the slightest objection to this legislation—not one of them. On the other hand, the importers are making some objection. Now I would like to ask this question: If it be a bad thing for Canadian manufacturers and Canadian production that we should insist on the country of origin being shown—that we should insist, if you like, on the goods of a foreign country being advertised in Canada—why is it that the only people who are complaining of this legislation are the importers whose interest it is to advertise the foreign as against the home-made article?

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Because the importers have the trouble. That would be my answer.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend has not appreciated my point, but the fault is entirely mine. I was just endeavouring to point out an inconsistency which appears to me to be perfectly apparent. It is alleged that the effect of this legislation will be to advance the sales of imported goods, because of the forced advertisement which they will get. If that is bad for Canadian production, how is it we have received not one complaint of this legislation so far from the manufacturers in Canada.

Another question was: where is the marking to be done? Where is the list going to be drawn up? How is it going to be put in force? The list of goods will be drawn up in Ottawa, it will be printed and circulated; it will be placed in the hands of every single customs official at points of entry.

The marking ought to be done, and will be done, in the country of origin. It is now being done in the country of origin in the case of a great many goods of the better class. It is now being done in the country of origin in so far as importations to countries having similar legislation to this are concerned.

Where is the inspection to take place? The inspection will take place where the goods are examined. All goods coming in have to be examined by the customs officers now. In connection with the larger question of valuing, and inspecting goods passed for customs, a small amount of extra work will be imposed upon the officials to see whether the article is properly marked. This will be done at the customs ports through which the goods pass. The work will be done by exactly the same man that is already doing it; there will be no increase in the number of customs officials. I think I have answered the list of questions in regard to which my hon. friends desires information. If there are any more questions I shall try to answer them.

Mr. McKENZIE: I was very much interested in the speech of the Minister of Finance in connection with this new duty which he is proposing on goods coming into the country. I thought that we could all safely heave a sigh of relief that the minister was about though with his new taxation proposals, but here he comes with another Bill. Is there any telling when the end will be.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is the same matter that has been before the House already.

Mr. McKENZIE: It is possibly the same matter, I suppose, on the same principle as the man who was going all over the continent and finding at every hotel at which he stopped a herring cooked in a different way. Every time he saw it, he said "You are the same red herring". Well, this may be the same red herring, although it is cooked in a different form. We had some criminal legislation going through this afternoon which reminded me of the story of a little girl who had a favourite pet dog. She heard they were going to cut its tail off and pleaded very hard with the executioner that if it was absolutely necessary to cut off the tail of her dear little dog, she hoped it would be done one piece at a time. She thought that it would be less painful that way. Evidently the Minister of Finance thinks that instead of giving us his objectionable legislation all at once he will save us some inconvenience by giving it to us a little at a time; but I think it would be better to have one fell stroke at once and have done with the whole thing, instead of introducing Acts of this kind from day to day. Now, this proposal says that every article that can be marked must be marked. In this connection, it has occurred to me that my old Scotch friend would have some difficulty in complying with the law. I refer to the shrewd man who, on one occasion, complained of the dishonesty of the English, as he had a right to do, when he imported one hundred thousand dozens of needles and said: "After I had counted them, I found I was ten short". I wonder what would become of him if he had to examine closely each one of the needles to see that it was stamped. It is not impossible to have a needle stamped, and I would ask my hon. friend if he really would insist on his officials counting every needle that comes into the country to see that it is duly stamped, and, if it is not stamped, whether it is his intention to exact the penalty? I am sure the minister, who is a humane man, is not disposed to be unscrupulous, except in so far as he gives in to his officials, and would see to it that people were not penalized to an enormous extent in connection with goods of this kind. The speech of the member for Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow), stands unanswered. Why should we give people this extra trouble? Who is complaining about a web of cloth as to whether it comes from the Old Country or any place else, so long as he gets his suit properly made to his satisfaction? If a lady goes into a store in Ottawa to buy a pair of boots and they suit her, she is not going to make a row because there is no stamp on them. If the leather is all right, and the boots are of the right style and meet her approval in every way, she is not going to look around to ascertain whether it has any particular stamp on it or not. The truth is that this is another form of protection. I get a great deal of advertisement and praise for being a protectionist. I do not try to escape from that reputation at all in many things that are proper and right, but I think that this is a kind of protection which will make it difficult to get goods into the country. It will profit nobody, but, on the other hand, will greatly inconvenience the officials of the department, the manufacturers, and those who do business. It will not serve any good purpose; if it could I certainly should not be opposed to it, because I want to help those who seem to have put some thought and time into this matter. Your predecessor in the Chair, Mr. Chairman, ruled that we could not compare this Government to anything else. I readily concur in that ruling, because, if we are to compare one thing to another, the comparison must be to a thing that exists or has existed before. Well, there was never anything, in the heavens above or in the earth beneath or in the waters under the earth, like this Government; therefore we cannot compare it to anything at all. So that I absolutely concur in the ruling of your predecessor in the Chair; I think he was quite right. Nevertheless, although the Government cannot be compared to anything that we know of, the Minister of Finance has a very great responsibility, and to a very great extent he deals with the everyday life of the 9,000,000 people in this country, and he should not discharge that responsibility in the indifferent and jaunty manner, if I may use the expression, which characterizes him when dealing with such matters. Possibly it is a mannerism of the minister, and perhaps, after he gets in the privacy of his chamber and closes the door and puts himself in the attitude of prayer, if ever he does that, he may have serious moments; but before us he manages splendidly to throw off every appearance of care in regard to the various onerous duties with which he is charged. He says that these goods are to be marked in a conspicuous place. I rather congratulate him on that because he evidently did not pay very much attention to the criminal legislation which was going through the House this afternoon in relation to the punishment of spanking. I think he should know more about spanking than he does. In regard to that question there was a good deal of dictionary research as to where the spanking was to be applied. I shall not go into the details of that matter, but I would ask the minister to look over the Bill as it was attempted to be put through the House. In that case the spanking was not necessarily to be on a conspicuous place. I hope that before the terms of that Bill apply to the Department of Finance the minister will abandon this proposed legislation and leave us where we were. For the last fifty years, the minister must not forget, we have got along splendidly without this legislation. The minister will remember that we now have customs duties, excise duties, sales tax, business tax, income tax, dumping tax, and now this stamping tax. Now many of these taxes were brought on by reason of the war, and I do not blame my hon. friend for them. But the war is over now, and we should be pointing the trade of this country, the operations of every industry, as much as possible into the open sea and away from the rocks, difficulties and embarrassments of the war.

We should be getting away from these restrictions until we get out of some of our other difficulties. After we get away from the sales tax, the dumping tax, and all the rest of it, after we get free from the embarrassments of the war taxation and are more at liberty, perhaps the minister might find it necessary to put a few more fences around the trade of this country; but for the present does not the minister think we have troubles enough and new conditions enough that he is imposing on the trade of Canada without adding this restriction? I seriously ask the minister if he does not think—having got along without such impediments for the last fifty years, or even since Confederation—that we could do without this one until we are prepared to drop some of the other embarrassments and taxes which surround the trade of Canada at the present time?

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I do not want to delay the minister one moment. If he is determined to go on with this, I should be the last to resort to anything that had even the appearance of obstruction. But there was one point in his reply to me which filled me with apprehension, and I want to impress it upon him. I want to do it by reminding him that last year I told him that in my humble view certain consequences would result from certain taxes. Well, at the time he did not see it my way, which shows that just for once I saw a little further than he did, because long before his next Budget he gave up the taxes. Now he admits that in regard to these taxes he has already had complaints from importers. I think I understood from my hon. friend that complaints have begun to come in before these marks have gone on, before the law is even in operation. It takes time for these things to make themselves felt and it is for legislators, especially ministers in the Government of a country, to see what the result of their action is going to be, and not to wait until the trouble ensues: It is their duty to prevent trouble—to foresee it if possible. Those importers who are complaining now may just have a little more foresight than the other importers of the country, and if they foresee it, and we fear it, it may be that before this marking has gone very far all the importers will be complaining. After that your goods have to pass from the importers to the retailers, and it may be that the retailers will meet some of these troubles that we fear. All these vexatious interferences with trade must fall somewhere, and they will fall on the people concerned. Now that is my fear. Is it getting any revenue for the country? It will never get a revenue for the country when it is evaded. I cannot see that the good to the consumer is going to compensate for the possible trouble and vexation to importers, retailers and consumers combined. Now I am warning the minister what he may look for in my judgment. It has not got into the retail trade yet, much less has it got to the consumer; but as to the consumer, my honest fear is that it is upon me and men like me that the thing will land. I want to tell the minister that with western prices at the rates so much dwelt upon, with the prices the farmers are getting for their stuff we cannot spend much more. The day will come when, if we want to wear boots and stockings, we will have to cut up some of these cheap sacks the minister is talking about and wrap our feet up in them. But what good will that do the trade of the country? We have to facilitate the communications and dealings of the people with one another. However, I do not want to expatiate upon it. I have explained to the minister my fears, and if he is determined to go on we must take our medicine. It is the aftermath of the war, and the minister is part of that aftermath.

Mr. COPP: Before the clause passes I would like to inquire from the minister if I understand him right when he said that the goods would be marked with the place of manufacture from which they were shipped by the exporters.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The country of origin, wherever they are made.

Mr. COPP: That means that if a man is importing goods from the United States the marking is done in that country? Now let us examine and see how far we get with that. You give an order to a retailer and he orders from a firm in the United States, or in Great Britain, or in some other country, and these goods arrive. Let us read the section my hon. friend has placed before the committee:

> That all goods imported into Canada which are capable of being marked, stamped, branded, or labelled without injury, shall be marked, stamped, branded or labelled in legible English or French words, in a conspicuous place that shall not be covered or obscured by any subsequent attachments or arrangements, so as to indicate the country of origin. Said marking, stamping, branding, or labelling shall be as nearly indelible and permanent as the nature of the goods will permit.

"As nearly indelible." Then he goes on and provides a penalty. I would like to ask my hon. friend to let his mind take him into a court of law and have the lawyers and judges there discussing this question. When a man is brought before the courts for the breaking of the law and expecting a penalty to be imposed, I would like him to imagine the court construing and interpreting the words "said marking, stamping, branding or labelling shall be as nearly indelible and permanent as the nature of the goods will permit." Then again, after these goods come into the country who is going to suffer the penalty? The manufacturer in the country of origin must mark them and if he does not do so he is liable to a penalty. Now, where are you going to get him to impose that penalty? The condition of affairs is one that is of very little importance to the country. As has already been said, it is a most annoying and vexatious arrangement to importers and dealers, but it means nothing to the revenue of the country. Fancy discussing such legislation in the last week or two of the session. Yesterday afternoon, last night, and this afternoon the House was considering a Bill providing how a man should have his dog's tail cut off. That is one of the weighty policies we have been discussing here for the last two days. Now my hon. friend the Minister of Finance after bringing down his Budget proposals very late in the session—much later than they should have been brought down—comes along with a Bill providing for restraint of trade, for that is practically what it means. It means nothing to the country, it means nothing to the Government, it means nothing but trouble and annoyance to everybody concerned, and directly concerned, in the trade of Canada. When I go into a store to buy a pair of boots I do not look inside the footwear to see who made them. If I go in to buy a pair of socks I do not care whether they are made in England or the United States—I want the socks and I get them. Ninety-nine out of every hundred men in the country do exactly the same thing. What difference does it make to me who made my boots, or my socks, or my suspenders, or any other article in connection with my wardrobe? It does not matter to anybody. The trouble is that the Minister of Finance, in making jobs for somebody, has surrounded himself with men who are determined to raise trouble for the people of this country. If we had a few more men of common sense and judgment these matters would be dealt with properly and sanely. Instead of that men who have been selected are causing trouble and disturbance among the people. It is because of such legislation as this that the country is in a state of unrest and dissatisfaction, and the people are being annoyed and embarrassed by agents of the Government in every possible way. Every day of the session some little picayune thing is brought up by the Government which means nothing to the advantage of the country, but entails great annoyance and vexation to the people who have to deal with the Government and its officials.

Mr. CALDWELL: I was rather interested in the statement made by the Minister of Finance that these goods should be marked in the country of origin. But unfortunately the Government of Canada has no way of fining the manufacturer if he fails to mark his goods, and the fine falls upon the importer here. We realize that these goods must be marked before they enter Canada, otherwise the customs officer will not pass them at the port of entry. The importer orders his goods and expects them to be marked, but they arrive here not marked. Whose fault is it? It is not the fault of the importer, but he is fined a thousand dollars or sentenced to a year in jail, or possibly both, for the fault of a man whom the Government of this country have no jurisdiction over. That looks to me like a very great hardship on the importer. Firms in the United States and other countries send their travellers to Canada, and they book traders orders for goods. The importer does not see those goods before they enter this country, he has no way of ascertaining whether they are properly marked, but if they are not properly marked, but if no fault of his own, he is fined or imprisoned. This is a very serious thing and should have the earnest consideration of the minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. PEDLOW: In justice to the representations that have been made to-night in reference to this matter, I do not think that members behind the Minister of Finance should be in such a hurry, crying "carried". I notice the hon. member for North Simcoe acting like a parrot or a phonograph all night—so frequently does he utter the word "carried". If he continues to read the paper he has before him we will get along much better I think.

The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) is not in his seat just now, but I think he will agree with me,—at least so far as he is permitted to do so as a Government supporter—that this Bill is bound to cause no end of trouble. He is a manufacturer himself, and possibly is regarded as one of those who have not been objecting to the measure. But getting down to the real issue, I do not see that even our own manufacturers will stand to gain very much by this unnecessary piece of legislation. As a matter of fact, I fancy that 75 per cent of the goods imported at the present time are branded with the country of origin, although that in itself is not always reassuring. The hon. member for Guysborough said a few moments ago that he had received a penholder from the distribution office branded as being made in the United States. I have in my hand a pencil I received this afternoon from the distribution office marked "British made". But the name of the manufacturer may or may not indicate that he is of British citizenship—E. W-o-l-f-f. That does not indicate an English name to my mind, although the purchaser of this pencil would be buying it with the understanding that it was made by a citizen of Great Britain.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If the hon. member will allow me, does he think that a good state of affairs?

Mr. CAHILL: What is wrong with it?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The hon. member is saying, Mr. Chairman, that he does not believe that that pencil is British made, that somebody has so branded it for the purpose of selling it as an article of British manufacture. The hon. member suspects that it is a German pencil, and that the branding is being done for the purpose, if he chooses to follow it out, of getting around the British preferential tariff, and therefore is a fraud. We ought to try and stop fraud, but there is no law at present which does enable us to stop it. This law may help us to stop such fraud, and I hope it will.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I think my hon. friend may be mistaken. The name "Wolff" is a very common Jewish name, and unless he has absolute knowledge that the maker is not a British subject, it is rather unjust to cast a doubt on his bona fides.

Mr. PEDLOW: The point I make is that this branding is no absolute guarantee that the pencil is of British manufacture.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): The quality of the stuff is there.

Mr. PEDLOW: In my judgment the point is debatable. The fact that an article is branded "British made" does not always indicate that it is so. Therefore as a guarantee it is of no value.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): That is the point.

Mr. PEDLOW: Then there is the matter of expense; I do not know where this is going to stop. Last night we were discussing the depreciation allowed on foreign currency, and the Bill then under consideration provided for a fifty per cent depreciation. That means that merchandise coming from Central Europe will pay six times the existing tariff, and in addition we must take into account freight and insurance, and also something not mentioned by the minister, the rise in British exchange during the last three or four months, running anywhere from ten to eighteen per cent. The result is that you have absolutely prohibited importations from those countries. Therefore a Bill of this kind is useless, because there will be no importations under the provisions that the minister is attempting to put through this House.

Now, taking up the question of marking goods, the Bill we are considering gives no indication of how goods are to be marked or branded, except that it is to be done in a conspicuous place. Dress goods, silks, laces, embroideries, woollen goods, ginghams, serges, linens—these generally are all sold by the yard. Are these goods to be branded on the end or on the selvage? The Bill gives no information and we are left entirely in the dark. We have been simply asked to pass a blank order for the Customs Department to deal with. I insist that it is not safe legislation for the representatives of the people to pass, and we should not be asked to endorse it. I am not attempting to obstruct this measure. I simply want to see it pass through this House as near perfect as possible, for I do not want Parliament to develop into a manufactory of lawsuits among the business interests of this country, but I am sure that if this measure is enacted it will, as I have already said,be the source of no end of trouble. I suppose the legal fraternity in the House would not object to more lawsuits, but it is as patent as the nose on a man's face that that would be the result of placing this Bill on the statute book. It is too open and ill-considered, and while the lawyer may be glad to see such legislation passed, I appeal to men of common sense in the House and ask them to say who in their opinion is to mark these imported goods and where. Where are goods made up in detail to be marked? A thousand and one cases will come up in the customs offices each year. Who is to decide all these details? And what is there in it for the consumer? Absolutely nothing. The consumer is well able to judge whether or not certain merchandise is suitable for purchase. If he were not, I do not see how the Government could deal with the matter. Some one has asked, who will pay the cost? Of course, the buyer will pay it, as he always does. This branding cannot be done for nothing. The minister has referred to certain articles which are already branded, but I would point out that these brands are not indelible; they disappear with the first washing. But the branding required under this Act is to be indelible; it will not be removable; it will lessen the selling qualities of the merchandise. This Bill will be an obstacle to trade, it is harmful, it is pernicious; it is absolutely unnecessary. In short, it is pure humbug and will accomplish no good, but will rather raise no end of trouble from one end of the country to the other. Will the minister tell us just what prompted this legislation and what good he hopes to accomplish by it?

Mr. CAHILL: When I came into the chamber at eight o'clock one of the Government supporters was asking the Government to amend the Criminal Code so as to permit the cutting off of dogs' tails. We are considering the last clause of this Bill, and I have been hoping during the last two hours that some supporter of the Government would ask that this clause be cut off; I am quite sure that the Government would find it an even less serious loss than would be the loss of a small dog's tail, because the provision is no value to the country, of no value to the Government. It is simply a nuisance, of no practical value to any one. The minister has not attempted to give any reason why this legislation should be adopted. Every member who has spoken on it has pointed out the trouble and inconvenience that will result from it and the restrictions of trade that will be brought about. The minister seems to realize that the people have no confidence in the Government, and the Government apparently have no confidence in the people, because they are afraid to let ordinary grown-up men—anywhere from twenty to seventy years of age—to walk into a store and buy merchandise without the Government first looking it over and putting a stamp on it to tell the buyer where it is made—as if that could have any bearing on the value of the commodity. It seems to me so foolish, so nonsensical and so silly that I am surprised that the minister's good sense has not already caused him to ask that the clause be dropped and that the Bill be passed with as little harm in it as possible. Surely the minister must know that we have enough restrictive legislation in this country. We have enough fraternalism, enough of treating every one as the ward of the Government. Let us have a little liberty and freedom in the future; let us have less of this restriction. In view of the character of this proposed legislation, Mr. Chairman, and in view of the fact that no hon. member to your right will make the motion, I will move that the clause be struck out.

The CHAIRMAN: A motion that a clause be struck from a Bill has been ruled out of order on many occasions because it is a negative motion. There is a motion now before the Committee that the clause be adopted, and hon. members who desire to have it stricken from the Bill have the opportunity of voting against that motion.

Mr. MORPHY: I would not like this subject to be passed over without a word or two being said in the nature of a reply to the remarks made by the last speaker. The hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill) said Canada has her burdens to bear and her obligations to meet in the form of the heavy debt which is the outcome of the war. As a Canadian I appreciate the value to the farmer of the great home market that Canada furnishes to the products of the farm. It is said that eighty per cent of the farm products of this country are sold in the home market. It is recognized that the home market is the best market for any country. That home market is afforded by the employees in factories and other consumers—by all who are not producers and who get their livelihood in the industrial establishments of the country. At this time, when all the countries of the world are making efforts to command their own trade as best they can, the occasion is opportune for men in this House who believe in Canadian trade to stand up and resent arguments such as those which have been advanced by the hon. member for Pontiac. While we talk in this House about the natural resources of the country it is worth our while to remember that those natural resources would be of no use if they were not worked out into finished products, the bulk of them for sale to the home consumer and the surplus to be sent abroad. I often think that when we talk of natural resources we are apt to forget the greatest resource of all, the man power and the woman power of the country. That man power and woman power we find most employed on the farms and in the factories. Is it worth while, through the furnishing of that home market, to increase the stability both of our farming and our industrial activities? It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to say they would prefer to have the goods of Austria sent into this country and to be sold in competition with the work of our men and our women in our factories and industrial establishments. But I take a totally opposite view. I take the view as a Canadian that it is the duty of this Parliament to look after the human power of this country, to see that every man and every woman, every girl and every boy of working age is furnished as far as possible with employment.

Mr. FIELDING: Are these people furnished with work now?

Mr. MORPHY: They are furnished with work now to a greater extent than is the case in any other industrial country. It is true that there is some unemployment in Canada, but I ask the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's to point to any country in the world where there is not more distress, more destitution, more poverty, more hunger, more trouble—labour trouble particularly—than there is in Canada to-day. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to refer to the conditions now, but I say that now is the time, when there are troubles, for the Government to lay down a sane fiscal and economic policy, a policy which has in view the employment of our workers and which aims to avoid the glutting of our market by the products of foreign countries. We want a policy which will free us from the competition of the cheap labour of Austria, Germany and other foreign countries—which, by the way, are very much worse off, through their own fault, of course, than Canada is. But for my part, I say that it is the duty of this Government to take every reasonable precaution, apart from the inconveniences that are talked about. Let us suffer some inconveniences, let us employ a few more men, if that is necessary, to insure that foreign goods shall not be put into this market in competition with the Canadian product by deceit and false marking. Let us see what we have to meet. I give the Government and particularly the Minister of Finance credit for standing up for Canadian labour, American workingmen and women throughout the whole country, and for the industrial life of this country.

Mr. FIELDING: Americans?

Mr. MORPHY: Canadians, I mean.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MORPHY: They are the best type of American on this continent, so that I am not far wrong.

Mr. EULER: The hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow) has given to the Minister of Finance some very good reasons for reconsidering what he has done. I will admit that the remarks of the hon. member for South Renfrew have been possibly a little harsh, but after all, they have not been any more so with regard to the action of the Minister of Finance than were the hon. member's references to the lawyers in the House. I think he stated that, no doubt, lawyers would be glad of any litigation that might result from the operation of this clause in the legislation. Then he said: "But I make my appeal to men of common sense." That was rather an unkind thing to say of the lawyers. While I understand the minister's object—and I think it is a perfectly laudable and worthy one—in his effort to place this regulation upon the statute book, while I believe that in theory it is absolutely correct that Canadian business should be protected, that the Canadian people should have some means of knowing what they are buying, is he not attracting too much importance to that theory and forgetting that its working out in practice will cause more trouble than the advantages to be gained from this law? I believe that is the case. It is not worth while; we have enough troubles of our own as the matter stands now. It is quite true that the business men of Canada have many troubles in these days, and we should do all we can to relieve them of any unnecessary worries, whereas this law will certainly provide many worries. I do not want to rub in the difficulties that the minister experienced in connection with the luxury tax; but I believe that when he looks back upon the operation of that tax, he will admit that if he had known last year what he knew a little later, he would not have applied the luxury tax, and, I am afraid he will have the same experience in this case. I hope I am not putting him into such a frame of mind as to cause him to be absolutely antagonistic to what I suggest, namely, that he do not lose sight of the fact that while the theory may be right, the practical operation is not in the public interest. I presume he may dislike to amend this legislation in face of the criticism directed against him, and while the criticism has been somewhat harsh, I believe there is a good deal in what has been said by members on this side. While he may dislike to make a change in the face of criticism, to change one's mind in the light of new knowledge is not an evidence of inability nor is it to his discredit, but is rather a tribute to his intelligence and wisdom than a sign of weakness. I wish the minister would seriously consider whether that clause should not be struck out in the interest of merchants and the public generally.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think hon. gentlemen can say that I am at all backward in taking the advice of the House on everything that I can, or that I am at all slow in accepting amendments. I have been blamed in that I have been too ready to accept amendments from hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. McMASTER: By whom?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: By hon. gentlemen opposite. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will remember the debate last year when it was said that I was ready to accept amendments. The idea is that I am ready to accept anything which, in my honest judgment, can improve any legislation that I am framing. That is all by the way. My hon. friend (Mr. Euler) is interested in button-workers in Kitchener. Those button-workers were here not very long ago, asking for a very much increased duty. They did not get it. They thought that they should have an opportunity of meeting fair competition, that people buying their buttons should know where they came from. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if he agrees with the button-workers.

Mr. EULER: Do the button-workers ask that each button be stamped with the place of origin?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of course not.

Mr. EULER: That is exactly what you will find the law will be in its practical working out. I am in accord with the object that the minister seeks to obtain, but I believe that it is not worth while, because he will find the disadvantages far outweigh the advantages.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I was going to suggest to the minister that sub-clause 2 of this clause be so amended that it will read that the section comes into force upon proclamation by the Govenor in Council. I have listened to all the discussion upon this clause for the last two or three hours, and I am more convinced than ever that this clause is absolutely without merit. It contains the elements of considerable annoyance to the Canadian people. I doubt very much if the minister would proclaim this clause effective if he gives it a little further reflection, and I believe that will be the judgment of the Canadian people if they have an opportunity of studying the section a little further.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I would like to support the proposal of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), for another reason, namely, that the time is short. October 1 is not very far away; it is only about five months from now, and in many lines of trade orders are given fully six months ahead. Orders are taken in the spring for fall delivery, and it might be necessary to have the law before the manufacturers as quickly as possible when goods are not manufactured in this country. The difficulty would be obviated if the suggestion of my hon. friend from Halifax were accepted.

Mr. PEDLOW: One other point which I wish to call to the minister's attention again is in reference to the penalty clause. I understand that this legislation has been drafted pretty much after the form of the Act in force in the United States. I understand too that the minister, in drafting this penalty clause, omitted one word that is included in the American Act. In my judgment that is a very important word in this connection, and I should like the minister to concede at least the inclusion of this particular word. If the Act in the United States has any virtue, and it has been in operation there since 1913, I think it should be adopted in its entirety here. I would suggest to the minister that he insert the word "fraudulently" in the 14th line, on page 6 of the Bill, between the words "shall" and "violate." As the Act stands now, any person who innocently violated its provisions would be liable to the penalty, and the magistrate would have no discretion in the matter. I would like this concession from the minister.

Mr. NESBITT: I would like to endorse the suggestion of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) as to the date the Act shall come into force. The goods now being manufactured were ordered last spring, and they will be shipped about September 1 or October 1. I would suggest that the date of coming into force be postponed from October to January.

Mr. PEDLOW: I beg to move that the word "fraudulently" be inserted in the 14th line between the words "shall" and "violate."

Mr. McKENZIE: If my hon. friend would take any advice from me, I would suggest that he use the word "wilfully," which is in nearly all statutes of this kind. There would then be some protection, but as the Bill now stands the magistrate has no discretion at all.

Mr. PEDLOW: I am quite willing to accept the suggestion of my hon. friend, and I move accordingly.

Amendment negatived.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT

The House again in committee on Bill No. 139, to amend the Immigration Act—Hon. J. A. Calder.—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When this Bill was last before the committee, all the clauses of the Bill had been read and adopted. We are now upon the title. Shall the title carry?

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

On the motion of Sir Henry Drayton (Minister of Finance) Bill No. 200, to amend the Inland Revenue Act, was read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT, 1915 AMENDMENT

On the motion of Sir Henry Drayton (Minister of Finance) Bill No. 204, to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915, was read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 1—excise taxes:

Mr. SINCLAIR: What changes were made since the resolution was before the House?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We made some changes in the resolution in committee, but no changes have been made since.

Mr. RINFRET: There was some trouble last year in deciding how the sales tax should be paid by certain merchants. Tailors import some of their tweeds, and they buy some from the wholesalers. I know of cases where the sales tax was charged to the tailor on the complete sale irrespective of whether the tweeds were imported or were bought from the wholesale merchants. In the latter case, of course, the tailor had already paid to the wholesale merchants and was therefore paying twice. Has that been adjusted?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Details of administration are not with me; they are in the Department of Customs. I am not familiar with the case cited by my hon. friend. I know of the difficulty that occurred in connection with the designation of tailors, as to whether they were manufacturers or not. We shall have no more trouble of that sort, and I may say that the court vindicated my view of the statute in the long run. A tailor is a retailer, not a manufacturer; he does not sell cloth in bulk.

Mr. RINFRET: Will he be free from all taxes, even on the goods he imports?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is a tax on the manufacturer, of 1½ per cent when he sells to the wholesaler or jobber, as the case may be, and a tax of 1½ per cent on the sale by the wholesaler or jobber. There is no tax on the sale of the retailer. If the tailor, instead of buying his goods in the ordinary way, imports them and uses them directly himself, he will have to pay the tax.

Mr. RINFRET: That is perfectly clear. Now, in case of any dispute with the excise officers, who might want to exact a tax on a basis other than the minister has stated, can we depend on what the minister now says, as a final decision? We have had a lot of trouble.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is no doubt about that; but you have behind you this time, not only the statute itself, but also the considered judgment of the Exchequer Court. There can be no more trouble.

Mr. BUREAU: When goods are bought in containers, is there any tax on the containers if they are returned? Suppose a man buys a carload of cement, returns the containers and is given credit for them; does he pay the tax on the full amount of the sale, including the cost of the containers?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If the containers are returned, and the purchaser is given credit for them, only the cement is taxable. The firm in sending the cement may charge not only for the cement but also for the containers. If the containers are returned and an adjustment takes place, of course there will be a refund for the containers.

Mr. KAY: Should not the exemptions from the sales tax in connection with dairy products include condensed milk, milk powder and ice cream? If these articles are not exempt the farmer will receive so much less from the factory than would the farmer who sent milk or cream.

11 p.m.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is no tax at all on anything the farmer sells. There is quite a difference between what the farmer gets for his milk, and what is charged for ice cream, and I do not know whether any attempt is being made to maintain the spread that now exists. We have not given any exemption on the things my hon. friend refers to. As I said when the resolution was being discussed in committee, there are very many things to be considered in connection with these matters, and I certainly do not pretend that it is possible to cover the whole field without careful consideration. We have reserved the power to go into these questions of further exemption, and there are some things which we contemplate granting. At present I cannot go further than to say that we shall consider these matters.

Mr. KAY: Should not the exemptions on oil cake, bran and cattle feed also extend to cotton seed and gluten meal?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Cotton seed is now exempt.

Mr. PEDLOW: Mr. Chairman, what part of the Bill are we discussing?

The CHAIRMAN: The entire Bill; it is all included in one clause.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Mr. PEDLOW: It would be far better if we discussed the Bill paragraph by paragraph. It is too comprehensive to be dealt with en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN: If the Bill were considered paragraph by paragraph, I fear that the Chairman would be obliged to invoke the rule which prohibits repetition of the same arguments. The contents of this Bill were discussed paragraph by paragraph in committee on Saturday last and the resolution which was adopted by the committee is embodied without change in the present Bill.

Mr. PEDLOW: I was present when that discussion took place, but I was under the impression that we could discuss the whole Bill at this stage. Certain amendments were proposed and accepted when we were considering the resolutions in committee, and the present Bill varies in some respects from those resolutions.

The CHAIRMAN: It does not vary from the resolutions as amended.

Mr. CANNON: On the former occasion did we discuss the resolutions or the Bill?

The CHAIRMAN: We discussed the resolutions.

Mr. CANNON: Well, a discussion of the resolutions is altogether distinct from a discussion of the Bill.

The CHAIRMAN: The Chairman did not rule that the committee could not discuss the Bill. He only ruled that the entire provisions of the Bill are included in one clause.

Mr. CANNON: If I understand correctly the motion of the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow) he moved that the Bill be discussed paragraph by paragraph, and the Chair ruled that that course could not be followed because the Bill had already been discussed in that way. As I understand it the resolution was discussed in committee on the former occasion but we are not dealing with the Bill itself in committee for the first time.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Dorchester is perfectly right when he contends that it is permissible for an hon. member to move that a clause be considered paragraph by paragraph. That motion, however, was not made by the hon. member for Renfrew nor by any other hon. member. If such a motion is made the Chairman will be pleased to put it to the committee and abide by its decision.

Mr. PEDLOW: To make my meaning clear, I move that this clause be considered paragraph by paragraph.

Motion agreed to.

On paragraph 4—Tax on sales.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Is coal one of the articles exempt?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, coal is exempt.

Mr. PEDLOW: I think this clause has been very considerably changed from the form in which it appeared in the resolution which we considered on Saturday. I do not know exactly what its meaning is now and to determine its effect will take some little time.

Mr. CANNON: Will the minister explain to the committee the nature of the changes that have been made?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My recollection is that the changes made had first to do with the lumber situation. Under the amendment the rate on importations of lumber will be 3 per cent, and the rate on domestic sales of lumber will be 2 per cent. There will only be the one tax in the case of domestic lumber and also in that of imported lumber. The main change made was that which brought into effect the law of last year. The original proposal this year left it entirely to the vendor, the wholesaler or the manufacturer, to say whether he should show his tax in the invoice at all. We have gone back to what we did last year which compels him to show one-half of the tax in the invoice.

Mr. PEDLOW: In reference to the clause providing for a tax on lumber, my understanding is that on imported lumber there is a tax of 3 per cent and nothing further. Provided that lumber is manufactured into doors, desks, chairs, and so on, will the manufacturer be compelled, under the sales tax, to collect 1½ per cent on the article manufactured from that lumber?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes.

Mr. PEDLOW: That is not expressly stated in the section. I would like to have a ruling on that particular point.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He is not selling lumber in that case, he is selling, we will say, a desk or a chair and he is taxable on those articles.

Mr. PEDLOW: First of all there will be 3 per cent on the lumber imported. Then there will be 1½ per cent on the finished article—including the cost of the lumber, the cost of the labour, and the profit. That is to say there will be the tax of 1½ per cent to the jobber or wholesaler, and in addition 1½ per cent to the consumer. That is my understanding of what is proposed but it is not expressed in the Bill.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think so.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): The exemptions make no mention of hospital supplies and medicines used in the hospital. Did the minister consider that question?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Some consideration has been given to it but it has not been finally determined what will be done. That is one of the matters I have referred for action by the Governor in Council.

Mr. McKENZIE: I have heard some complaint from druggists touching the very high tax that is put on alcohol. I understand the manufacturer gets his alcohol at a very much lower rate than the ordinary retailer. For example the manufacturer pays only $2.40 whereas the retailer pays $9. Is there any way at all of relieving the druggist of this high taxation, or of lessening the difference between the price paid by the manufacturer and what the druggist who is dispensing medicine pays?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is a matter which does not arise under this Bill, but under another measure. However, I will be glad to give what information I can. There is no doubt there is a considerable difference in the rates because the manufacturer uses liquor in large quantities, whereas the retail druggist does not. Furthermore the manufacturing chemist is under surveillance while the ordinary druggist is not. The latter, however, can take advantage of the provisions of this Bill if he desires to bond himself in the manner required of the manufacturer. I have asked for suggestions that will be useful in the practical working out of the measure and will be very glad to accept anything of a helpful nature.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Would the minister be kind enough to say whether he will receive a suggestion of this kind relating to the vendor who is in charge of the sale of intoxicating liquors in all the provinces? Under the regulations I think the vendor would be an officer that could be trusted to deal with the question of the sale of alcohol for medicinal purposes under some system that might be fixed by the department. They are officers of the provincial governments, but there is no reason why the duty should not be imposed upon them by the Federal Government under some arrangement with the provinces.

Mr. PEDLOW: I am informed by the member for south Bruce (Mr. Truax), who has had considerable experience in the lumber business, that the tax on finished lumber will discourage building operations. In his judgment on a $4,000 house the tax on doors, windows and interior trim will represent at least $225. I do not think it is in the best interests of the country that this class of material should be taxed to such an extent. We ought to encourage building operations, but I submit that this tax will penalize men who want to build and so retard the construction of houses that are so urgently needed. I should like the minister to take this into consideration and, if possible, reduce the tax.

Mr. CANNON: Could the minister tell us if he intends to impose this tax on the houses which will be built in accordance with the housing scheme which has been encouraged by the Government? What would be the result? With one hand the money would be given by the Government, and with the other it would be taken back.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am afraid the bookkeeping entry would not recover the amount of money which would make a serious offset to the houses alone. We had figures given the other day, and my recollection is that it was stated the tax on a $5,000 house would amount to $105. I am not sure that that is right, because even that was calculated upon the higher or old three per cent rate and not upon the new two per cent rate.

Mr. CANNON: The member for South Renfrew has raised a very important point. I read an article recently on the reconstruction policy of the British Government, and I gathered that one of the main features of that policy is to considerably increase and improve the housing accommodation of the ordinary people. The result of this tax will be to impose another hardship on our labouring people. It is right that the country should tax to the full extent the rich man who wishes to build a mansion, but I do not think this tax ought to be imposed on poor people. There should be at least a limitation as to value, and houses coming within that limitation ought to be exempt from this tax.

[Mr. J. H. Sinclair.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the hon. member's suggestion as to limitation of value?

Mr. CANNON: I would not dare suggest any minimum to the minister. He is in a much better position than I am to fix a limitation.

Mr. PEDLOW: The Bill provides that:

> The Governor in Council shall have power to add to the foregoing list of articles exempted from the excise taxes on sales, as he may deem it expedient or necessary to exempt from the said excise taxes.

Does the minister deem it necessary to encourage the building of a certain type of house? If he does, I think it would be wise for him to exercise the power given by this section.

Paragraph 1 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CONSERVATION ACT AND AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 187 (from the Senate) to repeal the Conservation Act and amendments.

Mr. BELAND: Is not the right hon. gentleman going to make a statement in regard to this Bill?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I can make a statement on the second reading, but as it is a Senate Bill, and a very full statement has been made by the leader of the Senate, I thought possibly a further explanation would not be required here.

The Conservation Act was passed, I think in 1909. Its purpose was to provide a commission, with power to investigate and advise as to the right lines of development of public policy in the conservation of Canadian resources. The Act itself sets out its objects, and the speeches made in support amplified its purpose. Canada in this regard followed the example of the United States. A commission was appointed there—I do not recall its exact name—with like ends in view. In both countries the commission sought to perform the purposes for which it was created.

By reference to the Act it will be observed that consonant with what I have said, no administrative functions devolved upon the commission; its purposes were advisory only. Consequently I think it should be assumed that such a commission could only be of a temporary character. I do not think it is sound policy that there should be any public body of a permanent character in the Civil Service whose purposes are merely advisory. Unless it combines administrative functions with its advisory functions it has not the seeds of permanency in it. The same conclusion is inevitable from other premises. The commission was constituted an independent body. It bore no relationship to any minister, or to the Government, such as a governmental activity, in my judgment, should. It does not seem to me to be consistent with our system of government that there should be any non-judicial body of a permanent character determining rights as between individuals and units that is not responsible as a branch of a department. That does not seem, I say, consistent with our system of government and it is my experience that it has not worked well.

Mr. FIELDING: How about the railways?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The functions of the Railway Commission are judicial.

Mr. FIELDING: I mean the Canadian National railways. I am afraid the principle my hon. friend is laying down would not apply to the Canadian National railways.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But they are responsible.

Mr. FIELDING: As a branch of a department?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They are not a branch of a department.

Mr. FIELDING: Those were my right hon. friend's own words—" as a branch of a department".

Mr. MEIGHEN: But there is direct governmental responsibility there. We appoint men to carry out those duties; we put them in the position of a corporation. There is no doubt that we are responsible for their work. We are responsible for the character of the men we appoint, and if they do not do their work properly it is our business to remove them. But I say I do not think it is consistent with our system of government that there should be a body for which no one is answerable and over which no one has any control, as is the case with this commission—in a word, a body in the position of a court but without the functions of a court. Consequently, reasoning from both those premises; from the premises that its functions are merely advisory, and from the premises that it is wholly independent of any department of government and answerable to no one, I think it should be assumed that the life of the commission was intended to be, or at least ought to be, temporary.

In working out the legislation creating it the commission has gone about in one direction or another, laying its hand on anything that looked alluring, anything that could be regarded as a possible field for its activity. It has invaded the province of one department of government after another, one branch after another, and necessarily it has duplicated services wherever it has so invaded. Where work was being done in this department or in that department which could be used by the commission for the purpose of amplifying in the general view the usefulness of the commission—well, it simply laid its hand on that work, and very soon the results of the activities of officers of the Government would appear in a very handsomely bound volume with the name of the Conservation Commission on the cover. Furthermore, the work of the commission has been most expensive, and one could look for nothing else in view of the irresponsible character of the commission. I do not say those words with any reference at all to the members of the commission; I say it with reference to the nature of its constitution. The Minister of Agriculture was, under the statute, the minister through whom the commission made its requests of Parliament. He, however, was merely the channel through which the commission reported—or, rather, through which the commission appealed to Parliament for money. There was no effective control over the commission's expenditures; it determined what its expenditures should be. Of course, it had to get the money from Parliament, but the commission's views were merely recited in Parliament by the minister; indeed that was the limit of the minister's power. The commission has cost the country an average, I think, of about $104,000 or $105,000 a year during the term of its existence.

Mr. BUREAU: As bad as the Purchasing Commission.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In that regard I think it is worse, but in results it has been much less beneficial to the country. The Purchasing Commission saves money much in excess of its cost. As to this commission, I do not know what it saves. I do not say that its work has been useless, by any means. But I do say that through all these years it has continuously tended, and more and more each year—it had to do so in order to do anything—to duplicate and overlap the functions of various branches of the different departments. That could be illustrated with reference to many departments. One might refer first to the commission's forestry activities. It set to work to tabulate the various forest resources of the country and to give a lot of publicity to its investigations in that regard. It has always been certain to publish those results in very expensive books, with a paper and binding that other departments could not dare to emulate. Its functions, as I say, were advisory in the first place, and once its advice was given, once it came to the work that was necessarily connected with the administration of the forests, it could not do anything, and rather than do nothing, of course, it actually got into the work that was necessarily connected with administration. It has continually pursued that work and, naturally, it has done so very much to the discouragement of the different branches that have had to administer the various government forestry services—branches which, in that administration, did precisely what the commission was doing; and very frequently the commission absorbed those services, or at least the credit for them. The same is true as to its overlapping the work of the Water Power Branch of the Interior Department. Of that —as well, indeed, as of the overlapping in connection with the forestry work—I myself have an intimate knowledge through my association with the Department of the Interior. Instances could be given—not one, but many—of its doing work that was being done by the Water Power Branch, work that the Water Power Branch had to do in order to carry on its administrative functions, and considerable public expense which could have been avoided has thereby been incurred.

The commission has even assumed responsibilities as regards external affairs; and here, I think, it has brought about a condition so anomalous that further argument will surely be unnecessary after that condition is explained. The External Affairs Department must, of course, receive advice from its responsible officers as to what should be done as regards certain of our resources—for example, as regards our resources in the waters of international rivers, both for navigation and for power. Matters have arisen in which the interests of the United States and of Canada were concerned; for example, as regards St. Lawrence development. Such matters are judicially determined by the International Joint Commission. Canada must necessarily be represented before that commission and must state what is the policy pursued and what is the desire of this country as expressed by its Government in relation to the matters in dispute or the matters which are the subject of consideration by the International Joint Commission.

We have found ourselves appearing before the International Joint Commission to state the position of the Government, and immediately alongside would appear the representative of the Conservation Commission who would also state the position of this country. If one can conceive of anything more anomalous than that, one's conception must be very lively. Surely it never was the intention that the Conservation Commission should determine what should be said before the International Joint Commission as representative of the views of the Dominion of Canada regarding the subject of international waters. If the Conservation Commission are the proper body to represent Canada, then the Dominion Government cannot do so too. If both can do so, what is to be done in case of conflict of views? The secretary of the Conservation Commission appeared in one case; he read before the International Joint Commission the names of all those who were members of the commission, many of them ex-officio members, made so by statute. Those names included the Minister of the Interior, another minister whose name I cannot recall,—I think it was the Minister of Mines, or possibly the Secretary of State, and after he had read that imposing list of names, it really looked as though he had the authority of all the members of the commission for appearing there and presuming to state the views of Canada on the question in dispute. As a matter of fact, in this case the commission had not been called, and if it had been called, it would not have been for its members to express what the attitude of the Government should be before the International Joint Commission.

That merely illustrates what is likely to occur when a commission, which was created merely for advisory purposes as respects different departments, as respects the policy to be pursued by the appropriate department or branch in relation to natural resources, created for that purpose, only and necessarily, I think, of a temporary character,—when such a commission assumes that it is a permanent institution and competent to act on those lines permanently. It cannot act permanently unless it pervades and conflicts with the proper functions of branches and departments. I believe, the cost of publication of reports of its various investigations has reached a total of some $280,000. Last year the commission cost $155,771.31, and the cost naturally increases from year to year. It seems to me that the right thing to do is not to discontinue any useful work that the commission may be doing; but where the commission is overlapping, to see that that work is done only by one service, and that service the appropriate service under a minister responsible to this House; if it is performing any function that is not being performed by the appropriate department of Government and that should be performed, then to see that such service is performed by the most suitable department or branch. In this way, there will undoubtedly be a very considerable saving and, I think, a much more efficient service.

It is the intention, when vacancies occur, or where officers of the commission can be used to the advantage of the service in different branches, that those of the permanent service shall be used, but only where they can be used to advantage and where they can earn their salaries. But even were all so taken—and I do not think it will be necessary to take all—there will still be a very substantial saving to the public treasury, and there will also, in my judgment, be a more efficient and certainly a more harmonious service, because a great deal of money is wasted in duplication of travelling expenses. We will find a representative of the commission away up in the Northwest Territories, perhaps, looking into water-power resources there, taking stream-flow data and the like, and a representative very probably has to follow from the water-power branch, getting almost, although not exactly the same data, but getting data which the branch must have in all its details for the work which it has to perform. Similar travelling expenses are duplicated in connection with forestry and other investigations. There is necessarily overlapping as well of publications, all of which will be saved by the repeal of the Bill establishing the commission. I am not criticising the purpose for which the commission was originally established. I merely say that its very purpose indicated that its duties would be performed within a limited period of years; that its duties could not be continuous in their nature and, consequently, the status upon which the commission was placed, the isolated position which it received, the degree of irresponsibility that was vested in it, all indicated that it could not have been intended that it should have any administrative or semi-administrative functions nor that it should have permanent existence. Therefore, the Government believe that the ends of public policy will be served, that we will get a more efficient and a cheaper service, and that very considerable expense will be avoided, by repealing the Act.

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the House very long on this subject; but I desire, in a few words, to take exception to what was stated in the upper chamber and also to what has been stated this evening by the Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) in connection with the Conservation Commission. The remarks made to the House just now by the Prime Minister would leave on the public mind generally the impression that the Commission of Conservation was a fifth wheel to the car of state, if I may use the expression. I have been more or less constantly connected with the Commission of Conservation; I have belonged to it from its inception; I have followed its work, and I believe that it is, on the whole, rendering a great service to this country. It was originated, as stated a moment ago by the Prime Minister, in 1909, in pursuance of a resolution adopted at a conference called the North American Conference for the Preservation and Conservation of Natural Resources, held in Washington at the call of the then President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt. At that conference the United States, Canada, and Mexico were represented. The Act creating the commission was passed by this Parliament in 1909. The commission was constituted for the purpose of conserving the natural resources of the country; that is to say, the main natural resources, man, our lands, forests, water-powers, minerals, fisheries, wild animal life and game.

As was stated by the Prime Minister, the commission is not an administrative body. Its functions are mainly advisory and consultative. The Prime Minister stated that the commission was responsible to nobody. That statement, I believe, is a little outside the mark. The commission is responsible to Parliament; it could not be otherwise. Its constitution gives it power to take into consideration every subject which may be regarded by its members as relating to the conservation of the natural resources, but the results of the commission's consideration are, as stated before, advisory only. In a sentence, the commission is a body constituted for the purpose of collecting exact—I insist upon the word —exact information, and deliberating upon, digesting, and assimilating this information so as to render it of practical benefit to the country; also for the purpose of advising upon all questions of policy that may arise in connection with the administration of the natural resources where the question of their effective conservation and economic use is concerned.

The commission has been a pioneer in many lines and in many directions. It has been able to discover advantageous and efficient methods of utilizing our resources, and has carried on this work, I say, at an insignificant cost. The hon. the Prime Minister stated that the commission spent last year $155,000.

Mr. BUREAU: And thirty-one cents.

Mr. BELAND: He is a little overstating the case. I have the exact figures before me, and I find that last year the commission had a total vote of $140,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think my figures are right. I have the details.

Mr. BELAND: When an economical and efficient method has been demonstrated by the commission, the carrying out of such method is transferred to the administrative department concerned, which can conduct such operations on a scale forbidden by the organic Act establishing the commission, and by its limited financial resources.

The House would perhaps like to know the composition of the commission. The commission is made up of three members of the Federal Government, and one member of the Government of each of the provinces. There are twenty other members appointed by reason of special qualifications. All the commissioners, including the chairman, are debarred by law from the acceptance of any remuneration for their services. The commission had formed out of its membership a number of committees. I will mention the committees on forests, waterways and water-powers, lands, fisheries, game and fur-bearing animals, minerals, and there are others.

Acting solely on an investigatory and an advisory capacity, the commission has been able to achieve results of far-reaching importance in promoting the conservation of our natural resources. It has studiously avoided any duplication, in spite of the accusation laid at its door, or in any manner encroaching upon the work which properly belongs to an executive department, but an examination of its record reveals that it has proven a highly efficient instrument in investigating our resources and in co-operating with every agency seeking their greatest and most economical utilization. If I insist upon this work of the commission, it is mainly for the purpose of offsetting the bad impression created throughout this country by the speech presented to the other House by a member of the Government in introducing this Bill or upon its second reading. The right hon. the Prime Minister did not go as far perhaps as the Hon. Mr. Lougheed in minimizing the efforts of the commission and the results it has achieved.

I might say that much valuable assistance has been rendered to the Governments of the different provinces and to the municipalities of Canada by the commission, which has placed the services of its experts freely at their disposal. Frequently, it is neither possible, nor as an economical proposition advisable, for the provinces or municipalities to employ highly paid experts whose services may be required for only a limited time or for only a portion of the year. Again, the fact that these experts are officers of the commission carries weight with the man in the street, who is not in a position to valuate the services of expert professional men.

Let me go into some details of the work of the commission. Take statistics, for instance. The commission repeatedly called attention to the inadequacy of the statistics published from time to time, and prior to the organization of the present Statistical Branch, which is giving such excellent service, urged the creation of an efficient organization along these lines.

The commission also has acted, and still acts as a bureau of information, and furnishes much valuable data to investors, business men, farmers, and others interested in the development or utilization of our natural resources. The right hon. gentleman has referred to forests in particular. I believe that it is in connection with the conservation of the forest wealth of Canada that the commission has accomplished perhaps the most commendable part of its work. The commission has devoted constant attention to the conservation of Canada's forest resources. The primary problem has been to check the enormous waste through forest fires. Investigations by the commission in the early years of its existence showed that forest fires started by locomotives constituted a very large percentage of the total number of fires occurring. For several years a propaganda to inform and enlighten public opinion as to the importance of this question was carried on, and the Commission of Conservation was instrumental—nobody will gainsay the fact—in securing legislation empowering the Board of Railway Commissioners to promulgate regulations for the prevention of forest fires along the railway lines.

In May, 1912, the board issued an order covering the railway fire situation very thoroughly and placed upon the railway companies, subject to the jurisdiction of the board, the responsibility for taking all measures necessary for the prevention and control of fires due to railway operation. This order obliged the railways to use the most efficient and most modern spark arresters and other protective devices, as well as to place fire patrols on dangerous sections of the lines in dry seasons. The result has been a great reduction in the damage caused by fires due to railway agencies. I wonder why, in the course of their remarks, both hon. ministers carefully avoided referring to this important part of the work of the commission. The results that have been thus obtained, if the Commission of Conservation had accomplished nothing further than this, amply justify all the money that has been expended by the commission since its organization ten or twelve years ago. The whole question of forest protection in Canada has been gone into thoroughly by the chief forester of the commission, and the publication of the results of his investigations has been of incalculable educational value. Now, while much has been done by the commission to prevent the destruction of forests by fires, a great deal has also been accomplished in taking stock of our forest resources, and making studies of the annual increase by growth. This may appear, on its surface, as a matter of no importance, but any one who will give a moment's thought to the subject will realize that it is most important that we should be made fully aware of the extent of the forest wealth of Canada. This work is being, and has been, done province by province, most of it through co-operation with Provincial Governments. The surveys of the forest resources of Canada being carried out by the commission have been heartily endorsed by the lumbering interests, who thoroughly appreciate the reliable information of the extent of raw material available not only to their industry but to the entire nation. The development which is now taking place in the pulp and paper industry is of such magnitude that every effort should be made to complete the surveys with the least possible delay.

There is another feature of the work of the commission in connection with the surveys of forests, and that is reforestation. In addition to pushing forward the survey of the extent and character of our forest resources, the commission is carrying out extremely important duties of the rates of production of commercial species on cut-over and burnt-over areas. The commission is therefore engaged upon a very important series of investigations, as it has been for a number of years, of the conditions governing the reproduction and the rate of growth of pulpwood species. The investigations have already shown that it takes much longer than has hitherto been supposed for cut-over lands to become reforested under natural conditions. From the results already available, it is believed that instead of a period of thirty years, as was generally believed formerly, it will take from fifty to one hundred and fifty years, to reproduce merchantable timber. It is not too much to say that, to a large extent, the permanence of our pulp and paper industries will depend upon the information obtained from the studies now being made and those that have been carried out in the past by the Commission of Conversation, and the use that has been made of the data obtained.

Now, let us look at the water-powers. This is more closely connected with the allusion made by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen), to the alleged interference of the commission with external affairs. When the commission began its work in 1910, it found that only the most fragmentary information was available respecting water-powers. In 1911, the commission published a report on "The water-powers of Canada," but only as regards the area east of lake Superior was much data available. Concerning the western provinces, there was scarcely any information of a precise character. A series of field investigations was begun, to make good this deficiency, and after years of painstaking work, both in the field, and among the Dominion, provincial and private records, reports dealing with the water-power resources of the Prairie Provinces and British Columbia have been published. Thus it came about that the first adequate and reasonably accurate estimate of the extent and character of the water-powers of Canada is due to the work of the commission. The House will remember very well that during the years from 1910 to 1913, what might be termed a veritable raid was made by private interests to get control of water-powers. One of the most notable of these attempts was the project to dam the St. Lawrence river at the Long Sault. The matter came up for hearing before the International Joint Commission, and that body asked the Commission of Conservation to investigate the scheme and report upon it. It was not a move on the part of the Commission of Conservation for the purpose of interfering in external affairs; they were requested by the International Joint Commission to investigate and report upon the scheme. This report showed that Canadian interests were not given adequate consideration and that the safety of navigation was threatened. The report advanced the opinion that when the time came to develop the St. Lawrence water-powers it behoved the governments of Canada and the United States to undertake the work jointly, to divide the power equitably, and to supply it to their nationals at a price free from unnecessary tribute to private corporations. What was the effect of the commission's report? It resulted in the defeat of a Bill to incorporate a private company, and valuable water-powers on the St. Lawrence were saved from passing into the control of private interests. These things, I think, should have been stated fully in the Senate the other day, and I think that perhaps they ought to have been stated this evening by the right hon. gentleman. It is now proposed that the Long Sault rapids be developed by the Governments of Canada and the United States, but it should not be forgotten that but for the intervention of the commission, the title to this great water-power would have been alienated and, I make bold to say, would now be controlled by the Aluminium Trust, one of the greatest trusts in North America, if not, indeed, in the world. If I should not delay the House at this late hour, I would quote an extract from an editorial which appeared two or three days ago in the Toronto Globe referring to this very subject, but I will not take up the time of the House by reading it now.

The principles laid down by the commission respecting alienation of water-power have now been generally accepted by governments and by the people at large. These are: that no unconditional titles shall be given and that every grant or lease of power shall be conditioned upon the development in a specified time, public control of rates, and a rental charge subject to revision from time to time. Now, I do not desire to absorb too much time, but I will just, en passant, refer in brief, to some of the work that has been done for the conservation of land.

To ascertain, as fully as practicable, the condition of lands under cultivation, and whether the systems and methods of farming were resulting in the conservation of fertility and productivity, the commission conducted for several years surveys of conditions on groups of farms in representative districts in every province. These surveys, the detailed results of which were reported upon in the published annual reports, revealed the fact that in many cases fertility was being reduced, weeds were becoming increasingly prevalent, and systematic courses of rotation of crops were not being followed. On the other hand, in every group of farms surveyed some farms stood out conspicuously as examples of conservation and at the same time as illustrations of profitable agriculture. In consequence one of such farms in each of the first groups surveyed was chosen by the neighbouring farmers in co-operation with the commission, as an illustration farm. The illustration farm was not in any sense taken over by the commission. The illustration farmer did not receive any salary or subsidy. He agreed to accept regular visits from the expert adviser sent by the commission, and to put into practice on his farm only such advice or suggestions as he considered would prove profitable to him. The commission at first gave direct assistance to encourage the use of seed grain of first-class quality and suitability, to encourage the sowing of larger quantities of clover and grass seeds per acre, and to bring about more effective methods of cultivation to suppress weeds. In fact, by the combination of expert practical and scientific advice with the profit-making practices of the farmer, each illustration farm soon became, to an ever-increasing extent, an illustration of conservation through profitable use to neighbouring farmers. Meetings were held on these farms to explain the system and methods and to demonstrate what these were accomplishing when applied, not on a government farm, but on one such as the farmers themselves occupied, and under conditions similar to those with which they had to do. The results were striking. The improvements were notable and numerous. There was a pressing demand for these illustration farms in other localities. But the commission, not being an administrative branch of the Government service and having accomplished its object in pointing to an effective means of promoting conservation—and profit—turned over the scheme to the Department of Agriculture. There is now an Illustration Farms Division of the Dominion Experimental Farm. I wonder why these facts have not been stated to the House, or to the Senate, or to the country.

Before illustrating the admirable pioneer work that the commission has done let me say that a department of the public service is loath to embark upon many lines of work unless it is obvious that such work is of commensurate value. The department fears that, if such work be taken up and fail to justify itself, it will be difficult or impossible to discontinue it. The commission, being an independent body, could undertake pioneer work. If the results achieved were not commensurate it could be dropped and it has, in some cases acted in this manner. If they proved of value the administrative department could carry the work on upon an adequate scale, and the commission could then devote its attention to other work.

I might also refer to the work done in connection with the conservation of the fisheries, of game, and of fur-bearing animals, but I will not delay the House much longer. In connection, however, with the fisheries I may say that the commission has given considerable attention to the Pacific coast salmon industry, particularly the valuable sockeye salmon, and its sustained efforts in making known the declining status of this most valuable fishery have done much to educate public opinion to the necessity for adopting conservation measures before it is too late, and to pave the way for the conclusion of an agreement between Canada and the United States, looking to the preservation and upbuilding of the salmon industry.

During recent months the commission has drawn Dominion-wide attention to the urgent necessity of guarding against the depletion of our resources in fur-bearing animals. As a result of the remarkable advances in the prices of furs, the most vigorous exploitation of these resources has been induced, and the threatened extinction of valuable fur-bearing species has become a matter of gravest concern.

I will not resume my seat without making an allusion also to the work of the commission in connection with the surveys of the mineral resources of Canada. I may say that as an initial step in regard to minerals, the mining engineer of the commission, in 1911, prepared a general summary of the mineral resources of Canada and outlined the more pressing questions connected with the industry. A special study was also made of mine accidents, and a brochure on the subject was published and distributed among miners and government mining authorities. Later, much attention was given to coal resources and an exhaustive report on the conservation of coal was issued in 1914. The Government, represented by the Prime Minister, this evening took some exception to the fine appearance of these reports. But there is some justification for preparing the reports in such a manner. You want first to catch the attention of the reading public by the external appearance of a book. That is so true that a declaration was made in the Senate by a staunch supporter of the Government, that while he never read the reports of the departments on these subjects he always read the reports of the Conservation Commission. In the report referred to, the problem of utilizing the lignite and low grade bituminous coals of Western Canada by means of briquetting was fully discussed, and later on a pamphlet on the subject was issued, reporting the latest progress in solving this problem. The most efficient use of our domestic fuel and power resources constitutes a national problem the gravity of which has been most forcibly impressed upon the Canadian people during the past year. The studies, made by the officers of the Commission of Conservation, of the different phases of this problem are of the greatest value, and have been admitted by the whole of the press of Canada without a single exception.

I will not say anything about public health. In view of the establishment of the Department of Public Health in Canada the activities of the Conservation Commission in this regard might be to a large degree discontinued.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the work of the commission has imparted, I submit, a wholesome stimulus to the activities of Government departments engaged in the administration of natural resources. I am sure the right hon. gentleman will readily admit that the different departments of this Government connected directly or indirectly with the natural resources have been very forcibly impressed by the activities of the commission, and they have received from the work of the commission an impetus which was never known before. Ten years ago most of these dpeartments gave little or no attention to any work of investigation for conservation purposes. I think this will be generally admitted. Now, in some departments considerable organizations have been built up to do work of a character which prepares for, promotes and accomplishes conservation. A marked change has come over the attitude of the public towards conservation during the ten or twelve years of the commission's life. It has become sensitive and alert to anything which indicates indifference on the part of public authorities, or hostility by private interests, to the principles and practice of conservation. This is particularly noticeable in the case of water-powers. The public has begun to realize what a valuable asset water-power resources are to a community, and no Government would contemplate permitting the alienation of great water-powers to private interests without conditions to ensure economical and efficient service and other appropriate returns in the public interest.

A great deal has been said, Mr. Speaker, by the minister who presides, I think, over the Department of the Interior (Sir James Lougheed) and by the right hon. the Prime Minister this evening regarding duplication of work. Let me say that the charge brought against the commission that it duplicates the work of some departmental organization is based on misinformation. Least of all is there any excuse for such an accusation respecting work of the Research Council, which was established I think about six years after the commission was created. If there has been overlapping in the slightest degree as between the Research Council and the Commission of Conservation no responsibility for such overlapping can be attached to the commission. In regard to fisheries in particular, the commission has had no staff expert, and its efforts have been restricted only to educational work and to special studies of a problem which either had not been made the subject of departmental investigation, or had been approached by the commission from an entirely different angle. The work done by the commission has been calculated to strengthen and not embarrass the departmental officials in promoting the economical development of Canadian fisheries. The minister in the Senate quoted the refusal—and I give only this instance—of the Editorial Board to sanction the printing of the pamphlet written by a certain Mr, Babcock dealing with the Fraser River salmon situation. This refusal is really due to friction, Mr. Speaker—and I know whereof I speak—between the provincial and the federal authorities, which the publication of the pamphlet would undoubtedly have helped to allay.

I do not desire to detain the House any longer, except to say that this charge of duplication or of infringing upon the prerogatives of some department has no foundation in fact. If the inter-departmental committee appointed to investigate this alleged overlapping had sought first hand information at the offices of the commission, it is safe to say that no such charges would have been made. The only work that the commission has done has been work that the departments were not doing, or were not doing completely. The plain fact of the matter is that the energy and vigilance of the commission have been of inestimable effect in stimulating the departments to deal with problems and conditions affecting the efficient use of Canada's natural resources which formerly received little or certainly no serious attention. If after the commission had demonstrated the utility of a certain line of study, similar studies were commenced by a regular department of the Government, the commission cannot be regarded as guilty of duplication. I doubt very much if the time has arrived when Canada can afford to dispense with such services as have been rendered by the commission in supplementing and stimulating departmental activities.

There is only one ground, Mr. Speaker, upon which you can rest the case of the Government at the present moment, and that is the urgent necessity for the strictest economy. But if on the one hand you abolish the Commission of Conservation and save to the country $140,000 a year, and on the other hand you provide $400,000 or $500,000 for the creation of a scientific research bureau—only for the erection of the building for that bureau—I say that instead of effecting an economy you are launching into larger expenditure and very much along the same line.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will bring my remarks to a close by reading a letter addressed to the assistant to the chairman of the commission, by Mr. Ross, who was formerly minister in the British Columbia Government. I think he was minister of—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Lands and Mines.

Mr. BELAND: Thank you. The letter is dated February 24, 1921. It deals in particular with the publication of a certain report on the water-powers of British Columbia, of which much mention was made by Sir James Lougheed in the Senate the other day as being a work that was mainly a duplication of what had already been done by some departments of this Government. This is the letter:

JAMES WHITE, Esq.,
Assistant to the Chairman,
Commission of Conservation.
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. WHITE,—

I duly received from your office a copy of "Water Powers of British Columbia" by Mr. Arthur V. White, consulting engineer, assisted by Mr. Charles J. Vick.

I have purposely delayed acknowledging its receipt in order that I might look through its contents so as to be the better able to form an opinion on its merits.

The subject dealt with so exhaustively by Mr. White is one with which I had much to do, and particularly during the formative stages of the present system of provincial water administration in British Columbia. This was one of the important branches of the Lands Department over which I had the privilege of presiding in the years 1910 to 1916 during which period I was able to be of some slight assistance to Mr. White in the assembling of his data. For this reason I have gone over the volume in its entirety, which has given me much pleasure as well as the satisfaction of feeling that one has contributed, even if in a small way, toward the splendid result which Mr. White has achieved in this volume.

I feel that the volume is an accurate, painstaking and complete textbook on the subject of which it treats and is one in which the Commission of Conservation may well take pride.

Mr. White is personally entitled to a very large measure of credit as well as thanks from the public of this province for the completeness of his research as well as for his method of compilation, which renders the contents of the volume so handy for ready reference.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd. WM. S. ROSS.

Now, perhaps I may quote one or two extracts from papers published in British Columbia. The Vancouver Daily Province is a newspaper which, no doubt, my hon. friend who represents so ably that part of the country must know. Here is what the Daily Province says of the report to which I have referred:

An authoritative, comprehensive and scientific record . . . . The Commission has rendered the Province full justice in the careful and detailed research, and in clear and adequate exposition.

What does the Victoria Daily Times say:

A magnificent report . . . . An exceedingly valuable document and in its preparation the Commission of Conservation has performed a valuable service to British Columbia.

What does the Vancouver Daily World say:

A monumental work . . . . What it does not contain upon the subject no one need trouble about.

What does the Vancouver Daily Sun say:

A complete compendium . . . . The manner in which the information is presented, with adequate maps and handsome illustrations, is a credit to every one who shares the responsibility.

I quote from the Victoria Daily Colonist:

Is easily the outstanding work of its kind yet put out in Canada . . . . lifts the theme of water-powers to a new sphere of interest . . . There is no publication dealing with any resource of the Province . . . . which is so complete . . . . It will remain a standard publication and the most exhaustive authority on the subject for many years.

Then there are comments from the Canadian Engineer and the Electrical News, two technical journals, which I shall not quote. In a word, Mr. Speaker, the Commission of Conservation, in my opinion, and in the opinion, I think, of the great majority of citizens of this country, has rendered useful, efficient service. It has rendered service to the country that may not be fully appreciated at the moment but which will be appreciated more and more as time goes on and as the natural resources of the country come to be more fully developed.

Mr. JACQUES BUREAU (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the reasons brought forward by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) are such as to justify the abolition of the Commission of Conservation, particularly when we have regard to the remarks made on this subject by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Béland). The Prime Minister mentioned three reasons in particular for the course which the Government has taken. He said that there had been overlapping, but he gave no instances. The hon. member for Beauce has pointed out that in many of these matter the cue was given by the Conservation Commission and the departments subsequently took them up.

This goes to show the ability and diligence of the commission in taking hold of these great questions affecting our natural resources. The second reason the Prime Minister gave was that on one occasion the secretary of the commission appeared before the International Joint Commission and that he read a list of those who formed the commission. Well, there does not seem to have been any great calamity involved in that; the Prime Minister has not shown that any disastrous results followed from the appearance of the secretary of the commission before that International Joint Commission. If the secretary of the Conservation Commission had done anything which was detrimental to Canada or anything which was not commendable, of course he would be subject to censure or to the loss of his position. The third reason given by the Prime Minister was on the point of expenditure. Well, if the services rendered are far greater than the expenditure incurred, then the expenditure is perfectly justified. But there seems to be something which has brought about this proposal to abolish the commission, some reason which has been suppressed. I think one of the senators may have stated the reason rightly, when he said he knew that the abolition of the commission was due to the—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I did not call the hon. member for Beauce to order when he made reference to the speech of a minister in the Senate, because of the exceptional circumstances and in view of the late stage of the session and the fact that the minister to whom reference was made is the head of a department. But it is a well known rule, and one which has always been very rigidly enforced, that there should be no reference in the House of Commons, to debates which have taken place in the Senate. I would ask the hon. member for Three Rivers particularly not to deal with specific references made by hon. gentlemen of the Senate.

Mr. BELAND: May I suggest by way of explanation, Mr. Speaker, that if I referred to the debate in the other House it was because the right hon. Prime Minister stated that he was not desirous of making a full statement in view of a fuller statement presented to the other House.

Mr. SPEAKER: Quite so. I have no doubt the Prime Minister considered that it was open to hon. members of the House to read the debates of the Senate. But the Prime Minister has no authority, and I am quite sure there was no desire, to take it upon himself to abrogate the rules of the House.

Mr. BUREAU: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. If I am well informed, an hon. gentleman occupying a high position in political life has stated that the proposal to abolish the Conservation Commission was due to the fact that two civil servants were very anxious to see the commission go out of business so as to advance their own interests.

Now, I shall not take up very much of the time of the House. I only want to point out that the reasons adduced by the Prime Minister are not sufficiently strong, in my opinion, to justify the course which is being taken. I do not think that the fact that some of the commission's reports were got out in nice bindings is a sufficient excuse for abolishing the commission. These books go broadcast throughout this country and other countries and I am sure that the Prime Minister would not, any more than I would, like to see a publication bearing the name of a commission carrying on a public service, a Government institution, go out to other countries in anything but decent form. I am sorry to see the Conservation Commission go out of business, because I think it has rendered great service. It has rendered splendid service so far as forestry is concerned. As has been stated by the hon. member for Beauce, the commission has educated the people in the matter of the preservation of our forests, and I know that they have made valuable suggestions as to the line of conduct to be followed in this connection. Of course, if the Government have decided on taking this action there is no use in our continuing the debate. But I want to express my regret and my sorrow at the abolition of this very useful body, composed of men representing the various provinces who have been getting together each year to discuss the resources of those provinces and the result of whose deliberations in concrete form has been spread all over Canada and sent to other countries as well.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: I must remind hon. gentlemen that if the Prime Minister exercises his right to reply the debate will be closed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know that I owe it to the House to be exceedingly brief, even if I do not do full justice to the very comprehensive remarks of the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Béland) and of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau). I do not doubt for a minute the bona fides, or indeed the sincerity, of the hon. member for Beauce in the strong plea which he has made, but I do think he has been imposed upon by members of the commission, with whom he has been associated.

This decision on the part of the Government has not been come to precipitately, nor without consideration; nor has the Government been stampeded by the evil designs of two civil servants. I have been associated with the question very closely for four years and more. The difficulties inherent in the situation were impressed upon me, and it was not after consultation with one or two civil servants or heads of branches, but after very many consultations on the part of a committee of the Government, and, indeed, with all affected, and after the most thorough review of the question from the ground up that this decision was arrived at. I could go into details of all the matters presented by the hon. member for Beauce. I have heard that case urged before; it has all been put before me not in such good form, but in substance pretty much the same, and I am convinced that there is very little in what has been pressed upon the House by the hon. member. I do not wish to be understood as saying that the commission has not rendered good service; but those words are largely applicable to the initial work of the commission which, in my humble judgment, it must have been designed to perform, namely, to investigate in a broad way the general subject of conservation, and having done so, to advise as to the lines of policy to be pursued. It did that in relation to forest fires started by railways, and it indicated legislation that it thought should be enacted, empowering the Railway Commission in this regard. That legislation was enacted; the Railway Commission took the matter in hand as the administrative body, and very probably good has resulted. I believe the legislation was good; but now we have a forestry service; we had to have it to carry out a forestry conservation policy at all. That forestry service must necessarily be ascertaining data all the time; it has to do that to carry out its administrative functions. Why should there be another body and an irresponsible one doing the same work? The hon. member says that we have a Department of Health, so that the commission does not need to operate any longer as regards public health. Having admitted that—and he is perfectly right—he throws up his whole case as to water-powers, because we now have a Water-power Branch; he throws up his whole case as regards forestry, because we now have a forestry service.

Mr. BELAND: We had it before.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, it did not exist in 1909; it was established between that and 1912; before that no real forestry policy was developed. I have here a memorandum covering the subject very fully. As regards fisheries I could quote from some proceedings of the commission itself, which would establish most definitely that it really was anomalous to have the Conservation Commission even acting in an advisory capacity as regards fisheries. At the meeting it was admitted that they had no one competent to advise, and they sought, and continued to seek until 1918, to have some one upon whom they thought they could rely in this regard. They persuaded a Dr. Jones to undertake this work, and Dr. Jones, upon being requested to do so, said that he had not only an open mind but almost a vacant one on the subject; that while he would be glad to try the experiment for a year, if he did not accomplish anything, he supposed some one else would take the matter up. They did not succeed in getting that expert until 1918, and I do not think they have succeeded yet; but they were offering "advice on fish culture, oysters, salmon, white fish; they published a small library of expert treatises, and tried their hand in settling international, federal and provincial fishery disputes." That is an example of what went on in that regard.

The hon. member mentioned—and this is of some importance—that this idea arose from a similar one that had taken root in the United States, from a movement that at that time had reached considerable magnitude, a movement that generated from the belief that the resources of this continent were being depleted at too rapid a pace and that the attention of Government should be very forcibly directed towards the need of their conservation. It took its rise from that movement and an organization was formed in the United States, a Commission of Conservation, for like purposes to that which was formed in this country. But the hon. gentleman must be aware that the United States commission has not sought to plant its roots permanently in the soil and to continue indefinitely as an expensive Government department irresponsible to a minister. The functions of the United States commission have been either discharged or since allocated to appropriate departments. That is what we seek to do here; that is what I think, if I may say so, should have been done before this.

The hon. member mentions that the commission was asked by the International Joint Commission to make a report as to the Long Sault. That is only natural; but that did not constitute the commission an advisor as to public policy before the International Joint Commission, and the commission came as adviser on public policy before the International Joint Commission in connection with the application for a diversion. That occurred in 1918, and this country found itself represented by two bodies, the Government on the one hand and the commission on the other. Is that not overlapping? Could anything more absurd be conceived? The hon. member says that the expenditure is not sufficient; that there has not been overlapping shown. Let me just cite some overlapping. There is overlapping in water-powers; in connection with that power report from British Columbia, 133 pages were appropriated from the report of the Water-power Branch, simply embodied in it, and the name of the director was put down as co-editor of the report. That is all printed as a separate booklet. And what business have we in connection with water-powers that we do not own, taking upon ourselves the expense and responsibility of a compilation and an expensive investigation of them? We should do that in connection with the powers we do own; but as regards the others, we should merely co-operate with the provinces in giving them the general advantage of the information that we have. That is what we are doing respecting Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and, I think, in respect of the water-powers of British Columbia unnecessary expense was gone to simply because we had an irresponsible commission. There is overlapping in connection with External Affairs, and I have given that instance. There is also overlapping as regards Mines. As regards all this lignite investigation work, I think it is presumption on the part of the commission to claim that the results are in any way traceable to them. I think the same is true as to other investigational work mentioned by the hon. member. It is true as regards the Long Sault dam. I do not think the commission would come to this House now and say that it was responsible for saving this country from a calamity in regard to the Long Sault; I do not believe the hon. member credits this himself. I do not want to delay the House further. While I do not say that any useful work that the commission is carrying on should be discontinued, I do say that the work which it is carrying has to be carried on by administrative functions of Government, whether the commission does it or not. So, why have it done by two bodies simultaneously and at double expense? And why particularly have it done by a body over whose expenditures we have very unsatisfactory control?

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On clause 1—repeal.

Mr. FIELDING: Two points made by the Prime Minister seem to be good argument. One is that there is a large measure of overlapping between the work of the commission and the work of the department, and that should be avoided. The second point is the absence of any proper link of connection between the executive power and the commission. It occurred to me not very long after the commission was appointed that there was a weakness in that respect. I am strongly of the opinion that for every branch of the public service provided for out of the public treasury, there should be somewhere a responsible minister answerable to this Parliament. I think that is a sound principle, and I wish I could feel it had been adopted as fully as my right hon. friend thinks in relation to the railways. However, we need not dwell upon that. I have felt all along that, excellent as was the work of this commission, it would have been better if it had had that connecting link. In view of all the important work it has done, and of the great number of volumes it has published, and the general excellent character of its work, I regret that the Government have felt that the only remedy is the abolition of the commission. I think that it would have been wise to establish that necessary connecting link and bring the commission under the authority of some responsible minister, and gradually work the two things into harmony. In view of the excellent work that has been accomplished by the commission, I think it is a pity that the Government have taken the extreme step of abolishing it.

Apart from the immediate officials of the commission, there are a large number of gentlemen throughout the country who have taken an interest in its work, and who without reward or fee have given their services from time to time. I think that service also was worth preserving for the assistance and advice of the Government, and I therefore express my regret that the Government have felt that the only remedy for these evils, if they be evils, was the abolition of the commission. I would much prefer that those services be utilized, and I had hoped that it would be possible to do that without abolishing the commission. The overlapping, I think, could have been avoided, and a connecting link could have been established between the work of the commission and the Government, through a responsible minister. I think that would have been wiser than to abolish the commission.

Mr. BELAND: No doubt the Government intends to retain the services of the high officials of the commission, such men as Mr. James White, for instance, who from the inception has been the Secretary, and later Assistant to the chairman of the commission. I have many times heard the Hon. Mr. Sifton, who acted as the chairman of the commission for I think some seven or eight years, speak in very high praise of Mr. James White, and I have myself on many occasions been in a position to judge of his ability and his fitness for a very important post in almost any department of the Government, in some department, at all events. I have no brief to speak for Mr. White. I have not seen him or heard from him for almost a year, and there was no question then of the commission being abolished. I speak absolutely independently of any suggestion on his part. Some of the other officials have also won the commendation of the commission and I hope the Government will find a way to utilize their services in some of the other departments.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

On the motion of Right Hon. Mr. Meighen the House adjourned at 12.58 a.m. Friday.

Friday, May 27, 1921

The House met at Two o'clock.

REPORTS AND PAPERS

Tenth report of the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.—Mr. Steele.

Correspondence between the Government of Canada, the Government of Ontario, and the Government of Manitoba with respect to the control of the waters of the Lake of the Woods.—Right Hon. Arthur Meighen.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. M. STEELE (South Perth) moved, that the Bills reported this day by the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills be placed on the Order Paper for consideration by Committee of the Whole this day.

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I think both Houses should be made aware of these Bills. The other day a similar motion was passed, and afterwards about twenty-five Bills were presented, including divorce and other private Bills, of which we knew absolutely nothing, the Bills not having been printed and distributed. I do not think it is fair to pass legislation in this way. I might state, further, that such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It does not protect the rights of the people.

Mr. SPEAKER: Rule 40, which is the rule governing notice, specifically exempts Private Bills; and my information is that it has been the invariable practice of the House to interpret this rule as requiring no notice of motion in respect to Private Bills. That being so, in my judgment the motion is in order. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill No. 217 respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Mr. Stevens.

PRIVILEGE—MR. KAY

Mr. W. F. KAY (Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. On page 4011 of unrevised Hansard of May 25, in the vote on the Bill for the Manufacture of Oleomargarine, I find my name among those voting for the amendment, which is quite correct. I find, however, that my name is also given in the list of pairs furnished by the whips. I beg to state that before I came into the chamber I was advised by the chief whip on my side that there were no pairs.

Mr. SPEAKER: Did the hon. member vote?

Mr. KAY: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: I will see that the necessary correction is made.

CENSUS ENUMERATORS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. A. B. COPP (Westmoreland): Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement that the work of the census enumerators is to begin on the first day of June, I beg leave to direct the attention of the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) to information I have received that, although about one-third of the population in the city and one-half of the population of the county of Moncton are French speaking, the enumerators appointed—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. COPP: I want to ask a question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Even so, the hon. member could hardly do that on the Orders of the Day. Apparently the enumerators have been appointed, and the hon. member is in effect calling attention to an omission on the part of the Government, which he could not do at this stage.

Mr. COPP: No, Mr. Speaker, I want to know if my information is correct that the census enumerators appointed in that section are not French-speaking gentlemen.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Minister of Trade and Commerce): My attention was called to this by the Prime Minister and I referred the question to the Dominion Statistician. I have not yet received word from him. My impression is that enumerators have already been appointed and have been under instruction. I have always thought it was only right that amongst the enumerators in French settlements of English-speaking counties, there should be gentlemen who understood the French language.

Mr. COPP: Otherwise it is impossible to carry on the work in some sections.

GRAIN INQUIRY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN (Halifax): I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question which, even without formal notice on the Order Paper, possibly he might answer to-morrow. What salaries are being paid to members of the Royal Commission now conducting an inquiry into the grain business in the western provinces; also what are the names of the secretaries, reporters and staff employed, together with their salaries.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will give my hon. friend a complete answer to the question to-morrow.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (leader of the Opposition): We have had one or two assurances from the Prime Minister that all the legislation the Government intends to bring down has been brought down, but I understand that the Government still has some legislation in contemplation. May I ask for a definite assurance as to any further legislation which is to be introduced, either in the Senate or in the House of Commons, and if none is contemplated, to be so informed?

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Prime Minister): I do not think I have given any assurance in that regard that has not been correct, nor do I think there is any further legislation. Of course there is the Bill of which notice was given yesterday, but I cannot think of any further legislation that the Government has in mind.

JUDGES ACT AMENDMENT

Consideration of a message from the Senate insisting upon its second and third amendments to Bill No. 60, to amend the Judges Act.—Right Hon. Mr. Doherty.

Right Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Senate having insisted upon the amendments which they made to this Bill and in which this House declined to concur, and there being reason to hope that a conference on the subject might lead to an agreement, I beg to move:

That a message be sent to the Senate respectfully requesting a free conference with Their Honours to consider certain amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 60, intituled: "An Act to amend the Judges Act," to which amendments this House has not agreed and upon which the Senate insist, and any amendment which at such conference it may be considered desirable to make to the said Bill or amendments thereto.

Motion agreed to.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT

BILL WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill No. 201, to amend the Penitentiary Act.—The Minister of Justice.

Right Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): The House will recall that when this Bill was introduced the suggestion was made that certain of its provisions perhaps called for more mature consideration than it would be possible to give them at the present time. I have attached to that representation the weight to which it seemed to be entitled, and I have gone over the existing legislation. As it appears that the principal or more important matters covered by this Bill can be dealt with in a certain measure without legislation, and as, therefore, the plans in mind can be initiated without this legislation, in accordance with the suggestion made I beg to move that the order for this Bill be discharged.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Public Works—harbours and rivers—Ontario, $370,850.

Mr. McMASTER: I move that the appropriation be considered item by item.

Motion agreed to.

Collingwood—breakwater reconstruction, $25,000.

Mr. CAHILL: What is the explanation of this item?

Mr. McCURDY: This revote is required for the completion of a contract with the York Construction Company for the reconstruction of 750 feet of the superstructure at the outer end of the eastern breakwater, in reinforced concrete. The estimated cost was $50,000. Last year $25,000 was expended; accordingly the amount required to complete is $25,000.

Mr. BUREAU: Will that complete the work?

Mr. McCurdy: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: In what riding is Collingwood?

Mr. McCURDY: North Simcoe.

Item agreed to.

Depot Harbour—repairs and renewals to wharves, $15,000.

Mr. BUREAU: Last year the appropriation amounted to $36,000. Did that cover repairs also, and were the repairs done under contract?

Mr. McCURDY: The work is under contract. This amount is required to complete the construction.

Mr. BUREAU: What county is that in?

Mr. McCURDY: Parry Sound.

Item agreed to.

Kingston—maintenance and operation of combined wharves and bridges, $17,900.

Mr. CAHILL: What is the explanation of this item?

Mr. McCURDY: This amount is for maintenance and operation of the combined roadway, wharves and bridges over the Cataraqui river at Kingston.

Mr. COPP: Was the amount of $12,800 voted last year, spent?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes.

Mr. COPP: Is this a continuation of the works, or repairs? Or what is it?

Mr. McCURDY: The appropriation asked for this year is for replanking and repainting the bridges. Many public works are in such condition that they call for continuous and extensive repairs, and it is sometimes difficult to tell exactly where to draw the line. Last year, as I have said, the amount of $12,800 was expended towards keeping this work in some sort of decent repair, and the amount asked for this year is absolutely necessary.

Mr. CAHILL: What proportion of this appropriation is to be expended on the road?

Mr. McCURDY: Details of last year's expenditures are as follows:

Power for this work	$1,400
Light	700
Oils and gasoline	350
Globes, lamps, fuses, etc.	350
Road maintenance and new roadway surface	2,000
Replanking bridges	4,500
Repainting bridges	3,500

Mr. CAHILL: How is it that the Dominion Government have to maintain a roadway at Kingston?

Mr. KEEFER: Anyone who has been there and remembers the roadway across to the Royal Military College will understand. It is a causeway across the water; it had to be built and made permanent. It is not a road in the city or anything of that nature; it connects across to the Royal Military College.

Mr. CAHILL: Is the road on Government property?

Mr. CURRIE: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS: There used to be a wooden bridge—built by a company in the first place—across at that point. The Dominion Government paid to that company each year a certain amount in tolls, so that when the military camp was held across the bridge, people going to and from it, and the Royal Military College could pass without paying tolls. The tolls were paid in a lump sum by the Dominion Government. When the late Hon. F. D. Monk was Minister of Public Works and the old bridge was in a deplorable state and was very dangerous—as admitted by the late Sir Frederick Borden, when he was Minister of Militia, the bridge was acquired by this Government and this new structure was put in its place. The new structure is in the form of a fill for part of the way; but there are two permanent bridges and one jack-knife bridge to admit of the passage of vessels. It is more than a roadway; it is more than a bridge; it is intended as well as a protection to the inner harbour at Kingston. As regards repairs on the roadway itself, I think every person will understand how those repairs have been required both last year and this. As has been stated, this was in great measure a fill in; it was surfaced immediately after it was first constructed, but it naturally settled. It was a filling across this piece of water, and while it looked perfectly firm when it was first constructed and rolled, it settled, and repairs had to be made on it the next year. I fancy that perhaps, repairs will have to be made for some little time until the roadway becomes thoroughly settled and firm. It was decided some years ago, if I mistake not, when the Laurier Government was in office that it would pay the Government to construct this bridge or causeway, not merely as a means of getting from the city across to the Royal Military College, but for the purpose of straightening out the channel. The swing bridge in the old structure was close to the city side, and as a result of that accidents frequently occurred in attempts to navigate this tortuous channel. Therefore, for the benefit of navigation, in order that the channel might be placed out in the centre as it is now, this new structure was built. It was also considered to be in the interest of the Militia Department, which was paying annually a sum of money in the way of rent, that the Dominion Government should acquire the property and thus escape the payment of tolls. There was also considered very carefully the advisability of making a fill and thereby doing work in the way of protecting the inner harbour, which work would have to be done at some time if a fill were not made. I do not think any money has been wasted on this bridge. When it was under construction there was some difficulty; I think the first firm, Fallon Brothers, that had a contract, lost money and had to give up their contract. I think this work is being pretty well looked after, and the structure certainly should be painted—in fact, it should be laid down as a definite policy and carried out carefully that wherever you have Government iron bridges, they should be kept painted.

Item agreed to.

Owen Sound—wharf reconstruction, $70,000.

Mr. CAHILL: How much was spent on that last year?

Mr. McCURDY: The contract was let last year, but no progress was made with the work. The contractor has assembled the materials and is now ready to proceed.

Mr. COPP: What was the contract price?

Mr. McCURDY: There were five tenders received, the lowest being that of E. Conroy, for $89,768.40. The others ran up to as high as $143,000.

Mr. COPP: Has anything been paid out on the contract yet?

Mr. McCURDY: No.

Mr. COPP: The contract is for $89,000 and you are asking for a vote of only $70,000.

Mr. McCURDY: The vote we are asking will pretty well cover the work that will be done this year. The contract will hardly be finished by this time next year.

Mr. CAHILL: What constituency is this in?

Mr. McCURDY: North Grey.

Item agreed to.

Port Colborne — repairs to breakwaters. $55,000.

Mr. CAHILL: What is the explanation of this?

Mr. McCURDY: This is for repairs to the west breakwaters, covering three lengths of 496, 134 and 31 feet, respectively, which were severely damaged by storms. This is a very important port, and the works cannot be allowed to go into disrepair.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I understand that there is a vote in the Supplementary Estimates also for repairs to Port Colborne.

Mr. McCURDY: My hon. friend no doubt refers to the vote that is being asked for by the Railway Department for repairs to the elevator at Port Colborne.

Item agreed to.

Rondeau — harbour repairs and improvements, $10,000.

Mr. PARDEE: What is that?

Mr. McCURDY: This vote is required to complete the contract let to the Border Cities Construction Company for the reconstruction of 227 feet of superstructure of the west pier; also to complete the contract for the construction of a close-faced sheet-pile wall, 320 feet long, and for general repairs to the decking on both piers.

Item agreed to.

Thessalon — to complete reconstruction of wharf, $12,250.

Mr. CAHILL: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. McCURDY: This revote is required to remove the old rotted superstructure and reconstruct with concrete the remainder of the wharf, consisting of the outer 115 feet by 20 feet, and the headblock 100 feet by 25 feet.

Mr. CHISHOLM: What constituency is that in?

Mr. McCURDY: East Algoma.

Mr. PARDEE: Why is that necessary this year if it was not necessary last year?

Mr. McCURDY: It was impossible to get what was regarded as reasonable prices for doing the work the previous year, but last August tenders were called again, and one of $10,770 was received, the others running to $18,000 and even over. The chief engineer's estimate was $11,447, and as the lowest tender was well within that mark it was accepted.

Mr. PARDEE: You are asking for more than the amount of the contract.

Mr. McCURDY: In addition to the contract price there are certain charges that have to be carried, such as inspection, advertising, and other contingencies that are always connected with a work of this character. The engineers in their estimates always include a percentage for contingencies that may develop during construction.

Mr. PARDEE: Is not the inspection done by the officers of the department?

Mr. McCURDY: No. As a rule on works of this kind outside inspectors are engaged.

Mr. PARDEE: Somebody in the locality, I suppose?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes. All these works come under the direction of the district engineers, who have a general supervision over the work, but somebody has to be there all the time to check materials, and so forth.

Mr. PARDEE: Are these inspectors appointed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Does my hon. friend mean to say that the district engineer names a local inspector, who then has to be appointed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Manitoba—harbours and rivers generally—repairs and improvements, $15,000.

Mr. MOLLOY: What harbours and rivers are included in this?

Mr. McCURDY: A general vote is taken for each province to take care of the small emergency repairs that may be required during the year. The expenditure in the province of Manitoba under this head last year was $9,030.26.

Mr. MOLLOY: Where?

Mr. McCURDY: This is the list:

Generally	$3,017 58
Le Pas Wharf	1,294 67
Winnipeg Office Staff	1,306 97
Delta Protection Works	2,747 19
Sale of Twin Screw Steamer at Selkirk, Man.	47 60
High Bluff	316 25
Victoria Beach Protection	300 00
Total	$9,030 26

Mr. PEDLOW: I understand there was a sum of money spent on this general vote last year upon The Pas wharf.

Mr. McCURDY: Yes, $1,294.67.

Mr. PEDLOW: There was also a vote in the Estimates for this particular item last year of $14,800. Has all of that amount been spent in addition to this other amount?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes. The larger sum my hon. friend mentions was spent under contract, but this smaller amount was for necessary repairs and the expenditure was carried out by the department itself.

Mr. PEDLOW: On the same wharf?

Mr. McCURDY: The larger sum was spent in extension of the wharf at The Pas. The amount of $1,294 was spent on repairs to the inner part of the wharf.

Item agreed to.

Selkirk—repairs to wharf, $15,000.

Mr. MOLLOY: This wharf is in Selkirk town?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes.

Mr. MOLLOY: What has been the total cost up to date in connection with it?

Mr. McCURDY: The total expenditure for all purposes on this wharf, including dredging up to March 31, 1920, was $101,095.14.

Item agreed to.

The Pas Wharf, $7,000.

Mr. EDWARDS: Where is this wharf?

Mr. McCURDY: In the constituency of Nelson.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): What was the amount of traffic at this wharf last year?

Mr. McCURDY: The District Engineer, Mr. Burbridge, reporting on the commercial necessity of this wharf, states that the extension of the present wharf is required to handle increasing traffic coming to and leaving the port of The Pas. This port is the distributing point for all points on the Saskatchewan river and its tributaries. One firm handled 800 tons of freight alone, and 7,500 tons of copper ore were landed at The Pas in 1920. The Provincial Government I am informed is building a railway to the large copper deposits of Northern Manitoba, and the material to be used will have to be handled by water.

Item agreed to.

Alice Arm—wharf—conditional on Provincial Government building road, $18,500.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): According to the item, this work is conditional on the Provincial Government building a road. What does that mean?

Mr. McCURDY: Alice Arm is a mining town of growing importance a hundred miles north of Prince Rupert. The population at present is approximately 400. A regular boat service is maintained by the Union Steamship Company to Vancouver, and considerable quantities of supplies, mining machinery, etc., will go into the country in the next few years. A short rail line from the proposed wharf to the Dolly Varden mines will be built.

Mr. FIELDING: Is this a new wharf?

Mr. McCURDY: This vote has been asked for and granted year by year. The construction has been delayed in view of a prospective understanding with the Provincial Government that a road would be built to connect the wharf with the district which will be served by the wharf. The road is under contract now. The Provincial Government have given a contract for its completion and it is anticipated that the construction of the wharf will be proceeded with.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): How much has been spent on the construction to date?

Mr. McCURDY: Nothing.

Mr. FIELDING: Is it a new wharf?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes.

Mr. FIELDING: Is not that a departure from the general policy laid down, that no new works will be undertaken?

Mr. McCURDY: It was decided some years ago to construct this wharf and a vote has appeared in the Estimates from year to year. The Estimate this year is therefore only a revote, the policy in regard to this construction having been decided, presumably, when the vote was first granted. As I have explained, the construction was deferred because of negotiations with the Provincial Government, and it is felt that it would hardly be proper, now that they have fulfilled their part of the bargain and have agreed to build the road, that we should recede from the undertaking.

Mr. FIELDING: We are being told in all other parts of the country that no new wharves will be undertaken, and the hon. minister is not living up to the principle he has laid down. I am afraid he will find this departure embarrassing for him elsewhere.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): In what constituency is this work to be done?

Mr. McCURDY: Skeena.

Item agreed to.

Boswell—floating wharf, $8,500.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Is this a new construction?

Mr. McCURDY: It is a new construction but it is also a revote.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) is perfectly right. The fact that these things may have been decided upon years ago is no excuse for commencing new constructions now, when we have no money. Expenditures should be curtailed, and I for one protest against any money being voted for new wharves or any other new public works.

Mr. McCURDY: This is a float that takes the place of a pile wharf that was destroyed by storms. In one sense it is a new work, but as it takes the place of a structure which has been serving the business of the district, my hon. friend will admit that it is hardly in the category of new undertakings.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are works in the city of Quebec which were stopped when the war broke out. They are still unfinished, and it is not fair for this House to vote money for new construction when works already begun are not being completed.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I endorse the remarks of the member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe). In Quebec we have been asking for repairs to a wharf destroyed by the flood in 1918, but the Government has always stated that they had no money. If they have no money for Quebec, how is it that they can afford expenditures somewhere else?

Mr. McCURDY: If my hon. friend will refer to the Estimates he will find that there is provision for works in the province of Quebec. The task of keeping up structures is a difficult one; it is not easy to determine exactly when repairs should be gone on with and when works should be allowed to stand over for another year. The officials of the department are very often put to it to correctly draw the line. I can assure my hon. friend that every effort is being made to care for the works that are in urgent need of attention throughout the country, and if he will look at the Estimates he will find that his province has not been neglected.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I did not mean the province, I meant the city of Quebec.

Item agreed to.

Carroll's Landing—wharf, $11,000.

Mr. CHISHOLM: That is a new wharf also.

Mr. McCURDY: Those members of the House who were present last year when the Public Works Estimates were under consideration will recollect that the acting minister stated that the appropriations then voted were to be expended. The item under discussion is a revote, and acting on the policy which was outlined last year tenders were asked for this work—it has been advertised and we have received very reasonable tenders to construct.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I accept the minister's word, but I must call his attention to the fact that there were certain amounts voted in the Estimates last year for works in other parts of the country, and I do not find them in the Estimates this year—urgent works too. I have in my mind's eye at the present time an appropriation that was in the Estimates last year, but, so far as I can see, these Estimates do not contain that item.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Is this a new construction also?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes, but it is a revote.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Has the work been commenced?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes, tenders were called for and the contract has been awarded.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Tenders were called for in the case to which I have reference, but, for some reason or other, the contract was not awarded. The appropriation in question was revoted several times.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Will the minister say when the tenders were called for?

Mr. McCURDY: Tenders for this work were called for more than once. Tenders were first invited in August, 1920, and in the opinion of the chief engineer of the department they were all too high—they were above his estimate. In January of this year tenders were again called for, and a tender $3,000 lower than the lowest tender on the previous occasion was received.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): How much is it?

Mr. McCURDY: It is $7,800.

Mr. McMASTER: I hoped to have been able to discuss these questions of expenditure on wharves and harbours with some idea of the public service that these different works were given to our people, and two months ago I put a question on the Order Paper which was passed as an Order for Return. The schedule which should have been prepared, and which I should have had long ere this, would have given the expenditure for the last five years on capital and on operating account of these different wharves, the amount of upkeep which the Government was obliged to expend year by year, and the amount of tonnage which these wharves serve. If I could have had, and the House could have had, the advantage of this information we could have discussed these Estimates with considerably more benefit, I think, to the people, and I deeply regret that the Government was not able to give me this information. It is very hard for us, Mr. Chairman, to really criticise these works as they should be criticised, because we cannot tell just how much public benefit each wharf affords to the people of Canada.

