By 1980 we shall have to increase our university enrolment by as much as three to four times to satisfy our indicated requirements at that time, so the brief says. By 1980 we shall have to increase our enrolment of today by seven or eight times to enroll the same proportion of the age group now enrolled in the United States, which is quite a bit ahead of us. We are in a very poor position compared with Russia and the United States. Russia proportionately has four times as many enrolled in schools of higher learning as we have in Canada and the United States has three times as many.

I could go on and give a good many other figures in support of our contention regarding higher education but I do not think I need to do that. I think I have made my point sufficiently clear in that regard. With our present performance we shall graduate between three million and four million students from high school who will not graduate from university over the period from 1956 to 1980, a period of 24 years. In the United States 53 per cent of those entering grade one graduate from secondary school. In Canada 20 per cent complete junior matriculation and slightly more than half of these complete senior matriculation. So in that way we are falling far behind the United States, and if we can believe the statistics and the reports we have received from the U.S.S.R. we are falling very far behind Russia in the same particular.

We are told that with no increase in the percentage of the age group graduating from our universities, 63 per cent of the graduates should be absorbed in satisfying our indicated requirements for scientists, engineers and post-secondary or university teachers. It is presently absorbing, we are told, 21 per cent.

We should consider carefully, therefore, in this parliament of Canada a program to influence the secondary school graduates now enrolled to continue their education, even if they do so on a part time basis. Again, we should provide facilities to enable them to do so, because there we have a vast reservoir of additional scientific, engineering and technical manpower which could readily be tapped if only the proper incentives were provided. Of course, out of all this stems the need for properly qualified and highly equipped teachers.

I had the great honour and privilege 30 years ago of being the president of the Canadian teachers' federation. For the next six years, from 1928 to 1934, I was the national secretary treasurer. During those years there was borne in upon me the fact that the teaching body was not a teacher's profession but a teacher's procession. There was a procession of young men and young women entering and remaining for a few years time, then finding more remunerative employment. There has been some improvement over the past several years. The provinces have adopted superannuation plans. The provinces have adopted salary schedules, and have given greater security of tenure to the teachers. Some have organized their areas, of course, into larger units making that security more complete than it was before. However, we still need to encourage more young men and women to enter the teaching profession.

In the primary, secondary and university levels, educational finance is inadequate and unequal. I was looking at a bulletin published by the research committee of the Canadian teachers' federation, whose head office is in this city at the present time. It is dated December, 1954, which is the latest one I could get. This report uses a number of yardsticks with which to measure the provinces' ability to support education. As I said at the beginning, under our constitution education is primarily a provincial function. We believe however that this parliament of Canada not only has a right but an obligation to see that education across Canada is adequate, and therefore we believe the federal government has the right to make grants to our provinces for that purpose. The federal government has no right to interfere with the management of education in a particular province. We recognize that very fully. These yardsticks of the research committee of the Canadian teachers' federation are useful in indicating the differences in the provinces' ability to provide education.

These statistics provide also striking evidence of what we have long advocated in this house. May I say, in order to avoid misunderstanding, that not only have we advocated, but some hon. members on all sides of the house from time to time have advocated in this parliament over the years federal aid to education. I regret that my own good friend who used to introduce his resolution on this subject every year is not here, that is Mr. Roy Knight of Saskatoon, himself a teacher of many years' standing. Others have done the same thing. I am not taking for this party or myself the sole credit for bringing this matter before parliament year by year.

Let us look at the report to which I referred. This report notes that a major reason for educational differences between provinces is differences in financial ability. As a yardstick of financial ability it compared per capita personal income figures of the provinces. It goes on to say:

> The best available measure of a province's ability to support the various functions of government is the per capita personal income of the individuals within the province. It quotes per capita personal income figures for 1951. However, comparable figures for as late as 1956 are now available.

I am going to put those comparable figures on the record this afternoon. The per capita personal income in 1956 for the whole of Canada was $1,350; for Newfoundland it was $725; for Prince Edward Island, $788; for Nova Scotia, $1,000; for New Brunswick, $923. Unfortunately those four Atlantic provinces have the lowest per capita incomes and yet, may I say that in days gone by at least many of the leading educationalists across Canada came from the Atlantic provinces and particularly from Nova Scotia. Look over the list of university presidents over the last number of years and one is surprised by the number of them who came from the Atlantic provinces, some from very humble origins. The opportunities which those men had then to get a higher education equipped them to occupy these very important positions in the field of education. Those opportunities are not there in the same way today because it is not as simple for a young man or a young woman to go through school and get a higher education, particularly a university education, as it was in those earlier years of our century.

The per capita personal income of Quebec in 1956 was $1,180; Ontario, $1,595—more than twice as much as Newfoundland and almost twice as much as Prince Edward Island—Manitoba, $1,260; Saskatchewan, $1,291; Alberta, $1,370 and British Columbia, in which they include the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, $1,566. Now, those figures are very revealing because they indicate the financial ability of the various provinces of Canada to carry the educational burden. As I have already indicated, though I have not said it, education is not only of interest to the various provinces or localities in which young people live but it is of interest to the whole of Canada. If you educate a boy or girl in Nova Scotia or Newfoundland, British Columbia or Saskatchewan, you have not guaranteed that your return on that young person's education will be made to the province which educated him. His contribution will be to the whole of Canada. Consequently, from that point of view the whole of Canada has responsibility for our educational facilities.

I was going to refer to numerous other sectors of this report, but I am not going to do so because I think I have established my point quite well that education is of direct interest to all Canada.

Therefore federal aid for education should be provided from this parliament of Canada without—again may I say—interfering in any way with the management of education by the several provinces of Canada. Of course the systems of education that have arisen in our provinces have vital differences. To try to control education in any province would cause great difficulty for us all, besides which it would violate the fundamental consideration of the confederation agreement. I do not suppose we would have had confederation at all unless the fathers of confederation had agreed to leave education as one of the principal functions under section 92 of the British North America Act to the provinces of Canada. Because of what I have said—and I shall have very little more to say afterwards—I am going to move this amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That all the words after the word "That" to the end of the question be deleted and that the following words be substituted therefor:
> "this house is of the opinion that the government should give consideration to the advisability of taking steps to relieve the financial crisis in education, without encroaching in any way on the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces in this field, by granting financial assistance to the various provinces for the expansion and equalization of educational opportunity across Canada."

What I have said this afternoon falls into two categories. First of all, there is what we can do ourselves. I mention particularly the extension of the facilities and the attractiveness of work in the national research council. I believe that to be absolutely fundamental to encouragement of pure science in this country. It is the only organization in Canada equipped and experienced in the field of pure science. Other research is applied science. We need more of the type of pure scientific research in this country than we have had up to the present time. I say that it would pay big dividends to our country.

I was going to refer—and I am just going to mention it because I do not intend to deal with it at any length; I have spoken long enough already—to the report that was made by Dr. LaZerte who was engaged by the Canadian school trustees' association to make an investigation of our educational system several years ago. It is a long report but there is a synopsis of it published. Dr. LaZerte is one of the outstanding educationists in this country. He was professor of education at the University of Alberta for a long time. I knew him years before that when, as a young teacher, I listened to him speak at the Saskatchewan educational association during the first world war. Dr. LaZerte has made a tremendous contribution in several fields of education. I believe that today, being retired from Alberta, he is lecturing in the University of Manitoba in education.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is right.

Mr. Coldwell: His report is one that should be read by every member of parliament because he makes an analysis of educational opportunities and facilities from the primary school right through to the secondary school. It is rather technical. That is why it is perhaps out of place to quote it at length in this house this afternoon. However it is well worth reading and I recommend it to hon. members of this house for their study.

We therefore would say to the government: You can provide, $1,750 million, one third of our entire budget, for defence in the military field; yet we are doing nothing substantial in what I believe to be a more effective field of defence, namely the field of education. As a matter of fact, the provinces are inadequately equipped to raise the money necessary to build up and carry on an educational system such as we need if we are to outrival the people who today are threatening us in so many fields, including the field of education, scientific and technical. The complexity of our present economic society is such that only the federal government can tax wealth wherever found in order to pay for educational services where needed. No other authority has that power. This federal parliament of Canada has the right to enter any field of taxation and to tax wealth where it can be found. In other words, we are the only ones who can provide sufficiently for the higher education that is essential to meet the needs of this country in this age of complexity, in this age of scientific and technical progress.

I plead with this house, Mr. Speaker, to support this amendment so that we may indicate to the government that we require a vast expansion of all kinds, of facilities and opportunities of education. This parliament alone can provide the necessary funds to enable us to do that so that Canada may progress as she should. We should provide them.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, there has been a certain switch in educational circles in the last few months as a result of scientific developments and education, which a short time ago had a sort of civil war going on within its ranks—rather the traditional versus the progressive—has now become something at which everybody is taking—I was going to say "optimistic" but that is hardly the word—a very pleasant look. Everyone is very much in favour of it. What I wanted to refer to today was that aspect of the resolution that would deal with universities, the nature of the crisis that we have at the present time and the measures that need to be taken to improve our position in higher education.

As one who has been in the classroom fairly recently I may say that there are two features which stand out about our failure and which have nothing whatever to do with the events in Russia. I think the first one—at least I place it first in importance—is the fact that the young ladies or the girls in our society are not getting the opportunity to go to university in anything like the numbers they should, according to what surveys reveal they have the capacity for. It may seem odd that I should place that matter first but it seems to me that is one of the great reservoirs of talent that we are not using. I suppose it will take almost a social revolution to get us to do something about that matter. I wanted to put it first in order to keep it in people's minds.

The other point which is very apparent and which was brought out by the leader of this party a short time ago was that equality of opportunity in education is something that we all treasure and believe in. I do not think there would be a gentleman in this house who would be against the idea that any students who had revealed by academic attainment and by their record that they were capable of higher education should not have the opportunity. Of course the question we are all asking at the present time and which there have been a number of specific studies to determine is this: Is such a condition existing? I hope later in this speech to cover some of the statistics which indicate that we are losing a great deal of talent.

There are four main reasons for saying that the universities of Canada face a crisis today. Firstly, statistics indicate a heavy increase in enrolment over the next 10 years; secondly, is the fact that Canadian universities for financial and other reasons are not even now fulfilling the manpower needs of our own economy; thirdly is the invidious comparisons drawn between Canadian and Russian production of university graduates, especially in the fields of pure and applied science; and fourthly is the fact that only a small proportion of those persons capable of benefiting from higher education are now receiving it.

Enrolment statistics in regard to universities and their projection into the future are usually those given by the education division of the dominion bureau of statistics, a number of which have been prepared by Dr. Sheffield of that division. We can see from the period 1945-1946 through to the projection to 1964-1965 that there is an estimated enrolment moving up to 122,900 undergraduates. This will be approximately 10 per cent of our 18 to 21 years of age group in 1964-65. The significant proportion of the college age group actually attending is increasing and will presumably continue to do so, but even in 1964-1965, if we project the figures set out by the bureau of statistics, we are still only going to have 10 per cent of the people in that particular age group attending universities. The reasons for the rise from 1945-1946 of only 4.3 per cent probably has to do with postwar prosperity and the various drives for status which accompanied that prosperity. There has certainly been an increased demand for university graduates but the general increase projected for enrolment will come about mainly from population increases. What is anticipated is not a sudden rise and a sudden drop as happened back in 1946 to 1949 with the influx of veterans at our universities but a permanent enlargement of enrolment as a result of higher population figures.

In terms of manpower and our present failure to fill that manpower requirement from the universities it is very hard to give accurate statistics but some of the reports of the Gordon commission indicate that although 15,000 students were graduated by Canadian universities in 1954 it was 10,000 short of the 1954 manpower requirements.

The committee of the national conference of Canadian universities has estimated that Canada will be 190,000 short of necessary personnel in 1965. When we compare our manpower requirements with that of other countries we have to realize that the U.S.S.R. has overtaken us as well as other western countries in the field of higher education.

In 1918, to serve a population of about 140 million, Russia had 96 institutions of higher learning or one institution for every 1,460,000 Russians. Canada at that time had one institution for 315,000 Canadians. In 1953 the U.S.S.R. had 890 centres of higher education. In 1927 university enrolment in the U.S.S.R. stood at 169,000; today it numbers 1,867,000. In other words, the U.S.S.R. has one university student today for every 107 people while Canada has about one for every 200. We are of course also behind the United States in this respect.

The following table shows the percentage of the 18 to 21 age group enrolment in United States colleges. In 1900 the percentage of enrolment there was 4.0 per cent; in 1950 it was 19.3 per cent. In the previous table to which I referred Canada in 1965 will have reached only 10 per cent. In other words, United States today is at least 10 per cent ahead of us in this important regard or in other words the percentage of students in the 18 to 21 age group at universities under our present situation is roughly equivalent to that existing in the United States more than 40 years ago. To put it in another way it is estimated that in order for our university population to reach a level proportionate to the United States and the U.S.S.R. the present Canadian enrolment of around 80,000 would have to leap immediately to between 240,000 and 315,000.

One of the questions we have to ask ourselves when considering our crisis in university education is "who goes to university?" It is surprising how very little is known in an analytical way about this question. There is no national survey at either the secondary school or university level and there are only two or three regional surveys which can answer a few questions. In a paper given to the November session of the N.C.C.U. in 1956 the authors say:

> It can . . . be argued on the basis of the fragments of information at hand that we are utilizing to the full the talents of probably no more than one-third of our academically-gifted young men and women.

This is a vital point if we are wasting that much of the talents of our gifted people. The evidence for this statement of course is very slight. I would like to refer all hon. members of this house to the two recent reports put out by Atkinson study of the utilization of student resources. I have gathered from conversations with the gentlemen behind this study that the new Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith), the former president of the University of Toronto, played a fairly large part in initiating this study. This particular book that interprets the initial stages of the study is entitled "Secondary Grade 13 Students—Who are They and What Happens to Them?" I would like to refer to the summary on page 52 of report 2, with relation to the points in connection with who goes to university.

It says that, regardless of sex a student had the best chance if he was somewhat younger than the average prospective grade 13 graduate, if both his parents were living, if he came from a family with not more than three children, if his father enjoyed a relatively high occupational status and especially if he was a college or university teacher, administrator, a lawyer, physician, dentist, an engineer or a manager of a wholesale trade; if his parents were relatively well educated and especially if they had attended university and if he had not done part-time work during his last year of secondary school. In other words early indications from this report are that if a student's family background is of a high occupational or educational standard he is much more likely to go to the university.

Any of us who have taught in these schools are quite aware that those students are not necessarily those who have the talent or the gifts. A powerful factor however, I am sure, is the position of those students who grew up in homes where university education is something that is prized and discussed and is part of their whole focal point as young people.

One of the other sources of determining who goes to university is the 1951 Canada census, and the main conclusion one can draw from a study of these figures is that if you live in a city you have a much better chance of going to a university than if you live in a rural area, and that if you happen to live in a city which is near a university you have a better chance still. For instance, if you live in Kingston, Toronto or Hamilton you stand a much better chance of going to a university than if you live in a city which has no university in its neighbourhood. This is a point of particular interest to the people of the lakehead where we are at the stage of initiating what we hope will be in a few years a lakehead university and for that reason the question of the price of higher education is particularly interesting to my constituents.

When you get into another phase of who goes to university, and what happens to students when they get there, you come to a discussion of university failure rates. It is known that approximately 33 per cent of university students fail to graduate, but no university has undertaken objectively to discover why. Part of the reason must be the fact that universities are open to those who can afford them rather than to all of those who have the necessary intellectual equipment.

I know of a young lad who has attended four universities. He has never got past the second year. He has put in a total of six years at universities because his father is a well to do man. I interviewed this young man, and was much impressed by his personality and very depressed by his lack of ability. I thought he made the perfect case as to the injustice of federal support for higher education. Even though such young men pay for their education the cost is heavily subsidized by federal grants to the universities and yet they have the jump over other students who never think of going to university just because their fathers are well to do, which points up again the necessity for a new approach to the question of enrolment rather than retaining a situation where money can override more important considerations.

Quebec requires special treatment because of her special situation. At first sight the province appears to lead Canada in the value attached to higher education, and in many ways this is true. At least 40 per cent of the graduates of the public secondary schools, and 96.5 per cent of the graduates of the classical colleges go on to university. The joker is that very few Quebec students enter either tye of secondary institution. The first problem for French speaking schools is not to bring more secondary school graduates into the university; it is rather to bring more boys and girls into the secondary school itself. The 1951 census showed that Quebec had the lowest percentage of the 15-19 age group still in school, 29.89 per cent; the national average being 40.42 per cent. The average for Newfoundland, the next province up the scale, being 38.4, and the averages for Ontario 44 per cent, Nova Scotia 45 per cent, Alberta 50 per cent and British Columbia, 52 per cent. On the other hand, because of the very high proportion of high school and classical college graduates going to university, Quebec's percentage of the 20-24 age group still at school is roughly the same as the national average, 4.5 as against the Canadian average of 4.84. There are five provinces below Quebec. Leon Lortie of the University of Montreal recommended, in effect, a break with the elitist tradition of Quebec education. If I may quote from his speech made at the Canadian congress of higher education:

> The efforts of all are indeed absolutely indispensable, and more especially in Quebec, because we are faced for the first time with the real task of democratizing our system and methods of education.

There has been no visible response to such notions from the Quebec government.

When one comes to the solution of the crisis which the universities face it has been argued that unless there is a limitation on university enrolment the universities are going to be swamped with applicants, and that in consequence there is bound to be limitation.

Apart from the social criticisms which can be made against limiting university enrolment, such a solution is erroneous in that it assumes that the crisis is one involving the universities alone, and of course this is not so. Limitation of enrolment has received a certain amount of consideration from university administrators, most of it unsympathetic. But even those, like Sidney Smith who harp incessantly on the responsibility of the university to society, set limits to maximum enrolment that are well below the maximum desirable level.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it is realistic to think of providing university training in Canada for anything approaching 25 per cent of our college age population. I have doubts even about the 11 per cent visualized in Dr. Sheffield's projection. I do not believe that "realistic" is precisely the word that Mr. Smith had in mind. Norman Mackenzie of the University of British Columbia used the word in a different way in 1948. He said:

> If we are convinced that there are more students demanding education than we can adequately look after, then we should do what we can to see that those who are best suited for it do get the opportunity to come. This can in part be taken care of through higher standards of admission, which should be general in character; and by the maintenance of high standards throughout the courses that are given, whether they be general or specialized. Many will continue to want to enter without any particular intellectual qualifications or for other reasons such as social or economic ones, or in order to fill in time before going into marriage or business. I think this is a fact we have to recognize. They will attempt to get in, and in many cases in the kind of society we live in, it will be difficult or impossible to keep them out. The only way we can meet this problem and deal with it in a realistic way is either to provide, as they have in the United States, not altogether satisfactorily, a larger number of junior colleges for undergraduate and superficial vocational training, or put up with larger enrolments in existing institutions. I do not believe it is realistic to think that we can reserve higher education for a privileged elite, privileged by reason of birth or family or economic position or even privileged by reason of the natural gifts of mind and intellect that they may have. We have to remember that we are part of the community which we serve and in which we live.

Cyril James of McGill University accepted Mackenzie's position in his presidential address to the N.C.C.U. in 1949, but rather tepidly—"whether we like it or not"—when he said that the plea for limited numbers cannot be applied successfully by all universities with any great expectation of success. President Somers of St. Francis Xavier was more forthright in 1955 when he said:

> We can give a very simple answer—hold to the present registrations. There are some who would solve the problem simply by saying that there are too many students of non-university calibre at present in our universities. We may solve the problem by raising tuition costs to the point at which only those with ample means may enter university. Before we accept either of these solutions we have to ask ourselves what are the requirements of this growing country of ours in regard to higher education. Canada must have educated leaders in all fields, and today these fields are many. Universities cannot restrict their work to a small elite and pay no attention to their country's needs. We cannot be content with the education of the same percentage of our youth as we now have in Canadian universities, even although that may give us a 50 per cent increase in students by 1965. We know that at least 25 per cent are of university calibre. We should educate many more of the college age group of our population—the group with the talents, who are not in our universities because they cannot afford to pay our fees.

So far only a few universities have announced restrictions in enrolment. Among the larger universities, McGill has done so, limiting the enrolment to 9,500, whereas by 1965 it might have been expected to reach 13,500. Of the middle range of universities, only Queen's plans some restrictions. The rest anticipate at least a doubling of the present enrolment. Of the smaller universities, Acadia and Mount Allison, being almost completely residential, cannot expand unless large grants are made for residences. Bishop's has decided to allow enrolment to expand only slightly above the present level of about 300. Its leaders said:

> We cannot expand beyond 400 without changing the character of the institution, and we feel that Canada can afford the luxury of one small college.

No university administrator has faced the problem of what the universities would do if, for example, a system of government bursaries raised the percentage of the 18 to 21 age group attending university above the projected 10 per cent to 11 per cent. Of the students attending university now only about 15 per cent receive financial aid of any kind and this percentage has not increased over the last 20 years. Mr. James has said:

> A young Canadian from a family of modest circumstance has less chance of getting a university education today than a youth in any other country with which I am familiar.

That is a very sweeping and powerful statement. In other words, we are in one of the poorest positions of all for youth in modest circumstances. In the crisis we have to consider where the universities are going to get the increased revenue. For some years the national council of Canadian universities has been attempting to gain from the federal government certain changes in tax laws governing deductions for charitable purposes in order to increase grants or gifts from private and corporate sources. The fact is that corporations have not taken advantage of the present tax situation. By law, corporations are permitted to deduct 5 per cent of their taxable income for charitable purposes. In 1946, corporations contributed three-quarters of one per cent of their income for charitable purposes; in 1953, about $26.3 million, or about one per cent of their next taxable income; in this year, five per cent would have amounted to about $130 million. The proportion of the .75 per cent in 1946 going to universities was about 14 per cent; the proportion of the one per cent in 1953 was about 10 per cent. When grants are made by corporations they are tied often to specific research projects in which industries are interested. For example, look at the givings of corporations such as International Nickel and Imperial Oil. There is no necessity for me to comment upon this, the former president of the University of Toronto has done so already. He said:

> We want a great deal of money. Without wishing to sound ungrateful, I have sometimes thought, when a prospective donor makes an offer, that the industrial conscience in some instances can satisfy itself by putting a very small sum on the collection plate. There are shining exceptions . . . but on the whole Canadian corporations have not as yet taken seriously the needs of higher education; they have not even taken advantage of the five per cent deduction from their taxable income permitted under the tax laws of Canada.

Part of the difficulty is that many of our corporations are not Canadian. In our branch plant economy, American-owned or controlled corporations feel little obligation toward the Canadian institutions which often provide them with their administrative and technical personnel.

The fact that corporations are concentrated, or at least their head offices, in central Canada works a hardship on eastern and western universities. In 1952, 84 per cent of corporation taxes were collected in Quebec and Ontario; the two tax districts of Toronto and Montreal accounted for 56 per cent of all corporation tax returns. A president of one of the eastern universities has proposed a kind of united chest and a division of proceeds from corporations on some equitable basis. The complaints you hear from the west and the east on the freight rates, or anything else, can be re-echoed by the universities. The situation is that those provinces in central Canada have quite an advantage and as far as the proposal of this president of an eastern university for a united chest for universities is concerned, I do not know that any of the central Canadian universities have rushed to endorse the suggestion. I have not seen any record of it.

During the last 20 years government financing has been an interesting problem. The university enrolment has more than doubled but the total revenue received by the universities in relation to the number of students has shown virtually no increase in real terms. At the same time real costs have gone up substantially. To carry out university functions, university capacities have been overtaxed, according to one expert; university teachers have suffered a sharp decline in relative real income; and essential university facilities have been skimped. An illustration of the consequences of financial squeezing is the fact that the 10 largest universities in English Canada spend together annually only about $500,000 on stocking their libraries with books and microfilms. It is almost a pitiable figure when one thinks of the tremendous amount of publishing that goes on in the world today.

Federal Aid to Education

When you look at the source of university revenue, which you can find in President Mackenzie's address on "Government Support of Canadian Universities" you find that endowment provides only six per cent; student fees, 28 per cent; provincial funds, 40 per cent; federal funds, 15 per cent; and miscellaneous, 11 per cent. The 40 per cent provided by the provinces amounts to exactly 3 per cent of provincial budgeting. On the average, roads and highways in the provinces got 30 per cent and education got three per cent. University presidents have tended to place their hopes on additional revenues from industry and from the federal government. The figures I quoted above show why. Student fees have increased steadily over the past 20 years and you cannot milk this source much more.

The request for increased federal assistance is always accompanied by some reference to the danger involved. However, it is apparent that university presidents in English Canada regard the prospect of having to do without federal assistance as more alarming than any dangers which might flow from it. They tend to regard—though how sincerely I am not in any position to judge—the diversity of university income sources as the best guarantee of university independence. As an illustration, President Mackenzie claimed that the "modest system of federal per capita grants" introduced in 1951 respected "the constitutional position of the provinces and maintained the independence of the individual institutions". But these grants have proved to be insufficient. Thus, former President Smith of the University of Toronto, after new federal grants, said:

> This and other Canadian universities will require for the mobilization of resources, support from government at all levels, municipal and federal as well as provincial, and in addition they will need all the help that industry and individual donors can give them. Their welfare and progress are matters of public concern. The Ottawa government is doubling its assistance to universities, and as in the past that assistance will not involve any interference or attempt at control. But the increased federal grants will not be enough to finance the expansion.

I hope the gentleman who made this very ringing statement will be in a position later on today perhaps to amplify the position of the government on his attitude in this regard. A good example of the notion that diversity of income source is the best guarantee of independence comes from former President Smith. He said:

> It is well for universities that they should have a diversity in their sources of income. The chairman of the board of governors, Colonel Phillips, stated in 1947: "Nothing could be more fateful for us than to adopt the view that all our financial problems could be thrown on the shoulders of our government."

Federal Aid to Education

There has been a conscious effort to justify increased federal government assistance by comparing the Canadian situation with that elsewhere, not simply in order to say, "other governments give more" but also to say, "other governments give more without endangering the universities". It can be shown that endowment income, for example, has formed a steadily decreasing part of university revenue in the United Kingdom and in the United States. It would seem that in the United States a large body of university opinion regards government assistance as bringing with it political interference. This is certainly the stand of the private universities, especially in the east. Over all, United States private universities gain 63 per cent of their income from private sources.

There has been a good deal of political interference on both the state and the federal level in the United States with public universities. The McCarthy scare is an example. The case of Illinois occurs to any one who followed the situation there. During the red scare the situation of professors on the staff was a very delicate one and many of them were quizzed in public.

The whole question of whether government assistance, especially federal government assistance, is going to tinker with and ruin the independence of universities is one that those of us who introduced the resolution and those who may support it will feel is something about which we all have to be very careful. There is no doubt about it that the old saw that the person who controls the purse controls things can apply, but the experience in the United Kingdom with the university grants committee is that political interference has really not entered into the operation of the universities there.

So far revenue from government sources in Canada is really too small to have introduced any undue influence. In the United Kingdom government grants form 73.6 per cent of university revenue, in the United States 42.4 per cent. In Canada the government's share in the four western provinces is 57 per cent and in Quebec we have a low of 23.7 per cent. The comparative niggardliness of government aid in Canada means that the minimum cost of a university education is much higher in Canada. In 1954-55, 72.9 per cent of all British students were in receipt of aid of some kind. The Canadian figure is 14 per cent to 15 per cent. President James concluded in this regard:

> As a result of these generous government grants every British student can be sure of a university education if he has the ability and determination to attain it. Financial factors are never a barrier.

Similarly, in the United States, as a result of government assistance to public institutions, fees are markedly lower than those charged at any Canadian university and 56 per cent of United States students are enrolled in state universities where these low fees prevail.

One of the factors that must be considered in any discussion of the crisis is the position of the province of Quebec because the Quebec position is that since the federal government may not legislate directly within any of the fields granted to the provinces and since federal grants do involve legislation, the interposition of a non-government distributing agency is still unconstitutional. In other words, the crux of any drastic change in our federal set-up will be the attitude of the province of Quebec. Marcel Faribault, representing the chamber of commerce of Quebec, has said:

> Yearly grants from the federal government to the universities, whether distributed directly or indirectly, are a matter which it is just not possible to class otherwise than as support for education and legislation in respect of education.

He is prepared to admit, however, the possible validity of non-recurring capital grants. He says:

> Capital grants are not recurrent, and the intermediary body, the Canada Council, is not primarily educational or para-educational. Moreover, the allotment to the recipients is to be variable, and is not to cover more than half the cost of some buildings for definite projects.

Mr. Faribault goes on in his remarks to indicate that if the capital grants from the federal government are of a non-recurring kind it might be expedient for Quebec to accept them. Arthur Tremblay, secretary of the Laval teachers' association, has declared:

> I want to reaffirm the public position we have already taken concerning the Canadian government plan to give grants to the N.C.C.U. We want those grants to be accepted by the province of Quebec universities as well as by other Canadian universities.

In other words, here is an expression of opinion by a French Canadian that the grants that have been offered should be accepted. President James of McGill, who is in a very difficult position as head of an English-speaking university within a French-speaking province, has said:

> The governing body of each university has the right to accept or reject any grant that is offered, but speaking personally I can see nothing in the pattern of federal grants which invades the constitutional rights of the provinces or weakens the independence of any Canadian university. There is no legal barrier that I know of which would prevent a university from accepting federal aid.

In order to clarify the position of that part of the Quebec elite which opposes federal grants, I consulted Le Devoir from November, 1956, to the end of March, 1957. During those months I could not find any explicit statement of the newspaper's constitutional position, but it seems to me it is similar to that expressed by Mr. Faribault. Le Devoir feels that federal grants are a menace to the cultural and religious autonomy of Quebec, and advocates resistance to them at all costs. Even though present grants are unconditional, there can be no guarantee that they always will be so. To resist grants now places no great burden on Quebec universities, since the grants are still modest. The universities must resist because they are the first line of defence. If this line is breached, primary and secondary education will come under attack too.

That is the gist of what I have gathered respecting Le Devoir's attitude to higher education grants from the federal government. Yet resistance to federal grants in order to preserve the independence of universities has brought the anomalous situation now existing. Quebec universities are at the mercy of the provincial government, are subject to political interference and are certainly not receiving provincial grants to match federal grants that would be coming to them.

Far from persuading Le Devoir that federal grants might be of some use, the provincial situation allows the editors to take up a favourite position—defenders of the right against tremendous odds, upholders of unsullied principle while damning the consequences. They insist that French Canadians must not sell their rights for a mess of pottage. They refer to Mr. Duplessis as "un phénomène passager". They say, "It is not desirable to destroy the constitution because of a simple public nuisance." They say, "We live in any age in which the people of Quebec prefer to be poorly governed by themselves rather than well governed from Ottawa." As an outsider just looking into the situation, I would not want to go out on a limb to express any opinion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we are considering a problem of very great importance at the present moment. We have a motion that the Speaker shall leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee, followed by an amendment dealing with the subject of aid for education. The amendment is framed in such a way that an important subject is brought to our attention but the framers of the amendment realize that according to the rules and the custom of the house the debate will be terminated by a vote at 8.15 this evening and that an amendment such as this is and always has been treated as a want of confidence motion to which, of course, the government naturally reacts and cannot accept. My hon. friends who introduced the amendment have done so apparently for the express purpose of putting the government in the awkward position of voting against aid for education, which is something many of us supported when we were on the other side of the house.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You also took a different line towards motions of this kind when you were on the opposition side of the house.

Mr. Churchill: This is obviously the type of motion calculated to embarrass the government, and since it is linked to a subject of this importance to the people of Canada it is, in my opinion, irresponsible.

Mr. Ellis: You used to bring in motions of this type.

Mr. Churchill: According to the notices of motion on the order paper—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What a change since June 10.

Mr. Churchill: —there were plenty of opportunities for this subject to come forward for discussion. Hon. members will find under Notices of Motion, No. 30, a motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton) dealing with this subject of aid for education. Then, No. 41 under the name of the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir), is another one dealing with aid to education in the maritime provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit a question?

Mr. Churchill: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: If these motions were brought forward, would the hon. gentleman vote for them?

Mr. Churchill: That is a hypothetical question.

Mr. Ellis: Talk them out.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate vote for them?

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall speak for myself in a moment.

Mr. Churchill: Perhaps that opportunity will arise. I have already stated that this is a want of confidence motion and will have to be treated as such. I have already said that this is a subject of very great importance. I have listened to the remarks made by the mover of the motion as well as the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) with a great deal of interest because I spoke on this subject myself in the house about five years ago. I thought then, and think now, that I knew a little about the necessity of aid for education. The problem has been with us for a very long time. This subject matter has been raised in the house over a great many years.

Mr. Ellis: Why not have government action now?

Mr. Churchill: Government action will follow on a government proposal. We are not accepting the suggestion of my hon. friends as to what we should do today or tomorrow. We are quite competent to bring forward our own program, and will do so in due course. I intend to restrict my remarks, something which was not done by the speakers who preceded me, although the time for debate is very short. The supper hour intervenes at six o'clock, and the vote is at 8.15.

I propose to restrict my remarks and will deal with a subject touched upon by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell). He dealt at some length with the question of scientific education, and with the threat caused by the evidence we have as to the importance that Russia is attaching to scientific education. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar drew attention to the scientific achievements of the Russians in launching satellites and so on. I feel that although these are important scientific achievements we need not get overly alarmed with regard to scientific achievements of that nature. Had we been living in a world less subject to tensions I believe scientists generally would have been inclined to applaud this advancement of scientific knowledge. Since we are living in a world of fear any scientific advancement of this nature is immediately linked up with the threat of warfare or something of that nature, and consequently is a matter for some alarm.

However, all the remarks that have been made with regard to the Russians' advance in science—not all of them but a great part of them—have tended towards measuring the advance quantitatively. We have been given today, and on other occasions, reports of the vast numbers of scientists that are being turned out by Russian schools and universities. The quantity has been emphasized. I think it is much more important in the scientific realm to emphasize quality. I am not suggesting we cannot do more in Canada, and in the other nations of the western democracies, but quantity is not the yardstick by which to measure scientific achievements. These figures showing thousands of Russian scientists being produced annually are not as alarming, I believe, as some people appear to think they are. Quality is of much greater importance. At the same time as the satellite was going around the world this fall one of the greatest scientific advancements was made by scientists in England who have got closer to solving the question of fusion. However, we heard nothing about that today at all. All we heard about was the Russian scientific advancement in launching a space satellite. This step towards solving the problem of fusion will be of greater consequence and greater benefit to mankind than the launching of a satellite at the present time.

It is not necessarily the most spectacular scientific advancement that is the most important. It may be some less spectacular scientific achievement which will prove of greater value in the long run. We have living in Canada Sir Robert Watson Watt, the inventor of radar. This advancement was accomplished quietly in the twenties and thirties, and the protective value of radar was to our advantage during the course of the war. The development of atom power was an achievement not attributed to the Russians. These things are perhaps less spectacular at the time the discovery is made, but may prove to be of greater importance than the more spectacular achievements. I simply draw that to the attention of the house. Let us not be carried away by the number of Russian scientists or some of the spectacular things they have done. We have scientists working carefully and quietly in Canada and in the western democracies whose achievements may be of much more lasting benefit.

I should like to draw attention to the fact that Canada has done a great deal in the realm of scientific research over the last 40 years. It is quite right to suggest that we should press on; that there should be greater advantages provided for our scientists and that more opportunity should be given to younger men in the scientific field. There is no quarrel with that at all. But let us not overlook the fact that we have made very great progress in Canada. If you refer to the report of the national research council of Canada for 1956-57 you will find an historical summary of our scientific achievements under the direction of that council. This council was set up 41 years ago, in 1916, incidentally under the Conservative government of Sir Robert Borden, and has achieved many things since that time.

During the past year the national research council provided $3.6 million to support pure research in the universities, and that was divided into 540 grants, 310 scholarships and fellowships. The research council employed 541 on the scientific staff, including 122 post-doctorate fellows; 819 technical personnel and 859 on the general services and administrative staff. The council operated five laboratory divisions in the sciences, and two regional laboratories, one at Halifax and the other in Saskatoon, as well as a division of medical research. The research council sponsored 26 associate committees working in diverse fields and answered over 7,000 technical inquiries from Canadian industries.

Just to show what can happen, I may say that in 1916 when the research council was established, and in 1917 when it became operative, industrial research was practically non-existent in Canada and the supply of research men capable of independent investigation was entirely inadequate. Over the years great advances have been made. More than 2,100 students have held council scholarships and a similar number of very able students have been employed as research assistants. Today the council's alumni occupy many of the senior scientific positions across Canada.

That indicates the change that has taken place. Back in 1916 and 1917 most of our postgraduate students went to foreign universities and many of them did not return to pursue their work in Canada. Hence through governmental assistance by the national research council the basis was laid in Canada for scientific advancement. That came to fruition—and I am summarizing very rapidly here—or was brought to fruition during the second world war when there was a great expansion based upon that scientific knowledge. Our scientists in Canada achieved international fame by their work during the second world war and established recognition for Canada in the field of science to an extent that Canada had not achieved previously. That situation has carried over into the postwar years, particularly in the field of atomic research in which Canada is recognized as having some of the leading people in the world.

I just give you that resume briefly to show what can be done by the application of funds and the attention of dedicated men to an enterprise such as this in establishing in Canada research on a sound basis, chiefly in the field of pure research, and then carrying over into the fields of applied research. So in discussing this particular subject of federal aid for education and in advocating, as have my hon. friends, increased support for education, let us not overlook the fact that over the years this has been done. The government has taken an interest in research and in educational assistance of this nature, and there is no reason to suppose that that type of assistance will not continue. Canada has laid the foundation for scientific progress and we can now move forward through assistance to the national research council and other means to increasing what we all desire, namely our scientific knowledge in Canada and our corps of scientists.

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to discuss for a few moments matters educational in Canada. As one can fully appreciate, having regard to my career, this is a topic that is very close to my mind and to my heart. With much that the mover of the motion, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), had to say I agree. Having regard to the quotations given to us by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) from a man by the name of Smith, I am bound to say that I am even more in concurrence with his remarks than I ever thought I could be.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar spoke of the threat of the Russians in the field of scientific advance. As a man who spent over three decades in the field of education I would say that I regret we are obliged to face up to educational problems as a result of fear arising from scientific advances made for the purposes of war. I would say that we must congratulate the Russians on their successful endeavours in the scientific field. It is a fact that they have made great advances. But, with the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, I would state that it is regrettable that their production of scientists has not involved also a program for men and women—and incidentally they have paid special attention to the training of women—who have something to do with ideas and ideals apart from the ideas and concepts that are peculiar to the physical and biological sciences.

There is one achievement that I am convinced the Russians have made and that is borne out by the testimony of men of whom the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar spoke, such as Mr. J. S. Duncan and others who have gone there, come back and given us their testimony. That achievement is that the Russians have been able to make their young people work. They have selected them early in life. They have afforded them this opportunity. They have ascertained that they had great gifts for further study and investigation. If they fail in any way, they are taken out of their schools, their colleges and their universities and are degraded in terms of social and economic status.

In speaking to this amendment I would make this plea, namely that we should not make that mistake in Canada. I am greatly concerned about taking a young person and giving him a scientific training—whether it be in mathematics or in the biological sciences or the physical sciences—where that is all he or she is exposed to. Despite the threat that may arise out of the success of the Russian scientists in terms of sputnik and the intercontinental ballistic missile, I would plead that we never accede to that type of narrow program. I would plead for the humanities and the social sciences and their development while at the same time we endeavour to do more in the field of the physical and biological sciences. As Sir Richard Livingstone once put it, you have the type of program for the study of the law of things, and that could produce and put forth a very arid person, a person who would make little if any contribution to our political and cultural development whereas, on the other hand, the humanities and the social sciences provide the opportunity to study the law of men as distinguished from the law of things.

We have in our larger universities or in nearly all of our universities and colleges in Canada some type of professional school. We need our clergymen. Of course we do. We need our teachers, our foresters, our engineers, our doctors, our dentists and our nurses. But again I would make another plea for the support of a faculty of arts. Sometimes people think of a faculty of arts as a division that teaches only the humanities and social sciences. But in the program of this core division within a university known as the faculty of arts, there is the interplay of the study of the social sciences and the humanities with the study of biological and physical sciences. I believe that we should never set off against the support of the faculty of arts the great need of scientific development to the sacrifice of the humanities and the social sciences.

I agree fully with the observation that was made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar that the teacher is the fundamental cornerstone of any educational institution. It is a fact that we are not attracting into the teaching ranks—and I am speaking of the colleges and universities—the men and women who should be taking up that worthy calling. They are attracted by offers from industry and they are attracted by offers—let us be frank about it—for graduate work in the United States. The United States universities and their supporters see to it that our best men are being retained in the United States. They do not return to Canada.

We must find more money in Canada for the increase of salaries to the end that we may attract to and retain on our teaching staffs of the colleges and universities the best in intellect, the best in curiosity and the best in character. The third requirement is not deliberately put there in a tertiary position.

[Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac).]

There is more money needed in this regard. A university that I know quite well—the University of Toronto—has an annual budget of $18 million; and between 70 and 80 per cent of its annual expenditures are devoted to the payment of the teachers, the academic staff and those who assist them in making it possible for the teachers and the investigators to carry on their work. Here, of course, I come back to the point I endeavoured to make in the first place, the need for the development, training and production of more physical and biological scientists. We heard something about that subject at the last NATO meeting. I would be a bit sceptical about a supranational body endeavouring to direct the research of gifted men and women in the various countries which adhere to the principles of the United Nations. You cannot direct, you cannot manage fundamental investigators in that way. So it comes back upon the nations themselves to support research in that fundamental field.

I agree with and I heartily endorse the observations made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar with respect to the need for developing fundamental research. He was not far from the mark—and I say this with respect—in his remarks concerning the growing need for scientists, quite apart from war purposes. I did attend the St. Andrews conference held in New Brunswick in September 1956 when it was told that to maintain our industry in Canada—and I am just speaking of our industries now—we will need by 1970 at least three times as many engineers as are now being turned out.

There is another facet of this educational problem as it relates to the universities at the present time. To take last year, 1956 to 1957, about 70,000 students were in our Canadian colleges and universities proceeding to degrees or diplomas; that is to say full-time students. In any projection I have ever seen with regard to students, having regard to the growth of birth rates, it has been indicated that by 1965 there will be twice as many students, 140,000 to 150,000, knocking at the doors of our colleges and universities. Those figures are in the same percentage of our population age groups of 18 to 22 years or 17 to 21 years.

This represents a great burden which will be thrown on our Canadian colleges and universities and if Canada is going to maintain its place as an industrial nation, a nation with a growing culture and, I say this advisedly, as a country which has a recognition of spiritual values, then Canadian colleges and universities must be supported in order that they may handle this greater number of students.

I do not recall, Mr. Speaker, the particular context of the observation which the hon. member for Port Arthur attributes to me. I do not remember ever having said that our student population in our Canadian colleges and universities, in relation to the total age group of 17 to 21 years or 18 to 22 years, could never be more than 11 per cent. Last year it was about 10 per cent. What I have endeavoured to say, and it was not said in any mood of academic snobbishness, and what I repeat at this time is that we should not attempt to admit to colleges and universities those men and women who have not the capacity to pursue the work in the field of higher education. That is the only test. When I say "capacity" I do not have in mind that they should all be grade A students. I have seen grade B students, class 2 students, graduate from university and do better than some of their colleagues and classmates who were regarded as abler because they got the highest marks in the class. But that is not a universal truth.

It happened in the United States army during the last world war that certain tests were given to the men in the ranks. It was ascertained by those tests—and I am not going to accept this qualification—that about 25 per cent of the recruits were qualified to go on for work in the field of systematic education. I have never discovered that large number, but if we can find them we must, having regard to the welfare of Canada and its progress in the future, use the brains we can get and if there are 25 per cent we must make it possible for that 25 per cent to carry on their studies. That will not be possible, however, unless we provide scholarships and fellowships.

I am not one who suggests that anyone who comes from a home which can provide finances for a three, four, five or six year course should be classified immediately as a person not qualified for university work. That is not true, but I have in mind the picture painted to us by the hon. member for Port Arthur that many young men and women, remote from college and university centres, are being deprived of the opportunity to attend university. Some of us in this house have experienced difficulties in that regard.

We need to provide ladders of opportunity, not ladders of opportunity for every young man and woman who desires to go to university, but we should have very careful selection methods for choosing students who are admitted bearing in mind their capacity to benefit from higher education. We need a better type of selection and then, when we do select the students on a more promising basis, we come back to the point raised, that we should provide scholarships for them.

Brains are one thing that we need in our students in colleges and universities, but coupled with brains I think we should have stamina. I can really describe it in another way as moral fibre. How you can ascertain the possession of moral fibre by a young person is very difficult to establish but we must not look only for gifted young men and women. We must also see in them those gifts, talents or qualities of character that will make the investment in them by society much more worth while.

The teachers are the most important. They are the very essence of an educational enterprise, but in the field of science, for example, and even in the fields of humanities and social sciences you must provide them with the tools they need to do the job. In the case of the sciences, you must provide laboratories; in the case of humanities and social sciences you must provide libraries. We cannot expect Canadian universities to attract the men and women of the calibre required under the present circumstances, or to retain them on the staffs. There is a need for higher salaries, a need for scholarships on a more satisfactory basis of selection, and the need to provide laboratories and libraries.

No university in Canada is sufficiently endowed in this regard. Need should be communicated not only to the federal government but to provincial governments. I feel we should expect and demand more from private donors, whether or not they are alumni, and that we should expect much more from corporate donors. Just think what industry and commerce have received from the universities in the way of trained personnel, whether technical or scientific, or staff at managerial level. We find corporations investing millions of dollars in plant and equipment and never being too much concerned about the amount of their investment provided they feel it will eventually yield a dividend. Well, it costs the university in the field of engineering—one that I know—about $1,600 a year for each student, and the student pays about $450. The universities are thereby providing $1,200 for each man's training. Therefore, I come back to the statement that the corporate donors who are receiving such benefits from our colleges and universities should contribute toward that over-all cost. It sounds rather cold and calculating, and it does not have any human aspect to it, when I say they should invest in the future of these people even if only on the low ground of providing necessary equipment as part of their operating costs and as part of their capital investment.

I fear that unless the colleges and universities of Canada receive greater support there will have to be limitations in enrolment and I think the colleges and universities will be justified in taking such a step on the basis of academic honesty. To take into a crowded lecture room about 400 students and to lecture to them in segregated conditions and not provide for them any opportunity for communication between staff and students or between students and staff would be to defraud the students. In terms of academic institutions they should not go beyond the point of an academic contribution to the development of our young people—I hesitated there for a moment; I was going to say "academic efficiency" but I do not like using those words in this context. We will in Canada be faced with the problem that is posed here. I regret, and I may say I regret it having regard to my past career, that I must vote against this motion.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Smith (Hastings-Frontenac): It is a vote of want of confidence having regard to the character of our parliamentary proceedings, and I regret that this government has not had a longer opportunity to study this crisis—I admit the term "crisis"—in education. But I can assure the house that it has already begun to study this very serious problem. This amendment has taken one whole afternoon to discuss. If we could have gone into supply we would have been nearer the solution to this serious problem as far as the dominion government is concerned.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the minister permit a question? Is the minister aware of the fact that in 1955 when his leader moved an amendment for a motion to go into supply concerning the South Saskatchewan dam, both he and Mr. Drew suggested that if the government was really interested in the matter it could arrange for a free vote? Would it not be possible for the government to permit a free vote on this particular motion, if the government is really interested?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin the few observations I intend to make on this amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) by saying, —I am sure the hon. gentleman will not regard it as disrespect—as one egghead to another, how thoroughly I agree with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) in his plea for more liberal education. There can never be too much liberal education.

I should like also to say how pleased we all were in this part of the house to hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) praise the work that had been done over the years by his great predecessor in the development of the national research council. It is very interesting to find how different hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches sound today from the way they sounded the last time a motion in what I think were almost identical terms was brought up in this house.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce said this motion was embarrassing to the government. We recognize that it is embarrassing to the government. I am very glad to say it causes not the slightest embarrassment to me. As did Mr. Garson on several occasions when we were on the other side of the house, I spoke in opposition to motions in almost exactly the same terms moved by Mr. Knight, the former member for Saskatoon, and I have no different tune on this side of the house from what I had on the other side. Perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite are now out of tune or perhaps they are now in tune. I leave it to them to explain to the public but we have witnessed, sir, on two successive days in this house the extraordinary spectacle, first of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) swallowing his leader yesterday and the Minister of Trade and Commerce doing the same thing today. I am very proud that I belong to a party which has the same kind of doctrine on both sides of the house.

I am quite sure that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be the first member of this house to admit that in the last few years nothing that has been done to support university education was greater than what was done under the leadership of my right hon. friend, the former prime minister, in establishing university grants, and if I had time I would like to read what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said on that subject when he was speaking in another capacity, but under the new rules under which we operate, when one minister speaks after another, my time is severely limited this evening.

An hon. Member: Are you rehearsing for next week?

Mr. Pickersgill: No; I think I need no rehearsing. I might say that there is nothing which I can say which will be more eloquent of the support for scientific research than the words read by the Minister of Trade and Commerce about the work of the research council under his great predecessor, Mr. Howe.

I would also remind hon. gentlemen in all parts of the house that in this year's appropriations, by the Liberal administration not by the present administration, $50 million was included for the purpose of assisting in the building of universities in this country and another $50 million was appropriated, the income from which is being used for the support of the very kind of scholarships for which the Secretary of State for External Affairs made his plea today, when appealing for more liberal education.

The reason I am opposing this motion is that it asks us, as previous motions moved by the former member for Saskatoon did, to consider the advisability of appropriating funds collected from the taxpayers of Canada generally by the federal government and handing them over to the provincial treasurers to be earmarked to be spent on education. No matter how many saving words may be put into such a motion, the plain fact is that if we earmark those funds exclusively for education and hand them over to the provincial treasurers it is, in fact, an invasion of a provincial field. It is altogether different in character from assisting universities directly by grants or students by scholarships and things of that sort. We are saying to the provincial treasurers: here is so much money; you can have it only if you spend it in such and such a way. I think the right way to deal with this problem is the way the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) recommended it should be dealt with during the election campaign at Three Rivers. Here is what the right hon. gentleman said on June 4.

Some hon. Members: The red book.

Mr. Pickersgill: This volume is published by the national Liberal federation and I think hon. gentlemen opposite know what is in it.

Mr. Churchill: It brought about your ruin.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is an extract from a newspaper which I do not think hon. gentlemen opposite will call into question. It is the Montreal Gazette of June 5. This is what the right hon. gentleman is reported to have said and it is in quotation marks:

> The Conservative party will restore the true meaning of the British North America Act—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Wait.

> —which guarantees the provinces freedom to carry out various spheres of activity allotted them under the constitution.

This is good Liberal doctrine. The second paragraph reads:

> We will not only make sure that the constitution is respected but we will also make sure that the provinces and the municipalities have sufficient money to do the job they are supposed to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Also, I might say, pure Liberal doctrine.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Listen to this:

> Having the power to do a certain job does not mean very much if you haven't got the financial means to implement these powers.

Over and over again the present Prime Minister promised—I could find dozens of examples of his promises in this book—that immediately after the election he would call a federal-provincial conference to do these things. He did not call it for five months, and now he makes the feeble excuse that he cannot call it again because hon. members in the opposition exercise the right given to them by their constituents to speak in this parliament. We in this party might perhaps have been embarrassed if the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar had framed his motion quite differently and I am not going to suggest how. I speak only for myself when I say that it does not cause me the slightest embarrassment to oppose this motion for precisely the reasons given by the Prime Minister at Three Rivers.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are you one of his followers?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to add just one other thing. Before hon. gentlemen opposite boast very much about what they have done in this field of putting the provinces in a financial position to carry out their functions let me remind them that just before coming into the house I looked up Mr. Ilsley's budget speech in 1946, and I found that in the year 1944-45 the provinces were receiving as their share out of the three principal direct taxes $82 million and under Mr. Harris' equalization scheme they will have received over $630 million this year. That, sir, if we are to assist the provinces to carry out their functions, is the right way to do it, namely by those equalization payments which we cannot get hon. gentlemen opposite to say they will carry forward in any increases they make in payments to the provinces.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a short statement in regard to the amendment which is before us. That is all I have time to do. First, I want to apologize to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) for what may be interpreted as a discourtesy to him. I had to leave while he was speaking in order to keep another appointment that had been made before I knew this motion was being moved. I certainly meant no discourtesy and I would have liked to stay to hear what he had to say.

I have expressed myself on various occasions, Mr. Speaker, with regard to federal aid to education and our position as a party in the house is well known. We have supported the idea over many years and with the principle of greater aid to education in the provinces we are still in agreement. However, there is something further that ought to be included in considering this matter. There are many people in Canada today who are not certain that they want further aid to education from the federal government for the reason that they fear that along with increased grants in aid of education from the federal government will come a greater demand for federal interference in what are considered to be purely provincial affairs. I respect that attitude on their part, although I have always said that I do not think it is necessary that the two things should go hand in hand at all.

I am quite certain that means can be found to provide further assistance from the federal government to education in the provinces without carrying with it any interference on the part of the federal government in purely provincial affairs. Until such time as we can get the people of the country in pretty full agreement on the matter it would seem to me that it would not be wise to try to press it too fast.

What will be our stand on the amendment? I feel, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a proper matter on which to call for a vote of want of confidence in the government. I should like to see greater aid to education but I do believe that that aid can be made available by a fairer division of the revenue dollars amongst the governments of Canada. Inasmuch as the federal government has already called a dominion-provincial conference and the matter of increased revenues for the provinces is under consideration, it does seem to me that it is premature to bring about a vote of want of confidence in the government on the basis of calling for increased aid to education.

I want to see more money made available for education in this country. Greater amounts have to be channelled into the field of education if we are going to do the job that is demanded of us. That is quite true. I want to see the very best people encouraged to get into the field of education to be leaders and teachers but that can only be done if we see that they are properly paid. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that we can get money into the field of education by the means that have been chosen and for that reason and the reason I have already given, that the matter is under study now as to how we can arrange a better division of the revenue dollars amongst the governments of Canada, I do not propose to support the amendment that has been moved.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Coldwell) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Argue
Barnett
Batten
Bryce
Bryson
Cameron
Campbell (The Battlefords)
Castleden
Christian
Coldwell
Ellis
Fisher
Herridge
Howard
Johnson (Kindersley)
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Lewry
Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway)
McCullough
Martin (Timmins)
Nicholson
Peters
Regier
Schulz
Stewart (Winnipeg North)
Winch
Zaplitny—27.

NAYS

Messrs:

Aitken, Miss
Anderson
Arsenault
Balcer
Barbes
Baskin
Beech
Begin
Bell (Carleton)
Bell (Saint John-Albert)
Best
Blackmore
Blanchette
Boivin
Bonnier
Boulanger
Bourget
Bourque
Brisson
Brooks
Brown (Essex West)
Browne (St. John's West)
Byrne
Campbell (Lambton-Kent)
Cannon
Cardin
Caron Carter
Casselman
Cathers
Chabot
Charlton
Chevrier
Chown
Churchill
Coates
Comtois
Courtemanche
Crouse
Deschatelets
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Doucett
Dumas
English
Eudes Fairfield
Forgie
Fraser
Gardiner
Garland
Gauthier (Lake St. John)
Gauthier (Portneuf)
Gingras
Gingues
Gour
Green Grills
Habel
Hahn
Haidasz
Hales
Halpenny
Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace)
Hamilton (Qu'Appelle)
Hamilton (York West)
Harrison

Hees	Muir (Lisgar)
Hodgson	Murphy (Westmorland)
Houck	Nesbitt
Howe	Noble
Huffman	O'Hurley
Johnston (Bow River)	Olson
Jones	Pallett
Jorgenson	Patterson
Jung	Pearkes
Kennedy	Pearson
Kirk	Phillips
Knowles (Norfolk)	Pickersgill
Kucherepa	Poulin
Laflamme	Proudfoot
Lafontaine	Ratelle
Landry	Rea
Lavigne	Ricard
Leduc (Gatineau)	Richard (Ottawa East)
Leduc (Verdun)	Robinson
Legare	St. Laurent (Quebec East)
Lennard	St. Laurent (Temiscouata)
Lesage	Schneider
L'Heureux	Sinclair
Low	Small
Macdonald (Kings)	Smith (Battle River-Camrose)
Macdonnell	Smith (Calgary South)
MacEachen	Smith (Hastings-Frontenac)
MacEwan	Smith (Lincoln)
MacInnis	Smith (Simcoe North)
MacLean	Stanton
Macquarrie	Starr
MacRae	Stefura
McBain	Stinson
McCleave	Stuart (Charlotte)
McDonald (Hamilton South)	Thomas (Middlesex West)
McGee	Thompson (Edmonton-Strathcona)
McGrath	Thompson (Northumberland)
McGregor	Thrasher
McIvor	Van Horne
McLeod	Villeneuve (Glengarry-Prescott)
McPhillips	Villeneuve (Roberval)
Maltais	Vivian
Mandziuk	Walker
Marler	White
Milligan	Wratten—163.
Mitchell
Monette
Monteith
Montgomery
Morton
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys has advised me that he asks leave of the house to make a short statement which he did not feel he could make during business hours this afternoon. Has the minister leave to revert to motions for the purpose of making a brief statement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROPOSED EXTENSION OF ACT

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement concerning the assistance to gold mining in Canada. The Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act will expire on December 31 next. Requests have been received from the gold mining industry and labour groups for an increased subsidy and for an extension of the act beyond 1958.

Following a study of the existing conditions in the gold mines and their dependent communities, it is the intention of this government to introduce at the next session of parliament a bill amending the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act to provide for a two-year extension to the act. The other matters are still under study.

Mr. Armand Dumas (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to be allowed to make a few remarks on this matter. The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) in making his statement tonight followed the same procedure as that which was followed in 1955 by the previous minister of mines and technical surveys, and I recall that on that evening in 1955 the procedure followed then was criticized. Tonight it is not my intention to protest against this way of making this statement. However, I will point out that I am disappointed and I know that the people interested in gold mining will be disappointed. The miners will be disappointed and the people living in mining communities will also be very much disappointed when they learn that the minister, although he has announced that the act will be extended, did not state tonight the manner in which the act will be amended. Of course, this matter is postponed until the next session. We do not know when the next session will take place. It may take place after an extremely important event which is supposed to take place any time now. The people in my constituency and those in many of the other constituencies in Canada will certainly be greatly disappointed to learn that the minister did not take the trouble to tell us tonight what will be the nature of the amendment to the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

SUPPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming for committee of supply.

TRADE—RELATIONSHIPS WITH UNITED STATES AND UNITED KINGDOM

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take advantage of this motion to bring to the attention of the house some questions which are, I think, of interest to all members and to the country. I refer to matters concerning trade and the effect of some aspects of this trade question on another matter which is of even greater concern to the house and to the country, namely unemployment. Of course, in the time which will be available to me I shall be able to deal with only certain phases of this trade problem and others I shall be obliged to omit. But there is one aspect of the problem which is perhaps central to the whole consideration of it, and that is our relationship with the United States of America.

My view on that relationship, both political and economic, is exactly the same as it was when I was sitting on the other side of the house. There can be no more important political or economic relationship for Canada than that which we have with our neighbour; and there can be nothing of greater importance not only to Canada but to the world than that the United States—which because of its power is bound to be the leader of the free world—should give that leadership which is required, both politically and economically. In that leadership, Mr. Speaker, no country has more at stake than has ours.

As has been said by members of this party, and indeed by members of other parties over the years, while we accept that leadership, it must be on a basis of partnership. We are all the happier to accept that leadership in the political sphere when it is given with imagination, determination and wisdom. We welcome and we look for that kind of leadership. When we feel that perhaps it is not being given Canadians are—as my friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith) pointed out the other day, I think at Windsor—in a particular position or advantage to remind our friends and neighbours of the necessity for that kind of leadership. But this leadership has also its economic as well as its political aspects and certain actions of the United States government which are very much in our minds cannot help but be contrasted by us with United States words in Paris and in Washington. That contrast is bound to arouse our anxiety.

Take for instance defence—

An hon. Member: What is the difference?

Mr. Pearson: This is a pretty serious subject, Mr. Speaker, and I think my hon. friends opposite might at least listen to it seriously. I forgive however, the exuberance which often descends upon them at this time of the evening.

Take the defence aspect of this economic co-operation. We have been discussing in this house in recent days the necessity for treating defence on a continental basis. My hon. friend the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) had some things to say on that subject the other day and we all agree that in this aspect of defence—the military and strategic aspect—it must be treated on a continental basis and that there must be the closest co-operation between the two countries. Perhaps indeed that co-operation should, in certain circumstances, extend to integration. But the economic aspects of defence so far as Canada is concerned at times seem to be treated by our neighbours to the south—by the United States—on a purely national basis. I suggest that it is going to be increasingly difficult to deal with defence in its military aspects, continentally and in its economic aspects, nationally.

We have a very good example of this position in NORAD. As contrasted with the United States emphasis, and it is quite proper emphasis, on the building up of NORAD on a continental basis; in contrast with that emphasis, there is United States national action taken in the field of oil imports into that country from Canada. I suppose in NORAD the planes under that command will operate under a joint continental command but the gas used by those planes, if they are United States planes, will be United States gas only; if commercial considerations seem to make that necessary. There is a pretty startling contrast between United States economic and strategic approaches in this respect.

It is going to be difficult to deal with our defence strategy on a joint basis and to develop our resources for defence on a national basis. I think this is something which should secure the preoccupation and attention of those in positions of responsibility, not only in this country but more particularly in Washington.

When in years gone by the United States took steps to interfere with our exports to that country in a way which we thought was unjustified, and perhaps at times almost irresponsible, we were urged by my hon. friends opposite when they were over here to stand up to the United States. When we mentioned, as we often did mention, the notes of protest which were sent to Washington on occasions like these a good deal of scorn used to be poured on those notes and it was said that all we did was to write notes and we were asked why did we not take action, retaliatory action.

I remember the eloquent invective that used to be hurled at us on such occasions, but what has happened in the last six months with respect to economic relationships with the United States? We know what has happened. Almost on the morrow of the election statements were made, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in particular, regarding a contrived diversion of trade from the United States to the United Kingdom and commonwealth markets. The Prime Minister made a statement which caused a good deal of interest and a good deal of excitement at that time. If I may lapse into the metaphor of baseball he threw a fast ball—a high hard one—which was immediately knocked over the fence by the United Kingdom through its late chancellor of the exchequer when he made his free trade proposal. Nothing much has been done about these free trade proposals and I may have something to say on that subject a little later.

However, the statement and the attitude of the government in regard to the removal of trade from the United States to the United Kingdom were not, I am sure, overlooked in Washington and perhaps may have had a greater effect on the attitude of the administration towards Canadian economic problems than we would like to think. Be that as it may, the government attempted to recover from this free trade knockout by sending a mission to Washington which, as I have already stated in this house, consisted of the four members of the cabinet who were described by one organ of the press as the power hitters of the administration. We know what happened to that mission.

We got a very comforting statement in the house a few months ago about the effect of the mission. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), and I am sorry that he is not able to be in his seat tonight, gave us to understand in the house and certainly in the communique which was issued upon their return from Washington that this time something really had been accomplished, that they had now secured a commitment from the United States administration which would be a great help in our trade relationships in the future.

What has happened since that time? As was pointed out in the house the other day, the United States secretary of agriculture is about to appear before congress which will be convened in Washington today with a request for a very large additional sum of money to encourage United States agricultural exports. When that was mentioned in the house the other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill)—his comforting words were re-echoed this afternoon by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Smith)—indicated that he did not think this additional sum to help the United States dispose of their surplus food products was going to harm us very much. We will see about that.

Only the other day, and this has been referred to many times since, the United States administration put on its 15 per cent restriction or, if you like 15 per cent diversion, of Canadian oil imports from Canada to domestic producers. In that regard it is perhaps interesting to recall that in 1956, while we exported $106 million worth of oil products to the United States, we imported $270 million of oil products into this country. Consideration might be given to that unbalance when the government is wondering what could be done about the 15 per cent restriction.

When I mentioned this matter the other day in a question addressed to the Minister of Finance I asked him if he realized—I am not quoting exactly my words—that twice in recent years the administration in Washington had taken action to restrict imports of oil into that country and that on both occasions Canadian imports were excluded by agreement from that restriction as a result of our diplomatic representations, formal and informal, in Washington. On this occasion, however, the action was taken in such a form that our oil was included with the oil from other countries which was to be restricted.

While that is a depressing indication of the lack of success of the diplomatic methods of the present administration in its dealings with Washington there is a real danger of further and even more serious action being taken against our exports. I suggest, and I think it is fair to suggest this, that the talk here in government circles—the official talk and unofficial talk of diversions from the United States to the United Kingdom, desirable as that diversion may be in principle to correct the imbalance of our trade—of that, and especially the 15 per cent proposal, is giving ammunition to those people in Washington and out of Washington in the United States who are contemplating in their own interests further action against Canadian imports. It is quite easy to realize what they will say when they go to Washington in their pressure groups—"The Canadians are looking after themselves, they are arranging to take away our exports to Canada. All right, surely we are not going to be so tender about their exports to this country". Perhaps before long—and I hope it will not happen—there may be action taken down there which will be very dangerous to our trade in base metals and fish products, and if that action does take place—

An hon. Member: I bet you hope it does.

Mr. Pearson: That is a very unworthy observation. No member of this house, unless he is inspired by the lowest partisan considerations, is going to take any satisfaction from any action, whether on the part of the United States government or of another government, which interferes with our trade and our welfare. I am pointing out that as a result of the policy or lack of policy carried out by this government ammunition may have been given to those interests in the United States which in recent years have been trying to increase the protection of United States tariffs against certain Canadian exports to that country. This is not new, this proposed action, and I refer again to base metals and fish products. This has been before their tariff board before but it has been possible in the past to bring influence and friendly pressure to bear on the United States government to assist those down there in Washington who were opposed to this kind of action.

Now surely it is fair to say that if emphasis is placed by the present Canadian government upon proposals to take away trade from the United States and divert it to the United Kingdom it is going to be hard to keep at bay and in check those forces in Washington which if they are successful will bring about a greater interference with our exports than anything that has happened up to now with regard to base metals and fish products. If this does happen I do not for one moment say this government is directly responsible, but I think it is fair to say that the policy they have adopted and the attitude they have taken will make it more difficult to prevent such action and, therefore, they will have to take that measure of responsibility for the action if it occurs. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I hope the government's intervention will be successful and that the action will not be taken.

Mr. Green: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? What did he and his government do to right the adverse balance of trade between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Pearson: That is a perfectly good question, Mr. Speaker, but I suggest to the leader of the house that the adverse balance would have been even greater if the United States government had not been able to resist the measures proposed to it to interfere with our exports of fish products and base metals to that country over the years. The balance of trade situation was bad, but it would have been far worse if we had adopted the attitude and policies which the hon. gentlemen are suggesting.

An hon. Member: Let us take another crack at the ball.

Mr. Pearson: I have not been struck out yet.

An hon. Member: Two strikes on you.

An hon. Member: Foul ball.

Mr. Pearson: If we can abandon just for a moment this baseball terminology, which I confess I introduced myself, I suggest also that this attitude of the present government, which of course is not one on their part of any unfriendliness, deliberate or otherwise, toward the United States; this attitude of uncertainty, confusion and diversion of trade from the United States and the lack of knowledge as to where we stand in these trade matters is bound to have an adverse effect on investment in Canada from abroad. The figures prove—I do not need to labour the point—that investment from abroad and particularly from the United States and the United Kingdom is of great importance to our future development. We have heard a lot in this house in recent years about the political and economic dangers of United States financial penetration of this country, and indeed there are dangers attached to it. There is no doubt about that. But I suggest, also, that this investment from the United States in Canada in recent years has been an indication of the confidence of the people of the United States in the development of Canada as Canada and not as a satellite of the United States. If we had not had that kind of investment in recent years, not only would we have been in far greater difficulty than we were over our trade balance on the whole but the entire pattern and basis of our development would have been altered and would have been slower; and I do not know anybody in Canada who would now say we should have slowed down that development.

Therefore it is important to maintain this atmosphere of confidence in Canada which has had such a marked effect upon investment in Canada. We can and we must protect ourselves against pressure, political and economical, from foreign investment from any quarter, and the only quarter where those pressures are likely to be of importance is I admit, the United States. But I think we should be very foolish and very short-sighted if we in any way brought about an atmosphere which would discourage the participation of American investment in the future development of this country. If we did it would slow down development, and the slowing down of development would mean the speeding up of unemployment.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) has mentioned the imbalance in our trade. Over the years we are bound to recognize that this has become a problem. It would be foolish to underestimate the seriousness of that problem. It would also be foolish to exaggerate its dangers and its significance in recent years at a time of great capital development and expansion in this country, an expansion which could not have taken place without the import of capital which, in effect, covered that imbalance in visible trade. We ought to be accustomed in this country to imports and exports not balancing. They have never balanced since confederation. I have been reading, as no doubt some other hon. members have been reading—I am sure members of the C.C.F. party have read it—a very interesting pamphlet put out by the labour research department of the Canadian Labour Congress, the editor of which is Dr. Forsey, a man not notable for his excess of friendliness toward the Liberal party. On the question of unbalanced trade and how did we pay for this imbalance, this gap between our exports and our imports, he said:

> We didn't. We borrowed. Canadian individuals, businesses and governments bought a whacking lot of goods and services on credit. We borrowed, of course, mainly from the Americans, because they have the most money, because they are the nearest, because they know the most about the possibilities of profitable investment here, and because they provide the biggest effective demand for the things we can produce by developing our new resources.

And incidentally, when we develop those new resources, as we are, from funds supplied in part from outside our country we are by that fact increasing our exports to those countries from which we got the money in the first place. Dr. Forsey goes on:

> Borrowing on such a scale (almost $3 billion in the last four years) makes a lot of Canadians very uneasy, to say the least. Surely it's not healthy to go into debt like this?
>
> The first answer to that question is that we have done it before, and survived.
>
> The second, and main, answer is that the healthiness or otherwise of borrowing depends on what you do with the money. The spendthrift borrowing for a lost weekend is one thing; the businessman with a solidly based business borrowing to expand that business is another and very different thing.

And that is what we have been doing in this country in recent years. Then, he says:

> There can be little doubt that Canada is the businessman rather than the spendthrift. We are borrowing to develop our resources. They are rich resources, and there is every prospect that most of the developments will pay handsomely.
>
> No doubt it would be better if we could do the developing ourselves, without having to borrow. Then we should not have to pay interest or dividends or repay principal to external investors. But the plain fact is that, unless we are prepared to slow down our development, or finance it all ourselves, we cannot get along without large borrowings from the United States.
>
> Are we prepared to slow down our development? It would be interesting to find anyone who would say yes.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the proper policy to follow in these matters is not to create an atmosphere which will restrict trade or restrict investment but to create an atmosphere which will encourage investment and encourage expansion to all trade areas; not diversion but expansion. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there has seldom been a time in our history when trade expansion was more necessary than it is at this time of slackening and reduced employment. That this is occurring is undeniable. We know the figures for mid-November were 352,000 unemployed and I suppose they are higher now. Indeed a Conservative member of the provincial legislature in Toronto—I quote him because he will not be suspected of betraying the country or rocking the boat—has prophesied that before March we shall have 800,000 unemployed. I hope he is wrong.

When we mention this problem of unemployment in this house we are accused—we have been accused—of trying to create a panic and increase a problem which is already serious enough. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that reaction to our efforts to bring this problem to the house and to the country is an unworthy one, I only have to recall to hon. gentlemen opposite their own fulminations and their own doom and gloom speeches in 1954 and 1955 when the situation was not as bad as it is now.

If we call attention to this problem, this very human problem behind the statistics, and if we call attention to its relationship to trade, to expanding and not restricting trade, it is so that in this parliament we may be able the better to do something about it and to encourage the government to bold, resolute, imaginative and wise action. I, of course, admit, as all hon. members must admit, that they have done something. They have primed the pump; they have encouraged construction, and all these things are good as far as they go. But they have not gone far enough yet to meet the problem which is looming up ahead of us, and I suggest they will have to take bolder and more imaginative action than that before the winter is over. I suggest also that this problem of unemployment will be increased in this country if we are not given stable, wise, constructive economic and trade policies which will create that atmosphere of confidence at home and abroad which could be the basis for our future prosperity as well as that for dealing with our present difficulties. We will not do that, Mr. Speaker, if we talk about diversions and restrictions or if we talk about action to reduce foreign trade by keeping out foreign goods in the interests of domestic employment.

We have had periods of recession and depression in this country before and one which we are not likely to forget; but surely we must have learned from the experience of those days that that kind of restrictive, panicky protective, policy does not aid employment. In the long run it creates unemployment and I hope it will not be followed by this government.

May I suggest one area where perhaps there is a possibility for imaginative and bold action, the effect of which may not be felt immediately but would be felt before long, and that is our trade relationships with the West Indies, the new federation of which was born just the other day. I know that we in this country have done a great deal for undeveloped countries, perhaps not nearly as much as we should or could do; we have made a respectable contribution to what we call underdeveloped areas. We have such an area close to home, materially and economically underdeveloped, in the West Indies. Perhaps it would be worth considering whether we cannot tie that new part of the commonwealth, as it soon will become, more closely economically and financially, to our own country, Canada, by exploring the possibility of free trade between the West Indies and Canada, or a freer trade area, and by tying up our two currencies, which would encourage trade and transport between us. I throw that out as merely one suggestion.

As to what can be done so far as the free trade proposal of the United Kingdom is concerned, we do not know where we are in that matter at all. We have asked and asked and asked what progress, if any, has been made, what consideration has been given to it. We know that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was in the United Kingdom for three weeks. We know that he saw the prime minister, the chancellor of the exchequer and the president of the board of trade. We know that he did not mention the British free trade proposal in those interviews because he said so. We know that the Prime Minister was in the United Kingdom and he met the United Kingdom leaders in Paris. He said he was not able to discuss this matter with them at the time. We know that the president of the board of trade is on this hemisphere at the present time but he is in Venezuela rather than in Ottawa. We know that the prime minister of the United Kingdom is going around the commonwealth at this moment but he is not coming to Ottawa to discuss the British free trade proposal. I suggest that one of the most astonishing things that has happened in the last six-months period in which my hon. friends have been in power is this proposal that the British made and the way in which it was made, which commanded so much attention. It died from that moment on so far as the Canadian government was concerned.

Mr. Green: May I ask the hon. member a question?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Mr. Green: Are the hon. member and the Liberal party in favour of free trade with the United Kingdom?

Mr. Pearson: That is a perfectly reasonable question, Mr. Speaker. I have been asked it before. What we are trying to do, of course, as an opposition, and as it is our duty to do, is to find out the policy of those who are responsible for these matters.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: But, Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad indeed to tell my hon. friends what I would have done in the matter. I would have announced at once that this is a far-reaching, imaginative and constructive proposal on the part of the United Kingdom government and one which seems to indicate the seriousness of their intention of getting closer economically to Canada, something which my hon. friends have often talked about, and I would have followed that up by saying that this proposal should be immediately and sympathetically considered in discussions between the two governments.

Mr. Green: Yes, but are you in favour of it?

Mr. Pearson: And, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Green: Why not answer the question?

Mr. Pearson: —I think I would have gone a little further than that. I would have added, if I had been in a position of responsibility—

Mr. Green: Why not answer the question?

Mr. Pearson: —that while it is very important indeed to work out bilateral relationships of that kind which increase trade between countries, and no country has more at stake in this matter than Canada, it is of even greater importance to expand this area of freer trade beyond two countries. I would have suggested that perhaps the British proposal could have been discussed within the context of Atlantic freer trade so that all this talk about economic interdependence in NATO might eventually result in some action towards economic interdependence. I trust that my hon. friend is completely satisfied now that if we had been in power we would have known how to deal with this matter.

Mr. Green: Why don't you answer the question?

Mr. Pearson: I suggest that the record is clear that this party throughout the years has stood for freer trade and has realized freer and expanding trade between Canada and other countries and that this party when in power has always attempted to avoid those restrictive trade practices which in the past have done us harm when they have been put into effect by governments of the party of my hon. friends. I can assure my hon. friends opposite that that will be our policy in the future, freer and expanding trade between all free countries.

Mr. Speaker: May I inquire whether any of the members who have risen are going to pursue the grievance which has been opened?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What is it?

Mr. Speaker: I would describe it as a grievance relating to governmental trade policy with respect to the United States but it seems to me that unemployment was added to it. I would describe it as a trade grievance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A glossary of gloom.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dauphin.

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, on the assumption that what the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) was talking about was chiefly trade, I should like to make a few brief observations in connection with what he had to say. He started by referring to the lack of information with regard to the proposal made by the British government to the Canadian government for a free trade area and also to the proposal made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) during the course of the election campaign for a diversion of 15 per cent of our trade with the United States to Great Britain. I think he scored at least one point when he pointed out quite effectively with respect to the question of diversion of trade from the United States to Great Britain that about all the government has been able to accomplish so far is to lose some trade with the United States without gaining any from Great Britain.

I fully expected to see the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill), the Prime Minister or some other responsible minister rise immediately to make a comprehensive statement on behalf of the government as to what, if anything, has transpired with relation to the proposal of Great Britain for a free trade area. That matter has become even more important since the original proposal was made due to the fact that a European common market is now in the process of being set up in which the United Kingdom apparently is going to play a part. We know that if we sit back and do not show any interest whatsoever in the proposal made by Great Britain to Canada the chances are that we will be the loser if that common market expands and absorbs a larger number of nations, as seems to be the prospect. I think the government certainly should go so far at this time as to make some statement of policy with regard to the British proposal.

The hon. member for Algoma East has gone quite a distance today in showing his sympathy for the proposal. At one point I almost expected that he was going to come out in favour of it. However, he very skilfully stopped short of that and did not really lay the policy of his own party before the house. But I think the time has come when parliament and the country deserve to be told exactly what the plans of the government are with regard to trade with Great Britain. A Canadian trade mission went to Great Britain at considerable expense to the Canadian taxpayer. No doubt the members of the mission were very interested in what they saw and the discussions they had, but we are still waiting to hear of any practical results from that mission. We are still waiting to hear from the Minister of Trade and Commerce or any other member of the government as to what field of endeavour they covered and as to what the intentions of Canadian business people are so far as imports from Great Britain are concerned. We are waiting to hear what if any actual discussions were held with the government of Great Britain with regard to a trade agreement between our two countries. We are being left entirely in the dark.

Before this discussion is over I think that parliament and the people of Canada deserve a statement from the Prime Minister speaking on behalf of the government in order to clear up some of the doubts and misunderstandings which are developing over this question. I am not going to repeat at this time what I have had to say before on the subject of a free trade area. My views have been expressed in the house and I am prepared to stand by them. I think there are some very distinct advantages to be gained by Canada in accepting that proposal and if there have been any misunderstandings about the matter in my opinion it is due entirely to the fact that the government has failed to make its policies known and to place its views before parliament.

I think one misunderstanding has been created by the impression that has been left in the country that the acceptance of such a proposal would mean the complete wiping out immediately of all tariffs between the two countries, and from that point of view there are certain industries and certain groups which, of course, are apprehensive. As a matter of fact, that was not the proposal at all. The proposal was a most reasonable one. It was that we begin now to sit down around the table and try to find out how to extend the free list already in effect between the two countries. The proposal was that this should be done step by step over a period of years and that we should try to see how we could reduce trade barriers so as to make the exchange of goods between the United Kingdom and Canada flow more freely with the objective or the ideal, if you wish to call it that, that in the end over a period of 10, 15 or more years we will arrive at a position where the two nations can trade freely, which is the only natural state of affairs that should exist between such countries within the commonwealth as Great Britain and Canada.

In my opinion, what the government has been doing so far in that respect has been very disappointing. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), since he became the head of that department has been busily referring certain tariff items to the tariff board. Almost every second or third day we receive in the mail a new list of items which have been referred to the tariff board.

Many of these items are items which have to do with tariffs against British-made goods. We know from experience what that means. Any time the Minister of Finance refers a tariff item to the tariff board it is for but one purpose and that is to get a recommendation to justify increase in certain tariffs. The minister will argue that it could, in some instances, mean decreasing certain tariffs also. Theoretically he would be right. However, we know that over the period of the last 10 or 15 years any time the Minister of Finance has referred certain tariff items to the tariff board it has been for the purpose of getting a recommendation in order to justify an increase in these tariff items.

As a matter of fact it seems to me quite clear now that this government instead of moving in the direction of freer trade between Great Britain and Canada is actually moving in the direction of a more restricted trade policy. In other words, we have the very opposite of what the Prime Minister advocated during the election campaign. From that point of view, this whole question of the trade mission looks a little bit ridiculous. Here we are going to the trouble and expense of sending a group of people over to the United Kingdom to induce the producers of manufactured articles in that country to find a market for their goods in Canada, creating the impression that we are willing and anxious to have their goods brought to Canada and exhibited to the Canadian consumer. On the other hand, the Minister of Finance is busily finding ways and means by which he can further restrict that trade, by which he can place higher trade barriers against the trade between the two countries. In other words, he is trying to find the means by which he can stop British-made goods from being sold in Canada.

Surely it is time that the government made its policy known. If they are going to follow restrictive trade practices, if they feel they do not want British-made goods sold in Canada because they constitute competition for certain industries in which the government is interested or which they feel require protection, let them say so. Let them stop kidding the people of Canada. Let them stop kidding the people of the United Kingdom. If, on the other hand, they really mean business when they talk about freer trade between this country and the United Kingdom, let them take some practical steps to indicate that they really mean business. The first practical step could have been taken as early as last September or October, and that would have been to indicate they were interested in the British proposal for a free trade area; that they were prepared to sit down with representatives of the British government to try to find ways and means by which some tariff barriers between the two countries could be removed and in that way improve trade between the two countries. They could also make it quite clear that they are not going to do anything from now on to increase tariff barriers against British goods.

Until we see some indication of action on these questions, or at least get a statement of policy from the Prime Minister, then the only thing we can conclude is that the government is quite happy to continue tossing the ball back and forth with the official opposition while leaving the matter as it was before. I listened with great interest to the foreshadowed leader of the Liberal party, but I could not help but recall having heard those words before from former Liberal leaders in this country. We have heard exactly the same phraseology in the period between 1930 and 1935 when we had a Conservative administration in this country and which adopted the same trade restrictive psychology as seems to be evident now. When the Liberals came back into power they fiddled around with the tariff structure but left it pretty much in the same condition as they found it. In some cases they increased trade barriers instead of reducing them.

It is for these reasons we say, so far as this group is concerned, we believe that until the government is prepared to carry on our trade in a logical manner, until the government is prepared to set up export-import boards which would be for the purpose of exchanging goods and not for the purpose of making profits for private corporations; until we are prepared to approach the whole question of trade from the point of view of the Canadian people rather than the welfare of a few individuals or a few corporations, we will never have a satisfactory system of trade relations with other countries. I think that eventually we will have to get away from this idea of competition. We will have to realize that today we are living in a world where we have to co-operate and improve our position in that fashion. If we continue to compete in the same way as each individual tries to exploit the other or one nation tries to exploit the other, if we follow that line then we will be getting deeper and deeper into trade barriers, trade restrictions and eventually into a world depression again.

Until the government of Canada is prepared to accept a rational and sensible system of trade relations through import-export boards then the least the people of Canada should expect from this government is some statement of policy on trade. I hope that before this debate is concluded we will hear from either the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Prime Minister as to what their attitude is with regard to this proposal of Great Britain for a free trade area; what their attitude is generally on the question of tariffs in so far as the United Kingdom is concerned, and as to what practical results have already been achieved or that they expect may be achieved as a result of this rather expensive trade mission that was sent to Great Britain and about which they have not given any detailed report whatever. In the absence of such a statement we shall have to assume the government has no policy or has the kind of policy they are anxious to hide until the next election is over.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION—BOW RIVER PROJECT

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a grievance I should like to bring to the attention of the house. It is a matter that concerns the Department of Agriculture, and I am sorry the minister is not in the house tonight. However, I understand that he is ill so I wish him a speedy recovery.

This matter concerns a number of people residing in what is known as the Bow river development project, who are under contract with the federal government. I should like to read into the record a letter that was sent to me and a copy of a plea that was sent last month to the Prime Minister (Mr. Dienfenbaker). The letter reads:

Dear Sir:

Enclosed you will find a copy of a letter that the Hays F.U.A. No. 1415 sent to Hon. Mr. Diefenbaker. We trust you will give us your full co-operation in seeing that our plea is acknowledged.

This letter was signed by 104 farmers in the area. I should like also to read that plea which was sent to the Prime Minister. It reads:

Dear Sir,

We the people of Hays, Alberta, wish to make a plea to you to make a thorough investigation of the Bow river project "Hays Area", as it is practically impossible for us to make a living on the small plots.

We are all people who have come from the unsuitable farming districts of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta or veterans. We have been placed on parcels of land consisting of approximately 120 acres, these units are just too small to make a reasonable living.

Some of us have been here since 1952 and not one of us to this day have a land deed, even though the P.F.R.A. took our land in trade which land was clear of all debts.