Mr. McCURDY: The return which my hon. friend asked for is, as he knows, a voluminous one which necessitates going into the departmental records for the past five years of all public expenditures on harbours and rivers. I am sure he quite underrates the amount of clerical work necessary to produce the figures that he asks for. I will make inquiry of the department and expedite the compilation of the return in every possible way consistent with the carrying on of the other duties with which the officials are charged.

Item agreed to.

Fraser River (lower)—operation of snag boat, $30,000.

Mr. CHISHOLM: What is that for?

Mr. McCURDY: As the name implies it is a boat for the removal of snags. In navigation, as in other pursuits, snags should always be avoided wherever possible. Snags come down the Fraser river and are a great menace to navigation. The department some years ago went into the removal of these, and all the reports we have are to the effect that the expenditure is one which has been more than amply justified.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Who owns this snag boat?

Mr. McCURDY: The Department of Public Works.

Item agreed to.

Graham—wharf, $7,700.

Mr. CHISHOLM: This also is a new wharf.

Mr. McCURDY: This work is under contract.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally—repairs and improvements, $95,000.

Mr. COPP: This vote appears in a very general way. Has the minister any information in regard to what he proposes to do under it?

Mr. McCURDY: As my hon. friend knows, the coast line of British Columbia is very extensive, and the people are dependent altogether, in many places, on water transportation. I have a list of the expenditures made last year on these sundry works, and it occupies a page and a half in the Estimate book. I will send the information to my hon. friend if he would like to peruse it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: How much of the $95,000 was spent last year?

Mr. McCURDY: $34,236.48.

Mr. COPP: Why is it necessary to expend any more than that amount this year?

Mr. McCURDY: It may not be expended. The expenditure may be much smaller this year, but we want to be on the safe side.

Mr. PARDEE: The minister expended only $35,000 last year. Why have such a wide margin? Would it not be better to take a smaller vote?

Mr. STEVENS: I would like to point this out to the committee. It is largely a question of emergency in these repairs. As the minister explained, the coast line of the province is exceedingly long. You have Queen Charlotte island, Vancouver island, and all the coast line of British Columbia, with innumerable wharves at small places which are completely isolated and dependent wholly on this method of transportation. Now the vote may not be needed, but on the other hand, emergencies may arise. For instance there may be violent storms, like one storm of a year ago in which a whole wharf was washed away.

Mr. CHISHOLM: There may be an election, too.

Mr. McCURDY: The vote is the same as last year.

Mr. PARDEE: The emergencies are not more likely to happen this year than last year when only $35,000 was expended. For my hon. friend to ask for almost three times the amount that he knows from experience is likely to be required is entirely too much of a margin. I therefore move that the item be reduced by the sum of $45,000.

Amendment negatived on division: Yeas, 35; nays, 44.

Mr. BUREAU: I beg to call the attention of the Chairman to the fact that I counted thirteen members on the other side, even including my hon. and good friend the Minister of Finance, who came in after the question was put and the vote was being taken. I want to know if, when we are in committee, a member has to hear the question before he can vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN: The point of order raised by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) has often been decided before by the Chairman of Committee, both by the present incumbent and by his predecessors. A vote in committee is not a recorded vote. Any hon. member who is present in the chamber when the vote is being taken has the right to vote for or against the motion, and it is not necessary for him to state whether he heard the question put, or not.

Mr. BUREAU: What constitutes the taking of the vote; is it standing up and hearing the question?

The CHAIRMAN: The taking of the vote consists in putting the question and counting the members.

Item agreed to.

Ioco—wharf, $9.200.

Mr. McCURDY: This is to take the place of a wharf that fell into utter decay and could not be repaired.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Is it new construction?

Mr. McCURDY: All construction under votes granted by this House is new, but in the sense I have explained this is not new construction, it takes the place of a wharf that has fallen down.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We cannot hear the minister at all.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: The minister states that all construction under these items is new, whether so indicated or not. Now we have an item for Ioco which is simply marked "wharf," and the minister states that it is a renewal. The next item, Kincolith, is marked "wharf renewal." There it is clearly indicated that it is to replace an old wharf.

Mr. McCURDY: I think I can explain that to the satisfaction of my hon. friend. At Ioco there was an old structure that became so dilapidated that it was impossible to repair it. Similar facilities are being created at the same place.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Is the new wharf on the same site?

Mr. McCURDY: A very short distance away.

Mr. PEDLOW: In what constituency is this Ioco wharf located?

Mr. STEVENS: I can answer that. It is situated at a small town called Ioco, of about 3,000 population, twelve miles distant from Vancouver. There are huge oil tanks and refineries located there.

Mr. PEDLOW: Is it on the seashore, or on the river?

Mr. STEVENS: It is on the upper reaches of Burrard Inlet.

Item agreed to.

Kuskanook—wharf, $5,800.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Is that new construction?

Mr. CURRIE: If the hon. gentleman will look at the item he will see that it is a revote.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I am asking a question of the minister.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): It does appear to be a revote, but as the money was not spent last year it would look as if this was proposed for new construction.

Mr. CURRIE: The item—

Mr. LAPOINTE: We do not need a lecture from the hon. member for North

Simcoe (Mr. Currie). The fact that it is a revote does not indicate that it is new construction. He should learn himself, before teaching others.

Mr. McCURDY: This proposed work is in the same class as one or two other items which we have discussed. This is a revote, but for a new structure. After the authorization by Parliament last year, contracts were entered into and the work is now proceeding.

Item agreed to.

Ladysmith—wharf, $12,000.

Mr. ROSS: Is that a revote of last year's general Estimates or was it in the Supplementaries?

Mr. McCURDY: I am informed it was in the Supplementary Estimates of last year.

Item agreed to.

Manson's Landing—wharf, $6,500.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Is that another new wharf?

Mr. McCURDY: This item is for a new wharf.

Mr. ROSS: In regard to all these wharves that are new construction, and said to be revotes, which I have no doubt they are, what is the reason for the increase in the amount required if no money has been spent? Take the case of Boswell, vote increased from $6,500 to $8,500; Carroll's Landing, vote increased from $7,000 to $11,000; Ioco, vote increased from $3,000 to $9,200; Ladysmith, vote increased from $9,500 to $12,000. What is the necessity for these increases?

Mr. McCURDY: In the case of Manson's Landing the amount asked last year was $5,500. Since that appropriation was made tenders have been called for and it has been found impossible to complete the work for that amount, the sum of $6,500 being necessary. It is not much of an advance; in some cases there are decreases.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: The vote for Manson's Landing is indicated as a revote, but I do not find it in the main Estimates of last year.

Mr. McCURDY: The records show that this is a revote and that the original vote was made in the Supplementary Estimates of last year.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Princess Creek—floating wharf, $2,300.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Are these floating wharves moved from one place to another? Do they serve more than one locality?

Mr. McCURDY: No. It is a less expensive method of providing facilities that the department has adopted largely in British Columbia, where the water level changes.

Mr. CAHILL: Are these pontoon wharves or solid log floats?

Mr. McCURDY: Solid logs, I believe.

Mr. ROSS: I cannot quite understand the minister's explanation with regard to these increases. He has pointed out that these items were put in the Estimates last year and that tenders were called, but on account of the tenders being too high the works were not built. Am I right in that?

Mr. McCURDY: In some cases, yes.

Mr. ROSS: This year amounts are asked for much in excess of last year's votes. My hon. friend either has more money or there has been a change of policy. I would like an explanation of the anomaly.

Mr. McCURDY: Take, for instance, the vote asked for under the head of Carroll's Landing, where $11,000 is asked for, the vote last year being $7,000. It was the intention of the department that the work should be proceeded with even if it should cost more than the $7,000 asked for last year. When the Estimates were being made up this year the construction costs were still high and lower tenders had not been received. The deputy minister advises that the present Estimate was based on tenders which had been received. It was a matter for the department to decide whether the project should be laid aside or a vote sufficiently large to complete the work asked for.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think we are entitled to an explanation from the minister as to the reason for the difference between appropriations for public works in different parts of the country. I know of instances where applications which have come to the Government for public works have been met with the reply that, on account of the state of the country's finances, the policy of the department was to start no new works, and public works which have been started have been suspended for the same reason. But now we find that new works are being started in other parts of the country. We are entitled to know the reason for this discrimination.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): The minister should be able to give us some explanation in regard to this matter. In Nova Scotia repairs have not been made to existing works. In my county a certain breakwater at Half Island Cove was partly broken down by storm in 1919. It was reported to the department that a very small sum would effect the necessary repairs, but no action was taken. The department was notified that if the matter was allowed to stand for another winter a large sum would be required for repairs, but it was allowed to stand and the breakwater went to pieces; now it will take $10,000 or $12,000 to make repairs that might have been made earlier for a couple of thousand dollars. That is the way repairs have been attended to in my constituency, and it is hard to understand why we should embark on a large number of new works when conditions of that kind prevail—where old works have been allowed to go into the sea because the Government would not provide a small sum to repair damages caused by storms.

Mr. McCURDY: I agree that the amount asked for public works is not generous, even if adequate to meet real necessities. My hon. friend, who is an observant man, sion of alleged public facilities, the commercial necessity of which has been doubtful. Would he say that the small sums which can be spared for public works should be utilized in the keeping up of structures of value to a few people, and that the needs of much larger communities should be ignored? No matter what policy is adopted, there must be exceptions to the rule. We had a discussion this afternoon about Ioco, B.C., where a large community, about three thousand people, has grown up, where there are huge oil tanks and refineries, and where, if there is no new construction, the community must do without necessary facilities. It is difficult at all times for the officials to tell exactly where to draw the line, they exercise their best discretion in these cases; and the few cases where small new structures are being undertaken are at places where the commercial necessity has been great. I think the committee will agree that where this committee in a previous year authorized the expenditure of money at certain places, the department should go ahead and provide those facilities. Otherwise, when Parliament met again and the Estimates of the department were brought down, the department would be subject to the criticism that they had a warrant to go ahead and provide those facilities and that they had failed to do so. While it is difficult to decide where to draw the line, practically no new constructions have been authorized. I am sure I am within the mark if I say that, including the class of representation to which the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) has referred, requests have come to the department this year for the expenditure of over $100,000,000, while the total amount involved in carrying to completion works at present under contract, repairs to old contracts and isolated cases of new construction, is in these Estimates something less than $5,000,000. Not a day passes but one or two or three, sometimes half a dozen, delegations come to the department, and I am sure my hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Lapointe), if he were administering a department of Government having to do with the expenditure of money on public works, would advise them along the line that I have always advised them.

Item agreed to.

South Gabriola island wharf, $3,500.

Mr. McCURDY: This is a revote for a new wharf under contract.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): How much will it take to complete the work?

Mr. McCURDY: It will be completed this season well within the amount of $3,500. The lowest tender was $3,152.08.

Item agreed to.

Tofino—repairs to wharf, $4,600.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: In what constituency is Tofino?

Mr. McCURDY: Comox-Alberni.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Is every constituency in British Columbia provided with a wharf?

Mr. McCURDY: There are several wharves in every constituency in British Columbia fronting on the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. ROSS: As regards these amounts for wharves, are they the amounts required to complete the wharves, or just to begin them?

Mr. McCURDY: Sometimes one, sometimes the other. In the case of these small works which can be completed in one season, the amount asked for is supposed to be sufficient to complete.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally, $30,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): This seems to be another item of the same kind. We had an item for harbours and rivers generally amounting to $95,000 and if you add this on, the total is $125,000. We were told last year that $30,000 was sufficient. This is a very large increase.

Mr. McCURDY: I scarcely catch my hon. friend's point. This is the same amount as was asked for under this heading last year. This item is to cover travelling expenses, printing, stationery, etc., which cannot be conveniently charged to any one particular appropriation.

Mr. FIELDING: This is a general item, not for British Columbia?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): We have a general item for every province. Why have another general one?

Mr. McCURDY: This is for the Dominion. There are certain items which cannot be charged to any particular locality.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—Maritime provinces, $500,000.

Mr. LEGER: I should like to have some information as regards dredging in New Brunswick. I understand that application was made for dredging to be done at Richibucto bar, continuation of work at Buctouche bar, St. Louis river, St. Charles river and Molus river. Is there any item in this $500,000 for these works?

Mr. McCURDY: The dredging programme for New Brunswick for this season is as follows: Grande Anse, Gloucester county; Hatfield point, King's county;—

Mr. COPP: What is the amount for each place?

Mr. McCURDY: The amount can only be estimated. The estimated quantity to be removed at Grand Anse is 9,000 cubic yards.

Mr. COPP: What is it going to cost?

Mr. McCURDY: I am afraid any estimate I could give would only be a rough-and-ready one.

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask hon. gentlemen to refrain from conversation. We have reached the point where it is practically impossible for even the Chairman to know what item hon. members are discussing.

[Mr. McCurdy.]

Mr. CURRIE: As these are contracts to be let, I think it is not in the public interest that the minister should be asked to disclose the estimate of the department. It would simply be giving information to the contractors. It has never been done in the House before, to my knowledge.

Mr. COPP: The minister is asking for $500,000 for certain work in the Maritime Provinces, and I think the committee is entitled to be informed as to how this amount is to be divided up between the different provinces.

Mr. McCURDY: So far as the work to be done by departmental dredges is concerned, I do not think the public interest would suffer if I gave the figures, but perhaps my hon. friend would assent to the proposal that in cases where tenders are to be called for close approximation of the cost as arrived at by our engineers should not be made public.

Mr. COPP: I quite agree.

Mr. McCURDY: The following proposed dredging for New Brunswick is on the programme for this year. Grand Anse, 9,000 cubic yards; Hatfield Point, 7,000 cubic yards,—for both of these we expect to ask tenders; Miramichi bay, 75,000 cubic yards, at a cost probably of $22,500; Molus river, Kent, N.B. 7,000 cubic yards; Nelson, 3,750 cubic yards; Newcastle to Bridgetown, 30,000 cubic yards, at a cost probably of $15,000; Restigouche river, 190,000 cubic yards, at a cost probably of $57,000; Bathurst, N.B., 88,000 cubic yards, at a probable cost of $26,400; Douglastown, Northumberland County, 7,500 cubic yards, at a probable cost of $4,500. Dredging will also be done at other places.

Mr. COPP: In regard to Hatfield Point, is the work to be done on the St. John river or on the main shore?

Mr. McCURDY: It is on the river, I understand.

Mr. COPP: Has any dredging been done there recently?

Mr. McCURDY: No.

Mr. COPP: What shipping does my hon. friend expect there?

Mr. McCURDY: I shall get the information and forward it to my hon. friend.

Mr. LEGER: A year or two ago there was an appropriation of $1,200 for work on the St. Charles river, which was not expended. Both the St. Charles and the St. Louis rivers should be dredged, for the convenience of farmers who have their fertilizer brought up the river in scows. I do hope that an amount for this purpose will be included. I think the farmers in that part of the country have cause for complaint, and I therefore feel it is my duty to bring the need for this work before the minister.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): I would like some information in regard to the proposed dredging in the province of Nova Scotia. There are two urgent cases in my own constituency. One is at Port Hilford. For the last ten years this Government has been asked to expend a small amount in dredging the harbour at Port Hilford so as to enable the coasting steamer to reach the wharf in stormy weather. Repeated requests have been made for this work, and we have been informed on several occasions that something would be done, but so far as I know, nothing has been done up to the present time. The sand has filled in around the wharf so much that on a stormy day the coasting steamer is unable to get to the place where the shelter is. The harbour is an exposed one and the steamer is not able to call at all when the weather is rough, owing to the fact that the dredging has not been done. The other case is the harbour of Canso, where some dredging has been done in the last few years to remove the boulders. This is a very important port, the headquarters of the fishing industry in eastern Nova Scotia, and it is urgent that the dredging work there should be completed. I should like to know from the minister whether provision has been made for dredging at these two places out of this vote for $500,000.

Mr. McCURDY: I have no recollection of having had the necessity for dredging at Port Hilford drawn to my attention since I assumed charge of the department. There is no amount included in this vote for dredging at Port Hilford, and the same applies to the harbour of Canso. There was a request received from Canso some two months ago for the construction of a new wharf at that place, but no representations have been made to me with regard to dredging at that port.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): What was the reason that my hon. friend did not make any provision for the construction of that wharf? Its construction is of very special importance to the fishermen of the locality. It serves not only as a wharf, but also as a shelter to a part of the harbour. The request the minister speaks of was made by the Fishermen's Union of Canso, which is a very strong and influential body, and very important from a commercial standpoint. The expenditure would not be very large, and it certainly would be a justifiable expenditure if any exception is to be made to the rule. The minister has already made half a dozen exceptions to the rule in British Columbia, and I therefore shall find it difficult to explain to my constituents why something was not done in connection with the wharf at Canso. What is the reason?

Mr. McCURDY: Different representations have been received from Canso with respect to the necessity for this work. I have not had the same opportunity of personally acquainting myself with the conditions there, as my hon. friend has. He says that the wharf is very much needed, but I am informed that in the meantime there are other means of loading and unloading fishing cargoes that come into that port. I have no personal knowledge of that, of course, but the representations are that this work is not of such extreme urgency as if no other wharf existed at the port. There are privately-owned wharves at Canso which for years have been used by the fishermen. The fishermen say that this is not satisfactory, but the fact is that they have been using these wharves for years.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): They are private wharves not generally available to the public.

Mr. McCURDY: I have no doubt that if either the hon. member or I wanted to land a cargo there we could. I understand that no charge is made for the use of these wharves. It is true they are privately owned, but they are used by the public. So that while it would be desirable to have a fishermen's wharf there when conditions permit, it was decided that it was not in the class of urgency that it could not stand over for another year.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Will you build it next year?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queen's): Will the minister give the amount of this vote that will be spent in Prince Edward Island, and also outline the programme for this season, informing us just where the money will be spent?

Mr. CHISHOLM: If it would make no difference, I think the minister might finish the outline of his programme with regard to Nova Scotia.

Mr. McCURDY: My heart is there.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Certainly, and if my hon. friend has no objection the minister might finish Nova Scotia first.

Mr. McCURDY: Dredge No. 1, the "Fielding," is to operate this year at Liverpool and remove 50,000 cubic yards, at an estimated cost of $20,000. She will then proceed to Restigouche river to remove 190,000 cubic yards at a cost of $57,000.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Restigouche is not in Nova Scotia.

Mr. McCURDY: Well, she gets a good start in Nova Scotia. My hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Sinclair) has asked a question in regard to Prince Edward Island. Perhaps I had better take the programme province by province. I will answer the hon. member for Queen's first. The programme for dredging operations in Prince Edward Island is not definitely concluded yet, but work is to be begun by the dredge at the marine wharf at Charlottetown, to remove 18,000 odd cubic yards of material. After that it will proceed to Pownal wharf and then probably to Murray River.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queen's): What portion of this $500,000 is to be spent in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. McCURDY: About $30,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queen's): The minister says that the programme for the season is not yet fully made up. How long is it estimated that the dredge will be required to carry out the work he has outlined?

Mr. McCURDY: Pretty nearly the whole season.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queen's): In 1914, or perhaps somewhat earlier—I am not sure of the exact date but it was before the war, at any rate—the Department of Public Works began the work of straightening and making a proper channel in the Hillsborough river from Charlottetown to Mount Stewart. The work was only partially completed when the war broke out, when it was thought wise to defer it owing to other heavy expenditures. If the work that is contemplated during the coming summer is completed before the close of the season, and the dredge is likely to be idle, I would suggest that the minister consider continuing the work of improving the channel in the Hillsborough river.

Mr. McCURDY: I am sure the dredge mentioned will not be idle, however, I will make a memorandum of what my hon. friend says and see whether the dredge can be placed on the work he has mentioned.

Mr. MICHAUD: I think the minister says that there is something like $45,000 to be spent on the Restigouche river. Is that right?

Mr. FIELDING: Is the bulk of this work being done by Government dredges?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes, almost entirely.

Mr. FIELDING: Well, I can appreciate the difficulty of specifying definite sums at particular points, because the dredges have to be maintained anyhow, and they start at one point and go to another. In that way several provinces become mixed up. I fancy that these estimates which the minister gives are made up in this way: From the general work of the department they know what it will cost to remove certain classes of material, and applying that rough estimate to the quantity they have to remove they are able to give an approximate idea of what it will cost. But it is difficult to give an appropriation of a particular sum to a particular place. Am I right in assuming that the bulk of the work is to be done by Government dredges?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes, that is perfectly so, and the method by which I have arrived at the estimated expenditure is exactly as my hon. friend has indicated. That is why I think it would be just as useful if I were to indicate the cubic yards which the department hopes to remove.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): If the minister has an estimate of the amounts he will spend in various harbours, that is all we ask for. I presume he will not go at the work in a haphazard manner, commencing at one end of a province without knowing where he will go next. The order in which the work is to be done is not a matter of interest to the committee at present; all we ask for is information as to where the various sums will be spent. My hon. friend has not yet told us very much about Nova Scotia.

Mr. McCURDY: No, for the very good reason that I have been interrupted several times when trying to do so. If I am allowed to proceed I will give the information. First, at Glace bay, 22,000 yards; at Liverpool, 50,000 yards; at Port Hood,

3,750 yards; at Shenacadie, 27,600 yards; at St. Peter's Narrows, 17,000 yards; at Sydney, 36,000 yards; at Windsor, 2,000 yards; at Yarmouth, 110,000 yards.

Mr. MICHAUD: Am I right in supposing that Restigouche river was one of the places mentioned by the minister where dredging operations will take place?

Mr. McCURDY: We expect to dredge 190,000 cubic yards in the Restigouche river this year.

Mr. MICHAUD: What will be the approximate cost?

Mr. McCURDY: Probably $60,000.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): At what point will this work be done?

Mr. McCURDY: At the Grandoon flats.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Is there anything for Cross Point?

Mr. McCURDY: There is a small amount under another heading that is going to be spent at Cross Point. I might also say that one of the dredges is now on her way to New Carlisle where 12,000 cubic yards are to be excavated.

Mr. CHISHOLM: As a matter of fact are all the Government dredges employed all the time?

Mr. McCURDY: Oh, no. Several Government dredges are laid up; they have not been in operation and will not be in operation this year.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I am sorry to learn that the minister has not the harbour of Inverness on his programme. It is a most unfortunate thing that this undertaking should be juggled in the way that it has been for the last five or six years. It also seems to me very unfortunate that an undertaking so important as this—an undertaking that was retarded during the war but for which there is ample justification—should be dropped now although its completion would not involve much further expenditure. The construction of the woodwork is going on, the contract undertaken last year not having yet been finished although it will be in a very short time. However, the whole expenditure on this work will go for naught unless the dredging is carried out. A very large amount of money was spent there before 1911, the work has been undertaken in a substantial way. The manner in which it was begun was a credit to the Department of Public Works who used creosoted lumber when they commenced construction. Although the undertaking was begun before 1911, it was stopped immediately after that year, and recommenced in 1918 for the purpose of opening up the harbour for the fishermen, because off the town of Inverness are perhaps the finest fishing grounds of America. That fact was recognized by the department at the time, and notwithstanding the scarcity of money and the difficulties in the way of undertaking public enterprises, the minister of the day undertook to open up and finish this work. Today the work is practically complete excepting the renewal of what was destroyed by a storm last fall. But if there is no dredging carried out there all this expenditure on the work will have been wasted. I am going to appeal to the minister, in view of the fact that he has got dredges available, to be good enough to undertake this work at the harbour of Inverness and try and finish the project once and for all. It has been, as I said, juggled with for the last eight years, it has been the most unfortunate undertaking I know of in Eastern Canada, and if the Government are not going to finish it, in the name of common sense let them stop spending money there.

Mr. McCURDY: I will bear what my hon. friend has said in mind.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—Ontario and Quebec, $450,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I ask the minister if this vote includes any expenditure for dredging in Yamaska county?

Mr. McCURDY: There are no Public Works dredges operating in Yamaska at the present time.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have seen some of them at work.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Would the minister be kind enough to mention the places where dredging is being done in the province of Quebec?

Mr. McCURDY: At Batiscan, 32,500 cubic yards; Doucet's Landing, 22,000 cubic yards; at Harricanaw, in the county of Pontiac, 24,000 cubic yards; Rimouski, 80,000 cubic yards; River du Loup, 80,500 cubic yards; and Verdun and Laprairie, removal of boulders necessitating the expenditure probably of $1,000. This is in addition to the dredging at New Carlisle, of which I have already spoken.

Item agreed to.

Roads and Bridges—Banff—bridges, $168,000.

Mr. CAHILL: Under the general vote for roads and bridges I wish to bring to the attention of the minister the condition of a bridge in the county of Pontiac, crossing the Ottawa river, which has been in charge of the Department of Public Works for some years. A few years ago they replaced two of the piers, but the centre pier is now in need of repair. I understand that the minister had a deputation wait upon him from the village of Bryson to ask that the work be gone on with as the bridge had been condemned by the minister's own department. It is the only means of communication between the village of Bryson, on the mainland, and Calumet island, which is an important farming district. Because the deputation did not ask my hon. friend to construct a bridge on the other side of the island to connect with the province of Ontario, he saw fit to refuse to maintain his bridge at that point. He was quick enough, however, when he found an item for dredging in the county of Pontiac to say that it was for work in my constituency. Perhaps the fact that this bridge is in the constituency of Pontiac was his reason for refusing to maintain the structure in a condition in which it can be used. The bridge cost a great deal of money and is liable, I understand, to collapse at any time—it is not safe for traffic. Although there is a steel superstructure the Government apparently are not maintaining this bridge in good repair. I think the minister should bring in an item in the Supplementary Estimates to take care of the repairs to this bridge. It is not fair to say to the township in which the bridge is located that they should have to look after it; the minister should provide, in the Supplementary Estimates, for doing this necessary work.

Mr. McCURDY: It is not intended, Mr. Chairman, to provide any sum for the repairs of this bridge. I recall quite distinctly the conversation that took place when the delegation came to see me some months ago in connection with this matter. The delegation was headed by Mr. Rimer, mayor of Bryson, and two other gentlemen, who asked that the department continue to repair a bridge of a local character connecting an island with another place on the mainland in the county of Pontiac. If, as my hon. friend has suggested, the bridge went from the island across the Ottawa river it would be interprovincial in its character, and under the British North America Act probably a case could be made out for the department contributing to its maintenance. I referred the matter to the Department of Justice. The answer being that it was not a work which the Dominion Government could be called on to maintain, I think I would be less than frank if I allowed my hon. friend to believe that any sum will be forthcoming towards its upkeep. The delegation which visited Ottawa have been advised of the decision of the department, which, so far as I know, can be looked upon as final.

Mr. CAHILL: As my hon. friend knows, the Ottawa river is the boundary line between the provinces of Quebec and Ontario clear to the north end of Lake Timiskaming, and the only bridges that cross the river between the St. Lawrence and that point are built from the Quebec side to the Ontario side and land on an island in every case. The bridge at Ottawa here was built and is maintained by the Government. The same remark applies to the bridge at Portage du Fort. The municipality and the province built this originally, and the Dominion Government recognized the injustice of asking them to maintain it, as it was on interprovincial waters. But now that the minister finds a loop-hole to escape this liabality he avails himself of it. I think the course taken is entirely unfair, especially when we have items here of hundreds of thousands of dollars for bridges in other parts of the country, some of them new structures. If the Government are maintaining bridges across interprovincial waters, there is absolutely no excuse why they should not maintain this bridge. The only difference in this case is that my hon. friend has got a bridge only half way across the river, and because he has not built the other half he refuses to maintain the part that is built.

Mr. McCURDY: If the districts affected will bring forward a proposal to make this an interprovincial bridge by extending it across the Ottawa river, I shall be very glad to have the matter taken into consideration; but at present it is simply a local bridge built by the local authorities.

Mr. CAHILL: How often has the minister consulted the Department of Justice in relation to public works in constituencies represented by his friends on the other side of the House?

Mr. McCURDY: Whenever there is any necessity.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): The minister has had several deputations from Campbellton asking for an interprovincial bridge between Crosspoint and Campbellton. How does that matter stand?

Mr. McCURDY: It stands, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MARCIL: An interprovincial bridge was built some years ago at Matapedia by this Government in conjunction with the Governments of Quebec and New Brunswick. I have called attention to the approaches of this bridge, as the road running through unorganized territory is almost impassable, and it is the only leading thoroughfare between Quebec and New Brunswick. The former member for Rimouski had some $10,000 expended on the road, but for some years no further work has been done. I wish the minister would give the matter attention and see if something cannot be done.

Mr. MICHAUD: I have received similar requests from the people of Campbellton and vicinity. I called upon the minister at the beginning of the session, but he told me the treasury was rather short of money, and that the structure being purely an interprovincial bridge, no federal assistance could be given. But interprovincial bridges have been built by the Dominion Government, and I can cite a case in point —the bridge between Ottawa and Hull. The necessity of a bridge between Campbellton and Crosspoint is just as great, and the bridge between here and Hull is certainly a precedent in favour of federal assistance in this instance.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I want to make a suggestion to the minister in regard to the Grand Etang bridge in Inverness county. The Government is spending considerable money on repairs to this bridge every second or third year, and when any further repairs are contemplated I would ask the minister to take into consideration its removal up to the Narrows. This would accomplish two purposes: it would give a shorter and less expensive bridge, and would also furnish the fishermen with urgently needed accommodation for the protection of their boats, as at present the harbour is entirely too small. This is an urgent matter and I would respectfully suggest that the minister take it into consideration when any further expenditure is needed for repairs to the existing bridge.

Mr. McCURDY: I shall see that the hon. member's suggestion is borne in mind.

Item agreed to.

Nova Scotia—Cape Breton Telegraph system—reconstruction of telephone line between Harvard lake and N.E. Margaree, $1,000; Pictou Island—telephone cable, $14,300.

Mr. CHISHOLM: Is it the intention of the minister to undertake this expenditure this year?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes. It is partly for diversion, in order to get a more direct line.

Graving docks, locks and dams, etc., $150,200.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): How many graving docks does the Government own?

Mr. McCURDY: The three mentioned in this vote and one at Kingston.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Is the new graving dock that is being built at Esquimalt the property of the Government?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): I understood that the Government paid subsidies to private companies to build these docks. If I remember rightly, my hon. friend's predecessor told us that a move was on foot for the construction of a graving dock at Vancouver by a company, subsidized by the Government. How is it that the graving dock at Esquimalt is on a different basis from the docks at Collingwood, Vancouver and other points?

Mr. McCURDY: There are two systems under which docks have been built in Canada. There is the Dry Dock Subsidies Act, the provisions of which are availed of by people who wish to build docks, the locations, of course, to be approved by the Government. Under that Act docks have been built at Collingwood, Port Arthur, Montreal and Prince Rupert and subsidy agreements are outstanding for the construction of dry docks at Vancouver and St. John. In addition, the Government have constructed the three which I have mentioned and are constructing the dry dock at Esquimalt, which will serve also the purposes of a naval dock.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Has the policy of the Government changed in this matter? Is it now to be the policy of the Government to build and maintain graving docks and to abandon the old system of insisting that a company manage them and pay the interest on their loans? May other parts of Canada apply to the minister to obtain graving docks similar to the dock now being built at Esquimalt and on the same terms?

Mr. McCURDY: As for requests that may come from other parts of the country for additonal dry docks, I would prefer to decide the matter when the applications arrive. I must confess that I am not thoroughly familiar with every detail of what has transpired regarding dry docks that have been under construction except so far as the records go, but in general I would say that there has been no change in policy.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone lines, $930,400.

Mr. LEGER: I wish to ask the minister for some information in reference to the extension of the line from Point Sapin to Kouchibouguac in the county of Kent.

Mr. McCURDY: I see no vote for that purpose.

Mr. LEGER: Will there be a vote for it in the Supplementary Estimates?

Mr. McCURDY: Quite probably so.

Mr. McMASTER: What has been the revenue from these different telegraph and telephone lines for the past year?

Mr. McCURDY: I have not that information under my hand, but it was given in the annual report of the Department of Public Works which was tabled at the beginning of the session; I will secure a copy and forward it to my hon. friend. But the operation of the Government telegraph and telephone lines covered by this vote is not a commercial undertaking. It is a large annual expense to operate these lines; I suppose the deficit would run from $600,000 to $700,000 per annum. As a rule these lines serve districts where commercial companies could not profitably operate. For instance, there are lines in certain parts of northern British Columbia and extending to the Yukon, where service is maintained at a heavy annual loss. It is, however, a service which cannot very well be abandoned; I am sure that hon. members would not like to see the Yukon deprived of telegraphic communication. In Eastern Canada these lines are for the most part in sparsely settled districts where there would be no service if it was not provided by the Government.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): In connection with the Yukon system, there is considerable duplication; for some distance you will find in little towns along the Grand Trunk Pacific two telegraph offices, those of the Grand Trunk Pacific and those of the Yukon telegraph system. It is some distance east of Hazelton where the Yukon telegraph line strikes off from the Grand Trunk Pacific and crosses over to the Canadian Pacific at Ashcroft. I fail to see why it is necessary to maintain two telegraph and telephone offices in each of these towns along that part of the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific which is paralleled by the Yukon system. It seems to me that a saving could be effected in that regard; where the Yukon system strikes the Grand Trunk Pacific telegraphic line you could cut the system and not duplicate from there on to the point where it leaves the Grand Trunk Pacific and goes across to Ashcroft on the Canadian Pacific line.

Mr. CURRIE: The line serves a number of places between Hazelton and Ashcroft.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): I am asking the minister, not the hon. member.

Mr. McCURDY: I have been giving some attention to this matter, and I quite agree with what my hon. friend states, namely, that there is ground for making improvements by which the services necessary may retained and a considerable saving effected. That is a matter which will receive attention at an early date.

Mr. MICHAUD: How many miles of telegraph lines are there in New Brunswick?

Mr. McCURDY: I have not the information for the province of New Brunswick. It is contained in the annual report which was tabled at the beginning of the session. Altogether the department operates 11,821 miles of land lines, 336 miles of submarine cables, and it has 1,179 offices.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): What lines do the Government operate in Saskatchewan?—because in that province we are very well served. We have a government long-distance system, and the rural systems belong to the farmers, private companies.

Mr. McCURDY: I assumed that, this matter being all outlined in the report, hon. members would have it. I regret that at the moment I have not the exact information under my hand.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): Is the information in the annual report?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): Then I will look it up.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization—Public Works, $750,000.

Mr. McMASTER: How does this vote come under demobilization?

Mr. McCURDY: This is another case where the Department of Public Works is bearing the burdens of other departments. My hon. friend, in perusing the Estimates, will have noticed that public works, so-called, public improvements, engross only a small part of the expenditure of the department. The Department of Public Works is the renting agent for public buildings. In connection with demobilization we found ourselves in possession of a number of hospitals, convalescent homes and other buildings which had been used for war purposes, and under contract to return these properties to the owners at the end of the Militia Department's term of occupancy. It is largely in connection with the replacement and refurnishing of buildings of that character that this vote is asked for.

Mr. McMASTER: Could the minister give the main items that make up this very considerable sum?

Mr. McCURDY: There is also the question of rentals of properties which have been used for war purposes, the appropriation for which is secured through the Department of Public Works. This amount of $750,000 is to complete the construction of works in connection with military hospitals, for the maintenance of existing works, to pay the salaries of staffs and to pay for buildings rented for the Militia Department, which item was formerly charged to war appropriation. This is a summary of the items:

For completion of works..	$ 77,315
Rentals..	469,776
Maintenance of existing buildings.. ..	173,965

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): What is the policy of the Government as regards convalescent homes in Winnipeg? A number of those buildings are standing vacant. What is to be done with them?

Mr. McCURDY: When the Minister of Militia and Defence is in the chamber, I shall ask him to supply the information to my hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—chargeable to income,—rents, repairs, furniture, heating, etc., $4,935,500.

Mr. COPP: As regards the item of $1,130,000 for rents, what buildings are rented in Ottawa and what is the policy of the Government in regard to this matter? Does the Government intend to continue renting these buildings, or to erect buildings of its own? The time has arrived when we should have some general policy in regard to the matter.

Mr. McCURDY: I move that further consideration of this item be postponed. I shall have the information in a few minutes.

Item stands.

Harbours and rivers—Nova Scotia, $274,050.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Will the minister explain the second item, Bass river wharf? Is that a new wharf?

Mr. McCURDY: It is for replacement of a wharf that has gone down.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): What is the business at that point?

Mr. McCURDY: This is a revote. The principal industries are lumbering and the manufacture of furniture. Located at Bass river is the Dominion Chair Company whose imports of general merchandise approximate $75,000 to $80,000 annually, and whose exports of chairs ordinarily amount to $20,000 annually, making a total of $100,000. Other local merchants who receive at this port will add $20,000 to $25,000. Shipments of lumber average around 4,000,000 feet annually. The old wharf was built in 1894-95. It was extended in 1901-02 and in 1911-12. The work is under contract. Tenders were called for and the work is under way.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Has the work been commenced?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): The output of the fishing industry at Canso is at least ten times the figure that the minister gave.

Mr. McCURDY: A million dollars a year?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): More than that.

Mr. McCURDY: I am glad to hear it.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): There is a large population depending upon the wharf that was supposed to be built at Canso and that could be built for a much less sum than the wharf at Bass river.

Mr. McCURDY: There is no other wharf at Bass river.

Mr. FIELDING: There are a few names in this item which occur in different counties. Maitland, I presume, is in Hants county. Summerville is to be found at several places.

Mr. McCURDY: It is in Hants county.

Mr. FIELDING: I am sorry; I thought it was in Queen's.

Mr. McCURDY: Blanche is in Shelburne county. We shall provide for Blanche in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. FIELDING: I quite understand the difficulty my hon. friend has in making new appropriations, but I hope the Government will be able to make a strenuous effort to provide for necessary repairs. There are throughout the country many works of a useful character which are falling rapidly into decay. I know of several in my constituency. This is a matter in which the Government would have to be advised by the engineers of course; but where they have information from their engineers as to the condition of the works, I hope a strenuous effort will be made to provide the necessary repairs, for two purposes; first in order to accommodate the public, and secondly, to prevent works going into decay. After a few years on our Atlantic coast a work that is neglected goes to pieces very rapidly. All I desire to say further is that I hope in the Supplementary Estimates the minister will be able to make provision for works which his engineers report as useful and urgent.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): I regret to find that there is nothing in these Estimates for a breakwater at St. Francis harbour. An application, I understand, has been made for this work, which is required to accommodate the fishing industry in that locality. My hon. friend will find on file in his office a petition from the fishermen of St. Francis harbour, pointing out that they are unable successfully to carry on their business owing to the want of shelter from the storms, and they ask for the expenditure of a small sum of money for the building of a breakwater. This matter has been before the department for some time. I took occasion to look at the petition myself and at the explanation that has been given by my hon. friend's engineer, and I regret to find that nothing has been done in this matter. In addition to the fishing industry, there is also developing at that point a lumbering industry, but as the place is far removed from railway communication, the whole business has to be done by water, and as there is no wharf in that locality where a scow or steamer can receive goods, the necessity for the construction of a work of that kind is very great and obvious. The construction of a wharf there would mean the development of the fishing and lumbering industries in that locality. I want to tell my hon. friend that not a single one of the wharves that have been built on the Atlantic coast in my constituency has not proved very useful. If he would visit that part of the country he would find that flourishing villages have grown up at the places where these breakwaters have been built, villages which formerly did not exist. The young men in the places where these works are provided instead of going to the United States, stay at home and purchase boats and become successful fishermen. That is one direction in which the expenditure of public money can very well be justified. I know there has been criticism with regard to the expenditure of public money on the coast of Nova Scotia, but I represent a county with a coast line of 150 miles, and I do not think my hon. friend will find any work along that coast the construction of which has not been justified. There has been nothing built by the Government in my constituency for the last ten years, since the change of Government, and I hope my hon. friend will make an exception in these one or two urgent cases, notwithstanding the fact that the county happens to be represented by an opponent of the Government.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—Prince Edward Island, $43,400.

Mr. McISAAC: There are four small items not here mentioned to which I wish to direct the attention of the minister, and for which I hope he will make provision in the Supplementary Estimates. These works are important locally, although the expenditure involved would not be large. First of all, repairs are needed to the wharf at Georgetown. The wharf at Greek river also requires some repairs and a short extension. Some repairs are also required to Chapel Point wharf at St. George, and to the pier at Bay Fortune; an extension is also required to that pier in order to enable vessels to load and discharge their cargoes. The total amount required for these works would be comparatively small, and I trust that the minister will be able to make provision for their construction.

Mr. McCURDY: We shall overtake such as we can.

Mr. LEGER: Is the completion of the pier and breakwater at Richibucto cape to Mr. McCURDY: The present intention is to have the work done by day labour.

Mr. LEGER: There was a vote in 1920 for repairs to what is known as Church wharf. The amount was $1,700. I understand that this has not been expended. I quote from Hansard of June 4, 1920:

> Cocagne (N.B.)—repairs to wharf, $1,700.
> Mr. Leger: On what wharf is this money to be expended?
> Mr. J. D. Reid: There is a wharf one mile to the north called "Cocagne Church Wharf." This is work that the hon. gentleman wished should be done.

From a communication I have received from the county of Kent, which I have the honour to represent, I understand that this work has not been done. About 70 feet of this wharf was damaged by running ice, which moved the wharf in one part about 4 feet. That was the year before last. No repairs have been made, and the wharf still stands that way, with a great risk of being washed away entirely next spring, if that has not already happened. I should like to know why the money that was voted last year has not been expended?

Mr. McCURDY: If my hon. friend refers to Cocagne Church wharf, I find there was an expenditure last year at Cocagne, repairs to wharf, of $1,700.

Mr. LEGER: The vote was for what is called Church wharf. If any expenditure has been made, it has not been made on the Cocagne Church wharf. I want an explanation of just how this mistake has been made, because the parties have written me in reference to the matter.

Mr. McCURDY: The information furnished me is that there was expended last year at Cocagne, on repairs to the wharf, $1,700. That is the only information I have, but I shall be pleased to get the information my hon. friend requires and forward it to him on Monday, and if he has anything further to say with regard to these expenditures perhaps he will take the matter up the next day we are in Supply or if we finish the Main Estimates to-day, for sanction.

Mr. LEGER: Is there any appropriation in the Supplementary Estimates for repairs to the Molus wharf? This is a small wharf and application was made last fall to have it raised a couple of feet. The wharf is used by farmers who get shell fertilizer from the neighbourhood, and at high tide it is covered and the loaded scows have to wait a considerable time before they can land their cargoes. It will not cost very many hundred dollars to raise this wharf a couple of feet, but I do not see anything in the Estimates to have this done.

Mr. McCURDY: We are planning to do some dredging at Molus river this year, and at the same time investigations will be made in regard to the desirability of the work my hon. friend proposes. No provision has yet been made in the Estimates for repairing the wharf he speaks of, and it will be necessary for us to send our engineers and have an official report before we can bring the matter to a finality. I assure my hon. friend that his representations will be given consideration.

Mr. LEGER: Have the engineering staff at Chatham been removed to St. John?

Mr. McCURDY: Another vote is being asked for under which I shall make a statement regarding engineering services. If my hon. friend is agreeable I would suggest that this question stand until I make that statement.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—Quebec, $303,820.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): This first item for the Anse aux Gascons wharf is a long standing vote. Will the minister make a statement in regard to it?

Mr. McCURDY: This amount of $49,000 is required for the construction of a new crib work wharf 400 feet long by a width of 20 feet upon the first 300 feet and a width of 30 feet on the outer 100 feet. The road to the wharf is to be levelled, and the shore space between the old and the new construction is to be filled to the level of the flooring of the wharf. The structure is to take the place of the old wharf which was destroyed by storms occurring in 1916, 1917 and 1918.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Is the work under contract?

Mr. McCURDY: In answer to public advertisements tenders were received in August, 1920, from T. P. Charleston, $44,580, and J. T. Collins, $57,940. The lowest tender was accepted and an Order in Council was passed on September 30, last year, authorizing a contract with Mr. Charleston which was duly made.

Mr. FOURNIER: In looking over the Estimates I do not see anything for the St. Michel wharf in the county of Belle-chasse. Has the minister provided for that wharf in the Supplementary Estimates?

Mr. McCURDY: The matter is under consideration in connection with the Supplementary Estimates, but whether or not a vote will be provided I am not at liberty to state at present.

Mr. FOURNIER: Last year there was a revote of $36,000 to complete the repairs to this wharf, but this year there is nothing. The wharf was destroyed in the storm of 1918. In 1919 plans and specifications were prepared and tenders called for, and the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer. Unfortunately, the bid of Mr. Galibois was so low that he could not keep up with the work and had to abandon it. He worked only two months and repaired 400 feet, leaving 400 feet more to be done. By winter additional damage was incurred and last year there was a revote of $36,000 in the Main Estimates, but no work was done. The consequence is that it will cost a little bit more to finish the repairs to the wharf. I must remind the minister that this is a county wharf which serves five parishes. A boat has been calling at the wharf twice a day for the last thirty-eight years and I would impress upon the minister the urgency of completing this work.

Mr. McCURDY: The department is fully seized of the importance of the work in question, but as my hon. friend knows, the provision of money is a difficult matter. I would advise him to keep up his courage and reserve further remarks until the Supplementary Estimates are down.

Mr. PELLETIER: There is nothing in the Estimates in connection with different harbours, namely, Matane, St. Felicité, Méchins and Ruisseau à Loutre. There is only $1,350 for repairs to the Méchins wharf, and for the past four years I have asked for an extension of the wharf at this harbour. The engineers have reported favourably on it, and I fail to see why this work should not be done. The department knows perfectly well that vessels between Rimouski and Gaspé have absolutely no shelter, and if this work were done it would afford protection for vessels in times of storm and stress. May I ask my hon. friend if he intends to do anything on this wharf at Matane, besides carrying out the repairs that are to be made?

Mr. McCURDY: If I have conveyed the impression to my hon. friend, or if he has interpreted my words to mean, that there is going to be provision for the wharf he has gathered an incorrect one. I advised my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Fournier) to be hopeful. I will, between now and the time the Supplementary Estimates are tabled, look carefully into the facts regarding the works my hon. friend has mentioned, and see whether or not something can be done.

Mr. PELLETIER: The minister advises the member for Bellechasse to be hopeful. I have been hopeful for quite a number of years, and have got nothing. I feel that it is about time a little work was done in my riding. Forty-five vessels enter the port of Matane, and the tonnage amounts to something like 30,000 tons, but the place is absolutely lacking in proper facilities. I think we ought to have a share of public expenditures. The provinces of British Columbia and Manitoba are getting all the works they want, why should we not get ours? What is the reason for the discrimination? I hope the minister will take this matter up seriously and see that something is done.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): I want to concur in the statements of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) regarding works already completed and in existence—they should not be entirely neglected. In my constituency, which has a coast line of over 100 miles, there are a number of wharves badly in need of repair. I see that two of them are being provided for, but there are others round that coast that are necessary to the fishing community and which need repairs badly. I hope that when the minister receives the report of his engineers on these matters he will give them favourable consideration because the works in question are all of a useful nature and should not be allowed to disappear completely. At the present time some of them are in a very bad state of repair.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa Parliament Buildings: restoration, $1,000,000.

Mr. FIELDING: When may we expect the completion of the work? Has the hon. gentleman formed a date in his mind?

Mr. McCURDY: I think it can be said that so far as the construction of the lower part of the building is concerned—that is, this floor—it will be absolutely completed this year. I am not referring now to the decorations and some fixings of that kind, but to the main construction work; the construction in the main hall, and the balance of the work on this floor should be finished this summer. The construction of the tower will probably go on for at least another year after the present year. There is some slight difference of opinion as between the architect and the builders as to the carrying capacity of the tower. That is, the architect thinks it is better to build more slowly and take at least another year, after this year, in constructing the main tower, whereas the contractors would willingly go ahead and finish the work this year as that is physically possible. In order to be safe, the Parliament Buildings Committee is authorizing the taking of two years at least to construct the tower instead of finishing this summer, as they regard that as the safest plan to follow. Apart from these two things to which I have alluded—the main entrance and the tower —I think the construction work on the buildings is practically complete.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Is the design of the tower finally settled?

Mr. McCURDY: Not finally settled. It is settled a little bit beyond the stage where construction has gone, but a final decision as to the upper part has not yet been reached. It is under consideration, however, and will be decided very soon. Working models are in the office of the Chief Architect just across from the entrance to this building, and I am sure it will interest members of Parliament if they would go to Mr. Pearson's office and view the models which he has there, and at the same time give him the benefit of their advice. The views or suggestions which members of Parliament have, might be of assistance to him in finally evolving the most fitting plans for the upper part of the tower.

Mr. FIELDING: I have noticed men working at night on the tower several times this year which would indicate that there was a desire to rush the work. I am not complaining of the fact, but what is the explanation for taking that course? It must involve extra cost.

Mr. McCURDY: The very thing the hon. gentleman speaks of occurred to me and I made inquiries with regard to the work that is going on. I find that the men are required to work in alternate shifts. They first put up a course of stone and that has to be backed up by a course of concrete. It is impossible to have both gangs working at the same time, so by arrangement one works in the day time and the other follows on and works after ordinary day hours. There is no overtime being paid in connection with the work.

Mr. FIELDING: That would be all right if you wished to rush the work, but the hon. gentleman has stated it is not intended to rush it. Will he tell us what amount has been expended up to the present time?

Mr. MARTIN: Under what system is this work being done, on a percentage basis or by contract?

Mr. McCURDY: By double shifts.

Mr. MARTIN: I know, but on what basis is it being done?

Mr. FIELDING: Of itself it must make an increase in the cost.

Mr. McCURDY: I understood my hon. friend to say that because the work was going on in the evening it was therefore costing more?

Mr. FIELDING: Surely.

Mr. McCURDY: The arrangement by which the men are working in double shifts is not costing any more than if these men worked on alternate days.

Mr. FIELDING: Then the night work is not costing any more than the day work?

Mr. McCURDY: No.

Mr. FIELDING: What has been the total cost up to the present time of the whole thing—building, furniture and everything?

Mr. McCURDY: In round numbers the expenditure up to the present time has been $9,000,000.

Mr. FIELDING: Does the hon. gentleman remember what the original Estimate was? Of course I know it was much below that.

Mr. McCURDY: The original estimate was not for the building we have now. The estimate was based upon a much smaller structure, one story less, and there have been a very large number of changes, including the provision of a central heating plant, all of which have added very much to the cost. I think that if the building had been completed according to the original plans it probably would have cost about $7,000,000, instead of $5,100,000 as estimated. There would have been an overrun of expenditure of probably $1,900,000. As every one knows, the cost of labour and material has advanced from 100 to 140 per cent over the figures that were current when the contract was made, and necessarily that advance has carried with it an increase in the total cost of the building. But it should always be remembered that we are now having a different structure entirely from what we started out to build, and the extra storey and other additions will cost probably from $2,500,000 to $3,000,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): What does my hon. friend estimate will be required to complete the work?

Mr. McCURDY: The total ultimate cost is expected to be something over $10,000,000.

Mr. MICHAUD: Will that include furniture?

Mr. McCURDY: Including furniture and fittings.

Mr. FIELDING: And the tower?

Mr. McCURDY: The tower and everything else.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): What are the names of the committee now in charge?

Mr. McCURDY: The Minister of Public Works, the President of the Privy Council, the Minister of Railways, the Minister of the Interior, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and Senators Robertson and Watson.

Mr. PEDLOW: Did I understand the minister to say that when the building is completed the total cost will not exceed $10,000,000 including furnishings and fittings?

Mr. McCURDY: I said the cost would probably be somewhat in excess of $10,000,000.

Mr. PEDLOW: And we have spent already over $9,000,000?

Mr. McCURDY: No, not quite $9,000,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What will be the height of the tower?

Mr. McCURDY: The exact height has not yet been determined, but it is expected to be from 250 to 280 feet.

Mr. MICHAUD: Will a cell be provided in the tower as in the old building?

Mr. McCURDY: No, but there is a cellar.

Mr. FIELDING: Is it proposed to provide a chime of bells?

[Mr. McCurdy.]

Mr. McCURDY: Provision is being made for a chamber to receive a carillon, should it later on be decided to install one. The committee has not yet decided to make the purchase, but provision is being made so that a carillon can be installed at any time without extra structural expense. I am sure the committee in charge of the Parliament buildings will be glad to have an expression of opinion from the House as to whether a carillon should be installed at present.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Take it up at the beginning of a new session.

Mr. McCURDY: The Senate has already expressed the opinion by resolution that a carillon should be installed without delay, but the committee is not anxious to obligate the Government to pay out immediately more money than is necessary, and therefore has postponed giving a decision for the time being.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): How are the materials purchased?

Mr. McCURDY: They are purchased under the direction of the contractors, Peter Lyall & Sons, Limited, and by tender and contract, and the tenders are submitted to the Parliamentary Building Committee for approval before the contracts are awarded.

Mr. FIELDING: Does this Parliamentary Building Committee meet?

Mr. McCURDY: Yes, it has met on an average perhaps three times a month since I became Minister of Public Works. During the past ten days we have been trying to have a meeting, but every time we called one many of the members of the committee were engaged on other duties, and I do not anticipate another meeting will be held until after prorogation.

Mr. FIELDING: Do all the members attend?

Mr. McCURDY: They attend very well indeed.

Mr. PEDLOW: Is the building stone used in the construction of these buildings all Canadian, and if so, from what part of Canada does the stone come that is used on the exterior walls? I have been asked that question very often by visitors, and would like to know.

Mr. McCURDY: Apart from a small quantity of Ohio stone which was used for trimmings about the doors and windows because it was employed in the old building, the stone used is Canadian stone, obtained partly from Wallace, Nova Scotia, and partly from the Tyndall quarries in Manitoba.

Mr. PEDLOW: The Manitoba stone is used in the interior trim?

Mr. McCURDY: That is known as Nepean stone and comes from the vicinity of Ottawa.

Mr. PEDLOW: But I am referring to the interior trim.

Mr. McCURDY: That comes from the Tyndall quarries.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Where does the marble come from?

Mr. McCURDY: Largely from Missisquoi, Quebec.

Mr. ROSS: What is the inscription on the tower? I cannot make it out.

Mr. McCURDY: I cannot give any information in regard to that.

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): If I understand the minister correctly, there is a difference of opinion between the architect and the builders in regard to the construction of the tower farther up. Has the architect consulted the architects of other towers? Because this is a serious matter. We are running this tower up 300 feet, and I think a great deal of care should be exercised before the construction is gone on with if there is any difference of opinion between the architect and the builders.

Mr. McCURDY: I am afraid I did not make my meaning very clear. What I intended to convey was that while both the builders and the architects are perfectly confident about the enduring qualities of the tower when erected, there was some slight difference of opinion as to whether it would be better to rush the work to completion now or to build 100 or 125 additional feet this summer and allow that to set before going on with the balance in the succeeding year. The committee threw its decision on the side of safety and decided that construction should not proceed very far this year, and that what is built in the next three months shall have time to set before the tower is completed.

Mr. REID (McKenzie): I am obliged to the minister for his explanation, because his former answer left me under the impression that the architect and the builders were not agreed.

Mr. McCURDY: Not at all.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I could not hear distinctly, but I think my hon. friend from Middlesex (Mr. Ross) asked what letters were being inscribed on the tower. I did not catch the minister's answer.

Mr. McCURDY: Yes, he asked that question and I told him I could not give him the information.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Is there any means of finding that out? Because if the inscription should not be placed there this is a good time to stop it.

Mr. McCURDY: Yes, I hope before the committee rises to be able to give my hon. friend the information.

Mr. FIELDING: Has all the compensation to the architect under the original contract been paid?

Mr. McCURDY: No, the payments which are due to the architect have not all been paid. The architect's commissions were to be paid on a fixed sum of $5,000,000, but alterations in the plans took place; a larger and more expensive building has been provided, and on the extra cost the architects are being paid their regular commission.

Mr. MARCIL: Two per cent?

Mr. McCURDY: No, 5½ per cent on these so-called extras, such as the central heating station and the additional features that have gone into the building.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not wish to be understood as expressing any opinion as to what the compensation of these gentlemen should be. They have given us a magnificent piece of work, and I should like to see Mr. Pearson well treated. But my recollection is that when the explanations were last given we were shown that the terms of the contract were such that the architects, under the terms of their contract, got all their money when only half the work was done.

Mr. McCURDY: Under their contract they would be entitled to receive all their commission when only $5,000,000 had been expended on the buildings, and doubtless these payments were made. Since that time they have been drawing their fees as against this additional construction.

Mr. FIELDING: Then it is admitted that they are to receive extra compensation?

Mr. McCURDY: Oh, yes.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not think we were informed of that before. I am not complaining at all; I do not want to be ungenerous. My complaint was that the wording of the contract, I thought, was very clumsy.

Mr. McCURDY: I think that the feeling expressed by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's will be shared by the members of the House generally. I am sure that the Building Committee are unanimous on the question. They feel that we have a very fine building which reflects credit on the architects and builders and is a fitting home for the Houses of Parliament. I am sure that every hon. member would be sorry if those who were producing this building did so at a financial loss to themselves—the labourer is worthy of his hire. There was an exchange of letters at the time the contract was originally given with reference to limiting the commission to payment on the basis of a cost of $5,000,000. But the contract was not completed and the feeling was unanimous in the committee that further compensation should be given. I trust that that course will meet with general approval; to my mind it is eminently fair and reasonable.

Mr. CAHILL: Does my hon. friend think that an architect who is drawing $50,000 a year is suffering very much if he does not get any more than was originally agreed to? I think there should be some definite understanding about what this building is to cost, when it is to be completed, and what amount by way of extras is to be paid to the contractor and to the architect. I am not at all in favour of this idea that these people are to be pampered and that we should spend money in this extravagant way, allowing them 5½ per cent commission on extras because they did not come within a fifty-per-cent guess of what the building would cost. I think that the people of the country would rather condemn the architect who made such a bad guess about his work than agree to pay him 5½ per cent on extras. My hon. friend talks about "magnificent work," and so on, but I have not met any person in this chamber who has said that the chamber itself is a very good one. I have not met any person who has been quite satisfied with it. As for the rest of the building—well, the lobbies on the sides here are such that an ordinary Galician farmer in Western Canada would not house his cattle in them.

[Mr. McCurdy.]

Mr. McCURDY: If my hon. friend's statement of fact were correct, I would agree with him. But it is not true that the architect is drawing personal fees of $50,000 a year. The operations of the architect require the employment of a large staff and the carrying on of an extensive work in the way of designing, drafting of plans, and oversight of construction. It is not a case of one man drawing these architects' fees; he is paid for his organization in keeping up the work. I know that at times the architect's staff has included eight or ten or more highly-paid assistants—so I am advised by the architect himself; and these services cannot be secured without substantial cost. I think in justice to the architects of the building I should make this matter clear to the committee—that these fees include all the drafting and office staff and all expenses entailed in the carrying on of the architect's work. If only a commission on the original $5,000,000 were paid I doubt whether the architect would get back a new dollar for an old; I do not think he would have anything for his own services at all. I do not think any member of the committee would like to see an outcome of that kind. Large business firms engaging the services of architects pay them a certain percentage for their professional work, and often the rate is more than 5½ per cent. I am informed that the architects' fees in connection with the Sun Life Building in Montreal were between 6 and 7 per cent. The percentage paid in the case of the Parliament Buildings is regarded by those who are in the business as not excessive—indeed, it is looked upon as a modest fee. That being the case, is it not a matter of equity that the architect should receive that fee on whatever the cost of the building is? The cost of the building is not decided by the architect himself; it is a matter for the Building Committee. I repeat that this is a pleasing building, it is one that we can be proud of, and that is the view which has been expressed to me by many hon. gentlemen. Hundreds of people who have visited the building have expressed themselves in similar terms. You cannot have a building of this character without paying for it, and I am sure that members of Parliament will be the last to suggest that we be niggardly in the payment of those who have been responsible for planning and designing the magnificent building.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: We were having some information with regard to the building of the tower a few minutes ago, and

I was endeavouring to ask a question. I would not undertake to criticise those who are responsible for the erection of this building; I would imagine they were highly trained and competent men. In view of past experience in building towers and public buildings in this city, one naturally views with a good deal of interest the building of a tower such as is now under construction. When the minister intimated that it was going to reach a height of somewhere in the neighbourhood of 300 feet, one can rest assured that there is going to be a tremendous weight resting upon the foundation of the tower. For several years back I have noticed that the outer foundations of the tower are built of concrete; in fact, I think that is the only part of the foundation of the building which is built of concrete. To the ordinary layman, it would appear that the concrete is not of a very good quality. I may be wrong in my estimation of it; but I have noticed that it has checked and that, on two different occasions, it has been gone over with cement and the checks filled in, in order to keep the wet and frost from working on it. This may be purely superficial; I am not saying that there is any serious defect in it; but to the ordinary layman it would appear to be rather an inferior quality of cement. In view of the fact that a tower which was put up in connection with the museum a few years ago, had to be torn down, and that another tower on the West Block tumbled over after it was put up, I am merely throwing out a hint that it might be well to have that matter thoroughly investigated.

Mr. McCURDY: I have had no intimation of there being any doubt whatever about the soundness of the structure, and I am quite sure that the apprehensions of my hon. friend are ill founded. I have pleasure in giving him that assurance, and I am sure he will be pleased to have it. I have discussed this matter quite recently with the contractors, and they are confident that the foundation will bear the weight of the tower. So confident are they, that, as I say, they wish to go ahead and finish the construction this summer, without allowing the new work much time to set.

In answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Ross) and the hon. member for Halifax, the words which are being inscribed on the tower, some of which are now visible, are as follows. Facing Wellington street:

Give the King thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the King's son.

That is taken from psalm 72 as, no doubt, my hon. friend will recognize. On one side there will appear these words:

Where there is no vision, the people perish.

On the other side:

He shall have Dominion from sea to sea.

Also from psalm 72.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Is that approved by the Parliamentary Committee?

Mr. McCURDY: That detail was not approved by the Parliamentary Committee.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): While one is diffident about expressing an opinion in regard to a matter of this kind offhand, it strikes me as being an absurdity; I do not think it will add anything to the beauty of the tower and it is altogether inappropriate.

Mr. CAHILL: Did I understand the minister to state a few minutes ago that it was not the business of an architect to estimate the cost of a building before he submitted his plans?

Mr. McCURDY: I did not make that statement.

Mr. CAHILL: What did the minister say about an architect not having anything to do with the cost of a building? My understanding is that an architect ordinarily gives an estimate of the cost of a building.

Mr. McCURDY: What I said was simply this, that the architect gave an estimate of the cost of reconstruction of the old building. As my hon. friend probably knows, when the old walls were being removed, it was found that it would not do to put a new structure on them; that they were ill-constructed. Alterations had to be made as a consequence of that, and other alterations were made including the addition of a complete storey to the building, with the result that the cost is much larger because you have a much larger building. The additional area which has been secured under the revised plans is half as large as the area in the original building. It is not surprising, therefore, that we have to pay more money for the building.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): When the plan was changed, did the architect not make a new estimate of what the building he proposed to build would cost?

Mr. McCURDY: No new estimate was made.

Mr. McMASTER: I have already expressed myself as to the lavish expenditure which has gone on in connection with this building, and I do not wish to insist upon this point. A matter which I would like to bring to the attention of the minister is the great draughts which are found in this building.

Mr. FIELDING: The drafts on the treasury.

Mr. McMASTER: They are not draughts, they are hurricanes. The draughts that I refer to are those which are very much felt in some of the seats in this chamber. I know that the health of some members has suffered from exposure to these draughts. I would ask the minister if he would have some expert on ventilation examine our ventilation system and see whether these draughts cannot be overcome. They are really a very serious matter to some of our members.

Mr. McCURDY: During the holiday I shall direct the attention of the architect to this particular feature, or defect, of the building.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Have these inscriptions been put on the tower?

Mr. McCURDY: They are being put on the tower now.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): I do not raise any question, but it will be raised sometime or another, regarding an inscription in French.

Mr. McCURDY: This is a matter that has not come before the Parliamentary Buildings Committee. I knew, half an hour ago, just as much about it as other members of the House. I have made inquiries since, and the intimation which I have is the result of my inquiries. I solicited an expression of opinion from the House and I am getting it now.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): The two languages being official, the point will certainly be raised at some time or other, and it might as well be considered now.

Mr. FIELDING: While I have no objection to the words myself, I can quite understand the point will be raised, and for that reason the hon. gentleman will be well advised not to put any such words on at all. I am not objecting to them; but they would be objected to in other quarters, and we have questions enough of that kind without adding another one.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): I should like that attention be drawn to the acoustics of this chamber. It was a great disappointment to myself that the acoustics are not better. This matter has been discussed for a number of years, and every time that the Estimates for the construction of the Parliament buildings has come before this House, the question has been drawn to the attention of the Government. We were assured that we had the best architects that could be found anywhere in Canada attending to this matter, but no one will say that the hearing properties of this chamber are good. There is something the matter with them, and that is one of the greatest difficulties as regards the chamber. The chamber is very beautiful and comfortable in many ways with the exception of those draughts; but we want to hear one another. That is essential, and in this chamber one cannot hear as well as one should hear. I have a notion that one reason for the trouble is the way in which the ceiling is arranged and the space that exists between the walls and the ceiling. I am not sure whether that makes a difference or not; but I should like the minister to take an interest in this question and, before these architects are paid for the work they have done, they should be compelled to give us a chamber in which we can hear one another. This matter of acoustics must be a scientific question that a skilled architect ought to be able to work out. There are buildings elsewhere in the world that are perfect in that respect, and if there is any building or chamber that we ought to have perfect in that respect, if possible, it is the House of Commons. This is where the battle of freedom is to be fought in the years to come, and it cannot be intelligently fought unless the representatives of the people can hear one another when they speak. This is a very important matter, and if anything further can be done to make this chamber a place where you can hear men speak, I trust my hon. friend will give the matter his attention, and endeavour to have the acoustics improved during the recess. I do not think it can yet be too late to take steps to remedy the present condition.

Mr. McCURDY: I am sure my hon. friend has noticed an improvement in the acoustic properties of the chamber over the previous session of Parliament. I have noticed a very distinct improvement myself. Experiments have taken place, the closing of an entrance at one end, for instance, and alterations of a minor character with the idea of improving the acoustics of the chamber. It is, as my hon. friend has said, a scientific question, but he also knows that acoustics is not an exact science. You cannot get the result that you propose in any given case. I can assure him, however, that the attention of the architects will be drawn to this matter during the recess.

Mr. KEEFER: Is not this largely a question for ourselves to tackle? There are certain gentlemen whose voices are clearly heard throughout the chamber. When the Right Hon. Mr. Lowther, the Speaker of the British House, addressed us the other day his voice could be heard in every part of the chamber. My hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) speaks in a low voice, yet his voice penetrates everywhere. You can always hear the voice of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding). The trouble with some of us is that we mumble our words and talk in such low tones that I defy any one within three or four feet to hear what is being said. I think it is time for some of us, instead of criticising the architects, to begin and criticise ourselves.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I understand that a little under $9,000,000 has been expended on this building, and I heard the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) say that that was a very lavish expenditure. Personally, I think we have got very good value indeed in this building, as building goes nowadays. I visited the province of Manitoba only a few months ago and went through their building, which is to accommodate only a comparatively few members compared with ours, being a building for one province only with a comparatively small population, yet that building has cost almost as much as this.

Mr. CAMPBELL: That building is used not simply for chamber purposes; it is largely an office building.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I went all through it and I saw the nature of it. It is nothing like the extent of this building. I repeat, we have got very good value in this building. I think the money has been well expended. When we consider that this building is to stand for at least a hundred years, perhaps two hundred—it is built of the most durable material and should last a great many more years than that—I cannot agree with the hon. member for Brome that there has been a lavish expenditure, and if the building can be completed for $10,000,000, the cost cannot be called excessive at the present time.

With regard to acoustics, I believe that the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Keefer) has given us one of the main reasons why gentlemen are not heard in this chamber. They do not exert themselves when they speak. I have never heard any one complain that he could not hear the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster), and there are others who can always be heard—sometimes we hear more than we wish to. It is largely a matter of exerting the voice and trying to make people hear.

I would like to draw the minister's attention to the acoustics of another room, much smaller than this chamber, and that is the Railway Committee room. It is almost impossible to hear a speaker there. You can hear the voice, but the words all seem to run together, and the result is that a great many sentences are lost entirely. It is not because the room is too large, not because the speakers are not speaking up well, but there is something wrong in that room which certainly needs attention.

As to the tower, I hope that the very greatest care will be taken in its erection. I have seen one tower fall—in the western block, a few years ago. I happened to be looking out of my window in the direction of the tower, and saw it fall. And another tower was torn down, at the museum. I think we had far better build a tower that is safe than try to reach up too much towards the sky.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: "Safety first."

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Towers are a great mark for lightning, and we would not like to see a thunderbolt strike the tower of the Dominion House of Commons; that would be a calamity. I have no doubt that the minister has warned all those concerned that the first requisite is safety, and I hope that that is the policy that will be pursued in building the tower. So far as the committee is concerned, I think those that have had to do with it have given us excellent value. I do not know what my hon. friend from Pontiac (Mr. Cahill) is accustomed to over the river, when he says that part of this building might be used for housing cattle. This building appears to me to be on very generous proportions, and all the appliances are of the best, and quite as good, I think, as hon. members are accustomed to in their own home town, if not a little better. Therefore, I think, we ought to be well satisfied, and I hope that the building will be completed in as good a fashion as the work has been done up to date.

Mr. BELAND: Many hon. members have complained of the acoustics of this chamber. There is another room in this building in which the acoustics are too good, and the floor too sonorous altogether, and that is the library. I have never been able to understand, in the twenty years I have been in Parliament, why the floor of the library should not be covered with rubber or matting of some kind. It is almost impossible for a member to work in one of the alcoves of the library because of the noise of people who are walking through. This defect could be remedied in twenty hours or less. It is the only library I know of where the noise is so disturbing to frequenters. If this matter comes under the minister's jurisdiction, I hope he will appropriate the necessary sum of money to remedy this defect. Hon. members and senators on the first and second floors can hear the noise when the employees of the library are walking around to get books from the shelves or replace books that have been returned. This is an important matter, and I hope that the minister will give it his attention.

Mr. McCURDY: The question raised by my hon. friend has not, of course, come before the committee, because the floor of the library is just as it was in the olden days. I have no doubt that the reason it has continued so has been because those in charge of the library hesitated to cover up the very fine inlaid floor.

Mr. BELAND: It is no longer pretty.

Mr. McCURDY: Well, in some eyes it is. Possibly there may have been poor judgment on the part of those in charge, but I have noticed on many occasions the drawback to which the hon. member refers. The library is not directly under the Parliamentary Buildings Committee, nor under my direction; it is a joint concern of the Speakers of the Commons and Senate. I shall have the matter brought to their attention, and if I can personally facilitate the rectifying of the evil mentioned I shall certainly see that this is done before Parliament reassembles.

[Mr. Cockshutt.]

Mr. CAHILL: I notice in the Auditor General's Report, volume 3, page V-18, the commission to Peter Lyall & Sons is 4.4 per cent amounting to $105,613; and the paylists paid by the department amount to $65,600. What does that mean?

Mr. McCURDY: That would be the contractor's paylist paid through the Department of Public Works out of a vote similar to this made previously.

Mr. CAHILL: That is not the question. If the minister will look at the report he will find that there is mentioned architect's commission of 4.4 per cent on P. Lyall's bill, $105,000 odd, and paylists paid by the department, of $65,000. There is a commission on that amount also. What is the explanation of that?

Mr. MOWAT: While the minister is looking up this information I might say a word in regard to the acoustics of this Chamber. I went into the Railway Committee room a couple of days ago with Mr. Pearson, the architect, and we tested the acoustics there. We both spoke in raised voices, and he said that the reason why the hearing was so bad there was that the room was not yet fully furnished. The room must have a mat he said, and he added that there was no doubt at all that hearing would improve when the room was properly furnished. He also thinks that this chamber possesses as good acoustic properties as any he has ever known, and he quotes Mr. Lowther, the Speaker of the British House, who spoke here the other day, as saying that in his opinion he had never spoken in a building or in a room which had better acoustic properties than this chamber. The hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) who raised this question almost disproved his own point, for every word he said was perfectly audible over here as far off as I am. The point I wish to make is this: hon. gentlemen have not apparently the mental attitude, when speaking, that is necessary if they wish to be heard. They get up, and instead of speaking, converse across the floor with somebody else and only a few members can hear them. If hon. gentlemen, every time they got up, would make a speech instead of indulging in what is nothing but a private conversation, there would be no difficulty about hearing them and there would be no complaint about the chamber. I think that this is a splendidly proportioned chamber, possessing first-rate acoustic properties, and if hon. gentlemen would always observe the rule which has been laid down by the architect, never to address any one in particular but to look at the clock and speak at the clock, they would make themselves heard and there would be no trouble about the hearing in the chamber.

Mr. McCURDY: I can answer the question asked by the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill). In the Auditor General's Report there is an item which reads:

> Architect's commission of 4.4 per cent on P. Lyall's bill of February, 1919, $105,613.10, pay lists paid by department $65,660.15. Lyall's commission on bill and pay lists, $13,701.86, and voucher of R. W. Hunt & Company, $21.67; $8,139.85; paid as follows: J. A. Pearson, $6,844.88.

—or 4.4 per cent commission on these disbursements made on account of the building. I do not know what my hon. friend's question is, but if he wants to know whether Mr. Pearson's commission is on the total expenditure, the answer is, yes.

Mr. CAHILL: On his own commission as well?

Mr. McCURDY: No; not on his own commission.

Mr. CAHILL: The minister should make an attempt to get from the contractors an approximate estimate of what they believe it will take to finish the building, and the time in which the work will be done, so that we shall not go on from year to year spending more money without any knowledge as to when we are going to be through or what the total cost will be. If it is a case of the architect making suggestions to the contractor and the contractor making suggestions to the architect for further expenditures, of course, it goes without saying that we shall never complete the building and these gentlemen will draw pay from the Dominion of Canada for the rest of their natural lives. The Government, so far, have not made any statement as to what additional fees they expect to pay the architect, or when he will finish making new plans for additions to the building.

Mr. McCURDY: I have already covered the points raised by my hon. friend. I have given a rough estimate of the probable cost of the construction work that remains to be done, and I have also indicated approximately when it will be done. I was grieved to hear the hon. member's reflections on the architects and builders. I have been in fairly intimate touch with them during the past six months and I have an entirely different impression of them both. I think the original Parliamentary Committee—of course, I was not on the committee and therefore cannot take any credit for what they did—made an excellent selection when they decided upon the present architects, and they made an equally excellent selection in Messrs. Lyall & Sons. As far as my observation goes, these gentlemen have all been satisfactory, and I do not think there has ever been any desire on the part of any of them to continue the work unnecessarily. They would all be glad to have the job finished and be about other more lucrative business. I am sure that is the feeling of the contractors and the architects.

Mr. CAHILL: Does the architect say that he is practically paying out what he is receiving in the hire of other architects? Does he not get this amount for preparing the plans and looking after them, whereas the country pays for the supervision?

Mr. McCURDY: No, that is not the arrangement at all. The architect's duties are to draw the plans, oversee the construction, and see that the contractors carry out their work satisfactorily. What I did say was that the architect, in order to function properly, must have a very considerable staff about him, his own office staff. I am advised that at one time he had fifteen or sixteen employees in his office on his own pay roll. who must be paid out of whatever commission he would get on his work as architect of these buildings. What I pointed out before was, that these architect's fees were not personal payments to the architect but payment for the architect's services, which includes the services of his whole organization. It has been represented to me by the architect himself that if the architect's fees were to be limited to the fees on the original estimate of $5,000,000, he would actually be out of pocket a large sum of money, instead of making a reasonable profit on the buildings, as he would in all fairness be entitled to.

Mr. CURRIE: Criticism of the buildings is a little out of place until they are entirely completed. The work is not yet finished. But it is not unusual for undertakings of this nature to receive considerable criticism. The party of hon. gentlemen opposite is the one that has always been prominent in decrying the efforts of this country to erect striking and noteworthy buildings. In this connection I wish to call the attention of the committee to a certain historical document, a copy of which I hold in my hands. Everybody knows that the buildings which were destroyed by fire were very good buildings. But there is no one who has had occasion to use the former buildings and compare them with the present structure but must come to the conclusion that the comparison is all in favour of the latter as regards beauty, accommodation, and interior arrangement are concerned. Now, the document I refer to was written by a gentleman named George Brown—Hon. George Brown to be perfectly accurate—in 1864, to Sir John A. Macdonald, at that time the Hon. John A. Macdonald, and it had reference to the former buildings, then under construction. After hearing this letter hon. gentlemen will come to the conclusion that history repeats itself, only the language used in 1864 was more mild and gentle than that which has been employed on the present occasion.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: What is the date of the letter?

Mr. CURRIE: The letter reads as follows:

TORONTO, August 15, 1864.

My dear Sir,—McDougall and I made an examination of the Ottawa buildings on Friday night, and we came to the conclusion that it was utterly impossible to take possession of the departmental buildings this Fall. By paying an enormous sum—say $75,000 to $100,000 extra to the contractors—the thing might be done in December, but it would be at the risk of the floors bursting up, and sickness to all who take possession of the rooms. What can be done is, to have the departments moved early in the year and Parliament summoned on the first of May, if that is thought to be better than another session at Quebec; it is open for adoption. But removal this fall would bring great discredit on us all.

I write all this very unwillingly. It would suit me vastly better to go at once to Ottawa, and I know how anxious you all are about it. but it was impossible to come to any other conclusion, after seeing the works and conversing with Mr. Page and the contractors.

The buildings are magnificent; the style, the extent, the site, the workmanship, are all surpassingly fine. But they are just 500 years in advance of the times. It will cost half the revenue of the province to light them and heat them and keep them clean. Such monstrous folly was never perpetrated in this world before. But as we are in for it, I do think the idea of stopping short of completion is out of the question. I go in for tower, rotunda, fountains, and every conceivable embellishment. If we are to be laughed at for our folly, at least let us not be ridiculed for a half-finished pile. I go in for making it a superb folly that will bring visitors from all countries to see a work they can't see elsewhere. To say the truth, there is nothing in London, Paris or Washington approaching to it.

[Mr. Currie.]

The Governor General's residence is a miserable little house, and the grounds those of an ambitious country squire. To patch up that building will cost more than a new one, and 10 or 12 acres on the river ought to be taken into the grounds.

In haste,

Yours sincerely,

GEO. BROWN.

Hon. J. A. Macdonald.

That letter was addressed to the Honourable, afterwards Sir John Macdonald, in 1864 when they were erecting the Parliament buildings which the party of my hon. friends opposite said were five hundred years in advance of the time. Now if those buildings were five hundred years in advance of the time, I would not be surprised if my hon. friends opposite were to say that the present buildings are a thousand years ahead of the time. I would commend the letter I have just read to the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill). I have had the honour of seeing a great number of magnificent buildings, but I do not think there are very many parliament buildings in the world which can compare with the buildings here; certainly there is not any in Great Britain or in France to compare with them. There may be at Washington, but the style of architecture there is very different. There are two buildings in Washington which may compare with the Ottawa buildings—one the Capitol building and the other the Library—but both are of different architecture. There is no gothic building in the world which compares in magnificence, size and architecture with the Ottawa buildings.

At Six o'clock the Committee rose and the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

DIVORCE—ALPHONSE LeMOYNE DE MARTIGNY

House again in committee on Bill No. 120, for the relief of Alphonse LeMoyne de Martigny.—Mr. Ross.—Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When this Bill was last before the committee the preamble had been read, the consideration thereof had been postponed, and we were considering clause 1. Shall the clause carry?

Mr. DENIS: Before this Bill is allowed to pass I wish to offer some considerations to the committee which I hope will be taken as a sincere expression of opinion on this matter and not as having been given utterance to with the object of taking up time. I may say in beginning that I have not the least interest in this matter. I do not know the man, I do not know the wife—I have never seen them—and I am not speaking on their behalf tonight. I am speaking in the interests of justice and on what I believe to be a principle which must be sustained before the committee and the House.

In examining this case I will first go into the particular circumstances connected with it and then deal with the general principles which should govern a proceeding of this kind. Taking the facts of this particular case, we find that the marriage was contracted in the year 1909, that in the same year a child was born as an issue of that marriage, that in the year 1912 the wife separated from her husband on the ground of incompatibility—according to the testimony given—and that in the year 1913 the husband left for California. In 1914 he came back to Montreal, and at that time he had an interview with his wife when he claimed his wife admitted that she was living with a man by the name of Perry. Now, Sir, the first consideration which must strike this committee is the fact that this man in the year 1912, deliberately abandoned his wife and child on the ground of incompatibility. The following year he did not seem to care at all what became of his family, and returning in 1914 from California, he began to be interested in his wife—not for the welfare of the latter, or for the welfare of his child, but simply to find out what the conduct of his wife was at that time. It must be well understood that, according to the testimony given, there is no proof that this man ever gave his wife any money to support her; he simply abandoned her to her fate and began making the inquiries I have indicated in the year 1914. Now de Martigny claims that his wife admitted to him her culpability in 1914. I do not think, Sir, that under the circumstances his testimony should be taken as being the truth; first, because his version lacks plausibility; secondly, on account of his own conduct; and thirdly, on account of the judgments which were afterwards rendered by the Superior Court in Montreal in this same issue. The husband pretended that his wife had committed adultery, but when he brought action against her before the courts of justice later on this action was dismissed because there was no evidence to prove the allegation against this woman. The action in question was brought before the Superior Court. Furthermore, I have a copy of the judgment rendered by Mr. Justice Duclos in Montreal on April 23, 1919, according to which not only was the claim of the woman sustained for alimony to the extent of $100 a month, but the judge accorded her an additional payment of $25 a month, making a total alimony of $125 a month. In the reasons for this judgment the judge says that in such a case, where the husband had the means of providing for a mistress, he should be in a position to pay his wife and child $125 a month alimony. I am not giving this as my own opinion; I am citing a statement from the judgment rendered by Mr. Justice Duclos. Therefore, I take it as equitable that the testimony of the husband on that point should be set aside, and if it is set aside—that is, if the admission of the woman which was supposed to have been made in 1914 is set aside—there is nothing left in the testimony of the husband sufficient to condemn the wife. What else is there in the record? We find that an old woman of 82 years of age named Azilda Fournier was a servant in the house for several months. She does not testify that she ever saw anything wrong there. She says that this man Perry lived in the same house as Mrs. de Martigny, but there is nothing to show that anything of a doubtful nature, or anything in the nature of adultery was committed; there is no evidence to that effect whatever. Another witness was Justine Brousseau, dressmaker, who was also there, and testified that the man and woman lived in the same house but she said nothing as to improper conduct. Finally, there is the evidence of the janitor, Moise Leboeuf, who testified to the same effect; that is to say, that nothing wrong happened in the house between the two, at least to his knowledge.

Mr. EDWARDS: Was it the same house in every case?

Mr. DENIS: No, the woman and the man lived in different houses. They lived in the same house, it is quite true, but there is no proof whatever that anything wrong ever took place between them. If anybody does say that anything of the kind took place he must take for granted something which was not proved in the case. From the judgment rendered by the Senate the inference apparently is drawn that under the circumstances something improper must have occurred, and consequently the woman must have been guilty. I do not share that opinion, but even if that were true I would not take much interest in the fact as to whether the woman might be guilty or not. I say that in cases like this a divorce should not be allowed. It should not be allowed because of the conduct of the husband. It should not be allowed because—

Mr. FRIPP: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I submit to the committee that, under a ruling made by this House four years ago in the Vineberg case, the decision of a committee such as the Private Bills Committee cannot be reviewed by this House, otherwise the usefulness of such committee would be at an end. The House must accept the decision of the committee which has dealt with the particular case to which my hon. friend refers; and the only course open to my hon. friend is to move that the Bill be referred back to that committee to take further evidence; he cannot argue, as he proposes to argue, that the committee did not come to a proper conclusion. If that were true, then every bill that is passed upon by the Private Bills Committee would be subject to review by the House and the committee practically would not function at all. I submit it is not open to my hon. friend to take the position that he does; he must accept the decision of the committee in this case, or move to refer the case back to take further evidence.

Mr. DENIS: On the point of order I wish to state that the questions of fact which were submitted to the Private Bills Committee, or the Senate, are questions which are pertinent to this committee to look into. I submit that we have a right to go into those questions of fact, examine them, and pass judgment upon them. If the opinion just given by the hon. member for Ottawa was well founded the decisions rendered by the Private Bills Committee, or by the Senate, on questions of fact, would be supreme. In that case it would be unnecessary for a bill such as this to be brought before the House as we would have to take it for granted that the moment the Senate, or the Private Bills Committee, had passed a bill the House had nothing more to do with it. I submit such is not the case.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. DENIS: No, I have not finished; I was arguing the point of order.

[Mr. Denis.]

The CHAIRMAN: Does any other hon. gentleman desire to speak upon the point of order?

Mr. STEIN: I think my hon. friend from Joliette has given a good reason why the point of order should not be accepted by you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. gentleman who raised the point of order argues that instructions may be given to the Private Bills Committee to allow further evidence to be adduced, but that no argument can be brought forward in this House against the evidence that has already been heard by the Senate. Well, I respectfully submit that this is a mistake. An hon. member who wishes to move that instructions should be given to the Private Bills Committee to allow further evidence to be adduced must discuss the facts already presented in order to sustain his motion. I do not think, therefore, that the point of order can be maintained.

The CHAIRMAN: The point of order raised by the hon. member for Ottawa is, that this committee has no right to review the evidence adduced before the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and that the decision arrived at by that committee must be accepted, or the Bill be referred back for further consideration. I am sorry that I cannot sustain the point of order raised by the hon. member. If the committee of the whole House had no right to review the facts and the evidence there would certainly be no reason whatever for submitting the Bill to this committee, because a bill can only be referred back to any Select Standing Committee by the House itself. I have a distinct recollection that on more than one occasion a Bill of the same nature as that which is now before the committee was voted upon in committee and the different clauses of the Bill rejected after a very full discussion of the evidence adduced before the committee of the Senate, and this in spite of the fact that the bills had been favorably considered by the Committee on Private Bills.

Mr. DENIS: Your decision, Mr. Chairman, being that this committee has the right to go into the evidence, I think if one reads the evidence carefully it will appear that it is very doubtful indeed whether the woman is culpable. Under the circumstances she should be allowed to have the benefit of the doubt; therefore we must take it for granted that in this case the wife is not guilty. Then the question arises: if she is not guilty, why did she not appear before the committee to defend herself? Well, there are several answers to that question. In the first instance, it may be said that she has already successfully defended herself before the courts of her province. In the second place, it is not very pleasant for a woman to appear before a committee and expose the facts relating to a case of this kind, and she might, therefore, choose not to appear. But the third, and, perhaps chief reason, might be that she is in collusion with her husband; that both are desirous that the divorce should be granted and she, not being guilty, would let her husband appear before the committee and contend that she was guilty in order that, to meet the desire of both, the divorce be granted. It is well known that no divorce can be granted in a case where collusion exists. In this particular case we have to come to one of two conclusions. Either the wife is not guilty, and for personal reasons she did not want to appear, or she did not want to appear because of collusion with her husband. In view of these facts, particularly in view of the fact that the culpability of the woman has not been proved or at least has been only very doubtfully established, I think that the divorce should not be granted.

But apart from the reasons concerning this particular case there are other general principles which enter into a consideration of the matter. We have no divorce law in Canada; consequently, there is no direction to guide Parliament in its decision to grant or not to grant divorces. In the province of Quebec we have a law which provides for separation from bed and board. That law declares that under certain circumstances the wife has the right to ask for separation from bed and board, and that under other circumstances the husband may apply for a like separation. When, therefore, there is a law defining the circumstances and conditions under which separation can be granted—and in this case I compare separation to divorce —the matter is made very much easier. But as I say, we have no divorce law and the only direction, if there be one, is in what I might call the unwritten law under which Parliament grants divorces. And what is the basis of that unwritten law? When the law is written the basis is the letter of the law, but in a case like this, where the law is unwritten, the basis is justice, honour, religion and conscience. The direction which Parliament must follow is indicated in these four words. I would be very careful in a case like this to avoid raising any question of race or religion, and I must point out that I am pleading this question on the point of law and not on the point of race, religion or prejudice. On the point of law, then, I say that this is a case from the province of Quebec. It is a case in which Catholics are concerned, and I should hesitate to say that the principles which apply to Catholics in a matter of this kind should be set aside or not taken into account. When the case comes from Ontario, where the parties are Protestant, the law of that province and the religious principles of the parties must be taken into account. Similarly when the case comes from Quebec, the religion of the parties, the law of the province of Quebec and the conditions which exist there should be taken into account. However, I say this only en passant, because I think I can safely put my case on a more general basis; I think I can look at it from the broader point of view, although I would not like to pass over the point which I have just put forward. In a case like this, then, I can safely place on the same footing the Protestant minister and the Catholic priest, and I think I can invoke the principles of both the minister and the priest in contending that a divorce should not be granted in a case like this. We all acknowledge the sanctity of marriage; it has been recognized by all creeds, by all races, and at all times in the history of the world. We are all aware of the fact that Protestant ministers hold just as strong opinions against divorce as do Catholic priests.

Starting from the point that Parliament is supreme and that Parliament is called upon to pass an Act for the relief of Alphonse LeMoyne de Martigny, I ask: Is this a case where relief should be given? Is this a case where the plaintiff is entitled to relief? The plaintiff in this case is not entitled to relief because he does not deserve it. When a man has lost his wife, not through being guilty himself, when a man has been separated from his wife and the conduct of the wife has been bad, that man can come before Parliament and ask for relief, and Parliament in its wisdom will decide whether or not relief will be granted. In many cases relief will be granted where the husband deserves that relief; but in this particular case relief cannot be granted because the conduct of the husband is much worse than that of the wife, even assuming that her conduct has been bad, which has not been proven in the present case. When a man's conduct is that of this man, as was proven and declared before this committee, the last time the Bill was before the committee, and more particularly, as was pointed out by my hon. friend from Kamouraska (Mr. Stein), when the conduct of the man has been proven to be such as to be much worse in the present case than the conduct of the wife, even if the wife were guilty, I say that the man is not entitled to relief. What is he seeking relief for? The only relief which Parliament can give to him is relief from paying a pension of $125 a month to his wife and child. Surely he does not want relief to get married again, because, according to his own admission, he is living with another woman and, since he has been separated from his wife, he has been living with several other women. What relief does he want? He wants to get rid of his wife, to stop paying her $125 a month, and what is much worse, he wants to get rid of the moral and natural obligation of paying a pension to his child. That is the only relief which can be granted in the present case. The principle upon which I stand is that in every case where the husband is more guilty than the wife, he should not be granted relief. Before a man can come before Parliament and ask for relief, he must be guiltless of wrong doing. Then—and this is my last word—are we going to forget that through granting relief to this man, who does not deserve such relief, we are going to declare that the mother of this child is a bad woman? This young girl, twelve years of age, will be told in years to come, simply because Parliament wanted to grant relief to the father, which relief the father did not deserve, that her mother was a bad woman and that judgment to that effect was given by the Parliament of Canada.

Therefore, to summarise my opinion in a few words, I say: Taking into consideration all the circumstances, I submit the case has not been proven, or at all events the proof which has been offered is so doubtful that I would not pass judgment upon it and say that the wife is guilty. In the second place, I say: Even should the wife be guilty, the husband cannot ask for relief from Parliament because he himself is more guilty than his wife, and in a case like this where there is no written law upon which the husband can base his claim, no written direction to Parliament, Parliament in its wisdom and discretion and by all the means in its power should say to this man that, until he has proven himself to have clean hands, he cannot come to Parliament and ask a divorce from his wife, simply because that will release him from paying a pension to his wife and child, which pension he is bound, by all laws of right and nature, to pay.

Mr. HOCKEN: This is a very curious situation. We find a man, who is a French Canadian, getting a divorce through the Senate Committee, and all his compatriots in this House are opposed to his getting the relief for which he is asking. My hon. friend (Mr. Denis) proclaims the doctrine that because this man is a Roman Catholic, he should not get a divorce. I had an idea that the laws of this country granted to a Roman Catholic the same rights as to a Protestant.

Mr. DENIS: I would not like my words to be distorted. I never said anything of the kind. I said, on the point of law, that we should not lose sight of the fact that these people are Catholic. I did not for a minute say that this point of law was supreme; that it should be the test of the case. I said that that was one consideration that should weigh in the balance.

Mr. HOCKEN: That is advanced by the hon. member as the reason why this couple should not be granted a divorce. This man is entitled to the same rights and privileges as any other citizen in Canada, and I do not see how we can get away from that. He finds himself in this position; he finds himself required by a decree of the court to pay $100 a month alimony to his wife who, he declares,—and she does not deny it,—is living in adultery with another man and has been doing so for a number of years. That being the case, the man undoubtedly should be given relief, because only in this way can he accomplish two things. Only in this way he can escape payment of alimony to a woman who apparently does not deserve alimony, and as she has another man providing for her, why should he pay alimony? In the next case, if he is granted a divorce—

Mr. PARENT: Where does the hon. gentleman see in the evidence that there is another man providing for the lady in question?

Mr. HOCKEN: I do not think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. PARENT: Where does he see that in the evidence?

Mr. HOCKEN: That is the statement made.

Mr. PARENT: By whom? It is a bare and unwarranted statement.

Mr. HOCKEN: The other side of the question is this, that if this man is granted a divorce, he is then in a position to get married and to live lawfully with a woman. He is entitled under the law of the country to get married again if this Bill goes through.

Mr. MARCILE: Never.

Mr. HOCKEN: The hon. member says, "never". I quite understand that if the man remains a member of the Roman Catholic Church, he cannot do that. The law, however, of the church is one thing and the law of the State is another; but as regards granting a divorce and putting a man in a position to marry again, the law of the State is supreme. Whatever penalty the ecclesiastical authorities like to impose is entirely within their discretion—and I am not going to question their right to do that. I do not see any reason in the world why the man's race or religion should debar him from having the same rights and privileges as any other citizen of Canada. The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Denis), who has just sat down, points out that by the laws of the province of Quebec a man can get separation, but that separation does not save him from paying alimony. To escape paying alimony and to undertake proper relations with some other woman, this man has to get a divorce, and I think he is entitled to that. The hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Parent), speaking on this question the other day, said that the woman had not been convicted of adultery, and he read part of the evidence taken at a trial in 1912 to prove that point. I submit that there was plenty of time between 1912 and the present day for this woman to be guilty.

Mr. PARENT: If the hon. gentleman will allow me to correct him, I said that in 1919 the same evidence was brought forward, and additional alimony was granted the lady in question. Is that sufficient for the hon. gentleman?

Mr. HOCKEN: I would say that there was still plenty of time between 1919 and 1921 for the woman to be guilty. An application for a divorce was made, and this woman was notified to appear and give her evidence in rebuttal of the most serious charge that can be laid against any woman, but she took no steps whatever to clear herself of the charge before the proper tribunal set up by this country. I do not think under the circumstances that we can assume that the woman is innocent. It would be an extraordinary thing if we could. If we are going to review the evidence, we ought to have a divorce committee of this House. For us to refuse to accept the evidence that was presented by witnesses sworn before the Senate Divorce Committee, and then without re-examining the witnesses, to say that they did not tell the truth, that the facts are not as stated, and that we will therefore throw the Bill out, seems to me to be an extraordinary proceeding. I do not think there would be any justification for that at all.

The other ground stated the other day why this divorce should not be granted was that there was collusion. The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) argued that because he suspected collusion the Bill should be put over. Now, the Senate Committee was better able to decide that question than this House, because they had all the witnesses before them, and were able to examine them on that point as well as on any other point. Surely we are not going to say that the Senate Committee, which heard the evidence of these witnesses, is not in a better position to judge whether there was collusion than we are. I think it is an extraordinary thing that an attempt should be made to prevent this Bill going through when scores of Bills of this kind go through this House without any more or any less evidence of collusion than in this case.

Mr. PARENT: Does the hon. member know of any other case where evidence was offered before the Private Bills Committee with the view of contradicting the evidence taken by the Senate Divorce Committee?

Mr. HOCKEN: No, but I say that the gentleman who appeared before the Private Bills Committee did not appear for the woman.

Mr. PARENT: Suppose he appeared for the sake of society.

Mr. HOCKEN: He did not come there representing anybody but himself; he said so. I do not know that we should attach much weight to representations made in that way by a man who was not sworn, but who simply appeared before the committee to make a statement. He said that he was a relative, and that he had the interests of the child at heart. I do not think that his statement should take precedence over the sworn evidence taken by the Senate Divorce Committee.

I do not agree with the doctrine of the hon. member for Joliette, that this Parliament should act on the unwritten law rather than the written law. We have a method of getting divorce in this country, and that method has been followed in this case. Everything has been properly done, the proper tribunal has given a decision, and now when the case comes to us, surely we are not going to go all over it again. If we attempt to do that, we must call the witnesses, and appoint a committee to hear the evidence that has already been taken by the Senate Committee. It is quite immaterial to me what happens to Mr. Martigny; I would not know him from a side of sole leather; but if we are going to have equality under the law, surely this man is entitled to the same consideration as scores of other men whose applications for divorce have been granted by this Parliament. It is perfectly absurd to say that because the man is a French Canadian he should not have the same rights as a British Canadian.

Mr. PARENT: Who says that?

Mr. HOCKEN: I am fighting for you fellows.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The question is not whether this gentleman is entitled to equal rights with a British Canadian. We live under a constitution that gives equal rights to all Canadians and British subjects. The question is whether in the present instance the facts and the procedure justify the granting of a divorce. Divorce, like separation from bed and board, is always a very serious matter, as it affects the fundamental rights of the family and of society. The family is the basis of society, and if you destroy the family by the granting of divorce, or separation from bed and board, without scrutinizing very closely the facts of the case, you are not playing fair or doing the manly thing towards your conscience and towards society.

In the present case, I would call upon my hon. friend to read very closely the evidence which has been adduced in the other chamber, and as a gentleman who claims to be a Christian, as I do, he will find that the evidence does not justify the granting of a divorce in this case. If, as was stated the other day, in the courts of this land, where applications for separations are heard, the judges found that the facts did not justify granting a separation, I say there is much less ground for the committee of the Senate granting a divorce in this case. At all events, that is the business of that committee. But this House has also a committee, the Committee on Private Bills, and I think that we are entitled by jurisprudence to ask that the evidence be heard before the Private Bills Committee.

I have said on another occasion that there has been collusion in this case, and I say now, there has been collusion. Further, Mr. Chairman, I object as a member of this House to being canvassed on such a serious matter as this or on any other matter coming before this Parliament, and there has been a systematized canvassing of members for the granting of this divorce. I object to the canvassing of members on any question, because members of Parliament must act as free agents; but if there should be objection in any one particular instance it is in the case of divorces. It is nothing short of a scandal that members should be button-holed and canvassed for the purpose of giving to a young lothario at large the divorce which he is so anxious to secure. The evidence in the case does not justify the granting of the divorce. There is collusion in the case, and it seems to me that when this statement is made there should be no desire to rush the passage of the Bill. We are all sitting in this case as judges on the bench, and when a judge informs the court, first, that he has been canvassed, and secondly, that he can prove that there is collusion in the case, I do not see why his brother judges should say: "No, we must deal with the case as it is before us." I say, Mr. Chairman, that as a judge in this case I have been canvassed, and I have the evidence that there is collusion. Surely, then, the Parliament of this country will not lower itself to the point of granting a divorce under such circumstances. I will object strenuously to the passing of this Bill.

Mr. EDWARDS: I am not a member of the Private Bills Committee.

Mr. LEMIEUX: You are a member of the House.

Mr. EDWARDS: I am aware of that fact, thank you. I am not a member of the Private Bills Committee and therefore no one would canvass me in regard to this or any other divorce case. Nor has any one done so. I have not read the evidence in this case, and was not present in the House when it was under consideration before. So that any conclusion I have drawn is based on what I have heard since eight o'clock. Now, in regard to the question of collusion—and my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) states positively that there was collusion—it strikes me as somewhat strange that hon. gentlemen who preceded the member for Maisonneuve, on that side of the House, should try on behalf of the defendant to prevent this divorce going through. If, according to the hon. member for Maisonneuve, there was collusion, then undoubtedly the two parties would be agreed on the desirability of having the divorce go through; they would both want it to go through. I do not think that the question of the religion of the applicants for divorces is something that should be brought up in the House. I do not care what their religion may be, because whether or not a divorce should be granted to any applicant is a matter that should rest on a basis other than the respective religions of the parties. If the case has not been proved against the defendant then the divorce should not be granted. I understand that when the committee passes its opinion on a Bill like this it takes all these facts into consideration, and having done so reports to the House with a view to having its decision approved by the House. It is then the responsibility of members of Parliament, doing their duty in the case, to come to a conclusion as to whether or not the fact of adultery has been established against the woman. Those who think that the case has not been made out, according to the evidence submitted to the Committee, certainly should vote against the Bill; that is the only course open to them; and those who consider that the evidence is sufficient, and that the case has been established, must record their opinion the other way. One thing must strike every one as being a little strange in this matter,—I know it influences me in my judgment of the case,—and that is that this woman, who is within easy reach of Ottawa, has never tried to prove her innocence. She is charged before the Senate with having lived in adultery with this man, not in one house alone; whenever he moved she seemed to move also and live in the same house with him. As my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Hocken) says, that is the gravest charge that can possibly be made against a woman; nevertheless, notwithstanding that the defendant in this case lives in proximity to Ottawa, she has not made any attempt to defend herself against that charge. That fact weighs with me, as it would in any other case, whether it were a divorce case or not. One is bound to be influenced by a fact of that kind. We had nothing in rebuttal of the statement made by the petitioner; no evidence has been adduced to contradict it. Under the circumstances I do not see what else the Private Bills Committee or the Senate could have done, on such evidence as they had, than to recommend a divorce. I do not see that the Private Bills Committee could have done anything else than endorse the act of the Senate in passing the Bill on to this House. For the reasons I have stated I shall have to vote in favour of the granting of the divorce.

Before I conclude I might remark that this case furnishes another example to this House and to the country of the deplorable situation that exists in this country in the matter of divorce. We should have divorce courts in the Dominion of Canada. I have long been of that opinion, which I believe is shared by the vast majority of the people of the country. Applicants for divorce should not have to come before the Senate and the House of Commons but should have their cases tried by properly constituted courts established from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. STEIN: I am sorry to have to address the House again on this subject as I did on Monday last, but, like several of my colleagues on this side of the House and even some hon. gentlemen on the other side, I feel that owing to lack of evidence in this case the Bill should not be accepted by this committee. Of course, I have the greatest respect for hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who do not share this opinion, and their position has been very frankly stated by the member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards). No doubt many other hon. gentlemen on the other side are in the same position as himself; they have not read the evidence. I believe that if hon. gentlemen did read the evidence carefully and, as I have done, several times, they would have no difficulty in concluding that there is not in this case that amount of evidence which is ordinarily brought before the Senate Committee on similar cases. As I stated the other day, I took the trouble to read the evidence in a few other divorce cases and I failed entirely to find any such lack of evidence in any other divorce proceedings as there is in the present case. The hon. member for Toronto alluded a few moments ago to the evidence that had been adduced before the courts of the province of Quebec in this case as far back as the year 1912. I may be allowed to correct some of his statements. The other day when I spoke on this matter I had not the exact dates before me; I have them to-day, however. The first time the case came before the courts of Quebec in the city of Montreal was in the year 1912, on November 22. There Mrs. de Martigny instituted an action against her husband to obtain separation from bed and board, under our provincial law. She secured a judgment in 1912 and her husband was ordered to pay her a monthly allowance of $100. The matter remained in abeyance until 1919, when Mrs. de Martigny again came before the Montreal courts and asked that the monthly allowance of $100 be increased. Her husband contested her petition and also asked to be given the custody of the child, and in order to sustain his petition he alleged the very same facts as those alleged by him in his petition before the Senate Divorce Committee. The case was heard, both parties presented evidence, and two judgments were rendered on April 23, 1919, by Mr. Justice Duclos. He increased the allowance, rejected the petition of the husband to be given the custody of the child, and declared that the husband had not proved his allegation that it was not in the interest of the child that she should remain with her mother as previously, because he was openly living with another woman. The husband appealed against those judgments in the Court of Revision, and while that appeal was pending the husband's mother filed an intervention in the case claiming the custody of her grandchild, stating that in her opinion neither parent deserved to have the custody of the child.

9 a.m.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I am sorry to have to interrupt my hon. friend, but if he will refer to rule 25 he will find that Private Bills have precedence only for the first hour on Friday nights. It is now nine o'clock, and therefore I will be obliged to report progress on this Bill.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY

The House again in Committee of Supply.

The Naval Service—to provide for the maintenance of the Royal Canadian Navy, $2,500,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will the minister tell the committee what was done last year with the money then voted for the Naval Service?

Hon. C. C. BALLANTYNE (Minister of the Naval Service): I might first explain that I stated last year when the Naval Estimates were up that it was the intention of the Government to dispose of the Rainbow, the Niobe, and the two old submarines, and that we had accepted from the Mother Country one modern cruiser, two modern torpedo destroyers, and two modern submarines. Those ships arrived at Halifax on December 18 last year, and at the present time they are on the Pacific coast. They will be leaving there shortly on their return to Halifax.

In answer to my hon. friend from Quebec East as to what we did with the money voted last year, we kept up the naval college, the naval dock at Halifax and Esquimalt, and we maintained in commission up to the time we sold them the Rainbow and the Niobe.

Mr. FRIPP: Who purchased the Niobe, at what price, and was the full price paid? Also, who purchased the Rainbow, at what price, and was the full price paid?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Niobe was sold to the New Brunswick Rolling Mills Limited, after public tenders had been called for, for $135,000.

Mr. FRIPP: Was the full price paid?

Mr. PARENT: Were many tenders put in?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I wish to slightly correct my statement. The New Brunswick Rolling Mills Limited bid of $135,000 included the Niobe and the two obsolete submarines. They have paid $20,000 so far on the purchase, and the balance is payable according to the terms of the contract. The following tenders were received for the Rainbow:

C. S. Sutherland Limited, Edmonton.	$ 5.000
Yarrows, Limited, Vancouver..	8,000
Alexander Zeeve, Seattle, Wash.. ..	34,565
Evans, Coleman & Evans, Limited, Vancouver..	36,855
Nieder and Marcus, Seattle, Wash.. ..	67,777

The department accepted the highest tender of $67,777, and the money has been paid into the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. FRIPP: Was it mentioned in the tenders for the sale of the Rainbow that only part of the purchase price need be paid, and time would be given for payment of the balance? My information is that it was a cash transaction, and some—

Mr. REID (Mackenzie): Louder, we want to hear you down here.

Mr. FRIPP: I am asking the minister if when tenders were called for the purchase of the Niobe it was stipulated that it was to be a cash price. The minister has answered that part of the price of the successful tenderer was paid I should like to know if it was not stipulated that the price was to be a cash price, because I have information from persons who did tender on a cash basis, and their tender was refused. Therefore, I think it is in the interest of the committee that we should know what the stipulations in the tenders were.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: My information is that no particular terms were specified in regard to payment. We simply offered for sale by public tender the Rainbow and the Niobe. Cash has been paid for the Rainbow, but only a partial payment of $20,000 has been made for the Niobe.

Mr. FRIPP: I think it is my duty to point out that when these tenders were called for the Niobe—and that is the only ship I have any knowledge of—it was understood between the department and some persons in Ottawa who were prepared to purchase that ship that it was to be a cash transaction, and they were the highest tenderers on that basis. Now it appears that this New Brunswick firm was awarded the ship by simply paying $20,000. I should like to know if there is a binding contract with the New Brunswick company for the payment of the balance, when the payments are due, and whether the ship has been delivered to the purchasers or is still under the control of the department until the full purchase price is paid.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. member is quite right that some tenders were sent in on a cash basis, but inasmuch as those tenders were all too low I refused to accept them and called for tenders on three different occasions. The tenders that we received were as follows:

John Simon, Halifax, N.S.	$20,000
J. E. Lipsitz Company, Chelsea, Mass.	$80,000
Baker & Betcherman, Ottawa	88,000

Mr. FRIPP: Those were cash offers?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes. The next tenders were from:

J. E. Lipsitz Company, Chelsea, Mass.	$80,000
Baker & Betcherman, Ottawa	88,000

We did not accept those tenders either because we thought they were too low, and for a third time we called for bids, with the following results:

Baker & Betcherman, Ottawa	$100,500
A. Garson & Co., St. John, N.B.	112,000

Therefore we accepted later on the offer of the New Brunswick Rolling Mills Limited of $135,000, which included the two submarines, because their bid was a good deal more than the highest bid of $112,000 from Messrs. A. Garson & Co. We gave them time to make their payments.

Mr. FRIPP: Were not the tenders of $100,000 by the Ottawa firm and $112,000 by the Halifax firm simply for the Niobe? Did these two tenderers understand that by making a further tender they would have to include the two submarines? And, further, what value did the department put on the two submarines that were thrown in to the successful New Brunswick tenderer at $135,000?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Even so, Mr. Chairman, if we deduct the price of the submarines the tender by the New Brunswick Rolling Mills Limited was still considerably higher than any of the other tenders.

Mr. FRIPP: Does the minister consider it was fair to ask tenders for the Niobe alone, and then, not having received sufficiently high tenders, to say to one company, without giving the others an opportunity to tender, "Oh, you may tender also upon two submarines"?

Mr. PARENT: Was that the case?

Mr. FRIPP: That is the information I have. I should like to get an answer to my question as to whether the ship has been delivered to the purchaser or is still under the control of the department until the full purchase price is paid?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Niobe, I regret to say, is still at Halifax, and we may have some trouble with this firm. I have handed the matter over to the Department of Justice. But I am sure that all hon. members will at once see that after these bids came in, it was my duty, as the responsible minister, to accept the highest bid, and undoubtedly the bid of the New Brunswick Rolling Mills Limited was much higher than the next highest bid.

Mr. FRIPP: Of course it is the duty of the minister to accept the highest bid. But the minister has not yet made himself clear as to whether the two unsuccessful tenderers, namely, the Halifax firm and the Ottawa firm were made acquainted with the fact that the two submarines would also be included in the purchase price. My information is that they were simply asked to tender on the Niobe alone, which is an entirely different matter.

Mr. FIELDING: Would it not be good business in asking tenders to have it clearly understood what the terms are so as to prevent any misunderstanding?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am informed that the bids were on the same basis. All these tenderers were asked to bid for the Niobe and also for the submarines. Some of them bid for the Niobe alone, but the New Brunswick Rolling Mills Limited bid for the Niobe and for the submarines also. But if we deduct from the $135,000, $16,000 for the submarines, the price that we got from the Rolling Mills Limited for the Niobe was by far the highest price.

Mr. FIELDING: How does my hon. friend arrive at $16,000 as the price for the submarines?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That was the highest bid we got for the two submarines.

Mr. PARENT: Were there any separate tenders called for the submarines?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Tenders were called for the Niobe as well as for the submarines. The highest bid for the submarines was $16,000.

Mr. RINFRET: Were there other bids for the submarines?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes, quite a number of them. Messrs. A. Garson and Company, St. John, N.B., offered $6,500 for both—for CC-1, $3,000, and for CC-2, $3,500. Then John Simon, Halifax, quoted for the CC-1, $6,000, and the CC-2, $6,000.

Mr. RINFRET: How much was paid for these submarines?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: $1,100,000. We paid about $1,200,000 for the Niobe.

Mr. FRIPP: When the minister found that this New Brunswick company were able to pay only $20,000 on a purchase price of $135,000, did he take any security for the balance? Would it not have been better to accept the cash offer of $100,000 tendered by the Ottawa firm than to accept only $20,000 cash from another firm and then have to try to collect the balance through the Department of Justice?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. gentleman would be quite correct in taking that ground if I had had any information before me at the time that the New Brunswick Rolling Mills were not able to pay for the Niobe. I have no reason now to believe that they are not able to pay. We did make careful inquiries with regard to the standing of the New Brunswick Rolling Mills, and the information was that their financial standing was good. Two bids were received, one for $88,000 and the other for $112,000, and so far as I could tell both firms were in good financial standing. I am sure, therefore, that hon. members of the committee would have found serious fault with me if I had accepted the tender of $88,000 under those circumstances. The only reason why this firm has not taken delivery of the Niobe—and it is not a financial one, as I understand—it is that the value of steel and of everything that enters into the make-up of a ship like the Niobe has considerably depreciated, and this firm would now like to get out of their purchase. The Government, however, still have the Niobe. I do not know what other security we could take. The duty is now upon the Government of seeing that this firm carry out their bargain and pay for both the submarines and the Niobe.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Did the minister take a cash deposit with the tender?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes, $20,000.

Mr. FRIPP: Will the $20,000 be forfeited to the Government if the contract is not carried out by the purchaser? If so, within what time will the money be forfeited?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I do not see any reason at all for letting this firm out. They knew what they were doing when they tendered for the Niobe and the submarines. We have $20,000 of their money, and we have the Niobe. The firm is financially good and it is the intention of the Government to see that they pay for the Niobe and the submarines according to the contract price, $135,000.

Mr. FIELDING: Was there a written contract?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. FIELDING: We ought to have it.

Mr. BUREAU: As I understand it, the minister thought the first tenders were too low, so he did not consider them. The third time tenders were called, a tender was received for $112,000 cash from a St. John firm and $135,000 cash from the St. John Rolling Mills, including the submarines. The law says that when tenders are called for the highest tenderer should get the contract according to the conditions of the tender. By what authority did the minister vary the conditions of the tender by allowing the New Brunswick Rolling Mills to pay the purchase price in instalments? Also, how were the instalments to be paid and what was to be the rate of interest?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It is true that this Ottawa firm quoted $88,000 cash; they did not want the submarines. The other tender was $135,000 but the tenderer in this case could not pay cash. I considered it was my plain duty to get the highest price I possibly could, and the arrangement was that this firm was to pay $20,000 cash and the balance at the rate of $10,000 a month.

Mr. BUREAU: What was the date of the contract?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am sorry I have not the contract before me, but it would be in November or December of last year.

Mr. BUREAU: Have the submarines been delivered to this firm?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes, but the Niobe is still at Halifax.

Mr. PARENT: When the hon. gentleman says that the Niobe is still at Halifax, does he mean that the Niobe is the property of the Government? The fact of its being at Halifax or elsewhere does not necessarily mean that it belongs to the Government?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Niobe is being held at the port of Halifax until such time as the New Brunswick Rolling Mills carry out the terms of the contract. We are not going to turn over the boat to them until payments are made according to the contract.

Mr. PARENT: The minister has said that the case of the New Brunswick firm is in the hands of the Department of Justice. What is the reason for its being in the hands of the Department of Justice?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The reason is this: $10,000 was due from this firm on the first day of January of this year and $10,000 every month afterwards.

Mr. PARENT: That is, according to the terms of the contract?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes, and the payments have not been met. The only payment was the initial one of $20,000. The Department of Naval Service could not get the money out of them so we turned the matter over to the Department of Justice and told them to take the necessary steps to secure payment.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Have not the New Brunswick Rolling Mills paid for the submarines?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The total amount of their tender was $135,000. All that they have paid so far is $20,000.

Mr. McCREA: Have they delivery of the submarines?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes, but they have not delivery of the Niobe.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): How did the minister come to decide to deliver the submarines to the rolling mills without being paid for them? I understand that the $20,000 was a deposit which would be forfeited if they did not go on with the contract; that it was not part of the payment for the submarines. Do I understand the transaction to be that $20,000 was deposited as security along with the tenders; that it was held by the department for that purpose, and that subsequently the department turned over the submarines to this company without being paid anything for them?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The rolling mills deposited a cheque for $13,500 with us at the time they sent in their tender. This could not be considered a deposit cheque in the broad sense. They merely sent in their cheque for that amount to show their good faith.

Mr. PARENT: Ten per cent on the contract.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes. We turned over the submarines to them, and in addition to the $13,500 they made another payment of $7,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Was that the price of the submarines?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, $16,000 was the price of the submarines. There is no question that the St. John Rolling Mills are trying to get out of their purchase; they are sorry that they put in so high a bid; they regret having bought the Niobe and the submarines, and they are now trying to get out of their tender.

Mr. McMASTER: Have they been sued by the Department of Justice.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: When they defaulted on their payment, I at once sent an official letter to my colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty), enclosing a copy of the contract and asking him to see that the Government got payment or else to take prompt action against this firm. I am not in a position to say how the matter stands at present.

Mr. PARENT: Was this done a long time ago?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: In February, if my memory serves me aright.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): I cannot help thinking that the transaction as regards the submarines was unbusinesslike. The submarines, like the Niobe, should have been held until the Government were paid in full for these vessels. The fact is that the company made a deposit for the purpose of showing their good faith, that they would carry out their contract and purchase the boats when the Government delivered the boats to them, so that no part of that money should have been credited to the purchase of the submarines. They should have been paid for in full when delivered.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The company, at the time the contract was signed, represented to the Naval Service Department that they particularly wanted the submarines before the bad weather set in. They said that they did not want to take delivery of the Niobe until later. From all the information that I had, they were good financially; I still think the St. John Rolling Mills are perfectly good financially, and we let them have the submarines. Our contract is a good contract in every way. There is no possible chance of the company getting out of it: the only way in which they could get out of it would be if they were in a position to implement the contract and pay for the Niobe. As far as I can learn, their financial standing is perfectly good, and we must see that we get our money.

Mr. BUREAU: Did the minister, after getting the New Brunswick Rolling Mills to make this offer to pay by instalments, summon the other tenderers and ask them if under the same conditions they had to pay, say $10,000 a month, they would not raise their tenders; or did he call for new tenders, stating in the notice that a certain amount of cash would be required and that so much time would be allowed for payment of the balance of the purchase price? I think that would have been a fair way to have handled the matter. If those men offered $135,000 for the submarines and the Niobe, took delivery of the submarines, got what they wanted and then turned their backs on the Government and said: "We will not carry out the balance of our contract," I do not think it is fair to say that the deposit of 10 per cent should be credited to the payment of the submarines. If the same proposition had been made to the other tenderers, I do not say that that would have made any difference, but it would have been fairer and according to the spirit of the law that the minister should have called the others in and said to them: "Will you raise your tender if you are given time for the balance of the purchase price in addition to your deposit; or, if you deposit $20,000 on account, you can have the submarines, and we will hold the Niobe as security for the balance?" This firm probably wanted steel last fall, and when these two submarines which, I understand the minister to say, cost a little over $1,000,000, were delivered, and when this firm got the steel they wanted, as I said just now, they turned their backs on the Government and said: "Now, look for the balance." They may be good financially; I do not know. I never heard of them before; I do not know the manager, nor the directors, nor who formed the company.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: My hon. friend has been a long time in public life, and he knows that this is the usual practice. When public tenders are called for, as a rule they are called for only once. If I had followed the usual governmental practice, the minute these three tenders, namely, $20,000 $50,000 and $75,000 came in, I would have accepted the hightest bid, $75,000, and closed the transaction. No hon. gentleman would have offered any criticism in this committee at all if I had read out those bids and said that I had accepted the highest offer. It is an unusual thing to revise bids on three different occasions; but I considered the Niobe was worth a good deal more than the highest bid of $75,000 and, therefore, I worked diligently with those bids. This Ottawa firm, on the second bid, came up to $88,000; on the third bid they came up to $100,500. I do not think it would have made any difference in the price had we called these firms in and said: "You need not pay all cash; you may take a little longer time;" I do not think they would have changed their bids at all. If the department has made an error, the error has been made in endeavouring to get as high a price as possible for the Niobe

Mr. FRIPP: Having some knowledge of this matter in the way that I have mentioned, I must say that the minister was insistent on getting a higher price than was offered by the Ottawa firm and by the next lower tenderer at the time. He insisted that the price offered, by the Ottawa firm, even of $100,000 cash, was too small. My only criticism of the minister's action is that I think he ought to have acquainted the Ottawa firm and the Garson firm with the fact that they could make their payments by instalments. The offer of the Ottawa firm was a cash offer. They were told that they had to pay 10 per cent down and the balance the moment the contract was awarded to them. That was a specific declaration of policy on the part of the department. Now it seems that when the offers were refused, and properly refused because they were not high enough in the judgment of the minister, this New Brunswick firm was allowed to make a part payment, whereas the Ottawa firm and, no doubt, the Garson firm, if they had been acquainted with the fact that they would be allowed to make part payments and would be given time for the balance, might have tendered higher.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Does my hon. friend think that his clients would have made a higher offer had we given them time?

Mr. FRIPP: I am inclined to say that they would, because I believe that they were prepared to go higher. It is not every firm in Ottawa that is able to raise $100,000 in ten days. This firm was a responsible firm. In face of the fall in price of the brass, steel and iron in these ships, the New Brunswick firm very properly—

Mr. McMASTER: Most improperly.

Mr. FRIPP: —endeavoured to get out of the contract because it was going to mean a big loss to them. The tenders in the first instance were called for cash, ten per cent down and the balance on delivery. I must say in justice to the minister that he was most anxious to get the very top price, hoping, no doubt, as he did, that this New Brunswick firm would be able to pay the $135,000. As a matter of fact, they have put up only $20,000, and he is likely to have these ships on his hands again, but one cannot criticise that because the representations made by this New Brunswick firm no doubt were that they were financially able to carry out their contract.

Mr. PEDLOW: Was any specific time arranged for as to when the balance of the purchase money was to be paid by this firm?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I have just answered that.

Mr. PEDLOW: When was the sale made?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Towards the latter part of December last.

Mr. GORDON: Christmas time.

Mr. BUREAU: The intention of the minister may have been very good, but I think the results are very bad. The results are that this firm have these two submarines and all the steel they want, and the minister has the Niobe tied up to the dock. Why? Because steel has depreciated and the value of the Niobe in consequence has gone down.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: What difference does that make, may I ask my hon. friend?

Mr. BUREAU: It makes this difference. If you put the Niobe under the hammer to-day you would not get $20,000, and you would have sold these two submarines and the Niobe for less than $40,000.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I would ask my hon. friend a legal question. If a firm like this, which is good financially, buys the Niobe and the submarines for $135,000 and signs a bona fide contract with the Dominion of Canada, what difference does it make whether steel goes up 50 per cent or goes down that much? The contract is legally binding, and we will see to it that we get just as good a lawyer as my hon. friend to make them pay for what they bought.

Mr. BUREAU: That is not a legal question. This matter is a question of finance on which my hon. friend ought to know much more than I do. I say that if the New Brunswick Rolling Mills are as good a firm as my hon. friend pretends they are, they ought to be able to raise $135,000 just as well as the clients of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Fripp). His clients were able to put up $100,000 cash. My impression is, without going into this matter, that this firm may have no assets. The stockholders may have great names, but they may not be personally liable. If that is the case, and the firm has no assets, my hon. friend will have no security except the Niobe, and if he sells the Niobe for $10,000, he will be out $70,000 compared with what he could have got if the tender of the clients of my hon. friend from Ottawa had been accepted. The firm may be all right; I do not know what their assets are, or who the manager is, but to the ordinary business man it would look like this: According to the statement of the minister the two submarines cost $1,000,000. Now, if they have depreciated 50 per cent, they would still be worth $500,000, and if they have depreciated even 90 per cent, they would be worth $100,000. To the ordinary business man it would look as if this firm was running away with at least $100,000 worth of property of the Government, and saying that they would not pay the balance due on the contract. I do not know how it looks to my hon. friend, but here is a reputable firm that is going to allow itself to be dragged before the courts to pay the balance of the purchase money. They have these two submarines, the value of which may have depreciated. I do not say they would bring much in the open market as vessels to be used for naval purposes, but still the steel was there.

Mr. FRIPP: They were purchased for scrap and the steel and scrap have gone down in price

Mr. BUREAU: Yes, that is the reason why they do not want to take the Niobe. This firm is willing to be dragged before the courts, and the first impression of the ordinary man, who is not a financier but a poor country lawyer, is that the assets of this firm cannot amount to much, the personal liability of the stockholders must be covered, and that is the reason why they are going to take the chance of the sheriff coming in.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I am a little jealous for the high standing of the First Lord of the Admiralty in the Canadian Government, and I intervene at this stage in the hope that this debate has already gone far enough in the way of presenting him to the country as a dealer in old iron. I trust without wanting to dictate to my hon. friends, that we may now turn our attention for a while to this vote of $2,500,000 which this minister is asking for the Naval Service of Canada. I could not help wondering as the old-iron discussion was proceeding, how long it will be before these three vessels the minister got last year from the British Government will be sold for old scrap iron in this way. If that is to be the main business of the minister, I should be very apprehensive if there was any danger of another war coming on, because, after all, the defence of our coast would not be very much promoted by the minister continually dealing in scrap iron. Can he tell us how these three vessels are getting on? He will remember that last year I told him in a very friendly way, for he and I are the best of friends, that I thought the Admiralty in Britain had put one over on him in presenting him with these three vessels. I suppose part of this $2,500,000 is to be spent in the upkeep of these vessels. I should like to know where this $2,500,000 is going. That is a lot of money in the present condition of the finances of this country. We had last year a national debt of $2,250,000,000, and so far as the national debt of the country is concerned, we have just added to that $100,000,000, making the national debt $2,350,000,000. Now if part of this $2,500,000 could be saved, it would help us a little in the face of this enormous debt that we have to deal with. I should like to know how the dock yards are, and how many naval officers we have in the Inside Service at Ottawa. We used to get a look at the officers a year or so ago; we knew when we were passing them on the street, because they used to have a uniform, but I believe they are knocking around in mufti now. I do not know whether the minister is rather ashamed of the Naval Service, but if he would put them in long trousers, or wide trousers, with a little decoration, we would know them when we met them. As it is, we cannot count them because we do not know them when we see them. It might save time if my hon. friend would make a little statement as to how these three ships which he got so cheap, are getting on, how the naval college is getting on, how many naval students there are, how many naval officers we have in the Inside Service at Ottawa, and how the dock yards are.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I shall be very glad to give my hon. friend any information I possibly can. I am glad to note that he has missed the blue uniform of the Royal Canadian navy on the streets. The only reason why he happened to see them in that well-known uniform a year or so ago was because the war was then on. During peace time at headquarters they are not permitted to wear their uniforms. The ships on the Pacific coast at present are the Aurora, two torpedo destroyers, the Patricia and the Patriot. The cruiser Aurora was built in 1914, is oil burning, and carries a complement of officers and men numbering 318. The two destroyers are oil burners built in 1916 and carry about 90 each of a personnel. The total number of officers and men on these three ships is something like 600. The college at Esquimalt is still carried on. Forty-five cadets entered for the last term, and while I do not yet know the results, the reputation that the graduates have had ever since the college was established in 1911 has been a most commendable one. The course is excellent and our young Canadian officers have done well in the British navy, in which we have something like 38. We are going to continue the college on the same footing that has been maintained since 1911. The dockyards at Esquimalt have been closed down for nearly a year. There has not been very much work and we therefore closed them and let all the workmen out except the necessary few to look after the stores, and the watchmen to look after the works. The Halifax dockyards are being operated on very much reduced time and our staff there is necessarily a great deal smaller than it has been. The vote we are asking for of $2,500,000 is for the operation and maintenance of the cruisers and two torpedo destroyers, two submarines, the college and the dockyards at Esquimalt and Halifax. This vote of $2,500,000 is no higher than the amount we spent in pre-war times. While before the war we spent $1,700,000, when we come to estimate the increased cost of oil, coal, wages, provisions, etc., I am happy to say that the cost to the country to-day is not one cent more than it was then, and instead of having an inefficient, obsolete and small navy we have a highly efficient fleet which has made a splendid impression at Halifax and at the Pacific coast.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Would these ships be of any use if war unfortunately broke out now? The Niobe and the Rainbow were not when the last war broke out.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The ships we have now are of the most modern type. The Aurora is armed with four and six-inch guns and also torpedoes and the destroyers are of the most modern type. We hope they will never be called upon to do anything in the way of active service, but if they are they can certainly take care of themselves.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): The minister says that a number of the cadets have gone into the Imperial fleet. That would almost look as if, up to now, we have not employed our own trained sailors on our own vessels. Has the minister a hope that in the near future he will be able to absorb the Canadian-trained young men in the Canadian navy, such as it is at the present time?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: As some of my learned friends would say, that is rather a leading question. It has been the custom of the Canadian Government since the Naval Service Act was passed in 1911 to send a certain number of graduates each year to the Imperial navy for training. They are paid, of course, by the Dominion of Canada. We have 38 there at present, and as vacancies occur we have always this service of trained Canadian officers in the home fleet upon which to draw. Of the 34 officers now on the Aurora and other ships, all are Canadians with the exception of four. The commander of the Patriot is a young officer of Ottawa named Beer and the commander of the Patrician is a Halifax man by the name of Jones. These officers are graduates of the Canadian Naval College who have passed through the British navy and are now on our ships.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I thank the minister for his courtesy, and the otherwise full reply he has made; but no doubt because he failed to note one point he has not given me certain information I desire. I asked about the number of naval officers employed in the office in Ottawa, how many saw active service, and how many would be fit for active service in case of war.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I regret I overlooked that point. We have six officers at headquarters, all of whom are either Royal Canadian Naval men or men from the British navy.

Mr. PEDLOW: In answer to the member for Red Deer the minister has given in detail the personnel of the crews of various vessels in the Canadian Navy. He has said nothing about the Sheerwater and the Algerine. Are they still in the service of the department? Will the minister also give some reason for the increase in the amount of this Estimate? Last year the amount was $2,000,000; for the current year it is $2,500,000. That is a large increase and I should have thought, in view of the decreased cost of commodities, the estimate would have been for less this year rather than more.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Sheerwater and the Algerine were not Canadian, but British ships. We never had to do with them. They were under our jurisdiction acting for the British Admiralty during the war and as soon as the war was over they went back. The member for Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow) says that the vote shows an increase of half a million dollars. My hon. friend will remember that when the naval discussion took place last year I said that the amount required was $2,500,000, and later in the session, when I brought down the Supplementary Estimates, I said we would reduce that amount to $2,000,000 because we would not be able to get the ships from England until well on in the year. On that account we were able to afford to take half a million less; but I made it quite clear that if the ships had been out here all of last year we should want the $2,500,000. I therefore ask for that amount now.

Mr. PARDEE: The minister has stated that he does not know who compose the New Brunswick Rolling Mills Company. As the Minister of Customs (Mr. Wigmore) comes from that part of the country he might be able to tell us who are the shareholders and directors of the company, and what is their financial standing.

Mr. WIGMORE: I cannot give that information. I am perfectly satisfied, however, that they are able to carry on and pay whatever balance is due by them.

Mr PARDEE: What is the basis for your satisfaction?

Mr. WIGMORE: Well, they carry on a large business. They are a reputable firm and I am quite satisfied are able to pay their bills.

Mr. PARDEE: Has the minister any idea why they have not paid their monthly instalment?

Mr. WIGMORE: The price of iron has dropped in the meantime. I do not know anything about it further than that.

Mr. PEDLOW: I would like to know what action the Government has taken in the meantime. I understand the sale of the Niobe took place in the month of December last. What action has the Government taken to force this company to pay the balance of the price they agreed to pay?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I cannot add anything more to what I have already stated, that the Naval Department promptly notified the Department of Justice. I will find out to-morrow just what 10 p.m. position the matter is in, and let my hon. friend know, but there is no doubt in my mind that the only reason why this firm want to get out of their contract is that the price of steel and brass has gone down—

Mr. BUREAU: Surely you do not call it a reputable firm?

[Mr. Ballantyne.]

Mr. BALLANTYNE:— but that does not let them out of the tender. As my hon. friend from Three Rivers knows, as long as a firm is financially good the Government are perfectly safe. It matters not to us whether the value of steel or brass goes down. Where a firm is financially sound, and our contract is good it is the simplest question of law to know that there is nothing to stop the Government from getting their money.

Mr. PEDLOW: I quite realize that but the fact remains that although this firm, or any other firm, might have been financially sound in the month of December last, owing to the changed conditions in the commercial world and the decrease in the price of materials that has taken place since, it might not be quite so sound to-day as it then was. I think the department would have been justified in taking prompt action to force payment. Perhaps the Minister of Justice will be able to tell us what action his department has taken, if any, at the instance of the Department of Marine.

Mr. DOHERTY: I think a moment's reflection will make my hon. friend realize that it is quite impossible for me to go round with a knowledge of what proceedings have been taken in the numerous cases that have been dealt with by the department. I shall be very happy to obtain the information for the hon. member, but I have not come here this evening in the position to give it to him.

Mr. JACOBS: If nothing has been done since last December in the matter of trying to force these people to take over this ship, there must be some reason for it. The Minister of Marine is a business man, and I am sure that if a matter of the kind were presented to him in his own personal affairs he would very soon find out the reason why nothing was done in a period of five or six months.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I do not know why my hon. friend assumes that nothing has been done. I have stated a good many times, and I now state again, that the Naval Department acted promptly, and I have no reason to think that the Department of Justice did not also act promptly when the information was sent. But my colleague the Minister of Justice has a great many things to look after, and he cannot tell just now how many letters have been sent or the nature of the replies received. I would be very glad to supply my hon. friend with that information to-morrow.

Mr. JACOBS: Perhaps I can tell the Minister of Marine what is happening. The question was asked in the House about three weeks ago, and we were then told that efforts of some kind or another were being made to get this company to see the error of its ways and take over the ship. Using a humane method, moral suasion, is just about as far as the department got, I think.

Mr. PEDLOW: My reason for asking the question was, that earlier in the session we had a similar discussion over another matter in connection with this department, the sale of an icebreaker. If my memory serves me rightly at the moment we were told this icebreaker was sold for a certain amount of money, but on that occasion notes were taken, which notes were endorsed.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We are on the Naval Estimates now.

Mr. PEDLOW: I was explaining that my reason for asking the question was that we had a similar occurrence before, and in that case the department took notes which were endorsed.

Mr. BUREAU: The statement made by the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Marine that this company is a firm of high standing is not substantiated by the facts. A firm of high standing will not repudiate a debt because the price of the commodity purchased is going down. As I said just now, it leaves the door open to suspicion, and the suspicion which naturally comes to one's mind is that this firm, the New Brunswick Rolling Mills, depend on the fact that they may have some political pull perhaps to get them out of the hole and they prefer this to the judgment of a court. I want to put things as they are, and I repeat that is the impression that remains in one's mind when we view the transactions from the beginning up to the present time, and when we cannot learn anything about the assets of the New Brunswick Rolling Mills, what they are doing, or anything about them. We are told they are a good firm, that they are an honourable firm, but I say that prima facie the fact of repudiating a debt does not inure to the credit of any firm or any company, especially when the debt is repudiated after they have had the best of the transaction—that is getting all the steel they wanted when steel was high, and refusing to take the balance when the price went down.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Where is the Stadacona now?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Stadacona is one of the fishery protection vessels, but is laid up at the present time because she is very costly to run, and the vote I am asking for to-night is not really sufficient to keep all the fishery protection vessels in service. We are laying up two on the Pacific coast and two on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): The Stadacona is resting then?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: She is resting.

Mr. JACOBS: To revert to this Niobe transaction, I should like to ascertain from the minister why it was, when this New Brunswick firm failed to take over the boat, they did not offer her for sale again by tender as they did two or three times during the fall of 1920? The minister will remember that a certain client of mine made an offer, I think of $90,000, for that boat and we heard nothing about the fact that the boat was not taken over by the people who were fortunate enough to get her until Parliament met and the question was asked in the House.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I will have to answer that question by putting a question to my hon. friend: If he owned a private house and that house was bought, and he got $8,000 for it, and another man came along and offered him $15,000—the sale being good and all the papers legally correct—would my hon. friend take the house over?

Mr. JACOBS: I think in the case of a falling market I would notify the party who had bought the boat that the boat would be sold at his cost and charge, and then sell it to the next highest bidder.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Before the item goes through I would like to make a remark or two about this business. I have no desire to obstruct the minister's Estimates, but I took the position in the House last year, the minister will remember, that we might very well at the present time hold our hand, and I expressed the fear that the minister had made a mistake in taking these vessels from the British Admiralty at this time. I pointed out to him the gravity of the toboggan slide at the top end of which he had entered, and his Estimate has gone up by a cool half-million this year.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Oh, no.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I understood there was a $500,000 increase.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Not a cent.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I would be glad to have that explained.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Pedlow) asked that question a few moments ago. Last year I informed hon. gentlemen that the amount I desired voted for the Naval Service was two and a half million dollars. Later on in the session I informed the House that we could reduce that amount by half a million dollars, due to the fact that we were not going to get these ships out from England at as early a date as I had hoped we would. But I said then that if the ships had been out during the past fiscal year we would have required $2,500,000, and that we would require $2,500,000 for this year. The vote we are asking for this year is exactly the same as that for last year.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): That statement is quite satisfactory, and I am glad to be advised that there is no increase. But I cannot help feeling regret that at this particular time those ships did not stay in England. Then we would not have needed $2,500,000 for a year or two. We do not feel any loss from the Stadacona taking a rest. There is not much difference between the minister and myself on some points, anyhow, because all I say is the Government should have taken a rest in regard to this business for a few years. No sentiment expressed in the House this session has received warmer commendation from all quarters in this country than the sentiment expressed by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Crerar) in his remarks in the debate on the Address that we might very well under the present circumstances of the world take a five years' naval holiday in Canada, and a considerable portion of a military holiday too. I know that defence is the first duty of the state, but I have argued on other occasions that when the time for defending the state came Canada was not lacking, she was there. And I am not at all sure that I have not misrepresented the Rainbow to-night, I am not at all sure that she did not do something at the beginning of the war, and if I have misrepresented her along that line I express my regret. But we were there as a nation, and we did wonders, and we did it all the better because we had not been spending too much money on military and naval establishments before. I only want to record my opinion that this is a melancholy business we have gone into. Here is a story tonight of scrap iron—the minister to all intents and purposes so far as the Rainbow and the Niobe are concerned is a dealer in scrap iron. And he has another vessel now taking the rest cure, but I do not think it will ever do her any good, because she is 26 years old, and she cost a great deal more money when she was going than I hope she will cost while she is resting. It is said we should not look a gift horse in the mouth. Well, I would not have looked at the animal at all, and I regret that these vessels were accepted. I repeat, it is a melancholy business in view of the financial position of the country. It is between him and the Minister of Finance, and I hope they will take the matter into their very serious consideration and see if they cannot keep this business well in check. It ought to be easy, as we are all going into the League of Nations. Every member I have no doubt has received notice, as I have, to attend a meeting on Tuesday next to consider Canada entering into the League of Nations. We have come out of a war of unparalleled magnitude in which we suffered terribly along with the other belligerent nations, and we were told all along that that war was to end war, but here we are again with a militant First Lord of the Admiralty with fire in his eye leading us on to this business of armaments. I can only express my regret that what I said to the minister last year has done no good, although he has had twelve months to reflect, and I can only hope that in the next twelve months—if he is so long in office—he will mend his ways and get some information that will lead him to substantially moderate this business.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: My hon. friend had his full share in the naval vote of $2,500,000, and all hon. gentlemen opposite also had their full share in it. I find no fault with them whatsoever for that. Canada under the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier decided to have a navy of its own. The Naval Service Act was passed in 1911, my hon. friend was a member of the Liberal party at that time, and the Government of the day decided that we would look after our own naval defence. Let me say again that I found no fault with the policy then, and I find no fault with it now. The Naval Service Act meant this. The Government of the day said to the Home Government, "Take away your ships and no longer look after the dockyards at Halifax and Esquimalt. Canada will assume that responsibility." And that responsibility is on this Parliament to carry out the terms of the Naval Service Act, which my hon. friend had his full share in passing in 1911. The Niobe and the Rainbow were brought out from England with the approval of my hon. friend. Now he would have been perfectly satisfied had we continued with those two vessels.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): As training vessels.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The vote would have been exactly the same as it is now, $2,500,000. We are carrying out the policy of the hon. member for Red Deer and of the Government of that day which he supported, and we are not increasing the expenditure one iota. What has this Government done? We have discharged 783 civilians and naval ratings that we did not need, we have sold those obsolete ships, and we have accepted modern ships as a free gift from the Mother Country. My hon. friend says it is a melancholy vote. Yet if anybody ought to appear in sackcloth and ashes it is my hon. friend from Red Deer. He helped to put the Naval Service Act on the statute book, he gave his consent that Canada was big enough and strong enough to take over the docks at Esquimalt, to support a naval college, and to bring out the Niobe and the Rainbow. The policy followed since the passing of the Naval Service Act must be the policy of Canada until such time as that Act is amended or repealed. My hon. friend took that responsibility; I think he took it rightly; but he cannot get out of it now by attempting to shift the responsibility on to me, although never at any time am I afraid to take my full share of that responsibility. Had we not accepted these ships from the Mother Country we would have had a disgracefully inefficient Naval Service, a service not worth one cent to Canada, and the expenditure would be just the same as we have now for a very efficient navy.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I am sorry my hon. friend has made such a combative statement in response to the very peaceful speech on my part. I do not propose to follow his example; I am going to keep to the peaceful frame of mind in which I talked to my hon. friend before. If he has not had enough of war I have, and I will not be tempted into strife by his very combative mood. He said the dockyards were taken over by Canada. But when he was on his feet a few minutes ago did he not say that those dockyards were practically closed down and he was getting his repairs done by tender?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): What did my hon. friend say in his previous utterance about the dockyards?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Under the terms of the Naval Service Act we have got to keep the dockyards in sufficient working order to repair any British admiralty ships that may require repairs. We have practically closed down the dockyard at Esquimalt, but we are keeping sufficient men there to attend to any needs either of a British naval ship or of one of our own ships. We are keeping the Halifax yard going with a very much reduced staff. In fact, both yards are being continued in a very moderate way.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): I cannot quite understand how a dock can be "practically closed down" and yet be "in sufficient working order" to do repairs. I am informed, it may be mistakenly, that repairs have been done by tender elsewhere, and that the dockyards are, as the minister says, practically closed down. If you have docks practically closed down, they are not fit to conduct business if language has any meaning. However, I will leave that point and pass on to the other portion of my hon. friend's argument. Now, I quite admit that he is pursuing a policy which was the acknowledged policy of a certain party in the country in 1911. He had had to train the party with which he is now associating up to the point at which the Liberal party had arrived at that period—if we are to have a naval policy at all it is evident that ten years have sufficed to teach something on this question to the party on the other side. But I did not want to labour that point. I did want to point out to my hon. friend that there is no inconsistency whatsoever in my having supported that policy at that time as the only possible and proper naval policy for Canada and in my saying, after the war, when another war in which we should be involved is to all human thinking considerably remote: Go easy with your naval policy. I am wholly in favour of Canada as a nation undertaking her own defence; there is no inconsistency whatever in that attitude on my part. But the minister is inconsistent in going full steam ahead after a war just as he would have been going before the war—that is my answer to my hon. friend on that point. However, I do not want to be drawn into a controversy; I have made my protest, and I want to express my very grave fear that, unless he changes his politcal affiliations once more, it will not be the present Minister of Marine who will be dealing in the scrap iron but somebody else if we go on with this business. After all is said and done, Mr. Chairman, I would rather that the business of the Admiralty was confined to getting presents of vessels, scrapping them and selling them as old iron than that we should be in another war. I do not change my point of view, however, that we might very well have waited in the present circumstances, as I suggested last year, until an Imperial Conference should settle upon proper lines the question as to what each part of the Empire should do for the defence of the Empire.

Mr. McMASTER: I think the minister is to be congratulated upon having cut down the ratings for the navy to the extent that he has. But I feel that it was a great mistake to take these ships from Great Britain. It was done while Parliament was not sitting; it was done without consultation with the representatives of the people, and it puts us in the awkward and unpleasant position of appearing to be ungrateful for a free gift. I do think that the minister has placed the representatives of the people in an unfortunate position. Now, the minister has argued that the Liberal policy is responsible for the Laurier naval policy. I admit that most frankly. At that time the world was busy arming for what proved to be, alas, an awful conflict. We were told there was a great European power which was marching on and on and that at some time we would have to meet that power. Unfortunately the prophets of evil spoke truly. War did break out; the navy of that great power is to-day at the bottom of the North Sea, and for the time being, at least, that menace is no more. Under these circumstances would it not be the part of prudence to take a naval holiday? The desires and hopes and prayers of all men of good-will throughout the civilized world are centred upon the League of Nations. We are hopeful that through that body mankind will be able to develop a method of settling international disputes. Is it not, then, the height of folly to go on in the same way in regard to naval matters? Is it not unwise to contribute $200,000 to the expenses of the League of Nations and then spend ten times that amount on preparing something which, if the League of Nations is a success, will in all probability never be required? The Laurier naval policy was proposed when our national debt was but $350,000,000; to-day it is $2,350,000,000. The minister therefore would confer a great benefit on the country if he would turn the prows of these three ships eastward and allow the Canadian people to see the smoke ascending from their funnels as they made their way home to the land beyond the seas. We cannot afford this expenditure at this time. We should not spend one cent except for absolute necessities and this is not an absolute necessity. I can hardly trust that the minister will change his view, but I would like to register my emphatic protest against this expenditure.

[Mr. M. Clark.]

Mr. PARDEE: The statement which the minister has given us with regard to the sale of these vessels is entirely unsatisfactory. He sells the Niobe and two submarines for $135,000; he gets $20,000 in cash, and he makes a contract for the payment of the balance in instalments. Before this item is passed I would like to know the names upon the contract; I would like to know who signed on behalf of the New Brunswick Rolling Mills. Well, the minister has handed over to the Department of Justice the matter of collecting the balance, the instalments due having not been paid. I say that the minister has not discharged his whole duty in simply turning over the collection of this debt to the Department of Justice. If the manager of a company turned over a debt of this kind to his solicitor he would follow it up from month to month and see what action was being taken in the matter and what results were being obtained. But did the minister say to the Department of Justice: We turned an account over to you in December or January. Have any payments been made? What are you doing with it? No payment is received in January, February, or in succeeding months; yet the minister does not say that he has done anything further. He evidently thinks that in handing the account over to the Justice Department he is relieved of all further responsibility. But the minister cannot so easily divest himself of responsibility. It was his bounden duty to-night to have shown us just what position that debt was in, to have stated the chances for recovery of it, to have told us how good the financial standing of the company was—in short, to have given us all the information that a business manager would give to a business concern under similar circumstances. Instead of that, the minister gets up and says: "We are certain of collecting the money. I know this is a going concern, though I do not know what assets they have or what the personnel of the company is; I know nothing about it, but I know we are going to get the money." Did he consult his colleague the Minister of Customs before he made the sale? Did he telephone him and ask him if he knew the New Brunswick Rolling Mills? Did he ask if they were in good standing? The Minister of Customs says: "Yes, I know the company are there, but I know absolutely nothing about them." An ordinary business man making a $135,000 sale would have seen what his security was and how he was going to be paid. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has not done anything of that kind; at least, if he has, has kept the information carefully concealed in his boots because he has not said anything about it.

Mr. McMASTER: He is at sea on it.

Mr. PARDEE: Yes. We are here tonight knowing nothing more than the man in the moon about the sale of the Niobe and the submarines except that $135,000 was the price. We know that there is a default. We do not know how great the debt is. We do not know how the debtor stands financially. It looks, as my hon. friend (Mr. Bureau) has said, as if the Dominion had been stuck for a very large sum in this matter. We shall be told: "We have the Niobe yet." That is true; but prices have fallen and we could not get for her now what we could have got before, and as a consequence the country is the loser.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The minister gave the committee a piece of history which was somewhat incomplete. I would not like to supplement it in any way except to point out one feature in connection with it. When the naval law was adopted in 1910, the hon. member for King's (Sir Robert Borden) who afterwards became Prime Minister of Canada, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Meighen) and all the other hon. gentlemen with whom my hon. friend is now associated, voted against that law and in favour of an amendment offered by the late Mr. Monk, that no naval policy should be adopted by Canada without being first approved by the Canadian people. This issue was fought during the campaign of 1911. As a matter of fact in my province, it was the only issue discussed on the platforms. Twenty-six members were elected in the province of Quebec against that law and after the elections, when those people got together, after having accomplished what they had in view, they pledged themselves in Parliament that no permanent naval policy should be entered into by this country without being first approved by the Canadian people. The Prime Minister of that day took that pledge; the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the Hon. Mr. Hazen, stated it emphatically on the floor of the House of Commons, and I ask my hon. friends when the Canadian people have since then approved the present policy of the Government as regards the navy. As the hon member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) stated, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Government accepted those ships as part of their permanent policy, without asking the approval, not only of the Canadian people, but of the Canadian Parliament. This was done by Order in Council, of course, under the general practice of this Government at that time. Parliament was not consulted, and when my hon. friend came to Parliament with a proposed appropriation, we were faced by an accomplished fact. The ships had been accepted, and we had to vote the money although we opposed the vote at that time. I was opposed to that vote being accepted; I am still opposed to it, for many reasons, one of them being, that there is no settled naval policy at the present time for the British Dominions. There is going to be an Imperial Conference next year. There is going to be a meeting of Prime Ministers this year. The name has been changed for the conference that takes place in July, and conditions are such that our Prime Minister stated the other day, or at least intimated in some way, that he would be opposed to the consideration of any naval policy at that conference next summer. Why should we not wait until the status of the Dominions is fixed, as we are told it is going to be at this Imperial Conference next year, before accepting, or adopting, any policy as regards naval defence? Conditions are altogether changed as the hon. member for Brome stated. In 1910, the country was prosperous; we had money; we had no deficits, we were not paying the rate of interest that we are paying now on our loans. We had not two billion dollars of net debt as we have at the present time. Conditions are altogether changed, and as the hon. member for Brome and the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) stated, we are paying an annual contribution to the League of Nations. We are members of that league. The last war was fought for the purpose of ending all wars. We should at least follow the example of those nations which are decreasing their armaments instead of increasing ours or entering into any new scheme. Last year there was in the Estimates a vote of $300,000 for the maintenance of the Canadian navy. That was the usual vote as in preceding years.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There were two votes yast year: Naval Service, to provide for the maintenance of the Royal Canadian Navy, $300,000, and then in the Supplementary Estimates, there was the other vote: Further amount required, $5,700,000.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. member will recall that I explained, when I asked for the $300,000 appropriation, that that was only part of the naval expenditure and that in the Supplementary Estimates I would bring down a further amount, so that he has to consider both of them together.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, but this $300,000 vote was practically the same as the vote of preceding years during the war.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What was the vote in 1919?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I have the amounts for all the years here. Before this is turned up, I might say that the expenditure was $1,700,000 in 1910-11. Then when we got into the war, of course, the expenditure ran away up, and it would not be a fair comparison at all.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The minister cannot tell me what the expenditure was in 1919.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I will tell my hon. friend just as soon as my deputy arrives. He has gone upstairs for a moment.

Mr. GORDON: Perhaps the deputy would ascertain the names of this rolling mill firm while he is up stairs, and the minister could give us the information to-night, and also any information he has as to the firm's solvency.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I think my hon. friend will have to take the word of the Government. I have had a very long experience in business, and I am sure my hon. friend has also had a very considerable business experience. He knows that before an ordinary business concern give credit, they look up the reports of one of the mercantile agencies, either Dun's or Bradstreet's, and if the reports of these agencies show that the firm's credit is good, business men do not ask the firm what their assets and liabilities are. They largely go by what their salesmen say, and also by the financial reports from these agencies. I took all these precautions at the time, but in these days, of course, when business is declining rapidly, a firm that may have been good a year ago may not be good now. From all I can learn, however, the firm is good. My hon. friend will have to take my word for it that at the time we made all necessary inquiries as to the firm's standing, and I was satisfied that they were good. The Government have to take financial risks, of course, just the same as any other concern.

Mr. GORDON: Dun's and Bradstreet's reports show in detail what the concern is, what its products are, what its bonded indebtedness is, and all the details that we would like to have to-night; so, if this information is available on file, I do not think it would be a difficult matter for the minister to give it to the committee to-night, instead of saying that he got the information but does not remember now what it was.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Oh yes, I do.

Mr. GORDON: Except that the firm was good. Well, it turns out that they are not good. If they were good, they would not be willing to have their reputation risked by being sued by the Government of Canada for this liability. They could not possibly stand that if they were good, because it would wreck the reputation of any solvent concern. If they were good they would not dare to assume the risk of having their credit ruined by refusing to pay a debt which the minister says is now due and owing.

In addition to that, as was pointed out by another hon. member, as soon as the responsibility was shifted from the Naval Department to the Justice Department, no further inquiries were made by the Naval Department to ascertain what was being done or whether the Justice Department had left the matter in the hands of some other official who was also taking a rest cure. This liability has been left standing for months, nothing has been done, and we are not able to ascertain now whether this concern is solvent or not. Only the hope is expressed that they will pay the debt, and we are told that the Justice Department has been applying moral suasion in different doses for the last few months.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I can now give my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) the information he asked for. The naval expenditure for the year 1910-1911 was $1,719,017; 1911-1912, $1,233,456; 1912-1913, $1,085,660. Then we got into the war years, and the expenditures were very large. If my hon. friend wants the figures for those years, I can give them.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There were small expenditures running up to about $300,000 or $400,000 for the upkeep of the Naval College and thing of that kind, but millions were spent which were charged to the War Appropriation.

Mr. EULER: I would judge that in the ordinary course of business, when this firm failed to make their payments as they fell due, the department would get into correspondence with them, and at least make some inquiry as to why they did not pay. Has the department done that, and if so, what answer did this firm make? Did they question the validity of the contract in any way?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Immediately they failed to make their first payment under the contract, my department wrote them, and followed the matter up for a considerable time. We did not get any satisfactory answer from the New Brunswick Rolling Mills at all; so, after following the matter up for a reasonable time, we turned it over to the Justice Department, and told them to take proceedings against the firm.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend says that he did not receive any satisfactory answer. I presume that he received some sort of answer. What answer did they make?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I cannot recall the exact phraseology now, but they were trying to get out of the contract owing to the market price of steel and brass having gone down very considerably.

Mr. EULER: Is that the only reason they advance?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That is all.

Mr. JACOBS: They did not advance that as a reason, did they?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: They were trying to get out of the contract. They were trying to work the Naval Department to see if we were easy and would let them out of the contract, which we certainly will not do.

Mr. McKENZIE: What was the nature of the instructions which the minister gave to the Justice Department? Were the instructions to sue for an instalment or for the whole amount? Was there any provision in the contract that the full amount would fall due if default was made on one instalment?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I have no knowledge of law, but I should think that the only proceedings which the Justice Department could take against the firm would be to insist upon payments as they became due under the contract.

Mr. McKENZIE: It is a very common provision in a contract of this kind, that if default is made in payment of one instalment the whole amount becomes due at once. I simply want to know if the minister had that provision in this contract?

Mr. EULER: I would suggest to the minister, if it can readily be done, that this correspondence with the firm be placed before the committee.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I have no objection at all.

Mr. JACOBS: Why did not the department insist that cash should be paid for this boat, instead of selling it on the instalment plan.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I know my hon. friend did the best he could for his friends, and it may turn out that it would have been better had the department accepted the next lowest bid for cash, but as there was such a difference in the tenders I made the best deal that I could with this concern, after satisfying myself that they were financially good. I do not think I would have been justified in turning their bid down and accepting another bid some $25,000 lower.

Mr. McKENZIE: I asked the minister a question, but he did not answer me. I want to know what instructions he gave to the Department of Justice. Were the instructions to sue for $10,000 or for the whole amount? Has the minister received any report from the Justice Department on the contract?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I merely sent the tender to the Justice Department and advised them of the steps we had taken, quite unsuccessfully, to get the firm to meet their payments. A layman like myself would not presume to suggest to my colleague what legal steps he should take.

Mr. McKENZIE: I must remind the minister that twenty minutes ago he told us in the most positive way, in a way that no lawyer would dare to do, that the contract was absolutely good, perfectly sound, and enforceable in every particular. Now, when it suits him to say that he does not know anything about law, he tells us that he does not know whether the contract is good or not. The minister ought to be able to tell us what the terms of the contract were. I do not think that the tender was ever handed over to the Justice Department. The minister would naturally hand over what was finally consummated in the shape of a contract and which I presume is in writing. The preliminary communings that took place before the final contract do not cut any ice; the contract must speak for itself. The minister must surely have contemplated some discussion of this kind to-night and should have had the contract here. It would not take long for him to get it and we should like to see it. We want to know whose names are on it. It has been suggested to-night that some favoritism has been shown in this matter. Three or four persons tendered and all except one said that they would pay cash in full. This concern is not paying cash and some inside arrangements seem to have been made to favour them. They fell down on their contract altogether and yet are given five or six months' leeway without anything being done. That looks like favouritism. At all events it is what the minister would do for his best friend if he could do anything at all for him. He would say to his very best friend, political or otherwise: "I will turn down the cash tenders of the other people and take advantage of the fact that yours is a little larger, and I will give you the best terms possible and deliver the property to you. If you do fail in your payments I will give you all the time you want and go through the camouflage of handing the matter over to the Justice Department. But you need not be afraid of this; nothing will be done." That is what the minister would do for me if I were his very best friend. It remains for him to show that no favouritism characterized this transaction, but that on the contrary, it was a hard and fast business deal. He can make this point clear by producing the contract and showing that everything has been open and above board and done in good business shape. And he should do that before the item passes. We ought to have the contract, because this is something that the minister might very well have anticipated.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. member will certainly see the contract to-morrow. I do not find any fault with him for imagining anything he likes. The transaction was a perfectly sound and legitimate business transaction and was perfectly above board. If I had accepted the lowest cash bid of $88,000 and someone had asked the hon. member to inquire of me why I had not accepted the offer of the St. John Rolling Mills at $135,000 even if the terms were longer, I could understand that the hon. member might possibly have something to say. But the whole criticism to-night is directed at the department because we did not take the lower tender, for the reason that it was cash, notwithstanding that it was $30,000 less. Possibly it might have been better had we taken it, although I do not hold that opinion. But everything was done in a proper way and I shall have no hesitation in bringing down all the correspondence, laying all the tenders on the Table, and producing a copy of the contract or the original itself. The Department of Justice was furnished with the contract which we entered into, and I have absolutely nothing to hold back.

Mr. McKENZIE: Personally I do not propose to hold any post mortem upon this item. If we are to have any evidence on the matter at all we should have it before we pass the item. The minister cannot claim any credit for getting $135,000 instead of $112,000, unless he can show us that he is dealing with reliable people. To put up a straw company, such as this appears to be, which is not able to meet its responsibilities, which squeals because the price of steel has gone down, and which refuses to pay, is something for which the minister cannot take credit. There is no credit at all to him in the fact that he turned down a cash offer of $112,000 and accepted a vague promise of $135,000.

Mr. JACOBS: The minister had an offer of $112,000 from A. Garson & Company of St. John for the Niobe alone, and he threw in two torpedo boats, the CC-1 and the CC-2 and got $135,000.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I did not throw them in at all.

Mr. JACOBS: They were thrown in.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, they were not. Let us be perfectly fair to one another; I am fair to hon. members and they must be fair to me. I gave all the tenders that my department received for the submarines and I also gave all the tenders that we received for the Niobe. The highest third bid for the Niobe was $112,000, but we actually sold her for $119,000, apart from the submarines altogether. As regards the submarines we received from the St. John Rolling Mills Company the highest price offered by any firm. There is no case of throwing in the submarines at all. It was a straight case of calling for public tenders and giving the contract to the highest bidder. I know very well that these firms that tendered and did not get the contract were sorry; whether or not they are sorry now I do not know. Possibly they are behind all this questioning at the present time. What position should I be in as Minister of Naval Service if after calling for tenders three times I repudiated the highest tender and gave the contract to another? I should not like to appear before the members of the committee under such circumstances.

Mr. JACOBS: The offer of $112,000 from Garson & Company was a cash offer, while the offer from the New Brunswick Rolling Mills of $119,000 was credit. That is the distinction.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: My hon. friend is getting on to ground that he is not familiar with. It is hardly fair for me to express any adverse opinions regarding any firms that tendered, but it might interest my hon. friend to know that, as regards the firm that tendered $112,000, their cheque was returned to us as being no good.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The minister says that this is a good company. He tells us that there is no doubt about its being solvent, and he is proud of the business deal he has put through. If that is so, surely the Minister of Customs can give us the names of the president and the general manager of the company. St. John is not so large a city. I know that if it were a Quebec company, and if the firm were a reliable one, as the minister says this is, I could give the names of the president and general manager. There is something queer about the whole matter. Surely my hon. friend can give us these names; and we are entitled to see the contract.

Mr. WIGMORE: I have not been in St. John since Christmas. I know that at that time this firm were doing a good business. They were working day and night running a rolling mill formerly owned by the St. John Rolling Mill Company. The firm in question took over the St. John Rolling Mill and called it the New Brunswick Rolling Mill and since that time they have been rolling iron there. I know nothing about the business since January, but I can say that they were doing a good business at that time and that they are perfectly able to carry on and pay any indebtedness that they owe. Personally I think this contract is a good one from the Government's standpoint. If I understand the figures correctly, this company agreed to pay $135,000 for the Niobe and the two submarines.

Mr. PARDEE: But they did not pay it.

Mr. WIGMORE: The highest price received for the submarines was $6,000 each, making $12,000 in all. Take that from the $135,000. The minister tells me that the amount for the Niobe was $119,000. Now, the manager of the firm is H. J. Garson and the secretary is a man named S. S. Elliot. Both are respectable citizens and good business men of the city of St. John, and I believe they are carrying on a satisfactory business.

Mr. JACOBS: Might I point out to the minister that this very Garson is the man whose cheque was returned?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Not the same.

Mr. WIGMORE: He is another Garson altogether.

Mr. JACOBS: A Garson of another colour.

Mr. EULER: I do not desire to question the frankness of the statement by the minister in any way, but it does seem to me almost incredible that a firm that is presumably composed of reputable business men would attempt to escape a straight unqualified obligation.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, it is very common.

Mr. EULER: It is common?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Common in business.

Mr. EULER: I am sorry that has been the business experience of the minister. I should say that reputable men 11 p.m. do not do that sort of thing. But what I was leading up to is this: There is just the suspicion of a feeling in my mind that the tender made by that firm had in it some sort of qualifying clause, and it is on the strength of that possibly they are refusing to pay.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I can certainly say most positively to my hon. friend that there is no qualifying clause in it at all, and from over thirty years experience in business I can say that not all firms by any means but very often very good reliable firms, when the market goes against them, do try to get out of contracts. It has happened to me many a time.

Mr. RINFRET: Do they merely default in payment, or do they allege any reason for not making payment?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Default only.

Mr. JACOBS: Have they taken delivery of the submarines?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. CAHILL: I understood the minister to say that he had an offer of $100,500 from an Ottawa firm, and an offer of $112,000 from another firm and that those offers were on a cash basis?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. CAHILL: I would like to ask the minister if he offered to sell the Niobe to those two firms on the terms basis which he made with the St. John company?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The firm that quoted $112,000 were not financially good, as I have already stated. The Ottawa firm that made the offer of $100,500 were good as far as I could tell at the time but the difference of $19,000 between that offer and the one accepted was so great that I did not think any good purpose would be served by going to them, after I had asked them to bid on three different occasions, and saying "Will you bid a fourth time provided I do not ask you to pay cash?"

Mr. CAHILL: How did the minister arrive at the conclusion that it was good business to go to some other person with an offer after he had made three attempts to sell for cash? He had attempted to sell for cash but could not get a satisfactory price and he then accepted an offer on terms.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The only mistake I made, was calling for tenders three times. I should only have called for tenders once. I should have accepted the price of $75,000 and we never would have heard a word about it. The mistake I made, in my earnestness, was trying to get too much money for these ships. If I call for tenders again, after the experience I am having here to-night, I will award the contract to the highest bidder; I will try no more dickering.

Mr. CAHILL: That is one good reason why my hon. friend should not be in the position he is in, if he is going to get peeved because he is criticized for making a bad bargain and say that in future he is going to take anything he can get from the first bidder. If that is my hon. friend's intention he is in the wrong place when he is in a public office in this country; and it would certainly be in the public interest if he were to desist from making any more contracts for Canada.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: He will keep on.

Mr. CAHILL: He should attend to his private business and the country can get along very well without him if that is the attitude he is going to adopt. The minister called for tenders three times and in each case a greater amount was offered than in the case of the previous tenders. Why did he not call for tenders a fourth time when, perhaps, even more money would have been offered? But when he desisted from doing that and started to deal privately with this firm, why did he not deal privately with the other people who had tendered on a different basis? He says the man who offered him $112,000 was no good. Well, we have had evidence to-night that the company whose offer was accepted is not very good. Had the minister accepted the tender of $100,500 he would have been much better off. I cannot understand why he did not ask that firm for a better price provided he gave them time.

Mr. McMASTER: The minister fails altogether to appreciate whatever criticism has been directed against him from this side if he imagines that we find fault with him for trying to get the best possible price. He is to be congratulated upon the fact that he endeavoured to get the best possible price. As I see it the only grounds for criticism are these: First, that having asked for cash prices he made a contract with one of the tenderers for a price which was partly in cash and partly on time without giving the other tenderers the same opportunity. That, it seems to me, may have operated unfairly. I do not say it did operate unfairly, but there was a possibility of unfairness there. The second ground for criticism is that having turned this collection over to the Department of Justice, he has not followed it up as I think a business man should have followed up the collection of such a very substantial amount.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: What makes my hon. friend think I did not follow it up?

Mr. McMASTER: Because had the minister followed it up he would have told us that he had done so, that he had asked the Minister of Justice, or the Department of Justice to give him information, and he would have had some information to give to the committee. Now, we are almost in the month of June. I understand that the payment in regard to this contract was to be so much in cash and then instalments of $10,000 a month, beginning with January 1. Well, there are the instalments for January, February, March, April and May —five instalments of $10,000 each, or $50,000 in all—now overdue. No doubt the minister has a great deal to do, but it does seem to me a fair ground for respectful criticism that he is not in the position to tell us: "The fault does not lie with me. I have month by month inquired from the Department of Justice to whom I turned over the collection of this amount, and they tell me they have done such and such a thing." He ought to be able to tell us that a writ has been issued or the reason why a writ has not been issued.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I think my hon. friend is quite fair in that. I have repeatedly, through my deputy, asked how the matter stood with the Department of Justice. The department replied that they had the matter in hand, and they were corresponding with the firm, and so on. No later than this morning when my deputy was in my office I told him again to go personally and see the Justice Department, and find out if a writ had actually been served against the company. I did not forget the matter at all. We have been doing the very best that we could, and I am quite sure that my colleague the Minister of Justice is exercising his usual good judgment. You do not sue a responsible party right off. As a rule I understand that lawyers and the Justice Department first write to try and obtain a settlement, and if they fail they issue a writ.

Mr. McMASTER: That is quite right. I do not want to labour the point too much, but it seems to me that when $10,000 falls due at the beginning of January, and another $10,000 falls due at the beginning of February, and another $10,000 falls due at the beginning of March, and another $10,000 falls due at the beginning of April, and still another $10,000 falls due at the beginning of May, letter writing apparently was not successful, and some stronger method should have been resorted to. If the Minister of Marine has followed this up from month to month I suppose he is pretty well discharged from blame; the blame rests upon another department of the Government.

Mr. COPP: I regret exceedingly, Sir, that the reputation of a firm in the city of St. John, apparently of very high standing in the opinion of the Minister of Marine as well as of the Minister of Customs, has been brought into question in this discussion, and it does seem to me that we should get some information in defence of this company. I do not happen to know the directorate of the St. John Rolling Mills Limited, but my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, who has been a resident of that city for many years, and is more or less intimately acquainted with local conditions, must, I am sure, have very good knowledge of the personnel of this company. I have no doubt that in the very strong efforts made by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine to collect this money he must have conferred not only with the Minister of Customs, but also with the Minister of Public Works in regard to this company, and those hon. gentlemen, who represent the Maritime Provinces in the Cabinet, no doubt, have general, if not in detail, information which would be of very great interest to this committee and would be of value to the business reputation of the company in question; and, if I may be permitted to say so to my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, I think it is due to that company that he should give the committee such information in regard to it. If the company is composed of men of strong financial standing and acknowledged business integrity there can be no reason why my hon. friend should not disclose its personnel to this committee, as if they are men of that type the delay in payment would not amount to very much. But inasmuch as they have been in default since the first of January, 1921, the transaction naturally arouses suspicion in the minds of hon. gentlemen, particularly of those on this side of the House. So far as I know in a general way, the St. John Rolling Mills Company is a reputable business concern, and I would be very sorry to see it questioned without some very good reason. The minister says he has a hard and fast contract with the firm, and it does seem to me there must be good grounds why they are not living up to the terms of that contract. He says that that contract was entered into openly and above-board. If that is so, I appeal to my hon. friend the Minister of Customs to inform the committee if he knows of any reason why this company is defaulting on that contract. I have no brief for the St. John Rolling Mills Company, but I do say that when the business methods of this or any other company are questioned in this House, and they have any defence to make, it should be given to the committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is perhaps a circumstance which makes it most imperative for both my hon. friends the Minister of Marine and the Minister of Customs to give this committee the fullest information possible concerning those tenders and the contract which was subsequently awarded. There was an election in the city of St. John in September, 1920, and it is certainly a coincidence—at least some people may think it is a coincidence—that the contract was granted in such a peculiar way, that only part of the amount of the tender was accepted by the department; and that subsequently the company failed to meet the five instalments of the balance as they became due. I think under the circumstances my hon. friends should give all the information they possibly can and put the matter fairly before the committee and before the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. RINFRET: I have a few remarks to make on this item, but I do not think it would be fair to mix the two questions as we have already mixed them somewhat to-night. There is, first, this contract for the sale of the Niobe and the submarines; and, second, the vote for the naval service proper. These two questions have been interwoven in such a way that confusion has resulted. I think we should clear up the sale of the Niobe first, but I ask that this item be not carried before we have a chance to express our views on it.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: My hon. friend is quite right, the vote before the committee is for $2,500,000 for the naval service. While the sale of the Niobe has something to do with naval affairs, it has absolutely nothing to do with this vote. I am asking the committee to give their approval to the vote of $2,500,000, into which the Niobe does not enter at all. I will lay on the Table to-morrow all tenders and all the correspondence that we have had with this concern, and also a copy of the contract. I submit to hon. members that the sale of the Niobe has nothing whatever to do with this vote of $2,500,000.

Mr. RINFRET: The minister did not understand me rightly. He is asking for $2,500,000 for ships which have been accepted to replace the Niobe and we are perfectly in order in discussing the Niobe first.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: If my hon. friend will allow me, I am not asking for $2,500,000 to purchase ships. I am asking for that amount to carry on the naval service of Canada, to maintain our docks at Halifax and Esquimalt, to maintain the naval college, and for the upkeep of our ships. It is quite in order to ask questions about the naval force when the vote is before the House, but the Niobe has nothing to do with this vote.

Mr. RINFRET: It is perfectly proper that we should deal with the Niobe transaction because this item covers the whole of the expenses of the department. The Chairman was asking whether the item should carry and I simply wanted to point out that I was refraining from offering any remarks on the naval service at this stage because I thought we might first clear up the Niobe deal.

Mr. CURRIE: Mr. Chairman, I submit that nothing in connection with the sale of the Niobe is involved in this item, and I would like a ruling whether the discussion with regard to the Niobe is in order.

Mr. BUREAU: With regard to the point of order, I submit that we are asked to vote an amount of $2,500,000 to provide for the maintenance of the Royal Canadian Navy, and that under it we are entitled to put all sorts of questions relating to the naval service. The Niobe is one of the ships that has been replaced by the new ships and we are entitled to know what has been done with the old ones, under what conditions they have been disposed of, and all details with regard to their sale. The sale of these ships involves an asset of the department, and that is connected with administration; therefore we are entitled to all information concerning them. Moreover, the question with regard to the Niobe was raised not by us, but by an hon.

gentleman on the other side, and very properly so; he deserves credit for bringing the matter to the attention of the committee. My contention is that if we are not satisfied with the administration of the naval service we are entitled to criticise this amount, and we would be justified in asking for a reduction of the vote if we thought the affairs of the department had not been properly conducted. I think the amount of the vote, $2,500,000 is quite sufficient to justify an inquiry on the part of members of the committee into the whole administration of this service.

Mr. JACOBS: I would also point out that if this $100,000 had been received the minister would be asking now for a vote of $2,400,000 instead of $2,500,000.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Oh, no.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I concur in the remarks of the hon. member for Three Rivers and the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier. Surely this House has the right to discuss a deal involving the sale of the Niobe to this firm. One very strong reason why we should be enabled to discuss it now is the fact that there is no other item in the Estimates under which the discussion could take place.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): Speaking to the point of order, I submit that it surely is elementary that if a minister had so ill-managed the affairs of the Naval Department and that fact were clearly brought to light, it would have an important bearing on the intelligence of hon. members on this side as to how far they should vote any more money to be spent by a minister who is making these bad sales.

The CHAIRMAN: The point of order has been raised by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) that the discussion of the sale of the cruiser Niobe is not in order on item 197, to provide for the maintenance of the Royal Canadian Navy, $2,500,000. During the time that I have occupied the Chair I have always endeavoured to keep the discussion strictly relevant to the item under consideration. I have, however, always observed the rule that all matters pertaining to all departments should be discussed in Committee of Supply if hon. members so desired, but that a discussion was out of order when there was in the Estimates another item upon which that discussion could with more relevancy and more propriety take place. I have looked over the Estimates and I find there is no item under which the sale of the cruiser Niobe could be discussed so relevantly and so properly as under the present item. This is the only item in the Estimates concerning the administration and maintenance of the Royal Canadian Navy. The sale of a battleship belonging to the Dominion Government is certainly a matter which can be inquired into by this Committee, and I therefore rule that the discussion is in order.

Mr. COPP: I am not quite satisfied that the Minister of Customs really wants to do such injustice to his friends as not to give this information to the Committee. From what has been said by the Minister of Marine, if this company is in such good financial standing as we hope it is and as I am bound to say I always understood it to be, it should meet its obligation under the contract. The Minister of Customs says in a general way that they are a firm of good financial standing in the community, and if that is so I cannot understand why they have defaulted in their payments. The Minister of Marine has made a very strong insinuation with regard to the business integrity of that firm, because he says that the only reason for their trying to get out of their contract is that the iron and brass and other materials in these vessels have fallen in price. Now, that is a statement made in this House, Mr. Chairman, and to my mind it affects very seriously the standing of that company. As I said a moment ago, I hold no brief for the company, but I do say that the minister should place before the committee any information he has in regard to the matter so that we may know just how to deal with it. If the company is strong and responsible financially, there is no reason that I can see why they should default upon their payments. They have defaulted now for five months and practically into six months. That is $60,000 that they are in default or will be in a few days under this contract. As I say, I have some pride in my province, and I regret exceedingly that the integrity, honesty and fair dealing of this company is brought into question by the very fact of the silence that has been practised by the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue (Mr. Wigmore), who, I am sure, as a business man and having done business in the city of St. John for many years, must have the information as regards this company. I again appeal to him, in defence of the honour of the corporation of the city that he represents and the province that we both represent, that he give to the committee that reasonable information upon which we can base an opinion in regard to this matter and see if we cannot shorten this debate and get along with the business as well as have the reputation of this corporation cleared up before this committee by my hon. friend.

Mr. WIGMORE: I do not see what more I can say than I have said. I have stated before that, in my opinion, this company is thoroughly reliable. I know that the president or manager of this concern owns a good deal of property in St. John city.

Mr. COPP: Will my hon. friend give his name?

Mr. WIGMORE: I gave the name before—H. J. Garson. I do not know what more information I can give. In my opinion this firm is absolutely solvent, and I do not know anything different from that. I have never gone into the bank to inquire into their financial condition, but I know that the president of this company owns a good deal of property in St. John city.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: In his own name or in the name of the company?

Mr. WIGMORE: In his own name, and I know that the property which they own there, the New Brunswick Rolling Mills is a very valuable property. So far as I know, they own it. I have never made inquiry to find out whether there is anything against it or not. I am absolutely fair to the House when I make that statement.

Mr. PARDEE: Are the New Brunswick Rolling Mills still in operation?

Mr. WIGMORE: So far as I know they are still in operation. The last time I was in St. John was at the New Year. I know that things are quiet all over. I do not know the condition of the New Brunswick Rolling Mills at the present time, but I know they have been carrying on a very successful business during the past two or three years.

Mr. COPP: Has my hon. friend, being interested as a citizen of St. John and a member of the Government in getting this matter cleared up, had any communications, correspondence or personal interviews with this firm, during the course of this trouble that has been going on for five months, to see what reason there is for this company delaying payment?

[Mr. Copp.]

Mr. WIGMORE: I do not know of any reason why the company is delaying payment. Only, as I said before—the hon. gentleman was not in the House, I think, when I made the statement before—

Mr. COPP: I apologize then.

Mr. WIGMORE: The only reason I could give is the same reason why many other firms are trying to cancel their contracts not only in this business but in every other business, namely, because prices have dropped materially. I do not know of any other reason why they should not carry out their contract.

Mr. BUREAU: Does the minister base his opinion as to the solvency and reliability of this company upon the fact that the president owns in his own name in the city of St. John a good deal of valuable property?

Mr. WIGMORE: I said besides that that the property that they have there in the situation in which it is, is very valuable at the present time even with the reduced value of real estate to-day. The property is on the line of the Canadian Pacific, and it is in a very valuable position in St. John as an industrial site of any kind.

Mr. DuTREMBLAY: Will the minister of Marine and Fisheries let us have the information that the department obtained from the mercantile marine agency before they made the contract with this company?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am glad to tell my hon. friend that all the information which I could gather at the time was perfectly favourable in regard to the financial condition of the company. I have not said to-night, and I do not say now that this company is not financially good. Hon. gentlemen opposite are hinting and almost saying that the company is bankrupt; I have not said so.

Mr. McKENZIE: One of the strongest evidences of bankruptcy is failure to pay your bill. Any person who refuses to pay his honest debt cannot complain if somebody says that he is insolvent. The company must not be very sensitive on that point. Has the minister the Order in Council which was passed closing this transaction with this company? That might give us some information as to what took place in the transaction. I have never been a minister, and the strong possibilities are that I never shall be; but I understand that a minister putting through a contract reports to council the facts of the case, and that an Order in Council is passed accepting the contract. Perhaps the minister could give us a copy of the report that he made to council on this transaction and the order that was passed at the time. That would be a very valuable record if the minister has it.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I will place on the table every tender that we got, the first, the second and the third time, all the correspondence that has taken place, a copy of the contract, a copy of the Order in Council. I shall be only too happy to do that. There is absolutely nothing wrong with this transaction. And having promised to do that, and as we are all trying to prorogue at as early a date as possible, I hope hon. members will agree with me that, after spending two hours and 35 minutes on this and saying practically nothing at all about the vote of $2,500,000, perhaps we have spent a sufficient time on it. I will put all the information on the table to-morrow. I will do more than that; I will hold one of the items here, because after all, they are all Naval Service items. Therefore, hon. members will have every opportunity again after they have seen a copy of the contract, the Order in Council and the correspondence, to make any further remarks that they desire to make.

Mr. McKENZIE: The minister should allow this item to stand until he has the information, and then he will get through very quickly. He has been struggling with this thing for six months trying to make some advance in it; he has failed absolutely to get a dollar in six months, so that he must not complain of the little delay from now until to-morrow to get this information. He will get on very much better by saying that he will take up something else and let this item stand until this information is put in the possession of the committee.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: The Chairman has decided that this is the only item on which this discussion can properly take place.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: That was the reason why he decided that it was in order on this item.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am not questioning the ruling of the Chair for a moment, but I should like to draw the Chairman's attention to the fact that all these items, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, and 294 are Naval Service votes. Hon. members have full right to ask any questions they like about the Niobe, Rainbow or anything else in regard to the Naval Service on any of these items, because they are all Naval Service items, as the appropriation shows.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I am sorry to differ from my hon. friend. The other items are not Naval Service.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes, they are.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Item 198 is hydrographic survey.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That is Naval Service.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Item 199 is fisheries protection service.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That is Naval Service.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Item 200 is Radio-telegraphic service, and 201 is tidal and current survey.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Those are Naval Service items.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: The only item is 197. The only reason why the Chairman ruled that this discussion was in order was the fact that there was no other item in the Estimates on which this discussion could take place. Even if the hon. member will hold one item, it will not be in order to-morrow to discuss this special deal on that item.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: To show that I am not trying to shut off debate at all—I would like to make progress to-night—I will table all the information that has been asked for, and I want it understood now, if the Chairman will allow me, that hon. members have the right to discuss this question again. Let me point out to my hon. friend that I am on the Naval Service Estimates which amount to $3,726,980. They are all Naval Service Estimates. I would ask the Chair again if he does not consider that all these Estimates are Naval Service Estimates; they are not fishery items nor marine items; they are Naval Service items.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I submit that even with the consent of the minister, the chairman could not allow the discussion of this matter on any other item.

The CHAIRMAN: In previous sessions it has often occurred that an item has been allowed to stand in the Estimates of one of the ministers with the understanding that any subject concerning his department could be discussed upon that particular item. I am sure that by unanimous consent this discussion could be resumed upon some other item, if the committee now wishes this item to pass and to proceed to other items.

Mr. CAHILL: Did I understand you to say, Mr. Chairman, that it would require unanimous consent to discuss this matter on some other item at a later date?

The CHAIRMAN: Strictly speaking, it would require unanimous consent, but if the hon. members of the Opposition desire to discuss a matter, and the minister in charge of the Estimates desires to allow the discussion, unanimous consent is generally given.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: It is not a matter of certainty.

Mr. BUREAU: We could let this item stand until we get the papers, and take up the other items, leaving this one open for further discussion.

The CHAIRMAN: That would be the best way out of the difficulty. Another way would be to obtain the unanimous consent of the committee now that on a certain item to be specified by the hon. minister, this discussion would be in order at a later date.

Mr. McKENZIE: It is very questionable whether this committee or Parliament can bind itself in advance as to what it is going to do, and particularly bind members who are not now present. Members are absent from both sides of the House, and I am not so sure that we could make such a ruling, outside of an Act of Parliament itself, that would be binding upon them.

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not going to get off as easily as he thinks. He is practically a new man in the House, and every minister before he is very long in harness learns that the less he says in putting through his Estimates, and the closer he keeps to the item under discussion, the better off he is. The minister to-night swung off into a full discussion of the naval policy, and told us of the sins of omission and commission of both parties for the last fifteen years. He is not going to escape after his fling at this side of the House to-night without hearing something about it.

The hon. minister was not in the House in 1909 when the naval policy of Canada was first discussed, but if he will look up the discussion in Hansard of March 30, 1909, he will see that hon. gentlemen now sitting around him who were in the House at that time voted unanimously with us on this side in favour of the Laurier naval policy. There was not a single dissenting voice to that resolution. The Laurier policy received the full and ample support of every man in the House. Now the minister comes here to-night, twelve or more years later, and taunts us about the Laurier naval policy. The Laurier naval policy had its basis in the resolution moved by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, then the Hon. George E. Foster. The Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was then leader of the Government, accepted his resolution with very slight changes and with those very slight changes the whole Parliament accepted the resolution upon which was based the Naval Act of 1910. If my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries wants to resurrect the question of the conduct of his party and the reasons for their right-about face in connection with the naval policy of Canada, I shall have no hesitation at all in discussing that matter with him. The naval policy was all right at that time, but in the early part of 1910, I think, an election was held in Drummond-Arthabasca, in the province of Quebec. It was found that the naval policy of Laurier which has been agreed to by every man in this House, was not popular with some people in the province of Quebec, so at once there was a volte-face by hon. gentlemen opposite, and they at once threw to the winds the naval policy of Laurier which they had supported. When the right hon. gentleman who is now Minister of Trade and Commerce was asked by some gentlemen in Quebec: What shall we do in this election? Shall we vote for those who are opposing the policy for the defence of Canada and the defence of Great Britain? Shall we vote against that policy? What did the right hon. gentleman then say? What does it matter whether they are refusing to do anything for Great Britain or not? Anything to beat Laurier. That was the policy of the gentlemen amongst whom my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries now takes refuge, and upon whose company he prides himself. At that time it suited him better, perhaps, to be with us supporting the Laurier policy. I say that the hon. gentleman has no business, just because he happens to renege from his party and take shelter with the party opposite, to taunt us because we were with him in supporting the policy of that time. He ought at least to have modesty enough to say nothing about the policy that he was supporting himself then. I think it ill becomes any man—I care not who he is—who, after supporting a certain policy at one time, leaves his party for some reason or other to befoul those who were formerly with him on the policy which he supported. There is nothing at all to be proud of in this matter. The hon. gentleman says that they have a new navy and a new policy. I want to ask the Conservative party when, where, and on what occasion they agreed upon a new naval policy? There is not a single man of independent standing on the Government side who is in favour of this naval policy. The main body of their support, they say, they have from Ontario. I tell them on my responsibility that there is no enthusiasm in Ontario or among Ontario members in regard to this new navy. In the first sitting of the Borden Administration in 1912 the then Minister of Naval Affairs, Mr. Hazen, shortly after he came into the House, in a speech declared that the naval policy of the Laurier Administration was abandoned once for all; it was not the policy of the Borden Government. He said they had no policy, that they were going to England the next year, and after a consultation on the other side the Government would announce their policy. Any one who reads Mr. Hazen's speech on that occasion will find that statement therein contained. Their next declaration was this, that we could not build ships on this side. They said it would take fifty years to build anything worth mentioning; that is what the leader of the Government at that time informed us. They decided to abandon any naval policy and to take $35,000,000 and purchase some ships from the Old Country and bring them over here in the name of Canada. That was their policy. It was defeated in the Senate after it had been forced through the House under closure, and we heard nothing whatever about the policy until to-night when the minister informs us we have a brand-new navy and naval policy, and that we have wiped out the old naval policy of the Laurier Administration. There is absolutely no foundation for such a statement. The matter was never submitted to the people, as was promised, and that being the case the minister has no mandate to have these vessels in his possession; nor have we the right to vote this money if we have any regard for the wishes of the people. There was no question of this kind before the people in 1917. The people, in fact, took it for granted that the Laurier policy had been abandoned by this Government, and they had every reason to suppose that they would be consulted on any question of a navy before any particular policy was adopted. The Government did not submit the matter to them in 1917, and the people to-day have the right to suppose that we are not going to invest in any naval affairs or launch on any permanent policy until the matter is pronounced upon by them. This discussion has been precipitated to-night by the minister's taunting us with having had a false navy policy. Well, whatever our policy might have been, it was concurred in absolutely and completely by both sides of the House. If it was a good policy we are all entitled to credit for it, and if it was bad we are all equally responsible, and we must not find very much fault with the Rolling Mills of St. John for not standing by their word if the part of Parliament composed of hon. gentlemen opposite have not enough respect for the resolution they passed in 1909 to abide by the consequences of that resolution. Everything in connection with this navy should be thoroughly investigated, and this matter should not pass until we have some information in regard to the way the business of the department is carried on. It will not impose any hardship on the minister to let this item stand. He could go on with other items and get the necessary information in regard to this matter in the meantime. I do say, with more or less feeling, that I deprecate the idea of the minister launching upon a tirade of practical abuse of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, their policy and their leaders. The policy which he is now so vigorously advocating is one for which he has no authority from the people; he had no mandate from the people to receive this gift. The vessels were only in the way in the Old Country; they did not know where to put them and threw them off their hands upon the minister, so that we should have the large expense in connection with them. No doubt the minister is in full sympathy with them in having vessels which they do not know what to do with. He can appreciate their position when he himself has sixty-five or seventy such craft which he is crowding into every mill pond in every part of the country so long as he can get them out of sight. On that principle, no doubt, he is willing to go to the assistance of those who have such ships as they cannot dispose of. We have no use for these ships that have been given us. I hope they will never be used, and I cannot see why we should expend money in connection with them that can and ought to be spent to better purpose. I do not think that the minister can defend a policy of spending money just for the glory of having a navy for which we have no use.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: As we have spent three hours now discussing the sale of the Niobe, and in order to give hon. members all the information that they ask for by tabling the facts, as I have promised to do to-morrow, I move that further consideration of this item be postponed, and I hope that hon. members will allow the other items to pass as we come to them.

Motion agreed to.

Item stands.

Fisheries Protection Service and to provide for the repairs and maintenance of the Fishery protection steamers, $370,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: What provisions are made for coastal protection in the Maritime Provinces this year?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We have two fishery protection vessels in service in the Maritime Provinces and also two which are laid up. We have not sufficient money to keep the four in commission.

Item agreed to.

Pay of temporary officers and clerks at Headquarters, at Halifax and Esquimalt Dockyards, $40,000.

Mr. CANNON: How long will these employees be needed?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The item of $40,000 is for the pay of temporary officers and clerks at headquarters, Halifax and Esquimalt dock yards. The work is just of a temporary nature.

Mr. CANNON: That is what the item says. I want to know how long they will be there?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That is a pretty hard question to answer; it is difficult to say how long they will be there. We do not intend to keep them any longer than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. CANNON: The time they will be kept will be proportionate to their usefulness. How long will they be useful, and what are they doing?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The permanent organization of the department is based on minimum requirements, and makes no allowance for emergencies, temporary pressure of work, unforeseen absence through illness or other causes, et cetera. The sum provided under this head is for the purpose of meeting such emergencies.

Mr. CANNON: I do not want to detain the Committee but I would like to ascertain the exact services of these officers?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: They are doing what ever work the permanent employees do. They may be sometimes employed at clerical work and sometimes at other work. As I say, we are asking this vote to employ these men in a temporary capacity until such times as the Civil Service Commission give us the necessary permanent staff.

Item agreed to.

Fisheries: To provide for salaries, construction and maintenance of fish breeding establishments, $365,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): I am chiefly concerned with the lobster hatcheries which have been abandoned by the department, and I want to know what the minister has done in the direction of substituting something in their place. I am told that on the Atlantic coast where those lobster hatcheries were, we are back now pretty much to the old method of catching the seed lobster and boiling it in the pot, and losing the seed. That is what I feared would happen when the minister undertook to abolish the system that had been in operation for a number of years. The minister will remember that his predecessors had established a large number of these hatcheries on the coast, but that—on the advice given him by some theorist in the city of Kingston, some professor who learnt his knowledge of fish out of a book—the minister, without consulting the House, or telling the members from the Maritime Provinces anything about it, closed the hatcheries all along the coast and sold them, and destroyed the system that had been built up in the course of many years. I would like to know if the minister has any information to give us as to what he proposes to do in the future in regard to that branch of the service.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. member, I think, is aware that the reason we closed these lobster hatcheries was because it was in the interest of the greater production of lobsters. Under the hatchery system the production of young fry was only about 30 per cent as compared with 100 per cent in the natural way when the female lobster extrudes her eggs. Therefore in the interest of the lobster industry, and especially as lobsters were becoming more and more scarce, we sold those old lobster hatcheries. But we have improved the regulations. We have expert men going down through those districts lecturing to the fishermen, and we are doing everything we can for the better care of the lobster industry and to secure greater production as well.

12 p.m.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): If the argument of the minister is any good it would apply to other fish as well as lobsters. He is carrying on the breeding of fish of various kinds on the coast and he is asking us to vote large sums of money for that purpose. If his argument that the lobster can be better propagated in the natural way than by any other method is a good one it applies equally to trout, bass, or any of the other varieties of fish that he is propagating. I think he will find it difficult to maintain such an argument. Instead of 30 per cent production of lobsters I question if we are getting any percentage of production at all. The minister apparently is not familiar with the history of this branch of the service. The experience at first was that these seed lobsters were destroyed: they were caught by the fishermen, thrown into the basket with the others, put into the pot in the factories and boiled. The hatcheries were built for the purpose of saving those lobsters that happened to be caught in that way. Inducements were offered to the fishermen to save the seed. That seed went into the hatchery and my hon. friend admits 30 per cent of lobsters were rescued. At present I am told that none are rescued, so that 30 per cent was better than nothing. I would like if my hon. friend could give me any proof that he is getting even a 30 per cent production out of the lobsters that are caught in the traps with seed on them.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I do not pose as an authority on lobsters or fish generally. I can only give the advice tendered by scientific men, who have informed me that lobster eggs are fertilized and that the female lobster really hatches each one. Therefore, the propagation is very much larger in the natural way when the lobster is free.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): But are not those female lobsters caught?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We have carried on a propaganda for some years to prevail upon fishermen not to catch these small female lobsters, and when they do catch them to put them back in the sea again.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Has my hon. friend sold all the lobster hatcheries on the coast? I understood there were about thirty.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes, they are all sold.

Mr. LEGER: Has the hatchery at Buctouche in the county of Kent been sold? If so, to whom and for what amount?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I find I was incorrect in that statement. They are all sold but two, and one of those two is the Buctouche hatchery.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Where is the other one?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am sorry I cannot tell just where the other lobster hatchery is located that is not sold.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): How much has been received for those hatcheries?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Canso, $1,750; Shippigan, $610; House harbour, $760; Fort Daniel, $775; Arichat, $1,000; Little Bras d'Or, $1,005; Georgetown, $555; Charlottetown, $700; Bay View, $650; Shemogue, $150; Antigonish, $635; Inverness, $350.50.

Mr. CHISHOLM: The minister made reference to the results of the investigation by scientists of this question. Were these scientists unanimous?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I believe so.

Mr. CHISHOLM: My information is that one of the head scientists of his own department, Professor Prince, did not endorse the policy of the Government in disposing of these hatcheries. If that is so, I do not quite agree with the minister that the question was decided correctly. Professor Prince was brought to this country many years ago, and he made a particular study of our lobsters. According to my information he opposed this policy of the Government, but I understand a few professors gathered themselves down by the seashore for a few months—enjoying themselves no doubt—and decided this question as against a man who had studied the question in the Old Country and had twenty years' experience. The first lobster hatchery established in this country was in 1896 at Pictou, and my information is that the particular zone supplied by the fry from that hatchery maintained a supply of lobsters much larger than those in any other zone along the coast of Prince Edward Island and around Pictou. This would go a long way to convince me that those hatcheries were doing good work, and that the only thing necessary was careful administration of each hatchery and giving the experiment time to prove itself. There were many features connected with the operation of those hatcheries which in my judgment did not contribute to good results, but rather to the very destruction of the lobsters. I would suggest that if the thirty per cent of fry gathered in the hatcheries was preserved, that is a much larger percentage than is preserved now under natural conditions. The fry of lobsters is subject to great destruction in its early stages, and that was the main reason for establishing these hatcheries. My belief is that they will yet be reopened at a much greater cost than the minister has received at this sale. These hatcheries were closed and sold over-night. In fact, they were sold in such a way as to indicate that the minister was eager to get clear of them, just as in the same department they closed up some of the life-saving stations over-night.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The biological board unanimously recommended that we close up these hatcheries, and Professor Prince as a member of that board concurred in its decision and also with the report that Professor Knight made. I can only go by the advice of our scientific officers. With regard to the sale of the hatcheries, we called for public tenders, and it has taken us almost two years to sell them.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Scientific officers may be all right in theory, but they do not know the history of the lobster along the Atlantic coast. The minister has not answered the difficulty I have raised in regard to the matter, and that is that the mother lobster is being destroyed. Through the hatchery method he says we preserved thirty per cent of the fry. Well, we are losing that thirty per cent now and the lobster industry is suffering to that extent. It is very easy for a professor to go into his office and make up his mind that the natural method is the best, and I agree with him, but he must have some regard for the fact that these female lobsters are being caught and destroyed. The whole purpose of building these hatcheries was to save those lobsters. My hon. friend should have consulted the House of Commons. There are a large number of men in this House representing Maritime constituencies who have had more experience in this matter than this professor at Kingston. But my hon. friend ignored the members of the House; he did not give them an opportunity of expressing an opinion in the matter before he came to a decision. If he had had the usual respect for the members of the House he would have come to them and told them that he was going to reverse a policy that had been followed for twenty-five years—that he was going to dispose of these hatcheries; then we would have been able to explain matters to him and perhaps cause him to change his mind. But he listened altogether to these scientific men who live a thousand miles from the coast and who do not know anything about the history of the lobster industry or of lobster breeding in that country. He did not even tell the members from the Maritime Provinces what he was going to do; he simply put the lobster hatcheries up to auction. Surely that course cannot be justified. The minister has to do more now; he has to show that we are saving that 30 per cent, and he has not been able to show it. My information is that we are losing and that the lobster industry is being depleted for want of the hatcheries.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: This matter was brought before the Standing Committee of this House on Fisheries and was very thoroughly discussed so that I did not by any means close the hatcheries simply on information that I got from the scientific officers. They were not sold for a year, and the matter was thoroughly gone into by this committee. I wish to point out also that before we closed the hatcheries and changed the regulations it was not illegal for fishermen to catch the small female lobsters and take them to the canneries where the eggs were brushed off. It is now illegal to do that, and we have taken many important and useful steps by our regulations to improve materially the conditions of the lobster industry. From information I have received from the practical as well as the scientific officers of the department and from hon. members of the House, I am satisfied that this is the case.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): I do not like to contradict the minister, but I have attended the meetings of the Fisheries Committee ever since I have been a member of this House and I have never heard that the question of the closing of the lobster hatcheries was submitted to that committee. It is news to me.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I want to make it quite clear to my hon. friend: I did not submit to the committee the question of the closing of the hatcheries. I said that the department decided on the advice of practical and scientific men that it would be wise to close them, but before selling them the matter was thoroughly discussed before the Standing Committee of the House on Fisheries and the hatcheries were not sold until a year after they were closed.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Guysborough): Some of them were sold and a protest was entered by members, including myself, to which the minister paid no attention. Of course, the fact that we were protesting as I am doing to-night did not affect the matter. The minister did not make any further investigation; he accepted the advice of the men whom he calls the scientific gentlemen. The minister is not able to show by the reports of his officers along the coast that he is saving the lobsters that were being utilized in the hatcheries. At least, he is not giving us any evidence to that effect; my information is that they are not being saved.