Some of us who had no land to trade in have been on the rental basis, and none of the crop share has been deducted from the principal, as we were promised verbally when first interviewed. It has come to the stage now that we cannot carry on our operations any longer, with our present rate of income from these small units.

We are not allowed to rent a neighbour's parcel should he be forced to go working for wages, because he can not make ends meet on his unit of land.

Should some of us be able to get money enough to buy our neighbour's unit, he cannot sell because he does not hold any deed, nothing even giving him permission to have buildings on the places.

We trust you will get in touch with your minister of agriculture and mend the mistakes the former minister of agriculture made in establishing this irrigation project, or the majority of we farmers will have to turn to social welfare, which in this day and age is a shame.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that before you can resolve a problem you must first of all recognize that a problem exists. I took this matter up on the orders of the day. As reported at page 2650 of Hansard I asked the acting prime minister—because the Prime Minister was away in Paris at the time—whether he had looked into the matter. He referred me to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) who, he said, would deal with the question. Here is the reply that I received at that time. I am quoting the minister as reported at page 2650 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, I have not the particular petition referred to. I will be glad to look into the matter when and if I receive it. However, I think the matter referred to is one which was contained in a long letter addressed to the Prime Minister and forwarded to me containing numerous but confused complaints with regard to the difficulty of a certain family group of Hays. I might say that those complaints were investigated by the local of the Alberta farm union at Hays, and the local did not seem to think there was very much in them.

I may say that I was in the Hays area during the Christmas recess and I found that it is not a family problem. It is a problem that concerns every one of the farmers who are settled in that area. I went to see the secretary and the president of the local farmer's union and they were surprised to learn that they were supposed to have investigated this matter. They had not heard anything along that line at all. They knew that they had sent the request to the Prime Minister but they had never been asked to investigate the matter.

I realize that when the P.F.R.A. took over the existing irrigation district in that area it was necessary because it had deteriorated and renovation was necessary. I realize also that when they were renovating it they expanded it to a certain degree. I think this was also a proper thing to do, in view of the fact that they were going to do the work, and there were several hundred thousand additional acres that could be brought under the ditch when renovation was done on that scale. I agree also that possibly the setting up of the contour farms, in size from 90 acres to 120 acres or approximately that size, was a proper thing to do but I think it is also essential that we realize that these farms were designed for irrigated crops. They were designed for those specialized crops that can be grown under irrigation but they are not economic units if they are to be used for growing wheat, oats and other grains in competition with dry land areas. There are several reasons why that is true. One is that there is not sufficient production of that kind of crop, and under the present quota system these small units do not allow each farmer sufficient income to make a living.

I hope the day will come soon when this land, that has been put under the ditch can be used properly for the growing of crops that are particularly adapted to irrigated farming. Those crops I suggest are sugar beets, various vegetable crops and other specialized crops where there is a high dollar return per acre.

I do not wish to go into that matter at length now. However, I should like to ask the government review the economics of these small units in view of the recent advances in the mechanization of agriculture and the tendency toward larger farm units. I would also ask the government to give immediate consideration to two things that would alleviate the situation until such time as this land can be used properly. First of all, I think the government should consider allowing temporary absence from these farms of those farmers who would like to do something else where they can make a living, get a job for wages and so on, and thereby allowing their neighbour to rent their unit while they have to grow these crops which, as I suggest, are not adaptable. Then also I think the government should give these people now—not some time later—a reasonable clear-cut contract so that they will know where they stand. They do not have this contract at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a plea for any subsidy or anything of that nature. It is simply an attempt to get the government to realize that unless the government is prepared to give recognition to this situation these people are going to be on relief. If they would allow temporary absence and give the farmers that stay on the land a clear-cut contract to their land so that they know where they stand then I think possibly they can get along until general agricultural conditions improve and reach a better level.

(Translation):

UNEMPLOYMENT AT MAGDALEN ISLANDS

Mr. C. A. Cannon (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, on behalf on the electors of the Magdalen islands, I wish to give my full support to the remarks made by the hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson). It is quite important for us that the Canadian external trade with the United States should continue, as far as the exports of our fish products are concerned.

A few years ago, the United States tariff commission recommended an embargo or higher tariffs on the imports into the United States of Canadian fish products, and only the veto of President Eisenhower saved us from such an action which would have been disastrous for all the fishermen of eastern Canada and in particular for those of the Magdalen islands.

Indeed we export to the United States a great quantity of lobster, of frozen cod fillets, and of fish meal and oil. The export of all these products is essential to the economic welfare of the Magdalen islands and, if the steps taken by this government or by any other Canadian government should have harmful effects on the good work of our American friends who protect us in circumstances similar to those I have just mentioned, I say, Mr. Speaker, that such an action from the Canadian government would be absolutely disastrous for the Magdalen islands.

That is why I fully agree with the hon. member for Algoma East when he says that what Canada needs, as far as trade is concerned, is the expansion and not the diversion of her trade from one friendly country to another.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Algoma East has also dealt with a question which is of interest to the Magdalen islands as much as to the whole of Canada, that is the unemployment situation. So the grievance which I wish to express to the house and to bring to the attention of the government concerns the unemployment problem in the Magdalen islands which must be checked without delay. The most populous and the most industrialized of the Magdalen islands . . .

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order, if the hon. member would recognize that there are several members who would like to speak and there is very little time available, perhaps he would refrain from opening up a second subject.

(Translation):

Mr. Cannon: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make a long speech and I am dealing with the same matter as the hon. member for Algoma East—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) spoke on the subject of trade rather than of unemployment.

Mr. Cannon: Also unemployment.

(Translation):

That is what I am saying, Mr. Speaker. I am speaking about unemployment and "chômage" in French means unemployment. I am speaking about unemployment and I say that, to remedy unemployment more public works should be carried out in the Magdalen islands. The grievance which I am expressing in this house is one of great importance to the Magdalen islands.

The main wharf of Cap-aux-Meules island was damaged by a storm last fall and it is very important that it be repaired before the opening of navigation. On this point, I should like to make two suggestions. I suggest first that the steel should be obtained for the pilings and then that tenders be called in advance so that the contract be awarded and the wharf repaired as soon as navigation opens.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I submit that this grievance has to do with unemployment because, through repairs to the wharf, jobs will be given to unemployed people, and thus the unemployment which we all deplore will be spared those people.

Before concluding these remarks, I would like to submit to the government and more particularly to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) a list of works whose implementation would help relieve unemployment in the Magdalen islands.

The landing strip at the Havre-aux-Maisons airfield should be completed. The wharf at Cap-aux-Meules should be repaired. The port at Baie-aux-Huîtres should be developed. The port at Dune-du-Sud should be repaired. The runway at the airfield at Havre-Aubert should be improved, enlarged and lengthened. The port at Havre-Aubert should be improved, as well as the fishing ports of Etang-des-Caps and Etang-du-Nord, by the construction of a new breakwater on the west side. There should also be constructed a breakwater at Millerand which would also serve the adjoining communities, more particularly l'Anse-a-la-Cabane and l'Anse-Lebel. Improvements should also be made to the harbours at Havre-aux-Maisons and Pointe Basse.

These are a number of suggestions which I put to the government and which would help relieve unemployment. I hope that the government will give them sympathetic consideration and will give the necessary instructions so that these various public works can be carried out as soon as possible.

(Text):

PUBLIC BUILDING, EDMONTON—PARKING FACILITIES

Mr. S. H. S. Thompson (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I believe we are expecting a knock at the door but if there is time I would certainly like to bring my grievance before you. It has to do with several interrelated problems surrounding the new federal building in Edmonton. I believe everyone would agree that this is one of the finest federal buildings in Canada and certainly the most modern.

Since time is very limited I think I had better deal with one problem in particular, especially since the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) is here. That problem has to do with the small amount of parking space in relation to the size of the building. For a $6,300,000 building, housing practically every department of federal operations in that area, we have parking facilities for 130 cars which will not be nearly enough for the staff alone. In addition to that, there is absolutely no room for expansion and I understand that all the departments are not going to be able to find their way into the building as they first expected.

This, of course, leaves no room at all for landscaping of any kind which is certainly a pity in view of the style of the building. I understand that immediately to the south and in the same block as the federal building land is available. In fact a development permit has been given for an office building in that area and the developers, I believe, feel that they would now like to perhaps get out from under. They might be interested in trading the federal government some of that land for some of the property which the federal government will be vacating in the near future when it moves into the new building.

It would seem to me absolutely essential both from the parking standpoint and from the point of view of future increase in the size of building which may be anticipated that this land be procured immediately.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

297. Departmental administration, $637,817.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

353. General administration, $6,927,301.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

435. Departmental administration, $1,937,680.

Proceedings reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask what the business will be tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Green: The business for tomorrow will be as announced last night. First, No. 9 on today's order paper, the Beechwood resolution; then No. 11, with respect to Atlantic power; then No. 2, annual vacations with pay; then No. 4, with respect to the income tax agreement between Canada and Australia; then No. 3, a bill respecting the boundary between Alberta and the Northwest Territories; No. 6, second reading of the bill amending the Criminal Code; and No. 8, a resolution concerning an amendment to the Northwest Territories Act.

Mr. Chevrier: Could the house leader indicate what other business will be taken up after tomorrow?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not able to do so but I will let the representatives of the parties know as soon as I can.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And having returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deupty Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act for the relief of Pierre Rothe.
An act for the relief of Vasyl Dudka.
An act for the relief of John Francis Bernard Deegan.
An act for the relief of Jean Guy Joseph Desparois.
An act for the relief of John Howard Cooper Thompson.
An act for the relief of Romeo Raymond.
An act for the relief of Annette Allard Huint.
An act for the relief of Vera Dziedzic Volkman.
An act for the relief of William Toulouse.
An act for the relief of Frances Maud Mercer Barter.
An act for the relief of Florence Bloomfield Cichella.
An act for the relief of Carmen Baron Matucha.
An act for the relief of Martine Rolland Badeaux.
An act for the relief of Gertrude Laurence Delisle Laplante.
An act for the relief of Viola Carmela Starnino Dizazzo.
An act for the relief of Ludek Peter Rubina.
An act for the relief of Bernhard Wilhelm Michael.
An act for the relief of Paul-Emile Bedard.
An act for the relief of Michael Todascu.
An act for the relief of Iris Dorothy Birks Yates.
An act for the relief of Marion Gloria Ewart Balleine.
An act for the relief of Yvonne Florence Kee Brien, otherwise known as Yvonne Florence Kee Durocher.
An act for the relief of Christine Mary Mackay Leavitt.
An act for the relief of William Lucien Proulx.
An act for the relief of Lionel Houde.
An act for the relief of Gilberte Henriette Marie Harchoux Vuillaume.
An act for the relief of Catherine Maitland Moenting Johnstone.
An act for the relief of Maria Torossi Chartrand.
An act for the relief of Judith Sidney Browne Stein.
An act for the relief of Florence Wedge Whitlock.
An act for the relief of Jean-Baptiste Gagnon.
An act for the relief of Christine Silverson Manchur.
An act for the relief of Joseph Napoleon Leon Prosper Brault.
An act for the relief of Kaarlo Kustaa Loikkanen.
An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1958.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to the order of the house passed on December 2, 1957.

APPENDIX

LETTER TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS RESPECTING DEVELOPMENT OF CAMP GROUNDS AND PICNIC AREAS

Ottawa, January 2, 1958.

The Hon. W. A. C. Bennett
Premier of British Columbia
Victoria, B.C.

My dear Premier:

At the federal-provincial tourist conference that was held in Ottawa this past October there was a good deal of discussion on the possibilities of major developments being achieved over the next few years in the expansion of Canada's tourist industry. It was recognized that in most areas of the country expansion of tourist accommodation facilities of all kinds would have to be effected before any major increase in tourist traffic could be handled adequately.

One type of tourist accommodation which has rapidly increased in popularity over the past few years, and which would certainly have to be expanded to meet a major increase in tourist traffic, is camp ground-picnic area development. At the conference, all provinces demonstrated their interest in this form of development, whether it would be located along provincial highways or in provincial park areas. I indicated on behalf of the government of Canada the strong interest which the government has in the development of the tourist industry which already plays such an important part in our country's economy and which we are sure will play an increasingly important part in years to come. While I was not able at the conference itself to make any definite offers of federal assistance in connection with projects the provinces might wish to undertake, the whole problem has since been under most active consideration.

The government of Canada has now decided that it would be very much worth while to take an immediate step in the direction of some assistance as a practical experiment. The work involved in implementing the program would have particular value at the present time in providing added employment this winter in many different localities across Canada. I have therefore been authorized to offer on behalf of the federal government a program of assistance to the provincial governments on the following basis:

(1) The federal government will reimburse the provincial governments for 50 per cent of provincial government expenditures made on camp ground and picnic area developments between the date of this letter and May 31, 1958.

(2) The offer applies only to developments on land owned or to be acquired by the provincial governments and constructed by or on behalf of provincial departments and agencies, with the understanding that the developments would continue to be owned by the province.

(3) Subject to (2) above, the developments could be constructed anywhere in the province.

(4) The offer is made on the basis that not less than 50 per cent of all expenditures are for payment of wages of persons employed on the work.

(5) Auditing of provincial records or inspection of provincial works by federal representatives would not be a condition of reimbursement. Reimbursement would be made on receipt of a letter or statement from the provincial minister or ministers directly concerned giving the total of expenditures made within each of the prescribed periods and stating that the conditions set out in (2), (3) and (4) above had been met, and enclosing a list of the points where work was done and a very brief description of what had been accomplished at each point.

(6) Reimbursement could be made on a monthly basis if desired by the province, on submission of an appropriate letter or statement as set out in (5) above to cover the expenditures made in the last complete month. For expenditures made prior to March 31, 1958, a covering letter or statement would have to be received by April 20, 1958, so that the federal contribution could be paid from 1957-58 funds. Covering statements for provincial expenditures in April and May could be submitted any time before June 30th.

(7) Because of the limited time, it would not be proposed that formal agreements be entered into. This letter, together with a letter from a provincial premier accepting the offer and the conditions set out above would be regarded as the agreement. Immediate consideration will be given to placing before parliament a request for the provision of the funds that will be required for the federal share of the cost of the program.

Development of Camp and Picnic Areas

I am sorry that I have not been able to advise you of this program at an earlier date but I would hope that it will still be possible to organize and carry out a good deal of work such as cutting and clearing of sites, trails leading to sites, erection of camp buildings and so on. We propose to initiate a program of this nature at once within the national parks and we have found by past experience that a good deal can be done regardless of weather conditions.

I would be very pleased if you would let me know as soon as possible whether your province wishes to take part in the program. If your province is to take part, it would be particularly helpful if you could let me know the approximate total of the expenditures you believe your government will be able to make during each of the two periods of the program. From these estimates we will have some idea of the probable total of federal contributions that would be required.

Yours sincerely,

Alvin Hamilton.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, January 8, 1958

The house met at eleven o'clock.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Seventh report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Rea.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COLOMBO PLAN—STATEMENT ON PURCHASE OF WHEAT BY MEMBER COUNTRIES

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, during recent weeks the government has been giving close study to the food situation in Colombo plan countries. Because of short crops on the Indian subcontinent, India and Pakistan have had to import unusually large quantities of wheat, much of it from the United States under the provisions of public law 480, in addition to their usual commercial purchases from traditional suppliers like Australia; and Ceylon will require additional food as a result of recent disastrous floods.

A few months ago, as the situation worsened, a decision was made to supply a limited quantity of wheat to both India and Pakistan and some flour to Ceylon out of available Colombo plan funds. This decision was warmly welcomed by these commonwealth countries. The totals could not be as large as we might have wished, $7 million to India, $2 million to Pakistan and $1 million to Ceylon, because the funds had already been largely committed for urgent purposes of national development.

Some weeks ago, the Indian government approached us to ascertain whether Canada would be prepared to supply additional wheat for payment over an extended period. Having in mind the great interest the Canadian people have shown in assisting India in its gigantic task of economic development, the government believed that parliament would wish to go as far as possible to meet the Indian request.

Accordingly negotiations have proceeded, and I am in a position to inform the house that an agreement has been reached between the Canadian wheat board and the Indian government for the supply of a quantity of 400,000 tons of wheat, approximately 15 million bushels, to be shipped during the winter and early spring months. This agreement is subject to the conclusion of financial arrangements between the two governments which will provide, in brief, that payment will be made in seven equal annual instalments beginning three years after shipment. Interest is payable annually at a rate equal to the borrowing cost to the Canadian government plus a small charge for overhead. This rate is not likely to exceed 4½ per cent.

These terms are, of course, most unusual. They are not terms that could be offered in ordinary commercial markets without the danger of turning cash sales into long-term credit sales. They can only be justified as part of Canada's effort to consolidate the very real gains that are being made in India, Pakistan and Ceylon and other Colombo plan countries, to prevent the serious setback which could result from the need to import and pay immediately for large scale imports of foods.

When the government of Pakistan was informed of these discussions with India they asked if wheat would be available to them on the same terms, and we assured them that the same terms would be available to all countries in receipt of assistance under the Colombo plan. Pakistan also requested that part of next year's Colombo plan appropriation be used for wheat. Because of prior commitments with respect to continuing projects this would have been difficult. But, as I shall indicate shortly, the government is proposing an increase which will be of assistance to Pakistan.

We have reason to believe that India will require additional quantities of wheat, over and above 400,000 tons, from Canada during the coming months. Some of this they may be prepared to buy on terms similar to those I have outlined. Pakistan and Ceylon and other countries within the Colombo plan may also make similar requests in due course.

The government is confident that parliament will support the provision of wheat and flour to Colombo plan countries on the terms I have outlined. We are also confident that at this difficult time in the affairs of our friends in south and southeast Asia, parliament and the people of Canada would wish to see an increase in the amount of aid in the form of outright grants that is being made available to them.

When the Minister of Finance brings down further supplementary estimates later this month parliament will be asked to vote approximately $30 or $35 million to be loaned to Colombo plan countries for the purchase of Canadian wheat and flour, and an additional $15 million as an outright grant for the same purpose. We have in mind that a part of the $15 million grant will be used to meet an urgent request for assistance by the government of Ceylon arising from the very serious floods that have caused such devastation in that country.

Canada has assumed responsibility to assist in the development of the countries of south and southeast Asia through the Colombo plan. This development is threatened by grave shortages of food. It is fortunate that our abundance coincides with their need and that we are in a position to play some further part in keeping this great effort of the free world moving ahead.

I am making this statement now so that plans for the movement of the wheat can proceed with a minimum of delay, and so that hon. members will be aware of this important development in government policy before they are asked to consider the relevant items in the estimates.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of the statement he made earlier today. Has the government of Canada given consideration to supplying under the Colombo plan more wheat flour or other wheat products to such countries as Pakistan which seem to lack the facilities for milling wheat? To repeat, has consideration been given to the supplying of wheat products rather than wheat to countries that lack milling facilities?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, we have the closest co-operation with Pakistan, and everything depends on the requests they put forward.

COLOMBO PLAN—REQUEST FOR REPORT BY HIGH COMMISSIONER TO CEYLON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Following the important statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, which was well received in all parts of the house, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs again review my request that the Canadian high commissioner in Ceylon, who has completed his term of duty there, be given an opportunity to report to the Canadian people regarding the importance of the Colombo plan before taking a new posting?

Hon. Sidney E. Smith (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would accede to that request.

APPLICATION OF CREDIT POLICY TO OTHER THAN COLOMBO PLAN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce can inform the house whether the seven to ten years credit policy that has been offered or has been provided to India and other Colombo plan countries will be available outside the Colombo plan area to countries which do not have supplies of dollars. Can the minister say whether this general type of offer is available to such countries as Poland and Spain?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): If the hon. member will read carefully the statement I made this morning I think he will find that this particular transaction is restricted to Colombo plan countries, and that the reason I stated was that we do not wish to interfere with cash customers. Ninety per cent of our export of wheat is sold on a cash basis.

Mr. Argue: I wonder whether I might ask the minister whether he considers that Poland and Spain are ordinary cash customers.

Mr. Churchill: Poland and Spain have been cash customers. At the present time Poland is buying wheat from us on a short-term loan basis.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): I have a supplementary question. Is it not true that some of the Colombo plan countries have been cash customers in the past?

Mr. Churchill: Not to any great extent.

DOMINION SUCCESSION DUTY ACT

CHANGE IN METHOD OF COMPUTING TAX; REVISION, CONSOLIDATION, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to replace the present Dominion Succession Duty Act, to provide that the tax on property passing or deemed to pass, on death, be computed by reference to the property comprising the estate of the deceased rather than the property contained in the bequests from the estate to the beneficiaries; and also to consolidate, revise and simplify those provisions of the present act that continue to be appropriate.

Motion agreed to.

STARRED QUESTIONS

POWER—PROVINCIAL REQUESTS FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Question No. 45—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. On what date did the government of New Brunswick first request financial aid for Beechwood from the present government of Canada?
2. What was the form of the request and what was the nature and scale of the assistance requested?
3. On what date did the government of Saskatchewan first request the present government to join with Saskatchewan in the South Saskatchewan project?
4. On what date did the government of British Columbia approach the present government regarding the development of the Columbia river?
5. Has any other provincial government made any request for assistance or co-operation in any power project?
6. If so, which provincial governments and in respect of what projects?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to parts 1 and 2 is that in a letter to the Prime Minister dated July 23, 1957, the premier of New Brunswick, Hon. Hugh John Flemming, said:

> Federal assistance to the hydro development at Beechwood represents the most immediately required extension of the principle (of special assistance for the maritime area) in so far as New Brunswick is concerned.

A copy of this letter was tabled on January 3, 1958.

3. The premier of Saskatchewan wrote to the Prime Minister on August 8 and in his letter he said:

> Since your views and those of your party are well known on the desirability of the South Saskatchewan dam project, there is no need for me to stress the urgency for proceeding with it. However, it would be useful in preparing our budget if we knew when this undertaking was likely to be started and what contribution, if any, the Saskatchewan government would be expected to make over the next few years.

4. This government has not been approached by the government of British Columbia regarding assistance in the development of the Columbia river.

With respect to parts 5 and 6, the government of Nova Scotia has requested assistance in respect of several projects coming within the scope of the Atlantic provinces program already announced for which the parliament will be asked to appropriate funds, and the details will be explained at that time. The government of Prince Edward Island, by telegram dated January 7, made clear its desire to have this Atlantic provinces program cover the provision of additional facilities to provide power to the island; the government of Newfoundland has also expressed its desire to have the program extend to that province. Assistance in regard to specific projects has not been requested by these governments.

ELECTRIC POWER COSTS, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 51—Mr. MacEachen:

1. Has the federal government ascertained in its negotiations with the province, the present cost of electricity to industrial users in Nova Scotia?
2. If so, what are these present costs?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of this question is yes.

With respect to the second part of the question the answer is that these costs vary considerably. For example, some large industrial users of wholesale secondary energy can purchase power in Nova Scotia at 7 mills plus a demand charge based on the connected load plus an escalation clause tied to the cost of coal. In the case of the smaller users of industrial power, the cost of firm energy has been 30 mills or more.

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY—CHANGE OF GAUGE

Question No. 52—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Is the government or the Canadian National Railways giving consideration to changing the gauge of the Newfoundland railway to standard gauge?
2. If not, is it proposed to give consideration to such a change?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I might deal with both parts of this question at the same time. Consideration is not being given to changing the gauge of the Newfoundland railway. I would point out that this matter has been raised on one or two occasions in the sittings of the sessional committee on railways and shipping, and I find that during the proceedings of this committee on March 18, 1957, the president of the Canadian National Railways stated as follows:

> There is a very wrong impression that a narrow gauge railway is by definition an inefficient railway. That is not so. A narrow gauge railway can be just as efficient, if not more. In the peculiar circumstances of Newfoundland, and the peculiar circumstances under which your railway was built, in the matter of grades, curvatures, etc., a narrow gauge is a more efficient railway than a standard gauge would be. That is why I have said before, if the proposal were to build a standard gauge, we would never build a standard gauge on the same right of way as the narrow gauge is on. You would get a different idea about curvature, gradings, and everything else.

POWER DEVELOPMENT, NFLD.—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Question No. 53—Mr. Batten:

1. Has the government received any representation from the premier of Newfoundland since November 25, 1957, regarding federal assistance for power development?
2. If so, what is the nature of the representations and what reply has been made by the federal government?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): In reply to this question, on December 21 a telegram was received from the premier of Newfoundland which is as follows:

I understand that you are bringing before parliament a measure enabling you to enter into agreements with Atlantic provinces governments for the development of thermal electric power plants. I respectfully suggest that the word thermal would in practice virtually eliminate Newfoundland from any assistance from Ottawa. My request could be met by adding the word hydro in case there is any reason why you must use the word thermal. I would greatly appreciate your complying with this request. Kindest regards,

J. R. Smallwood

A reply was sent acknowledging receipt of the telegram and containing these additional words explaining the position of the government:

I am asking my colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to look into this matter and get in touch with you. I know that he will be glad to see what can be done to bring Newfoundland clearly within the terms of the proposed agreements.

R.C.A.F. STATION, SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.—HANGAR CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 54—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Has a decision been taken to construct new hangars at the Royal Canadian Air Force air station at Summerside, Prince Edward Island?
2. If so, on what date was the decision taken?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has asked whether a decision has been taken to construct new hangars at the Royal Canadian Air Force station at Summerside, Prince Edward Island. The hon. member for Prince has also sent me notice of his intention to ask a similar question on the orders of the day today. Perhaps I might answer the two questions together.

A decision has now been reached to construct a cantilever hangar, a readiness hangar and an anti-corrosion hangar at Summerside, P.E.I., R.C.A.F. station, in order to house the new Argus aircraft.

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I just want to draw the attention of the Minister of National Defence to a question which I have had on the order paper for several weeks, very similar to the ones to which he has just replied. I was wondering when I could get an answer.

Mr. Pearkes: I appreciate the interest taken by the hon. member in this subject, but as a decision was reached only this week and there was no opportunity to answer questions yesterday, he will understand why he did not receive an answer before this.

[Mr. Batten.]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

AIR LINE POSTAL SERVICE PAYMENTS

Question No. 210—Mr. Howard:

1. Has any money been paid by the government to air line companies for mail carrying purposes?
2. If so, (a) what schedule of rates apply to each company by route? (b) upon what dates did the present respective schedules become effective? (c) were any schedules of rates, different than those presently in effect, applicable to the respective companies prior to the time referred to in (b) above? (d) if the answer to (c) above is in the affirmative, upon what dates did the various previous respective schedules become effective and what were the respective schedules by routes?
3. What has been the total amount of money to date paid to each air line company which has received any money for carrying mail?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Return tabled.

GOVERNMENT RADIO AND T.V. PROGRAMS AND ANNOUNCEMENTS

Question No. 264—Mr. Hansell:

1. To date in 1957 has any department of the government and crown corporations, other than the C.B.C., sponsored any radio and T.V. programs and spot announcements over C.B.C. and independent stations?
2. If so, for each department or corporation, what are the (a) radio programs (b) T.V. programs; (c) the nature of the spot announcements?
3. What is the cost of each program and spot announcements?

VETERANS HOSPITALS—IMMIGRANTS TREATED

Question No. 285—Mr. Herridge:

1. Have any immigrants been admitted to, or received any form of treatment or services in hospitals of the Department of Veterans Affairs, between December 1, 1956 and December 1, 1957? If so, how many?
2. What was the total amount charged for these services to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, or any other department?

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYEES, B.C.

Question No. 296—Mr. Hahn:

How many civil servants, and in what departments, are employed in New Westminster, Cloverdale, White Rock, Ladner, Langley, Douglas port of entry, British Columbia?

TRANSLATIONS

Question No. 305—Mr. Fisher:

1. How many translators of Russian are there in (a) the bureau for translations; (b) in other government services, by departments?
2. What percentage of translations let out to outside translation services is classified for security reasons?
3. What is the average time from receipt of request for translation to the completion and return of the translated material?
4. What was the backlog of translation requests as of December 18, 1957?

PRINTING BUREAU—OUTSIDE ORDERS

Question No. 310—Mr. Fisher:

1. Were any orders for outside printing placed by the Queen's printer in the financial year ending March 31, 1957? If so, to what value and in what provinces?

2. If outside printing orders were placed, were any placed without any competitive bids being received? If so, to what firms, for what amounts?

TRADE

OIL—ALLEGED DUMPING OF SUPPLIES FROM VENEZUELA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or to the Prime Minister. Will the government inquire into the alleged dumping of Venezuelan oil into Canada and the charges made by church authorities and trade union leaders that the Venezuelan dictatorship and international oil companies are cruelly exploiting the working people of that country? Does the government consider this fair and proper competition with prairie oil?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will take notice of that question, Mr. Speaker.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO SALE TO AUSTRALIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Trade and Commerce advise this house what arrangements have now been made to supply Canadian wheat to Australia?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): My hon. friend is quite rightly interested in the Australian situation. When he originally asked me about the crop failure in Australia I thought he was aware of the fact that Australia is one of the four great exporters of wheat in the world, and that they would know what to do in a case of emergency. Australia has a sufficient amount of wheat to feed its own population, but perhaps not sufficient to maintain overseas markets. We are ready to sell wheat to Australia whenever Australia makes a bid to buy. The Australian people are just as capable of dealing in wheat as anybody in Canada, and they quite likely know what they want to do. We have the wheat, and if they want to buy it we are ready to sell it.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Does the minister expect to get an order from Australia? I heard him on "Press Conference" last night, and I thought that was the implication of his reply to one of the questions.

Mr. Churchill: Australia, I think, will buy some Canadian wheat. If we were placed in a similar position I think we would buy wheat. I am just waiting for Australia to order some Canadian wheat.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the minister a supplementary question. Does he consider this to be an aggressive sales policy?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of sending Canadian wheat salesmen to Australia. I have pointed out that Australia has been in the wheat business for years and is one of the great exporters. They know all about the wheat business. They know we have wheat. We are quite familiar with their shortage at the present time. The offer is there, if any country wants to buy.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just like the wait and see Liberals.

Mr. Argue: Did the Canadian wheat board or some agency of government not approach Australia after a minister of the government of that country made an announcement that they were in the market for Canadian wheat?

Mr. Churchill: That perhaps has been done; I do not follow the day to day operations of the Canadian wheat board. They are certainly very active, and I am sure have been in consultation with Australia.

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is it not true that the wheat board has been much more aggressive under the new government than it was under the old one?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Very definitely.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask a supplementary question. Are we to infer that the wheat board is governed by the stripe of government we have in power?

Mr. Churchill: I am sorry, but I did not hear the question.

Mr. Coldwell: From the Conservative whip's question are we to infer that the wheat board's activities are governed by the government we have in power in this country rather than by the interests of the wheat growers? I do not think that inference should be allowed to remain on the record, because it is incorrect.

Mr. Churchill: I do not think it was intended that such inference should be made.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What was the intention?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think this question, which sounded more like a dialogue than a question, should be pursued by way of supplementary questions. It should not have been asked in the first place.

Mr. Lewry: May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question in view of his answer to my question in connection with the sale of Canadian wheat to Australia. In view of the fact that the Canadian government has already sent a delegation to buy from other countries, would they now consider sending a similar delegation to sell to other countries?

Mr. Churchill: We are quite prepared to sell at any time to other countries, and we have trade commissioners active in a great many countries throughout the world encouraging sales of Canadian products. The question of selling wheat to Australia is similar to offering Canadian wheat to the United States of America or to the Argentine, which are also great wheat producers. It seems to me that is in a somewhat different category.

Mr. Speaker: I think we have pursued far enough this morning sales of wheat to Australia. The next thing we know we will be carrying coals to Newcastle.

FREIGHT RATES

STATEMENT ON PROGRESS OF FREIGHT RATE EQUALIZATION INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Assiniboia asked me a question regarding when it might be expected that the inquiry into the equalization of freight rates might be completed.

The board of transport commissioners has advised me as follows. The inquiry into the equalization of freight rates cannot be completed within a few months. The complicated freight rate structure of Canada includes millions of freight rates, and when the matter of equalization was before the parliamentary committee dealing with the proposed legislation, implementing recommendations of the Turgeon royal commission on transportation in 1951, evidence was given that it would take approximately five years to complete equalization. That estimate was in fact too low.

The board has proceeded to deal with the task of equalization as rapidly as possible, but since 1951 it has had a very heavy volume of work including a series of applications by the railways for freight rate increases.

The task of equalizing the "class" or maximum rates was accomplished and put into effect on March 1, 1955, and the board then proceeded to deal with the lower rates on various bulk commodities, some of which have been dealt with to a conclusion. The board issued an extensive judgment in respect of these commodities in September last, and is proceeding with further hearings as expeditiously as possible. It has set down for hearing at Vancouver on March 3 next the equalization of rates on fruits, vegetables and lumber and a further hearing at Kelowna on March 10, and hearings at Calgary and Regina later in March respecting rates on coal.

In addition, the board has ordered the railways to submit equalized scales on cement, pulpwood, wood pulp and paper articles on or before March 31. Seventy-eight other scales have been ordered for revision on or before June 30. There are, however, many more rates to be dealt with.

The board submitted an interim report on equalization to his excellency the governor general in council in March, 1955, and a further report dated September 23, 1957. These reports gave details of the board's activities in connection with equalization of freight rates and indicated what progress had been made.

[Later:]

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question concerning the equalization of freight rates. Could the minister inform the house as to when the board may be able to make another progress report representing another step forward? Second, is he able to ascertain what the board's target date is for completion of this very important inquiry?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I will speak to the board and secure the further information sought by the hon. member.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if the minister—I am sure he would—will impress on the board the great importance of this inquiry and the necessity of having it completed as quickly as possible?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the board have informed me that they are so impressed.

AIR TRANSPORT

STATEMENT ON PROVISION FOR FLIGHT ENGINEERS ON NEW JET TRANSPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the questions asked yesterday by the hon. member for Kootenay East and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre regarding a meeting held between representatives of my department and the association of flight engineers.

Representatives of the association of flight engineers met with officials of the civil aviation branch of my department last week to present a brief dealing with the carriage of flight engineers on the large commercial turbine-powered transport aircraft that will be coming into service in the next few years. This matter has been under investigation during the past several months by both my operating and engineering air officials and for this reason the brief was welcomed. Additional study and consultation with the air lines and aviation industry will be necessary before we reach a decision as to the requirements that should be established.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Has he ascertained whether it is correct that the DC-8's being built for Trans-Canada Air Lines are being built in such a way that there will not be room in the cockpit for a flight engineer? If this is the case will he consider having this change in construction delayed until a decision has been made on the issue itself?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have no indication that that is the case, but I will be glad to check on the matter for the hon. member.

STATEMENT ON INVESTIGATION INTO HELICOPTER CRASH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Laurier asked me a supplementary question regarding the setting up of a board of inquiry to inquire into the very unfortunate crash of a helicopter last week. The technical board of inquiry into the accident to a departmental helicopter was set up in accordance with standard departmental practice in these matters, which provides for immediate technical investigation in these cases. The authority stems from the general authority vested in the minister under the Aeronautics Act and there are no special regulations dealing with this particular accident, although the general air regulations as approved by the governor in council, P.C. 1954/1821, and published in the Canada Gazette, with which the hon. member is doubtless familiar, contain certain sections relating to the reporting and investigation of accidents.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUESTS FOR ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources if he would have a look at question 92, which has been on the order paper since October 29, and let me know at his convenience when he expects to give a reply?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I shall look into that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, to correct my abysmal ignorance and because I like asking questions of ladies I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Fulton: Don't give her a superman task.

Mr. Herridge: Why has it taken from December 7 until today to decide that question No. 285 in my name requires to be made an order for return?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows that his questions are so profound that they necessarily take longer than most.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

MONT TREMBLANT AND WASHINGTON CONFERENCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. On November 27 the hon. lady moved to have a question of mine made an order for return, question No. 197. I have not yet seen that it has been tabled, and I wonder if she could tell me when that is likely to be done.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire into it immediately.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NON-OPERATING RAILWAY UNIONS—PROTEST OVER CONCILIATION BOARD CHAIRMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. What action has the government taken or does it intend to take with respect to protests made by the non-operating railroad unions on the appointment of Charles P. McTague as chairman of the conciliation board to deal with the dispute between the railroads and the non-operating unions?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this matter is under consideration and no decision has been reached as yet.

CONSTRUCTION AND IMPROVEMENT OF CAMP AND PICNIC AREAS TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Comox-Alberni asked me a question about seaside parks for boating tourists, and I should like to make a reply at this time. The offer made to the provincial governments was for federal assistance toward the construction of camp grounds and picnic grounds. In the letter which was sent to the provincial premiers on January 2 it was made clear that these camp grounds and picnic grounds could be constructed at any point within the province, provided that the provincial government owned the land on which the developments were constructed.

The choice of location is, therefore, left to the good judgment of the provinces, and I have no doubt that any provincial government participating in the program would proceed with work on those developments which would be of maximum assistance to the tourist industry. There would be no objection on the part of the federal government if the government of the province of British Columbia decided that work should be done under the program toward the development of camp grounds or picnic grounds which would serve boating tourists.

CIVIL DEFENCE

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Claude Richardson (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Having particularly in mind the electric power failure in Montreal last Monday evening, would the minister consider giving at an early date a statement in respect of civil defence in Montreal?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member possibly knows, civil defence has been most inactive in Montreal. I might mention that the deputy co-ordinator, General Hatton, had a recent conversation with Mayor Fournier of Montreal, taking into consideration all aspects of the matter.

[Mr. Ellis.]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON REVISION OF TERMS OF UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. T. Stick (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. When does the government expect to receive the report of the royal commission on the revision of the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have had no intimation recently as to when it is expected the report will be completed, but when the royal commission concluded its sittings two months ago the chairman indicated that they would prepare and submit their report as soon as possible.

SHIPPING

MAGDALEN ISLANDS—USE OF ICEBREAKERS TO KEEP NAVIGATION OPEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to a question asked me yesterday by the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine. Yesterday the hon. member referred to the statement I made in the house on November 7 regarding assistance to shipping the Department of Transport planned to extend this winter in the lower St. Lawrence by way of icebreaking, and mentioned that at that time he had asked if the work could be extended to the Magdalen islands. The hon. member added that he had not heard from me since then and suggested I should look up Hansard to refresh my memory.

I have done this and find that the hon. member did make such a request, but if he in turn will be good enough to look up Hansard he will find that I replied as follows:

> Plans for icebreaking in the lower St. Lawrence are now under consideration, but have not been put in final form as yet.

It seemed to me there was an implication in the hon. member's question yesterday that I had neglected to give him an answer, but it is quite clear from Hansard that there was no intimation on my part that there would be a further reply in the house. Perhaps I should add that the hon. member wrote me a letter dated November 7 reminding me of his question and expressing the hope that when the icebreaking services for the north shore were being organized the Magdalen islands would not be forgotten. He will recall that I acknowledged his letter under date of November 13, assuring him that I had taken good note of his representations and that I would draw his request to the attention of my officials. This, of course, I did at that time.

Our icebreaking operations are carried out at the request of shipping companies, and we have as yet received no request for icebreaking this year in the vicinity of the Magdalen islands. When such requests are received from shipping companies we will meet them to the very best of our ability.

NATIONAL PARKS

GARIBALDI, B.C.—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word or two in answer to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam requesting the federal government to reopen negotiations with the government of British Columbia to make a national park out of Garibaldi park. Garibaldi park is provincial land, and it would hardly be proper for the federal government to make any suggestion to the government of British Columbia that the land be turned over to the federal government for use as a national park. If at any time the government of British Columbia wished to suggest such a step, the government of Canada would of course be prepared to give the proposal careful consideration.

GRAIN

WHEAT—CASH ADVANCES FOR FARMERS RENTING LAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce involving the repetition of a question I asked some time ago. I imagine that by this time he has had representations from farm organizations drawing his attention to the problem. Will the government consider amending either the cash advance legislation or the Canadian Wheat Board Act in such a way that farmers who rent land may be able to obtain cash advances on the acreage they cultivate?

Mr. Speaker: I am not certain whether that question should be asked. It seems to me that the house has already dealt with the matter of cash advances.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I say that I took up this matter with the minister, and he was good enough to say that if enough requests were made the matter would be reconsidered. With respect, I think the question should be allowed.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I may say that some representations have been made to me regarding the difficulty of renters getting landlords' signatures in order to make it possible for the renters to obtain cash advances. I pointed out in a communication to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar that I had not received many such protests, but naturally if difficulties are caused and hardships result we will have to give serious consideration to the problem. At the moment I am not sure how extensive the alleged hardship is or to what extent arrangements can be made at this time to ease the problem, but I am quite prepared to give it consideration.

Mr. Bryson: Has the minister had any representations from farm organizations in regard to this question?

Mr. Churchill: Not that I can recall. I have heard from individual farmers and perhaps some local has sent in a letter; but when you speak of farm organizations, I have not heard from the large farm organizations on this particular problem.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): I wonder if the minister received representations from the rural municipality of Porcupine setting out this problem? My attention has been drawn to a case where a death has taken place and the executors have refused to sign a release, so the farmer who is renting the land is not able to get a cash advance on his own property.

AIRPORTS

DRUMMONDVILLE, QUE.—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL GRANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Has the Minister of Transport received a request from the city of Drummondville for a grant to improve the airport? If so, is the minister in a position to give a favourable answer to this request, which I strongly support and which is anxiously desired by the entire population of Drummondville?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received such a communication, but I shall keep an eye open for it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DISMISSAL OF J. GEORGE NEUSPIEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Is the hon. lady in a position to answer my question of yesterday regarding the case of Mr. J. George Neuspiel? In view of the fact that he has been reinstated without any impairment of his position, could we now be told what were the reasons for his dismissal?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this has been a most complicated problem, and the whole case and the policy involved is presently under review. I am sorry to say that I cannot make a statement until that review is completed.

HIGHWAYS

MACKENZIE HIGHWAY, N.W.T.—REQUEST FOR USE OF LOCAL EQUIPMENT AND MANPOWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): I should like to direct a question to either the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or the Minister of Public Works. Is it true that the department has invited bids on a cost-plus management fee basis for the clearing of the Mackenzie highway between Fort Providence and Fort Rae in the Northwest Territories? If so, will the minister see to it that all available local equipment and manpower will be utilized before either are brought in from the province of Alberta?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): The answer to the first part of the question is yes. The answer to the second part of the question is that I shall have to take it under consideration because of the fact that we are trying to get this work started by January 15, which makes it imperative to move at high speed. I will take the matter up with the department to see what we can do. I want to assure the hon. member that one of the conditions of these tenders was that the government of Canada would have the choice as to the source of the labour supply.

Mr. Hardie: What about the supply of equipment?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): That is the part I have to take under consideration.

[Mr. Hees.]

FISHERIES

WEST COAST—REQUEST FOR BOUNTY OR FLOOR PRICE ON DOGFISH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Has the Minister of Fisheries received representations from the fishermen's union on the Pacific coast or the fishing companies that the bounty on dogfish be reinstituted? If so, can he tell us when that bounty will be reinstituted?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, a question on this matter was asked in the house some time ago. I did receive a request from the united fishermen and allied workers' union that such a bounty should be reinstated. I then made a reply in the house to that effect and stated what the position was. As yet, at any rate, no further requests have been received.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE

STATEMENT AS TO DATE OF PAYMENTS TO QUALIFYING FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question directed to the Acting Minister of Agriculture yesterday by the hon. member for Yorkton, I may say that at December 31 payments totalling $1,095,149 had been made to 4,231 farmers in western Canada under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. It is expected that the balance of first payments will have been made before the end of this month except in the Peace river block. As hon. members are aware, severe weather conditions delayed harvesting in this area and also made inspection difficult. However, it is hoped to complete inspections within the next few weeks, and it is expected that first payments will be made in this area shortly thereafter.

HEALTH INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS IN CONCLUDING AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the time the house recessed at Christmas, have any agreements been signed with any of the provinces under the provisions of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, or have any other steps been taken to bring about an early implementation of that act?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No agreements have been signed, but further steps and correspondence have taken place between some provinces and the federal authorities.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister say what steps have been taken? What are the steps to which he referred?

Mr. Monteith: Discussions as to clarification of the terms of the regulations.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the minister whether a decision has yet been made as to the date when the act will be brought into effect?

Mr. Monteith: No, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

BURLINGTON, ONT.—STATEMENT ON ALLEGED INFRINGEMENT OF MUNICIPAL BY-LAWS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Timmins asked the Postmaster General the following question which bounced off to me:

Is the minister aware that the postal department has been involved in the infringement of two municipal by-laws in Burlington, Ontario, in regard to rented premises, as to which it is reported charges are to be laid? If so, is he in a position now to give the house any details on this matter?

The answer is that the Department of Public Works in providing a total of 2,025 square feet of temporary basement rented space for the Post Office Department located at 208 and 210 Brant street in Burlington, Ontario. Leases have not been signed as yet, but departmental approval has been given.

To date there is no correspondence on record to the effect that charges are to be laid against the crown for the infringement of two municipal by-laws in Burlington. However, the district architect's office advised by telephone this morning that (a) the owners have infringed on the municipal by-laws to the effect that they neglected to take out a building permit when altering the premises for occupancy; (b) neglected at that time to instal an emergency exit to satisfy the fire regulations as laid down by the municipal by-laws. This is reported to have been done now to the satisfaction of all concerned.

It will be seen from the above that if there is any infringement of city by-laws, it is by the owner of the building and not by the department.

POWER

AUTHORIZATION OF LOAN OF $30 MILLION TO PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Minister of Finance to make loans, out of the consolidated revenue fund, to the government of New Brunswick, not exceeding thirty million dollars, in respect of expenditures for the development of hydro-electric power at Beechwood on the St. John river.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, the bill to be founded on this resolution will authorize the government to make a loan to the government of New Brunswick in an amount not exceeding $30 million to cover the cost of constructing the Beechwood hydroelectric development on the St. John river.

May I remind the house that this resolution deals with a particular matter, that of assisting the province of New Brunswick in financing a specific and a very important project. There is another resolution on the order paper which my colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources will be introducing very shortly—indeed, it is the next item of business following the present resolution—which deals with the broader questions of the generation of electrical energy in the Atlantic provinces. May I express the hope that in this debate hon. members will address their attention to this Beechwood financing problem and if I may so request, reserve their views on the more general power problems of the Atlantic provinces until the other resolution and bill are before us.

The development of the power potential of the St. John river is not a new idea. As far back as 1910 the international joint commission undertook certain studies of its potential power resources, and a hydro-electric plant was built at Grand Falls shortly after the first world war. This power plant is privately owned. In line with the policy adopted by other provinces, the government of New Brunswick has for many years followed the policy of developing electrical energy by public ownership through the New Brunswick electric power commission.

Some nine years ago, that is early in 1949, the then premier of New Brunswick, foreseeing the growing need for expanded sources of energy, asked the federal government to invite the United States to join with it in requesting the international joint commission to make more detailed studies of the St. John river basin. In due course this work was undertaken, and in 1953 the New Brunswick government came to the conclusion that a power development at Beechwood offered the best prospect of a substantial and economical addition to the province's power supplies.

This development, however, required a very substantial capital investment, an investment which in the opinion of the New Brunswick government when added to other essential capital requirements of the province, exceeded the probable capacity of the province to raise funds in the ordinary capital market.

In March and April, 1953, and again in September and October, 1953, Premier Flemming of New Brunswick requested the federal government to assist in financing power development in his province. Numerous meetings between ministers and officials of the two governments were held and various projects and forms of assistance were put forward, but the final result was a rejection by the federal government in February, 1954.

Toward the end of 1954, with the need for increased sources of power becoming more and more urgent, the premier of New Brunswick renewed his request for financial assistance and the federal government again declined to participate. The government of New Brunswick felt, however, that the need for more power was so insistent that they had to go ahead with the Beechwood project, and in June 1955, construction work was commenced and pressed forward and the plant is now substantially completed.

The immediate financing costs were met by bank loans, but throughout 1956 Premier Flemming repeated his requests for federal assistance in making long-term financial arrangements, either by a direct long-term loan or by guaranteeing the bonds of the New Brunswick electric power commission. The federal government of the day once more declined these requests, and there matters stood until after June 10.

Hon. members who sat in the previous parliament and others who have read the record will recall that those who constitute the present government and those associated with them never accepted the decisions of the former government as sound, and as soon as the present government took office it undertook to review the Beechwood situation, quite apart from the general problem of the energy resources of the Atlantic provinces.

This review proceeded rapidly, and early in November we were happy to reach an agreement with the government of New Brunswick on this subject. The terms of the agreement which we are now asking parliament to approve contemplate a federal loan to the province of New Brunswick covering the total cost of Beechwood, not exceeding the sum of $30 million. The rate of interest will be the rate at which the federal government normally advances funds to crown companies such as the St. Lawrence Seaway authority. This rate is our own current borrowing cost plus one-eighth of one per cent. The past practice has been to adjust this rate semi-annually on October 1 and April 1. The appropriate rate at the time we negotiated this agreement with New Brunswick was 4⅜ per cent.

However, as hon. members are aware, the rates at which the federal government has been borrowing money have dropped since that date. Since it will be some weeks before the government of New Brunswick will be able to certify the full cost of the Beechwood project, I understand that the government of New Brunswick will not draw down the loan before April 1. The bill will therefore provide that the rate of interest be fixed by the governor in council, but at a rate not higher than 4⅜ per cent.

The loan is to be repaid in eight equal annual instalments of principal and interest combined. The present estimate of the final cost of Beechwood is approximately $29,400,000. In essence this resolution and the bill to be based upon it are designed to help New Brunswick over a difficult financing problem. New Brunswick is a relatively small province. It has been doing all in its power to help itself, but I think all hon. members will realize that during the past year or two it would have been quite impossible for a province of New Brunswick's size and resources to have placed an additional $30 million issue on the capital market.

The government of New Brunswick is satisfied and the dominion government is satisfied that the repayment of this loan under the terms of this agreement is quite feasible. The revenues available from Beechwood will make some contribution toward the repayment, and the balance of repayment can be raised by periodic sales of long-term bonds by the province or by the power commission in blocks of manageable size during the next eight years.

The government has subscribed to the principle of special economic assistance to the Atlantic provinces. This resolution represents an important part of the government's implementation of this policy. This proposal also fits in with the government's policy of co-operating with the provinces in the sound development of their natural resources where such development appears to be in the national interest, and where the provinces' financial capacities are inadequate.

The particular form of co-operation will vary with the circumstances. In this case the proposal covered by this resolution appears, both to this government and to the government of New Brunswick, to be the most appropriate means.

May I say, Mr. Chairman, that the bill which the resolution seeks leave to introduce is very short,—consisting of about 10 lines. It simply states in bill form the terms of the resolution. If it meets with the approval of hon. members when the resolution is adopted the bill should be circulated at once; and if it were the wish of hon. members to proceed with discussion of the motion for second reading of the bill today, the government would be happy to proceed on that expeditious basis.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if it will be possible to grant the request of the Minister of Finance to proceed with second reading of the bill later today. It will depend upon the answers I get to a number of questions I intend to ask at this time.

The Minister of Finance has just said that the government of which he is a member has subscribed to the principle of special economic assistance to the Atlantic provinces. This is nothing new; the previous government subscribed a long time ago to that principle and has given evidence of its good faith in the matter. The Minister of Finance in his short resume has tried to convey the impression that the government of which he is a member is now doing something which the previous government had refused to do—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lesage: —which is not the case, as I will show very clearly when I go in more detail over the history of Beechwood.

An hon. Member: Did you bring some department files with you?

Mr. Lesage: I have some sessional papers, and whenever you want to talk about departmental files I am ready for you. However, I am going to quote from these sessional papers, which will prove that the previous government never received the kind of request from the government of New Brunswick for assistance in respect to Beechwood with the conditions outlined by the Prime Minister the other day and by the Minister of Finance today.

On April 27, 1953, the government of New Brunswick presented to the government of Canada a brief on the need for financial assistance to develop the hydroelectric power resources of the St. John river. The request of the government of New Brunswick was outlined on pages 5 and 6 of the brief as follows:

That the federal government advance to the province of New Brunswick the cost of developing the Beechwood hydroelectric power generating station, with projects incidental thereto. Estimated cost to 1960, $44,400,000.

Which is much more than $30 million.

That the funds be interest free or, if this should prove to be impossible, that the interest rate be 2½ per cent and interest free during construction.

And finally:

That repayments be made at the rate of 1.5 per cent of the principal amount each year,—

That is a 66-year period, not an 8-year period.

—the first payment to be due one year after the completion of the particular project for which the money was advanced.

The government of New Brunswick then projected the following development for Beechwood, and I will quote from page 3 of the brief:

The initial installation at Beechwood would be two 45,000 H.P. units, which is feasible on a run of river basis. The second step would be the development of 600,000 acre feet of storage in the upper reaches of the river. The completion of this storage development would be followed by the installation of a third unit at Beechwood together with the necessary transmission facilities.

The estimate of the cost of the two first units was at that time $24,200,000. Between 1953 and 1955 the program of the government of New Brunswick was amended, substantially changed, and in January, 1956, the government of New Brunswick presented a new brief to the government of Canada on the need for federal financial assistance for the development of electric power. The proposals of the New Brunswick government can be found on pages 16 and 17 of the brief, and I quote:

The government of New Brunswick urges that the government of Canada assist it in developing the electric generating capacity which will be required for a rapidly expanding New Brunswick economy. It requests the federal government to consider the following alternative proposals:

(1) The government of Canada to advance to the government of New Brunswick the necessary capital for the development of the hydro power of the St. John river basin. The rate of interest to be that prevailing on long term government of Canada bonds. Funds to be advanced for each project as they are required for the load of the New Brunswick electric power commission, and as it proves to be economically feasible as compared with alternative sources of power.

The estimate of the funds which would be required up to March 31, 1967, is $89,850,000.

The alternative to that proposal was the following:

The government of Canada to advance to the government of New Brunswick the funds required for the projected construction program of the New Brunswick electric power commission through to March 31, 1967, the rate of interest to be that prevailing on long term government of Canada bonds. Funds required are estimated at $211,094,000.

In the second brief there was no direct proposal as to the annual rate of capital reimbursement, but the rate of depreciation was the same as in the first brief, 1.5 per cent a year over a period of 66 years.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask the hon. member a question? In the first brief did not Premier Flemming state that "the above", namely the 1.5 per cent repayment and the term of payment "has been set down on a basis for discussion only, and of course we will be glad to consider financial assistance in any form possible by your government"? That was the statement he made.

Mr. Lesage: On what page of the brief was that?

Mr. Brooks: It was not in the brief. It was in a letter to the Prime Minister of Canada sent with the brief.

Mr. Lesage: At that time?

Mr. Brooks: At that time.

Mr. Lesage: What was the date of that letter?

Mr. Brooks: The date was in September, 1953, the same year as the brief.

Mr. Lesage: Would the minister be willing to table that letter?

Mr. Brooks: Well, I am sure the hon. member has the letter.

Mr. Lesage: I do not have the letter.

Mr. Van Horne: He has it. He has them all, he said.

Mr. Lesage: I never said I had all letters. That is contrary to the facts, and the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska had much better study his own problems than try to smear hon. members of this house.

Mr. Van Horne: Did the hon. member not say in this house time after time that the reason for refusing help for Beechwood was that New Brunswick was sufficiently well off as not to warrant assistance from the federal government?

An hon. Member: Why don't you attend a session of parliament occasionally?

Mr. Van Horne: Now you are trying to whitewash your own inactivity.

Mr. Brooks: The date of that letter, since the hon. member asked for it, is September 11, 1953, and it is directed to Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, Prime Minister of Canada, from the premier of New Brunswick, Hon. Hugh John Flemming.

Mr. Lesage: Would the minister be prepared to table that letter?

Mr. Brooks: Yes.

Mr. Lesage: The hon. gentleman knows that in 1956, as I said, the estimate of the cost of the two first units at Beechwood had risen to $29,200,000. The construction program of the power commission according to both briefs, was based on providing storage in the upper reaches of the St. John river and its tributaries, and the installation of a third unit in Beechwood.

As time went on the possibilities of such storage were examined. It was not possible to reach an agreement with the province of Quebec or the state of Maine to have storage in either territory. A survey was made of the possibilities of storage on the Tobique river in New Brunswick at the ledges. On March 14 of this year the premier of New Brunswick sent me a report which he had received from the New Brunswick electric power commission, and I wish to quote the following from the report:

With an interest rate of 3.5 per cent the total estimated annual cost of the Ledges site would be $321,750 as compared with a total annual benefit of $320,500. It must be noted of course that practically all the annual cost of a storage project is the carrying charges on the capital investment.

Until cheaper money is available than is now the case, or until the shape of the load duration curve of the commission changes from that which is anticipated by 1959 to 1960, it will be necessary to alter the long-range program of the commission by excluding storage facilities, which are predominately dependent upon investment charges in their annual cost structure, and which will not produce required capacity at a cheaper cost than equivalent thermal generation. It would seem that this observation would be applicable to any of the St. John river storages unless interest rates on capital required for their construction was considerably reduced.

Mr. Van Horne: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he now trying to deny that the answer given on each and every occasion when an appeal was made for help for Beechwood was that New Brunswick was sufficiently well off as not to warrant a loan from the federal government for the project?

Mr. Lesage: If the hon. member will quietly and patiently listen to what I have to say and to the details I am putting on Hansard he will understand, if he uses his intelligence.

Mr. Van Horne: Will the hon. member permit another question? I am asking him very simply if he is trying to make some excuse now for forgetting what was said in this house, when time after time he himself gave the answer that the only reason help was refused for Beechwood was that New Brunswick did not require any help.

Mr. Lesage: The previous government never refused a loan to the province of New Brunswick for the Beechwood project on the terms which are offered by the present government.

Mr. Morris: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Lesage: I hope, Mr. Chairman, that my time will not be cut short.

Mr. Morris: My patient consideration of the hon. member's remarks will be assisted if he will kindly inform us as to the date of the letter he has just read in part and also the full salutation; whether it was addressed to him as a private member or in his former capacity as minister.

Mr. Lesage: What was the last part of that question?

Mr. Morris: I simply asked for information. I wish to know the date of the letter and whether it was addressed to the hon. member in his private capacity as a government supporter or in his previous political capacity.

Mr. Stick: If you listen to the speech you will get your information.

Mr. Byrne: Keep quiet and you will get the information.

Mr. MacEachen: Stand up.

Mr. Lesage: This is a copy of a report by the New Brunswick electric power commission signed by Mr. J. L. Feeney, chief engineer, and addressed to Hon. Edgar Fournier, chairman of the New Brunswick electric power commission. It was sent by Mr. Fournier to Mr. Flemming on March 11 and was sent to me by Mr. Flemming on March 14. This was tabled as sessional paper No. 213 on Tuesday, April 9, 1957, on motion of the hon. member for Gloucester.

Mr. Morris: I thank the hon. member for that information.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Now, would you like to know about unemployment in Halifax?

Mr. Morris: I would be delighted to know about it any time.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I do not imagine you know what is going on down there at any time.

Mr. Lesage: Since water storage was not possible at that time to firm up the power at Beechwood, thermal plants would eventually have had to be used for that purpose. The previous government would not only have financed but would have built such thermal installations.

It will have been noted that the demands of the government of New Brunswick to the previous government in 1953 were for nearly $45 million without interest or with a maximum interest of 2½ per cent at the highest, and in 1956 for loans of either $90 million or $211 million, reimbursable over a period of 66 years.

Mr. Brooks: But the point that was brought out at that time, as the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska stated very well, was that the federal government took the attitude that no matter what the provincial government asked for the province was capable of paying the cost. That is exactly what the federal government was saying.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I suggest to you with deference that we should have some order in this committee in the discussion of the matter that is now before us.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Not closure.

Mr. Chevrier: It is the privilege of any hon. member in this committee to rise and ask the hon. member who is speaking for permission to ask a question, but that has not been done. The hon. members who have interrupted have not asked permission but have proceeded to make speeches, and I think that is contrary to the rules of the house.

Mr. Van Horne: I asked permission.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has also proceeded in that manner.

Mr. Brooks: I must object to that.

Mr. Pickersgill: Sit down. This is a point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: I submit to you with deference, sir, that this debate should be allowed to continue in the ordinary and normal manner.

Mr. Brooks: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I definitely asked the hon. member—

Mr. Pickersgill: But you did not ask a question.

Mr. Brooks: Yes, I asked a question.

Mr. Van Horne: So did I.

Mr. Brooks: I asked permission and obtained it from the hon. member by his sitting down at the time. I do not know about the others.

Mr. Van Horne: So did we all.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are in committee of the whole, where members can speak as often as they want for 30 minutes at a time, so what is all the fuss about?

Mr. Stick: The interruptions that have occurred.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Start in again and take 30 minutes.

Mr. Lesage: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, if I were to leave the past history and come to the present resolution it might have the effect of quieting the spirits and minds of hon. gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. MacEwan: It is doubtful.

Mr. Lesage: The loan proposed by this resolution is for a maximum of $30 million at 4⅜ per cent interest, or whatever lesser amount it might be on April 1. Repayments, instead of being made at 1.5 per cent of the principal amount each year—that is, as I said earlier over a period of 66 years,—will have to be made in eight years in equal instalments of combined principal and interest of approximately $4,500,000, according to the statement of the Prime Minister and the one made by the Minister of Finance today.

I wish to come back to what the Prime Minister had to say in reply to questions asked by my colleague the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, as recorded at page 1405 of Hansard of November 22, 1957. The first part of the question read as follows:

1. Are loans based on the principle applied to the Beechwood project to be available only for projects in the Atlantic provinces?

The answer was no. The second part of the question read:

2. If not, will all provinces qualify?

The answer given was as follows:

The answer is that any province that has a project for which there is an equally good case could qualify in respect of that project.

That means, surely, that the Prime Minister and his colleagues have deemed that the government of New Brunswick has made a good case for the financing of Beechwood by the federal government. Of course the interruptions I have had since the beginning of my remarks prove without doubt that not only members of the government but members of the Conservative party are convinced that a good case has been made. I would like the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to outline to the committee the factors that were considered by the government in reaching the decision that this is a good case. This is important not only in the present instance but also in other cases for determining future guidance and policy.

Surely one of the most important factors must be the cost of power to the consumers. Of course there will be a reduction, though we do not know what kind of reduction. I would like the minister to tell the committee what will be the reduction which will benefit the consumers because of this loan. I would also like to know what will be the cost of energy from Beechwood, the first two units, delivered to load centre substations in mills per kilowatt hour.

On January 3 of this year the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources answered a somewhat similar question asked by the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond. The answer of the minister as recorded at page 2831 of Hansard of that date was as follows:

1. Assuming a production of 300 million k.w.h. annually and a borrowing rate of 6 per cent on the $29 million, the cost of power produced by the present Beechwood plant would be of the order of 7 to 7.5 mills per k.w.h.

One matter to which I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources immediately is that he used the figure 300 million kilowatt hours which would be sold, of course, whereas in the second brief presented to me in 1956 by the premier of New Brunswick, as found at page 34, the following figure was used.

The average annual kilowatt hours available—355 million.

In a dry year, as the minister knows very well, this would be very substantially decreased. I do not understand why the figure 300 million kilowatt hours annually would have been used by the minister, so basing his answer on a load factor of about 85 per cent, when the report of Montreal Engineering tabled in the house by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources on November 14, I believe, mentioned an average load factor for the maritimes of 50 per cent.

I should like the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to revise his figures by using the real figures which should be the basis of the calculations, that is to say an average of approximately 180 million kilowatt hours in a year. The second part of his answer to the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond, based on the figure of 300 million kilowatt hours—

Mr. Fleming: Does my hon. friend not think that the questions he is pursuing now could be asked to better advantage on the second resolution rather than on the present one?

Mr. Lesage: No, I am talking about the cost of power at Beechwood. I am talking about the output of the first two units at Beechwood, and it is only with respect to the first two units that the loan of $29 million to $30 million is proposed. I am not talking at all about the other resolution which has to do with the establishment of thermal plants and transmission lines for interconnecting purposes in the Atlantic provinces. I am dealing strictly with the two units at Beechwood, and the output of 300 million kilowatt hours applies only to the first two units. My remarks bear only on the Beechwood project. The second part of the answer was:

This cost could be reduced by approximately 1.2 mills per k.w.h. by loans from the federal government at a lower interest rate.

First of all, I believe that 1.2 mills is too high because of the reason I have just given, as to the load factor. There is also another reason. It would seem that the federal rate has been used for the whole depreciation period, while it should have been used only for eight years. After the period of eight years the province will have to supply the money at its own rate of interest, so the federal rate of interest should not be used as a basis for calculation of depreciation for the whole period of depreciation but only for the eight years.

I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to request his officials, between now and second reading of the bill, to make the calculations again and prepare an answer to the question of the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond based on the true facts, that is to say the federal rate of interest only for eight years and an annual use or sale of 180 million kilowatt hours which, according to the report of Montreal Engineering, would be the average use in a year.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Did you use the figure of 30 years?

Mr. Lesage: I did not use any such figure.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): No, but did you ask me to use 30 years?

Mr. Lesage: No. This is not thermal plants or transmission lines. There is no doubt that the depreciation period on water power installations is much longer than on thermal plants.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): What time do you suggest?

Mr. Lesage: I suggest the time suggested by the government of New Brunswick, 66 years at 1.5 per cent per year.

While I am dealing with the cost of the power to be produced at Beechwood I should like to ask the minister what his opinion is as to the economics of the problem. For instance, how will the cost of energy from Beechwood compare with that of energy to be developed through the large modern thermal plants to be built under government policy, taking into account the difference in the depreciation period between the two, the load factor and also what I am about to say? Without storage facilities, to which I referred a few moments ago, the two Beechwood units will be operated on a run of the river basis. Yet the flow of the Saint John river varies greatly from season to season. To what extent will the annual curve of production of power coincide with the curve in the load factor?

That is very important in determining the economics of any project. Surely the peak of power generation at Beechwood does not occur at the same time as the peak load. In order to know if this is really as good a case as was put forward by the Prime Minister, we should have some information as to how much it will cost to build and operate the thermal plants which will be necessary to meet the load at all times of the year.

Mr. Brooks: Your government said it was a good proposition.

Mr. Lesage: Yes, but I want to know about the economics. I want to know what will be the cost of power from Beechwood to the consumers of New Brunswick. I have here all the calculations of cost based on the proposals of New Brunswick, but I do not have the calculations of cost based on the conditions of the loan put forward by the Minister of Finance now, which are completely different; and I am not an engineer.

Mr. Brooks: That is quite evident.

Mr. Lesage: I have to rely on the figures I find in documents in this house. I should like to know how much power will be lost at the time of peak flow. I submit that the committee is entitled to a full and detailed report on the economics of the Beechwood project in the light of the proposal made in the resolution.

Before resuming my seat I wish to refer to a statement made by the Minister of Agriculture on November 20 in his capacity as Acting Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I thought it was to be found on page 1333 of Hansard of November 20, but I cannot find the quotation. The minister said, in any event, that the first two units of the Beechwood project were 90 per cent completed at that time. To return to the question I mentioned a few moments ago, asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, part 4 of that question, as found at page 1405 of Hansard of November 22, was in these words:

Are such loans—

Similar loans as in the case of Beechwood.

—available only for new or uncompleted projects or will they be available for refunding obligations of established power projects in the Atlantic provinces?

At that time the Prime Minister answered that they would not be available for refunding obligations. I should like to know how much of this loan will be available to New Brunswick for refunding, that is to say how much of the project will have been completed on April 1 when the government advances the first money on the loan? How much will be for refunding purposes?

Mr. Fleming: All the project will have been completed, because the resolution assumes that the cost will have to be ascertained. As I mentioned in my statement this morning, that is expected to be known shortly and it is at that time that the province will take down the loan.

Mr. Lesage: Therefore I have to conclude that the whole of the loan will be for refunding purposes.

Mr. Fleming: No, not for refunding at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: Where does the money come from in the meantime?

Mr. Fleming: The obligations incurred by the province of New Brunswick—

Mr. Lesage: Will be refunded.

Mr. Fleming: No, they have not been funded. That is not the state of these obligations at the present time.

Mr. Lesage: So we should interpret the answer of the Prime Minister to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in the light of the statement of the Minister of Finance now that reimbursing a bank is not refunding.

Mr. Fleming: Refunding has a very definite and well accepted meaning, and I think my hon. friend is aware of it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not have the hon. gentleman's advantage, so perhaps the Minister of Finance would define it for me.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Pickersgill: My question was a serious one, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fleming: Very well; I shall deal with these questions in due course.

[Mr. Lesage.]

Mr. Low: I listened with keen interest to the short statement made by the minister in introducing this resolution. I have listened also with very keen interest to the statement made by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet. He very properly raised the questions he did concerning the soundness of this proposition. After all, if we are to be fair all around with our provinces and with the money that properly belongs to the people of Canada, we must know that when advances are to be made out of the consolidated revenue fund the proposition is sound, and there is a good chance that the province to which the loan is made will be able to pay it back.

I have listed a number of questions which were asked by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, and I will repeat them and ask the ministers concerned, before the second reading of the bill, to give us answers to these questions. In the first place, let me assure the minister and the committee that we believe that at times it is necessary for the federal treasury to come to the assistance of provinces in order to ensure the proper development of the resources of those provinces. We do know that the province of New Brunswick has had a depressed economy for some years; that has been quite clear. They have required help, and there is no doubt about that. We have been, in our group, sympathetic to whatever help could be granted to New Brunswick so they could get a proper development; because we realize that unless they have power down there, and sufficient power, they cannot proceed to industrialize to any degree.

One of the things they need above all others is industry in order to ensure employment for their people and the fullest measure of development of their resources. We know also, of course, that New Brunswick has had to operate on a comparatively small budget every year. When you compare it with the budgets of some other provinces of Canada it looks almost infinitesimal. How in the world they carry on with that small amount of money is sometimes a mystery. However, they do. I say we must be sympathetic to their requests for whatever help can be granted. Under the circumstances of confederation and what confederation did to the Atlantic provinces, including New Brunswick, I believe the government of Canada owes them some assistance; that is the position we take.

Having said that, the question arises in my mind as to whether Beechwood is the kind of project that ought to be proceeded with in preference, let us say, to thermal power development units that have been projected there for some years and which could use the abundant shales that are in the province. We have heard about these shales for years. Nobody, to my knowledge, has been able to obtain all the facts for the house regarding these shales and whether it would be possible to develop enough power for the needs of the people of New Brunswick through the use of these shales in thermal power units.

Mr. Fleming: I wonder if the hon. member would permit me to interrupt. I take it he is aware of the fact that this Beechwood project is in being, and it is not now a case of an alternative choice between it and some other power development.

Mr. Brooks: I wonder if I might bring everybody up to date. Beechwood has been in operation now for three weeks, and is supplying power.

Mr. Low: I understand that, but we are still considering—

Mr. Lesage: Is it not a trial run?

Mr. Brooks: It is supplying power now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does anybody know what the situation is?

Mr. Low: In any event, we know the Beechwood project has been completed and is in operation. However, I am also mindful of the fact that we are being asked in this parliament today to give favourable consideration to a loan from the consolidated revenue fund of this country in the amount of $30 million in order to refund to the province, or to the banks who have financed the project thus far, the moneys they have advanced. We do feel, therefore, that we are entitled to the facts, and all the facts. Along with the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet I should like to know if sufficient investigation has been carried out to ascertain whether or not the amount of power available through the Beechwood project is such as to justify the cost. That certainly is important and fundamental.

Have careful inquiries been made to find out whether the possible amount of power available to the people through Beechwood not only would justify the cost but would be equal to what they could provide through thermal units at a similar cost? It seems to me that is fundamental to this whole case. It seems to me that we ought to have also the actual cost of the development of power reduced to mills based on realistic load factors, and not this basis of 85 per cent or 90 per cent. If a realistic load factor is, let us say, 55 per cent or 50 per cent, then we should have a break-down of the actual cost in mills of the development of that power based on that figure. Certainly there is a tremendous spread between the estimated 300 million kilowatt hours annually at a cost of 7 mills per kilowatt hour and, let us say, 180 million kilowatt hours per year at a much greater cost. I think the minister ought to be able to give us these figures and, perhaps before we go on too far with the bill, to present this break-down to us.

Now, provided it is a sound project and can be justified, certainly I would be putting no stumbling block in the way of this loan to New Brunswick. After all is said and done, we want to see the fullest measure of development of the resources within the provinces. New Brunswick is one of the provinces that need assistance, and in order that we can give them that assistance I believe the minister ought to give us the facts requested by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, all the members from New Brunswick have been waiting for some time for this matter to come before the house in order to express their views. It is quite apparent also that there has been quite a bit of heat generated as the result of members on one side of the house not agreeing with those on the other side. I believe this matter has been a political football for a long, long time. I believe the facts should be brought to light, and I hope in my humble way to be able to do that very thing.

I am going back a little in the history of power development in New Brunswick. A major part of the electric power development in New Brunswick has taken place within my memory; in fact in my own home town of St. Andrews we have only enjoyed this necessary service since 1920. In that year a little company composed of citizens of that town was formed, electrical energy was purchased from the Canadian Pacific Railway through their facilities at the Algonquin hotel. It was steam-generated power. We paid for that service in the little town from which I come at 16 cents per kilowatt hour plus a $1 a month service charge. We also found it necessary to pay for the meter that measured the energy.

That was my first experience with the cost of electrical energy in the province of New Brunswick. After two or three years it was determined that some cheaper source of power must be found, and for a few years we were serviced from the Canadian Cotton Mills in Milltown. That power was sent over the St. Croix river by an underwater cable to St. Andrews and we were serviced in that way. Later on it was taken over by the New Brunswick power commission.

Beechwood Power Project Loan

The first development we enjoyed in New Brunswick in so far as water power is concerned took place at Musquash in Saint John county. That was a very successful development. It has been in operation, I would say, for 27 or 28 years. It has been a great convenience and has meant a great deal to the people of the province of New Brunswick. That project was sponsored and built by a Liberal government for this purpose. They wanted to be able to provide electrical energy for the citizens of our province at cost. As I have pointed out, prior to that time the cost of electrical energy in that province was prohibitive. There were many appliances we wished to have in our homes but which we just could not have on account of the cost of energy.

That same government, namely the Liberal government, went ahead with plans for a much larger development at Grand Falls, which is well known to the Liberal members of this house here. There is no doubt in my mind that Grand Falls was the greatest water development in the maritime provinces. Arrangements and agreements had been completed with the province of Quebec and the state of Maine for storage facilities away back in 1925. With those storage facilities we could have produced 300,000 horsepower at Grand Falls, much more power than is being developed at Beechwood.

Tenders had been called to go ahead with the work prior to the election of 1925. When the election came the Liberal government was defeated, and the late J. B. M. Baxter formed a Tory government in our province. What happened? He immediately withdrew those tenders that had been called, and sold our birthright at Grand Falls to the Gatineau Power Company.

Mr. Brooks: That is just nonsense, and you know it.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): My hon. friend who says that is just nonsense was a member of the government when this was done. If Beechwood is such a wonderful idea for New Brunswick today, why was not Grand Falls in 1925?

Mr. Brooks: The only large industry we have had in New Brunswick came as a result of Grand Falls.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I did not intend to get rough here today, but if there is too much interruption there are a good many things I can put on the record in connection with Beechwood that I think my hon. friends do not want me to put on.

Mr. Brooks: Go ahead.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): If I am needled I will put them on the record. The hon. gentleman who interrupted me was a member of the government of New Brunswick in 1925 when they sold our birthright which would have provided twice the power that we can ever hope to get from Beechwood. It could have been developed then for $10 million. That was the estimated cost at that time, $10 million for 300,000 horsepower. But our Tory premier, the late J. B. M. Baxter, sold it to the Gatineau Power Company. We had no development in the way of power during the time the Conservative government was in power. No effort was made to develop power. In 1935 we changed that government, and from that time until 1952 there was a great improvement.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): What a joke.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Let me tell my friend the hon. member for Saint John-Albert that his friends who have supported him over the years in Saint John took every ounce they could take out of the Saint John people for years and years in the cost of electricity, until the Liberal government took over the provision of electrical energy to the city of Saint John. If he does not know that I can tell him now. I could give him the names of those who for years bled the people of his own city blind and dry with the cost of electrical energy. It was a Liberal government that took over in Saint John city to get the people from underneath that load.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, may I say that the facilities in Saint John city are owned by the Saint John civic hydro commission, which has no connection whatsoever with the provincial government.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I do not question that; but until the New Brunswick hydro electric commission took over, their rates remained up in Saint John.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Just a moment ago you said the Liberal government took over the facilities in Saint John.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): They set the rate. You were being robbed and they set the rate for you, which is a well known fact all over the province of New Brunswick.

There has been one problem for all Liberal members from New Brunswick in this house. They have been accused of being greatly opposed to the Beechwood project. I have expressed my views on other occasions, and I hope to be able to express them here today. There is a misunderstanding so far as the difference of opinion is concerned. I am going right back now to 1952, which was the year the government of New Brunswick was changed and Hon. Hugh John Flemming became premier. In the budget debate of that year just prior to the election Hon. J. B. M. Baxter had this to say and I want to put this on the record to show to what degree the Liberals in New Brunswick have always felt that storage rights meant a great deal to this development on the Saint John river. This is our friend Premier McNair—

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Excuse me again, but the hon. member just said that J. B. M. Baxter said something in 1952 and he died in 1946.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I did not say anything of the kind. I said that in 1926 he sold our birthright.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Many Tories speak after they are dead.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): It was in 1926 that Baxter sold our birthright. If I made any mistakes about the date I will correct it now. Speaking in the budget debate in 1952, this is what J. B. McNair had to say.

An hon. Member: One o'clock.

Mr. Cardiff: The hon. member will speak better on a full stomach.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I do not know about a full stomach, but if my hon. friend would sit and listen and not to try to apply Tory closure we might get on with this debate in an orderly way.

Mr. Cardiff: I was not trying to apply closure.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): This Tory closure does not affect me. I am going to say what I want to say whether you like it or not. You might as well sit still and take it as sit there yakking for an hour or an hour and a half.

An hon. Member: One o'clock.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): May I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, in speaking before one o'clock there were two statements I made which were, I know, believed to be incorrect by two hon. members sitting on the other side of the house. I referred to the New Brunswick hydroelectric power commission taking over the electrical system in Saint John city. I have checked since I left the chamber at one o'clock, and I find that the New Brunswick electric power commission did take over what is known as the New Brunswick power company, the producing company in Saint John, and today only that producing company distributes power. It is owned and controlled by the New Brunswick electrical power commission.

I also stated that between 1930 and 1935 no improvements had been made in the way of power development in New Brunswick. I find that during that period one plant was built at Minto, New Brunswick in 1933, and I also find that the highest cost power produced in New Brunswick comes from that plant. The latest figure I have is 22 mills.

I stated earlier today that those who sit on this side of the house and who come from New Brunswick have always maintained and still maintain that Beechwood would never provide a stable source of power until storage rights had been secured. This stand that has been taken over the years was based on information which we were able to obtain from those who were qualified to give it. I know the former premier of New Brunswick was very very much convinced that storage rights were necessary. One of the main sources of information we have had in New Brunswick was the late Gaspard Boucher, who was at one time chairman of the hydro company. He gave me these same views; and in order that there may be no misunderstanding I should like to put on the record a statement made in the budget debate in the provincial legislature at Fredericton in 1952, just previous to the provincial election of that year. In speaking in that debate Hon. J. B. McNair had this to say:

> It was upwards of six years ago that fresh studies were launched to determine the power potential of the Saint John river. These were initiated through the New Brunswick resources development board. As a result of its work we early became convinced that, in addition to others the merits of which have long been considered debateable, there are two potential sites capable of economic development. These are the sites at Morrill and just above Beechwood enumerated in this house by my friend opposite a few weeks ago.
>
> Our studies have been predicated upon the assumption that storage is vital to any development. We know too, as he said in his speech, that sections of the river constituting boundary waters as well as tributaries, outside this province would be involved. We have also been aware that heavy expenditures would be involved in any development program.
>
> It seemed to us necessary to enlist interest and support elsewhere if any plans were to be developed for the effective harnessing of the power of the Saint John river system.
>
> . . . On December 8, 1948, I wrote the Prime Minister of Canada requesting the co-operation of the Canadian government and that steps be taken to refer to the international joint commission the study of the power potential of the Saint John river system and means to make it effective. I feel it desirable that this letter should also be read into the records of this house. It is as follows:

Then here is the letter sent by Hon. J. B. McNair to the Prime Minister of Canada at that time.

In New Brunswick as elsewhere in Canada the demand for electric energy is increasing at an unprecedented rate. For some years efforts have been made by our publicly owned electric power commission to meet the needs in this province by additions to its coal steam generating system and in certain areas by the temporary and costly expedient of installing diesel units to meet pressing local shortages of supply. During the past few years certain surveys and studies of sites where hydro-electric energy might be economically produced, have been carried on. In these we have had the assistance of such engineering firms of the Power Corporation of Canada and H. G. Acres and Company.

During these investigations consideration has been given to further hydro-electric development on the Saint John river, the largest of the rivers of the maritime provinces. As you may know, about 20 years ago a hydro-electric plant was established at Grand Falls which is presently owned and operated by the Gatineau Power Company. Apart from this there are other sites, possibly three, farther down the river which may lend themselves to development. One of them is now receiving intensive study and appears very promising. However, any such development is rendered problematical due to lack of storage and regulation of flow, factors very material to steady energy production throughout the year.

The history of the Grand Falls plant, which primarily supplies the newsprint mill of the International Paper Company at Dalhousie, has shown a drop during the winter season from its designed and installed capacity of 80,000 H.P. to an output of 20,000 H.P. or less. Any new installation on the river would be subject to similar winter and late summer or early autumn fluctuations in production.

The solution of this problem lies in the provision of storage in the headwaters of the Saint John river. These lie chiefly in the state of Maine and in the province of Quebec. Available statistics show that the drainage area of the Saint John river above Grand Falls is about equally divided between Maine and Quebec with approximately 4,500 square miles in each jurisdiction.

It was of interest to us to note that the newly reorganized international joint commission is now giving study to various boundary water questions. It would seem that the time is opportune to seek its assistance and intervention in connection with the hydro-electric potential of the Saint John river. It is obvious that apart from other possibilities there is storage of considerable magnitude available on the St. Francis river, one of its tributaries. This river rises in Quebec and for a portion of its course forms the boundary between Maine and Quebec and then becomes the boundary between Maine and New Brunswick. In these boundary waters are to be found three lakes known as Glasier, Cross and Beau lakes which constitute wide stretches in the river which should lend themselves to storage works and if developed would afford most helpful storage during periods of low water supply for any present or future development on the Saint John river. It clearly falls within the jurisdiction of the international joint commission.

In every part of that speech made in the budget debate by Hon. John B. McNair he outlined in every detail the absolute necessity of storage rights on the St. John river before stable power could ever be produced. That was the attitude that was taken 20 years ago, and it is the attitude that is taken today. Nevertheless it was decided by the provincial government of New Brunswick to go ahead with that project without storage rights.

To confirm the ideas that have been expressed by Liberal members of this house I should now like to put on the record a statement by one who is very closely connected with the New Brunswick power commission, Dr. Rowley. In his 1955 report which was published and put out by the provincial government of New Brunswick, Dr. Rowley, director of the research branch of the New Brunswick resources development board, had this to say:

Until large water storages are constructed in the upper reaches of the Saint John river watershed in Maine and Quebec, such firm or continuous power will not be available from sites that might be developed on the main river. With ample water flowing, as during the spring run-offs and with rainy autumn periods, Beechwood will afford periods of firmness in supply. The smaller winter and summer flows will afford energy for some hours each day only to care for peaks when system demand is high. Consequently new sources of continuous power must be afforded and these are most likely to be steam plants burning that fuel which will most effectively yield power at the lowest cost.

No stronger support could be given to the stand taken by Mr. J. B. McNair in New Brunswick than that statement by Dr. Rowley. I have been convinced for many years that Beechwood would never be economically sound, would never provide stable and dependable power, until those storage rights had been secured, and I believe that idea has today taken form in the minds of many people in New Brunswick. It is for that reason that on many occasions when I have spoken on this matter I have been accused of opposition for political reasons. But that would not greatly affect the people in my province, because they know that the whole issue has been shrouded in politics for years and years.

It was the belief of many people in New Brunswick that this development should never have been taken out of its international setting; that we should have gone ahead by obtaining those storage rights, and in that way we could have been supplied with dependable power from Beechwood. You must have dependable power before you can interest those who might come to the area and establish industries. You cannot attract industry when you have low power during one part of the year and high power at another period.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to get on to the submission made to the government in 1953 by the premier of our province, and I am going to quote his own words. They are as follows:

> The cost of power from the Beechwood site would, of course, be determined by the rate at which the capital to construct the hydro power installation could be borrowed. If the province were forced to borrow at the present market rate of approximately 5 per cent, the estimated cost of delivered energy in mills per k.w.h. would be 6.92.

Mr. Fleming: Would the hon. member tell us the date of that letter?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The date of this letter is April, 1953.