Mr. LEGER: I would ask the minister not to dispose of the Buctouche hatchery at least for a year or so. Many of the people on the shore believe that it is useful, and if it is decided not to close it up the same hatchery might be used for future operations.

Item agreed to.

Ocean and river service—to provide for the temporary relief of distressed seamen and to cover the expenses of shipping forms—further amount required, $3,500.

Mr. McKENZIE: The minister is no doubt aware that the marine hospital at Louisburg has been closed. May I have the minister's attention? Perhaps he is not sufficiently interested in the seamen to listen to a member when he is putting his case. If he is not, I will prefer the matter on some future occasion.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I was listening to my hon. friend. About two years ago the matters affecting sick mariners were transferred to the Department of Health. This item is to provide for the temporary relief of distressed seamen—to bring to their home ports those who may be wrecked.

Mr. CHISHOLM: With respect to this hospital in Louisburg, I happened to be before another minister of the Government yesterday with respect to hospitals and he assured me that one of the remedies for my difficulty was that there was a hospital at Louisburg.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am sorry, but I do not know anything about the marine hospitals; they come under my colleague, the Minister of Health.

Mr. ELKIN: Can the minister tell us how much was transferred from the Marine Department to the Health Department arising out of the sick mariner's benefit fund?

Mr. CALDER: The moneys derived by way of levy for this purpose form part of the general revenue; they do not constitute a special fund.

Mr. ELKIN: Quite a number of hospitals in the seaport towns were supported to some extent by the Marine Department out of this fund—that is, certain beds were maintained in those hospitals for sick mariners. Many of the hospitals have complained that the per diem allowance for these beds is not sufficient. Last year we tried to get a further allowance on that account, for St. John, but it was just at the time that this transfer was being made. I then maintained that if there was a large fund which had been collected by way of mariners' dues at least the interest should be devoted to the payment of a larger per diem allowance in these hospitals in order to give the sailors better accommodation. In St. John the accommodation is not sufficient to take care of sick mariners who are there in the winter season. In fact, in a great many cases the people of St. John are unable to get into the public hospital. A larger wing or something of that sort should be built to take care of these sick mariners, and the same applies to the other ports in the Maritime Provinces where contributions to this fund are rather large. I should like to bring this matter to the attention of the Minister of Health (Mr. Calder), to whom this matter has now been transferred.

Mr. CALDER: I assume the whole discussion is out of order; but I might state that the revenues derived from the Maritime Provinces this year are not as large as the expenditures, and I doubt very much if there is any fund such as that to which my hon. friend refers.

Item agreed to.

Lighthouse and coast service—signal service —further amount required, $4,000.

Mr. FIELDING: I have heard complaints made about the absence of telephones in lighthouses. I think I once made some inquiries of the department, and I was informed that it was not considered to be good policy that telephones should be supplied to light keepers. I have here, if the House will bear with me for a minute, an extract from a newspaper which seems to illustrate the need for telephones from lighthouses to the mainland. This is from an item in the Shelburne Gazette of a few days ago:

Messrs. Robert D. McKay and Frank Owen, of this town, had an exciting experience on Saturday last while fishing between Gray's Island and Gull Rock.

Their motor boat refused to go and for sometime they were pitched about in lively style by the waves which were big enough to make life in an unmanageable motor boat anything but pleasant. Fortunately they were seen by Beaumont Decker, keeper of the Light on McNutt's Island, who walked between two and three miles to give the alarm. Two boats put off to rescue of the two fishermen, one containing Sydney Slate and the other Stanford Kenney and Freeman Atwood and it was not long before the men were towed to terra firma.

They lost their dory and a tub of trawl and had an experience they do not wish to have repeated.

This was a case in which there was danger; the lightkeeper saw the danger, but he had to walk two miles in order to give an alarm. That is an illustration of the fact that lightkeepers should be provided with telephones. Would the minister give consideration to that?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I shall be glad to give every consideration to the suggestion of my hon. friend. We have not the money this year; but it is a matter that should receive attention, and as soon as the finances of the country will permit, I hope we may have telephones, at least in some of the most important stations.

Item agreed to.

Fisheries—to provide for the expenses of counsel in the Quebec fisheries reference before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, $21,645.55.

Mr. McKENZIE: Can the minister give us any idea what is the result of the decision of the Privy Council?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Privy Council a few months ago gave a decision under which we are now acting, namely that fisheries in navigable streams leading from the sea were no longer vested in Provincial Governments, but were under the Federal Government. Therefore, we have notified the Provincial Government at Quebec that all these fisheries in navigable streams leading from the sea now come under the Federal authorities, and all those that were not licensees must apply to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa Parliament buildings—restoration, $1,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN: This is the item which was under discussion this afternoon when the committee rose at six o'clock.

Mr. McCURDY: One or two members wish to discuss this item further, and it had better stand.

Mr. McKENZIE: I would suggest to the minister that when he brings this item on again, it would be well for him if possible to have the original contract with the contractor and the contract with the architect. We would like to know what those contracts are, particularly the one with the architect, and when the terms of the first contract became exhausted, what was the nature of the second arrangement that was made under which the architect is getting paid now.

Progress reported.

JUDGES ACT AMENDMENT

CONFERENCE WITH THE SENATE

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate acquainting this House that the Senate hath agreed to a free conference desired with the Senate for the purpose of communicating the reasons which induced the Commons not to concur in the amendments made by the Senate to the Bill No. 60, intituled: "An Act to amend the Judges Act," and hath appointed the Honourable Messieurs Bennett, Bostock, Lougheed (Sir James), Ross (Middleton), and Thompson as managers on their part of the said conference, and also that the managers of the Free Conference on the part of the Senate will meet in the Senate Committee Room No. 262, at 10.30 o'clock in the morning, on the thirtieth day of May instant.

On the motion of Hon. Mr. Ballantyne the House adjourned at 12.35 a.m.

INDEX

FIFTH SESSION — THIRTEENTH PARLIAMENT, 1921

Abbreviations.—1r., 2r., 3r.,=first, second, or third reading. Admn.=Administration. Amdt.=Amendment. Com.=Committee. Dept.=Department. Div.=Division. Govt.=Government. M.=Motion. Neg.=Negatived. Qu.=Question. Ref.=Reference. Rep.=Report. Res.=Resolution. Sec.=Section.

Abbatoirs. See Health of Animals; Live stock

Abitibi District, 3075
Grievances of settlers, 2510

Accounts. See Finance; Public Accounts

Accredited Herd. See Health of Animals

Adams, Capt. Henry C., and Canadian Navy Enquiry, 901; qu. 1237

Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 5, 40, 66, 110, 154, 188, 230, 244, 262, 313, 351, 397, 448, 479. Amdt. to Amdt. (Mr. Campbell), adjournment, neg.; Amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) non-confidence, neg. Address agreed to, 561

Ad Hoc Judge, 1084. See also Judges Act Amdt.

Adjournment. See House of Commons

Administration of Justice. See Justice

Admiralty Courts. See Vice Admiralty

Adulteration of Food Act Amdt.
Administration, 3129
Maple Products, 888. See also that title

Advisory Council of Scientic Research. See Research

Aeronautics, etc. See Air

Aeroplanes. See Air

Age of Consent. See Criminal Code Amdt.

Age Limit. See Prisons

Agenda. See Prime Ministers' Conference

Agrarian Party. See Progressive Party

Agricultural Colleges, 1034

Agricultural Gazette, 1074

Agricultural Implements, 91, 492, 417, 583, 666, 3179, 3372, 3394, 3492-6, 3508, 3631
United Grain Growers, and, 418-9

Agricultural Instruction, 1029

Agricultural Machinery (Standardization of Parts) 584; Res. (Mr. McCoig) 666; Amdt. (Mr. Henders) 670

Agricultural Shows, grants to,
M. (Mr. Archambault) 1238; withdrawn, 1247

Agricultural Societies, 1074. See also Exhibitions

Agriculture. See also Immigration; Soldier Settlement; Unemployment
Agriculture Act in Great Britain, 3186
Aids to, 1245
Appropriations limited, 1029
Butter. See Dairying Industry
Cold Storage warehouses, 1038
Conservation Commission, 3964
Cow-testing associations, 1036
Deputy Minister, salary, 950
Dairying. See that title
Decline of in Great Britain, 3186, 3237
Department
Civil Service appointments, 1045
County fairs, assistance to, 1123
Deputy Minister, salary, 950
Estimates, 917, 1024, 1074, 1116, 4506-13
Destructive insect and Pest Act, 4512. See also that title
District Representatives, 1033-4
Duff, the late Hon. James, work of, 1033
Eggs. See that title
Experimental Farms, 4512. See also that title
Fruit inspection, 1041. See also Fruit
Grasshopper plague, qu. 838, 1027
Health of Animals. See that title
International Institute of, 1116
Land suitable for, 845, 872
Live stock. See that title

Agriculture.—Con.
National Dairy Council, 1126
Potato-growing and diseases, 1032-3, 3224, 3442-73, 3525
Production, 135-6, 872
Products, decline in value, 3487
Publications, 1073
Seed and Feed Control, 1125, 4513
Seed fairs, 1126
Seed Grain. See that title
United States, in, 3188
Wright County, condition in, 922

Air Board, estimates, 3776

Air Force,
Camp Borden, qu. 1820, 3777
Preference in Civil Service appointments, 4483

Air Service, 3776
Forest patrol, 4495
Topographic Survey of Northern Canada, 856

Alaska boundary, 4494

Alberta
Coal, price at mine, 1251
Coal production. See Fuel Supply Problem, Natural Resources
Highways, grants, qu. 821
Industrial Research Commission, 1267
Penitentiary. See Penitentiaries
Prohibition plebiscite, 3901, 4374-88
Supreme Court, qu. 576

Alcohol. See also Customs and Excise; Inland Revenue; Prohibition; Proprietary; Special War Revenue
Certificate of provincial analyst, 3786
Customs duty, 3705
Excise duty, 2725-6
For medicinal purposes, 3729, 3957

Alderson, Mr. George B.
Claim of for compensation, 924, 1052, 2270-4, 4508. See also Health of Animals

Algernon Rock pier, qu. 1383

Alice Arm, wharf, 3976

Aliens. See also Canadian Nationals; Dominion Elections; Immigration; Naturalization;
Franchise, and, 3103
Naturaliation, 2441
Wives of British Subjects. See Dominion Election Act Amdt. Bill

All Night Sitting. See House of Commons

All Saints' Day. See Civil Service Holidays

Alpine Club, 4494

Alward, Mr., and Transcontinental, 1657

Ambassador at Washington, 185, 357, 525, qu. 671, 2400-23, 3635. See also Canadian Representation in the United States; Prime Ministers' Conference
Delay in appointment, 786
Fordney Bill, 512. See also United States

Amendments to Supply. See Supply

American Consuls. See Customs and Excise Bill; Trade; Trade Commissioners

American Markets. See Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Trade; United States

Amery, Col. L. S., 1532

Ames, Sir Herbert B. (St. Antoine)
Resignation
Enquiry as to date, 1069
Received, 1001
Reported, 464, 469, 478, qu. 577
See also Representation

Amherst drill hall, 2739

Amqui Station, 382, 1176, 1233

Anderson, Mr. R. K. (Halton)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 235. Demand that Government resign—amendment introduces no new issue, 235; congratulations to mover and seconder—tributes to former Prime Ministers—speech of Leader of Opposition—Unemployment insurance—old age pensions—League of Nations; tariff, 238; Alliance with Agrarian party; leader of Agrarians an out-and-out free trader—by-election in Peterborough—principles of Liberalism, 239; invitation to Liberal Unionists to cross floor—mandate of Government—immediate election would delay redistribution; increased representation, 240; seceders should have consulted their electors—Laurier administration and the tariff, 241; Daniel Webster and the clamourers, 242
Budget, 3348. Canada's debt and annual growth of expenditures, 3348; increase in trade, 3349; increase in population, 3349; Canada's present and future growth and progress, 3351; moderate protection necessary, 3351; reciprocity with United States, 3353; home market and transportation, 3354; fruit growing, 3354; Opposition and protection, 3355; Farmers' Party platform, 3356;

Anderson, Mr. R. K.—Con.
Budget—Con.
Grain Growers' Grain Company, 3357, 3360; Winnipeg strike, 3359; Depopulation of rural sections and increased price of commodities, 3361
Feeding Stuffs Act, qu. 965
Inspection districts, qu. 1624
Toronto-Guelph-Sarnia highway, etc., qu. 4252

Andrews, Mr. George W. (Centre Winnipeg)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 469. Congratulations to Prime Minister; free trade and protection—the "yellow peril", 471—markets of the world, 472; exports; Farmers' Platform; abuse of tariff no argument against protection, 473; free trade in England; armaments do not prevent war; Assembly of the League of Nations—the amendment; redistribution; election, 474
Canadian National Railways
Special Committee reference to, M. (Mr. Meighen), 1803
Housing, 1152
Oleomargarine Act Amdt., 3881
Prime Ministers' Conference, 2678
Proportional representation, 1537

Anglo-Japanese Alliance, 2637-9, 2357-60

Animal Contagious Diseases Act
Administration, 1048
Powers under, 4508
See also Health of Animals

Animal Contagious Diseases Act Amdt. Bill
Res. 2031; 1r., 2942; 2r., com., 3r., 3011

Animals, Cruelty to. See Criminal Code Amdt.

Annapolis County
Fruit growing in, 1046
Inspectors, 1041

Annapolis public building, 2741

Annexation. See United States

Annual Drill. See Militia

Annuities Branch, 4524

Anodynes, elixirs, etc., duty on, 3709

Anse Aux Gascons wharf, 3991

Anse St. Jean, wharf, 4536

Antelope in Western Canada, qu. 1134

Anticosti Island, squatters on, 1514

Antigonish Public Works office, 2818

Appendices
Canadian National Railways
Employees' pay, qu. 1737, 1815

Apples. See also Fruit
Export to Great Britain, 1501, qu. 1714
Markets for, 1469
Tariff on, 126

Appropriation Acts
1. Bill No. 42 (for 1921-2, for $71,499,703.70). Res. 1674; 2001; 1r., 2045; 2r., com., 2100; 3r., 2116
2. Bill No. 222 (for 1920-1, for $14,681,810.-14; and for 1921-22, $371,044,471.26). Res., 1r., 2r., com., 3r., 4577

Arbitration. See Grand Trunk

Arbitrations and Awards, Railways, 3015

Arbitrators, Judges as. See Judges Act Amdt.

Archambault, Mr. Joseph (Chambly and Verchères)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 244. Grand Trunk employees' pensions, 244—omissions from Speech—dissolution—election, 1917; "Knots and Lashings"—railway problem, 245; Can. Govt. Merchant Marine—Prime Ministers' Conference, 246; Imperial relations; League of Nations; no mandate—Purchasing Commission, 247—overtures to Quebec, 248; Mr. Gauthier, severance of connection with Liberal party, 250; inconsistent attitudes towards tariff, 251; Lafontaine and Cartier, 252; Minister of Immigration, 253
Agricultural Shows, M., 1238-46; withdrawn, 1247
Auditor General's Report, 1385
Banff National Park, 4495
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2911
Board of Commerce, qu. 599, 602
Budget, 3557. Financial operations, 3557; rigid economy in national expenditure necessary, 3558; military expenditure, 3558; Winnipeg strike, 3560; Grand Trunk shareholders, 3560; Prime Minister playing the game, 3562; Credits to Greece and Roumania, 3563; Members of Parliament directors of companies selling to Government, 3564
Canada Grain Act, 1442
Canada Shipping Act Amdt. Bill, 2230
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 2252

Archambault, Mr. Joseph—Con.
Canadian Government Merchant Marine
Proposed Special Committee, 1440
"Squatter" and "Pioneer," Ss., qu. 1382
Canadian Nationals Definition Act, 2032
Canadian National Railways
French language, 4331-3
Special Committee, reference to, M. (Mr. Meighen) 1767-97
Canadian Press Limited, qu. 564
Civil Service, religious holidays, 1384; qu. 1499
Confidential messengers, 1334
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3007, 3919-36
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Amalgamation of departments, Dr. Cartier, 3821
Debates, translation of French Speeches, Res. 698
Defamatory libel; publication of judicial proceedings, 2149, 3933
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4237-40
French Trade Agreement, 1174
Grand Trunk Railway
Loan, 4138
Shareholders, list of, 3320, 3560, 3740
Harbours and rivers, 3975-81
Highways, grants to provinces, qu. 2098
Inland Revenue Act Amdt. Bill, 2247
Inland Revenue Collector at St. Hyacinthe, Dr. Cartier, qu. 3904
Inquiry into public services, qu. 604
Interim Supply, voting of, 2011
Kirkwood Steamship Company, qu. 564
Militia supplies, sale to Roumania, 2245
Mondou, Mr.—Yamaska election, 3594
Montreal and South shore bridge, M. 2211-19
Montreal, public service, qu. 604
Naturalization Act, 1914 Amdt. Bill (Aliens who served in Allied Armies) 2441
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale, 4031-34
Oil, leases, qu. 564
Opium and Narcotic Drugs, 2265
Paintings in Senate Chamber, qu. 566
Parliament Buildings, 3994-4002
Pierreville postmistress, qu. 3423
Prime Ministers' Conference, qu. 564; 3320
Privilege, correction of Official Report Société des Artisans, 230
Public Accounts, 1069
Public Buildings, Nova Scotia, 2758
Public documents, destruction of, qu. 599
Purchasing Commission, 2024
Returns, enquiries for, 2009, 2775, 3320
Ross rifle, statement of Rev. Canon Scott, qu. 599

Archambault, Mr. Joseph—Con.
Roumania and Greece
Dominion Canners, purchases, qu. 1001
Interest on loans, 1072
Loans to, qu. 478, 564
Militia stores, sale to, 2245
Tappert, Rev. N., qu. 1673
Welland canal, 2025, 2979-98

Architect. See Parliament Buildings

Archives, 4533. See also Public Records
Biggar, Mr. H. P., qu. 2343
Doughty, Dr. Arthur, 2947
Provision for, 2945

Arctic Expedition, 4106, 4113

Argentine, Beef, competition with, 1039

Argue, Mr. Ira E. (Swift Current)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 367. Congratulations to Prime Minister—Mandate of Government and its supporters, 367; redistribution, representation of West; freight rates; Wheat Board, 368; price of wheat—grain investigation, 369
Canadian National Railways, 3038
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4467
Gravelbourg-Swift Current Railway, 3053

Armistice Day
Shipbuilding contracts after, 1683
Thanksgiving, 2555

Armistice Day Bill (Mr. Mowat) 1r., 2618; Transferred to Govt. Orders, 3207; 2r., com., 3773; 3r., 3776

Armouries for Public Meetings, qu. 901

Armstrong, Mr. J. A. M. (North York)
Civil Service bonus, 2109

Armstrong, Mr. Joseph E. (East Lambton)
Budget, 3424. Western Ontario industries, 3424; Imports of manufactured goods and exchange, 3425; canning factories, 3426; manufacturing industries generally, 3427
Business of the House
Bills reported by Standing Coms., 3761
Butter substitutes, material for, 3745
Canal tolls, 2969
Civil Service Retirement Act Amendment Bill, 4273
Flax Industry, 1401
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Waterway, 744
Highways west of London, 4307
Illustration stations in Western Ontario, 948
Immigrants along national railways, 3070

Armstrong, Mr. Joseph E.—Con.
Inland Shipping
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, qu., 2192
Rates—control, 1497, 2557, 2966-9
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters, 607
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4193
National Research Council, 2702
Ocean shipping, Govt. control, qu. 3530
Quebec Union Electric Telephone Co., 3343, 3421
Railway Act Amdt. Bill (Inland Shipping Rates), 1497, 2556
United States railways, 1576
Welland canal, 2969

Army Worms, 1028

Arsenic, 1027

Arthur Young Company, 2781, 4465. See also Address; Civil Service; Post Office; Printing Bureau
Employment of, 551
Payments to, qu., 4251

Arthurs, Mr. James (Parry Sound)
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, firearms, 3900-6
Dominion Elections Act Amdt., 309
Imports for home consumption in 1920, qu., 602
Pensions, widowed mothers, 637
Polish battalion for service in French army, 4056
Soldiers' Pensions, insurance and re-establishment committee, final report, 4056

Artisians, Canadiens Francais, La Société des, 82

Ascension Day, 2626, 2775. See also Civil Service
Adjournment. See House of Commons

Ashley, Sergt. T., C.M.S.C., qu., 3090

Assembly. See League of Nations

Atholstan, Lord, 1515
La Presse and, 3248

Atikokan, additional tracks, 1017

Atlin District, B.C., Judge, 1080

Auditing. See Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Canadian National Railways

Auditor, Independent. See Canadian National Railways

Auditor General
Railways, audit by, 1189

Auditor General's Report, 597, 958, 2247
Comparison with Estimates, 1108
Delay in bringing down, 737, 903, 1791
Penitentiaries, purchases for, 1104-5
Travelling expenses of judges, 1088
Unprovided items, 4535
Vols. I and II, 642; Vol. III, 788, 1396; Vol. IV, 737, 1176, 1385, 1388

Australia and New Zealand
Trade and steamship services, 1223, 1468, 1493

Austrian and German Imports. See Customs Act Amdt. Bill; Customs and Excise Dept. Bill

Authors. See Copyright

Automobiles.—See Criminal Code Amdt.
Driving while intoxicated, 3911
Theft, 3913

Backus, Mr. E. W., 4173-4224. See also Lake of the Woods

Baie Ste. Catherine Steamship Service, 1822, 1971

Baie St. Paul liquor seizure, qu., 696; qu. 1132

Balance of Trade, 97, 3219, 3264, 3366, 3397 See also Address, Budget, Trade

Baldwin, Mr. W. K. (Stanstead)
Budget, 3201. Tariff question, 3201; war indemnity, 3202; Roumanian and Greek loans, 3202; present economic conditions, 3202; financial situation, 3202; Laurier Government, 3204; railway problem, 3204; taxation, 3204; Easterr Townships, 3205; military and nava expenditure, 3205; League of Nations, 3208; military service, 3206; immigration policy, 3206
Dairy Products Grading Bill, 4446
De Martigny divorce, 4112
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 741
Housing, 1143-9
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4224
Unemployment and Labour, 1373

Balfour, Hon. A. J., and protection, 3417

Ball, Mr. Robert J. (Southeast Grey)
Pierreville postmistress, qu., 3208

Ballantyne, Hon. C. C. (Minister of Marine and Fisheries and Minister of the Naval Service)

Ballantyne, Hon. C. C.—Con.
Brant, steamer, 1982
British preference, 3485, 3553
Liberals, and, 3616
Budget, 3209. Revenue, 3209; Imaginary letters and Mr. McMaster, 3209; private business of ministers, 3210; tariff revision, 3210; position of Mr. Fielding on tariff, 3211; Naval affairs and expenditure, 3212; fiscal policy of Farmers' and Liberal parties, 3213; boot and shoe industry in Quebec East, 3214; Mr. King's speeches in Eastern and Western Canada, 3214; position of Mr. Gauthier, 3215; Quebec representation in Cabinet, 3216; attitude of Quebec,. 3216
Business of the House
For tomorrow, 2148
Canada Shipping Act Amdt. Bill (Public harbours) 2229
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 2259-60
Canadian Government Merchant Marine
Balance sheet, 1920, errors in, 1697-8
Canadian Press comment, 1704
Creation of company, 1908
Dominion Iron and Steel Company, 1710
First annual report, 1694
General statement, 1272; shipbuilding, 1272, 1279; shipping rates, decline in, 1273; cost of construction, 1274; operating costs, 1275; routes and sailings, 1275; exports, 1276-77; operating results, 1277; assets, 1277; liabilities, 1278
Halifax-Newfoundland route, 1686
Information, 1440
Operating profit, 1867
Preference to Canadian products, 1280
Quebec port, alleged discrimination against, 1271
Sailing routes, 1275, 1733
Ships on Great Lakes, 1914
Vessels, names of, 1962
Canadian "Inventor" 1890
"Champlain," 1980, 1995
Canadian Nationals Definition Bill, 786
Champlain, steamer, 1980, 1995
Chicago Drainage Canal, 1851
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4475-84
Naval Service, preference, 4484
Dry docks, 1690
"Esperanto," wreck, 4341
Fisheries
Breeding establishments, 4036
Dominion and Provincial jurisdiction, 2105

Ballantyne, Hon. C. C.—Con.
Fisheries—Con.
Inspection of pickled and canned fish, 2183
Lobster hatcheries, 4036
Overseers in Lunenburg, 2179
Salmon fishing licenses, 4342
Icebreakers and steamers, repairs, 1979, 1994
Imaginary letters, 3209, 3174
Johnston, Mr. Alex., re-appointment, 644
Life-saving service, 1990, 1991
Lighthouse and coastal service, 1996, 2174
Signal service, 1997, 4040
Lightkeepers' salaries, 1995
"Marie Lydia," schooner, 1985
"Narbethong," steamer, 2175
Naval Service estimates, 4010-36
Navigation, season of, 1994
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale, 4010-36
Ocean and River service, 1736
Pilotage, administration of, 1999
Pilots, pensions, 2000
Public Harbours, 2229
Repairing of ships at Quebec, 1988
St. Lawrence channel, dredging, 1992
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. (Ministers and directorships) 652
Sherwin-Williams Paint Co., 372, 3484
Shipbuilding, 1272, 1683, 2081
Contracts, 1872, 1884, 1972, 1902
Correction as to value, 1683
Depreciation, 1886
Details of construction, 1874
Dominion Steel Company, 1691
Extra fittings, 1894
Figures, 1931
Imperial Munitions Board, 1869
Interest on cost, 1887
Lemieux, Mr., speech on, 1684
Newspaper comment, 1934
Operating profit, 1866
Opposition to, 1892
Price per ton, 1873
Progress in debate on, 1729, 1931
Sinking fund, 1885
Shipyards, Government loan to, 1883
Swan, Mr. D. D., Consulting engineer, 1997
Tariff—speech, Montreal, Nov. 15, 1920, 363
Welland canal obstruction, 1990
Wrecking plants, 1990
Wrecks, investigation, 1988
Yamaska by-election, 3251

Ballot Boxes, Convicts working on, 1092

Banff National Park, 3986, 4495

Banking and Commerce, Com., 962

Bankruptcy Act Amendment Bills
1. Bill No. 36 (notice to creditors of suspension) 1r., 1069; 2r., com., 2556. (See No. 3)
2. Bill No. 37 (French Version) 1r., 1069; m. for 2r., 2557. (See No. 3)
3. Bill No. 118. 1r., 2618; 2r., com., 3909, 3143; 3r., 3146. Senate amendments. 3772-4068

Subjects and sections discussed:
Additional security by trustee, 2913
Adjustment of rights of contributories, 2929
Affidavit upon registration, 2910
Alternative powers—court to await prior action, 2937
Assignment of book debts, 2922
Available Act of bankruptcy, 2909
Claims, priority, 2935
Commencement of bankruptcy, 2910
Discharge of Trustee, 2934
Dismissal of petition, 2910
Dividend, 2930-31
French version; correction, 4170
Jurisdiction of Dominion and provinces, 2924
Leased premises, 2935
Liability of officer, director or agent of company, 2940
Local newspaper, 2909
New trustee may be substituted, 2916
Penalty for removing goods, 2938
Permission limited, 2920
"Person," 2910
Procedure in Quebec under Civil Code, 2924
Proof, power to admit or reject, 2935
Proposal of composition or management, 2911
Removal of goods; bank deposits, 2920
Remuneration, expenses and costs, 2930
Remuneration of trustee, 2933
Search warrants, 2936
Securities—secured creditor to value, 2935
Stay of proceedings, 2912
Trustee may apply for directions, 2918
Trustee may apply for sale of property, 2920
When misrepresentation or fraud, a defence for contributory, 2928

Bankruptcy Act, Judges under, 1084

Banks. See also Finance; loans
Canadian, deposits outside Canada, qu. 1623
Dominion Notes and gold reserve, qu. 1234
Taxation, and, qu. 2192, 3664

Banner Oats, 1033

Bar Association. See Canadian Bar Association

Barbed Wire, 3328, 3495

Barnard, Mr. C. A., 1846, 1930

Barnhill, Mr. A. P., 1609-10. See also Canadian National Railways
Business interests, 3610

Bass River, wharf, 3989

Battlefields Memorials Commission, competitive designs, 2566

Beatty, Mr. E. W., and immigration, 1127, 1356

Beauce, appointment of Judge, 1081

"Beaver" Canadian, Ss., qu. 1673

Beef Cattle. See Cattle Embargo; Live Stock

Beef, Dressed, export of, 1039. See also Cattle Embargo

Beer Containers, Marking, 3786

Beet Sugar, 301, 3426, 3456

Béland, Mr. H. S. (Beauce)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 157; Election, League of Nations, 157; speeches of Sir George Foster and Mr. Rowell; International Justice; Article X; registration of treaties; expenses, salaries of officials. 158; Canada's share; Imperial federation; centralization; local control; Lord Burnham, 159; unrest and dissatisfaction, 160; Government has outlived mandate; representation, redistribution will not greatly help Agrarians; tariff issue, 161, 162; Quebec situation, 162; Canadian National Railways, Board of Commerce, 163; Board of Pension Commissioners; International Joint Commission; Peace Conference; Assembly of the League of Nations, 164
American implements at Experimental Farms, qu. 492
Auditor General's Report, 914
Brunelle, Sergt. Major N., 1519
Business of the House
Monday, Government business, 2148
Public Bills and Orders, 2819
Second reading by consent, 2889
Saturday sittings, 2818
Canada Year Book, 1425
Canadian Association for Prevention of Tuberculosis, 3142

Béland, Mr. H. S.—Con.
Canadian National Railways
Private ownership, 1498
Canadian representation in the United States, 2400-28
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2780
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2492-2502, 4268-73
Coal importation, 1248
Cocaine and morphine imports, 3130
Coffee, adulteration of, 3141
Conservation Act Repeal Bill, 3146, 3958-71
Dairy Produce Grading Bill, 4437-42
Demobilization, 2285
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. Bill, 4065
French Trade Agreement, 1175
Fuel Supply, Special Committee, evidence in French, 4251
Government railways, boards of management, 1658
Governor General—reported appointment of Lord Byng, 4435
Grain elevators, 1442
Health
Medical officers, 3133
Immigrants, for, 3132
Housing loan, 4552
Immigration, 2575
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4351-5
Income Tax, extension of time, 1272
Maple Products Act Amdt. Bill, 2150, 2193, 2557-60, 2618, 2890
National Catholic Labour Unions, 1652
National Resources, 892
Maple industry, 892
Opium and Narcotic Drugs, 2263-7
Parliament Buildings, 4000
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2096, 2709-11
Polish Battalion for service in French Army, 4055
Pootmans, Mr. G., and Belgian loan, 3379
Purchasing Commission, 2018, 2020, 2024
Quebec riots, 1508
Quebec Union Telephone Company, 3343
Returned Soldiers
Pensions, insurance and re-establishment Special Committee, 732, 4055
Relief for, 2688
Revenue, expenditure and debt, qu. 2099
Scientific Research, 1430. See also Research
Statutory expenditures, 1422
Unemployment, 4551

Belfast, linen yarns. See Linen yarns

Belgo-Canadian Pulp & Paper Company, 3049

Belgium. See also Loans
Credit to, qu. 577, qu. 1001, 3347, 3377
Pootmans, Mr. G., 3379
Purchases in Canada, qu. 736

Bell, Dr. Graham, secretary, 2377

Bell, Major Graham A., 1609-10, 1666, 3610. See also Canadian National Railways

Bell Telephone Company, Signal Service, 1998

Belly River water rights, qu. 2943. See also Irrigation

Bermuda
Steamship service to, 1488
Trade agreement, rejection of, 1271. See also Canada-West Indies
Trade relations, 2253

Berne Convention. See Copyright

Berry Boxes and Currant Boxes
Amendment of Inspection and Sale Act M. (Ethier), 4106, 4114

Berthierville telephone, qu. 1233

Bertrand, Mr. Joseph Tetu, 4079

Best, Mr. John (Dufferin)
Agricultural Shows, 1244
Chief Justice, income tax, 1565
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4468-80
Experimental Farms, 940
Flax-growing, 1392, 1395
Fruit inspectors and Civil Service Commission, 1045
Highway construction in Ontario, 3027, 3033, 4295
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4214-18
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3855-88
Parliament Buildings, 4075

Bi-Cameral System. See Ministers

Bienfait, Briquetting plant at, qu. 673, 4499. See also Coal; Lignite; Natural Resources

Biggs, Hon. F. C. and Highways, 3036, 3037, 4290, 4448. See also Highways

Bills. See also Deputy Speaker; House of Commons; Private Bills Discussed; Speaker. For Public Bills see individual titles

Binder Twine, 3227, 3328, 3365, 3481, 3493, 3505. See also Special War Revenue Act Amdt.
Exemption of fibre, 3746

Biological Board, 2189

Birchard, Dr., grain laboratory at Winnipeg, 1228

Birds. See Migratory Birds

Bituminous. See Coal; Fuel Supply

Blair, Mr. William J. (Battle River)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 376; General election unfair to West; no demand; marketing of farmers' grain; at mercy of grain dealer; elevator practices, 377; position of elevator operator; screenings and dockage, 378; overages; Winnipeg Grain Exchange; Wheat Board; participation certificates, 379; Mr. Woods' statement; investigation necessary
Canadian Wheat Board, qu. 1343

Blake, Mr. Matthew R. (North Winnipeg)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 313; Congratulations to Prime Minister; unjust criticism of Government, 313; effective prosecution of war; trade expansion; merchant marine; re-establishment, 314; Soldiers' Settlement Act; soldiers' insurance; expenditure of Ontario Government, 315; trade with United States; exchange; declaration of policy by leader of Agrarians; investigation of grain trade, 316; performances not promises; leader of the Opposition, 317
Alcohol, tax on, 3731
Criminal Code amendment, 3899
Debates, translation of French speeches, 702
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4201
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 2267

Blondin, Hon. P. E., 536, 552. See also Postmaster General
Payments to, qu. 567. See also Ministers, Post Office

Blood Indian Reserve. See Indians

Blood-Testing of Animals, 1050

Blouin, Mr. Joseph. See Quebec Riots

Blue Books, printing of, 1485. See also Printing Bureau

Board of Commerce, 163, 401, 441, 3169, 3604. See also Address, Budget
Appointment and work, qu. 602
Total cost, qu. 599

Board of Directors. See Canadian National Railways; Management

Board of Railway Commissioners. See Railway Commission

Board of Trade Reports
French forms, 2819, 3320, 3375

Boards of Trade, 1465. See also Trade

Boivin, Mr. George H. (Shefford). See also Deputy Speaker
James McLaren Company, Limited, 665
Speaker's Chair, presentation, 3688, 3691

Bolshevism, 27, 3451
Pamphlet issued by Labour Department, 4548

Bolton, Mr. Ferris (Lisgar)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 396; Grain trade—drying up of lakes in Prairie Provinces—duration of Parliament, 396

Bombs. See Criminal Code Amendment

Bonds. See also Finance; Loans; Victory Bonds
Canadian Government, qu. 1620, 3289
Comparative return on Dominion and Nova Scotia, 4165
Outstanding War, Victory, tax free and taxable, qu. 2821
Tax-exempt, 3398

Bonus. See Civil Service

Boot-making. See Penitentiaries

Boots and Shoes
Industry, 1222, 3214, 3230, 3386, 3484, 3631
Trade in, 1225

Borax, Manufacture of, 3365

Bordeaux Mixture, 1033

Borden, Right Hon. Sir Robert L. (King's, N.S.)
Archives, provision for, 2947-53
Armistice Day Bill, 3773
Business of the House
Complaint of undue haste, 4452
Prorogation—important business immediately preceding, 4452
Canadian Constitutional Development, 2378
Canadian National Railways, Special Com., reference to, M. (Mr. Meighen), 1777
Canadian Representation in the United States, 2436
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4488
Religious holidays, 4488
Returned soldiers, 4259
Copyright Act Amdt. Bill, 3838-50
De Martigny divorce, 3765-70
Disarmament, views on, 3418
Estimates on Thursdays and Fridays, Rule 17c, 2104
Governor General—Address to on retirement, 4435
Interim Supply, 1678
Judges' salaries, 1563

Borden, Right Hon. Sir Robert L. —Con.
Maisonneuve and Gaspé, representation, 2329
Nauru Island phosphate deposits, 4542
Prime Ministers' Conference, 2626
Privileges and Elections Com., 2373
Speaker's Chair, 3693

Borden, Camp
Air Force, qu. 1820, 3777

Borrowing. See Housing; Loans

Boswell, wharf, 3977

Bosworth, Mr., and value of ships, 1706

Boucher, Mr. Aime, ques. 3422, 3423. See also Pierrevile; Yamaska

Boucher, Mrs. See Pierreville Postmistress

Bounties, 3085. See also Natural Resources; Trade and Commerce
Beet Sugar, 3456
Iron and Steel, 874
Linen yarn, 1389
Petroleum, crude, 1385, 1413

Bourassa, Mr. J. B. (Levis)
Canadian National Railways, superannuation, qu. 2344
Civil Service
Appointments, qu. 572
Returned soldiers, qu. 3259
Dredge Internationale, qu. 2192, 2506
Motor-bus tax, remission, qu. 603
Printing Bureau, destruction of documents, qu. 603
St. Romuald public building, qu. 577, qu. 604

Boxed Goods. See Special War Revenue Act Amdt.

Boyce, Mr. George (Carleton)
Arthur Young Company and Griffenhagen, payments, qu. 575
Housing, 1146
Immigration to Northern Ontario, 3077
Oleomargarine Act Amendment Bill, 3859
Unemployment and immigration, 1362

Boyer, Mr. Gustave (Vaudreuil-Soulanges)
Dairy products grading Bill, 4444
Maple Industry, 887
Natural resources, 887
Road from Cascades Point to Coteau Junction, qu. 576
Tobacco licenses, 2554
War History, qu. 1625

Boys, Mr. William A. (South Simcoe)
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Provincial analyst's certificate, 3789
Still—innocent manufacture of part, 3788
Grand Trunk loan, 4148-58

Bradley, Mr., Vice-Admiralty registrar, 1086

Bran, for destructive insects, 1027

Brandram-Henderson, Limited, 1611

"Brant," steamer, 1982

Brantford-Hamilton Highway. See Highways.

Bridges. See also Canadian National Railways; Public Works; Railways and Canals
Banff, 3986
Bryson-Calumet Island, 3986
Campbellton-Cross Point, qu. 573, 2937
Edmundston, 2810
Grand Etang, 3987
Jacques Cartier County, 3678
Joliette, 4320
Kingston, 3973
Lachine Canal, 3675, 4308
Longueuil, 300
Montreal-South shore, M. (Archambault) 2213
Perrot Island, qu. 576, qu. 603
Quebec highway, 4333
Railway, 1664
St. Annes-Vaudreuil, 3677
Victoria, 300

Briquettes, 1251, 1267, qu. 673, 4499. See also Fuel; Lignite

Bristol, Mr. Edmund (Toronto Centre)
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 1288
Cattle embargo, 728
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2464
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 743
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. (Ministers and directorships) 594
Shipbuilding, 1288

British Board of Trade and Immigration, 3133

British Cattle, 1049. See also Cattle Embargo

British Chamber of Shipping, 1716

British Columbia
Buoys and Lighthouse service, 2175
Fisheries, 861, 883
Fruit industry, 9-10
Hog cholera in, 1059
Lumber trade, 1725

British Columbia.—Con.
Natural resources, 861
Poultry, 3750
Shipment of ties to Egypt, 1725
Vancouver Island railways, qu. 3422

British Embassy at Washington, 1221. See also Canadian Representation.

British Empire Steel Corporation, 1691. See also Halifax Graving Dock

British Flag, protection under. See Burnham, Dr.

British Foreign Office. See French Trade Agreement

British Funds, disbursement in Canada, qu. 733

British Goods, importation of. See Customs Tariff Act Amdt. (Marking of Imported Goods)

British Manufacturers. See Trade

British North America Act
Proposed amendments. See Address; Ministers
With regard to Judges, 1082

British Precedents. See Address; Ministers

British Preference, 3699

British Remount Commission, 4341, qu

British Subjects, foreign-born wives of. See Dominion Elections Act

British Traditions. See Ministers

Brookfield, Mr., and Halifax Graving Dock, 1699

Brouillard, Mr. J. O. (Drummond and Arthabaska)
Archives, Mr. H. P. Biggar, qu. 2343
Canadian National Railways, Hornepayne division, qu. 1624
George, Mr. A. D., qu. 1233
Newcombe, Mr. E. F., and G. T. Arbitration, qu. 1002
Printing Bureau, destruction of documents, qu. 1621
Judge Snider's report, qu. 2028
Tilley, Mr. W. N., K.C., qu. 1001

Brown, Hon. George, 172, 1167-8
Letter to Sir John A. Macdonald, 4002

Brown-Tail Moth, 1027. See also Destructive Insects

Brunelle, Sergt. Major N.
M. (Mr. Lemieux) for papers, 1518

Brussells, International Financial Conference, qu. 1237, 3148, 3150, 3157, 3268, 3276, 3452, See also Military Expenditure

Buchanan, Mr. W. A. (Lethbridge)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 475; congratulations to Prime Minister; explanation of personal position; not prepared to support Government; people voted on war not domestic questions; new parties, policies and leaders, 475; redistribution and election; Western Canada entitled to increased representation, 476; tariff; the parting of the ways, 477
Antelope in Western Canada, qu. 1134
Customs revenue by provinces, qu. 1622
Irrigation
Belly river water rights, qu. 2943
Milk river water rights, qu. 2099
Natural resources, 857
Transfer to Western Provinces, 2535
Trade agents in United States, qu. 1001

Buckley, Mr. Charles P., qu. 966

Budget. See also Ways and Means
Date of
Announcement of, 2943
Inquiry, 738, 903, 1270, 1555, 2151, 2568, 2818, 2890
Debate on, 3127, 3146, 3209, 3262, 3322, 3343, 3375, 3423, 3476, 3531, 3584
Amdt. (Mr. Fielding) 3155; neg., 3686-7; resolution agreed to, 3688
Resolutions, 3121
Speech, 3114

Bud Worm, destruction in spruce forests, 1031

Building Conditions. See Housing

Building Material, tax on, 3734, 3736. See also Special War Revenue Act Amdt.

Building Trades. See Labour

Building Trades Conference, 1498, 1556

Bulk Freighters. See Fuel Supply

Buoys. See Navigation, aids to

Bureau, Mr. Jacques (Three Rivers and St. Maurice)
Armistice Day Bill, 3773
Automobile theft, 3916
Business of the House, 1330, 1340
Definite statement as to, 1025
Estimates—method of voting, 1073
Morning sittings—prorogation, 4339
Previous debate, 3562

Bureau, Mr. Jacques—Con.
Business of the House—Con.
Supply
Procedure, 1024, 1025, 1073, 1217
Thursdays and Fridays, 958, 1217
Canada Temperance Act
Cases pending, 3902
Exemption of, 4376
Proclamation, 4876
Retroactive legislation, 4376
Supreme Court case, 4376
Canadian Forestry Association, 4494
Canadian Nationals Definition Act, 645, 647, 767
Canadian National Railway Company, damage to property, 3049
Canadian National Railways
Forest fires—Transcontinental, 4335
Operation of, 1004
Saskatoon, switch engines, qu. 3090, 3903
Cattle embargo, 729
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 3901-4267
Conservation Act Repeal Bill, 3959-68
Containers, 3956
Copyright Amdt. and Consolidation Bill, 3830-7
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3900-36
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Invoice certificate, 3798
Fee, 3798
Form of, 3798
Proclamation, 3798
Trade agents, 3798
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition plebiscite), 261
Dates of proclamation, assent and voting, 303
Names eliminated, 304
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4246-8
Election officers, disqualification, 4246
Nomination paper, 4247
Exchequer Court Act Amdt., 624
Fuel Supply Co. evidence in French, 4251
Harbours, and rivers, estimates, 3973
Vote in Com., 3979
Highway construction in Ontario, 4297
Hudson Bay Railway, motion involving expenditure, 984
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4344-54
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters, Bill, 608
Interior Department
Messenger clerks, 1333
Salaries, 1330
James MacLaren Company, Limited, Bill, 598
Justice Department
Law officers, 1078
Juvenile delinquents—spanking, 3918

Bureau, Mr. Jacques—Con.
Lake of the Woods Control Bill, 1176
International Joint Commission, and, 1071
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4171-4226
National Research Institute, 2692
"Niobe" and "Rainbow", sale, 4012-34
Park St. Charles Company, proposed payment to, 4575
Patent Act Amendment Bill, 4456-9
Penitentiary Act Amdt. Bill, 3739
Railway statistics, qu. 3422
West Durham election, 1324
Wines, sparkling, tax on, 3734

Burnham, Dr., treatment of by Serbian Government, qu. 576
M. (Mr. Lemieux), 1520

Burnham, Mr. J. H., resignation of, 1

Burnham, Lord, 159
Suggested appointment as Governor General, 599

Business Depression, 3213. See also Address; Budget; Trade

Business Profits War Tax, 3120, 3253, 3445. See also Address; Budget; Taxation
Expenditure, 4533

Butter. See Dairying Industry; Dairy Products, grading of; Oleomargarine

Butts, Mr. Robert H. (Cape Breton South and Richmond)
Budget, 3524. Attitude of Government supporters on tariff, 3524; comparison with attitude of Opposition, 3525; protection and the fiscal policy, 3525; foreign trade development under protection, 3526; steel trade, 3526; Dominion Coal Company and strike—Mr. E. M. Macdonald, 3528
Cost of operation of ships, 1799
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, theft of automobiles, 3917
Ingonish, Macleod's breakwater, 4087
Interim Supply, 2020
Judges, power to suspend sentence, 1857
Post Office Act Amdt. Bill, 2124
Reciprocity agreement with United States, 2066
St. Lawrence coal trade, 1495
Wrecks, removal of, 1990

By-Elections. See House of Commons; Representation in Parliament
Bill respecting, 1310
Holding of. See Representation in Parliament

Byng, Lord, New Governor General. See Governor General

Cabinet
French Canadian Minister, alleged offer of position to, 3638. See also Veniot; York-Sunbury
Gauthier, Mr. L. J., M.P., and, qu. 1131
Ministers. See also that title
Post Office Dept. and, qu. 1349
Quebec, representation in, 3216

Cabot Strait, 3297

Cahill, Mr. Frank S. (Pontiac)
Air Board, 3777-83
Annapolis public building, 2741
Binder twine fibre, 3756
Bounties, 1386. See also under this title; Natural Resources; Oil
Bureau of Statistics, 2142
Business of the House, 1344
Estimates
Announcement of business for to-morrow, 1344
Rule 17C
Right to call dept. when in Com. of Supply, 2889
Thursdays and Fridays, 1215, 2889, 3001
Calumet Island bridge, 3986
Canada Year Book, 1425
Canadian Nationals Definition Act, 776
Canadian National Railways
Auditing of accounts, 1189, 1668
Board of Directors, 4314
Correspondence with directors, 1003
Lord Shaughnessy's letter, 2503
Management—Information, M. (Mr. King) 1189
Officials, payment of, 1669
Report, qu. 902
Special Committee, reference to
M. (Mr. A. K Maclean), 1615
M. (Mr. Meighen) 1769
Amdt. (Mr. Crerar) 1813
Canadian Northern Railway, Directors, 1664
Canadian Representation in the United States, 2378
Census—appointment of enumerators in Pontiac, 828, 1127
Civil Service and patronage, 828
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Cost of production, 4426
Imports from European countries, 2811-19
Proclamation, 4407
"Reasonable profit in the circumstances" 4415
Valuation for duty, 4415

Cahill, Mr. Frank S.—Con.
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill—Con.
Valuation of currency, 3811-19
Customs Tariff Amdt. Bill, imported goods, marking, 3952
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4245
Dominion Police Force, withdrawal from Mounted Police, qu. 601
Dominion Statistician, 1231
Estimates. See also under this title Business of the House
Consideration of, 1666
Objection to, 1074
Flax industry, 1396
Georgian Bay Canal, 688
Gilmour and Hughson, Limited, 1096
Grand Trunk Arbitration, qu. 2030, 2445-79
Grand Trunk Loan, 4145-68, 4314
Motion to reduce, 4151, neg. 4167
Grand Trunk Railway, directors, 3741
Great Lakes and St. Lawrence waterway, 688
Harbours and rivers, 3973-80
Homesteads, 1346
Housing, 1145
Immigration, 2578-84, 3057
Abitibi country, in, 3075
Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3826
Imperial Mineral Resources Bureau, 4499
Interim Supply Bill, 2103-2116
Interior and Immigration Depts. 1331
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 609
Kapuskasing illustration station, 949
Live cattle industry, 1474
Manufacturers, protection, 1492
Militia, annual drill, 2294
Montreal Harbour Commission, 2268
Mounted Police,
Recruits, qu. 601
Strength, 2798-2800
National Research Institute, 2705
National resources, 849
Oil
Bounties, 1418, 1424
Lands, General Lindsay and, 1342
Leases, 1340
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale, 4028-34
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3883-92
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. 2267
Parliament Buildings, 3996-4001
Penitentiaries, 1116
Increase in cost, 1112
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2096
Pontiac Census Commissioners, 1127
Printing of Publications, 1438
Purchasing Commission, 1098, 1102, 1114, 2142

Cahill, Mr. Frank S.—Con.
Railway Commission, 3016
Railway Department, record searcher, 1672
Railways
Deputy Minister of, 1665
Parliamentary control, 1603
Return, inquiry for, 2688
Riding Mountain Park, 1343
Rule 17C (Estimates on Thursdays and Fridays) and Interim Supply Bill, 2103-2105. See also under this title Business of the House
St. John and Quebec Railway Bill, 2155-7
Shipbuilding, 1935
Contracts, 1902, 1911
Export trade, 1927
Sinking fund, 1885
South Africa steamship service, 1491
Steamship subsidies, 1491
Transcontinental Railway
Colonization along, 3075
Winnipeg-Quebec service, 2511
Transportation of grain, 2982. See under this title Georgian Bay Canal; Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway
Welland canal construction, 2981-90
West India cable, 1438
West Indies-Canada Trade Agreement, 1467
West Indies Steamship service, 1488, 1490

Calder, Hon. J. A. (Minister of Health, Immigration and Colonization; President of the Council)
Canadian Nationals Definition Act, 779
Chinese Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3207. 3827-9. See also under this title, Immigration
Civil Service
Retirements, list of, 1817
Superannuation
Increased allowances, 4275
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4461-93, 4281-88
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2486-2503, 4119, 4266-78
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. Bill, 3903, 4062-8
Debates, Official, distribution of, 2224
Esmonde, Mr. Osmonde Grattan, 1557
Health
Adulteration of food, 3142
Department, 3127
Report, 1852
Research work, 3135
Drugs, traffic in, 3130 See also Opium and Narcotic Drugs
Medical officers, 3133
Mental Hygiene Council, 3143

Calder, Hon. J. A.—Con.
Health—Con.
Sick mariners, 3135, 4039
Immigration Act Amdt. (Deportation), 1858
Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3007, 3822-7
Money qualification, 3825
Persons guilty of sedition, 3826
Senate amendments, 4343
Immigration
British inspectors, 3067
Care of immigrants, 3069
Chinese, 3207, 3827-9, 4131
Department, 3055
Estimates, 2568-2602, 4127, 4131
Postponement of consideration, 3077
Exhibits decorator, 3066
General statement, 2568
Head tax, 3056
Medical officers at ports of departure, 3132
Mental defectives, 3583
Officials, 3057
Policy, 3063
Railways and, 4130
Typhus fever, precautions, 644
Unemployment, and, 1380
United States, 3065
Women, 3061
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 620
Langley, Hon. George, statement by, 456
Langlois, Mr. George Arnoult, 4128
Military District No. 12, 2797
Opium and Narcotic Drugs Act Amdt. Bill, 2263-8, 2346, 2897, 3009, 4062
Special Committee, report, 2708
Proportional Representation, 1541
M. for Special Com., 1542
References to, 363, 438, 452
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, strength, 2798
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act Amdt. Bill, 2343, 2481-6
Sales tax, 3757
Sick and distressed mariners, 3135, 4039
Smallpox on Scandinavian, 1499
Tuberculosis, prevention of, 3142

Caldwell, Mr. Thomas W. (Victoria and Carleton, N.B.)
Abattoirs and cold storage plants, 1125
Agricultural implements, 3496
Budget, 3441. Farmers' party, attitude of, 3441. Protective tariff and duty on fertilizers, 3441; potato crop, 3442; Roumanian loan, 3444; revenue from Victory Bonds, 3444; luxury taxes and business profits tax, 3445; Canadian manufacturers and tariff, 3446; sales tax, 3447

Caldwell, Mr. Thomas W.—Con.
By-election, York-Sunbury, 2151
Canadian National Railways, directors, 1672
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2781, 4467-89
Cow-testing, 1037
Customs Tariff Amdt. Bill—imported goods marking, 3950
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4243
Fertilizer Act Amdt. Bill, 1497, 2231
Highways—New Brunswick, 4306-8
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters, 613
Lumber, tax on, 3744
Militia, Douglas, Mr., dismissal, 2277
Post Office Act Amdt. Bill, 2123
Railway Department, sundries, 1667
St. John and Quebec Railway Bill, 2154, qu. 837
Tobique reserve—timber, 4503
Widowed mothers' pensions, 639, 4370
Woodstock exhibition, 1125

Camp Borden. See Borden, Camp

Camp Grounds, Farnham, Que., 1132

Campbell, Mr. A. W. See Highways, Commissioner of

Campbell, Mr. J. A. (Nelson)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 369; Congratulations to Prime Minister; review of the debate; personal position, 370; tariff, protection not main question before House, 371; adjustment of tariff schedules, necessaries of life; profits; Dominion Textile Company; Sherwin - Williams Paint Co.; duties on agricultural implements; Ford car; mining machinery, 373; Government formed for period of war; redistribution before election, 374; precedents; constituency of Nelson, a concrete proposal; adjournment till fall for redistribution, 375; amendment to the amendment proposed, 376; Amdt. negatived, 561
Aerial patrol, 4495
Budget, 3681. Natural resources of Western Provinces, 3681; tariff revision and protection, 3682; cement industry, 3683
Canadian Forestry Association, 4495
Canadian Wheat Board Bill, 2159
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3915-38
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4233-43
Geological Survey, 2141-7
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 3463
Highways
Manitoba, 4308
Ontario, 4298

Campbell, Mr. J. A.—Con.
Hudson Bay Railway, 2980
M. 974, 1852
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4187-4207
Musk Ox and Reindeer, 4543
National Research Institute, 2699
Natural Resources, 869
Transfer to Western Provinces, M. 2519, 2541-53
Parliament Buildings, 3999
Railway Commission, cases before, 3022
Reference to, 495
Shipbuilding contracts, 1955
Trent Canal, 2606-16, 2953-8
Welland canal, 2966-89
Witness fees, 3937

Canada Evidence Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 3318-9; 2r., com., 3r., 3758

Canada, Foreign Trade. See Trade

Canada Grain Act. See also Canadian Wheat Board; Grain; Administration, 1442

Canada Highways Act. See Highways

Canada Shipping Act Amendment Bill (Public Harbours)
1r., 1174; 2r., com., 2228; com., 2555; 3r., 2556

Canada Steamships, Limited, 1914

Canada Steel Company, 3407

Canada Temperance Act, 4533
Importation of liquor into provinces, qu.
Quebec city, petition for suspension, 3584, 4382
Where adopted, repealed and in force, qu. 4253

Canada Temperance Act, Bill. See also Dominion Elections Act Amdt; Prohibition Plebiscite
1r., 3901, 4061; 2r., com., 4373; 3r., 4388
Subjects and sections discussed:
Alberta, probibition plebiscite, 4376
Cases pending, 3902, 4373
Costs, 4377-81
Damages, 4387
Defect in form not to invalidate, 3902
Expenses under, 4533
Gold Seal Liquor Co. v. Dominion Express Co. 4375
Omission of date from proclamation, 4379
Pending litigation not to be affected Amdt. (Mr. Maclean, Halifax) 4384

Canada Temperance Act Bill—Con.
Proclamation, 3901, 4375
Valid, 4373
Prohibition plebiscite, 4375
Retroactive legislation, 4374
Rights other than those of litigants, 4379
Vote, 4379

Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 1920, 563
Report tabled, 2191. See also Trade

Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 1920, Bill
Res. 1557; 1r., 1557; 2r., com., 2251; 3r., 2263

Canada Year Book, 1231, 1425

Canadian Air Force, qu. 965, 3776. See also Air
Camp Borden, qu. 1820, 3777
Regulations tabled, 350

Canadian Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, 3142

Canadian Bar Association, 1094. See also Private Bills Discussed

Canadian "Beaver," qu. 1673. For names of Canadian Government Merchant Marine vessels, see Vessels

Canadian Citizens, War Claims, qu. 1820. See also Germany, Reparation

Canadian Council of Agriculture. See also Progressive Party
Platform, 338, 489, 3356, 3358, 3569

Canadian Council of Women's Immigration, 3058-61. See also Immigration

Canadian Engineering Standards Association, 1426

Canadian Expeditionary Force. See also Returned Soldiers
Disability pensions, qu. 1235
Farmers and farm labourers in, qu. 1349
Polish battalion for service in French army, 4051

Canadian Forestry Association. See Forestry

Canadian Goods, sale of. See Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Trade

Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 6, 314, 557, qu. 3089. See also Ballantyne, Hon. C. C.; Canadian National Railways, Special Committee; Insurance Act Amdt. Bill; Returned Soldiers; Shipbuilding; Vessels

Canadian Govt. Merchant Marine—Con.
Assets, 1277
Liabilities, and, for 1920, 1701
Auditing of accounts, 1694
Balance sheet for 1920, 1696
Bosworth, Mr., statement of, 3249
Business brokers, 1713
Coal for, 1861
Competition with other steamers, 1714
Construction costs, 1274
Contracts, proposed cancellation, 1727
Control of, 1908
Crews, 1275
Complaint of treatment, 1891
Depreciation, 1701
Directors, names of, 1934
Dominion Iron and Steel Company, 1710, 1723
Export trade, 1732
Fair wages, 4545
Financial operations, qu. 902
First annual report, 1692
General statement by Minister, 1272; shipbuilding, 1272, 1279; shipping rates, decline in, 1273; cost of construction, 1274; officers and crew, 1274-5; operating costs, 1275; routes and sailings, 1275; West Indies service, 1275-6; export trade expansion, 1276; results from operation, 1277; assets, 1277; liabilities, 1278;
Government shipbuilding programme, 2076. See also Shipbuilding
Great Lakes, ships on, 1913
Hall Engineering Co., Montreal, qu. 695
Information, 1164, 1440
Availability of, 1279, 1290, 1292
Special Committee. See Canadian National Railways, Special Committee
Inland navigation, and, qu. 2192
Insurance, 1278, 1703, 4359
Liabilities, 1278
Manager, 1934
Marcil, Mr. Louis T., compensation for injuries, qu. 2942
Marwick, Mitchell & Co., auditors, 1724. See also that title
Montreal, Bank of, opinion, 1895
Operating account, for 1921, 1969
Estimated, 1717
Operating costs, 1275; and wages, 1933
Operating losses, 1579
Operating profit, 1866
Operation, result of, 1277
Operation of boats, 1579
Press comment, 1705, 1707, 1709, 1718, 1808
Prime Minister, statement of, 1708

Canadian Govt. Merchant Marine—Con.
Quebec port, discrimination against, 1271, 1965
Reported sale of ships, qu. 570
Royal Bank, and, 1719
Sailing routes, 1275, 1732
Sick mariners, and, 3136. See also Health
State-owned fleets sold in other countries, 1718
Steamers, repairs to, 1979
Steamship services. See also that title
Australia-New Zealand, 1493
Canada-West Indies, 1275, 1489, 2259
Newfoundland, 1487
Vessels. See also that title
Cost of, 1799
In service, qu. 568
Liquor cargoes in, 1713, 1715
Names of, qu. 1499
Canadian "Beaver," qu. 1673, 1862
Canadian "Conqueror," qu. 1381
Canadian "Explorer," 1714
Canadian "Inventor," 1890
Canadian "Mariner," 1713, 1715
Canadian "Otter," qu. 1382
Canadian "Pioneer," qu. 1382, 1689, 1722, 1894
Canadian "Planter," qu. 2942
Canadian "Rancher," 1716
Canadian "Recruit," qu. 575, qu. 1381, 1382, 1703, 1868
Canadian "Runner," 1715
Canadian "Sapper," qu. 734
Canadian "Squatter," 1894
Canadian "Voyageur," qu. 1381, 1382, 1716, 1894
Registration of, 1720
Size of, 1732
Wages, 1921

Canadian Government Railways. See Canadian National Railways

Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, 2164

Canadian Law Library, 1090

Canadian Locomotive Company, Limited, 1610-11
Works, 3407

Canadian Manufacturers. See Trade and Commerce

Canadian Manufacturers Association and Tariff, 3445, 3645. See also Address; Budget; Manufacturers

Canadian National Committee for Mental Hygiene, 3143

Canadian National Express Company
Expenditure on Eastern lines, 3037

Canadian National Railways, 89, 163, 245, 269, 330, 344, 381, 387, 390, 4561. See also Grand Trunk; National Railways and Shipping; Railways; Reid, Hon. J. D.
Administration of. See under this head Management
Amqui station, 382, 1176, 1233
Annual statement by Minister, 1004
Auditing of accounts, 1669, 1792
Auditor
Independent, qu. 1133
Baie St. Paul—St. Urbain branch line, 4328
Betterments, 1015, 3037, 4316
Bonds
Flotation of in New York, 3288, 3298
Bridge between Montreal and South Shore, 2213
Canadian Government Railways. See under this head Intercolonial, Transcontinental Branch railways, purchase of, 4338
Vote of $7,000,000 to meet working expenditure, 4335
Canadian National Express Company, 3037
Canadian National Railway Magazine, 4332
Canadian Northern Railway, 245, 3287
Bonds, issue and sale of, qu. 837
Borrowing, 3287
Certificates, issue and sale of, qu. 605
Cost of equipment, 1023
Deficits, 1189
Eastern lines, 1018
Guaranteed bonds, sale of, qu. 604
Loan of $50,000,000, 3037
Quebec-Loretteville, electrification, 4328
Salaried officials, qu. 2942
Vessels, qu. 1348
Western lands, 2583
Western lines, 1017
Cape Breton Coal and Steel, 3295
Car shortage, 512, 549, 3541, 4322
Caraquet-Gulf Shore extension, 4338
Carvell, Hon. F. B., speech of, 1202. See also that title
Cedar posts, tenders for, qu. 1130
Charlevoix county—station platforms, 4329
Claims against, 1657
Claims between Ste. Rosalie and Bagot, qu. 571
Disposition of unoccupied land between, qu. 572
Coal purchases, 1772
Committee proposed, 1201
Company, 3049
Conductors, qu. 569
French-speaking, lack of, 1782, 4329
Correspondence, production of, inquiry, 1003

Canadian National Railways—Con.
Deficit, 996, 1005, 1178, 1185, 1189, 1203-4, 1205, 1597, 1600, 4165, 4319
Payne, Mr. J. Lambert, 3017
Directors, 1664, 3407, 4314
Cantley, Col. Thomas, qu. 1501
Deputy Minister of Railways, 1666
Interested in other companies, 1609
Names, 1609
Private business interests, 1609, 3610
Responsibility, 1594
Salaries, 4315
Divisional points, qu. 574
Earnings, 1006
Eastern lines, Improvements, 1017
Electrification, 4327
Employees, 1011
Conductors and brakemen discharged, qu. 1622
Fraud and malpractice by, 1669
Reduction in, 1851
Remuneration, qu. 1673, 1737
Supplementary answer, 1755, 1815
Equipment, 1007, 1013
Expenditure, 1662
Betterments, on, 3037
Western lines, 3037
Explanation of increase, 1011
Fair wages, 4545
Family compact, 1610
Fences, 4569
Fire claims—Shelburne County, 4569
Fish, transportation of, 877, 883, 890, 962, 1038
Fixed charges, 1006, 1008
Flavelle, Sir Joseph, 4142, 4314. See also that title
Foremen of engines, qu. 1673
Freight
Cars, qu. 568
Nova Scotia points, qu. 1620
Rates, 4562
Tonnage, 1007, 1012
French language in Quebec and New Brunswick, 4328
Gaspé Railway service, 962, qu. 2623
Government business, 4130
Grading and track-laying, 1021
Grading in Western Provinces, qu. 570
Grand Trunk loan, 4131
Halifax and South Western
Extension to Lockeport, 4323
Station accommodation, 4327
Hanna, Mr. D. B., 4315. See also that title
Hornepayne division, qu. 1624
Ice supply at Mulgrave, qu. 963
Immigration, 4129
Improvements and new structures, 1017

Canadian National Railways—Con.
Independent auditor, qu. 1133
Information for Parliament. See under this head, Management; Special Committee
Insurance, 1772
Intercolonial Railways, 3041, 4561
Amqui, piling lumber in railway yard, 382
Auditing of accounts, 1189
Charny and St. Foy, work, qu. 1501
Deficit on, 1800
Expropriation of land at Lévis
M. (Mr. Fielding) for papers, 1846, 1851
Lévis station, 2957
Management, 1189
Maritime Provinces, improved transportation, 4561
Mileage, 1005
Ocean limited, 1976
Pensions, old employees, 387
Railway Board, and, 1655
Section men, dismissal, qu. 2028
Superannuation of employees, qu. 575
Train service, qu. 3903
Joliette bridge, 4320
Kelley, Mr. Howard D., 4315
Lake Superior Branch, 3050
Liabilities, 3300
Liquor, theft of, qu. 1132
Loans
$26,000,000, 4169, 4288, 4334
$89,687,633.39, 4131
Amended item, 4168, 4288, 4313
Locomotives, etc., 1007, 1203, 1611
Damage to at Parent, qu. 963
Lord Shaughnessy's letter, 2503, 2890
McAdoo award, 4325
Maintenance, 1005, 1006
Management, qu. 1132, 1654, 1659, 1668. See under this head Special Committee
Information laid before Parliament, M. (Mr. King), 1178
Neg. on division, 1214-5
Manitoba Government, correspondence, 2777
Maritime Provinces, improved facilities, 4516, 4561
Mileage, 1005, 1012
Ministerial statement by Hon. Mr. Reid, 1004; operation, loss in, 1005; mileage, 1005; earnings and operating expenses, 1006; general railway situation, 1007; Grand Trunk Railway, 1008; summary of operating results, 1010; Grand Trunk Pacific, 1014; new structures and improvements, 1017
Monastery, station at, 4324
Moncton shops, 1851
Montmagny—shed accommodation, 4570
Montreal Locomotive Company, qu. 696
Natural resources, development, 871

Canadian National Railways—Con.
National Transcontinental. See under this title, Transcontinental
New lines, 1023
Operation, 1005, 3300
Cancellation of trains, 1004
Operating deficits, 1013, 1189
Operating divisions
Eastern lines, qu. 1131
Western lines, qu. 1131
Operating expenses, 1006
Operating results, 1010, 4316-18
Parlor car receipts—French language, 4330
Passenger traffic, 1012
Payroll, comparison of, 1011
Political control, freedom from, 2828
Politics, participation in, 4502
Prince Edward Island Railway, 4565
Private cars, 4563
Private ownership, and, 1498
Provincial liabilities, qu. 2942
Publicity, 4332
Purchasing agent at Chicago, 1793
Quebec and Saguenay station agents, qu. 696, qu. 963
Quebec bridge—highway, 4333
Quebec, Oriental & Atlantic and Western Railways, qu. 573
Quebec—Shawinigan service, qu. 573
Questions on order paper, 1763, 1782, 1783, 1798
Rails
Price of, 1852
Transfer to France, 4569
Railway ties, 1772
Rate increases, 1007, 1191
Report, qu. 902
Rolling stock, 1007
St. Alexis station, qu. 2375; qu. 3582
St. Augustine, qu. 695
St. Foy round house, 767
Correspondence, 1502
Res. (Mr. Parent), 840, 967
St. John and Quebec Railway, qu. 837 See also that title
St. Hyacinthe shops, qu. 2821
St. Simon telegraph operator, qu. 3208
Saskatoon, shunting, qu. 3090, 3903
Section men, 1439
Special Committee, proposed reference to M. (Mr. A. K. Maclean), 1573; Amdt. 1582-83
Special Committee on National Railways and Shipping
M. (Mr. Meighen)
Agreed to as amended, 1814
Amdt. (Mr. King) 1761, neg. 1810
Amdt. (Mr. Crerar) accepted, 1812-14
Notice of, 1618

Canadian National Railways—Con.
Special Committee on National Railways and Shipping—Con.
Special Committee appointed, 1845
Reference to, 1817
Report of, 2095
Staff, 4562
Statements and summaries, 1010, 1024
Statistics, qu. 3422
Steamship services, 558
Subsidiary companies, 1907
Sully, Que., 1134
Summaries of operating results and trade statistics, 1009
Superannuated employees
Increase of allowance, qu. 575, qu. 2344
Toronto train connections, 4569
Tourist traffic in Gaspesian peninsula, qu. 2622
Train agents, qu. 1349
Transcontinental Railway, 280, 746, 1949, 3043
Expropriation of land, 1656
Forest protection, 4335
Freight rates on pulpwood and sawlogs, 2511
Management, 1189
Mileage, 1005
Montreal, and, qu. 574
Montreal-Winnipeg passenger traffic, qu. 2376
Winnipeg-Quebec service, 2509
Transportation of grain, 2984
Transfer of rails to France, 4569
Vancouver Island, qu. 3422
Western lines, 1017, 3039
Winnipeg-Quebec and East, qu. 569, 2509
Work done, 1019

Canadian National Railway Company, existence of, 3049

Canadian National Research Institute, 4555. See also Research

Canadian National Telegraphs, 1019

Canadian Nationals Definition Bill
1r., 397; 2r., 585, 644, 767; com., 767; 2031; 3r., 2151
Sections and Subjects discussed:
Canadian Nationals, 767
Declaration of alienage, 2031
Naturalization, 781
Renunication of nationality, 781

Canadian Navy. See also Naval Service
Adams, Capt. Henry C., 901, qu. 1237
Ex-members of, qu. 3422
Sale of "Niobe" and "Rainbow." See "Niobe"
Status of members of, 3686

Canadian Northern Railway. See this title under Canadian National Railways

Canadian North Prairie Lands Company, 1611

Canadian Pacific Railway Company, 1789. See also references in Canadian National Railways debates
Canadian notes refused in United States, qu. 599
Comparison with Government railways, 1780
Competition with Government railways, 1181, 1190, 1200
Patents to lands, qu. 2821
Shares, decline in price, 1195-6
Steamers, 1688, 1730, 1936
Stock, depreciation in, 1882

Canadian Postal Guide, qu. 1349

Canadian Press Limited, 4533. See also Press
Comment on Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 1704

Canadian Reconstruction Association, 3312

Canadian Representation in the United States, 2378-2436. See also Ambassador at Washington; Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Prime Ministers' Conference; Trade
Correspondence, 2406, 2428
Press comments, 2408
Statement regarding, 2406

Canadian Trade Commission
Roumania and Greece, purchases, qu. 1236

Canadian Vickers, 1884. See also Shipbuilding

Canadian War Mission in the United States, 2388, 2400

Canadian Wheat Board, 240, 277, 343, 368, 379, 390, 487, 1452-63, 3566. See also Grain and Grain Trade; Wheat
Agrarian party and, 1455
Correspondence, qu. 1348
Discontinuance of, 513
Participation certificates, 340-1
Report, 150

Canadian Wheat Board Bill
Res. 2116; 1r., 2117; 2r., com., 2158-59; 3r., 2159

Canadians, Foreign decorations to, qu. 1132

Canal Boats. See Fuel Supply Problem

Canals, 2025, 2602, 2953, 2960, 2966-98
Carillon and Grenville, 2603

Canals—Con.
Chambly, 2602
Georgian Bay, 688, 745, qu. 2625
M. (Mr. Devlin) 679. See also that title
Lachine, 2603
St. Anne's lock; St. Ours lock, 2606
Tunnel, 302
Navigation by coal barges. See Fuel Supply Problem
Perrot Island bridges, qu. 576
Soulanges, 2604
Road from Cascades Point to Couteau landing, qu. 576
Tolls, 2962, 2972
Trent, 3374, 3415
Construction, 2025, 2966
Improvements, 2606, 2953
Nassau dam, 2954
Peterborough dam, 266
Wharf at Lindsay, 2616
Welland, 1968, 3374
Construction, 2025, 2493
Contracts, 2966-98
Cost plus system, 2966-98
Improvements, 2960
Retirement of superintendent, 2493
Sand contract, qu. 600

Cancellation of Trains. See Canadian National Railways

Canned Foods. See Meat and Canned Foods

Canners. See Dominion Canners

Cannon, Mr. Lucien (Dorchester)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 531; Speech of the Minister of Militia; the new Prime Minister, 531; partizans and ultra Imperialists; big interests and protection; Government's mandate; struggle for constitutional and responsibile government, 532; election of 1911; controversial legislation following extension of 1916; the appeal in 1917; measures following the war; railway policy; Imperial Conference, 533; new Government leader and programme—the "Rump Parliament"—by-elections, 534; situation in Quebec—Mr. Gauthier—the Postmaster General—the Minister of Labour, 536—Quebec and the balance of power, 537
Annapolis public building, 2750
Arctic Expedition, 4113
Auditor General's report, 1388, 1396
Bankruptcy Act Amendment Bill, 2915-40
Judges under, 1085
Bounties, principle of, 1425

Cannon, Mr. Lucien—Con.
Business of the House
Estimates on Thursdays and Fridays—Rule 17C, 1218
Canada Year Book, 1231
Canadian Nationals, 769
Canadian National Railways
Management and expenditure, 1662
Management — Information, M. (Mr. King) 1197
Canal tolls, 2962
Chief Justice, salary, 1569
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4489-90
Religious holidays, 4489-90
Civil Service Commission, 1336
Outside service, 1653
Civil Service, Res. (Sir Sam Hughes) political patronage in; vicious principle; patronage rampant; judicial appointments, 811; census commissioners; Halifax platform, 813
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3921-29
Dominion Elections Act Amdt., 305
Dominion lands and parks, 1334, 1343
Donner, Mr. W. A., ques. 1624
Estimates
Detail of item, 1226
French, in, 1386
Rule 17C, Thursday and Fridays, 1218
Post Office, date of submission, 4531
Statutory payments, 1414
Exchequer Court Act Amdt. Bill, 625
Expenditure
Necessity for reduction, 1336
Without consent of Parliament, 1415
Experimental farm in Dorchester county, 946
Flavelle, Sir Joseph, 4142
Government Railways, claims against, 1657
Governor General's cars, 3037
Grand Trunk loan, 4132-69
Halifax and Esquimalt dockyards, 4036
Highways, expenditure on, 3024, 3026, 3036
Houses, tax on, 3958
Imperial Oil Company, 1386-8, 1414
Intercolonial Railway, station at Lévis, 2757
Interim Supply. See also under this head Estimates
Discussion out of order, 1680
Notice, 1676
Interior Department Publications in French, 1333
Judges, conduct of, 1571
Live stock, distribution of pure-bred animals, 923
Ministers to sit in either Chamber, 1165
Montreal-Quebec pilots, superannuation, 1501

Cannon, Mr. Lucien—Con.
Motion pictures, artist, 1225
Parliamentary restaurant, 4536
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2716-36
Petroleum bounties, 1386, 1413, 1420
Point of order
Information, 1229
Statement of Member to be accepted, 2765
Railway Commission, 3020
Cases before, 3021
Chairman, 3017
Railway Congress, 3023
Railway Department
Deputy Minister's salary, 1666
Outside legal counsel, 1656
Solicitors and counsel, 1654
Work of, 1661
Railways. See also under this head Canadian National Railways
Lack of information, 1336
Minister, duties of, 1663
Railway employees, Civil Service Commission, 1653
Responsible Government, 1335
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 2799
Ste. Rose de Watford mail contract, qu. 3209
Secretaries to executives, 1671
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill, 653
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Consideration of, 3956
Statutory expenditure, 1419
Trade with Russia, 1224
Trent canal, 2960
Unemployment and immigration, 1375

Canso
Harbour, 3983-9
Wharf, and, 3983-9
Marine hospital, 3138
Mulgrave steamship service, 1496

Canteen. See War

Canteen Funds, Expeditionary Force, qu. 1133

Cantley, Col. Thomas, qu. 1501, 1609-10, 3407, 3610. See also Canadian National Railways

Cape Tormentine, dredging, 1017

Cardin, Mr. P. J. A. (Richelieu)
Government shipyard at Sorel, qu. 568, 2028, 2618
Indian Commissioner at Regina, qu. 964
St. Lawrence river
Deepening, qu. 2028
Dredges and tugs, qu. 568

Cards. See Criminal Code Amendments; Three Card Monte

Carillon and Grenville Canals. See Canals

Carroll's Landing, wharf, 3977

Car shortage. See Railways

Cartier, Dr. A. P., St. Hyacinthe, 3821, qu. 3904

Cartier Square, Ottawa, storeshed. qu. 3208

Cartwright, Sir Richard, 3645

Carvell, Hon. F. B., Chairman of the Railway Commission, 451, 1202, 1690, 1725, 3017

Casgrain, Mr. Pierre F. (Charlevoix-Montmorency)
- Baie Ste. Catherine-Tadoussac
  - Mail service, 4530
  - Steamship service, qu. 734
- Business profits tax, qu. 576
- Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 1907
- Canadian National Railways
  - Baie St. Paul-St. Urbain branch line, 4328
  - Canadian National Railway magazine, 4332
  - Charlevoix station platforms, 4329
  - Directors' salaries, 4315
  - French language, 4329
  - Liquor
    - Seizure at Baie St. Paul, qu. 696
    - Theft at Baie St. Paul, qu. 1132
  - Montmorency county as tourist resort, 4332
  - Quebec and Saguenay station agents, qu. 696
  - Subsidiary companies, 1907
- Canadian Nationals Definition Act, 2032
- Canadian Northern Railway, 1909
- Canadian Pacific Railway
  - Canadian notes refused in United States, qu. 599
- Champlain steamer, 1980, 1983
- Charlevoix County
  - Station platforms, 4329
  - Wharves, 1929, 4536
- Civil Service Commission, proposed abolition, qu. 1381
- Dredging—Baie St. Paul district, 1992
- Embargo on Canadian cattle, qu. 566
- Experimental station—Charlevoix-Montmorency, 943-5
- Foodstuffs, hoarding of, qu. 1347
- Gauthier, Mr. L. J., M.P., qu. 1131
- Grand Trunk loan, 4152-66
- Grand Trunk Railway, reported application for assistance, 1498

Casgrain, Mr. Pierre F.—Con.
- Highways, 3032
  - Grants under Act, qu. 567
  - Quebec-St. Joachim-St. Simeon, 3026, 4313
- Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3824
- Isle aux Coudres telephone line, 4540
- Lightkeepers' salaries, 1995
- Montreal Post Office Mutual Benefit Association, qu. 567
- Murray Bay-Tadoussac steamship service, 1528, 1822, 1828
- Natural resources
  - M. to adjourn debate neg., 894
- Payments to Postmaster General, qu. 567
- Post Office
  - Mail Superintendents and postal inspectors, qu. 841
  - Religious holidays, 2626
  - Superintendents and inspectors, qu. 965
- Public Works at Murray Bay, etc., qu. 604
- Quebec and Saguenay Railway, qu. 963
- Quebec (city) immigration officers, qu. 1131
- Quebec riots, 1507
- Quebec Steamship Company, 2775, 2941
- Railway securities, provincial guarantees, 2619
- Roumania, interest on advances to, qu. 566
- St. Antoine, Montreal, representation, qu. 577
- St. Catherines Bay-Tadoussac mail service, 4530
- St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, warden, qu. 575
- Scott Act, suspension of, 3584
- Shipbuilding, 1895, 1929
- Tapley, W. H., case of, res. 970, neg. 974
- Three Card Monte, 1439
- Trent Canal, 2607-17, 2972
- War indemnity, Canada's share, 3583

Casselman, Mr. Orren D. (Dundas)
- Budget, 3195. Congratulations to Minister of Finance, 3195; general election, 3196; tariff a political issue, 3196; protection, 3196; milk products, 3197; free trade arguments, 2197; tariff protection increased in foreign countries, 3198; group system of Government, 3199; Farmers' party, 3200; price-fixing, 3200; conscription, 3200
- Experimental stations in Dundas, 954, 956

Catellier, Mr. Ludger J., 1465

Catholic Electorate. See York-Sunbury

Catholic Labour Unions. See Labour

Cattle. See also Agriculture; Health of Animals
Blood Indian Reserve, qu. 1818-19; see also Indians
Feeding, 344
Feeds, exemption of, 3746
Industry, 335
Live, export to Great Britain, 1474
Prize. See Agricultural shows
Shipping, 1039
Slaughtered, compensation for, 1061. See also Health of Animals

Cattle Embargo, 757, 3532. See also Health of Animals; Live Stock; Prime Ministers' Conference
Commission, inquiry, 1072
Promise of removal, qu. 566
Res. (Mr. Smith) 702
Amdt. (Mr. Pedlow) 725
Sub-Amdt. (Mr. Steele) 758, agreed to, 766
Res. (Mr. Lemieux) dropped, 766

Causapscal illustration station, 947

Cedar Posts for Canadian National Railways, qu. 1130

Cement Industry, 3683

Census. See also Civil Service (Res. Sir Sam Hughes)
Commissioners and enumerators, qu. 696, 800-12, 1209, 1226, 2098, qu. 3260
Appointment of, qu. 735, 2779, 2843, 2874-82, 3807. See also Civil Service Commission
Missisquoi, qu. 1132, 4113
Moncton, 3972
Officials, appointment of, 527, 597, 813, 827, 828, 830, 832
Pontiac, qu. 1127, 1231
Returned soldiers, as, qu. 2097
Industrial, 3490

Cent Coin, 2161

Central Railway Company of Canada, 3716. See also Private Bills Discussed

Chabot, Mr. J. L. (Ottawa)
Civil Service, Res. (Sir Sam Hughes) patronage in, 796; Civil Service Commission; ill-founded assertions; importance and variety of duties; organization attitude of Civil Service, 797

Chair. See Speaker's Chair

Chairman. See Deputy Speaker; Mr. Steele

Challies, Mr. J. B., 1346

Chambers of Commerce. See Trade

Chambly Canal. See Canals

"Champlain" steamer, 1980, 1983, 1995

Charlevoix County
Station platforms, 4329
Wharves, 1929, 4536

Charny, work at, qu. 1501

Chartered Banks. See Banks; Finance

Charters, Mr. Samuel (Peel)
Budget, 3410. Comment on Speech of Mr. W. C. Kennedy, 3410; Rural depopulation, 3411; production per man in agriculture, 3412; tariff and free agricultural implements, 3413; sales tax, 3413; outside capital, 3414

Chaudiere Junction, 1017

Cheese. See Dairying Industry

Chemicals for Fertilizers, 3441-2

Cheticamp Fishing station, 1991

Chicago Drainage Canal, 185, 1851, 2225

Chicoutimi
Customs collections, qu. 698
Labour Convention. See Labour
Pier, qu. 967
Wharves, 1921

Chief Electoral Officer, 4534. See also Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill
Reports, qu. 577
To be printed, 731

Chief Justice. See Judges Act Amdt. Bill

Chief Whip. See Ames

Child Prisoners, 3011

Child Welfare, 3130

China, Importation of Eggs from, qu. 568

Chinese Immigration, 4131. See also Immigration

Chinese Immigration Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 3207-3208; 2r., com., 3827; 3r., 3830
Subjects and Sections discussed:
Identity to be established, 3827
Power to arrest, 3829
Prohibited persons, 3839

Chippewa Power Canal, 2444

Chisholm, Mr. Alexander W. (Inverness)
Alcohol for medical purposes, 3729
Bernasconi, Mr., 4088

Chisholm, Mr. Alexander W.—Con.
Canadian "Spinner," "Leader," etc., qu. 1382
Census commissioners—returned soldiers, qu. 2097
Chartered banks, taxes paid by, ques. 2192
Cheticamp station, 1991
Dredging, 3983
Fraser, Mr., Collector of Customs, 3082
Grand Etang
Bridge, 3987
Light, 1997, 3987
Harbours and Rivers, estimates, 3975
Highways inspectors, 3023
Illicit liquors, 3082
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 622
Inspectors under Destructive Insect and Pest Act, 1043
Inverness
Fishery overseer, 2178
Harbour, 3985
Public building, 2817
Lobster hatcheries, 4037
Marine hospitals, 3138
Port Hood, wharf, 4104
Port Margaree wharf, 2174
Public Works—Engineering Branch, 4088
Relief of distressed seamen, 4039
Roy Building, Halifax, qu. 3089
Sheridan, Mr. John, resignation, 4503
Trent canal, 2958

Chlorine Gas, 1027

Churchill, Right Hon. Winston and Shipbuilding, 1288. See also Prime Ministers' Conference

Cigars and Cigarettes, duty on, 3698. See also Tobacco

Citizens' Liberty League, 304

Civil Aviation, 3776. See also Air

Civil Service. See also Arthur Young & Company; Griffenhagen; Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill; Civil Service Political Patronage; Supply
For individual departments see their titles
Appointments
As result of notices sent Members in Quebec, qu. 572
Competitive principle, on, 798
Distribution of, 1045
Dominion Lands Act, under, 4062
Dorchester penitentiary, Warden, 1092, 4467
Fruit inspectors in Nova Scotia, 1042
Gas and Gas Meters Act, Inspectors, 618, 619
Health of Animals, Inspectors, 1057, 1067

Civil Service—Con.
Appointments—Con.
Justice Department—lawyers, 1077
Member's recommendation, on, 2851-60-79
Militia appointments and dismissals, 2234
Order in Council, by, 1114
Purchasing Commission, 1100
Toronto post office, qu. 734
Trade Commissioners, 1464. See also Trade; Customs and Excise Dept. Bill Veterinary inspectors, 925. See also under this head Health of Animals
Woman Supervisor of Immigration, 3058-62
Bonus, qu. 901, qu. 967, 1176, qu. 1350, 1463, qu. 1623, 1948, qu. 2029, 2108-2115, 2236, qu. 3089, 3531, 4120, 4534
Health of Animals, Inspectors to, 1057, 1067
Lightkeepers, qu. 1622
Statement by Prime Minister, 1233
Classification, 817, 1660, 2236, 2842-8, 4465, 4475. See also under this title, Reorganization. For classification of the several departments, see their titles
Arthur Young Company, 551, 793, 799, 802, 816, 833, 2781
Board of Hearing, 823, qu. 2820
Bonus and, 1463
Civil Service Executive, 1671
Employment of foreigners, 825
Griffenhagen and Associates, payments to, qu. 575, 793, 833, qu. 4251. See also that title
Increase in salaries, 4541
Justice Department, in, 1076
Lightkeepers' salaries, 1995
Public Works, engineers, 2682
Record searcher, 1672
Commission, 825, 829, 835, 836. See also Civil Service Act Amdt.; Res. (Sir Sam Hughes); Retirement
Abolition, proposed, qu. 1381
Administration of Retirement Act, 2486-2503
Appointments by, 814, 822, 824. See also under this title, Appointments
Bland, Mr. C. H., 2861
Buffer, used as, 830
Certificate of competency, 2832
Cost, 794
Curtailment of jurisdiction, 815. See also Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill
Establishment of, 798
Fraser, Mr. Roy, 2860-8
Good work of, 817
Information from, 1336
Nelson, Mr. Christian, 2880

Civil Service—Con.
Commission—Con.
Organization and duties, 797
Outside Service, and, 794, 815
Promotions, and, 827, 2833-9, 2847-50, 2867-2878, 2885, 4125
Removal of power to make certain appointments, 2778
Report tabled, 4449
Secretary, 2860-9, 2875-81
Competitive examinations, 817
Disabled soldiers, preference, 4049
Dismissals, 2234, 2884
Economy in, 3194, 3439
Efficiency and discipline, 2865
Employees, number, name and classification, 4255
Employment of women, 2286
Examinations, 2178
Competitive, 798, 817
Federal Union No. 66, 795
Fishery overseers, Lunenburg county, 2179
Grain inspectors, 1444
Griffenhagen and Associates. See under this title Classification; Reorganization
Halifax platform, 2844
Holidays, religious, 1384, qu. 1499, 2626, 2775, 4484. See also Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill
Interim Supply and. See Interim Supply
Labour employment bureau, 2852
List, qu. 1349
Manual labourers, 2830-9, 2841-69, 2877-84, 4278-4460
Meetings in Government buildings, qu. 3421
Naval veterans, and, 3686
Organizations, 797, 2850
Outside Service, qu. 2820, 2876-80
Cost of placing under Commission, 794
Railway Department, 1653
Should be taken from Commission, 815
Political partisanship, 828
Political patronage, 2778-81, 2824-40, 2843-6, 2855-83, 3248. See also Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill; Speeches on Res. (Sir Sam Hughes)
Census appointments, 800, 806, 808, 809
Committee to investigate, 790
Declaration against, 822
Opposed to, 797
Res. (Sir Sam Hughes) 789; withdrawn, 836
Preference to disabled soldiers, 4049
Prevailing rates of pay, qu. 3089
Printing Bureau, qu. 1234, 2827. See also that title
Professional, scientific and technical officers, 2830-43; 2866-84

Civil Service—Con.
Reform, 2844-71
Religious holidays, 1384, qu. 1499, 2626, 2775, 4484. See also Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill
Reorganization, 1335, 4465, 4541, 4555. See also under this title Classification
American firm, employment, 517
Griffenhagen and Associates, 551, 799, 802, 813, 816, 2242, 2623, 2781, 2827, 4117
Officers detailed to assist, 600
Post Office Department, 4514. See also that title
Retirement, 2826, 4266. See also Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill
Barsalou, Mr., 2490
Customs and Inland Revenue Dept., 4117
Postmaster at Montreal, qu. 566
Provincial service, 2487-98
Report of Commission on, 1817
Survey staff, 2143
Returned Soldiers and, qu. 963, 2828, qu. 3259, qu. 3531, 4257, 4482. See also that title
Rural postmasters, 2829, 2833-41, 2866-84. See also Post Office
Superannuation, qu. 734, qu. 967, 2489, 2820. See also debates under Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill; Retirement Fund, taxation of, qu. 1237
Increased allowances to meet cost of living, 2112, 2491, qu. 3903, 4275, 4541
Application for, qu. 2099
Permanent Superannuation Act, 4277
Postmaster at Toronto, 566
Transfers, 2847-85
Unrest in, 795
Federal Union No. 66, 795
Whitley Councils, qu. 2820
Women in, employment, 2286

Civil Service Act, 1918, Amendment Bill
1r., 2865; m. for 2r., 2778, 2823; amdt. (Mr. Maclean, Halifax) 2835; neg. 2887, 2r., 2887; com., 4278-80; 4460; 3r., 4493
Special Committee
Appointed, 2776
Discussed, 2778
First report, 2940
Concurred in, 3005
Second report, 3088
Third and final report, 3901
Discussed, 4278-80
Subjects and Sections Discussed:
Air Force, preference, 4483
Annual report, 4473-81; Amdt. 4482
Commission, jurisdiction of, 4460-82
Commission may make regulations, 4461
Customs officials, 4268

Civil Service Act, 1918, Amdt. Bill—Con.
Subjects and Sections Discussed—Con.
Dorchester penitentiary, appointment at, 4467
Employees on railways and ships, Act not to apply, 4278-83
Evidence before Special Committee, 4469-80
Exclusion of certain positions from operation of Act, 4281
Foran, Mr. William, 4286
Health Department—Research, 4464-73
Holidays, religious, Amdt. (Mr. Trahan) 4484; neg. 4492
Manual labourers, 4278-4460
Method of procedure, 4257-9
Naval Service, preference, 4482
"Nor in the public interest" Amdt. (Mr. Euler) 4283; 4460-81
Political patronage, 4280
Postmasters, 4278-4460
Professional, scientific and technical officers, 4279-4460
Provisions recommended by Pensions Committee, Res. 4257
Returned soldiers, preference, 4577
Amdt. (Mr. Cronyn) 4482; agreed to, 4484
Roche, Dr., 4287
Section 38, 4460
Senate amendments, 4577
Stayner, postmaster, 4470

Civil Service Association of Canada, 797. See also Civil Service

Civil Service Federation of Canada, 797. See also Civil Service

Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill
Res. 2486; 1r., 2503; 2r., com., 4275; 3r., 4278
Subjects and Sections discussed:
Commission to report, 4266, 4277
Continuous employment, Res. 4266
Customs officials, 4268-72
Employees in post offices, 4268
Militia and Defence Dept., 4267-70
Notification of retirement, 4275
Officer, 4277
Officers of House of Commons, 4274
Officials
Permanent Superannuation Act, 4277
Receiving daily wage, 4267-70
Senate amendments, 4544
Sessional employees, 4268-71-74
Special circumstances, 4277
Working part time, 4267

Civil Service Retirement Act, qu. 734

Clapp, Miss S., 1332

Clark, Mr. Hugh (North Bruce)
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4485
Holidays, religious, point of order, 4485
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4350
Payments to Justices Riddell and Latchford, qu. 1500

Clark, Mr. Michael (Red Deer)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 397; sympathy with and congratulations to Mr. Bolton; the home market argument, 397; congratulations to Prime Minister—protection, narrow, sectional and local; "National Policy" a misnomer, 398; condition of the country—request for Grain Commission, 399; League of Nations—relations with United States—finance, trade, tariff, "luxury" taxes; production, markets; daylight saving; Board of Commerce; direct taxation; free wheat; Prime Minister's speech on Budget, 1920, 401; taxes difficult to collect, 402; rural depopulation, 403; fiscal policy of Great Britain; excess imports not necessarily adverse balance of trade; excessive borrowings, 405; labour conditions in Great Britain and United States; industries of Ireland; emigration from British Isles; iron and steel, 408; fiscal policy of United States; statement by Mr. Thomas W. Lamont, 409; antiquity of protection; Solomon a free trader; Britain has blazed the trail, 410; amendment to the amendment (Mr. Campbell); the amendment want of confidence in Government; redistribution; proportional representation, 411; the tariff issue, 412; sinking ship, 413; election; Progressive platform; the question before the country, 414
Agricultural publications, 1074-5
Bounties, principle of, 1424
Budget, 3218. Raises a clear issue; Canadian strawberries and grapes, 3218; fiscal condition of Britain; adverse balance of trade, 3219; National policy, debts, and deficits; tariff revision, 3220; taxes upon consumable commodities; three main principles of taxation, 3221; Mr. Fielding's amendment; Protection and Toryism, 3222; needs of the country; trade, increase in necessary, 3223; British trade increased, 3225; cost of living, 3226; building up of industries, 3227; taxation of land values, 3229; income tax, 3229; direct taxation, 3230; boots and shoes, 3230; tariff burdens, 3231

Clark, Mr. Michael—Con.
Budget—Con.
Business of the House
Complaint of undue haste, 4451
Duration of sittings, 1330
Wednesday evening adjournment, 1830
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 2253-9
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 1283
Canadian National Railways
Management, Information, M. (Mr. King) 1191, 1806
Special Committee, reference to, M. (Mr. Meighen) 1769, 1801
Canadian representation in the United States, 2396-2436
Cattle embargo, 704, 728
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill
Holidays, religious, 4492
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 4268-73
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill
Crime and sin, distinction between, 3910
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Expense, 4395-4400
Fee, who pays? 3806
German reparation, 4429
Imports and exports, 4397
Increase in tariff, 4398
Invoice certificate, fee, 4397
Officials, appointment of more, 4398
Prohibitive legislation, 4420
Prohibitive tariff, 4429
Reparation Act in Great Britain, 4429
Restriction of trade, 4398
Roumania, 4429
Trade agents, 3805
Trade of other countries, 4430
Trade with United States, 4397-4400
Valuation for duty, 4419
Valuation of currency, 4429
Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt. Bill
Imported goods, marking of, 3724, 3939-51
District Engineer's Office, Edmonton, 4543
Estimates, Committee on, 2201
French Trade Agreement, 2131
Highways, 3029, 3032
Construction in Ontario, 4294, 4305
Immigration, 2579-93, 3056-66
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4344-54
Latitude in debate, 1451
League of Nations, contribution to, 2370

Clark, Mr. Michael—Con.
Maisonneuve and Gaspé representation, 2315, 4437
Naval holiday, 4020
Naval Service, 4016-19
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale—point of order, 4031
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3853-88
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 2902
Polish battalion for service in Frency army, 4059
Prime Ministers' Conference, 2639-58
Privilege—report in Ottawa Citizen, 448
Protected industries and export, 3631
Protective policy, 1288
Reciprocity agreement with United States, 2045
Reparations—difficulties between Allied Powers and Germany, 599
Representation in Parliament, 1314
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships), 655
Shipbuilding, 1283, 1683, 1866, 1874, 1880, 1917, 1924
Closure, 1931
Newspaper comment, 1934
Progress in discussion, 1938
Soldiers' pensions, insurance and re-establishment, 4059
Taxation, incomes of $200,000 or over, qu. 838
Wheat Board, 1453, 1458

Clarke, Mr. W. A. (North Wellington)
Criminal Code Amdt.—docking animals, 3923

Clark's Harbour, public building, 2817

Classification. See that title under Civil Service

Clay. See also Natural Resources
Crockery for, 3384-5
Deposits in Saskatchewan, 846

Clements, Mr. H. S. (Comox-Alberni)
Fisheries of British Columbia, 890
Halibut industry, 891
Natural resources, 890

Closure, Rule 17B. 1844. See also Interim Supply; Shipbuilding
Government Shipbuilding Programme, 1979-2094
Interim Supply, 2025
Formal motion, 2026; agreed to, 2076
2 a.m. rule, 2094

Clover and Grass Seed, 1109

Coal. See also Fuel Supply Problem; Lignite; Mines and Minerals; Natural Resources

Coal—Con.
American competition with Nova Scotia, 3295
Canadian-owned railway mines in United States, 4316
Carriage of. See Fuel Supply; Railways; Transportation
Consumption in Canada, 1249
Deposits, Alberta penitentiary, 1092
Development, 842, 848
Maritime Provinces in, 1281, 3295
Prices at mine, 1251
Production and value, 3515
Railway rates on, 390. See also Railways, Freight rates
Railways, duty on, 1184, 1187
Reserve, 1247-8
Resources in Alberta, 857
St. Lawrence route, by, 1731. See also Great Lakes-St. Lawrence
Scarcity of. See Fuel Supply Problem
Trade, 1936. See also Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Shipbuilding
Wales, from, 1716
Wasting of. See Fuel Supply Problem
Water carriage, 2963. See also Great Lakes-St. Lawrence

Coastal Trade, 1494. See also Shipping

Coats, Mr. R. H., 801, 1231. See also Census; Dominion Statistician

Cocaine Imports, 3130, 3170. See also Opium and Narcotic Drugs

Cockshutt, Mr. W. F. (Brantford)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 91; tribute to new Prime Minister, 91; speech of Mr. Gauthier, a "family fight"; stability and self-respect of Quebec, 92; price of agricultural implements, 93; Opposition—amendment—the Government's mandate, 94; census, redistribution and appeal to country, 95; Agrarian party; expenditure of Ontario Government, 96; tariff and exchange situation—League of Nations, 97; disarmament, reparations, indemnities—taxation, 98; relations between Canada and the Mother Country—Judicial Committee of Privy Council—Governor General; agitation and unrest, 99; modern fads, 100
Binder twine, 3746, 3493
Brantford Customs office, 3086
Budget, 3488. Congratulations to Finance Minister, 3488; taxation severe, 3488; Leader of Agrarian party and manufacturers, 3489; co-operation between Cockshutt, Mr. W. F.—Con.