> However, if the commission could borrow the capital funds from the federal government at 2½ per cent, the estimated cost would only be 4.76 mills per k.w.h. If the federal government would advance the funds, free of interest, the estimated cost would be driven down to 2.61 mills per k.w.h.

Mr. Lesage: That is three units, not two.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Three units. In the final detailed proposals to the federal government the following appears in a paragraph over the premier's signature:

> In view of the above, it is requested that the government of Canada agree to advance to the province of New Brunswick as the work progresses, sufficient funds, interest-free, to permit the development of the Saint John river basin with repayments at the rate of one and one-half per cent per year, starting one year after each unit of plant goes into operation. If an interest-free loan is not possible, it is requested that the advances be interest-free during construction and bear interest at a rate not exceeding 2½ per cent per annum thereafter.

The amount that was requested of the federal government at that time was not $30 million but $44.5 million. This proposal was given serious consideration by the government at Ottawa at that time, and I wish to assure all hon. members in this committee that the Liberal members from New Brunswick discussed the matter on every occasion which was provided to discuss it.

The federal government was not prepared at that time to extend interest free money to the province of New Brunswick, realizing that once this was done the same service had to be provided for all the other provinces; you cannot provide interest free money for one province without providing it for all. But I do believe the premier of our province was told at that time that in the view of the government Beechwood was not beyond the financial capacity of the province, and that once it had been completed, if there were further developments required the federal government would be prepared to consider financial assistance. That remark, I realize, was given very little publicity.

It is a fact that our premier has stated that to borrow at the rate of 5 per cent would make Beechwood practically prohibitive in so far as cost is concerned. Those are his own words. He said it would cost 6.92 mills per kilowatt hour at 5 per cent. With the arrangements we now have, or will have, with this federal government to lend $30 million at 4⅜ per cent or thereabouts, I fail to understand how any one can argue that there could be any great difference in the cost of power, taking an interest rate of 5 per cent into consideration as opposed to an interest of 4⅜ per cent. As far as I can see there would be very little difference in the cost of power.

At the same time we all know we were promised cheap power in New Brunswick from Beechwood; we were assured that it was not practical to develop the project with an interest rate of 5 per cent on the loan, that it would be beyond a reasonable cost. Why then are the premier of New Brunswick and the Conservative members so very jubilant today over the fact that we are in a position to borrow money at 4⅜ per cent? I just cannot understand it, because an interest of 4⅜ per cent certainly will not give us cheap power in the province of New Brunswick.

I have listened to many discussions on this question. Our premier has given it a lot of publicity over the radio, on television and in the press, showing what a wonderful plan has been submitted by the federal government. At the same time this is directly contrary to anything he suggested to the former Liberal government, because what he asked of the former Liberal government was interest free money; he never asked for a loan of 5 per cent or 4⅜ per cent. He asked for an interest free loan; and not only that, but for a period of 66 years in which to repay, whereas under this arrangement he has eight years in which to repay the loan at a rate of $750,000 a year, or a total interest cost of $6 million.

I might add that to me an interest rate of 4⅜ per cent seems practically prohibitive in so far as power is concerned, and when all the rejoicing which has taken place in connection with this great piece of business is over I think this will be more widely realized. I draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to a loan which was made only a few weeks ago in western Canada, a loan that was interest free. If this government really want to do something for New Brunswick why can they not provide interest free money for power development in that province as well as for some other purpose in some other part of Canada? It would seem to me as if discrimination was being shown.

Beechwood Power Project Loan

I realize at the same time that many people in our province would not know the story in connection with the suggestions that have been made regarding power development in New Brunswick. But these are facts; what I have put on the record is a statement made to this government by the premier of New Brunswick, and at no time can I find any record or any suggestion of his wishing to borrow money at 4⅜ per cent or 5 per cent.

It comes back to what I said in my opening remarks on this matter; that hydro expansion in the province has developed into a political football, and nothing else. Since 1952 I would say this project has been shrouded in deception, uncertainty and political manoeuvring.

That is my opinion. Back in 1953 the citizens of our province were assured by our premier that the development of Beechwood would immediately bring several new industries to our province. These industries were said to be ready to establish branches in New Brunswick just as soon as the power could be provided. We were told that over the radio, over television and in the press. Beechwood would be the answer to the processing of our metals in the Bathurst area and other parts of the province; and our premier emphasized on every occasion the fact that what was required to induce industry was cheap power. Beechwood, he said, would provide the cheap power which was the answer to all our power problems.

I would just like to run over again the figures of the proposal made to the federal government in 1953. It was either interest free money or money at 2½ per cent. I repeat that under the premier's proposal to the federal government he requested 66 years instead of eight years in which to make the repayment. The proposal now before us provides for a loan of not more than $30 million at 4⅜ per cent interest, and eight years for repayment. Again I want to put the interest rate on the record. Six million dollars in eight years when broken down represents an annual interest of $750,000 on the loan.

According to our premier's own reasoning, Beechwood will never provide cheap power under those conditions. Beechwood will not bring industry to our province because it cannot provide cheap power; and now the premier's own engineers admit that Beechwood will never be a source of cheap energy until storage rights have been secured. Without storage rights there will always be a great fluctuation or variation in the power potential.

If an interest rate of 5 per cent was prohibitive in 1953 in so far as cheap power was concerned, it is evident that a rate of 4⅜ per cent is an insignificant improvement. The cost of power to the citizens of our province cannot be reduced as a result of Beechwood. There will be no improvement in this regard, which is most disappointing to all those who expected and were promised substantial relief in the cost of electrical energy once Beechwood was completed.

During the recent election campaign the Prime Minister, the premier of New Brunswick and Tory candidates in all parts of our province assured our good citizens that if a Conservative government was formed after the election it would immediately adopt the plan as set out by Premier Flemming for interest-free money for the Beechwood project, which would no doubt have cut the cost of power to a great extent.

These promises were made in the latter part of the campaign. At the time the date of the election was announced our premier suggested to the leader of the opposition in New Brunswick and to other Liberals that the question of power development in New Brunswick should not be mentioned or become an election issue in the election campaign. He gave his solemn promise that he would avoid any mention of this most important issue which means so much to the economy of New Brunswick. But the campaign had been under way only a very short time when the premier of our province made a statement on this very subject in Moncton. This was followed up by a statement in Fredericton which was picked up by the press and carried all over the province.

I wish to emphasize that when the premier of New Brunswick approached the federal government for this assistance in 1953 he could have obtained the money for less than 4⅜ per cent if he had followed the advice given to him at that time. Only a few days ago I noticed an article in a Nova Scotia newspaper to the effect that the government had arranged a loan of $8 million at a total cost to the province of 4.786 per cent, or something under 5 per cent. However, I can readily appreciate that the province of Nova Scotia would have some advantages over the province of New Brunswick in that regard, because they have had a Conservative government there for only a year and a half or so which would be of some assistance in this connection.

Basing my closing remarks on the information I have been able to obtain in my own province, I say in all sincerity that desirable as it may be to have this essential service under public ownership it has many misgivings. There are many examples of misdirected effort on the part of the New Brunswick power commission that I could bring to the attention of this committee if I had sufficient time. In the extension of this service the first thought should have been the greatest benefit to the greatest number of people.

That has not been the case, however. The governing factor in making the decision was which extension will bring the greatest number of votes in support of the government. That has been the governing factor in every case. We experienced exactly the same thing only a few months ago when the Liberal government made its power proposal to the province of New Brunswick.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am obliged to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, now that the hon. member has completed his remarks I wonder if I may be permitted to place on the record the final qualification paragraph that the Minister of Veterans Affairs also interjected into the speech of the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the hon. member's intention to make a speech now?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Well, we are in committee, Mr. Chairman, and I merely wish to place this on the record to achieve continuity.

The Deputy Chairman: I appreciate the hon. gentleman's remarks, but on the other hand arrangements have been made under which someone else has the floor at the present time. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman should wait and do this later, if it would meet the same purpose.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I understood, Mr. Chairman, that it was customary not to interrupt the speech of an hon. member but that following his speech a correction could be pointed out. I feel it is quite important that it be done at this time in order to provide continuity in Hansard.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the hon. gentleman wish to ask a question?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Yes, Mr. Chairman. May I ask the hon. member for Charlotte if he is not aware that following these four proposals made to the federal government by Premier Flemming of New Brunswick he also put in a qualifying paragraph which reads:

The above—

—proposals—

—have been set down as a basis for discussion only. Of course we will be glad to consider financial assistance in any form deemed possible by your government.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Well, Mr. Chairman, I believe that provides an opportunity for me to finish my remarks, since I am on my feet.

Mr. MacInnis: You had to have it pointed out to you. Someone else gave you an assist on that one.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I have not seen that correspondence, and I do not believe it was in the brief submitted to the federal government. I believe it is contained in a letter.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Is the hon. member not aware that these records were tabled in this house?

Mr. Lesage: What is the date of the letter?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Is he not aware that sessional paper No. 219 would uncover that whole matter; and if he was speaking with authority on this subject, as he purported to have done, would he not agree that he should read all the correspondence and the complete record?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, let me say to the hon. member in reply to the question he has asked that even if I had read the letter it would not change the picture one iota, because our premier has stated definitely that money at 5 per cent interest makes Beechwood prohibitive. The hon. member has not answered the question at all. If a loan at 5 per cent interest makes Beechwood prohibitive, surely a loan at 4⅜ per cent interest is not any great improvement. Even if the Liberal government had offered a loan at 4⅜ per cent interest it would not have satisfied the people of New Brunswick, although it may have satisfied the premier of that province.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the hon. gentlemen have now had enough extra time on this point.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): With all due deference, Mr. Chairman, I believe that once a question has been asked I can assume the floor again and speak for another half hour in committee.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member has already spoken for half an hour.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I believe that in committee I am entitled to speak for another half hour, though it would not take me that long.

Beechwood Power Project Loan

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member may do that if he wishes, but he has already spoken for half an hour and it is not fair to the other hon. members.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): That is perfectly all right with me. I can take another half hour later.

Mr. MacInnis: If you have enough material.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I may tell my hon. friend that I do not need any material of his. I do not need any material of yours; and any time you think you would like to have an opportunity for you and me to debate it either inside or outside of this house just let me know and I am ready to proceed; yes, any time. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that the hon. gentleman and I—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman:. Order. I recognize the hon. member for York-Sunbury.

Mr. MacRae: In rising to speak in support of this resolution, Mr. Chairman, I wish to express the gratitude of the people of my constituency for a measure which has been hailed not only in the constituency of York-Sunbury but throughout the whole province of New Brunswick. I have no doubt that when the speech from the throne was read by Her Majesty on October 14 and Beechwood was mentioned, there were many people listening to whom Beechwood was only a name. There are those who think of Beechwood only as a hydroelectric development on the Saint John river 100 miles or so above the capital city of Fredericton, but Beechwood is a great deal more than that. Beechwood is a symbol, an example of the courageous determination of the people of New Brunswick to improve their lot, to improve their standard of living.

A few days ago I was reading a volume on our Atlantic provinces. The harsh first sentence in the chapter on my province was in these words:

> New Brunswick is a poverty-stricken land which occasionally sprouts a millionaire.

Those are the words of the author, Mr. Chairman, not mine. New Brunswick was not always a poverty-stricken land. When New Brunswick joined with Nova Scotia and Upper and Lower Canada to form this great nation, it was anything but poverty-stricken. Its lumber was shipped all over the world. Saint John was the second largest shipbuilding port in the world. It traded heavily with the New England states, the West Indies and Europe. As the result of the federal union we lost the valuable United States trade, trade which was never regained.

Since that time the maritimes have fallen behind the rest of Canada economically. But because we have lagged economically does not mean that we have failed to make our full contribution to over-all Canadian development in other ways. The contribution of our people in the wars of this century speaks for itself. Our men and women have gone to every province of the dominion and every nation in the world to enrich them. One need only remember men like Bonar Law, at one time prime minister of Great Britain, Richard Bedford Bennett, Lord Beaverbrook, Sir James Dunn, the scores of jurists, the university presidents, the leaders of the church, the leaders of finance, who left the province of New Brunswick and made their mark elsewhere because there just was not the opportunity at home for them. This state of economic stagnation continued until September of 1952, when a government took office in New Brunswick that was determined to do something about it.

In this day of mechanization cheap electric power is one of the keys to prosperity. New Brunswick does not have a great deal of hydro power potential. There are perhaps less than half a dozen good sites for development, but one of these is at Beechwood on the Saint John river. Here low cost hydroelectric power could be developed. Studies began as early as 1945 with regard to this particular site. Negotiations were conducted by the provincial authorities with the international joint commission and in April, 1953, their report was presented stressing that power could be developed cheaply at Beechwood, more cheaply than by thermal plants. The cost, as it turned out in the final analysis, was less than $30 million for 90,000 horsepower, with an additional 45,000 horsepower available when needed at a cost of approximately $2½ million.

The government of New Brunswick approved the project and asked Ottawa for help several times over a two-year period. No help was given. At one time we were told by Ottawa that Beechwood was so sound a project that help was unnecessary. Another time we were told that the project was not economically feasible. Finally Hugh John Flemming and his Conservative government in New Brunswick decided to go ahead on their own, the boldest, most courageous step in the financial history of that province. Work on Beechwood officially began on June 11, 1955, a tremendous task for a province of only a little more than half a million people.

Today the great power plant at Beechwood is almost finished, and part of it is now operating on a test basis. Power is flowing to turn the wheels of industry so vitally needed in

New Brunswick; power to smelt our mineral resources, said to be one of the greatest finds on the North American continent; power to turn the wheels of the industries we can now attract; power for a better life for our people. Beechwood is one of the greatest things that has ever happened to New Brunswick, and the legislation we are discussing today involving a loan to be paid back over an eight-year period is legislation which the people of New Brunswick and all of Canada will acclaim.

Remember, sir, that this is a loan, not a gift. The previous government could easily have done this and should have done so but did not. The right hon. gentleman who is now the Prime Minister of Canada has kept the promise he made to the people of my province before June 10 and has kept it generously and quickly. In the words of the great Conservative premier of New Brunswick, "This is an unmatched record in Canadian politics, any time, anywhere."

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, the resolution before us now has to do with a measure to authorize a loan out of the consolidated revenue fund to the government of New Brunswick, not exceeding $30 million, to cover the full cost of construction of the Beechwood plant. The terms of the loan have been outlined by the Minister of Finance this morning, and the loan is to bear interest of 4⅜ per cent or the current rate of interest of long-term Canadian loans at the time the loan will be made on April 1, and is to be repayable in a period of eight years.

The Canadian people were first informed of the government's decision in this connection when in the speech from the throne the following words were spoken by Her Gracious Majesty the Queen:

> You will also be asked to provide assistance in financing the Beechwood project which has been under construction in New Brunswick.

An hon. Member: What are you reading from?

Mr. Robichaud: I am quoting from the Christmas card circulated by the premier of New Brunswick bearing those words, being an excerpt from the speech from the throne read by Her Majesty the Queen at the opening of parliament in Ottawa on October 14, 1957. The same words are to be found at page 6 of Hansard for that date. It is no wonder, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for York-Sunbury, when speaking before me, said that before the present government took office Beechwood was only a name but now it is a symbol. No true Canadian ever thought that Beechwood would be used by the premier of New Brunswick, together with the very words of Her Majesty the Queen, on a Christmas card for political purposes.

Mr. Montgomery: I rise on a point of order. I think it is unbecoming for a member of this house to state that anybody has used these words for political purposes on a Christmas card.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, it may be more unbecoming for the premier of a province to use such words on a Christmas card.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to standing order 35, which reads as follows:

> No member shall speak disrespectfully of Her Majesty, nor of any of the royal family, nor His Excellency or the person administering the government of Canada; nor use offensive words against either house, or against any member thereof. No member may reflect upon any vote of the house, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

I think it is quite clear that according to the second last sentence of that paragraph, the hon. gentleman is not strictly in order.

Mr. Robichaud: On the point of order—

Mr. Lesage: On the point of order, may I submit very respectfully that what the hon. member for Gloucester did was to say that the premier of a province had used a picture and words of Her Majesty for political purposes. It was an accusation against the premier of a province, and I respectfully submit that it had nothing to do with standing order 35.

The Deputy Chairman: It is an accusation in which the name of the Queen is mentioned, and that cannot be done. No member can use the name of the Queen in debate in the House of Commons.

Mr. Lesage: On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Gloucester was saying that somebody had used the name of Her Majesty in vain.

Mr. Robichaud: Now that the point of order has been cleared up, I hope I can carry on.

Mr. Fraser: You should apologize.

An hon. Member: To whom?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, if hon. members want to bring up the question again, I have made reference to the words that were used, and at no time have I made any accusation or reference which was not respectful to Her Majesty the Queen.

Mr. Lesage: Quite the contrary.

Beechwood Power Project Loan

Mr. Robichaud: In a statement issued to the press two days later Premier Hugh John Flemming said:

> It has been a moving experience to represent New Brunswick in Ottawa during the opening of parliament by Her Majesty, and to hear set forth in the speech from the throne the promise of Her Majesty's government of Canada to assist the Beechwood development and to make further provision for the generation of lower cost power in the Atlantic area.

Further on he makes reference to this generous promise in the speech from the throne, and concludes his statement by saying:

> Altogether, the speech from the throne contained news of great and hopeful significance for every man, woman and child in this province.

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that on the government side of the house there is some confusion about the present status of the Beechwood project. This morning, in an interjection, the Minister of Veterans Affairs said that Beechwood had been in operation for three weeks. Amongst the sessional papers which were tabled on January 3 there is a letter dated October 21, 1957 from the Prime Minister of Canada to Hon. Hugh John Flemming, premier of New Brunswick. This letter reads as follows:

> My dear Premier:
>
> I wish to send you my congratulations and best wishes on the occasion of the formal opening of the Beechwood hydro development project next Thursday, October 24.

Now, whom are we to believe? This is in a sessional paper which was produced on January 3, amongst all those letters of congratulations from the Prime Minister and other ministers of the cabinet; but the real document which was requested, the proposal of the federal government to the province of New Brunswick, was not tabled.

It is my intention this afternoon to review briefly some of the incidents and discussions relating to federal assistance to electric power development in New Brunswick, leading to this so-called generous reference of such hopeful significance. The interim report of the international joint commission of the United States and Canada on the water resources of the Saint John river basin involving Quebec, Maine and New Brunswick, released on January 27, 1954, included, in conjunction with the Beechwood project on the Saint John river, provision for a 500,000 to 600,000 acre feet reserve storage at sites upstream from Grand Falls, New Brunswick. This would have made possible the prospective increase in normal power demand through 1961, with thermal plants to meet the requirements of extraordinary demands such as may be required by mineral developments in northern New Brunswick. We all recognize that thermal expansion would be less economical than storage; nevertheless it appears to be the only alternative if storage is not made available in order to increase the total output of the present Beechwood installation by the addition of a third 45,000 horsepower unit, or even to assure the potential electrical output of the present units.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I may refer to the words of the premier of New Brunswick himself when addressing the New Brunswick legislative assembly on April 14, 1954. He said, and I quote his own words:

> All this information has gone to show that the outstanding question in regard to power development is the amount of financial assistance which could be secured by the province in developing the Saint John river. It has already been announced by the hon. chairman—

That is the chairman of the New Brunswick hydro commission.

> —that the province, on its own behalf, can and will begin the initial development at Beechwood. However, the great storage projects will require assistance when they are undertaken—assistance which can only come from one source.

In view of these words by the premier of New Brunswick himself I am wondering how the members on the government side can protest the attitude of the previous government on this matter.

We should deduce from this statement by the premier of New Brunswick that the province, on its own behalf, could proceed and decided to proceed with the initial development of Beechwood. The premier stated at the time, and this was less than four years ago, that where assistance was required and where it was expected was for the acquisition and construction of the great storage projects which were needed in order to make the Beechwood operation effective and economical.

In view of this statement by the premier of New Brunswick, and in view of the decision, according to this statement, to proceed with the initial stage of the Beechwood project, which in fact has been now practically completed and is in operation, it is clear that the previous federal government had taken very important decisions concerning this vital question. On January 26, 1956, as reported on page 558 of Hansard for that date, I received a reply from the then minister of northern affairs and national resources which reads in part as follows:

> All the way along there has been a constant exchange of views among provincial and federal technical and financial officials. These discussions appeared to indicate that the development to the end of the Beechwood phase could be carried out by the province of New Brunswick without jeopardizing its credit. It appears, however, that future developments in the province are likely to require additional power on a substantial scale.

This larger future development has been represented to the federal government as likely to be beyond the capacity of the province of New Brunswick to finance on its own.

The previous government was prepared to recognize that the larger future development of the Saint John river was beyond the capacity of New Brunswick to finance on its own, and also to take into consideration the admission by the premier of New Brunswick himself that the present phase of the project, the one which we are discussing today, could be undertaken by the province on its own.

In his budget presentation on March 14 last the former minister of finance outlined a proposal which was offered to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and which has been referred to by those who have preceded me in this debate. In concluding his remarks the minister stated that notwithstanding his offer, the relatively high cost of electrical power in the Atlantic region as a whole would continue to receive further careful study.

The latest available report on this important subject is the report on the power supply of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, made for the Northern Canada Power Commission by the Montreal Engineering Company Limited, which was finally tabled in this house a few weeks ago by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. On page 8 of this report we find this:

The two hydro units now being installed in the Beechwood plant, can be used to good advantage for supplying peak power and secondary energy. Unless storage is developed in the United States or Quebec, the water supply will be inadequate to justify the installation of a third unit in the period under review.

On this very subject of water storage, a day or two ago I came across a statement made by Mr. H. J. Rowley, director of the research board and chairman of the New Brunswick development board, which was included in his 1955 report to the department of industry and development of his province. I feel that this statement by Dr. Rowley, which was quoted in full a few minutes ago by my colleague the hon. member for Charlotte, has a direct bearing on the motion which is now under consideration by this committee. Here is a statement by an expert in this field. Here is a straightforward report which reveals without any doubt that water storage facilities are essential to the economic development or operation of the Beechwood project.

From the statements I have just placed on the record it is obvious that the government would have been well advised to advance money to provide water storage facilities which are essential to the economical operation of Beechwood, rather than share in financing a project which is already completed and in fact partially in operation. If this is a general policy to be adopted by the government the minister should advise the house accordingly.

Personally I would have preferred to see the government advance money for the storage facilities, which would have contributed to making the Beechwood project not only economically sound but would at the same time have provided employment which is so urgently needed in New Brunswick today. In fact, had the province of New Brunswick financed the project in 1954, when the premier announced that the province could and would proceed on its own with the construction of Beechwood, when loans could be obtained at an interest rate of 3½ per cent to 3¾ per cent, the ratepayers of the province of New Brunswick would have been saved from $250,000 to $300,000 a year in interest alone.

In making his announcement, on November 14 last, part of which I referred to earlier, the Prime Minister stated that the Beechwood plant would provide a substantial block of relatively low cost power. Has the minister today given any indication of the cost of this relatively low cost power for which a loan is asked? Has the Prime Minister, when he made his announcement on November 14 last, or the Minister of Finance when introducing the resolution we are now discussing, given any assurance to this house that relatively low cost power could be produced if this loan were approved?

In the same address to the provincial legislature which I mentioned earlier, on April 14, 1954, the premier of New Brunswick said:

The Conservative party has been the strongest advocate of the storage scheme during recent years.

If they are so strong an advocate of the storage scheme, why are they not asking for the co-operation of the federal government to take care of the 500,000 or 600,000 acre feet storage required to make Beechwood economically sound, and the only way to provide the relatively low cost power which New Brunswick industries are asking for? The construction of storage facilities at this time, when unemployment in New Brunswick has reached an all-time high, would provide work for a large number of our unemployed.

Where is today the news of great and hopeful significance for every man, woman and child in New Brunswick? Is it to be found in the recent curbing actions by the United States government or in the further restrictions which can be expected following the bold and arrogant attitude of the present government? Is it to be found in the ever-increasing unemployment which is spreading through New Brunswick and through all Canada today?

The people of Bathurst and of Gloucester county have been seriously shocked by the recent announcement of the curtailment of operations by Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation. There is a possibility that lead and zinc are next on the list to be affected by United States import curtailment. Is it not significant that over six months after taking office the present government have not produced a single official note of protest, a single official document having to do with representations to the United States government, asking for postponement of such curbing actions toward imports from a neighbouring and friendly country? No one in New Brunswick, particularly in Gloucester county, can disregard the serious blow to our people and to our economy that will follow the curtailment of mining operations in the Bathurst area.

For the last four years our merchants, our industries and our people had geared and planned their activities on developments which had given new hopes to our depressed areas and which had promised a revolution in our general economy. Investments were made accordingly. New constructions were started, some of which are now completed. New accommodations were provided and Bathurst, conscious of its responsibility, was looking ahead to a future of achievement in material things, of progress in civic affairs, ready to take full advantage of its human resources as well as its new natural resources.

If the present government was prepared to take action to keep in operation the Britannia mines in British Columbia, and if the present government is consistent in its policy to help the Atlantic provinces, why is it not taking action to keep in operation the mining developments in northern New Brunswick? I will have more to say on this subject on resolution No. 11, having to do with assistance in the generation of electrical energy by thermal power projects for the Atlantic provinces.

When normal amortization periods on power plants built by the Northern Canada Power Commission are based on a long term amortization period of 30 years, why is the loan now granted to New Brunswick for the Beechwood project limited to an eight year repayment period? It is only logical to assume that the province of New Brunswick with its declining revenues mainly in the last few months, will not be in a position to repay this loan on the basis of $4 million per year.

In other words, if New Brunswick wants to meet its obligations under this particular loan it may have to borrow at a higher rate of interest. Before this bill is presented the minister should consider very seriously extending the amortization period to conform with the policy in regard to northern power development.

In concluding I wish to quote a brief paragraph from the Atlantic Advocate, a magazine from the maritime provinces which I am sure, through its editor and publisher, is well known to the members on the government side of the house. Before doing so, however, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the Atlantic Advocate, which won high honour by receiving the annual award of the Canadian tourist association's historical and cultural committee. This, and the public references in speeches and newspapers that followed, have combined to make the first year-end of publishing a happy and rewarding climax. Under the title "Looking a Gift Horse in the Mouth" the editor of the Atlantic Advocate has the following words to say:

> For it is a natural and proper reluctance that causes hesitancy to look a gift horse in the mouth. Ingratitude is one of the baser qualities. Yet, whilst we are glad to get acceptance of the principle of adjustment grants to poorer provinces, and grateful for the thermal units, the coal subsidy that goes with them, the grid, and the financing of Beechwood, we must admit to disappointment that the coal subsidy, limited as it is to $1,600,000, will not be sufficient to remove the differential between power prices in the Atlantic area and elsewhere; and the federal financing of Beechwood with interest at 4⅛ per cent and repayment spread over eight years is not the low interest long term financing the province looked for.

Mr. Herridge: In view of the fact that on two occasions the present hon. member for Cape Breton South has clearly indicated to this house that he would prefer to settle issues by fisticuffs outside of the house rather than by exhibiting his ability to debate issues inside the house, I suggest that he model his conduct on that of the former member for Cape Breton South who, I think I am safe in saying, had the respect of his colleagues in this house, whose ability was recognized by members of all parties, who on all occasions respected the highest and best traditions of parliamentary procedure, and who always aimed to achieve his ends in strictly Canadian and constitutional ways. In all kindness to the young member I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that in order to become thoroughly housebroken to the days ahead he read very carefully the speeches his predecessor made from 1942 until the dissolution of parliament this year.

This group has remained silent on this resolution to date, Mr. Chairman, because it is quite content to sit here and glow with pride and satisfaction in the knowledge that this government is following the procedure of the former Liberal government in adopting as policy some segments of C.C.F. policy that have been advocated in this house for many years.

In this resolution the present government is adopting the policy that has been urged by members of this group for many years; that is for a federal government to render financial assistance to a provincial government for the development of hydro resources under public ownership. We are very pleased to see this and we realize it is further evidence—and it happens from day to day—that even governments learn from this little and valiant group on this side of the house, that our policies are substantially sound and that we are effective out of all proportion to our numbers at the present time. I hope the people of Canada in general will recognize these facts at the next election.

I have taken a great deal of interest in the development of hydro resources and in deference to the expressed wishes of the Minister of Finance I am going to defer my remarks with respect to the validity of public ownership for the next resolution, because I do not want to stir him up at this time. I do want to put on record, however, the report which General McNaughton made to the external affairs committee with respect to the Saint John river development of which I understand the Beechwood development is an important part, because I think the member for Charlotte was rather critical of that development. I have the report given by General McNaughton to the external affairs committee, but there were certain questions asked and we do not have a printed copy of the record at this time. I propose now to read from the report on the Saint John river reference, 1950, as amended July 7, 1952, as I think this should be placed on the record:

> Again in the maritimes, I would like to report briefly on the Saint John river reference. As I mentioned last year the interim report of the commission dated January 27, 1954 is in the hands of the governments and since that time, we have received annual reports from the engineering board covering subsequent developments in the area.
>
> I am pleased to report that the first two units of New Brunswick's Beechwood power project are now in place and will be in operation shortly. Action is being taken to provide electrical interconnection between New Brunswick and Maine which was recommended in the commission's report. In this respect I recall that on my appearance before this committee last year I was able to report that the state of Maine had repealed the Fernald Act which had prohibited the export of hydro-electric power from that state. Action has since been taken by the Department of Trade and Commerce (Canada) and by the United States federal power commission to authorize the interconnection and the export of electric energy in the amounts proposed. The amounts are not large in comparison to various blocks of power available in other parts of Canada but under the special conditions of development in the region largely along the two sides of the Saint John river these arrangements should prove of material help in satisfying local needs of the area and we are hopeful that later these arrangements for co-operation may be further extended to the benefit of development in the Saint John river basin both in Canada and in the United States.

I judge from the report of the general and the answers to the questions of that committee that while this whole scheme of development has not come to fruition with respect to the arrangements between Canada and the United States—and to the hydro development this is a very important and worth-while step in this direction—we in this group give wholehearted support to this resolution as providing for a measure that will be of great advantage to the people and to the economy of the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, it would seem that the last speaker saw fit to rather put me in my place for what has previously taken place here this afternoon. Let me at this time say that when that challenge was hurled at me I made no reply whatsoever. I got up and left my seat and as far as—

The Chairman: Order. That is not the question. If you have a direct question—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He has the right to speak.

The Chairman: I have recognized the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton.

Mr. Brooks: May I say that I think there was a reflection on the hon. member for Cape Breton South. The hon. member for Kootenay West in speaking said that the hon. member wished to settle these disputes by another manner than debate in the house. As the hon. member said a moment ago, he merely got up and left the chamber and there was no indication on his part that he wished to settle disputes in any other way than by speeches in the house. I think he should be allowed to make that statement now because there was a reflection upon him.

An hon. Member: The chairman has ruled.

The Chairman: He should have made that statement just at the time when the point was taken.

An hon. Member: He was out of the house.

Mr. Montgomery: I would like to say a few words in support of this resolution. As a matter of fact I think I would be less than human if I did not at this time, not only express my own appreciation for the early recognition by the government of the necessity of helping a small province but also express the appreciation of the people of my constituency because this project happens to be in that constituency. Indeed I might go a step further and say that the people of New Brunswick in general appreciate the action taken by this government in such an early recognition of their needs.

I would like to be fair, but I cannot let pass some remarks made by hon. members today. I am wondering if they are trying to convince the members of this house that this resolution and the legislation which follows it should not be supported. Neither the hon. member for Charlotte nor the hon. member for Gloucester indicated that they were going to support the legislation and I wonder if they are going to do so. Even though it is not as good as they would like to see it, is it so bad that they are going to vote against it? I am sure they have not convinced the members of this house that this project is an unworthy one but I am afraid that the impression is going out from this house, through those members, that it is not an economic, sound or even the type of project which the federal authority should support in a small province like New Brunswick.

If that impression should go out I would feel sorry because I am sure it could do nothing but hurt, not only those members in their own constituencies and in their own provinces but it might give a wrong impression to the rest of Canada as to the outlook we have in New Brunswick. After all, we are pretty solid citizens down there and we do not tackle anything unless we have a pretty good idea that we can carry it out.

The Beechwood project is the largest development that has ever been undertaken by the New Brunswick hydro commission and it was undertaken only after months and months of study and research. I would like, as strongly as I can, to impress upon the members of this house that I think they will find if they will look into the records that the project about to be completed—or that part of it which includes the two units—has been approved by the power corporation, by H. G. Acres and Company Limited and by the chairman of the Canadian section of the international joint commission.

It has been approved, and the New Brunswick hydro commission was given the go ahead for that part of the project as a sound economic development. So all those arguments which strive to indicate that because we cannot at the moment secure the rights from the state of Maine and from the province of Quebec and settle the great problem of flowage everyone should keep their hands off Beechwood do no good for New Brunswick and no good for Canada.

This present policy is, if I understand it correctly, one of the first steps of the new government in the development of a natural resources policy which this country has so far lacked. All through the negotiations which were carried out between the provinces and the federal authorities there has emerged now and again a very good reason why the federal government did not back the province, and this was because they had no national development policy on which they could justify their claims.

I should like to refer to a letter dated February 3, 1954 from the federal authorities to the comptroller general of the province of New Brunswick in which the deputy minister of finance told the comptroller general:

> Confirming our telephone conversation we have, as you know, given long and careful consideration to your proposals regarding federal assistance to the government of New Brunswick in financing the development of hydroelectric power on the Saint John river. I am now directed by my minister to say that he has reviewed this matter with his colleagues, and the conclusion has been reached that it would not be right or proper for the federal government to provide funds by loan or otherwise for the development of natural resources along the lines you suggest.

Mr. Lesage: Mark those last words.

Mr. Montgomery: I certainly do mark those last words, and I tell the hon. member that the people of New Brunswick have got those last words underlined. If I had wanted to play politics, or try to do anything funny, I would leave them out; that is what hon. members on the other side usually do.

If my hon. friends want to look up Hansard for a few years back they will find it recorded that the former minister of finance, Mr. Abbott, made a statement in this house while sitting on this side of the chamber that it was not the policy of the federal government to finance any project for a provincial authority which they should finance themselves and pay for over a period of years. In other words, that statement was right in line with this letter. There was no federal natural development policy available on the basis of which the government could see their way to giving assistance to a province. Therefore they did not do so. They never provided any assistance in this regard, either to New Brunswick or to any other province. The step which the government is now undertaking is a step toward the development of the type of policy which I believe will, as it unfolds, offer every province a chance when it has a proposition which is sound economically, feasible of accomplishment and able to pay its way. That is exactly what we have in the Saint John river hydro development at Beechwood today.

This project was begun on June 11, 1955. Before proceeding further I will say that ever since that day the people concerned with the project in New Brunswick, both the federal authorities and the hydro authorities have tried to keep politics out of it. At no time, in my view, have they ever originated the idea of making this a political football. On the occasion of the opening ceremony the federal government was represented by the former minister of trade and commerce, the Right Hon. C. D. Howe. Also present was chairman of the Canadian section of the international joint commission, General McNaughton; officials of the hydro electric authority of the state of Maine, members of the government of the province of New Brunswick and, in addition, distinguished members and leaders of the opposition at that time, along with members of the New Brunswick power commission. All these people took part in this opening ceremony. It was not a political occasion.

Moreover, as I understand it, since 1953 when the new government came into power in New Brunswick the opposition in New Brunswick, which comprised the remnants of the Liberal party, supported this proposal; as far as I know they have never opposed it; it has been non political.

In addition to receiving the support of all these public men, this tremendous undertaking was brought into being at a time when the province was just recovering from a period of financial difficulties which had lasted for several years; I am referring to 1953 and 1954. And if ever a province needed assistance, New Brunswick needed it then. At that time the federal authorities gave encouragement to those in the province with whom they were in contact. They never refused to discuss this question, and that is borne out by all the correspondence which has been conducted between the authorities. The matter was on a basis of discussion, and I do not think any one can deny that discussions were carried on freely. I do not think anyone can deny that the federal authorities encouraged New Brunswick to proceed, as this was a solid project from the economic viewpoint.

However, the federal government always stopped short of saying, "We will back your bonds or supply money at a certain rate of interest," or something of that nature. It stopped short of the financial assistance which was the final step needed to be taken to help us out. The lack of such backing would have discouraged many public men. Fortunately, however, a new government had recently been put in charge of our affairs in New Brunswick. It was a government of young businessmen who had faith in the future of New Brunswick and who tackled their work with vigour, confident that something could be done for New Brunswick. In addition to that they conveyed that feeling of enthusiasm to the people of the province as has been so ably demonstrated since that time. Thus it was that on June 11, 1955, when the first blast was set off, many thousands of people gathered at Beechwood to watch the opening.

What I am going to say now I say with all sincerity because I was present at that opening and spoke to many of the people who were gathered there. The people who spoke to me expected me to have the answer but I did not and of course the answer they were looking for did not come. The Right Hon. C. D. Howe was present on that occasion which was very encouraging to the people of New Brunswick when they gathered there that afternoon. When they saw the federal minister in attendance they were sure that before the meeting was over he was going to announce that the federal authority had decided to back the project but they went home disappointed. Perhaps they were not justified in their expectations but they did know that negotiations had been proceeding and many of them being supporters of the Liberal government were certain he would make the announcement because it was one of the first and biggest projects New Brunswick had undertaken that would benefit the province as a whole and would assist the future of our mining, lumbering, pulpwood and paper industries.

No announcement was made and so the New Brunswick hydro commission backed by the provincial government went ahead with the project. As you have heard today two units are now operating and the project has become an integral part of the support of our whole economic system, a necessity to the encouragement of mining expansion and the establishment of new industries. I am under the impression that General McNaughton advised the external affairs committee that there has already been a hookup with the hydro system of the state of Maine and this integration is of importance. Nevertheless the completion of this project by no means represents the fulfilment of our hydro development requirements in New Brunswick. I am not going to take time to labour the point because it is generally known and has already been stated by the hon. member for Charlotte that the cost of the development of power from the first thermal plant was extremely high and it continues that way. In a province like New Brunswick or in any other small province that has very little potential hydroelectric development the cost of thermal electrical development is very expensive, but if you mix the two you can possibly arrive at the best average price. The greatest cost is the initial expenditure and there is the cost of repair and so on but ten years from now the cost may be quite different.

I do not think it is necessary to labour unduly the arguments in support of this resolution. I have been a member of this house for five years and during that time the question of hydro development in New Brunswick has often been discussed. In that period of time I have witnessed a significant change in the attitude of hon. members from other than the Atlantic provinces towards those of us who come from the maritimes. In 1955 and 1956 private members on all sides of the house were speaking on our behalf in an effort to impress on the federal government that the maritimes deserved assistance. Many hon. members who sat or who now sit in these benches came to me and discussed the question of hydro power in New Brunswick and were very sympathetic toward us. Some hon. members are not here today because they have passed on or have fallen by the wayside but their sympathetic attitude lingers after them and I believe the majority of hon. members of this committee today regardless of what province they come from are sympathetic toward us in the maritime provinces. They realize we are backward in our development in some respects and most of them are prepared to support us in trying to bring the standard of living in the Atlantic area in closer relationship to the standards enjoyed in other provinces.

Mention has been made today of the attitude held by some hon. members that the present interest rate is not going to provide cheap power. I do not think I am unfair when I say that if the previous federal government had adopted a policy under which it could have acted it could have backed the province of New Brunswick in 1954 and 1955 when these demands were made. It could have assisted the Beechwood development and financed it at an interest rate much less than the present 4⅜ per cent. At that time the government could have arranged a loan at an interest rate more favourable than the rate under with the government must operate today. I do not think that we in New Brunswick expect the government to lend money to the province today at a cheaper rate of interest than that at which it can borrow but two years ago the federal authority was able to borrow money at a cheaper rate than is possible today. If negotiations had been concluded and the federal government had come forward and offered a loan at cost plus administrative charges I am sure the interest rate would not have been more than 3½ per cent and perhaps not that much and I feel sure that the province of New Brunswick would have gladly entered into an agreement. But the two governments did not seem able to get together.

I do not think it is fair to blame the province of New Brunswick. In all fairness I feel that the fault lay in a lack of policy because from my own experience in the house I believe that many members who supported the government of the day were sympathetic and felt that something should be done. As a matter of fact I have talked with them. Of course it may be the case that a government cannot always put something like this into operation unless it feels it has a sound reason for advancing it. No government had ever been in power so long without having a policy and I suppose the government of the day felt it could not establish a policy for New Brunswick.

On behalf of the people of my constituency and my province I want to say again that we appreciate the fact that the new government has given early recognition to our need. I do not think the government is going to go overboard and give us everything we want, but to me this is the first stepping stone in the development of a policy which will not only help us but will help other provinces as well. I hope that members of the house will support the legislation and I feel that they will.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the resolution is very clear and simple. It will have two effects; first, to reduce the interest obligations of the provincial government of New Brunswick and, second, because of that reduction to reduce the cost of the generation of electricity by the Beechwood project. As the hon. member who has just taken his seat pointed out, during previous sessions a desire has been expressed by members from the Atlantic provinces for policies which would result in the development of cheaper electricity in that area, and we did have a response to that last spring in the budget of Mr. Harris. However, the resolution to follow the present one will provide a better opportunity to compare that proposal and the proposal that will be under discussion.

I find it rather difficult to approach a discussion of the resolution now before us because an examination of the economic merits of Beechwood cannot lead to anything but futility on the part of the House of Commons inasmuch as we are asked to examine the merits of a project which is now completed and in operation. The House of Commons is asked to share retroactively in the responsibility for a decision taken in 1955 by the government of New Brunswick. At this moment some years later we are asked to share in that responsibility and to approve, as it were, without an opportunity to have any real effect on the decision then made. We have been presented today, Mr. Chairman, with a number of arguments that might have changed that decision if the House of Commons had had the opportunity to pass judgment on them.

For example, the hon. member for Charlotte pointed out that the proper development of Beechwood might and apparently does involve co-operation with the United States and the province of Quebec, and if that is the case then the House of Commons at the time of the origin of the project might have had an opportunity to deal with that matter. We are asked to deal with an omelet that is now presented to us.

However, while that is true it is not the main source of difficulty for me. This resolution having to do with the development of hydro power in the province of New Brunswick is followed on the order paper by another resolution dealing with the development of thermal power in the Atlantic provinces as a whole. One block of electricity is to be developed through hydro power and another block of electricity in the same region is to be developed through the use of coal.

The presentation of these two companion resolutions reveals to me the inconsistent attitude which the government is taking toward the coal industry in the Atlantic provinces. The hon. member who just took his seat asked members of the house to support this resolution and certainly I have given some consideration as to whether I should support the resolution because of the effect which this development will have upon future markets for coal in the province of Nova Scotia.

I am, of course, sympathetic to the development of New Brunswick in any shape or form but I am also conscious of the responsibility which I, as a member from Nova Scotia, have to promote those matters that are of assistance to the coal industry. I should like to know from the Minister of Finance or from the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources how many tons of coal would be used annually.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I think my hon. friend will realize he is now entering into the subject matter of the following resolution. There will be plenty of opportunity to take up any questions pertaining to thermal power on that resolution. It is the next item on today's order paper.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I understand the point of view of the Minister of Finance but my attitude to the resolution now before us must be based on information which has to do with the alternative production of electricity. I could not, for example, easily support this resolution if the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources presented information to the house showing that this electricity could be produced as well and as cheaply from coal. That is the type of information I am seeking from the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. If we are not permitted to discuss alternatives to this particular possibility, then I think the discussion is quite futile.

Mr. Fleming: Perhaps my hon. friend will permit me to suggest this to him. We are on the resolution stage. If in the course of the discussion of the other resolution there are any matters that he thinks are relevant to the debate on second reading of the bill concerning Beechwood, I suggest it is the proper course to raise them then, but I think it is not relevant to the resolution now under discussion to go into the question of the cost of thermal power for the very simple reason that we are not now at the stage of choosing an alternative. As the hon. gentleman has indicated, here is a virtually finished project. It is no longer a question of choosing an alternative. My hon. friend will have the fullest opportunity to ask questions of my colleague, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, about the development of thermal power on the next resolution to which the subject of thermal power is directly related.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say a word on the point of order raised by the Minister of Finance. Surely the only purpose of these resolutions preceding money bills is to enable hon. members to make up their minds by hearing debate as to whether or not this is the most suitable way of spending the taxpayers' money or whether some alternative way is more suitable. If the Minister of Finance is seeking to restrict the debate on these resolutions preceding money bills to the strict terms of the resolution and to exclude discussion of alternatives, there is no purpose whatever served by these debates. It seems to me, from all the observations I have made of this house over 20 years and during four years as a member of it, that this is the first time I have ever heard of this new attempt to restrict the debate in committee on a resolution preceding a money bill.

Mr. Fleming: The hon. member's memory must be failing him and I think upon reflection his statement will appear to him to be far from the fact. There are on the order paper today two resolutions. There is the one now under discussion which reads as follows:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Minister of Finance to make loans, out of the consolidated revenue fund, to the government of New Brunswick, not exceeding thirty million dollars, in respect of expenditures for the development of hydroelectric power at Beechwood on the Saint John river.

There is nothing said in that resolution about thermal power. The following resolution, upon which I hope the house will be in committee shortly, does read as follows:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the government of Canada to enter into agreements with any of the Atlantic provinces to provide assistance in the generation of electric energy by thermal electric power projects, and in the control and transmission of electric energy, and including provisions for the payment of a subvention on coal used in the production of electric energy.

The purpose of this procedure of having money bills preceded by resolutions considered in committee is to afford hon. members the fullest opportunity to obtain all information relevant to the subjects involved. What I am pointing out to my hon. friend is that the matter upon which he now wishes information is something relevant to the following resolution, and not this one. The proper course for him, if I may say so, Mr. Chairman, is to ask these questions of my colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources on the next resolution, and not to ask them of me on this resolution.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may just say one more word, I should like to thank the minister for reminding me of the word "expedient". That is precisely the point. What we are trying to do is decide whether it is expedient to do this or not to do it. Surely when the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond says that before he can properly make up his mind he wants to know whether the amount of power produced by Beechwood could be produced more cheaply by coal, he is entitled to know that. The question relates to this resolution and has nothing to do, even remotely, with the other.

The Chairman: I would suggest that the resolution before the committee deals with the financing of the project. I do not think the production of power through the use of coal comes within the terms of this resolution.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Lesage: May I, with all due respect, ask for a clarification of your ruling? This morning when I discussed this matter I said, and this will be agreed upon by everyone, that the power coming from Beechwood is far from being firm power. At certain times of the year the Saint John river at Beechwood is dry and the power has to be firmed up through the use of thermal power. It is important, in reaching a judgment on the economics of Beechwood as it is now, with two units and without storage, to know what the cost of thermal power will be which will firm up the power at Beechwood. Then, too, we should know what the cost of thermal power would be compared to the cost of hydroelectric power from the two first units at Beechwood.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, that is the very sort of information that I think is quite properly relevant to the next resolution.

Mr. Lesage: No, to this one.

Mr. Fleming: The next one, Mr. Chairman. My hon. friends should have all the information they require, but surely that kind of information is relevant to the next resolution.

Mr. Lesage: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman; I am speaking of the economics of Beechwood itself. I am not talking about the program for thermal plants in the Atlantic provinces, which is the subject of the other resolution. I am talking directly about the economic soundness of having only two units at Beechwood.

Mr. Pickersgill: And so was the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond.

Mr. MacEachen: I think it would be very difficult, certainly for the members from coal mining areas in the maritime provinces, to discharge their responsibilities on this particular resolution without knowing whether this particular block of power of 3 million kilowatts per annum could be produced as cheaply or more cheaply from coal than from hydro sources.

Mr. Brooks: I wonder if I could ask the hon. member a question. I am not admitting that the power could be produced cheaper by coal because I do not think it could, but supposing it could, is he suggesting that New Brunswick scrap Beechwood and use coal in producing the amount of power Beechwood would produce? Is that his suggestion?

Mr. MacEachen: No, my desire to get information on this point is not for the purpose of making suggestions to New Brunswick as to what its course of action should be, but to determine what my course of action should be as a member representing a coal mining

Mr. Chairman, and I have never yet seen the chairman of the committee of the whole have to subside in his chair because a member who is reading remarks that are out of order waved his hands at him. I think the hon. member should be told to throw away his text and to make his speech as he should without its aid and to remain within the rules.

The Chairman: I think the hon. member will follow my observations.

Mr. Coates: I feel that we in the maritime provinces are entering a new era—

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I think you should comment on the point of order raised by the hon. member. When you rose to give your ruling I think it was improper for you to be waved down to your seat by the member who was speaking and for the chairman of this committee immediately to take his seat. I think it is discourteous to this chamber to have this conduct.

The Chairman: I do not think it was a point of order. The hon. member was just saying that he would resume his seat presently.

Mr. Coates: I feel that we in the maritime provinces are entering a new era, an era which will bring us nearer to that position we held in 1867 in relation to the rest of Canada. I certainly believe it would never have resulted under any other government. The Prime Minister was to the maritimes in 1957 what Sir John A. Macdonald was to Canada in 1867. He substituted a financial transfusion for tolerance.

Mr. Lesage: Is the Minister of Finance going to answer the questions I asked this morning?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, there are one or two facts which I think should be made clear in regard to the further information sought by my hon. friend.

Mr. Lesage: I am sorry I did not hear exactly the words of the minister.

Mr. Fleming: The present resolution and bill, Mr. Chairman, are not designed primarily to reduce the cost of Beechwood power. They will have that effect; the resolution and bill will certainly have that effect—but that is not their primary purpose.

The policy of the government respecting Atlantic power costs comes under the next item on the order paper and there will be full opportunity to deal with it there. The present resolution and bill are designed to surmount a particular problem of financing. The federal government is not proposing and is not asking the house in this resolution to lend money or to authorize the lending of money on the security of the Beechwood project. What the house is being asked to do is to approve a loan to the government of New Brunswick the reason for which is to assist that province to finance the cost of the project already incurred amounting to approximately $30 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, it is refunded.

Mr. Fleming: No, it is not refunded; that is not the word.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman define exactly what he means.

Mr. Fleming: The fact is that the project has thus far been financed by loans from various banks to the power commission of the province. These are demand loans—the usual bank demand loans—and there is also one loan by the province to the power commission. This present resolution contemplates the introduction of a bill to enable the province to meet the need of funding that obligation of approximately $30 million. I do not think any hon. member is suggesting that it is a practical proposal that the province should be now expected to go into the money market to raise $30 million on an issue. Those are the facts which I think, if I may say so, should guide hon. members in their approach to this present resolution. The financial aspects are those which are germane to the question which now has to be decided by the committee.

The questions in regard to cost or the comparisons of the cost of generating by different forms of power, whether it be by water on the one hand or thermal on the other, relate to the next resolution rather than the present one. We are now dealing with a project which is completed or virtually so, and I would ask hon. members to defer these questions concerning the development of thermal power until the next resolution which directly raises the whole question of the development of power in that manner in the Atlantic provinces.

Reference was made to the fact that there are two units on the Beechwood project. No. 1 is now in operation on a 10 per cent load factor and is producing between 820,000 and 840,000 k.w.h. per day at the present time. All these are questions which ought to be raised on the next resolution. The house has to decide now whether, having regard to the fact that this project is virtually completed—

Mr. Cannon: Would the hon. minister permit a question?

Mr. Fleming: May I finish my sentence. While the cost has been met by the power commission, it is simply in the form of demand loans almost entirely from the banks and the problem as to the funding of that cost has now to be met. It is not within the capacity of the province of New Brunswick to place an issue of that size on the financial market at the present time.

Mr. Cannon: Would not the hon. minister admit that if the second resolution were not on the order paper—and after all we are only discussing one resolution at this time—it would be in order to discuss all these matters which the minister has said we should not be discussing this afternoon. Should we not take these resolutions one by one and should we not discuss this one as if the other were not on the order paper?

Mr. Fleming: I quite agree that the issue as to what is germane to the present resolution is not to be determined simply by the fact that there is another resolution on the order paper but I might point out to my hon. friends that these questions which have been raised do not relate to the present resolution. They obviously relate to the following one. Questions have been raised about alternative methods of generating power—about power generated—from thermal sources. Such questions do affect the next resolution and not this one.

Mr. Lesage: Would the minister permit a question? Is he not agreed that the question I have asked about the cost of power to be produced at Beechwood from the two units is very relevant to this resolution and that it has nothing at all to do with the next one.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, with respect to that question I would not have thought that—

Mr. Lesage: That was my main question.

Mr. Fleming: I did not think my hon. friend would be raising that question.

Mr. Lesage: I did raise it this morning.

Mr. Fleming: Very well, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend has asked that attention be drawn to the calculation that appeared in an answer given in Hansard at page 2831 which reads:

1. Assuming a production of 300 million k.w.h. annually and the borrowing rate of 6 per cent on the $29 million, the cost of power produced by the present Beechwood plant would be of the order of 7 to 7.5 mills per k.w.h.

2. This cost could be reduced by approximately 1.2 mills per k.w.h. by loans from the federal government at a lower interest rate.

As I took his question it was this: If you do not assume a production of 300 million k.w.h. annually—

Mr. Lesage: I did not say production. I said utilization which is quite different.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Fleming: It does not require very much arithmetic, I would think, to know that if you assume a 55 per cent load factor the effect that is going to accrue from the present resolution will be correspondingly larger—

Mr. Lesage: Lower.

Mr. Fleming: —in the form of reduced costs relatively, but the relationship of the two schemes of power development and the possibility of integrating the use of power from the Beechwood project with power developed from thermal sources is something that will arise in the next resolution.

Mr. Lesage: No.

Mr. Fleming: We are dealing here with this one question, I take it, as to whether it is proper for the federal government to assist the province of New Brunswick in financing this obligation which has been incurred by the province through its power commission on a project that is now completed or is virtually completed. No one will deny that if the load factor is reduced—if you are figuring, for instance, on 180 million instead of 300 million kilowatt hours—you will have corresponding increases in your mill cost.

Mr. Lesage: That is clear.

Mr. Fleming: No one can question that. But if the hon. gentleman wants to go into the question of a comparison of those two types of generating power and the possibility of integrating them, then I suggest the place to do that would be on the next resolution. There will be full opportunity because the next resolution obviously contemplates the integration of the two types of power. There will be very great advantages in the integration of these two types of power, and Beechwood will be of very great assistance in that respect. The hon. gentleman is aware —I do not know whether all other members are—of the fact that the costs of the two types of power are built up in two quite different ways. Obviously, in the case of thermal power—

Mr. Lesage: The cost of the fuel means more than the capital cost.

Mr. Fleming: While in the case of electric power once you have paid for construction it is a matter of maintenance costs and depreciation.

As to whether this project is a sound project, I had not expected the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet to raise this question because it has been acknowledged in this house times without number by the former government of which he was an active member that the Beechwood project was a sound project. As a matter of fact the position area in this House of Commons. It would be rather inconsistent and ridiculous for me to approve any measure before the house calling for an expenditure of public funds for the development of electricity, if that same electricity could be provided through the use of coal, from the hardpressed collieries of Nova Scotia. That is the very point I had in mind. Tomorrow, or perhaps even today, the minister will be telling us to what extent assistance will be given to the movement of coal for the generation of electricity in thermal plants.

I want to ask him, Mr. Chairman, in giving me this information, what the mill rate would be for a thermal plant in Saint John producing electricity from coal, given the same rate of assistance that will be given under the provisions of the next resolution? When that information is given to the house I will be in a position to determine my attitude to this particular resolution.

I believe it is rather confusing to deal with two companion resolutions dealing with the same area, one calling for an expenditure for a loan for the development of hydro power and the other calling for the expenditure of funds for a development of thermal plants. I think that if we get the proper information it will be helpful in reconciling the difficulty in my own mind. In so doing, I hope I will not do anything that will interfere with the welfare of New Brunswick or anything will be inconsistent with the welfare of my own constitutents.

Mr. Brooks: You are expecting to sell coal to New Brunswick.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, that is the point.

Mr. Brooks: We also have coal in New Brunswick.

Mr. MacEachen: The miners at Minto may also be interested in the point of view I am putting forward. Perhaps it would be a better Beechwood for the miners at Minto if coal were used. However, that is not the point. The point is that I am interested in the difference in cost between these two sources.

Mr. Brooks: I should like to ask the hon. member this question, if I may. Does he agree with his colleagues who have already spoken advocating the full development of the Saint John river, which would mean that there would be no coal used from either Nova Scotia or New Brunswick? This was advocated by the hon. member for Charlotte and the hon. member for Gloucester. I am sure that would not appeal to the hon. member.

Mr. MacEachen: Any consideration—I will say this quite candidly—that affects harmfully the market for Nova Scotia coal will not appeal to the member for Inverness Richmond, even though proposed by my gooc friends from New Brunswick.

I just have one more point to make in connection with this particular resolution and that is this. How will this apply to the province of Nova Scotia? This is something that I believe the Minister of Finance will agree comes squarely within the terms of the resolution. We are told that the Beechwood project was commenced in June 1955. I believe that within the same period the province of Nova Scotia, through its publicly operated utility the Nova Scotia power commission, also undertook the development of power installations. I wonder—and this is a very simple question—whether similar loans or similar terms would be extended to the province of Nova Scotia for similar development if a request were made in a manner similar to that of the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Fleming: I think my hon. friend will recall that a similar question was asked of the Prime Minister on November 22, 1957, as recorded at page 1405 of Hansard. There was a series of questions on the subject. The first question was:

1. Are loans based on the principle applied to the Beechwood project to be available only for projects in the Atlantic provinces?

The answer was no. The second question was:

2. If not, will all provinces qualify?

The Prime Minister said:

The answer is that any province that has a project for which there is an equally good case could qualify in respect of that project.

Mr. MacEachen: Would that apply retroactively?

Mr. Fleming: That question was not asked.

Mr. Lesage: Oh, yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman should look at question No. 4.

Mr. Fleming: I would ask my hon. friends to permit me to make my remarks.

Mr. Pickersgill: They were my questions.

Mr. Fleming: Oh, yes. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will be given full credit for asking his four questions. But if he does not mind I should like to be allowed to continue; I have read questions No. 1 and 2 and have quoted the answer by the Prime Minister to them. The hon. member for Inverness-Richmond has asked, "Does that apply retroactively?" The questions that I have now read and the answers given do not raise the question of retroactivity. Question No. 3 simply asked whether the terms were available to private companies and the answer was no. Question No. 4 was as follows:

4. Are such loans available only for new or uncompleted projects or will they be available for refunding obligations of established power projects in the Atlantic provinces?

The Prime Minister's answer was that they would not be available for refunding obligations.

Mr. MacEachen: The operative word seems to be "refunding". The Minister of Finance attached to the term "refunding" this morning a particular meaning which did not seem to apply to the type of activity that was undertaken by the government of New Brunswick in repaying its bank loans. Suppose the power commission of the province of Nova Scotia had financed its development in precisely the same way as has the government of New Brunswick. Would terms similar to those provided in this resolution be available to the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Fleming: My hon. friend would not expect me to deal with a situation until it arises. He has had the general statement of the Prime Minister in reply to the four questions put by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. MacEachen: I just want to conclude my remarks by saying that I would have expected that there would be a particular policy the minister could outline and that these projets would not be treated on an ad hoc basis. I certainly think we should know, as members from Nova Scotia in this parliament, whether the development in that province is to be given the same treatment as the development in New Brunswick. That is the only point I am making.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, representing the only Nova Scotia constituency which borders on the province of New Brunswick, having attended a university in that province for three years, and having as my better half what I consider their finest export, it is with deep sincerity that I rise in support of this resolution. My wife's home is situated very near this great project, a mere sixteen miles west, in the centre of that province's great potato industry. On many occasions I have driven past this great project and never ceased to marvel at its size and what it means to that province. This was a project which the government of the day could very easily have turned its back on, through lack of support, by the then federal government, but it did not do so; it took the bull by the horns and started out on its own. Of the fact that its problems were many, there is no doubt; but the initiative and determination were there, and the job was done.

[Mr. Fleming.]

To many in Canada, viewing a project of this type would not occasion a second look. But we in the east are not accustomed to seeing projects of this scale attempted; at least, shall I say, we were not until we decided on parties that believed we had the goods and could do the job. The fact that this is only the first link in the complete hydro development of New Brunswick makes this all the more significant.

New Brunswick is indeed fortunate that they have the potential hydro development available. We in Nova Scotia have depleted a large part of our hydro resources and those remaining are receiving active consideration at the present time. We have in Nova Scotia, however, millions of tons of coal which will in the near future, and under a resolution to be introduced here in parliament later today, supply our province with thermal power, our mines with markets, and our people with an ambition that has lain dormant for a great many years.

While speaking on the matter of coal, might I bring to the attention of this house a discrepancy in the Montreal engineering report which to any person in my constituency is indeed grave. I refer to its statement of the coal reserves in the Springhill area. Might I bring to the attention of this house those figures and the figures of an earlier report on these reserves, so that you may better understand the confusion of my constituents.

The Montreal engineering report stated that there were between 6 million and 13½ million tons of coal in the Springhill area and a further 1½ million tons in the Joggins and River Hebert area.

The Chairman: Order. I would ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the resolution before the committee. We are not discussing coal. We are just discussing the Beechwood project.

Mr. Coates: There is just one more sentence. May I just finish?

Mr. Nicholson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I think you cannot raise a point of order and have your ruling ignored in this way.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Coates: While the Carroll commission gave figures of 34,384,000 tons minable plus 89,040,000 tons recoverable in the same area. I feel—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Coates: I am almost through. I feel that we in the maritime provinces—

Mr. Cannon: I rise on a point of order. I have been in this house for quite a while, taken by the former prime minister was that it was sound and that the government of New Brunswick could finance it. The soundness of the project as a scheme for the development of hydro electric power on the Saint John river was never questioned by the former government, as the record shows, on not a few occasions. May I remind the hon. gentleman that the man who turned the sod on this project was the Right Hon. C. D. Howe, and that in the course of his remarks on that occasion he praised the project. There was no suggestion at that time that there was anything unsound about it, or that the federal government of that day was telling the province of New Brunswick that it should be turning to the development of thermal power and abandoning the idea of developing hydro power on the Saint John river at Beechwood. Mr. Howe in his speech on that occasion on June 11, 1955, congratulated the premier of New Brunswick on pressing on with the project at Beechwood.

Of course, this is a free country and a free chamber, and the hon. gentleman is entitled to change his mind on this matter if he wishes, but I should think that in the light of the many statements and acknowledgments on the part of the former government that this Beechwood project is a sound project he would not now reverse his opinion and question the proposition; and I venture to remind the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond in reply to his observations this afternoon that this was the position of the former government, which he consistently supported, toward this question.

Mr. MacEachen: Would the Minister of Finance not agree that the statements made by the former minister with respect to Beechwood were always conditional upon the observation that the soundness of it should be determined by the capacity of the government of New Brunswick to finance the proposal through the banks?

Mr. Fleming: No, I do not think the hon. member is right in his suggestion. That is quite a different matter. The soundness that the former government attributed to the project was as a project for the development of power on the Saint John river, that is, sound from the economic point of view, by which is obviously meant that it would in time become a project which would pay for itself. That is a different matter altogether from the question as to whether at one particular time a province with little in the way of financial resources, such as New Brunswick, should be expected without any assistance from the federal government to go out and face the financial market with the need for raising $30 million.

That is the situation. We think this project is of general advantage; we make no attempt to hide the fact that we said so in earlier days in this house when the question was under discussion here and also in discussions between the former federal government and the provincial government. The former federal government was asked to give such assistance, and declined to give assistance in financing the project but at no time did it question that the project was a sound economic project which justified the province of New Brunswick in proceeding with it. I would again remind hon. members that Mr. Howe undertook to congratulate the government of that province on its courage in proceeding with the scheme.

Mr. Chairman, asking the committee as I do to give its attention to the essence of the resolution and its purpose I think the committee can be satisfied now to give leave to introduce this bill, and that it can reserve questions as to the development of different forms of power in the Atlantic provinces and the integration of that type of development with the Beechwood power project until we come to consideration of the following resolution.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, will the Minister of Finance assure me that the information I requested will be forthcoming in the discussion on the next resolution?

Mr. Fleming: Will the hon. member state precisely the point he has in mind?

Mr. MacEachen: The particular question is: if this particular bloc of power were developed from thermal sources—from coal —given the same type of additional subventional assistance, what would be the cost as compared to the cost shown in the answer which the Minister of Northern Affairs gave to me some days ago?

Mr. Fleming: I think that question is related to the next resolution.

Mr. MacEachen: And it will be answered?

Mr. Fleming: As far as the resources of the government can provide an answer, yes.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance has just said that the members of the previous government and I in particular had always approved the Beechwood project and considered it economically sound. He has referred especially to remarks made by Mr. Howe two years ago. I wish to remind the Minister of Finance through you, Mr. Chairman, that in all the representations which were made to the government of Canada in 1953 and in later years, and in all the conversations which I have had with the premier and other members of the government of New Brunswick, and in the discussions of the officials of the department while I was a member of the government, with officials in New Brunswick, on the subject of Beechwood, the project was always to have three units at Beechwood coupled with 600,000 acre feet of storage to regularize the flow of the Saint John river. It is impossible to have firm power on a run-of-the-river basis with only two units. And it is only on March 14 of this year, of 1957—

An hon. Member: Last year.

Mr. Lesage: On March 14, 1957, this spring.

An hon. Member: That is last year.

Mr. Lesage: Oh yes. Anyway, I should forget that year 1957. This is a new year. It was only on March 14, 1957, that the premier of New Brunswick advised me that it was impossible to obtain economic storage on the Tobique river. I had known for some time that efforts made by the government of New Brunswick to obtain storage in the United States in Maine and in the province of Quebec had not been successful.

The government of New Brunswick through its premier and officials represented that it was pretty well convinced that it could find the necessary storage on the Tobique river. A survey was made and I read into the record this morning a portion of the report of the chief engineer of the New Brunswick electric power commission to the chairman, Mr. Fournier, saying it was impossible to obtain storage on the Tobique. Since March a new problem has emerged with a new economic facet. It is to operate two units only until it is possible to obtain storage in the state of Maine or the province of Quebec and heaven knows when that might be. We have only two units at Beechwood with a maximum capacity of 355 million kilowatt hours operating on a 50 per cent load factor according to the report of Montreal Engineering.

I would like to know, and it seems to me it is an important consideration in reaching a decision as to how to vote on this resolution and the bill to follow it, what will be the cost of power coming from Beechwood? Would it have been more profitable to instal thermal plants to generate the amount of kilowatt hours that will be obtained from the two units at Beechwood on a run-of-the-river basis? This is essential. The Prime Minister said, as recorded at page 1405 of Hansard, that New Brunswick "had made a good case".

It is quite all right to say that and I certainly hope that New Brunswick has made a good case but one of the first considerations in judging for ourselves whether or not it has made a good case is to know if the cost of power is going to be less from Beechwood than from thermal plants; otherwise the government would be asking us to vote for the financing of a project which might be uneconomic. It seems to me it is elementary that the government should prove to us that this project, even with only two units on a run-of-the-river basis, is economically advantageous.

Mr. Fleming: Is my hon. friend not aware of the opinion of General McNaughton to that effect?

Mr. Lesage: The opinion of General McNaughton, if I remember correctly, was that the two units would be first installed while the storage facilities were being developed. That is quite different. If it is a matter of only one, two or three years; that is completely different.

Mr. Brooks: Might I ask the hon. gentleman a question. Did not General McNaughton in his report state that it was feasible and practical for New Brunswick to develop Beechwood with its own storage and that it was not necessary for Beechwood to get any storage either from the state of Maine or the province of Quebec, that it was a practical proposition?

Mr. Lesage: I am sorry, I do not recall that. In what year was that, 1951 or 1952?

Mr. Brooks: It was when the international waterways commission made its report, I think about 1953 or 1954.

Mr. Lesage: No, it was before that I believe.

Mr. Brooks: Whenever it was made; it was made some time ago.

Mr. Lesage: As the Minister of Finance has said, the most important consideration when you deal with the cost of power in a hydro power installation is the amount of the capital outlay. The Minister of Veterans Affairs knows that the cost of completing Beechwood is going to be not far from double what was expected at the time of General McNaughton's report.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I do not think my hon. friend is right in saying that.

Mr. Lesage: It might be 60 per cent.

Mr. Fleming: I think my hon. friend had better qualify his statement some more.

Mr. Lesage: I said "approximately".

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, the situation is simply this. We are not sitting here as the government of New Brunswick deciding whether we should go ahead and carry out the Beechwood project development. We are sitting here as the parliament of Canada, acquainted with the fact that this project has been constructed, is virtually complete and that now the problem of financing arises. All that we are being asked to do is to provide financing for the province of New Brunswick to be repaid in eight annual instalments over the next eight years. I think hon. members are quite persuaded that the dominion government is going to be paid back this money, that there is no doubt from the federal point of view that this loan can be justified on its merits and that by lending this money to this province we are assisting the province in financing a very important project that is going to contribute substantially to development in that province. It is the policy of the government, and I hope it is the policy of the house, to assist in measures of this kind where the benefits are going to be widespread. It surely cannot be denied that the development of power in the province of New Brunswick is going to bring widespread benefits.

Mr. Lesage: What are the widespread benefits? That is the point.

Mr. Fleming: What are the widespread benefits? My hon. friend really surprises me in asking that question.

Mr. Lesage: That is the point.

Mr. Fleming: The facts are simply these, that New Brunswick does need power and here is a source of power.

Mr. Lesage: It needs cheap power.

Mr. Fleming: Yes, this is a source of cheap power and it is being generated by a scheme that has been regarded by the government of which he was a member and also by the experts as one that is economically sound.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, I agree with the Minister of Finance when he says that this will be helpful to the province of New Brunswick. No one questions that it will be helpful, at least to the taxpayers, but in order to clear up the situation in so far as the stability or dependability of the source of power at Beechwood is concerned I would like to put on the record a comment made in the provincial legislature by the Hon. A. C. Taylor which is drawn from an authentic record. Mr. Taylor said:

> The flow records at Pokick, below Beechwood, show that from 1st July to 31st December 1955 (a six month period) there wasn't one day with a sufficient flow of water to run the two proposed 45,000 horsepower turbines at Beechwood at capacity. Not one day.
>
> During the same period of 184 days, there were 119 days when the volume of water was not sufficient to operate even one unit at capacity.
>
> Now I appreciate that last year was extremely dry. But who can foresee how often we may have dry years in the future? For the year of record ending on 30th September 1954 there were four months when the average monthly flow was below that required to operate two units at capacity. And that was a year of exceptionally heavy rainfall.
>
> For the year of record ending on 30th September 1953, there were nine months during which the average monthly flow of water was insufficient for capacity production of two units.

No one who lives in the province of New Brunswick would fail to agree with me when I say that last year we had several months when it would have been impossible for one unit to operate at capacity production. I agree that it was an exceptionally dry year but there were times last fall when you could walk across above the Beechwood project. The matters that have been brought to the attention of the minister are extremely reasonable in my opinion and the questions asked by my colleague to the right deserve to be answered.

I want to say one other thing and then resume my seat. There is one member of the cabinet of the former government with whom I discussed this question on many occasions. He made this statement publicly or I would not be referring to it here at this time. The Hon. Robert Winters informed me and said in the press that in his opinion Beechwood without storage rights was not economically sound. I have a copy of that statement in my office which I can provide to the minister if he would like to see it. That comment was made by Mr. Winters who in my opinion was an outstanding engineer so I know that at least one member of the former government held that opinion.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask a question. Mr. Taylor of course is not an electrical engineer in any sense of the word. Would the hon. member for Charlotte not agree that Mr. Taylor and his party in New Brunswick voted unanimously with the government of the Hon. Mr. Flemming for the development of the Beechwood project?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I believe he moved an amendment at the time this matter was raised.

Mr. Brooks: Not the first time, but the second time.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): We all have second guesses.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am quite sure you will find that the Hon. A. C. Taylor moved an amendment that was voted down by the majority in the legislature of the province of New Brunswick. I know Hon. A. C. Taylor's views in this regard and I know he has not spoken from a political standpoint because I have discussed the matter with him on many occasions. I also know the views of our old friend, Gaspard Boucher, who in my opinion had as much knowledge about the power potential in the province of New Brunswick as anybody I have ever known. He had made a complete study of the situation. Before he passed away I discussed the matter with him when he was a member of the House of Commons. He had a great deal of literature that he lent me at that time. He had exactly the same opinion. The opinions I have expressed here are based on the information I have obtained from those I believe to have great knowledge of the Beechwood project.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, earlier today the Minister of Finance undertook that when he answered he would give me a definition of the word "refunding" as it is used in the Prime Minister's answer, and I have some observations I want to make based upon his definition.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I must begin by correcting the hon. member. I did not say I would give a definition. I said I would deal with these questions—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman do me the courtesy of giving me a definition?

Mr. Fleming: —in reply in relation to that and other matters he and other members were raising at the time. The hon. member is referring to the Prime Minister's answer to the fourth question asked. I would not say for one minute that the obligations incurred thus far in connection with the construction of this project have been funded. This is not in that sense a refunding operation. This is the first time there has been a funding in the sense of the word that I think is proper. The obligations that have been incurred have been by way of bank demand loans to the power commission, with the exception of one loan made by the government of the province to the commission. This is the first time that the obligations, aggregating with additional expenditures close to $30 million, will have been funded.

What the Prime Minister was dealing with in his reply to the fourth question was the possibility of someone coming along now and raising the matter of retroactive effect which was brought up by the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond. It is not intended that some authority which constructed a project a long time ago and would like to have some assistance now in carrying the financial burdens should come along now and say, "Well, this may be old but we would like to come in now and receive federal assistance in refunding so that we may change the basis; we have some market obligations now, bonds are due, and we want federal assistance in meeting those obligations." That is not the situation we are dealing with here. The situation we are dealing with here is an expression—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not asking the hon. gentleman what the situation is.

Mr. Fleming: —of the policy of the government in the development of natural resources, and where we can in ways like this assist the provinces in the development of resources it is in accordance with the policy of the government to do so. Let me say that a full understanding of the policy of the government in the development of resources in this area will become clearer, I think, when the house has heard the discussion of the next resolution. It will see there how power development projects are to be integrated in the Atlantic area and how Beechwood fits in with that type of development.

But here we are dealing with a situation which is not the mere retroactive assumption of a burden by the federal government, as the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond suggested. From the time construction of the project was undertaken, indeed before it was ever started, it was the policy of the party that is now represented to the right of the chair in this house to assist the province in the financing of this particular project. This is not a case of taking up some project that was completed and is old and proposing some refunding of its cost. This is a fulfilment of undertakings given. This is a keeping of faith with the people of Canada and the province of New Brunswick as to the declarations we made and have made throughout the period that the project was under construction, yes and long before it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the minister another question. I am putting it in this form because I really do not want to waste the time of the committee by talking about something that is different from what the government understands it to be. I am trying to find out what the government really means. Am I to understand that if a project is started but is financed by bank loans or by loans from a provincial treasury it would fall within the ambit of this policy but that if it has already been financed by a bond issue then that is what the government means by refunding? The dictionary definition of "refunding", which the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet was good enough to look up for me, accords exactly with my own view of what refunding means. It means that you will pay back any kind of loan. That is all there is in the dictionary. If the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister have some special definition in mind I think the rest of us are entitled to have that definition so we will know what we are talking about. What I am anxious to find out, and I want to try to make it as clear as possible to the minister, is just what is included within the ambit of the answer to question No. 4 and what is not.

Mr. Fleming: I think I made it quite clear in my previous statement—

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not clear to me.

Mr. Fleming: —that here there is no ex post facto approval by the present government of this project. We were favourable to the policy that we are now expressing before the project was undertaken, and if the hon. member can duplicate the same circumstances with regard to any other project, then in the light of the first answer given by the Prime Minister, as found at page 1405 of Hansard, it will have similar treatment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely, Mr. Chairman, this is the most remarkable statement we have yet heard from a very remarkable government. The Prime Minister told us that loans based on the principle applied in the Beechwood project were to be available to all provinces. I presume the Prime Minister was not trying to mislead the house. I presume the Prime Minister was trying to give a straightforward, truthful answer that all of us could understand. He said that loans based on this principle were available to all provinces and that the provinces would have to meet certain conditions that were met by the Beechwood project.

When I try to find out what those conditions are the minister says there is no other project anywhere in Canada that can possibly be comparable—

Mr. Fleming: I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the minister would let me finish my sentence.

Mr. Fleming: Please keep to the truth.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister implied, if I understood his words, that any project that had been fully financed could not qualify and obviously any project that has not been started cannot qualify because the minister said it had to be some project that his party had approved in the past. Therefore, this case is unique. There will never be anything like it. Is that a correct interpretation of the government's position?

Mr. Fleming: I cannot find anything correct in the statement the hon. member has made. It is a demonstration of pretty wild reasoning, the way he is jumping around—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Fleming: —distorting statements I have made and then drawing the most fantastic conclusions from my alleged statements. I think he had better content himself with the statements I have made and ponder on them rather than misinterpret them the way he is doing now.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very far from being finished, I am only just beginning to talk about this project in this free parliament where the minister was good enough to say we still are allowed to speak, so long as we confine our remarks within the very narrow limits defined by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Most certainly.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): How does the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate justify his position as Liberal whip for the Atlantic provinces and therefore speaking for all the Atlantic provinces, and his position of being against something that is for one of the Atlantic provinces? Secondly, how does he justify the statements of some of the Liberal members that this is nothing; it is a mere bagatelle and the Liberals would have done this and that and would have gone much further, and yet he is worrying about the fact that these other provinces might not be getting anything?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is not the Liberal whip for the Atlantic provinces. He is the member for Bonavista-Twillingate and is speaking for his constituents just as the hon. member for Saint John-Albert is speaking for his. That is his first duty in this house. In the second place, I do not have to justify what any other hon. member says. He can justify what he says. In the third place, I have said not one single word to indicate whether I was voting for or against this resolution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have merely asked questions. Like the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond, I want to know what we are really being asked to agree to, and the government will not tell us.

Mr. Fleming: Nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: All we have been able to gather so far from the Minister of Finance, and I shall recapitulate what the minister said to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet as faithfully as I can, is that the province of New Brunswick built this thing; you are not entitled to know whether it is efficient or inefficient; that is an unfair question. You are not entitled to know whether this power could be produced more cheaply as thermal power; that is no business of the House of Commons. You are to vote this money blindly. Why are we to do that? We are to vote this money blindly because New Brunswick went ahead and built this thing without financing it; now, they cannot finance it and we have to bail them out. Up to now that is all the Minister of Finance has asked us to do. I do not think it is good enough. I am just as anxious to do something for New Brunswick as any other member who does not represent that province.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): You better not come around at election time in New Brunswick.

Mr. Pickersgill: I might remind you, Mr. Chairman, that there are 255 members in this house who do not represent New Brunswick. Those 255 members not only are entitled, but if they are doing their duty conscientiously in voting public money they have an obligation to know whether or not that money is being used wisely and properly. They have an obligation also to know whether or not the same policy would apply in other similar situations, and what the government considers other similar situations are. That is precisely what I am trying to find out.

Mr. Brooks: You were not so fastidious when you were voting money for the pipe line in the west.

Mr. Pickersgill: I might say, Mr. Chairman, that most hon. members on this side of the house have no apologies to make for voting money for that great capital project which is one of the few things that is maintaining employment in this country at this time. Incidentally—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Incidentally, it is certainly—

Mr. Pallett: It has not got as much gas in it as you have.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Incidentally, it is a great national scheme and very different from anything we have been offered by this government. I think perhaps hon. members on the treasury benches particularly should be reminded, as I believe they were earlier in the day when I, unfortunately, was not in the house, by the hon. member for Gloucester, of the words in the speech from the throne. I read from page 6 of Hansard of October 14, 1957:

> My ministers believe that a national development policy carried out in co-operation with the provinces, and in the territories, is needed to enable all regions of Canada to share in the benefits to be realized in developing the resources of this great nation.

Then it goes on to include amongst those projects this Beechwood project. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance one very simple question, to which an answer of yes or no could easily be given, even by the verbose Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming: What about the verbose member for Bonavista-Twillingate who is asking the question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Is this Beechwood project part of this national development program?

Mr. Fleming: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: The answer is yes.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Are you going to vote for it or against it?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman's curiosity will no doubt be satisfied at the appropriate time. Perhaps with that enthusiasm for human rights, which his party showed yesterday, he may allow me to exercise my rights as a member of parliament without his repeated interruptions.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): You mean we will know when your verbosity has run out.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Finance says that this Beechwood project is a part of the national policy. It does seem to me, sir, that if it is we are entitled to know, before we are asked even to make up our minds how we should vote on this resolution, what the rest of that national policy is. We are entitled to know how this is going to apply elsewhere. I tried to find out something about that by putting some questions on the order paper. They were not intended to be frivolous and I did not waste the time of the house by asking them on orders of the day. I gave the government plenty of time to prepare the answers. Those answers have been referred to several times, and they are going to be referred to by me several times more. One question was, as reported on page 1405 of Hansard for November 22, 1957:

> Are loans based on the principle applied to the Beechwood project to be available only for projects in the Atlantic provinces?

The Prime Minister said that the answer was no. I believe that the minister should tell us, before we are asked to vote, what other projects there are to which this principle is going to be applied by the present government. I grant that they cannot foresee everything in the future, but surely they would not have put those words in Her Majesty's mouth if they had not had some meaning, some content. The only specific references that one can find in the speech from the throne are four. The references are to the South Saskatchewan, the Columbia, Beechwood and these thermal plants, not one of which is original at all. Every one of these suggestions was under consideration before the present government came into office. Furthermore, sir, they do not accord in any way with what the Prime Minister indicated before his election when opening the campaign at Massey Hall on April 25, 1957.

An hon. Member: Where is the red book?

Mr. Pickersgill: The red book is here, but I have lots more where this came from. He said:

> We intend to launch, in order to assure the economic development of this country, a national policy of development; in the northern areas it may be called "The New Frontier Policy" . . .
>
> We believe in a positive national policy of development in contrast with the negative, haphazard one of today.

Presumably this referred to the government that was then in office.

> We believe that the welfare of Canada demands the adoption of such a policy which will develop our natural resources for the maximum benefit of all parts of Canada;—

Now nearly seven months later the government finally gets around to bringing forward the first part of this national development program.

Mr. Fraser: It took the Liberals 22 years.

Mr. Pickersgill: What did we do in 22 years?

Mr. Fraser: Nothing.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will tell the hon. gentleman on another occasion about a few other things besides the St. Lawrence seaway which is bigger than all the things they have suggested or all the things they have even been able to make any suggestion about.

An hon. Member: What has that to do with Bonavista-Twillingate?

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): Did not the Conservative government in Ontario prod the Liberal government to go ahead with the St. Lawrence seaway?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman who is a new member does not realize that on February 7, 1949 my right hon. friend, the hon. member for Quebec East, who was then prime minister of this country and who had only been prime minister for something under three months, went to Washington to confer with President Truman at the instance of no one but himself and I went with him. It was the right hon. gentleman who initiated the discussions with President Truman which broke the log jam over the St. Lawrence seaway.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): Would the hon. member agree that the New York state power commission and the Ontario Conservative government helped just a little bit in prodding you, just a wee bit?

Mr. Pickersgill: We never pretended there was not co-operation. There was, I may say, most excellent co-operation over all that period between the federal government and the government of Ontario and indeed with the government of every other province. There was no attempt on our part to select provinces according to the political complexions of their governments.

Mr. Brooks: Might I just point something out to the hon. member?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not mind a question by the hon. gentleman but I do not like his pointings out.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think this debate has gotten pretty much out of hand.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is degenerating into a debate.

The Deputy Chairman: Standing order 59, paragraph (2) reads as follows:

> (2) Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

All I would do would be to ask hon. members to bear that standing order in mind in the next few minutes. I think that after the next few minutes have passed and after hon. members have settled down we will have less trouble.

Mr. Brooks: I wanted to ask the hon. gentleman a question if he will permit me to do so.

Mr. Pickersgill: If it is a question, all right.

Mr. Brooks: My question is this. Is he not aware that the province of New Brunswick supported fully the St. Lawrence seaway although they do not expect to get any benefit at all from it?

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, I think the members elected from the province of New Brunswick over the years as I have observed them in parliament—and I think most of them have been Liberals—have taken a national attitude and have supported everything that was good for the country.

Mr. Brooks: I am not a Liberal—

The Deputy Chairman: May I intervene for a moment. If anyone is desirous of asking a question of the hon. member who is speaking I wish that he would make his question strictly relevant to the subject under discussion.

Mr. Pickersgill: I appreciate very much your intervention on my behalf, Mr. Chairman, because I am trying very hard to be strictly and completely relevant to the resolution before the house.

Mr. Rowe: You have not succeeded very well in the last few minutes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to take a moment to define again, if I may, what I consider is really relevant. We are being asked, as the Minister of Finance has admitted, to approve a bill to carry out stage 1 of the national development policy initiated in the speech from the throne. This stage 1 is entirely within the confines of one of the ten provinces. Two hundred and fifty-five of the members of this house represent the other nine provinces. We are being asked —and I take no exception to this—to vote a considerable sum of money,—by way of loan, it is true,—for this project. It seems to me that we are entitled to be told what up to now is the whole policy of the government which is to take the place of what the Prime Minister, before he was Prime Minister, referred to as the negative, haphazard one of the previous administration.

Nothing in the speech from the throne, or nothing that we have been told in the seven months in which this government has been in office, has disclosed any project whatever that was new or any suggestion of any project that was new. We have this Beechwood project which has been discussed for the last seven or eight years and which, as the Prime Minister said when he congratulated the premier of New Brunswick, had been completed some time ago. We are being asked to do what I would call refunding of the money spent on this project. The Minister of Finance quarrels with my language. He does so, I presume, because he does not want to admit that it is just as reasonable for the government of Nova Scotia to ask for the refunding of the loan for something they did a year or two ago as it is to ask for the immediate refunding of this one.

The effect of this loan will be to reduce the cost of power in New Brunswick to some degree. The minister himself admitted that. Why should we be asked to do that in New Brunswick and why should it be refused in Nova Scotia merely because the government of Nova Scotia more prudently arranged for a bond issue? Surely what the Minister of Finance has enunciated, if I understood him correctly, is that if a province goes ahead and does something imprudently and then finds it cannot float a bond issue itself, it is then our duty to do it for them; but if they are prudent and careful, as Nova Scotia was, and do it themselves, then they are not entitled to as favourable treatment. Is that the policy? It seems to me that what we have had so far are a few bits and pieces left over from before June 10 and that we should not be asked on this basis to approve this resolution without being told what else the government is going to do in this field.

I am particularly interested, of course, in knowing what the government intends to do about the province of Newfoundland. We are undoubtedly in more need of electrical development there than is any other part of Canada. There is no other province where there are more homes, in proportion to the total, without electricity. I do not think even the Minister of Finance would contend that the province of Newfoundland is in a better financial position to float a loan to develop electricity or indeed to reduce the cost of electricity that is already developed, because that is all we are doing here. We are not developing anything new; it is all completed. The Minister of Finance says it is in operation. We are simply reducing the cost of something that is already in operation. Why should not that be done in Newfoundland merely because bonds have been floated. It seems to me that is a very difficult principle to get anyone to accept. Why should it not be done in Nova Scotia? What is going to be done for Prince Edward Island? I understand that earlier today the Prime Minister told the house that he had had a telegram only yesterday from the premier of Prince Edward Island—before the house. I would ask him to make his remarks relevant to the subject matter under discussion.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. gentleman is far away from the subject

Mr. Pickersgill: I submit, Mr. Chairman, with the greatest possible deference and respect that, the Minister of Finance having said that this proposal was part of a national policy it is surely proper for any of us to ask how the principle behind this proposal will apply in other places. If this were purely an isolated matter not connected with anything else, and if the government were just coming here and saying that the province of New Brunswick is in financial difficulties and that notwithstanding anything else in any other part of the country we should come to their aid, that would be one thing. But they are not saying that. They are saying that this is stage 1 of a national policy. We are being asked to approve stage 1 and to spend a considerable amount of money on a policy—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The matter before the house is as follows: House in committee of the whole on a certain proposed resolution to authorize loans to the government of New Brunswick for the development of hydroelectric power at Beechwood on the Saint John river.

That has nothing to do with anything in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland or any other place. It is tied down strictly to the government of New Brunswick. I wish the hon. gentleman, who certainly knows the rules of the house better than most of us and far better than I do, would use his own good judgment and stay within the rules.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will endeavour to do my best, Mr. Chairman, to stay within the rules and I of course would not for one moment, as a member of the house of only four years standing, put my judgment about the rules or about any other matter against the judgment of Your Honour. However, the resolution does say that it is expedient to do this and it seems to me that determination of that expediency depends upon the reasons for which we are taking this action. Surely that is the essential point, the fundamental point? Are we being asked to do this as a rescue operation because the government of New Brunswick is broke. Is that the reason, or are we being asked to do it as part of a national policy.

The Minister of Finance said when I asked him a question and when, for the first time to my recollection he gave a simple and straightforward answer for which I was grateful, that this was part of a national policy. Surely before we are asked to discharge this most fundamental of the obligations of the House of Commons—to vote the taxpayers' money—we are entitled to make the fullest and most searching inquiry into the reasons for which we are being asked to spend that money. We are also entitled to ask what it is eventually going to involve, not just what it is going to involve in approving this policy. If I might venture an analogy, the Minister of National Defence on many occasions has asked the house to approve the prototype of aeroplanes—

Mr. Rowe: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Surely the hon. member is not suggesting that we should waste the time of the house while he tries to convince the house that it is relevant for him to be saying, first, that it is part of the national policy only that we are discussing and then that it is relevant to demand that we should discuss all parts of the national policy. We are now getting into defence and I submit that it is so irrelevant that it might almost make us forget that the hon. member tries to be relevant.

Mr. Lesage: The chairman will be in a very embarrassing position.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is, I am afraid, becoming clearer and clearer why the Prime Minister is willing to move for the abolition of closure in this house. We do not have to have formal closure because we have closure from the government benches. I have been attempting to discuss this matter which is a matter in which I am being asked to vote money collected from my constituents and from the constituents in the other parts of Canada to do a particular job in a particular place, and which is supposed to be part of a policy about which we are told nothing. Furthermore, we are told that we are not entitled to inquire even as to the cost of the power produced; that it is irrelevant to this discussion. We are told we are not entitled to find out whether this plant is efficient or inefficient; it does not matter, we have to pay for it anyway. We have to pay out this money blind and now we are told that although the Prime Minister has said—and it is here in answer to a question—that this is part of a policy that applies to all the provinces, we are not entitled to inquire how it would apply, where it would apply or under what circumstances it would apply.

If we are going to have all these restrictions placed upon us I do not know what point there is in having these discussions at all, but I am going to endeavour to keep within the rules, to continue my inquiries and to hope that one of the members on the treasury bench, who were not so slow about making inquiries themselves when they sat over here, will make some effort to answer some of these questions after they have been put.

I would like to know, firstly, whether the government has in mind at the present time any projects whatever in the province of Newfoundland? Whether any attempt has been made to expand this national policy to the province of Newfoundland; that is to say the national policy embodied in Beechwood?

The Prime Minister said it would be extended to all the provinces; he said it was not going to be haphazard but that it was going to be planned and organized. That is what he said before the election. I would like to know what is going to be done in Newfoundland, what is going to be done in Prince Edward Island and what is going to be done in response to requests made at the federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, surely this irrelevancy has gone far enough. My hon. friend is going to discuss every project right across Canada if this goes on. Surely there must be an end to this obstructive breach of the rules of the house.

The Deputy Chairman: I should like to remind the hon. member that his time has expired in any event.

Mr. Hansell: I am not going to make any extended speech because I had one jotted down here in which I was going to talk on the thermal energy power plants and, just as I was going to speak I discovered the minister was objecting to the bringing of this particular type of power into this debate by reason of the fact that the next order of business is to be a resolution dealing with thermal power.

I would, however, like to receive the assurance of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who is the sponsor of the further resolution, that we will be able to discuss in the fullest and the freest possible way the subject matter of thermal electric power projects. I would like to have this promise. Otherwise I will try to give my speech on this particular resolution.

I appreciate what the minister has said to the effect that he and the government are interested in assisting in projects which would bring widespread benefit to the people. That is what he said. I think perhaps when he said it he must surely have had his tongue in his cheek because some of us remember not so many months ago when a matter was before us to provide for loans to another great project in Canada which would benefit a terrific number of people, the hon. minister and his party at that time were so vociferous in their attacks on the proposal, and he himself was such a bad boy at the time, that we read him out of the house—yes, and he draped his desk with the flag. That is how interested he was in assisting a project which would bring widespread benefits to the people.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question? Is there no difference between making a loan to a private corporation and a loan to a provincial government?

Mr. Hansell: There certainly is a difference, but in principle the difference is that you are either doing it to a provincial government or you are doing it to a private corporation. But the principle of the loan is the same.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Hansell: I am only answering the hon. member's question.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. gentleman is answering a lot of questions all of which are out of order.

Mr. Hansell: Well, the question itself should not have been admitted.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member should not have provoked it.

Mr. Hansell: In that case I might say that the loan was made and repaid before maturity with interest.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And Tanner and Coates made their millions.

Mr. Hansell: And the treasury of this country benefitted thereby. However, I want to ask the minister now if he will give us an assurance that we will be able to discuss this matter of thermal nuclear power projects in the widest field, because this is a resolution with great possibilities and we want that assurance now.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): To which minister are you referring?

Mr. Hansell: Either one could give me the assurance.

Mr. Fleming: The hon. member is a senior member of this house and he knows the rules of relevancy. The next resolution is one that refers specifically to thermo-electric power. It will be for the chairman of the committee to determine what discussion is relevant to that resolution; it is not for me as a minister or as a member of this committee to lay down the interpretation which shall be given. The chairman of the committee will do that. But I am pointing out that I have consistently throughout all this discussion stated that a discussion of thermo-electric power projects is not relevant to the resolution now under consideration which is confined purely and simply to Beechwood which is not a thermal project at all.

Mr. Hansell: When you said that you also stated that thermal power plants could reasonably be debated on the resolution which is eventually to come up in committee and I just wanted a reassurance on that point because I had my speech ready to give on this resolution.

Mr. Fleming: I suggest that if the hon. member had something to say about thermal power projects in the Atlantic provinces he should make his remarks on the next resolution, because they clearly would not be relevant to this resolution.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, I want to be assured that I understood the minister well when he said we would be allowed to discuss the cost of hydro electric power produced at Beechwood under the next resolution.

Mr. Fleming: I should have thought, Mr. Chairman, it is clear that I cannot interpret the next resolution. We have not even reached it yet. But the reading of the terms of that resolution makes it quite clear—

Mr. Lesage: There is no mention of hydroelectric power in the next resolution. The phrase used is thermal-electric power. In the present resolution which we are studying the words are "hydroelectric power at Beechwood". My question is this: what will be the cost of the power generated at Beechwood, with only two units, on a run-of-the-river basis, taking into account all the conditions that I mentioned earlier at the substations, ready for distribution to the public?

Mr. Fleming: All I can say is that my colleague, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, has indicated he will speak in the course of considering the next resolution about the integration of the Beechwood and other schemes of power development in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Lesage: So it will be possible to discuss the cost of energy at Beechwood as part of the integrated program in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia?

Mr. Fleming: So far as the chairman who may be called on to rule on the matter considers it relevant to the terms of the next resolution.

Mr. Lesage: I am sure the chairman would be much enlightened if he had the benefit of the opinion of the Minister of Finance upon this question.

Mr. Fleming: I must decline the hon. member's invitation to be irrelevant and to break the rules of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: In this case however there can surely be no doubt that the cost of power at Beechwood is relevant to this resolution. Surely the Minister of Finance is not going to say, and surely you, Mr. Chairman, would not be led by the Minister of Finance into thinking, that the cost of power developed under this project is something which hon. members of this committee should not be entitled to know before they are asked to vote this money. And surely hon. members are also entitled to know how that cost compares with the cost of other power which can be supplied to developments in the same area. Since we have no assurance whatsoever that this information will be available to us while discussing a subsequent resolution, I do not think we should be asked to agree to this resolution until this absolutely relevant information is provided. For my part I am far from being satisfied about this project and I wish to pursue certain other matters. I want to go back to the question of refunding. As I understand the Minister of Finance, this project will be completely paid for before the federal government is called on to pay out any money. If I am incorrect I should appreciate being corrected now.

Mr. Fleming: Well, you are incorrect.

Mr. Pickersgill: It will not be completely paid for?

Mr. Fleming: If the hon. gentleman had been in the committee today when I made various explanations he would not now need to delay the committee by rehashing what has been said and getting all mixed up the information I gave. What I said was that the cost of the project would be known when the project is completed, and it is at that point that it will be determined whether the cost amounts to $30 million or not. The fact is that the bill places a limit of $30 million on the obligation, and it is at that point that the extent of the obligation will be made known, and the loan taken down by the province.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am only seeking clarification, quite without offence, and perhaps I can put it in another way which the Minister of Finance will admit is fair. I understand that this project is to be completed before any federal money is advanced. Is that correct?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, we are informed that the province is not intending to take down the money until April 1 in order to obtain the advantage of the lower rate we expect to have available as the federal rate to crown corporations in the six months period commencing April 1.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think perhaps the Minister of Finance was not dissenting from my point when I said that this project would have been completed before any of this loan was made to the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Fleming: I indicated earlier, Mr. Chairman, that the No. 1 unit is now in operation on a 100 per cent load factor. I may add to that that No. 2 will be going into service for mechanical tests on January 17 according to our information.

Mr. Pickersgill: So far as the government is informed about this project we are being asked to pay for on an interim basis it will be completed before any of the loan is taken up. Apparently the minister has not taken the trouble to inform himself very precisely about this but as far as the minister knows it will be completed.

Mr. Fleming: Oh yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was all I was trying to find out and if we had had the "yes" a little earlier it might have saved some time.

Mr. Fleming: If you had asked the question a little more plainly earlier you would have received the answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: I asked three times.

Mr. Fleming: And I answered three times.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then, sir, this project in the ordinary dictionary definition of the term is a refunding project, it is repaying something that has already been paid, which is the dictionary definition of "refunding". I cannot understand, and I doubt if any other fair minded member of the house can understand why, because a project has only been completed for two or three months it should be a proper thing to ask parliament to vote money to refund the cost of it and why it should not be equally proper to do so in the case of a similar project in Nova Scotia which was built a little earlier. I should like to obtain from the minister, and I am sure that in view of the Prime Minister's answers you would not consider it irrelevant, Mr. Chairman, his explanation in clear terms of the kind of project which could qualify for similar treatment. On November 22, 1957, as recorded at page 1405 of Hansard I asked the following question of the Prime Minister:

> Are loans based on the principle applied to the Beechwood project to be available only for projects in the Atlantic provinces? If not, will all provinces qualify?

In answer to the second part of that question the Prime Minister clearly said that these loans were not going to be available just for Beechwood. He used the following language:

> The answer is that any province that has a project for which there is an equally good case could qualify in respect of that project.

I should like the minister to define the kind of project which would be an equally good project because this is of great interest to those of us who represent other parts of the country. We are being asked to vote for this resolution to lend this very considerable sum of money for this project and our constituents are going to want to know whether they can benefit similarly by this national policy of the government. We will have to account to them for our vote and we are surely entitled to a clear definition of what the Prime Minister meant by that answer to the second part of my question which he gave on November 22.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, the subject matter of the discussion before the committee at this time is the resolution concerning Beechwood and it is not the four famous questions asked by my hon. friend and answered by the Prime Minister in this house on November 22. We are debating the Beechwood resolution and I must decline my hon. friend's invitation to offend the rules of the house by straying into all other manner of projects scattered across Canada.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, may I ask one question before six o'clock. The minister has said that the province of New Brunswick would not take advantage of this loan until April 1. It occurred to me that there might be a considerable difference between the interest rate the province would now be required to pay to the bank and what it would pay under this arrangement. Would it not be more beneficial to the province to take advantage of this loan now than to pay the interest to the bank on this huge loan? In view of the difference in the interest rate would it not be reasonable to expect that the province would take advantage of it now?

Mr. Fleming: That, Mr. Chairman, will be a matter for decision by the government of the province of New Brunswick. Once the bill which we hope to introduce after this resolution is passed the power will be given to make the loan to the province when the province chooses to take it. In deciding not to take it before April 1 or after that date I presume the province will consider where its advantage lies having regard also to the fact that the obligation it will be incurring under this loan will be for an eight-year period.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): What I mean is that from the standpoint of the interest rate it would appear to be to the benefit of the taxpayers of the province to take advantage of this loan now with a lower interest rate than to continue paying the rate of interest that would be necessary to pay to the bank at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could pursue my point. Since the minister is not willing to answer my question which it does seem to me is completely relevant he places me and I think he places hon. members from practically every province except New Brunswick in a position of great embarrassment. We are being asked by this resolution to approve the beginning of something the extent of which we are not even to be allowed to see. We are being asked to do something in the province of New Brunswick and the minister resolutely refuses to tell us how it could be done in any other province despite the fact that the Prime Minister said this could be done.

As I have some rather extended observations to make on this question, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, when we rose for the dinner recess I was just pointing out to the committee that the minister had made it clear that the purpose of the bill to be founded on the resolution was to refund the moneys expended by the government of New Brunswick on the Beechwood project. I know that the minister does not agree with the definition of the word "refund" that is found in all standard dictionaries and that I am using here, but the minister has indicated that this project by that time will have been completed, that there will be no new work, that there will be no further employment in building the project.

In other words, it is not something new that is being done. It is a project on which the work is entirely completed, a project that is in operation and on which there is a debt which the federal government intends to assume, if the bill is passed, up to $30 million. That is what this proposition is. We are being asked to agree with the government that it is expedient to lend the government of New Brunswick up to $30 million to refund these obligations of the government of New Brunswick for this particular project in this particular place, a project which the minister has told us is part of the national development policy of the government.

We have the Prime Minister's answer in the house to a question I put on the order paper which was obviously very definitely considered, that this is not an isolated matter, that it is part of a policy that is applicable in all the provinces or in any province —I want to be quite accurate—in which there are comparable conditions. It seems to me it is quite impossible for us to decide in the knowledge of all the circumstances whether it is really expedient to make this very considerable charge upon the taxpayers of Canada for a project, however meritorious it may be, and I am not discussing its merit at the moment, in one particular place in one particular province, until we know how this policy which the government has told us is a national policy applicable across Canada is to be applied in other provinces, and what in the opinion of the government would constitute the similar circumstances to which the Prime Minister referred.

It does seem to me, sir, that it is very hard for a member representing a constituency in the province of Newfoundland, where the need for the development of power is as great as it is in that province, to say that it is the right thing to do to vote public moneys for this project in another province unless we can be satisfied that Canadian citizens living in another province, a province with even less resources, will be similarly treated by the government in like circumstances. I must say, sir, that it is impossible for me to understand how the government can make any kind of valid distinction making any sense at all between lending this money to New Brunswick to pay off the Bank of Montreal, the Canadian Bank of Commerce or whatever chartered bank it may be and saying on the other hand that it would be quite improper to lend money, say, to the government of Nova Scotia to pay off a bond issue, thus reducing the cost of power to the users in Nova Scotia. It does not seem to me that we should be asked to adopt a policy of limited application to a very limited area of the country unless we know that if comparable circumstances exist it will be applied in other places as well.

I must say I was rather astonished by the answer given by the Prime Minister to the third question I put to him and which he answered on November 22. That question was:

> Are such loans available only for projects owned by provincial governments or provincial crown agencies or will they be available to private power companies sponsored by a provincial government?

This is the answer given by this great Tory government, the apostles of free enterprise. It would not have surprised me in the least bit if a government headed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, or by his colleague, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, if there ever were such a government in this country, would have given this kind of answer but it does surprise me that such an answer should be given by this Tory government that boasted during the election campaign that they were going to take government out of business, that they were going to restore free enterprise. What did they say? The answer given was no, such loans would not be available to private companies.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What would be your stand?

Mr. Pickersgill: What would be our stand? We are trying to find out whether or not it would be a wise thing to make this money available and the government refuses to give us the information on which we can make an intelligent judgment.

Mr. Fleming: Do not hold the government responsible for that.

Mr. Lesage: They surely are.

Mr. Pickersgill: The government is certainly responsible for the failure to give information, and I know of no member of the house who spoke—I will not say eloquently—more frequently, more vociferously, more—perhaps it is rude to say this—noisily—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pickersgill: My colleague from Newfoundland says "more vehemently"—about the denial of information than the hon. member for Eglinton when he was on this side of the house. The hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet and the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond tried vainly all afternoon to find out what this power is going to cost and what comparable power produced from coal would cost, but the government says that is none of the business of members of the House of Commons. We are to vote blind on this motion.

I do not think we should be asked to do this. It is true that this project is finished. It is true that it has to be paid for by somebody and it may well be, as the minister indicated, that at the present time the government of New Brunswick could not float a loan to pay for it. It may well be that it is in the national interest to take the course that the government is asking us to take. They are asking us to embark upon what they say is stage No. 1 of a vast new policy. Surely we are entitled to be told how that policy will apply right across the country. We are surely not to be asked to accept it on faith, to accept it without being told what is involved in the project itself or how other communities could avail themselves of the same policy which the Prime Minister told us is available across the country.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member will agree with me that he is out of order. The basis upon which he is speaking now is not relevant in any way to the resolution before the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: It would be impossible for me, with the respect that I have publicly demonstrated for the chair by putting down the motion that is on the order paper in my name—which I do not think the government will ever allow us to debate—to dissent from your judgment. I readily accept it.

The Deputy Chairman: I am very appreciative of that. I trust that that will be the course of action the hon. member will follow from here to the end of his speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly, Mr. Chairman, I shall endeavour to be strictly relevant. I understand, Mr. Chairman—I understand—

An hon. Member: You said that.

Mr. Pickersgill: —that the interest rate on this loan at the present time will be 4⅜ per cent. The Minister of Finance, having ended tight money in this country in a way he refuses to explain, believes that the interest rate will be even lower by next April. It may be or it may not.

Mr. Lesage: Unemployment will be higher.

Mr. Fraser: You are getting away from the subject now.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am talking about the interest rate on this proposed loan. If the interest rate on this proposed loan is not relevant, I should like to know what hon. gentleman opposite think is relevant to this resolution.

Mr. Robichaud: They would rather have closure.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a form of closure, sir. I should like to know whether this interest rate of 4⅜ per cent would be available for similar projects, for a project that is contemplated and that is on the point of being undertaken by the government of Manitoba in northern Manitoba? I should like to know if this interest rate will be available for any additional projects undertaken by the hydro commission of Ontario. I should like to know—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member knows he is out of order. He is covering the whole country.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, may I very respectfully submit to you that the questions asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate are in order. After all, here we have a resolution dealing with a specific project, it is true, at Beechwood, giving to the government of New Brunswick very special conditions for a loan, for the refunding, in this case, of a power project. Surely it is in order to inquire from the government if the same terms and conditions will be available for other projects elsewhere in Canada, or I do not know my rules any longer.

Mr. Montgomery: The former minister, who has just been speaking, received an answer to that in the one word "yes", this afternoon. I do not know why he wants to pursue it and pursue it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, with respect, I should like to appeal to you to reconsider the decision you have made. Before I press the point as to the right of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to ask questions about this matter in the context in which the government has placed it, may I say that so far as we are concerned we will support this proposal. I shall come back to that later.

I should like to point out that in the speech from the throne, with which this session was opened, there were three paragraphs relating to national development. The reference to the Beechwood project is in the middle of the second paragraph. There are words in that speech from the throne about national development before the reference to Beechwood and then after the reference to Beechwood there was this statement:

> My ministers will advance this national development policy further by initiating new discussions with the government of Saskatchewan—

My point, Mr. Chairman, is that it is the government itself that has presented to parliament this proposal in the context of a national development policy which calls for assistance for development in various parts of the country. It seems to me that before we are asked to declare as to the expediency of this measure we have a right to ask questions and get answers as to the relationship between a policy being pursued with respect to this item and that policy as it might apply to other projects in other parts of the country.

I shall take the floor a little later to make it clear that we are prepared to support this project. We think that what is good for New Brunswick is good for the whole of Canada, but at this point I say that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has a right to ask questions about this matter in the context in which the government itself has presented it to parliament.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to have to disagree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who undoubtedly is a recognized authority on the rules. He bases his argument on the fact that because something was mentioned in the speech from the throne about this resolution, which is tied difinitely to the authorization of a loan to New Brunswick for the development of a hydroelectric power project at Beechwood on the Saint John river, hon. members in speaking can cover any development in Canada. If that is so, no debate in this house would ever be concluded. If people were permitted to talk about all the places that could be talked about the debate would never conclude and for that reason I still believe the hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall endeavour, with the greatest difficulty in the world, to relate what I have to say as directly as I possibly can to this particular project. The minister himself has said that it was part of a national program. I should like, therefore, to put this question. Is the interest rate available for this Beechwood project to be available only for projects which have not yet been refunded, in the sense the minister used the word, that is to say, for which there are not already bond issues? Is the interest rate to be available for any new project in any particular province that applies for it, or is there some geographical limitation upon this policy? How can an application be made to fulfil the necessary requirements in order to get a loan of this kind?

It is very embarrassing for any one who has to be elected in some other part of the country and who has to justify to his electors —as the Minister of Finance will have to do— the commitment of a large part of the taxpayer's money in one particular place, to say why it is in the national interest, what makes it in the national interest so that we can determine what other projects like it will be in the national interest. I do not think even the Minister of Finance, who has sought to restrict debate in this house in a way that was never before attempted at any time in my experience here, would question our right to know what it is that makes this project in the national interest, what it is that makes this Beechwood project the kind of project that parliament rather than the province should provide the money for and therefore what my constituents or what the people in the province which I represent could do to come within the ambit of this policy. It seems to me that we are entitled to be told by the government what is the nature of this national policy, how this fits in, how it works and how a project would qualify. From the beginning to the end that is all I have been trying to say, with great difficulty.

For some reason I do not understand the members of the government do not seem to want to give us any information about this matter and it is very difficult to form any kind of judgment. I am therefore going to make certain assumptions. I am going to assume that any project, any hydroelectric development or any other power development that is undertaken by a provincial authority from now on will under this policy be eligible to receive from the federal government a loan of a comparable character or a comparable amount, having in mind the size of the project in any part of Canada.

The Minister of Finance did me the great honour one day to say that I had made a speech which could be summarized in two words and the two words were "Hate Ontario". I do not think the Minister of Finance should assume that because it is hard to love everybody who lives in Ontario, and particularly the Minister of Finance, one necessarily hates Ontario. It seems to me that there is some rather difficult explaining to be done in order to explain why it is that the Ontario hydro, which has huge projects of development in a province where the government claims it has not sufficient revenue to carry on its ordinary functions, should have to pay what I am told—the hon. member for Welland brought it out here one day—is 5.09 per cent on money while another project in another province should be financed out of the federal treasury for 4⅜ per cent. It seems to be that before we can determine whether it is in the national interest to vote for a project of this kind we ought to be told whether, in the future, loans of this character will be available to the Ontario hydro, or if they will not be available why they will not be available; and whether they will be available in Manitoba for schemes which we know the government of that province has in contemplation. We know that and the government knows it because they were told it at the federal-provincial conference and they were asked by the premier of Manitoba whether their scheme would come within the ambit of these national development proposals. It seems to me that it is quite unreasonable, Mr. Chairman, for the government to expect us to reach a conclusion about this matter without being given an answer.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the reference he made just now to Manitoba I wonder whether he noted that this morning when the Prime Minister answered a starred question about other provincial governments requesting assistance for power projects there was no reference to any such request coming from Premier Campbell of Manitoba.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not criticize the Prime Minister in the least for that because I am sure the Prime Minister interpreted that question as meaning any request in the form of a letter or telegram. But I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is as familiar as I am with the brief presented by the government of Manitoba to the federal-provincial conference and therefore to the federal government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But you cannot let things drop there.

Mr. Pickersgill: From the conduct of the Manitoba government in recent months I do not imagine it is very likely to drop that matter.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): In recent months?

Mr. Pickersgill: There has been, as the hon. member knows, a great and encouraging development in northern Manitoba in recent months about which all of us who have had a long connection with Manitoba are extremely pleased, and it is going to require, in order to develop it, a great deal of financing. I think any hon. member who represents a constituency in Manitoba, including some of the hon. members who sit on the back benches opposite, would like to have an answer to that question before they vote for this resolution. Certainly if I were representing a constituency in Manitoba I would want an answer to Mr. Campbell's question before I was asked to vote on this resolution.

What I say is this, Mr. Chairman. In default of any answer from the government as to how this policy is going to be applied on a national basis as the Prime Minister said it would be I think we can only assume that the government either intend to give or will by pressure be obliged to give, similar treatment to every project from now on in the future. If we are not to be allowed to debate this project any longer in this house and if we are not to be given any answers by the government to perfectly proper and relevant questions dealing directly with the project or dealing with its relationship to the policy which the government boasted about in the speech from the throne, I think we must act on some kind of assumption and make some kind of judgment. Because I represent a constituency in the Atlantic provinces where more power development is very badly needed, I certainly do not intend, because I cannot get information to which in a free parliament I should be entitled, to take it out on the people of New Brunswick.

Mr. Lesage: On October 29, Mr. Chairman, as reported at page 502 of Hansard, I asked the following question of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources:

> Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is it his intention to outline to the house the national development policy which is mentioned in the speech from the throne during the current debate on the said speech?

The answer was as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, I think this will be shown in due course.

From that reply we must conclude that the government has a national development policy. The Minister of Finance said so this afternoon and it is mentioned in the speech from the throne. The government, according to its own words—at least in the speech from the throne and from two of its ministers —has a national development policy. If it has a national development policy, surely it is precise in scope. Surely a national development policy requires principles and methods. A national development policy must be applicable to all the regions of Canada. Hence this question which I put to the Minister of Finance and to which I believe I am entitled to a reply.

If this is a national policy for development surely there are rules and regulations and methods which have been set by the government even though we cannot get any information on them. I will put a direct question. Is the present government ready to make a loan to the province of Quebec under the same terms and conditions as this loan to New Brunswick for the development of the Lachine rapids? That is a very simple question, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the question is strictly out of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: The question has nothing whatever to do with this resolution. The only thing you can talk about now is the New Brunswick development and nothing else.

Mr. Lesage: With all due deference, Mr. Chairman, I represent a constituency in the province of Quebec. Am I not entitled to ask this government if the same treatment that is given to New Brunswick is indeed going to be given to Quebec?

The Deputy Chairman: Yes, on the proper occasion.

Mr. Lesage: And to all other provinces.

The Deputy Chairman: But this is not the proper occasion.

Some hon. Members: When?

Mr. Lesage: I do not see any other occasion, sir.

The Deputy Chairman: As a matter of fact there are wide open debates in this house where you can ask anything you wish.

Mr. Lesage: With great respect, sir, we cannot ask questions except when we are in committee. I submit that I have a right to know if my province is entitled to the same treatment as another province.

The Deputy Chairman: You have had six supply motions on which you could have asked anything you wished.

Mr. Lesage: Very respectfully, sir, on supply motions we are not in committee and we cannot ask questions.

The Deputy Chairman: You may ask questions. You may not get the answers but you can ask questions and get them on the record.

Mr. Lesage: This government never answers questions when we are on supply motions anyway. Am I to conclude then, from the silence of the Minister of Finance, that the province of Quebec is not entitled to the same treatment as the other province?

An hon. Member: You would like to conclude that.

Mr. Lesage: Well silence means consent as far as I know.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hesitated to rise because I thought the Minister of Finance might want to make some remarks with respect to the comments which have been made since eight o'clock by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet. However, I would like to say, as I implied when I was speaking to a point of order a few moments ago, that we are prepared to support this resolution. I agree with my hon. friends who have had the floor since four o'clock that they have the right to ask the questions they have put to the government and that they have the right to expect answers. However, if the government is not prepared to answer these questions we nevertheless want to make it clear that in our view it is good for Canada to have such a development as the building of railways in northern Manitoba, it is good for Canada to have the development of power on the Columbia river,—

An hon. Member: You are out of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is good for Canada to have the construction of the South Saskatchewan river project—

Mr. Lesage: Order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is good for Canada to have an authority respecting the Red and Assiniboine rivers in Manitoba—

Mr. Lesage: You are out of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): — and likewise it is good for Canada—my hon. friend is too late—to have the Beechwood project constructed in the province of New Brunswick. Therefore, Mr. Chairman although we would like to have answers to these questions which would set the policy of the government in its national context, nevertheless on its own feet we are prepared to support this proposal made by the government.

I think the rest of us in Canada are aware of the fact that the three maritime provinces originally, and now all four Atlantic provinces, have made a significant contribution to the welfare of this country. We are also aware of the fact that geography being what it is, the three maritime provinces in particular have a limited area as compared with the vast resources in the northern parts of all the provinces from Quebec west to the Pacific coast. It is on that basis that we think it is not out of place for Canada as a whole to use some of the wealth of this nation to improve and to strengthen the economy of the maritime provinces. What is now before us is a measure to strengthen the economy of the province of New Brunswick and we think it is not out of place for Canada to render the small amount of assistance involved in lending the money suggested in this resolution and, as I have already said, we think it is good for Canada.

We are sorry that the minister is not prepared to set out more fully the government's alleged national development policy but nevertheless, on its own merits, we are prepared to vote for this resolution.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to put another question to the minister in the hope—probably the vain hope—that he will condescend to give us just a little bit of information. I should like to ask the minister if there are in fact any other projects which in the opinion of the government are comparable with this Beechwood project which the Prime Minister said was based on a principle applicable to the rest of Canada, or if the Prime Minister was attempting to deceive the house when he gave the answer on November 22—

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no question of privilege.

Mr. Fleming: I suppose the hon. member having already passed judgment on my question of privilege there is nothing for me to gain in pursuing it but, with his permission Mr. Chairman, I would like to address you on a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman has suggested that the Prime Minister of this country was endeavouring to deceive the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not.

Mr. Fleming: It is a shameful and most unparliamentary attempt on the part of the hon. member to reflect upon the honour of the Prime Minister and I ask that the slur be withdrawn.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I made no such allegation. If the hon. gentleman had done me the courtesy of listening to what I said he would have noticed that I asked him if there was in fact any comparable project in the minds of the government. I assumed that the Prime Minister was not trying to deceive the house, but I said if so would he tell us what was it, because by his silence, they let it appear that the Prime Minister had been trying to deceive the house?

An hon. Member: You had better read Hansard.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the minister will get up and tell us honestly what the Prime Minister meant in answering that question; if he will tell us what projects the Prime Minister had in mind when he gave the answer that there were other projects comparable to Beechwood, then there will be no reflection on the government but if there are no other comparable projects what other conclusion can we draw?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, the tight rope walking demonstration of the hon. member does not change the fact that in his previous double barrelled question—

Mr. Pickersgill: It was a simple alternative.

Mr. Fleming: —he asked me if the Prime Minister was attempting to deceive the house. That is a slur on a member of this house and it is a most unparliamentary reflection and I ask it to be withdrawn.

The Deputy Chairman: I understood the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to say that he gave no such meaning to his statement as was taken by the Minister of Finance. If I am correct in that, then there is nothing I have to ask him to withdraw. I should like to ask the hon. member to say whether or not I am correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think, sir, you have put the matter very accurately. I still assume that the Prime Minister was speaking for the government. I think we are entitled to be told what he meant. I think we are entitled to be told what these other projects are which the Prime Minister was talking about. That is all I have been trying to find out all the evening. I want to see a project like Beechwood in Newfoundland; I think the people of Newfoundland are just as much entitled to it as the people of New Brunswick. I happen to represent constituents in Newfoundland, and I want to find out whether there is anything in this national policy or whether the whole thing is a farce. It is perfectly easy for the minister, who has come in here and introduced stage 1 of his policy, to explain this to us. If the government has no policy I can understand his silence, but if they do have a policy why is it being kept secret? Is he ashamed of it? Is there something wrong with it? That is what I should like to find out. That is what I have been trying to find out all evening.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 243, to authorize a loan to the government of New Brunswick in respect of the Beechwood power project.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—LEGISLATION RESPECTING THERMAL PROJECTS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the government of Canada to enter into agreements with any of the Atlantic provinces to provide assistance in the generation of electric energy by thermal electric power projects and in the control and transmission of electric energy, and including provisions for the payment of a subvention on coal used in the production of electric energy.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Casselman in the chair.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, on December 21, 1957 this house agreed to a motion made by myself that it consider this resolution, which had been recommended by His Excellency. The measure which it is proposed to introduce entails financial consequences which will greatly benefit the Atlantic provinces.

As announced in this house on November 14, 1957, by the Prime Minister, apart from the financing of Beechwood, which is being dealt with separately, the present proposed measure would do two things. For those Atlantic provinces who desire such aid the dominion government would build for and sell to the provinces such thermal plants and transmission facilities as may be agreed upon. The second part of the program would consist of granting a subvention on Atlantic provinces' coal consumed for the production of power in the Atlantic provinces. This subvention would be so calculated as to eliminate, so far as possible, the differential in price between coal used in the Atlantic area and coal used in Ontario for the production of power.

We have had from the provinces their estimates of the cost of the construction programs for the fiscal years 1957-58 and 1958-59. For Nova Scotia the program would amount to about $3.4 million, and for New Brunswick it would amount to about $9.3 million, or a grand total of about $12.7 million for those two years. To complete the immediate program thus embarked upon would cost possibly another $3.5 million for Nova Scotia and another $8.5 million for New Brunswick, or a total of about $12 million. Thus the projects presently planned would cost about $25 million.

There will undoubtedly be other programs submitted in future years which will require to be considered by parliament. These cannot be known at this stage, and will depend upon the extent and pace of development in the Atlantic area, and also on whether provinces in that area other than New Brunswick and Nova Scotia wish to take advantage of the program. Hon. members would like to have a forecast of what the program might cost, say over the course of the next ten years.

We have, at present, no program of development put before this government by the governments of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. As far as the other two Atlantic provinces are concerned, there might be as many guesses as there are experts on the subject of power. One group of experts who have looked at the question recently, Montreal Engineering Company Limited, estimated that an interconnected program within and between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick might give a total installed capacity of 507 megawatts by 1967 at a capital escalated cost of about $105 million. This would provide for two plants in New Brunswick, eight in Nova Scotia and the requisite transmission and terminal facilities. This, Mr. Chairman, is only one estimate of an order of magnitude.

For the purposes of the two fiscal years now in contemplation, a total of $12.7 million for construction of plants and transmission lines will certainly be required. Appropriate items will be included in the further supplementary estimates for 1957-58 and in the estimates for 1958-59. Hon. members of the committee will wish to note, Mr. Chairman, that the amounts of money expended on the construction program will all be refunded with interest so that this phase of the program is a self-liquidating one.

The second phase of the government's program will consist of a subvention on the Atlantic provinces' coal used for the production of thermal electric energy in the Atlantic provinces. For the purpose of this resolution the annual cost of such a subvention is currently estimated to amount to $1.7 million. It will, of course, vary with the amount of coal actually used for power purposes. This sum of money will not be recovered directly. But it is the conviction of this government that the industry promoted and generated by this subvention to the provision of cheaper electric energy in the Atlantic provinces will be worth many times the money expended. Given electric energy at a cost competitive with that available in other areas of Canada the people of the Atlantic region will be in a much better position to compete successfully with all comers in Canada or elsewhere.

Perhaps I should make it clear, Mr. Chairman, that the legislation to be introduced under the terms of this resolution will not in itself appropriate or authorize the expenditure of any sums of money. The legislation is enabling legislation, to permit agreements to be entered into for the program I have outlined. The funds required each year to carry out the program for that year will be sought from parliament in the normal fashion in the estimates. It is the purpose of this government through this and the Beechwood measure to enable the people of the Atlantic provinces to have cheaper electric energy. It will then be possible for them to develop, process and utilize more effectively their natural resources. It will make for a better Canada. It is the first step in what I hope will be a continuing series of measures designed to develop Canada. As agreements in principle are reached with other provinces on projects the pattern of the government's over-all policy for development will become clear.

This program is a co-operative one with the provinces in the Atlantic area. Some hon. members may say that there is nothing in it for Newfoundland or Prince Edward Island That, Mr. Chairman, is not an accurate statement. True, it may be inappropriate for Newfoundland at this time to seek to build thermal plants. However, transmission lines and related facilities, which are, as you know, often very costly—and indeed of great importance in the development of a power system—could be built by the federal government and sold to Newfoundland on the same basis as for Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. The same can be done for Prince Edward Island.

This program of lending aid to provinces which have not shared the advantages of the remainder of Canada in the development of their natural resources will help not only to develop Canada's natural resources in that area, but such a program is among the first steps of this government to speed up the development of Canada's natural resources by Canadians for Canadians.

However important and essential it is, firstly, to obtain thermal power generating and transmission facilities in the Atlantic provinces and, secondly, to obtain them on these advantageous financial terms, the resolution forecasts yet another means of reducing the cost of thermal power in the Atlantic provinces. And it is this means which alone is truly significant in the reduction of the mill rate to the power user. I refer to the subvention on Atlantic provinces' coal consumed in the manufacture of thermal power in these provinces if the provinces so request.

As hon. members know, the coal used in different plants most often has differing heat value. The coal subvention contemplated by this bill will be calculated at that rate per million heat units—technically known as British thermal units—necessary to equalize the cost of the heat in the coal produced and used in the Atlantic thermal plants with the same cost in central Canada thermal plants.

The final and exact figure of the subvention will form part of the agreements to be entered into with the respective provinces. Reports received from 12 plants in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick show that in the 12 months ending August 31, 1957 these plants used 927,257 tons at a total cost of $9,150,580 or an average cost of $9.69 per ton. This coal contained, on the average, 11,885 British thermal units per pound. The average cost per million B.T.U. was 41.51 cents. The central Canada plants consumed during the same period 1,459,881 tons of coal and the cost per million B.T.U. was 34.73 cents. On the basis of these figures, the assistance would be the difference between 41.51 cents and 34.73 cents or 6.78 cents per million B.T.U.

The rate of assistance per ton will vary with the quality of the coal used in the individual plants. For example, a plant using coal with a heat value of 13,325 B.T.U. per pound would qualify for $1.81 per ton at the rate of 6.78 cents per million B.T.U., while another plant using coal of 11,190 B.T.U. per pound would rate $1.62.

After discussion with the premiers of the two provinces which have sought federal aid so far it has been agreed that the assistance will be at a defined rate for a period of five years from the date of the agreement. May I say at this point, Mr. Chairman, how much I appreciated the friendly and co-operative spirit of Premiers Flemming and Stanfield in the meeting I had with them. They most ably represented the interests of their provinces, but when a compromise had to be reached they agreed co-operatively and in a sense of complete understanding.

I should add, Mr. Chairman, that the subvention will not be restricted to thermal plants operated by power utilities or commissions but would also be paid to industrial plants producing thermal power for their own use and for sale. The subvention would be paid to the province's designated agency and the province will be responsible for a fair distribution among power producers.

The subvention on coal for power production based on such a differential and paid on performance should, firstly, give the Atlantic provinces an opportunity of competing more successfully with the rest of Canada from the viewpoint of power costs. Secondly, there will be an indirect support for Atlantic seaboard coal to be used in this region. And, thirdly, there will be an incentive to buy, produce and deliver coal of good quality for the production of the cheapest power possible in the Atlantic region. As I have indicated previously, the cost of the coal subvention for a full year is estimated to be $1,700,000. Such a subvention would be paid from funds appropriated annually for this purpose by parliament.

Hon. members will recall from my statement that the program of work envisaged for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick over the fiscal years of 1957-58 and 1958-59 is of the order of $12.7 million. In the case of Nova Scotia, one 20 megawatt addition will be made to the Trenton thermal plant at a total cost of about $3.2 million. In the two fiscal years mentioned the cost for the Trenton plant would be about $2.3 million. Transmission lines in Nova Scotia and terminal facilities would account for another $1 million.

So far as New Brunswick is concerned, a 50 megawatt plant will be established at East Saint John. In the two fiscal years, the cost will amount to about $3.3 million. The ultimate cost of this plant is estimated to be $10 million. Transmission lines and facilities would cost another $6 million in the two fiscal years.

At the end of these two fiscal years the two provinces will be well on their way not only to complete interconnections within the provinces but between both these provinces. This should relieve both these provinces of the necessity of providing immediately for additional reserve or standby capacity as a linked-up system will provide its own reserve capacity and two linked-up systems will provide mutual support to each other.

On the previous resolution, the treasury benches were asked questions about comparative power figures and the Minister of Finance assured hon. members that I would give these during the course of my remarks this evening. The government was asked, what would be the cost of replacing Beechwood power by thermal power, assuming 300 million kilowatt hours, 6 per cent money and a coal subvention. I should state here that the answer given was that such Beechwood power would cost between 7 and 7.5 mills. That was the answer I gave earlier in the house and which now appears in Hansard.

It has been estimated that 300 million kilowatt hours produced by a 50 megawatt unit at Saint John financed at 6 per cent would cost about 8.93 mills per kilowatt hour. The coal subvention on such an amount of power, I am informed, would come to about .9 of a mill and thus, in this case, the net cost of replacement power would be about 8 mills compared with 7 to 7.5 mills in the case of hydro power from Beechwood. Therefore, hydro power, even with a subvention on coal at Saint John, is definitely cheaper.

Mr. Lesage: Yes, but with an 85 per cent load factor.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The figures I have just quoted are based on a 50 per cent load factor. Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friends who pressed me so hard to get a copy of the Montreal Engineering report will look at page 26 they will find that with interest at 7.5 per cent the estimated cost is about 10.65 mills. I am quoting from memory, but I think it is page 26.

Mr. MacEachen: Will the minister permit a question? Could he tell me how many tons of coal would be involved in the production of that block of electricity, 300 million kilowatt hours?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): For the one plant at Saint John?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I could not give that detail offhand. I have seen it but I could not give it offhand. There is one point, Mr. Chairman, which I think is too often overlooked. The New Brunswick and Nova Scotia systems we speak about are to be integrated systems. The Beechwood project will not be used to carry the base load. I heard a good deal of discussion about this this afternoon and I should like to say a word or two about it.

The base load will be carried by thermal power. I am not a power systems engineer, Mr. Chairman, but I am informed that the cost of power is determined largely by what it will cost to meet the peak demand. With two excellent units such as at the new Beechwood plant the cost of peaking will be below that of thermal power. Moreover, further thermal plants will not be needed to meet the peak demands which are growing at a very rapid rate in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

The best engineering advice has indicated that the two Beechwood units now being installed can be "used to good advantage for supplying peak power and secondary energy". The same engineering advice recommends the construction of a 50 megawatt unit in east Saint John if immediate interconnection is not available. This same advice recommends interconnections between the two provinces. This is the program we propose to follow which, I feel convinced, will result in a lowering of costs for industrial power and the further development of the natural resources of these Atlantic provinces.

I have spoken tonight on the resolution, Mr. Chairman, and I think that hon. members will realize that in dealing with the problem of a power system in the four Atlantic provinces a good deal of the information can only be brought out properly in the committee stage. But in view of the turn that the debate on the Beechwood resolution took today I want to conclude with one or two observations which I think will bear listening to.

In the first place, when we looked at this problem in the maritimes we were faced with the fact that here was an area in Canada short of power and generally speaking what power they had in these two provinces in particular was very high-cost power. Then we had to take a look at the situation not only from the point of view of handling the power requirements of these two provinces but of fitting them into the over-all national development philosophy.

Mr. Lesage: What is that?

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle).]

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): We were elected on the pledge that we believed in one Canada. This meant that people in all parts of Canada and all groups in Canada would have equality under a Progressive Conservative government.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Do I understand that under this resolution it is all right to discuss the national development policy of the government?

The Deputy Chairman: As a matter of fact, I think the minister was out of order in the last statement he made.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Then I am to understand that discussion on the resolution we are now considering will be confined entirely to thermal projects and transmission lines as clearly outlined in the resolution.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You asked for it.

The Deputy Chairman: In the extended resolution but no further than that. I see the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I should like to complete my statement, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry; I thought the hon. gentleman had finished.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I want to go back to the second part of my observations. The Atlantic provinces are a power deficit area, an area which presented tremendous economic difficulties in working out the thermal power grid problem. We recognized that every device possible had to be used to achieve the aim of the government which was to provide cheaper power in this area. The devices used were first of all the usual device of interconnections. Second, there was the use of a coal subvention. Third, there was the question of tying in the hydro power in the plants already existing in the two provinces with the basic thermal plants to give maximum efficiency.

May I give hon. members one figure which I think will be useful in this debate. If we had kept the two provinces separate we would have had to build 16 plants while this integrated system only calls for 10 plants. By the combination of the thermal and hydro plants in one province together with the combination of such plants between the two provinces we were able to cut the cost little by little until I think we have reached the objective that was so necessary to attract industry to the Atlantic provinces at a figure approaching 7 mills.

I thought that when I came to the house with this information there would be general support among all parties and I felt very proud indeed that as a new member of the house I should be allowed to play a part in one of the moves that will help one part of Canada to achieve some measure of economic uplift that has been so badly needed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before my colleague proceeds I have one very brief question I should like to put to the minister. If I understood him correctly, he said that the policy of assisting in the development of plants would apply only to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Does that mean that the government has not accepted the request of the premier of Newfoundland that modification be made to permit assistance to hydro plants as well?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, one point I made in my statement was that we had worked out this program with the two provinces which had asked for help. At their request we confined the matter to thermal plants and, although I hardly dare mention it after the discussion we have had, to Beechwood. So far as power costs are concerned, the hydro and thermal plants are interconnecting and we expressly framed the legislation so that the other two provinces could be included if they could establish a need for thermal plants, although at the moment I do not think that is apparent.

Somebody asked me a question last fall about nuclear energy which is not something to be ignored in the long-range picture in these power-short areas. The terms of the legislation apply only to thermal plants and interconnecting lines regardless of whether they carry thermal or hydro power within or between provinces. Transmission lines may be very much needed in Newfoundland and they could be covered. I think that is about the extent of the question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not quite clear about one point. Would a thermal plant in Prince Edward Island or in Newfoundland, if there were any such projects, come within the ambit of the minister's proposal?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes. May I just repeat this to be absolutely clear. If there were a thermal plant required in Newfoundland or if there were any kind of thermal plant required in Prince Edward Island, they could come under the terms of this measure. If there were transmission lines required in any one of the four Atlantic provinces, they would come under this measure.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources said that he was proud to outline this program for the building of thermal plants and transmission lines in the Atlantic provinces. I am proud that he feels proud, because after all he was just dealing with the implementation of Liberal policy which was announced in this house by Mr. Harris in his budget speech on March 14 last. I, myself on April 9 gave more details about the project which was being developed by the previous administration to build thermal power plants and transmission lines for interconnection purposes in the Atlantic provinces. The statement I made at the time was a comprehensive one and an outline of the plans we had in mind can be found at page 3293 and following of Hansard for last session. The object of the then government was to secure power at the lowest possible cost, and at the same time use maritime coal as the fuel for that purpose. I said at that time, and may I quote from page 3294 of Hansard for April 9, 1957:

> It has been decided that an immediate study should be undertaken to determine what new capacity may be required in the two provinces—

That is in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

> —and, having regard to possible new interconnection lines, what would be the most effective and economic location. This study will be undertaken by Montreal Engineering Company as consultants for the Northern Canada Power Commission. The study will be carried out in full consultation with the power commissions of the two provinces.

The report of the Montreal Engineering Company was expected in the month of August. In the meantime there was correspondence between the authorities in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and myself. There were meetings of the officials of the two provinces and of the department to settle all possible details and be ready to proceed at once when the report of the Montreal Engineering Company was received. When the present government took over we had made good progress in our discussions with the provinces.

According to the correspondence which has been tabled in this house, negotiations between my immediate successor, now the Minister of Agriculture, and Mr. Flemming, the premier of New Brunswick, continued in July. In the first days of August the report of the Montreal Engineering Company was received by the government and copies were sent to the premiers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The report has now been tabled in this house. This report contains very definite recommendations. On November 14, when he tabled the report, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources had this to say, and I quote from page 1102 of Hansard for the present session:

> In doing so—

That is tabling the report.

—I should like to make it clear that the report is in the nature of professional engineering advice on a specific range of problems. In providing such advice, which I think has been very competently given, the engineers of the company had to examine to some extent or make assumptions on certain matters not strictly of an engineering character. In relation to these there can well be differences of view, without affecting the accuracy of the technical advice. Unless this is understood there could be misinterpretation of some aspects of the report.

This report contains definite recommendations, seven in number, which can be found immediately after the chapter entitled "Findings". I do not believe it is necessary to read them at this stage, but I certainly would like the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to tell the committee—if I could have his attention for a moment, I am making a request of him. I said that the report of the Montreal Engineering Company contains seven very definite recommendations. I should like the minister, when he replies, to tell the committee if each one of those recommendations has been accepted and what action has been taken, if any, on each of them. I ask this question in the light of the comments made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources which I quoted a few moments ago, comments made in this house on November 14. I ask the question also in the light of the comment made on the report in a letter dated September 6 last and written by Mr. R. E. Tweeddale, chief engineer of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission, to the premier of New Brunswick.

In the correspondence which was tabled in this house, according to an order of the house on a motion by the hon. member for Gloucester, there is a copy of a letter written by the premier of New Brunswick on October 11 to the Prime Minister, enclosing a copy of his comments on a memorandum of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources dated September 30 and entitled "Power Problem in the Atlantic Provinces". As was said the other day on a question of privilege by the hon. member for Gloucester, this memorandum of the minister has not been tabled with the correspondence, and with the comments on such memorandum. All members of this committee are placed in a position where it is impossible to weigh the criticisms made in the comments of the premier of New Brunswick against what is described as the "memorandum of proposals of the Hon. Alvin Hamilton". I am sorry I am giving his name, sir, but this is the title of the paper to which I am referring.

There are four pages of these comments and at one point, on page 3, it is said that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources does not conform to the principles which have been discussed over the last six months by representatives of the government of Canada and representatives of the governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. In his comments the premier of New Brunswick outlines his opinion of the main conditions of the agreement to be reached. I would again ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources if he would kindly table the memorandum in order to make it possible for members of the committee to understand exactly what has happened between him and the premier of New Brunswick and to know what the attitude is, on the one hand, of the premier of New Brunswick and, on the other, of the present government.

I should like to know what has been done about the criticisms of the premier of New Brunswick to try to satisfy him. These criticisms are contained in those comments I was mentioning, and they can be found at pages 95 and following of sessional paper No. 117. According to the program that was outlined by the then minister of finance and myself last spring, the thermal plants and the transmission lines were to be built by Northern Canada Power Commission after tenders were called and in the usual course the contracts were to be allotted to the lowest tenderers in a position to fulfil the contract, and this would be done in co-operation with the province.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a question? How can you tie in the statement with the statement made by your then leader in New Brunswick when he said that if power could not be produced at a reasonable cost in the maritimes, the maritimes would have to do without the power? How can you tie it in with the statement by the then prime minister that coal was too valuable a product for future generations and should be left in the ground for the manufacture of synthetic materials? How can you tie it in with the former minister's statement—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps the hon. member would address the Chair as is required in this house.

Mr. Robichaud: He would rather be outside.

Mr. MacInnis: I apologize, Mr. Chairman. I do not have the experience enjoyed by these other hon. members and I may be carried away by my feelings.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Chown): Perhaps the hon. member would confine himself to asking his questions one at a time.

Mr. Lesage: I do not know what former leader in New Brunswick the hon. member was referring to.

Mr. MacInnis: The former prime minister.

Mr. Lesage: I have here a transcript of the speech he made in Fredericton on May 23. Is that the one the hon. member is referring to?

Mr. Robichaud: He would not know the date.

Mr. Lesage: I quote this transcript:

> Our offer is to collaborate with the provincial governments and their power agencies to get for the people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia power at the cheapest cost that may be made available (applause).

And rightly so. That was exactly the program.

Mr. MacInnis: If the Chair will permit me to say so, I am not at all surprised at the prime minister.

Mr. Robichaud: Get outside of the house and fight it out.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Chown): Would the hon. member confine himself to questions.

Mr. Lesage: If I allow questions, and I usually do so.

An hon. Member: You are afraid of them.

Mr. Lesage: I am not afraid of questions. I have never been afraid of questions. I believe I should be the last member to be accused of being afraid of questions, in spite of the fact that I am not speaking in my own mother tongue, and that when I came into this house in 1945 I could hardly speak a word of English. I have no lessons to receive from those hon. members.

Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted by an hon. member who would rather settle this question outside of the house, I was saying that last year our proposal was that the Northern Canada Power Commission would build the thermal plants to be established in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and also the transmission lines under the tender system. I am asking the minister whether he has reached agreement with the provinces to the effect that this part of the program stands.

I should like the minister to tell the house under what conditions these plants and transmission lines will be operated. The Prime Minister, when he mentioned this program on November 14, said I believe that these plants and transmission lines would be sold at cost to the provinces, as we had intended in the program I outlined in April last, whenever they wished to purchase them. Do I understand that until the provinces have purchased the new installations these installations will be operated by the Northern Canada Power Commission? When the Northern Canada Power Commission operates these plants and transmission lines how will the cost of power be calculated? On what rate of interest? Will it be the same as our proposal which was the current rate of interest for crown corporations? What will be the depreciation or amortization period for transmission lines with steel towers? Will it be 40 years as we had proposed? What will it be for the thermal plans? Will it be 30 years as we had proposed? When they are turned over to the provinces who want to purchase them, what will be the period over which the provinces will be allowed to repay or will they have to repay on a cash basis? All these are questions which I believe are pertinent and which I suppose will be part of the agreements that the resolution seeks authority to conclude with the provincial government.

Mr. Brooks: It is very easily answered.

Mr. Lesage: I hope it is, because it was all arranged before you took over.

Mr. Brooks: That is not a big problem.

Mr. Lesage: The answer is always easy when it has been arranged before this government took over.

Mr. Brooks: They did not know what the cost was going to be.

Mr. Lesage: In a moment I am going to say a word about cost. I am coming to that matter now. Before I resume my seat I just want to say a word about the cost of power. According to the report of Montreal Engineering, which was received by the government on August 1 after this government had taken over, this is the situation. This can be found at page 5 of the findings:

> The average annual load factor in the maritimes is about 50 per cent. On that basis, and using Sydney coal, steam power produced in New Brunswick in 1960 in a large new power station, financed by public funds, would cost approximately 1¼ cents per kilowatt-hour.

When I asked the minister a question at the end of his speech the minister referred me to pages 26 and 27 of the report of Montreal Engineering. There the cost per kilowatt-hour at 50 per cent load factor is mentioned as being at this time, for a 66 megawatt thermal plant firing coal, 11.35 mills per kilowatt-hour. The figure the minister has given in answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond about the cost of power at Beechwood with two units was 7 to 7.5 mills per kilowatt hour.

But as I said, if he looks at his answer he will find it is based on an 80 per cent to 85 per cent load factor. The Minister of Finance this afternoon, when I asked him a question as to how much more it would cost per kilowatt hour on a 50 per cent load factor, just said, "it will be proportionately higher". I should like to know how much more it would be.

The minister has very competent officials and I hope that tomorrow he will be able to give me a reply and to give me the exact figure in mills so that we can compare the cost at Beechwood on a 50 per cent load factor with the cost of power from a 66 megawatt thermal plant, firing coal, at East Saint John on the very same basis. In view of these figures that have been mentioned and the one he mentioned a few moments ago when he said he thought the East Saint John plant would produce power at a cost of 8.93—I think that is the figure he gave—

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): 8.93.

Mr. Lesage: I suppose that is a 50 per cent load factor because of the difference of the figures I find in the Montreal Engineering report. When the minister replies, I would like an explanation as to the discrepancy between his figure of 8.93 mills and the figure mentioned in the Montreal Engineering report at page 27 of 11.35 mills. I would also like the minister to comment on these figures in the light of the letter which was addressed to his immediate predecessor the Minister of Agriculture, on August 6, 1957, by the premier of New Brunswick from which I would now like to quote:

> I am attaching copy of letter which I have received from Mr. John C. Udd, president of Stratmat, Ltd., providing, in some detail, information as to the probable power requirements of the proposed ferromanganese project of the Stratmat company in the Woodstock, New Brunswick area.
>
> As you will note, a price of 7 mills for power will be an essential requirement in the plans for development. It will be seen the immense importance of the—

This is not too well copied by your department.

An hon. Member: You trained them well.

Mr. Lesage: I did not train them. I continue:

> —importance of the price of power to the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission in this, as well as in other mining projects.
>
> Attached is a copy of the letter from Mr. Udd as mentioned in the letter of Mr. Flemming, confirming that his company is ready to go on as long as the electric power can be obtained at a price not to exceed 7 mills per k.w.h.

[Mr. Lesage.]

I would like the minister to comment on this and to know what kind of representations he has received from the premier of New Brunswick in the light of the Montreal Engineering report, especially as to the cost mentioned in that report.

This, as I have said, is a continuation of Liberal policy. It is the implementation of a policy which had been conceived and developed under the previous administration. I welcome it and I hope the answers I will obtain to the questions I have asked will prove that the only thing the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, his government and his officials can do is really to try to improve what had already been so well done.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): In rising to say a few words in support of this resolution before the committee I note and am glad that the minister has said that he has been acting at the request of two of the provinces and I assume from that there has been good co-operation between the federal government and the two provinces in question. What would have been the situation if these provinces had not asked for the assistance of the federal government in their power projects? What would have been the situation if they had run after private money elsewhere at greater cost, rather than even make a request for assistance from their own national government? What would have been the situation had they run, say to the Krupp interests or to the Wenner-Gren interests who were so closely allied with the nazi war effort which so recently came to its dismal conclusion rather than to seek support in a national development program?

As one member of this house I want to say to all other hon. members that I was shocked and dismayed to see that this had been the attitude of the British Columbia government with respect to the development of the Columbia basin. Certainly ever since this government took office, according to starred question No. 45, the British Columbia government has not even requested assistance in the development of the Columbia basin.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Chairman, I think we are all pretty well agreed that these measures serve to implement Conservative policy and Liberal promises. I recall very well during the last campaign picking up the Liberal manifesto of the 1949 election when these very resolutions which we are introducing here tonight were the crux and the basis of the Liberal campaign at that time. It has always been the task of a Conservative government to implement Liberal promises and I feel quite certain that our sincere friends on the other side of the house will not hesitate to give this measure the support it deserves.

This resolution, like the one that was presented today to the house for Beechwood, confirms in a very concrete manner the determination of this government to carry out to the letter the program of our party as it was explained to the people of Canada before and since the general election. We who sat on the opposite side of the house while the former government dilly dallied and pussy footed around and ignored our just and long unanswered demands know how the present opposition—the long to be opposition—ignored the long neglected rights of the Atlantic provinces. All that is needed is a review of our demands over the years and the do-nothing reaction these demands received from the former government to understand very clearly the record of the late Liberal party as being one of indifference, inaction and downright irresponsibility toward the people of the maritime provinces.

In the long and colourful history of the maritime provinces the rights of those provinces have stood out as being neglected by the federal government. I think we must recognize that our economic troubles in the maritime provinces really began with confederation. The promises and the considerations upon which the maritime provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order.

Mr. Van Horne: —entered confederation—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, in the light of the rulings of the previous chairman I wonder how the hon. member relates what he is saying to thermal plants?

Mr. Van Horne: I am merely reciting these points to illustrate and lead up to my main point which is that we in the maritime provinces are very grateful now that we have finally got a government in Ottawa which will recognize our rights and do something about them. One has only to consider the history of the maritime provinces since confederation and the inaction on the part of the Liberal government for the past 20 years.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Chown): Order. Would the hon. gentleman please confine himself to the contents of the resolution before the house.

Mr. Van Horne: The only purpose in my rising this evening is to say how grateful we are in the maritime provinces that at last we have a government which is prepared to do something, and not a government such as we had previously. I can recall when I was sitting as a member of the opposition getting up time after time to ask the prime minister when he was going to buckle down and do something for the maritimes; I can recall one occasion when I accused the former government of staging a sit down strike, and the prime minister answered: I wish the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska would go on a sit down strike himself—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Chown): I am sorry, but I must ask the hon. gentleman once more to confine his remarks to the resolution.

Mr. Van Horne: It is indeed an honour, Mr. Chairman, to support this resolution. It may be very useful to say a word or two to hon. members of this house who do not come from the maritime provinces on the advantages it will bring us from a trade point of view. The development of our industry is based upon power; it is based upon power co-ordinated with transportation. If the maritime provinces had one advantage before confederation it was cheap transportation by water, and if there is one thing which has hindered our progress since confederation it is transportation difficulties coupled with the lack of power.

I am not averse to mentioning a subject which was touched on by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet a few minutes ago. I recognize that this problem has been under study by the previous government. That is to their credit. What is not to their credit is that they did not have the stamina to enforce that policy while they were in office, and it has remained for this government to take the initiative to put into action the policies which are embodied in this resolution.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who has just resumed his seat stated that the present solution is a combination of Conservative policy and Liberal promises. In order to put him straight I would point to the first part of the memorandum from the premier of New Brunswick, tabled as Sessional Paper 117, part of which reads as follows:

> The government of New Brunswick has reviewed the memorandum of the Hon. Alvin Hamilton, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, relating to federal assistance with electric power development in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The review has been carried out against the background of a considerable number of documents and correspondence beginning with the so-called "budget proposals" of March 1957 and continuing through a series of conferences by representatives of the two provinces with the present federal administration and its predecessor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the resolution before the committee at this time has to do with a measure to authorize the government of Canada to enter into agreements with any of the Atlantic provinces to provide assistance in the generation of electric energy and thermo electric projects, and also in the control and transmission of electric energy together with provisions for the payment of subventions on coal used in the production of electric energy. It is, as stated by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, but the implementation of a policy initiated last spring by the previous administration.

In the correspondence and documents tabled under Sessional Paper 117-B we had access to the correspondence which took place since the announcement made by the former minister of finance in presenting his budget on March 14, 1957. Included in this sessional paper was a letter from the premier of New Brunswick to the Prime Minister of Canada, under date of October 11, 1957, which read as follows:

My dear Prime Minister:

I am enclosing a copy of my comments on the memorandum of Hon. Alvin Hamilton, dated September 30, in connection with "Power Problem in Atlantic Provinces", which, I trust, will be helpful to you in presenting our point of view.

With best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

Hugh John Flemming

Also attached to this letter was a memorandum from the premier of New Brunswick on the proposals of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources relating to financial assistance with power development in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Yesterday, rising on a question of privilege, I asked the minister for the tabling of this proposal which was not included in the sessional paper, and I stated rightly that it was part of the documents which were asked for following a return to an address of the House of Commons, dated November 6, 1957, for a copy of all correspondence and other documents exchanged between the federal government or any of its departments and the governments of the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia or their respective power commissions, from April 1, 1957 to date, regarding the development of electrical energy.

In his reply the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources stated that the document referred to was a private document that was circulated to certain of his colleagues. It was concerned, stated the minister, with basic Conservative policy, not government policy, on development with application to the Atlantic provinces, and he added, I quote:

A copy was shown to the premier of the province of New Brunswick. My department advises me that they did not consider it as part of their records and since it was not used in the department, it is not part of the documents requested.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

Mr. Pallett: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is now speaking on a subject with regard to which a comment was made by the Speaker when the house was sitting, and he will recall that at the time the Speaker advised him that if he wished to pursue the matter further the proper course would be to bring forward a motion for the production of that particular paper. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that this is not the time to discuss this matter.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, the document which I am discussing now has a direct relation to the resolution before this house. It is a document which has to do with correspondence and documents relating to the development of electric power and thermal plants in the Atlantic provinces.

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Robichaud: We do know, judging from the comment made by the premier of the province of New Brunswick on this particular document.

The motion for production of papers which was approved by this house clearly stated:

A copy of all correspondence and other documents exchanged between the federal government or any of its departments, and the governments of the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia or their respective power commissions.

How can we take it for granted that the federal proposal was only shown to the premier of New Brunswick as stated by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources when in his letter to the Prime Minister the premier of New Brunswick says: "I am enclosing a copy of my comments on the memorandum". How can it be considered as a private or secret document when the comments of the premier of New Brunswick on this very proposal were tabled in this house on January 3? This again is clear evidence of the attitude of the present government, and at this point I feel I am justified in using the very words of the Prime Minister when, in his final television broadcast on June 5 last, five days before the general election, he said:

Day by day, week by week, as parliament met, these men determined that they would not furnish information and refused information over and over again.

These words of the Prime Minister are so readily applicable today to the present government that I feel justified to apply them in this particular case just as well as they were applicable when the Beechwood bill was discussed earlier.

Without having seen the federal proposal, if we are to judge from the memorandum showing the reaction of the premier of New Brunswick we must conclude that the unqualified acceptance of the proposal would entail specific points of difficulty in the conclusion of any agreement. For instance, in his reply the premier of New Brunswick stated that the method of financing power development outlined in the proposal entailed rates of interest considerably in excess of anything proposed to date by the government of Canada to the government of New Brunswick.

It is further stated that if the rate of interest for power development should be substantially above the federal long term rate, and if the price of power from new generating units financed with federal assistance was to be based on the principle of earning 5 to 6 per cent on invested capital, as stated in the memorandum which has been refused to us for obvious reasons, then the price of power would be at a level which would completely discourage development by high load factor power users in the pulp and paper industry and in the metallurgical industry.

It is clearly stated that the memorandum does not conform to the principles which have been discussed over the last six months by representatives of the government of Canada and representatives of the governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and which were dealt with in detail at the meeting held in Ottawa on August 13 and 14 between the Prime Minister of Canada and certain of his officials, and the premiers of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and certain of their officials.

In its report of the power supply of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia for the Northern Canada Power Commission, the Montreal Engineering Company made certain recommendations which I think should be placed on the record:

(1) That the additional power that will be required in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia in the next decade be generated in the main in a number of large steam plants feeding into an interprovincial grid. Any hydro power that can be obtained to better advantage should also be developed.

(2) That the steam plants be located where they will be reasonably close to the load centres, have rail connections with the Sydney and Pictou coal fields, and be on tidewater, so that coal and oil can be purchased in the cheapest markets.

(3) That the sites for such steam plants be Saint John, Halifax, Trenton and Sydney, and possibly given sufficient increase in load in northeastern New Brunswick, near Chatham or Bathurst.

(4) That the electric utilities endeavour to complete the interconnections between their power systems by the end of 1959, the transmission lines to be single circuit and operated initially at 138 KV. As regards the new sections of line that will complete the link between Saint John and Halifax, serious consideration should be given to designing them so that they can eventually be operated at 230 KV.

(5) That the utilities also do their best to work out an agreement between them that will provide for the orderly installation of additional generating capacity and for the sharing of the cost of spare capacity.

(6) That if an adequate interconnection cannot be arranged in the near future, the 50 megawatt unit now on order by the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission be installed in Saint John with all possible dispatch.

(7) That if the completion of an adequate interconnection between the New Brunswick and Nova Scotia power systems can be assured, and if no unforseen increase in load develops, the installation of the first unit in the new steam plant in Saint John be deferred until 1961, and if cancellation and other charges are not excessive, consideration be given to increasing its capacity substantially.

It appears obvious that in view of this recommendation, and judging from what has been said so far, the government has decided to proceed with the installation of large steam plants feeding into an interprovincial grid. At this point, I want to urge the government to give very serious consideration to the location of the plants to be built in the next year or so in order to provide the necessary power for the development of our mining resources. The Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation have already announced their decision to proceed with the construction of a lead and zinc mill and also with a lead smelter at Caron Point, near Bathurst. The Prime Minister on September 27 last, made the announcement that the government was prepared to share in a major harbour development at Bathurst in conjunction with the mining company's plans for a $20 million expansion and development program in that area. Such a project if realized would have automatically required a substantial output of electrical energy and it would only have been logical, practical and economical that such thermo plants be constructed at Caron Point at the proximity of the load centre required by this proposed mineral expansion. Furthermore, Caron Point would have offered year-round deep-water facilities in addition to its rail connection which could make it an ideal site for such a proposed unit.

When the increase in load will be required in eastern New Brunswick it will naturally originate from the development of our mineral deposits and I was hoping that the government would be practical in choosing the Caron Point site for its first thermo plant, thereby taking advantage of relatively cheap transportation, the most advantageous in the province for the coal or oil required for the operation of the plant. Unfortunately, the announcement made in the last few weeks by the Brunswick Mining and Smelting Company to the effect that their operations would be curtailed for a certain period has greatly upset the people in Gloucester county and the entire population of New Brunswick. I understand the officials of this company were in Ottawa during the week of December 15 and that discussions took place at that time.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Marler: Mr. Speaker, could the leader of the house tell us what business we shall be taking tomorrow and the following day?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall continue with this resolution and then take the estimates of the Department of Justice, the Department of Fisheries and the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Marler: Is the house leader in a position to say whether we shall go on with that program on Friday?

Mr. Green: So far as I can say at the moment, we will be continuing with these estimates on Friday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And Saturday?

Mr. Green: Now, do not ask too much!

Mr. Pickersgill: That would be taking us into your confidence.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to the order of the house passed on December 2, 1957.

Question

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

POST OFFICE, REGINA—STAFF REDUCTIONS

Question No. 309—Mr. Ellis:

1. Is the Post Office Department making reductions in the staff at the Regina post office now or in the immediate future?
2. If so, in what branches or categories of service have, or are these reductions to be made?
3. What is the reason for the reduction, or proposed reduction, in each instance?
4. On whose advice or recommendation was the decision made?
5. What provision is being made for employees affected by present or proposed staff reductions?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. The strength of the staffs at all larger post offices is under constant review and, when warranted, additions or reductions are made. At present the staff of part-time employees at Regina is under study but no decisions have yet been made.
2. See answer to No. 1.
3. See answer to No. 1.
4. Decisions are usually based on the recommendations of senior field officers.
5. Employees affected by staff reductions are assigned, where possible, to existing vacancies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, January 9, 1958

The house met at eleven o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—INTRODUCTION OF MEASURE PROVIDING GRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister how soon the government expects to introduce the bill to provide for the special grants to the Atlantic provinces, which he announced as part of the business of this session?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): At the earliest possible date. As a matter of fact, if progress is made with that expedition we hope to see with regard to the current measures, it will be introduced just as soon as the estimates covering the departments that have been called have received the attention of the house, and one or two other matters that have to be dealt with have received the acceptance of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have a supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister whether it is intended to have these grants made available for the present fiscal year, or whether they will only be available for the fiscal year 1958-59? This is a matter that is, of course, of the greatest possible interest to all provincial treasurers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When the legislation is introduced the terms will be revealed.

TRADE

WHEAT—REPORTED PURCHASE OF 1,500,000 BUSHELS BY AUSTRALIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I ask it in view of the uncertainty he expressed with regard to possible sales of wheat to Australia. I have in my hand the Australian Daily News, an official publication of the Australian government in North America, dated December 13, in which this official statement was made:

> Minister for trade John McEwen said today Australia would import 1,500,000 bushels (60 lb. per bushel) of high-protein Canadian wheat for making certain types of bread in Sydney.

He also added:

> If it became necessary, more Canadian wheat would be imported—

In view of that official statement of December 13, and the fact that there has been so much confusion on the part of the minister and in other quarters of the house, I wonder whether he has seen this statement before.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I do not think there is any confusion on the part of the Minister of Trade and Commerce with regard to this matter. The confusion has existed in the minds of my hon. friends.

Mr. Coldwell: First of all the minister said he had not heard of such a suggestion.

Mr. Churchill: I do not recall having made such a statement whatsoever. I said I was fully aware of the situation in Australia with regard to their crop failure and the necessity they might have to import wheat if they wished to maintain their export markets. I also stated that there was no actual shortage of wheat in Australia to sustain their own population.

That would be borne out by the figures which you would find in the Wheat Review. I have the November issue in front of me, and the Australian supply position, as mentioned on page 29, indicates that they had total estimated supplies of 218 million bushels, with total exports of wheat and wheat flour of 92.6 million bushels, leaving a balance on November 3 for export and for carryover of 49.1 million bushels, a sufficient amount of wheat to sustain their population.

The problem facing Australia is to maintain its export position. As I understand the situation, they consider it perhaps advisable to import some Canadian wheat so they could export their Australian wheat to countries with which they have been dealing over the years. On the point as to whether or not it is essential for us to press upon the Australians the fact that we have wheat available for export, may I say that I pointed out yesterday that Australia has been in the wheat business for many years and is one of the four leading exporters of wheat, and that the Australian people in the wheat business are just as familiar with our situation as we are with theirs, because they get constant reports on the availability of supplies. We are prepared to do business with Australia; and the wheat board, I presume, has been in constant consultation with Australian officials. I do not see the difficulty which arises in the mind of my hon. friend.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask a supplementary question of the minister. Does he not think in view of this statement that it would have been wise for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to have followed this up, or is he reverting to the policy of a former minister who said it was not the business of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to sell wheat? I refer, of course, to Mr. Malcolm.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have been spending a great deal of my time on the problem of how to advance the sale of Canadian wheat, and we are having considerable success in doing so. I am very much interested in the prospect for the sale of wheat to Australia, but I am naturally dependent upon information I receive from the wheat board. The wheat board meets daily, as my hon. friend knows, to consider possible sales, and they are not overlooking any opportunity to make sales of Canadian wheat.

OIL, LEAD AND ZINC—INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO PROTECT CANADIAN INTERESTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in view of the decision of the government of the United States to curtail to the extent of 15 per cent its imports of oil from Canada, and in view of the story contained in this morning's Globe and Mail about possible action with regard to lead and zinc, if he is in a position to say whether or not the story of last Friday, that he proposed to take steps this week to see the President of the United States, is true. Is he in a position to tell us what additional protests the government of Canada is making?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to comment on any newspaper story that I have not read or seen. I can simply say this, that we intend to place this question before the United States administration very definitely and very clearly, and we have already taken steps in that direction, pointing out that in the interest of our common defence, if nothing else, action such as this should be carefully considered with all its implications.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the assurance given by the Minister of Finance last Friday or Saturday, I forget which day, has a formal note of protest been sent as yet by the government?

[Mr. Churchill.]

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might answer that question. I do not think the hon. gentleman was in the house yesterday when the same question was asked and answered by my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry, but I was not here. Was the answer no?

Mr. Fleming: The answer was that the note was in course of preparation and will be presented as soon as it is completed.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Prime Minister, who I presume is Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, if, in view of the fact that the Minister of Finance indicated a few moments ago that the note protesting the action taken by the United States with regard to the curtailment of oil imports had not yet been sent, and in view of the fact that that question was put to the Minister of Finance a week ago tomorrow, does the Prime Minister not think somebody has been dilatory somewhere in taking more than a week to draft a formal protest expressing the views of the people in this case?

Mr. Green: I thought you were leaving external affairs to the hon. member for Algoma East.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Having regard to some recent events, Mr. Speaker, I know that my hon. friend has a high regard for epistles, Paul's latest epistle. I also recall that on a number of occasions when my hon. friend was a member of the government—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do so in order to suggest to Your Honour that the Prime Minister relate what he is now saying to the question before the house.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Instead of giving a frivolous reply.

Mr. Pickersgill: Contempt of parliament.

Mr. Sinclair: It is not St. Paul but St. John the Baptist preaching.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Apparently I have aroused my hon. friends. Apparently they have guilty consciences.

Mr. Sinclair: We like our sermons on Sunday.

Mr. Speaker: Will the house allow the Prime Minister to give his answer? I think the house will appreciate that, in view of the character of the question, perhaps what the Prime Minister is saying is related to it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was simply pointing out, Mr. Speaker, that in the past there have been delays. In this case, however, there has been no delay because representations have been made personally and directly, and they are continuing. The formal note of protest will go ahead—if it has not already gone—to Washington at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I noted the very helpful observations made by my hon. friend the Prime Minister. He has said that protests have already gone; that is true. But my question was this. In view of the statement of the Minister of Finance that a note would be sent, and in view of the fact that that statement was made last Friday, will the Prime Minister explain why there has been this long delay in preparing this formal note with regard to a matter of this great importance?

Mr. Diefenbaker: There has been no delay, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, as I was trying to point out, on the basis of past experience with the government to which the hon. gentleman belonged, six weeks to two months' delay took place. But nothing like that is going to take place under this government.

Mr. Pickersgill: We obtained some results from our protests.

[Later:]

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I am sorry that I was not able to give him notice of it but I am sure that either of his two colleagues the Minister of National Defence or the Minister of Trade and Commerce could assist him in answering. The question is with respect to the proposal of the United States government, or rather the tariff commission, that there should be an increase in the tariff on lead and zinc coming into the United States.

Does the minister feel that the speed-up of the defence program in the United States may have any effect on the thinking of congress or on the thinking of the President with regard to this matter?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, it keeps me very busy trying to judge the mind of the Canadian House of Commons without undertaking to judge the mind of the United States congress.

Mr. Byrne: May I ask a supplementary question? I wonder, then, if the minister has anything to report whatsoever with respect to the negotiations in this matter and how we are progressing in our representations?

Mr. Fleming: There is nothing further to report, Mr. Speaker. I have kept the house fully informed on this subject, I think, ever since the session opened on October 14. The views of the Canadian government have been put before the United States administration in a way they fully understand. There is no question about their understanding the Canadian point of view with regard to this matter.

REFERENCE TO REMARKS OF HON. MEMBER FOR CALGARY SOUTH ON TELEVISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I regret that I have not given him notice of this question, but it is a very simple one. Last night on a television program, in commenting on the recent 15 per cent reduction in imports of crude oil by the United States, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) is understood to have said that the United States had little or no regard for international co-operation. I would like to ask the minister whether the hon. member was expressing the views of the government.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. member does not need to worry about whether or not I am given notice of questions, because I have not received much notice of questions that are asked of me here. I saw the excellent television performance of my hon. friend last night and I thought he gave a very creditable performance. He is an example of the type of young Conservative who will be carrying on the government of this country for a great many years.

He was not expressing any policy on the part of the government, but was reflecting in his remarks a great many criticisms that are being directed at the administration in the United States by United States citizens, as hon. members will see by reading Barron's Weekly and the last edition of the New York Times.

OIL—ALLEGED DUMPING OF SUPPLIES FROM VENEZUELA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, of which he took notice yesterday. My question had to do with the dumping of oil from Venezuela, and he said that he would give an answer later.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I took notice of the question and I have passed it over to the proper department, which is the Department of National Revenue.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MISSION TO COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Could the minister bring the house up to date on the progress of the trade expedition to China, and indicate whether we are likely to sell any wheat to China in 1958?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there was no trade expedition to China—

Mr. Marler: Flower gathering.

Mr. Pickersgill: Unofficial visit.

Mr. Churchill: —in the ordinary meaning of "expedition". Our trade commissioner from Hong Kong visited China and did report that there might be some opportunity to sell a certain amount of wheat in that country, but nothing has been brought to my attention in that regard during the last few days.

Mr. Nicholson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister expect that we will be able to sell wheat to China prior to recognizing the fact that the government of China is on the mainland rather than in Formosa?

Mr. Churchill: If wheat is sold to China the sales will be arranged through Chinese importers who will make contact with business firms in this country that are in the business of selling wheat.

Mr. Coldwell: Under the kind of economy they have there, are the importers not the government of China?

Mr. Churchill: I think perhaps that is correct, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend may have more knowledge of the fact than I have, but my understanding is that the government of China operates through state-controlled agencies.

Mr. Coldwell: The only knowledge I have is the general knowledge, which is universal throughout the world, I think, at least knowledge by intelligent people.

Mr. Pearson: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister feel that the Chinese communist government should expiate its crimes before we can do business with it?

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I am called upon to answer that question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Prime Minister a question. What is his reply to the question put—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

UNITED STATES—REPORTED INTENTION TO INCREASE GIVE-AWAY PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the speeches that have been made by him, which have been well received in this country and in the United States, protesting about their wheat give-away program interfering with our markets, and also in view of similar speeches of the Minister of Finance, and in view of the United States proposal to increase by 50 per cent the appropriation to take care of their farm surpluses and their give-away program, is it correct to say that the policies of the government have been properly stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who said he does not think any action is necessary on our part, or that the United States surplus program is likely to interfere with the sale of wheat to our cash customers? Are we no longer concerned with the interference with the selling of wheat on short-term credit programs or anything like that? Is it the attitude of the government that we are no longer concerned about this matter in which the United States propose to increase their appropriation by 50 per cent?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if you can tell where the question began and the observations ended, I cannot.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister may think he can shut me off in that way, but the country is interested in knowing whether it is the policy of the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member wishes to put the question that he wishes answered I shall give him the floor again.

Mr. Tucker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that we are no longer concerned about this surplus food disposal give-away program represents the policy of the government?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the interpretation placed upon the remarks of the Secretary of State for External Affairs being baseless, there is no question to be answered.

Mr. Tucker: I was stating it in his words. Is the Prime Minister aware that on January 7, 1958, the minister for external affairs said:

> We are aware of the proposed action on the part of the United States. I do not think any action on our part is necessary.

Those words are found on page 2942 of Hansard of that date.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that this is not the type of question which is ordinarily provided for by the rules. Hon. members presumably are aware of what is in Hansard and what has been said. If the hon. member has a question to direct to the Prime Minister I shall hear him, but not if it is that sort of question.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister indicated that I was putting some interpretation on what the minister for external affairs said, and I wanted to point out to him—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Tucker: —what the Secretary of State for External Affairs had said and ask him if that represents the policy of the government. Surely the Prime Minister can give an answer to that simple question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, made by a minister of the government, naturally represents the views of the minister and the government, but the interpretation placed upon the words used by the minister bears little or no relationship to the misinterpretation of the hon. member for Rosthern.

Mr. Tucker: If it is of concern to the government, what action is the government taking on the matter?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member does not think this is the proper place to enter into a debate as to what these words mean. He has asked his question twice and he has been answered twice. I think the matter ought to be dropped there.

Mr. Tucker: May I ask a supplementary question. If I have misinterpreted this, what action is the government taking on this matter about which I understand they are concerned?