Budget—Con.
farmers and manufacturers, 3489; industrial census, 3490; agricultural implements and Western Grain Growers, 3492; Binder twine and free trade, 3493; home market, 3494; free trade with Britain, 3494; agricultural implement industry, 3496
Canadian National Railways
Special Committee, reference to, M. (A. K. Maclean), 1612
Canadian representation in the United States, 2402-11
Cattle embargo, 718
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Express parcels, 4403
Fee—who pays? 3802, 4402
Invoice certificate, 3802, 4401
Toronto Board of Trade, 4402
Trade
Agents and commissioners, 3802, 4402
Extension, 4403
Director of exporting company, 3564
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 308
Dr. Graham Bell's secretary, 2377
Housing, 1150
Income Tax Act Amdt Bill, 4350-3
League of Nations, contribution to, 2360-7
North American Trust Co., 1128
Parliament buildings, 3999
Pensions, widowed mothers, 637
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2724
Proportional representation, 1546
Reciprocity agreement with United States, 2058
References to, 451, 491
Senate and House of Commons (Ministers and directorships) Act Amdt. Bill, 660
Shipbuilding, 1878, 1881

Cocoa
Cocoa paste and chocolate, 3703
Duties on, 3170

Coffee Adulteration, 3141

Coinage. See also Currency Act Amdt. Bill
Cent coin, 2161
Gold, melting down, 2160, 2269
Gold, standard, 2269
Nickel, five cent coin, 2160, 2269
Redemption of, 2160

Cold Storage. See also Dairying Industry; Health of Animals
Foodstuffs in, qu. 1347
Fruit, 1041
Meat of, 1125
Plants. See Live Stock
Warehouses, 1038

Collingwood breakwater, 3973

Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, 1884, 1890, 1902. See also Shipbuilding

Colonial Conferences, 3432. See also Prime Ministers' Conference

Combines, 3293-5, 3382

Combines and Fair Prices Act, 3606

Commercial Exhibits, director of, 1225

Commercial Feeding Stuffs. See also Stock feed

Commercial Intelligence, Director of, 1219

Commercial Museum, 1227

Commercial Relations. See Address; Budget; Canadian Representation; Customs and Excise; Reciprocity; Trade

Commercial Treaties, 2378. See also Canada-West Indies; French Trade Agreement; Reciprocity

Commission of Conservation. See Conservation Commission

Commissioner of Patents, 623
Report, 107

Commissioners, Judges as. See Judges Act Amdt. Bill

Commissions of Inquiry. See Printing Bureau; Grain Trade

Committee of Supply. See Supply

Committee on Imperial Defence, 2637-49. See also Imperial Defence; Prime Ministers' Conference

Committee on Railways and Shipping. See Canadian National Railways

Committees, Standing. See House of Commons

Commodities, Taxes on, 3221. See also Special War Revenue Act

Compensation for Slaughtered Animals. See Health of Animals

Condensed Milk, tax, 3737, 3956

Confederation. See Ministers

Conference on International Finance, report tabled, 962

Confidence Games. See Criminal Code Amdt. Bill

Confidential Documents. See Canadian National Railways

Confidential Information. See Canadian National Railways—Management

Confidential Messengers, 1079-80

Conscription, 3200, 3517, 3528. See also Military Service Act; Quebec riots

Consent of the House. See House of Commons; Deputy Speaker; Speaker

Consequential Amendments. See Corrupt Practices at Elections

Conservation Act Repeal Bill
1r., 3739; 2r., 3958; com., 3970; 3r., 3971

Conservation Commission
Abolition of, 2, 875, 3146, 3739, 3958, 3970-1
Illustration farms, 949-954

Consolidated Revenue Fund, surplus from Grain Board, 1447

Constituent and Subsidiary Companies. See Canadian National Railways; Railways

Constitutional Development. See Address; Canadian Representation; Ministers; Prime Ministers' Conference

Consular Agents. See Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Trade

Consular Certificates. See Trade, Agents and Commissioners

Consuls. See also Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Serbian, at Montreal, qu. 605
United States, in Canada, 2405

Contracts. See Purchasing Commission; Shipbuilding

Controverted Elections Act. See Corrupt Practices at Elections

Convicts. See Penitentiaries

Cook, Mr. Fred, 4541, 4557-60. See also Printing Bureau

Cooper, Col. John A., qu. 697, 1713

Cooper, Mr. Hugh L., of New York. See Chippewa Power Canal

Cooper, Mr. R. C. (Vancouver South)
Soldiers' pensions, insurance and re-establishment, report, 4055-60

Co-operative Marketing. See Live Stock

Copp, Mr. Arthur B. (Westmorland)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 445; Minister of Militia; his

Copp, Mr. Arthur B.—Con.
Address—Con.
position from 1911 to 1917; an exponent of free trade in natural products; speeches of mover and seconder, 446; the amendment—constitutional position of Government; the written and unwritten laws—Bourinot; moral obligation to appeal to people; Ministers in disagreement—public opinion demands election; the precedent of 1911, 449; War election of 1917—formation of Union Government—retirements, 451; responsibility implies public confidence; Mr. Calder; Mr. Spinney; Postmaster General; Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue, 452; St. John Standard, 453; political conditions 1891 to 1896, 454; returned soldiers calling for election; Great War Veterans Association, 455; strength of the Liberal party, 456
Agricultural estimates, increases in, 951
Air Board, 3783
Amherst drill hall, 2739
Canadian National Railways, 4561, 4338
Employees, reduction in number, 1851
Freight rates, 4562
Maritime Provinces, 4561
Private cars, 4563
Staff, 4562
Census enumerators in Moncton county, 3972
Census officials, 830
Civil Service, political patronage, 830
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2489-90
Customs
Belyea, Mr., retirement of, 3082
Offices, amalgamation of, 3083
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Amalgamation of departments, 3820
Inland Revenue Act—administration, 3820
Customs Tariff Act Amdt., marking of imported goods, 3949
Debates, translation of French speeches, 701
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. Bill, 4068
Dorchester penitentiary
Purchases for, 1108
Salaries, 1096
Warden, 1092
Dredging, 3982
Forts Cumberland and Moncton, care of, 4540
Fredericton experimental farm, qu. 1131
Grand Trunk loan, 4136-67
Harbours and rivers, 3973

Copp, Mr. Arthur B.—Con.
Highways, 3023, 3034, 4290, 4303
Immigration, salaries, 3059
Imperial Mineral Resources Bureau, 2166
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill
Intercolonial Railway, 4561
Judges Act Amdt. Bill, 2119-20, 2151
Justice Department, private secretaries, 1079
"Laurentian," Government steamer, qu. 1348
Marine signal service, 1998
Moncton, examining warehouse, 2815
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale, 4031-2
Parliament Buildings, 4070
Partridge Island quarantine station, 2810
Pilotage, 1999, 2001
Railway Department
Purchasing agent, 1670
St. John and Quebec Railway Bill, 2153, 4564
St. John Rolling Mills. See "Niobe" and "Rainbow"
Sackville public building, 2816
Shediac and Cape Tormentine Railway, 4564
Sheridan, Mr. John, resignation of, 4505
Shipbuilding, 1905, 1931, 1935
Wednesday evening adjournment, 1837
Welland canal, construction, 2996

Copyright Amendment and Consolidation Bill, 2, 649
1r., 350; 2r., ref. to Special Com., 2909; com., 3830. 3r., 3850; Senate Amdts. concurred in, 4256
Special Com. appointed, 2941
Report, 3761
Subjects and Sections discussed:
Acts of United Kingdom, 3833-46
Berne Convention, 3833
License to print, 3831-7
Phonographic discs, 3832
Publication in serial form, 3844
Royalty, 3831
Second or succeeding editions, 3840
Suppression of works, 3838

Corn Borer, 1025, 1027, 1031

Corning, W. H., cattle purchases, qu. 1624

Cornmeal, 3546

Correspondence. See also Canadian National Railways
Availability to Parliament, 1290-1

Corrupt Practices Inquiries Act
Bill withdrawn, 1126

Corrupt Practices at Elections Bill
1r., 1126-7; 2r., 2036; com., 2036; 3r., 2151
Subjects and Sections Discussed:
Avoidance of election, 2037
Exoneration of candidate from consequence of illegal practices, 2037
Exoneration of any person from consequences, etc., 2037
Illegal practices, 2036
Judge's report published, 2037
Presenting petition, 2037
Punishment of corrupt or illegal practices, 2037

Cory, Mr. W. W., and Immigration Department, 3056

Cost of Living, 3169, 3226, 3256, 3548, 3606, 4551. See also Address; Budget; Civil Service Bonus; Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Superannuation, Increased allowances

Cote, Hon. Mr., Provincial Secretary, Alberta, 1266

Coughlan Shipbuilding Company, 1890

County Fairs. See Agricultural Shows; Live Stock

Courtenay Bay, improvements, 4097. See also St. John Harbour

Cowan, Mr. G. H., K.C., legal expenses, 2187

Cowan, Mr. Walter D. (Regina)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 165; Canada at Assembly of League of Nations—election—agitation and unrest, 165; abnormal business conditions—visit of leader of Opposition to western provinces; the tariff, 166; newspaper comment; opinions of business men and returned soldiers, 167; omission of tariff from amendment; unfair to hold election before redistribution, 168; duty on fruit; express rates; Scientific and Industrial research, 164
Agrarian party and Wheat Board, 1455
Briquetting plant at Bienfait, qu. 673
Budget, 3375. Congratulations to Minister of Finance, 3375; attitude of Opposition and Agrarian party, 3376; Agrarian party and free trade, 3376; loan to Belgium, 3377; agricultural machinery and the tariff; 3379; Customs duties and manufacturers, 3380; free trade and combines, 3382; price-fixing ring in Great Britain, 3383; protective tariff and Western Canada, 3384; agricultural implements, duty on, 3386-7

Cowan, Mr. Walter D.—Con.
Canadian Northern, Craven line, 3053
Canadian Wheat Board, qu. 340, 341, 1452, 1455
Flax-growing, 1396
Fuel Supply Problem, 1266
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 685
Natural resources, 845
Saskatchewan militia organization, 2795-6
Trade commissioners, 1392

Cow-Testing Associations, 1036

Creamer, Dr. J. P., qu. 1236

Creameries. See Dairying Industry

Cream Separators, 3328, 3364, 3495, 3481, 3508. See also Agricultural Implements

Credits. See Finance; Housing; Loans

Crerar, Hon. T. A. (Marquette)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 262; congratulations to Prime Minister; to mover and seconder; the Speech a meagre bill of fare—freedom from unrest; Speeches of the Prime Minister; fishing in Quebec; unemployment insurance and old age pensions; tariff revision, 263; protection to agriculture; revenue, 264; finances; necessity for economy; expenditures, 265; naval and militia votes; trade and exchange; Great Britain, Australia, and United States, 266; need for extended markets; reciprocity, 267; commercial agents, 268; national railways; deficit; special committee suggested; reorganization of board of directors; immigration, 269; Prime Ministers' Conference; Imperial defence; the amendment; Government has lost confidence of country; by-elections; reorganization of Government, 271; redistribution; serious problems, 272
Archives, provision for, 2951
Budget, 3476. Reference to previous speakers in debate; national debt and Finance Minister's surplus, 3476; revenues and expenditures, 3477; maturing loans, provision for, 3478; Agrarian party—"servile tools and minions"—3479; York-Sunbury election. Government platform, 3480; Binder twine industry, 3481; cream separators, 3481; tariff revision, 3482; adverse exchange and protection, 3482; export trade, 3483; boot and shoe industry, 3484; Sherwin-Williams Paint Company, 3484; sales tax, 3485; income taxes in Crerar, Hon. T. A.—Con.

Budget—Con.
Canada and Great Britain, 3486; land taxation, 3486; agricultural products; restricted market and decline in value, 3487; rigid economy in expenditure necessary, 3487
Business of the House
Audibility of debates, 1625
Saturday sittings, 2818
By-elections
Medicine Hat, 2151
York-Sunbury, 3480, 3628
Canada Temperance Act, 4379
Canadian National Railways
Lord Shaughnessy's letter, 2503
Management — Information, M. (Mr. King) 1187
Special Committee
M. (Mr. Maclean) 1184
M. (Mr. Meighen) 1776, 1804
Amdt. 1812, 1813
Canadian Representation in the United States, 2412-17
Canal tolls, 2964
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2835-66
Deceased members, tribute to, 153
Destruction of documents, 2951
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4239-41
Additional courts, 3111
Alien wives of British subjects, 3106
Certificate of naturalization qualification, 4240
Forms, 4240
Government terminal elevators—overages, 3634
Governor General, address to on retirement, 4434
Grain Growers Grain Company, 3180
Grain inquiry
Proposed commissioners, 1674
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2449-59
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 689
Highway construction in Ontario, 4294-6
Hudson Bay Railway, 998
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4345
Judge Snider's report, 4436
Lake of the Woods Control Board Bill, 2351-2
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4184-4224
Migratory Birds Convention Act Amdt. Bill, 2891
Natural resources—transfer to western provinces, 2529-46
Navigation, season of, 1994
Owens, the late Thomas P., Editor of Debates, 259
Post Office Department, 4519

Crerar, Hon. T. A.—Con.
Proportional representation, 1545, 1546
Railway Commission, vacancy, 3021
References to, 367, 372, 390, 395, 438, 450, 515. See also Speeches on Address; Budget
Resignation of, letter, Sir Robert Borden, 516
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. (Ministers and directorships) 662
Senate Committee, leave to attend, 3207, 3259
Shipbuilding, attitude on, 1978, 2082
Speaker's Chair, presentation of, 3694
Trent canal, 2971-8
Welland canal, 2974
Wheat Board, position with regard to, 1452
York-Sunbury election, 3480
Debates, official report of, changes in, 3628
Reference to by Mr. Stevens, 3627-8

Criminal Cases
Appeals, 3006
Procedure, 3006

Criminal Code Amendment Bills
1. Aliens and Firearms (Mr. Currie) 1r., 2373; Bills withdrawn, 2560; (See Bill No. 7)
2. Excessive or Inadequate Punishments (Mr. Tweedie) 1r., 695; M. for 2r. stands, 1856, 1857, 2228
3. Defamatory Libel. (Mr. Archambault) 1r., 2149, 3933
4. Probation of Offenders. (Mr. Mowat) 1r., 2097. (See No. 7)
5. Three Card Monte (Mr. Lafortune) 1r., 1439; 2r., 1857; com., 1857-58; 2555; (See No. 7)
6. Warrant of Commitment (Mr. Mewburn) 1r., 2686
7. Age of Consent; Firearms; Motor Car Theft; Recorder's Court Jurisdiction; Seduction; etc. (Mr. Doherty) 1r., 3005-7; 2r., 3830; com., 3830-96; 3906; 3r., 3938; Senate Amdts, concurred in, 4342

Subjects and Sections discussed:
Animals, docking, 3922-36, 4343
Carnally knowing, 3912, 4342
Chattels, $25 in value, fraudulently burning, 3922, 4343
Clerk or Deputy Clerk of Peace, 3936
Commencement of Act, 3932
Concealed weapons, pistols, ammunition, etc., 3900-33
Disorderly house, 3925
Dogs—docking, 3936
Driving motor vehicles while intoxicated, 3911

Criminal Code Amendment Bills—Con.
Subjects and Sections Discussed—Con.
Falsely registering at hotel as man and wife, 3909
Feeble-minded, 3896-3932
Forms, 3932
Horses, docking, 3923
Illicit connection with Indian woman 3907
Indecent assault—age raised from 14 to 16, 3911, 4342
Location of land, 4343
Marks made on public stores, 3921
Metal tokens used as money, 3923
Offender under suspended sentence may be placed on probation, 3931
Officials stealing fares, 3925
Penalty for injuring oil wells, etc., extended to gas wells, 3922
Publication of Judicial Proceedings—Defamatory libel, 3933
Rape—whipping added to punishment, 3912
Reading depositions on preliminary inquiry, 3924
Recorder's Court, 3899
Revising of sentences, 4343
Seduction and carnal knowledge, 3899, 4342
Spanking—persons under 21 and guilty of theft, liable to, 3918
Stealing automobiles, minimum sentence for, 3913
Three Card Monte, 3921
Whipping for robbery and assault with intent to rob, 3922
Witness fees, 3937

Cromwell's Navigation Act, 1872

Cronyn, Mr. Hume (London)
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2922
Civil Service Act. Amdt. Bill
Air Force, preference, 4483
Returned Soldiers, preference, Amdt. 4482, 4493, 4577
Housing, 1146
National Research Institute, 886, 2695
Natural resources, 885
Pension Act Amdt. Bill, 4366-73
Pensions, widowed mothers, 633, 4369
Polish battalion for service in French army, 4055
Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 4262, 4356
Returned Soldiers
Special Committee on Pensions, Insurance and Re-establishment

Cronyn, Mr. Hume—Con.
Returned Soldiers—Con.
Motion for adoption of report, 4041-55.
See also Returned Soldiers, Special Committee Civil Service
Quorum, 901

Crop Reports, 1116

Crops, Loss of through insect pests, 1028

Crowe, Mr. S. J. (Burrard)
Currency Act Amdt. Bill, 2269

Crown, taxation of the, 3742

Cruelty to Animals. See Criminal Code Amendment Bill

Currant Boxes. See Berry Boxes

Currency Act Amendment Bill
Res. 2160; 1r., 2162; 2r., com., 2269; 3r., 2270

Currie, Mr. J. A. (North Simcoe)
Adams, Capt. Henry C., qu. 1237
Armistice Day Bill, 3776
Australian and New Zealand trade, 1223
Automobile theft, 3914
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2925
Berry Boxes, 4115
Business of the House, 1831
Supply, procedure,
Discussion not in order, 1217
Hypothetical questions, 1217
Canadian Manufacturers and American markets, 1223
Canadian National Railways
Management—Information, M. (Mr. King) 1194
Cattle embargo, qu. 714
Chief Justice, income tax and, 1566
Chinese Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3828
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2825-48-83, 4283, 4466-93
Annual report, 4473
Holidays, religious, point of order, 4485
Returned soldiers—preference, 4493
Stayner postmaster, 4471
Copyright Amendment and Consolidation Bill, 3835-41
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3900-34
Firearms, 2373, 2560
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Commercial agencies, 1408
Consular certificate, 4408
"Dick Turpin"—point of order, 4421
Dumping of goods, 4412
Invoice certificate, fee, 4391

Currie, Mr. J. A.—Con.
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill—Con.
Trade, extension, 4408
Valuation for duty, 4412
De Martigny divorce, 3764-9
Destruction of documents, 2950-3
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. 309
Dredging, 3982
Foreign trade commissioners, 1223
French Trade Agreement, 1175
Gaspé Peninsula, railway facilities, 2509
Geodetic survey, 2806
Geological survey, 2145-7
Grain
Grain Growers Grain Company, 1462
Open market in, 1452
Harbours and rivers, 3979
Highland regiments, 2307
Highway construction in Ontario, 4296
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4353-5
Lake of the Woods Control Board Bill, 2355
League of Nations, contribution to, 2365-73
Letter rate, 4517
Linen trade, 1391
Maple Products Act, 1920, Amdt. Bill, 2558, 2890
Militia
Command pay, 2292
Purchasing Commission, 2239
Topographic Survey, 2806
National Expenditures Committee, 1835
National Transcontinental Railway—Winnipeg-Quebec service, 2516
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale,—point of order, 4030
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 2899-2905
Parliament buildings, 4076
Letter of Hon. George Brown, 4001
Post Office, Col. Verret, 4525
Potato growing and diseases, 1033
Press—publication of court proceedings, 3933
Prime Ministers' Conference, 2669
Soldiers' pensions, insurance and re-establishment, 4059
Spruce forests, bud worm, 1031
Trade agents, 1478
Trade with Fiji Islands, 1465
United States, exports to, 1222
Wednesday evening adjournment, 1831
Welland canal, construction—point of order, 2989
Wheat Board, loss under, 1457-9
Wheat, purchase by Great Britain, 1449

Customs. See also Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Customs Tariff, 1907, Amdt. Bill; Tariff
Brokers'
Licenses, 3786
Payments to by departments, 1090
Drawbacks, qu. 2375
On fish from United States, qu. 600
Entry, 3786
Foreign monetary standards, qu. 1133
Importations
Foreign goods, 3119
From Germany, qu. 696
Marking of, 3120
Reported increase in, 597
Revenue by provinces, qu. 1622
Value for duty, 3786-3819
Valuation of currency, 3786-3818

Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Res. 3785; 1r., 3822; 2r., com., 4388; 3r., 4453
Subjects and sections discussed:
Certificate, form of, 3788
Certificate of trade or consular agent, 4389
Commission, 4388
Consular agents, 3791
Cost of production in foreign country, 4411
Customs house brokers, 4432
Department constituted, 4388
Entry, 4389
Exchange—tariff rates on foreign goods, 4421
Express parcels, 4400
Fee for invoice certificate, 4389
Who pays?—3792-9, 4391-5, 4400-9
German competition, 4423
German mark, depreciation, 3810-19
Invoice certificate, 3786-3809, 4391-5, 4400-9
Minister's duties, powers and functions, 4389
Molasses wash, for hog feed, 3787-3820
New or unused goods, 3813
Proclamation of Act, 3798, 4391-4
Provincial analyst, certificate, 3786
"Reasonable profit under the circumstances," 4415
Restriction of trade, 4398
Letter of Gillies Bros., Limited, 4418
Revenue, expenditure, 4397-9, 4403
Still—innocent manufacture of part or possession, 3788-3820
Third reading, complaint of haste, 4449
Trade agents, 3786-3809
Trade, extension of, 4389
United States Customs regulations, 4417
Valuation for duty at not less than wholesale price, 4411
Valuation of currency, 4420

Customs and Inland Revenue
Department
Board of Customs, 4126
Consolidation of offices, 3083
Estimates, 2889, 3077, 4117
Inspectors, 4126
Officials
Merchandise, branding of. See Customs Tariff Act Amdt. Bill
Overtime, 4123-5
Reorganization, 804
Retirement, 2490-7, 2502, 4268-72
Salaries and contingent expenses, 2889, 3081, 4117
Staff, reduction, 4117
Toronto, 1351
Revenue cruisers and preventive service, 4127
Minister, private business connections, 3077, 3172

Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt. Bill
Res. 3121, 3698; 1r., 3725; 2r., com., 3938; 3r., 3955
Subjects and sections discussed:
Anodynes, elixirs, etc., 3709
Imported goods to be marked, branded or labelled, 3711-19, 3938
Spirituous liquors, 3708-8
Sugar, 3699
West Indian importations, preference, 3698
Wines
Medicinal, 3709
Other than sparkling, 3710
Sparkling, 3711

Dairy Cattle. See Health of Animals; Live Stock

Dairy Herds, testing of, 1118

Dairying Industry, 1036, 3118. See also Address; Budget; Dairy Produce, Grading; Oleomargarine
Butter
Material for substitutes, 3745
Price of, 3190, 3256
Production, 3118
Butter and Cheese
Exports and imports, 1037, 1470, 1471, 3747-50, 3852-88, 4438
Cheese factories, 1472
National Dairy Council, 1126

Dairy Produce, Grading Bill
Res., 1r., 3760; 2r., com., 4439; 3r., 4448
Subjects and sections discussed:
Butter and cheese, export, 4437
Complaint of undue haste, 4449
Definitions, 4437

Dairy Produce Grading Bill—Con.
Subjects and Sections Discussed—Con.
Demand for legislation, 4437
Regulations, 4448

d'Anjou, Mr. Emmanuel (Rimouski)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 137; right of Mr. Mackenzie King to lead Liberal party—overtures of Government to Province of Quebec; the French language, 138; Government without authority to carry on administration; Prime Minister the author of iniquitous laws, 139
Agricultural shows, 1240
Debates, translation of French speeches, 700
Experimental station in Rimouski, 954
Lightkeepers' salaries, 1995
Military expenditure, 2801
Shipbuilding, 1924

Dark Lantern Brigade, 1187, 1192, 1209, 1282

Davidson, Mr. A. L. (Digby and Annapolis)
Annapolis public building, 2743
Apple-growing counties of Nova Scotia, 1046
British preference and free trade, 3666
Canada Temperance Act—relevancy, point of order, 4383
Canadian Wheat Board, participation certificates, 341
Guernsey cattle at Nappan, qu. 2686
Highways expenditure, 2555
Proportional representation, Special Com., 2027
Reference to Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King in speech, 2443

Davie Shipbuilding Company, qu. 1348, 1846, 1972

Davis, Mr. F. L. (Neepawa)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 483; congratulations to Prime Minister; "no man's land"; formation and composition of Government; out of touch with electorate, 483; Progressive platform; Liberal party; tariff "opportunism"; transportation; Committee on Estimates; Imperial relations; excess profits tax; demand by western provinces for natural resources, 484; redistribution and election, 485
American immigration, 3064
Budget, 3262. Business and financial depression, 3262; business profits and income tax, 3262; heavy freight rates, 3263; adverse balance of trade, 3264; exchange variation, 3264; debts and

Davis, Mr. F. L.—Con.
Budget—Con.
obligations, 3265; United States, borrowings from, 3266
Canadian National Railways
Management—Information, M. (Mr. King) 1193
Special Committee, reference to, M. (Mr. Meighen) 1793
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4283
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Cost of production, 4413
English bankers on trade restriction, 4412
Exchange, 4413
Foreign goods, cost of production, 3814
German goods via Holland, England and the United States, 4427
Money—purchasing power and exchange value, 4427
New and unused goods, 3815
Valuation for duty, 4412
Valuation of currency, 3816, 4427
Wages, 4428
Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt. Bill, imported goods, marking, 3940
Estimates, Committee on, 484, 2197
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2458-70
Grand Trunk loan, 4146
Hudson Bay Railway, 994, 2969
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4220
Militia—reduction of staff, 2241
Natural resources—transfer to western provinces, 2537
Proportional representation, 1542
Welland canal construction, 2967-8
Wheat Board, unified buying, 1459

Dawson, Judge at, 1088

Daylight Saving, 401, qu. 1817
Ottawa, in, qu. 2687, 2776

Dease and Stikine Rivers, qu. 1133

Debates, Official, Report of. See House of Commons

Decayed Pilots, 2000. See also Pilots

Dechene, Mr. A. M. (Montmagny)
Agricultural Gazette, 1076
Agricultural shows, 1243
Board of Trade forms in French, 2819, 3320
Budget, 3466. Government system of taxation; war profits tax and large companies; income tax, 3467; Yamaska election, 3467; railway administration, 3469; fire insurance in foreign firms, 3469

Dechene, Mr. A. M.—Con.
Butter
Exports, 1037
Price of, 3256
Butter and cheese exports, 1471
Civil Service
Bonus, 4535
Classification, 4541
Dairy Products Grading Bill, 4446
Government shipbuilding programme, 2094
Immigration, salaries, 3057
Militia employees, 2241
Montmagny—railway shed accommodation, 4570
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3759, 3860
Post Office, Isles aux Grues-Montmagny service, 4529
Potato diseases, 1032
Public Works—Nova Scotia, 2754
Special War Revenue Act Amdt.
Missals and prayer books, 3756
Prayer beads and crucifixes, 3756
Sales tax, 3757
Supply—point of order, 2759

Decorations, foreign, to Canadians, qu. 1132

Defamatory Libel. See Criminal Code Amdt. Bills

Delinquent Children, 3012. See also Juvenile Delinquents

Delisle, Mr. M. S. (Portneuf)
Cabinet Ministers and Post Office Dept., qu. 1349
Canadian National Railways
Conductors and brakemen discharged, qu. 1622
Post Office Department—reorganization, 3772

De Martigny Divorce. See Private Bills Discussed

Demers, Mr. M. J. (St. Johns and Iberville)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 232; congratulations to mover and seconder; general election, inevitable, 232; circumstances under which Government was formed; manipulation of soldier votes in 1917; no relief until constitutional government restored: Prime Minister's attitude towards Quebec, 233; all classes anxious for general election; necessity for rigid economy, 234
Budget, 3437. Financial and economic condition of country, 3437; railway deficit,

Demers, Mr. M. J.—Con.
Budget—Con.
3438; shipbuilding, 3438; military expenditure, 3440; economy in public affairs, 3440
Deposits outside Canada in Canadian banks, qu. 1623
Fort Lennox, Isle-aux-Noix, sundial, qu. 2097
Pecuniary Claims Convention, qu. 736, qu. 1817; qu. 2027
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2718-22
St. Jean Post office, receipts, qu. 576

Demobilization, 2285, 3523. See also Soldiers Civil Re-establishment; Special Committee on Pensions, Insurance and Re-establishment.
Canadian claims against Germany, 4534. See also Germany
Enemy debts, 4534
Public Works, 3989

Democratic Government. See Ministers

Demography, Chief of, 1232

Denis, Mr. J. J. (Joliette)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 539; French language; speech of Prime Minister a document without fragrance, flavour or taste, 540; the new Government and the old; Prime Minister's tour; general election; position of Government precarious and humiliating, 541; province of Quebec, 542; League of Nations; French speaking representatives; International Labour Conference, 544; financial position of Canada, 545; amendments, 546; ten years without an election; the one issue of 1917; fiscal policy, 547
Alcohol, tax on, 3732
Budget, 3575. Approved by industrial interests, 3575; sales tax bears heavily on working classes, 3576; tax on spirits, 3576; railway situation, 3577; immigration policy, 3580; military expenditures, 3580
Business of the House
Duration of sittings, 3733
Private Bills, 3971
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 2257-8
Canadian National Railways
Joliette bridge, 3038, 4320
Canadian Representation in the United States, 2419-21
Census commissioners in province of Quebec, 832

Denis, Mr. J. J.—Con.
Chinese Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3828
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2865
Civil Service, political patronage, 831
Criminal Code Amendment Bill, 3830
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Valuation of currency, 3818
Dairy Produce, grading Bill, 3760
Debates, official, distribution of, 2221
De Martigny divorce, 4002-6
Estimates in French, 1385
Grand Trunk loan, 4159-62
Highways, Quebec, 4308
Immigration, 2598, 3088
Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3825
Income Tax Act Consolidation, 2819, 3905
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3759, 3877, Amdt. to 2r., 3879, neg. 3886
Privilege—Immigration, remarks on, 3088
Proportional representation, 1543
Quarantine stations, 2811
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Amendments, 3755
Lumber, tax on, 3756-7
Sales tax, 3755

Departmental Expenditures. See also Supply, Depts.
Detailed information, 1186-7

Departments
Purchasing Commission, 1099
Supply, right of discussion, 1215. See also Supply

Deportation of Undesirables. See Immigration Act Amdt. Bill

Depot Harbour, wharf, 3973

Deputy Governor General, 1559

Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees (Mr. George H. Boivin)
Rulings and Statements of. See also House of Commons; Speaker
Amendment
Changing destination of vote, 4169, 4289
Mover may not speak second time without consent, 727
Sent across floor, 764
To Public or Government Bill, 4485
Announcement by Minister in Committee, of Governor General's assent, 4169
Bills
Amendments
Involving or increasing charge on public revenue, 4359, 4485-91
Negativing principle, 3895
Which do not alter principle, 4355
Committee
Discussion of principle in, 779
Notice of amdt. to public or government Bill not required, 4485

Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committee (Mr. George H. Boivin)—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Bills—Con.
Committee—Con.
Principle having been adopted discussion must be relevant to clause 4466
Question put and declared carried, 4488
Title cannot be changed in, 2033
Two questions cannot be considered at same time, 4229
Consideration of clauses en bloc, 3956
Introduction of
No debate allowed, 3007
Motion to strike out section not in order, 3952
Permissible to move consideration clause by clause, 3956
Private
Com. must first report progress and motion to refer back will be in order, 1130
Precedence only for first hour on Friday night, 4010
Recommendation for change of title, 1096
Right
To hear evidence, 3768
To refer back, 1130, 3768
To review action, 4004
Senate amendments, non-concurrence in, reasons, 3010
2r.,
Analysis of clauses on, 2832
Objection to Bill not being printed in both languages must be raised before, 1095
Order for, stands, 1857
Questions and comments not in order, 2834
3r.,
Amendment, notice of, 3421
Change of title, 1096
Chair
Cannot oblige Minister to give answer unless he so desires, 1908
Rulings of subject to judgment of House, 3562
To be addressed by Members, 1066, 1896, 3468, 3530
Closure. See that title
Minister's right to speak exhausted, 2080
2 a.m. rule, 2094
Committee
Discussion must be strictly relevant, 1570, 1995

Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committee (Mr. George H. Boivin)—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Committee—Con.
Evidence taken in Court not to be used as argument, 3769
Forms adopted can only be reconsidered by unanimous consent, 4229-49
Having agreed to report, member's opportunity to speak has passed, 4275
Item declared carried after question put, 1091
No item before Com., debate not in order, 1090
Principle of Bill may not be discussed, in, 779
Vote in, 2756
Correspondence reflecting on members, 2176
Debate
Confined to specific items in Com. of Supply, 944
Details of railway administration, 747-8
Interjection of remarks during, 914
Limitation on Appropriation Bill, 2103
Motion for adjournment negatived, mover precluded from continuing, 894
Motion to adjourn by member closing discussion, 999
Debates, Official report of
Statement not read, insertion of, 472, 3270
Decorum—conversation, 272, 528, 3619, 3832, 3982, 4145
Interruptions—members should ask permission, 3215
Language
"Flippant" and "disrespectful", 2746
"Gentlemanly", 3553
"Misstatement", 2321
Letter already read may not be read again, 3080
Member
Attack or reflection on, 4297
Exhausting right to speak, 1650
Has no right to consent to irregularity in debate, 914
Lecturing another, 4078
May comment on letter but not read it again, 3080
May not question ruling, 3003
May speak to point of order, 1217
Minister having floor, member may not ask questions, 1867
Misstatement or untruth, 3615
Must accept statement of Minister, 3080

Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committee (Mr. George H. Boivin)—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Member—Con.
Must not entirely forget subject under discussion, 996
Must rise to ask questions, 3216, 3553
Putting question without giving opportunity for reply, 4471
Right to close debate, 1528
Right to state point of order, 2322
Should speak to question, 1898
Sitting not entitled to answer question until member speaking yields floor, 4402
Two members cannot occupy floor at same time, 4467
Message from Governor General, 4169, 4289
Ministers
Comparison between, 3944
Official conduct of, 3079
Motions
Amended
Purchasing Commission, 2020
In absence of notice require unanimous consent, 3088, 3259, 3582
Mover to close debate, 2206, 2210
Negative, not in order, 2920, 3952, 4411
Non-debatable
Adjournment, for, 2148
That Committee rise, 2230, 2774, 4203
That further consideration be postponed, 1389, 2025, 3716
To refer back, 1130
Non-debatable subjects
Already debated, 2406
Notice of Motion
Action on does not imply acceptance of principle, 584
Order—Point of
Attacks or reflections on judiciary, 1570
Denial does not constitute, 2322
Discussion, 1218
Interim Supply, 2011
When raised members must confine remarks to it, 2009
Pairs—none in Committee, 4531
Previous debate, 3533, 3562, 4212, 4401
Questions
Not relevant, may be asked by consent, 2113
Not in order on item, 3065
Relevancy, 1035, 1345, 1571, 1772, 1898, 2113, 2175, 2405, 2747, 2751-59, 2761, 2916, 2966, 2990, 3003, 4158, 4313
Canadian National Railways, directors, 1667

Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committee (Mr. George H. Boivin)—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Relevancy—Con.
Discussion of "Niobe" and "Rainbow" on estimate for Royal Canadian Navy, 4031
Highway construction in Ontario, 4293-6
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4354-5
Interrogation of Govt. on estimates to be taken up, 1218
Question not in order on item before Chair, 1669, 3065
Resolutions
Amendments to not reported, 3755
Consideration, item by item, 3026
Ruling may be appealed but not questioned, 779
Speaker's Chair, speech on presentation, 3691
Notice of presentation, 3688
Statement not a question, 4056
Supply
Agreement as to contentious items, 4538
Amendment changing destination of vote, 4169, 4289
Amendments in—discussion must be relevant, 1191, 1583
Announcement of consent of Governor General, 4169, 4289
Discussion confined to specific item, 944, 919, 3066
Government orders may be called in sequence as Government think fit, 962
Individual items, motion to strike out, 3015
Interim
Further consideration of item postponed, 1682
Motion, 1674
Notice not required, 1676
Resolution can only be considered by unanimous consent, 1680
Item by item, 3014, 3132
Item disposed of discussion not in order, 1090
Latitude of discussion, 3014
Liberty to discuss any subject on item allowed to stand, 4033
Minister in order in asking that item be called, 961
Mounted Police not to be discussed on Militia Estimates, 2799-2801
Motion that item be struck out, not in order, 2617
Questions not in order, 1653, 3056

Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committee (Mr. George H. Boivin)—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Supply—Con.
Railway items to be considered separately, 3048
Reverting to previous item, 2163
Rule 17C, Estimates on Thursdays and Fridays, 959, 961, 962, 1677
Unanimous consent, 1026, 1074-6, 1677, 1680, 3088, 3259, 3582, 3725, 3849, 3936, 4245, 4489-92
Vote in Com., hearing question, 2756
Vote, to be counted, five members should rise, 1068

De Salaberry, Miss, 4070

Desaulniers, Mr. Arthur L. (Champlain)
Military Service Act—Mr. R. A. Stewart, qu. 2028
Privilege—name omitted from division list, 4255
Rural Mail routes, qu. 605
Stewart, Mr. R. A., qu. 2028, qu. 2343

Desjardins, "Ti-Noir," 1515, 3562

Deslauriers, Mr. Hermas (St. Mary)
Bonus to letter carriers, qu. 967
Canadian National Railways, locomotives at Parent, qu. 963
Prime Ministers' Conference, 2554, 2672
Shipbuilding, 1966
Unemployment, suspension of immigration, M, 1351

Destructive Insect and Pest Act, 1027, 4512. See also Entomology

Destruction of Public Documents. See Printing Bureau

Desy, Mr. Justice, 1569

Detroit River, 1996

Devlin, Mr. Emmanuel (Wright)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 57; complimentary reference to Minister of Trade and Commerce, 57; official languages, League of Nations; reply to Prime Minister; status of the Government; no precedent for present situation; the tariff, 58; financial, agricultural and industrial conditions consequent on war; Government by Order in Council; voice of the people stifled; agricultural growth of Quebec, 59
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 260
Experimental Station in Wright, 922
Georgian Bay Canal, 679
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 679

Devonshire, Duke of. See Governor General

Dick Turpin, 4421

Dillon, Mr. Gerald, Purchasing Agent, 1079

Direct Taxation. See Taxation

Directors. See Canadian National Railways

Directorships. See Ministers and Directorships

Disarmament, 98, 3150, 3418. See also League of Nations

Discrimination in Rates. See Railway Act Amdt. Bill

Diseased Herds. See Health of Animals

Disfranchising Act, 1r., 1126. Bill withdrawn, 1126

Disputed Accounts. See Pecuniary Claims Convention

Disraeli, Benjamin, and Proportional Representation, 1552

Divisions. See House of Commons

Divorce, 228, 4474. See also De Martigny

Dockages, 3633-34. See also Grain and Grain Trade; Wheat

Docking Animals. See Criminal Code Amdt. Bill

Dockyards, 4017-36. See also Drydocks

Documentary Evidence. See Canada Evidence Act Amdt. Bill

Documents
Access to, 1286
Production of. See Canadian National Railways
Public, destruction of. See Printing Bureau

Doherty, Right Hon. C. J. (Minister of Justice)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 188; speech of Mr. Lemieux; Canada's status; a voice in foreign affairs; Mr. Asquith's declaration, 189, 190; development of inter-imperial relations, 190; equality amongst the nations of the British Commonwealth; signature of Peace Treaty, 191; consular service; Ambassador at Washington; the ghost of Imperial centralization; declaration of Prime Minister, 192; general election before Prime Ministers' Conference, 193; Assembly of the League of Nations, 195; alleged violation of constitution by continu-

Doherty, Right Hon. C. J.—Con.
Address—Con.
ance of Government, 196; authority derived from people and parliament; countries in which elections have been held, 197; Sir Wilfrid Laurier, 198; by-elections, 199; requisitioning of ships; cattle embargo; merchant marine; the Gold Coast and Nigeria, 200; "deadly parallels"; reciprocity; election in England after South African War, 201; declaration of Prime Minister at Montreal, 202
Ambassador at Washington, 185. See also Canadian Representation
Ames, Sir Herbert, resignation of, 1323
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2914-39
Judges under, 1085
Business of the House
Adjournment, 1173
Closure,
Motion under Rule 17B—Govt. shipbuilding programme, 2076
Notice of, 2026
Estimates, Rule 17C, Thursdays and Fridays, 958, 3001
Interim supply, 2011
Morning sittings, prorogation, 4338
Order of, 1672
Supply, procedure, 1073
Justice Dept., 1073
By-elections Bill, 1310
Canada Evidence Act Amdt. Bill, 3318
Canada Temperance Act Amdt. Bill, 4061
Alberta Court of Appeal, decision, 4375
Constitutional question, 4375
Costs, 4378-81
Court cases pending, 4374
Gold Seal Company vs. Dominion Express Co., 4375-8
Pending litigation not to be affected Amdt. (Mr. A. K Maclean) 4384
Prohibition plebiscite, 3901
Public vs. private interests, 4374
Canada Temperance Act
Quebec, petition for suspension of Act, 3584, 4382
Canadian Bar Association, 1095
Canadian Nationals Definition Act, 397, 585, 644, 768
Declaration of alienage, 2031-2033
Canadian National Railways
Special Committee
M. (Mr. A. K. Maclean) 1598
M. (Mr. Meighen) 1766
"Champlain" steamer, 1980
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2835-72, 4467-89

Doherty, Right Hon. C. J.—Con.
Civil Service, Political patronage in, (Res. Sir Sam Hughes) 809
Conservation Act Repeal Bill, 3146
Copyright Amdt. and Consolidation Bill, 350, 649, 2908, 3830-50
British Copyright Acts, 3833
Explanation of provisions, 3830
License to print, 3831
Phonographic discs, 3832
Royalty, 3831
Criminal Code Amdt. Bills, 3005, 3830, 3896-3901; 3906-38
Automobile theft, 3913
Defamatory libel, publication of judicial proceedings, 3934
Firearms, 3900-6
Juvenile deliquents, spanking, 3918
Senate amendments, 4256, 4343
Witness fees, 3937
Excessive or inadequate punishments, 1856
Exchequer Court Amdt. Bill, 563, 623
Extradition treaty, 3008, 3319, 3740, 3741
Hearst publications, 4171
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters, 614
Judges
Exchequer Court, 1083
Judicial district of Quebec, 1081
Resignation of, 1093
Retirement and superannuation of, 1082
Vice-admiralty, 1084
Yukon, 1088
Judges Act, 1920, correspondence, 1851
Judges Act Amendment Bill, 1559, 1561, 3009
Free Conference with Senate, 3972, 4061, 4250
Retiring allowance, 1562
Judge Snider's report, 3905
Judicial districts, division of, 1083
Justice
Administration of Northwest, 1080
Yukon, 1087
Department
Litigated matters, 1089
Private secretaries, 1079
Purchasing agent, 1079, 1115
Salaries, 1076
Juvenile deliquents Act Amdt. Bill, 3319, 3758. See also under this head Criminal Code Amdt. Bill
Law stamps, tax, 1090
League of Nations. See also under this title Address
Contribution to, 2362-9
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2096. See also that title under this head

Doherty, Right Hon. C. J.—Con.
Legal expenses, 4497
Madrid Postal Conference, 3001
Maisonneuve and Gaspé representation, 2315
Marine estimates, closure notice, 1988
Migratory Birds Convention Act Amdt., 2892
Militia Dept., sale of surplus supplies, 1098
Ministers to sit in either Chamber, 1160
National Catholic Labour Unions, 1650
Natural resources, transfer to western provinces, 2551
Nauru Island phosphate deposits, 4255, 4542
"Niobe" and "Rainbow" sale, 4018
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 2905-8, 3009
Park St. Charles Company, 4571
Patent Act Amdt. Bill, 4456-60
Penitentiaries Act Amdt. Bill, 3738, withdrawn, 3973
Penitentiaries. See also that title
Alberta, closing of, 1115
Ballot boxes, labour on, 1092
Detailed statement of expenditure, 1105
Dorchester
Purchases for, 1109
Salary and retiring allowances, 1096
Warden, 1092, 4467
Flour purchases, 1107
Increase in crimes, 1091
Maintenance and cost, increase in, 1111
Prisoners, remission of sentences, 1094
Purchasing system, 1108
St. Vincent de Paul, warden, 1078
Salaries and retiring allowances, 1097, 1110
Saskatchewan, 1091
Stony Mountain, release of prisoners, 478
Supplies for, 1104
Pensions, widowed mothers, 638
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2708-36, 2096, 3014
Post Office Act Amdt. Bill, 1619
Post Office Department
Annuities Branch, 4524
Fiset, Dr. Michel, 4523
Isles aux Grues service, 4529
Letter rate, 4519
Maritime Provinces, 4522
Outside service, 4529
Parcel post rates, 4527
Purchasing agent, 4527
Railway mail service, 4519
Reorganization and administration, 4518
Griffenhagen and Associates, 4519
Rural mail carriers, 4524

Doherty, Right Hon. C. J.—Con.
Post Office Department—Con.
St. Catherine Bay-Tadoussac mail service, 4530
Verret, Col. Hector, 4525
War tax, 4519
Prisons and Reformatories Act Amdt. Bill, 3011
Privy Council appeals, 1090
Proclamation—enforcement of Acts of Parliament, 3758
Provincial legislation, reports on, 2373
Public Works estimates, 2737
Purchasing Commission, 1080, 2015, 2021
Appointment, date of, 1102
Authority appointing, 1098
Civil Service Commission, and, 1100
Details of contracts, 1104
Reduction, 2024
Staff, 1113
Statutory authority, 1113-1114
Tenders—statute applying, 1106
Quebec riots, 1512
Representation in Parliament, 1321
Scott Act, suspension of, 3584, 4382
Three Card Monte, 1837. See also Criminal Code Amdt.
Vice-Admiralty Courts, registrars, 1086
Winding Up Act Amdt. Bill, 2095
Yorkton judicial district, 1080

Dollar, Mr. Robert and shipbuilding, 1707, 1725

Dominion Alliance, 304
Use of armoury at Windsor, 902

Dominion Arsenal, Lindsay, 2439

Dominion Canners
Greek and Roumanian purchases, qu. 1001, 1072

Dominion Coal Company, 3528

Dominion Controverted Elections Act. Bill withdrawn, 1126

Dominion Elections Act Amendment Bill. (Prohibition Plebiscite in Ontario). See also Prohibition Plebiscite. 1r., 150-2; 242; 2r., com., 244; 259; 3r., 313
Subjects and Sections discussed:
Agents, names of eliminated, Amdt. (Mr. Bureau) 304
Lists, preparation of, 307
Proclamation, assent and voting, 303, 311
Residential requirement, Amdt. (Mr. Steele), 306; neg. 311

Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 2775; m. for 2r., 2994; 2r., 3090; com., 3090-3114; 4227; Amdt. (Mr. Euler) to 3r., 4249; 3r., 4250

Dominion Election Act Amdt. Bill—Con.
Subjects and sections discussed:
Administration of oaths, 3091
Advance polls, 3099
Amendment to writ, 3100
Certificate, 3100
Certified copy of list, 3094
Chief Electoral Officer, 4288-48
Consent of person nominated, 4246
Election officers, disqualification of, 4245
Foreign born wives and children of British subjects, 4229
Forms, 4227-40
Hours of polling—Amdt. (Mr. Fraser) 4245
Indexed copies of Act for election officers, 3094
Name added to list, 3092
Naturalization—certificate of qualification. Amdt. (Mr. Euler) 3103, 4249
New forms substituted, 3100
Nomination day, postponement of, 3094
Nomination paper, 4246
Oath of qualification, 4228-39
Oath of secrecy, 3095
"Personally naturalized", 4244
Polling divisions, urban, 3091
Polls, holding of, 3095
Qualifications, 3096
Recount, application for, 3097
Returning officer's report, 3098
Revising officers, 3091, 3101, 4250
Smith, Mr. Alexander, 4228-40
Voting, if disqualified, 3098

Dominion Elections Act
Chief Electoral Officer's reports, qu. 577; 731

Dominion Express Company. See Canada Temperance Act

Dominion Franchise Act, 361

Dominion Iron and Steel Company, 1710, 1723
Contract for ship plates, qu. 733, 1233. See also Shipbuilding

Dominion Lands, 1334
Aerial exploration and survey, 3778
Oil leases and, 1340. See also Oil
Pre-emptions and purchased homesteads, qu. 2506
Reclamation, 4495

Dominion Lands Act Amdt. Bill (Appointments). 1r., 3903; 2r., com., 4062; 3r., 4113

Dominion Lands and Parks, 1334, 1343, 4494
Antelope for parks, qu. 1134

Dominion Linens, Limited, 1398. See also Flax

Dominion Notes
And gold reserve, qu. 1234
Circulation of, qu. 1001
Securities, qu. 1383

Dominion Securities
Assignments of grain and produce, 1443

Dominion Shipbuilding Company, 1884, qu. 3423. See also Shipbuilding

Dominion Statistician
Census commissioners and enumerators, 801, 1232. See also Census

Dominion Textile Company, profits, 372

Donner, Mr. W. A., qu. 1624

Don Pacifico, case of, 1522

Dorchester Penitentiary. See Penitentiaries

Douglas, Mr., dismissal of from Militia, 2246, 2277

Douglas, Mr. J. C. (Cape Breton South and Richmond)
Canadian National Railways—rails, 1852
Fuel Supply Problem, 1270

Douglas, Mr. James M. (Strathcona)
Oil and Gas rentals, qu. 672
Unemployment and immigration, 1366
As Chairman
Member must show what bearing question has on estimates, 3078

Doukhobors, 1365

Dourine among range horses, 1050

Drainage. See Reclamation; Irrigation

Draper, Mr. P. M., and Labour, 1632, 1637

Drayton, Hon. Sir Henry L. (Minister of Finance)
Auditor General's Report, 737
Delay, 911-17
Fourth volume, 1385
British taxation of spirits, 3706
Budget
Date of, 738, 903, 1555, 2151
Speech, 3114. Luxury taxes, 3114; exports and imports (aggregate trade) 3115; trade with Great Britain, 3116; revenue and expenditure, 3116; liabilities, 3117; revenue and expenditure estimated, 1921-22, 3117; Grand Trunk acquisition, 3118; tariff changes, 3119; imports, marking of, 3120; Business profits war tax, 3120; excise taxes, 3120; sales tax, 3120; resolutions, 3121

Drayton, Hon. Sir Henry—Con.
Business Profits War Tax, 2100, 3120
Canadian loans in New York, 3289
Canadian National Railways
Directors, responsibility of, 1604
Special Committee, reference to
M. (Mr. A. K. Maclean) 1602
M. (Mr. Meighen) 1762
Civil Service
Bonus, 2108-10, 4535
Superannuated officials, payments to, 4541
Coal prices, 3295
Combines, 3293
Comparative return on Dominion guaranteed and Nova Scotia bonds, 4165
Currency Act Amdt. Bill, 2160-2, 2269
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Dumping clause, 3815
Exchange, 4424
German
Agents of exporters, 4426
Competition, 3811-19, 4424
Labour, cost of, 4425
Mark, 3810, 4423
Policy, 4423
Reparation, 4423
New and unused goods, 3815
Roumanian loan, 3811
Unemployment, 3811
Valuation of currency, 3810, 4423
Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt. Bill, 3698
Alcohol, 3705, 3725
Cocoa imports, 3704
Date of coming into force, 3724
Imported goods, marking of, 3711, 3714, 3719, 3722, 3938-54
Date of coming into force, 3724
Liquor, tax on, 3708
Medicated wines, 3709
Whiskey, 3706, 3707
Estimates, Committee on, 2202
Grand Trunk loan, 4165-6
Income tax, 2102, 2107
Exemptions, 3466
Forms, 1176
Penalties, 2100
Returns, 2625
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 3905, 4251
Consolidation, 4353
Penalties, 4343
Self-assessment and payment, 4344-50
Provincial Ministers' salaries, and indemnities, 4352
Railwaymen's expenses while absent from home, 4353
Inland Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Alcohol, 3727, 3729, 3732
Distilled spirits, 3726

Drayton, Hon. Sir Henry—Con.
Inland Revenue Act Amdt. Bill—Con.
Molasses, 3726
Patent medicines, 3728
Spirits, excise duty on, 3726
Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 2625, 4339
Insurance Conference, 3088
Interim Supply, 1675, 1680, 1681, 2095, 2100-10
Former votes, 1681
Necessity for voting, 2002
Notice, 1676
Payments due, 2025
Montreal Harbour Commission Bill, 2159, 2268
Reciprocity agreement with the United States, Amdt. (Mr. Fielding) 2041
Reduction of drink consumption, 3705
Returns, inquiries for, 1176
Roumania, Canadian loan to, 3811
Interest on, 478, 1072
Repayment of, 3811
Russian currency, 1072
Sales tax, 3120, 3372
Senate Committee, attendance of Mr. Crerar, 3259
Special War Revenue Act. Amdt. Bill
Alcohol, tax on, 3957
Amendments, 3742
Binder twine, 3751, 3756
Butter importations, 3749
Containers, 3754, 3956
Farmers, no tax on sales by, 3956
Fishing boats, 3745, 3751
Houses, tax on, 3959
Lumber, tax on, 3743
Farmers exempt, 3744
Missals and prayerbooks, 3756
Mixed grains, 3744
Sales tax, 3735, 3752, 3754
Change in clause, 3957
Tailors, 3955
Sparkling wines, 3734
Spirits, 3742
Sugar, duty on, 3699
Supplementary estimates, 3741
Supply, partial, 2019
Tariff revision, 903
Taxation. See under this title Business Profits; Income; Special War Revenue
Tobacco, duty on, 3698
United States tariff and Canadian duties, 4255
Whiskey, importation and taxation, 3706, 3707
Young Emergency Tariff, 3905

Drayton-Acworth report, 3042

Dredges and Dredging, 3982. See also Harbours and Rivers; Marine; St. Lawrence Channel
Baie St. Paul district, 1992
Cape Tormentine, 1017
"Internationale," qu. 2192, qu. 2506
Inverness harbour, 3985
Maritime provinces, 3982
Ontario and Quebec, 3985
Quebec dredging fleet, 2605
St. Lawrence river, qu. 568. See also that title

Druggists. See also Customs Tariff; Inland Revenue Act Amdt.
Alcohol tax, and, 3727
Prescriptions, 3725

Drugs. See Customs and Excise; Customs Tariff; Health; Inland Revenue; Opium and Narcotic Drugs

"Druid" steamer, repairs, 1980, 1984

Drury, Hon. E. C., and Drury Government, 96, 315, 335, 421, 3199, 4172-4221, 4301. See also Address; Budget; Highways; Lake of the Woods
Patronage, 2876
Position on tariff, 421

Drydocks, 1690, 3987, 4017-36. See also Shipbuilding
Esquimalt, 3149, 3648
Expropriation of, 1698
Halifax, qu. 567
Montreal Dry Docks and Ship repairing, limited, qu. 2191
Prince Rupert Dry Dock Engineering Company, qu. 3423
Victoria, contract for, qu. 565

Duff, Mr. Justice, 1561

Duff, the late Hon. James, 1033

Duff, Mr. William (Lunenburg)
Air Board, 3782
Apple-growing in Lunenburg county, 1042
British Chamber of Shipping, 1716
Canadian citizens' war claims, qu. 1820
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 1686
Assets and liabilities, 1920, 1701
Balance sheet for 1920, errors in, 1698
Business brokers, 1713
Depreciation in value of vessels, 1701
Dominion Iron and Steel Company, 1711
Hall Engineering Company, qu. 695
Insurance, 1703
Officers, and seamen, 4357-60
Operating account, 1717

Duff, Mr. William.—Con.
Canadian Govt. Merchant Marine—Con.
Prime Minister and, 1708
Registering of ships at Halifax, 1720
Reported sale of ships, qu. 570
State-owned fleets in other countries, 1718
Vessels, qu. 1499
"Canadian Conqueror," qu. 1381
"Canadian Explorer," 1714
"Canadian Inventor," 1890
"Canadian Mariner," 1715
"Canadian Pioneer," 1689
"Canadian Recruit," qu. 575
Canadian National Railways and Montreal Locomotive Co., qu. 696
Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk bonds, qu. 837
Cantley, Col. Thomas, qu. 1501
Civil Service Commission
Appointments, distribution of, 1045
Fruit inspectors, 1042
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2496-2502
Cold Storage, 1040
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Consular certificates, 4404
Invoice certificate, 3791, 4407
Fee—who pays? 4399, 4403
Proclamation, 4407
Trade agents, 3791-4, 4404
Drydocks
Halifax, ques. 567
Expropriation of, 1698
Victoria, contract for, qu. 565
"Esperanto," wreck of, 4341
Fish and Fisheries
Canned and pickled, inspection of, 2182
Cold storage for, 1039
Drawback on from United States, qu. 600
Fish breeding establishments, 2188
Lunenburg overseers, 2179
Tax on fishing boats, 3745
French speech by Sir George Foster, translation, 1230
Fruit inspectors, 1041, 1047
Halifax-Newfoundland service, 1713
Highways, 4303
Johnston, Mr. Alexander, re-appointment, 644
Marine hospitals—Lunenburg, 3139
Montreal Drydock and Ship-repairing, Limited, qu. 2191
Natural resources, 881
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," qu. 671
Prince Rupert
Public building, qu. 567
Purchase of land from Mr. V. W. Smith, qu. 963
Railway Department, salaries, 1671

Duff, Mr. William—Con.
Railways, auditors, 1661
Returned Soldiers Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 4355-60
Shipbuilding, 1710, 1867, 1932
Advances at Victoria, qu. 599
Contractors' percentage, 1902
Contracts, 1689
Depreciation, 1886
Dominion Steel Company and Government, 1691
Exchange, 1894
Interest, 1869, 1886
Operating costs and wages, 1933
Opposition to policy by newspapers, 1892
Point of order, 1898
Programme, 2091
Trade routes, opening of, 1888
Sick mariners, 3129, 3139
Steel plates for ships, qu. 1233
Steel ships, contracts for, qu. 565
Trade and Commerce estimates, 1231

Duguid, Mr., naval architect, 1280

Dumping Act. See Customs and Excise Dept. Bill

Du Tremblay, Mr. P. R. (Laurier-Outremont)
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2921-7
Budget, 3191. Tariff revision, 3191; congratulations to Minister upon moderate changes, 3192; public debt, 3192; golden era of Liberal party, 3193; get rid of railroads, 3193; merchant marine, 3194; military and naval expenditures, 3194; Civil Service, 3194; war indemnity, 3195
German reparation, Canada's claim, qu. 643
Loan to shipyards, 1883
"Niobe" and "Rainbow", sale, 4032
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3881
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 2266-8, 2903
Tobacco, duty on, 3698

Easter Adjournment. See House of Commons, Adjournments

East Elgin, 1293. See also Address

Eastern Car Company, Limited, 1611

Ebert, Mr. Justice, report of, qu. 4254

Economic Development Commission, 869

Editorial Committee, 4557. See also Printing Bureau
Printing of Civil Service list, qu. 1349
Statement, 4551

Edmonton
Deputy postmaster, 827
District Engineer's office, 4535-43

Edmundston
Bridge, 2810
Post office, qu. 3422

Educational Statistics, 1231

Edwards, Mr. J. W. (Frontenac)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 126; congratulations to Prime Minister; the tariff on apples, 126; speech of the leader of the Opposition; right of the Government to hold office; resignation of Ministers or defection of supporters no reason for dissolution, 127; Liberal party a thing of shreds and patches, 128; by-elections, 128; leader of the Opposition a usurper; issue of the 1917 election, 129; right of Parliament to deal with tariff; the soldier vote, 130; analysis of civil and soldier vote in Ontario and Quebec, 131; the amendment not specific, 131, 136; record of Liberal party on the tariff, 132; Government defeat would mean accession to power of leader of the Opposition, 133; province of Quebec, 134; record of the Government, finances, debt, expenditure, agricultural and industrial production, loans, savings, 135, 136
Agricultural shows, 1239, 1241
Budget, 3175. Liberals and free trade, 3175; Ministers of the Crown and business enterprises, 3176; German goods, 3177; public debt, 3177; other budgets, 3178; budget of 1919, 3178; tariff reductions on agricultural implements, 3179; Progressive party, attitude of, 3179; Mr. Crerar and Grain Growers Company, 3180; Prime Minister on tariff, 3182; member for Red Deer and free trade, 3182; Liberals and tariff reduction, 3183; fiscal policy of Great Britain, 3185; agriculture in Great Britain, 3185; pig iron industry, 3188; Ontario, progress in, 3188; United States, progress in farming, 3188
Business of the House
Wednesday evening adjournment, 1840
Butter and cheese, imports and exports, 3852, 4438. See also under this title, Oleomargarine
Cattle embargo, 715
Chief Justice, salary of, 1562
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2874, 4286
Air Force, preference, 4483
Holidays, religious, 4490
Returned soldiers, preference, 4483
Civil Service (res. Sir Sam Hughes), political patronage in; Judicial appointments; Halifax programme; Lib-

Edwards, Mr. J. W.—Con.
Civil Service—Con.
eral platforms, 1893 and 1919; census enumerators, 813; Civil Service Commission; an illogical and undemocratic system, 814; outside service; inside service, 815
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 4274-6
Collins' Bay, wreck, 1989
Dairy Products Grading Bill, 4438-46
Debates, translation of French speeches, 700
De Martigny divorce, 4203
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 680
Health of Animals—glanders in Frontenac, 926
Hearst publications, 4170
Highway construction in Ontario, 4290-4303
Interim supply, 2008, 2020
Judges Act Amendment, 1560
Judicial appointments, 813
Kingston, bridges and wharves, 3974
Langlois, Mr. George Arnoult, appointment, qu. 2505
Lightkeepers' salaries, 1995
Main Ducks life-saving station, 1991
Maisonneuve and Gaspé, representation, 1302, 2247, 2310-2339
Militia
Annual drill, 2295
Military expenditures, 2792
Ministers to sit in either Chamber, 1171
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3852-88
Opium and Narcotic Drugs Act Amdt. Bill, 2904
Polish battalion for service in French army, 4061
Privilege, Maisonneuve-Gaspé representation, 2247
Proportional representation, 1537
Reciprocity agreement with United States, 2048
Representation in Parliament, 1316
Royal Military College, 2803
Shipbuilding, 1953
Soldiers Pensions, Insurance and Re-establishment, 4054-61

Eggs, 1122
Chinese, importation of, qu. 568, 3751
Export and marketing of, 1122
Production, 3190, 3473

Egypt, shipment of railroad ties to, 1725

Elections. See also By-elections; Canadian Nationals; Controverted Elections; Corrupt Practices; Dominion Elections; Proportional Representation; Representation in Parliament

Elections—Con.
Foreign agitators at, qu. 903
General, necessity for. See Address; Budget; Representation in Parliament
Officers' fees, 188
Yamaska, arrangements for, 4534. See also Yamaska
York-Sunbury. See that title

Elective Senate. See Ministers

Electoral System. See Proportional Representation

Electric Power. See Fuel Supply; Great Lakes and St. Lawrence; Lake of the Woods, Water Powers

Elevators, 1442. See also Canada Grain Act; Canadian Wheat Board; Grain and Grain Trade; Terminal Elevators

Eleven O'Clock Adjournment. See House of Commons

Elkin, Mr. S. E. (St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert)
De Martigny divorce, 3764
St. John and Quebec Railway Bill, 2156
Shipbuilding, 1888
Sick mariners benefit fund, 4039

Embargo on Cattle. See Cattle

Empire Cabinet, proposed, 1385. See also Prime Ministers' Conference

Empire Insurance Company. See North American Insurance

Empire Parliamentary Association. See also Speaker's Chair
Address by Sir Herbert Ames, 1311

England. See also Great Britain
Linen manufacturers, 1390
Railway situation in, 1008

English River. See Lake of the Woods

Entomology, 1024. See also Destructive Insects

Epiphany, 2626. See also Civil Service, Religious holidays

Esmonde, Mr. Osmonde Grattan, 1556

"Esperanto", wreck of, 4341

Esquimalt
Dockyard, 4017-36
Drydock, 3149, 3648, 3651
Naval College, 4010-16

Essences, tax on, 3709

Estimates. See also Deputy Speaker; House of Commons; Interim Supply; Speaker; Supply. For departments, see their titles

Estimates—Con.
Closure. See that title
Consent of House necessary, 1073
Consideration after midnight, 2736-75
Current necessities—Redlich, 1675
Discussion of, opportunity for, 1026. See also Labour Dept.; Ministers; Post Office Dept
Form of voting objected to, 1674
Holding up of, 1941. See also Shipbuilding
Lengthy debate, 1832
Main (1921-22) tabled, 644
Notice of amendment in Com., 4168
Obstruction in. See Shipbuilding
One-sixth of amount, 1674 See also Interim Supply
Passing of without information, 1616
Procedure in, 1676
Railways, deferring of, 1652
Right of Opposition to attack items, 1678
Scrutiny of by Special Committee, 484, 1503. M. (Mr. Lemieux) 2193
Statutory payments, 1414
Supplementary, tabled, 3901, 4170, 4453
Inquiry as to, 3741, 4070
Thursdays and Fridays, Rule 17C. See House of Commons
Unreliability of figures, 1203-4
Voting en bloc, 2006, 2012
Voting, method of, 4538, 4540

Ethier, Mr. J. A. C. (Laval-Two Mountains)
Berry Boxes, 4106, 4114-16
Canada Temperance Act, 4383
Central Railway Company of Canada, 3715, 3716
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 4277
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4278-85
Classification and reorganization, 4465
Dorchester penitentiary, appointments at, 4467
Exemption of certain classes from jurisdiction of Commission, 4460-83
Returned soldiers, preference, 4358, 4483
Special Committee, evidence, 4461
Civil Service
Bonus, qu. 1350
Number of civil servants, names, and classification, 4255
Daylight saving, qu. 1817
De Martigny divorce, 3766-8
Griffenhagen and Associates, qu. 1821
Highways—Montreal—Hull, 4306
Inspection and Sale Act Amdt.—Berry Boxes, 4106, 4114-16
Veniot correspondence, 3719

Ethyl Alcohol, 3705. See also Inland Revenue

Euler, Mr. William D. (North Waterloo)
Air Board, 3777-85
Bounties, principle of granting, 1423
Budget, 3569. Business profits tax and sales tax, 3570; economy in expenditure necessary, 3570; income tax, 3570; methods of raising revenue, 3571; national railways, 3572; Mr. Fielding's amendment, 3573; Prime Minister's remarks on Budget, 3574
Canadian Nationals, 647, 770
Canadian National Railways
Independent auditor, qu. 1133
Canadian Press, Limited, 4533
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4280-5, 4469-82
"Nor in the public interest," amdt., 4283
Returned soldiers, 4258
Civil Service Bonus, 2110-15, 3531
Coal consumption, 1258
Convicts, increase in number, 1091
Copyright Amdt. and Consolidation Bill, 3844-6
Customs Tariff, 1907, Amdt. Bill—imported goods, marking, 3953
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (prohibition plebiscite), 259
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4227-49
Foreign-born wives and children of British subjects, 3103, 3113, 4209. See also Naturalization
Forms, 4227-46
Naturalization—certificate of qualification, 4229
Amdt. in Com., 3103, 4227; neg. 4342
Amdt. to 3r., 4249
"Personally naturalized", 4244
Fuel Supply Problem, 1263
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2461-3
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 694
Highways, 3028
House of Commons Chamber, temperature of, 1071
Hudson Bay Railway, 979, 988
Illustration stations in Ontario, 950
Immigration, 2574-92
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4344
Income Tax returns, 2567, 2625
Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 4549
Kingston penitentiary, 1097, 1107
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4175
League of Nations—labour, 4547
Linen yarn factories, 1397
Ministers to sit in either Chamber, 1161
"Niobe" and "Rainbow", sale, 4025
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3870
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt., 2267
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 2483-4
Royal Military College, 2802

Euler, Mr. William D.—Con.
St. John and Quebec Railway Bill, 2154
Shipbuilding, assistance to, qu. 603
Smith, Mr. Sydney, qu. 1236
Suggested resignation of Opposition, 223. See also Stevens, Mr. H. S.
Surplus war supplies, disposal of, qu. 736
Trent canal, 2613-15, 2989
Welland canal, construction, 2988-96; amdt. 2989

European Corn Borer. See Corn Borer

European Credits, 3160. See also Belgium; Greece; Loans; Roumania

Excessive or Inadequate Punishments. See Criminal Code Amdt. Bill

Exemptions. See Taxation

Exchange, rate of, 96, 267, 316, 416, 545, 3087, 3160, 3167, 3264, 3571, 3599. See also Customs and Excise; Finance; Loans
Comparative return on Dominion guaranteed and Nova Scotia bonds, 4165
German mark, 3810-19
Money—purchasing power and exchange value, 4427
Shipbuilding, 1894
Tariff rates on foreign goods, 4421
Trade with Russia, 1003
Valuation for duty, qu. 733
Valuation of currency, 3786-3818
Valuation of the pound and dollar, qu. 577

Exchequer Court Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 563; m. for 2r., 623; com., 625; 3r., 644
Subjects and sections discussed:
Appeals, 623
Commissioner of Patents, 623
General rules and orders, 258
Judges, 1083

Excise. See Customs and Excise; Inland Revenue; Special War Revenue

Exhibitions, 1123. See also Agricultural Shows; County Fairs; Live stock; Trade Film productions, 1558
Seed fairs, 1126

Exhibition Train, 1557-8

Exhibits Branch, 1466

Expeditionary Force. See Canadian Expeditionary Force

Expenditure in Departments. See Ministers

Experimental Farms, 922, 928, 931, 932-36, 945, 1949, 4215. See also Agriculture; Live Stock
American implements at, qu. 492
Charlevoix-Montmorency, 945
Distribution of, 1076
Dorchester county, 946
Fredericton, qu. 1131
Hours and pay, 932
L'Assomption, 918
Nappan, Gureney cattle, qu. 2686
Ontario, 948
Rimouski, 954
Ste. Anne de la Pocatière, 948
Seed inspection, 1125
Wright county, 922

Explosives, 2162

Exports. See also Address; Budget; Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Trade
Canadian, for last year, 3483
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, by, 1276-7
Freight rates, 1224

Export Trade, Expansion of. See Shipbuilding; Trade

Express Companies, 3469

Express Rates, 169

External Affairs
Conservation Commission, 3960
Department, creation of, 2388
Estimates, 2437
Legal adviser, opinion as to correspondence re Canadian Representation in the United States, 2406, 2428
Passport office, 2436
Report of Secretary of State for, 397

Extradition Convention with the United States, Bill
1r., 3319; withdrawn, 3741

Extradition Treaty with the United States (Wife desertion.) See also Extradition Convention
Copies tabled, 3207
Inquiry, 3008, 3740

Fabian Pamphlets, 1034

Fafard, Mr. J. Fernand (L'Islet)
Algernon Rock pier, qu. 1383
Bonus to lightkeepers, qu. 1622
County fairs, 1123
Fruit inspection, 1043
St. John harbour, qu. 1383
Upper Crossing St. Roch light, qu. 1383

Fares, theft of, 3925

Farm Implements. See Agricultural Implements; Machinery

Farm Labour, 3412. See also Labour; Unemployment

Farm Lands, price of, 1034

Farmers
Agricultural publications, and, 1075
Canadian Expeditionary Force, in, qu. 1349. See also Military Service Act
Exemption, 3597
Income tax collections, 569, qu. 838
Organizations, 791
Prosperity of, 1035
Protection for, 3748-49

Farmers' Clubs, 1034. See also Live Stock

Farmers' Movement and Party. See Progressive Party

Farming, competition in, 3188

Farnham, Que., camp grounds, qu. 1132

Fat Stock Shows. See Live Stock

Federal Housing Board. See Housing

Federal Union No. 66. See also Civil Service
Agitation by, 825
Organization of, 795
Policy of, 823

Feeding Stuffs Act
Enforcement, qu. 965
Inspection districts, qu. 1624

Feeds, Mill, 1126
Adulteration of, 3589
Exemption of, 3745
Stock, 289
Mixed grains, 3745
Transportation charges on, qu. 2686

Female Suffrage, 173, 527, 4474. See also Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill

Ferrer, Execution of, 1523

Ferries. See Marine

Ferryman. See Post Office

Fertilizer Act, 1909. Administration of, 4513

Fertilizer Act, 1909, Amdt. Bill, 1r., 1497; 2r., 2231; ref. to Com. on Agr., 2234

Fertilizers, duty on, 3441

Fielding, Hon. W. S. (Shelburne and Queen's)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 518; political possibilities—Liberal, Farmer or Tory Government—congratulations to Prime Minister; leaders of Liberal and Farmers parties; League of Nations, 518; Canada's participation; independence; expenses of League, 519; difference between British and Canadian representatives, 520; Article X, 521; the Government's mandate; change of leadership, name, party and policy, 522; individual understandings and experiences; conclusion of war ends Government's mandate, 523; Cabinet reorganization; Government's record, 524; Ambassador at Washington, 525; Imperial Conference, Cattle embargo, 526; votes to women; patronage, 527
Alcohol, tax on, 3705, 3727, 3730, 3732
Armouries for public meetings, 901
Auditor General's report, delay, 909
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2919-34
Bolshevism, pamphlet, 4548
Budget, inquiry as to date of, 1270
Approximate date, qu. 738
Speech, 3127, 3146; severe depression result of war, 3146; advantage of direct taxation, 3147; income tax returns, 3147; disposition of public funds, 3148; naval and military expenditures, 3149; disarmament, 3150; tariff revision, 3150; protection of industries, 3153; American tariff, 3154; free trade, 3155; Amdt. moved, 3155; neg. 3686-7
Business of the House. See also under this head Estimates; Interim Supply; Supply
Adjournment moved by member closing debate, 999
Agriculture Estimates, proceeding with, 1074
Announcement of, for to-morrow, 1026, 1073, 2148
Division after a recess, 1383
Easter, after, 1270
Further discussion, 1068
Meeting at two o'clock, 447
Motion requires longer notice, 1672
Prorogation, 4068
Sittings
Saturday, 2777
Wednesday, 1384
Adjournment at eleven o'clock, 1828
Evening sittings, 1174, 1844
Two o'clock rule, on, 447
Undue haste, 4449
Butter "dumped" into Canada, 3750
Canada Shipping Act. Amdt. Bill (Public Harbours) 2230-1

Fielding, Hon. W. S.—Con.
Canada Temperance Act Amdt. Bill
Cases pending, 3902, 4373-6
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 1557, 2254-63
Canadian Government bonds, qu. 1620
Canadian Nationals Definition Act, 647, 768, 2033
Canadian National Railways
Board of Directors, 1653
Correspondence with directors, 1003
Fire claims—Shelburne County, 4569
Halifax and Southwestern line, 3052
Extension to Lockeport, 3054, 4323
Station accommodation, 4327
Management — Information, M. (Mr. King) 1184
Special Committee, reference to
M. (Mr. A. K. Maclean) 1606
M. (Mr. Meighen) 1764, 1846
Amdt. (Mr. King) 1794
Canadian Representation in the United States, 2391-2436
Cattle embargo, 713, 729, 762
Chief Justice, income tax, and, 1566
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2780, 3901
Religious holidays, 4491
Returned Soldiers, 4259
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2489-90, 4268-78
Civil Service, political patronage, Res. (Sir Sam Hughes) 807
Clark's Harbour, public building, 2817
Conservation Act Amdt. Bill, 3959-71
Copyright Amdt. and Consolidation Bill, 3834-48
Currency Act, 1910, Amdt. Bill, 2161
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Brokers' fee, 4432
Cost of production, 4411-14
Dick Turpin, 4421
Dumping clause, 3816, 4412
Exchange—tariff rates on foreign goods, 4421
German trade, 3813
Invoice certificate, 3801
Fee—who pays? 3801-3, 4389
New or unused goods, 3813
Tariff, increase, 3813
Third reading; undue haste, 4449
Trade agents, 3800-13, 4389
Valuation for duty, 4411
Valuation of currency, 3813, 4420
Customs Tariff, 1907, Amdt. Bill, imported goods—marking, 3712, 3714, 3722, 3953
Dairy Products Grading Bill—undue haste, 4449

Fielding, Hon. W. S.—Con.
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition plebiscite) 243
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 2944
Revising officers, 3092, 3101
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. Bill, 4063-5
Dredging, 3984
Election petitions, 3934
Entomology Bureau, 1025
Estimates
Expenditures not appearing in, 1423
Statutory, 1417-18
Thursdays and Fridays, Rule 17C, 1676
Voting of fixed sums, 1417-18
Extradition Treaty, 2687, 3008, 3740, 3741
French Trade Agreement, 1351, 1558, 2127-41, 2152
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2376, 2448-80, 2777
Harbours and Rivers
Estimates, 3976-82
Nova Scotia, 3990
Highways, 1664, 3023
Hudson Bay Railway, M. involving expenditure, 982
Imports, regulations, 3709
Income tax, Chief Justice, and, 1566
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4344-52
Intercolonial Railway—land at Lévis, 1846
Interim Supply. See also under this title, Estimates; Supply
Motion out of order, 2009
Procedure, 1677, 2012
Resolution should have schedule, 2015
Unanimous consent required, 2002
Urgency of, 2003
Judges' Act Amdt, Bill, 2118, 3010
Judges as revising officers, 3092-3101
King's birthday, 4450
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4224-6
League of Nations, Assembly, request for papers, 188
Lighthouse signal service, 4040
Lobster season, 2188
Lockeport-Froude's Point service, 1496
Lockeport railway extension, 3054, 4323
Luxury taxes, abolition, 1185
Macallum, Dr., 1432
Manufacturers and protection, 3660
Migratory Birds Convention Act Amdt. Bill, 2891, 4496
Montreal Harbour Commission Bill, 2159
National Catholic Labour Unions, 1649
National Research Institute, 1432, 2701-07, 2893-6. See also Research
National resources—transfer to Western Provinces, 2549

Fielding, Hon. W. S.—Con.
"Niobe" and "Rainbow", sale, 4011
Nova Scotia harbours and icebreakers, 1994
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3531, 3863-90, 3906
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 2898-2903
Ottawa Improvement Commission Act Amdt. Bill, 2941
Parliament Buildings, 3992-8
Pensions to pilots, 2000
Pensions, widowed mothers, 638
Pensions Act Amdt. Bill, 4365-73
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2097
Polish battalion for service in French army, 4061
Prime Ministers' Conference, 2637-8
Privileges and Elections Committee, 2373
Protection and, references to former speeches, 3332
Public Accounts Committee, information, 1805
Public Works Engineering Branch, 4083-4
Railway Commission, 3019, 3022
Railway estimates, deferring of, 1652
Reciprocity agreement with the United States, Amdt. to Supply, 2038
Representation in Parliament, 1318
Research Council, 1432. See also under this title National Research Institute
Returned Soldiers, 4365
Returned Soldiers Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 4261
Right of Dominion to tax provinces, 3742
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act Amdt. Bill, 2482
St. John and Quebec Railway Bill, 2155-6
St. John harbour, 4079
Soldiers pensions, insurance and re-establishment, 4061
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Alcohol, 3705, 3730, 3727, 3732
Fishing boats, 3737, 3745
Patent medicines, 3728
Sales tax, 3754
Spirituous liquors, 3711
Sugar, duty on, 3699
Supply. See also, under this title, Estimates, Interim Supply
Amendments, non-confidence, 1184
Comprehensive items, 3015
Motions in, 1683
Tariff revision, 3749
Taxation, right of, 3706, 3742
Trade agents in United States, 1476
Trade with United States, 1468
Unemployment, 4549

Fielding, Hon. W. S.—Con.
Vacancies, 1324
Victoria Day, 3697
Vote on capital account, 1464
West Indies importations, 3704
West Indies steamship service, 1488
Westport signal service, 1998
Women workers, 4547

Fiji Islands, trade with, 1465
Catellier, Mr. Ludger, 1465

Films, Educational. See Trade and Commerce; Exhibitions

Finance. See also Address; Banks; Bonds; Brussels International Financial Conference; Budget; Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Canadian National Railways; Currency Act Amdt. Bill; Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Exchange; Grand Trunk; Housing; Loans; Taxation
Accounts with Great Britain, qu. 2191; qu. 2622
Canadian currency discount, 3115
Canadian dollar, value in United States, 3087
Canadian Government bonds, 3289
Chartered banks, taxes paid by, qu. 2192
Credits, 3160. See also Loans
Roumania and Greece, to, qu. 1236. See also Roumania
Department
Purchasing Commission, and, 1102
Deposits outside Canada in Canadian banks, qu. 1623
Dominion Notes
Circulation, qu. 1001
Gold reserve, and, ques. 1234
Issues, qu. 2621
Securities, qu. 1383
Expenditure accounts, qu. 2621
Expenditure and debt per capita, 2013
Expenditure, revenue and debt, qu. 2099
Foreign monetary standards and Customs, qu. 1133. See also Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Government bonds, purchase of, qu. 1620
Investments, "other" and "non-active," qu. 2691
Minister
Miscellaneous estimates, passing of, 1116
Public debt—non-active, miscellaneous and banking accounts, qu. 2621
Repayment of, $25,000,000 loan, qu. 2622
Revenue accounts, qu. 2620
Revenue, expenditure and debt, qu. 2099
Victory bonds, 1920
Expenses, qu. 1620

Firearms, possession of. See Criminal Code Amdt. Bills

Fire Insurance, 3469

Fiscal Policy of Government. See Address; Budget; Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Tariff

Fiset, Dr. Michel, qu. 963, 4523

Fish and Fisheries
Biological Board, 2189
Breeding establishments, 2185, 4036
Saskatchewan, in, 2185
British Columbia, 882, 890
Conservation Commission, 3965-9
Cowan, Mr. G. H., K.C., legal expenses, 2187
Development of, 856, 861
East Coast Fisheries drawback, qu. 600
Ebert, Mr. Justice, report, qu. 4254
Fish bait, 1038
Fish consumption, 1038
Gulf, Gaspé and Magdalen Islands, 877
Halibut industry in British Columbia, 883
Halifax award, qu. 2191
Inspection, 2182
International Fisheries Commission, Fraser River, 2189
Jurisdiction of Dominion and Provinces, 2104
Lobster hatcheries, 2188, 4036
Net fishing in Missisquoi Bay, qu. 570
Officers and guardians, 2177
Oyster culture, 2177
Patrol service, 2177
Problems, scientific investigation, 2188
Protection service, 4036
Quebec fisheries reference, 4040
Refrigerator cars, 1038
Salmon licenses, 2104, 4341. See also Privy Council
Quebec, qu. 1381, qu, 2506
Transportation of fish, 883, 877
Gaspé, 962

Fishing Boats, exemption of material, 3737. See also Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill

Flavelle, Sir Joseph, 4142, 4314. See also Canadian National Railways

Flax. See also Bounties; Linen Yarn
Bounty, 1389
Decline in prices, 1389
Growers, Convention, 1391
Industry, experimental work, 931-2
Patent process of retting, 4455

Fleming, Sir Sanford, 3046

Florence & Son. See Printing Bureau, Destruction of Documents

Flour. See also Wheat
Moisture in, 1446
Penitentiaries for, 1107
Price of, 1448

Flour Bags, tax on, 3754. See also Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill

Flynn, Mr. Harry, 217

Fontaine, Mr. J. E. (Hull)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 210; congratulations to new Prime Minister, 210; change in name of Unionist party; the tariff; neglect of agriculture; the working classes; consumer finally pays the taxes; the cost of living, 211; Georgian Bay Canal; national debt, expenditure; old age pensions and unemployment; insurance; province of Quebec, 212
Alcohol, tax on, 3725, 3728, 3732
Georgian Bay Canal, 745
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 745
Hull-Wakefield road, 3033
National Catholic Labour Unions, 1646
Patent medicines, 3728
Shipbuilding, 1941

Food Adulteration of. See Health
Maple Products, 887. See also that title

Foodstuffs, 3589, 3734
Hoarding of, qu. 1347
Tax on, 3546. See also Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill

Foran, Mr. William. See Civil Service

Ford Motor Company, 3409

Fordney Bill. See Budget; Tariff; United States

Foreign Agitators and Elections, 903

Foreign-Born Wives and Children of British Subjects. See Dominion Elections Act Amdt.