Mr. Fraser: You made a misstatement at the outset.

Mr. Marler: No action and no answer.

Mr. Lesage: No information; closure.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION

ALFONZE BARDOS—REPORTED REFUSAL TO GRANT CITIZENSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Fulton) and in his absence perhaps his parliamentary assistant would take it as notice on his behalf.

Has the minister's attention been drawn to a letter in this morning's Globe and Mail entitled "In Search of Citizenship". It is signed by a Mr. Alfonze Bardos who maintains that he has lived for 25 of his 29 years in Canada, and continuously since 1951. Twice he has applied for citizenship and he says twice he has been denied without explanation, even though he has met personally with the acting minister.

I would like to ask if the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration would explain the situation, and why there has been a denial of citizenship in this case.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): In the absence of the acting minister I will take the question as notice and will bring it to his attention.

FREIGHT RATES

INQUIRY AS TO PRESENT POSITION RESPECTING RECENT INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister, and I am sorry I did not give him notice. If he would like to take this as notice and answer tomorrow that will be all right.

I do not want my question to be misunderstood. I am sure we are all pleased to know that the government is not permitting the increase in freight rates until the case of the provinces is heard. My question is, owing to the possible action of the railways in taking the matter to the courts, would the Prime Minister care to state what in his opinion are now the relative positions of his government, the provinces, the railways and the board of transport commissioners?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, under the law there are available, as I understand it, two courses. There can be an application to the governor in council on the part of the interested parties —and I refer of course to the provinces or to the railway companies—and that course provides for consideration on the part of the governor in council.

The other course is an appeal on a question of law or jurisdiction to the Supreme Court of Canada. There is no inconsistency in the position; there is no way the governor in council could anticipate what the railway companies might do.

The railway companies have given notice that they intend to apply for leave to appeal to a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada. The action taken by the government was that of suspension of the decision to increase the freight rates by approximately 4 per cent—3.6 per cent to be exact. The railway companies not only intend to uphold the 3.6 per cent but will apparently contend that 10 per cent, as asked for, should have been granted.

I am not going to place myself in the position of giving legal advice; naturally that would be improper. But I see no inconsistency in the position, nor any beclouding of the issues, for both situations are provided for in the statutes.

STATEMENT ON PROGRESS OF FREIGHT EQUALIZATION INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Assiniboia asked me the following questions:

> Could the minister inform the house as to when the board may be able to make another progress report representing another step forward? Second, is he able to ascertain what the board's target date is for completion of this very important inquiry?

Mr. Speaker, the board's program in the equalization of freight rates is such that it considers that another progress report could usefully be made before December, 1959, the board's target date for completion of its program of equalization. However, equalization of commodity rates, which are now being investigated, is subject to a variety of complicating factors, for many or most of them were established because of circumstances peculiar to each commodity and the territory in which they apply.

Hearings on due notice are also necessary in various cases in Canada in order to give affected parties an opportunity to be heard for, as was stated by the royal commission on transportation in 1951, many serious problems are involved; for example, the effects that equalization may have on railway revenues, on established industries, and on trade and market patterns, all of which are matters of the utmost importance.

The board can devote only a portion of its time to equalization, for its duty requires that it attend to a heavy volume of applications and complaints respecting matters other than equalization. Factors beyond the control of the board may also make it impossible for the board to complete its program by the target date.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. I thank the minister for his statement on the progress of the equalization of freight rates. I wonder if the minister might not consider whether it would be advisable for the board to give a higher order of priority to hearings on the equalization of freight rates rather than apparently placing that matter at the bottom of the list of hearings of all sorts of applications such as applications to close railway stations, to change the schedules of passenger train runs, and so on.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, from the correspondence I have had dealing with that subject I have observed that the people applying to the board and everyone who does business with the board seem to feel that their particular matter has equal importance.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister does not feel that for the Canadian nation the question of the equalization of freight rates should be given priority.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I think it is being given very high priority, but it cannot completely occupy the time of the board. They are giving it a very great deal of time.

Mr. Argue: And have been for six years.

Mr. Hees: And it seems they will be for another two years.

[Later:]

Mr. Argue: I wonder if the Minister of Transport could tell us whether, prior to the railway association making any application for an increase in freight rates, the president of the Canadian National has consultations with the minister.

Mr. Hees: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—REPORTED INCREASE IN STOCK MARKET PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines stock has gone up over four points in the last two days, and that this has been attributed in the press to rumours that the company will receive permission to export gas to the United States?

Is the government making any announcement of policy in connection with this matter in the course of the next few days? May I ask also whether in view of the huge private profits still being made out of this publicly financed project, consideration is being given to placing the line under public ownership?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): As far as the latter part of the question is concerned, the answer is no. With regard to the earlier part of the question, any rumours which may have been circulating and which have brought about, according to the hon. gentleman, a rise in the stock—and I have no knowledge of that—are entirely without basis.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question with regard to the Prime Minister's answer to the latter part of my question. Is he forgetting the stand that he and his party took when they were on this side of the house with regard to this matter?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman participated in a debate with regard to this matter over a month ago. I suggest, therefore, that he look back and read what took place at that time.

An hon. Member: Anyway, he is consistent.

AIR TRANSPORT

FURTHER STATEMENT ON PROVISION FOR FLIGHT ENGINEERS ON NEW JET TRANSPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked me the following question:

Has the minister ascertained whether it is correct that the DC-8's being built for Trans-Canada Air Lines are being built in such a way that there will not be room in the cockpit for a flight engineer? If this is the case will he consider having this change in construction delayed until a decision has been made on the issue itself?

Mr. Speaker, there will be room in the cockpits of the DC-8's being built for Trans-Canada Air Lines for a third crew member, and ample time remains to give consideration to whether a third member should in fact be carried before the aircraft are put into service.

AIRPORTS

DRUMMONDVILLE, QUEBEC—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR FEDERAL GRANT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska asked me the following question:

Has the Minister of Transport received a request from the city of Drummondville for a grant to improve the airport? If so, is the minister in a position to give a favourable answer to this request, which I strongly support and which is anxiously desired by the entire population of Drummondville?

Mr. Speaker, I have now received that communication and the matter is under serious consideration by the officials of my department.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. When did the minister receive the representation from Drummondville?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, it was received after I returned to my office following the completion of orders of the day yesterday.

NATURAL GAS

INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL JURISDICTION OVER RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Loiselle (St. Ann): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the government any jurisdiction in fixing the price for natural gas in Montreal? If the answer is yes, does the government intend to take any steps in this connection?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am afraid I did not hear the first part of the question.

Mr. Loiselle: Has the government any jurisdiction in fixing the price of natural gas in Montreal?

Mr. Churchill: The answer is no.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, supplementary to the question asked him by the hon. member for St. Ann. In view of the stand taken by the Conservatives in 1956 that the board of transport commissioners should control the rates charged for gas, has the government taken any action along this line since it came into office?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the subject has been referred to a royal commission, and we will have its finding in due course.

Mr. Marler: In about two or three years.

HIGHWAYS

MACKENZIE HIGHWAY, N.W.T.—REQUEST FOR USE OF LOCAL EQUIPMENT AND MANPOWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. A. Hardie (Mackenzie River): Yesterday, I asked the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources about the clearing of the Mackenzie highway and the use of local equipment and manpower. Is the minister in a position to answer the last part of that question today?

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF LOAN FUND FOR SMALL BUSINESSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question of which I have given him short notice. Has the government taken any steps or does it consider it necessary to take action to assist small businesses and industries throughout Canada by the granting of long-term loans at low interest rates?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I thank the hon. member for his short notice of this question. The government, as such, has no power to do any of the things the question contemplates. Parliament has made provision for loans to assist industries in certain cases through the agency of the industrial development bank. Further action on the part of parliament, and the relationship of the government to it, would have to be a matter of government policy. I have already dealt with the subject in reply to similar questions asked frequently during this session, and I do not think I could usefully add anything in that respect to the answers I have already given.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. May we, at this session, expect the announcement of the appointment of a commission to inquire into the needs of small businessmen or, as an alternative to that, will the government introduce an amendment to the legislation covering the industrial development bank so as to supply small businesses with loans?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I could usefully add anything to what I have already said in reply to similar questions on previous occasions.

SHIPPING

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO MAINTENANCE OF COASTAL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, and I regret not having given him notice of it. I wonder if any further discussions have been held between the officials of his department and Canadian Pacific Steamships in an attempt to provide service to those communities on the coast of British Columbia that were left out of the arrangements made with the Canadian Pacific when they replaced Union Steamships?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): The officials of Canadian Pacific are here today, and we will be having discussions of that sort.

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND—CHANGE OF RAILWAY TO STANDARD GAUGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether, when he gave the negative answer yesterday to a question about the Newfoundland railway, he was aware that the Prime Minister promised during the election campaign that there would be a standard gauge railway if the Conservatives won the election.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I am not aware of any such statement by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be glad to send the report to the hon. gentleman. Another broken promise.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ROYAL COMMISSION ON ENERGY—REQUEST FOR INTERIM REPORT ON OIL AND GAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): May I ask the Prime Minister a question. Have the government instructed or do they expect the Borden commission to submit an interim report within the next short while, we will say two or three months, on the oil and gas industry?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful the Borden commission will make an interim report.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF RESUMPTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of his implied contention of yesterday that the federal-provincial conference cannot be held while parliament is in session, can he say whether that conference will be called as soon as this session of parliament is concluded?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): That will depend, of course, on the circumstances as they arise in this parliament and also on the degree to which the legislation before the house is expeditiously passed. I will come to the decision as to the actual date of the conference on the basis of the speed and the thoroughness, of course, of examination with which the legislation yet to be placed before this parliament receives the attention of the house.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. When the Prime Minister promised, during the course of the election campaign, to call a federal-provincial conference, did he attach to that promise any condition such as that which he is now enunciating?

Mr. Diefenbaker: There was nothing attached to the promise. The dominion-provincial conference was called and action was taken.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Montmagny-L'Islet): May I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. Why is it not possible to hold this other federal-provincial conference while parliament is sitting, in view of the fact that the first part of the conference was held in November while parliament was sitting?

Mr. Sinclair: Other conferences have been held while parliament was sitting.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend will be able to arrive at his own conclusions on the basis of what has already been said in this regard.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a related question. In view of the urgency which the Prime Minister attached to this question of fiscal adjustments with the provinces, is it intended that the fiscal adjustments which he promised will be available to the provinces for the current fiscal year? All the provincial treasurers want to know that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend asked the same question a while ago. For that reason it requires no answer at this time.

Mr. Sinclair: He received no answer at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would draw the Prime Minister's attention to the fact that I asked an entirely different question on a different subject, and I—

Mr. Speaker: Order. When the hon. member begins his question by saying that he will draw somebody's attention to some fact, then he puts himself out of court and I am obliged to rise. If he has a question to ask, of course I will hear him.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the Prime Minister a further supplementary question. Will the federal-provincial conference be called into session before or after the next general election?

Mr. Diefenbaker: As to when the next general election will take place would naturally depend on the conduct of my hon. friends opposite and the degree to which they follow the course of action they have followed in recent weeks.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the house is wasting its time in trying to dip into the future. If there are any legitimate questions to be asked of course I will entertain them. But in endeavouring to ascertain things that perhaps are not ascertainable at the present time, it does not seem to me that we are furthering the interests of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether his answer means that the government will not ask for dissolution unless it is defeated in the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: No answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: That's what he said.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN PROTEST AGAINST UNITED STATES ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I am sorry I have not given him notice, and he may wish to take this question as notice. Has the Canadian government sent to the government of the United States a formal protest against the unilateral attempts of the United States tax department to revise the Canadian-United States tax convention by reaching its long arm into Canada to impose income tax upon a purely Canadian company? If such protest has been sent, has any reply been received from the United States government?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is a question, I think, for my colleague the Minister of National Revenue, and I shall be glad to bring it to his attention.

POWER

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—LEGISLATION RESPECTING THERMAL PROJECTS

The house resumed, from Wednesday, January 8, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle)—Mr. Courtemanche in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the government of Canada to enter into agreements with any of the Atlantic provinces to provide assistance in the generation of electric energy by thermal electric power projects and in the control and transmission of electric energy, and including provisions for the payment of a subvention on coal used in the production of electric energy.

Mr. Robichaud: Before the adjournment of this committee at ten o'clock last evening I said that officials of the Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation were in Ottawa during the week of December 15, and that discussions took place at that time with officials of the Department of Public Works in connection with the future mining operations and the proposed harbour development at Caron Point site near Bathurst.

As the additional power that will be required in northern New Brunswick in the next decade will depend largely upon the extraction of metals from the concentrate by electro-metallurgical methods, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or the Minister of Public Works should report to this committee on the results of the discussions which took place with officials of the Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation. The people of Gloucester county and of New Brunswick have a right to know if the mineral discoveries and developments which have taken place in the northern section of the province during the last four years, and which will have a direct effect on the future requirements for electrical energy, are to be curtailed for an indefinite period. They also have a right to know what is contemplated by both federal and provincial authorities to assure that these developments will be carried on without delay to the best interest of the province and of the country in general.

In his statement when introducing this resolution the minister stated that for those Atlantic provinces which desire such aid, the dominion government would build and sell to the provinces such thermal plant and transmission facilities as may be agreed upon. Before this resolution is passed by the committee the minister should inform us as to the conditions and terms of such sales to the provinces concerned.

The minister stated that the amounts of money expended in the construction program will all be refunded with interest so that this phase of the program will be self-liquidating.

[Mr. Fleming.]

He should tell us what will be the depreciation on the thermal plants and on the transmission lines, and also if the interest charged is to be the same as mentioned for the Beechwood project, that is, on the same basis as the long-term loans by the federal government.

With reference to the second phase of this resolution, we have a right to know what effect the estimated subvention of $1,700,000 per year will have on the cost of power as compared with present prices paid for coal purchased by the thermal plants now in operation in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The minister should also inform this committee how the cost of power or the price charged consumers after the coal subventions are applied will compare with power produced by thermal plants in central Canada, particularly in the province of Ontario.

The minister should also clarify the comments made by the premier of New Brunswick to the effect that the method of financing power development, as outlined in the secret memorandum which represented Conservative policy on power development and which has been refused to us, entailed rates of interest considerably in excess of anything proposed to date by the government of Canada to the government of New Brunswick. We also have a right to clarification of another comment by the premier of New Brunswick to the effect that the memorandum does not conform to the principles which have been discussed over the last six months by representatives of the government of Canada and of the governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, to which I referred in my remarks last evening.

In the case of generating plants, will the annual payment be based on the federal long-term rate of interest plus the sum required to amortize the plant in 30 years, and in the case of transmission lines will the annual payment be based on the same rate of interest plus the sum required to amortize the lines in 40 years?

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, before this resolution carries I would like to make one or two comments. The wording of the resolution makes it apply to the Atlantic provinces, and for that reason it has a regional application. The use of the word "thermal" in the third line makes this resolution discriminative against Newfoundland, which is one of the Atlantic provinces, because the accepted interpretation of a thermal electric power project is a power plant where electricity is generated from heat derived from the use of coal.

In Newfoundland it is impossible for us to benefit from this resolution because we do not have any local coal resources that may be utilized in this way. We have to depend on Nova Scotia for our coal, and the supply from which we have been drawing in Nova Scotia has been getting shorter and more difficult to obtain as the years have gone by.

The use of this coal in the Atlantic provinces—Nova Scotia and other maritime provinces—for thermal plants would possibly have a harmful effect on our coal supplies in Newfoundland; the increased demand would make our coal either scarcer or higher in price.

On the other hand, we do have in Newfoundland, and particularly in my own riding, undeveloped sources of hydroelectric power which could very well come within the scope of this resolution if the word "thermal" were not included. I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that though using the word "thermal" the resolution does not specify from what source the heat is to be derived. It could be derived from coal, but it could also be derived from thermonuclear energy. It is just a matter of the source of the heat.

For this reason we would prefer to see this resolution amended by having the word "thermal" at the end of line 3 deleted. If this were done we believe it would not do any harm to any other of the Atlantic provinces, but it would be bringing Newfoundland within the scope of this resolution. At the present time Newfoundland is excluded from any benefit under the proposal.

Mr. Batten: Mr. Chairman, the terms of this resolution refer to the Atlantic provinces, and I think it is generally accepted that the Atlantic provinces include New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. So I think nobody could have any disagreement about providing more and cheaper electric power for the maritime provinces, and if this project is going to be undertaken I think it is reasonable to assume that in the development of this additional electric power the resources within a province, whatever they may be, will be used.

If we were to look through the figures with regard to electric power available from water sources as supplied by the minister's department, we should note that the power available from water sources in Newfoundland is four times as great as that available in the other three maritime provinces combined. In Newfoundland at the moment the turbine installation is capable of generating 329,000 horsepower, which is approximately 240,000 kilowatts, and this is almost equal to the total turbine installations of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island combined.

Now it may be true, and I think it is, that if the supply of electric power in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island is to be increased, there is a good deal to be said in favour of the source of energy being some type of thermal plant, because of the fact that there is not sufficient power from water available in those three provinces. We in Newfoundland are not in that position; and it appears to me that under the terms of this resolution as it is now drafted, if the word "thermal" is used we will be ruled out, in the sense that in increasing the electric supply in Newfoundland it would be better to use water power than to use energy supplied by heat. If we were to use energy supplied by heat we should need to import coal or oil into the province.

In these circumstances, Mr. Chairman, I propose to move an amendment to this resolution. My amendment is seconded by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, and reads as follows:

That the word "thermal", the last word in line 3 of the resolution, be deleted from the resolution.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I have before me an exact copy of the amendment which was moved, but I understand that it deletes the word "thermal" in the third line of the resolution. May I point out that by doing that it obviously broadens the terms of the resolution and would in consequence impose an additional expenditure on the government of the day. An amendment of this kind could only be brought in by the government in the usual way in which amendments bringing about the expenditure of moneys is done, and obviously an amendment of this type is out of order when brought in by a private member.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to address myself to the point of order raised by the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as leader of the house. I quite agree with the general proposition that an amendment to a resolution preceding a money bill can only be made by the government after a message from the crown. That is the well accepted and very proper rule which I would certainly never question or challenge.

But if I may, sir, I am going to quote the words that were used by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in his presentation of this resolution last evening, as recorded at page 3038 of Hansard, in an endeavour to convince you that this particular amendment does not in any way increase any charge upon the crown. The third full paragraph of the minister's remarks on that page reads as follows:

Perhaps I should make it clear, Mr. Chairman, that the legislation to be introduced under the terms of this resolution will not in itself appropriate or authorize the expenditure of any sums of money. The legislation is enabling legislation, to permit agreements to be entered into for the program I have outlined.

Those are all the words that are relevant. It therefore seems to me that since this amendment would not impose any charge on the government but would only empower it to extend this policy to plants that were not thermal plants, if the government saw fit to do so, the amendment should be accepted. It would not oblige the government to do it but it would do what the premier of Newfoundland asked the Prime Minister to do in the telegram read by the Prime Minister to the house yesterday.

I would hope the government might see fit to accept this amendment; or if the government would prefer it I am sure my friend the hon. member for Humber-St. George's would be very glad to withdraw his amendment and allow a similar amendment to be moved by a member of the government. I would have thought the hon. member for St. John's West would be very happy indeed to show some interest in the province he represents by doing so.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, may I point out the great fallacy in the argument made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. He quoted the words used by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources last evening as recorded at page 3038 of Hansard, as follows:

Perhaps I should make it clear, Mr. Chairman, that the legislation to be introduced under the terms of this resolution will not in itself appropriate or authorize the expenditure of any sums of money.

The hon. member proceeded to argue that therefore this resolution does not involve the expenditure of any money and any private member is free to amend it.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; the committee is free to do so.

Mr. Green: If that argument is correct, then it means that a private member can amend any bill unless that bill has in it that there can be the expenditure, say of $100 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is perfectly true.

Mr. Green: To reduce the rule to that position would mean that very many government bills—

Mr. Sinclair: Resolutions.

Mr. Green: —which have to be introduced by resolutions could be amended by private members, and that argument is utterly fallacious.

Mr. Pickersgill: Only by the house, surely.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Green: The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources was quite correct when he said that in itself the resolution does not appropriate any money. That is perfectly right. I think the majority of resolutions that are brought in do not provide for the actual appropriation of a specified sum of money. The very fact that this resolution itself could be brought in only after it had been placed before His Excellency and then had to be brought in in the form of a resolution indicates that the measure is one that can be amended only by the government.

The argument submitted by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate may be a very good one on which to hang a political argument, and I think that is all that was intended by the hon. member as demonstrated by his remarks—

Mr. Sinclair: Do not impute motives.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the minister's remarks are out of order.

Mr. Green: —but the rules provide that a resolution can be amended only by the government and not by a private member, and I submit that this amendment is entirely out of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak in support of the amendment as being in order, but I must make it crystal clear at the outset that I do not start from the premise laid down by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just as long as you arrive at the same destination.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think my hon. friend would have been well advised not to try to argue that this is not a money bill. I do not think there is any question but that it is a money bill and that the resolution preceding it is before us for that very reason.

However, Mr. Chairman, Beauchesne is quite clear on the point that amendments can be made to a resolution preceding a money bill provided they fall within the terms of the resolution. Perhaps I should not paraphrase but should read the actual citation on which I am basing my remarks, namely citation 440 in what is left of my copy of Beauchesne's third edition, which reads:

The fundamental terms of a money resolution submitted to the house with the Governor General's recommendation upon which a committee of the whole is set up cannot be amended. Amendments will only be in order if they fall within the terms of the resolution.

I hope you will follow me, Mr. Chairman, and I hope the Minister of Public Works will follow me in this. Relying on that proposition, no less an authority on the procedure of this house than the present Minister of Justice moved an amendment very similar to this one on April 16, 1956. The matter before us at that time was a bill brought in by the then minister of public works, Mr. Winters, to amend the Trans-Canada Highway Act. I ask hon. members to follow this very closely. The purpose of that amendment was to provide certain additional payments to the provinces on terms set out by the government of that day in its bill. The present Minister of Justice, then the private member for Kamloops, moved an amendment to the effect that these words be added:

"the portion of the highway to which such increased payment is to apply to be designated by the province."

This reference can be found at page 2980 of Hansard of April 16, 1956. In other words, what the hon. member for Kamloops asked on that occasion was not an increase in the amount of money to be appropriated, but simply for the right of the province to have the say as to how the amount of money appropriated for each province would be spent. Is that not exactly what my friend the hon. member for Humber-St. George's is asking today? I wish the Minister of Justice were here. I am sure, because of the consistency for which he is noted, that he would agree.

Mr. Brooks: What happened to the amendment?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thank my hon. friend for his question. The amendment was ruled in order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sinclair: You fell into that bear trap very nicely.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My good friend the Minister of Veterans Affairs amazes me. Does he think I would have cited this precedent if it had gone the other way? No. The amendment was moved by the then member for Kamloops and the deputy chairman at the time—that would be Mr. Applewhaite—said, as reported at page 2980 of Hansard:

I might say that at the moment it does not appear to me that this proposed amendment would extend the financial commitment of the crown.

The then minister of public works, Mr. Winters, got into the argument and used exactly the same language that the Minister of Public Works used today—

Mr. Sinclair: Perhaps he pressed a button and got the same speech.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): — that it would extend the financial commitment of the crown. As I say, Mr. Winters made that argument, as recorded at page 2984 of Hansard for April 16; but I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to note that the chairman of that day rejected the argument of the minister of public works of that day and said he was wrong. He said:

It does not appear to me that this proposed amendment would extend the financial commitment of the crown.

He went on to say that it only made a change within the terms of the resolution, which was in order. Mr. Applewhaite gave his initial opinion that it was in order, as recorded at page 2980 of Hansard. The argument was mixed up as between procedure and substance, but he was pressed later as to whether or not the amendment was in order and on page 2986 of Hansard he made the statement again that it did not increase the financial commitment of the crown and that the amendment was in order. At this point Hansard reads:

Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?
Amendment negatived, yeas, 38; nays, 74.

I do not know whether the hon. member for Humber-St. George's remembered this amendment when he drafted his amendment, but certainly he has an excellent case. I am glad the Minister of Justice is now in his seat. The member has a splendid authority for what he is now proposing, because it was the present Minister of Justice who moved an amendment very much like this in 1956. The two subjects are different. One had to do with trans-Canada highway and this has to do with assistance to power plants. The request of the Minister of Justice was that without increasing the financial commitment to the provinces, the provinces might have a say as to how this money would be spent on the highway within the provinces. My hon. friend asks for no increase in the amount of money the government is prepared to spend under this legislation, but he asks that the provinces have some say as to whether it should be limited to thermal electric power projects or whether it will be available for electric power projects of other types.

I have taken a few minutes to develop my argument, Mr. Chairman, because I thought you might interpret the argument advanced by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate as denying that this was a money bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: I never denied that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He would be on much firmer ground in arguing that this amendment does not extend the financial commitment of the crown. Therefore, relying on the excellent precedent of 1956 and on the clear-cut statement of Beauchesne that amendments are in order if they fall within the terms of the resolution, I submit that you, sir, should do as the chairman did in 1956 and reject the argument of the Minister of Public Works and permit the committee to vote on the substance of this amendment.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I am very suspicious that this amendment was really drawn by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a question of privilege, I do not mind the Minister of Public Works having a little fun if he wishes to have it, but let it be made crystal clear that I had nothing to do with the drawing of this amendment. I did not know it was coming. I always have a few notes on procedure ready for the Minister of Public Works, because I know he likes to raise points of order when matters are proposed from the opposition side of the house.

Mr. Batten: On a question of privilege, I object very strongly to the statement made by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Green: In the first place, Mr. Chairman, the argument made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is to the effect that this amendment would not extend the financial commitment of the crown. He uses the very devious argument that the provinces would have to request this expenditure, and that sort of thing, and therefore it would not impose any further financial commitment on the crown. Actually there is a fallacy in the argument advanced both in behalf of the Liberals and in behalf of the C.C.F. The removal of the word "thermal" from this resolution would very probably greatly expand the financial commitments involved in this resolution. No matter how hon. members try to argue around it, that is the actual fact and that is the purpose behind this very amendment. Were Your Honour to rule that a private member could amend a government resolution in this way, then the effect would be that any government resolution could be amended by a private member. The only authority the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has been able to quote is not Beauchesne, Bourinot, or anyone of that kind—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just the Minister of Justice.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Green: —but a ruling made by an assistant chairman of committees, not by the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Sinclair: That is a reflection on the Chair.

Mr. Green: Your Honour is not bound by a ruling made by a person of a lower rank.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Do not forget black Friday, December 13.

Mr. Green: Certainly any ruling made by Mr. Applewhaite is not binding on Your Honour. I suggest further that the ruling was made in an entirely different set of circumstances, and this argument is merely dragged in by the heels to substantiate a very weak submission in support of having this amendment ruled in order.

Mr. Pickersgill: In reply to the Minister of Public Works I would like to make one brief observation. The minister is now contending that this amendment would have the effect of increasing the charge upon the crown. I find it very hard to reconcile what he says with what was said by the minister who introduced this resolution yesterday. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources said, as reported at page 3038 of Hansard:

> The funds required each year to carry out the program for that year will be sought from parliament in the normal fashion in the estimates.

There is no appropriation being made by the bill to be founded on this resolution. It seems to me, sir, that the statement of the minister who introduced this resolution causes the argument of the Minister of Public Works to fall completely to the ground.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to ask the minister this question. If I were to offer him a dollar—

Mr. Green: I would take it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If I were to offer him a dollar to buy a meal and he were to ask me for the privilege of spending that dollar on two meals instead of one, would that expand the amount of money that he would get out of me? I submit, Mr. Chairman, that is exactly what this amendment seeks, and it is exactly what the Minister of Justice sought in 1956. It is not an increase in the total amount of money to be spent; it is merely the privilege of spending it on power but in other ways than the one spelled out in the resolution.

As to the argument that you should pay no attention to the ruling made by Mr. Applewhaite merely because he was the assistant or deputy chairman of committees, may I say that I am shocked at that argument coming from the representative of a party that has had a great deal to say about respect for the Chair. It is a reflection on the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas who now occupies that same position. I am surprised that my hon. friend sits there and takes it.

I would point out that on Friday, December 13, in this very session, we were told we did have to pay some attention to the rulings that had been made previously, Mr. Chairman. Furthermore, the minister seems to overlook completely the fact that Mr. Applewhaite made his ruling on the basis of arguments advanced by the present Minister of Justice.

Mr. Fleming: One thing is crystal clear and is completely overlooked by my hon. friends, and that is the fact that this a money resolution.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I started by pointing that out.

Mr. Fleming: My hon. friend is not the only one who has participated in the discussion. If this resolution were not of that nature, Mr. Chairman, we should not be discussing it at all. Objection should have been taken to the procedure at the outset and the government should have been told that they ought to have proceeded directly by the introduction of a bill. This is a money resolution, and it requires the recommendation of His Excellency the Governor General. On the clearest authority such money resolutions are beyond the power of a private member to amend unless that amendment can meet two tests. The amendment must be able to survive both these tests.

First of all it must not increase any possible expenditure provided or contemplated by the resolution. Second, it must not change the fundamental character of the resolution. I submit to you, sir, that the amendment now before you does offend both these clear and well-established rules. My hon. friends do not overcome the fact that the amendment would involve an increase in the contemplated expenditure within the terms of the bill to be founded on the resolution simply by making the assertion that no increase will result. If this is a money resolution, as I have argued, then it certainly follows as the day the night that this amendment is of a nature that would increase the type of expenditure contemplated by the resolution.

In the second place, sir, this amendment does, in itself, change the fundamental character of the resolution. The citation which my hon. friend for Winnipeg North Centre read from Beauchesne was No. 440, and it reads as follows:

> The fundamental terms of a money resolution submitted to the house with the Governor General's recommendation upon which a committee of the whole is set up cannot be amended. Amendments will only be in order if they fall within the terms of the resolution.

I say to you, sir, that this amendment, far from falling within the terms of the resolution, constitutes such an expansion of the terms of the resolution as to create a quite different scheme from that contemplated by the terms of the resolution now under discussion.

Mr. Carter: I should like to comment on one argument the minister has just made, in which he states that the deletion of the word "thermal" would change the character of the resolution. The word "thermal", as I pointed out, only means a source of heat. It does not describe the source from which the heat is obtained. You could still retain this word "thermal" and have a thermonuclear plant produce the electricity. That would cost a great deal more money than is contemplated by the use of coal. The fact that you use the word "thermal" gives the resolution a very wide application, wide enough to include thermonuclear plants.

Mr. Winch: It is not my intention to become involved in what is a procedural matter but, sir, I could not sit here, after listening for the last few minutes to the arguments advanced, without making this statement, which I do very deliberately. Ye gods, how the attitude of the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Finance has changed since the election in June.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I have great admiration for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I always listen very carefully to his arguments. This is one time, however, when he has gone completely off the rails. When he reads his argument he will find that it is contrary to the usual sound sort of thing we have been accustomed to from him in the past.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am just giving you the argument of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): No, it is an entirely different argument. What the hon. member is putting forward today is quite unsound. He says that by removing the word "thermal" from the third line of the resolution as it reads now:

> —in the generation of electric energy by thermal electric power projects——that does not take this out of the terms of the resolution. The hon. member was quoting from Beauchesne. In the second line of the resolution we have another adjective used. It reads:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the government of Canada to enter into agreements with any of the Atlantic provinces—

The argument used in favour of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's could be used to the same effect to justify the removal of the word "Atlantic".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It might be a good idea.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Yes, it might be a good idea, but it is not necessary, as it happens. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre agrees with me that his argument that it does not affect the resolution to take out the word "thermal" would be just as good if he favoured an amendment to take out the word "Atlantic".

An hon. Member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): That is not what we are discussing. We are discussing a point of order as to whether or not the amendment does enlarge the terms of the resolution. We are not discussing the merits of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's, we are discussing whether or not this amendment affects the resolution and places a greater burden upon the crown.

If the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources had to deal with provinces other than the Atlantic provinces, who in this house would say that would not increase the burden on the crown? If the word "thermal" is taken out, to what does it apply? It applies, in the first place, to what the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo has spoken about, thermonuclear energy. It would apply also to hydro, which is the purpose my honourable and gracious friend from Bonavista-Twillingate had in mind in trying to assist the premier of Newfoundland to get that change made.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre gave us a very happy comparison. He asked of the Minister of Public Works, if I offered my friend a dollar to buy a meal, could he get two meals? I think that was the way he put it. If I offer my hon. friend some liquid refreshment I mean that he is to take a drink, not food and drink; that is the aptness of the comparison to the removal of the word "thermal". If you remove the word "thermal" the effect would be the same as if my hon. friend interpreted an invitation to partake of liquid refreshment as including food and drink. There is no doubt about it; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has gone completely off the rails.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. minister from Newfoundland can have his fun if he likes, but may I point out that when the Minister of Justice sought the change he wanted by means of an amendment of the Trans-Canada Highway Act in 1956, the same argument might have been made that he was changing the terms of the resolution because he was asking that the money be paid in a slightly different way for different portions of the highway than the government intended. Yet he argued that that was within the terms of the resolution, and the chairman of that day agreed with him.

We are accepting this, I may say to the Minister of Finance, as a resolution preceding a money bill. We are accepting the fact that no private member can move an amendment that would increase the expenditure that has been committed. But we suggest, Mr. Chairman, that just as the Minister of Justice had the right to ask that money being spent on the highway be spent on portion A as well as on portion B, so my hon. friend from Humber-St. George's has a right to ask that money that is being spent on electric power plants in the Atlantic provinces be spent on type A as well as on type B. I submit that the proposed amendment is just as much in order as was the amendment of the hon. member for Kamloops in 1956. It is on that basis that I support the contention.

The Chairman: Order. I think I am now in a position to deal with the amendment. May I call the attention of hon. members to May's fifteenth edition, page 678, where we find the following words:

> The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand or recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications.

I particularly draw the attention of hon. members to the words:

> —not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications.

The paragraph continues:

> In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the crown, not only if it increases the amount, but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications, expressed in the communication by which the crown has demanded or recommended a charge.

I read this in conjunction with the citation from Beauchesne's third edition to which my attention was drawn by hon. members. I should like to repeat the latter part of citation 440 which reads as follows:

> The procedure in committee on those resolutions follows in principle the procedure of the committee of supply, and amendments are out of order if they are proposed with a view to substituting an alternative scheme to that proposed with the royal recommendation.

In my opinion the amendment would include projects not contemplated by the terms of the resolution. In other words it enlarges the terms of the resolution and, in doing so, it would impose additional financial responsibilities upon the crown. I suggest that the amendment is an alternative proposition. Accordingly I must rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: We, of course, on this side of the house accept your ruling, Mr. Chairman, without the slightest question. It gives me great pleasure to do so, in contrast to the behaviour on the other side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming: That remark is out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would remind hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches of that sad Friday the 13th in December—

Mr. Fleming: This is a repetition of the sort of thing we have had from the hon. member previously. That remark is clearly out of order. It is the most patent kind of infringement of the privileges of this house for any hon. member to reflect upon the vote of any other hon. member of the house. In this case the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is reflecting upon the votes of a good many hon. members of this house on a recent occasion, and he is clearly out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have no intention of continuing this line of argument, Mr. Chairman. I will leave the electors to do the reflecting—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and they will do a good deal of reflecting on that advertisement about black Friday the next time. But what I rose to do was to appeal—and I recognize that perhaps I have not done it in the most appealing way—to the members on the treasury benches, and particularly to the hon. member for St. John's West, to reconsider the position the government has taken with respect to this resolution.

Mr. Winch: Why does not the hon. member appeal to the Chair?

Mr. Pickersgill: Because the Chair cannot do anything about it.

Mr. Winch: Oh, yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman does not quite appreciate the point I am trying to make. I am appealing to the government, not about a point of order. I am appealing to the government to accept the request of the government of Newfoundland, made through the premier of Newfoundland and communicated to this house yesterday by the Prime Minister. That was a request to which the Prime Minister undertook that his colleagues would give consideration. It is a request which, if it is not met, will mean that this resolution will be of little or no advantage to the province of Newfoundland for the foreseeable future. I say, and I hope without offence, that if the hon. member for St. John's West, the minister without portfolio, had exercised upon his colleagues in the government the same persuasive power to get some consideration for the province of Newfoundland that he has exercised in trying to prevent us on this side of the house from getting that consideration, his constituents would probably have appreciated his efforts more.

It seems to me that if this is—and I am sure you will not say I am out of order in saying this, Mr. Chairman—part of a national policy, and the minister himself said it was that last night, it is surely extraordinary that there should be a deliberate refusal—because, that is what it appears to be—to include one of the Atlantic provinces which needs this help so much. A deliberate refusal of that kind is surely not the way in which to carry out a national policy. I am appealing to the government seriously and sincerely. This is a good resolution. I am in favour of it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a good policy. With a few minor modifications, which I do not think are improvements, it is the policy enunciated by my friend Mr. Harris in his budget speech, explained to the house by my colleague the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet—

Mr. Fleming: Nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and accepted by the premiers of both Nova Scotia and New Brunswick until certain other events intervened when those gentlemen, for reasons to which I am not going to ascribe any motives, decided the matter should be delayed. There is no doubt that if certain events had not taken place in the way in which they did take place, that policy would have been carried out probably a good deal more quickly by the former administration.

But I say this is a good resolution, and I will support it whether or not the government amends it because it is a good sound thing to do. I am glad they are doing it. Any credit they can get for it, in addition to the credit coming to its authors, they are perfectly entitled to get. But I appeal to the government, and especially to the Prime Minister, to reconsider this matter. It would require an adjournment of this matter for a very short time in order to get the royal recommendation which the Minister of Finance says is necessary in order to make this amendment. I am appealing to the government to show this consideration for the newest province, the tenth province of Canada; to yield to the arguments of all members from Newfoundland on this side of the house and make this gesture of good will and national unity.

Mr. Batten: May I make one or two comments on this matter. When the minister brought in the resolution I believe he was very serious in doing so. I commend him for bringing it in. I think if the resolution proceeds and is implemented in the maritime provinces it will bring to the maritime provinces many benefits.

It appears to me that if you are going to develop electric energy in any area, it is only sensible to use that source which is available. I do not happen to be an engineer, but I think it is fair to say that in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island there is not sufficient water power to supply all the electrical energy that is required by those three provinces. Therefore some other way must be found if the required energy is to be available.

The resolution the minister has brought in to provide in at least these three provinces for the development of electric energy is a very sound one. I can assure the minister right now that I am going to vote for it.

I agree with this; but surely we are not going to confine this resolution to developing electric power in three provinces where it could be produced cheaper by adopting the thermal method and then, for the fourth of the four provinces involved, use a method which to my mind is going to be far more expensive than the development of electric energy by the water power which is available in Newfoundland.

If we are going to abide by the word "thermal" I believe, and here I am in accord with the premier of Newfoundland, that it is going to exclude Newfoundland. When I made my amendment I was very serious in so doing, and I believe if we are going to stay with the word "thermal" then we are excluding Newfoundland and we are therefore not carrying out the terms of this resolution which applies to the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): It is approaching one o'clock and I thought possibly, Mr. Chairman, I could help this matter along by answering some of the statements that have been made in order to make just a little bit clearer what we are trying to do.

I am going to start with the last question first and will answer the hon. member for Humber-St. George's and the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. I would just like to read again, if I may, the remarks I made last night as recorded at page 3038 of Hansard:

> This program is a co-operative one with the provinces in the Atlantic area. Some hon. members may say that there is nothing in it for Newfoundland or Prince Edward Island. That, Mr. Chairman, is not an accurate statement. True, it may be inappropriate for Newfoundland at this time to seek to build thermal plants.

I would like to emphasize that thermal means from all sources of heat; oil, gas, coal, nuclear and every form of heat.

Mr. Lesage: Everybody knows that.

Mr. Stick: We have not got it. We have no gas.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Just a minute. I will repeat that statement.

> True, it may be inappropriate for Newfoundland at this time to seek to build thermal plants. However, transmission lines and related facilities which are, as you know, often very costly—and indeed of great importance in the development of a power system—could be built by the federal government and sold to Newfoundland on the same basis as for Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. The same can be done for Prince Edward Island.

In all fairness, Mr. Chairman, I feel this resolution we have before us came about, as I described to the house last evening, at the request of two provinces, and we have received formal requests from neither of the other two provinces.

Mr. Lesage: It did not come from two provinces. It was initiated by the former government.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Just hold your horses a minute—

Mr. Lesage: You had better be accurate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And get off yours.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I would like to complete this statement.

At the request of the two provinces and in discussion with those two provinces we arrived at this solution to the problem, which was one of obtaining cheaper power. Beechwood was separated from this thermal proposition; and it may interest the house to know that there are other hydro projects in New Brunswick and in Nova Scotia about which there have been discussions and which do not come under this bill because in their discussions with this government these two provinces asked for them to be kept out.

In order to achieve our purpose of providing cheaper power for this area we set it up in this manner, but I would like to emphasize, that this was under discussion with these provinces. There was no effort made here to force any unilateral decision by this government on those two provinces. There was debate, there was discussion, and some of the ideas I proposed were not accepted while others were accepted.

Mr. Lesage: It is always like that.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): And vice versa with the provinces; some of the ideas they proposed were accepted and others were turned down. I complimented the premiers of these two provinces last night for the manner in which they dealt with me in connection with this matter. We set our minds to the task of achieving cheaper power, and I think we arrived at the solution.

Mr. Carter: Would the minister permit a question? When he says, as he has just quoted on page 3038 of Hansard, that a power system could be built by the federal government and sold to Newfoundland on the same basis as to Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, does he mean that the federal government would do that for the use of thermal power when it could be done much cheaper by the use of hydro power? Is that what the minister's statement means?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): No, Mr. Chairman, the minister means that if the province of Newfoundland makes application to the federal government to build and then sell to them transmission lines in their province between hydro, hydro and thermal, thermal and thermal or any type of transmission, then we are prepared and are empowered under this legislation to make such an agreement.

Mr. Pickersgill: But you will not accede to the requests they do make.

Mr. Carter: If they made a request for a transmission line from hydro power already developed; is that what the minister means?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes.

Mr. Carter: What is the use of that, when all the power is used and we need extra development of power before we can do it?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I do not want to get into the details at this late stage. I was hoping the resolution would go through before lunch.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister need not worry.

Mr. Lesage: No, he will be lucky if he gets it through by six o'clock tonight.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): However, in answer to this one question in the matter of trying to achieve greater efficiency in reducing power costs, the interconnecting power plants, whether they be hydro and hydro, thermal and hydro or thermal and thermal, it is of great benefit to the management of the hydro power commission or whatever agency is handling it if they can move power from one area to another, from a surplus area into a deficit area. This is the great advantage of transmission lines. A lot of plants which have capacity beyond their needs can shift production from place to place, thus reducing capital costs over the whole area.

Mr. Carter: I can understand that, but my point was of what use is that if there is nothing to transmit, if all the power that is developed has been used?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think we had better call it one o'clock.

Mr. Sinclair: Yes; you had better get some advice on that.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Stick: Mr. Chairman, before the adjournment for lunch we were discussing resolution No. 14 on the order paper regarding thermo-electric power projects in the Atlantic provinces. I think it is fair to say that the government has acted in good faith in this, and I think the minister also is acting in good faith. My understanding of the resolution is that it is designed principally for the maritime provinces, but in the resolution the phrase "Atlantic provinces" is used which, of course, includes the whole of the province of Newfoundland.

It may be of some slight interest to the committee if I say that when we came under the terms of union, Newfoundland was often designated as one of the maritime provinces. We did not altogether, like that designation, and I coined the phrase "Atlantic provinces" in this house to distinguish between the maritimes and Newfoundland. In this resolution the phrase "Atlantic provinces" is used, which means that Newfoundland is included.

One can make some excuse for the minister because he is not familiar with the local problems which we have in the province of Newfoundland, but I think the intention was to include Newfoundland in this resolution. First, as has been pointed out by my colleagues from Humber-St. George's and Burin-Burgeo, this resolution as it now stands is of practically no value to Newfoundland.

It has some value, it is true. Just before the adjournment the minister told us we would benefit in connection with any transmission lines which might be built. Well, there are places in Newfoundland and in my riding which need electric power, and we should be very grateful if the government would give us an assurance that this resolution would include any transmission lines which the government may wish to build. But from the standpoint of thermal power this does not help us, because although we have some deposits of coal they are not of such economic value as to enable us to generate electricity.

On the other hand, we have an abundance of hydro power; a great abundance, not only on the island of Newfoundland itself but in that part of Labrador which belongs to my province. One of the greatest potential hydro-electric developments in the world is in the Grant Falls on the Hamilton river. A couple of years ago I went into this question while I was on the committee on research, and the potential was said to be at least six million horsepower, a capacity which could quite possibly be doubled in the course of time. The problem is, of course, to develop that sort of energy and to find a use for the power. We also have in Newfoundland itself undeveloped hydro power at Bay d'Espoir on the southwest coast and other places.

So if the words "hydroelectric power" are not included in the resolution, and if we are confined to thermo-electric power, the province of Newfoundland cannot participate fully in the intent of this resolution; and of course we should like our province to be able to do this. Although we will probably derive some minor advantages from the resolution I believe, as I indicated, that the government in drawing up this resolution and using the phrase "Atlantic provinces" fully intended that Newfoundland should participate fully. It is for that reason, I think, that the premier of Newfoundland sent his telegram to the minister pointing out the difficulty.

I have no desire to hinder the passing of the resolution, and no desire to do anything which would delay the benefits which may arise under this resolution for New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island. But I do say it is unfortunate that the minister, who evidently does not understand Newfoundland affairs as well as we would like him to do—and I do not say that is his fault—has not made better provision for the interests of the province from which I come.

There is a way out. I could move an amendment but you, Mr. Chairman, would probably object. The Minister of Finance objected this morning to an amendment proposed by another hon. member on this side of the house on the ground that it would probably add to the expenditure of the government. Now I am going to say that I believe the government is sincere in its proposals embodied in this resolution, and I hope for that reason the minister will take into consideration the suggestion I am about to make. If he would add, after "thermal" the words "and hydroelectric power projects" I think that would solve our problem in Newfoundland and enlarge the scope of the resolution so we could participate fully in its intent. The relevant part of the resolution would then read, "....Atlantic provinces to provide assistance in the generation of electric power by thermal and hydroelectric power projects."

I ask the minister to take this into consideration. I cannot move an amendment on these lines myself; that could only be done by a member of the government. So I ask the minister in all sincerity to take this suggestion into consideration and embody in the resolution the words I have suggested.

In my opinion this would end all the discussion we have had in this committee today, clarify the situation as far as Newfoundland is concerned and, I think, satisfy all who are connected with this problem. If the minister could at some time this afternoon or on another early occasion take action on the lines I have indicated I think it would be very acceptable to the house.

Mr. Macdonald (Kings): Mr. Chairman, the resolution under discussion today to authorize the government of Canada to enter into agreements with any of the Atlantic provinces to provide assistance in the generation of electric energy by thermal electric power projects is of very considerable interest to the province of Prince Edward Island. The cost of electric power in our province is extremely high, probably higher than in any other province, and higher than the rates charged in many lands.

When one considers the topography of our island, the reasons are obvious. Our countryside is low and rolling, with little water potential and no natural basins or storage facilities of any size. We have no coal, and to date we have no oil resources. At the present time surveys and boring operations are in progress and we are hopeful that the results may be good, but we cannot depend on anything in this line for the present, at least.

That leaves us with the alternative of either importing coal or oil as fuel or transporting electrical energy into the province. The latter proposal would entail combating the high energy loss sustained by underwater cable. The former proposition, that of importing coal, is possibly now a feasible project with the coal subventions which might be paid by this government.

In this regard I would draw the attention of the government to a plan discussed in our area not many years ago. The proposition was to transport coal from western Cape Breton or from the Pictou area by barge to the large port of Georgetown on the eastern coast of Prince Edward Island, where an electrical plant could be set up at waterside. The coal would be taken from pithead to barge by escalator, transported at a very cheap water rate and taken from the barge by escalator right into the plant. This is a suggestion worthy of consideration, and I strongly urge that all the possibilities of this plan be studied. This is especially pertinent in view of the assistance by way of coal subventions which I have just mentioned, and should also provide the coal industry in the Atlantic provinces with considerable assistance.

For years the people of our area have asked for arrangements by way of assistance in providing cheaper electrical power. As in the case of many of our other submissions, we could not get any degree of sympathy for the Atlantic provinces' problems from the previous government. It has been the pledge of our party for the past three elections that we would provide such assistance, and now it is being done. We are pleased and most appreciative that recognition of this and other problems peculiar to the Atlantic provinces has been accorded to us.

This has been another of the milestones achieved under the Diefenbaker government in the development of national policy, a recognition of the particular needs of some areas, a realization that if we are to have a strong and united country we must be fair and wise in the development of every part of it. We cannot leave that development to take place in a willy-nilly fashion to the benefit of the central areas and to the detriment of the outer areas such as has happened in the last two decades.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I would like to add my remarks to those of hon. members who have spoken in favour of this resolution. Many of the remarks placed on the record with regard to the previous resolution under order No. 9 on the order paper might be pertinent to this one. Above all we do appreciate the new principle being put into effect with regard to the eastern provinces. Under this resolution the government has placed the opportunity before any of the Atlantic provinces. I do not know what the attitude of our local government will be toward entering into an agreement, but I hope it will give every consideration to the provisions of this resolution. If such an agreement would give our province relief from the high rates we now have to pay for electrical energy it would be most welcome, and I give my wholehearted support to this resolution.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I have some remarks I should like to make at this time, but before doing so I have one or two questions I wish to direct to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and I would hope that he might be able to answer them immediately. I would like to know if the agreements that are contemplated by this resolution are in fact either in the process of being signed or have been signed, and whether under those agreements the provinces involved have agreed on completion of the power plants to buy them and, if so, over what period of time the provincial governments or their power commissions may pay for the plants or transmission lines?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, a part of this question was going to be answered today by myself in reply to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet, but with your permission I will give my reply in direct answer to the hon. member for Assiniboia.

In answer to the first part of the question, the agreements are now in process of being discussed. When they have been discussed, finally agreed upon and signed I will be tabling them in the house, as I have already mentioned. I am very sorry that they are not ready at this time.

Mr. Lesage: Are there still some differences on some points?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes. We received a letter the other day from one of the premiers pointing out four difficulties he wanted straightened out, but they are minor in nature and I think will be straightened out in a reasonably short time.

Concerning the question of the agreements to buy the power plants and transmission lines, it is a prior commitment in the first part of the agreement that the provinces must agree to buy immediately on completion both the transmission lines and the plants.

With regard to the time for payment, we accepted the traditional time worked out by the department over the last several years. For thermal plants it will be 30 years of annual capital payments with interest, and for transmission lines 40 years.

Mr. Lesage: The rate of interest is to be 4⅜ per cent as of the present time, the ordinary crown corporations rate?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes. It is made clear, Mr. Chairman, in the agreements that the interest rate will be the rate given to crown corporations.

Mr. Lesage: At the time of the sale?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes.

Mr. Argue: I appreciate receiving that information from the minister, Mr. Chairman. As has already been indicated, we in this group are quite happy to support the resolution, believing that it is an important step forward and that it will help a deficit power area in the country.

It does seem to me, however, that the terms of the resolution would have been much more acceptable to the nation as a whole if they had been somewhat different. I am not able to understand the thinking of the government in confining this policy at this time to the Atlantic provinces. I fail to see why in the resolution as it now stands the word "Atlantic" should appear at all. The government has said, the minister has said and the Prime Minister has said that there is or will be an over-all power policy for Canada. If that is the case I can see no reason why this resolution should include the word "Atlantic", which will mean that if this type of policy is to be extended at some later date to other parts of the country new legislation will be required, a new motion, new approval by parliament.

I can think of no other hon. member of the cabinet who has taken more interest in power over the years than has the present Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. He has travelled across his own province pointing out the great need for power in that area, and it seems strange indeed that in introducing this legislation, the first brought in by this government to deal with power, the province of Saskatchewan from which the minister comes would have been omitted from the resolution.

No one can say that the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia do not require some assistance. I think it could be readily proven that these are depressed areas as far as power is concerned; but no matter what yardstick is used to determine whether those provinces are depressed in regard to power I believe the same yardstick will show that other provinces in this country also have a good claim for this type of assistance from the government.

I hold in my hand statistics which were supplied by the Saskatchewan Power Corporation. They relate to power needs and power facilities in various provinces of this country. They point out that in Nova Scotia there are 27 power outlets per 100 of population; in New Brunswick, 26 per 100; in British Columbia, 31 per 100; and in Saskatchewan just 24 per 100. On the basis of those figures alone I suggest that a province like Saskatchewan should have as good a claim for the same consideration under this legislation as has the province of New Brunswick or the province of Nova Scotia.

I tell the minister that the terms of repayment he has outlined, namely 30 years for power plants and 40 years for transmission lines, are good terms. I think the length of time for repayment is reasonable. I do not think anyone can quarrel with those provisions; but I can tell him, and I think he is already aware of it, that these are precisely the same kind of terms and the same kind of conditions for the building of thermal plants as are required in the province from which he comes. A burden is now being placed on the treasury of that province for expansion in the field of power which makes it a question mark whether the province can meet the power needs of the people in that area in the future.

Therefore I am suggesting to the minister and the government that this legislation, precisely because it is good legislation, should not be confined to the Atlantic provinces. If the government has a national policy—and some of us are wondering whether it is a national policy at all or rather a catch as catch can policy, or a political policy which is geared to what appears to be the best interests of the government party at the moment—how in the world can it be called a national policy when you have legislation dealing with only one section of the country?

Over the years in this house I have not taken the attitude I have seen some other hon. members take, that because something does not provide any particular benefit at the moment for their area or for their province they vote against it. I think that is a narrow-minded and parochial attitude. I do not think it accomplishes anything. I welcome this legislation without reservation, but because I think it is good legislation I suggest the government has made a very grave error in confining the terms of the resolution to the Atlantic provinces. As a matter of fact I could present other information to show that in certain ways some other parts of Canada have a more difficult power problem than have the provinces to which this legislation applies.

I am informed that on the average it takes 5 miles of power line to service 100 customers in Nova Scotia. In New Brunswick it takes 6 miles of power line to service 100 customers. In British Columbia it takes 3 miles of power line to service 100 customers, but in Saskatchewan it takes 16 miles of power line to service 100 customers. It takes three times as much power line to service a given number of customers in Saskatchewan as it does in either Nova Scotia or New Brunswick; yet by the terms of this resolution Saskatchewan is excluded.

I should like the minister to disclose the government program for the other provinces. Saskatchewan finds that because of the scattered area of settlement, it has a very difficult power problem. Not only that, but it finds that its need for power is growing now at the rate of 20 per cent per year, so that the need for power facilities and power output doubles every four years in that province. Just last year Saskatchewan had to raise $60 million for power. It will soon have raised $150 million for the distribution of power.

I suggest to the minister, and I think he knows this very well, that Saskatchewan today faces a power crisis and has a claim on this government for the same kind of terms and the same type of policy as are provided to the other provinces. I can say that Saskatchewan would certainly welcome any program of the federal government under which this government would build thermal plants and then sell them to the province, amortized over a period of 30 years, with the payment for power lines over a period of 40 years.

I am informed that in Nova Scotia there are 10,000 miles of transmission and distribution lines; in New Brunswick, 9,000 miles of transmission and distribution lines; in British Columbia, 14,000 miles of transmission and distribution lines; but in Saskatchewan, 34,000 miles of power lines. In other words the province of Saskatchewan has more than three times as many miles of power lines as has Nova Scotia and almost four times as many as New Brunswick. It means that we have to take power to a widely scattered population over a tremendous area, which makes our cost of distribution very high per customer.

I have some other statistics to show the population of farming area per square mile. In Nova Scotia the population of farming area per square mile is 23; in New Brunswick it is 28, and in Saskatchewan it is only 4. Therefore our widely scattered population increases the problem of providing adequate power facilities to our people.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask the hon. member a question? Does the very fact he has just mentioned not prove that we in the maritimes need special consideration?

Mr. Argue: No, I do not think it proves that at all. Obviously if the farms are two or three miles apart it is more difficult to provide power facilities to the people than if they are much closer together.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Does it not prove that in order to increase our population we need special consideration along the same lines as the hon. member has advocated for wheat farmers, which consideration cannot possibly benefit the maritimes?

Mr. Argue: Certainly we would like to see your population increase.

Saskatchewan, on the basis of the area of that province, is much more in need of whatever measures the hon. member may have had in mind designed to increase the population. Certainly if you have a dense population the difficulty of providing power facilities is much less than in sparsely settled areas. I have some other figures that relate to the population of the province and to the square mile of farm area. If you relate the population of Nova Scotia to the square mile of farm area you find the population is 160; New Brunswick is 119, and Saskatchewan only 9.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask the hon. member if he knows the per capita horsepower for Saskatchewan as compared with New Brunswick?

Mr. Argue: No, I do not have those figures. I have not seen them.

Mr. Brooks: Does he know that in New Brunswick it is only about .26? The average for Canada is 1, and I think he will find the horsepower per capita in Saskatchewan is far greater.

Mr. Argue: That may be.

Mr. Brooks: That, of course, is the main point.

Mr. Argue: I am no electrical engineer, but if I know anything about it I know that the more miles of line you have the higher your power production has to be in order to push the power over this tremendous area of transmission lines. We are developing power in southeastern Saskatchewan, in the coal fields, and transmitting it all the way up to Saskatoon, North Battleford and beyond. I suggest that because our coal fields are located in the extreme corner of the province and our transmission lines are very long it is necessary, even to accomplish the same consumption of power, to have greater facilities.

I believe I could best answer the minister by saying that I do not complain about what is being done for the Atlantic provinces. The Atlantic provinces have not obtained from confederation the same kind of economic standards and the same policies that have applied to other parts of this country. I believe the Atlantic provinces have a good claim for such legislation. All I am doing is submitting to the government that the province from which the minister and I come has a claim that is, at least in many respects, equal to the claim of the Atlantic provinces. I am saying that what is a good policy for the maritime provinces is a good policy for the prairie provinces. I see no reason why the government should have one policy today for the Atlantic provinces, and not be in a position to announce its policy for the other provinces in this country.

I should like to know from the minister what discussions are taking place toward arriving at this national policy to which he has referred. I want to know where a province like Saskatchewan is going to stand with the government in getting the same kind of offer, particularly when there is to be no immediate resumption of the federal-provincial conference and that avenue, at least, will not be open for such discussions. I do appeal to the minister and to the government to come forward with the national power policy they promised the people of this country, and not rest content with a policy that applies only to one part of this nation.

Mr. MacEachen: I wish at the very beginning of my remarks to indicate my wholehearted support for this particular measure, which is likely to have very important consequences for the province of Nova Scotia. I believe the fact that this measure has come before the house reflects the widespread feeling, not only amongst members of the house but also in the country, that special measures are required in order to advance the economic welfare of the Atlantic region. I realize that one of the main objects of this resolution is to permit the more rapid industrial expansion of the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

It should, however, be stated that access to power is only one of the factors in economic development. It is a necessary but not a sufficient condition for economic development. It would be a mistake, in supporting this resolution, to put forward the idea to the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick that this is the final solution to the problems of that area. The cost of power is important in industrial development only in so far as it affects the cost of production. In certain industries the cost of power is a minor factor in production, but in other industries it is an overwhelming factor. However, this is a very important step forward and it has the support of the people of Nova Scotia.

We know, Mr. Chairman, that the problem of power has been raised in this house before, and its application to the Atlantic provinces. As a matter of fact, just about two years ago there was an amendment to a motion to go into supply upon which the problem of power was discussed for two days, with respect not only to the maritimes but to all parts of Canada. The views that were expressed on that occasion have some application to the diagnosis that has been given by the minister as to the crux of the power problem in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

On two occasions, last night and again today, the minister has stated that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were power short or power deficit areas. I should like the minister to elaborate further on this particular diagnosis of the problem, because it does not coincide fully with other views that were expressed in that debate on power to which I have referred. When the former member for Cape Breton South took part in that debate he had this to say:

> The discussion would suggest that the development of Nova Scotia was retarded because of the lack of power. It is not true that there is lack of power. There is now developed in Nova Scotia power that could be used by any industry that may come in there.

I had occasion during the same debate to refer to an interim study that had been made by the power committee of the Atlantic provinces economic council of power problems in that area. I quoted the remarks made by Mr. Tweeddale, assistant chief engineer of the New Brunswick power commission. He said that basically there is an adequate supply of electrical power available in the maritime regions to meet present demands. The committee believes that electric power can be made available to any section of the region to meet future demands. This interpretation, of course, is somewhat at variance with the diagnosis of the minister. I must at the same time, however, concede that there is in Nova Scotia, and in New Brunswick as well, a feeling that these areas are power short.

I have here the report of an address given four years ago at St. Francis Xavier University by a businessman, Mr. Dyson Crowe, who spoke as follows:

> I'm not alone in advocating government owned cheap electricity as the fundamental answer to our Nova Scotian and maritime problems. This is the common and universal answer of all who have ever studied the question. Just a few nights ago at the fishermen's convention in Amherst, Dr. M. M. Coady, of your extension department, advocated this very thing as the fundamental answer to maritime disabilities.

Hence the minister is not alone in his view although, after having discussed the matter on occasion with the officials of the Nova Scotia power commission in particular, I believe the problem is not so much the difficulty of generating a supply of electricity, but that the difficulty is to generate a supply of electricity at a price comparable with costs in central Canada. This same power committee of the Atlantic provinces economic council stated that the power rates in the Atlantic region were comparable to the power rates on the eastern seaboard of the United States. I should be happy if the minister would assist my understanding and that of the public of the nature of the problem we are now attempting to solve by throwing further light on this particular matter, as to whether the real problem is a power deficit or the need to generate greater quantities of electricity at lower rates.

With that preliminary view, I certainly felt that the minister in introducing this resolution last night was in a very enviable position, because as his first task as a minister in this house he had the privilege of introducing a measure that has been long sought and is now a reality through this resolution. The satisfaction he felt, I am sure, was sincere, although I must confess that I felt that the remarks of the minister last night and today were tinged somewhat by self-delusion; because he attempted to convey the impression, or at least let me say that he left the impression with me, that he had come to his task as Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and that no plans were in the files, no discussions had preceded his accession to office, and that he himself had decided from the very beginning to develop a power program for the maritime provinces.

When the former minister of northern affairs and national resources last night attempted to stake out a claim, which I thought was a modest one in the circumstances, for a share of the credit for these power proposals, his statement was met by explosions of disbelief on the part of members on the government side of the house. Because this is a good measure, I think I will attempt to set out today the Liberal contribution to this particular problem, or the Liberal stage of development and then, I hope, fairly assess what I consider to be the additional embellishments or improvements that have been made since June 10 or the accession of the new government.

The very inspiration for the thinking behind this proposal came from an extremely important report made in 1954 by Professor Christie of Johns Hopkins University. Professor Christie had been asked by the dominion coal board to investigate the problem of the generation of electricity from thermal sources in the maritime provinces, not only in order to meet the situation in respect to electricity but also to provide further markets for coal from that area. On previous occasions I have referred to this report which was submitted on September 20, 1954, to the dominion coal board, and which is entitled, "Thermal Power from Canadian Coal: The Maritime Situation". As I listened to the minister last night expose the advantages of this plan I could not but recall the words which Professor Christie used in this report. He states:

> To ultimately attain minimum electrical rates in the maritime provinces, it is proposed that New Brunswick and Nova Scotia be considered a single area for electrical generation and distribution.

That is the essence of the plan and on the following page, namely page 9, he lists I believe ten advantages that would accrue from this integration. Among these were the very advantages that were pointed out by the minister last night:

> (a) The combined system would justify the installation of large steam turbine units built for the maximum fuel economy and which could serve with run of river plants as base load units.

And again:

> (e) Such large units on an interconnected system would reduce the cost of reserves, which each utility in the system would otherwise have to maintain for emergency purposes.

And finally:

> (g) The addition of low cost capacity to hydro storage plants would lessen the cost of serving peak loads.

In the plan elucidated by the minister last night there is nothing which was not first proposed in this report. I certainly do not think there is anything wrong with that, except that it should be pointed out that the dominion coal board, as an agency of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, had first provided the opportunity for a plan of this kind. I believe this particular work of the dominion coal board is one of the real contributions they have made to this country. It was not unusual that following the presentation of this report it was referred to and put forward as a basis for a plan in this House of Commons on a number of occasions.

I personally felt a great sense of satisfaction when Mr. Harris, in his budget address of last spring, brought together the ideas of Professor Christie and announced them as government policy. I felt that here had been a realization that the needs of the maritime provinces were legitimate needs, and that the government of the day, with the support of the House of Commons, was prepared to put forward a plan that would do the work that was required. Just for the record, Mr. Chairman, may I quote one or two sentences from the budget address of Mr. Harris. He states, as reported at page 2,220 of Hansard:

> Such interconnection would reduce the requirements for stand-by capacity and would permit the most advantageous location of thermal plants and the building of larger and more efficient thermal units.

Then again:

> Under this proposal, the transmission lines would be rented on a non-profit basis and the power would be sold at cost to provincial electric systems. The purpose would be that the plants and other facilities built under this program can be acquired by the provinces at any time on payment of their amortized cost.

The next step in the elaboration of this power plan occurred on April 9, 1957, when the then minister of northern affairs and national resources, made a very important statement to the House of Commons telling us the state of the negotiations between the provinces and the federal government, and announcing to us that in principle the provinces had accepted the federal offer.

That was a very important step forward, but I want to refer in particular to one paragraph of this statement where the then minister pointed out that the Montreal Engineering Company had been retained by the Northern Canada Power Commission to undertake engineering studies, the purpose of such studies being to ascertain where these plants should be built and the effect which the development of larger thermal units and an interconnected system would have on the cost of electricity in the maritime provinces. In other words the broad plan had been laid before the House of Commons by Mr. Harris and the former minister, and the engineering and practical aspects were to be worked out by this Montreal Engineering Company.

At that time it was expected that the report of the Monteral Engineering Company would be available by August 1, and likely it was. That is why, Mr. Chairman, the present Prime Minister was able to say things about power which the former prime minister was not able to say; because he was able, as a result of these studies, to indicate to the house and to the country the extent to which power costs would be reduced by means of this particular innovation.

I am conscious of the fact that in Fredericton the prime minister of the day followed the only wise and responsible course in telling the people there that he could not say by how much power costs would be reduced, pending completion of the reports; although with one exception the elements upon which the minister elaborated last night, which elements would reduce the power costs, were present in the plan as presented to this house last March and April.

I remember that earlier the Prime Minister, in referring in this house to the power plan, said that the Liberal party had served up a dish which was unpalatable and that the Tory government had served up a dish which would be palatable. Well, I suppose the best judges of the palatability of the dish would be the people of Nova Scotia, and when this initial plan was put forward by the Liberal government it had an immediate response from the people of that province. I have in my hand an editorial in the Halifax Chronicle Herald dated March 25 with the caption "Giant Project", with reference to the Liberal power plan, which says that the probable magnitude of the federal government's planned power development in the maritime provinces, as disclosed by the initial blueprints, is something much larger than most citizens of this area had anticipated.

Another editorial some weeks later entitled "Forging Ahead" says "The announcement by resources minister Jean Lesage of plans for immediate construction of the first of the new federally owned thermal plants in the maritimes is the result of the most heartening display of intergovernmental cooperation in a long time."

The Antigonish Casket said in an editorial entitled "Boosting Maritime Power": "This is wonderful news for the maritime provinces and the most promising development. It is definite proof of concern on the part of the federal authorities for the eastern provinces and their inability to keep in step with the industrial growth of the nation. It supports the point of view held by so many of our leaders that a key factor to industrial progress in our region is economic and sufficient power. It may well be—" decided the observer who, by the way, is one of the keenest students in Nova Scotia "—that this report of minister Lesage will trigger a resurgence of industrial activity in these maritime provinces."

May I now refer to further authorities. I have with me statements in the Halifax Chronicle Herald of March 16 under the headline "Province Welcomes Budget News".

> "Anything which will lead to cheaper industrial power in this region is most welcome", Premier Stanfield said yesterday.

Later in the same story the united mine workers had this to say:

District 26 united mine workers of America welcomes a thermal power program set forth in the budget address of Hon. Walter Harris.

The public response in Nova Scotia to this program as outlined by Mr. Harris and Mr. Lesage in the House of Commons was warm, and may I conclude my recitation of authorities by referring to a one-page advertisement in the Halifax Chronicle Herald by the Conservative party in Nova Scotia. It states, "The question of federal thermal power proposals is not an issue". So they too, apparently, found this dish palatable, because they did not want to make it an issue in the election in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Chairman, my reason for setting out this summary of evidence is simple and clear. The minister has left the impression that this plan before the house was developed ab initio by his government at the request of two provinces. This was an inherited plan. It has been added to in one important particular, a particular which was inherent in the plan which would have been the outcome of commitments which had been made by the previous government. I refer to the decision of the government to apply a subvention on the movement of coal to these maritime plants.

I believe there has been a great deal of confusion as to the stand of the previous government on this particular matter. Full guarantees were given that coal would be used in these plants. The new government has now added a further embellishment or improvement to the plan which was ready for them when they came into office.

Mr. Brooks: That is the key to the whole proposition. Until that was done the other was impractical and the people of the maritimes knew it.

Mr. MacEachen: I would remind the hon. gentleman who has made this interjection that the premier of Nova Scotia introduced a bill which was given second reading, to approve the proposal which the minister now regards as impractical.

Mr. Brooks: He also requested that the former government should estimate what the cost would be, and they were not able to tell him.

Mr. MacEachen: The minister knows that these matters were at that time under study.

Mr. Brooks: Your prime minister said he could give no report as to the cost.

Mr. Lesage: We had not received the report of the Montreal Engineering Company when you took over.

Mr. MacEachen: That is the point, and it is one which has obviously escaped the attention of many people. As the minister knows, this is another key point—the studies which were then being made by the Montreal Engineering Company.

A subvention on the movement of coal is assistance in the development of electric power. The word "subvention" has been used in the past to describe those payments which were made for the movement of maritime coal to meet the competition of United States coal in central Canada. This new application of the subvention is an ingenious one, but it is not precisely the same application and it does not fall within the usual definition of a subvention. It will add to the attractiveness of this power program for the maritime provinces, but I say it would be unusual if a new government of Canada, such as the one now holding office, could not find a way to make some additional improvements in a plan which was, in its entirety, so important and so useful to the economy of Nova Scotia. The response of the Liberal government to the needs and the power possibilities of the maritime provinces was a massive response. The response of the new Tory government is an agonizing reacceptance of the Liberal policy.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The people did not think so.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, in speaking to this resolution I must say I am delighted that the government has recognized the needs of the Atlantic provinces, particularly since I understand that the Atlantic provinces have been in a period of depression, or recession, for some years past, due largely to capital Liberal policy, or the policy of former governments, though I do not wish to pursue the question of who is to blame for this state of affairs which has made this legislation necessary. That is not my purpose at this time. I just want to ask the minister one or two questions, and I will come to them shortly.

The resolution as it stands—and I will not read it in its entirety—provides for the government to assist in the generation of electric energy by thermal electric power projects and in the control and transmission of electric energy, including provisions for the payment of a subvention on coal used in the production of electric energy. It specifically mentions the Atlantic provinces. One of the hon. members who spoke earlier in the debate, and possibly others as well, wondered at the time why this was not declared to be a national policy. I, likewise, wonder why the word "Atlantic" was inserted in the resolution as it now stands, because certainly there are other parts of Canada which could well make use of this type of legislation, including the province of British Columbia. I know that we have great resources of water power available. However, the minister himself must be aware that the capital cost of providing equipment for the proper development of these power resources is becoming prohibitive, and that it is increasingly difficult to raise the hundreds of millions of dollars necessary for such development, and to do this on an economic basis.

The minister did give me some hope, because he had this to say as recorded in Hansard on page 3038:

> Given electric energy at a cost competitive with that available in other areas of Canada the people in the Atlantic region will be in a much better position to compete successfully with all comers in Canada or elsewhere.

And again on page 3039 he expresses himself in these terms:

> The subvention on coal for power production based on such a differential and paid on performance should, firstly, give the Atlantic provinces an opportunity of competing more successfully with the rest of Canada from the viewpoint of power costs.

Those two quotations would in themselves indicate that the cost of power throughout the various provinces of Canada has been carefully studied, and that it has been found that the cost in the Atlantic provinces is high as compared with the cost in other provinces; to such an extent, indeed, as to make it necessary for the government to provide a subvention on coal used for the development of power in that region.

I would ask the minister, therefore, to indicate to the committee—I am not questioning his statement in any way, but I should just like to know—what the various provinces pay for power so that we can give this matter the thorough study which I think it deserves.

On page 3039 the minister continues:

> Secondly, there will be an indirect support for the Atlantic seaboard coal to be used in this region.

I may say in respect of that that we have coal mines in my province which have been idle for some years and which might become productive again if we had the opportunity to develop power by means of a subvention, on the same basis as is provided in this resolution. An arrangement of this sort would enable us to have the power which we so badly require.

Lest any members of the committee be under the impression that there is unlimited hydro power to spare in British Columbia, I would draw to their attention the fact that we are building a thermal plant at Ioco at the cost of many millions of dollars—a hundred million dollars estimate—the purpose of which is to make electric power available on the lower mainland at a price which would compete with the supposedly cheap water-power we are said to enjoy at this time. For this reason it seems to me that the minister should outline specifically any reasons why he should oppose the striking out of the word "Atlantic" in his resolution, so that it would read as follows:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the government of Canada to enter into agreements with any of the provinces to provide assistance in the generation of electric energy by thermal electric power projects and in the control and transmission of electric energy, and including provisions for the payment of a subvention on coal used in the production of electric energy.

On this basis I feel it would be a more desirable and palatable resolution than as it now stands. Certainly I concede and I am satisfied that the people in my province and throughout Canada as a whole join me in welcoming the fact that the Atlantic region will receive the preference at this time because of its depressed condition but we would like to see legislation introduced that would make it possible to extend assistance of this kind to every province in Canada requiring it without the necessity of having to go to parliament to bring in an amendment to the act.

As I said earlier, the cost of electrical power throughout the nation should be studied. I believe we should know what we are talking about when we speak of cheaper power for the Atlantic provinces as compared with the other provinces so we can rest assured that the money we are being asked to expend today for this project will achieve the desired results.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, it is with a great deal of pride and pleasure that I rise to speak in support of this resolution. The pride arises out of the fact that it is a Conservative government led by the great and illustrious Prime Minister, champion of the little man in Canada, which has introduced this legislation. At long last we in Nova Scotia and the Atlantic provinces have been discovered by Ottawa and it has taken a Conservative government to make this discovery. In line with this it has had the courage and imagination to do something of value for this part of Canada. Of course, I could say that we were "discovered" once again by the previous government, just prior to the last election as we had been on similar occasions for many years, but that was as far as it ever went. In fact, just before the last election we were promised everything under the sun short of moving the national capital from Ottawa to Halifax.

An hon. Member: By John Diefenbaker.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): We were deluged with cabinet ministers in their eleventh hour repentance; and after all the deadwood had been brought in they tried their luck with "smallwood" but alas the people of Nova Scotia were not going to be fooled again. As one prominent newspaper has stated:

> The Conservative government is being true, not only to its election promises, but to its whole concept of national development, when it announces large-scale measures to promote production and distribution of cheap power in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

I feel that the announcement of this program is to be highly commended. It offers the type of assistance specifically directed toward industrial growth that will do the maritimes the most good. For generations we have lagged behind the rest of Canada in progress and prosperity. In 1956, for example, Nova Scotia's per capita income was $1,000 and New Brunswick's $923 against a national average of $1,350. It may be said that the Atlantic provinces are being specially favoured by this government. This is not so. We have not been asking for favours, only for our rights, and it has taken a Conservative government to recognize them. I think all hon. members must have heard at one time or another of maritime rights. This is the boldest step ever taken by any government since confederation to raise the economy of this area.

The rash of promises that were made by the former government in its dying throes prior to the last election made mention of the construction of thermal plants but there is a tremendous difference in the proposal made at that time and the excellent one we have before us now. By a strange coincidence that death-bed proposal was made on March 14 by some fellow by the name of Harris. Every one in the opposition is talking about that date. How interesting that it should have been made on March 14, 1957, and then came June 10, 1957. What a strange coincidence. I do not know what the connection is between these two dates but they are separated by only a short space of time.

I was pleased to note when the Prime Minister made his momentous announcement in this house on November 14 last concerning assistance to the Atlantic provinces, the Leader of the Opposition was quick to see the difference to which I have referred. In his remarks one of the chief differences he noted was that this government was prepared to pay subventions on coal used for power purposes. He indicated that this would probably have the double-barrelled effect of aiding the coal industry as well as providing more attractive power for industrial purposes. There is no probability about it: the payment of subventions will definitely assist the coal industry and this is of vital importance to us in my area because the coal industry is our bread and butter.

It was mentioned by the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond that our proposition had improved a wee bit since the proposal of his government was made on March 14. That "wee bit of improvement" in which we are so interested amounts, I believe, to approximately $1,700,000 yearly in subventions. The minister could correct me if I am wrong in that figure. To my knowledge no mention was ever made to the payment of subventions until the proposal of the present government was outlined, as verified by the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. The hon. member for Inverness-Richmond also said that it did not become an election issue. It certainly was an election issue in my area because we were vitally interested in this question which was extremely important to us.

There is a tremendous difference, with a capital "D", in the pre-election plan offered at the last minute by the previous government, and the one we have before us today. This plan has been hailed, welcomed and acclaimed by provincial leaders, civic leaders and by newspapers, not only in the Atlantic provinces but throughout Canada, and also by the coal miners who are the group most vitally concerned and by the leaders of the miners' union and others. I do not have as much time as some other hon. members and my scissors are not very sharp so I did not have an opportunity to clip all the newspaper articles and editorial comment expressing support of this measure but many comments have appeared in the press since this announcement was made. The hon. member for Inverness-Richmond read several press comments into the record and I could do the same thing. One article to which I have already referred is entitled, "Muscle for the Maritimes" and reads:

> The Conservative government is being true, not only to its election promises, but to its whole concept of national development, when it announces large-scale measures to promote production and distribution of cheap power in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacEachen: Would my hon. friend tell me from what newspaper he is quoting.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): That is to be found in the Cape Breton Post a good paper and it is quoted from the Toronto Globe and Mail. I have another editorial which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of November 16, 1957.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): My hon. friends on the opposite side should not laugh and ridicule because that is one reason you are sitting over there.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Then you will soon be here.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): You know, I am one of those of whom a so-called great Liberal leader said they should be put in padded cells. I am a coal miner and that comment was made by a so-called great leader of the Liberal party.

Mr. MacEachen: To whom are you referring?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I would dislike to disturb him today, he has since passed on.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. gentleman should be fair enough to tell us to whom he attributes that remark.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have answered you, sir.

Mr. MacEachen: You should identify the person; I do not think the statement was ever made by any Liberal.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): If the plan of the previous administration was as good as the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond stated it was when a gentleman named Mr. Harris announced it, why did the people of Nova Scotia show their resentment toward the plan by returning ten Conservative members out of a possible 12 from Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacEachen: You explained that yourself by telling us about the Conservative promises made before the election.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like to quote what Mr. John H. Delaney, international board member of the United mine workers of district 26, had to say shortly after the announcement:

> We very much welcome the announcement by the federal government that thermal power plants will be erected in the maritimes. The plan is an excellent thing for Nova Scotia's coal industry. Anything that will expand the maritime market for coal is good for the industry. The government's plan as announced last week will not only provide cheap power for industry, but will very materially help the coal industry.

That is a very important point—helping the coal industry.

There has been some controversy within the last day or so as to what the Leader of the Opposition said at some meeting in Fredericton. I was quite interested. I had not followed it before; it had not appeared in our local papers, but I made it my business to look it up and I have it here as it appeared in the Daily Gleaner of Fredericton for May 24, 1957. I should like to take this opportunity to say that what the hon. member for Cape Breton South said yesterday was quite right. Absolutely right. I should like to quote part of the article. An editorial appeared in the paper some time previous to the meeting and it was in relation to that editorial that the Leader of the Opposition made his remarks at the meeting, and I should like to quote from the article:

> After quoting the editorial, Mr. St. Laurent would not venture to say how much power would cost in New Brunswick. It was an engineering proposition that would have to be investigated. If it was found that power could not be produced at reasonable prices the Atlantic provinces would have to do without it.
>
> However, the Prime Minister expressed confidence that power could be produced at "reasonable and competitive prices".

I am covering the article pretty well; I am not just picking out certain parts. I continue:

> Purpose of the federal offer to construct thermal plants was to bring cheaper power to the maritimes; not primarily to aid coal mines in Nova Scotia.

Remember he said "not primarily" to aid coal mines in Nova Scotia.

> Mr. St. Laurent believed that eventually—

This is the point that the hon. member for Cape Breton South mentioned yesterday:

> —coal would be too valuable a material for production of synthetic products to be used as a fuel. He did not want to see coal centres turned into "ghost towns", but he would not encourage any immediate substantial increase in coal production.
>
> It would not be fair to future generations in the maritimes who would greatly benefit from the increased value of coal as an industrial raw material. If federal-developed thermal power aided Nova Scotia coal mines, that was "incidental and will be all for the good".

That is what the former prime minister said. Incidental! That is more or less Liberal thinking, incidental as far as the maritimes are concerned.

Let us get back to the resolution. I should like to make a very important observation. Let me say that we have come a long way when we look back and recall the visit of the former minister of fisheries in the previous government to the maritimes. This has been mentioned in the house on another occasion, but I should like to refresh the memories of my friends opposite. At that time the hon. member for Coast-Capilano opened his mouth and put his foot in it with his infamous statement that uneconomical coal mines must eventually close. Close them up! It does not make any difference. Close them all up, nothing can be done about them!

Don't even consider if anything can be done. It was a simple matter for the hon. member to make this rash statement, but it is not so simple for a miner to leave his home and everything he has accumulated through years of hard, dirty, miserable and dangerous work. And this is what he would have to do because we do not have any other industry to which he can turn. It is no wonder that the union officials of Princess local union of the united mineworkers of America at Sydney Mines, my home town, termed this statement brazen and a black eye to organized workers in the coal industry in my province. I can think of other words that may have been used. What a contrast, Mr. Chairman, what a picture! We have on the one hand a member of the Liberal government coming into our own back yard and with unmitigated gall kicking us in the teeth. This is a do-nothing-for-you, a take-you-no-where and a kick-you-after-he-gets-you-there policy.

As far as the maritimes are concerned, this has been the policy of the Liberal party in the past; it is their present policy and it shall continue to be their policy in the future. On the other hand, we have a government which is composed of men who are dedicated to the job of providing good legislation, and they have proven it in the short time that they have been in office, not only for the maritimes but for all of Canada.

When I began my remarks I mentioned that I was proud that this legislation had been introduced by a Conservative government. Let me reiterate that once more. I have to interrupt myself because I have something here that is very important, namely another statement from the office of the united mineworkers of America at Glace Bay, Nova Scotia. This local represents roughly 10,000 men at the moment. I should like to quote the following paragraph:

> It will take some time for the government program to be completed, but "we hope the proposal to pay subventions on coal used in power production will apply right away".

That is the thing we are interested in and that is the thing we were interested in during the campaign. Let me reiterate once more that I am doubly proud that we have as our leader the Prime Minister, a great man who will not only be noted in history as the man of the year 1957, but the man of the century in Canada.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on this resolution. Let me say at the outset, as some other members from the west have already said, that I am indeed pleased to know that New Brunswick is getting some assistance. It does not matter to me particularly what government they get it from so long as they get it. The Atlantic provinces are one part of Canada which has not received the same consideration that other parts of Canada have received, neither have the western provinces received the same assistance as have other parts of Canada. Therefore I am grateful that on this occasion at least the Atlantic provinces are getting some consideration.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, the time has long passed when we should have legislation in this country which discriminates against one part of the community as compared with another. Over the last few years we have had several examples of that discrimination. One example that comes to my mind is the freight rate structure of Canada. The Atlantic provinces and the western provinces have been discriminated against in the matter of freight rates ever since confederation. It is no wonder that some of the provinces are complaining bitterly at the present time about that discrimination and are asking that some assistance be given them in this respect.

As I say, I am glad to know that the Atlantic provinces are getting assistance. I do not want anything that I might say to be construed in any way as being opposed to assistance to the Atlantic provinces. In fact, Mr. Chairman, on many occasions in this house I have emphasized the importance and the necessity of giving assistance to the Atlantic provinces so that they might be brought on a par with the central provinces of Canada. I have also urged that the western provinces might be brought on a par with the central provinces because, in my opinion, it is not good economically, it is not good nationally that the two central provinces should be given assistance that will be of greater benefit to them than to the other parts of Canada.

I said a moment ago that I thought the freight rate structure of this country was discriminatory against the Atlantic provinces and the western provinces, and I want to say that this bill is discriminatory also in its effect. I think, in that sense, it is bad. Certainly I know the Atlantic provinces need assistance in generating electrical power. I happened to be there a couple of years ago and I can say without hesitation that, in my judgment at least, the Atlantic provinces are 10 to 15 years behind the central provinces because of the discrimination which has existed in the past. We in the west are fighting to the utmost extent of our ability in trying to make some progress against the obstacles which have been placed in our way by the central provinces.

Here we have a resolution which, in my judgment, is discriminatory against every part of Canada. I am not referring to the central provinces when I say that. The resolution before us, according to the minister, has two main purposes in mind. He says this, as reported at page 3037 of Hansard for January 8, 1958:

> As announced in this house on November 14, 1957, by the Prime Minister, apart from the financing of Beechwood, which is being dealt with separately, the present proposed measure would do two things. For those Atlantic provinces who desire such aid the dominion government would build for and sell to the provinces such thermal plants and transmission facilities as may be agreed upon. The second part of the program would consist of granting a subvention on Atlantic provinces' coal consumed for the production of power in the Atlantic provinces. This subvention would be so calculated as to eliminate, so far as possible, the differential in price between coal used in the Atlantic area and coal used in Ontario for the production of power.

Thus not only is assistance to be given in this way, but he said that in the future there would undoubtedly be other programs submitted which would require to be considered by parliament. This is, therefore, a rather extensive program. We hope that the results of the resolution will be beneficial to the Atlantic provinces. We hope also that this element of discrimination is removed. It is quite obvious because the resolution itself says:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the government of Canada to enter into agreements with any of the Atlantic provinces to provide assistance in the generation of electric energy by thermal electric power projects and in the control and transmission of electric energy,—

This is important.

> —and including provisions for the payment of a subvention on coal used in the production of electric energy.

Why does the government confine it to the Atlantic provinces? Why not say that the government will enter into agreements with any province to provide the same facilities as they are providing under this measure for the Atlantic provinces? I thought this Conservative government was going to do something about the development of Canada, but here we have a measure which, in its effect, is going to carry out the same policy of discrimination as was carried out by the other government. I was in hopes that this government would do something on a national basis to help all those have-not provinces, instead of confirming this measure of aid to one section of the country.

I want to speak about this subvention on coal. We, in the province of Alberta, produce electric power by two means, by hydro and by this thermal process. It is difficult for some of the thermal units to compete with hydro. I believe that in the city of Edmonton they have switched to gas. They had no assistance when they were forced to use coal. Then, down in the Drumheller area we produce electric power from coal. We have had no assistance.

Now, substantial assistance is going to be given to the coal mining industry of New Brunswick and the other Atlantic provinces. I am glad to see them get it, because in the last few years they have been in very great difficulty. We in Alberta have been in the same position, so why discriminate against Alberta? I am not going to speak about coal at this time, but I did put these figures on Hansard just the other day, and I want to say that over the last four or five years the Alberta mines have been forced to close at the rate of 15 to 20 mines a year. Our production is continually falling.

The last speaker was referring to some of the promises made by the Prime Minister in the Atlantic areas, which he is now carrying out. What about the promises he made concerning the production of coal in our provinces? A number of mines closed again in the first eight months of last year, and production went down considerably.

Mr. Beech: Why not change governments?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): God forbid that anything like that would happen.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Don't be so serious.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): This is a serious problem. I am amazed at the attitude of the hon. member when he asks, why don't we change governments. Surely he recognizes that there is discrimination in this legislation. He should be the first one in this house to object to this type of legislation. Let him come out in the province of Alberta and he will see that the only reason we have been progressing is that we have not had either a Liberal or Conservative government.

An hon. Member: What about oil?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Oil has done a lot, but what have you fellows down here done to our oil industry? You have practically ruined the oil industry because of your trade policies with the United States.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): These are the tactics used by this so-called progressive government; the Diefenbaker government.

Let us examine the extent to which this project is going to assist the coal mining industry of the Atlantic provinces. It is going to be a very substantial amount. Let me say that I am glad they are getting that assistance.

An hon. Member: Then why do you object?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Because of the unfair treatment that is given to the west in regard to coal.

An hon. Member: Why not do that another year?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Let us not wait for another bill. All you have to do is leave out that word "Atlantic" and put in the word "any". My friends might think this is a joke, but I am afraid that when it comes time for another election they will not see the joke. All we are trying to do now is make sure this thing will not be used as a political football.

Mr. Brooks: Does the hon. member consider the P.F.R.A. discriminatory? It applies particularly to his province and not to others.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I would say that it is, but it does not apply particularly to Alberta. It applies to the western provinces. On many occasions I have objected to that very thing. I believe it should be made applicable all over Canada. Why does the hon. member not get up and say the same thing about this measure?

Mr. Brooks: I do not consider it discriminatory.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): When the measure applies only to the Atlantic provinces that must be, even in your limited knowledge of the word, discriminatory.

Mr. Broome: It is too bad your knowledge is not limited to words.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I think my stand is well taken.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a question?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Yes.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Does the hon. member consider the trans-Canada pipe line discriminatory, in the sense it does not extend to the maritime provinces?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I hope, my dear sir, it gets right down to the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): You voted for it last year. It would have been there a long time ago if it had not been for you.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): It would have been there a long time ago if it had not been for you and your party.

The Chairman: I would ask the hon. member to address the chair.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am just answering some of their questions, Mr. Chairman. I might add that they did their best to kill that measure entirely. But of course I do not intend to speak about the pipe line at this time. I want to refer to another part of the minister's remarks in this regard. At page 3039 of Hansard he states this about the subvention:

> The rate of assistance per ton will vary with the quality of the coal used in the individual plants. For example, a plant using coal with a heat value of 13,325 B.T.U. per pound would qualify for $1.81 per ton at the rate of 6.78 cents per million B.T.U., while another plant using coal of 11,190 B.T.U. per pound would rate $1.62.

Just before that, as reported at page 3038 of Hansard, he points out:

> The second phase of the government's program will consist of a subvention on the Atlantic provinces' coal used for the production of thermal electric energy in the Atlantic provinces. For the purpose of this resolution the annual cost of such a subvention is currently estimated to amount to $1.7 million.

I wonder whether the members of the Conservative party have given a thought to what amount of assistance that sum of money would give in restoring our coal industry in western Canada. We also could use this subvention on coal for the production of electric power. When we are talking about these subventions for this particular purpose, let us make the measure apply to all parts of Canada. Then if there were other parts of Canada that do not want to use it, that would be their affair. The measure would be there for them to use if they desire to do so. Then it cannot be said that it is cheaper to produce your power by hydro or that it is cheaper to use natural gas. If that is the case, then of course none of those provinces would apply for assistance and there should be then no objection to removing this restriction.

We in the province of Alberta are in a mighty bad position so far as our coal industry is concerned and such assistance as this, if it were applied to other parts of Canada, would be of great help. We have hundreds and hundreds of coal miners who are out of work, just as you had in the Atlantic provinces. You were seeking a way in which to be able to re-open some of these mines, to assist the mines and the people so employed, and you figure that this is one way in which to do it. I am sure that it will. But why deprive those of us in the rest of Canada from getting that same assistance? We have many miners out there in my constituency alone who are out of a job now and who have exhausted their unemployment insurance. There is no place else for them to go because they are coal miners. Yet we do not get any assistance like this.

Surely it is time that the government of Canada began to enact legislation which would be of equal benefit all over the country so that all parts of Canada would be able to expand industrially thus giving them the same standard of living as is enjoyed by the two central provinces. When you do anything that counteracts that high principle then I think you are on the wrong road and you should change the legislation or amend it so that things will be equal, wherever it is possible to do so.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The attitude of some of the hon. members opposite in the debate is most amazing to me. While this measure and the previous measure on Beechwood are somewhat of an anticlimax to those of us who took part in debates on these subjects over the last four years, I feel that a comment should be made on some of the things that have been said.

First of all, I think that reference should be made to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and his amazing position during these last two days. He is the only former Liberal cabinet minister from the Atlantic provinces left after the debacle in the last election. He is also, I understand, the Liberal caucus chairman of the members of that party from the Atlantic provinces, and I would think he would be obliged to speak up for any measures that would benefit one of those provinces. Yet we see the example here today and yesterday of an attack on this legislation that would definitely benefit one of those provinces in which he is supposed to be interested.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to be unfair. As to the Beechwood matter which is not under debate now, I said that I would not oppose something that was good for New Brunswick merely because the government would not tell us how the principle would apply in other provinces. But I think I had a perfect right to inquire how it would apply in the province I represent. When I spoke about this measure today I said it was an excellent resolution, and I have nothing to take back.

[Mr. Johnston (Bow River).]

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I certainly would think that a man with the hon. member's 20 years of experience in parliament could use the term "excellent" without taking two days to do it. However, the stand of some of the other members from the maritimes—and I am referring to them in this instance—is also amazing. The hon. member for Charlotte who has always opposed this Beechwood project—

Mr. Lesage: He did not speak in this debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I was severely restricted by Your Honour and other members from the chair yesterday in debating Beechwood. Surely you are not going to permit the hon. member to debate Beechwood on another resolution.

The Chairman: I think the hon. member was referring to the debate of yesterday and I would ask him to confine himself to the proposition that we now have before us.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): That is all right, Mr. Chairman, I am merely referring to the amazing position that has been taken by the maritime members. I think the fact is very noticeable that the hon. member for Westmorland has not had anything to say in the debate today and yesterday. Since this session began we have witnessed the asking of question after question before the orders of the day were called. Yet on this important measure that means so much he has not had a word to say. It may be that he is a shrewd politician, however, and realizes that it is smart politics not to oppose this measure in any form whatever.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is this the latest form of closure?

Mr. Robichaud: I do not think any of the maritime members who spoke on both resolutions have spoken against them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not one of them.

Mr. Robichaud: No one has opposed the measure.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): They may not oppose the measure by their votes, but that has become a common procedure around here. We know—and the Hansard record shows it—what has gone on in the past two days here.

Mr. Robichaud: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Yes.

Mr. Robichaud: Does the hon. member recall that in January, 1954 there was a debate in this house on the National Housing Act in which 52 speeches were made by the opposition members criticizing the legislation and that when the vote came there were 186 votes for and 2 against, including that of the hon. member.

The Chairman: Order. I hope hon. members will confine their remarks to the subject matter we are discussing.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): What I rose to put on the record, Mr. Chairman, was simply the fact that the narrow-mindedness that has been shown, particularly by some maritime Liberal members and by some other members opposite from other parts of the country, is confined to parliament only. The people outside the House of Commons appreciate this measure and, as a maritimer, I am proud to know that fact. I want to place on record two editorials that were written and published in our papers after the news was announced of the Beechwood and the thermal plant measures.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): On November 16, 1957, the Toronto Globe and Mail had this editorial.

Mr. Pickersgill: That great maritime paper.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): This is from a section of the country that would perhaps not directly benefit from this measure and this is the attitude they take:

> The Conservative government is being true not only to its election promises but to its whole concept of national development, when it announces large scale measures to promote production and distribution of cheap power in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.
>
> . . . What makes us think this is the new spirit of self-help evident in the maritimes since men like Premier Flemming and Premier Stanfield came into office. That these men are Conservatives matters little enough; what matters is their determination to write a new and more cheerful chapter in the maritimes' history. Such men can be counted upon to make the very most of the newly announced power program; using it as a means to build up industry which in turn will build up living standards, tax revenues, public services and all the rest.
>
> Some will say that the maritimes are being specially favoured by Ottawa. Not at all. Whatever can be done to make these "have-not" provinces self-supporting relieves the "have" provinces (such as Ontario) which are now obliged to help carry them and which, because of the maritimes' low purchasing power, cannot do as much business there as they would like to. If per capita income in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick can be raised, every person in every province will feel the benefit.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question? Does he not think it is rather narrow minded—and I use his own phrase as I would not otherwise have used it —on the part of the government to refuse to amend this measure so as to include the province of Newfoundland in this excellent legislation?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): It is included.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Newfoundland can benefit under this in the same way as New Brunswick and Nova Scotia for the particular reasons for which this measure is being brought down. In the Ottawa Journal, Mr. Chairman, there was a similar editorial—

Mr. Lesage: Another great Liberal paper.

Mr. Pickersgill: A great maritime paper too.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): —on the same date as follows:

> It would be perhaps foolish to expect that what Mr. Diefenbaker's government is doing will immediately raise the prosperity of the maritimes to the level of rich provinces like Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia; geography and resources can't be just brushed aside. But if what is being done results in some measure of maritime betterment, some more equal division of the good things of our country, thus bringing more maritime content and consequently more of national unity, the thing will surely be worth-while.

An hon. Member: What date was that?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): That was in the Journal of November 16, 1957. I think that is all I have to say at this time and I merely wanted to put these on the record. I think a great deal of credit should be given to—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Harris.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): —the premiers of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, to the new Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who is new to this parliament but certainly a long-time advocate of development policy and certainly very ready to catch on to many of the needs of the poorer sections of our country. I also think that the new Prime Minister deserves a tremendous amount of credit for going forward—

Mr. Pickersgill: With Mr. Harris' proposals.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): —in pursuance to his election promises. We have an old saying down in the maritimes which may not be understood by some of the hon. members who are not from that proud and historical area but which was used in the provincial election a few years ago, and, on one occasion which I remember, by our present premier when referring to the Liberals and their past record. He was referring to their promises and what they had done and I think his words are appropriate at this time so I will end my brief remarks with them:

They promised it. We did it.

Atlantic Provinces Power Development

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few further comments on this important resolution. I want to assure my hon. friend from Saint John-Albert that in so far as the maritime Liberals are concerned we are 100 per cent behind this resolution.

Mr. Fulton: Queer way you have of showing it.

Mr. MacEachen: Because we claim parentage for the ideas and the imagination behind this proposal.

Mr. Fulton: You are giving it a long labour.

Mr. MacEachen: Perhaps the Minister of Justice was not in his seat this afternoon but I think if he had listened when I outlined the historical background of this measure he would have agreed with what I said.

Mr. Fulton: I was here and I do not agree.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was a simple catalogue of facts and the hon. gentleman was not here.

Mr. MacEachen: I realize that the disagreement of various members on the government side has been expressed more by irresponsible statements of nonsense rather than by an analysis of history. I think if the Minister of Justice wishes to put his disagreement in concrete form he should do so.

Mr. Fulton: I would have thought it more important to get the resolution passed.

Mr. Lesage: You want to get on with your estimates.

Mr. MacEachen: We will get the resolution passed. I want at the very outset to refer to some very sensible remarks made by the hon. member for Kings with regard to the problem of the development in the province of Prince Edward Island. He pointed out that there is hardly any hydro possibility in that island and I think the only possible way of developing electrical energy there is through coal from the west coast of Cape Breton. That is a very appealing proposition to me because the west coast of Cape Breton island lies within the boundary of Inverness-Richmond and contains very large coal deposits in the Port Hood area and Mabou area, in the Inverness area and in the Ste. Rose area. These are extensive deposits and the collieries and towns which have grown up around these coal deposits have suffered perhaps more than any other part of Nova Scotia during the difficulties in the coal industry.

I would suggest that the minister explore as fully as possible the proposition put forward by his colleague from Kings on the idea of using greater amounts of coal from Inverness county in the thermal plant in that island.

[Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert).]

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): You are glad we added Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MacEachen: Oh, undoubtedly. Furthermore, I have expressed my approval as enthusiastically in support of the general proposal of thermal development, although there has arisen in my constituency a problem in connection with the power plant located in the town of Inverness. This is a small power plant but it has been a very important outlet for coal from the small collieries in that area. It has been suggested by the provincial government of Nova Scotia that this plant is to be closed and that power for that particular part of Cape Breton island will now be had from the seaboard plant near Sydney. This development will be a very serious blow to that area in particular.

There is one thing that is certain—that at times there is a great demand for coal. Last year for example I understand the coal mines of Nova Scotia could not fill the orders for coal. In other times the coal market declines and there is a very great problem in disposing of the coal of the mines around Inverness. I should like to suggest to the minister, and suggest it most sincerely, that he should explore, together with the provincial governments, the possibility of maintaining the power plant in the town of Inverness under this program so that these collieries will be provided with an outlet for their coal, and so that the west coast of Cape Breton island will not be overlooked or neglected.

There is a second part to my remarks which is not as non-political as the first part. I want to make one reference to the remarks made by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria. I think that any fair-minded member of parliament would agree that if the remarks of a public man are quoted, particularly a statement by a prime minister of Canada on such an important matter as power development in the maritimes, his remarks should be quoted in full. Now it has been suggested in this house and outside that at a meeting in Fredericton the prime minister of Canada, the hon. member for Quebec East at that time, more or less dismissed the idea of power development in that region by an offhand comment to the effect that if you cannot develop power in that area you cannot have it. I believe that a fair-minded person would find nothing objectionable in the full text of that part of his speech, which reads as follows:

> Well I can't tell you at this time how much the power will cost. I can't tell you how much the plants will cost. All I can tell you is that if this project is one that is favoured by the governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, we will have it properly investigated by competent engineers and, if power cannot be produced at reasonable prices in any way—

I stress those operative words.

—in these provinces, well you would have to do without it. But I can't believe that that is the case. I am convinced that it can be produced at reasonable cost—competitive cost.

That is the full statement made by the former prime minister. What is objectionable about that? It is a very well considered and reasonable statement on an important public matter. And the hon. gentleman said later:

And our offer is to collaborate with the provincial governments and their power agencies to get for the people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia power at the cheapest cost that can be made available. It so happens that at this time, it would be thermal power produced from maritime coal.

I believe it is important that this should be put on record so that in future truncated versions of the remarks made by the hon. member for Quebec East will not be given currency either in this house or elsewhere.

The hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria made some other statements which were not exactly a charge but which amounted more nearly to an interrogation as to whether the former government had taken any decision on the question of subventions for coal used in thermal plants. I will readily confess, Mr. Chairman, that during the period of the election campaign a lot of charges were made—this is inevitable in any campaign—and that this question became a matter of political discussion. But I do know that the government of Canada did take a decision which is reflected in a statement made by the then minister of public works at Chester on June 6, 1957. In that statement the minister was referring to statements which had been made by the premier of Nova Scotia on this particular matter. Mr. Winters said, as reported in the Halifax Chronicle Herald of June 6:

Mr. Stanfield is not in the federal government. I am in the federal government and, speaking on my authority as a member of that government, I say we will use Nova Scotia coal and that we will provide subventions, if necessary, to make that coal competitive with other fuels.

That is all. I realize that there are many technical questions to be dealt with and that there is much information we wish to have on this important topic, but no doubt we will be able to deal with these questions in committee.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask what was the date of the report of Mr. Winters' remarks?

Mr. MacEachen: June 6, 1957. I think I read it.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): At that time you might say the Liberals in Nova Scotia were getting pretty desperate.

Mr. Pickersgill: If my hon. friend from Inverness-Richmond will permit me, I happen to have been a member of the administration. Is the hon. gentleman suggesting for one moment that Mr. Winters' statement was untrue?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): No, I was not.

Mr. Fulton: A deathbed repentance is always the most sincere.

Mr. Pickersgill: I might add that that decision was made before the campaign even started, and my hon. friend from Montmagny-L'Islet reminds me that he announced it in the house.

Mr. Lesage: On April 9.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, representing as I do a mining constituency and one which also contains a thermal power plant, may I say how greatly I and the people of my constituency appreciate both the thermal power program and the subvention on coal. Why are we so pleased? We are pleased because we are going to get two things: cheaper power, which will attract the industry we have for so long tried to attract in the past and, secondly, new markets for our coal. An example of just how badly we need markets for our coal can be gathered from a news report yesterday that Dosco informed the people of Springhill that they would be unable to reopen their No. 4 colliery because of a lack of markets for that coal. The reopening of this mine is very important both for the people of Cumberland county and the people of Nova Scotia, and it is my firm belief that with the subvention on coal and the building of these thermal power plants there is no doubt that the people in my constituency can look forward in the future to the reopening of this mine.

The people of Nova Scotia are well aware of the difference between Liberal promises and Conservative action. That has been well exemplified since June 10. Shortly before June 10 we saw in Nova Scotia more members of the Liberal cabinet than we had ever seen before, probably in the 90 years since confederation. And after we had seen this Liberal deadwood they followed up with Smallwood, but it did not do very much good, because instead of one Conservative member, today there are in Canada ten Nova Scotia constituencies which returned Conservative members. I think this is the best example of the feeling of the people of Nova Scotia toward the Liberal front benchers.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if the minister would care to inform the committee what the government has in mind by way of applying this welcome policy to other parts of Canada. I should be glad if he would make some comments on the remarks I made earlier. I do not need to tell him that Saskatchewan is hoping the federal government can adopt the policy that will aid her with her very difficult power problems.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, am I correct in assuming that all other hon. members have finished their remarks on the resolution? I would prefer just to wind it up.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is this another form of closure?

Mr. Kucherepa: Speak to the resolution.

Mr. Argue: We can speak after you do. I can appreciate the attitude of the minister in that he wishes to wait until all hon. members have had a chance to present him with their views on this resolution before he speaks but I do not think he can be serious when he said that he expects to be the last speaker in the debate or to wind it up because obviously there could be a great deal of discussion following his remarks. I would think that the best procedure to adopt in order to expedite this resolution would be for the minister to deal with the points that have been raised.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): If that tends to expedite the matter perhaps I should follow that course. There has been a discussion over a wide range of subjects on this resolution and in all fairness to the minister I think some of these matters could better be answered in the committee stage. I am referring to precise figures, for instance. I will mention only a few of them at this time and if any hon. member is not satisfied and wishes a fuller answer at the committee stage I will be glad to co-operate with him.

I wish to deal first with the question raised by the hon. member for Assiniboia which was also raised by Alberta and British Columbia members regarding aid to these other provinces. I think the best way to reply would be to refer to the statement made by the Prime Minister on November 22, 1957, as recorded at page 1405 of Hansard, dealing with the hydro aspect, in reply to questions asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. The first question reads:

> Are loans based on the principle applied to the Beechwood project to be available only for projects in the Atlantic provinces?

The Prime Minister said that the answer was no. The second question reads:

> If not, will all provinces qualify?

The Prime Minister replied:

> The answer is that any province that has a project for which there is an equally good case could qualify in respect of that project.

In regard to Saskatchewan the government of that province has placed before the government of Canada a tentative power proposal which more or less outlines the situation. I expect shortly they will be submitting some sort of case to the government and we are awaiting it. I cannot go beyond saying that we are willing to examine these cases on the basis of the merits of the case and along the lines of the idea I made very clear, that if there was need for it, as in the case of the maritimes area or in the case of high cost areas in any other part of Canada.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question on this point. Does the government's attitude relate only to projects that might be comparable to the loans made for the Beechwood project or does this offer, policy or proposal apply to arrangements similar to the thermal plants and transmission lines that might be developed under this policy? I think Saskatchewan would be more interested in the latter.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I believe that would be true in any case where a province finds itself in difficulty in this regard and can make out a case on economic grounds. We are trying to get power costs down to encourage industry. I do not think it should be exactly limited to hydro. We are thinking in terms of hydro in the case of Saskatchewan because that is what their original proposition was, one dam at Coteau Creek and five downstream dams there. But as the hon. member for Assiniboia well knows, Saskatchewan with its rich coal deposits at Estevan is able to produce power at site cheaper than most hydro-electric installations. So far the provincial power corporation has been going along quite smoothly in getting loans for this purpose but like all other parts of Canada has been suffering under the burden of paying a high interest rate in the last two years and therefore there is a financial problem.

At this stage of the procedure I am supposed to be dealing with a resolution concerning thermal power in the four Atlantic provinces as well as transmission lines but I think I have said enough to indicate what the general policy is and I hope the hon. member will be satisfied with these remarks.

Mr. Argue: Do I take it that whether or not an agreement could be reached the government would be prepared to give consideration to a proposal for assistance for thermal plants within Saskatchewan? This is the very great burden carried by the Saskatchewan power corporation and therefore indirectly by the provincial treasury in raising very large sums of money; $60,000,000 last year.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the hon. member has gone a little further in his interpretation than I actually went. I said that at the moment we had been considering only hydro in Saskatchewan because that is the only thing about which the government has made any proposition to the federal government. I also said in relation to thermal power that the Saskatchewan power corporation was producing very cheap thermal power at the present time at site at Estevan. At this time I can only go as far as to say that the government has indicated an attitude of willingness to consider any one of these propositions in the light of the circumstances.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, by way of clearing my mind on the point, do I understand from the minister that the Saskatchewan government has never asked for assistance similar to this in connection with the present Estevan development where it is spending some $40 million on the development of power from coal? Has the government never asked for assistance in that regard?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): To my knowledge, no.

Mr. Argue: On that point, if the minister will check the record I believe he will find that Saskatchewan asked the previous administration and has renewed the same general request to this government but is waiting to see whether the government is going to fulfil its commitments so far as hydro development on the South Saskatchewan river dam is concerned and once that is decided Saskatchewan will then know the amount of money it would require from the federal government for thermal development. But if the minister wants to know the position of the Saskatchewan government, it would like the same kind of treatment with regard to all power development as is to be given to the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, I thought I had a pledge of being expedited because I did not want to start here any form of discussion concerning the particular problems of Saskatchewan or any other part of Canada. I am trying to get through a resolution preceding a bill to bring into force an act that I think will assist in getting us started on the program. I believe that this is a reasonably honest effort by the government to meet a condition of high cost power in a certain area of this country where the costs of power are higher than in any other part of Canada.

Mr. Lesage: How can you be "reasonably" honest?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am not as expert as the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet in dealing with dialectics and semantics.

Mr. Lesage: Oh, I am not a professor.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, there was a point raised, and I think a good one, by the hon. member for Trinity-Conception in relation to the province of Newfoundland when he spoke of the need in Newfoundland to have the word "hydro" included in there. In answer to that I think I might say that this did not enter into our minds because hydro in Newfoundland has been quite cheap compared to the cost of power in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. As I said, in this particular resolution we were attempting to meet a specific problem in the best way we could in co-operation with the government that requested the help.

The Hamilton river is the great source of future power for the province of Newfoundland. This has been turned over at the present time by the government of Newfoundland to a private corporation called British Newfoundland Corporation and is a little bit out of the range of help at the time because of the general idea we had expressed in regard to public and private power in these assistance bills. I would hope that in the future the province of Newfoundland some day could probably think in terms of coming into this wider field of the Atlantic provinces in handling power in that area. It is my firm conviction as an individual that until the Atlantic provinces visualize their economic needs, particularly from an industrial point of view, as one and combine their thinking in the production of power into an over-all grid, they will not be able to achieve the future development that is potentially possible for the Atlantic provinces.

In regard to Newfoundland particularly, we know and expect, from the ordinary logic of the situation that for the short-range plans in Newfoundland there may be need for transmission lines there that would help their economics and their power situation by switching surpluses to deficit areas at times of the day or in times of the year. The long-range hopes of this province I do not intend to deal with at any length but I should like to repeat what I said yesterday that when the province of Newfoundland and the other three provinces in the Atlantic area begin to work as I think they are beginning to work now under the Atlantic provinces economic council, they will be able to help themselves by co-operation in this Atlantic area. I think this government has demonstrated its willingness to help with any form of help where they help themselves.

Finally,—possibly I could ignore this point —there was the question of the Prime Minister's statement. I think we have either to accept the statement at its face value that it means what the government says, or we do not accept it. We cannot go beyond that fact, that the statement has been made. It is government policy and we will do our level best to carry it out as the propositions are put before the government.

I would like to say just a few words on some points that were raised yesterday. The hon. member for Inverness-Richmond inquired whether I could tell him how much coal would be consumed in producing the 300 million kilowatt hours, basing myself on a 50-megawatt unit at Saint John. I am informed that the amount of coal will vary, of course, on the quality of that coal and that possibly between 135,000 and 150,000 tons of maritime coal might be required to produce 300 million kilowatt hours in the manner stated.

The hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet also put forward a number of questions which I shall try to answer even though we may be anticipating some of the discussion on the second reading of the bill. We have been considering matters with the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick at the official and ministerial level and our talks have been fruitful. I know that the hon. member would like to bask in the comfort that this government's program is no different from that proposed by the former Liberal government. It might be of a little help to the hon. member in his present position and it is, I think, to the credit of the staff in the continuation of administration that we have in a democratic country with one government carrying on after the other that all the work of my hon. friend before June 10 has not been lost.

Mr. Lesage: Surely not.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is evident from this resolution.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle).]

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): It would be misleading this house and the country to say that both programs are identical apart from financial assistance to the Beechwood project which the former Liberal government was not prepared to give. This government is prepared to give a subvention on Atlantic seaboard coal used for the production of Atlantic thermal power. It is our contribution coupled with the Beechwood which is the really effective contribution toward the lowering of power costs to the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Lesage: No.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): A combination of the two. One alone is no good. The two have to be worked together. I have not mentioned all of the things I have here to indicate the difference between the policy of this government and the policy of the previous government. I was going to use this on second reading, and I think I will keep them for that time. I have given the committee just an example of the type of thing that I tried to say last night in my opening statement. It is a combination of the hydro and the thermal which makes possible that extra saving to produce the low-cost situation that we are trying to achieve. Furthermore, the former government proposed to make this aid available only to the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. I have already indicated that this government is prepared to make aid available to thermal plants and transmission facilities for the four Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Lesage: May I ask the minister a question? Has he read Mr. Harris' budget speech?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes.

Mr. Lesage: Does he not know that the offer was made to the Atlantic provinces in Mr. Harris' speech on April 9?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I have read both. As I was about to say, in the discussion with the two provinces which have asked specifically for assistance, in the proposed bill we have agreed that the period of depreciation for thermal plants will be 30 years and for steel towers 40 years.

My hon. friend asked whether the several recommendations contained in the Montreal Engineering report have been accepted and what action has been taken to implement those recommendations. Those recommendations could be summarized as follows: one, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia power requirements to be met in the main by large steam plants feeding into a grid; two, sites for steam plants on tidewater to be Saint John, New Brunswick, Halifax, Trenton and Sydney; three, utilities to connect within and between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia by the end of 1959; four, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia utilities to work out agreements for adding plants and sharing costs of spare capacity; five, defer 50 megawatt plant at Saint John if Nova Scotia and New Brunswick can be interconnected in the near future; if not, instal the Saint John 50 megawatt unit immediately.

How the provinces use their power plants and facilities will be largely a matter for them to decide. It is clear, however, that such facilities as are provided by the federal government we shall require them to use. We shall be guided largely by these recommendations so far as this government is responsible for action. I have no doubt that the provinces will also act in a similar way.

I should like to point out to the hon. member and to all hon. members that one of the great differences between what we have just done on behalf of the Atlantic provinces and what was proposed and what was in the minds of the previous government is essentially the principle of the whole conduct of democratic government in this federal state. We have proposed to build and to sell to those provinces and to give them complete power to operate and run their own show and make their own decisions.

Mr. Lesage: So have we.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): And only deal with those matters in so far as they affect the federal interest. The previous government did not offer to build and sell; the previous government offered to build and operate by the Northern Canada Power Commission, those power plants and to build and to lease the transmission lines to those two provinces. The former government, centralizing in concept, centralizing in action, were going to run the development service in those two provinces. Knowing the maritime spirit, as I have seen it demonstrated in this house in the last few days, I can understand the maritime objection and why they say they want to run their own show. But it is a matter of great pride that we have gone in and trusted them to come into partnership and helped them to achieve their objective and still maintain the maximum amount of local government. I think I can state quite frankly that this is the feeling of this government. We believe that wherever possible local government should be given the power to govern and that is essentially the principle under which we will operate in the name of efficiency. We sometimes have to co-operate. Sometimes we have to do things at the federal level, but wherever possible I think that most of us would support the idea that we should put the emphasis on local government and local control. That is what we have done.

Obviously, after the completion of the two units at Beechwood the power requirements of both provinces will be met in the main by large steam plants feeding into a grid. The first plants to be built, as I indicated yesterday in my statement, will be one 50-megawatt plant at Saint John and one 20-megawatt plant at Fredericton. It is now planned to interconnect the main utilities within themselves and between the provinces by the end of 1959—we are not just sure when they will be finished.

Mr. Lesage: How do you reconcile that with the recommendations of Montreal Engineering?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): It is the second choice; either one or the other. The program I have just outlined indicates Mr. Chairman, what it is proposed to do in the immediate future to implement the recommendations of the Montreal Engineering report. If my hon. friend examines the matter carefully, as I am sure he will, I think he will realize that all the recommendations made by that company are in process of being implemented in so far as it may depend upon this government. We have given the maximum amount of control to the local power corporation of these two provinces.

The hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet had one further question. He pointed out that on page 27 of the Montreal Engineering Company report the total cost per kilowatt hour, at a 50 per cent capacity of a 66 megawatt unit, is shown to be 10.45 mills. You will remember that I used 10.65.

Mr. Lesage: And I used 10.85.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): This is a little bit confusing to other members of the house because the report gives examples for a 50 megawatt unit and for a 66. Originally I used the figure for the 50 megawatt and my friend used the figure for 66 megawatts, and now I am on that.

Mr. Winch: Would the minister answer a question? I have been asked what the hon. member means because some of the time he speaks of megawatts, sometimes he uses kilowatts, sometimes he uses watts and the term electricians use is k.v.a. I think it would help if the minister would explain.

Mr. Lesage: A megawatt is 1,000 kilowatts.

Mr. Winch: Do not tell me, I know.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am assuming that the letter "k" is for kilowatt and small

"m." is for 1,000, and if you want to make me use the large figures it will take longer.

Mr. Winch: I am not going to embarrass the minister, but I have been asked why he sometimes uses kilowatt and sometimes watt when our term is k.v.a.

Mr. Lesage: The "v" is for volts.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): These are the figures for which the hon. member asked. He said that the previous figure given for Beechwood had been between 7 and 7.5 mills and it was based on an 85 per cent load factor.

Mr. Lesage: For 300 million kilowatt hours.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): That is absolutely correct. He wondered how, for 300 million kilowatt hours, with money at 6 per cent, I could arrive at a figure of 8.93 mills for the replacement cost of thermal power, and he suggested to me that I look over the figures so that the record would be put straight. In answer to that question I am going to read very slowly because this is a matter of arithmetic. I will speak slowly so that any hon. member may take down these figures.

If one assumes for the total installed capacity of the two units at Beechwood 72 megawatts, and money at 6 per cent cost and a load factor of 50 per cent, the cost per kilowatt hour works out at 7.3 mills. Now, if one considers a 66 megawatt thermal unit of that installed capacity and one assumes money costing 6 per cent, coal at 42 cents per million b.t.u. and a 50 per cent load factor, the cost per kilowatt hour works out to be 9.83 mills which, less the calculated effect of the coal subvention, would work out at 8.93 mills per kilowatt hour.

Mr. Carter: Would the minister say how this figure compares with the use of fuel oil instead of coal?

Mr. Lesage: It is higher.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I wonder if the hon. member would leave that question until the committee stage. I could work it out, but not now. This is the figure I submitted initially, and that is how the figure was arrived at.

I want to point out that any person who looks casually at the Montreal Engineering Company report might misunderstand it. The Montreal Engineering Company figure is worked out on a private power development basis, with money at 7.5 per cent, a 25-year amortization period and coal at 47 cents per million b.t.u. This results in the cost figure of 10.45 mills or 10.65 mills, depending on which application you are making, which I gave to the house and which I compared with a cost of 9.83 mills before a coal subvention was applied. After the coal subvention is applied the cost would be 8.93 mills, and that was my original figure.

Mr. Lesage: May I ask one question of the minister? What was the amortization period used in both cases, first for Beechwood and secondly for the 66 megawatt coal-fired plant?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I wonder if the hon. member could hold that question over for the committee stage.

Mr. Lesage: It is quite all right; it will be in Hansard. I believe the minister will realize that the amortization period used is a very important factor.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes; they run from 45 to 50 to 60 or 66 years. I think I have that figure here, but I lost the page in the book.

Mr. Lesage: That is quite all right. Has the minister finished his remarks?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes.

Mr. Lesage: There is one point I wish to raise in connection with the minister's remarks. First, a megawatt means 1,000 kilowatts and not 1,000 watts, as someone tells me I said.

Mr. Winch: You said 1,000 watts.

Mr. Lesage: It is 1,000 kilowatts.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In other words, it is a million watts.

An hon. Member: So what?

Mr. Lesage: During the course of the minister's answer a few minutes ago he pointed to the fact that the agreement he is about to reach with the provinces is much more advantageous for the autonomy of the provinces than the proposal that had been advanced by the previous administration in that the present government would build the plants and transmission lines and, as he said yesterday, the provinces would have to purchase them immediately at cost and pay for them over a period of years. I might remind the minister that Mr. Harris, when he made the offer of the previous government in his budget speech of March 14 last, offered Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the opportunity of purchasing the plants and transmission lines at any time they wished. I quote from page 2220 of Hansard of March 14, 1957:

> Under this proposal, the transmission lines would be rented on a non-profit basis and the power would be sold at cost to provincial electric systems. The purpose would be that the plants and other facilities built under this program can be acquired by the provinces at any time on payment of their amortized cost.

The minister should not forget that when the present administration took over we were negotiating with the two provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and that no final agreement had been reached. He will agree that some principles had been put forward, principles which have been kept and rightly so by the present administration in the agreements they are trying to reach with the two provinces now and which are the object of this resolution. If the minister looks at the file—I have here Sessional Paper No. 117 tabled on Friday, January 3, 1958—he will see that correspondence was maintained between the premiers of the two provinces and myself until the end of April. Then, of course, I was rather busy for some time and the deputy minister of the department continued the correspondence, while the officials, according to this sessional paper, carried on negotiations at the official level on technical matters.

At that time, as will be recalled, we were waiting for the report of the Montreal Engineering Company, which was absolutely necessary before we could reach a final agreement with the two provinces concerned. This program, therefore, was initiated in March by the previous administration, was discussed and was evolved until there was a change of government on June 21.

On July 12, according to this correspondence, the premier of New Brunswick wrote to the then minister of northern affairs, now Minister of Agriculture, and the negotiations were continued up to the time that agreement could be reached. Agreement has been reached on certain principles but there are still some matters to be settled before agreements can be signed. I do not see how this present government could contend that the previous government had not done whatever was possible to try to reach agreement with the provinces, respecting their autonomy, in consultation with those two provinces; and what the government has done is just to continue the negotiations that had been started previously on the principles which were enunciated both by Mr. Harris and myself last spring.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Including Beechwood.

Mr. Lesage: Beechwood has nothing to do with this resolution. I discussed Beechwood yesterday and I made the position of the previous government very clear on Beechwood. This resolution deals with a program for thermal installations and transmission lines in the Atlantic provinces. This program is completely different from the proposal presented yesterday dealing with a loan to New Brunswick for the Beechwood project. As I said last night, this measure is only a continuation, with modifications, after consultation with the province, of a project which had already started under the previous administration. It is only a continuation of the policy which was enunciated, which was evolved and which would have been put into practice by us in co-operation with the provinces had it not been for the event of June 10.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think we have to clear this matter up once and for all. I know that it has been ruled that I cannot speak on anything else but this thermal plant measure, but the whole thing would not have been even possible without getting the cost down. We could not get the cost down if we did not combine thermal and hydro. That was why I said "including Beechwood". The hon. member rode over that question and implied that this program we have announced is the same as that of the previous government. But I can say quite frankly that it is not so on that point, and that we could not have met this test without tying in with hydro.

Mr. Lesage: I agree first that the test that we had in mind, as expressed in my intervention on April 9, on the subvention on coal is not the same as the one that is being proposed in this resolution. With that I agree. I agree that we were not ready at the time to make a loan on Beechwood; but I do not agree that that program was not to have an interconnection between Beechwood and the thermal plants. Of course it was the program, and the minister knows it very well.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The point I am trying to get through the member's head is that the cost of hydro power depends on the interest rate and that one fact does not seem to have sunk in here. If we are going to get the cost down on these thermal plants we have to get the cost down on the hydro. One of the members asked a question the other day along that line. I do not like to raise my voice in this connection,—

Mr. Lesage: Do not do so.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): —but it seems to me that you must have an understanding of the basic economics of financing these power propositions in order to understand what is going on here. In answer to a question earlier in the session on the difference between the cost at 6 per cent at Beechwood I gave the answer to the house of 7.5 mills. Then under the present rate of financing as proposed under the Beechwood proposal of 4⅜ per cent the cost was reduced 1.2 mills or to 6.3. Then the question was raised—this was under Beechwood which I am not allowed to refer to here but which affects this debate to a degree—that I had given the wrong impression by using an 85 per cent load factor and that I should give the figure for a 50 per cent load factor. Any person who knows the A.B.C.'s of the matter of cost, whether it is gas or electric power, knows that the lower the load factor, the higher the cost.

Mr. Lesage: Surely.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Therefore the saving will be greater and we are helping the province much more if we use a load factor that is higher. In giving this figure today at an 85 per cent load factor I was giving the government's maximum position in helping the province.

Mr. Winch: The first thing you know you are going to get me into this thing.

The Chairman: May I take this opportunity to congratulate both hon. members for their endeavour to keep their remarks within the confines of the resolution which is before the house.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think that at the moment I was trying to make a correction.

Mr. Lesage: May I at this point say a word as to what the minister replied to me regarding the cost of power at Beechwood, his answer to the question from the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond was that the cost of Beechwood power with an interest rate of 6 per cent, was between 7 and 7.5 mills. The load factor was not mentioned. But because the figure of 300 million kilowatt hours utilization was mentioned I felt it was an 85 per cent load factor that was used to come to that conclusion. But the minister in his answer a few moments ago told the committee that the cost in mills on a 50 per cent load factor was 7.3 mills for the two units at Beechwood, did he not?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): No.

Mr. Winch: They are both wrong. It is not the load factor which governs: it is the power factor.

Mr. Lesage: Would the minister look at the sheet he read slowly: 72 megawatts; money at 6 per cent; load factor, 50 per cent; cost 7.3 mills.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): That is right.

Mr. Lesage: That is what the minister read into the record. So how do we reconcile this explanation with the one he gave to the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond. If the minister would rather reply on second reading, I do not mind.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I am not questioning this. The whole thing, Mr. Chairman, to my mind, makes it impossible for me, with the two sets of figures I have here, to come up with an answer that is to the point because on top of the detail that I have I must have time to work out these answers. I wish the whole matter had been left to the committee stage where I could have dealt with it with some help.

Mr. Winch: May I, in all seriousness, make a suggestion at this point of the resolution stage. May I suggest that those who want to discuss the matter—and I speak now as an electrician since 1924—of peak load, power load or power factor, which is entirely different, adjourn to the coffee shop with the rest of us and discuss the principle of the resolution that is now before us.

Mr. Carter: When the minister began his reply a short time ago he said that this legislation was designed to meet a specific problem. That specific problem must be the shortage of electric power. That, I take it, is what the problem is.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): High rates.

Mr. Carter: I beg the minister's pardon?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, I am just being very peaceful in my suggestion. The problem was that they could not bring industry into the area because the rates for industrial power were too high. So we went in in order to try to help them bring them down so that they could attract industry which would cause a greater demand for power and then your demand would start to rise.

Mr. Carter: Are you saying that there is no shortage of power and that the only purpose is to create more power in order to bring down or lower the rate.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): What I am saying is that there was a need for low cost or cheap power in the maritimes.

Mr. Carter: And more power. Is that not right?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes; because if you are going to produce cheap power, you are going to need more in order to meet the demand.

Mr. Carter: Yes. We have the same specific problem in Newfoundland. There is in my own riding a fluorspar mine closed down at this moment because one of the factors in the cost of their production is the cost of electricity. In my riding there is also a fish processing plant which is closed down at the present time because they cannot operate with a sufficiently low cost and one of the factors in their cost of production is the shortage of electricity in addition to the high cost of electricity. Both these factors are present.

How, then, does the government propose to meet that problem in Newfoundland under this legislation? The minister when speaking a little while ago mentioned the development of water power being assigned to Brinco, the British Newfoundland Corporation. That is only partially true. There are many sources of hydro power on a smaller scale which do not come under the jurisdiction of Brinco. Brinco is concerned with the huge development on Hamilton falls in Labrador and also with the watershed development in the Bay d'Espoir area, which has a possibility of producing 500 thousand horsepower.

There are, however, many other sources of hydroelectric power on a smaller scale but which do not come under Brinco at all and which are necessary for the development of Newfoundland island—particularly for the development in my own riding which is a "have-not" riding. Furthermore its only chance of survival is the utilization of the power resources which we have, and that is why we are so anxious to have this resolution made applicable to Newfoundland.

We are happy in what is being done for the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and we are supporting this legislation, but we have a similar problem and would like to see something done under this legislation particularly in view of the fact that it is part of a national plan. If it were only a special project for those two provinces and not part of a national plan then I do not think we would have a very strong case, but as part of a national plan and in view of our need surely we have some claim for consideration under this legislation.

I could not follow the minister very well in his reference to Newfoundland. He spoke of hoping that some day something would be done; that Newfoundland would on some way avail herself of the benefits under this legislation. He spoke of transmission lines but I could not really follow his thoughts when he was speaking and I do wish he would be more specific. I ask him now to tell us in more detail just what he envisages for Newfoundland in this legislation. Transmission lines are not distributing lines. If you are going to transmit something you must have something to transmit. It must be developed somewhere. Are you going to develop it in the maritimes by using coal? We could develop it much more cheaply in Newfoundland by using hydro power.

If we are going to use coal then we would have to pay a subvention on the coal, we would have to pay freight to get it over to Newfoundland and all the handling charges between the areas, which would double the price. The price of coal in Newfoundland is just about double what it is in North Sydney and if you are going to use North Sydney coal to run the thermal plants in Newfoundland the cost is going to be terrific. Why should a federal government tie its hands in this manner and bind itself to excessive costs when the same thing could be done much more cheaply and exactly the same problem could be met in a much better way by the development of electric power?

I would be most grateful to the minister if he would tell me exactly how this legislation is going to benefit Newfoundland.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before the minister replies to my colleague from Burin-Burgeo I should like to join him in his plea and I also want to make one or two other observations. I should like at once to reassure you, Mr. Chairman, that I do not intend to go beyond the ground covered by the minister himself, and I assume that it will be permissible for me to touch upon any subject touched upon by the minister without my being called to order.

I tried without any kind of success to find out certain things from the Minister of Finance yesterday and I must say I congratulate the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources on his attitude to the committee. Unlike the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources is conciliatory and friendly and does try his best to give us what information he has. What I fear is that he is very seriously limited by the uncertainty in the government of which he is a member about what their policy is. I am afraid that is not his disability but it is the disability of the government.

I could not agree more completely with the excellent analysis of the situation in Newfoundland as given by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. It is true of course that the Hamilton river, with the Columbia river is, I suppose, the greatest undeveloped source of hydroelectric power in the western world, if not in the whole world. It is also true that it is in the province of Newfoundland but it is in that part of the province which is on the mainland of Canada, and a good deal of time is going to pass before very much of the power from the Hamilton river becomes available on the island of Newfoundland.

It is also true, as the hon. member said, that there are one or two large undeveloped sites in Newfoundland which are at the present time under the control of the British Newfoundland Corporation, but there are around the shores of Newfoundland some 1300 settlements in which a series of small sites could be developed, in most cases at no terribly great cost and which no doubt could be self-sufficient if they could be developed cheaply enough. But, as the minister so accurately said when he referred to his own province of Saskatchewan, one difficulty has been the rate of interest which either a private company or the government of Newfoundland would have had to pay for financing these developments. Another difficulty is the one which small projects of this sort have in getting organized and developing on an individual scale. That is, I happen to know, what prompted the premier of Newfoundland to make the request to the Prime Minister shortly after this motion was put on the order paper that its scope should be enlarged to include the development of hydro plants.

The premier did not have in mind, and I know this because I have discussed it with him, large developments like that on the Hamilton river. He had in mind the relatively small developments with which the minister will be familiar and which serve what I suppose we must call the rural communities of Newfoundland although the word rural has an agricultural connotation which is perhaps not entirely accurate. There is no part of Canada where this power development is more needed than Newfoundland in order to give anything like equality of opportunity or anything like a comparable standard of living—not even New Brunswick.

It seems to me that the government could have made this excellent measure very much better by accepting our suggestion. It is not as though they had not been asked to do it; they were asked to do it some time ago by the premier of Newfoundland. All he asked them to do was bring hydro development within the ambit of their legislation. It seems to me that was a most eminently reasonable suggestion, and it would not have committed the government to supporting any scheme which was not reasonable or proper; it would simply have made it possible for Newfoundland to have been included in this national policy about which the government boasted in the speech from the throne.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Brooks: Does he agree with the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo that hydroelectric development in Newfoundland would be much cheaper than thermal development—and that would apply either to Nova Scotia or to New Brunswick—and would not the cost of the transmission lines be the place where Newfoundland would be benefitted. Is not that where this resolution and the bill which will be brought in is intended to assist Newfoundland to equalize the cost of power in that province with that of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick? The hon. member has just repeated—

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member was asking a question, not making a speech.

Mr. Brooks: Does he agree then with the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo that hydro development in Newfoundland would be much cheaper than thermal development, either in Newfoundland, New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, and if it is his argument does not apply.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very grateful to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who has an extraordinary faculty of reminding us of good points for our arguments that we sometimes forget.

Mr. Brooks: I have listened to so many bad arguments that—

Mr. Pickersgill: He is, in a way which is quite characteristic of the government to which he belongs, offering another Indian gift.

An hon. Member: You can talk about Indians.

Mr. Pickersgill: I listened politely to the hon. gentleman when he was interrupting me and perhaps he would not mind listening to me now.

Mr. Brooks: Well, answer my question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am, and very directly. I am saying that transmission lines at the present time to connect the various power stations in Newfoundland would be of little or no value because of the great distances between the various units in that province. What is needed in that province is, as the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo so accurately said, the development of new small plants to overcome the difficulties caused by these long distances.

Unlike the hon. member for Vancouver East, I have no expertise in these matters, and do not pretend to have any. It is no doubt true that it is cheaper to develop hydro power, though that would depend a good deal on the site and on the situation, but I would remind the Minister of Veterans Affairs that if you have not the money to do anything at all, it is no easier to buy hamburger than it is to buy a first class steak, and we in Newfoundland see no reason why we should be allowed to have hamburger when in the hon. gentleman's province they have filet mignon.

An hon. Member: This is a baloney sandwich.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is all I am urging. I am urging the government once again, and urging the minister, to do something along the lines we are suggesting, because I believe the minister has a good deal more sympathy with our proposals than has the Minister of Finance, and perhaps that is understandable. I suspect that one reason why he should be sympathetic is that the hon. gentleman hopes to come to this house some day before a certain event happens, and ask us to vote considerable sums of money for a power development which was supposed to have started 30 days ago in his own province. He is going to find it more difficult than ever, when he comes to do that to justify his refusal, and the refusal of the government, to include the very modest demands which the hon. members for Burin-Burgeo, Humber-St. George's, Trinity-Conception and I are making to have the facilities provided under this resolution made available to Newfoundland.

Now the minister also said that we must take it on trust when the Prime Minister said that any scheme for which an equally good case could be made out would be considered on its merits, that any scheme for which an equally good case could be made out would come within the scope of the principles of the national development policy embodied in Beechwood.

It may be that it would be quite unnecessary to include hydro development in Newfoundland within the scope of this measure if the minister could give us an unqualified assurance that a loan at the rate of interest and on the same terms as Beechwood would be available for any reasonable project in the province of Newfoundland or in any other province. If the minister could give us an unqualified assurance to that effect, if he could outline precisely what the national policy is, we on this side would be far more satisfied than we are at present.

All we know, and all he has told us on the subject, is that that national scheme consists of two projects in New Brunswick and one in Nova Scotia, a project in Saskatchewan and a project in British Columbia—four provinces out of ten. Every one of these projects was well known before the present government took office. There has been no suggestion yet of anything new in this entire national policy. Our suggestion is that the national policy should be extended to the province of Newfoundland. The hon. member for Assiniboia suggested that it should be extended to the minister's own province; one or two hon. members from Alberta suggested its extension there, and the hon. member for New Westminster suggested its extension to British Columbia—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And the member for Winnipeg North Centre will be on his feet in a minute.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was just going to say, when the hon. member interrupted me, that I feel there is an obligation upon me to say a word on behalf of my hon. friend, the hon. member for St. Boniface, who is not here today because he has to be at home because of the illness of his wife. I know that he also wishes to make an appeal on behalf of his province. The minister knows that the premier of Manitoba, in the course of the federal-provincial conference—I know the minister is aware of this because he was there at the time—made during the presentation of his brief a formal request to be included.

As nearly as I have been able to gather from the minister's remarks, and from everything that has been said, the government has no ideas of its own; it is waiting for requests from the provinces. Now they have had a formal request from the premier of Newfoundland which they have not been willing to accept up to now.

I am trying to make my language as moderate as possible in the hope of melting the minister's heart and in the hope that perhaps he will be able to persuade his colleagues to do the decent thing by Newfoundland. He may even get some assistance from my broadminded colleague on the other side of the house from Saint John-Albert. I hope that when the hon. gentleman is elevated to the cabinet with the other young men who are soon to take the place, we were told yesterday, or was it this morning, of the present incumbents of treasury benches, we from Newfoundland will get a little consideration.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, if I ever do get into the cabinet I am not sneaking in through the back door.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman can compare his majority and his proportion of the vote with mine, and if he would like to come and contest my riding against me he is very welcome; I would not be at all worried. I may say, sir, and I say it with pride that there is no member in this house who has a greater right to speak here on behalf of his constituents, except my hon.

friend from Burin-Burgeo who was acclaimed. There is no other member of this house who has a greater right to claim he represents his constituents, because 87 out of every 100 who voted, voted for me, and when the hon. member for Saint John-Albert has the same kind of majority from his constituency he can talk about people getting into this house through the back door.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I did not say that the hon. member came into this House of Commons by the back door; I said he entered the cabinet by what is considered by many people to be the back door.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think everyone knows that I had a position in the civil service which I am inclined to think, if the words of the present Minister of Public Works mean anything, would have been secure even after June 10 and it does not seem to me that anyone who suggests that to give up that kind of position to accept what do seem to be the hazards of public life and who I think most hon. members will admit has accepted them rather cheerfully, accurately describes the situation in referring to my entry into the cabinet as being by the back door.

An hon. Member: The hon. member should sell tickets for this show.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think perhaps that on reflection the hon. member would agree that he is not correct in suggesting that that is entering by the back door.

Mr. Hodgson: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps if and when the hon. gentleman arrives in the cabinet he will have to crawl in the coal hole.

Mr. Hodgson: I will at least run in my own riding. I will not have to go out in the middle of the Atlantic ocean to get elected.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hasten to withdraw that remark, Mr. Chairman, because I have the highest regard for the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Public Works and I know he would grace any position in the cabinet. As a matter of fact I can think of one or two members of the cabinet for whom I would cheerfully substitute him.

However, sir, I must confess that I think, myself, I am getting a little out of order, and I should like to return to my very serious plea. It does seem to me that it is time we were told what this national policy for power development really is, what it comprises, how a province qualifies, how a project qualifies, what the criteria are. It also seems to me that if the minister had brought down real enabling legislation it would have laid down the qualification for all projects in all parts of Canada.

Mr. Small: You played that record for us last night, why not change it?

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, I would change it very quickly if the hon. gentleman is impatient about it.

An hon. Member: If you must sing, why not put a little more music into it?

Mr. Pickersgill: It would be very easy for the government to silence me and to do so with my consent, if the government would answer these perfectly proper questions that are being put to it, if it would reveal what its national policy is, how it applies in the province I represent and how it applies in the other five provinces about which we have been told nothing until now.

I think this is an excellent measure. It was devised by the Liberal government and accepted by two Tory provincial governments before the election and all we have had since are some minor modifications. It is still a good measure and I am certainly going to support it, but I am doing my best to encourage the government to make it a better measure. I am also doing my best to get from the government some indication of how this policy applies across the country. I want to know how it applies to Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Newfoundland and the other provinces. How do the provinces qualify? What projects qualify? What is an "equally good case"? What are the merits? Surely we are not being asked to accept this blindly.

I conclude by appealing again to the minister to adjourn this debate, to meet with his colleagues and see if he cannot persuade them to get a royal message so that this resolution could be slightly modified to carry out what we have been asking for all day.

Mr. Brooks: If this is a policy of the former Liberal government how did you propose to make it apply to all of Canada? You have repeatedly said it was your policy.

Mr. Pickersgill: What I said, Mr. Chairman, was that the projects that are embodied in this resolution were proposed by Mr. Harris in his budget debate and amplified by my colleague, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet. I did not say that the previous administration had a national policy for power development and I never pretended it did because it did not. We never pretended we had. The difference is that hon. gentlemen opposite boasted about it, put the words in Her Majesty's mouth and now when we ask what those words mean we are told we have not the right to know, it is something that will be revealed in due course. That is the favourite phrase of this government. Members of the government used to complain about the previous administration referring to the public interest. The expression of this government is, "You children on the other side will be told in due course if you are good boys. Do not talk too much. Do not ask too many questions".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: The government says, "Just listen to John, let him do all the talking; and then in his own good time, if he feels inclined, he may tell you a little about what these empty phrases"—and I am afraid that is all they are—"really mean."

Mr. Fraser: That is all we got from the Liberal government for 22 years, talk and no action. Now you are getting action.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the St. Lawrence seaway?

Mr. Fraser: We are getting action on that, too.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, with the exception of intervals of a few minutes on various occasions I have been here and have listened with keen interest to the entire debate on this resolution today. I hope that through you, sir, I can tell this government and future governments that perhaps we can learn a lesson from this debate. The government has introduced a measure which is without doubt of major importance. It embodies the principle of providing assistance to the Atlantic provinces in certain phases of power development and the transmission of power. Because of the way it is framed it has of necessity given rise to the question in the minds of hon. members from other parts of Canada as to whether or not the same principle will be applied in other provinces if requests are made by the governments of the provinces irrespective of their party affiliations. That is an important question which I believe all have the right to ask.

I did not rise at this time to bring up the question of British Columbia, Saskatchewan or Newfoundland and indeed I have been trying for quite a while to figure out a way to explain the point I wish to raise. I feel that consideration should be given in the future, and perhaps it ought to be given at this time, to referring this question to a committee for study because if you have followed all the discussion today, as I am certain you have, Mr. Chairman, you will be aware that a great deal of confusion and complexity has arisen concerning the meaning of the principle of the resolution and the engineering aspects of the project envisaged by the resolution.

We have heard from the minister, and almost everyone who has spoken, questions on engineering aspects which underly the principle of this bill, and they were introduced by the minister himself.

I ask you quite honestly, sir, how many of us sitting here as members of the House of Commons can pass on a bill when a great deal of it is bound up in engineering facets and factors? How many of us are in a position to make a decision, especially when watts are thrown around? Watts of what? What is a kilowatt? What is a k.v.a.? What is horsepower? What is the term that has been used so often, which actually means one million watts? We have had such terms as peak load and power load but no reference to the most important of all from an engineering point of view, namely electrical or power factor. Let us not kid ourselves, the power factor could mean a lot more than a peak load or a power load, especially in electrical engineering.

Therefore, sir, I hope you understand the point I am trying to make. Here we have a resolution, the principle of which I think we all agree with. How far it goes we are not sure and we are trying to find out. Some of the major arguments which have been put forward by the minister who introduced the resolution were on the basis of electrical engineering facts and terminology which most of us do not understand. Perhaps a few of us do understand them.

The minister read from a script and I as an electrician can tell him that he was wrong in some of the terms he used. What he is after is a grid system in New Brunswick and in Nova Scotia, which I hope will eventually be extended all across Canada, but a grid system was not mentioned. My hon. friend from Newfoundland—I can never remember his constituency—

Mr. Pickersgill: Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Winch: I cannot learn French because there are some English names I cannot remember.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was the beginning of everything in Canada.

Mr. Winch: The hon. member discussed Newfoundland. Of course, he is interested in Newfoundland and in its development but he does not know a darn thing about electrical engineering and electronics. I could tell that from his speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: I admit it.

Mr. Winch: In electricity today is not yesterday. Today not only are we changing from copper to aluminum above ground but the same thing applies to undersea cables. In the past they were 77,000 volts and 220,000 volts but now they are 750,000 volts and this has changed the complete idea of the distribution of electricity. Therefore it might be better to produce electricity 750 miles away and distribute it. These are matters of engineering, electronics and electricity which have been thrown into the debate. I say, sir, although it happens to be my trade, I am not in a position to debate it either. I hope that as long as this debate continues we shall keep to the principle of the bill which indicates that the federal government is now going to take some action on a public basis to assist the expansion of power in two provinces. We hope we shall get an answer that it will apply to any other province which makes a request for assistance.

If we cannot do so with respect to this bill, I hope that in the future when a minister presents an argument that is based on his reading of engineering reports, the bill, after it passes the resolution stage, will be referred to a responsible and respected committee of the House of Commons before which engineers can be called to explain exactly what it means. I am certain that if that procedure had been followed in this resolution we would not have taken as long on it as we have done.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 244, to provide assistance in respect of electric power development in the Atlantic provinces.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Casselman in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

A—Department—

172. Departmental administration including annual contribution of $200 to the conference of commissioners on uniformity of legislation in Canada, $543,155.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I have been waiting for a number of months for an opportunity of asking the Minister of Justice his views and policies on certain matters. I had intended to discuss the matter of capital and corporal punishment under the minister's estimates, but in view of the fact I have a bill for the abolition of capital punishment up for second reading, and have given notice of a bill for the abolition of corporal punishment, I believe that according to parliamentary procedure I should not discuss these two subjects. It is not my intention this evening, therefore, to go into the matter of capital or corporal punishment because, as I have said, of the two bills I have, one on the order paper and the other of which I have given notice.

There are matters which come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice which are of the utmost importance and upon which I think, in this first session of a new parliament, an opportunity should be given to the minister to explain the government's policy. I believe we should, therefore, ask for a statement from him at this time.

First of all, sir, I should like to draw to your attention the fact that the government of Canada and the taxpayers of our country have in past years spent a great deal of money in making certain investigations and in bringing forward certain reports. I should like to draw to your attention, Mr. Chairman, that for a period of almost three years there was a joint committee of the other place and the House of Commons on the subject of capital and corporal punishment and lotteries. On July 31, 1956, this joint committee submitted its report. There are many matters in that report which are not only worthy of immediate consideration, but should have immediate consideration because the House of Commons and the other place saw fit to request that certain matters be investigated.

There is also a report from a committee appointed to inquire into the principles and procedure followed in the remission service of the Department of Justice. This report is now known and recognized throughout Canada as the Fauteux report, and it was filed on April 30, 1956. Under the preceding administration, the House of Commons was given to understand that upon the filing of these reports the government would proceed to send copies to the attorneys general of the provinces and call an immediate conference with a view to getting agreement, so far as possible, upon enacting the necessary legislation. I believe it was either in the latter part of November or the early part of December, 1956, that a meeting was held in Ottawa, not of the attorneys general but of the heads of the departments who were sent here by the attorneys general for the purpose of discussing these reports. I am sorry to say that as a result of only a one-day meeting—I think I am correct in making that statement—it was the decision of all those present that more information would have to be obtained; that they would report to the provinces and then be in a position to come back to Ottawa with their attorneys general and reach a decision.

As I said before, I think I am correct in stating that that meeting was held in the latter part of November or early in December of 1956. No meeting whatever was held in 1957, either by the departmental heads or the attorneys general. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that a couple of days ago I asked the Minister of Justice a question on orders of the day as to whether any date had been set for a conference of the attorneys general or departmental heads on these reports. The minister said no. This was a great disappointment to me, not only because of the time spent by the members of the other place and this house, as well as departmental officials, on these reports, but because of the importance of these reports. I was disappointed when the minister said only two or three days ago that it has not yet been possible to set a definite date for collaboration and discussion with the provinces on the implementation of some of the recommendations in the report which were filed, so far as the joint committee on capital and corporal punishment is concerned, on July 31 and the Fauteux report on April 30, 1956.

As I said, because I have two bills, one for second reading and one under notice, I am not going to deal specifically with the joint committee report of the other place and the House of Commons. However, I should like to draw the attention of the house to what I consider to be a most important and valuable report, namely what is known as the Fauteux report.

It has been my privilege to be a member of this house for not quite five years but to have been in parliament here and in the British Columbia legislature for almost 25 years. I consider this to be one of the finest reports that has ever been made on the question of penology. I am of opinion that it is one of the finest analyses ever made. I believe its recommendations are of such a nature that they should not be left in abeyance. I admit that there are some 44 recommendations in the report. I am convinced that a number of them could have been put into effect immediately in this House of Commons because they come completely within the purview and the jurisdiction of the federal house. Because my time is limited, because I believe the report is of such great importance, and because I regret so much that the Minister of Justice has informed us this week that there is still no date set for meeting with the attorneys general of the provinces, I should like briefly just to go over the recommendations and, merely by reading them, to explain thereby the importance of speedy action. If we go to page 87 of the report we find recommendation 2 which reads as follows:

2. Some means should be found whereby the courts, at all levels, may be made more conscious that the true purpose of punishment is the correction of the offender and not mere retribution by society.

That is one of the finest statements ever made. I believe it costs us about $4.50 a day for every day we keep a man in jail. The answer given by the Fauteux report is correction of the offender. That is one reason why I regret that with this report having been filed on April 30, 1956, the minister just two days ago said that no date has yet been set for a conference with the attorneys general. Recommendation 4 reads as follows:

4. The parliament of Canada should give serious consideration to

(a) the abolition of a number of the restrictions on the power of courts to suspend the passing of sentence; and

(b) the enactment of legislation to authorize probation without conviction.

That is something that is completely, wholly and solely within the power of the Minister of Justice and the federal government, on recommendation to this House of Commons and the other place.

Recommendation 7 reads as follows:

7. In passing sentences the court should rely, to a much greater extent than they now do, upon pre-sentence reports.

That is something that I would have hoped would be in effect by now. I am going to be obliged to jump over a number of recommendations. I should like to deal with all 44 of them but I am not going to be able to do so. I am going to jump to No. 16 which reads as follows:

16. Appropriate legislative amendments should be made immediately to provide that no person under the age of sixteen years shall be committed to penal institutions where adult prisoners are confined.

That is being done now and has been done inside the last six weeks on convictions under our Criminal Code. I do not need to add to that. I can see my friend the Minister of Justice nodding his head. That is something that should have been into effect before now, namely that nobody under the age of 16 could be sent to an institution where adult criminals are confined. I should like the minister to note recommendation 18 which reads:

18. Some means should be devised by which unjustified inequalities in the length of sentences of imprisonment, especially in the cases of co-offenders, can be remedied.

Perhaps it will be recalled that about six weeks ago, on the orders of the day, I asked the minister a question on that matter. Since that time I have acquired a great deal more evidence but I think it is important. We administer justice, but in the administration of justice it is important that those to whom we administer justice because they committed an offence should not feel that they have suffered an injustice. I have here reports from papers. I will give you one with regard to two men who committed the offence of breaking and entering on ten occasions, both together. One was given a suspended sentence on the ten charges of breaking and entering and the other one who was with him received a sentence of five years. I am not going to repeat what I said on the orders of the day with regard to matters of attempted rape and rape where under absolutely similar circumstances there have been terrific differences in the sentences. I believe the Fauteux report is very wise in making this recommendation which I have just quoted.

Mr. Chairman, I am trying to mention only the things which I feel are being too long delayed and which are still going to be delayed we do not know how long because of the answer of the minister that no date has been set for a conference between his department and the provinces. Because my time is as short as it is, I want to jump to recommendation 38 in the Fauteux report. It reads as follows:

38. Some means should be found to provide specialized after-care for particular types of parolees, such as sex offenders, drug addicts, alcoholics and psychopaths.

That brings me, in my remaining time, to a matter in which I have been interested for a great many years and I look forward to a statement from the minister upon it. I refer to the situation with regard to our drug addicts and the narcotic situation in Canada. I have been interested in this matter for a great many years. I am convinced that the governments of Canada should hang their heads in shame because we have never faced up to the situation and tried to do something of a constructive nature about it. I do want to say, however, that a start has been made in British Columbia and I hope the experiment is successful but on a national basis we have not done very much about the situation.

I hold in my hands the report of the United Nations commission on narcotic drugs. It is a summary of the annual reports and it gives the situation across the world. May I refer the Minister of Justice to the part concerning Canada, according to the information given to this commission. It says this:

It is estimated that there are approximately 5,000 addicts who can be classified in the following groups:

(a) Medical addicts consisting of individuals who, for medical reasons, have had narcotics prescribed in the course of treatment and who later on have not been able to forego completely this support, even though the medical condition was no longer a factor.

(b) Professional people such as physicians, nurses, pharmacists, etc., with neurotic tendencies and easy access to narcotics, who have taken to narcotics as a "crutch".

(c) Addicts obtaining drugs from illicit sources who become addicts through association with criminal elements or because of psychotic tendencies. These addicts usually do in fact obtain their drugs from illicit sources, although they occasionally prey upon physicians for drugs if illicit supplies become scarce.

Mr. Chairman, I want to read the final sentence in this United Nations report on Canada. It says:

No definite program of treatment for addicts has been formulated.

That is the report of Canada to this commission of the United Nations on narcotic drugs, that no definite program of treatment for addicts has been formulated although according to Canada's own report there are 5,000 admitted addicts in our own country.

I would like to draw the attention of the minister to the different picture in some other countries. Israel: 10 addicts were apprehended of whom 2 were physicians, etc. Norway: the number of drug addicts is estimated to be 300 to 400 practically all of whom are receiving drugs on a prescription. Poland: drug addiction is not a serious problem in that country; drug addicts are placed under the care of provincial mental health centres which direct them to psychiatric clinics for disintoxication treatment.

Then with respect to the United Kingdom, and I am still quoting from the United Nations report, the number of addicts receiving drugs from medical sources during the year was estimated to be 290. I believe our population in Canada is around 16 million and in the United Kingdom it is around 45 million. The United Kingdom says the number of addicts receiving drugs from medical sources is 290. There is no compulsory treatment for addicts and there are no state institutions specializing in the problems of addiction. There are, however, a number of public hospitals where treatment can be obtained and several private nursing homes dealing almost exclusively with alcoholics and drug addicts.

I could go from country to country but I will not do so because I am certain the Minister of Justice has an interest in this matter. I do want to say, however, that we in Canada are derelict in our responsibility in the handling of the narcotic problem. The way to start handling the narcotic problem is to take the profit away from those who make it by selling to the addicts.

The first way we can do that is to make sure that those who are addicts are treated as sick people and not as criminals. I am not a sentimentalist with respect to those who sell to addicts. They can be put in jail as far as I am concerned; put them in jail for life, but the addicts are sick people. If we on a national basis find some system—I do not say I know the answer—of treating addicts as sick people, enabling them to have treatment and to be registered, we can thereby take the profit out of the illicit trade in narcotics. That is the first step but I want to say more than that.

My late father and I have been most interested in this question and I could tell the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, of case after case about which I have personal knowledge. You will understand why I will not give names, but I know of case after case of drug addicts who eventually became criminals and who, time after time, went to Oakalla or to penitentiary because they had to steal in order to take care of their craving. I could also tell the minister of cases—plenty of them—where we finally got doctors, not only to take them under treatment but, because they had to have something all the time, to bring them down to a minimum and give them a dosage every day. Not one of them has ever gone back to jail since. I repeat, not one of them has gone back to jail since.

Is it not time that something was done? It is admitted that we have over 5,000 addicts in Canada. We in British Columbia are most concerned because according to all reports between one-half and one-third are in our province. Why I do not know but they are. Although a preliminary step has been taken in British Columbia by the provincial government and the committees which are now working in Vancouver and in the province with the government on a national basis, we should now admit how disgraceful it is that in the United Nations report we find the words I quoted a few moments ago.

There is no definite program of treatment for addicts; none has been formulated. Mr. Chairman, when the present Minister of Justice was on the other side of the house he was keenly interested in this matter. I remember that shortly before his election, and shortly before he became the minister he said something was going to be done about this narcotic situation. So Mr. Chairman, I am asking the Minister of Justice through you if he will tell us why from July 31, 1956 to the present time there has been no meeting called to deal with this matter.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much what the hon. member for Vancouver East has said. I, too, am familiar with that report because I have been interested in this matter for a good many years, actively since 1908 and for ten years prior to that. I must say that since I came down here I have had great help from each of the ministers of justice. I remember well the first time when I placed a case before the Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe. The big fellow just gave me a look: "Why do you want him out?" I said: "Because he is a human being and because I think he will make good." We got him out.

The reason I am on my feet now is because I want to say a word on behalf of those who are allowed out on parole or permit. I have had to deal with 107 cases. Today I have had one, through the kindness of Mr. MacLeod of the parole board, and out of all those cases there have been only three that went wrong. One was because of drink, another was because the man's wife was drinking and he did not have enough money to keep her going, and the other man, the son of a lord of Yorkshire, drank too. But the man who had a wife who was not worthy of him made good later; he went overseas and covered himself with honour.

Mr. Chairman, I can remember the first time I spoke to the present Leader of the Opposition with regard to criminals completing their sentences. He agreed that it was far better not to compel a prisoner to complete his sentence when it was not necessary, and I think the present Minister of Justice would be inclined to think that way, too. Why do these people go wrong? Most of them are young people. If you want to find a cure you must find the cause, and in my experience the worst cause is the liquor business. But many members of parliament, you know, are scared stiff of saying a word against the liquor business because there are so many votes involved. I pity the men who are in that position. I have never been in that position yet, and I never will. I believe that today no less than $965 millions are spent each year on liquor. The Minister of Justice should keep an eye on this business because it is the worse cause of crime we have in Canada today.

With regard to the present parole system, Mr. Chairman, one great need is that when a young man, or any man for that matter, gets out he should find somebody ready to take an interest in him, because it is well known that so many of these men feel that nobody cares. "Who cares for me?" they ask. I am interested, now, in the case of a man at Fort William who has been in jail off and on for 15 years. I think he is improving because he has quit the drink. As I say, when these people get out on parole it is important they should find somebody who will take an interest in them, not for the sake of getting anything out of them but for the sake of helping them and enabling them to measure up and become good men and women.

We should line them up with some church —with whatever branch of the church they lean toward—and get the minister or priest, or somebody belonging to the church, interested in them and helping them to get back. This in my view is far better than leaving a man to his own devices on release. If a man feels that when he has served half his sentence someone will be interested in his case he has a great deal to look forward to and encourage him while he is in prison. Of course, it is not possible to get a man out until he has served half his sentence, at least that is my experience. It is only in special cases when something has gone wrong in the courts that there can be earlier release on parole. But when a man has served half his sentence, if someone is interested he can begin to have some hope. The real aim, in every case, is to help these men and women to measure up and become good Christians in practice.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words concerning judicial appointments. This is a matter of concern in British Columbia at the present time as we have vacancies in our hard working supreme court, which is the trial division, as well as on the court of appeal. In addition, notice has been given that this parliament will be asked to provide for two additional judges on the court of appeal of British Columbia. It is important if we are to have a strong, independent, imaginative judiciary that we attract the best people possible to this field of public service.

I begin by expressing the hope that the minister will not rule out candidates for the judiciary because they have taken part in party politics. Perhaps I should add that this is not a bid on my own part for a seat on the bench. I much prefer to take part in a fight rather than to preside over one. But politics is not a dirty word and should continue to attract in increasing measure many of those professional people who may later prove to be the best possible material for the judiciary. If their politics have been open, rather than of the back room strategy kind, so much more to their credit. The point is that the minister should draw upon all sources, regardless of what politics have been involved in the past, in order to get the best men. Just because we have a Conservative government should not mean that candidates for the judiciary must have had past Conservative leanings.

Then, too, judicial appointments should reflect the recommendations of the bar association of the province. Not that these recommendations should be considered binding, in my view, but the government should consult with these associations through their proper officers and give their recommendations most careful consideration. After all, working lawyers should have the best possible means of knowing who would and who would not make a good judge.

There is another point, however. While a judge may have had a political past it is important not only that he abandon politics on his elevation to the bench but that he should not have or seem to have a political future. Many of us regret the loss through resignation in the last few weeks of the services of the chief justice of British Columbia. Mr. Sloan made a noteworthy contribution as chief justice of the province. However, his services were bid for by the provincial government on a very handsome scale. The offer accepted was a ten-year contract with the provincial government at $50,000 a year for services which still remain rather vague.

We lose judges on occasion when they resign to go into private practice or into private business. That is one thing; but I deplore the action of a government in bidding for the services of prominent judges for work which, in this case, has inevitable political undertones. Indeed, it has even been suggested that the provincial government in this case was looking for a disinfectant for some of the political meat that has been allowed to rot in the attorney general's refrigerator. I therefore express the hope that this matter of bidding for the services of judges will not become a common practice because in a subtle but nonetheless marked manner it is bound to affect and undermine the strength and independence of the judiciary.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity to continue with my previous remarks which will be of a brief nature and follow up what I had to say concerning the illicit narcotics situation in Canada. On occasion we read in the newspapers of the excellent work being done by the undercover men of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and by local law enforcement officers in running down drug addicts and peddlers but it does not appear to have any visible effect in decreasing the traffic in drugs or improving the situation. As a matter of fact I have discussed this matter on more than one occasion with the law enforcement officers of the city of Vancouver. I have told them that I have known of a certain location in Vancouver where drug peddling is taking place and they have confirmed that I was correct. I then asked, "Why do you not step in and stop it?" The answer has been, "Because at that spot we know where to pick up the men we want to apprehend." This is not a healthy situation in my view.

Some 18 months ago a committee of the other place investigated the illicit narcotics situation and made a report with which I do not agree. As a matter of fact I think it was a stupid report. To the best of my knowledge the report has never been considered or discussed. The point I wish to emphasize and again draw to the attention of the minister is that we can say what we like about what is called the English system but nevertheless the facts are conclusive that in the United Kingdom, Israel, the Scandinavian and other countries where they recognize drug addiction as a sickness and register and treat addicts, and in cases where they cannot be cured allow the addicts to have the minimum dosage legally according to a physician's prescription, there is no narcotics problem. I have only to refer you, Mr. Chairman, and hon. members of this committee and the minister to the report of the United Nations committee to verify what I have said.

Why can we not face up to the situation in Canada and do something about the fact that, to the best of my knowledge, ours is the only country with a population of 16 million that has 5,000 drug addicts. Speaking of countries on this side of the iron curtain, because I have no knowledge of the situation on the other side, the majority of countries handle the problem in a practical, medical and scientific manner.

I want to repeat my position with regard to this matter because I have been misquoted on previous occasions. So far as those who peddle drugs are concerned the harshest penalty is not too harsh in my view excluding sentence of death, but with regard to addicts let us approach the problem from the standpoint of health, treating them as sick people rather than as criminals. My own experience has proven that if addicts are treated in that manner they can be rehabilitated and become useful citizens.

I should like now to refer to the Fauteux report. I have long been interested in the question of penology. I agree completely with the statement made by the Fauteux commission that we have to place more emphasis on correction and less on punitive sentences. The longer we delay in taking this action the more it will cost the taxpayers in keeping criminals in jail and the longer we will withhold making socially useful members of society of those who were previously antisocial. I was most interested in those sections of the report that dealt with the young offender and was particularly interested in the recommendation to the effect that judges should have a pre-sentence report and that probation should be given a high priority even before a sentence to jail. I admit that this is a very complex question. I wish to draw to the attention of the Minister of Justice section 32 of the report which says:

> If it is not possible to implement these recommendations, or most of them, within the next two or three years, amendments should be made immediately to the Ticket of Leave Act as suggested in chapter VII of this report.

The two years are not yet over, because the report is dated April 30, 1956. I would draw the minister's attention to section 32, which apparently the commissioner and his colleagues felt to be of such importance that they said:

> If it is not possible to implement these recommendations, or most of them, within the next two or three years, amendments should be made immediately to the Ticket of Leave Act as suggested in chapter VII of this report.

That has to do with the question of ticket of leave and parole. I would ask that the minister give this his attention. I could go on. This is a subject that is dear to my heart because I believe a great deal of good work can be done; but I think I have said enough to indicate to the minister what I have in mind. Perhaps for the first time he can give us the policy outlook of himself and his government and some assurance as to when he contemplates some action of a combined federal-provincial nature and in particular, sir, action on those things that come completely within the purview of the federal government. I hope he will take action on a federal basis in the near future if he is here.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to say how very much I am aware of and how very deeply I appreciate the fact that I am here tonight introducing the estimates of the Department of Justice for the first time as Minister of Justice. I want to take this occasion to express to my colleagues in the committee my appreciation of the very kind remarks they have made to me, both privately and publicly, on the occasion of my appointment, and to tell them that I am fully aware of the fact that I follow a long line of most distinguished Canadians in what I regard as the finest appointment in the parliament of Canada.

In the office in the Justice building in which I carry on my work there hangs a photograph of the first minister of justice of Canada, Sir John A. Macdonald, and the long line of distinguished ministers carries on down through a list of names which are part of the warp and woof of Canadian history. Amongst them are members of both major parties, and not far from the end of the present line is the photograph of the honorary life president of the Canadian bar association, the Leader of the Opposition.

I know, sir, that I am not particularly called upon—and I am not capable of doing so if I were called upon—to say too much on this occasion but I find it appropriate, and I feel it appropriate, and I think my colleagues will feel it appropriate, if I pay tribute to a great lawyer and a great Canadian who retires shortly from his role as leader of his party and thus from the role of one who has contributed most actively and most splendidly to the public life of Canada.

It is in a consciousness of the tradition that I follow that I am grateful to my colleagues for the kind things they have said about me and the support they have given me in the role to which I have been summoned. I realize that there will come a time, there is bound to come a time, when controversy will, shall I say, displace the kind things that have been said but that is part of the life of parliament.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister would like it that way, no doubt.

Mr. Fulton: But tonight I am introducing the estimates of the department and I should like to deal as best I can with the points which have been made by the speakers who have spoken in a general way on the first item. Perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver East will forgive me if I reply to him in rather general terms on the basis that we can have a detailed discussion on the particular items when we reach them.

His main concern was with two subjects, namely the implementation of the Fauteux report and the question of reforms in the realm of the enforcement of the narcotic laws. My hon. friend found it a matter of criticism—I do not in any way resent his criticism—that no meetings had been held between representatives of this department and the attorneys general of the provinces or their representatives since this government had taken office. It is true that there has been no formal meeting, but I can tell him that there were informal discussions with most of the attorneys general at the meeting of the Canadian bar association in Banff in September of last year, at which time I outlined in general terms, as I have outlined to the house since then, the method of procedure which we felt should be followed in connection with the Fauteux report.

The hon. member did refer to the fact that a meeting had been held in Ottawa in November, 1956, between the senior officials of the federal and provincial governments. I do not wish to make any disparaging remarks, but perhaps I can best summarize the situation by saying that nothing much was done between that meeting in November and the election which took place in June last year. After all, I am sure he will realize that the attention of the ministers of the previous government was engaged for some months prior to the actual date of the election upon the election campaign, and in that atmosphere it is probable that meetings for this purpose were not very easy to arrange.

However that may be, we found that when we took office there was nothing very concrete at hand in the department by way of proposals for the implementation of the report. Therefore, we in the department were faced with the necessity of deciding upon our course of action with regard to the problems with which the report confronted us. It seemed to me that the best and most sensible method of approach would be for us to make an assessment of the physical and financial implications involved in the Fauteux committee's recommendations because they are many and they are far-reaching; and that, having made that assessment, I would then seek from my colleagues in the government approval in principle of a method of approach. Having obtained that approval, I would then meet with the attorneys general of the provinces, or with their representatives, and ask them for their views as to whether the outline which we had been able to work out was acceptable or whether they wanted to modify it, and, if so, in what particulars.

We have therefore, been working in the department. We have assigned an officer to work exclusively on the recommendations of the Fauteux committee. I expect within a matter of a week or so to be able to lay before my colleagues in cabinet a report with recommendations as to what it seems we should do, and what we can do, with regard to the implementation of the Fauteux report, both in fields which are at present exclusively federal responsibility and fields which are joint responsibility. Having, as I say, obtained that approval in principle, then we would meet with the attorneys general of the provinces.

This approach has been communicated to the provincial representatives and they have indicated to me that they are in general agreement that that will be a sound and sensible method of approaching the problem. In the meantime, however, I quite agree with the hon. member, and with others who have spoken to me and written to me, that there are certain areas in what is presently the field of exclusive federal responsibility in which the Fauteux commission makes recommendations and in which we may proceed to implement some of those recommendations. Although we have not yet had a meeting, I am able to assure my hon. friend and the house that we have taken action on an appreciable number of these subjects.

For instance, one recommendation of the committee is that there is a great need for the immediate expansion of the regional services of the remission service. I should say, incidentally, that this is a matter entirely within the responsibility of this government and this parliament. I am glad to be able to report that in line with this recommendation we opened regional offices in Winnipeg, Toronto and Moncton in April of last year. A further office was opened in Kingston in July. Offices had previously been established at Montreal and Vanouver.

Another recommendation was that as soon as possible a system of automatic parole review should be instituted for Canada. I may say that this was a recommendation to which my hon. friend attached considerable importance. It was recommended that this automatic parole review should be instituted thereby dispensing with the system for requiring applications for parole. A system of automatic parole review has been started in three out of the eight Canadian penitentiaries. The system of automatic parole procedure that has been developed in respect of the inmates at these three institutions will, as quickly as circumstances permit, be extended to the remaining penitentiaries.