Foreign Business. See Trade

Foreign Currency Inflation. See Customs and Excise Dept. Bill

Foreign Decorations to Canadians, qu. 1132

Foreign Imports, value, 3310

Foreign Loans. See Greece; Loans; Roumania

Foreign Manufacture. See Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Customs Tariff, imported goods—marking

Foreign Monetary Standards and Customs, qu. 1133. See also Customs and Excise Dept. Bill, Valuation of Currency

Foreign Shipments, Invoice Certificate. See Customs and Excise Dept. Bill

Foreign Tariffs Division, 1437

Forest Reserves
Porcupine, 538
Winter grazing, 383

Forestry. See also Natural Resources; Research
Aerial patrol and survey, 3776, 4495
Bud worm, 1031
Canadian Forestry Association, 4494
Conservation Commission, 3960-9
Director of, 1346
National Transcontinental Railway, forest protection, 4335
Protection of forests, 870, 4335, 4494
Spruce forests—bud worn, 1031

Forfeitures and Penalties. See Inland Revenue

Forman, Mr. H., 1672

Fortier, Mr. H. A. (Labelle)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 169. Amendment — duty of Government to hold election; the Agrarian movement; West Peterborough; attitude of Quebec; National Liberal Conservative Association in no sense national, 170; change of electoral map will not change sentiments of the people; western representation; unconstitutionality, tyranny and despotism, 171
Air Board, 3785
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2912-34
Budget, 3417. Deplorable condition of finances, 3418; military expenditures, 3418; national debt, 3420; tariff revision, 3420
Canadian Bar Association, 1094
Canadian Wheat Board, 2116-17
Civil Service bonus, 2112
French, Bill not printed in, 1095
Highways projected in Quebec, 3025, 3029
Judges—reorganization of districts, 1083
National Research Institute, 2897
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3876
Railway Commission, French secretary. 3018

Fortier, Mr. H. A.—Con.
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act Amdt. Bill, 2486
Shipbuilding, 1946

Fort Cumberland and Fort Moncton, care of, 4540

Fort Frances Post Office site, qu. 1233

Fort Garry Hotel, Winnipeg, qu. 1348

Fort Lennox, Isle-aux-Noix, sundial, qu. 2097

Fort Smith Railway Company. See Private Bills Discussed

Fort William
Harbour improvements, 4536
Terminals, 3050

Fortifications of the City of Quebec. See Quebec

Fortin, Abbe. See Labour, National Catholic Labour Unions

Foster, Mr. A. De Witt, 90, 3509

Foster, Right Hon. Sir George E. (Minister of Trade and Commerce)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 46; the tariff; First Assembly of the League of Nations; work and purpose of League, 47; development of national life; enlarged ideals and sympathies; the problem of world peace, 48; Covenant of League of Nations and Treaty of Versailles; Peace Treaty signed by 47 nations; the United States; duties and obligations of League; its organization; the Council, 49; respective jurisdictions of Assembly and Council, 50; the Secretariat, reduction of armaments and arbitration of differences; registration of Treaties; mandatories, 51; social and economic reforms; technical organizations; meeting of assembly in Geneva, 52; election of permanent president; rules of procedure; official languages, 53; spirit of courtesy; the smaller nations, 54; publicity of proceedings; financing of the League, 55; Article X; Permanent Court of International Justice, 56
Auditor General's Report, delay, 915
Bounties, 1386
Flax and linen yarn, 1389, 1393, 1394
Brunelle, Sergt. Major N., 1519
Budget, 3156. Income tax, 3156. Brussels Conference, 3157; League of Nations, 3157; debt, increase in, 3158; tariff revision, 3159; exchange and credits

Foster, Right Hon. Sir George E.—Con.
Budget—Con.
system, 3160; Young Emergency Bill, 3160; protection, 3161
Business of the House
Announcement of for to-morrow, 1026
Legislation pending, 4068
Progress in, 1230
Butter and cheese exports, 1470
Canada Grain Act, administration, 1442
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 1557, 2191, 2251-62, 3703. See also West Indies steamship service
Canada Year Book, 1231, 1425
Canadian Engineering Standards Association, 1426
Canadian National Railways
Management — Information, M. (Mr. King) 1207
Cattle embargo, 711
Census commissioners and enumerators, 597, 696, 735, 806, 1209, 1226, 2098, 3260, 2843, 2874, 3807
Missisquoi, 1132, 4113
Moncton, 3972
Pontiac, 1127, 1231
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2842-74
Civil Service
Bonus, 1463
Griffenhagen and Associates, 1555, 4555
Reorganization, 4555-6
Civil Service, Political Patronage, Res. (Sir Sam Hughes) 802-3
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Invoice certificate, 3791-3809
Fee—who pays? 3792-9, 3804, 4389-95
Form of, 3799
Imports and exports, 4398
Proclamation of Act, 4394; Amdt. 4407
Revenue and expenditure, 4399
Trade agents, 3791-3809
Certificate of, 4389-94
Trade commissioners, 4394
Trade, extension of, 4394-8
Debates, translation of French speeches, 701
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition plebiscite) 307
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. Bill, 4062-6
Editorial Committee, 4559
Estimates
Committee on, 2206-8
Procedure, 1385
Statutory payments, 1414
Exhibitions, 1466
Canadian goods, 1227
Flax bounty, 1403. See also under this title Bounties
Fox breeding, 1429
French Trade Agreement, 1174, 1573, 1557, 2125-41, 2152

Foster, Right Hon. Sir George E.—Con.
French Trade Agreement—Con.
Printing, 1380
Fruit, co-operative effort, 1470
Grain Act, administration, 1442
Grain
As security for Dominion notes, 1443
Chemistry—Dr. Birchard, 1228
Elevators, 1442
Grading, 1230
Inquiry, remuneration of Commissioners, 3972
Griffenhagen and Associates. See under this title Civil Service.
Hides, inspection, 1437
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4345-51
Industry
Encouragement of, 1469
Government aid to, 1397
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 351, 607, 2944
International Customs Tariff Bureau, 1437
International Trade Conference, 2151
Judge Snider's Report, 3761, 4062
Labour—Mr. Lapointe, 3584
League of Nations, 47, 2356-73
Macallum, Dr., 1433
Motion picture films and exhibits, 1232, 1466
National Research Institute, 2688, 2708, 2892-7. See also Research
Newfoundland railways, 1485
Patent Act Amdt. Bill, 4453-60
Patents of Invention Act Consolidation Bill, 303, 2890-1
Pensions Act Amdt. Bill, 4368
Petroleum bounties, 1413
Prime Ministers' Conference, 2662
Printing Bureau, destruction of documents, 4559
Publications, printing, 1438
Research, industrial and scientific, 1426
Research Council Act Amdt. Bill, 2566; 2688, 2892. See also under this title, National Institute
Returned Soldiers Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 4355
Searls, Mr. George, Chief Grain Inspector, 1444
Shipbuilding, 1938, 1972
Statistical Department, 1231
Statistics Act Amdt. Bill, 3007
Statutory expenditure, 1420
Steamship Services
Australia-New Zealand, 1493
Murray Bay-Tadoussac, 1826
West Indies, 1488, 1491
See also under this title Trade
Terminal elevators, 1463, 1464, 1442
Timber culling, 1426

Foster, Right Hon. Sir George E.—Con.
Trade
Australia, 1468
Russia, 1003, 1072
South Africa, 1491
United States, 1219, 1468, 1475. See also Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Trade and Commerce
Department
Director of Commercial Exhibits, 1226
Educational films, 1225, 1466, 1558
Patent and Copyright Branch, 1496
Salaries, 1218
Tariffs division, 1226
Weights and Measures, 1485
Trade Commissioners, 1219, 1224, 1391, 1464, 1479. See also under this title Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Trade Mark and Design Act Amdt. Bill, 229; 2891
War Indemnity—Canada's share, 3583
West Indies
Cable, 1438
Steamship service, 1488, 1491
Trade agreement. See under this title Canada-West Indies
York-Sunbury, French-Canadian Minister, 3638

Foundation Company of Montreal, payment to, qu. 4541

Fournier, Mr. C. A. (Bellechasse)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 203; speech from the Throne a "negligible document"; Government incapable of dealing with pressing issues; unemployment and soup kitchens; 203; League of Nations an ideal distant and unattainable; disarmament, 204; Administration's arguments for retaining office; inconsistency of Minister of Immigration; issue not the tariff but vindication of constitutional rights, 205; no general election held on last redistribution; crime of the junkers, fire-eaters and reactionaries; assault on national unity, 206
Agricultural expenditures, 1029
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2910
Canadian National Railways
Special Committee, reference to, M. (Mr. Meighen) 1799
Civil Service, Political Patronage, 836
Highways in Quebec, 3030
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill. 2266
Parliament buildings, expenditure, qu. 4341
St. Michel wharf, Res. 967, 3991
Weekly bulletins, 1231

Fox Bay, squatters, 1514

Fox-Breeding, grant for, 1428

France
Amount of credit to, qu. 2622
Ministers, appointment of, 1154
Senate in, 1165
State-owned fleet sold by, 1718
Treaty with. See French Trade Agreement

Franchise. See also Canadian Nationals; Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill; Naturalization; Proportional Representation

Franco-Canadian Commercial Agreement. See French Trade Agreement

Fraser, Mr. Evan E. (Welland)
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill
Hours of polling in municipalities near international boundary, amdt. 4245
Returned Soldiers, employment on Welland Canal, 3001

Fraser, Mr. Roy, 2860-8

Fraser River
International Commission, 2189
Snag boat, 3978

Fredericton Experimental Farm, qu. 1131

Free Trade, 4419. See Address; Budget

Freight Rates, 214, 484, 3474. See also Railways; Transportation; Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Canadian National Railways
Discrimination in, 1232
Increase in, 341, 389, 538, 3263
Ocean, 1734, 1946
Pulpwood and saw logs, 2511

Freight Ships. See Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Shipbuilding

French Canadians, 3594
Appointments to office, 355, 510
League of Nations, representation on, 552
United States in, 1483, 3675

French Language, 3824, 3972, 4543
Address not moved or seconded in, 138, 223, 280, 385, 539.
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, French Version. See that title
Bill not printed in, 649, 1095
Board of Trade reports, forms, 2819, 3320-75
Canadian National Railways
Conductors,, waiters, printing, 1782, 4329-33
In Quebec and New Brunswick, 4328

French Language—Con.
Debates, Official Report of, translation of French speeches M. (Mr. Archambault) 698; agreed to, 702
Election proclamation, 553
Estimates, printing and discussion in, 1386
Fuel Supply, Special Committee, evidence, 4251
Income tax instructions, 2626
Interior Dept. publications, 1333
Parliament buildings
Inscriptions
Central column, qu. 568
Tower, 3995-8, 4543
Pensions, application forms, qu. 965
Questions to immigrants, 779, 3824
Use of in debate, 539

French Parliament. See Ministers

French Purchasing Commission, 3172
Letter of Minister of Customs to, 3079

French Trade Agreement
Copy of
M. for, 578, 607, 766, 2193
Tabled, 1271
Inquiry as to date of, 1174
Printed copies, 1351, 1380
Terms and signature, 1185

French Trade Agreement Bill
Res. 1557; 1r., 1573; 2r., com., 2125; 3r., 2152

French Version, 3144. See also Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill

Fripp, Mr. A. E. (Ottawa)
Canada Highways Act, qu. 1237
Cartier square, Ottawa, stores shed, qu. 3208
Civil Service
Political patronage in, Res. (Sir Sam Hughes) 792; Civil Service Act; patronage not abolished, 792; classification, Arthur Young & Company; Griffenhagen; Printing Bureau; Mr. Wolffe; destruction of documents; patronage exercised by irresponsible persons, 793; outside service; cost; efficiency not increased, 794; unrest; Federal Union No. 66; reorganization by deputy ministers, 795
Reorganization, qu. 600
Superannuation, application for increased allowances, qu. 2099
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4481
Daylight saving in Ottawa, qu. 2687
De Martigny divorce, 3715, 4004
Gilmour and Hughson Bill, 1096
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale, 4010-15
Right of House to review action of Private Bills Com., 4004

Frontenac Breweries, Limited, 1611

Fruit. See also Apples
Berry boxes, 4106, 4114
Cold Storage, 1041
Duty on, 126, 164-8
Growing, 1469, 3354
In British Columbia, 9-10
Inspectors, 1041, 1042-3, 1045
Preserved, 3703

Fruit Marks and Sale Act, 1041

Fuel Control, 2944. See also Coal

Fuel Supply Problem. See also Coal; Lignite; Mines and Minerals; Natural Resources
Special Committee, M. (Mr. Steele) 1247; appointed, 1439; withdrawn, 1857; Mr. Chisholm substituted for Mr. Lemieux, 2148; Evidence, printing and distribution, 2027, 4250

Fulton, Mr. F. J. (Cariboo)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 206; issues proposed by Opposition, 206; congratulations to mover and seconder; reasons for opposing amendment; no demand for immediate election; assertion that Government has usurped powers, 207; war not only issue of 1917 election; problems arising out of war; changes in personnel of Government; constitutional right of Government to carry on; British and other precedents, 208; conduct of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1911; the reciprocity question, 209

Fumigation of Nursery Plants, 1028, 1031

Fur-bearing Animals, Conservation Commission, 3965

Furness-Withy Company, 1712

Gambling. See Criminal Code Amdt. Bill

Game
Conservation Commission, 3965. See also Migratory Birds; National Parks

Gaols. See Prisons

Garbage Feeding. See Hog Cholera; Health of Animals

Gas and Gas Meters, Inspection of. See Inspection

Gaspé
Railway facilities, 2507
Railway from Amqui to Gaspé Basin, 876, 881
Service, qu. 962
Timber and mineral resources, 875

Gaspé and Bonaventure
Fishing communities, 1038

Gaspé and Maisonneuve. See Maisonneuve

Gauthier, Mr. L. J. (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 74; comment on remarks of Mr. McMaster; demand for election in advance of redistribution; free trade, protection and the tariff, 74; fiscal policy of the Liberal Government; the late Hon. M. Tarte, 75; the Government's mandate ;increase of indemnity; precedents for retaining office; Liberals members occupying dual positions; member for Maisonneuve and Gaspé; "traitors and renegades"; Agrarianism a class movement, 79; Labour element, 80; isolation of Quebec; alliances of Laurier and Cartier, 81; Ontario natural ally of Quebec, 81; accusations answered; La Société des Artisans Canadiens Francais, 82; a "solid bloc" no longer possible; Quebec must have representation in public affairs, 86; the hour of Quebec has struck; Lafontaine, Cartier, Laurier; the Baptist preaching the coming of the Saviour, 87; gospel of toleration and self-respect, 88
Canadian National Railways
Management, Information — M. (Mr. King) 1196
Special Committee, reference to, M. (Mr. A. K. Maclean) 1583
Highways; Quebec-Montreal-Sherbrooke, 4305
Maisonneuve and Gaspé, representation, 2338
References to, 421, 446, 514, 535, 559, 3215

Gauthier, Mr. L. J., and Montreal Progressive Club, qu. 1131

Gauvreau, Mr. C. A. (Temiscouata)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 385; address not moved or seconded in French; Government has not confidence of country; voice of the people; the Press and by-elections, 385; unpopularity of Government; usurpation of power; Prime Minister's attitude towards Quebec, 386; Canadian National Railways deficit; treatment of old employees; clamour for general election, 387
Business of the House
Monday, Government business, 2148

Gauvreau, Mr. C. A.—Con.
Canadian National Railways
Intercolonial
Section men, qu. 2028
Superannuation of employees, qu. 575
Section men, 1439
Canadian Nationals Definition Act, 2033
Census officials, 597
Civil Service Retirement Act, qu. 374
Civil Service Superannuation, qu. 734, qu. 967
Customs officer, Riviere du Loup, 3083
Farmers' sawlogs, 3743-4
Indians at Temiscouata, 2168
Macdonald, Hon. Senator, appointment of, qu. 577
Post Office Act Amdt. Bill, 2121
Sully station, 1822

Geodetic Survey, 2806
Report, 4340

Geological Survey, 2141-62. See also Mines and Minerals
Below normal strength, 870
Survey of Northern Canada, 856

George, Mr. A. D., qu. 1233

Georgetown wharf, 4564

Georgian Bay Canal, 212, 298, 679, 688, 745, 751, 755, qu. 2625, 3678. See also Great Lakes-St. Lawrence
Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Company, 229, 598, 1270

Germany
Commodity prices, 4431
Competition from, 3177, 4424
Cost of labour in, 4425
Enemy debts, 4534
Exports to Canada, 4426
Imports from, qu. 696, 838
Holdback, qu. 1350
Marking of. See Customs Tariff, Imported Goods
Labour conditions, 4425, 4428
Mark, 3810-19, 4421, 4431. See also Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Reparation, 98, 599, 4423-9
Canadian claims, 643, 3583, 4534
Trade with. See Customs and Excise Dept. Bill

Gervais, Mr. Theodore (Berthier)
Berthierville telephone, qu. 1233
Tobacco
Excise taxes on, qu. 1236
Growing, qu. 1500

Gilmour and Hughson, Limited. See Private Bills Discussed

Gladstone, Mr., and Thrift, 1169, 3640

Gladu, the late Mr. Joseph E. O., tribute to, 3, 153, 292, 430

Glanders. See Health of Animals

Glass, Mr. S. F. (East Middlesex)
Experimental farms, 938
Flax industry, 931, 1399, 1408, 4455-8
Imports, per capita, 3415
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4349-52
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3868-95
Patent Act Amdt. Bill
Flax, process of retting, 4455-8
Nolan Act, 4454
Right to continue to manufacture, 4454
Right to revive patent, 4454
Treaty of Versailles, 4453
Poultry industry, 939

Glass Industry, 3484

Gold
Melting down, 2160, 2269
Reserve, Dominion notes and, qu. 1234
Standard, 2269. See also Currency

Gold Seal Liquor Company, 4375. See also Canada Temperance Act

Good Roads Convention, 4300. See also Highways

Goods, new and unused. See Customs and Excise Dept. Bill

Gordon, Mr. G. N. (West Peterborough)
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2915-22
Budget, 3543. Will affect milling industry, 3543; packing business in cereals, 3544; sales tax and package business, 3545; Minister of Immigration and Liberal party, 3547; Mr. W. F. O'Connor, 3548; Peterborough strike, 3549; unrest and wages, 3549; inconsistency of taxation, 3550
Civil Service Bonus, 2111
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3910-20
Juvenile deliquents, spanking, 3920
Military and civilian caretakers, qu. 4340
Militia Department
Employment of women, 2286
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale, 4024
Oatmeal and package foods, 3543, 3736
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2727
Shipbuilding, 1968
Trent Canal, 2953-9, 2976
Unemployment relief to returned soldiers, qu. 4253

Gouin, Sir Lomer, 1825

Gould, Mr. Oliver R. (Assiniboia)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 335; speech of Mr. Scott; quotation from speech of Mr. Clark (Red Deer); Premier of Ontario; dissolution, 335; speech of Mr. Crerar; congratulations to Prime Minister; members elevated to Cabinet rank, 336; Mr. Stacey; Tariff Commission, 337; the amendment; "want of confidence" argument; faith with the people broken; suggested fusion of Liberals and Progressives; platform of Canadian Council of Agriculture; Liberal platform of 1919, 338; agreements and differences, 339; Canadian Wheat Board; decline in price of wheat; participation certificates, 340; freight rates; Advisory Council of Scientific 3666; manufacturers and United Farmers, 3667
Budget, 3662. United Grain Growers, 3662; Mr. Steven's remarks on York-Sunbury election, 3662; new methods of taxation, 3663; taxation and large banking institutions, 3664; land taxation, 3664; agricultural losses from insect pests, 3665; Tariff Commission, 3666; manufacturers and Grain Growers' Association, 3667
Export liquor licenses in Saskatchewan, qu. 838
Farmers in Canadian Expeditionary Force, qu. 1349
Grasshopper plague, qu. 838, 1028, 3665
Horse clubs, 1120
Income tax, 2107
Insect pests, 930, 3665
Military district No. 12, 2379
Military expenditures, 2792
Military preparations, 2298
Natural Resources, transfer to western provinces, 1339
Reciprocity agreement with United States, 2072
References to election, 368, 391, 438
Saskatchewan Militia organization, 2792
Smallpox on Scandinavian, 1498
Wheat Board and Progressive party, 1455

Governor General
Acknowledgment of address in reply to Speech, 3830
Address to on retirement, 4433, 4493
Cars, 3037
Lord Burnham, suggested appointment of, qu. 599

Governor-General—Con.
Lord Byng—reported appointment, 4435
Announcement of appointment, 4541
Message from, 4169, 4289
Prorogation, 4577
Speaker's Chair, speech on presentation, 3696
Speech on opening of Parliament, 2; relative prosperity of country; revenue maintained; taxes remitted; measures to relieve unemployment; unemployment insurance and old age pensions; British West Indies; Assembly of League of Nations; Tariff revision; Commission of Conservation; Dominion Elections Act; Canada Temperance Act; Copyright; Income War Tax Act; Scientific Research, 2

Governor in Council, specific power to pass Orders in Council, 1098

Government
Attitude of in regard to information, 1739
Borrowing from. See Housing; Loans
Buildings, Civil Service, meetings in, qu. 3421
Control of steamships, qu. 3530
Policy with regard to Estimates, 1026
Railways and ships, 1895. See also Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Canadian National Railways
Responsibility to Parliament, 1197, 1098, 1192, 1213, 1186
Shipbuilding programme, 1858. See also Shipbuilding
Ships. See Canadian Government Merchant Marine

Grade Cattle. See Health of Animals

Graham, wharf, 3978

Graham, Mr. A. M., 2618

Grain Act. See Canada Grain Act

Grain and Grain Trade, 316, 335, 390, 395, 396, 399. See also Agriculture; Address; Budget; Canada Grain Act; Canadian Wheat Board; United Grain Growers
Assignments of grain and produce as note securities, 1443
Car shortage, 512, 549. See also Railways; Transportation
Carriage on Great Lakes, 1915, 3371. See also Great Lakes
Certificates, 1451
Commission to investigate, 342, 493, 510, 513, 539, 549, 2247. See also Grain Inquiry Commission
Crushed grain, 3745
Dockages, 3633-34
Elevators, 277, 278
Country, 278

Grain and Grain Trade—Con.
Elevators—Con.
Overages, 3634
Quebec, 282, 1443
Saskatchewan So-operative Elevator Co., 391
Terminal, 278, 1442
Weed seeds in, 289
Exchange, 277. See also Winnipeg Grain Exchange
Export, 3045
Freight rates, 999, 3392
Lake, 1915, 2963, 3371. See also Canals; Canadian National Railways; Great Lakes-St. Lawrence; Hudson Bay Railway
Grain Growers' Grain Company, 288, 391, 3180, 3357, 3587, 3662, 3667. See also Address; Budget; Progressive Party; United Grain Growers
Agricultural implements and, 418, 491, 3372, 3492
Grain Growers' Guide, 391, 420, 3360, 3393
Inspection. See Canada Grain Act
Marketing, 346, 377, 383, 438
Moisture in grain, 1445
Montreal, handling at, 3371
Northwest Grain Dealers' Association, 277, 297, 379
Overages, 316, 1463, 3181, 3634
Screenings, 3182
Seed Grain Advances, 4498, 4506
Shipments
By American ports, 1975
Freight cars for, 3541
Staples, Mr. W. D., 3260
Supervisors, 439
Surplus fund, 1446
Tests, 1228
Transportation, 999, 2962, 2963, 2984, 3370. See also Canadian National Railways; Canals; Great Lakes-St. Lawrence; Hudson Bay Railway
United Grain Growers' Company. See under this title Grain Growers
Winnipeg laboratory, 1228

Grain Inquiry Commission, 278, 279, 441, 493, 1447, 1674, 2116, 2295, 3417
Counsel, Secretary, cost of, qu. 2625
Remuneration of Commissioners, 3972
Staples, Mr. W. D., qu. 3260
Winnipeg laboratory, 1228
See also Grain and Grain Trade

Grand Etang
Bridge, 3987
Light, 1997

Grand Trunk Arbitration
Board, salary of, qu. 1130

Grand Trunk Arbitration—Con.
Correspondence, 1619
Exchequer Court, Chief Justice, 1084
Expenses, 4335
Extension of time, 1498
Newcombe, Mr. E. F., qu. 1002
Obligations under agreement, 2030
Pensions, qu. 964
Progress of, 3321
Revival, 4436
Subsequent correspondence tabled, 3738
Taft, Hon. W. H., 4158
Tilley, Mr. W. N., K.C., qu. 1001
White, Sir Thomas, 464, 1294

Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill
1r., 2247; M. for 2r., 2346; 2r., 2445; com., 2450, 2560; 3r., 2566; Senate amdts. 2977, 2821
Agreement to revive and continue Arbitration to be made before May 16, 1921, 2474
Extension of time, 2450
Immediate possession and control, 2248
Letter of Messrs. Kelley and Phippen, 2454
Power to continue arbitration, 2248
Powers and duties of arbitrators to continue if Governor in Council extend time, 2476
Preamble, 2450
Request for delay, 2376

Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. See also Canadian National Railways; Grand Trunk
Betterments, 1015
Borrowing, 3291
Cost of, 1614
Deficit, 1005
Equipment, details of, 1015
Improvements, 1018
Loan of $89,687,633.39, 4331
Amended item, 4168, 4288, 4313
Loan of $26,000,000, 4169, 4288, 4334
Mileage, 1005
Operating results, 1014

Grand Trunk Railway
Acquisition of, 3118
Alleged request for assistance, 1498
Amount due by United States Government, 4135
Board of Directors, 4142, 3741
Bonds, issue and sale, qu. 837
Building of, 1584
Coal mines in United States, 4316
Control, qu. 697
Details of expenditure of $25,000,000 advance, 4143
Employees
Pensions, qu. 964

Grand Trunk Railway—Con.
Equipment trust certificates, qu. 604
Estimated cash requirements, 4140
Estimates for, 1864
Guaranteed advances to, 4139
Guaranteed bonds, sale of, qu. 604
Interest, alleged default, 1498
Lines in the United States, 4326
Central Vermont, 4327
Loan of $89,687,633.39, 4131, 4334
Amended item, 4168, 4288, 4313
Details of, 4144
McAdoo award, 4143
Management and details, 1008
Operating charges, qu. 1132
Operating results, 4319
Portland terminus, 1384, 4316-27
Running rights Richmond to Quebec, qu 964
Shareholders
List of, 3320, 3560, 3740
Voluminous return, 3697

Grasshopper Plague, qu. 838, 930, 1027, 3665. Insect Pests. See also Destructive Insect and Pest Act

Graving Dock Company. See Halifax

Grazing
Blood Indian reserve, qu. 1817-19, qu. 2098, 2618, 2374. See also Indians
Leases, 335
Forest reserves, 383

Great Britain. See also Shipping; Trade
American wheat, sale to, 1449
Apple exports to, qu. 1051, qu. 1714
Butter and cheese exports, 1471
Cattle, live, export to, 1474. See also Cattle Embargo
Decline of agriculture in, 3185
Tonnage, disposal of, 1718
Trade agreement with Russia, 1003

Great Lakes
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, and, 1913, 2192, 2969

Great Lakes and St. Lawrence Waterway
Chicago Drainage Canal diversion, 186, 2225
Motion (Mr. Keefer) for Special Com., 674-95, 738
Withdrawn, 757

Great Northern and Lake St. John Railways, 281

Great War Veterans Association, 105, 214
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2855-81. See also that title
Dominion Housing scheme, 4049. See also Housing
Early General election, 455

Greece and Roumania. See also Roumania
Dominion Canners, purchasers from, qu. 1001
Loans to, qu. 1236

Grenville Canal. See Canals

Griesbach, Mr. W. A. (Edmonton West)
Alberta Supreme Court, qu. 576
Canadian National Railways
Provincial liabilities, qu. 2942
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4284-7
Civil Service (Res. Sir Sam Hughes) political patronage; present system preferable; Civil Service Commission; Federal Union No. 66, 825
Disability pensions, qu. 1235
Immigration, 3070
Migratory Birds Convention Act Amdt. Bill, 2891
Military preparations, 2299
Militia staff, 2793
Oil and Gas leases
Bounties, 1387, 1413
Delay in issuing, 2029
Payments under, qu. 734, qu. 673
Surface rights, 579
Prime Ministers' Conference, 2639
Ross Rifle, 2784
Royal Military College, 2805
Y.M.C.A., qu. 1625

Griffenhagen and Associates, 1555, 2781, 2827, 4277, 4465, 4514, 4555. See also Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill; Civil Service, Reorganization, Post Office, Printing Bureau
Employment of, 517, 551, qu. 1821
Officials detailed to assist, qu. 600
Payments to, qu. 4251
Penitentiaries, 1111

Griffin-Boscawen, Sir Arthur, 1156

Gulf of St. Lawrence Navigation Company, 1981

Gutelius, Mr., Intercolonial Railway, 1847

Guthrie, Hon. Hugh (Minister of Militia and Defence and Acting Solicitor General)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 415; divergence between reasons advanced by leader of the Opposition and Mr. Clark (Red Deer) in support of amendment; the fiscal question, 415; trade policy of Great Britain; adverse balance of trade; exchange situation, 416; purchasing from United States; United Grain Growers; tariff, policy of Farmers' party; South York speech; Mr. Rice Jones; statement

Guthrie, Hon. Hugh—Con.
Address—Con.
compared with evidence before Tariff Commission; United Grain Growers machinery almost all from the United States, 418; farmers demand for free implements; millions going out of country; why not buy in Canada; 419; did not say Farmers party a "menace"; tariff; position of Farmers' party, 420; Mr. Drury; the official Opposition; Mr. Gauthier; balance of trade; Canada's indebtedness largely to her own people, 421; Liberal Convention of 1919; tariff plank; Liberal Government was protectionist, 423; the amendment; British and Canadian precedents for Government's continuance in office, 424; who is clamouring for election? 426; by-elections; leader of Opposition represents only remnant of Liberal party, 427; amendment to the amendment (Mr. Campbell) 428; redistribution; rural and urban representation, 429
Air Board, 3776-85
Armistice Day Bill, 3773-5
Armouries for public meetings, 902
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2618, 2909-40, 3143, 4170
French version, 2557
Budget, 3267. Congratulations to Minister on financial showing; former surpluses did not reduce national debt, 3268; Brussels Conference; military expenditure, 3269; comparison of military expenditure by countries, 3271; returned soldiers and military training, 3279
Chief Electoral Officer, reports, 731
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2780
Civil Service classification and bonus, 2237
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 4270
Corrupt Practices at Elections Bill, 1126, 2036
De Martigny divorce, 3771, 4203
Demobilization, 2286
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition Plebiscite) 244, 259, 303
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill 2775, 2944, 3091, 4228-48
Advance polls, 3099
Amendments to writs, 3100
Certificate to women voters, 3111
Disqualified voters, 3099
Election officers, disqualification, 4245
Foreign-born wives and children of British subjects, 3109, 4233

Guthrie, Hon. Hugh—Con.
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill—Con.
Naturalization—certificate of qualification
Amdt. (Mr. Euler) 4233
New forms, 3100
Nomination and polling day, 3096
Nomination paper, 4246
"Personally naturalized," 4244
Polls, hours of, 3095
Qualified voters, 3096
Recount, 3097
Returning officers' report, 3098
Revising officers, 3091, 3101
Voters, identification of, 3093
Franchise Act—foreign agitators and elections, 903
Judges' Act Amdt. Bill, 2118
Military expenditure, 2301, 3269, 3551
Military Service Act, claim for services, 2807
Militia
Annual drill, 2294
Cadet services, 2296
Command pay, 2290
Employees, increase in number of, 2014
Employment of women, 2286
Estimates, 2234-46, 2275-2310, 2781
Permanent Force, 2239, 2788
Purchasing Commission, 2239
Record Office, 2280
Sale of supplies, 2244-5
Staff, 2787-95
North American Trust Company, 1094, 1129
Pensions
Deduction from pay of Permanent Force, 2236, 2275
South African, 2278
Polish battalion for service in French army, 4052
Post Office Act Amdt. Bill, 2120-25
Quebec citadel, 1442
Fortifications, 968
Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 4261
Ross rifle, 2783
Royal Canadian Mounted Police, strength, 2800
Royal Military College, 2802
Soldiers' pensions, insurance and re-establishment, 4052
Tapley, W. H., case of, 972
Winding-up Act Amdt. Bill, 2158

Halbert, Mr. Robert H. (North Ontario)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 500; criticisms of Farmers' party; Colchester and East Elgin; election demanded by people; by-elections, 501; redistribution; great issues at stake; farmers' part in national development; unity and agreement as to national ideals, 502; equal rights to all; protection and class privilege, 503
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act Amdt. Bill, 2485

Half Island Cove, breakwater, 3981

Halifax
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, registration of vessels, 1720
Dockyards, 4017-36
Explosion, 1699
Fisheries award, qu. 2191
Graving Dock Company, qu. 567, 1690, 1698, 1861. See also Drydocks; Shipbuilding
Harbour, government ships at, 1940
Naval College, 4010
Newspapers and merchant marine, 1705, 1706, 1928
Ocean terminals, 1017
Quarantine station, 2754
Roy Building, qu. 3089
Shipbuilding at, 1689, 1921. See also Shipbuilding
Shipyards. See Shipbuilding

Hall Engineering Company, qu. 695

Halladay, Mr. H. H. (Bow River)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 334; congratulations to Prime Minister; the amendment; mandate of the Government; election; the ins and outs; redistribution; Grain Commission, 334; price of wheat; the cattle industry; grazing leases, 335
Canadian Northern Railway, Hanna-Calgary line, 3048
Destruction of documents, qu. 604
Immigration, 2590

Halladay, Mr., Canada Cycle and Motor Company, address, 1227

Hamilton-Brantford Highway. See Highways

Hanna, Mr. D. B., 381, 1191, 1609, 1658, 1774, 1801, 1852, 3051, 3406, 3499, 4315, 4328. See also Canadian National Railways
Business interests, 3610

Hansard. See House of Commons, Debates

Hanson, Mr. R. B., and York-Sunbury election, 3639. See also York-Sunbury

Harbours. See Canada Shipping Act. For Individual harbours, see their titles

Harbours and Rivers, 3973-82, 4097, 4536
Estimates, amdt (Mr. Pardee) 3979
Manitoba, 3975
Nova Scotia, 3959
Ontario, 3973
Prince Edward Island, 3990
Quebec, 3991

Harding, Mr. R. T., payments to Judges, qu. 1500

Harling, Mr. Thomas, 1981

Harold, Mr. John (Brant)
Binder twine fibre, 3746, 3756, 3505
Budget, 3500. Canada's financial position; manufacturing industries, 3501; tariff problems, protection and free trade, 3502; manufacturers' profits, 3503; tax upon profits, 3504; customs tariff, binder twine, 3505
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Express parcels, 4400
Impediment to business, 4400
Invoice certificate, fee, 4399
Trade agents, 4399
Proportional representation, 1544
Sales tax, 3754

Harrison, Mr. Charles R. (Nipissing)
Address in reply to Governor General's speech, 230; Grand Trunk strike in 1910, 230; the tariff; effect of Opposition policy on wage-earner; United States industries in Canada; unemployment, insurance and old age pensions, 231; what Government has done for labour; the Mathers Commission, 232
Canadian Northern Railway
Salaried officials, qu. 2942
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill
Railwaymen's expenses while absent from home, 4352

Harrow Tobacco Station, 1076

Hawkins, Dr. Charles, and immigration, 3068

Hay, Mr. Thomas (Selkirk)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 393; congratulations to Prime Minister; no great demand for election; side-stepping of Opposition, 393; tariff; office seekers and usurpers; the home market, 394; the grain trade; commission of inquiry; old age pensions and unemployment insurance; Prime Minister should carry on, 396
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4242
Disfranchising, 3112

Hay, Mr. Thomas—Con.
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill—Con.
Naturalization—certificate of qualification
Amdt. 4242; agreed to, 4245
Hog cholera, compensation, 1065
Hudson Bay Railway, Amdt. 994
Imaginary letters, point of order, 3173
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3883

Hay and Straw Inspection. See Inspection and Sale Act

Hayter, Mr., auditor, 1668

Head Tax. See Chinese Immigration

Health. See also Immigration; Opium and Narcotic Drugs; Quarantine
Adulteration of food, 3129
Estimates, 2940-3127
Minister's statement, 3127
Medical inspection of immigrants, qu. 573 3128
Opium and Drug Act Amdt, convictions under, 3134
Quarantine stations, 3128
Report of, 1852
Research, 4464-78
Salaries, etc., 3127
Sick mariners, 3129, 3155
Smallpox on Scandinavian, 1498, 1556
Typhus in Europe, 643, 4534

Health of Animals, 926, 1048, 4506-13. See also Agriculture; Cattle Embargo; Live Stock
Accredited herd, 4506-13
Alderson, Mr. G. B., claim of. See that title
Compensation for slaughtered cattle, 1061
Glanders outbreak in Frontenac, 926
Hog cholera, 1050-9. See also Alderson
Increase in amount of item, 1064
Indemnity for diseased herds, 1048
Motions (Mr. Sutherland)
To reduce item, 1068
To strike out item, 4513
Tuberculosis, 4506-13
Veterinary system, 1058, 4508-13. See also Alderson

Hearst Publications, 4170

Heating. See House of Commons, Chamber

Henders, Mr. Richard C. (Macdonald)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 272; protection of agriculture; tariff changes in the United States; the tariff, 273; the Government's mandate, issues of the election of 1917, 274; record of the Government; important measures passed, 275; the "want Henders, Mr. Richard C.—Con.

Address—Con.
of confidence" cry; no popular demand for an election; no charges of maladministration or corruption; progressive legislation, 276; Canadian Wheat Board; Grain Exchange; Northwest Grain Dealers' Association, 277; uniform price quotations; elevators; profits; overages, screenings; enquiry suggested, 279
Agricultural machinery, standardization of parts, 669; Amdt. 670
Binder twine, 3748
Butter and oleomargarine, 3748
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2868-83
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4232
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4187
Wheat Board, 1454

Hepburn, Mr. W. B. R. (Prince Edward)
Dairy Produce Grading Bill, 4441

Hewitt, Dr. Gordon, the late, 1030

Hickman, Mr., alleged deportation of, qu. 575

Hides
Inspection, 1437
Prices of, 3317, 3370, 3491, 3667. See also Budget Speeches

High Commissioner in London, 2437

High Cost of Living. See also Address; Budget; Civil Service Retirement; Customs and Excise
Superannuated civil servants, 2491, 4275.

Highland Regiments. See Militia

Highways
Alberta, grants to, qu. 1821
Canada Highways Act, administration of, 4289
Approval of projects in Ontario, qu. 1237
Grants, qu. 567, qu. 2098
Commissioner, Mr. A. W. Campbell, 3023-4289
Expenditure, 2555
Good Roads Convention, 4300
Manitoba, proposed, 4308
Metapedia valley, qu. 2505
New Brunswick, approved, 4306
Nova Scotia
Approved and applied for, 4307
Highways Board, 4304
Ontario
Approved, 4295
Biggs, Hon. F. C., 4290, 4448
"Charge of the Road Brigade," 4300
Dundas Street, qu. 4252, 4299

Highways—Con.
Ontario—Con.
Dundas-Waterloo, 4298
Expenditure, 4289
Extravagance, charges of, 4304
Hamilton-Brantford, qu. 3582, 3904, 4252-3, 4290
Hamilton-Dundas, 4290
Hamilton-Kitchener, 4292
Hogarth, Mr., 4298
London-St. Thomas, 4307
London-Stratford-Sarnia, 4307
Maclean, Mr., 4298
Peel and Halton, qu. 4252
Price paid for expropriated land, 4291
Purchase of trucks, 4292
Relevancy of discussion, 4293-6
"The Roads that Biggs Built," 4302
Toronto-Guelph-Sarnia, etc., qu. 4252
Toronto-Kingston, 4306
Town of Dundas, 4298
Wages, 4291
Warren Paving Company, qu. 4252; 4291
Ottawa-Point Fortune, 4306
Overhead charges, qu. 4252
Prince Edward Island, aid to, qu. 2345
Projected roads, 3025
Quebec
Approval of, qu. 2098
Federal aid to, qu. 2344, 2375
Hull-Montreal highway, 3029, 4306
Hull-Wakefield highway, 3033-34
Lachine bridge, 4308
La Salle, repairing road in, 4313, 4333
Montreal-Sherbrooke, 4305
Quebec-St. Joachim-St. Simeon, 4313
Rougemont-St. Hyacinthe, 4305
St. Hyacinthe-Richmond, 4305
Saskatchewan, approved, 4307
Grants to, qu. 1820
Statement of highways under agreement or consideration, 4309
Width of, 4306

Hillsboro river dredging, 3984

Historical Publications, Board of, 2947

Hobson, Mr. Robert, 1609-10, 3407, 3610. See also Canadian National Railways

Hocken, Mr. H. C. (West Toronto)
Chief Justice, salary of, 1565
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2859-66
Copyright Amdt. and Consolidation Bill, 3844-50
De Martigny divorce, 4006-8
Fraser, Mr. Roy, and Civil Service Commission, 2860-8
Fuel Supply Problem, 1261

Hocken, Mr. H. C.—Con.
Housing, 1134, 1136, 1857
Judges Act Amdt. Bill, 1565
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4209-18
Parliament Buildings, book on, inquiry, 1175
Printing Bureau employees, qu. 1234
Quebec riots, 1510
Toronto post office, promotions, qu. 1673
Unemployment and immigration, 1378
Wednesday evening adjournments, 1838

Hog Cholera. See Health of Animals; Alderson

Holt, Sir Herbert, and shipbuilding, 1900

Home Brewing, 3788

Homesteads. See Dominion Lands

Hooper, Mr. Ronald, 1539. See also Proportional Representation

Horses. See also Live Stock
Blood Indian reserve, qu. 1817-19
Diseased. See Health of Animals
Docking of, 3922
Purchase of by British Remount Commission, qu. 4341

Hospitals
Alcohol, use of by, 3726. See also Inland Revenue
Marine. See Health

House of Commons. See also Deputy Speaker; Speaker
Adjournment to discuss matter of public importance, 4106
Adjournments
Ascension Day, 2688, 2941, 2998-3000
Easter, 1002
Victoria Day, 3531, 3698, 3738
Audibility of debates, 1625, 2252, 2269, 2385, 2892, 2941, 2989, 3998-4000, 4307, 4381, 4489
Bills
Introduction by consent, 2247
Private
Extension of time, 1625
Placed on order paper same day as reported, 3971
Procedure, 1128
Suspension of rule, 3582, 3715
Reported by Standing Com., 3761
Second reading by consent, 2889
Senate, delay in 1r., 1619
Business of the House
Alleged desire to hasten prorogation, 4068
British Practice to announce, 1026

House of Commons—Con.
Business of the House—Con.
Closure. See that title
Complaint of undue haste, 4068, 4449
Definite statement necessary, 1025
Division after a recess, 1383
For to-morrow, definite statement, 1025
Government, 1318, 1384, 2148
Legislation pending 2150, 2818-9, 4068
Mondays and Fridays, 1830, 1845
Government business, 2148
Order of, return incomplete, 2250, 2270
Progress of, 1842
Public Bills and Orders, 2819
Restriction of discussion, 1318
Rule 17C—Estimates on Thursdays and Fridays. See under this title Estimates
Saturday, on, 2777
Suspension of Rule, 103, 3582
To-morrow, for, 1025, 2148
By-elections, 217. See also under this title Vacancies
Dates, 903
East Elgin, 1293
Medicine Hat, 1174, 1293, 2151
Peterborough, 504
Yamaska, 4534, 4572-6. See also that title
York-Sunbury, 2151. See also that title
Chamber, temperature of, 1071
Closure. See that title
Committees, Select Standing, 3, 107, 303, 2776. For proceedings and reports, see titles of the several Committees
Liberty to sit during sessions of the House, 4338-40
Powers of, 110
Correspondence, unsigned, 2175
Debate, motion to adjourn by member closing discussion, 999
Debates, Official Report of,
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, errors in, 1697-8
Changes and corrections in 3716
Crerar, Hon. Mr., 3628
Documents not read, insertion of, 4308. See also Deputy Speaker; Speaker
Distribution of, M. (Mr. Prevost) 2220
French speeches, translation of, M. (Mr. Archambault) 698; agreed to, 702
Motion in different form from Votes and Proceedings, 1130
Owens, the late Thomas P., Editor, 258, 430
Speaker's Chair, address to be printed in, 3696
Staff—strain of long sittings, 2887
Decorum, conversation, 528. See also Deputy Speaker; Speaker

House of Commons—Con.
Divisions
Address, Amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) non-confidence, neg. 561
Budget, Amdt. (Mr. Fielding) neg. 3686-7
Canadian National Railways
Management, Information—M. (Mr. Mackenzie King) neg. 1215
Special Com., reference to M. (Mr. Meighen); Amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) neg. 1810; Main motion agreed to as amended, 1814
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill
Amdt. (Mr. Maclean, Halifax)—six months' hoist, neg. 2886
De Martigny Divorce Bill
M. (Mr. Stein) agreed to, 4107
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Mr. Guthrie)
Amdt. to 3r. (Mr. Euler) neg. 4249
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill
Amdt. to 3r. (Mr. Pardee)—six months' hoist, neg. 4226
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill
Amdt. (Mr. Denis) 3886—six months' hoist, neg. 3886
Prime Ministers' Conference
Amdt. (Mr. Mackenzie King) neg. 2679
Reciprocity—Amdt. to Supply (Mr. Fielding) neg. 2075
Representation in Parliament Amdt. (Mr. King) neg. 1329
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Mr. McMaster) 665
Estimates. See aslo that title
Method of voting, 4033, 4117, 4569
Post Office, late date of submission, 4531
Rule 17C—Thursdays and Fridays, 958, 1004, 1073, 1215, 1217, 1385, 1682, 2103-4, 2887, 3001, 4544
Effect of passage of Interim Supply Bill, 2103, 2105
Right to call department when in Com. of Supply, 2888
Supplementary, inquiry, 4070
Imaginary letters, 3172. See also that title
Indemnity of Members, 4450-52
Internal Economy Commission, 3
Members
Attendance of, 1829, 1832, 1838
Deceased, tributes to
Gladu, the late Mr. Joseph E. O. (Yamaska) 3, 153, 292, 430
McLeod, the late Col. H. F. (York-Sunbury) 4, 153
Sifton, the late Right Hon. Arthur (Medicine Hat) 3, 153

House of Commons—Con.
Members—Con.
Deceased—Con.
Wallace, the late Mr. Thomas G. (West York) 152
Money resolutions, and, 1135
New
Election and introduction
Gordon, Mr., 258
MacKelvie, Mr., 1
McCurdy, Hon. Mr., 1
McDermand, Mr., 1
Wigmore, Hon. Mr., 1
Non-attendance on Mondays and Fridays, 1832-8
Resignation of. See also Representation in Parliament
Ames, Sir Herbert, 1001. See also that title
Maharg, Mr., 4340
Rowell, Hon. Mr., 4340
White, Sir Thomas, 1619. See also that title
Ministers to sit in either Chamber. See Ministers
Motions
For returns in general terms, 1555
Notices of sent in Advance, 1307
Pairs, correction of list, 563. See also under this title Divisions
Parliamentary Restaurant. See that title
Privilege
Archambault—Société des Artisans, 230
Clark, Mr., (Red Deer)—Address, incorrect report in Ottawa Citizen, 448
Denis, Mr.,—Immigration, misinterpretation of speech by Quebec newspapers, 3088
Desaulniers, Mr.
Correction, Montreal Gazette, 644
Name omitted from division list, 4255
Edwards, Mr.,—representation of Maisonneuve-Gaspé, 2247, 2310
Kay, Mr.,—Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, vote on, 3971
Lapointe, Mr.
Alleged statement of Mr. Davidson regarding Liberal leadership, 2443
Correction of report in Ottawa Journal, 477
Explanation of remarks on Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4543
National Catholic Unions, 3584
Meighen, Right Hon.,—York-Sunbury election, Hon. Mr. Veniot, 3716
Pedlow, Mr.,—Amendment incorrectly printed in Votes and Proceedings, 737

House of Commons—Con.
Privilege—Con.
Power, Mr.,—Withdrawal from Special Committee, Returned Soldiers, 789
Robb, Mr.,—Quebec bloc, 3261
Turgeon, Mr.,—Hon. Mr. Veniot, 3740
Wilson, Mr., (Wentworth)—Challenge to Hon. F. C. Biggs, 4448
Questions
Inquiry as to, 2943
Not answered, 1621, 1502
Returns
Alleged disobedience or neglect of order, 3320
Alleged imperfect, 2250-70
Inquiry for, 1176, 1499, 1502, 2688, 2775, 2777, 3008, 3320, 4255
Motions for in general terms, 1555
Reason for delay, 1555
Rules
Suspension of, 3582, 3715
Bills, first reading, 3716
17C. See under this title Estimates
Sergeant-at-Arms; Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms, 3
Sittings
Attendance at, 1844. See also under this title Wednesday evening
Duration of, 1330, 1828, 2438, 2736, 2750, 2772, 2887, 2998, 3000, 3900, 4169, 4420, 4449, 4531
All night
Government shipbuilding programme, 1858-2026
Saturday, 2777, 2818, 2941, 4338-40
Two o'clock, 2941, 3737
Wednesday
Two o'clock, 447
Evening, 1002, 1174, 1384
M. (Mr. Fielding) 1828; withdrawn, 1845
Staff
Law Branch, changes, 2685
Long sittings, 2887
Organization and compensation, 2441, 2685
Retirement Act, 4266-78. See Civil Service Retirement Act
Women workers, 4547
Supply. See also that title
Interim—Redlich, authority on, 1675
Procedure, 1215
Thursdays and Fridays—Rule 17C
See under this title, Estimates
Vacancies. See also under this title By-elections
Filling of, 1293. See Representation in Parliament

House of Commons—Con.
Vacancies—Con.
Leeds, 1293, 1619. See also White, Sir Thomas
Medicine Hat, 478, 1174, 1293
St. Antoine, 1001, 1069, 1293. See also Ames
Yale, 1
Yamaska, 478, 643, 1293. See aslo that title
York-Sunbury, 478,643, 1293
York, West, 478, 643, 1293
Writs, 643

House of Lords. See Ministers

Housing, 4362-8. See aslo Labour; Returned Soldiers; Unemployment
Dominion Housing scheme, 4049
Loan to provincial governments, 4552
Proposed establishment of a Federal Housing Board
M. (Mr. Hocken) 1134, 1152
M. as amended withdrawn, 1857

Howard, Mr. See Purchasing Commission

Hudson Bay Railway, 330, 538, 1578, 1961, 1966, 2969-80. See also Canals
Early resumption and completion, M. (Mr. Campbell) 974
Amdt. (Mr. Hay) 994; agreed to, 999
M. (Mr. Campbell) as amended, withdrawn, 1852-6
Expenditure actual and estimated, qu. 2623
Fort Churchill, 1966
Port Nelson, 1966
Selection of lands, qu. 672

Hudson, Hon. A. B., 4184-4213

Hughes, Hon. Sir Sam (Victoria)
Civil Service—Res.—Political Patronage in; fads and freaks, 789; uplifters; Outside Service; Civil Service Commission; Inside Service; Committee to investigate, 790; trust and mistrust; autocracy, 791

Hungry Bay road, 1661

Hunter, Dr. Andrew, fox-breeding, 1428

Hydro-Electric Power. See Fuel Supply Problem; Great Lakes-St. Lawrence

Hyndman, Judge, and Grain Inquiry Commission, 1674

Icebreakers, 1979
"Lake Champlain", 2174
"Montcalm", 1985
New, 1994
Thunder Bay, at, 2174

Ice-cream, tax, 3737, 3956

Iles aux Grues-Montmagny mail service 4529

Illegal Practices. See Corrupt Practices at Elections Bill

Illicit Still, innocent manufacture of part, 3788-3820

Imaginary Letters
Hon. Mr. Ballantyne, 3174-3209
Mr. McMaster, 3173
Speaker's ruling, 3260

Immaculate Conception, 2626. See also Civil Service, Religious Holidays

Immigration, 269, 3580. See also Canadian Nationals Definition Act; Chinese Immigration; Health; Unemployment
British, Inspector of, 3067
Central European, 2575-85
Chinese, 4131. See also Chinese Immigration
Continuous passage, 2580-6
Co-operation of railways, 4129
Emigration to the United States, 3068
Esmonde, Mr. Osmonde Grattan, arrest for sedition, 1556
Exhibitions, 3067, 4129-31
Expenditure, qu. 2943
German and Austrian, 3206
Halifax Quarantine Station, 2754
"Hand picking" of immigrants, 3203
Head tax, 3056
Hickman, alleged deportation of, qu. 574
Immigrants rejected, qu. 1624
Infection, danger of, qu. 272
Inspectors, 3067
Land settlement policy, 2581, 2588-9
Liberal administration, under, 3245
Loss of in Western Canada, 3373-4
Medical inspection of immigrants, 3128
Medical offices at ports of departure, 3132
Mental defectives, of, 3055, 3583
Money qualification, 2579-85
Nationality of, 3071
Oriental, 2584-94, 2595. See also Chinese Immigration
Partridge Island Quarantine station, 2808-15
Policy, 850, 861, 872, 879, 3205, 3249, 3256, 3580
Polish immigrants rejected, qu. 964
Restriction of, 507, 1127, 2568-77, 2585
Statistics, 3071-3073
Suspension of. See Unemployment
Typhus fever, precautions, 643, 4534
Western Canada Colonization Association, 2583

Immigration Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 3007; 2r., com., 3822; 3r., 3955; Senate amdts. 4343

Immigration Act Amdt. Bill—Con.
Subjects and Sections discussed:
Bill of health, 3824
Costs of appeal, 3823
Deportation after five years—cost, 3827
Hearing of cases, 3823
Investigation of complaints—deportation—cost, 3826
Landing of passengers, 3824
Medical examination, 3824
Non-immigrant classes, 3822
Possessing prescribed amount of money, 3825
Powers of Board exercised by officers in charge, 3823

Immigration Act Amdt. Bill (Deportation of Undesirables)
1r., 1497; order for 2r., stands, 1858. See above Bill

Immigration and Colonization
Department
Contingencies and general expenses, 4127
Deputy Minister, 3057
Estimates, 2568
Contingencies, 4131
Postponement of consideration, 3077
Quebec, officers at, qu. 1131
Salaries, 2568-2602, 3055, 3068

Imperial Bureau of Entomology, 1025

Imperial Conference, 526, qu. 564, 1073. See also Prime Ministers' Conference

Imperial Defence, 228, 270. See also Prime Ministers' Conference
Committee on, 2637-49

Imperial Federation, 159, 2423. See also Prime Ministers' Conference

Imperial Institute, 4499

Imperial Mineral Resources Bureau, 2164, 4498

Imperial Munitions Board, 1284. See Research
Shipbuilding, and, 1730, 1859, 1875

Imperial Oil Company, 3206. See also Oil; Petroleum Bounties

Imperial Relations, 247, 484, 519. See also Prime Ministers' Conference

Imperial War Conference, 1917, 2389
Res. 2626-36-48. See also Prime Ministers' Conference

Implement Manufacturers, 91. See also Agricultural implements

Imported Goods, Marking of, 3120, 3938. See also Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt Bill

Imports. See also Budget; Customs; Trade
Foreign, value of, 3310
For home consumption, 1920, qu. 602
From Germany, qu. 838
From United States, 3409
German goods, holdback, qu. 1350
Invoice Certificates. See Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Marking. See Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt. Bill

Income Tax, 98, 402, 3229, qu. 3260, 3422. See also Budget; Taxation; Ways and Means
Canada and Great Britain, in, 3486
Chief Justice and. See Judges Act Amdt. Bill
Corporations, on, 3262
Exemptions, 1567
Forms, inquiry, 1176
Regulations, 1272
Returns, difficulty of making up, 3147

Income Tax Act Consolidation Bill, 3905
1r., 4251; 2r., com., 4343; 3r., 4355
Subjects and Sections discussed:
Administration, 4533
Direct taxation, 4344
Members' travelling expenses, 4349
Method of self-assessment and payment, 4345
Notice of assessment, 4353
Penalty for failure to file returns, 4343
Penalty for short payment, 4344
Railway men, expenses when absent from home, 4352
Salaries and indemnities of provincial ministers, 4351
Tax upon tax, 4349
Victory bonds, taxation of, 4353

Indemnity of Members. See House of Commons

Independence of Judges. See Judges Act Amdt. Bill

Independence of Parliament. See Representation in Parliament

Indian Affairs

Department of
Estimates, 2167, 2171, 4501

Indian Ford, 1055

Indians
Blood Reserve
Grazing leases, qu. 1817, 1818, 1819, 2098

Indians—Con.
Blood Reserve—Con.
Live stock, starvation of, qu. 2618
Sale of cattle, qu. 2374-5
Commissioner at Regina, qu. 964
Muscowegan reserve, 2171
New Brunswick, 4501
Prince Edward Island, 4505
Riding Mountain reserve, 2172
Sheridan, Mr. John, resignation and reinstatement, 2173, 2618, 4501-5
"Shows" for distinguished visitors, 2169
Tobique reserve—timber cut, 4503
Women, 3907

Indirect Taxation. See Taxation

Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 4549

Industrial and Scientific Research. See Research

Industrial Councils. See Labour

Industrial Production. See Fuel Supply Problem

Industrial Property, International Convention for protection of, 230

Industrial Research Commission, Alberta, 1267

Ingonish-MacLeod's Breakwater, 4087

Inland and Coastwise Shipping Rates, 1497, qu. 2192, 2969. See also Railway Act Amdt. Bill

Inland Navigation, qu. 2192. See also Great Lakes-St. Lawrence

Inland Revenue. See also Customs and Excise Dept.; Customs Tariff

Inland Revenue Department. See also Customs and Excise Dept.; Customs Tariff Excise taxes on tobacco, qu. 1236
Montreal officers, qu. 1820
St. Hyacinthe—Dr. Cartier, 3821, qu. 3904

Inland Revenue Act Amdt. Bill. (Forfeitures and Penalties—Mr. Archambault)
1r., 2247

Inland Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Res. 3726; 1r., 3733; 2r., com., 3r., 3955
Subjects and Sections discussed.
Beer containers—marking, 3786
Illicit stills, 3786-3820
Increased jurisdiction in proceeding in summary convictions, 3786
Liquor, tax on, 3708
Tobacco and cigars—unlawful sale, 3786

Inquiry for Returns, House of Commons. See Returns

Insecticides, 1027

Insect Pests, 930, 1024, 3665. See also Destructive Insect and Pest Act; Entomology; Grasshoppers

Inspection and Sale Act
Administration, 1437

Inspection and Sale Act Amdt. Bills
Berry Boxes, 4106, 4114
Hay and Straw. 1r., 3319-20; 2r., com., 3r., 3759
Root vegetables, 4343

Inspection of Animals. See Cattle Embargo; Health of Animals

Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill
1r., 351; 2r., 607; 3r., 2944

"Insular" Tribunal of England, 1090

Insurance. See also Fire Insurance; Returned Soldiers; Unemployment
Canadian, in foreign firms, 3469
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 1278
Officers and seamen, 4359
Canadian National Railways, 1772
Fire, 3469
Fort Garry Hotel, Winnipeg, qu. 1348
La Société des Artisans Canadiens Français, 82
Marine, 1703. See also Shipbuilding
Registered mail matter, 2120-24
Registered parcels. See Post Office Act Amdt. Bill
Returned Soldiers, 4041. See that title; also Pensions
Returned Soldiers Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 4260, 4355. See also that title
Sickness, 2554
Taxation of Mutual Companies, qu. 605
Unemployment. See that title

Insurance Act
Proposed amendments, inquiry, 2625
M. for res. 4339; withdrawn, 4453

Insurance Conference, 3088

Intercolonial Railway. See that title under Canadian National Railways

Interim Supply. See also Supply
Closure. See that title
Debate postponed, 1682
Former votes, of, 1681
Motion withdrawn, 1683
Point of Order—Res. to be preceded by notice, 1676

Interim Supply Bill. See also Appropriation Acts
Res. 1674; objected to, 1674; notice, Rule 17B, unanimous consent, 1676-82; withdrawn, 1683; Res. 2001; Amdt. (Mr. Lemieux) 2018-20; closure, notice of under Rule 17B, 2025-6
1r., 2095; 2r., com., 2100; 3r., 2116

Interior Department
Draughtsmen, 1334
Minister, necessity for presence in Commons, 1155
Salaries, 1330
Surveys Branch, 1332
Surveyor General, 1342

International Association of Railways Congress, 3023

International Boundary Commission, 1342, 4494
Joint report, 4340

International Commission, Fraser River, 2189

International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, adherence to, 230

International Customs Tariff Bureau, 1437

International Financial Conference. See Brussels

International Harvester Company, 3394. See also Agricultural machinery

International Institute of Agriculture, 1116

International Joint Commission, 164, 2388, 2421, 2435. See also Great Lakes-St. Lawrence; Lake of the Woods
Appointment of Sir William Hearst, 510
Lake of the Woods Control, 1071, 1176, 1233, 4172
St. Lawrence waterway, 691, 3960-70

International Justice. See Permanent Court

International Labour Conference, 544. See also Labour

International Labour Union. See Labour, National Catholic Unions

International Trade Conference, qu. 2029. See Trade

"Internationale," dredge, qu. 2192, qu. 2506

Inventors. See Patent Act Amdt. Bill

Inverness
Fishery overseers, 2178
Harbour, 3985
Public building, 2817

Invoice Certificates. See Customs and Excise Dept. Bill

Ioco, wharf, 3979

Ireland, Parliament for South of, qu. 603

Iron and Steel Industry
Development of, 873-4. See also Natural Resources; Steel

Irrigation. See also Natural Resources
Belly river water rights, qu. 2943
Milk river water rights, qu. 2099
Southern Alberta and Saskatchewan, 858

Isaac, Mr. See French Trade Agreement

Italy
Cargoes of wine from, 1715
Lira, exchange value of, 3816-4227
Trade with. See Customs and Excise Dept. Bill

Jacobs, Mr. S. W. (George Etienne Cartier)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 503; congratulations to Prime Minister; by-election in Peterborough, 504; National Liberal and Conservative party; Mr. Bourassa, 505; Mr. R. B. Bennett; Government saturated with war spirit, 506; shipbuilding; immigration; restrictive loans and regulations, 507; railways and public ownership; Department of Trade and Commerce, 508; Departments not directly represented in House; military expenditures, 509; Royal Commission to investigate grain trade; conciliatory overtures to Quebec; appointments that violate the traditions, 510
Agriculture Dept.—Salary of Deputy Minister, 950
Air Board, 3780-3
Alpine Club, 4494
American immigration, 3065
Ames, Sir Herbert, resignation, 1327
Animal Contagious Diseases, 1048
Armistice Day Bill, 3773
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill (Mr. Jacobs)—French Version, 1069, 2256
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill (Mr. Guthrie) 2910-39, 3144
Bankruptcy Act, Judges under, 1085
British Remount Commission, qu. 4341
Canada Temperance Act
Damages, 4387
Invasion of the province of the courts, 4379
Proceedings pending, 4378
Canadian Bar Association, 1094
Canadian Forestry Association, 4494

Jacobs, Mr. S. W.—Con.
Canadian National Railways, Special Com., reference M. (Mr. Meighen) 1785
Cattle embargo, 1072
Chief Justice, salary of, 1568
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3896-8, 3906-30, 4342
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Commissioner, 4388
Reflections on legal profession, 4406
Trade commissioners, 4406
De Martigny divorce, 3763
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill
Foreign-born wives of British subjects, 3105
Esmonde, Mr. Osmonde Grattan, 1556
Foundation Company of Montreal, payments to, qu. 4341
Fox-farming, 1433
Governor General's cars, 3037
Grand Trunk Arbitration expenses, 4335
Grand Trunk loan, 4158
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 749
Immigration, 2574-92, 3055
Exhibit decorator, 3066
Officials, 3057
Juvenile delinquents—spanking, 3918
League of Nations, contribution to, 2357-69
Liquor, tax on, 3708
Maisonneuve and Gaspé, representation, 1325, 2333
Medicinal preparations, 3709
Militia, cadet services, 2297
National Transcontinental, Winnipeg-Quebec service, 2513
Natural Research Institute, 2894
"Niobe" and "Rainbow", sale, 4018-31
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3880-2
Opium and Narcotic Drugs Act Amdt. Bill, 2898-2905
Amdt. to amdt., 2903
Parliament buildings, 4075
Patent Act Amdt. Bill, 4456
Penitentiaries, 1092
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2709-35
Permanent Force, 2278
Private Bills—extension of time, 1625
Quarantine, typhus, 4170
Representation in Parliament, 1327
Roumanian loan, interest, 1441, 2030
Supreme Court and Privy Council appeals, 1089-1090
Tariff revision, qu. 903, 2346
Trade commissioners, 1219, 1465
Trent canal, 2607
Unemployment and immigration, 1358
Wines—British colonies, 3710

James MacLaren Company, Limited. See Private Bills Discussed

Jameson, Mr. Clarence, 799. See also Civil Service

Japan
Foreign credit, balance of, 1227-8

Johnston, Mr. Alex., 1280
Reappointment, 644

Johnston, Mr. J. Fred. (Last Mountain)
Address, 437. Congratulations to Prime Minister, 437; Canadian Wheat Board; statement of Minister of Immigration at Regina; attitude of Progressives, 438; definite stand taken on "enabling legislation", the farmers and wheat control; report of grain supervisors, 439; objections to Wheat Board, 440; scarcity of cars; increase in freight rates; commission to investigate grain trade; Board of Commerce, 441; Mr. G. M. Murray and the press, 442; the West anxious for an election, 444
Agricultural shows, 1245
Budget, 3550. Military expenditures; shifting of taxation, 3551; tariff revision, 3552; Government policy of moderate protection, 3553; agriculture, area and revenue, 3553; Soldier Settlement Board, operations, 3554; natural resources of prairie provinces, 3555; Ambassador to Washington, 3556; Farmers' party, 3556
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4469-72
Cow-testing, 1037
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4241
Naturalization—Certificate of qualification, 4241
Grain Commission, 1449
Grand Trunk Railway, operating charges, qu. 1132
Immigration, restriction of, 1127
Indian Commissioner at Regina, 2167-9
Live stock breeding, 1117
Muscowegan reserve, 2171
Oil development in Mackenzie district, 2162
Post Office, outside service, 4528
Public Works, expenditures in Saskatchewan, 2818
Reciprocity agreement with United States, 2070
Stayner postmaster, 4470
Wheat Board, 1454

Joliette Bridge, 3038

Jones. See Rice Jones

Judge Snider. See Printing Bureau

Judges. See also Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill; Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, Revising Officers

Judges—Con.
Appointment of, 801, 811, 813
Chandler, Judge, Moncton, 2119
Chief Justice, Supreme Court, exemption of salary, 2188
Exchequer Court, 1083-4
Latchford, Judge, payment to, qu. 1500
Macleod Judicial district, qu. 2344
Number of, 1081
Riddell, Judge, payments to, qu. 1500
Salaries, 3680
Saskatchewan King's Bench, additional Judge, 1559
Travelling expenses, 1559, 2118
Vice-Admiralty, 1084
Wilson, Judge, qu. 1622
Yukon Territory, salaries and living allowance, 1087-8

Judges Act, 1920
Correspondence, M. (Mr. Lemieux) 1851

Judges Act Amdt. Bill
Res. 1559; Amdt. (Mr. Lanctot) neg. 1572; 1r., 1573; 2r., com., 2117; 3r., 2151; Senate amdts. 3009; Free Conference with Senate, 3972; 4040-61; 4250

Judicial Committee. See Privy Council

Judicial Districts, Quebec, 1081-3

June Bugs, 1030

Justice
Administration of, Yukon Territory, 1087
Department
Counsel employed in, 1077, 3523
Legal cases referred to, 1655
Litigated matters, expenses, 1089
Newcombe, Mr. E. F., qu. 1002
Purchasing agent, 1079, 1115, 2017
Salaries, 1076
Taxation forms, revision by, qu. 1237
Law stamps, tax, 1090
Penitentiaries, estimates, 1091, 1096. See also Penitentiaries
Privy Council appeals, 1089. See also that title

Juvenile Courts. See Juvenile Delinquents

Juvenile Delinquents, 3013
Spanking, 3918

Juvenile Delinquents Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 3319; 2r., com., 3r., 3758

Kamouraska, plum-growing, 1048

Kamouraska and Temiscouata Telephone Co., 2175

Kapuskasing Illustration station, 949

Kay, Mr. W. Fred. (Missisquoi)
Camp Grounds, Farnham, Que., qu. 1132
Canada Temperance Act, qu. 4253

Kay, Mr. W. Fred.—Con.
Census enumerators, qu. 735, qu. 1132, 4113
Income tax forms, 1176
Missisquoi
Census enumerators, qu. 735, qu. 1132, 4113
Net fishing in Missisquoi Bay, qu. 570
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3854
Privilege—vote on Oleomargarine Bill, 3971
Special War Revenue Act—condensed milk and ice-cream, 3956
Victoria Day, 3531

Keefer, Mr. Francis H. (Port Arthur and Kenora)
Africa, trade with, 1965
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2925
Canada-West Indies Trade agreement, 2259
Canadian representation in the United States, 2424-6
Canal tolls, 2963
Cattle embargo, 730
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2487-8
Fuel Supply Problem, 1257
Grain transportation rates, 2982
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2479
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, Res. 674, 753
Kingston, wharves and bridges, 3973
Lake of the Woods Control Board Bill, 2346-54
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4184-98
Parliament buildings, 3999
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act Amdt. Bill, 2483-4
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships) 593

Kemp, Hon. Sir Edward (East Toronto)
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships) 590

Kenora
Board of Trade, 4184-6
Dam, 4172

Kennedy, Mr. J. Wilfred (Glengarry and Stormont)
Cattle, embargo, 720
Cattle feeds, 3744
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
New and unused goods, 3814
Grading of cheese, 1037
Hudson Bay Company, selection of land, qu. 672
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3866
Unemployment and immigration, 1372

Kennedy, Mr. W. C. (North Essex)
Budget, 3404; deficit and annual debt; militia expenditures; mercantile marine, 3405; railway situation, 3406; Canadian National Railways, directors, 3407; manufacturers and home and foreign markets, 3408; importations from United States, 3409; amdt. of Mr. Fielding, 3410
Canadian National Railways, Board of Management, qu. 1132
Civil Service bonus, 2111-13
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 684

King, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie (Leader of the Opposition)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 10; congratulations to Prime Minister; usurpation of authority by Government; changes in Ministry; elected as a war administration—has it a mandate?—comparison with former administrations, 12; retirement of ministers principally responsible for Government's war record, 13; aims of present and former administrations different, 15; the tariff, 17; issue excluded in formation of Union Government, 19; no right to legislate without consulting the people; grounds for continuance of Government examined; limitation of parliamentary term, 20; supremacy of Parliament, 22; no pledge given in 1917, 23; withdrawal of Ministers who believed administration had fulfilled its mandate, 24; desire of Leader of Opposition for an election; significance of by-elections, 25; Canada alone in denying to people right of general election, 26; violation of fundamental principles of free government, 28; non-confidence amendment, 28
Air Board, 3782
Ames, Sir Herbert, resignation, 478, 1069, 1295
Archives, provision for, 2949
Arctic expedition, 4106
Armistice Day, 3775
Auditor General's Report, 737, 903, 915
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2909
Budget, 3596. Tariff revision and the Government; tariff inquiry, 3598; Republican party in the United States—barriers to trade between two countries; exchange rate, 3599; comparison of Budget speech and policy and principles of National Liberal and Conservative party, 3600; inter-Imperial trade, 3601; association between interests and Government during war period, 3602; political power united with plutocracy of self-interest, 3603; Board of Commerce—Mr. Murdock, 3604; lack of constructive legislation, 3607; protection of the interests, 3607; expenditure on National Railways and Merchant Marine, 3608; directors of National Railways and business interests, 3609; loans to foreign countries, 3611; Members of Parliament and sales to foreign countries, 3611; Minister of Crown soliciting business from foreign government, 3612; Prime Minister and misrepresentation of attitude of Opposition, 3612; free trade and protective tariffs, 3613; methods of taxation, 3614; downward revision of tariff, 3616; election necessary, 3618

King, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie—Con.
Budget—Con.
Budget, date of, inquiry, 1555, 2151
Business of the House
Estimates—alleged agreement, 4569
For to-morrow, 2145
Interruption of debate on Address, 151
Legislation
Pending, 2150, 2819, 3972
Undue haste, 313
Lengthy discussions, 1230
Monday—Government business, 2148
Order of, 1619
Prorogation, 4069
Sittings
Duration of, 897, 900, 1330, 2887
Saturday, 2818
Wednesday evening, 1002
Supply, procedure, 1216
Victoria Day, 3689
By-elections, dates, 903. See also under this title Representation in Parliament
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 1292
Canadian Nationals Definition Act, Bill, 585, 648
Canadian National Railways
Government-owned railways, correspondence, 1004
Information—attitude of the Government, 1759
Management, 1440
M. that information be laid before Parliament, 1178
Special Committee, reference to
M. (Mr. A. K. Maclean) 1188, 1594; M. (Mr. Meighen) 1758; Amdt. (Mr. King) 1761; Amdt. (Mr. Crerar) 1813

King, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie—Con.
Canadian Representation in the United States, 2378-2429
Chinese Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3828
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2486
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill
Amdt. (Mr. A. K. Maclean) 2844; M. for 2r., 2778
Commission
Annual report, 4477
Jurisdiction of, 4286-8
Returned soldiers, 4258-9
Special Com.
Quorum, 2940
Reference to, 2776
Copyright Amdt. and Consolidation Bill, 2908, 3843-50
Cost of Living, 4551
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3830
Date of summoning Parliament, 311
Daylight saving in Ottawa, 2776
Deceased members, tributes to, 4, 153
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition Plebiscite) 151, 309
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill
Bill not printed, 2944
Certificate of qualification, 3090, 3107-10, 4238-9
Foreign-born wives and children of British subjects, 3090
Forms, 3100
Voters' lists, registration, 3092
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. Bill, 4062-6
Estimates. See also under this head Business of the House, Interim Supply
Committee on, 2207-9
Time of taking up, 1330
French Trade Agreement, 2125
Governor General—address to on retirement, 4434
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill
Agreement of March 8, 1920, 2377
Committee of five, 2479
Legal consequences, 2451
Liquidation, 2451
Position of Opposition on taking over Grand Trunk, 2560
Ratification of new agreement, 2450
Request for delay, 2346
Senate amendments, 2777, 2823
Submission of agreement to Parliament, 2476
House of Commons staff, 2887
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4343
Interim Supply, 1679, 2115
Attitude of Opposition, 2004
Objected to, 1674
Obligations for payment, 2025

King, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie—Con.
Judge Snider's report, 3697, 3761, 3905
Judges Act Amdt. Bill, 2117-18
Kamloops, speech at, 3623
Labour Department
Alleged combines, 4551
Bolshevism—pamphlet, 4548
Fair wages, 4545
Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 4552
Minister—letter of in Gazette, 1643
Lake of the Woods Control Board Bill, 2033
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 3903, 4211-17
League of Nations, contribution towards, 2356
Ministers to sit in either Chamber, 1163
Montreal Harbour Commission Bill, 2159
National Research Institute, 2894. See also Research
Natural resources
Adjournment of debate, 894
Transfer of to western provinces, 2546-52
Nauru Island, phosphate deposits, 4255, 4541
Newsprint, alleged combine, qu. 2099
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 2898-2907
Owens, the late Thomas P., Editor of Debates, 258
Park St. Charles Company, proposed payment, 4573
Peterborough speech, 134
Post Office Act Amdt. Bill, 2123
Press Gallery, 2887
Prime Ministers' Conference, 2631
Amdt. to Supply, 2634-58
Prisons and reformatories, 3011
Privilege—alleged statement of Mr. Davidson regarding Liberal leadership, 2443
Privileges and Elections Committee, 2373
Proportional representation, 1552
Public money, accounting for, 1292
Purchasing Commission, 1099
Statutes
Limiting power, 1101
Providing for tenders, 1105
Representation in Parliament
Vacancies (Amdt. to Supply), 1293, 1300, neg. 1309
By-elections, 1306
Rockefeller Foundation, 2443
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act Amdt. Bill, 2481, 2801
Shipbuilding, 1292

King, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie—Con.
Speaker's Chair, 3693
Supplementary Estimates, inquiry for, 3741
Tariff inquiry, 3055
Tariff revision, 3622-3
Unemployment, 4549
Vacancies, 478. See also under this head Representation
War Times Election Act, 4238
White, Sir Thomas, qu. 477

King's Bench. See Judges Act Amdt. Bill
Judges, 1081

King's Birthday, 4450

King's County, fruit inspectors, 1041

Kingston
Fortifications, 969
Penitentiary. See Penitentiaries
Wharves and bridges, 3973

Kino Hill, silver discovery, 856

Kirkwood Steamship Company, qu. 564

Knox, Mr. Andrew (Prince Albert)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 537; congratulations to Prime Minister; the amendment; Soldiers' Settlement Board; Porcupine Forest Reserve; lack of transportation facilities—freight rates—Hudson Bay Railway, 538; investigation of grain trade; farmers' movement
Budget, 3414. Government has reverted to indirect taxation, 3414; militia expenditures, 3415; expenditures on canals; northern Saskatchewan transportation facilities, 3416; protection and the farmers; grain inquiry, 3417
Canadian National Railways, passenger traffic, Montreal-Winnipeg, qu. 2376
Chinese immigration, 3056
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2855
Cordwood for fuel, 3748
Credits to Roumania and Greece, qu. 1236
Hudson Bay Railways, 538, 982
Immigration, 2589-90
Income tax payers—farmers, qu. 838
Saskatchewan railway lines, 3054
Senate representation—Saskatchewan, 2567
Trent canal, 2608-9, 2958

Kuskanook, wharf, 3979

Labour. See also Building Trades Conference; Housing; Immigration; Industrial Disputes; Shipbuilding; Returned Soldiers; Unemployment
Alleged combines, 4551

Labour—Con.
Bolshevism, pamphlet, 4548
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, wages, 1921
Civil Service, prevailing rates, qu. 3089
Conditions in Great Britain and United States, 408
Discontent and unrest, 3439
Department
Emergency relief, 4535
Employment offices, 2852, 4363
Estimates, 4170, 4535
Draper, Mr. P. M., 1632, 1637
Fair wage clause, 1910, 2955, 4545
Germany, cost in, 4425, 4428
Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 4549-52
International Conference at Washington, 544
Status of Canada, 2629
Unemployment insurance, 4547
Washington and Geneva, conventions and recommendations, 4041
Women workers, 4547
League of Nations, 4547
Manual labourers. See Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill
Mathers Commission, 232
Minister in Senate, criticism of, 1154-5, 1162, 1169, 4544
Moore, Mr. Tom, 1627, 1632, 1636
National Advisory Council, 4363
National Catholic Labour Unions, 1625, 3584
Chicoutimi Convention, 1626
Letter of Minister in Gazette, 1642
Minister of Labour and, 1625
Platform of, 1627
Wright, Mr. A. A., letter of, 1647
National Industrial Conference, 2101, 4549
Railways, and, 1179, 1190, 1587. See also that title
Shipbuilding, Government, 1273, 1727, 1889, 1897, 1902, 1909, 1974
Strikes
Cape Breton in, 3528
Grand Trunk, 230
Number of, qu. 569
Peterborough, 3549
Winnipeg, 3359, 3360, 3560
Trades and Labour Congress, platform of, 1634
Unemployment relief, 4535. See also Unemployment
Wages and prosperity, 3514
Women workers—overtime, 4547

Labour Gazette, 1155

Lachine Canal. See Canals

Ladysmith, wharf, 3980

Lafleche, Col. See Purchasing Commission

Lafortune, Mr. D. A. (Jacques-Cartier)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 292; tribute to late Mr. Gladu; the debate reviewed, 292; Mr. Gauthier, 293; the amendment; Government's mandate executed; Prime Ministers' Conference, 294; Government in danger when it turns to Opposition for help; new name of Government party, 294; change of Government in 1896; issues of the election; promises made and kept; Manitoba school question; St. Lawrence river channel; revising barristers; contracts, men's wages; deficits; Sir Wilfred Laurier; the tariff, 296; reciprocity, 297; things the Liberals will do when returned; Georgian Bay canal; bridge between Vaudreuil and Ste. Anne, 298; will demand accounting; Quebec not isolated but badly represented, 299; widening of Victoria bridge; bridge at Longueuil; tobacco growers, 300; sugar beet industry, 301;
Automobile theft, 3915
Budget, 3669; historical and political review, 3669-70; Mr. Bourassa, 3671; Laurier administration; prosperity of manufacturers and agricultural interests under Liberal Government, 3673; Post Office Department—deficit, 3674; Lachine canal bridge, 3675; immigration of French Canadians to United States, 3675; protection of tobacco growers, 3676; Ville Emard tunnel, 3677; bridge at Ste. Anne's-Vaudreuil, 3677; bridges in Jacques Cartier county; Georgian Bay canal, 3678; Military Service Act, 3678; Liberals returning to Opposition after war, 3679; Judges' salaries, 3680
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3910-32
Lachine canal bridge, 3675, 4308
La Salle—road repair, 4313-33
Perrot Island bridge, qu. 576, qu. 603
Pointe Claire, wharf, 4312
Three Card Monte, 1858

"Lake Champlain", icebreaker, 1985

Lake Freights, 3371. See also Canals; Great Lakes-St. Lawrence; Transportation

Lake of the Woods and Other Waters, 3903. See also Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill

Lake of the Woods Control, International Joint Commission, 1176, 1233

Lake of the Woods Control Board, estimates, 2437

Lake of the Woods Control Board Bill
1r., 788; 2r., com., 2033, 2346, 3r., 2445
Subjects and Sections Discussed:
Board
Creation of, 2033-2346
Immunity from actions, 2355
Powers—enforcement of
By order of court, 2350
By taking possession of property, 2353
Purposes, 2350
Correspondence — International Joint Commission, 1176, 1233
Norman dam, English river, Winnipeg river, 2347
Statement by Prime Minister, 2033

Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill
1r., 3903; 2r., com., 4171; Amdt. (Mr. Pardee), six months' hoist—to 3r., 4226; 3r., 4227
Subjects and Sections Discussed:
Backus, Mr. E. W., 4173-4224
Boundary award, 4181
Concurrent legislation, 3903
Correspondence between the Prime Minister and Hon. Mr. Drury, 3971, 4170, 4182
English river, 4172
Hudson, Hon. A. B., 4184, 4213
Kenora dam, 4172
Norman dam, 4173
Rivers and Streams Act, 4174-4225
Sioux Lookout, 4191
Statement by Prime Minister, 4171
Technical Board, 4173
White Dog Falls, 4172
Winnipeg river, 4172

Lalor, Mr. F. R. (Haldimand)
Budget, 3656. Change in official Opposition, 3657; free trade and farmers, 3658; manufacturers help to lower prices, 3659; Roumanian and Greek loans and contracts, 3661; protection proper policy for Canada, 3661
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2492-4
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Dumping clause, 3817
Invoice certificate, fee, 4391
Position of Agrarian group, 4400
United States Customs regulations, 3817, 4417
Valuation for duty, 3817, 4417
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition plebiscite) 307

Lalor, Mr. F. R.—Con.
Highway construction in Ontario, 4300
Hon. F. C. Biggs, 3037
Immigration, 2582
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4351
Lambert, Mr. Norman P., 289, 3329, 3363, 3685. See also Grain Growers' Grain Company
Lanctot, Mr. Roch (Laprairie and Napierville)
Budget, 3516; tariff revision; Canada's participation in the war, 3517; imports and exports, 3518; revenue; expenditures, 3519; military expenditure, 3519; railway situation, 3520; Grand Trunk Railway, 3522; lawyers and Justice Department, 3523
Chief Justice, income tax, 1572
Civil Service bonus, 2107, 2114
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4352
Interim Supply Bill, 2107
Judges Act Amdt. Bill
Amdt. to res. neg. 1572
Montreal and South Shore traffic bridge, 2216
Post Office, outside service, 4531
Shipbuilding, 1959

Land.—See also Soldier Settlement; Immigration
Settlement, western, 3249
Location, 4343
Tax, 3229, 3317, 3453, 3486, 3511, 3634-35, 3664

Lang, Mr. Norman (Humboldt)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 342; the amendment; desire for election confined to one side; questions affecting West; investigation of Grain Trade, 342; marketing conditions; series of unfavourable years; Wheat Board; Wheat pool; better understanding between East and West; live stock industry harvest help; National Railways, branch lines, 344

Langlois, Mr. George Arnoult, appointment, qu. 2505, 2875, 4128

Lapointe, Mr. Ernest (Quebec East)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 457; congratulations to Prime Minister; special circumstances under which Parliament meets; House must reflect national will; public confidence withdrawn from Government, 457; justification of amendment; Union Government formed for duration of war—continuance in office injustice to Canada; democracy; the soldiers' vote;

Lapointe, Mr. Ernest—Con.
Address—Con.
war mandate used for other purposes, 458; new Administration without public endorsation; origin of National Liberal and Conservatice party; no mandate given in 1917 to present Government, 459; withdrawal of Ministers who gave prestige to Administration; sincerity of Liberals who support Government, 460; Government no longer in harmony with public opinion; by-election, 461; the Government's majority, 463; Sir Thomas White; Sir Herbert Ames; constitutional duty of Government; British precedents, 464; Imperial conference, 467
Alcohol, tax on, 3705
Ames, Sir Herbert, resignation, 464, 1296, 1310
Business of the House
Estimates on Thursdays and Fridays—Rule 17C—958, 1073, 1218, 1385, 2103-4, 4544
Canadian Nationals Definition Bill, 769
Canadian National Railways
Board of directors, 1605
Canadian Representation in the United States, 2429
Cattle embargo, 727
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2779, 4487-90
Religious holidays, 4487-90
Civil Service (res. Sir Sam Hughes) Political Patronage, 800; census commissioners and enumerators, 800; Judges, 801; commissions, 802
Closure, 2025
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3907
Customs Tariff, 1907, Amdt. Bill
Imported goods—marking, 3939-41
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition plebiscite) 310
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4246-50
Nomination paper, 4246
Revising officers, 4250
French Trade Agreement, 2137-8, 2152
Harbours and Rivers, estimates, 3977-80
High Commissioner's Office, 2437
Immigration Act Amdt. Bill—(Deportation) 1497, 1858
Imperial Mineral Resources Bureau, 2165
Interim Supply, 2010-11; 2101-4
Judges
Judicial District of Quebec, 1081-2
Justice Department
Counsel employed, 1076
Lake of the Woods Control Board Bill, 2033
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4210

Lapointe, Mr. Ernest—Con.
League of Nations, contribution to, 2357-67
Maisonneuve and Gaspé representation, 2314, 2342
Marine estimates, length of debate, 1988
Minister of Labour, 4544
National Catholic Labour Union, 1625, 3584
National Industrial Conference, 4549
Naval policy, 4023
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3891
Order, point of, word of member should be accepted, 1641
Parliament buildings, 3994, 4075-8
Inscription on tower, 4544
Polish battalion for service in French army, 4060
Prime Minister's Conference, 2505, 2637-67
Naval defence—contribution of Dominions to, 4256
Privilege
Alleged statement of Mr. Davidson regarding Liberal leadership, 2443
Correction of report in Ottawa Journal, 477
Explanation of remarks on Dominion Elections Bill, 4543
National Catholic Labour Unions, 3584
Provinces as traders, 3706
Purchasing Commission, 2015
Negative motion, 2019
Quebec riots, 1506
Railway Department employees, 1654
Representation in Parliament, 1307
Revenue from duty on wines, 2711
Soldiers' pensions, insurance and re-establishment, 4055-60

Laporte, Sir Hormidas, 1609-10, 4315. See also Canadian National Railways
Business interests, 3610

La Presse, 3217
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, criticism, 1709
Lord Atholstan, and, 3248
Yamaska by-election—Mr. Mondou, 3251

LaRochelle, Mr. M. G., 799. See also Civil Service; Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill

La Salle road, 4313-33

L'Assomption Experimental Station, 918, 946

Latchford, Mr. Justice, payments to, qu. 1500

"Laurentian", Government steamer, qu. 1348, 1863

Laurentide Pulp & Paper Company, 3049

Laurier, Sir Wilfrid, 3670. See also Address; Budget; Prime Ministers' Conference
Imperial Conferences, and, 3431-34
South African War, 1527
Tariff, 3614, 3642

Laval University. See Research

Lavigueur, Mr. Henri E. (Quebec County)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 280; congratulations to Prime Minister; the French language; demand for general election; changed attitude towards Quebec; unfulfilled obligations to city of Quebec; equipment for Transcontinental railway; grain elevators, docks, workshops; Great Northern and Lake St. John railways; St. Charles river dam; the Quebec riots of 1918, 282
Canadian National Railways
Directors, 4315
Quebec bridge—highway, 4333
Civil Service bonus, 2112-13
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 686
Harbours and rivers, estimates, 3977
Income tax, 2106
Marine estimates, 1987
National Catholic Labour Unions, 1649
Park St. Charles Company, proposed payment to, 4575
Post Office
Fiset, Mr. Michel, 963, 4523
Loretteville, 4523
Quebec elevator, 282, 1443
Quebec-Loretteville line, 4328
Shipbuilding, 1971
Telegraph line, Loretteville-St. Gerard, 4539

Lavoie, Mr., and Canadian National Railways, 1659, 1670

Law Library, Canadian, 1090

Law Stamps, 1090

Lawyers. See Canadian Bar Association; Justice Department

League of Nations, 97, 110, 125, 157, 164, 186, 188, 195, 204, 227, 229, 237, 247, 285, 357, 400, 435, 474, 2629-50-52, 2789, 3157, 3205. See also Canadian Nationals Definition Act; Prime Ministers' Conference; Permanent Court of International Justice
Ames, Sir Herbert, 464. See also that title
Article X, 158, 1967
Elimination of, qu. 575
Assembly, 164, 436, 2629, 2710, 543
Canadian representatives, 188, qu. 602, 785

League of Nations—Con.
Assembly—Con.
French Canadians unrepresented, 552
Request for papers, 188
Aviation, 3782
Burnham, Dr., case of, 1521. See also that title
Canada's participation, 519
Canadian Nationals, 397. See also that title
Constitutional questions, 113
Council, 2709
Expenses, Canada's share, qu. 1235, 2356
Labour, 4547. See also that title
Nauru Island, 4255, 4541
Permanent Court of International Justice. See that title
Permanent Secretariat, maintenance, 2356

Leases of Federal Oil Lands. See Oil

Lecours, Mr. A. J. See Quebec Riots

Leduc, Mr. J. Alfred (Westmount-St. Henry)
Budget, 3463. Comparison of present with Liberal administration; Government economy in expenditure necessary, 3464; methods of taxation, 3465; income tax, 3465
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3882
Public buildings, Nova Scotia, 2770

Lee-Enfield Rifle, 2783-7. See also Militia; Ross Rifle

Leeds
Status of member for, 464, 1294, 1326. See also White, Sir Thomas
Resignation of member for, 1619
Vacancy, 1293

Legal Responsibility. See Quebec Riots

Leger, Mr. A. T. (Kent, N.B.)
Agricultural publications, 1074
Beef production, 1039
Cold storage—delegation from Maritime Provinces, 1038
Dairying, 1036
Dredging, 3982
Fruit growing, 1041
Harbours and rivers, 3990
Lightkeepers' salaries, 1994
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3759
Partridge Island quarantine station, 2206-14
Public Works—transfer of district engineer's office from Chatham, 4081-5
St. John harbour, 4078
Sheridan, Mr. John, resignation and reinstatement of, 1499, 2173, qu. 2618, 4501-5
Veterinaries in New Brunswick, 1050

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe (Maisonneuve; Gaspé)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 177; Mr. Mowat; platform of Liberal Convention of 1919; Speech of Mr. Gauthier a "degrading incident", 178; the amendment; Government possible only with consent of governed; the "Khaki" election in England; Balfour administration, 178; no general election for ten years; issue in 1911; dissolution and election; only issue in 1917 was "Win the War"; that election a "sham" and "official debauchery"; tariff, 181; coalition illogical after the war; Cabinet changes; distinction between Tory and Liberal, 182; justification of amendment; Imperial Conference, naval defence; British foreign policy; Canada will never surrender rights; Government without mandate to discuss naval defence; organic change in constitution, 183; Canada a nation? Right denied to conclude commercial pact; consular agents, 184; Ambassador at Washington, 185; Chicago Drainage Canal; levels of the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence river; League of Nations; increasing desire for national unity, 187
Air Board, 3778
Archives, provision for, 2949
Arctic expedition, 4106
Ascension Day, adjournment, 2688
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 291¢
Belgian Immigration, 4128
Berry boxes, 4116
Bertrand, Mr. Joseph Tetu, 4079
Brunelle, Sergt. Major N., 1518
Budget, 3241. Tariff Commission; free trade and protection, revenue, raising of, 3242; income tax; two normal periods of recent history, 1879-1896, 1896-1911, comparison of, 3243; British preference, establishment of, 3244; relations with the United States, 3245; benefits of Liberal administration, 3245; war loans, debts and deficits, 3246; a free press, 3247; naval and military expenditure, 3248; vigorous policy of immigration and land settlement, 3249; mining industry; attitude of Quebec, Yamaska by-election, 3250
Burnham, Dr., and Serbian Government, M., 1520, 1528
Business of the House, 1851
Morning sittings, prorogation, 4338-40
Previous debate, 3627

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe—Con.
Business of the House—Con.
Wednesday evening adjournment, 1833
Canada Temperance Act Bill
Costs of litigation, 4385
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 1557, 2254-7
Canadian dollar in the United States, 3087
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 1286
Canadian National Railways
Deficit--Mr. J. Lambert Payne, 3017
Foremen of engines, qu. 1673
St. Hyacinthe shops, qu. 2821
Special Committee, reference to M. (Mr. Meighen) 1774
Train agents, qu. 1349
Canadian Representation in the United States, 2396, 2430
Cattle embargo, 710; motion withdrawn, 766
Chicago Drainage Canal, 185, 1851, 2225
Chinese Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3827-9
Civil Service
Bonus, qu. 901, 1176
Griffenhagen and Associates, 799, 4555. See also under this title, Post Office
Outside Service, qu. 2820
Res. (Sir Sam Hughes) Political Patronage in, 798; Liberal principles; Civil Service Commission; competitive principle; worries of patronage system; experience in England, United States and India; Hon. Sydney Fisher; confidence in Commissioners; Arthur Young and Company; Griffenhagen and Associates, 799
Reorganization, 4555
Superannuation, increase of allowances, 2112
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2855-71, 4258-60, 4280-88, 4466-86
Religious holidays, 4485
Returned Soldiers, 4258-60
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2490-2; 4275
Copyright Act Amdt. and Consolidation Bill, 3838-49
Customs
Minister of
Letter to French Purchasing Commission, 3079
Private business connections, 3079, 3080
Montreal port officers, 3086
Dairy Products Grading Bill, 4448
De Martigny divorce, 3767-71, 4008, 4203, 4477
Destruction of documents. See also under this title Printing Bureau

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe—Con.
Divorce evil, 4474
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 3092, 4246
Naturalization, 3112
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. Bill, 4064
Editorial Committee, 4557-9
Estimates, Scrutiny of, Special Committee, M., 1503, 2193, 2210
Expenditure
National Committee on, 1835
Statutory, 1557
French Trade Agreement, 1557, 2127-41, 2193
Gaspé Peninsula railway facilities, 2507-9
Georgian Bay Canal, qu. 2625
Germany
Canadian claims against, 4534
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2450-80, 2564
Highways
Construction in Ontario, 4290-3
In Quebec, 3029
Housing
(Amdt.) 1135-36
Point of order, 1135
Immigration
Central European, 2575-85
Deputy Minister, 3057
Exhibits, 3067
Inspectors, 3067
Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3822-7
Income tax
Instructions in both languages, 2626
Penalties, qu. 2100
Regulations, 1272
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4345-53
Insurance Act, proposed amendments, 2625, 4339
Insurance Conference, 3088
Interim Supply, 1679
Bill, 2101-2112
Motion to reduce, 2095
Judges Act Amdt. Bill, 1561, 3010
Judges Act, 1920, Correspondence, 1851
Judge Snider's report. See under this title Printing Bureau
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4207-10
Langlois, Mr., 4128
Magdalen Island steamship service, 767
Maisonneuve and Gaspé, representation, 2328
Military expenditure, South Africa, 3273
Ministers to sit in either Chamber, M., 1152; withdrawn, 1172
Murray Bay-Tadoussac Steamship service, 1825
National Research Institute, 4555. See also under this title, Research

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe—Con.
National Transcontinental, Winnipeg-Quebec service, 2509-19
Natural resources, 874
North American Trust Company, 1129
Oil and Gas permits and leases, 899
Oil bounties, 1421
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3883-94
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 2906, 3009
Park St. Charles Company, proposed payments to, 4570
Parliament buildings, 4077
Pension Act Amdt. Bill, 4367
Pensions
Etienne, Mde., claim, 4367
Martel, Mde., claim, 4367
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2712-14
Pierreville postmistress, qu. 2624
Polish battalion for service in French army, 4053
Post Office Act Amdt. Bill, 1619, 2123-25
Post Office Department
Anderson, Mr., 4556
Annuities, 4524
Griffenhagen and Associates, 4556
Letter rate, 4515
Postmaster General, 4514
Railway mail service, 4516
Reorganization and administration, 4514-24, 4556
Verret, Col., 4525-56
Prime Ministers' Conference, 2642
Printing Bureau—destruction of documents, 2950-3, 4557
Judge Snider's report, 1625, 2444, 2943, 3905, 4062, 4436
Private members and money resolutions, 1135
Prohibition, 4474
Public moneys, expenditure of, 1678
Public Works in Gaspé, 4088
Purchasing Commission, 2021, 2018-22
Motion to strike out item, 2018
Quebec riots, 1514
Question not answered, 1621
Railways
Freight rates on, 2018
Refrigerator cars for fish, 1038
Revenue and expenditure, 4515
Salmon fishery licenses, 4341
Sandy Beach wharf, qu. 965
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships) 591
Senate Bills, delay in first reading, 1619
Shipbuilding, 1286, 1686, 2078

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe—Con.
Shipbuilding—Con.
Speech referred to, 1684
Soldiers pensions, insurance and re-establishment, 4053
Speaker's Chair, 3694
Stony Mountain penitentiary, release of prisoners, 477
Thanksgiving day, date, qu. 2098
Trade with United States, 1481
United States tariff, Canadian duties, 4254
War tax, 4515
Woman suffrage, 4474
Yamaska election
Speech at St. François du Lac, 3528
Unsatisfactory arrangements for, 4534
Young Emergency tariff, 2905

Le Pas wharf, 3975-6

Letter Carriers. See also Post Office
Bonus, 2109-15. See also Civil Service, Bonus

Letter Rate. See Post Office

Letters. See Imaginary Letters

Levels, Great Lakes, 186. See also Chicago Drainage Canal; Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Waterway

Lévis, expropriation of land at, 1846

Libel. See Criminal Code Amendments

Liberal Bloc, 3216

Liberal Convention, 1919, 73, 175, 218, 338, 3637. See also Address; Budget
Fiscal policy, 3213
Tariff resolution, 3643

Library of Parliament
Joint Committee, 110
Joint Librarians' Report, 3
Noise, 4000

Life Assurance Companies. See North American

Life-saving Service, 1990

Lighthouses and Lightkeepers, 1994, 2174
Bonus, 1622, qu. 1623
Signal service, 4040

Lignite. See also Coal, Natural Resources
Briquetting plants
Bienfait, qu. 672, 673, 848, 4499
Estevan, 2689
Conservation Commission, 3965
Utilization Board, qu. 672, 673, 1269, 4499

Lindsay
Arsenal, 2782
Wharf, 2616

Lindsay, General
Oil lands, 1342
Tar sand rights, 671

Linen Yarn, Bounty on, 1389. See also Flax

Liquor. See also Alcohol; Canada Temperance Act; Customs and Excise Dept. Act; Inland Revenue; Prohibition; Special War Revenue
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 2258-9
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, cargoes, 1713, 1715
Export licenses in Saskatchewan, qu. 833
Illicit traffic, 4388
Seizure of at Baie St. Paul, qu. 696
Tax on, 3705, 3708
Theft of at Baie St. Paul, qu. 1132

Lira, exchange value of. See Italy

Live Stock, 344, 846, 923, 1116. See also Agriculture; Health of Animals
Abattoirs and cold storage, 1125
Accredited Herd, 4506-13
Breeding, aids to, 1117, 1245
Cattle embargo. See that title
Corning—cattle purchases, 1624
County fairs and exhibitions, 1123
Dairy herds and cow testing, 1118
Distribution of pure-bred animals, 923, 948
Eggs and poultry, 1122. See also Eggs
Farmers' Clubs, 1117
Feed. See that title
Guernsey cattle at Nappan, qu. 2686
Health of Animals, 4506-12. See also that title
Marketing, 1039, 1119
Molasses wash for hogs, 3787-3820
Saskatchewan, distribution, qu. 1236
Transportation charges on feed, qu. 2686
Wool grading, 1121

Living Conditions. See Housing

Loan Companies. See also Housing

Loans. See also Address; Budget; Credits; Finance; Housing
Belgium to, qu. 577, qu. 1001, 3379. See also that title
Canadian National Railways, 4131-68, 4288, 4313, 4334
Canadian Northern Railway, 3037
Domestic, qu. 566
European credits, qu. 2622
Foreign, 3286, 3347, 3611
Grand Trunk Railway, 4131-68, 4288, 4313, 4334
Grecian, 2812
Roumanian, and, qu. 564. See also under this head Roumanian

Loans—Con.
Maturing, 3478
Repayment in New York, $25,000,000 loan, qu. 2622
Roumanian, 478, 564, qu. 566, 1072, 1441, qu. 2030, qu. 2344, 3811, 4430
Tax exempt, qu. 575

Lobsters. See Fish

Lockeport-Froude Point
Steamship service, 1496
Railway extension, 3054, 4323

Locomotives. See Railways

Long, Mr. C. E. (North Battleford)
Hudson Bay Railway, 996
Live stock commission men, 1123

Longueuil Bridge, 300

Loretteville, post office, 4523

Lowther, Right Hon. J. W.
Speaker's Chair, presentation, 3689
Expression of thanks, 3697

Lumber
Pacific coast trade, 1725
Piling of near stations, 1177
Profits on, Grain Growers' Grain Company, 3180, 3633
Sales tax on, 3449, 3736, 3742-3, 3751-7
Ties, railway, for Egypt, 1725
Tobique reserve, cutting on, 4503

Lunenburg County
Fishery overseers, 2179
Fruit inspectors, 1041, 1047

Luxury Taxes. See Taxation

Lynch, Mr. Frank, 4541

Macallum, Professor, 1328, 1432, 2144, 2688, See also Research

Dacdonald, Mr. E. M., 3529

MacDonald, Hon. Senator, appointment of, qu. 577

MacKelvie, Mr. John A. (Yale)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 7; (seconder) retirement of Hon. Mr. Burrell; acceptance by Hon. Mr. Tolmie portfolio of Agriculture; new Prime Minister; unrest; agitation and unemployment; re-establishment of returned men; old age pensions and unemployment insurance; the tariff; fruit-growing industry; amicable relations between two great races forming bulk of population, 10

Mackenzie and Mann, 1960, 3206, 3288. See also Canadian National Railways

Mackenzie District
Oil Development, 2162. See also Oil, Petroleum

Mackie, Mr. H. A. (East Edmonton)
Cattle embargo, qu. 714
Civil Service—(res. Sir Sam Hughes)—Political Patronage in; abuses of system; promotions; deputy postmaster at Edmonton; census commissioners, 827; transfer of patronage to officials; political partisanship, 828
Debates, official, distribution of, 2224
Natural resources, 878
Oil and Gas
Expenditure for discovery, qu. 695
Permits and leases, res. 894
Leases, issue of, 598
Rights, 2555
Point of order—member reading speech, 544
Tar Sand rights, qu. 671
General Lindsay, qu. 671

Mackie, Mr. H. J. (North Renfrew)
Pembroke wharf, 4539

Maclean, Hon. A. K. (Halifax)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 318; Prime Minister, congratulations to; tenure of Parliament; early dissolution desirable; life of Government measured by war, 319; attitude of members towards dissolution; Military Service Act and coalition, 320; understanding of electorate in 1917; War Times Election Act; redistribution, 322
Canada Shipping Act Amdt. Bill (Public harbours) 1174, 2228-30, 2556
Canada Temperance Act
Pending litigation not to be affected (Amdt.) 4384
Rights of litigants, 4377
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 2255-61
Canadian National Railways
Management, Information—M. (Mr. King) 1204
Proposed reference to Special Committee, M., 1573
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2823-75
Amdt. to M. for 2r., 2835, 4464-93
Commission—exclusion of certain positions, 4477
"In the public interest," 4477
Naval Service—preference, 4484

Maclean, Hon. A. K.—Con.
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill—Con.
Returned Soldiers—preference, 4492
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2490-2502
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Consular agents, United States, 3792
Consular certificates, 4390
Invoice certificate, 3792, 4389
Fee—who pays? 4390
Proclamation of Act, 4391
Trade agents, 3792
Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt. Bill
Imported goods—marking, 3954
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition plebiscite) 307
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4240-5
Naturalization—certificate of qualification, 4240
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. Bill, 4067
Fuel supply problem, 1264
Grain inquiry—remuneration of Commissioners, 3972
League of Nations—Canada's contribution, 2362
Ministers to sit in either Chamber, 1154-9
National Research Council, 2896
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3895
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 2264-5, 2898-2908
Parliament buildings, 3995-7
Public harbours, 1174, 2228-30, 2556
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act Amdt. Bill, 2482-6
Unanimous consent, 1173
War Times Election Act, 322, 4240

Maclean, Mr. W. F. (South York)
Canadian Nationals Definition Bill, 769
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 3113
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 747
Hudson Bay Railway, 985, 996
National railways and telegraphs—Government business, 4130
Railways and immigration, 4129
Returned soldiers in Civil Service, qu. 963
Toronto post office, appointments, qu. 734

MacLeod Judicial District, qu. 2344

MacLeod's Breakwater, 4087

MacNab's Island. See Halifax Quarantine station

MacNutt, Mr. Thomas (Saltcoats)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 527; congratulations to Prime Minister; tariff; new Prime Minister but same old policy; position of parties uncertain; fusion; "moderate protection," 528; settlement of soldiers on the land, 529; high prices for seed and stock—low prices for products; suggestions for relief of returned men; housing; exchange, 530; amendments; no confidence in Government, 531
Budget, 3685. Budget a protectionist one; eminent men changing political opinions; Canadian navy, status of officers and men, 3686
Canadian navy, status of officers and men, qu. 3422, 3686
Census appointments, qu. 3260
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4234-5
Naturalization—certificate of qualification, 4234
Hudson Bay Railway—expenditure, qu. 2623
Immigration, 2584
Pre-emptions and purchases of homesteads, qu. 2506
Soldiers' Land Settlement Board, dismissal of Mr. Graham, 2618

MacNutt, Mr. Thomas—Con.