Another recommendation was that the annual conference of after-care agencies and government services should be continued in the future. Arrangements are being made for the holding of such a conference on a regional basis early in 1958.

Another recommendation was that parliament should give serious consideration to the abolition of the power of the courts to suspend the passing of sentence and the enactment of legislation to authorize probation without conviction. This is another of the steps referred to by my friend.

Mr. Winch: You have not moved on that one?

Mr. Fulton: I shall come to that in a moment. Another recommendation was that the provisions of the criminal law that authorize imprisonment in default of payment of fines by persons who are unable to pay them should be repealed and that no distinction should be made in the law as far as time for payment of fines is concerned between indictable offences and summary conviction offences. My hon. friend went on to deal with a number of other recommendations of the commission involving changes in the system of administration of penitentiaries which would necessitate changes in the Criminal Code itself. The last recommendation to which I have just referred is one of those.

Again, while we have not had a meeting, we have been working on this matter in the department. I have before me now a number of specific recommendations for consideration involving, if they are approved, amendments to the criminal law, many of them arising out of the recommendations of the Fauteux commission. There are, I should think, some 15 or 20 of these recommendations which it has not been possible to deal with at this session, but which it is my hope we will be able to deal with or we will be able to incorporate into a bill to amend the Criminal Code which will be presented to parliament at its next session.

In these ways, Mr. Chairman, I can assure my hon. friend that although we have not had this meeting with the attorneys general of the provinces we expect to have it within the reasonably near future. In the other fields where we have exclusive responsibility we have been taking the necessary action and making the necessary study to be able to lay before parliament a comprehensive program with regard to the implementation of the Fauteux commission recommendation. We cannot do that at this session. These are a few specific things we can do, but action on many of the recommendations will have to wait probably until the next session.

My hon. friend referred to the question of narcotics and the problems of narcotic drugs. He referred to a report of the United Nations committee in which it is stated that there are some 5,000 addicts in Canada. No one can be happy that there are 5,000 addicts in Canada, whether or not those facts are accurate. The fact that we have this number of addicts, as compared with other countries with larger populations, is not a matter about which any person or any government or anybody in authority can be happy. My colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and I have had some preliminary discussions already. There are a number of conflicting views. The hon. member for Vancouver East, has said that he does not agree with the report of the Senate committee. There have been other reports on this matter and other parties disagree with those reports. It is going to take some considerable time to try to sift through and analyse the different opinions that have been expressed by experts in the field and arrive at the best course of action to deal with this very pressing problem.

Mr. Winch: Are you going to do something?

Mr. Fulton: We are working on it now. My hon. friend has expressed the view that one approach might be to proceed against the peddlers and treat the addicts. I must confess that on the face of it that makes commonsense to me as a basis of approach, to punish most severely those who make a profit out of distributing and selling drugs and try to do something to treat and rehabilitate those who have been victimized by those terrible people who are prepared to make a profit out of the depravity of their fellow Canadians. I can assure my hon. friend we are just as seized with the importance of the subject as he is. If I seem to make excuses it is not because I am trying to hide behind the difficulty but because I want to assure him and the committee that when we move on it we want to move on a sound basis. That is the only reason we have not yet moved, because we are trying to study this problem and arrive at the best method of procedure.

I was grateful indeed to the tribute paid by the hon. member for Fort William to the staff of the remission service. In the short time that I have been serving as minister of this department I have found that there is no department of government better served than the Department of Justice. I want to pay my tribute to that department, and through them to all the civil servants with whom I have had the privilege of coming in contact in my capacity as minister since my appointment on June 21.

I can assure the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway that we will bear in mind the principles which he has suggested we should follow in the matter of judicial appointments.

Mr. Christian: At this time, Mr. Chairman, I should like to extend my personal congratulations to the Minister of Justice upon his appointment, and his further appointment as Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway spoke in the house this evening and mentioned that the selection of judges should be on a non-partisan basis. With that statement of fact I should like to agree with him.

But I say that it was very unfair of the hon. member to mention that there was a political undertone in so far as the appointment of the Hon. Mr. Justice Sloan as the forestry chief in the province of British Columbia is concerned. Many of us know that Mr. Justice Sloan was in politics a Liberal and that fact certainly negatives any idea that there was a political undertone to his appointment. I would say that the Social Credit government in British Columbia made an excellent choice in picking him for the position he now holds. The Hon. Mr. Justice Sloan is recognized as one of the ablest men in western Canada if not in the whole of Canada. As far as I am personally concerned, I feel that the choice was a most excellent one. The Social Credit government of British Columbia did not draw any political line whatsoever. It went out to get the best man to serve a specific need in the province of British Columbia and the choice was a good one.

An hon. Member: What has that to do with the estimates of the Department of Justice?

Mr. Christian: It has a great deal to do with them. This issue was raised in the House of Commons. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway brought this matter before the house and I am going to see that the statement is not unchallenged. I would also like to say this. I should like the Minister of Justice to give the following matter consideration. Many people say that the Hon. Mr. Justice Sloan is being paid $50,000 a year and that the amount is excessive. It is not the sum of $50,000 that is the important thing. The important thing is what the hon. gentleman takes home at the end of each and every month. Hon. members know what taxation is in this country today. They know that he takes home only a portion of that total amount.

In so far as our supreme court and county court judges in Canada today, are concerned, my understanding is that our supreme court judges are paid the sum of $16,900 a year and that our county court judges are paid $10,500. If we wish to have the finest legal brains in our country grace the bench and contribute their services to the public an inducement must be offered to attract those men to honourable positions in the country. I personally feel that our supreme court judges and our county court judges are not paid sufficient remuneration at the present time. It is my opinion that the amount they receive annually should be increased.

I read in the paper recently that the Hon. Mr. Justice Clyne, formerly of the supreme court of British Columbia has resigned in order to go into a field of business or economic activity. It could be the fact—although I am not saying that it is—that he will receive greater financial reward elsewhere. I think as Canadians we should remember that our courts in this country are the last vestige of freedom. My opinion is that our judges should be paid a reasonable and proper amount. They are well worth it. I realize how hard these men work from day to day and the great responsibilities they assume.

Mr. Howard: I should like to make a comment or two in support of some of the remarks that have already been made about some of the activities under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice. They also have to do with drug addiction. I raise these matters, not in order to delay the progress of these estimates under this minister's department but in order to add a little bit of extra weight, if I can do so, to the comments already expressed by the hon. member for Vancouver East with respect to people who are addicted to drugs.

In my opinion the general public have a great misconception about people who are drug addicts. Until such time as we can overcome some of that misconception in the minds of the general public and probably in the minds of some of the members of this house I am convinced we shall have less chance of approaching the question of drug addiction in a sensible manner. There are probably five or six people who are at present members of the House of Commons who could be in possession of narcotics, and it would be perfectly all right. There is nothing illegal about that. They could not be convicted of possession as might many other individuals. I am referring to members of the legal profession.

Mr. Lesage: You mean the medical profession.

Mr. Howard: I mean the medical profession. I have some thoughts about the members of the legal profession but I expect I should not express them. It is perfectly all right for doctors to be in possession of narcotics and in fact is all right for some of them to be addicts, if they so desire, and maybe some of them are. I do not know. Certainly statistics show that in England there are medical doctors who are addicted to morphine and some of the other drugs. Here in Canada they can be addicted also. Yet society does not look down on them and the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act does not say that, because they are addicts they should be hauled up in court charged with possession and, if found guilty, sentenced to so many years in the penitentiary.

A number of people also have the misconception that people who are drug addicts are depraved in some way, that their mental faculties are affected to the point where they must go out and steal, and that they are not fully in control of their abilities and of their mental faculties. To people who have that thought I think we should attempt to point out that it is a misconception. While I have been in public affairs for only a short period of time, nevertheless I have also taken an interest in drug addiction and in other related questions. I used to work out of an office which was situated on the corner of Hastings and Carroll streets in Vancouver and which, as the Minister of Justice will know as will others from Vancouver, is very close to a central hang-out of drug addicts, people who peddle drugs and push them and other people in the underworld. It is only about a block from there.

I have visited a couple of penal institutions under the jurisdiction of the federal government and have come to know a few people who are drug addicts. I have come to know them, although not personally or intimately, and have spoken to them about their addiction to drugs. All of them have substantially the same opinion and the same attitude. These people are addicted to drugs just in the same way as others might be addicted to alcohol or to nicotine. It is an addiction. The craving which they have, of course, is more serious and more compelling with narcotics than it is with nicotine or with alcohol.

When these people enter a penal institution, whether it be a provincial jail such as that at Oakalla or whether it be a federal penitentiary, they are given absolutely no assistance, guidance or treatment except that they are removed from the drug itself; they are not able to obtain drugs. As soon as they get back out again they still have a desire for it because of some psychological quirk or some glandular deficiency or some other reason. There is disagreement as to why people become drug addicts. But because they have this desire inside them, back they go to find out if they can get hold of some drugs again and back they are to addiction. So they enter a life of crime again, They have to shoplift, steal, break and enter, hold up, break into doctors' cars and elsewhere in order to get either the money to buy drugs on the illegal market or get the drugs themselves from whatever source they can get them. This is where they run into difficulty in more cases than by being in actual possession of the drugs.

I do hope that—I take the minister at his word—the study that is being given will be a deliberate and conscious study which will attempt to show to some of the other places in the world—and there are relatively few of them with an enlightened attitude towards drug addicts and some program of treatment for them—that we also have an enlightened approach. I also hope, as I suspect has been the case in past years with some of the law enforcement officers, that we will not be guided by the attitude of the officials in the United States with respect to drug addiction. I understand there is a pretty fierce, backward and cruel approach there to people who are addicted to drugs and that we are following along somewhat the same lines which so far has solved nothing.

I have one or two instances I would like to give to the minister but he will probably want to indicate that these might more easily be dealt with under specific items. One of them relates to the public relations, or I should say the lack of them, of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It appears that in many cases officers of the R.C.M.P., many of them who are very youthful and in fact I understand there are some under the age of 21—

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member has invited my comment as to whether the subject to which he wishes to refer could be more properly dealt with elsewhere and I wonder if I could suggest to him that he wait until we reach item 396 under Royal Canadian Mounted Police on page 68 of the estimates.

Mr. Howard: Yes, it is very kind of the minister to indicate that. I do not know whether he would suggest that I should bring up the other item under some other vote, but it deals with the attitude of the courts. This is of course, under provincial jurisdiction in some cases because it relates more to magistrates court than to any others, but I have reference to the attitude of the courts and the chances which a native Indian gets in court when he is charged with almost anything. I know, having lived in an area where there are many native Indians for quite a while now, that many of them are not too conversant with the English language. I am sure the minister is aware of this fact but if there is a question asked with which they are not too familiar or if that question entails something they do not understand, their general reaction is to say "yes". I think anyone who knows anything about native Indians will agree that if they do not understand you they will say yes anyway and it takes a terrific amount of questioning or even cross-examination before you get to the real facts of the case—even when it is a matter for the Indian affairs branch—and to sift through all these "yesses" thrown at you.

An hon. Member: What do you suggest should be done?

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Howard: The solution would be to convince him to say, "no", I expect, or to plead not guilty to start with.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He would probably say yes.

Mr. Howard: Whether the solution is a simple one which could be given in a few sentences is problematical but since the matter has been pin-pointed perhaps the minister will say it could be more properly dealt with under the Indian affairs branch, so that provision could be made to give the native Indian some sort of legal advice through that branch to ensure that his rights under our laws are protected to the fullest extent and to see that he gets the fairest possible treatment from the courts.

Mr. Fulton: I think in so far as this is a legal matter at all, it does fall under provincial jurisdiction and in so far as it is one dealing specifically with the administration of justice in the provinces, that should be dealt with in the same way. In so far as the question of the training of Indians and the protection of Indians when they get into courts is concerned it does to some extent fall under federal jurisdiction, but there it would come under the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, the estimates of which department I will be dealing with later.

I might just point out here that in capital cases the invariable practice is to provide Indians with legal assistance of the nature to which the hon. gentleman has referred.

Mr. Howard: I might add, Mr. Chairman, that these problems arise more particularly in magistrates' courts which are—

Mr. Fulton: Which are provincial courts exclusively.

Mr. Howard: No, I beg to differ—they are kangaroo courts.

Mr. McIvor: I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. When a man who has slipped a bit has been confined, are you in favour of giving him consideration by cancelling part of his sentence if he shows signs of making good?

Mr. Fulton: I think about the only answer I can give the hon. member is that I am very impressed with the work of the remission service. The principle upon which that service operates is that wherever the facts of the case indicate a prisoner can be successfully rehabilitated if discharged they go to work on such a basis. I am in full accord with that principle. Sometimes it does seem to some of us that they could work a little faster. On the other hand there are a great many factors to be considered and in general I believe they work on a pretty sound basis.

Mr. McIvor: Thank you.

Mr. Winch: Is the minister discussing now the remission branch or does he wish us to wait until item 173?

Mr. Fulton: If it suits the convenience of hon. members to move to item 173 that is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Chairman, I am afraid it does not suit my convenience just now unless the minister can tell me that I am not dealing with that part of the estimates where the question I have in mind could be asked. I am faced with another difficulty. I wish the minister would occupy some other dual position than that of Minister of Justice and that of Minister of Citizenship and Immigration because I have questions in mind which may deal with both of those positions.

First of all, I want to bring the minister back to a question I asked last November about one Per Holting, a Canadian citizen who boarded a S.A.S. aircraft in Greenland, having purchased a ticket from there through to Los Angeles and when the plane touched down in Winnipeg, got off the plane. I agree that according to the ticket Mr. Holting should have gone right through to Los Angeles and I suppose it was part of the contract between Mr. Holting and S.A.S. that he should do so.

Nevertheless this Canadian citizen, having got off the plane at Winnipeg, decided he would like to break his journey permanently at that point. In an answer the minister gave to me he said that the police of St. James, at the request of the captain of the aircraft, literally had Mr. Holting put back on that plane, and I suppose it would have been done —no matter how gently—nevertheless forcibly.

I would like to know if it is possible for a Canadian citizen to be deported from this country in such a way and, if so, under what law? This man was sent out of his country. Here again there is the question as to whether this should come under the Department of Justice or under the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, but I think there is an element of law in this matter, and I would like to know what the Minister has to say about what I call the deportation of Mr. Holting, a word which I gathered was disagreed with previously. The fact remains that a Canadian citizen was deported, sent out of this country by police officers, acting, I have no doubt, honestly. Nevertheless he was sent out of this country to another land and had to find his way back. I should like to find out under what law this man was exiled from Canada.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I think that part of the hon. gentleman's question might better be asked on the estimates of the Department of Transport which is responsible for questions arising under these international air agreements, and under which the particular air line in question was prohibited from allowing a passenger to deplane in Winnipeg.

Mr. Nicholson: Or the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Fulton: I might almost say any department other than my own. I do assure the hon. gentleman that this department is not responsible in this matter at all. Mr. Holting was not arrested—perhaps I should say interfered with—by federal police; he was not interfered with by any officers of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Representations that were made to any authorities were made by the air line officials who were seeking to discharge the terms under which they were given the right to land in Winnipeg. The police involved in the case were, I believe, the St. James municipal police. Mr. Holting suffered himself to be led back to the plane, and went on to Los Angeles, and while I understand the apprehension and dissatisfaction felt by the hon. member I think that in the circumstances I must take the position, in dealing with the estimates of the Department of Justice, that there is nothing here for me to answer.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): But is this not a matter which should be the concern of the Minister of Justice. Is it possible that under our system of law in this country a Canadian can be deported from Canada? Is there not a principle here? A Canadian lands here and surely, if he decided to stay, it would be the duty of the S.A.S. to take action against him and to do it properly through the courts. Is there not a violation of law here? What does the Minister of Justice have to say about that?

Mr. Fulton: I think that if Mr. Holting feels that he was improperly treated a remedy would be open to him by way of whatever action he may see fit to take against those by whom he feels he was improperly treated. I do not think as Minister of Justice I should be drawn into expressing an opinion beyond the general statement I have made. The difficulty under which I labour is that as a private citizen I might be as much concerned about the situation as is the hon. member, but the moment I say something here as Minister of Justice I might be taken as expressing an official opinion that Mr. Holting should or should not follow a certain course of action.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): If I should direct a question to the minister in his capacity as Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will I get the same answer, or will I get a fuller answer?

Mr. Fulton: That would depend entirely on the question which the hon. gentleman asks.

Mr. Christian: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask a question with regard to item 172. I notice that the increase in this item is approximately $9,000. Would the minister like to report on what progress has been made in Canada in so far as uniformity of legislation is concerned.

Mr. Fulton: The increase of $9,497 is for the entire departmental administration, whereas the amount voted to the Commissioners with respect to promoting uniformity of legislation is only $200, which is the amount actually expended this year. Their meeting took place in Calgary in September just prior to the meeting of the Canadian Bar Association.

Mr. Christian: What progress has been made in so far as uniformity of legislation is concerned?

Mr. Fulton: This is a matter which is largely of concern to the provinces. What is sought in these meetings is to bring legislation and legal practices in the various provinces into conformity as far as is possible. Our interest as I understand it, is more a watching interest than a direct interest because of course when we legislate we legislate for the whole dominion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question which, as he knows, has been directed to a number of his colleagues on the first item of their estimates. Is he making any reductions in the estimates of his department for this year, and has he found any examples of waste or extravagance?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I propose to move three reductions in the estimates, one in the combines branch—and I assure the hon. member that it does not represent any diminution in the work of that branch—one in the penitentiaries and one in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. In so far as the other part of the question is concerned, that is to waste and extravagance, I do not recall that when I sat on that side of the house I ever made any allegations of waste and extravagance against this particular department.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether, if this government gets down to attempting to bring the labour laws of Canada into conformity, that will be done under the system for promoting conformity of legislation dealt with in item 172.

Mr. Fulton: I imagine that the discussion of labour legislation could take place at the meetings to which reference has been made, but it would be more likely to take place at a conference of labour ministers or deputy labour ministers, and I understand that such conferences do take place from time to time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the uniformity referred to under this heading mean uniformity as to the substance of legislation or just uniformity as to the form?

Mr. Fulton: I am not sure I heard the hon. member's question fully, but the sort of topic that would be discussed would be uniformity of highway legislation, uniformity with regard to bill of sale acts, mechanics liens acts and subjects of that nature. I am not sure whether that answers the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In part. If I may repeat my question, I asked whether what was sought was uniformity as to substance or uniformity as to form.

Mr. Fulton: The answer would be both.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What is it that limits the type of subjects that are considered? The field that has been mentioned is rather narrow.

Mr. Fulton: As I understand it there would be no limitations as to the type of subject. The subjects covered would be those suggested from time to time in correspondence between the various attorneys general. The hon. gentleman will recall that a couple of years ago we had extended discussions here on highways legislation; and it might be that as a result of such discussions it would be suggested to the committee that the highway codes of the various provinces should be discussed at the conference. There is I understand no limitation on the headings of legislation which might be discussed at the conference.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, on page 241 respecting the details of this particular item I notice that the bulk of the $9,497 increase this year over last year results from an increase of salaries to the civil servants or to those responsible for administration. I note, too, that there are listed on that page an estimated 108 employees for 1957-58 as compared with 109 last year. I am not taking any exception to the increase in salaries, but I am wondering whether these 108 jobs are all filled at one time, or what percentage of them are ever filled.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, in this department we have a staff turnover problem just as any other department of government or indeed any business employing a comparable number of personnel would have. The desire of the department and the effort of the administrators of the department is directed toward keeping the positions filled in so far as it is possible to do so because the efficient functioning of the department depends upon keeping the positions manned to as full an extent as possible.

Mr. Hahn: Just by way of example, Mr. Chairman, we are estimating this year that we shall have three deputy assistants to the Minister of Justice at a salary of $15,000. We provided for three last year and I am wondering if we have the three each year. Did we have three last year? When did we last have three?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that question is mainly that up until May of 1957 Mr. F. P. Varcoe, Q.C. was deputy minister of justice. He then retired and Mr. W. R. Jackett, Q.C. who sits in front of me here was appointed deputy minister. Prior to his appointment we had three assistant deputy ministers. We now have only two and I am informed that in next year's estimates we will only have establishment for two assistant deputy ministers.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister one question of detail. Reference was made earlier this evening to the resignation from the bench of Mr. Justice Sloan. Can the minister say whether the pension which the governor in council may grant to a judge on retirement has been granted to Mr. Sloan for the period when he will be doing this other job at $50,000 a year?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, no pension has as yet been granted to retired Chief Justice Sloan. The matter is by way of correspondence before me for consideration and I would not care to go further at the moment.

Item agreed to.

173. Remission service, including $40,000 for grants to recognized prisoners' aid societies, as may be approved by treasury board, $267,835.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, the minister has stated that he is going to move for reduction of a couple of items but he did not mention this one and I am very glad he did not. As a matter of fact, although it is now only a matter of a few months before the estimates run out I want to say something on behalf of the remission service and express the hope that the minister, if not now at least in the future, will greatly increase the budget of this service.

It has been my experience since I came to Ottawa as the result of the election in 1953 to have to take up a number of cases with the remission service. I would direct the attention of the hon. members to the amount of money allocated to this branch. Quite bluntly, I must say I do not think the remission service can possibly do the job it is supposed to do or would want to do on this budget. It is the responsibility of the service to make up all the necessary documents for submission to the Solicitor General for the report to the governor general in council with regard to any person who is sentenced to death for homicide and who appeals the sentence. That is automatic. I also understand that those who have their death sentence commuted to life imprisonment have their sentence reviewed by the service after 12 years. There is also an automatic review in the case of all those who are committed to penitentiaries as habitual criminals or psychopaths. I believe this is done every three years after a definite period. The remission service also has to deal, if not on an automatic basis at least on request, with the question of appeals for parole and ticket of leave of every person in Canada who has been given a sentence of two years or more.

I am sorry that I do not have the record here of the number of cases the remission service is supposed to review on a complete and honest basis and on which it must make recommendations as to whether or not a parole should be granted. I notice that in the present estimates from the administrative viewpoint there is a staff increase of only three. As I said I know that the estimates will have run out in about two months but as one who has had considerable experience with the remission service I want to say that I believe they would be the first to admit that they are completely overworked. They do not have adequate staff to handle cases to the extent they should. I sincerely hope that the minister will see to it that there is a substantial increase in the estimates for this service in line with the recommendation of the Fauteux report in order to place the service on the basis outlined in that report and also, I believe, in line with the thinking of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have the advice of the hon. member. The increase this year as against the year before is not three but nine or nearly 20 per cent over last year.

Mr. Winch: It is only three in the estimates.

Mr. Fulton: It has increased from 46 to 55.

Mr. Winch: I am speaking about the administrative aspect. I am not including stenographers or others who are not involved in making decisions or doing research.

Mr. Fulton: If you confine it to the administrative staff I am sure the percentage increase is even greater. I am glad to be able to assure my hon. friend that I expect to have before me within the next two weeks recommendations from the department with regard to the institution of a parole board along the lines of the recommendation of the Fauteux commission report which, of course, is all bound up with this report of the remission service. The matter of staff and the function and position of the board will be considered at the same time that that other matter is being considered.

Mr. Winch: I sincerely hope that when the change is being made the director of the remission service will be allocated to the job of directing the service only and will not have to take on any additional responsibilities.

Mr. Christian: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question with regard to item No. 173. I notice that the sum of $40,000 is mentioned in there as grants to recognized prisoners' aid societies, an increase of $10,000 over last year. Then, if we turn to item No. 182 on page 36 the sum of $60,000 is mentioned for grants to recognized prisoners' aid societies which has been increased from the sum of $50,000 allocated last year. I recognize the good work that these societies are doing but I would like an explanation as to the increase and as to why these two items are separated one under the heading "Penitentiaries" and one under "Department".

Mr. Fulton: As to the increase in item No. 182 perhaps the hon. gentleman would permit me to wait until we reach that item under "Penitentiaries" before dealing with it. Under item No. 173, the hon. gentleman will appreciate that these prisoners' aid societies do a great deal of the supervisory and reporting work on the prisoners released on parole or ticket of leave. As I announced earlier, we have established additional regional offices and it is the increases arising from such developments which account for the increased work which is being undertaken for the department by these prisoners' aid societies. The hon. member will also agree—I think I am correct in saying this—that this is in line with the recommendation of the Fauteux committee that we should make every use possible of recognized prisoners' aid societies.

Mr. Hahn: Will the minister indicate why we have two items?

Mr. Fulton: I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that the prisoners aid societies do work while the prisoner is in the penitentiary at which time provision is made by the penitentiaries branch and after he leaves the penitentiary at which time provision is made under this item.

Item agreed to.

Exchequer Court of Canada—

175. Administration, $108,760.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, this item has to do with the administration of the Exchequer Court of Canada. Has the minister yet had time, with all the other responsibilities that are his since he is in charge of two departments, to give consideration to the idea that we have proposed in this house on a number of occasions, namely that the exchequer court might be asked to take on the handling of those divorces which are now being dealt with by parliament. Some of us are aware of the fact, although I was not personally involved, that 20 or 30 members of the House of Commons spent the greater part of this day hearing one divorce case. The information about that hearing that has been communicated to me makes me feel, as I am sure the minister does, that that is hardly the business for which members of parliament are elected. I am fully aware of the feelings that are aroused when one mentions this matter. I am aware of the arguments that are proposed against the suggestion that we have made. It does seem to me, however, that it is a way of getting divorces out of parliament and yet at the same time not establishing a divorce court in either of those provinces where it is not wanted.

As far as I am concerned, any alternative suggestion that would be better or more practicable would be equally welcomed. I wonder whether the minister, together with his officials, has given any consideration to this matter. If not, would he put it on his agenda?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, I have to confess to the hon. gentleman that it will be more a case of putting it on the agenda than being able to report much progress. It seems to me the problem is, to use the word in its broader sense, more a political one than an administrative one and therefore I hesitate somewhat to put any onus on the department. I can only report that I have had some preliminary discussion with the Speaker of the other place, but I am not able to report that we have made much progress. I am as uneasy about the situation as is my hon. friend and I shall continue to try to work something out.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Knowing the readiness of my hon. friend to pursue matters about which he is uneasy, these words of his are very welcome.

Item agreed to.

Combines Investigation Act—

179. Restrictive trade practices commission, $79,465.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can the minister make a statement to the committee on what has been happening under the Combines Investigation Act since the new government came into office? Can he tell us how many investigations have been made in the last number of months? Can he tell us how many reports have been made? Can he tell us how many prosecutions have been launched? Can he tell us whether the new government plans any changes in the administration or the policies with respect to the effort to avoid the development of monopolies in this country? Perhaps the minister might prefer to call it ten o'clock and start afresh tomorrow morning.

Mr. Fulton: I might hope we could carry the item tonight if I make a brief statement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think the subject calls for more than one minute. I remember once when it took several weeks.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps we might call it ten o'clock.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the leader of the house what the business is for tomorrow and Saturday and I would also like to couple that with a request to him to tell us what the business will be on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week. The leader of the house knows that the Liberal convention to select a leader for our party will be held on those three days and it would be extremely useful for us to know at this time what the order of business will be on those three days.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the hon. member must not expect me to be a star gazer quite that far away. The business tomorrow will be the continuation of the estimates of justice and then fisheries and national revenue. On Saturday we shall continue with estimates. I am hoping that Monday will be a government day. There will be a notice of motion in Votes and Proceedings tomorrow dealing with Monday and I expect we shall have legislation on Monday and Tuesday but I cannot go any farther than that at the present time.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the house leader not able to say what will be taken up on Tuesday and Wednesday?

Mr. Green: No, I cannot say that far ahead, Mr. Speaker. I will let the hon. member know just as soon as I can.

Mr. Low: I was just wondering, Mr. Speaker, whether I might make a suggestion to the house leader. Everybody knows how important to the Liberals the coming convention is. Some of us may not think it is too important. They are shy. I never saw such a shy bunch of fellows in my life. Otherwise, I think they would have made a request for time off. Since they are shy, I do not mind suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that it does not hurt to be a bit chivalrous sometimes. I would suggest to the house leader that he give consideration to adjourning the house during the Liberal convention. I should like to see how they carry on, and perhaps get a pointer or two. I would strongly suggest that the house leader give consideration to that suggestion. I might just assure him that my group would be quite prepared to support him if he will propose that the house adjourn for the duration of the convention. We should go down and see for ourselves what effect the first epistle to the Babylonians is going to have. I do suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the house leader give that careful consideration.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, these Liberals are not as shy as they seem tonight. There will be a motion on Votes and Proceedings tomorrow that will deal with the times during which we shall request the house to adjourn next week.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the leader tell us at this time what the contents of the motion will be?

Mr. Green: If the hon. member will just possess himself in patience until tomorrow morning I think he will see the times that are stated. I rather suspect that he knows already.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the house leader whether, in considering the estimates of the Department of National Revenue, at the same time we will be considering the estimates of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I suggest to the house leader that since he has informed the house tonight of the terms of one motion that is to appear in tomorrow's Votes and Proceedings, namely the one that takes away the last Monday which would be a private members' day, he would not be violating the British North America Act or the laws of the Medes and Persians if he were to tell us the terms of the motion having to do with the days or nights we might not be sitting next week. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, with great respect for my hon. friend, that he could tell us in advance a little more about what is coming than has been his practice thus far this session. In other words, may I suggest to the Minister of Public Works that he loosen up a little bit.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is unusually persuasive this evening. However, I believe that he, too, knows just as much about these hours as the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the minister like the member for Laurier and me to tell him what the plans are?

Mr. Hardie: As a private member, may I say let us have them.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

EIGHTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. C. E. Rea (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask leave of the house to revert to routine proceedings for the purpose of presenting a report from the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rea: I have the honour to present the eighth report of the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to the order of the house passed on December 2, 1957.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

PIPE LINES DISPOSAL, YUKON TERRITORY

Question No. 92—Mr. Lesage:

1. Have the 2 inch, 3 inch and 4 inch pipe lines in the Yukon been disposed of?
2. If not, what progress has been made in the negotiations with the United States government on the subject?
3. If so, how have they been disposed of and under what conditions?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. No.

Questions

2. Progress is being made in the negotiations with the United States government and it is hoped that a satisfactory agreement for the transfer of title to these pipe lines from the United States to Canada will be reached shortly.

3. Not applicable.

WHEAT STORAGE, WEST COAST TERMINALS

Question No. 317—Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose):

1. How much space in terms of bushels of wheat was available in the Alberta wheat pools, Vancouver terminal, at the end of November, 1957, and at the end of December, 1957?
2. How much space in terms of bushels of wheat was available in all other west coast terminals at the end of the above-mentioned months?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

	(1) Alberta wheat pool terminal	(2) All Pacific coast terminals
Rated capacity	7,300,000 bushels	23,900,000 bushels
Estimated working capacity (a)	5,475,000 bushels	17,900,000 bushels
Available space on basic working capacity—
November 27, 1957	1,141,000 bushels	5,035,000 bushels
December 31, 1957	1,075,000 bushels	3,723,000 bushels

(a) Estimate of maximum capacity during operating season to ensure full operating efficiency.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

A—Department—

172. Departmental administration including annual contribution of $200 to the conference of commissioners on uniformity of legislation in Canada. $543,155.

173. Remission service, including $40,000 for grants to recognized prisoners' aid societies, as may be approved by treasury board, $267,835.

174. Administration, $203,440.

175. Administration, $108,760.

Northwest Territories territorial court—

176. Administration, including administration of justice—Northwest Territories, $93,800.

Yukon territorial court—

177. Administration, including administration of justice—Yukon territory, $85,650.

Other courts—

178. Payments of gratuities to the widows or other dependents of judges who die while in office, $20,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, January 10, 1958

The house met at eleven o'clock.

HEALTH INSURANCE

STATEMENT ON AMENDMENT TO HOSPITAL INSURANCE AND DIAGNOSTIC SERVICES ACT

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce to the house that the government intends to introduce an amendment to the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act during the next session of parliament to repeal section 6 (2) of the act, which deals with conditions relating to the start of the shared program. This section reads as follows:

> No contributions shall be paid under this act until at least six provinces, containing at least one-half of the population of Canada, have entered into an agreement and the provincial law in relation to those provinces is in force.

It is of course necessary to specify the time at which federal contributions can be made. Therefore a new section will be proposed which will permit any province that has signed an agreement with the federal government and has a provincial law in force to receive federal contributions on or after July 1, 1958.

This amendment will accomplish two purposes:

1. It establishes an effective date for the start of the program, and

2. The start of the program in any one province will no longer be dependent upon the action in at least five other provinces.

This announcement will allow the provinces concerned to plan their budgets now being or about to be considered, without any uncertainty as to the federal government's stand in this regard. I am confident that at least three or four of our provinces will try to be ready by July 1, 1958, and that most, if not all, of the remainder of the provinces will soon have plans in operation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think the house and the country will welcome this announcement by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, particularly in view of the fact that although now more than six months have passed since the government came to power, no agreements have been signed with any of the provinces. This kind of action, as my hon. friend well knows, is very necessary in order to permit provinces like Ontario to proceed with their plans.

I would now ask the minister if he does not propose to make any announcement about the government's intention, pursuant to its election pledges, of including tuberculosis and mental illness, without any strings attached such as those laid down by the Prime Minister at the dominion-provincial conference, when he said the government was prepared to include these particular provisions but that any moneys paid out by the federal government, namely a total of $68 million, would have to be deducted from any further fiscal grants made by the federal government to the provinces.

Mr. Fleming: He did not say that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Monteith: The Prime Minister at the dominion-provincial conference did make an announcement, but I may say we are not prepared at this moment to make any further announcement in that respect.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I say that although we too would like to see action in the matter of including tubercular and mental cases within the provisions of this act, the only word we wish to say at this moment is that we welcome the announcement the minister has made today.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to ask the minister a question for the purpose of clarification—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we have followed a very salutary practice after a minister's statement has been made on motions of hearing from only one representative of each group in the house, and of reserving other questions until the question period.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. If I heard him correctly he said this amendment he referred to would be introduced at the next session of parliament. Is it not true that he previously informed us that it would be introduced at this session of parliament?

Mr. Monteith: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think I had intimated that we were going to attempt to have the amendment proposed at this session, but we find now that this will not be possible.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister if in view of the state of balance of the parties in this house it is not a rather arrogant assumption on the part of the government to assume that this is any assurance to the provinces that something will be done in the next session?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Apparently the government considers parliament of no importance.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is rather in the nature of an assertion than a question, and is not in order at this stage.

Mr. Fleming: An untrue assertion.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the minister not regard it as reasonable to assume that any government in power in the next few months would make that amendment?

Mr. Monteith: Why yes, of course, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF OVERSUBSCRIPTION OF $300 MILLION CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BOND ISSUE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday at five p.m. the books were opened on an issue of $300 million of C.N.R. bonds guaranteed by the Canadian government. This is the largest bond issue in the history of the Canadian National Railways. I am happy to report that the issue was heavily oversubscribed and the books were closed immediately. Fractional allotments are now being made against the subscriptions.

This firm expression of public confidence in Canada's financial strength is deeply gratifying and I am sure it will also be pleasing to all members of this house.

REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF LOAN FUND FOR SMALL BUSINESSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the declaration made by the Prime Minister at Brockville on May 8, 1957, in favour of granting loans to small business, and also in view of the deplorable situation in which small manufacturers and small retailers actually find themselves, my question is this. Is it true that the government has decided at last to grant loans to small business?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I dealt with this matter in reply to a question yesterday. I think my hon. friend was not in the house at the time. If he will look at Hansard he will see the answer.

[Later:]

Mr. LaCroix: May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I understood from the answer given yesterday in connection with granting loans to small businesses that a decision had not yet been reached so far as government policy is concerned. May I ask the minister if we may expect a decision soon?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I think my answer yesterday was full and complete. Whenever there is anything further to announce my hon. friend may be sure it will be announced in the house in the regular and proper manner.

REPORTED DECREASE IN COST OF LIVING INDEX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister prepared to say whether the slight reduction in the cost of living index recently is the result of government policy?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the hon. member seriously puts that question forward for information, but rather to draw attention to it.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO IMPLEMENT RECOMMENDATIONS OF JOINT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 245, to amend the Criminal Code (corporal punishment).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to carry into statutory effect the recommendation of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons dealing with corporal punishment, that corporal punishment should no longer be part of a judicial sentence in Canada. To do this would require a number of amendments to the Criminal Code, and that is the purpose of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO LETTERS FROM PREMIER BULGANIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Algoma East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has received a letter from Premier Bulganin of the Soviet union and, if so, what action the government proposes to take with regard to it.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, about 9.30 this morning I had delivered to me a rather lengthy note from Marshal Bulganin, chairman of the council of ministers of the U.S.S.R. It comprises some 29 pages, and having regard to the fact that there was a cabinet meeting this morning I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that there has been no time as yet to do more than peruse the note. It will be considered during the week end, and I hope to be in a position at the beginning of the week to have something to say in this regard.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask if not a supplementary question at least a related question, and ask the Prime Minister how he is getting along with the earlier note of Mr. Bulganin which arrived early in December.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is fully informed in that regard. The question as to the nature of the replies of the various NATO nations was considered on Wednesday by the council in Paris. Consideration as to particulars, and also as to the general purport of the answers, is being continued when the council reopens this afternoon.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, apparently two further notes have been received. Was there not a note received after the statement issued following the meeting of the supreme soviet of the U.S.S.R. in December, containing the seven points which have been widely publicized? As far as my reading goes I understand that these seven points were also sent to the government. It seems that there are three communications. Has the government dealt with any of those three? Was one addressed to the government or to parliament? What is the situation regarding the seven points passed at the meeting of the supreme soviet in, I think, December?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, my information is that there were just the two notes, and in addition there was a note of felicitation to Canadians in general as of January 1.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question in view of the reply given a few moments ago about the NATO meeting, in answer to a question put by the hon. member for Algoma East. The Prime Minister will recall that a few days ago, some time before Christmas, I asked if the reply would be collective or by individual countries, and the Prime Minister replied that it would be by individual countries. Are we now to understand that the reply will be a collective one, or is this meeting taking place at NATO simply to enable countries to be better informed of the position of each other, and the replies will be individual?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there is no incongruity in the two answers. The position of affairs is this. If necessary, in co-operation we desire to have some degree of uniformity, while maintaining the right of each to reply as it will.

COLOMBO PLAN—PURCHASE OF WHEAT BY MEMBER COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce relating to grain shipped to Colombo plan countries, following the announcement made in the house the other day. Would the minister say how early the grain can be moved and whether it can be moved through the Atlantic and eastern ports as one means of helping to equalize delivery quotas in western Canada and as a method of improving employment, since western facilities are now being extensively used?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons for making the announcement the other day was to expedite the movement of the wheat to India prior to the completion of the financial arrangements. Second, part of the understanding with India in taking the 400,000 tons that they are prepared to accept was that approximately half of that amount would be shipped out of Atlantic ports; and that movement will commence just as quickly as the Indian officials are able to make the necessary arrangements.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might ask the minister whether the agreement to take half through the Atlantic ports means that half will go through Vancouver, or may it be possible that an even larger proportion will go through the eastern facilities since the western facilities are now being used almost to capacity.

Mr. Churchill: That has been considered, but it cannot all be moved at once, and this early movement of the first half will be through the eastern ports.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED PRINTING OF PENSION CHEQUES IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis Lewry (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport and bring it to the special attention of the Minister of Finance as well. Is the minister aware of the fact that on a pension cheque stub of the Canadian National Railways which I have just sent over to him for examination there appears in very fine print the words "Printed in U.S.A."? Is it necessary for a Canadian public utility to have its employees' pension cheques printed outside of Canada?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of why this particular pension cheque stub was printed in the United States, but I will make inquiries of the management of the Canadian National Railways and give an answer as soon as I receive one.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING CONTINUOUS TRANSIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In answer to a question of mine last night about one Per Holting, a Canadian citizen who was forcibly evicted from Canada because he landed in Winnipeg from an S.A.S. plane, the Minister of Justice referred me to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell me if negotiations are under way with S.A.S. to obviate any other such incident?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question. I might say that no negotiations are under way at the present time, but a general review is to be undertaken of air transport agreements with foreign countries.

TELEVISION

MARITIME PROVINCES—INQUIRY AS TO COMMENCEMENT OF REGULAR MICROWAVE TRANSMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. L. Morris (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue, notice of which I have given him. Can the minister now advise whether a firm date has been determined by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the commencement of regular microwave relay television transmission over CBHT, Halifax?

Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member gave me notice of his intention to ask this question just as I came into the house. Speaking from memory, but I am reasonably certain that my memory is correct in this particular matter, I can say that arrangements have been made for the commencement of regular telecast programs over the station in question on February 2. The microwave connection will then have been finally tested, and barring some unexpected technical difficulties they will commence regular telecasts on February 2, and possibly even a short time before that.

Mr. Morris: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the minister tell us when they will commence in Newfoundland?

Mr. Morris: May I ask a supplementary question? In view of the minister's beneficence this morning, can he tell us whether the C.B.C. will also be requested to provide live television transmission of two early entertainments, the Liberal convention and the Durelle fight?

Mr. Pickersgill: That, of course, is not a frivolous question!

Mr. Nowlan: In view of the sporting nature of both the events and the matter which they have in common, arrangements have been made for the telecasting of those events although the microwave set-up will not have been completely and finally checked. It is obvious to all those who know this—certainly I did not until recently—the microwave installations are already in. They are being tested and checked every day. The Bell Telephone Company will not certify them as completely satisfactory until February 2; but barring the possibility of some technical difficulty the C.B.C. intend to use them for the telecasting of the Liberal convention next week and also for the fight which unfortunately has been postponed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—INTRODUCTION OF MEASURE PROVIDING GRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the government is now announcing details of legislation for the next session, will the Prime Minister reconsider the answer he gave yesterday and tell the house whether the legislation making grants to the Atlantic provinces will make those grants for the current fiscal year or whether they will be available only for the next fiscal year. As I am sure the Prime Minister will appreciate, this is a matter of great importance to the Atlantic provinces.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think in the next two days the answer to my hon. friend's question will be not only apparent but complete.

MARITIME FREIGHT RATES

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF REVISION OF ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister say when the Maritime Freight Rates Act will be revised to help Atlantic provinces producers sell their products in central Canada, as promised by him at College Bridge, New Brunswick, on May 28, 1957?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member well knows that matters of this kind are always under consideration by this government, whose whole aim is to do good for the people of this country.

AIRPORTS

PENTICTON, B.C.—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF RUNWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. C. Christian (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, of which I have given him notice. In view of the fact that at Penticton traffic has increased considerably during the past year, and in view of the willingness of Canadian Pacific Airlines to fly larger aircraft into the Penticton airport in the near future, would the government, when it causes the airport runway to be strengthened next year, extend the present runway an additional 1,200 feet, thereby making the over-all length of same 7,200 feet?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I wish to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising me of his intention to ask this question. This request will receive the usual study and consideration which requests of this kind always receive from my departmental officials.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): May I ask a supplementary question. Would the same consideration be given to an application respecting Castlegar airport?

Mr. Hees: If one is received, Mr. Speaker.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ROYAL COMMISSION ON ENERGY—CONSIDERATION OF PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Borden commission on energy still free, in pursuance of its terms of reference as announced on October 15, to consider public ownership as one of the special measures that might be taken in relation to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited in order to safeguard the interests of Canadian producers or consumers of gas, or has this possibility been closed out by the negative statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the powers of the Borden commission are set forth in the order in council establishing that commission. Those powers comprise several sections and will be exercised by the commission in accordance with the application of the sections in question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If the Borden commission recommends public ownership of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, will the government give consideration to that recommendation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is too experienced in the practice of the house to expect an answer to a question as hypothetical as that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Only because I know the Prime Minister.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—TRANSPORTATION BY AIRCRAFT OVER CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can he advise the house whether United States aircraft carry hydrogen and atomic bombs over Canada in moving to European and Alaskan bases?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I was asked a somewhat similar question on November 27 regarding the carriage of live bombs by United States planes across Canadian territory. I pointed out at that time that United States aircraft carrying live bombs across Canada were required to obtain prior permission from the Minister of National Defence before such aircraft could fly with that type of bomb. The same thing would apply to nuclear bombs if the United States desired to transport any such weapons through Canadian air space.

There have been occasions when requests have been made for the passage of nuclear weapons, in which cases every precaution has been taken to see that these weapons are inactivated and that there is no danger to Canadian lives or property. I do not think it is advisable to draw a distinction between atomic and hydrogen bombs.

Mr. Henderson: I take it from the minister's answer that, with permission, hydrogen and atomic bombs have been carried across Canada.

Mr. Pearkes: I did not say that. I referred to nuclear weapons. I said it was undesirable to draw a distinction between atomic and hydrogen bombs.

Mr. Henderson: Then do I take it from the minister's answer that nuclear weapons have been carried across Canada by United States aircraft with the permission of the Canadian government?

Mr. Pearkes: That is correct.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Is the minister aware that public statements have been made recently to the effect that, regardless of what precautions may be taken, an accident is possible?

Mr. Pearkes: I am not aware that an accident is possible. I do not believe it is probable because, as I said, every precaution is taken to inactivate these weapons before they are carried across Canadian territory. I am assured there is no risk to Canadian lives or property as the result of an accident occurring to aircraft carrying such weapons, which accident would be the direct result of the fact that such weapons were being carried by the aircraft.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I have a supplementary question. I hate to bother the minister, but can he give me a more definite explanation of the meaning of the word "undesirable" in the context in which he used it?

Mr. Pearkes: I beg the hon. member's pardon?

Mr. Herridge: The minister used the word "undesirable" in order to distinguish between this and that. Could he give a more definitive explanation of the meaning of the word "undesirable" in the way in which he used it?

[Mr. Pearkes.]

Mr. Pearkes: I do not know that I used the word "undesirable"; did I?

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Mr. Pearkes: Oh, yes; undesirable to draw a distinction between the hydrogen and the atom bomb. I question whether it is desirable or in the public interest to define the difference between the hydrogen and the atom bomb in this connection.

[Later:]

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of National Defence would care to amplify somewhat the statement he made when he referred to the permission that is being granted for the transport of nuclear weapons above Canadian territory. Is this permission being granted only for specific movements, or are any of those permits that are being given on a continuing basis? The strategic air command, we understand, has 1,000 planes in the air; and does the possibility exist that these nuclear weapons are in the air above us at all times?

I think the minister knows what I am after. Is it for the movement from one place to another on a particular day, or is there a continuing permit in effect?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker, I think the short answer is that there is no blanket authority given. Every particular case makes application for the flight. There is no blanket or continuing authority at all. Each specific request is dealt with at the time.

AGRICULTURE

NORTHERN ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOLLOWING CROP LOSS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister now say whether, as a result of requests from the stricken area, the government of Canada has been able to find any way by which assistance can be given those in the Peace river country whose crops are a total loss? I am speaking now of assistance in addition to what can be extended to them under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): As I think the hon. member is well aware, and as I have pointed out in letters to the minister of agriculture of Alberta, to boards of trade and so on, the matter of direct relief as far as the farmers in the Peace river district are concerned who have lost their crops is the primary responsibility of the municipalities and the provincial government of Alberta. As I have pointed out in these letters, if the province of Alberta considers that a disaster has taken place which it is beyond their financial ability to handle, they then can make application to the dominion government in connection with the matter. But until we get an application of that kind from the government of Alberta we are in no position to move into that Peace river country with direct relief measures, and it is constitutionally improper for us to do so.

Mr. Low: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I should like the minister to know that I was not asking him to move into the Peace river country. My question was simply whether he had been able to find any means by which the federal government could grant additional assistance where it is so urgently required. That was the important thing.

Mr. Harkness: The only means by which we have been able to assist have already been taken, namely by the Prairie Farm Assistance Act measures and through increasing the quota so the grain which was harvested up there in a damp condition can be shipped out for drying. Also, of course, that means that the people up there who have grain have been able to deliver more than have people in other parts of the country.

EGGS—REPORTED PURCHASE BELOW FLOOR PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, and I am sure that members in all parts of the house welcome the minister back following his illness. My question is this Has the minister been advised that eggs are being purchased in the London district at below the floor price? If so, will the government purchase the surplus, as has been done in the past?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I have not been advised of any circumstances of this kind. I shall have the matter looked into immediately. We are of course prepared, through the prices support board, to buy all eggs which are offered at the support price. In the period before Christmas we had bought a considerable number of eggs in western Canada, but the price of eggs in eastern Canada up to the end of December was above the support price and none had been offered to us. We are, of course, prepared to take all that are offered at the support price.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister explain why it is that at points in western Canada this situation prevails? I am referring now to Rosetown, from which I had a letter a few days ago stating that eggs in the neighbourhood were being turned in at 20 cents and 25 cents a dozen. How can that occur if we have a proper floor price?

Mr. Harkness: Without knowing the exact circumstances I could not say exactly what is the answer to that particular question. But in most cases the answer is that the eggs referred to are not grade A large eggs. They may be grade B eggs or they may be grade A medium or they may be some other grade of eggs. There is quite a price differential between grade A large eggs which are at the support price of 38 cents and these other eggs.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I have a supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister has given any consideration to changing the act in order to require the packing companies and others by law to pay not less than the floor price as set out in government policy?

Mr. Harkness: I do not think that is a matter of changing the act. Certainly I am taking every means possible to insure that those dealers who offer eggs to us in the support board have paid the proper price to the farmers. In any case I can discover in which the farmer has not been paid the proper price, we will not purchase the eggs from the dealer at the support price.

GRAIN

WESTERN CANADA—ALLOCATION OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister give the house the assurance that progress is being made with respect to the allocation of box cars and shipping orders in western Canada so that as we come to the end of the crop year there will be more justice and equality in the distribution of box cars and shipping orders among western farmers?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): In reply to that question, which also contains an opinion, I would say the answer is yes.

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): I have a supplementary question. As a result of the many complaints with regard to the shortage of box cars at C.P.R. points in western Canada, has the minister brought this problem to the attention of the company in an attempt to correct this serious and unsatisfactory condition?

Mr. Churchill: If that is the case, it will be done.

Mr. McCullough: I have a supplementary question. Can the minister give the house the number of points that are still on the initial quota and the one-bushel quota in western Canada?

Mr. Churchill: That appears to me to be more a question for the order paper than one for an oral answer.

Mr. McCullough: I would like to direct another question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister give assurance that at the end of this crop year some plan will be undertaken and assurance given that in cases where there is not a proper distribution of box cars or shipping orders so as to equalize the quotas, special circumstances will be taken into consideration so this year quotas will be allocated on an equitable basis?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the hon. member recognizes the fact that at the end of the crop year, which is July 31, this government will be in power or will have been returned to power, and his suggestion with regard to box cars will be given very serious consideration.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO INTERIM PAYMENT ON 1956-57 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It arises out of a very grave financial crisis prevalent in the prairie provinces amongst grain producers. Can the minister say whether the interim payment on the 1956-57 wheat crop will be made at an early date?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): That question is important to the farming community in the prairie provinces. I can assure the hon. member that it is under consideration.

Mr. Argue: Can the minister give them some indication as to whether or not payment will be made within a few days or a few weeks? I think the matter has some urgency.

Mr. Churchill: It has some urgency, but I am not in a position today to say just what the date will be.

TRADE

FISH—U.S. RESTRICTIONS ON CANADIAN IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's statement accusing the former federal government of not being strong enough in resisting the efforts of United States politicians to have United States imports of Canadian fish restricted, can he tell the house what representations are being made by this government in the matter and how they are being made?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): That question has been answered on a number of occasions in recent days, respecting the attitude on the part of the United States in connection with importations, and I have nothing further to add.

WHEAT—PROVISION OF CREDIT FOR POLAND AND SPAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Peter Stefura (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Have negotiations been completed for the sale of wheat to Spain and Poland, or are they still continuing?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The negotiations have not been completed, Mr. Speaker.

REPORTED DECISION TO INCREASE DIVERSION TO UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to endeavour to divert more than 15 per cent of Canadian purchases in the United States to the United Kingdom, as was reported in yesterday's press by one of the members of the Canadian trade mission to Britain?

Mr. Speaker: I do not know what the minister to whom this question is addressed thinks of the question, but it seems to me it is hardly one that can be dealt with on the orders of the day.

An hon. Member: Why not?

IMMIGRATION

ALFONZE BARDOS—REPORTED REFUSAL TO GRANT CITIZENSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Justice whether he is in a position to answer the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Vancouver East?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I am not aware of the question to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Transport undertook to draw it to the minister's attention.

Mr. Fulton: The Minister of Justice was in the house yesterday. No; I beg the hon. member's pardon. I was attending a Senate committee during question period.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps if the hon. gentleman would look at page 3055 of Hansard—

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell me what the question is, since he displays such great interest in it.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a rather long question, sir, but it relates to the application for citizenship of Alfonze Bardos, about which the Globe and Mail complained in the same kind of terms in which it used to complain when I was minister.

Mr. Fulton: Now I understand the reason for the hon. gentleman's interest in this matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is more than just natural curiosity—

Mr. Fulton: The hon. gentleman has asked a question. I do not know whether he merely wanted to get his question on the record or whether he really wanted an answer. If he is interested in the answer he might give me an opportunity to reply.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be delighted.

Mr. Fulton: It has always been felt in cases such as this that it would not be in the public interest or even in the interest of the individual concerned to reveal the details of the reasons for rejection.

Some hon. Members: We have heard that before.

Mr. Fulton: The whole policy regarding rejection and the refusal of information is under review, so I am not able to say anything more at this stage.

Mr. Marler: A reasonable facsimile of other statements.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR CURRENT STATISTICS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I would like to ask the Minister of Labour, as the statistics usually given out from government departments as to the number of applicants for unemployment insurance are now delayed, if he is yet in a position to tell the house what are the actual registrations and what are the alleged unemployment figures? If my hon. friend is not in a position to do that today I would understand, because I have not given him notice; but I do think there is considerable delay in giving this information.

Mr. Fleming: Order. Are these statements?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): In answer to the hon. member's question I should say this, that the latest figures for registrations at the unemployment insurance offices across Canada, as of December 26, total 698,153. Of course the hon. member will understand that is not a true picture of unemployment in Canada. The latter figure is compiled by the dominion bureau of statistics and is expected to be issued, for the month of December, somewhere in the middle of January.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question. These figures are as of December 10?

Mr. Starr: December 26.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I ask the minister if he has the figure for December 26 last year, or a date approximately in that neighbourhood?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): About half.

Mr. Coldwell: Because 698,000 seems a very large figure indeed.

Mr. Starr: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The figure I gave a moment ago to the hon. member for Essex East compares with the figure for December 27, 1956, which was 387,327. I wish to point out, however, that there are fishermen added this year who were not eligible for unemployment insurance last year.

An hon. Member: They were unemployed just the same.

Mr. Argue: 300,000 of them?

Mr. Starr: And there are also larger registrations in respect of married women because of the regulations being revoked. In addition there is also seasonal unemployment.

Mr. Sinclair: And of course the Tory government is in power.

Mr. Starr: Also, Mr. Speaker, there is the extension of seasonal benefits from December 1 to May 15 where ordinarily they would not get on the rolls until January 1.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to ask a supplementary question. Would the minister tell us how many fishermen are registered?

Mr. Starr: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not those figures; they have not been compiled.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister get the figures?

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. He may not have the figures available and may want to wait until tomorrow to give a full answer. A while ago he stated there were some 698,000 unemployed. Could he tell us of that number how many have exhausted their unemployment assistance and, although they are still now unemployed, are now receiving no unemployment assistance?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the figure I quoted of 698,153 applies to those who are registered for unemployment insurance. I have no other figures available but, as I pointed out earlier, the dominion bureau of statistics figure which gives you these particulars as to who are unemployed and seeking work will be out some time during the middle of January for the period between November and December.

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINE—INVESTIGATION OF WALK-OUT EAST OF PORT ARTHUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister tell us what barriers, if any, prevent action being taken by his department in the walk-out affecting 500 men on the trans-Canada pipe line, a situation which has been going on for one week?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the walk-out is not in accordance with the collective bargaining agreement between the union and the employers. Consequently, because of that fact the federal government cannot interfere in this walk-out, and the matter must be settled between the employer and employees in accordance with the collective agreement.

Mr. Fisher: If either of the parties affected, the contractors or the contracting union, should appeal to the Minister of Labour for conciliation, could he intervene?

Mr. Speaker: That is purely hypothetical, I suggest, and we might pass on to a more definite question.

[Later:]

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Port Arthur with regard to the strike on the trans-Canada pipe line. Is the minister aware that the collective agreement to which he referred has a basic wage rate 27 cents an hour lower than the basic rates in the area where the people are working.

Mr. Speaker: I understood the minister to say that the matter is not one within his jurisdiction and responsibility, and it seems to me that unless he has other views the question is not in order.

[Later:]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Port Arthur on this matter. Is it not true that these contracts are yellow dog contracts that were signed in this particular case, and is it not also true that the offices of the Minister of Labour are used and will be used to conciliate matters between employees and employers to facilitate the completion of that slashing job in that particular area?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the facilities of the labour department come into being upon request when there is a dispute between an employer and employees in the negotiation of a contract, but in this case there is a collective agreement which has not run out. It is in force, and the strike is illegal.

REPORTED REFUSAL OF FARM WORK BY UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Melville): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Was the statement which was put out by the farm forum early in the week correct, to the effect that some 900 persons had applied for positions in Toronto and a number of them were offered farm jobs but none of these offers were accepted? If that is the condition which prevails in Toronto or elsewhere, has the government any plans to deal with it, because there is a shortage of labour on farms. Why cannot this labour be obtained?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I am glad to receive this information from the hon. gentleman, because I was not aware of it. Now that the matter has been brought to my attention I will look into it to see what are the circumstances.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN PROTEST AGAINST UNITED STATES ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, and I want to assure him that I have no desire at all to put him on the spot. However, an answer to this question on the record would be most useful all around.

Officials of the United States tax department in Washington have been making the claim that the government is unconcerned about the efforts of the tax department in the United States to impose income tax on a purely Canadian company. Is this claim correct?

Hon. G. C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEDUCTIONS TO FARM WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the shortage of farm labour and widespread unemployment, can the minister say whether or not in the administration of the changes in the Income Tax Act allowing for deduction of the cost of living while away from domicile for construction workers, this provision will be applied to farm workers? The minister will readily see the discrimination—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has completed his question, and I would ask him not to engage in argument.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has no power to exceed the terms of legislation enacted by parliament. The amendment to which my hon. friend refers and which was given effect from January 1, 1957, applies to construction workers. This matter was fully discussed in committee of the whole on clause 1 of the bill.

Mr. McCullough: A supplementary question then, Mr. Speaker. Would farm workers who partially at least are construction workers, in a sense, be classified as coming within the jurisdiction of the amendment?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, if they are construction workers they will qualify.

HIGHWAYS

MACKENZIE HIGHWAY, N.W.T.—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR USE OF LOCAL EQUIPMENT AND MANPOWER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, two days ago the hon. member for Mackenzie River (Mr. Hardie) raised a question in the house and then he changed the wording of that question yesterday. I should now like to give him the answer.

When I answered yes to the first part of the hon. member's question in the reply I gave on Wednesday I had understood him to refer to clearing rather than completion. My answer therefore still holds good and is a correct answer for the question as it was amended yesterday morning. I should perhaps mention, however, that the tenders have been called by the Department of Public Works which will be supervising the work on behalf of my department.

In so far as the second part of the hon. member's question is concerned, I might explain that there are three projects which make up our special program for northern winter employment. One of these in the Fort Smith area will provide employment for about 65 men, and will be carried out by my department. All employees will be recruited locally, and local departmental equipment will be used.

The other two projects, employing in total some 300 men, will be supervised by the Department of Public Works. Full consultation is now going on with the Department of Labour, and it is expected that a substantial number of positions will be filled locally. In any event, arrangements are being made to use local labour and local equipment to the full extent practicable. The two projects in question are the clearing work on the Fort Providence to Rae section of the Mackenzie highway at an estimated cost of $500,000, and clearing work on the Peace Point-West Boundary road in Wood Buffalo park at an estimated cost of $475,000.

Mr. Lesage: May I ask the minister if there are not some large forestry operations going on south of the Fort Smith area, in Wood Buffalo park?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): If the hon. member is referring to the timber operations at Wood Buffalo park, yes; they are going on at full speed. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the provinces are reacting very favourably to our winter work program, and I hope to be able to make an announcement very shortly on this matter which I hope will be of interest to the house.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

HULL, QUE.—REQUEST FOR DEMOLITION WORK TO BE UNDERTAKEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. On January 9 the city of Hull passed a resolution, following one of July 23, asking for the demolition of a building at the corner of Maisonneuve and Reboul streets which has been expropriated. Could the minister tell us when the work of demolition will begin, because the city has some projects to carry out around this corner?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I will take the question as notice.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO REMOVAL OF SECTION 55 OF ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State when we may expect an announcement of government policy with regard to the removal of section 55 of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this is part of the problem under consideration now about which I spoke when the estimates of my department were before the committee. The survey which is being undertaken by the civil service commission and by the government has not as yet reached the stage where a decision can be made.

UNEMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE

INQUIRY AS TO CONCLUSION OF AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister of health and welfare if the government has yet reached an agreement with the government of Ontario about unemployment assistance.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: And has agreement been reached with the other three provinces which did not have agreements? What is the position of the negotiations?

Mr. Monteith: There has been an indication as far as Nova Scotia is concerned that that province is considering entering.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

METHOD OF MAKING APPLICATION BY MAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In recent weeks there have been deposited in some post offices envelopes containing information as to how applicants for unemployment insurance may make their claims by mail. Is it the intention of the department to extend the circulation of these letters to all post offices where mail order claims are made?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, I did not hear all the hon. member's question. I wonder if he would mind repeating it.

Mr. Harkness: It was not a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that perhaps the hon. member might put it on the order paper, unless he feels it is necessary or urgent to have an answer today. We have spent considerable time on questions.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO SHARING OF TAX REVENUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Wilfrid LaCroix (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister or perhaps to the Minister of Finance, who may be better informed on the question.

Mr. Churchill: Withdraw. He would not be better informed, but the question may more properly be directed to him.

Mr. LaCroix: In view of the declaration made at the last dominion-provincial conference, and in view of the wishes expressed by the different provincial governments and their anxiety to secure an answer, my question is this. Is it true that the government has decided at last what share of the tax dollar will be received by the provinces and the municipalities?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, whenever a decision is reached on that matter and it is proper to make it public it will certainly be made public in the house at the time if the house is sitting. These are all matters that are under discussion in the course of the proceedings of the dominion-provincial conference, as I think my hon. friend realizes.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Courtemanche in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Combines Investigation Act—

179. Restrictive trade practices commission, $79,465.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, is the minister prepared this morning to give us a rather comprehensive statement on the work of the combines investigation branch?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the details of this item are found at page 249. I do not suppose the hon. member wishes me merely to review the composition of the branch. As far as its activities are concerned I can give the following information. As of January 10, that is today, there are 21 inquiries under way which compare with a total of 20 as of March 31, 1957, 17 on March 31, 1956, 14 on March 31, 1955, 13 on March 31, 1954, 14 on March 31, 1953 and eight on March 31, 1952. It will therefore be seen that the number of inquiries under way is approximately the same as last year and that there has been a small annual increase in the number of inquiries handled and in the activities of this branch.

At the present time there are two prosecutions in progress and there are also two cases in which reports have been received from the commission and to which consideration is now being given as to whether or not prosecution should be ordered. There is one case in the hands of counsel for prosecution.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, would the minister care to give any indication to the committee as to whether careful consideration is being given to a revision of the penalties under the act? I have noted on more than one occasion that judges who are trying those who have been charged under the act have expressed regret at not having the power to impose penalties which they thought the offences justified.

We have the most recent illustration which indicated that the case prepared by the combines investigation branch was so thorough that the firms engaged in the control of roofing material in Canada pleaded guilty. They not only pleaded guilty but admitted that they had operated a combine for purposes of profit for a period of over 20 years. Yet the maximum penalty the judge could impose on each company was a fine of $10,000, which means that they were fined the sum of $500 a year during the time they had been operating this combine. Surely the principle of the act is such that those who go into a combination for the purpose of setting prices and making greater profits for themselves should be dealt with in a severe way, especially when they maintain that they believe in free enterprise competition and by their actions give the lie to their statements.

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, the time has come for the revision of the penalties under the act so as to make it clear to the companies which take action under a combine which is detrimental to public welfare and harmful to the consumers' pocketbooks that we will enable our courts, on finding those people guilty, to impose a penalty which will really hit them where it hurts those profiteers most, namely in their pocketbooks. I would also recommend that a crime against society is one which should, perhaps in the circumstances, entail a jail sentence as well. Can the minister tell us whether any consideration has been given to this phase of the matter?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the act as it appears in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, as amended by chapter 51 of the statutes of 1953-54, contains no ceiling on the fine that may be imposed, so the suggestion made by the hon. member has been in force for some three or four years. The case to which my hon. friend refers, which I believe was determined the day before yesterday or very recently, in any event, by a plea of guilty, happened to be a case in which the offence arose under the provisions of previous legislation when there was a maximum fine. It takes some time to bring these matters through the stages of investigation to prosecution and this is why, in that particular case, there was a maximum fine. But in cases arising since the amendments there is no maximum; the fine is in the discretion of the court.

Mr. Argue: Is it not possible under the act as it now stands to impose jail sentences on the officials of the company?

Mr. Fulton: Yes. The courts may punish any failure to comply with an order under this section by a fine in the discretion of the court or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

Mr. Winch: That is if an order of the court that they shall not continue in their operations is not complied with. Is that not the point? Could it also apply to the actual offence itself?

Mr. Fulton: To the actual offence itself.

Mr. Winch: Why the dickens do the judges not use it?

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): I should like to touch on a problem which is quite significant in my constituency. I bring it to the minister's attention because I am certain it relates to this section of the act. As the minister knows, the propane gas industry, or the bottled gas industry, has made great gains in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta because of the presence of the butane gas. As it progressed we found that many of the people in isolated rural communities and farmers were using bottled gas to a very large extent.

I believe at that time there were three companies engaged in the production and sale of bottled gas. Now we find there has been a merger of those companies, with the result that the price of propane gas has increased by 25 per cent in Saskatchewan. I think it is significant that there has not been a corresponding increase in the price of that gas in Alberta, which certainly indicates that there is a provincial monopoly exerting itself on the trade.

This is imposing a particular hardship on anyone who, as the minister knows, has gone to the great expense of installing natural gas or purchased or leased a large 500 or 1,000-gallon tank or has installed a home-cooking unit. Can the minister give me any information on what hope the consumers of this product may have of getting some redress which would put them on a basis comparable with that of the other provinces?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the branch takes cognizance of all information which it receives as a result of its own initiative, or which is directed to it as a result of knowledge coming to the attention of individuals or organizations, and it institutes the appropriate inquiry.

The hon. member will be aware that it is not the policy to state in any case whether or not an investigation is under way until such time as the matter has reached some finality. I would therefore suggest to him, if he has any particular information on this matter in his hands, that it would be appreciated and helpful if he would send it to me or to the director of investigation and research.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I think the Combines Investigation Act is of interest to anyone who is concerned with the idea of the relationship on the one side of pure monopoly and on the other side of pure competition. I have noticed in the last number of years, welling up from the business community through such forms of communication as the Financial Post and bank presidents' statements, a feeling against the way in which the Combines Investigation Act works.

In recent weeks I have been digging into this further because I have had a specific interest and hoped that the combines investigation branch might do something in one specific case. I discovered in the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science for February, 1956 and February, 1957, a number of articles dealing with this particular act and the way it works. I discovered there is quite a keen questioning of the act and how it should be handled.

Arising out of that I wanted to see whether the minister had any opinions or any ideas, as someone new on the job, on the words expressed by Mr. George Wilson. This is taken from the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science of February, 1957. Mr. Wilson wrote:

> In recent years certain business interests, lawyers, and professional economists have been insisting that the combines commission be required to demonstrate more than an "undue lessening of competition" to obtain a conviction under the Combines Investigation Act. What is being suggested is that the commission prove that the economic consequences of the anti-competitive business practices complained of are less desirable from the public point of view than they would have been in the absence of such restrictive activities.

In other words, the business community and some professional economists are asking that the combines investigation commissioners be required to go further in the proceedings arising from their investigations and prove undue harm to the public interest, which they do not have to do at the present time. I am wondering whether the minister is concerned with that particular point and whether, in taking over as the new head of the ministry of justice, he has any ideas about it.

In the second place I should like to ask him about the initiation of inquiries. I gather that in recent years the provision for the initiation of an inquiry by six people supplying information or making a petition has practically lapsed, and that in actual fact it is the director of the branch who launches most of the investigations. That being the case, I think it would be useful to have a fuller explanation of just how much information is required. Is it just a matter of suspicion? Is the division keeping a general surveillance at the present time on many of our major industries? At what point does the director decide to go ahead in a specific case?

I should like to refer to a specific case in order to obtain an opinion with respect to whether it would come under the Combines Investigation Act. I have had a complaint from a small car dealer that he is at a disadvantage in selling cars compared with the larger dealers, those with a greater volume of sales, in that the acceptance corporations or finance companies that handle the dealings will give a kick-back to the large dealer because they know that during the year he is going to direct all the business he can their way. Consequently the small car dealer is at a disadvantage. At the same time, the small car dealer who brought this matter to my attention said that he would hesitate very much to make an open complaint because of the difficulties in which he might be involved both with respect to the car companies and the finance companies.

I would appreciate it very much if the minister would answer the questions I have asked him.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, dealing with the first question asked by the hon. gentleman with regard to whether we are making a study of the combines legislation, I can tell him, as I think he would expect, that when we took over it was the task of every minister with respect to his particular department—and I certainly regarded it as my task —to have a look at all the areas for which the department is responsible, and one of the most important, of course, is the field of combines legislation. He mentioned the discussions which are current as to what he described, I think, as the conflict or possible conflict between the principle of unlimited competition on the one hand and the desire to prevent any combination or arrangement on the other.

The discussion has been opened up, I think it is correct to say, as a result of the fine papers case, in which the jurisprudence was pretty well settled by a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada that all that needs to be proved is the fact of a combination and that it has substantially lessened competition, and the courts do not require to inquire further than that as to the effects in terms of practical economics or particularly long-range economics on the public interest. The courts do not have to inquire into that once the two basic elements have been proven.

That does raise important considerations for all those in the field of business, and as a natural consequence they have expressed their concern and have made representations suggesting that the subject be reviewed. Therefore on both counts, first that it would be no less than my duty to inquire into the whole field on taking over, and second, as the result of representations that have been received, a study of the whole field of combines legislation is being made; but it is a general review, and I am not able to indicate at the present time what may be the results.

The hon. gentleman raised two other points which I perhaps should deal with now. As to the requirements that must be met before an investigation is commenced, the hon. member will find the statutory requirements set out in section 8 of the Combines Investigation Act, and it might be useful to put them on the record here. The section is in these words:

> The director shall
> (a) on application made under section 7,
> (b) whenever he has reason to believe that section 32 or 34 of this act or section 411 or 412 of the Criminal Code has been, is being or is about to be violated, or,
> (c) whenever he is directed by the minister to inquire whether any of the sections mentioned in paragraph (b) has been, is being or is about to be violated, > cause an inquiry to be made into all such matters as he considers necessary to inquire into.
>

So you may have the three methods; any six persons making representations, the director moving of his own volition, or the director being directed by the minister. I think it is probably correct to say that in the considerable majority of cases the investigation is started by the director as the result of facts which are drawn to his attention not by six persons but by reports appearing in the press, reports from other departments of government and so on.

The third question asked by the hon. gentleman was whether a certain course of conduct said to be practised by car dealers constituted an offence or whether an inquiry would be warranted. I can only say in answer that if the conduct complained of did, prima facie, seem to establish that there is an offence under the combines legislation, it would be investigated by the director.

In that connection I can assure the hon. gentleman that the director is frequently in receipt of confidential communications. I do not think any dealer or any person need have any fear of the consequences if he wants to go to the director confidentially and lay information that is in his possession before the director. At least in the stage at which the initial inquiry is instituted that information will be kept perfectly confidential. If it is found that there is evidence of an offence it may be that we cannot move very far unless somebody is prepared to come forward and give evidence in a formal way, but the confidentiality is entirely preserved at least with respect to the preliminary inquiry by the director, to see whether there is in fact anything which would bring the complaint under the combines legislation.

Mr. Fisher: Further to the second answer, is the director being encouraged? Is there likely to be any expansion in his bureau in order to maintain more of a general surveillance? If, as I understand, most of the investigations are initiated by him, what sort of staff has he behind him in order to maintain a general surveillance? After all, to rely on newspaper articles or letters is a sort of hit or miss system.

Mr. Fulton: The director and his branch constantly amaze me by their efficiency.

Mr. Argue: Recently acquired?

Mr. Fulton: It is not a large branch, yet they are carrying on a comparatively large number of important and complicated investigations. At the present time there are five vacancies in the junior and middle categories which have existed for some years. I have the matter under consideration now as to whether we need to fill them immediately, and we are keeping watch on the situation for suitable candidates. There is that leeway there for further expansion of the activities of the branch should it become obvious that that is necessary.

Mr. Fisher: I have two more very minor questions. Is the gentleman who wrote this rather major article on the Combines Investigation Act, Mr. L. A. Skeogh, a member of the government department at this time?

Mr. Fulton: He is on the staff of the branch, but at the present time he is on one year's leave of absence without pay as a visiting professor at Queen's University.

Mr. Fisher: The second question is this. Can the minister give us any more information on how progress is coming along in the investigation into pulpwood prices in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Fulton: Final hearings before the restrictive trade practices commission have been concluded. The next step is for the commission to make its report. I am not able to say when the report will be received, but the hearings are concluded.

Mr. Hahn: I should like to ask the minister a question respecting a case now before the commission. I refer to the united fishermen and allied workers union. Can he give us a report as to what progress has been made, and if and when a report is expected from that hearing?

Mr. Fulton: The taking of evidence has in part been concluded, and the director is now reviewing such evidence and awaiting some further evidence in order to reach a conclusion as to whether to submit a statement of evidence to the commission.

Mr. Barnett: I have a question on the same subject as that which was raised by the hon. member for New Westminster. The minister will recall that earlier this session—as a matter of fact, it was on October 21 as reported at page 181 of Hansard—I asked him a question in this connection which reads as follows:

> I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, and my question is this. In view of the minister's statement on Friday last that he has no authority under the Combines Investigation Act to direct the discontinuance of the investigation into the affairs of the united fishermen and allied workers union, will he introduce amendments to clarify the intent of the act in order to ensure that trade unions in the future will not be subject to this sort of investigation?

[Mr. Fulton.]

On that occasion the minister replied as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, combines legislation generally is presently under consideration in my department and I can assure the hon. member that we will give very full consideration to the point of view he has just put forward.

My question to the minister is whether he can give us any information as to the result of the consideration he has given to this matter since October 21 last. Can he inform the house that in point of fact amendments will be introduced which will prevent investigations of this sort from being introduced into the field of trade union activities?

Mr. Fulton: It is not possible to give a final answer to that question at the present time. Section 4 of the Combines Investigation Act is quite clear. It reads as follows:

> 4. Nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to combinations of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as such workmen or employees.

This is, of course, one of the questions which will have to be considered by the director as he assesses the evidence. He has not completed that work yet. I therefore can only say that I shall be glad to consider, on the conclusion of the case, whether the legislation has been shown to be deficient in the protection which it was intended to afford such unions in any substantive or procedural respect, or whether any of the provisions have been misapplied.

Mr. Cameron: Just now the minister told us that he has been reviewing the whole field of operations of the combines investigation branch. I wonder whether he has also reviewed some of the earlier investigations following which no action was taken. I have in mind the investigation some few years ago of the milling industry. If my memory serves me correctly, although the McGregor report revealed the existence of a combination in restraint of trade, a combination setting prices across the country, no action was taken by the former administration. I was wondering whether the minister is considering a review of that situation and possibly a new investigation in order to see whether the conditions complained of in the report are still extant.

Mr. Fulton: Current situations are constantly under review. I do not think it would be useful to order an investigation to be made into a situation which arose and was reported upon five, six or more years ago. It is the current situation and the current detriment with which we are concerned. In this field, as in others, there is a constant surveillance of the situation.

Mr. Castleden: I should like to refer back to the minister's statement with regard to the case of the roofing combine. From the minister's reply I gather that in this case the penalty which was imposed by the judges after the companies were found guilty was limited because the offence with which they were charged was laid while there were limitations on the amount of the penalty. I presume, then, that the penalty was imposed because they were guilty of an offence at the time; that is prior to the amendment of the act.

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Castleden: How then could they be penalized for carrying on a combine after the limitations were removed as to the fines the judge could impose upon them? In this case I believe there were eleven companies.

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Castleden: The penalty was $10,000 per company. I should like to know whether or not that is the case; that is, whether the fine of $10,000 each was because of the limitation.

Mr. Fulton: I am informed that the period covered by the investigation and upon the basis of which the charges were laid was prior to the amendment of the act, the period within which the penalties were confined to a maximum of $10,000. If I am correct in my understanding, the investigation and the charges did not relate to a period after the amendment when the ceiling on fines was removed.

Mr. Castleden: Would it be possible, by laying another charge, to have them penalized for carrying on a combine for a period since the limitation, if they were doing so?

Mr. Fulton: If in fact any evidence were available which disclosed that they continued to carry on their combine it is possible that the suggestion made by the hon. member would have validity. I would have to review the evidence in order to see whether that is the case, but I think it is correct to say that when an investigation has proceeded to the point where it is fairly clear that legal proceedings are to be had, in most of these cases but not by any means in all of them the activities complained of are suspended. I will have to see whether that was the case here. However, I can assure the hon. gentleman that if there is evidence of a continuation of the offence or of the actions which formed the basis of the charge, the director will take appropriate action.

Mr. Castleden: That deals with any case as from now on.

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Castleden: I am referring to the fact that this combine operated for a period of some 20 years, according to the evidence. A portion of the time was after the amendment to the act which removed the limit on the penalty. It seems to me that this combine is getting off very easily. I think it could be proved that if these ten companies, which have operated across the whole of Canada, had operated a roofing combine in this country for that length of time, the profits they made because of the combine would amount to many millions of dollars, and that the penalty of $10,000 a company is mere peanuts and is not, as a matter of fact, justice.

Surely the purpose of this act is to prevent and discourage combines and their operation. It seems to me that in this case the purpose is not being fulfilled if these companies can make profits of this kind and get such a very small penalty because of the limitations in the act when the complaint was made.

Mr. Fulton: I am informed that it was the opinion of crown counsel that the charges he could prove and which he felt would result in a conviction related to the period before the act was amended. That was the opinion of counsel and that opinion, of course, we had to accept. I am also informed that the prosecution commenced about a year ago.

Mr. Fisher: If one makes a distinction between combinations on the one side and monopolies or mergers on the other, has there been any record in the past of orders by the courts to dissolve monopolies or mergers, or have all the results of these investigations been on the combines side?

Mr. Fulton: I am informed that the amendment empowering the courts to make such orders only came into effect in 1952, and that there have been no merger or monopoly cases finalized since that amendment in which the circumstances would be such that an order of that nature would be applicable.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I appreciated the minister's previous answer about the initiation of complaints, but if one makes the distinction between a combine and a monopoly or a merger, I was just wondering if the minister could express any opinion as to how much of the research and investigation of the department is going toward the monopolies and mergers side where you are much less likely to get complaints than you are on the combines side.

Mr. Fulton: It varies from year to year, and I think one can only say that we take them as they come when the evidence arises or when it is brought to our attention. It would not be possible to give a percentage; for instance, that 40 per cent of the attention is directed to looking out for mergers and 60 per cent to looking out for combines. It depends entirely upon when evidence of offences becomes available.

Mr. Castleden: I should like to ask the minister whether or not among the 30 cases now before this branch of his department there are included charges against some large chain store grocery outlets or against brewery and distillery amalgamations?

Mr. Fulton: If I understand the question of the hon. gentleman it is as to whether any of the cases recently before us included charges against chain stores?

Mr. Castleden: Grocery chain store outlets.

Mr. Fulton: No.

Mr. Castleden: Among the 30 cases you mentioned in which there were complaints now before the commission—I am asking whether these included complaints against chain store outlets in the form of combines?

Mr. Fulton: There are 21 cases before the commission as of today.

Mr. Castleden: Oh, 21? Do they include any against grocery chain store outlets?

Mr. Fulton: These embrace only the combine and merger cases and would not include investigations as to whether there is, for instance, what is generally described as the loss-leader practice. That is not included in this figure of 21.

Mr. Castleden: It was not the loss-leader point that I was particularly dealing with. I was asking the minister whether among the 21 cases now before the commission there were included charges of monopoly practices by large chain store grocery outlets.

Mr. Fulton: The answer is no.

Mr. Hahn: Are there any investigations being carried on at this time with respect to mergers of newspapers or other publications?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am again in the position where, if I gave an answer to the hon. gentleman's question, I think I would be in breach of the principle that until any inquiry has reached a certain stage we do not give information, so I would prefer not to answer that question.

Mr. Winch: Perhaps in a similar vein—I am not going to deal with loss-leader practices, and I may not be able to ask a direct question because the minister might not feel he could answer me, but I would make this suggestion to the hon. gentleman. If they are not doing it now, his department should make a very exhaustive examination of the full operations of the Taylor interests and the Weston interests.

[Mr. Fulton.]

I say this because at least in my interpretation of the act it constitutes a combine or a restraint of trade where you have a firm in the retailing business, supplied by a wholesaling business, supplied by a production business, all of which are owned by the same interest.

When you have a situation which is developing through the medium of controlled companies and subsidiaries, such as I am convinced there is in Canada today in these two cases, I think it is high time that a most exhaustive analysis be made by this department of all the ramifications and the controlled interests of those two individuals.

I must admit it is only my own impression, but I have made some studies and I can assure the minister that it is a terrific job to try to follow through all the ramifications of these companies controlled by these two individuals. I am convinced in my own mind that the Minister of Justice would be doing a great service to the consumers of Canada if these two individuals were completely examined in respect of all the ramifications of their financial and their corporate control.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, any activities of whatever individual or of whatever corporation which may be carried on and which come within the scope of the combines legislation will be investigated by the director as soon as evidence suggesting that there is an infraction of the combines act is brought to his attention. However, they have to be brought within the scope of that legislation. If my hon. friend or anybody else has any evidence that would be helpful in this regard, then I suggest he could make it available to the director.

Mr. Fisher: Could the minister express an opinion on a point that has been brought up? Where you get, for instance, a huge corporation such as A. V. Roe or some other organization which straddles a number of interests, is there anything in the Combines Investigation Act that would allow investigation of this type of merger and the extension of these corporations into so many fields? I can think immediately of A. V. Roe or Algoma Steel.

Mr. Fulton: The offences covered by the act are defined in the definitions section, section 2 of the act, subsection (e) which defines a merger, trust or monopoly, and it also outlines the restrictions as to the types of businesses to which the definition is confined.

Therefore I come back to the answer I gave previously that if any corporation, however large or small, in its activities comes within the terms of the definition and can be established to have committed an offence, then it will be proceeded against, or it will at least be investigated. That being the general situation then, as I say, we have to have evidence in a particular case, and I would not be able to give an opinion in answer to the general form of the question which I have just been asked.

Mr. Bryson: I am wondering, Mr. Chairman, if the minister has had any formal complaint from retail jewellery outlets in Canada protesting the development which they believe constitutes a violation of the fair trade practices act. Apparently one or two discount houses are circulating catalogues to insurance dealers, filling station operators and others offering merchandise generally found in a jewellery store. They feel that this is a violation of the fair trade practices act. Also they believe that the prices quoted and the quality of the goods advertised are not as they should be.

The magazine which is the official organ of the jewellery stores suggested in a recent article that the people concerned should liquidate their business before it is too late, because they feel they are going to be the victims of these discount houses. I wonder whether the minister has any comment to make, and whether he thinks this constitutes a breach of the fair trade practices act.

Mr. Fulton: We have received a number of informal representations on this subject, and we are considering at the moment whether they raise any cause for inquiry.

Mr. Cameron: I wonder if the minister could tell us whether it would be considered prima facie evidence of a combine in restraint of trade and an offence against the act if there appeared in the papers an announcement of a merger involving all the cement companies in Canada, and whether the department would take action if such a notice was brought to its attention.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be drawn into expressing positive opinions on hypothetical questions. Such an extraordinary announcement in the papers would, I am sure, arouse more than passing interest on the part of the director.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, there is one group of privately owned corporations in Canada which has probably the greatest amount of interlocking associations in its activities, as far as relations with the general public are concerned. I wonder whether any request has been received for an investigation into the private chartered banks to determine whether they constitute combines in restraint of trade. I am sure everyone will agree that one bank is just the same as the next when it comes to interest rates and taking your money from you.

Mr. Fulton: I think the answer to that question is that the business of banking does not fall within the terms of the legislation concerned here, which relates primarily to commodities.