MacPhail, Mr. E. S., 1232

McAdoo Award, 1588, 4325

McCallum, Miss Mary P., 3108

McCoig, Mr. A. B. (Kent, Ont.)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 88; reply to Mr. Gauthier—almost identical argument by Mr. his attack on Hon. Mr. Lemieux; anxious to be taken into the Government; almost identical argument by Mr. Gauthier and Prime Minister; election, census, and redistribution, 89; Canadian National Railways; Mr. De Witt Foster, 90; Board of Commerce; profiteering; combines; Tobacco Buyers' Association; agricultural machinery, 91
Agricultural machinery, standardization of parts, 584, Res. 666
Apple exports to Great Britain, qu. 1501
Budget, 3506. Taxation of necessaries of life, 3506; rural mail contractors' remuneration, 3507; agricultural implements, 2508; military expenditure, 3508; Government war scandals, 3508; tractors, 3509
Civil Service, bonus, 2029, 2109, 2115
Experimental farms, 943
Flax industry, 1397
Highway construction in Ontario, 4293-5
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters, 622
Interior Department—salaries, 1333

McCoig, Mr. A. B.—Con.
Militia
Annual drill, M. to reduce, 2296
Pensions, 2278

McCrea, Mr. F. N. (Sherbrooke)
Amherst drill hall, 2752
Grand Trunk loan, 4166
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4348
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4221
Military preparations, 2298
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale, 4013
Shipbuilding, 1944

McCurdy, Hon. F. B. (Minister of Public Works)
Bryson-Calumet Island bridge, 3986
Clark's Harbour, public building, 2817
Commons Chamber, temperature of, 1071
Courtenay Bay improvements, 4097
Dredging, 3982
Drydocks, 3987
Fort Cumberland and Fort Moncton, care of, 4540
Halifax quarantine station, 2754
Harbours and rivers, estimates, 3973-82
Montreal-South shore traffic bridge, 2217
Parliament Buildings, 3992-4001
Partridge Island Quarantine station, 2808-15
Pembroke wharf, 4536-8
Port Hood, wharf, 4104
Public Works
Amherst drill hall, 2739
Annapolis public building, 2741
Demobilization, 3989
Engineering Branch, 4080-90
Estimates, 2737-73, 3973
Expenditures, 4102
Nova Scotia, 4086
Return, inquiry for, 3008
St. John harbour, 4078
Telegraphs and Telephones
Isle aux Coudres, 4540
Loretteville-St. Gerard, 4540

McDermand, Mr. S. S. (East Elgin)
Apples, profit on, 1470
Encouragement of fruit-growing, 1469
European corn-borer, 1031
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 613

McDonald, Mr. Angus (Timiskaming)
Civil Service
Board of Hearing, qu. 2820
Bonus, qu. 3089
Meetings in Government buildings, qu. 3421
Prevailing rates, qu. 3089
Reorganization—Griffenhagen and Associates, qu. 2623

McDonald, Mr. Angus—Con.
Civil Service—Con.
Superannuation, qu. 2820
Whitley Councils, qu. 2820
Judge Snider's report, 3209
Returned Soldiers—civil servants, qu. 3531
Shipbuilding, 1884
Unemployment and immigration, 1377

McGibbon, Mr. Peter (Muskoka)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 154; the amendment; Opposition has no policy and no case against Government; taxation, debt, railways, repatriation, pensions; unemployment insurance; old age pensions; the tariff; vacillation of Opposition on question of the tariff, 155; the Government's record; war taxation, repatriation, pensions, expenditure, production—election; mistakes—who has not made them? 156; Government justified by its record—redistribution and representation—congratulations to Prime Minister, 157
Agricultural shows, 1242
Automobile theft, 3914
Budget, 3510. Business conditions of country; revenue by taxation; direct and land taxation, 3511; protection and industries, 3512; iron and steel industry; plate glass; pineapples; wire nails and sugar industry, 3513; prosperity and wages, 3514; exemption of farmers, 3516
"Canadian Inventor," 1891
Cattle embargo, 727
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2829-67, 4478
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill—firearms, 3907-14
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Home brewing, 3788
Restrictive legislation, 3790
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition plebiscite) 308
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4239-41
Revising officers, 3102
Farmers, protection for, 3748
Health Department
Report, 1852
Scientific branch, 3134
Highways, construction in Ontario, 4293
Hog cholera, compensation, 1060
Illustration stations and farms in Northern Ontario, 955
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 618
Military preparation, 2304
National Research Institute, 2895
Ontario timber limits, 3391

McGibbon, Mr. Peter—Con.
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 2264-7, 2901
Convictions under, 3134
Pensions Act Amdt. Bill, 4373
Pensions
Widowed mothers, 634
Record of member for Lunenburg, 1903
Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 4356
Shipbuilding, 1903, 1904
Trent canal, 2955-65

McGibbon, Mr. Peter R. (Argenteuil)
Questions, inquiry as to, 2943
Railway bridges, 1664

McGill University. See Research

McGilvray, Dr. C. D., 1055

McIntosh, Mr. J. C. (Nanaimo)
Fisheries—Mr. Justice Ebert's report, qu. 4254

McIsaac, Mr. James (King's, P.E.I.)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, moved, 5; congratulations to Prime Minister; tribute to Sir Robert Borden; after-war problems and conditions; Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 6; Customs Tariff, 7
Budget, 3397; congratulations to Minister of Finance; Canada's trade; financial position of country, 3398; revenue, raising of, 3399; sales tax; tariff revision, attitude of Opposition on tariff, 3400; Fielding, Mr., former speech on tariff, 3401; Amdt. of Mr. Fielding, 3403
Georgetown wharf, 4564
Harbours and rivers, 3990
Highways, expenditure, 4306
Prince Edward Island Railway, 4564

McKean, Mr. Melville, 4083

McKenzie, Mr. D. D. (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 40; mover and seconder; congratulations to Prime Minister; tribute to leader of Opposition, 40; disappointed in speech of Prime Minister; should place himself in the "hands of the country"; election before redistribution; position of West, 41; quotations from Calgary Albertan and Montreal Gazette; newspaper comment on by-election results, 43; amendment necessary to expression of views; the tariff; wait until report of Tariff Committee of Cabinet produced,

McKenzie, Mr. D. D.—Con.
Address—Con.
44; a government of the "big interests"; restoration of confidence in parliamentary institutions impossible while Government remains in power, 45; position and policy of Liberal party, 46
Agricultural publications, 1075
Alcohol, tax on, 3957
Alderson, Mr. George B., claim for compensation, 2273
Amherst drill shed, 2739
Australia-New Zealand service, 1494
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2925-9
Budget, 3280. Minister of Militia and military expenditure, revenues and expenditures, 3283; speeches on Government side of House, 3284; luxury taxes, 3285; unfairness of taxation, 3286; foreign loans; Canadian Northern system borrowings, 3287, 3288; Grand Trunk borrowings, 3291; trade outlets; railway business, handling of; shipbuilding, 3292; combines, Nova Scotia coal, 3295; lack of railway facilities in Cape Breton
Burnham, Dr., treatment of by Serbian Government, 1526
Canada Temperance Act, costs, 4381-88
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, shipbuilding, 1280
Canadian Nationals Definition Bill, 778
Ruling of Chairman, 779
Canadian National Railways
Management — Information M. (Mr. King) 1210
Operating expenses and receipts, 4316
Special Committee
M. (Mr. A. K. Maclean) 1600
Canadian Representation in the United States, 2416
Cattle embargo, 763
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2781, 2844, 4287
Civil Service bonus, 4120, 2236
Civil Service (Res. Sir Sam Hughes) Political patronage; election officers in North Cape Breton and Victoria; census officials, 832; service overmanned and underpaid, 11,000 dismissed, 25,000 appointed; classification and reorganization, 833; Printing Bureau; Civil Service Commission, 834; patronage and the party system; appointments, 835
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 4274
Coal supply in Maritime Provinces, 1281

McKenzie, Mr. D. D.—Con.
Comparative return on Dominion guaranteed and Nova Scotia bonds, 4165
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3912-38
Currency Act Amdt. Bill, 2269
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Invoice certificate, 3806
Fee—who pays? 3807
Preventive service in Victoria county, 4388
Customs and Inland Revenue—payments for overtime, 4123
Customs officers, 3086
Customs Tariff, 1907, Amdt. Bill—imported goods, marking, 3947-55
Dairy products grading, 3760
Delinquent children, 3012
De Martigny divorce, 3766
Destructive insects, 1027, 1032, 1075
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition plebiscite) 311
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill 3091, 4243-6
Election officers, disqualification, 4246
Naturalization—certificate of qualification, 4243
Nomination day, 3096
Recount, 3097
Revising officers, 3102
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. Bill, 4066
Flax industry, 1402
Flour, high price of, 1448
Fruit inspectors, location in one county, 1046
Fuel supply problem, 1260
Gas and Gas Meters, Inspection of, Bill, 609, 2944
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2458-80, 2446
Position, 3321, 4436
Grand Trunk Railway
Coal mines in the United States, 4316
Default of interest, 1498
Loan, 3291, 4152-69, 4315
Portland terminus, 4316
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 695, 738
Immigration, 2584-96
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 4343-55
Ingonish-Macleod's breakwater, 4087
Insect pests, 1027, 1032, 1075
Judges Exchequer Court, 1083
Lake of the Woods Control Board Bill, 2350-5
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4224-6
Lignite, 4500
Migratory Birds Convention Act Amdt. Bill, 2891

McKenzie, Mr. D. D.—Con.
Military Service Act, claim for services, 2807
Montreal Harbour Commission, 2269
National Research Institute, 2703
Naval policy, 4034
Newfoundland railways, 1485
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale, 4032-6
North Sydney, removal of Public Works officials, 2817
Nova Scotia judges, 1572
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 2264-5, 2908
Partridge Island Quarantine Station, 2813-15
Pension Act Amdt. Bill, 4372
Pensions, widowed mothers, 639, 4372
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2720-33, 3014
Prisons and reformatories, 3011
Proclamation—enforcement of Acts of Parliament by, 3758
Public buildings—Nova Scotia, 2736-71
Public harbours, 2229-31
Public Works—Engineering branch, 4083
Purchasing Commission, 1102
Quebec riots, 1511
Reid Newfoundland Company, 1486
Relief of distressed seamen, 4039
Returned Soldiers Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 4262
Ross Rifle, 2783-7
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act Amdt. Bill, 2484
Russian currency, 1072
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships) 659
Sheridan, Mr. John, resignation and reinstatement, 4503-4
Shipbuilding, 1280
Statistics Act Amdt. Bill, 3758
Steamship routes, new, 1494
Welland canal, construction, 2994
West Indies steamship service, 1490
Wharves and breakwaters, Cape Breton, 4103
Wheat Board, loss under, 1461
Witness fees, 3937

McLean, Mr. H. H. (Royal)
Chief Justice, salary of, 1562
Income tax, Chief Justice, 1561

McLennan, Professor, 1428. See also Research

McLeod, Late Col Harry, tribute to, 3-4, 153

McMaster, Mr. A. R. (Brome)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 65; congratulations to mover

McMaster, Mr. A. R.—Con.
Address—Con.
and seconder; criticism of speech of Mr. Nesbitt; unemployment insurance; the tariff, 65; Minister of Trade and Commerce and League of Nations; speech of the Prime Minister, 66; right of the Government to carry on—pledged to hold office only during war and demobilization; evidence of the agreement, 67; no difference between parties in desire to win war—conditions in 1904 and 1917 not comparable; Brown-Macdonald coalition; National Liberal and Conservative party, 70; Ministry not united on tariff question; position of the Minister without portfolio (Mr. Spinney) 71; election of Minister of Customs; a portfolio for Quebec; tariff attitude of Liberal party, 72; platform adopted at Liberal Convention of 1919, 73; parliamentary institutions on trial—the Prime Minister a usurper; Liberal Unionists elected for war only, 73; fate of Government in their hands, 74
Air Board, 3779-83
Ames, Sir Herbert, resignation, 1301
Automobile theft, 3913
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2934-9
Bounties on oil, 1387
Budget, 3164. Income tax; League of Nations, 3165; war expenditure; protection of industries, 3166; debt and revenue; exports and imports, 3167; exchange rate; tariff schedule, raising of, 3168; short-sighted uneconomic policy, 3169; sales tax; cocoa, duties on, 3170; public men and private interests; St. John city, representation of, 3172; foreign governments; Ministers soliciting business, 3173; Imaginary letters
Business of the House
Estimates on Thursdays and Fridays—Rule 17C, 960
Progress of, 1230
Canada Temperance Act Amdt. Bill
Costs, 4377
Pending litigation, 4377-86
Rights of litigants, 4377
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 2251-9
Canadian Nationals Definition Act, 649, 767
Canadian National Railways
Board of Directors, 1667
Questions on order paper, 1763
Special Com., M., (Mr. A. K. Maclean) 1608

McMaster, Mr. A. R.—Con.
Canadian Northern Railway
Certificates, issue and sale of, qu. 605
Guaranteed bonds, sale of, qu. 604
Canadian representation in the United States, 2395
Cattle embargo, 765
Compensation for slaughtered animals, 1062
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3900, 3913-17
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Purchasing power of European countries, 4430
Valuation of currency, 4430
Valuation for duty, 4412
Customs brokers, payment, 1090
Customs—foreign monetary standards, qu. 1133
Customs Tariff, 1907, Act Amdt. Bill—imported goods, marking of, 3944-54
Delinquent children, 3012
Documents placed on Hansard without being read, 1539
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4247-8
Election papers, 3098
New forms, 3101
Expenditures, curtailment of, 2978
Flax bounty, 1393
Fox breeding, 1428
French Trade Agreement, 2130-39
Fruit growing in Eastern Townships, 1043
Grand Trunk
Equipment trust certificates, qu. 604
Guaranteed bonds, qu. 604
Halifax Shipyards, Limited, 1698
Harbours and rivers, estimates, 3973-8
Health of Animals, diseased herds, 1048
Highway construction in Ontario, 4290-4302
Imaginary letters, 3173
Good taste, 3174
Immigration, 2572-82
Imperial Mineral Resources Bureau, 4499
Income tax, qu. 3260
Interim supply, 2012
Interior Department, reduction of estimates, 1334
Justice Department, purchasing agent, 1079
Lake of the Woods Control Board Bill, 2355
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4204-24
League of Nations, contribution, 2359-70
Lignite, 4499
Maisonneuve and Gaspé, representation, 2328
Maple Products Act, 1920, Amdt. Bill, 2559
Military preparation, 2295, 2303

McMaster, Mr. A. R.—Con.
Ministers of the Crown and directorships, 2228
Ministers to sit in either Chamber, 1169
Naval Service, 4022
"Niobe" and "Rainbow", sale, 4013-29
Parliament buildings, 3998
Penitentiaries
Saskatchewan, increase in, 1091
Point of order—irrelevancy, 1066
Post Office Act Amdt. Bill, 2120-22
Prisons and reformatories, 3012
Privy Council, limitation of appeals, 1089
Proportional representation, 1548
Purchasing Commission, 2016
Railway Board and Intercolonial, 1655
Reciprocity agreement with the United States, 2054
Research, 1427
Return, inquiry for, 3008
Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 4360
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships) 258, 585, 662
Statutory expenditures, 1423
Trent canal, 2953
University professors and scientific research, 1436

McNeil, Archbishop, and Housing, 1137

McPhail, Sir Andrew, 1353-55-60

McQuarrie, Mr. W. G. (New Westminster)
Farmers, protection for, 3748
Fisheries of British Columbia, 861
Housing, 1144
Natural resources, 861
Poultry industry in British Columbia, 3750
Unemployment and immigration, 1364

Machinery. See Agricultural machinery; implements

Madrid Postal Conference, 3001

Magdalen Islands
Steamship service, 557, 767

Magill, Dr., 1451, qu. 1624

Magrath, Mr. C. A., and Fuel Supply, 1256

Maharg, Mr. John A. (Maple Creek)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 485; congratulations to Prime Minister—statement attributed to Prime Minister; allegation that farmers in alliance with Bolshevists; what farmers did in the national crisis, Wheat Board, 487—results of discontinuance, 488; platform of Canadian Maharg, Mr. John A.—Con.

Address—Con.
Council of Agriculture, 489; fiscal policy of Great Britain—Government's record—elections; United Grain Growers, sale of agricultural implements; pamphlet attributed to Mr. Cowan, 491; Government supplies purchased in the United States, 492; Canadian manufacturers refuse to sell to farmers' co-operative organizations; Commission to inquire into grain trade, 493; British Columbia apples, 494; the amendment, 495
Agriculture Dept., salaries of officials, 1036
Budget, 3362. Reference to Prime Minister's speech; Mr. Norman P. Lambert and his article, 3363; cream separators and the free list, 3364; protection and Great Britain, binder twine industry, 3365; imports and revenue, adverse balance of trade, 3366; tariff reduction, 3368; home market, 3369; western grain shipments, 3370; freight rates, 3371; implement manufacturing, 3372; sales tax, 3373; railway situation; canal expenditure, 3374
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, West Indies trade, 1913
Canadian Wheat Board, 1449
Flour, cost of, 1450
Fruit inspection in the West, 1043
Government marketing of wheat, 1460
Grain
Chemistry expert, 1228
Commission, 1447, 1462
Overages, 1463
Transportation rates, 999
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 749
Great Lakes, ships on, 1913
Ocean freights, 1936
Magill, Dr., and Agrarian group, 1451
Point of Order—political sagacity, 1066
Resignation of, 4340
Returned soldiers, employment on Welland canal, 3001
Saskatchewan
Co-operative Elevator Company, qu. 391
Militia organizations, 2794-6
Searls, Mr. George, grain inspection, 1445
Shipbuilding, 1920
Steamship subsidies, 1492
Terminal elevators, 1463
Wednesday evening adjournment, 1842
Welland canal, construction, 2999-3003

Mail Bags, repairing of. See Penitentiaries

Mail Contracts, 1823. See also Post Office; Rural Mail

Mail Contracts—Con.
Ste. Rose de Watford, qu. 3209
White Horse-Dawson contract, qu. 2686

Mail Subsidies, 1485. See also Steamship subsidies

Main Ducks, life-saving station, 1991

Maisonneuve and Gaspé, Representation of, 2247, 2310, 4437
M. (Mr. Edwards) 2314; agreed to, 2343
See also Privileges and Elections

Majority of Votes. See Proportional Representation

Management. See Canadian National Railways

Mange. See Health of Animals

Manion, Mr. R. J. (Fort William and Rainy River)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 351; congratulations to Prime Minister; Liberal-Unionists not weak-kneed, servile or subservient, "Liberals" and "Conservatives", 352; the tariff, historical alignment of parties on, 353; the Farmers' party and free trade; position of Mr. McMaster; agricultural and industrial interests; the Government's mandate, 354; demand for election; no criticism of policies, principles or legislation; personal criticisms of Prime Minister and Quebec, 355; representation of French Canadians on Boards and Commissions, Supreme Court; friendship between Quebec and rest of Canada; Military Service Act; sane elements do not want election; the Government's record, 356; Canada's status, League of Nations; no charges against Government; the country prosperous, 357; social conditions; Canada's problems, 358
Alcohol and medicinal preparations, 3731
Budget, 3231. Speech of Mr. Clark (Red Deer) 3231; taxing of necessaries of life, 3232; attitude of Mr. Fielding on tariff; free trade policy in the United Kingdom, 3233; tariff policy for Canada a vital one, 3234; tariff and revenue, 3235; cheap countries; moderate tariff, 3236; carrying trade of Great Britain; adverse balance of trade; Great Britain's exports and imports, 3237; agriculture declining in the United Kingdom; United States manufactures and shipping, 3238; Great Britain suffering under free trade policy, reciprocity and the Fordney Bill, 3239
Canadian National Railways
Lake Superior Branch and Fort William, 3050
Canadian Representation in the United States, 2414-32
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill
Religious holidays, 4491
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2474
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 682
Macallum, Professor, 1435
Natural resources, Res, 841
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3879; Amdt. 3886
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 7, 2903

Manitoba
Grasshopper plague, 1027
Harbours and rivers, 3975
Highways, 4308
List of candidates and votes polled, 1539
Transfer of Natural Resources to. See Natural Resources

Manson's Landing, wharf, 3980

Manufacturers. See Address, Budget, Canadian Manufacturers Association, Customs and Excise, Labour, Trade Commissioners, Unemployment Agricultural implements and United Grain Growers, 418, 491, 3372. See also that title

Maple Products Act Amdt. Bill
M. for leave to introduce: Speaker's ruling, 2150
Res. 2193, 2557; 1r., 2618; 2r., 2890, 3141, 3720

Maple Sugar, 887, 1047, 1474

Marcil, Hon. Charles (Bonaventure)
Baie des Chaleurs, steamship service, qu. 2506
Bonaventure-Gaspé mail service, qu. 577
Bonaventure wharves, 3992
Campbellton-Cross Point
Bridge, qu. 573, 3987
Ferry, qu. 573
Canadian Nationals, 777
Canadian National Railways
Gaspesian peninsula, train services, qu. 2623
Tourist traffic in Gaspesian peninsula, qu. 2622
Intercolonial—Campbellford train service, qu. 3903
St. Alexis, qu. 2375, qu. 3582

Marcil, Hon. Charles—Con.
Census commissioners and enumerators, qu. 696
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4284
Dredging, 3985
Gaspé Railway, qu. 962, qu. 2623
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters, 608
Marcil, Mr. Joseph, pension, 3903
Marcil, Mr. Louis T., compensation for injuries, qu. 2942, qu. 3531
Metapedia valley highways, qu. 2505
Parliament buildings, 3993-8
Pensions, payment to Messrs. Louis T. and Joseph Marcil, qu. 2942
Quebec, Oriental and Atlantic and Quebec and Western Railways, qu. 573
Quebec salmon net licenses, qu. 1381, 2506

Marcil, Mr. Joseph, qu. 2942, 3903

Marcil, Mr. Louis T., qu. 2942, qu. 3531

Marcile, Mr. J. E. (Bagot)
Canadian National Railways
Ste. Rosalie-Bagot
Claims between, qu. 571
Disposition of unoccupied land, qu. 572
League of Nations, Canadian representatives, qu. 602

"Marie Lydia," schooner, 1985

Marine. See also Canada Shipping Act; Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Shipping. For vessels, see that title
Department
Estimates, 2190
Johnston, Mr. Alex., reappointment, 644
Marine insurance, 1703
Salaries, 1617
Shipbuilding, 1683. See also that title
Dredging
St. Lawrence Channel, 1991. See also that title
Hospitals, 3135. See also Health
Life-saving service, 1990
Lighthouses. See that title
Montreal Dry Docks and Ship Repairing, Limited, qu. 2191
Navigation
Aids to, 1996
Schools of, 1989
Ocean and river service, 1736, 1979
Pilotage, 1999
Shipbuilding. See that title
Signal service, 1997
Wrecking plants, 1990
Wrecks, investigation, 1988

Mariners, Sick, care of, 3129. See also Health

Maritime Provinces
Railway facilities, improvement of, 4516, 4561
Wooden ships, 1711

Marking of Goods. See Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt. Bill

Marquis Wheat, 1033

Martin, Mr. Peter F. (Halifax)
Highways—Nova Scotia, 4304-7
Parliament buildings, 3993
Public Works—Engineers' Branch, 4090

Marwick, Mitchell and Company, Auditors, 1278, 1694, 1704, 1724, 1866, 1933. See also Canadian National Railways

Massey-Harris Company, 3393, 3496. See also Agricultural Implements

Massey, Hon. Mr., Prime Minister of New Zealand, interview with, 3008

Masters and Mates, Examination, 1736

Matane
Illustration station, 947
Wharves, 3992

Meat and Canned Foods Act
Administration of, 1048

Medicated Wines, 3709

Medicinal Preparations, 3709

Medicine Hat. See also House of Commons
By-election, 2151
Vacancy, 1174, 1293

Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur (Prime Minister)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 28; mover and seconder of Address; personal and public relations with leader of Opposition; position of the Government; proposed amendment to the Address; right of the Government to retain office, 30; successor to and continuation of preceding government; issue in 1917; Government's duty in regard to war problems not yet done; the Government's right to retain office after principle upon which it was elected has been decided; appeal to people after Armistice, 32; no departure from policy justifying an appeal, 33; by-elections; reasons for the amdt., 35; leader of the Opposition seeking alliance with Farmers' party, 36; where Government stands on tariff; leader of Opposition evades issue, 37; no departure from historic policy proposed; challenge to dissolve Parliament; representation of the West, 38; duty of the Government to carry on; Opposition invited to make

Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur—Con.
Address—Con.
clear and specific statement on issue to be decided, 39
Agricultural machinery, standardization of parts, 584
Alderson, Mr. George B., claim for compensation, 2274
Amalgamation of departments, 1331
Amendment to Address, 348
Amendments, want of confidence, 1199
Ames, Sir Herbert, resignation of, 478, 1071, 1298, 1300, 1311
Archives, provision for, 2952
Arctic, expedition, 4106, 4113
Ascension Day adjournment, 2688, 2941
Audibility of debates, 1625
Auditor General's report, delay, 903
Bermuda, trade with, 1271
Board of Trade reports, forms in French, 2819, 3320, 3375
Bolsheviki and wreckers, 3451
Budget, 3322. Congratulations to Minister of Finance; revenue and expenditures; Mr. Fielding's amendment, 3323; Farmers' party servile tools and minions of Opposition, 3324; tinplate industry, 3325; Liberal party and free list, 3328; binder twine; Mr. Clark and free trade, 3330; Mr. Fielding's amendment and tariff reduction; protectionist speeches of Mr. Fielding, 3332; Liberal press and protection, 3336; Government's attitude on tariff matters, 3338; Prime Minister's speech at Sherbrooke, 3339; moderate protection the policy for Canada, 3341; United States tariff revision, 3342
Building Trades Conference, 1498, 1556
Burnham, Dr., treatment of by Serbian Government, 576, 1523
Business of the House, 1340. See also under this title, Estimates, Interim Supply
Adjournments, 1841
Ascension day, 2688, 2941
Eleven o'clock, 1841
Victoria Day, 3531, 3698, 3738
Agriculture and Justice estimates, procedure, 1074
Announcement, 1073
Closure, notice, of, 1979
Complaint of undue haste, 4450
Delay, 1618
Distinction between Ministerial statement and Amdt. in Supply, 1308
Estimates, lateness of hour, 1330
Estimates on Thursdays and Fridays—Rule 17C, 1074, 1215, 1682, 2103-6, 2887, 4544

Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur—Con.
Business of the House—Con.
Legislation pending, 2150, 2819, 3972
Monday—Government business, 2148
Non-debatable motions, 1320
Order of, 1618
Procedure, 1345
Prorogation, 4068, 4340, 4451
Public Bills and Orders, 2819
Second reading by consent, 2890
Questions
Inquiry as to, 2943
Subject matter of, 1071
Sittings
Long, 897
Morning, prorogation, 4340, 4451
Morning and Saturday, 4451
Saturday, 2818, 2777, 2941
Two o'clock, 3737
Wednesday, 1384
Evening, 1002, 1841
Supply, to-morrow, 1270
By-elections
Dates, 903
Medicine Hat, 2151
York-Sunbury, 2151. See also this title,
Canada Temperance Act Bill
Costs, 4386
Damages, 4387
Effect of proposed amendments on plebiscite, 4386
"Having in view the provisions of this Act", 4386
Pending litigation, 4386
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 563
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 1290
Insurance of officers and seamen, 4359
Special Com. proposed, 1440
Statement referred to, 1708
Canadian National Railways
Amqui station, 1177, 1233
Correspondence
Directors, with, 1004
St. Foy round house, 1502
Lord Shaughnessy's letter, 2503, 2890
Management, Information, M. (Mr. King) 1180
Private ownership, and, 1498
St. Foy round house, 767, 1502
Special Committee, reference to
Amdt. (Mr. A. K. Maclean) 1589
Notice of, 1618
Reference to, M. (Mr. Meighen) 1755, 1817, 1803
Amdt. (Mr. Crerar) 1812
Special Committee appointed, 1845
Sully, Que., 1134

Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur—Con.
Canadian National Railways—Con.
Transcontinental, Winnipeg-Quebec service, 2514
Canadian Representation in the United States, 2378-2431
Cattle embargo, 725, 730, 761, 4543
Commission, inquiry, 1072
Chicago Drainage Canal, diversion, 2226
Chief Justice, salary of, 1567
Chippewa Power Canal, 2444
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2776, 2778, 3901, 4485-7
Religious holidays, 4485-7
Returned Soldiers—preference—provisions recommended by Pensions Com., 4257, 4577
Civil Service
Bonus, 901, 1176; statement, 1233; 2029, 2113-15, 3531
Number of civil servants, names, classification, 4255
Religious holidays, 1384, 2776, 4485-7
Superannuation, 2820
Allowances, 2112
Churchill, Rt. Hon. Winston, reported statement, 2567
Conservation Act Repeal Bill, 3958-70
Cost of living, 4551
Crerar, Mr., and attitude on shipbuilding, 1978
Customs, Minister of, private business relations, 3081
Dairy Produce Grading Bill, 3760
Daylight saving in Ottawa, 2776, 2800
Debate
Motion to adjourn by member, closing discussion, 999
Debates, translation of French speeches, 701
Deceased members, tributes to, 3, 152
Destruction of documents, 1625, 2943, 2953, 4558. See also under this head Judge Snider's report
District Engineer's office at Edmonton, 4543
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition plebiscite) 150, 152
Motion to vary order of House, 152, 242
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 2944
Dominion Parks, 1343
Editorial Committee, 4558
Empire Cabinet, proposed, 1385
Estimates. See also under this title Business of the House
Opportunity for studying, 1290
Scrutiny of by Special Com., 1503
Supplementary, inquiry, 4070
Extradition Treaty with United States, 2687

Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur—Con.
Fertilizer Act Amdt. Bill, 2231-4
Foreign trade, 3224
French Trade agreement, 767, 1271, 1351, 1559
Fuel Supply problem, 1268
Special Com. appointed, 1439
Evidence in French, 4251
Gaspé peninsula railway facilities, 2509
German reparation—Canada's claim, 643
Governor General
Address to on retirement, 4433-5
Lord Byng, reported appointment, 4436
Appointment, 4541
Grain inquiry, 1674
Grand Trunk Arbitration, 1498
Correspondence, 1619
Further, tabled, 3738
Progress of, 3321
Revival of, 4436
Grank Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2247, 2346, 2397, 2447-80, 2560-4; Senate amdts. 2777, 2822
Grand Trunk Railway
Assistance, 1498
Default of interest, 1498
Directors, 3741
Interest, alleged default of, 1556
Shareholders—return, 3697, 3740
Highway construction in Ontario, 4300
Homesteads, 1347
Housing, expenditure
Loan, 4552
Point of order, 1135
Hudson Bay Railway, M. involving expenditure, 982
Immigration, Restriction of, 1127
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill, 2819, 4352
Regulations, 1272
Returns, 2568
Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, withdrawn, 4453
Interim supply, 1682. See also under this title Estimates; Supply
Necessity for, 2004
Point of order, 2009, 2010
Procedure under, 1676
Interim Supply Bill, 2101-2116
Interior Department
Editors, 1331
Employees, dismissals, 1345
Surveyor General and International Boundary Commissioners, 1343
International Joint Commission. See also under this title, Lake of the Woods
Lake of the Woods Control, and, 1072, 1176, 1233, 4172
Judge Snider's report, 1625, 2943, 2951, 2445, 3209, 3697, 3905, 4436-53. See also under this head Destruction of documents

Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur—Con.
Judges Act Amdt. Bill, 2117
Labour Department
Alleged combines, 4551
Bolshevism, pamphlet, 4548
Fair wages, 4545
Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 4549-52
Minister, 4545
Letter of in Gazette, 1642
Lake of the Woods Control, 1233. See also under this title International Joint Commission
Board, 789
Inquiry, 1176
Lake of the Woods Control Board Bill, 2033-36, 2348-55
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 3903, 4171-4226
Correspondence, 4170
League of Nations
Canada's contribution, 2356
Labour, 4547
Maisonneuve and Gaspé, representation, 2321-9, 4437
Massey, Hon. Mr., 3008
Ministers to sit in either Chamber, 1157
Ministers of the Crown and directorships, 2228
Musk-ox and reindeer, 4543
National Catholic Labour Unions, 1638
National Industrial Conference, 4549
National Research Institute, 4555.
Natural resources, adjournment of debate, 894
Transfer to western provinces, 1337, 2541-50
Natural Resources Branch, 1343
Naval Service, Capt. Adams' alleged statement, 901
Newsprint, alleged combine, 2099
Northwest Territories Act Amdt. Bill, 3903, 4113
Oil
Leases, 1340, 2377
Surface rights, 583, 666
Oil and Gas permits and leases, 898
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3759, 3889
Ottawa Improvement Commission Act Amdt., 2941
Owens, late Thomas P., Editor of Debates. 258
Park St. Charles Company, proposed payment to, 4574
Parliament buildings
Book on, inquiry, 1175
Inscription on tower, 4543
Pension Act Amdt. Bill, 4262, 4361-5

Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur—Con.
Pensions. See also under this title Soldiers; Returned Soldiers
Deductions for insurance, 629
Widowed mothers, 632
Polish battalion for service in French army, 4054
Prime Ministers' Conference, 564, 1073, 2504, 2634-42, 3320
Naval defence—contribution of dominions to, 4256
Reported statement of Mr. Churchill, 2567
Printing Bureau. See under this title, Destruction of Documents
Privilege
Veniot, Hon. Mr., alleged offer to, 3688. See also under this head York-Sunbury
Privileges and Elections Committee, 2373
Proportional Representation, Special Com. appointed, 1554-5
Quarantine, typhus, 4170
Quebec Steamship Company, 2941
Railway Commission, alleged statements of Chief Commissioner, 2030
Reparations—difficulties between Allied Powers and Germany, 599
Representation in Parliament, vacancies, 1300
Research. See under this title, National Research Institute
Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 4260, 4356-60
Returned Soldiers. See also under this title, Soldiers
Housing, 4362
Relief for, 2688
Review of question, 4361
Special Committee, 732
Unemployment, 4361-4
Returns, inquiries for, 3321
Loans to Greece and Roumania, 3009
Motions for in general terms, 1555
Sheridan, Mr. John, resignation and reinstatement, 1499, 1555
Riding Mountain Park, 1343
Roumania, loan to, 1441
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships) 657, 2228
Senate representation in Saskatchewan, 2567
Shipbuilding, 1290, 1976
M. that further consideration be postponed, 1979
Soldiers' insurance, pensions and reestablishment, 4054
Speaker's Chair, 3692

Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur—Con.
Statistics Act Amdt. Bill, 3758
Supply. See under this head Business of the House; Estimates; Interim Supply
Tariff Commission report, inquiry, 1127
Tariff Revision, 2346. See also under this head Budget
Unemployment relief, 4549
Vacancies, 478, 1304. See also under this head By-elections
Victoria Day adjournment, 3531, 3698, 3738
Water powers, director of, 1345
West Indies Trade—Bermuda, 1271
Western provinces, natural resources, 1338-7
White, Sir Thomas, 477
York-Sunbury election, 2151
Government platform, 3481
Hon. Mr. Veniot, alleged offer to, 3638, 3716, 3688
Correspondence, 3716
Reference to by Mr. Stevens, 3627-8

Meighen, Mr. William, Warden of Dorchester penitentiary, 1092

Members. See House of Commons

Mencius, political economy of, 3228

Mental Defectives, Immigration of. See Immigration

Mental Hygiene, 3143

Merchandise, Branding of. See Customs

Merchant Marine. See Canadian Government Merchant Marine

Merchant Shipping. See Railway Act Amendment

Merchant Ships. See Canadian Government Merchant Marine

Meredith-Duff Commission, 1788

Metal Tokens. See Criminal Code Amdts.

Metropolitan. See North American

Mewburn, Hon. S. C. (East Hamilton)
Battlefields Memorials Commission, competitive designs, 2566
Canadian National Railways and Shipping, Special Com., first report, 2095
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill (Warrant of Commitment) 2686
Fortifications of Quebec, 969
Militia
Cadet services, 2297
Command pay, 2291
Record office, 2281
Patent Act Amdt. Bill, 4457
Pensions
Widowed mothers, 635
Withdrawal from Government, 451

Mexico, compensation, 1507

Michaud, Mr. Pius (Restigouche and Madawaska)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 436; Assembly of the League of Nations; Canada's war sacrifice; nations that profited should help the sufferers; immigration and repatriation; the tariff; early appeal to electors, 437
Canadian National Railways—cedar posts, qu. 1130
Cattle embargo, 566, 4543
Crosspoint-Campbellton bridge, 3987
De Martigny divorce, 3762
Dorchester penitentiary—farm, 1097
Dredging, Restigouche river, 3984
Edmundston post office, qu. 3422
Exchange, value of pound and dollar, qu. 3770
Fertilizer Act Amdt. Bill, 2233
Fisheries—Dominion and provincial jurisdiction, 2105
Grain elevators, 1443
Grand Trunk, Portland terminus, 1384
Madawaska, public building required, 2809
Parliament buildings, 3994
Pension Act Amdt. Bill, 4368
Potato seed inspectors, 1033
St. John and Quebec Railway, qu. 1501
St. John and Quebec Railway Bill, 2031
Sheridan, Mr. John, resignation and reinstatement, 4502
Shipbuilding, 1944
Tariff Commission, report, 1127
Transcontinental Railway
Claims against, 1656
Wilson, Judge, qu. 1622

Middlebro, Mr. W. S. (North Grey)
Ames, Sir Herbert, resignation, 1296
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2934
Civil Service (Res. Sir Sam Hughes) Political patronage, 831
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2467-71
Pairs—Correction of list, 563
Privileges and Elections Committee, 2373

Migratory Birds Convention Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 2442; 2r., 2891; 3r., 2892
Enforcement, 4496

Militarism, 2294-2305, 2789-93. See also Military Expenditures

Military Authority. See Quebec riots

Military Districts, 2788-92
No. 12, 2279

Military Expenditures, 266, 509, 2294, 2305, 2792, 3269
Comparison by years and countries, 3270
Defence figures of various countries, 3275

Military Preparation, 2294, 2305

Military Service Act, 320, 356, 2807, 3200, 3678. See also Quebec Riots
Employment of Mr. Stewart, qu. 2028
Exemption of farmers, 3516, 3592

Military Stores Shed, Cartier Square, qu. 3208

Militia and Defence
Annual drill, 2294, 3405
M. (Mr. McCoig) to reduce amount, 2296
Armouries for public meetings, 901
Associations, grants to, 2439
Cadet services, 2296
Command pay, 2290
M. (Mr. Power) to reduce amount, 2292
Department
Anderson, Mr. A. H., qu. 735
Ashley, Sergt. T., qu. 3090
Black, Mr. A. H., qu. 755
Brackenbury, Mr. G. B., qu. 735
Central registry, 2281
Chief Engineer and Controller of Military lands, 2241
Douglas, Mr. H. S., dismissal of, qu. 735, 2246, 2277
Employees
Female, 2286
Increase in number, 2014
Quebec, in, dismissal, 2237
Retirement of, 4267-70
Engineer services, 2439
Permanent force, strength, 2278, 2797, 2800
Photographers, 2245
Record office, 2241, 2278-80
Salaries, 2234, 2275
Separation Allowance and Assigned Pay Branch, 2281
Supplies, 2239, 3244-5
Sale of to Roumania and Greece, 2245, 3564
Transfer to other departments, 1098
Survey Division, 2243, 2284
Topographic Surveys, 2806
Estimates
M. (Mr. Pedlow) to reduce amount, 2287-8
Highland regiments, 2307
Lee-Enfield rifle, 2783
Military and civilian caretakers, qu. 4340
Military district No. 12, 2279, 2792-97
Ordnance Arms and Lands, 2441, 2781
Permanent Force, 2278, 2797, 3279, 3405
Pensions, 2278, 2236
Strength, 2235
Purchasing Commission and Supplies, 2239
Ross rifle, 2783

Militia and Defence—Con.
Royal Military College, 2802
Staff
Pay, 2787
Reduction, 2234-46, 2282
Warlike stores, 2807

Milk, Prices of, 3197

Milk River, water rights, qu. 2099

Milk-Testing, 1037

Mill Feed, 1126. See also Feeds, Live Stock

Milling Industry, 3543, 3544

Mines and Minerals, 2141, 2162, 3250. See also Coal; Geological Survey; Natural Resources; Lignite Research
Alberta penitentiary mining rights, 1092
Conservation Commission, 3965
Development of, 841
Federal mining legislation, 871
Imperial Mineral Resources Bureau, 4498
Machinery, duties on, 373
Returned soldiers, prospecting, 871
Zinc deposits of Gaspé, 876

Minister of Customs and Excise, 3785

Ministers and Directorships, 258, 585, 650 2228. See also Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill

Ministers
Cabinet, and Post Office Department, qu. 1349. See also Blondin, Hon. P. E.; Minister of Labour; Postmaster General
Personal business, 3079, 3173-6, 3612
Proposed right to sit in either Chamber
M. (Mr. Lemieux) 1152; withdrawn, 1173
Upper Chamber in, 1154

Minority Representatives. See Proportional Representation

Missals. See Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill

Missisquoi Bay, net fishing. qu. 570

Missisquoi County
Census commissioners, qu. 1132. See also Census
Income tax forms in, 1176

Mitchell, Mr. A. J., 1609-10. See also Canadian National Railways
Business interests of, 3610

Model Villages. See Housing

Molloy, Mr. J. P. (Provencher)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 495; congratulations to Prime Minister; demand for an election; the sub-amendment; redistribution and representation, 496; the amendment; soldiers, farmers, and business men; women against the Government; changed conditions, 497; danger in Government delaying; the Minister of Militia; Liberal and Agrarian platforms; the recall, 498; the acid test; Government must satisfy the manufacturers; tyranny and terrorism in 1917; people calling for an election, 499
Blood Indian reserve, qu. 1817, 1818
Live stock and grazing leases, qu. 1819, 2098, 2374, 2618
Fort Garry hotel, Winnipeg, qu. 1348
Grain Inquiry, Counsel, Secretary, cost, qu. 2625
Health of Animals
Glandered horses, 1054
Hog cholera, 1053
Inspectors, 1054
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4199
Manitoba harbours and rivers, 3975
Western farmers, 1035

Molasses
For destructive insects, 1027
For hog feed, 3787

Monastery station, 4324

Moncton
Canadian National shops, 1851
Census enumerators, 3972
Engine terminal site, 1017
Examining warehouse, 2815

Mondou, Mr. A., and Yamaska by-election, 3251

Monetary Standards, qu. 1133. See also Finance

Monsarrat, Mr. C. N., and Quebec bridge, 1653, 1670-71

"Montcalm," icebreaker, 1985

Montenegro Hospital Mission. See Burnham, Dr.

Montizambert, Dr., 3133

Mont Joli, 1800

Montmorency County, Tourist traffic, 4332

Montreal
Bank of, and Government ownership, 1895
Customs revenue, 3086
Grain handling at, 3371. See also Grain and Grain Trade

Montreal—Con.
Inquiry into public services, qu. 604
Post Office, Mutual Benefit Society, qu. 567
Registration of Government ships at, 1720
Revenue offices, qu. 1820
Transcontinental railway, qu. 574. See also Canadian National Railways

Montreal and South Shore Bridge, M. (Mr. Archambault) 2211

Montreal Dry Docks and Ship Repairing, Limited, qu. 2191

Montreal Gazette
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, comment on, 1707
National Catholic Labour Unions, 1627. See also Labour
Shipbuilding, criticism, 1893, 1900, 1917

Montreal Harbour Commission
Cold storage plants, 1041

Montreal Harbour Commission Bill
Res. 2151; 1r., 2160; 2r., com., 2268; 3r., 2269

Montreal Locomotive Company, 1203

Montreal Progressive Club and Mr. L. J. Gauthier, M.P., qu. 1131

Montreal-Quebec Pilots, superannuation, qu. 1501. See also Pilotage

Moore, Mr. Tom, and Labour, 1627, 1632, 1636

Morley, Alberta, air station, 3780

Morphine Imports, 3130. See also Opium and Narcotic Drugs Act Amdt. Bill

Morphy, Mr. H. B. (North Perth)
Air Board, 3780
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2931-3
Budget, 3454. Congratulations to Minister; free trade and protection; United Kingdom and Customs duties, 3455; United States protective tariff; beet sugar industry, 3456; Great Britain and world trade, 3457; protection of industries, 3459; trade with the United States, 3460; trade agents; Canadian Merchant Marine, attack on, 3462
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 2261-2
Canadian Nationals Definition Bill, 768
Canadian National Railways, Toronto train connections, 4569
Canadian representation in the United States, 2404-30
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2827-79

Morphy, Mr. H .B.—Con.
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 4119
Copyright Amendment and Consolidation Bill, 3841
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3923-31
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Invoice certificate, fee, 4393
Molasses wash for hog feed, 3787
Trade agents, 3788-95
United States consular service, 3796
Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt. Bill
Imported goods, marking of, 3952
Customs officer at Listowel, 3084
Debates, Official, distribution of, 2223
Entomology Bureau, 1025
Fuel Supply Problem, 1265
Geological survey, 2144-7
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2457
Great War Veterans, qu. 455
Highways
Construction in Ontario, 4304
London-Stratford-Sarnia, 4307
Hog cholera—Alderson claim, 1063
Illustration farms and stations in Ontario, 952
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 615
Linen yarn, bounty on, 1389
Maisonneuve and Gaspé, representation, 2331
Militia—photographers, 2245
Military districts, 2788-9
Polish battalion for service in French Army, 4056
Rulings and statements as Chairman
Estimates, vote to be dealt with as a whole, 2750
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships) 654
Stratford customs office, 3085
Trade agents and commissioners, 1475-77, 3460, 3788-95
Tuberculosis and pleuro-pneumonia in cattle, 1051
Wednesday evening adjournment, 1835
Wheat market, 1452

Morrison, Mr. J. J., rural depopulation, 403

Mortgages. See Housing

Motor Cars, Theft of. See Criminal Code Amendment Bill

Mounted Police. See Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Moving Pictures. See Trade and Commerce

Mowat, Mr. H. M. (Parkdale)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 171; Liberal-Unionists; conditions of 1864 and 1917; George Brown; no difference in principle between parties, 172; municipal and common rights v. rights of corporations; temperance legislation; woman suffrage; Liberal measures sponsored by Government; nationalization of railways; the game of politics, 173; amendment; election; leader of the Opposition wants power; ambitions that came to naught, 174; no reason for want of confidence vote; the tariff; policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier; tariff resolution of Liberal Convention of 1919, 175; "substantial reductions", 176; National Liberal and Conservative party; Canada's status as a nation, 177
Armistice Day and Thanksgiving, 2555
Armistice Day Bill, 2618
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2926
Canada Temperance Act
Costs, 4378
Rights of litigants, 4378
Commercial agents in the United States, 1473
Copyright Amdt. and Consolidation Bill, 3834-48
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3931-36
Probation of Offenders, 2097, 3931
Dogs, docking of, 3936
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. (Prohibition plebiscite) 311
Fortifications at Kingston, 969
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2465
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 687
Housing, 1148
Judges Act Amdt. Bill, 3010
Lake of the Woods Control Board Bill, 2350-2
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4225
Ministers to sit in either Chamber, 1167
North American Trust Company, 1127-8, 1130
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3865
Parliament buildings, 4000
Private Bills, extension of time, 1625
Probation of offenders, 2097, 3931
Railway Commission—alleged statement of Chief Commissioner, 2029
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships) 595

Mulgrave
Ice tenders, qu. 963

Mulgrave-Canso Steamship services, 1496

Municipal Cold Storage Plants, 1040

Murdock, Mr. James, 3603-4. See also Board of Commerce

"Muriel W.", steamer, 1990

Murphy, Hon. Charles (Russell)
Ambassador at Washington, qu. 671
Budget, date of, qu. 993
Budget, 3635; comment on speech of Mr. Stevens, 3636; Liberal Convention and Liberal platform, 3637; Mr. Crerar and York-Sunbury election, 3637; Budget born of necessities of Government, 3639; burden of taxation, 3640; Tariff Commission, 3640; speeches of Hon. Mr. Guthrie and Hon. Mr. Ballantyne, 3641; Hon. Mr. Calder and the Tariff, 3644; Canadian Manufacturers Association—Mr. G. M. Murray, 3645; newspapers—manufacturers, editorial control of, 3646
Building Trades Conference, 1498
Business of the House
Saturday sittings, 2941
Canadian Nationals Definition Act, 771, 2032
Canadian National Railways
Employees remuneration, qu. 1672, 1737
Lord Shaughnessy's letter, 2890
Management, Information—M. (Mr. King) 1198
Special Committee
M. (Mr. A. K. Maclean) 1573
M. (Mr. Meighen) 1806
Chief Electoral Officer's reports, qu. 577
Chippewa power canal, 2444
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2779, 2833-70, 2940
Returned soldiers, 4260
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill, foreign consular service, 3808-3995
Debates, translation of French speeches, 702
De Martigny divorce, 3765
Empire Cabinet proposed, 1385
Entomology—increase in item, 1024
Expeditionary force—Canteen funds, qu. 1133
Fox-breeding, 1430
French Trade Agreement, printing, 1380
Governor General, suggested appointment of Lord Burnham, qu. 599
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 1498, 2448-77
Grand Trunk loan, 4135-7
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 751
Griffenhagen and Associates, 1555. See also under this title, Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill

Murphy, Hon. Charles—Con.
Hickman, alleged deportation, qu. 574
Highways
Construction in Ontario, 4295
Hull-Wakefield, 3034
Imaginary letters, 3261
Immigration, 2570-5
Mental defectives, 3583
Officials, 3060
Woman supervisor, position, 3058, 3062
Imperial Conference, 1073
Income and Business Profits Taxes, qu 837
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 609
Interim Supply, granting of, 2007
Judge Snider's report, 4436
Lake of the Woods Control Board Bill, 2034-36
Lord Byng, appointment, 4541
Luxury tax, qu. 600
Macallum, Professor, 1431
Massey, Hon. Mr., 3008
National Gallery, 2684
National Research Institute, 2962-2708
Naval Service, Capt. Adams, alleged statement, 901
Parliament buildings, 4071-6
Pension Act Amdt. Bill, 4373
Prime Ministers' Conference, reported statement of Mr. Churchill, 2567
Printing Bureau
Employees in, qu. 1131
Extension to building, qu. 1383
Quebec riots, 1510
Questions, inquiry for, 1502
Research Council, industrial chemistry, 1434
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act Amdt. Bill, 2481-2
Royal Canadian Mounted Police at Thorold, qu. 574
Royal Military College, 2805
Trade with Russia, 1003
Veniot, Hon. Mr., 3637, 3688
Welland canal, obstruction, 1990

Murray, Mr. G. M.
Editorial control of newspapers, 330, 442, 2622, 3645-7

Murray Bay public works, qu. 604

Murray Bay-Tadoussac Steamship Service, M. (Mr. Casgrain) for papers, 1528, 1822, 1825, 1930

Musk Ox and Reindeer. See Reindeer

Musselman, Mr. J. B., 3382

Myers, Mr. E. T. W. (Kindersley)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 388; Amendment to amendment (Mr. Campbell); congratulations Prime Minister; tariff; policies of the parties; alliance between Liberals and National Progressives; reform of Senate; freight rates, 389; Canadian National Railways; coal; the grain trade; Wheat Board, 390; Royal Commission to inquire into marketing; shipment through Canadian ports; no urgent demand for election; redistribution, 392
Canadian Wheat Board, qu. 340
Income tax collections in Saskatchewan, qu. 2028

Nadeau, Dr., 3133

Nagle and Wigmore, 3077, 3172. See also Customs, Minister of

Nantel, Hon. Mr., 3019

Napier, Mr. J. J., qu. 1624

Nappan, Gurnsey cattle at, qu. 2686

"Narbethong," steamer, 2175

Narcotic Drugs. See Opium and Narcotic Drugs

National Advisory Council, 4363. See also Research

National Assets. See Fuel Supply Problem; Natural Resources

National Battlefields Commission
Fort Cumberland and Fort Moncton, 4540
Fortifications of Quebec, 967

National Catholic Labour Unions. See Labour

National Dairy Council, 1126

National Expenditures, Committee on, 1835. See also Estimates

National Gallery, 2684

National Industrial Conference, 4549. See also Labour

National Liberal Convention. See Liberal Convention

National Parks, 4495. See also Dominion Lands and Parks

National Policy, 3220, 3569. See also Address; Budget

National Progressive Party. See Progressive

National Railways. See Canadian National Railways

National Railways and Shipping, Special Com., reference to
M. (Mr. Meighen) 1755; names substituted, 2776. See also Canadian National Railways

National Research Institute, 886, 2566, 2688, 2892, 4555. See also Research Council Act Amdt.
Annual report, 2897
Bequests and donations, 2896
Bursarships and studentships, 2894
Co-ordination, 2892
Council, 2892
Discoveries and inventions, 2895
Establishment of, 886
Materials, investigation and standarization, 2893
Trade agents, 2893

National Transcontinental Railway. See Canadian National Railways

Natural Gas, 879. See also Gas; Oil and Gas

Natural Resources. See also Coal; Fuel Supply problem; Mines and Minerals; Research
Aerial explorations and surveys, 3776
Canadian hinterland, 852
Conservation Commission, 3961
Control of, 857
Development of, Res. (Mr. Manion) 841; neg, 894
Drainage of flooded areas, 871
Intelligence Bureau, 1343
Investigation of, 845
Mackenzie Basin, 879
Maple industry, 887
National Research Institute, 886. See also that title
Ownership of, 879
Timber and minerals, 893
Western provinces, of, 3555
Transfer to, 1336-40
Demand for, 484
M. (Mr. Campbell) 2519-84

Naturalization, 781. See also Canadian Nationals; Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill

Naturalization Act, 1914, Amdt. Bill (Aliens who served in Allied Armies)
1r., 2441

Nauru Island, phosphate deposits, 4541, 4255

Naval Defence, 183, 227, 266. See also Naval Service; Prime Ministers' Conference
Contribution of Dominions, inquiry, 4256

Naval Service. See also Canadian Navy
Adams, Capt. Henry C., inquiry, 901, qu. 1237
Air stations, 3780
Appropriation, 4017-19
Cost of maintenance, 2107
Estimates, 4010
Esquimalt, Naval College, 4016
Fisheries protection, 4036
Halifax and Esquimalt, dockyards, 4017-36
Halifax naval college, 4010
Naval cadets in Imperial navy, 4017
Naval holiday, 4020
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," disposal of, qu. 671, 4010-36, 4041
Pacific coast, vessels on, 4016
Preference in Civil Service appointments, 4482
Royal Canadian navy, estimates, 4010
Vessels presented by British Admiralty, 4016-23

Navigable Waters, obstructions, 1989

Navigation. See also Marine
Aids to, 1996
Schools of, 1989

Navy. See Naval Service

Navy League of Canada, grant, 4535

Nelson, Mr. Christian, 2880

"Neophyte", steamer, 1966

Nesbitt, Mr. E. W. (North Oxford)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 60. Government's term of office; no reason to seek re-election; group government versus the two-party system; War Times Election Act; Quebec most stable province; unemployment insurance; the labour situation, 61; extravagant living followed by curtailment; work the only salvation, 62; the "interests" all must work together; the Government not responsible for unemployment; the tariff—reasonable protection, 63; members not elected to promote partisan, selfish interests, 64
Agricultural shows, 1245
Alcohol for hospitals, 3706
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2933-6
Budget, 3252. Sugar, price of; congratulations to Minister of Finance, 3253; income and business profits tax; tariff

Nesbitt, Mr. E. W.—Con.
Budget—Con.
revision, 3254; reciprocity; free trade England, 3255; revenue and expenditure; cost of living, 3256; immigration; Great Britain and free trade, 3258
Canada Temperance Act
Cases pending, 4377
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 2253
Canadian National Railways
Special Committee, reference to
M. (Mr. A. K. Maclean) 1607
M. (Mr. Meighen) 1784
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2863, 4267-73, 4493
Consular agents, 1479
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Dumping, 4414
Invoice certificate, fee, 4393
Trade agents in United States, 4393
Trade commissioners, 4393
Valuation for duty, 4415
Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt. Bill
Imported goods, marking of, 3712, 3724, 3942-55
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition plebiscite) 306
Experimental farms and stations in Ontario, 950
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2460-75
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 741
Health of Animals, 4508
Hog cholera, compensation, 1060
Housing, 1142
Hudson Bay Railway, 992
Immigration, 2602
Imported goods, marking of, 3712, 3724, 3942-55
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 612
National Research Institute, 2693
North American Trust Company, 1130
Pension Act Amdt. Bill, 4367-73
Pensions, widowed mothers, 636
Polish battalion for service in French army, 4057
Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 4262, 4357
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships) 651
Soldiers' pensions, insurance and re-establishment, 4057
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Containers, 3755
Sales tax, 3735
Unemployment and immigration, 1357

New Brunswick
Minister of Public Works and York-Sunbury election, 3480. See also Veniot; York-Sunbury

Newcombe, Mr. E. F., and Grand Trunk Arbitration, qu. 1002

Newfoundland
Sick mariners, 3139
Steamship service, 1485, 1686, 1712

Newport News, Canadian vessels at, 1689, 1722

New York
Immigration officers at, 3131
Loans on Canadian bonds, 3288
Shipping pool, 1713

New Zealand
Steamship service, 1493
Trade with, 1223

Newspaper Comments on Shipbuilding. See Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Montreal; Press; Shipbuilding

Newspapers. See Press

Newsprint, alleged combine, qu. 2099

Nickel, Coinage, 2160
Five cent coin, 2160, 2269

Nicholson, Mr. Donald (Queen's, P.E.I.)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 556; congratulations to Prime Minister; speech of Mr. Cannon; the Government's mandate; soldiers' vote in 1917, 556; the charge of coercion; majorities of Mr. Wigmore and Mr. McCurdy; Prime Minister's Truro speech; Canadian Mercantile Marine, 557; Magdalen Islands, Prince Edward Island; revenue, expenditure and taxation; highway expenditure in Nova Scotia; Mr. Maclean, Halifax, 558; revenue requirements; Mr. Gauthier; Quebec and other provinces, 559; stand by the national policy; toleration, 560
Highways, Prince Edward Island, qu. 2345

Nicholson, Mr. George B. (East Algoma)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 283; congratulations to Prime Minister; a unique debate; no constructive criticism by Opposition; "bloodless neutrality"; programme of legislation; unemployment insurance and old age pensions, 284; League of Nations; the tariff; the Government's mandate, 285; unrest amongst business men and soldiers, 286; suggestion that leader of Opposition should form Government a "flagrant insult" to returned men; election, 287; policy of Opposition; Farmers' party, 288; United Grain Growers; stock feed; attitude towards farmers and milling industry; Mr. Norman Lambert, 289; flour, agricultural implements, profits—Mr. Rice-Jones; payments to newspaper for educational propaganda; campaign of "blatant hypocrisy", 290; increased representation for Quebec; the Prime Minister and Quebec—harmony, not discord, 291

Nicholson, Mr. George B.—Con.
Budget, 3299. Flotation of Canadian National Railway bonds in New York; foreign loans, 3300; Canadian National Railways; railway merging, 3308
Canadian National Railways
Special Com., reference to M. (Mr. Meighen) 1794
Canal tolls, 2975
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill
Foreign-born wives of British subjects, 3103, 3106
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2565
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 690
Interim supply, reduction of items, 2023
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2797
Railways and ships, 1730
Research, 1432
Supply—point of order, 2757
Trent canal, construction, 3975

"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale of, qu. 671, 4010-36, 4041. See also Naval Service

Nolan Bill, 3008

Non-Confidence Motions, 1184. See also House of Commons, Divisions

Non-Political Operation of Railways. See Canadian National Railways

Norman, Dam. See Lake of the Woods

Norris, Hon. Mr., 4198

Norrish, Mr., 1226

North American Trust Company, 1094, 1127. See Private Bills Discussed

Northcliffe, Lord. See Gulf Pulp and Paper Company

North Sydney
Port of, 1282
Public Works—removal of officials, 2817
Terminus, 1487

North West Grain Dealers Association, 277, 297, 379

Northwest Territories Act Amdt. Bill (Council)
1r., 3903; 2r., com., 3r., 4113

Northwest Territories Explorations, 4494

Nova Scotia
Canadian National Railways
Freight to certain points, qu. 1620
Coal supplies, 1261, 3295. See also Fuel Supply
Fruit inspectors in, 1041, 1045
Highways, 4304-7
Mines. See Fuel Supply; Great Lakes-St. Lawrence

Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, 1611, 3407

Norwegian Boats and coastal trade, 1494

Nursery Plants, fumigation of, 1028, 1031

Oatmeal, tax on, 3735

Oats, 3395
Banner, 1033
Quaker, 2954-76, 3455. See also Grain; Trent Canal

Obregon, General, 1507

Ocean. See also Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Shipbuilding; Steamship services
Freight rates, 1936-61
Decline, 1273
Pacific steamship service, 1493
Shipments by United States ports, 1975
Shipping—Government control of, qu. 3530
Trade routes, 1888

Ocean and River Service, 1736, 1979

Ocean Limited, 1800

O'Connor, Mr. W. F., and cost of living, 3548, 3606

Ogilvie, Messrs. D. W., and Company, 1846

Oil. See also Oil and Gas; Natural Resources; Petroleum
Bounties, 1385, 1413. See also Trade and Commerce
Development, 844, 2162-4
Expenditure for discovery, qu. 695
Government regulation, 3539

Oil—Con.
Leases, qu. 564, 3539
Issuing of, 598, 2377
Delay, 2029, 2377
Payments under, qu. 673
Mackenzie district in, 879, 2162, 3206
Purchase from Great Britain, 1253
Regulations, 1340
Rentals, qu. 672
Stability of title, 854
Surface rights, res. (Mr. Griesbach) 578; withdrawn, 666
Wells, penalty for injuring, 3922

Oil and Gas
Leases and permits, qu. 734
Res. (Mr. Mackie, Edmonton) 894; withdrawn, 901
Rights, 2555

Oil Burning Steamers. See Canada Shipping Act Amdt. Bill

Old Age
Pensions, 2, 9, 231, 237, 263, 284, 395
Provision for. See Housing

Oleomargarine, 3384. See also Dairying
Importation of, 3852, 4439
Inquiry, 3531
Inspectors under, 1068
Materials for, importation, 3747

Oleomargarine, 3384. See also Dairying
Res. 563, 3759; 1r., 3760; m. for 2., 3850; Amdt. (Mr. Denis) 3879; neg. 3886; com., 3886; 3r., 3905
Subjects and Sections discussed:
Label with statement of ingredients
Amdt. (Mr. Robb) neg. 3896
Manufacture, importation and sale
Amdt. (Mr. Manion), limitation of one year, 3886
Agreed to, 3896
Amdt. to amdt. (Mr. Sutherland), oleomargarine not to contain milk or cream, 3887, neg. 3896

Ontario
Drury and Drury Govt. See that title
Duff, the late Hon. James, Minister of Agriculture, 1033
Government, expenditures, 3495. See also Drury
Highways, work on, qu. 1237. See also Highways
Prohibition plebiscite, 303
Referendum Committee, 304
Renfrew returning officer, 820
Voters' lists, 150, 242, 259, 303
Timber limits, 3391

One-sixth Vote. See Interim Supply

Open Market. See Canada Grain Act

Operation of Railways. See Canadian National Railways

Opium, imports of, 3130. See also Opium and Narcotic Drugs

Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. See also Health Department
Administration of, 3130
Convictions under, 3134

Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill
Res. 1069, 2263; 1r., 2268; 2r., ref. to Special Com., 2346; com., 2897; 3009; 3r., 3009
Report of Special Committee, 2708
Senate amdts. concurred in, 4062
Subjects and Sections discussed:
Failure to pay fine, 2908
Household remedies, 2902
Indictable offence, 2897
Penalty, 2897-2907
Possession, 2903-6
Prescriptions not to be filled more than once, 2897
Sale or gift to minors, 2897
Whipping, 2897

Orders in Council. See also Purchasing Commission
Appointment of representatives to Assembly of League of Nations, 188
Immigration, 2585
Peace Conference, 397

Oriental Immigration. See Chinese

Ottawa
Cartier square, stores shed, qu. 3208
Daly building, rental, 4094
Daylight saving, 2687, 2776
Hunter building, 4094
Lighting roads and bridges, 4090
Noon gun, 4091
Newspapers and shipbuilding, 1925
Parliament buildings, 3992. See also that title
Public buildings, 4101
Rental of buildings in, 3989, 4092-6
The "Reno" of Canada, 4474

Ottawa Improvement Commission Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 2941; 2r., com., 3r., 3759

Overages. See Grain

Owen Sound, wharf, 3974

Owens, the late Thomas P., Editor of Debates, tribute to, 258, 430

Oyster Culture, 2177

Pacaud, Mr. L. T. (Megantic)
Belgium, credit to, qu. 577, qu. 1001
Purchases in Canada, qu. 736
Budget, 3343. Importance of debate; inefficiency of Administration, 3344; extravagance and economy, 3345; control by Parliament of necessary expenditures, 3346; credits to foreign countries; amendment of Mr. Fielding, 3347
Canadian Government Merchant Marine
"Canadian Ranger" and "Seigneur", qu. 1382

Pacific Ocean
Steamship service, 1493
Trade, 3649

Pacific Salvage Company, Limited, 1990

Packing Houses. See Health of Animals; Oleomargarine
Cold storage plants, and, amount collected, 607

Pagè, Dr., 3133

Paintings, in Senate Chamber, qu. 566

Pairs. See House of Commons, Divisions

Palmerston, Lord, and Don Pacifico, 1522

Panama Canal, Canadian shipments by, 3047

Panet, Mr. L. C., appointment as Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms, 3

Paper, Newsprint. See Newsprint

Papineau, Mr. L. J. (Beauharnois)
Canadian National Railway vessels, qu. 1349
Canadian Postal Guide, qu. 1349
Parliament buildings, furniture, qu. 2192
Staples, Mr. W. D., qu. 3260
War, adjustment of accounts, Canada-Great Britain, qu. 2191

Parasites. See Destructive Insects

Pardee, Mr. F. F. (West Lambton)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 479; congratulations to Prime Minister; Minister of Militia, chameleon-like change of policy; the tariff red-herring; favoured free agricultural implements in 1914, 479; the Farmers' party, 480; reprisals against the United States; dissolution and appeal; by-elections; the "remnant" of Liberalism, 481; rural and urban representation; resignations of ministers; trust the people, 482

Pardee, Mr. F. F.—Con.
Budget, 3497. Tariff revision; luxuries tax; Great Britain, 3498; foreign trade; shipbuilding; railways and public ownership, 3499; position of Liberal and Agrarian parties, 3500
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2840
Civil Service bonus, 2111
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3908-28
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill, brokers, 4432
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 743
Harbours and rivers, amdt. 3979
Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3826
French language, 3824
Interior Department, draughtsmen, 1334
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4177-4226
Amdt. to 3r., 4226
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale of, 4018-32
Representation in Parliament, 1326

Parent, Mr. George (Quebec West)
Agricultural shows, 1242
Amherst drill hall, 2739
Annapolis public building, 2764
Boots and shoes, Canadian, 1225
Canadian Nationals Definition Act, 779
Canadian National Railways
Agents, 1605
Cancellation of trains, 1004
St. Augustin station, qu. 695, 3018
St. Foy round house, Res. 840, 967, qu. 1501
Correspondence, 1502, 1659
Shawinigan service, qu. 573
Chinese Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3829
Compensation for slaughtered cattle, 1050
De Martigny divorce, 3762-9, 4006
Director of Commercial Exhibits, 1226
Dominion Shipbuilding and Repair Company, qu. 3423
"Druid," steamer, 1984
Experimental farms, hours and pay, 932
Fruit inspection, 1047
Fuel Supply, Special Com., evidence in French, 4251
Highways, amount of vote, 3024
Icebreakers and steamers, repairs, 1979
Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3822-5
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 608
Intercolonial Railway
Work at Charny and St. Foy, qu. 1501
Interior Department, dismissal of employees, 1345
International Customs Tariff Bureau, 1438
Liquor, tax on, 3707
Militia
Dismissal of employees in Quebec, 2237
Surveys division, 2244

Parent, Mr. George—Con.
Montreal Harbour Commission, 2269
National Catholic Labour Unions, 1646
National Research Institute, 2896
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale, 4011-13
Pilotage, 1999
Post Office Act Amdt. Bill, 2120-24
Prince Rupert Dry Dock Engineering Company, qu. 3423
Printing, Government, 1439
Quebec riots, 1918, Res. 974, 1503
Railway Commission—jurisdiction, 3017
Railways, law costs, 3015
St. Augustin Station, qu. 695, 3018
St. Lawrence dredging, 1992
Supply—procedure, 3014
Surveyor General and Boundary Commissioners, 1342
Trent canal, 2606-16
Waterpowers, director of, 1346
Welland Canal, construction, 2990-3001
Wrecks, investigation, 1988

Paris Agency, 2437

Paris Green, 1030

Park St. Charles Company, Limited, proposed payment to, 4570

Parks. See also Dominion Lands and Parks
Antelope for, qu. 1134

Parliament
Availability of Information. See Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Canadian National Railways
Earlier sessions of, 1843
Information for. See Ministers
Prorogation. See that title
Representation in, 1293. See also House of Commons, Vacancies

Parliament Buildings, 3992, 4040, 4070-8
Acoustics, 3998-9, 4000
Architects' commission, 3995-4000
Brown, Hon. George—letter to Sir John Macdonald on former buildings, 4002
Building stone, 3994
Commons Chamber, 3996
Concrete, 3997
Cost, 3993-7, 4000
Draughts, 3998
Expenditure, qu. 4341
Furniture, qu. 2192
Inscription on central column, qu. 568
Inscription on tower, 3995-8, 4543
Library, 4000
Probable date of completion, 3992
Purchase of materials, 3994
Tower, 3993-9

Parliamentary and Departmental Printing, 1438. See also Printing Bureau

Parliamentary Control of Railways. See Canadian National Railways Special Committee

Parliamentary Elections. See Proportional Representation

Parliamentary Government. See Representation in Parliament

Parliamentary Guide, purchase of copies, 4533

Parliamentary Procedure. See Deputy Speaker; House of Commons; Speaker

Parliamentary Restaurant, 4536
Additional vote for, 4535
Joint Committee, 303
Manager, 2027

Participation Certificates, 340. See also Address; Canadian Wheat Board

Partridge Island Quarantine Station, 2808-15

Party Politics. See Canadian National Railways, Management

Passport Office, 2436

Pas, The, wharf, 3976

Patent Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 3007; 2r., 4453; com., 4456; 3r., 4460; Senate amdts. 4544
Subjects and Sections discussed:
Alien enemies, 4456
Fee, 4456
No patent void by failure to make or import between August 1, 1914, and Jan 10, 1922, 4457
Return of fees, 4457
Rights of those who have commenced to make, use, or sell, 4459
Time extended, 4457
United States legislation, 4454-60
Validity of patents protected during war, 4459

Patent Act Consolidation Bill, 4456

Patent Medicines, tax on, 3120, 3727-28

Patents, Commissioner of, 623. See also Exchequer Court Act Amdt. Bill

Patents of Invention Acts Consolidation Bill
1r., 303; M. for 2r., 2890; withdrawn, 2891

Patronage. See Canadian National Railways; Civil Service

Peace Conference, 164, 2629. See also Address; League of Nations; Permanent Court of International Justice; Prime Ministers' Conference
French Canadians, unrepresented, 552
Orders in Council, 397

Peat Industry, 2689. See also Supply problem

Peck, Mr. C. W. (Skeena)
Australian steamship services, 1495
Burnham, Dr., case of, 1526
Dease and Stikine rivers, qu. 1133
High Commissioner's office, 2438
Military districts, 2789
Militia, command pay, 2292
Rulings and Statements as Chairman
Decision of Chair must not be questioned, 1904
Members, reflections on, 1903
Shipbuilding, 1923
Interruption in debate, 1898
Special Committee on Returned Soldiers, 788

Pecuniary Claims Convention, qu. 736, qu. 1817, qu. 2027

Pedlow, Mr. Isaac E. (South Renfrew)
Air Board, 3778-82
Alberta penitentiary, 1115
Armistice Day Bill, 3773-6
Canadian National Railways
Purchasing agent, 1659
Cattle embargo, Amdt., 725, 758
"Champlain", steamer, 1995
Chief, Foreign Tariffs Division, 1437
Civil Service Classification
Filing clerks, 1660
Griffenhagen, 2242
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2488-2500
Civil Service (Res. Sir Sam Hughes) Political patronage; Liberal platform and administration, 815; defeated candidate should not control patronage; condition of civil service; discontent, dissatisfaction and unrest; classification and reorganization; Printing Bureau, 816; Civil Service Commission, competitive examination; census commissioners and enumerators, 817; prohibition plebiscite, returning officer at Renfrew, 820
Coats, Mr. R. H., salary of, 1232
Cocoa preparations, 3703
Confidential messengers, 1334
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Currency inflation and commodity prices, 4431
Fines, 4392

Pedlow, Mr. Issac E.—Con.
Customs and Excise—Con.
German bounty on sugar, 4432
German mark, 4431
Imports and exchange, 3810-12
Invoice certificate, 3799, 3803-04
Fee—who pays? 3804, 4391-4409
Obstacles to importation, 4410-16
Restrictions on trade—letter from Gillies Bros., Ltd., 4418
Trade agents, 4410
Valuation of currency, 3809-12-19, 4430
Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt. Bill
Imported goods, marking of, 3938-55, Amdt. 3955
Customs estimates, 3087
Demography, chief of division, 1232
Fisheries, 2177-90
Flax industry, 1398, 1401
Free trade—Mr. Cockshutt, 3747
Halladay, Mr,, and Canada Cycle and Motor Co., 1227
Harbours and rivers, estimates, 3976-9
Horse-breeding, 1121
Imported goods, marking, 3712, 3720-23, 3938-55
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters, 612
Interior Department, employees, 1343
Lignite, 4499
Militia
Estimates, 2239
M. to reduce, 2281-8
Purchasing Commission, 2239, 2287
Salaries, 2287
"Niobe" and "Rainbow", sale, 4015-19
Parliament buildings, 3994
Pembroke wharf, 4536-9
Penitentiaries, increases in estimates, 1109
Polish battalion for service in French army, 4051
Polish immigrants, rejected, qu. 914
Post Office
Letter rate, 4526
Parcel post rates, 4526
Purchasing agents, 4527
Rural mail carriers, 4527
Stamps, postage and revenue, 4526
Preferential tariff—West Indies, 3704
Preserved fruits, 3703
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act Amdt. Bill, 2482
Shipbuilding, 1956
Soldiers' pensions, insurance and re-establishment, 4051
Special War Revenue Bill
Consideration en bloc, 3956
Houses, tax on, 3958
Lumber, tax on, 3743, 3957, 3958

Pedlow, Mr. Issac E.—Con.
Special War Revenue—Con.
Sales tax, 3755
Change in clause, 3957
Wholesalers opposed to, 3752
Steamship "Narbethong", 2175
Sugar imports, 3703
Trade and Commerce employees, 1226
Trade commissioners, 1399
Trent canal, 2606-16

Pelletier, Mr. F. J. (Matane)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 381; previous arguments for dissolution endorsed; public ownership; Canadian National Railways; Board of Directors; employees and elections; sections granted privileges denied to others; Intercolonial, piling lumber in yard at Amqui; financial obligations due to nationalization; world-wide liquidation, 382; Prime Minister's duty to dissolve Parliament, 383
Canadian National Railways
Amqui station, 382, 1176
Illustration stations at Matane and Causapscal, 947
Matane, wharves, 3992
Quebec Union Telephone Company, 3343

Pembroke wharf, 4536

Penitentiaries, 1091, 1096. See also Justice; Prisons and Reformatories
Alberta, 1092, 1115
Appropriations for, 1104
Convicts
Number and cost of, 1092
Dorchester, 1092
Purchases locally, 1108
Salaries of officials, 1096
Warden, 1092, 4467
Flour purchases, 1107
Kingston, 1110
Staff and inmates, 1097
Trades at, 1092
Maintenance cost, increase in, 1111
Purchases, system of, 1108
Purchasing Commission, 1104
Report, 2027
Salaries and retiring allowances
Increases in, 1109-10
St. Vincent de Paul, 1078, 1091
Convicts, number of, 1091
Warden, qu. 575, 1078
Saskatchewan, 1091, 1110
Stony Mountain, release of prisoners, 477

Penitentiaries Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 3738-39; withdrawn, 3973

Pensions, 164, 2236-78. See also Returned Soldiers, Special Committee
Application forms in French, qu. 965
Assignment in payment of insurance premium, 4355
Board of Commissioners, 4366
British funds, disbursement in Canada, qu. 733
Brunelle, Sergt. Major N., 1518
Deduction from widows' pensions, 4369
Deductions for insurance premium, Res. (Mr. Power) 629; withdrawn, 630
Disability, qu. 1235
Etienne, Mde., claim, 4367
Marcil, Mr. Joseph, qu. 3903
Marcil, Messrs. Louis T. and Joseph, qu. 2942
Martel, Mde., claim, 4367
Old age. See Address
Permanent force, deductions from pay of, 2275
Refusal to soldier disabled by accident, 4366
Scale for deaths, 4266
Scale for disabilities, 4264
South African, 2278
Special Committee, final report, 4041
"Unmarried wife," 4369
Widowed mothers, Res. (Mr. Power) 630; withdrawn, 642, 4047, 4368

Pensions Act Admt. Bill
Res. 4262; 1r., 4266; 2r., com., 4361; 3r., 4373
Subjects and Sections discussed:
Board of Pension Commissioners, 4366
Deduction from widowed mothers' pensions, 4369
Housing, 4362
Increased sale, 4361
Interpretation of Act, 4366
Military Service, "as such," 4366
Statement by Prime Minister, 4361
Unemployment, 4361
Widowed mothers, 4368

Pentland, Mr., and Quebec Admiralty district, 1086

People's Representatives. See Ministers

Per Capita Expenditure and Debt, 2012, 3246

Permanent Court of International Justice Bill, 56, 285, 645. See also Canadian Nationals; League of Nations; Prime Ministers' Conference
1r., 2096; 2r., com., 2708; com., 3013; 3r.,

Permanent Force. See Militia; Pensions

Perrot Island bridge, qu. 576, qu. 603

Peterborough
By-election, 504
Milling industry, 3544
Trent canal, 2953. See also that title

Petitions. See Private Bills

Petroleum. See also Oil
Bounties, 1385, 1413
Government regulation, 3539
Leases, 3539
Natural gas, and, lease rentals, qu. 672

Pharmaceutical Compounds, 3726-7

Phonographic Discs. See Copyright

Pictou-Georgetown steamship services, 1496

Pierreville Postmistress, qu. 2624, 2858, qu. 3208; qu. 3422; qu. 3423. See also Yamaska

Pig iron industry, 3188

Pilotage, Administration of, 1999

Pilots, 1999
Montreal-Quebec, superannuation, qu. 1501

Pin, Mr. J. E. A., and Labour, 1642

Pipes, Mr., and Dorchester Penitentiary, 1093

Plate Glass Industry, 3513

Playing Cards. See Criminal Code Amdt. Bill—Three Card Monte
Tax on, 3126

Pointe Claire, wharf, 4312

Poisoning of Insects, 1028

Police Magistrates. See Judges

Polish Battalion for service in French Army, 4051

Polish Immigrants, rejected, qu. 964

Political Control of Railways. See Canadian National Railways

Political Patronage. See also Canadian National Railways; Civil Service
Lawyers selected by Government, 1077

Pollution of Harbour Waters. See Canada Shipping Act Amdt. Bill

Pontiac
Census commissioners and enumerators, 828, 1127

Population, increase of, 843

Pootmans, Mr. G., Vice-Consul for Belgium, 3347, 3379. See also Belgium, loan to

Porcupine Forest Reserve, 538

Portage du Fort, war record, 1928

Port Arthur and Fort William harbour improvements, 4536

Port Aux Basques, 1468

Port Colborne, breakwater, 3974

Port Hilford, dredging, 3983

Port Hood, wharf, 4088, 4104

Port Margaree, wharf, 2174

Port Nelson, dredging, 1853

Porter, Professor, 1427

Porter, Mr. George, Maycroft, Alta., 384

Portland Terminus, 1384, 3291. See also Grand Trunk

Postmasters. See also Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill; Post Office
Montreal and Toronto, qu. 566
Rural. See also that title
Appointment of, 2779, 4278-4460

Postmaster-General. See also Blondin, Hon. Mr.; Post Office
Election of, 1171
Necessity for presence in Commons, 1155, 4514
Payments to, qu. 567
Yamaska election, and, 3468

Post Office, 3003. See also Civil Service; Mail Carriers. For individual post offices, see their titles
Annuities, 4524
Canadian Postal Guide, qu. 1349
Department
Anderson, Mr., 4526
Cabinet Ministers, and, qu. 1349
Mail superintendents and postal inspectors
Res. (Mr. Casgrain) 841
Outside service
Maritime Provinces, Inspection Branch 4528
Parcel post rates, 4526
Postmen, bonus to, 3549
Purchasing agent, 4526
Railway mail service, 4516
Religious holidays, 2626

Post Office—Con.
Department—Con.
Reorganization, 804, 4514
Moon, Mr., 4518
Northrup, Mr., 4518
Retirement of officials, qu. 3772
Smith, Mr. Sydney, qu. 1236, 4518
Troop, Mr., 4518
Verret, Col., 4525
Superintendent and inspectors, qu. 965
Employees in post offices, retirement, 4268
Letter rate, 3571, 4515
Madrid Postal Conference, 3001
Montreal Mutual Benefit Society, qu. 567
Offices in Canada, qu. 1235
Parcelpost rates, 4526
Railway mail service, 4516
Bonaventure-Gaspé, qu. 577
Revenue and expenditure, 4515
Rural mail carriers, 4523. See also that title
Bonus, 2115
Saguenay district service, 1825
Stamps, postage and revenue, 4526
Statistical schedules, 3758
War tax, 4515

Post Office Act Amendment Bill
1r., 1619-20; 2r., com., 2120; 3r., 2944
Subjects and sections discussed:
Insurance of registered mail matter, 2120
Obligations of ferrymen, 2122
Unpaid or underpaid letters, 2121

Potato Bug, destruction by, 1932

Potatoes, 3224, 3525
Diseases, 1032
Export, 3442
Market for, 3473

Poultry Industry, 939, 1122
British Columbia, in, 3750-51
Egg production, 1242-3. See also Eggs
World's Poultry Congress, 4513

Power. See also Fuel Supply Problem; Great Lakes-St. Lawrence

Power, Mr. C. G. (Quebec South)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 100. The new leader of the Government, 101; dissolution of Parliament and appeal to the people; different schools of thought; House of Commons "express image of the feeling of the Nation"; present parliament not representative, 102: history of the Government; power despotically used; Cabinet reconstruction; by-elections, 103; defections among Ministry and Government supporters, 104;

Power, Mr. C. G.—Con.
Address—Con.
Government has lost confidence of country; deficits from public ownership; Great War Veterans Association, 105; enforced isolation of Quebec, 106; the public conscience, 107
Administration of Justice, 1325
Alpine Club, 4494
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2913
Burnham, Dr., treatment by Serbian Government, qu. 576, 1525
Cabinet-maker, Interior department, 1342
Canada Temperance Act
Quebec petition for suspension of Act, 4382
Canadian Government Merchant Marine Vessels, names of, 1962
Canadian Nationals Definition Act, 782, 2033
Canadian National Railways
Employes, fraud by, 1669
Canal tolls, 2976
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2780, 2881
Returned soldiers—preference, 4483
Superannuation—increased allowances, qu. 3903, 4541
Coats, Mr. R. H., 1232
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition plebiscite) 304
Expenditures on public works, 2983
Fiji Islands, Mr. Catellier, 1465
Foreign agitators and elections, 903
Forestry
Canadian Forestry Association, 4494
Director of, 1346
Immigration, medical inspection, qu. 572
Interior Department law clerks, 1332
Ireland, South, Parliament for, qu. 603
Judges, Admiralty, 1086
Lights, repairs to, 1996
Marine signal service, 1998
Militia
Ashley, Sergt. T., qu. 3090
Command pay, 2290
M. to reduce, 2292
Estimates, 2275, 2310
Permanent Force, M. to reduce estimate, 2797
Record office, 2278-81
Staff, 2787-91
Military preparation, 2305
Miniature natural resources cabinets, 1342
Moving pictures, 599
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 2265
Pensions Act Amdt. Bill, 4366-73
Pensions
Application forms in French, qu. 965

Power, Mr. C. G.—Con.
Pensions—Con.
Deductions for insurance, res. 629; withdrawn, 630
Permanent Force, deductions from pay, 2236, 2275
Widowed mothers, res. 630, 640; withdrawn, 642, 4369
Public Works—Quebec district, 2983
Quebec
Citadel, 1441
Fortifications, res, 967
Port and Merchant Marine, 1271
Riots, 1509
Ship repairing, 1986
Returned Soldiers Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 4355-7
Ross rifle, 2782
Serbian Consul at Montreal, qu. 605
Shipbuilding, 1962
Soldiers Civil Re-establishment
Loyola college building, Montreal, qu. 569
Supply—Public Works, point of order, 2758
Trent canal, construction, 2983-94
Unemployment relief, qu. 570
Union Service Fund, qu. 2192
Welland canal, construction, 2983-94

Prairie Provinces
Grasshopper plague, 1027
Transfer of Natural Resources. See Natural Resources

Preferential Vote. See Proportional Representation

Presentation of Speaker's Chair. See Speaker's Chair

Press
Bureau in New York, 2400
Canadian Press Limited, qu. 564, 4533
Comment on Shipbuilding. See Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Shipbuilding
Defamatory libel, publication of court proceedings, 2149, 3933
Murray, Mr. G. M., and, 330, 442, 2622, 3645-7
Propaganda, 290

Press Gallery
Long sittings of House, 2887

Preston, Mr. W. R. T., 3383

Prevost, Mr. Jules E. (Terrebonne)
Budget, 3427. National Liberal and Conservative Government; railway policy, 3428; expenditure, public debt and re-

Prevost, Mr. Jules E.—Con.
Budget—Con.
venues; taxation, 3429; military expenditures and conscription, 3430; Canadian policy and Imperialist doctrine, 3430; Laurier and Colonial Conferences, 3431; Prime Minister and Quebec, 3435; fiscal policy, 3436
Canadian National Railways
Montreal-Transcontinental, qu. 574
Census, appointment of officials, 696
Debates, Official, distribution of, M. 2220-5
Highways
Approval of in Quebec, qu. 2098
Federal aid to, qu. 2375
League of Nations
Article X, qu. 575
Canada's contribution to, 1235
Postmasters, Montreal and Toronto, 566

Price-Fixing, 3200

Prime Ministers. See Ministers

Prime Ministers' Conference, 183, 193, 227, 246, 254, 270, 294, 467, 526, qu. 564, 2626, 3320, 4304, 4449
Agenda, 2504, 2638-47
Anglo-Japanese Alliance, 2637-9-57
Canada and the United States, 2653. See also Canadian Representation in the United States
Canada's status, 2642
Committee on Imperial Defence, 2637-49
Constitutional conference, 2637-8-47-49
Constitutional development, 2626-47
Imperial Conference, 2628, 2633-36
Imperial defence, 2633-44
Imperial War Cabinet, 2636-48
Imperial War Conference, 1917, res. 2626-36-48
International relations, 2651
Lloyd George and Mr. Churchill, 2633-44
Military, naval and air defence, 2640-50
Naval defence
Contribution of the Dominions to, 4256
Peace Conference at Paris, 2637
Proposed instructions to Prime Minister, 2554
Reparations, 2653
Reported statement of Mr. Churchill, 2567
Statement by Prime Minister, 2504
Wireless Communications, 2640

Primeau, Mr., and Railway Commission, 3018

Prince Albert, Soldier Settlement Board, qu. 673

Prince Edward Island
Harbours and rivers, 3990
Highways, Federal aid to, qu. 2345

Prince Edward Island—Con.
Railway, 4565
Steamship service, 558

Prince Rupert
Dry Dock Engineering Company, qu. 3423
Public Building, qu. 567
Purchase of land from Mr. V. W. Smith, qu. 963

Princess Creek, wharf, 3980

Printing Bureau
Bailey and Wolffe, Messrs., qu. 603
Building, extension to, qu. 1383
Destruction of Public Documents, qu. 599, qu. 603, 793, qu. 1621, 1625, qu. 2028, 2943, 2950-3, 4062, 4436-53, 4465, 4557
Canadian Postal Guide, qu. 1349
Judge Snider's Report, qu. 2028, 2444, 2943, 2951, 2952, 3209, 3697, 3761, 3905, 4062, 4436-53, 4557
Statement of Messrs. Fred Cook and Frank Lynch, tabled, 4541
Statutes, plates of, qu. 603
Employees in, qu. 1131, qu. 1348
Additional, qu. 1234
Long sittings of the House, 2887
Reorganization, 793, 802, 816, 834, 836, 2827-79, 4465. See also Civil Service

Printing, Joint Committee, 110, 2618, 2889, 4041

Printing of Parliamentary and Departmental Publications, 1438

Prisons and Reformatories Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 1069; 2r., com., 3011; 3r., 3013

Private Bills. See House of Commons, Bills

Private Bills Discussed
Canadian Bar Association, 1094
Central Railway Company of Canada, 3715, 3716
De Martigny divorce, 3715, 3761, 4002-10, 4078, 4107, 4203, 4477
Fort Smith Railway Company, 3771
Gilmour and Hughson, Limited, 1096, 2442, 2503, 2800
James MacLaren Company, Limited, 598
North American Trust Company of Canada, 1094, 1127
Quebec Steamship Company, 2775, 2941
Quebec Union Electric Telephone Company, 3343, 3421, 4105

Privilege. See House of Commons

Privileges and Elections Committee, 2314, 2373, 2617, 2685, 2775
Representation, Maisonneuve and Gaspé, 4437
Substitution of names, 2441

Privy Council, 99, 2105
Appeals, limitation of, 1089, 1090
"Insular" tribunal of England, 1090
Judges. See Judges Act Amdt. Bill
Law library, 1090
Salmon fishery licenses, qu. 104, qu. 1381, 2104, qu. 2506, 4341

Prize Money. See Agricultural Shows

Probation, system of. See Criminal Code Amendment

Progressive Party, 331, 539, 1531, 1546, 3324, 3356. See also Address, Budget, Canadian Council of Agriculture, Crerar, United Grain Growers
Abolition of patronage, 822, 3163
Attitude on Tariff, 3212. See also Budget Speeches
Canadian Council of Agriculture. See that title
Railway problem, and, 1789
Wheat Board, and, 1451. See also Grain and Grain Trade; Canadian Wheat Board

Prohibition, 4474

Prohibition Plebiscite, 303. See also Canada Temperance Act; Dominion Elections Act Amdt.
Alberta, 3901, 4374-88
Ontario
Renfrew returning officer, 820
Voters' lists, 150, 242, 259, 303

Proportional Representation, 346, 411
M. (Mr. Sexsmith) for adoption of, 1528
Amdt. (Mr. Calder) for Special Com., 1542
M., as amended agreed to, 1554; Special Com. appointed, 1554-5
Special Com., authority to print report, 2027

Proprietary and Patent Medicines, tax on, 3120

Prorogation, 4577
Alleged undue desire to hasten, 4068
Governor General's Speech, 4579
Probable date of, 4238-40, 4551

Protection. See Address; Budget; Customs and Excise Dept. Bill

Proulx, Mr. Edmond (Prescott)
British funds, disbursement in Canada, qu. 733
Buckley, Mr. Charles P., qu. 966
Canada Temperance Act
Pending litigation, 4384
Canadian Air Force, qu. 965
Canadian Bar Association, 1095
Cattle embargo, 766
Chief Justice, salary of, 1571
Civil Service
Bonus, 2115
List, qu. 1349
Res. (Sir Sam Hughes) Political patronage; amendments to Civil Service Act; Civil Service Commission; appointments in cities and rural districts; census commissioners and enumerators, 829
Clapp, Miss S., 1332
Condensed milk, tax, 3737
Cooper, Col. John A., qu. 697
Dairy Products Grading Bill, 4442
De Martigny divorce, 3765
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4247-8
Elections in France, 1552
Highways
Construction in Ontario, 4290-4306
Width, 4306
Judges
Exchequer Court and Grand Trunk arbitration, 1084
Superannuation and retirement, 1082
Justice Department
Lawyers in, 1077
Purchasing agents, 1079, 1115
Live stock breeding, 1116
Militia supplies, sale of, 1098
National Catholic Labour Unions, 1647
Post Office Act Amdt. Bill, 2121
Roumanian loan, interest, qu. 2344
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships) 593
Unemployment and immigration, 1356
Welland canal, sand contracts, qu. 600

Provinces doing business, and taxation, 3705-6, 3742

Provincial Legislation, reports on, 2373

Provincial Responsibility. See Housing

Provincial Rights. See Canadian Bar Association; Lake of the Woods

Publications, Government, 1438
Editorial Committee, annual report, 901

Public Accounts Committee, 3582, 4105
Motion for reference to Com., 1069
Report, 397

Public Buildings
Estimates, 4090
Ottawa. See also that title
Charwomen, 4092
Elevator attendants, 4090
Nova Scotia, 2737-42
Toronto customs house, 4095
Yukon, 4096

Public Documents, Destruction of. See Printing Bureau

Public Harbours. See Canada Shipping Act; Harbours and Rivers

Public Money, voting of. See Canadian National Railways; Estimates; Supply

Public Ownership of Railways, 381, 1187, 1196. See also Canadian National Railways

Public Printing and Stationery Department. See Printing Bureau

Public Records, provision for, 2947

Public Service Retirements. See Civil Service Retirement

Public Works
Bridges. See Bridges
Demobilization, 3989
Department
Accounts, paying of, 1606
Salaries, 2680, 2736, 2808, 2945, 4070, 4079
District Engineers' Office, Edmonton, 4535
Engineering Branch, reorganization, 4079
North Sydney, officials, 2817
Expenditures, 4101
Property, protection of. See Criminal Code Amendment Bill
Rents, repairs, etc., 3989
Shipbuilding, 1858. See also that title
Transfer of District Engineer's Office, Chatham-St. John, 4081

Pulp and Paper Industry, 873, 875. See also Natural Resources; Research
Freight rates on, 2511
Pulpwood, exportation, 3513, 3744

Punishments, Excessive or Inadequate. See Criminal Code Amdt. Bill

Purchasing Agents, 1079
Canadian National Railways, 1659

Purchasing Commission, 1080, 2015, 2142, 2163, 2190, 2287
Authority for appointment, 1114
Canadian National Railways, 1659

Purchasing Commission—Con.
Closure, notice of, 2025
Creation of by Order in Council, 551
Limit of $5,000 without tender, 1101
Members of, 2016
Militia supplies, 2239
M. (Mr. Lemieux) to strike out item, 2108; amended 2020
Penitentiary supplies, 1097, 1108
Post Office, 4527
Public Works, 2681-3
Staff of, 1113
Surplus War supplies, disposal of, qu. 736
Tenders, statute providing for, 1105

Pure-bred Cattle. See Health of Animals; Live Stock

"Pussyfoot" Johnston, 902

Quaker Oats Company, 2954-76, 3544. See also Trent Canal

Quarantine. See also Health; Immigration
Stations, 3128
Halifax, 2754-68
Partridge Island, 2808-15
Typhus, 4170

Quebec (City)
Arsenal, bonus to employees, 2113, 2782
Canada Temperance Act, 4382
Citadel, 1441
Elevators, 282, 1443
Employees, Militia, dismissal of, 2237
Fiset, Dr. Michel, qu. 963, qu. 4523
Fortifications, ancient. Res. (Mr. Power) 967; withdrawn, 970
Immigration buildings, 2757
Immigration officers, qu. 1131
Mail collection and delivery, qu. 576
Post Office, 4523
Riots of 1918
M. (Mr. Casgrain) 974
M. (Mr. Lavigueur) for compensation, 282
Mr. (Mr. Parent) 1503; neg. on division, 1518
St. Charles dam, 281
Transcontinental Railway workshops, 281

Quebec (Port)
Canadian Government Merchant Marine
Discrimination against, 1965
Unfair treatment by, 1271
Elevator, 1443
Equipment, 687
Park St. Charles Company, proposed payment, 4570
Repairing of ships at, 1986
Shipbuilding, 1972
Transcontinental Railway facilities, 280
Wharves, 3977

Quebec (Province), qu. 570
Attitude towards Government, 551, 3216. See also Address
Census commissioners, 832
Highways in, 2098, 2344, 3025, 3029-34, 4305-13-33
Increased representation, 391
Judicial district, judges, 1081
Vice-Admiralty district, 1084-6
Labour in. See National Catholic Labour Unions
Natural resources, 875
Salmon fishery, qu. 1381, 2104, qu. 2506, 4040, 4341

Quebec and Saguenay Railway
Mileage, 1005
Station agents, qu. 696, 963

Quebec and Western Railway, qu. 573

Quebec Bloc, 3216

Quebec Bridge, 1653, 1670

Quebec Conference. See Ministers

Quebec-Montreal Pilots, Superannuation, qu. 1501. See also Pilotage

Quebec Oriental and Atlantic Railway, qu. 573

Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company, Limited, 1990

Quebec Steamship Company, 2775, 2941
Petition presented, 3005

Queen's University. See Research

Questions, inquiry as to, 1502. See also House of Commons

Questions Passed as Orders for Returns, 578, 605, 606, 698, 839, 967, 1002, 1238, 1350, 1625, 1674, 1821, 2029, 2099, 2376, 2625, 2687, 2821, 3090, 3830, 3905

Quinlan and Robertson, 1972

Railway Act Amendment Bill (Inland Shipping Rates)
1r., 1497, order for 2r., stands, 2557

Railway Act Amendment Bill (Discrimination in rates) 1r., 1232-33

Railway Adjustment Board, 4547

Railway Commission
Cases before, 3021
Chief Commissioner, 451, 1690, 1725, 3017
Speech of with reference to Canadian National Railways, 1202, qu. 2029
Fuel Control, 2944
Inland Merchant Shipping, and, 1497. See Railway Act Amdt. Bill

Railway Commission—Con.
Maintenance and operation, 3016
Members, 3016
National Transcontinental Railway, fire protection, 4337
Railway mail service, 4517
Railway rates, and, 1803

Railway Problems. See Canadian National Railways, Special Committee

Railways, 484, 3014, 4131. For individual railways see their titles
Canadian National Railways. See that title
Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk bonds, qu. 837
Car shortage, 512, 548, 3541, 4322
Charges on dining cars, 921
Coal for, duty, 1183-4
Coal mines in the United States, 4317
Competition, 1181
Deficit, 1577, 1585, 1946
Employees, income tax, 4353
Employees' wages, 1803
Export freight rates, 1224
Financial condition of, 1574
Freight cars for coal, 1254
Freight rates, 1009
Coal on, 1249, 1976. See also Fuel Supply
Government. See also Canadian National Railways
Auditing by Auditor General, 1189
Lack of information, 1336
Ships, and, 1730
Grand Trunk. See that title
Locomotives
Cost of, 1587
Obsolete, 1587
Roumania and Greece, for, qu. 1236
Losses generally, 1008
Mail Service. See Post Office
Management. See Canadian National Railways
Merging of, 3308
Minister of and administration of Canadian National Railways, 1190
Party politics, and, 1179
Public ownership, 508
Quebec, Oriental & Atlantic and Quebec and Western Railways, qu. 573
Railway Commission, under, 3017
Requirements for, purchasing, 1610
Securities, provincial guarantees, qu. 2619
Situation generally, 1007, 3406
Statistics, qu. 3422
Taxation, 1008
Tourist traffic, 4495
Traffic and government ships, 1936
Utilization of, 844

Railways and Canals, Department of, 3014
Annual report, 697
Buckley, Mr. Charles P., qu. 966
Law costs, 3015
Minister of, duties, 1663
Outside service, 1665
Printing and stationery, 4335
Salaries, 1652, 3014, 4131, 4288

Railways and Shipping Committee. See also Canadian National Railways, Special Committee
M. for Standing Com. on (Mr. A. K. Maclean) 1555, 1582-3

Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, Committee, 1174, 2247, 2708, 3005

"Rainbow" and "Niobe." See Ballantyne; "Niobe"

Rates. See Railways, Freight; Shipping
Discrimination in. See Railway Act Amdt. Bill

Real Estate. See Housing

Reciprocity Agreement with the United States, 268, 297, 1487. See also Address; Budget, Customs and Excise Dept. Bill Amdt. to Supply (Mr. Fielding) 2038; neg. 2075, 2393

Reclamation. See also Natural Resources
Dominion lands, 4495
Moose Range area, 871

Recorder's Court Jurisdiction. See Criminal Code Amdt. Bill

Record Office. See Militia

Redemption of Gold. See Currency; Gold

Redistribution. See Address; Budget; Proportional Representation

Redlich on Procedure, 1675

Redman, Mr. D. L. (East Calgary)
Fuel Supply problem, 1253
Highway grants—Alberta, qu. 1821
Oil bounties, 1418
Tobin, Mr. W. J., qu. 1133

Re-Establishment, 314. See Returned Soldiers; Housing
Special Committee, final report, 4041

Referendum. See Prohibition Plebiscite

Reformatories. See Prisons and Reformatories

Refrigerator Cars for Transportation of fish, 1038

Regina
Indian Commissioner at, 2167-9

Regional Exhibitions. See Agricultural Shows

Registered Parcels, Insurance, 1619. See also Post Office Act Amdt. Bill

Registrars. See Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill; Judges

Regulations, Oil and Gas, 894. See also Oil and Gas, Petroleum

Reid, Hon. J. D. (Minister of Railways and Canals)
Annual railway statement, 1004
Business of the House
Estimates, alleged agreement, 4532, 4569
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 1702
Statement to be made, 902
Canadian National Railways
Betterments, 4317
Board of Directors, 4314
Box cars ordered, 331
Canadian Government railways—vote of $7,000,000 for working expenditure, 4335
Canadian Northern Railway Company, 3049
Loan of $50,000,000 to, 3037
Car shortage, 4323
Claims against, 1658
Coal mines in the United States, 4317
Correspondence with directors, 1003
Deficit, 4319
Electrification, 4328
Employees, 1735
Reduction in number, 1851
Expenditure, 1616, 1662
Fire claims in Shelburne county, 4569
Flavelle, Sir Joseph, 4142, 4314
Fort William terminals, 3052
French language, 4331
Halifax and South Western line, 3053
Lockeport extension, 4324
Hudson Bay Railway, 985
Information, 1782
Intercolonial Railway, 1655
Land at Lévis, 1849
Transcontinental, and, management, 1189
Joliette bridge, 4322
Joliette county, 3038
Loan of $50,000,000 to Canadian Northern, 3037
McAdoo award, 4325
Management of, 1440, 1654
Manitoba, construction, 3053
Maritime Provinces, improved facilities, 4568

Reid, Hon. J. D.—Con.
Canadian National Railways—Con.
Monastery station, 4325
Operating results, 4318
Operation, cancellation of trains, 1004
Portland terminal, 4317
Rails, price of, 1852
Special Committee, reference to, M. (Mr. Meighen) 1771-4
Tenders for coal and ties, 1772
Transcontinental, forest protection, 4337
Transfer of rails to France, 4569
Western lines, 3039, 3048
Canal tolls, 2962
Fuel control, 2944
Government ships, 1731
Governor General's cars, 3037
Grain transportation rates, 2967
Grand Trunk arbitration, expenses, 4355
Grand Trunk loan, 4131-69, 4314-34
Grand Trunk railway
Lines in United States, 4326
Portland terminus, 1384
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 690, 740
Halifax Graving dock, 1698
Highways, 3030, 4289-4313
Construction, 3127, 3036
Expenditure on, 3024
Inspectors, 3023
Projected roads, 3026
Work on, 1661, 1664
Purchasing agents, 1660, 1670
Questions, answers to, 1502
Railway Commission, 3016, 3020
Cases before, 3021
Railway department
Auditors, 1661-70
Deputy Minister, 1665
Estimates, procedure in, 1666
Officials, 1654, 1660, 1672
Staff reduction, 1672
Travelling auditors, 1661
Railway estimates, 1652; 2953
Railways
Annual report, 1770
Congress, 3023
Items in supply, 3015
Law costs, 3015
Politics, 1771
Railway Commission, under, 3017
Traffic and Government ships, 1936
Red Deer river line, 3048
Returned soldiers, employment on Welland canal, 3001
St. John and Quebec Railway Bill, extension of time, 2030, 2152-7
Soldier Settlement Board, Maritime Provinces, 4532

Reid, Hon. J. D.—Con.
Tariff investigation report, 3055
Trent canal, 2953-60, 2606-17
Welland canal, 2025, 2966-3003

Reid, Mr. John F. (Mackenzie)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 329; congratulations to Prime Minister; leaders who were born on the farm; new name for an old party; Government allied to big interests, 329; Mr. G. M. Murray and the press; Hudson Bay railway; Canadian National Railways, scarcity of cars, 330; grain blockade, United Grain Growers, Limited; National Progressive party, 331; business methods of the company; Mr. Guthrie's charges, 332; Mr. Rice Jones; names and birthplaces of directors; American settlers and goods, 333; Progressive movement not confined to Western Canada, 334
Agricultural implements, 3492
Bonds, War, Victory, tax free and taxable, qu. 2821
Briquetting plant at Bienfait, qu. 672
Budget, 3388. Comment on speech of Mr. Cowan; Agrarian and Liberal parties, 3389; economy in expenditure, 3390; tariff on agricultural implements; Canadian National Railways and freight rates, 3392; tariff revision; Grain Growers Guide, 3393; attitude of Government towards big interests, 3395; sales tax, 3396
Canadian National Railways
Grading in western provinces, qu. 570
Canadian Wheat Board, 2117, 2158
Cattle clubs, 1120
Cattle embargo, 717
Civil Service
Bonus, 2110
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2879-80
Civil Service (Res. Sir Sam Hughes) Political patronage in; Civil Service Federation; Saskatchewan Customs Association; National Progressive party; Federal Union No. 66, 822; Board of Hearing; Printing Bureau, 823; British Civil Service, no fault to find with appointments, 824
Cold storage plants, 1040
Distribution of pure-bred stock in Saskatchewan, qu. 1236
Emigration, United States to, 3068
Hudson Bay railway, 991
Immigration
Expenditure, qu. 2943
Immigrants, care of, 3069
Income tax, qu. 3422

Reid, Mr. John F.—Con.
Live stock commission men, bonding of, 1124
Natural Resources, transfer to western provinces, 2539-45
Opium and Narcotic Drugs, 2266
Parliament buildings, 3995
Pensions Act Amdt. Bill, 4365-71
Pensions, widowed mothers, 4371
Post Office Act Amdt. Bill, 2123
Public buildings—Nova Scotia, 2771
Returned soldiers, housing, unemployment, 4365-8
Ross rifle, 2784
Sales tax collections, qu. 2506, qu. 3830
Trent canal, construction, 2987
United States, emigration to, 3066
Vancouver island railways, qu. 3422
Yorkton Judicial district, 1080

Reid Newfoundland Company, 1486

Religious and Racial Questions. See York-Sunbury

Religious Holidays. See Civil Service; Post Office

Reindeer and Musk Ox
Arctic regions, report on, 2940, 4543
Economic value of, 841, 871

"Reno" of Canada, 4474

Rentals, of buildings, 3989, 4092-6

Reorganization. See Civil Service

Reparations. See Germany; League of Nations; War

Reports Tabled, 3, 39, 107, 150, 188, 229, 258, 350, 397, 562, 597, 643, 788, 836, 962, 1001, 1069, 1174, 1347, 1380, 1496, 1619, 2027, 2095, 2247, 2566, 2889, 3146, 3259, 3582, 3697, 3971, 4041, 4105, 4340, 4449, 4541

Representation. See Proportional Representation

Representation in Parliament, 1293
Amdt. (Mr. King) in Supply, neg. 1329

Research. See also Natural Resources; National Research Institute
Advisory Council, 150, 341, 1426, 2688
Scientific and Industrial Research Bureau, 169, 2144

Research Council Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 2566; 2r., 2688; com., 2701, 2892; 3r., 2897

Resignations. See House of Commons

Responsibility to Parliament. See Government

Restaurant. See Parliamentary Restaurant

Retail Merchants Association and Sales Tax, 3446

Retiring Allowances. See Judges Act Amdt. Bill

Returned Soldiers. See also Civil Service; Dominion Lands; Pensions; Re-establishment; Soldiers' Settlement; Unemployment
Canteen funds, 4050
Census commissioners, 2097
Civil Service and, 963, 2828-38-49-53-68-81, qu. 3259, qu. 3531
Preference in, 4482
Civil Service Act, Amdts. proposed by Pensions Com., 4257
Employment on Welland canal, 3001
Gratuity—estimate of cost by Mr. Thomas Cox, 3559
Handicap, problem and tuberculosis cases, 4050
Highways, employment on, 3033
Housing, 4362-8
Loan, 4552
Insurance, 4355, 4361
Insurance Act, 629. See also Pensions
Land for, 1344
Military training, 3279
Pensions, 4361. See also that title
Prospecting for minerals, 871
Re-establishment, 4361. See also that title
Relief for, 2688
Shipbuilding and, 1273, 1727, 1903, 1921, 1974. See also that title
Special Committee moved, 731, agreed to, 733
Mr. Sutherland substituted for Mr. Peck, 788
Quorum, 901
Statement by Prime Minister, 4361
Sympathy with, 1903-4
Unemployment, 4048, 4361. See also that title
Relief in Peterboro, qu. 4253

Returned Soldiers Insurance Act Amdt. Bill
Res. 4260; 1r., 4262; 2r., com., 4355; 3r., 4361
Sections and subjects discussed:
Annuity, 4356
Assignment of pension, 4355
Commencement of Act, 4357
Death of beneficiary during lifetime of insured, 4355

Returned Soldiers Insurance Act Amdt. Bill—Con.
Sections and Subjects discussed—Con.
Insurance and limits thereof, 4355
Mercantile Marine, officers and seamen, 4357
Old age and sickness insurance, 4357

Returns. See House of Commons

Reuter's and Imperial News Service, qu. 564

Revenue Bills
1. Customs and Excise Department Bill
Res. 3785; 1r., 3822; 2r., com., 4388; 3r., 4453
2. Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt. Bill
Res. 3698; 1r., 3725; 2r., com., 3938; 3r., 3955
3. Income Tax Act Consolidation Bill. 1r., 4251; 2r., com., 4343; 3r., 4355
4. Inland Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Res. 3726; 1r., 3733; 2r., com., 3r., 3955
5. Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Res. 3733, 3741; 1r., 3758; 2r., 3955; com., 3955-3958; 3r., 3958

Revising Officer. See Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill

Rhodes, Hon. Edgar N. See Speaker

Rice Jones, Mr. Cecil, Vice-President and General Manager, United Grain Growers, 289, 290, 333, 417, 3180, 3492

Richards, Mr. T. H., veterinary inspector, 1063

Riddell, Mr. Justice, payments to, qu. 1500

Right of Ministers to Sit in Either Chamber. See Ministers

Riley, Mr. R. T., 1609-10, 3610. See also Canadian National Railways

Rimouski
County Fairs, 1240
Customs office, qu. 839
Experimental station, 954

Rinfret, Mr. Fernand (St. James)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 120; Prime Minister—right of Government to retain power, 120; formation of a new party to take place of Unionism—its misleading name, 121; the Prime Minister's Sherbrooke and Granby speeches, 122; by-elections; non-confidence amendment, 124; argument of Prime Minister analyzed; census and redistribution, 125; tariff; League of Nations; clamor for general election

Rinfret, Mr. Fernand—Con.
Budget, 3651. Dr. Tolmie and dry dock at Esquimalt, 3651; Prime Minister's discussion of the tariff, 3652; Tariff Commission and revision of tariff, 3653; St. James by-election, 3655; customs duties and rate of exchange; deficits and expenditures, 3656
Copyright Amdt. and Consolidation Bill, 3835-49
Dominion Iron and Steel Company contracts, qu. 733
Exchange, value for duty, qu. 733
Excise officers and sales tax, 3955
Foreign decorations to Canadians, qu, 1132
German goods, holdback, qu. 1350
Government candidates, 3336
Immigration, 2579-2602
Importations from Germany, qu. 696, qu. 838
Income tax collections
For 1919, qu. 3422
For 1920, qu. 2821
Insurance against sickness, 2554
Loans, tax exempt, qu. 575
Member making serious charge should retract, 1904
Montreal Inland Revenue offices, qu. 1820
Taxation, mutual insurance companies, qu. 605
National Research Institute, 2894
Naval Service, maintenance, 2107
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," sale, 4012-30
Pierreville postmistress, qu. 2624
Post offices in Canada, qu. 1233
Prime Ministers' Conference, 2677
Sales tax, 3955
Shipbuilding, 1898, 1908, 1926, 2094
Estimates, manner of bringing down, 1937
Holt, Sir Herbert, comment on, 1900
Unemployment, and immigration, 1367

Riordon Company. See Gilmour and Hughson

Riots. See Quebec Riots

Rivers and Streams Act. See Lake of the Woods

Roads, 3986. See also Bridges; Highways

Robb, Mr. James A. (Chateauguay-Huntingdon)
Agriculture, grasshopper plague, 1028, 1030
Business of the House
British practice as to, 1026
Canadian Government Merchant Marine
Preference to Canadian goods, 1280

Robb, Mr. James A.—Con.
Canadian National Railways
Transfer of rails to France, 4569
Canadian Wheat Board, 2116
Cattle embargo, 730
Cattle feeds, exemption of, 3746
Chief Justice, income tax and, 1565
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2778
Crushed grain, 3745
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill, brokers, 4432
Customs duties, increase in, 597
Dairy Produce Grading Bill, 3760
Estimates, supplementary, inquiry, 4070
Flax industry, 1404
Foodstuffs, tax on, 3736
Freight losses, 1658
Fruit inspectors, 1046
Grain trade, investigation of, 2116
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2563
Hungry Bay road, 1660
Immigration, 2582-94
Imported goods, marking of, 3714, 3723
Indian "Shows" for distinguished visitors, 2169
Interim Supply Bill, 2115
International Trade Conference, qu. 2029, 2151
Judges Act Amdt. Bill, 2118
Maple Products Act, 1920, Amdt. Bill, 2559
Montreal Harbour Commission Bill, 2160
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3759, 3850-96; Amdt. 3896
Politics—participation in by railway employees, 4502
Post Office Act Amdt. Bill, 2120
Province trading subject to taxation, 3705
Quebec Union Electric Telephone Company, 3421
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships) 656
Sheridan, Mr. John, resignation and reinstatement, 2173, 4502-5
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Containers, tax on, 3754
Flour, 3755
Lumber, 3751-2, 3756
Trade agents, 1225
Trent canal, 2610-12
Unemployment and immigration, 1363
West Indies trade, 1271

Robertson, Hon. Senator G. D., 536. See also Labour, Minister of; Ministers

Roberval, air station, 3779

Robson, Judge, 3606. See also Board of Commerce

Robson, Mrs., and Immigration Department, 3058

Roche, Dr. See Civil Service Bill

Rockefeller Institute, 1433. See also Research

Rockefeller Interests and Mr. King. See Lapointe, Mr.

Rodrique, Mr. Didace, qu. 3208

Rondeau Harbour, 3975

Root Vegetables.. Res. withdrawn, 4343

Ross, Mr. D. C. (West Middlesex)
Budget, 3531. Reciprocity agreement great boon to Canada, 3532; attitude of various members on Budget, 3533; Minister of Militia and tariff reform; military expenditure, 3537
Customs—Strathroy office, 3085
Fuel supply problem, 1255
Harbours and rivers, estimates, 3980-1
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 618
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4187-91
Newfoundland steamship service, 1486
Parliament buildings, 3995
Railway Commission, members, 3019
Steamship passengers, 1495
Trade with Australia and South Africa, 1468
West Indies steamship service, 1490

Ross Rifle, 2783-7
Statement of Rev. Canon Scott, qu. 599

Rotation of Crops, 1033. See Agriculture

Roumania. See also Loans
Loan to, 478, 1441, 3444, 3811, 4430
Greece and, qu. 1236, 3563, 3611, 3620, 3661
Dominion Canners, purchases, qu. 1001, 1072
Interest on, 1072, qu. 2030, qu. 2344
Sale of military supplies to, 2245, 3564

Routhier, Late Judge, 1085-6

Rowell, Hon. N. W. (Durham)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 110; League of Nations and Assembly at Geneva, 110; co-operation to prevent armed conflict; Covenant of League; public rights and wrongs in international affairs; war, or threat of war, concern of all nations, 111; purposes and functions of League; some phases of the work at Geneva, 112; constitutional questions;

Rowell, Hon. N. W.—Con.
Address—Con.
budget to be submitted annually; Council to report to Assembly; relations between Council and Assembly; Article XXIII, 113; vote to be not of a delegate but of the state he represents; proposed amendments to Covenant, 114; monopolies in and distribution of raw materials; admission of new states, Austria and Bulgaria, 116; questions of principle; case of Albania; minorities treaties, 117; Russian situation, 118; United States; attitude of representatives of self-governing minorities, 119; admission of Germany, 119
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 2257
Canadian representation in the United States, 2394-2408
League of Nations, 110
Contribution towards, 2357
Letter of International Joint Commission, 691
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2722-24
Prime Ministers' Conference, 2647-67
Resignation of, 4340

Roy Building, Halifax, qu. 3089

Royal. See North American Insurance

Royal Assent, 486, 2160, 2899, 4578

Royal Bank of Canada
Canadian Government Merchant Marine and, 1719

Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act Amdt. Bill (Fines and forfeitures)
1r., 2343; 2r., com., 2481; 3r., 2486

Royal Canadian Mounted Police
Dominion police force, withdrawal from, qu. 601
Recruits from England, qu. 601
Strength, 2798-2800
Thorold, qu. 574

Royal Canadian Navy. See Naval Service

Royal Commissioners. See Judges Act Amdt. Bill

Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, 1712, 1714, 1870. See also Canadian Government Merchant Marine

Royal Military College, 2802
Road, 3973

Royalty. See Copyright

Ruddick, Mr. J. A., 1036

Rule 17C. See House of Commons, Estimates

Rulings. See Deputy Speaker; Speaker

Rural Homes. See Housing

Rural Mail. See also Post Office
Boxes, number of, qu. 1235
Carriers, qu. 964
Contractors, 3507
Delivery, 1156
Routes, qu. 605
Rural postmasters, 2829-33-41-84. See also Civil Service; Post Office

Russia
Currency, 1072
Flax. See that title
Trade with, 1003, 1072, 1224

Ruttan, Dr. See Research

St. Alexis, station, qu. 2375, qu. 3582

Ste Anne de la Pocatiere
Destruction of library at, 1075
Illustration station, 948

St. Antoine, Montreal, representation of, qu. 577, 1069, 1070, 1293, 1295. See also Ames

St. Antoine, wharf, 2616

St. Augustin station, qu. 695, 3018

St. Catherine's Bay-Tadoussac service, 4530

St. Charles de Bellechasse, 1801

St. Charles River dam, 282

St. Croix wharf, 2616

St. Foy
Artesian well, 1659
Engine house, 767, 840, 967, qu. 1501, 1502, 1659. See also Canadian National Railways

St. Francis Harbour, 3990

St. Francis River, 1992, 1995

St. Francois du Lac
Electoral list, 3468
Lemieux, Mr., Speech at, 3528

St. Hyacinthe
Inland Revenue collector, Dr. A. P. Cartier, 3821, qu. 3904
Shops, qu. 2821

St. Jean post office receipts, qu. 576

St. Joachim-St. Simeon highway, 3026

St. John (City)
Belyea, Mr., retirement of, 3082
Representation, 3171-2
Vacancy, 1293

St. John (Harbour and Port) 4097
Facilities for potato shipments, 3443
Harbour, 4097
Improvements, qu. 1383, 4078
Partridge Island quarantine station, 2808

St. John and Quebec Railway, qu. 1501, 4564

St. John and Quebec Railway Bill (Extension of time)
1r., 2030, 2097; 2r., com., 2152; 3r., 2157

St. John Rolling Mills. See "Niobe" and "Rainbow"

St. Lawrence, Gulf of Fishing in, 1038

St. Lawrence Navigation Company, 1981

St. Lawrence River. See also Canals; Great Lakes-St. Lawrence
Coal trade, 1494
Conservation Commission, 3960-8-70
Diversion of water, 186
Dredges and tugs, qu. 568. See also Dredges
Power development, 1252, 1263
Route and Channel
Deepening, qu. 2028
Development, 674, 691, 1252-63
Dredging, qu. 568, 1991, 4541
Navigation for coal vessels, 1260, 1854. See also Fuel Supply; Great Lakes-St. Lawrence
Sorel shipyards, qu. 568, 1992, qu. 2618

St. Malo shops, 1017

St. Michel wharf, res. 967, 3991

St. Pascal, domestic science school, 1075

St. Roch, Upper Crossing light, qu. 1383

St. Romuald post office building, qu. 577, 604

Ste. Rose de Watford, mail contract, qu. 3209

St. Simon station agent, qu. 3208

St. Thomas de Pierreville, postmistress. See Pierreville

St. Valier wharf, qu. 965

St. Vincent de Paul. See Penitentiaries

Sackville public building, 2816

Saguenay river, crossing of, 1822

Sailors, Sick, care of, 3129. See also Health

Sales Tax. See Special War Revenue; Taxation

Salmon. See Fisheries; Privy Council

San Jose scale, 1028

Sandy Beach wharf, qu. 965

Saskatchewan
Clay deposits for pottery, 3384-5
Co-operative Creameries, Limited, 1040
Co-operative Elevator Company, 391
Fish-breeding, 2185
Grasshopper plague, 1027
Highways, qu. 1820, 4307
Penitentiary. See Penitentiaries
Pure-bred animals in, qu. 1236
Representation in Senate, 2567

Saskatoon, Canadian National engines, qu. 3090, 3903

Saturday Night, comment on shipbuilding, 1968

Savard, Mr. Edmond (Chicoutimi-Saguenay)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 554; speech a "meagre dish"; non-confidence amendment justified; Government has lost confidence of country; by-elections—Government's mandate exhausted; precedents, 555; Liberal leaders record; Borden Government, 556
Chicoutimi
Customs collector, qu. 698
Pier, qu. 967
Murray Bay-Tadoussac steamship service, 1824
Rimouski customs office, qu. 839
Shipbuilding, 1969

"Scandinavian," smallpox on, 1498, 1556

Scientific Institutions, 4494

Scientific Research. See Research

Scott, Mr. F. S. (South Waterloo)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 324; congratulations to Prime Minister; speech of Mr. Crerar; railway situation, economy in administration; financial situation in Ontario; Government's mandate; general elec-

Scott, Mr. F. S.—Con.
Address—Con.
tion, 325; business men opposed to dissolution; the amendment; confidence of the country; defections from Government; dissolution should be decided by Government not by leader of Opposition; Opposition and Agrarian party; Mr. Gauthier and province of Quebec, 327; Mr. Clark (Red Deer) and Liberal party, 328

Scott, Mr. W. D., and Immigration Dept., 3058

Scott Act, petition for suspension, 3584, 4382. See also Canada Temperance Act

Scottish Canadian Trust Company. See North American Trust

Screenings, 3182. See Elevators; Grain

Scrub Cattle. See Live Stock

Seamen, Sick, care of, 3129. See also Health

Search Warrants. See Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill

Searls, Mr. George, Chief Grain Inspector, 1444

Secretary of State. See also External Affairs
Enemy debts, demobilization, 4534
Estimates, 4557

Sedition
Esmonde, Mr. Osmonde Grattan, arrest for, 1556

Seed and Feed Control, 1125, 4513

Seed Fairs, 1126

Seed Grain
Advances, 4498
Inspectors, qu. 1624
Purchase, 4506

Seed Purchasing Commission, 1126

Seguin, Mr. P. A. (L'Assomption-Montcalm)
Budget, 3668. Administration of public business, 3668; tariff commission; tobacco-growing, 3668-9
Income tax—instructions in French, qu. 2624
L'Assomption
Experimental station, 918, 946
Pierreville postmistress, qu. 2624
Point of order—attack on members, 1904
Religious holidays, qu. 1499
Shipbuilding, 1916

Select Standing Committees. See House of Commons

Selkirk wharf, 3976

Senate
Age limit, 1171
Committee, leave for Mr. Crerar to attend, 3259
Free Conference—Judges Act Amdt. Bill, 3972, 4040, 4061, report 4250
Government representation in. See Ministers
Governor General—Address to on retirement, 4493
Macdonald, Hon. Senator, appointment, qu. 577
Members of to have seats in Commons. See Ministers
Members should be elected, 1163
Ministers in. See Labour; Postmaster General
Paintings in, qu. 566
Printing of Senate Bills, 3938
Reform, 389. See also Ministers
Representation of Saskatchewan, 2567

Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships)
1r., 258; M. for 2r., 585, 650, neg. 665

Serbia
Consul at Montreal, qu. 605

Serbian Government, Dr. Burnham and M. (Mr. Lemieux) for papers, 1520

Sessional Employees. See Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill

Settlers' Relief, 4498

Sex Offences. See Criminal Code Amdt. Bill

Sexsmith, Mr. J. A. (East Peterborough)
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4283
Dairy Produce Grading Bill, 4442
Highways, 3031
Metal, 4307-8
Illustration farms and stations in Ontario, 954, 956
Proportional representation, M., 1528
Toronto-Kingston highway, 4306
Trent canal, 2959, 2971-3

Shaughnessy, Lord, 1195, 1896, 3046, 3572
Letter on railway situation, 2503, 2890

Shaw, Mr. H. M. (Macleod)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 383; investigation of grain trade; winter grazing in forest reserves; letter from Mr. George Porter, Maycroft, Alberta; the Government's mandate, 384

Shaw, Mr. H. M.—Con.
Blood Indian reserve, qu. 1818, 1819
Canadian Wheat Board, qu. 340
Macleod judicial district, qu. 2344

Sheard, Mr. Charles (South Toronto)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 253; Mr. Gauthier; Imperial Conference; Lord Beaconsfield; Imperial Council, 254; isolation of Quebec; pledges of 1917; no discontent regarding Government; urban and rural representation, 255; the tariff issue; seceding Liberal Unionists; Mr. Pardee; railway policy; Agrarians and free trade, 256; by-elections; union and harmony; Opposition policy, 257

Shediac and Cape Tormentine Railway, 4564

Shell Contracts, 1788

Sherbrooke, Prime Minister's speech at, 3339

Sheridan, Mr. John, Indian Agent
Resignation and reinstatement, 1499, 2173, qu. 2618, 4501-5

Sherwin-Williams Paint Company, profits, 372, 1897, 3484, 3565

Shipbuilding. See also Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Labour; Unemployment
Advances at Victoria, qu. 599
Amount required for, 1683, 1858
Assistance to, qu. 603
Auditing, 1933
British Government policy, 1865
Closure, 1979-2094. See also that title
Continuation of after the war, 506
Contracts, 1683, 1689
Cancellation, 1726
Cost plus basis, 1910
For steel ships, qu. 565
Details of construction, 1874
Dominion Iron and Steel Company, qu. 733, 1233
Freights, lack of, 1284
Government programme, estimate, 2076
Government shipyard at Sorel, qu. 568, 1992, qu. 2028
Interest on cost, 1886
Labour for, 1889. See also Labour
Newspaper comment, 1893, 1900, 1917, 1925, 1934, 1968
Returned soldiers and, 1727, 1909
Royal Bank, remarks of President of, 1900
Sinking fund, 1885
Steel and, 1876, 1884
Tonnage depreciation in value of, 1734
Trade routes, 1888

Shipbuilding—Con.
Unemployment, 1882, 1897, 1902, 1909. See also that title
Victoria, qu. 599
Wooden ships, 1711

Shipping. See Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Canals; Great Lakes; Shipbuilding
British Chamber of, 1716
Flag, recognition in foreign waters, 786
Great Britain and, 3236
Inland, 745, 1497, 2192
Rates, 2963-9
Ocean, decline in, 1273
Special Committee. See Canadian National Railways
Tonnage into Canadian ports, 3650
United States discrimination in tonnage dues, qu. 697

Ships
Deadweight value per ton, 1702
Private control of, 1717
Publicly-owned, disposal of, 1718
Repairing at Quebec, 1986
Steel plates for, 1233

Shipyards. See also Shipbuilding; Sorel
Construction at, 1927
Government loans to, 1883
Vickers, 1967

Shortt, Professor Adam, 799, 2948. See also Civil Service

Sick and Distressed Mariners, 3129, 4039

Sickness, Insurance against, 4357
M. (Mr. Rinfret) withdrawn, 2554

Sifton, Late Right Hon. Arthur, tributes to, 3, 153

Sifton, Sir Clifford, and immigration, 3245

Silver, discovery at Kino Hill, Yukon, 856

Simpson, Mr. T. W. (West Algoma)
Natural resources, 872
Pulpwood, 3744

Sinclair, Mr. J. E. (Queen's, P.E.I.)
"Brant," steamer, 1982
Budget, 3470. Liberal party's record when in power; comparative tables of imports, 3471; average customs duty on imports, 3472; tariff issue; Prince Edward Island, potato growing, 3473; high freight rates, 3474; York-Sunbury election; record of Government during war, 3475
Cold storage plants, 1041

Sinclair, Mr. J. E.—Con.
Co-operative marketing of live stock, 1124
Dairy Products Grading Bill, 4439-48
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. Bill, 4066
Dredging, Hillsboro river, 3984
Government shipbuilding programme, 2076
Health of Animals, 4506
Highway construction in Ontario, 4306
Migratory Birds Act, enforcement, 4496
Post Office, Maritime provinces reorganization, 4528
Prince Edward Island Railway, 4566
Soldiers Settlement Board, Maritime provinces, 4532
World's Poultry Congress, 4513

Sinclair, Mr. John H. (Antigonish and Guysborough)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 358; congratulations to Prime Minister; duty of Opposition to criticise; National Liberal and Conservative party; same old party; "strange bedfellows"; Cabinet changes; retrenchment, 359; practical suggestions; nation builders and nation wreckers, 360; Dominion Franchise Act; withdrawals from Government, 361; tariff of special interests, revenue, protection; Mr. Calder's change of heart, 363; Liberals and Farmers; hazards of the farmers' calling; prices of farm produce, 365; price-fixing; forces of progress must unite; big interests behind Government, 366; amendment a challenge to Government, 367
Air Board, 3785
Alcohol for medicinal purposes, 3957-58
Amherst drill hall, 2739
Auditor General's report, 597, 913
Blue books, printing of, 1485
Camp Borden, aeroplanes, qu. 1820
Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 2259-62
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 1729, qu. 3089
Information, 1440
Trade routes, 1733
Vessels
"Canadian Beaver," qu. 1673
"Canadian Otter," qu. 1382
"Canadian Recruit," etc., qu. 1381
"Canadian Sapper," 734
Canadian National Railways
Coal purchased, 1763
Freight, Nova Scotia points, qu. 1620
Monastery station, 4324
Mulgrave, ice supply, qu. 963

Sinclair, Mr. John H.—Con.
Canso
Harbour, 3983-9
Navigation school, 1989
Civil Service
Bonus, 2109-10
Payments to Arthur Young and Griffenhagen, qu. 4251
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2487-2503, 4270-77
Coal trade, 1936
Commercial exhibits, 1227
Copyright Amendment and Consolidation Bill, 3840
Corning, Mr. H., cattle purchases, qu. 1624
Currency Act Amdt. Bill, 2269
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Valuation of currency, 3812
Customs and Inland Revenue, overtime, 4123
Customs Tariff Act, 1907, Amdt. Bill
Imported goods—marking, 3712, 3941-54, 3954
Debates, Official report, distribution of, 4560
Dominion and provincial jurisdiction over fisheries, 2105
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill
Polls, hours of, 3095
Qualified voters, 3096
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. Bill, 4065
Dominion notes
Circulation, qu. 1001
Securities, qu. 1383
Dominion securities—grain, 1443
Dredging, 3983
Drydocks, 3987
Editorial Committee, 4560
Estimates on Thursdays and Fridays, Rule 17C, 958, 1026
Export trade, development, 1732
Fish—breeding establishments, 4036
French Trade Agreement, 2135-40
Fumigation of nursery plants, 1031
Grand Trunk Arbitration Bill, 2452-69
Grand Trunk loan, 4162-5, 4317
Grand Trunk Railway, lines in United States, 4326
Half Island Cove, breakwater, 3981
Halifax fishery award, qu. 2191
Harbours and Rivers, estimates, 3976-82
Hoarded liquor, tax on, 3706
Horse breeding, 1120
Intercolonial branch railway in Guysborough county, 4567
Interior Department, editors, 1331
Job printers, taxation, 4123
Judges Act Amdt. Bill, 2118

Sinclair, Mr. John H.—Con.
League of Nations, Canada's contribution, 2357
Marine hospitals, 3130-36
Maritime Provinces, improved transportation facilities, 4567
Mercantile Marine, insurance of officers and seamen, 4359
Migratory Birds Act, enforcement, 4497
Military expenditure, 3278
Militia—surveys division, 2243
Montreal Harbour Commission, 2268
Moving picture films, 1226
Mulgrave, ice tenders, qu. 963
Murray, Mr. G. M., qu. 2622
Natural resources and western provinces, 1338
"Niobe" and "Rainbow", sale, 4012-14
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3851-94
Parliament buildings, 3994-8
Partridge Island quarantine station, 2808
Pension Act Amdt. Bill, 4366
Pensions, refusal to soldier disabled by accident, 4366
Permanent Court of International Justice, 2717-21
Pilots, pensions to, 2000
Port Hilford, dredging, 3983
Post Office Act Amdt. Bill, 2124
Post Office
Expenditure, 4521
Reorganization in Maritime Provinces, 4521
Rural mail, carriers, 4523
Public Works engineering branch, 4082-90
Purchasing Commission
Staff of, 1113
Statutory authority to appoint, 1113
Quebec riots, 1516
Returned Soldiers Insurance Act Amdt. Bill, 4359-60
Returns, inquiries for, 1176
Russia, trade with, 1003
St. Francis harbour, 3990
St. John and Quebec Railway Bill, 2152-4
St. Lawrence channel, dredging, 1992
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships) 591
Sheridan, Mr. John, resignation and reinstatement, 4504
Shipbuilding, 1858, 1869, 1920, 2085
Contracts, 1683, 1872
Excessive tonnage, 1873
Newspaper comment, 1932
Progress of debate on, 1727
Ships under construction, 1927
Sick mariners, 3130-36
Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Hospital supplies and medicines, 3957

Sinclair, Mr. John H.—Con.
Steamship services, 1493, 1489, 1495
Sugar, importation of, 3702
Swan, Mr. D. D., consulting engineer, 1997
Toronto Customs building, 3772
Trade with Russia, 1003
Trent canal, 2609-13
United States discriminatory tonnage dues, qu. 697
Vessels commandeered, qu. 2943
Victory bonds, expenses, qu. 1620
Whitehead life-saving station, 1991
Wrecking plants, 1990
Wrecks, removal of, 1990

Sioux Lookout, 4191

Six Months' By-Elections. See Representation in Parliament

Six Months' Hoist. See House of Commons, Divisions

Smallpox on "Scandinavian", 1498, 1556

Smith, Mr. Alexander. See Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill

Smith, Mr. Sydney. See Post Office Dept.

Smith, Mr. William (South Ontario)
Cattle embargo, res. 702
Eggs, importation from China, qu. 568
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3893

Smuggling
Aerial preventive service, 3778

Snider, Judge. See Printing Bureau, Destruction of Documents

Société des Artisans Canadiens Francais, 82

Soldiers. See also Returned Soldiers
Pensions, Insurance and Re-establishment, 315
Polish battalion for service in French army, 4051
Settlement on land, 529
Special Committee, final report, 4041

Soldiers Civil Re-establishment
Department of, report, 836
Disabled unemployed, 4364
Estimates, 4532
Loyola College building, Montreal, qu. 569
Operating expenses and working capital, 4532

Soldier Settlement Board, 314, 529, 538, 3554, 4532
Advisory and Qualification Board at Prince Albert, qu. 673
Estimates, 4532
Graham, Mr. A. M., qu. 2618

Soldier Settlement Board—Con.
Maritime Provinces, 4532
Operation of, 529
Tobin, Mr. W. J., and, ques. 1133

Solicitor General. See Ministers

Sorel Dockyard, qu. 568, 1992, qu. 2028
Shipyards, qu. 568
Superintendent, qu. 2618

Soudan War, 1882

Soulanges Canal. See Canals

South Africa
Steamship service, 1491
Trade with, 1468

South African War, 1527
Pensions, 2278

South Gabriola Wharf, 3981

Soviet. See Russia

Speaker, Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes. See also Deputy Speaker, House of Commons Rulings and Statements of
Address, debate on,
Tariff not excluded from discussion, 58
Adjournments
For purpose of discussing matter of urgent, etc.; question may be discussed on motion for Supply, 4106
Amendments
Must amend, not merely negative, 561
Put subject to consideration, 376
Ames, Sir Herbert
Resignation of, 469, 1001
Member (Hon. Mr. King) may go into matter on motion for Supply, 1070
Bills
Additions to, proposed, 4259
Com., referred to after second reading, 2776
Details properly discussed in Com., 624
Preceded by resolution
Notice not necessary, 2942
Trade Bills should be, 2150
Press interview not germane to principle of, 2870
Printing of Senate Bills, 3938
Private
Notice not required, 3971
Reference back by Com. of Whole, 1094
Suspension of Rules for, 3716
Second reading, order must be proceeded with or stand, 650

Speaker, Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Bills—Con.
Senate, motion for first reading not debatable but rule relaxed for Prime Minister and leaders, 151
Senate amendments, correction of error, 4068
To be disposed of by consent without discussion, 2890
1r.,
Senate Bills, unusual to explain, 151, 1619-20
3r.,
Debate on, 3343
Chair
Good taste, 3174
Ruling—exception to must be taken in constitutional manner, 3174
Should be permitted to exercise jurisdiction, 1308
Com.,
Standing, competent to consult Law Clerk, 598
"To-morrow" means next Government day, 563
Debate
Adherence to rules, 649, 2333
Closed by mover, 900, 2447, 2518, 3968
Questions not to be asked as in Com., 2450
Restriction of, 969, 2067
Debates, Official Report of Insertion of documents
After reading, 1539
Not read, 2067
Unanimous consent necessary, 1009
Decorum, 3174
Conversation in Chamber and galleries, 2053
Debate cannot be conducted from seats, 287
Debate, in, 286
Good taste, 3173-4
Governor General
Acknowledgment of Address, 3830
Address to on retirement, 4493
Imaginary letters, 3173, 3260
Minister of Crown and, 3174
Substitution of names, 3174
Interruptions, 3228
Language
"Coward", 287
"Deliberately false and untrue", 2444
"Flagrant insult", 287
"Mean appellation", 463
Unparliamentary, 1516
Members
Asking question may not make statement, 77, 987, 1308, 2865

Speaker, Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Members—Con.
Comment on speech in other House not in order, 536
Debating, should be mindful of rule, 1758
Discussing principle of Bill on second reading restricted to one speech, 649
Having already spoken no right to speak again, 1307
How to be referred to, 69, 444
Leeds (Sir Thomas White) 69, 469
Limited to one speech on motion, 1177
May not reflect on judiciary, 812
Must be seated when Speaker rises, 3228
Not to be put on trial in House, 2443
One may give his own interpretation to remarks of another, 1197
Promises made by subject to rules of order, 4204
Reading from documents or newspapers when asking question, 736, 972
Reading speech, 544
Resignations, 1619. See also House of Commons
Ames, Sir Herbert, 469
Right to reply, 1245
Right to reply to reflection implied in question, 1172
Right to speak exhausted, 985, 1812, 2780, 3859, 4113, 4116
Should confine remarks to question before House, 816
Sitting, may ask question but may not make remarks, 127, 2225, 2867
Speaking, may not interrogate members sitting, 126, 2333
Speaking when no motion before House, 4203-4
To speak only once on motion, 2889
Speaking, has floor, 1794
Statement of must be accepted by House, 1197, 1641
Motions
Adjournment
Competency to withdraw, 1173
Adopted as amended, 1846
Amendment must amend not merely negative, 561
Committee
Not in order to discuss general railway problems, 1782
Error in, 1810
Involving expenditure
Housing, 1135
Hudson Bay railway, 985
Not in proper form, 4052

Speaker, Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Motions—Con.
Notice not given—unanimous consent necessary, 732, 1439, 2027, 2776, 2940, 4250
Notice not required with respect to Private Bills, 3971
Practically identical, 974
Strict application of rule would leave only portion debatable, 1758
To adjourn for purpose of discussing matter of urgent, etc., 4106
Withdrawal by unanimous consent, 2554
Non-debatable subjects
Evidence before Committee not reported to House, 2381
Subjects already debated, 2824
Orders of the Day
Debate limited, 110, 1271, 1439, 2250, 2377, 3972
Alleged incomplete return may not be discussed in detail, 2250
Appropriateness of matter, 2626, 2776
Argument improper, 1070
Argument under guise of question, 901
House reverting to certain motions, 1851
Latitude allowed, 1070, 4254
Local questions, 110, 1271
Member not to be put on trial in House, 2443
No cross-examination of Ministers, 1004, 1441, 3321
Optional with Government to give information, 478
Questions reflecting on Government's policy, 1441
Questions unanswered, attention directed to, 1621
Summarizing newspaper articles, 1441
Pairs, correction of list, 563
Parliament buildings, inscription on tower, 4544
Petitions, manner of presenting, 562
Previous debate, 2824
Privilege. See also this title under House of Commons
Matter not affecting member personally, 2443
Questions
Answer of Government to be accepted, 1004
Deferred until Com. of Whole, 1024
Reflecting on Parliament, improper, 736, 1441

Speaker, Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes—Con.
Rulings and Statements of—Con.
Questions—Con.
Supplementary answer to, 1755
Unanswered, member should direct attention to on Orders of the Day, 1621
Reference by way of illustration and not reflection, 3261
Relevancy, 1172, 1193, 1196
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2865
Resolution
Amended by avoiding mention of money, 1136
Latitude of discussion, 1135
Money, 1135
Propriety of form, 1146
Rules of the House
Discussion, widest possible measure of, 1135
17C, Thursdays and Fridays. See House of Commons, Estimates
Senate
Committee
Leave for Mr. Crerar to attend, 3207
Debates, reference to, 3968
Free Conference on Judges Act Amdt. Bill, 4040
Members of, reference in terms of disrespect, 536
Supply
Amendments to Discussion confined, 2067
Irrelevancy, 1193
Questions of detail should be withheld for, 1280
Rule 17C—Thursdays and Fridays, 1004. See also House of Commons, Estimates
Unanimous consent, 1009, 1233, 3715, 4433, 4453. See also under this title, Debates, Official Report
Canada Temperance Act, 3902
Minister making statement while Speaker in Chair, 1024
Votes and Proceedings, correction of, 737
Warrant for election writ—Durham and Maple Creek, 4340

Speaker's Chair, presentation of, 3689, 3691
Addresses to be printed in Official Report of Debates, 3696
Expression of thanks to Empire Parliamentary Association, 3696
Presentation of, notice, 3688
Speeches, 3689

Speech from the Throne debated. See Address

Special War Revenue Act Amdt. Bill
Res. 3733, 3741; 1r., 3758; 2r., 3955; com., 3955-3958; 3r., 3958
Subjects and Sections discussed:
Amendments, 3742
Binder twine fibre, 3746, 3756. See also that title
Boxed goods, 3735
Condensed milk and ice cream, 3737, 3956
Containers, 3737, 3754, 3956
Excise taxes, 3955
Fishing boats, 3745
Foodstuffs, 3589, 3734
Lumber, tax on, 3734, 3736, 3742-3, 3756-57
Missals and prayer-books, 3756
Mixed grains for feed, 3745
Oatmeal and rolled oats, 3735-6
Oleomargarine, materials for, 3745-6
Package goods, 3735
Sales tax, 3120, 3170, 3399, 3996, 3735, 3752, 3957. See also Taxation
Opposition to change, 3752
Sparkling wines, 3734

Speedways. See Highways

Spinney, Hon. E. K. (Yarmouth and Clare)
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2685, 2778, 4278-80
Annual report, Amdt. 4482
Special Com., report, 3901
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 4271

Spirits, Tax on, 3120, 3506, 3576, 3705, 3726. See also Alcohol; Customs Tariff; Customs and Excise; Liquor

Spirituous and Alcoholic Liquors, 3705-8

Sprays. See Insects

Spruce Bud Worm, 1031

Stacey, Mr. F. B. (Fraser Valley)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 140; examination of reasons advanced in support of amendment; pre-election pledges of Government fulfilled or in process of fulfilment; no charge of maladministration, 141; Government policy in interest of country; unification of Canadian people, 142; class consciousness; by-elections in British Columbia; the Agrarians, 143; no demand for a change, 144
British Columbia, fishing regulations, 2180

Stacey, Mr. F. B.—Con.
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 4268
Ministers to sit in either Chamber, 1163

Standardization. See Agricultural machinery

Standing Orders Committee, first report, 3005

Staples, Mr. W. D., and Grain Inquiry, 1674, qu. 3260

Statistical Department, 1231, 1672

Statistics Act Amdt. Bill, 1r., 3007, 2r., com., 3r., 3758

Statutes, destruction of plates, qu. 603

Statutory Officials. See Purchasing Commission

Stayner, postmaster, 4470

Steamers. See Vessels

Steamship Services
Australia-New Zealand, 1493
Baie des Chaleurs, qu. 734, qu. 2506
Baie St. Paul-Tadoussac, qu. 734
Halifax-Newfoundland, 1485, 1686
Halifax-St. John-Newfoundland, 1712
Magdalen Islands, 557, 767
Mulgrave-Canso, 1496
Murray Bay-Tadoussac, 1528, 1822, 1825, 1930
Newfoundland, 1485, 1686, 1712
Pacific, 1493
Pictou-Georgetown, 1496
Prince Edward Island, 558
South Africa, 1491
Supervision, 1496
West Indies, 1275, 1488, 1712, 1714, 2253-62

Steamships. See also Vessels
Government control of, qu. 2530
Subsidies, 1735

Steel
Nova Scotia, 3295
Plates for ships, 1283, 1884
Shipbuilding contracts, 1876. See also that title

Steel and Iron Industry, 3526

Steel Company of Canada, Limited, 1611

Steele, Mr. Michael (South Perth)
Cattle embargo, debate adjourned, 731
Sub-amendment, 757
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2497
De Martigny divorce, 3769
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill (Prohibition plebiscite) 306

Steele, Mr. Michael—Con.
Fuel Supply Problem, Res. 1247
Special Committee, evidence to be printed, 2027, 4251
Highways in Ontario, 3034
Immigration
Immigrants rejected, qu. 1624
Typhus fever, precautions, 643
Point of Order, letter reflecting on Minister, 2176
Proportional representation, 1550
Strikes, number of, qu. 569
Rulings and statements as Acting Speaker and Chairman
(as Acting Speaker)
Member not precluded from quoting from same debate, 3627
Member must accept statement of another, 3628
(as Chairman)
Conversation, 4307
Debates, Official report of
Insertion of documents not read, 4309
Discussion not relevant to item, 1665
Interim Supply
Schedule customary, 2015
Language
"Misleading the House", 1457
Relevancy, 1451, 1452, 1456, 1665, 3766, 3808, 3821, 4090, 4123-4, 4306, 4312
Letter from Gillies Bros., Ltd., 4418
Supply motion to strike out item not in order, 2018, 4513

Stefansson, Mr. Vilhjalmar, 871
Northern lands, possibilities of, 841. See also Reindeer and Musk Ox; Natural Resources

Stein, Mr. Adolphe (Kamouraska)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 550; charges of maladministration; war contract scandals; Purchasing Commission; feeling in province of Quebec; French Canadians not represented at Peace Conference; Assembly of League of Nations; other instances of discrimination; election proclamation in French, 553; election, 554
Agricultural publications, 1075
Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill, 2914-16
Bankruptcy Act Judges, 1084
County fairs, assistance to, 1123
De Martigny divorce, 3715, 3761, 3769, 4004-10, 4107
Illustration station at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière, 948
Judges, local, in criminal cases, 1085

Stevens, Mr. H. H. (Vancouver Centre)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 212; the amendment; argument of the Opposition; Liberals and Agrarians, 213; Leader of Opposition's incentive is accession to power; redistribution before election; increased representation for West; freight rates, relative representation of urban and rural districts, 214; no general demand for an election; War Veterans, Mr. Harry Flynn; Peterborough by-election; Yale, Colchester, St. John, East Elgin; War Time Elections Act, 217; the tariff—Opposition dare not make it an issue; National Liberal Convention, 1919, 218; statement of leader of Opposition at Kingston; tariff a matter of vital interest; Opposition resolutions of 1919 and 1920, 221; Government will welcome campaign on fiscal policy; coalition between Liberals and Agrarians; leader of Opposition lacks sincerity in proposing amendment, 222
Average duty during Liberal regime, 3471
Budget, 3619; speech of Mr. King, comment on; Canadian National Railways, administration, 3620; loans to Roumania and Greece; members of Parliament and sale of goods to foreign countries, 3621; comparison of this year's expenditure and expenditure under Liberal administration, 3621; position of leader of Opposition on tariff, 3622; American tariff a factor in tariff revision, 3623; tariff for revenue only, 3625; Mr. Fielding and protection, 3626; Mr. Crerar and York-Sunbury election, 3627; Hansard, changes in Mr. Crerar's speech as delivered, 2627-8; tariff question, boot and shoe industry, 3631; agricultural implements, 3631; United Grain Growers and lumber combine, 3633; grain overages, 3634; taxation, 3634; land tax, 3634-35; Canadian representative at Washington, 3635
Canada Temperance Act, qu. 736
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 1721
Dominion Iron and Steel Company, 1723
Canadian manufacturers and export trade, 1222
Canadian National Railways
Special Com. (Mr. Meighen) M., 1805
Chinese Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3828
Customs, Minister of, 3081
Private business of, 3078

Stevens, Mr. H. H.—Con.
De Martigny divorce, 3770, 4203
Government shipbuilding programme, 2088
Harbours and rivers, estimates, 3978-9
Immigration, 2595
Deputy Minister, 3056
Imperial Mineral Resources Bureau, 2166
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 619
Interim Supply, Purchasing Commission, 2021
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4195
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill Amdt. (Penalty—whipping) 2901
Oriental immigration, 2594
Railway Act Amdt. Bill (Discrimination in rates) 1232
Senate and House of Commons Act Amdt. Bill (Ministers and directorships) 596, 650
Wednesday evening sittings, 1829
Wheat Board, qu. 489

Stewart, Mr. J. A. (Lanark)
Alcohol, tax on, 3729, 3730
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 4268-73
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Commercial agents, payments to, 4405
Dumping clause, 4413
Ports of entry, 4414
Trade extension, 4405
Valuation for duty, 4414
De Martigny divorce, 3765

Stewart, Mr. R. A., qu. 2343

Stewart, Mr. T. J. (West Hamilton)
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill (Automobile theft) 3916
Highways, 3028
Construction, 3036

Stikine and Dease Rivers, qu. 1133

Stock Feed. See also Feeds; Live Stock

Stockyards, 1124. See Live Stock

Strathroy
Customs, 3085
Destruction of pasture lands, 1030

Streams Bill. See Lake of the Woods
Strikes. See Labour

Submarines. See Shipbuilding

Sugar, 3699
Beet industry, encouragement to farmers, 301, 3426, 3456
Canada-West Indies trade, 2255-7, 3699
Customs tariff on, 3698, 3725, 3938, 3955

Sugar—Con.
German bounty on, 4432
Imports, 3703
Industry, 3513
Refiners, prices, 3245
Season, vessels for, 1489
West Indies, from, 2255, 3699

Sully, Quebec, station, 1822

Summary Cases, Fees, 3006. See Criminal Code Amdt.

Superannuation. See Civil Service, Superannuation; Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill

Supplementary Estimates, 1618. See also Estimates
Inquiry for, 3741

Supplementary Extradition Convention with the United States. See Extradition

Supreme Court. See also Canada Temperance Act Bill
Appeal to in Criminal cases, 3006
Appointment of Mr. Mignault, 356
Exemption of Salary of Chief Justice, 2118
See also Judges Act Amdt. Bill
Gold Seal Liquor Co., appeal. See Canada Temperance
Judges. See Judges Act Amdt. Bill
Privy Council appeals, 1089. See also that title

Supply Bills. See Appropriation Acts

Supply. See also Interim Supply
Committee of, 562, 917, 1215, 1330, 1385, 1442, 1617, 1652, 1736, 1979, 2076, 2234, 2270, 2275, 2356, 2378, 2568, 2680, 2736, 2781, 2800, 2889, 2940, 2945, 3014, 3055, 3068, 3127, 3776, 3973, 4010, 4070, 4117, 4288, 4494, 4544

Supply, Committee of Amendments
Canadian National Railways—Information—M. (Mr. King) 1178, neg. 1215
Prime Ministers' Conference
Amdt. (Mr. King) 2626, neg. 2679
Reciprocity with the United States
Amdt. (Mr. Fielding) 2038, neg. 2075
Representation in Parliament
Amdt. (Mr. King) 1293, neg. 1329
Closure. See that title
Concurrence, 4541, 4576
En bloc, 2006
Estimates. See also that title
Committee on, 2193
Justice—without consent estimates cannot be considered, 1073

Supply—Committee of—Con.
Interim Supply. See that title
Non-confidence motions. See Representation in Parliament
One-sixth vote. See Interim Supply
Procedure in
Business for "to-morrow", 1025
Resolution introducing money bill should be preceded by notice, 1676
Rule 17C. See House of Commons
Subjects and items discussed:
Accredited herd, 4506-13
Agriculture, 4506
Entomology, 1024
International Institute of Agriculture, 1116
Live stock, 923, 1116
Publications, 1074
Salaries and contingencies, 917
Air Board, 3776
Alderson, Mr. George B., claim of. See that title
Archives, 4533
Canada Grain Act, 1442
Canada Temperance Act, 4533
Canadian Forestry Association, 4494
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, 1272, 2076
Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, 2164
Canadian National Railways, 1004, 4131, 4169, 4288, 4313, 4334, 4561
Canadian National Research Institute, 4555. See also under this title Scientific Canadian Northern loan,, 3037
Canadian Press, Limited, 4533
Canadian representation in the United States, 2378
Canals, 2025, 2602, 2953, 2960, 2966-98
Civil Service
Bonus, 4534
Reclassification, 4541, 4555
Courtenay Bay improvements, 4097
Customs and Inland Revenue, 2889, 3077, 4117
Destructive Insect and Pest Act, 1027 4512
Dockyards, 4036
Dredging, 3982
Entomology, 1024
Exchequer Court, 1083
Experimental farms, 922, 928, 931, 932-36, 945, 4512
External affairs, 2437
Fish-breeding establishments, 2185, 4036
Fish inspection, 2182
Fishery officers and guardians, 2177
Fisheries patrol service, 2177

Supply—Committee of—Con.
Subjects and items discussed.—Con
Fishery problems, scientific investigation, 2188
Fisheries protection service, 4036
Flax, 931
Geological Survey, 2141-8, 2162
Government Shipbuilding Programme, 2076. See also under this title, Shipbuilding
Grand Trunk Loan, 4131, 4168, 4288, 4313, 4144, 4334
Harbours and Rivers, 3973-82, 4097, 4536
Nova Scotia, 3989
Prince Edward Island, 3990
Health, 2940, 3127
Health of Animals, 926, 1048, 4506-13. See also under this title, Live Stock
High Commissioner's office, 2437
Highways, 4289
Housing, 4552
Immigration and Colonization, 2568-2602, 3055, 3077, 4127, 4131
Imperial Mineral Resources Bureau, 4498
Indian Affairs, 2167, 2171, 4501
Interior, 1330
International Fisheries Commission, Fraser River, 2189
Justice, 1076
Labour, 4170, 4544
Emergency relief, 4535
Lake of the Woods Control Board, 2437
League of Nations, 2356
Lighthouse and coastal service, 1994, 2174, 4040
Lignite, 4499
Live Stock Branch, 923, 1116. See also under this title, Health of Animals
Marine, 1617, 1736, 1979, 2190
Marine Biological Board, 2189
Marine estimates, notice of closure, 1979
Migratory Birds, 4496
Militia, 2275, 2438, 2781
Annual drill, 2294
Cadet services, 2296
Clothing and necessities, 2305
Command pay
M. (Mr. Power) to reduce, 2291
Permanent Force, 2797-2800
Salaries, 2234, 2275
Mines, 2141, 2162
National Parks, 4495
Naval Service, 4010
"Niobe" and "Rainbow", sale, 4010-36
Northwest Territories, explorations, 4494
Ocean and River Service, 1736, 1979
Oyster culture, 2177
Paris agency, 2437
Parliament buildings, 3992, 4040, 4070

Supply—Committee of—Con.
Subjects and items discussed.—Con
Passport office, 2436
Penitentiaries, 1096
Pensions, 2236-78
Post Office, 3003, 4514
Outside Service, 4528
Public buildings, rents, repairs, etc., 4090
Public Works, 2680, 2736, 2808, 2945, 3973, 4070-9, 4535
Quarantine stations, 2754-68
Salaries, 2680, 4079
Shipbuilding, 1858
Railways and Canals, 1652, 3014, 4131, 4288
Railway Commission, 3016
Relief of distressed seamen, 4039
Roads and bridges, 3986
Royal Canadian Navy, 4010
Royal Military College, 2802
St. Lawrence Ship Channel, 4541
Scientific institutions, 4494
Secretary of State, 4534, 4557
Shipbuilding, 1857, 2076
Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, 4532
Soldier Settlement, 4532
Telegraphs and Telephones, 3987
Telegraph lines, 4539
Trade and Commerce
Bounties, 1385
Canada Grain Act, 1442
Salaries, 1215
Trent canal, 2025, 2606, 2953, 2966
Welland canal, 2025, 2493, 2960-98
Yukon Territory, 1087

Sutherland, Mr. Donald (South Oxford)
Alderson, Mr. George B., claim of, 924, 1052, 2270-4, 4508
Animals slaughtered for export trade, 1051
Budget, 3584. Railway construction, 3585; industrial enterprise; class organization, 3586; Prime Minister and Progressive party, 3587; Grain Growers' Company, 3587; mill feeds, adulteration, 3589; foodstuffs and free list; farmers' sons and military service; Mr. King and the Government, 3593; Liberal platform of 1919, 3594; Farmers' party and record of Prime Minister, 3595
Butter importations, 3749
Cattle embargo, 706, 764
Dairy Products Grading Bill, 4441-8
Experimental farms, 928, 931-6
Agricultural publications and, 1076
Flax industry, 1395
Grasshoppers, destruction of, 1030
Health of Animals, 1052-67; 2270-4

Sutherland, Mr. Donald—Con.
Highway construction in Ontario, 4296-4306
Illustration farms and stations in Ontario, 953, 956
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 610
Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, 4219
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 3872-95; amdt. 3887
Oleomargarine, importation of materials, 3747
Parliament buildings, 3996
Return, alleged incomplete, 2250, 2270
Returned Soldiers, Special Committee, 788
Tubercular cattle, slaughtering of, 1051
Unemployment and Immigration, 1369
Veterinary Director General, 4508-13. See also under this title, Alderson
White grub, destruction by, 1030

Swan, Mr. D. D., consulting engineer, 1997

Tadoussac-Murray Bay Steamship Service M. (Mr. Casgrain) 1528, 1822, 1825, 1930

Taft, The Hon. William H., 3205

Tailors, Sales Tax, 3955

Tampico, Government vessel at, 1716

Tappert, Rev. N., qu. 1673

Tariff, 7, 96, 125, 130, 132, 136, 147, 155, 161, 162, 167, 175, 181, 211, 218, 238, 241, 251, 256, 263, 272, 285, 296, 315, 322, 337, 350, 353, 371, 388, 394, 398, 412, 528, 559, 417, 437, 432, 570, 476, 479, 484. See also Address; Canada-West Indies; Customs; French Trade Agreement; Special War Revenue; Ways and Means Changes, 2938-55, 3119, 3121, 3696, 3725. See also Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Commission, 3055, 3241, 3640
Rice Jones, Mr. Cecil, evidence before, 418. See also Rice Jones
Report, inquiry for, 1127, 3055
Legislation, 3118
Policy, 1878
Preferential, with West Indies, 2251
Protective, 1285
Reciprocity Agreement with United States—Amdt. (Mr. Fielding) 2038, neg. 2075
Reduction of—Amdt. (Mr. Fielding) to Budget, 3155, neg. 3686
Resolutions, 3121. See also Customs Tariff; Ways and Means
Revision of, 2, qu. 903, 2346, 3150, 3159, 3160, 3220, 3342, 3392, 3420, 3482, 4254. See also United States, Young Emergency Tariff

Tar Sand Rights, General Lindsay, qu. 671, 834

Taxation. See also Revenue Bills
Banks, qu. 2192, 3664
Burdensome, 1292
Business profits, 484, qu. 576, 3120, 3253, 3445
Cost of collection, 2100
Direct, 3147, 4344
Excise, qu. 1236, 3120. See also Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Forms—revision, qu. 1237
Income Tax. See also that title
Appointments to staff, 2106
Collections in Saskatchewan, qu. 2028
Farmers from, in each province, qu. 569
Incomes of over $200,000 qu. 838
Instructions in French, qu. 2624
Penalties, qu. 2100
Preparation of return and computation of tax, 2567
Regulations, 1272
Returns, 2625, 3147
And penalty, 2101
Tax-payers—farmers, qu. 838
Taxes for 1920, qu. 2821
Income and Business Profits, cost of administration, qu. 837
Inconsistencies in, 3550
Indirect, 3221
Land. See Land Taxation
Law stamps, 1090
Job printers, 4123
Luxury, qu. 402, 600, 1191, 3114, 3285, 3445
Abolition, 1185
Motorbus, remission, qu. 603
Mutual companies, qu. 605
Postal war tax, 4515
Provinces, 3705-6, 3742
Railways, 1008
Sales, 3120, 3372, 3485, 3545, 3735-52-54, 3957. See also Special War Revenue Act Amdt.
Collections, qu. 2506, qu. 3830
Sales by farmers, 3956
Three main principles of, 3221

Taxation of Judges. See Judges Act Amdt. Bill

Teakle, Mr. R. B., 1934

Telegraphs and Telephones, 3988, 4539
Cape Breton, 3987
Government business, 4130
Isle aux Coudres, extension, 4540
Loretteville-St. Gerard, 4539

Telephones. See also Marine Signal Service
Berthierville, qu. 1233
Kamouraska and Temiscouata Co., 2175
Service, 4093

Témiscouta
Indians 2168
Telephones 2175

Temperance Act, prescriptions under, 3730. See also Canada Temperance Act

Tenders. See Purchasing Commission

Terminal Elevators, 277-79, 1442. See also Canada Grain Act; Grain; Wheat
Maintenance, 1463
Overages, 3634

Textiles. See Trade

Thanksgiving Day, date of, qu. 2098. See also Armistice Day Bill

Theft, Motor cars of. See Criminal Code Amdt.

Thessalon wharf 3975

Thompson, Mr. Alfred (Yukon)
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill 4480
League of Nations, 55
Mail contract, White Horse-Dawson, qu. 2686
National Research Institute 2698-2700
Natural resources, 851
Proportional representation, 1553
Rulings as Chairman:
Member in order in reading from newspaper, 1891
Tedious repetition, 1892

Thompson, Mr. T. H. (East Hastings)
Dairy Products Grading Bill, 4441-7

Thomson, Mr. Levi (Qu'Appelle)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 345; congratulations to Prime Minister; country's obligations to returned soldiers; conscription; United Grain Growers, Limited, 345; marketing of grain; sale of implements and other commodities; two party vs. group system; proportional representation 346; the amendment; different premises but same conclusion; confidence of the country; by-elections; consequences of vote on amendment, 348; no confidence in Government; the tariff, 350
Agricultural shows, 1241
Ames, Sir Herbert, resignation, 1317
Automobile theft, 3914
Budget, 3310. Sales tax and valuation of foreign imports; Canadian Reconstruction Association, 3312; protective Thomson, Mr. Levi—Con.

Budget—Con.
tariff for industries, 3315; free trade, 3315; raising of revenue; land tax, 3317
Cattle embargo, 714
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3897-9, 3914-35
Crushed grains, 3746
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Free trade, 4419
Indirect increase in tariff, 4419
Trade agents, 3808
Valuation for duty, 4419
Customs drawbacks, qu. 2375
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill
Candidate, death of, 3095
Disqualified voters, 3098
Foreign-born wives and children of British subjects, 3104
Forms, 4228-47
Naturalization—certificate of qualification, 4237
"Personal naturalization", 4245
Recount, 3097
Revising officers, 3102
Dominion notes and gold reserve, qu. 1234
Farmers and protected interests, 3751
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 751
Justice Department
Law-clerk stenographers, 1078
Maisonneuve and Gaspé, representation, 2335
Military preparation, 2300
Point of order—member must accept statement, 3629
Proportional representation, 1534
Reciprocity agreement with United States, 2064
Representation in Parliament, 1317
Trade commissioners in the United States, 1465, 1484
Welland canal, construction, 2989
Wheat Board, 1453
Position of Mr Crerar, 1460

Three Card Monte. See also Criminal Code Amdt., 3921

Thunder Bay, Ice-breaking, 2174

Thursdays and Fridays, Rule 17C. See House of Commons, Estimates

Ticket-of-Leave, case of W. H. Tapley, res. (Mr. Casgrain) 970

Tilley, Mr. W. N., K.C., qu. 1001. See also Grand Trunk Arbitration

Timber. See also Forestry
Culling, 1426
Ontario limits, 3391
Tobique reserve, cutting on, 4503

Tinctures and Elixirs. See Customs Tariff

Tinplate Industry, 3326-7

Titaniferous Ores. See Research

Tobacco
Canada-West Indies Trade, 2254. See also that title
Cigars and, unlawful sale, 3786
Duty on, 3698
Excise taxes on qu. 1236
Experimental station at L'Assomption, 918, 946
Growing, 91, 1076, qu. 1500, 3669
Protection, 300, 3676
Harrow tobacco station, 1076
Licenses, 2554

Tobacco Buyers' Association, 91

Tobin, Mr. E. W. (Richmond and Wolfe)
Anderson, Mr. A. H., qu. 735
Black, Mr. A. H., qu. 735
Brackenbury, Mr. G. B., qu. 735
Civil Service bonus, qu. 1623
Douglas, Mr. H., qu. 735
Grand Trunk
Arbitrators, salaries, qu. 1130
Pensions, qu. 964
Taking over, qu. 838
Printing Bureau employees, qu. 1348
Quebec highways, aid to, qu. 2344
Rural mail carriers, qu. 964
Taxation forms, revision, qu. 1237

Tobin, Mr. W. J., and Soldier Settlement Board, qu. 1133

Tobique reserve, timber cutting, 4503

Tofino wharf, 3981

Tolmie, Hon. S. F. (Minister of Agriculture)
Accredited herd, 1049, 4506-12
Agricultural shows, 1245
Agriculture. See also under this title, Health of Animals, Live Stock
Benefits from agricultural bulletins, 1075
Department, estimates, 917
Publications Branch, 1074
Salaries, 1036
Seed inspectors, 1033
Alderson, Mr. George B., claim of, 925, 1052, 1059, 4512
Animal Contagious Diseases Act Amdt. Bill, 2031, 3011, 2942
Banff National Park, 4495
Berry boxes, 4115-16
Budget, 3648; dry dock at Esquimalt, 3648; Pacific coast trade, 3649; tonnage entering Canadian ports, 3650
Canadian Forestry Association, 4495

Tolmie, Hon. S. F.—Con.
Cattle
Embargo, 722
Feeding for export, 1120
Marketing, 1121
Cold storage, 1039
Montreal Harbour Commission, 1041
Municipally-owned plants, 1040
Dairying, 1036
Dairy herds, 1118
Dairy Products Grading Bill, 4437-48
Destructive insects, 1027
Dominion lands, 1334
Entomology, 1024
Esquimalt dry dock, 3648
European corn borer, 1032
Exhibitions and fairs, 1123
Experimental farms, 942
Farmers' clubs and cattle herding, 1117
Flax industry, 931
Forestry, 4494
Forests—aerial patrol, 4495
Fruit growing, development of hardy varieties, 1043
Fruit inspection, 1041
Inspectors, 1042; distribution of, 1045
Grasshopper and insect plagues, 1030
Health of Animals, 4506, 4513
Compensation for slaughtered herds, 1048
Diseases, 1048, 1051
Glanders in Frontenac, 926, 1058
Hog cholera, 1058
Garbage feeding, 1058-9
Procedure in dealing with, 1061
Alderson, case, 925, 1052, 1059, 4512
Increase in amount of item, 1057
Inspectors, 1067-8
Pleuro-pneumonia and tuberculosis, 1048
Slaughtering, 1048, 1051, 1062
Veterinary system, 1058
Horse breeding, 120, 1118
Illustration farms in Ontario, 952
Illustration station at L'Assomption, 947
Imperial Mineral Resources Bureau, 2166, 4498
Indian affairs, 2167-71
Insect and Pest Act, inspectors, 930, 1044
Inspection of root vegetables, 4343
Interior Department
Cabinet maker, 1342
Clapp, Miss S., 1332
Employees, 1332
Salaries, 1331
International Institute of Agriculture, 1116
Lignite Utilization Board, 4499
Live stock, 1116. See also under this title Agriculture, Health of Animals

Tolmie, Hon. S. F.—Con.
Live Stock—Con.
Commission men, 1122
Marketing, 1039
Pure-bred animals, distribution of, 948
Rescue policy, 1119
Migratory Birds Convention Act Amdt. Bill, 2442, 2891, 4496
Mines and Geological Survey, 2141, 2162-67
Municipalities—cold storage, 1040
Oleomargarine Act Amdt. Bill, 563, 3850-96, 3905
Pacific coast trade, 3649
Politics, participation in by public officials, 4503
Potato diseases, 1032
Refrigerator cars for fish, 1038
Seed Branch, 1125
Seed Grain 4506
Sheridan, Mr. John, resignation and reinstatement, 2173, 4501-5
Spruce bud worm, 1031
Surveyors, pamphlets for, 1335
Tourist traffic, 4495
Wool grading, 1121-2

Tonnage into Canadian ports, 3650. See also Shipping

Toronto
Customs building, qu. 3772, 4095
Customs officials, 1351
Harbour improvements, 687
Post Office
Appointments, qu. 734
Promotions, qu. 1673
Shipyards, 1889
University. See Research

Torrance, Dr. See Hog Cholera

Tourist Traffic, 4495.

Tractors, free, 3509. See also Agricultural Machinery

Trade. See also Board of Trade; Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement; Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; French Trade Agreement; Steamship services
Africa with, 1468, 1965
Agents and Commissioners, 525, 1392, 1464-77, 2893, 3460-2, 3785-3809. See also Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Buenos Aires, 3794-8
Europe, in, 1473
United States, in, 512, qu. 1001, 1473, 3460. See also United States
Aggregate, 3115
Australia and New Zealand, 1223-4, 1468
British preference, 3699

Trade—Con.
Chamber of commerce, 1224
Development of, 1466
Export, 1688, 1712, 1732
Canadian Government Merchant Marine, by, 1276-77
Expansion, 1276
Figures, 3349
Foreign, 1221-1225
Canadian enterprise in, 3409
Imports, value, 3310
Invoice certificate, 4389
France, with. See French Trade Agreement
German. See Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Customs Tariff
Gillies Bros., Limited, letter on restriction of, 4418
Great Brtain with, 3116
Imported goods, marking, 3938. See also Customs Tariff
International Trade Conference, 2151
Report, 4541
Restrictions, 4418
Routes, 1888
Rates on. See Canadian Government Merchant Marine
Russia, with, 1003, 1072, 1224
South Africa, with, 1468, 1965
Treaties. See Canada-West Indies; French Trade Agreement; Reciprocity
United States. See that title
West Indies 1271, 1275, 1870, 2251. See also Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement

Trade and Commerce
Department
Bounties. See that title
Canada Grain Act, administration, 1442
Demography, Chief of, 1232
Dominion Statistician, 1231
Employees, 1218
Moving pictures, 599, 1225, 1467, 1558
Artists and Lecturers, 1225, 1232
Patent and Copyright Branch, 1496
Salaries, 1215
Increases, 1218
Statistical Branch, 1231
Subsidized steamers, 1712. See also Steamship Services
Weekly bulletins, 1220
Weights and Measures, 1485

Trade Mark and Design Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 229; withdrawn, 2891

Trades and Labour Congress. See Labour, National Catholic Unions
Platform of, 1634

Trahan, Mr. Arthur (Nicolet)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 223; disregard of rights of French language, 223; religious holidays; violation of pledge given by Sir Robert Borden; Prime Minister's professed friendship for Quebec, 224; attack on leader of Opposition and his supporters; military imperialism the mailed fist of commerce and industry; agriculture, the basis of industrial stability; industrialism fraught with danger; the "crisis of moral sense"; Pensions Act; the Prime Minister still a "downright imperialist"; Mr. Gauthier and the Minister of Marine; Quebec will remember 1917; War-time Elections Act; Government shows contempt for rights of Parliament and people; Peace Treaty; country's credit involved without the consent of Parliament, 226; Purchasing Commission; Canadian Navy; League of Nations; Prime Ministers' Conference, 227; Imperial defence; divorce; Quebec, 228; Government undeserving of confidence, 229
Civil Service
Ascension day, 2775
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 4484-89
Holidays, amdt. 4484
European credits, qu. 2622
Finance. See also that title
Accounts with Great Britain, qu. 2622
Dominion note issues, qu. 2621
Expenditure accounts, qu. 2621
Investments "other" and "non-active", qu. 2619
Public debt—non-active miscellaneous banking accounts, 2621
Repayment of $25,000,000 loan, qu. 2622
Revenue accounts, qu. 2620
Income tax returns, 2625
International Financial Conference, qu. 1237
St. Simon station agent, qu. 3208

Trains, Cancellation of. See Canadian National Railways

Tramp Steamers. See Canadian Government Merchant Marine

Transcontinental Railway. See Canadian National Railways

Transferable Votes. See Proportional Representation

Translation of French Speeches. See House of Commons; Debates; French language

Transportation, 738. See also Canals; Grain and grain trade; Great Lakes-St. Lawrence; Railways; St. Lawrence river
Difficulties, 3567
Car shortage, 512, 548, 3541, 4322
Rail and water, 484
Res. (Mr. Keefer) 674; withdrawn, 756

Travelling Expenses of Judges. See Judges Act Amdt. Bill

Treaties. See also Canada-West Indies; Extradition; Canadian Representation in United States; French Trade Agreement
Extradition between Canada and United States, 2687
Migratory Birds Treaty, 2892. See also that title
Negotiation of, 2387

Tremblay, Edouard. See Quebec Riots

Trent Canal. See Canals

Tributes to Deceased Members. See House of Commons

Trowers, Miss Catherine, qu. 1131

Trustees, remuneration of. See Bankruptcy Act Amdt. Bill

Tubercular Cattle. See Health of Animals

Tuberculin Test, 1049

Tuberculosis, Prevention of, Canadian Association, grant, 3142

Turgeon, Mr. O. (Gloucester)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 144; congratulations to mover and seconder; the new Prime Minister, 144; the "Great Liberal" dead but spirit survives; the world in an abnormal condition; Prime Minister's reasons for not holding general election; Government has forfeited confidence of country, 145; reasons for formation of Union Government; Government elected for term of war and demobilization, 146; people clamouring for election; tariff; increase of railway rates, 147; redistribution, representation of rural and urban communities, 148; increased production and population, 149
Budget, 3447. Financial conditions and Government policy, 3447; tariff revision, 3448; value of home market, 3449; luxury taxes; taxation of lumber; tariff and protectionist spirit. 3450; income tax, 3451; free trade and Turgeon, Mr. O.—Con.

Budget—Con.
Agrarian party, 3452; Brussels Conference; taxation of unemployed land, 3453
Caraquet Gulf Shore Railway extension, 4338
Civil Service bonus, 2112
Civil Service (Res. Sir Sam Hughes) Political patronage in; Civil Service Commission; classification, 825; exercise of patronage by members; outside service, 826
Grain exported, 3054
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, 745
Intercolonial Railway, 4568
Lumber, sales tax on, 3450, 3743
Maritime Provinces, improved railway facilities, 4568
Privilege—Hon. Mr. Veniot, 3740
Railway situation, 3039
Shipbuilding, 1951

Turnover, Tax on. See Sales Tax

Tweedie, Mr. T. M. M. (Calgary West)
Canada Temperance Act Bill
Costs, 4387
Gold Seal Liquor Company vs. Dominion Express Co., 4379
Proclamation, omission of date, 4379
Rights of others than litigants affected, 4379
Strict compliance with statute, 4380
Vote, 4379
Canadian National Railways
Special Committee, reference to, M. (Mr. Meighen) 1789
Canadian representation in the United States, 2411-14
Cattle, slaughtered, compensation, 1061
Chief Justice, salary of, 1566
Civil Service Act Amdt. Bill, 2833-84
Criminal Code Amdt. Bill, 3926
Punishments, 695, 2228
Dairymen, loss to through destruction of cattle, 1061
De Martigny divorce, 3765-7
Estimates, Committee on, 2202
Excessive or inadequate punishments, 695, 1857, 2228
Inspection of Gas and Gas Meters Bill, 619
Opium and Narcotic Drug Act Amdt. Bill, 2904
Natural Resources—transfer to western provinces, 2547-49
Pensions, widowed mothers, 636
Public buildings in Nova Scotia, 2744
Tubercular cattle, destruction of, 1061

Typhus
Epidemic in Europe, 4534
Precautions, 643. See also Immigration

Under Secretaries. See Ministers

Unemployment, 2, 3203, 3259, 3367, 3811-12, 4361. See also Address; Budget; Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Housing; Immigration; Labour; Returned Soldiers; Shipbuilding
Emergency relief for, qu. 2623, 4535
Employment offices, 4363
Extent of, 4549
Housing loan, 4552
Immigration, suspension of
M. (Mr. Deslauriers. 1351; withdrawn, 1380
Insurance, 2, 9, 231, 237, 263, 284, 395, 4547. See also Address
Labour and, 1373. See also Labour
National Advisory Council, 4363
Relief, qu. 570, 4550
Emergency, qu. 2623, 4535
Returned soldiers, 4048
Peterborough in, qu. 4253
Shipbuilding, 1727, 1882, 1897, 1902, 1909
Quebec at, 1986

Unified Buying. See Canada Grain Act

Union Service Fund, qu. 2192

United Farmers of Ontario, 791, 3199, 3592, 4297, 4301. See also Drury
Railway nationalization, 1787

United Grain Growers, Limited, 289, 316, 331, 346, 417, 3662. See also Grain and Grain Trade, Progressive Party
Commercial activities, 516
Dockages, 3633-34
Lambert, Mr. Norman. See Lambert
Lumber business, 3633
Rice Jones, Mr. Cecil, 289, 290, 333, 417, 3180, 3492
Sale of American implements, 346, 418, 491, 3372. See also Speeches on Address; Budget

United States. See also Ambassador; Canadian Representation; Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Reciprocity; Trade
Annexation with, 1483
Attitude of Southern States on protection, 3458
Boots and shoes, Canadian in, 1225
Borrowings from, 3266
Canadian dollar, value in, 3087
Canadian Government Merchant Marine cargoes, 1689, 1722. See also that title
Canadian War Mission, 3388, 2400
Capital invested in Canada, 3219

United States—Con.
Coal from, 1248. See also Fuel Supply Problem
Coal mines owned by Canadian Rys., 4317
Commercial agents in, 1473
Constitution, comparison with, 1166
Consular service, 1475, 3460, 3796. See also Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Trade
Customs regulations, 3817, 4417
Emigration to, 3068
Exchange rate, 3167
Extradition Treaty with, 2687, 3008, 3207. See also Extradition Convention
Tabled, 3207
Farming, competition in, 3187
Fordney Bill, 512, 3239, 3368, 3442. See also under this title Young Emergency Tariff
French Canadians in, 1483, 3675
Grand Trunk Railway
Amount due, 4135
Lines in, 4326
Immigration, 1360, 3064, 3068, 3072
Commissioner, 3059
Restrictions, 1357
Importation of farm implements from, 417, 492, 3372, 3409
Migratory Birds Treaty, 2892. See also that title
Nolan Act, patents, 4454
Patent legislation, 4454-60
Pecuniary Claims Convention, qu. 1817. See also that title
Premium on American money, 3087
Progress in farming, 3188
Pure bred cattle, 1049
Railways, 1007, 1576
Cost of operation, 1576
Government control, 1583
Systems and freight vessels, 1730-31
Reciprocity with. See also Address; Budget, 268, 297, 1481, 2038, 2045, 2058, 2066, 2075, 2393
Relations with, 400, 3245
Shipbuilding, 1288. See also that title
Tariff, 3456. See also under this head, Fordney, Young Emergency
Canadian duties, 4254
Tariff legislation, 3118, 3342
Tinplate industry, 3326
Trade agents in, qu. 1001, 1219. See also under this title Consular Service
Agents in Canada, 1221. See also Customs and Excise Dept. Bill; Trade Trade with, 1482, 3460, 4397-4400. See also that title
Barriers to, 3599

United States—Con.
Young Emergency Tariff Bill, 2905, 3160, 3115, 3352, 3809
Rumoured new tariff resolutions, 3905

United States Transportation Act, 1007

Universities, Scientific work at. See Research

Unopposed Motions for Returns, 578, 606, 674, 767, 840, 1134, 1238, 1350, 1502, 1625, 1821, 2193, 2346, 2507, 2821, 3090, 3423, 2772

Upper Chamber. See Ministers

Upper Crossing, St. Roch light, qu. 1383

Uruguay, seizure of Nova Scotia vessel, 1527

Vacancies. See House of Commons

Vallée, Dr., case of, 3131

Vancouver Island
Canadian National Railways on, qu. 3422
Returned soldiers and shipbuilding, 1727

Vegetable Insects, 1027

Vegetables, Root, Inspection and Sale, 4343

Venereal Diseases, 3127

Veniot, Hon. P. J., 3637, 3688, 3717, 3740. See also York-Sunbury

Verret, Colonel Hector, 4525

Versailles Treaty. See League of Nations; Patent Act Amdt. Bill

Verville, Mr. Alphonse (St. Denis)
Housing loan, 4552
Income tax collections, qu. 569
Unemployment, 4550
Emergency appropriation for, qu. 2623

Vessel Rates. See Railway Act Amdt. Bill

Vessels. See also Canadian Government Merchant Marine; Shipbuilding
Canadian National Railway, qu. 1348
Commandeered, qu. 2943
Names of
"Brant", 1982
"Canadian Beaver," qu. 1673, 1862
"Canadian Conqueror," qu. 1381
"Canadian Explorer," 1714
"Canadian Inventor", 1890
"Canadian Mariner", 1713, 1715
"Canadian Otter," qu. 1382
"Canadian Pioneer," qu. 1382, 1689, 1722, 1894

Vessels—Con.
Names of—Con.
"Canadian Planter", qu. 2942
"Canadian Rancher", 1716
"Canadian Ranger," qu. 1382, 1863
"Canadian Recruit," qu. 575, qu. 1381, 1382, 1703, 1863
"Canadian Runner", 1715
"Canadian Sapper", qu. 734
"Canadian Seigneur," qu. 1382, 1863
"Canadian Squatter", 1894
"Canadian Voyageur", qu. 1381, 1382, 1716, 1894
"Champlain", 1980, 1983, 1995
"Druid", 1980, 1984
"Esperanto", 4341
"Lake Champlain", ice-breaker, 2174
"Laurentian", qu. 1348
"Marie Lydia", 1985
"Montcalm," ice-breaker, 1985
"Muriel W.", 1990
"Narbethong", 2175
"Neophyte", 1966
"Niobe", qu. 671, 4010-36, 4041
"Rainbow", qu. 671, 4010-36, 4041
"Scandinavian", 1498, 1556
Seagoing, tonnage, 3650
Service, in, qu. 568
Wooden, 1714, 1728, 1871

Veterinary Director General, 4508-13. See also Alderson; Health of Animals

Veterinary Inspector General, 4513

Veterinary Inspectors. See Health of Animals

Veterinary Surgeons. See Health of Animals

Vice-Admiralty
Judges, 1084
Registrar in Quebec district, 1086

Vickers' Shipyards, 1967

Victoria
Drydock, 265
Contract for, qu. 565
Shipbuilding, qu. 599

Victoria Day, adjournment. See House of Commons, Adjournments

Victoria Bridge, widening, 300

Victory Bonds, 1285, 3444. See also Finance
Expenses, qu. 1620
Government investment in, 1704

Vien, Mr. Thomas (Lotbiniere)
Address in reply to Governor Generals' Speech, 430; Tribute to the late Thomas P. Owens, Editor of Debates; the late Mr. Gladu; does majority in the House reflect public opinion?; the Government's mandate, 430; Government elected in 1917 to enforce Military Service Act; the question of confidence; Liberal members of Cabinet; tenure morally at an end; Prime Minister's argument, 431; tariff, 432; fiscal policy of Liberal party; Farmer's platform; refusal of Canadian Manufacturers to sell to farmers' organizations, 434; Minister of Immigration; Canada's status; unity a real element of nationhood; Sir Wilfrid Laurier; dissolution, 436

Vien, Mr. Thomas—Con.
Address—Con.
Administration of Justice, Yukon territory, 1087
Agricultural shows, 1240
Bankruptcy Act, Judges under, 1085
Canadian Bar Association, 1095
Canadian Government Merchant Marine
Administration, 1441
Insurance and value, 1278
Vessels in service, qu. 568
Canadian manufacturers and United States trade, 1222
Canadian nationals, 772
Canadian National Railways
Conductors, qu. 569
Divisional points, qu. 574
Freight cars, qu. 568
Operating expenses, qu. 1131
Policy and history of, not in order, 1773
Service between Winnipeg and Quebec, qu. 569
Special Committee, reference to M. (Mr. Meighen) 1768, 1779
Transcontinental, transportation of grain, 2984
Canadian Record, 1438
Canadian representation in the United States, 2386
Canadian Wheat Board Bill, 2159
Cattle and horse breeding, 1118
Cattle embargo, qu. 709
Civil Service
Bonus and reclassification, 1463
Copyright—Bill not printed in French, 649
County Fairs, assistance to, 1123
De Martigny divorce, 4078
Director of Commercial Intelligence, 1219
Dominion Lands Act Amdt. Bill, 4062-6
Estimates
Before item passes question should be put in Com., 1091
Discussion of, 1230
Experimental farms, 939
Flax industry, 1408

Vien, Mr. Thomas—Con.
Fortifications of Quebec, 970
Gilmour and Hughson Bill, 1096
Grand Trunk loan, 4134-51
Grand Trunk loan, 4134-51
Hudson Bay Railway, 989
Iron ores, 1436
Law stamps, tax, 1090
Linen yarns, 1407
Loans, domestic, qu. 566
Judges
Ad hoc, and Admiralty, 1084
Yukon territory, 1088
Justice Department
Purchasing Commission and, 1103
Maisonneuve and Gaspé representation, 2319
Parliament buildings, 4077
French inscription, qu. 568
Penitentiaries, 1115
Purchasing of supplies, 1097, 1104, 1107
Pierreville postmistress, qu. 3422
Point of order—statement misquoted, 2231
Polish battalion for service in French army, 4058
Privy Council—"Insular" tribunal of England, 1090
Purchasing Commission, 1098, 1103, 1114
Civil Service Commission and, 1100
Railways and Canals, annual report, qu. 697
Research Council, 1436
Russia, trade with, inquiry, 1072
St. Croix and St. Antoine wharves, 2616
Searls, Mr. George, grain inspection, 1444
Soldiers' pensions, insurance and re-establishment, 4058
Trade commissioners in United States, 1220
Trent canal, 2953, 2978, 2606-17
Veniot correspondence, 3719
Vice Admiralty, registrar, salary, 1086
Welland canal, construction, 2978
Wheat Board, 1454, 1463, 2159
Winding-up Act Amdt. Bill, 2158

Ville Emard Tunnel, 3677

Vote on Account. See Interim Supply

Votes. See House of Commons, Divisions

Walker, Sir Byron, 2684

Wallace, The Late Mr. Tom G., tribute to, 152

War. See aslo Demobilization; Germany, Reparations
Accounts, Canada-Great Britain, adjustment, qu. 2191
British Remount Commission, qu. 4341
Canada's share, 3583
Canadian Mission in the United States, 2388, 2400

War—Con.
Claim of Canadian citizens, qu. 1820
History, qu. 1625
Indemnity, 3195
Loans, 3246. See also that title
Reparations. See Germany
Scandals, 3509
Surplus supplies, disposal of, qu. 736
Union Service Fund, qu. 2192

War Measures Act, 4459. See also Purchasing Commission

War Purchasing Commission, 2309. See also Purchasing Commission

War Times Election Act, 217, 322
Perpetuation of, 4238-40

Washington. See Ambassador at; Canadian Representation in the United States; Prime Ministers' Conference

Water Powers. See ulso Lake of the Woods
Canadian General Electric Company, 2607
Conservation Commission, 3960-70
Development of, 844
Director of, 1346
Films showing, 1467
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence. See that title
Lake of the Woods, 4171. See also that title
Trent canal, 2954-64

Waterways. See Canals; Transportation Commission. See International Joint Commission
Great Lakes-St. Lawrence, 674, 738
Chicago Drainage Canal diversion, 186, 2225

Watson, Dr., Chief Pathologist, 1050

Ways and Means, Committee of, 562, 2100. 3688, 3698, 3719, 3726, 3733, 3741. See also Budget; Tariff
Resolutions, printing of, 3207

Webster, Hon. Senator, 1990

Wednesday Sittings. See House of Commons, Sittings

Weed Seeds, 289

Weekly Bulletins, 1220

Weights and Measures, 1485

Welland, Binder twine factory, 3227

Welland Canal. See Canals

West Durham Election, 1324

West Indies. See also Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement
Cable, 1438
Canadian Government Merchant Marine ships, 1913. See also that title

West Indies—Con.
Canadian ships for, 1870
Conference of 1920, 1870, 2252
Customs tariff, goods under, 3698. See also that title
Importations, preference, 3698, 3704
Preferential tariff, 3704
Proposed union with, 2254
Steamship service, 1275, 1488, 1712, 1714, 2253-62
Sugar imports from, 3699-3700
Trade with, 1271, 1275, 1870, 2251

West Indies Trade Agreement. See Canada-West Indies

Western Canada
Antelope in, qu. 1134
Colonization Association, 2583
Natural Resources. See that title

Western Dominion Railway Company, 3343. See Private Bills

Western Provinces and Natural Resources
M. (Mr. Campbell) 2519. See also Natural Resources

Wharves and Breakwaters, for individual wharves. See their titles
Cape Breton, 4103
Lighting of, 1929
Repairs to, 1971

Wheat. See also Canada Grain Act; Canadian Wheat Board; Elevators; Grain and Grain Trade; Transportation
Consumption and production, 3369
Credit to Belgium for purchase of, qu. 1001
Crop of 1920, 438
Marketing, 342, 346
Marquis, 1033
Milling in bond in United States, 3368
Pool, 391
Price of, 369, 3395
Rust, 341

Whipping. See Criminal Code Amdt.; Opium and Narcotic Drug

White, Sir Thomas, 451, 477. See also Leeds
Resignation of, 1619
Status of, 69, 463, 469, 477, 1294, 1326

White, Mr. W. H. (Victoria, Alta.)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 548; congratulations to Prime Minister; grievances of the West; car shortage; Commission to investigate grain trade, 549; sentiment of the West; the Agrarian group, 550
Agricultural implements, 3394
Blood Indian reserve, qu. 1818, qu. 1819, qu. 2098, qu. 2374
Budget, 3538. Alberta's representation in House; Government regulation of oil and petroleum resources, 3539; inadequate transportation facilities in West, 3540; freight cars for grain shipments. 3541; agricultural implements, 3544
Canadian National Railways
Car shortage, 548, 3541, 4322
Western representation on Board, 4315
Canadian Pacific Railway, patents to lands, qu. 2821
Cattle embargo, 704
Dominion Elections Act Amdt. Bill, 4234-5
Naturalization—certificate of qualification, 4236
Immigration, 2574-9
Immigration Act Amdt. Bill, 3823-6
Reciprocity agreement with the United States, 2071
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act Amdt. Bill, 2484
Soldier Settlement Board, qu. 673
Transportation charges on stock feed, qu. 2686

White, Mr. W. H.—Con.

White Cross. See Burnham, Dr.

White Dog Rapids, 4172

White Grub, destruction by, 1030

Whitehead Life-saving station, 1991

White Horse, Judge at, 1088

Whitley Councils. See Civil Service

Wholesalers. See Sales Tax

Widowed Mothers. See Pensions

Wife Desertion. See Extradition

Wigmore, Hon. R. W. (Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue)
Civil Service Retirement Act Amdt. Bill, 2500-01
Customs and Excise Dept. Bill
Amalgamation of departments, 3821
Brokers, 4432
Certificate, form of, 3799
Explanation by Minister, 3786
New and unused goods, 3813
Preventive service, Victoria county, 4388
Provincial analysts' certificate, 3788-90
Valuation for duty, 4411
Customs and Inland Revenue Department
Belyea, Mr., retirement, 3082
Consolidation of offices, 3083
Estimates, 3077, 4117
Officers, 3083
Nova Scotia, 3096
Overtime, 4123-5
Retiring allowances, 3084

Wigmore, Hon. R. W.—Con.
Customs and Inland Revenue Dept.—Con.
Job printers, taxation, 4124
"Niobe" and "Rainbow," 4018-32
Personal business, Nagle & Wigmore, 3077, 3079, 3612
Shipyards, 1927
York-Sunbury election, Veniot correspondence, 3718

Wilson, Judge, superannuation of, qu. 1622

Wilson, Mr. Gordon C. (Wentworth)
Highway construction in Ontario, 4289-4300
Hamilton-Brantford highway, qu. 3582, qu. 3904, 4252-3
Privilege—Hon. F. C. Biggs, 4448
Purchase of trucks by Hon. F. C. Biggs, 4291
Warren company, qu. 4252

Wilson, Mr. J. R. (Saskatoon)
Highways—Saskatchewan, 4307
Income Tax Act Amdt. Bill
Prosecutions in Saskatchewan, 4347
Unemployment and immigration, 1373

Winding-up Act Amdt. Bill
1r., 2095-6; 2r., com.; 3r., 2158

Windsor, use of armoury, 902

Wines
Imported, duty on, 3126, 3705, 3710, 3734
Medicinal, 3709
Other than sparkling, 3710
Sparkling, 3711

Winnipeg
Fort Garry Hotel, insurance, qu. 1348
Grain Exchange, 277, 335, 343, 379, 440, 489, 513. See also Grain
Grain laboratory, 1228
Proportional representation in, 1532, 1535, 1538
Strike, 3359, 3360, 3560

Winnipeg river., 2347, 4172. See also Lake of the Woods

Winter Fairs. See Live Stock

Wireless Communications. See Prime Minister's Conference

Wire Worms, 1027

Wolffe, Mr., 793. See also Printing Bureau, Destruction of documents

Woman Suffrage, 173, 527, 4474

Women Voters. See Dominion Elections Act; Canadian Nationals

Wood, Mr. E. R., 1609-10, 3610. See also Canadian National Railways

Wooden Vessels, 1714, 1728, 1871. See also Shipbuilding

Woods, Mr. H. W., 288, 331, 380, 513

Woodstock Exhibition, 1125

Wool Grading, 1121.

Working Expenses. See Penitentiaries

World's Poultry Congress, 4513

Wrecking Plants, 1990

Wrecks, Investigation of, 1988

Wright, Mr. A. A., and Labour, 1647

Wright, Mr. H. O. (Battleford)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 511; Congratulations to Prime Minister; Fordney Bill and its possible effect on Canada; Ambassador at Washington, 511; trade between Canada and the United States; adverse trade balance, 512; shortage of cars; Commission to investigate grain trade; foreign-born in Western Canada, 514; broader national spirit; national classification of census; leader of Progressive party, 515; commercial activities of organized farmers, 516; sale of American goods; purchases by Government in United States; Government's mandate, 517
Budget, 3565. Budget and taxation, 3566; Canadian Wheat Board; Agricultural and transportation difficulties, 3567; low price of farm produce and high price of farm implements, 3568; Farmers' platform, 3569
Civil Service bonus, qu. 967
Fish-breeding in Saskatchewan, 2185
Highways, Saskatchewan, qu. 1820

Yamaska By-Election, 1156, 1898, 3215, 3250, 3467, 4534
Boucher, Mr. Aime, 3422, 3423. See also Pierreville Postmistress; Park St. Charles Mondou, Mr., 3251
Vacancy, 1293

Yarrows, Limited, 3649

York-Sunbury
By-election, 2151, 3475, 3480, 3627, 3630, 3662, 3637, 3717
Catholic Minister, and, 3480. See also Veniot
Vacancy in, 1293

Yorkton Judicial district, Judge, 1080

York, West, vacancy, 1293

Young. See Arthur Young and Company; Civil Service, Classification

Young Emergency Tariff. See United States

Yukon Territory
Administration of Justice, 1087