Mr. Howard: Can I assume, then, that private finance corporations which are not banks, small loan companies such as Household Finance and similar concerns, come into the same category?

Mr. Fulton: I believe that generally speaking it would be correct to say that they are dealt with by other legislation and that they do not fall within the category intended to be dealt with under this legislation.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I understand there are two ways in which the government can punish firms which appear to be breaking the law in this particular regard by action outside the Criminal Code; that is, by the removal of customs duties, and the revoking of patents or that sort of thing. Has anything of that kind ever been done in the past to bring groups into line?

Mr. Fulton: One or two instances have occurred in the past, and one case is under consideration at the present time.

Mr. Fisher: In which category?

Mr. Fulton: Customs tariff protection.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the minister if he could tell us the present status of the report concerning the sugar industry in western Canada and the proposed merger of certain sugar companies? I realize that there has been some corporate change since the report was prepared, but I should like to ask the general question.

Mr. Fulton: The report and the findings of the commission are still before us in the department for consideration as to what action we should take, and while the situation is as I have described it, it is difficult to go much further than that statement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the minister whether any study has been made of the sugar industry in Canada as a whole?

Mr. Fulton: I think I must make a general reply here and say that specific answers to inquiries such as that are not usually given.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That reply gives one the hope that this matter is being studied. May I ask also what is the present status of any inquiry or action with regard to the alleged combine in the manufacture and sale of beer in Canada?

Mr. Fulton: I think I have answered that question already. That has been referred to counsel with instructions for prosecution.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I have one question with regard to the details on page 260, in relation to the fees and expenses of legal counsel, etc. I see this figure has been reduced by $10,000. The reduction lies, I imagine, in the field of services and might involve a serious curtailment of activity. If the branch is increasing its work I wonder why this reduction was made.

Mr. Fulton: I think the hon. gentleman means page 250, does he not?

Mr. Fisher: Yes, page 250.

Mr. Fulton: Well, the item we are considering comes under item 179, the details of which appear at the top of page 250. If the hon. gentleman is looking at the bottom of page 250, that would come under item 180.

Mr. Fisher: I apologize.

Mr. Fulton: If it is agreed that we should carry item 179 and come to item 180, I am prepared to deal with that question.

Mr. Blackmore: May I ask the minister whether or not the use of the word "merger" was justified as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre used it in respect to sugar companies?

Mr. Fulton: That is one of the points before us in the department for consideration at the present time, and one which must be decided before we can determine our course of action.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister if, for the information of those who read Hansard, and for my information, too, he will tell us what companies are proposing to merge?

Mr. Fulton: I believe the names of the companies are the British Columbia Sugar Refining Company Limited and the Manitoba Sugar Company Limited. I am not sure that those are the exact names, but I think most of those who are interested will be able to identify the companies which have already been named in the report.

Mr. Christian: I should like to ask the minister if the expression "trade practices" covers the restriction of news.

Mr. Fulton: I am advised that those words do not appear in the legislation.

Item agreed to.

180. Office of investigation and research, $455,375.

Mr. Fulton: On this item I have a motion which I would ask one of my colleagues to move. It is:

That vote 180 be reduced from $140,000 to $120,000.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

My colleague the Minister of Fisheries has agreed to move it.

Mr. MacLean: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the minister explain why this figure is different from the figure in the book? The amount set out in the book is $455,375 rather than $140,000.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I have to admit that there is a small error in the drafting of the motion which I, as Minister of Justice, find somewhat embarrassing. It should be that the vote be reduced by $20,000; I think that would probably be ample. It should be reduced from $455,375 to $435,375. I will have the motion written out again, but in the meantime I can explain that the $20,000 reduction will be found in detail under fees and expenses of legal counsel, accountants, special assistants, reporters and witnesses. It has been found that we will not require all that money this year.

As I said yesterday, it does not represent a reduction in the activities of the department. In estimating we have to make provision, for instance, for the payment of fees to counsel as cases are launched in court, and we have not that number of cases before the courts which will make it necessary to spend this amount of money this year. Whenever we get them before the courts we can provide the money in next year's estimates.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This would not be a case of lawyers working for less money?

Mr. Fulton: Lawyers' fees are always reasonable and do not require justification.

Mr. Castleden: I presume the amount of $140,000 was a decision of the previous minister of justice, since these items take in 1957?

Mr. Fulton: Yes. These were initially prepared in August of 1956, I believe, and tabled early in 1957. It is a feature of estimating that when you are estimating 18 months in advance of the end of the fiscal year in which the money will be spent you frequently approach the end of the fiscal year and find there are reductions that can be made.

Mr. Castleden: It was an estimate of the previous minister?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, before the item carries I should like to congratulate the minister on finding a place where we can save some money, but may I just request that when he finds it necessary to make any amendment he provide us with a sufficient number of copies of the amendment so that I may have one for this group?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): None of us has a correct copy.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, if hon. members would be kind enough to permit me to do so, and with the concurrence of my colleague the Minister of Fisheries, I would move:

That item No. 180, "Combines Investigation Act—office of investigation and research" be reduced from $455,375 to $435,375.

The item itself is found on page 35 of the estimates, and the original wording of the motion is based on the fact that the detail within which the reduction takes place provided for $140,000.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Zaplitny: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

Mr. Fulton: Can't this one carry?

Mr. Zaplitny: I have only one question to ask, and it is not a matter of detail, either; it is a matter of a principle, I suppose you would call it. Would the minister say if that $20,000 which is no longer required is evidence of waste and extravagance in the estimate as it now stands?

The Chairman: Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose at one o'clock we were considering item 180 of the estimates of the Department of Justice, and the minister moved the following amendment:

That item No. 180, "Combines Investigation Act—office of investigation and research" be reduced from $455,375 to $435,375.

Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Before the amendment carries may I ask the minister whether he has figures as to how much was spent under this subitem in the fiscal year 1956-57? Perhaps he can tell us how much he thinks will be required under this same subitem in 1957-58?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, that information will be looked up and I will reply to the hon. gentleman in a moment. But before I do so I should like to refer to a statement in answer to a question by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, in case I should have misled the hon. gentleman or the committee. I believe the question was asked as follows:

I should like to ask the minister if the expression "trade practices" covers the restriction of news?

I replied:

I am advised that those words do not appear in the legislation.

I think the correct answer would have been that the words "trade practices" appear only in the title of the restrictive trade practices commission; and since the commission is set up and referred to in the statute, then obviously the words "trade practices" do appear in the statute. As I understood the intent of the hon. gentleman's question, however, it was to ask whether the offences covered in the act are covered with reference to trade practices in the sense of unfair trade practices, undesirable trades practices, and so on. The offences as defined in the act and as covered in the ambit of the legislation do not have reference to trade practices as such, and it was in that sense I intended my answer to be taken.

To answer the question of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, a hasty calculation indicates that something of the order of $100,000 was spent in the year 1956-57, and we anticipate that we shall be spending close to $120,000 this year. For that reason I moved to reduce the amount to $120,000.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can't we have fun with figures? The minister is now indicating that in this fiscal year the government will actually be spending $20,000 more than was spent in the previous fiscal year; yet, because of the way the previous government overestimated, he is able to come before the committee and ask for a reduction in the estimate. As I say, it is very interesting the fun one can have with figures. If an error was made here it was an error of overestimating, not an error in terms of waste and extravagance.

Amendment agreed to.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Richardson: Before you come to the next item, Mr. Chairman, I should like your opinion or that of the Minister of Justice as to the propriety of my raising a question at this point or at some other point. Before I ask the minister a question I should like, if I may, to confirm in the house the personal congratulations I have already given to him upon attaining the very high and distinguished office of Minister of Justice. Those of us who belong to the legal profession, as I do, know that he will bring to that post, as a good many of his predecessors have done, a good mind, experience and a desire to serve the country in the very illustrious portfolio of Minister of Justice.

The question I would like to put—and I have been searching for an item in the estimates of the Department of Justice—relates to the phrase "not a judicial body but a semijudicial body". I cannot find that any estimate has been set up for a semijudicial body. I did understand—perhaps it was not said by the present government—that at least a suggestion was made in recent months, and some weeks prior to June 10, that a semijudicial body would be set up for the determination of problems between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and private radio stations. Are we to assume, Mr. Chairman, that because there does not seem to be anything in the estimates this pledge or this suggestion is not to be implemented, at least at this time?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the hon. gentleman should draw any conclusion, restricted as to time or otherwise, such as he has suggested, on the basis of those estimates.

I would like to say at once I appreciate very much his kindly reference to myself. If he will recall for a moment he will appreciate that the estimates we are now dealing with, as was made clear by the Minister of Finance, are the estimates which were prepared by our predecessors, and he will realize that no item such as he is interested in appears in the book now before us. In any event, the subject matter which he has in mind would, I assume, be covered by an item in the estimates of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, or under the Department of National Revenue through which the C.B.C. reports and, as I understand it, would not be likely to appear in the estimates of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does not the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—just to have the matter clear—report to the Minister of National Revenue rather than to the department?

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member is quite right; it reports to the minister. I will check it here. I think it has its own separate estimate; therefore I assume the item which covers the subject matter referred to would appear in the C.B.C. estimates.

Mr. Richardson: The minister has dealt with my question, which is semijudicial. He has at least given me half the answer.

181. Bankruptcy Act administration, $48,985.

[Mr. Richardson.]

Mr. Hahn: Can the minister inform the committee how many bankruptcy cases were heard during the year? While he is looking up the information perhaps he can compare the number with the previous year.

Mr. Fulton: I regret that I am unable to give the hon. gentleman the information he has asked for. I will get it for him. If he would prefer to have this item stand that will be satisfactory, or perhaps we could carry the item subject to my getting the information.

Mr. Hahn: I may have some questions on it. I would just as soon the item did not carry.

Mr. Fulton: Then this item stands.

Mr. Christian: The minister may not have the information readily available, but I should like to know whether he has any statistical information showing the number of bankruptcies this year compared with one year ago.

Mr. Fulton: I find I have the information as to the number of bankruptcies up to the end of 1955 in the figures which were prepared for the estimates, but I realize that may not be very satisfactory and would therefore be prepared to get up to date information and bring in an answer later. Perhaps, therefore, this item should stand.

Item stands.

Penitentiaries—

182. Administration of the office of the commissioner of penitentiaries, including $60,000 for grants to recognized prisoners' aid societies, as may be approved by the treasury board, $482,446.

Mr. Stick: May I preface my remarks under this heading by saying that when gentlemen of the legal profession start throwing bouquets at one another I think it is time for us poor laymen to beware. I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question. The nearest federal penitentiary to Newfoundland is at Dorchester in the maritimes. Has there been any request with regard to the building of a federal penitentiary in the province of Newfoundland?

Mr. Fulton: The hon. gentleman has asked me a question, as I understood it, with regard to plans for building a federal penitentiary in Newfoundland.

Mr. Stick: Have any representations been made?

Mr. Fulton: The officials are just arriving, and I will be able to answer that question in one moment. I am informed that no representations have been received to that effect. We have an arrangement with the government of Newfoundland whereby we pay them stated per capita rates for the prisoners they accommodate who would otherwise have to be accommodated in federal penitentiaries.

Mr. Olson: I understand the department has studied or is studying the redistribution of prisoners among provincial jails and federal penitentiaries in western Canada. I also understand the federal government feels it should assume some additional responsibility in this regard. Does the Department of Justice feel that it needs some additional accommodation for federal prisoners in western Canada? If so, will a committee be set up to look into the selection of a site or sites?

My information is that some 40 or 50 invitations have been forwarded from different areas in western Canada for the establishment of such an institution. In view of the large number of communities asking to have it located in their areas, will the minister say whether or not there will be an opportunity for representations to be made to the committee when they are determining where the site will be?

Mr. Fulton: The hon. gentleman is correct when he states we have had somewhere around 40 to 50 representations or requests from communities in western Canada for the choice of their area as the site of a new federal penitentiary. The situation remains as I have outlined it previously and, indeed, as I did yesterday on the administration item of the Department of Justice; namely, that until we have had an opportunity to discuss with the provinces the implications of the Fauteux committee's report we will not be able to make an intelligent decision as to where a new federal penitentiary should be located, and as to the size and type of building that should be constructed. Therefore, as I have advised all those who have renewed their representations recently, it is necessary to leave a decision on that matter for the time being.

The hon. gentleman asks whether, after a decision is made, there will be an opportunity for interested communities to renew their representations to a committee which will be considering the matter. I think the best answer I could give is to say that this and related questions will be considered at the proposed meeting with the attorneys general of the provinces. At that time I expect there will be competing claims, no doubt supported by the attorneys general, but I am quite sure that at those meetings we will be able to discuss the problem and arrive at the most satisfactory solution from the point of view of the country as a whole.

Mr. Hahn: Speaking to the question raised by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, I know the Minister of Justice is fully aware of the needs of the province of British Columbia; and in view of the fact that the British Columbia penitentiary is located in the city of New Westminster itself I believe the minister will recognize that there is great need for another penitentiary in western Canada.

I have one or two specific requests to make with regard to any new institution that may be built. First and foremost, when the matter of building a new penitentiary is being considered I would request that one of the requirements that should be taken into account is sufficient agricultural land surrounding the penitentiary so the land surrounding the present British Columbia penitentiary may be made available to the city of New Westminster. I request that any new penitentiary that is built be equipped to look after the agricultural activities of the inmates of the British Columbia penitentiary.

I fully realize, as I am sure the minister does, that New Westminster has reached a point where there is not a single lot available within the city limits. When the citizens look at 70 acres of the finest land in the whole area being devoted to raising agricultural produce for the penitentiary, which is practically in the centre of the city, one can understand that there is a certain feeling of animosity among the citizens that this condition should be allowed to continue as it has during past years and possibly will in the future unless new plans are evolved. I do not suggest that the penitentiary itself necessarily need be moved, as the spending of $10 million to build an additional penitentiary to house the 650 inmates in the present institution might not be warranted at this time.

We are not asking that the British Columbia penitentiary itself be moved. We just want the land surrounding the penitentiary to be made available to the city. That is the prime consideration that I think should be kept in mind when any decision is made respecting where a new penitentiary is to be located in the western part of Canada.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): While this question is being discussed I should like to draw the minister's attention to the question of a federal penitentiary in Alberta, particularly in the Drumheller area. I have taken up this matter with the minister during this session, and he indicated to me that an investigation was going on in the province of Alberta to ascertain whether or not the federal government would be wise to go ahead with the construction of a penitentiary there until such time as it had consulted with the provincial authorities to see if there was a necessity. Once that decision had been reached, then the federal government would take some further active steps to see that something was done about it.

Of course, when I was taking this matter up with the minister I pointed out the advantages that the Drumheller area had for the location of such an institution. I pointed out that it had exceptionally good agricultural country surrounding it, that it had all the coal, natural gas and oil that could ever be expected to be used for heating purposes or for any other purposes for which they might be required in the construction and operation of a penitentiary.

As the minister knows, for some time now the provincial government of Alberta has been giving consideration to the construction of a provincial jail, but the federal government's indecision has prevented the provincial government from going ahead with this project. They already have the property bought and are awaiting, as I am informed, the decision of the federal government before they can go ahead. It is obvious that it would not be necessary to have two large institutions of that kind in the province in addition to what is there already.

It does seem to me that since the federal government have now been investigating this matter for some time, they have no doubt come to a conclusion. If the minister could advise us as to the progress of their investigation and what their decision is in this regard, I am sure the people of Alberta would appreciate it. When the minister is making his decision I hope he will give first consideration to the Drumheller area which I indicated to him previously for the location of this building. It has tremendous advantages that I do not think are possessed by any other site in the province of Alberta.

It is an urgent matter for either the provincial government or the federal government to go ahead immediately with the construction of such an institution. However, it seems that the federal government's decision now is holding up the whole thing. Certainly the province cannot go ahead until the federal government has made its decision. It seems to me that the federal government is now in a position where such an institution is required under federal jurisdiction, and that we should go ahead now and build that institution in Alberta, preferably, of course, at Drumheller.

Mr. Cameron: In listening to the debate just now, it occurred to me that the old adage that crime does not pay apparently will have to be discarded, because apparently it does pay if there are enough people inside penitentiaries. I should like to call another matter to the minister's attention. It has to do with extension of penitentiary service. I wish to ask him if he or his officials are giving any consideration to the establishment of a penitentiary for the accommodation of women prisoners in western Canada.

Just before I came down here I had occasion to visit the penitentiary in Westminster, and I had a long talk with the warden there. He expressed the view that one of the most important facts in the rehabilitation of prisoners was whether or not they had been in receipt of regular visits and communications from their families and friends while in prison. For women prisoners from British Columbia brought down to Kingston there is not the slightest chance of their ever receiving a visit from any of their relatives or friends during the time of their imprisonment.

I think this is a serious lack in our penitentiary system. To me it is a rather brutal and cruel feature, that these women are brought half way across the continent knowing perfectly well that they are not going to see any friends or relatives during all the time they are serving their sentences. I wonder whether the minister can tell us whether he has been giving some consideration to the problem.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps I could deal with the remarks of the hon. member for New Westminster and the hon. member for Bow River somewhat at the same time. It is a matter of fact that there is need for an additional penitentiary in western Canada. The overcrowding at the present time is most noticeable at the penitentiary at New Westminster where, during the year 1957, there had to be two transfers of prisoners to other penitentiaries, one in Saskatchewan and one in Manitoba. Hence the point made by the hon. member is one that is well before us.

I can say that we will bear in mind his representation that even though the penitentiary might not be transferred from New Westminster, nevertheless the agricultural lands, as I understand it, should be made available and agricultural lands elsewhere acquired. He will appreciate the fact that that would create a considerable problem because of the desirability of having your agricultural lands, which are worked to a great extent by the penitentiary inmates, as close as possible to the penitentiary itself. However, his urgings will be borne in mind.

On the same subject and in reply to the hon. member for Bow River may I say that I am aware that the province of Alberta has a desire to proceed with the construction of certain additional prison accommodation of its own. I have discussed the matter with the deputy attorney general, and I regret that we have not been able to present to him any precise plan which would enable an immediate decision to be made. However, I believe I can properly say that he in his turn is in agreement that it would be sounder to wait until we have an over-all solution to this problem before proceeding separately with the construction of additional facilities in that province. This is one of the many reasons why we are fully aware that we must get on with the job as fast as we can, and why we have assigned one officer exclusively, full time, in the department to work out more precisely the implementation of the Fauteux committee report.

With regard to the observations of the hon. member for Nanaimo may I say this. As he will recall, the Fauteux committee devoted some attention to this question of an institution for women prisoners, and they urged that consideration should be given to the problem of whether there should be decentralization of women's penal institutions or whether they should continue, as they are at the present time, to be accommodated at one central penitentiary. That is also one of the problems which is actively under consideration in connection with these recommendations.

Mr. Henderson: On the subject of a women's penitentiary, to which the hon. member for Nanaimo has just been referring, I think we as Canadians should feel rather gratified that of between 8 million to 9 million members of the female sex in Canada, we have an average of only about 82 to 85 women in our federal penitentiary.

On the subject of the women's penitentiary at Kingston, and having regard to the fact that I believe that penitentiary has a very high security rating, it could be used as a reception depot for prisoners becoming inmates of the federal penitentiary at Kingston. I was just wondering whether the minister would give us some idea whether or not the federal women's penitentiary will be built on the site that was formerly sold for the Collins Bay penitentiary, or would his answer of the Fauteux report apply to that matter?

Mr. Fulton: We still have the site available if a decision should be made to build a separate women's penitentiary at Collins Bay. I do not like having to keep on saying that these details must await determination until we have arrived at an over-all program with regard to the Fauteux report but I am afraid I am compelled once again to resort to that answer. However, I can tell the hon. gentleman this. He will be interested to learn that instead of the present number of inmates of the women's penitentiary being as high as he said, it is at the present time only 74 out of 8 million to 9 million women in Canada.

Mr. Henderson: On another point in connection with penitentiaries in the Kingston area, I should like to take this opportunity of congratulating the minister and his departmental officials on the progress that is being made in the construction of the Joyceville penitentiary. There are two points about which I should like to ask the minister. One is this. I should like to see the minister's department work, as they have in the past, in co-operation with the township of Pittsburgh for a combined water system to service both this penitentiary area and the village of Joyceville, having in mind that in the development of the village of Joyceville they could develop guards' residences on an individual basis, as they have residences available both at Collins Bay and at Kingston penitentiary close by.

I realize that the Department of Justice at the present time has entered into a temporary arrangement for a private water system, but I wonder if in the future they would bear in mind in their plans that they might be able to co-operate in some way with the township of Pittsburgh in order that water could be taken up to the village of Joyceville close by the penitentiary. The officers could then live within the limit of five miles while working at the penitentiary, and it would be very advantageous not only to the penitentiary branch but to the home life of guards, and would also tend to put the development in that area on a stable basis.

Another question I would like to ask the minister is with respect to the fact that the old penitentiary farm at Kingston penitentiary will eventually be disposed, of being replaced by both the Collins Bay farm and the Joyceville penitentiary farm. In view of the fact that the city of Kingston must plan future services for development in that area I wonder if the minister could give us some idea as to when that farm may be disposed of; that is to say the old Kingston penitentiary farm bordered by highway No. 33, Palace road and Johnston road?

Mr. Fulton: I am informed that present indications are that we will be needing that farm land for at least another two years. Therefore it seems premature at the moment to enter into specific negotiations for its disposal. Speaking from memory, we have had I believe three indications from interested parties that they would like to be borne in mind when ultimate disposal is undertaken and they, together with all other representations received, will be carefully noted.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I have not had the opportunity to go into the details of the Fauteux committee's report, and perhaps the subject matter which I am going to raise is contained therein. If it is I know the answer already, but in looking through the annual reports of the commissioner of penitentiaries for at least the past three or four years you find that the average educational level of inmates in our federal penitentiaries is probably grade V or grade VI. In the last report at which I am now looking, which is the one for the year ending March 31, 1956, over 60 per cent of the inmates in our penitentiaries across Canada had grade VIII or less of formal education.

Having visited two or three of the penitentiaries and discussed with the wardens and other officers and the inmates themselves the question of the vocational and education training given them, I am of the opinion that it is far less than it should be. I spent some time in the Collins Bay penitentiary—and for the benefit of those who are now looking at me it was just about two days—

An hon. Member: Not two years?

Mr. Howard: No, it was not two years.

An hon. Member: He must have got out.

Mr. Howard: Yes, I knew the warden. While I was there I was most interested to see the operation of the Collins Bay penitentiary, which is primarily a vocational training school for people who are transferred mostly from the Kingston federal penitentiary, who undergo some sort of vocational training in carpentery, bricklaying, sheet metal work and allied types of trades. I was told that last year, which I believe was the tenth anniversary of the operation of the Collins Bay educational program—

An hon. Member: A Liberal realization.

Mr. Howard: A Liberal realization?

Mr. Fisher: There is nothing liberal about a penitentiary.

Mr. Howard: It is a good job that the Liberals realize this necessity, though I am sure they did not have too much to do with this. In any event, I was told that of all the people who had—and I use the word in quotation marks—"graduated" from Collins Bay in this 10 year period, more than 65 per cent had not become recidivists, which is a higher percentage than those released from penitentiaries other than Collins Bay.

I hope that, if this will depend on the Fauteux commission's report, a great advance will be made in the steps taken to provide educational training for inmates in penitentiaries, as well as to provide vocational training for them. I am not talking now in terms of the normal type of work which inmates of penitentiaries do such as making boots, sewing up mail bags and other such menial tasks which are classified in terms of vocational training. If these thoughts could be kept in mind, and if the minister wishes to make some comment on them, it would be most appreciated.

While I am on the subject I wonder if I could inquire whether the estimate that was referred to last night, No. 396 I believe it was, which applies to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, will be considered immediately following completion of the Department of Justice estimates?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, to answer the last question first, Mr. Chairman; that is the intention. As soon as we are through with penitentiaries, unless there are one or two supplementary items, that will be the procedure in general. As soon as we have completed these estimates we will go on to the R.C.M.P.

On the subject of education or training in the penitentiaries there are two main types involved which you might call academic training and vocational training. We have at each institution a number of professional teachers who are responsible for the carrying out of the academic education of the inmates. In addition there are at all the penitentiaries facilities for vocational training, although the main facilities are concentrated at Dorchester, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Collins Bay and at the federal training centre at St. Vincent de Paul.

The total expenditure for the fiscal year under review or materials involved in vocational training is $45,400. Those materials are broken down into $950 for training films, $4,210 for printing and stationery and $40,240 for materials. That does not take into account all the staff devoted to vocational training instruction or the administrative overhead in that connection. That is purely the expenditure on the materials purchased to be used this year in vocational training. It takes no account of the capital equipment in machine shops and so on, which were already on hand.

The types of training given, if the hon. gentleman would be interested, are broken down under automotive, barbering, brick masonry, cabinet making, upholstering, wood finishing, carpentry, commercial, electrical, machine shop, painting, plastering, plumbing and steam fitting, rural repairs—which means repairs to machinery used on farms and in other rural occupations—sheet metal, elementary training and welding.

Mr. Howard: I understood the minister to say $45,400?

Mr. Fulton: That is right.

Mr. Howard: I have the right figure, then. I assume, from the listing of the types of vocational training given—barbering, rural maintenance and so on—that the minister is including under this item of vocational training the normal, day to day, so-called hard labour to which inmates are sentenced.

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman. I am informed that this whole vocational program which I have been discussing is in addition to the ordinary day to day work required to be done by the inmates. This is a program of vocational training during which the men are assigned to benches under the supervision of an instructor—not just making things for the prison or the penitentiary; not just working on a farm driving a tractor. These are courses of instruction quite apart from the day to day work expected of some of the inmates.

Mr. Howard: The minister mentioned such training centres as those at Saskatchewan and St. Vincent de Paul, as having vocational training programs under federal jurisdiction. Are any of those on the same scale and nature as the one at Collins Bay, where there is a definite combined academic and vocational training course which is a full time occupation?

Mr. Fulton: I am informed that they are all of the same nature, although they may not all be training the same number of men. They are all of the same nature, and with respect to the men undergoing training, the program at one place would be as extensive for an individual as if he had been at Collins Bay, with the exception possibly of barbering and the commercial course. The figures I have show that of the penal institutions per se more is spent at Collins Bay than at any of the others. The heaviest expenditure of all is at the federal training centre. Then Collins Bay, $9,525—that is on the material used in the vocational training; Saskatchewan, $6,120; British Columbia, $5,625; and Dorchester, $3,775.

Mr. Howard: At Collins Bay, as I understand it, an inmate who spends two or three years there, or whatever period of time he has to serve, in some program of vocational training, gets a certificate of competence if he passes the tests and performs his work well, and arrangements exist with the apprenticeship branch of the province of Ontario and, in some instances, with some of the unions in the building trades under which such persons can apply part of the time spent in training at Collins Bay toward the period of time which would be spent as an apprentice following a trade. Does a similar arrangement exist arising out of vocational training done in other penitentiaries, or is it confined to Collins Bay?

Mr. Fulton: I am advised that the arrangements in Ontario are more advanced than they are in other provinces. That would cover Collins Bay. It depends to some extent on the provisions of the provincial apprenticeship acts, as the hon. member will appreciate, and I am informed that attempts are being made to bring the same arrangements into effect to as full an extent in the other provinces as is presently the case in Ontario. But we have to admit we are more advanced in Ontario in this regard than elsewhere.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I think it is only fair to state that I know of one case of a young man who was not making good, and who had committed crimes in consequence of which he was sent to Stoney Mountain. He came back a carpenter. When he applied for a job they asked him where he got his training. "In Stoney Mountain", he replied. And the contractor said, "I don't care where you got your training. If you can do the job you will get the job". And he got it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word in support of the contention put forward by the hon. member for Nanaimo that active consideration should be given to decentralizing our penitentiaries so far as women are concerned. I am sure the minister, or his department, has received representations concerning this matter from a number of women's organizations who are interested.

We are all pleased to note that the number of women maintained in our penitentiaries is so small, as announced by the minister a moment ago. Nevertheless, in line with our modern acceptance of the fact that there should be no discrimination between men and women, it does seem unfair that if a man is sentenced to a penitentiary the chances are good that he will at least serve in an area where his family and relatives can visit him, whereas if a woman is sentenced to a term in a penitentiary the chances that this will be the case are very slim. I hope the consideration to be given to this matter by the minister will be very active.

I should like to ask a question with reference to a matter mentioned by the hon. member for Kingston. He referred to the new penitentiary being built at Joyceville. I wonder whether, since the new minister took over, there has been any review of the amount of money paid to, and other financial arrangements made with, Mr. Ben Franklin —I do not mean the gentleman who belongs to American history, but a gentleman alive today—concerning the purchase from Mr. Franklin of a portion of his farm which is being used for this new penitentiary.

I have in mind some questions that I asked by means of the order paper during the last parliament. The answers given by the previous minister of justice suggested to me that some quite fancy prices had been paid, and I wondered whether this matter had been reviewed by the present minister.

I have one other question to ask, and I might as well ask it while I am on my feet now so the minister can answer all these points at the same time. Would the minister comment on the fact that the grants to recognized prisoners' aid societies seem to be divided into two parts? There is an amount of $60,000 under this item, and there was an amount of $40,000 under item 173. Is there any difference in the purpose of these grants or in the kind of society to which these grants of money are made?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, may I advise the hon. gentleman that I have not reviewed the situation regarding payment for the land that was required for Joyceville. I have understood that this was a completed contract which, however it may have been negotiated, was legally in effect, and under which payment had been authorized and, indeed, made. I have not therefore embarked on an investigation of the matter, because administratively it did not seem that there was very much that could be done. If information comes to my attention—if the hon. gentleman or any one else were to give me information—suggesting that the contract should be reviewed from the point of view of possible revocation or rescission, I would be ready to consider the matter. My information is that there might be objections as to the way in which this was done, but that it is a closed incident.

On the question of the division of the amounts to be paid to prisoners' aid societies, the reason for that is fundamentally that the work done by the prisoners' aid societies in connection with those who are out on ticket of leave, the supervisory work, advice, care and so on, is done on behalf of the remission service. That is why there is an amount under that item. There is in addition the work done under this item by the prisoners' aid societies in connection with the counselling and issuing of advice to prisoners and their families while the prisoner is in the penitentiary prior to his discharge or release on ticket of leave. That is why there are two items in the estimates.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I notice that each of these items has been increased by $10,000 from what was provided in the previous fiscal year. Do the new totals now meet reasonably well the needs of the societies in this field?

Mr. Fulton: I am advised that it is expected this year the amount of $60,000 included in these estimates will be adequate to meet the need and that next year we are asking for a similar amount, namely $60,000. In the two years the distributions we will have been able to make to these societies will have been approximately 20 per cent more than in previous years. They are doing a magnificent job. Very likely we will be asking them to do more as the recommendations of the Fauteux commission report are gradually implemented, but as yet I cannot make any definite statement as to what amounts will be asked for in subsequent years. I can tell the hon. gentleman only that the increase this year over last year is believed to be adequate, and the same amount for next year is hoped to be sufficient to meet the needs.

Mr. Bryce: Mr. Chairman, I have two questions on this item. How many trades are being taught at Stoney Mountain, and in how many penitentiaries are the young prisoners segregated from the older and more hardened prisoners?

Mr. Fulton: I am informed with regard to the second question asked by the hon. gentleman that in all the prisons the greatest possible care is taken to ensure that the living and sleeping quarters of the young inmates, the first offender type, are separated from the similar quarters for the older and more hardened type of inmate, but it is not possible in the institutions as they exist at the moment to have complete segregation in that in many cases their recreation periods may be spent in the same place and they may eat in the same place and go to church at the same time. But in so far as possible for the important periods of the day there is the maximum segregation that the physical accommodation permits.

As to the number of courses taught at Stoney Mountain, I am informed that bricklaying and stationary engineering are taught as special vocational training courses. There is the usual academic instruction to which I referred earlier, and in addition there is the normal on the job training in the shops and on the farm.

Mr. Bryce: Would it be the policy of the present government in building new prisons or in constructing additions to existing prisons that may be made from time to time to make arrangements so the young prisoners and first offenders could be located in one prison while the more hardened prisoners could be kept in one of the older prisons?

Mr. Fulton: That is the accepted theory of prison construction and prison administration, and as quickly as we can do it, it will be done. I am informed that in new construction it will be the basis of design. With regard to the older types of prisons, in so far as we can make modifications and indeed in so far as the designs of new prisons will permit, it will be the intention to segregate as between institutions where that is practical; and that will be borne in mind as a desirable principle.

Mr. Thompson (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Chairman, I note that a large number of instructors, grades 1 to 10, and rehabilitation officers grades 1 to 8 are employed in our penitentiaries. Could the minister inform us for how many of these positions, if any, university degrees are required?

Mr. Fulton: In the vocational training branch of the instructional work of the department it is more technical training that is required, and therefore there probably would not be very many, if any, where a university degree is a requirement. In the academic training the requirement is the normal teacher's certificate of the province from which the instructor is recruited, although extra salary allowances are made for those in possession of higher degrees of qualification. We also have in addition our special highly trained personnel such as psychiatrists, doctors and other prison personnel where a university degree is of course an absolute requirement for appointment to the position.

Mr. Thompson (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Chairman, am I to understand, then, that among the rehabilitation officers there may be university men employed but that they will receive additional salary which is not shown in the estimates; or does it mean the top rating shown in the estimates is for university men?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I think the reason I have not answered the hon. gentleman's question satisfactorily is that I thought he was relating it to the general question of administration. The details he is now discussing are contained in vote No. 183. We are now discussing vote No. 182. Would it be agreeable to the committee if we were to carry 182?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item agreed to.

183. Operation and maintenance of penitentiaries, including supplies and services relating thereto; administration, operation, repair and upkeep of buildings, works and equipment; maintenance, discharge and transfer of inmates; compensation to discharged inmates permanently disabled while in penitentiaries, $11,002,925.

Mr. Fulton: I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information at the moment. All I can say is that some would require university degrees and others would not. We would have to have a complete breakdown of the establishment at each institution in order to give a complete answer. I could obtain that information and give it to the hon. gentleman later if he wishes.

Mr. Thompson (Edmonton-Strathcona): It is not necessary to answer my question to know how many are actually employed. I was attempting to satisfy myself about the salaries being paid to university men. It would appear from what the minister said that some of these salaries fall within those shown in this table. I should like to ask the minister whether he believes that the salaries shown there are commensurate with the type of training required to obtain a university degree?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman. One is always conscious of the fact that you are not paying salaries as high as those which theoretically, and indeed perhaps absolutely, it would be desirable to pay. All I can say is that the last salary revision which took place in May of this year was made absolute throughout the penitentiary staff, and the commissioner and all the senior administrative officers are fully conscious of the desirability of getting highly trained men at every level where it is sensible to have a person with a good background of education and training. I am told that in the group to which my hon. friend refers, namely the rehabilitation officers, the effect of the general increase of last May would be an average of $300 a year.

Mr. Christian: Mr. Chairman, in regard to item 183, I would like to refer the minister to page 253 of the estimates dealing with the item, office stationery, supplies and equipment, $9,800, as compared with the previous estimate of $8,000. In other words, there is an increase of $1,800. First, I should like to know the reason for the increase. Then, I have a further question which probably relates to the Department of Justice as well as to the other departments of government. When office stationery, supplies and equipment are ordered what is the method used? Are tenders called in all instances, or what is the rule? This question is important because of the fact that a lot of equipment, supplies and office stationery is used in government service. What is the method used in the purchase of such supplies?

Mr. Fulton: The office stationery, supplies and equipment are, in the main, not in total, purchased through the queen's printer, which falls under the Department of the Secretary of State. There is an increase in this item. I might point out we have gone back to item 182 now, but I do not mind dealing with the matter. This item provides for the purchase of printed forms, including those printed at the penitentiary and those purchased through the department of public printing and stationery; stationery, envelopes, blotting paper and other office supplies such as pens, pencils, letterheads, carbon paper, stencils and other paper supplies; office machinery and equipment.

The main reason for the increase of $1,800 is the construction of the new penitentiary at Joyceville, which was a major undertaking and involved a great deal of supervision from headquarters—we are dealing here with the administrative item—and in addition the general, steady increase in the operations and to some extent in the population of the penitentiary system in Canada, but the main reason was the construction program at Joyceville.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Has the minister any figures showing how many inmates are permanently disabled while in penitentiaries and thus entitled to draw the compensation referred to in this item, and what is the basis on which the compensation is computed?

Mr. Fulton: At the present time we are paying compensation to three inmates who were disabled while in penitentiary.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the basis similar to that of workmen's compensation in the provinces?

Mr. Fulton: We consult the workmen's compensation board of the province in question and the employees' compensation branch of the Department of Labour in arriving at the appropriate amount to be paid.

Item agreed to.

184. Construction, improvements and equipment, $2,365,555.

Mr. Christian: This item involves $2,365,555. Will the minister give us the particulars of the individual amounts, and especially the item of $73,470 in regard to British Columbia.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I should say at once that this is the second item in my estimates in which I shall be asking the committee to approve of a reduction. I shall ask my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, to move that the amount of this item be reduced by $1 million.

Mr. MacLean: I so move.

Mr. Fulton: When the chairman has put the question I will give an answer to the question.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rea): Moved by Mr. MacLean:

That item No. 184, construction, improvements and equipment, $2,365,555, be reduced by the amount of $1 million.

Mr. Fulton: Before the motion is carried perhaps I should say a word about this item and answer the question of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. The main reason for the substantial vote here, as compared with last year, is, of course, the Joyceville construction program. It was found, therefore, that a good deal of time was consumed in the negotiations for the purchase of the site and agreements on the purchase price. Then, in addition, there was the work that had to be done in clearing and levelling the land before the contracts could be let for the construction of the buildings, with the result that it has not been possible to spend in the fiscal year the amount that it was anticipated would be spent by way of actual contract-letting before the fiscal year was over.

As a result of the request that was made to all branches of the department to study their estimates and see where reductions could be made, I am advised that a reduction of this substantial amount can be made here without in any way prejudicing the actual construction program.

To answer the question of the hon. gentleman from Okanagan Boundary as to the item of $73,000 for British Columbia, which is found on page 256 of the estimates, the item for construction or acquisition of buildings and works is $53,675, and the total for warehouse building is $20,000, which I think accounts for $73,675. There is a discrepancy there of about $125 and I shall see if I can find it.

Mr. Chevrier: May I get from the minister some further explanation of the motion to reduce item 184? Is it the intention to take up this reduction of $1 million in supplementary estimates or is the program for construction under that item being effected by the removal of certain buildings? I do not know that I understood fully the explanation which the minister gave a moment ago and I wonder whether he would be good enough to supplement it.

Mr. Fulton: The main reason why we are able to move a reduction in the construction item as shown is that it has not been possible to proceed with the actual construction of the new institution at Joyceville as rapidly as possible due to delays in the final negotiation of the purchase price of the property and payment of that purchase price; due to delays in the architectural design of the building and to the necessity of extensive levelling and clearing of the site. The result is it will not be possible actually to let contracts during the fiscal year for the full amount anticipated, and I am advised that we can safely reduce the item by $1 million. We have items in the supplementary estimates but I believe in the main they were submitted before we found it possible to reduce this construction item and they are in different votes.

Mr. Chevrier: Does this item refer exclusively to the building at Joyceville?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: And the progress of the building will not be interrupted? It will be continued and the money will be voted in some other item?

Mr. Fulton: No, the money will be voted next year in the 1958-59 estimates. I may say I went into this fairly carefully because I was concerned lest, as a result of the reduction, we might be lessening the chances of providing additional employment through construction this winter. I am advised it is simply not possible. We have let all the contracts we can covering the stage to which preparations and planning have now gone, and therefore this is simply an item which does not reduce our power to provide employment this winter.

Plans are continuing to be prepared. We have the matter fully covered in next year's estimates and contracts will be let on a continuous basis but they cannot be let before March 31. I might also say for the information of the committee that to date contracts for construction have been let totalling $804,287 for administration building No. 1, power plant building No. 12 and the steam generating plant and high level water tank. Tenders have been called for the hospital and chapels building No. 2, accommodation building No. 3, automotive and shop building No. 11, and other tenders are expected to be called prior to March 31 for the stores building, maintenance shop and laundry building, shop building, and kitchen building.

Mr. Winch: Is it not a fact that a great deal of the construction and improvement work in penitentiaries is done by the inmates themselves? If that is the case, and I know it is because I have seen some of that work, has consideration been given by the minister to the payment of unemployment insurance to prisoners released from custody? Some hon. members may smile but it is a very serious proposition.

Mr. Fulton: I did not smile.

Mr. Winch: If you interest yourself in penitentiary inmates and the problems of penology, you will know that one of the big problems arises in connection with the rehabilitation of those persons who are released after serving their sentences. When a man is released he has very little money in his pockets and he has not a job. When men have been incarcerated behind walls and bars for 2, 5, 10 or 15 years and are then released, being human one of the first things they want is a fling. By the time they have had their fling, and it is only human that they should, they do not have much money left and they do not have a job.

It is tough enough, particularly at the present time, for the law-abiding citizen who needs a job to find one, but when a person has a prison record it is most difficult to obtain work even though a certain amount of help is given. These people are not entitled to unemployment insurance, have no money in their pockets, and cannot get a job. On far too many occasions they develop a feeling of frustration, "what's the use", and they take up crime again and are back in the penitentiary where it costs the taxpayers $4.63 a day per person to keep them.

In view of the fact that every year we vote money for construction and improvements and that nearly all of these men are sentenced to hard labour as they should be, I think it might be an excellent investment if they were paid for the work they do by the purchase of unemployment stamps on their behalf. Then if they could not find a job on coming out of prison there would be no reason to return to their criminal ways, because they would be entitled to unemployment insurance. Has the minister given any thought to something of that nature?

Mr. Fulton: I understand that the hon. gentleman is not quite correct when he says that the majority of the construction in the penitentiaries is done by the inmates. They do work on the farms, in the shops, and day to day maintenance and upkeep.

Mr. Winch: And building.

Mr. Fulton: —but I am informed they do not do any major construction that would be described as being of a contractual nature.

Mr. Winch: If the minister will visit the penitentiary at New Westminster he will see the wonderful work that was done there last year on the extension of the office building and reception rooms, the installation of a new system of drainage and that sort of thing. It is all being done by the inmates.

Mr. Fulton: I did not appreciate the information given to me by my advisers. The point they were making is that the inmates would not be doing the type of construction which we were referring to a moment earlier at Joyceville, but it is correct to say that they do an appreciable amount of construction work within the walls of the penitentiaries by way of remodelling and so on. I am advised that discussions have taken place with the unemployment insurance commission on the point the hon. member mentioned but we have not reached any agreement as yet. Until the unemployment insurance commission will come around to the point of view expressed by the hon. member there is not much we can do. Perhaps he would address his remarks to one of my colleagues.

Mr. Winch: I will do that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I am sure we are all happy to congratulate the minister on being able to move another reduction in his estimates. I have the feeling that it must give him particular pleasure, bearing in mind the famous phrase "what's a million", to be able to move a reduction in the amount of $1 million. However, I think we should realize that this is largely a bookkeeping matter. As I look into the details of the estimates I discover that in 1956-57, despite the fact there was a larger vote, the total amount spent under this item was $1,392,000 odd. With respect to 1957-58, even after the $1 million reduction, we will still be voting $1,365,555. In other words, the amount to be spent in 1957-58 will be more or less the same as the amount that was actually spent in 1956-57.

Hence, on that score it is really a bookkeeping transaction. The minister has also pointed out that this money will be voted in next year's estimates. In other words, it is simply a choice between voting it this year, not spending it and revoting it next year, or voting it for the first time next year. Nevertheless we still congratulate the minister on being able to introduce the motion in this particular round figure.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

626. Expenses of the Royal commission on the criminal law relating to criminal sexual phychopaths, $7,500.

Mr. Fisher: I just wonder whether the minister has been following the developments that have taken place in England on this matter and whether he has any views to express at this time on the changes that have been contemplated there in the treatment of sexual psychopaths.

Mr. Fulton: I speak subject to correction but I am reasonably certain that the report has not yet been received. My recollection of the latest position is that Chief Justice McRuer advised us that the taking of evidence and the studies had been completed and that he is working on the report at the present time. If I am incorrect, I will correct my statement and give the hon. gentleman a supplementary answer tomorrow.

Mr. Fisher: I am sure the minister is correct. I was wondering whether he was following what has been happening in the public discussions in England on these matters and whether,—how shall I phrase it—as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggests, they are receiving their active attention.

Mr. Fulton: Indeed yes. We follow these things and the officers of the department follow them, those who are interested and whose administrative responsibility will be covered. They keep abreast of them. But before we could make any intelligent conclusion based upon what is happening elsewhere I think we must wait until we receive the report of the royal commission which was set up especially to deal with the matter. They too will, I am quite certain, be following these developments in other countries.

Item agreed to.

Yukon territorial court—

698. Administration, including administration of justice—Yukon territory—further amount required, $10,000.

Mr. Herridge: I just want to say a word or two on this item. I might not be strictly in order but I intended to be here last night and was kept in my office by a visitor dealing with an extremely important matter concerning my constituency. I notice that the hon. member for Trinity-Conception was a bit sticky about one gentleman of the legal profession congratulating another on his appointment to office. But as the most ancient of this group from British Columbia, and a very humble layman indeed, I want to extend very sincere congratulations to the minister on his appointment to the very important office he now holds. The minister's family history has been very closely woven into the fabric of the public life of British Columbia over a great number of years, to the advantage of the province of British Columbia and to the great credit of his family. I wish him every happiness in the performance of his duties and every success.

This item deals with the courts of the Yukon. However, I wanted to make this observation. I have had something to do with the courts, strictly as a spectator or a witness, and I have always been proud, in my considerable experience in that direction, of the courts of Canada. I think we sometimes fail to realize the high standard of administration that prevails in this country.

In contrast with that, I have in my files much correspondence concerning a young Canadian who was sentenced to life imprisonment in the United States in the superior court in 14 minutes. I have in my file a letter from one of the counsel concerning the case. The case occurred during an election, when the judge was seeking election as were the crown prosecutor, as we would call him, and the sheriff and when public opinion in the town concerned was somewhat against the defendant. In this letter he mentions the fact that owing to public opinion, the election and the need for votes, the prosecutor could do nothing other than recommend the maximum sentence, and the judge agreed with the recommendation on that ground. I just mention that matter in order to indicate what can happen in other countries. I am quite sure that something of that nature could never happen in the administration of justice in Canada. I mention that matter because I think some of our young people fail to realize the extremely high standards that have been maintained in this country, particularly with respect to the administration of the criminal law.

Before I sit down I want to bring to the attention of the minister something which I have had in mind for some time because of being interested in court procedure, the appointment of juries, their composition and so on. The jury system is a very important part of our administration of justice which we inherited from Great Britain where it was established shortly after the Norman conquest. It has an important function in the administration of justice. It is necessary that persons who are appointed to juries have an understanding of their responsibility and an understanding of the system.

I was just going to suggest this to the minister. I do not know whether or not he could put it into effect. Some time ago I happened to pick up a small pamphlet issued by the sheriff of Carleton county. I was very much surprised to find such a progressive pamphlet coming from such a Conservative county in Canadian history. In any event, I think the sheriff showed a great deal of intelligence in publishing a little pamphlet of information for jurors. It gives a little bit of information concerning the history of the jury system, the types of juries that are established including the grand jury, the petit jury and so on and then some information for jurors.

I think it would be an excellent thing if the practice were followed by all the attorneys general in the provinces of Canada so that all persons who are appointed to juries and who are required to act on juries might be given this information. In many cases these people have had no previous experience in jury service and in many cases they have little understanding of what a jury is. I suggest that the minister recommend to the attorneys general of the provinces that some such pamphlet be published and distributed to all persons called to sit on a jury before they commence to perform their duty. I think it would be most worth while and would give many of these people a better understanding of the importance of the duty they are going to perform, of their responsibility and of the procedures that are traditional in the jury system.

Mr. Fulton: I would be less than human, to say nothing of being less than courteous, if I did not express to my hon. friend my very real appreciation of the extraordinarily kind things he has just said about me. I know too that he says them on the basis of the tremendous interest and historical background that he and his family have in our province of British Columbia with which so much of his activities and those of his family have been so closely identified, in the Kootenay area especially, over the past three generations, anyway certainly since before the beginning of this century.

Mr. Herridge: Biblical generations.

Mr. Fulton: Yes; that is what I had in mind. I thank the hon. gentleman and assure him that I hope to deserve the kind things he said. I quite agree with him about the desirability of impressing upon jurors the importance and the very fine composition of the responsibilities that they discharge. If the hon. gentleman would be kind enough to let me have a copy of the pamphlet I think I could give him an undertaking right now that I will get in touch with the sheriff for Carleton and ask him if he will let us have sufficient copies to send a sample to each of the attorneys general.

Item agreed to.

B—Penitentiaries—

700. To provide for a credit to the revolving fund established pursuant to vote 628 of the Appropriation Act No. 2, 1955, to meet the deficiency arising from over-valuation of inventory, $6,642.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I notice that this item is supplementary to another supplementary which in effect is supplementary to an item of a previous year. Could the minister explain it?

Mr. Fulton: Yes. This particular item arises out of the need for an adjustment of the revolving fund in compliance with the terms of section 58, subsection (5) of the Financial Administration Act. An apparent shortage in the fund was brought to light at the end of the fiscal year 1955 to 1956 amounting to $9,075. Investigation subsequently revealed that this is attributable mainly to an overvaluation of $9,141 in inventory carried at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary and on hand at the previous year end.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That would be when the revolving fund was first set up.

Mr. Fulton: When the revolving fund was first set up, that is correct. This excess occurred as a result of its physical inventory being taken as of March 31, 1955, compared to an earlier March cutoff date in justice treasury records and this apparent excess physical value over the books formed part of a large surplus in the funds credited to "revenue" at that time. The consequence of this unreal surplus was to create a deficiency in the fund upon inventories being taken a year later which was reduced to some extent by a surplus in the operation of the fund meanwhile.

These circumstances were brought to the notice of the comptroller of the treasury who advised that it was not possible to reverse the error retractively. Thus, the artificial deficiency has been carried forward from March 31, 1955 and continued to be reflected in the revolving fund, subject to a surplus of $2,433 in its operations as of March 31, 1957. This reduced the apparent surplus, the incorrect surplus, or rather it reduced the deficiency resulting from the previous incorrect surplus to $6,642. The purpose of this item is to enable us to adjust the books by voting funds which will restore the revolving fund to its correct amount as at April 1, 1957.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What would be the amount of that revolving fund at par?

Mr. Fulton: $300,000 at par as of April 1, 1957 but increased to $600,000 by an item in the supplementaries of this year.

Mr. Caron: On that point, I wonder if the minister just out of interest could tell us what caused the deficiency in the first place. Was it a part of the inventory that was stolen or was it overvaluation or what?

Mr. Fulton: I am informed it was simple overvaluation owing to a time lag, if you like, or a difference in the time at which the inventory was entered as against the time the valuation was taken.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: May I ask the minister if he is ready to deal with item 181 or does he wish to let it stand?

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member for New Westminster and the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary both asked me for information with regard to the number of bankruptcies. I do not wish, Mr. Chairman, to take advantage of these gentlemen—I see that neither of them are in the house—I would therefore like to defer giving this answer until they are present. May I ask that the item stand.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police—

Headquarters administration, national police services and training establishments—

396. Administration, operation and maintenance, $7,329,030.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, in making the comments I wish to make on the Royal Canadian Mounted Police I would like at the start to underline that there is no particular prejudice in my mind against the force but through a contact I had with them a number of years ago—in fact during the thirties—my first impression of the mounted police was when I saw them equipped with a wand of ashwood going to work on some marches across the country and ever since then I have had a quizzical eye cast towards them.

One of the things which is bothering me is the fact that they have been identified with comic strips and glamorous stories and have become a tourist symbol synonymous with Canada itself. There is nothing wrong with that at all, but the stricture that comes to mind is this organization which is so glamorous and so popular and which has had such a tremendous expansion in the last 20 or 30 years until it now has a budget of $40 million or more and is a very substantial force also happens to be our security or you might say our secret police force.

I want to bring into this discussion the words of one of our intellectual mavericks

Professor Lower of Queen's University, who has put in a way much better than I could the fundamental danger in terms of individual liberties in the present trend of the R.C.M.P. organization in its relationship to security. The remarks of Professor Lower were occasioned of course by the Norman case and the fact that the R.C.M.P. sent a report to Washington in October 1950 which informed the United States security agencies that it had received a report from one of its secret sources that Mr. Norman was a member of the Canadian communist party. Later on the R.C.M.P. informed the United States authorities that they had discovered this was a case of mistaken identity. However, Professor Lower says in the July 6 issue of Macleans in an article entitled "Is the R.C.M.P. a Threat to Our Liberty?":

> Few more damning statements about an agency of government can ever have been published. Here is a responsible branch collecting any and all types of hearsay and rumor from "unidentified subsources"—in other words, tittle-tattle passed on by irresponsible gossiping—and handing it over to the American secret police, whence it later turns up in congressional committees which, whatever their purpose, publicize it throughout the world.

I realize that the minister is not responsible for the growth of the R.C.M.P. over past years or for its policies or activities, but I am wondering if he shares or has shared any of the concern, as someone interested in justice and in the operation of our security system, in the point of view of individuals concerned with liberty such as Professor Lower and, I might add, myself. Professor Lower goes on at page 57 of his article to say:

> Yet apparently rumour-collecting is one of the R.C.M.P.'s functions. Worse still, it hands this trash over to representatives of a foreign power, for them to use at their discretion. Surely such activity is more dangerous to our liberty than the threats it is supposed to guard us against.

May I point out that I cannot guarantee that the expression of opinion by Professor Lower is the exact or complete truth, but I do think it is sufficiently accurate and expressed of opinion that we should have from the minister a statement with regard to it.

During the war, as was pointed out, there was a tremendous emphasis on security. Many members of parliament became conscious of it in relation to the fact that some of their constituents wished to become citizens but discovered that they could not get citizenship papers. As I mentioned this morning, there was some kind of review, and I believe the Royal Canadian Mounted Police played a fundamental role in this. A number of people have had the embarrassing experience of getting to the boundary of our neighbour to the south and discovering that they were not allowed into the United States because, somehow, a secret report had apparently been filed with the United States authorities.

I think all this requires one to pinpoint the operations of the R.C.M.P. in this regard, and I might in closing express the hope that the minister will seriously consider separating the secret police functions of the R.C.M.P. from the other aspects of its work which have been so glamorized and put forward as something identical with Canada. There is nothing evil about this work, and it has to be done, but I think it is a function which could be separated from the other duties of the force.

There is one further question I should like to ask in connection with the R.C.M.P. and that is whether any discussions have taken place with regard to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, section 37, subsection 2 which deals with the unauthorized use of the words "Royal Canadian Mounted Police" and its utilization as any sort of trademark or symbol in commercial activities.

Mr. Cameron: Mr. Chairman, I should like to pursue the heart of the matter which my colleague from Port Arthur has brought up, because there has come to my attention what is, in my view, a very dangerous position. I had the experience two or three years ago of receiving a letter from a personal friend who asked me if I could make some inquiries about a situation in which he found himself involved. He is a member of an international organization—not a labour organization, but an organization which is international in North America—and he was chosen as a delegate to attend a conference in the United States. He made inquiries from his employer to obtain leave of absence to attend this conference, but he was informed by his employer that it was useless for him to take this leave of absence because he would not be permitted to cross the border, as he had been the subject of an investigation by the R.C.M.P. Naturally enough my friend was rather dismayed about this, and it turned out later that he was almost the only person in Nanaimo who did not know he was being investigated by the mounted police, that he was being investigated on the suspicion of having communist affiliations.

There are two points involved here. The first is that the two officers who, I found, conducted the investigation were—and I am trying to put the most charitable construction I can on it,—political innocents, babes in arms who were quite incapable of assessing whether or not a certain individual had communist affiliations or sympathies and, moreover they failed signally to contact people who might very readily have supplied them with the whole of the background on this particular man who is a native of the district and whose record is an open book. They never contacted me, although it must have been known to them—it should have been at least—that he was my financial agent in the election of 1953.

There is another angle to this. I cannot avoid the conclusion that this investigation was instigated and initiated not by the R.C.M.P. but by the security agency of another power; that, in effect, the R.C.M.P. was in this instance acting as agents for the federal bureau of investigation. Indeed, this became perfectly evident later when we found that officials of this organization in the United States had been anxious to have this particular man, and others in Canada, excluded from the convention in the United States.

I was quite understandably, not given any definite information with regard to this matter when I applied to the mounted police headquarters, but I do think that what is involved here is a very serious question. I quite understand that the security forces of both the United States and Canada must work in conjunction in certain matters, such as certain criminal activities, but I do think it is an intolerable situation when Canadian citizens are subjected to an investigation at the instigation of a foreign organization in respect of points of view, and even definite affiliations, which are not contrary to Canadian law. In addition to that, I would point out that the investigation, in this instance at any rate, was carried out in the most clumsy and amateurish manner and caused the most acute embarrassment to my friend when it turned out that all his friends and neighbours had been contacted and asked if they thought he had communist affiliations and sympathies.

I should like to have some assurance that in future the R.C.M.P. will be given firm instructions that they are not to investigate the private lives of Canadian citizens at the instigation of a foreign power except on suspicion of some contravention of the Criminal Code of Canada. In this particular instance, of course, the matter was never cleared up. It was merely dropped, and my friend got across the line to the United States. But today most people, if not everybody, in Nanaimo know that my friend was investigated by the R.C.M.P. They do not know what he was investigated for, and they do not know whether the matter was ever cleared up. What happened has caused the most acute embarrassment.

So, Mr. Chairman, I suggest we should carry out investigations of Canadian citizens only at the instigation of Canadian authorities, and that when we do so we should employ people who can be relied upon to have some knowledge of the sort of thing they are investigating. This is a situation which needs to be cleared up, and it can, I think, be cleared up by decisive action on the part of the minister.

Mr. Peters: I also should like to say something on this matter. A number of years ago when I was attending school in Ottawa it was brought to my attention at that time there was an organization interested in organizing the student bodies of colleges across Canada, and there was some question of whether or not that was a left wing or a very left wing organization. I was delegated to go to various sources and find out whether it was advisable for the college which I was attending to affiliate or not. One of the places to which I went was the R.C.M.P. headquarters here in Ottawa. We discussed the case, and I mentioned several people who were involved and of whom I had some previous knowledge. But I was very surprised when the commissioner at that time suggested to one of his assistants that he check on the files of myself and one of the other gentlemen about whom I had been inquiring. And I was very surprised when they brought out a file on myself which was much larger than the file on the other gentleman. The commissioner told me that this file contained information, not of a criminal nature of any description, but information strictly of a political nature. It was a political file. It mentioned the fact, among other things, that I had been partly responsible for placing a petition before the House of Commons, and matters of that nature. Returning to the purpose of my visit, the commissioner asked me what information I had on this gentleman. At that time I took my leave and told him that I could get the information and he could get his information the same way.

The question I ask is this. Why should that file have been kept in the first place? Are those the only files that are kept? I have been told by other people that there are files kept on everybody in political life which are in the possession of the R.C.M.P. in Ottawa. I have been informed that these files contain excruciating details about the people concerned. In fact I was told that one contains a certain gentleman's record, a report on his performance in a baseball game. There was some question, I understand, of his applying for a pension at one time through the D.V.A. and the information that he had knocked out a few home runs was recorded in that file. I suppose he was not eligible for a pension because he was in good condition.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Did he knock them into the left field?

Mr. Peters: I was not advised into what field he knocked them but he certainly must have knocked them into the political field in order for the mounted police to have kept a record of it. I have another question to raise. Under what circumstances does the R.C.M.P. have the right to demand information given by those people who saw fit to volunteer in the last war including fingerprints and other identification marks? Under what circumstances and conditions are they allowed to distribute that type of information across the country?

With regard to the political file kept on myself I wish to point out that it is also kept at all the border crossing points. I am using my own case as an example because it is one of hundreds and after being checked it was found that there was nothing criminal involved in it. Whenever I go to cross at a border point, without any questions being asked in particular except my name and a few other pertinent facts, I am asked to step inside and they haul out the file examine it and then comment that everything is fine, there is nothing in it.

I am wondering if the R.C.M.P. have set up files of this type as anti-labour files to be used in certain instances? In cases where files are maintained, under what circumstances is the information contained therein given to the provincial police force, the municipal police, and municipal and provincial courts of law. Is the information that is kept distributed generously and indiscriminately to other sources. Is the purpose of the R.C.M.P. in small communities to supervise such acts as the one in which the Minister of Justice has been so interested relating to the improper use of comic magazines and that type of thing or is that administered by some other group in this country. I am inclined to believe that the police spend more time on this political aspect than they do on some of the work they are supposed to do. If a file is maintained on myself I am quite sure there is no one in the House of Commons today on whom the R.C.M.P. do not maintain a file. If that is so, how many personnel are involved in this and to what extent is the provincial police force used for that purpose?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I think I must answer one of the remarks made by the hon. member for Timiskaming immediately. I understand and I think I can state as a fact that there is not a file kept on every one in public life in Canada. Files are started only if there comes to the attention of the police, either of their own discovery as it were or by virtue of some report which they receive, information which appears to warrant the starting of a file in connection with anyone whether he be in political life or in any other form of activity. It will I am sure be appreciated that quite often information is received which, if correct, would warrant the gathering of further information, the opening of a file and the conduct of an investigation. In many cases the investigation reveals the fact that the original information received was not correct and the file then becomes inoperative. It is still retained on file, it is true, but it is inoperative and nothing further is ever done with it unless some organization, it could be a police force, which has a legitimate interest in knowing what information is on that file and some one who will establish his entitlement or right to get that information asks for it. Only in such a case is the information given to any one other than the proper authorities in the police force itself.

I think I must at once correct what would otherwise stand as uncontradicted assertions, namely that there is a file on everyone in political life. That is not correct. The other assertion that information is distributed across the country, I can assure the hon. gentleman, is not a correct assertion. It is given only to persons who establish their right to it and their proper interest in the matter and who must also establish the fact that they will keep it confidential in the way in which it is supposed to be kept.

Mr. Lewry: Mr. Chairman, on the point the minister just mentioned, during the last election campaign in Saskatchewan a member of parliament at that time was reported to have had available to himself, and was flashing on the public platform in a constituency which I will make clear now was not my own, a portion of an R.C.M.P. file on a man of different political opinion from himself. The minister said the information would be made available to members of the police force and I am interested in knowing if such information would be made available to a member of parliament or any other officer within the government for use for political purposes? I should like to have the minister's assurance that this is not the case.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, if I said what the hon. gentleman suggests that I said, I was incorrect. It is not given to every policeman. It will be made available to the proper authorities in other police forces, not generally to the members of other police forces, if a file is requested and proper entitlement to it is established.

With regard to the specific question, I can only say that not only is a file not made available generally but the existence of a file is not made known except to a person authorized to receive the information that a file exists. If a member of parliament, as the hon. gentleman states, had a portion of an R.C.M.P. file and was, as he said, flashing it around, I can only assume that it came into his possession improperly. If he were shown a file on a confidential basis in connection with some matter in which it was felt he might have had a legitimate interest then I can only say he was in gross breach of the confidence which was reposed in him when he was shown that portion of the file. A file would never be made available to anybody on the basis that it might be used on a political platform.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would pursue the point raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming when he said that in his case when he attempts to cross the international border there seems to be some evidence that there is information at the border that there is a file on him. I gathered from the account given that the border officials look into the file and see there is nothing there. Would that accord with the minister's information that there would be knowledge on the part of the border officials of the fact that there was even an inoperative file back in the office of the R.C.M.P.? In relation to this I express the view that if a file becomes inoperative then it is clear that there was nothing that needed to be investigated at all. If that is so, why should that file continue to exist at all?

Mr. Fulton: I understand the hon. member for Timiskaming is referring to the United States border officials, not the Canadian.

Mr. Peters: I presume the Canadian officials also. The file that I know of is at Detroit and Rouses Point.

Mr. Fulton: When the hon. gentleman is subjected to this questioning is it by the Canadian border officials or the United States?

Mr. Peters: I think it is the Canadian, whomever you have to see.

Mr. Fulton: If you are going across the border usually you have to report out at the Canadian immigration and report in at the United States customs and immigration. When you come back you report out at the United States immigration and report in at Canadian customs and immigration.

Mr. Peters: I am not sure which it is.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Whichever way it is, does it not point up the situation? If there is what the minister refers to as an inoperative file, and if the knowledge in that inoperative file is placed in the hands of border officials on either side of the border, is that not in contravention of our concepts of civil liberties?

Mr. Fulton: We are talking so much in the dark here that I find it difficult to give a definite answer. If the information were in the hands of the United States border officials then, of course, we would have no way of regulating what they did with it, even if it were inoperative.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Who gave them the Canadian file. How would they get it?

Mr. Fulton: The information might have come to their attention in any one of a number of ways and I am going to suggest a way which will show how difficult it is to deal with this case in broad generalities and without knowing what are the facts. It is quite possible, for instance, that there may be a notorious criminal with the same name as that of the hon. gentleman. That is not a far-fetched possibility. His name is not an unusual one, and therefore it would be quite normal for our border officials, in normal co-operation with the United States border officials, to be informed—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There might be a two-gun Fulton.

Mr. Fulton: That is quite possible. The Canadian officials might be informed that this person may be crossing the border. Somebody turns up with that name and the proper officials on both sides of the border would check to make sure whether he is the man on whom they have the file and for whom we are watching, or whether he is somebody else, let us say, Smith, other than the one in the file. I do not think any hon. member would object either to that exchange of information between ourselves and the United States authorities or to our border people or their border people keeping those files on hand. That may not be the explanation of the case of the hon. gentleman, but I do not know what the situation is in his case, in the absence of concrete information. It seems to me that what we are all indulging in is speculation that will not help anybody.

Mr. Cameron: Perhaps I can clear up that part of the situation by completing the story

I told you a little while ago. I was informed, after I had interviewed the commissioner, that I could inform my friend in Nanaimo that he would have no difficulty in crossing the border. Presumably the Canadian authorities have no particular interest in preventing Canadian citizens in crossing the United States border. That is something for the United States officials to be concerned about. Therefore if my friend had any difficulty in crossing the border it could only have been on the basis of information supplied to the United States officials, and it would have been information not revealing that he was guilty of any criminal activity in Canada at all or being in any position that is against the Canadian law.

Mr. Fulton: I think the hon. gentleman's statement is too sweeping when he says that the information given to the United States officials could only have come from a Canadian source. I think that is making too wide a statement. Let me put it to him in reverse. We have a large number of border crossings from the United States into Canada. It is the policy of the Canadian government, and I believe it is the policy of the Canadian people, that we should not admit into our country persons who are undesirable. We do not have any information on them but when they present themselves as applicants to cross the border the only place where we can get that information is from the country of origin. Yet we require that information to determine whether a person is suitable to be allowed to cross the border, whether as an immigrant, a visitor, or in any other category, and if we require that information from countries from which people come to cross our border we will not get very far in receiving that information if we in turn were to refuse to give the information in our possession on persons in Canada who may be crossing the border the other way. It seems to me the matter is as simple as that. I would be quite prepared to accept the criticism and to regret it and to assure the hon. gentleman that we will do our best to improve the standard where he says that the investigation was conducted carelessly and resulted in embarrassment and perhaps even unnecessary suffering and some loss on the part of the person investigated.

I make no comment on the justification of the investigation because I do not know the facts. Anyone in charge of a department and of a force would say, as I say now, that the desire is to have the best qualified persons employed in that force and carrying on the work of that force; and certainly with respect to the security type of work that the hon. gentleman has brought before us today it is necessary to have the highest degree of skill in order to carry out that sort of investigation. It may be that the investigation was not carried out with that degree of skill; I do not know, but I can say that it is my desire and the desire of the commissioner constantly to improve the standard of all branches of the force so that there should be no cause for complaint on that or any other ground.

On the ground of the general proposition that information is exchanged I think it would be obvious that information has to be exchanged. It seems to me that the thing to be looked at is that we control the exchange of information and we certainly control the accuracy of the information and that we control the release of the information.

Mr. Cameron: There is another point that should be cleared up and that is, what yardstick do you apply to the term "desirability" because we have a rather different yardstick in Canada?

Mr. Fulton: In what context?

Mr. Cameron: We have a different yardstick from that which obtains in other parts of the world, particularly in the United States?

Mr. Fulton: In what context does the hon. member use the word "desirability"?

Mr. Cameron: The minister mentioned the fact that it was our duty, if you like, to make sure that a person was a desirable person. In Canadian law a person may be a perfectly desirable Canadian citizen, but there might be other countries which do not regard him as being desirable for reasons which we do not consider valid. Does the minister apply their yardstick to Canadian citizens?

Mr. Fulton: No, my understanding is—and I shall look into this to make sure that I am correct—that we do not in any case where Canadian authorities are asked to investigate make any attempt to assess the result of the investigation. It is merely a factual report that goes out and it is up to the persons who may be applying, who are interested in receiving the information, to assess it and apply their standards. In the same way, if we ourselves were to receive reports we would not rely on someone else's assessment; we would have to make that assessment ourselves in accordance with our own standard.

Mr. Macdonald (Vancouver-Kingsway): Since the hon. member for Timiskaming has referred to himself and said there is a file that may be his but probably is not his at all, I should like to say something that he was too modest to say, and say it with some knowledge of the labour movement and some knowledge of my hon. friend. He is well known in the labour movement as one of those who have had a great deal to do with ridding Canadian trade unionism of communist or foreign influences. He happens to belong to a trade union with which I am familiar and which succeeded some time ago in ridding itself of these influences. I happen to know that he is actively associated with the group in that union that succeeded in doing that. Part of the record of Canadian labour, which has a very low degree of communist infiltration, is due to the painstaking and hard-working efforts of people like the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I used an example. I must confess that I probably should have known but you see that we do not keep very complete files in the R.C.M.P. I did not know of the hon. gentleman's background. I used an example in that case because I do know the hon. gentleman's name and I know it is quite a usual name in Canada. That is the only reason I say it might well be that at the border there are files on other people with the same name. That was the only reason I gave that example. Perhaps I should have used the name "Smith", but then there are some members in the house by that name and I might have offended them.

Mr. Cameron: Would the minister answer this question? Does the Royal Canadian Mounted Police undertake an investigation of any Canadian citizen at the instigation of a foreign power?

Mr. Fulton: I think the answer to that is that we would exercise our judgment as to whether it was a proper request, whether there was any proper interest established, either on their part or ours, which would justify us in carrying out such an investigation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In discussing the exchange of information a few moments ago the minister said that it was not the endeavour of the Canadian authorities to assess the meaning of information but rather just to give the F.B.I., for example, factual information obtained as the result of an investigation in this country. It seems to me that one of the matters that should be considered, in the review of these procedures which I hope the minister will undertake, is the fact that in another country the assessment made of facts that are understood in the Canadian context might be quite unfair.

I think, for example, of some of the organizations that we may have had in our Canadian colleges and universities in the past. Some of the names that apply to organizations of various kinds in Canada mean one thing to us and mean something else to the authorities in another country. I think that consideration might be given whether there should not sometimes go with the facts an assessment or evaluation as to the real meaning of these connections if the information is given at all. I agree with Professor Lower that we should lean the other way and be very careful about exchanging this information at all.

There are two questions I should like to ask the minister while I am on my feet. First of all, I should like to ask him if all the files of the Royal Caandian Mounted Police are open to him as Minister of Justice at any time?

Mr. Fulton: The answer is yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am very glad to hear that. This is my other question. Has the Minister of Justice received from the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration a request that he, as Minister of Justice, review the procedures of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the investigation of prospective immigrants. If the Minister of Justice has received such a request from the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has the Minister of Justice assured the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that he will meet that request?

Mr. Fulton: The Minister of Justice and the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration do not go through the involved process described by the hon. gentleman. The Minister of Justice authorizes the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. to meet with the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and to discuss with him and review thoroughly the processes by which the investigations to which the hon. gentleman has just referred are carried on and also to review with him all related problems which arise when reports are received as the result of these investigations involving prospective immigrants, and the Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and the commissioner carry on these discussions directly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am very pleased to hear that. When these gentlemen meet, will it be over two cups of tea or three?

Mr. Fulton: I will probably have a parliamentary assistant with me so it will be three.

Mr. Fisher: Since the files of the R.C.M.P. are open to the minister, does that mean that a member of parliament, through his right to place questions on the order paper, can discover statistically some of the facts about these files? I do not mean the contents but the quantity. For example, how many inoperative files are there on members of parliament? That is the sort of question I have in mind. Would that be possible?

Mr. Fulton: It is difficult to generalize because when you generalize you give an answer without realizing its implications. I think the approach would be that such information as could be given without contravening grounds of public policy would be given and should be given, but just where the line should be drawn I am not able to say at the moment. For instance, if you answer one question, then at what point do you refuse to answer the next question? There is some danger that if you start to answer any questions in this particular field you may open a door by which you may be forced into apparent inconsistencies in subsequent refusals or else into going all the way and revealing information which might be neither in the public interest nor in the interest of the individual concerned.

All I can say there is what I said at the beginning, that whatever information can be given safely in accordance with sound policy should be given. There are restrictions against making all information known in the form of a public return. There are fewer restrictions against making it known on a confidential basis where you are satisfied as to the legitimacy of the interest of the person inquiring and of his capacity, as would be the case almost without question with members of parliament, to maintain the confidentiality with which he received the information.

Mr. Peters: Now that the government has changed, does the minister see much point in maintaining this Canadian investigation branch to investigate political probabilities? Does he see any point in maintaining the division or is he prepared to indicate whether he might be considering disposing of some of these files? I think it would hinge on whether the purpose of maintaining the file was to build up a case or whether it involved national security and citizenship matters. Has the minister given any consideration to the elimination of the part of this branch that appears to me to be detrimental to our Canadian way of life?

If there appeared to be anything that contravened Canadian law in a criminal or other sense then I would agree completely that such files should be maintained and used for reference purposes, presenting a case in court or whatever other reason might arise. However, if these files are just being maintained more or less in case somebody may need them some day, then I do not see any reason for doing so. I think the minister will agree that many of these files were initiated originally under governments of days gone by and that it might be quite proper to dispose of them if they are not serving any particular purpose.

Mr. Fulton: I am informed by the commissioner that they strip the files as and when they can. When a file is definitely inoperative or dead it would be disposed of but it is a problem as to how much of your time and effort you devote to stripping files and how much you devote to carrying on the police work for which the force is responsible. However, I understand it is not the case that a file once opened is kept forever. If the case comes to a dead end, if it becomes obvious that the purpose for which the investigation was first opened is no longer a real purpose, then the file is closed, and as I understand it it will be disposed of at the first reasonable opportunity so that no one will ever know about it.

On the question of whether we should dispense with the work of that section of the force, I cannot agree that it does not perform a very useful, valuable and important function. As I said earlier, it seems to me that the problem and the objectives should be rather to make sure that the function is performed efficiently and thoroughly and that the interest of the public and of individuals is safeguarded by the secrecy and confidentiality of the information so that it is never put to an improper purpose. It seems to me that is what the objective should be.

Mr. Ellis: For my own information I wonder whether the minister could tell the committee at whose instigation an investigation is commenced. For example, I am thinking of an employer desiring an investigation of an employee. Could he under certain circumstances make representations to the R.C.M.P. to initiate an investigation?

Mr. Fulton: I understand that investigation could not be made unless it was in connection with a defence contract; that is to say in the ordinary course of employer and employee relationships no private employer could come along and say "I want my employee investigated". He could not do that through the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Ellis: Generally speaking, on whose authority is it done or who gives instructions to the R.C.M.P. to undertake the investigation of a particular individual.

Mr. Fulton: I think the hon. gentleman must mean in the sense of an employee in a defence industry working on a defence contract. The instruction would be received from the Department of Defence Production.

Mr. Ellis: I understand that under those circumstances an investigation might be commenced, but I am thinking of employees apart from employees working in defence industries. I am thinking in more general terms and I am wondering who undertakes the initiative or on whose instructions and recommendations are the R.C.M.P. empowered or instructed to carry on an investigation of any individual.

Mr. Fulton: I will ask the commissioner. If the Royal Canadian Mounted Police receive information which on the face of it appears to have any semblance of reliability and to contain in it anything of a serious nature with regard to the security of the state in so far as it concerns an individual, then they would investigate as a result of the receipt of that information. But, as I say, it must be information which on the face of it, has some degree of reliability and which on the face of it discloses something of concern so far as the interests of the state are concerned.

Mr. Ellis: I would gather that information forthcoming in a letter from an individual somewhere might be grounds for investigation.

Mr. Fulton: I do not suppose much attention is paid to anonymous letters. I do not suppose they are completely disregarded but they would not be treated very seriously. It is difficult to categorize the exact sort of information that might give rise to an investigation beyond the general terms which I have tried to describe.

Mr. Herridge: I have listened to this debate with great interest. I think the minister hit the nail on the head when he said that in many of these things there must be a difference between assessment of information in another country and the assessment we would give the same information. Some two or three years ago a very respectable constituent of mine—in fact, the great majority of my constituents are very respectable—was refused admission to the United States. I brought the matter to the attention of the minister's predecessor, it was investigated and later this gentleman was allowed to go to the United States. I remember what the minister told me at that time. He said that unfortunately these people on the other side often make a completely different assessment of the information than that which would be made in Canada. I think it is necessary to reconsider the procedure so that information is given having in view the fact that some things which are dangerous from their point of view are considered to be legal in Canada.

Mr. Fulton: I am glad the hon. gentleman raised that matter again. I may have been a little bit too general when I said we would not make any assessment of information. I am told that if we were reporting on an organization, for instance, we might give our assessment of the character of the organization so that they on their side could make an intelligent assessment of what membership in or connection with that organization meant. We do not just send them a factual report with no comment.

Mr. Fisher: What about the prospect of dividing or separating the security aspect of the work of the R.C.M.P. and giving it to a genuine Canadian counter-espionage security police, if you want to separate it from this other organization which has such activities as musical rides?

Mr. Fulton: In fairness I think I must say at once that the musical ride is an infinitesimally small fraction of the work of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in comparison with the straight police work of that force which is nation-wide and which is by and large carried on at a high standard of efficiency.

However, to deal with the substance of the hon. gentleman's question, may I say that I have not really given much thought to it. We have in mind a revision of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act. I should be glad to have a good look at it at the time when we are reviewing the act in order to see whether any good purpose would be served by separating the functions. The hon. gentleman will understand that there is a separate division which carries on the type of work we have been discussing and specialization within that division is being increased all the time. However, I should be glad to have a look at the matter and to give further consideration to whether it would serve a good purpose.

Mr. Peters: I should like to ask the minister a question about a hypothetical case because I do not want to mention any names. As you know, on many occasions when delegations have been going to the United States for conferences, particularly from unions, people have been questioned as to their right to go. If a person is questioned and is not allowed a border crossing pass has he any right to go to the federal government, or however you go about these matters, to get these particular files that were kept on him presented in court and defend his case?

Mr. Fulton: I think the answer to my hon. friends question is that this information, in so far as it rests in our files, has not in any sense been used against the individual. But information may have been communicated to the United States authorities. They make their assessment and they form their judgment as to whether or not the individual concerned should be admitted. I do not know of any way in which the matter could be raised here in a court in Canada.

Mr. Fisher: Could there be a repetition of the Norman case situation?

Mr. Fulton: Not under the new government.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock, it is my duty to leave the chair pursuant to standing order 15 (3) in order to allow the house to proceed to consideration of private and public bills.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence. As hon. members will note, there are on the order paper two bills under the heading of private bills. Is it the wish of the house to have both bills referred to the committee of the whole at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

ERNEST FRANK CROSS

The house in committee on Bill No. 181, for the relief of Ernest Frank Cross—Mr. Rea—Mr. Casselman in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman I know there is very much more important legislation coming up, or I hope it will be coming up before the house, than this particular legislation, indeed legislation that is of great concern to many hundreds of thousands of Canadians. However, I do want to say a few words on this case because I feel they should be placed on the record.

It has long been a tradition in the administration of justice in Canadian law courts that the defence be provided, if necessary, with adequate means to conduct as able a defence as can possibly be provided. No one in Canada is summarily condemned because of the inability to afford a defence and I understand that in the civil court, if the respondent in a divorce case pleads she is unable to afford an adequate defence, the court in most provinces in Canada then orders the petitioner to supply her with sufficient funds. I believe this is also being done in a similar manner in connection with the bills which are before a committee in the other place and that on a number of actual occasions the petitioner has been ordered to supply money.

In this particular case of Cross versus Cross the respondent wrote several letters, possibly not all of them to the right people and perhaps not in the right manner, indicating that she desired to appeal this matter before the miscellaneous private bills committee. She did not actually want to appeal but she indicated she wanted a re-hearing of this case and that is her right. She therefore appealed for the necessary funds. The committee, rightly or wrongly and I am not prepared to enter into an argument on this subject, felt it did not have the authority to order the petitioner to supply these funds. The committee furthermore felt it had no public funds of its own at its disposal which it might use to assist this lady to prepare her defence in the action which was being sought by her husband.

Some of us then asked the committee to appeal to this house and to ask this house to order the committee to ask the petitioner to supply the necessary moneys. The committee voted against this proposal and I regret that it did so. I very much regret that we, acting as an entirely independent body in our approach in each of these cases, or any action taken in the other place, are hereby condemning a woman as guilty of having committed adultery in the province of Quebec and have not seen fit to supply her with the wherewithal to present her case. I regret this action very much and it points out once again the callous disregard of human rights that obtains in this whole procedure which we are following.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 218, for the relief of Gordon Frank Skilling.—Mr. Rea.

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT TO ESTABLISH MINIMUM RATE

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia) moved the second reading of Bill No. 17, to amend the Interest Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to place a limit on the interest rates that can be charged on any transaction throughout this country where federal jurisdiction would apply. I have studied interest rates that are being charged in many fields and in many areas of this country and I find that such rates are exorbitant and excessive. I believe it is in the interests of the ordinary Canadian that this parliament should place a ceiling or a limit on the interest rates that may be charged.

Small loans companies, finance companies, many large retail firms providing instalment credit, departmental stores, loan sharks, and companies making loans for the purpose of second mortgages on real estate are in many instances charging interest rates of 15 per cent, 20 per cent or even more.

Before the banking and commerce committee in 1956 the superintendent of insurance told us that one small loans company had been charging interest rates in excess of 70 per cent per year.

I believe this problem of high interest rates is important because the amount of credit for which these excessive rates are being charged is very large and is growing steadily. I do not think hon. members should approve transactions under which the ordinary people of this country are being forced to pay loan sharks, to pay so-called respectable business firms, companies and individuals making loans these excessive rates.

Before the banking and commerce committee the year before last important amendments to the Small Loans Act were considered. They did increase the area of control over the business done by the small loans companies on loans up to $1,500 and provided a measure of control over the interest rates, though rates even within this area are still very high. On loans up to $300 the interest rate allowed by law is 2 per cent per month, which on the basis of simple interest works out to over 26 per cent per year.

Some of us in this group were responsible, I believe, initially, for presenting this problem to the House of Commons. I believe the attention that was drawn to it in parliament resulted in the former administration taking action on its own and sending a bill to the banking and commerce committee. It is my further contention that the C.C.F. group in the banking and commerce committee were responsible for the bill being reported back to parliament in such a form as to be of real service to the Canadian people, because had a minority of the Liberal members on the committee at that time, and Conservative members on the committee had their way at an earlier stage of the discussion the bill would have been killed. But the bill was reported back to the committee and on the basis of the evidence given. I think it is fair to say that those changes in the interest rates are resulting in an annual saving to the Canadian people of some $10 million a year.

The amount of consumer credit has been increasing very rapidly. I have in my hand the Bank of Canada statistical summary for November 1957 which shows consumer credit made available by finance companies and retail credit dealers to the extent of $1,903,000,000 for the latest period reported, namely for June 1957. This shows, in the case of the instalment finance companies, an increase since September 1952, when such credits stood at $1,334,000, to September 1957, when such credits stood at $821 million, an increase in that five-year period of 144 per cent in credit provided by instalment finance companies. For the same period small loans companies increased their cash loans from $139 millions to $343 millions, an increase of 170 per cent.

Department stores increased conditional sales agreements from an amount of $54 million in 1952 to $153 million in 1957, or an increase of 183 per cent. Those are the main items of increase in that general category, and they show a tremendous increase in the credit granted in this field. It is, therefore, a very important problem and one with which parliament should deal.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? The hon. gentleman used the very interesting figure of $10 million in suggesting that there has been a saving of this magnitude to the Canadian people as a result of these amendments to the Small Loans Act. I did not follow him as to how he made that calculation.

Mr. Argue: I have not the source of the calculation here today, but that calculation came from the evidence placed before the banking and commerce committee in 1956 which showed the projected effect of the interest changes which were proposed and finally made law on the business being done.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): And that can be found in the evidence of the banking and commerce committee?

Mr. Argue: I am not saying it can be found in the printed evidence, it can be found, in the evidence presented to the committee in the form of documents by the superintendent of insurance and others.

If one looks at the $1,900 million of credit in this field I think it would be fair to estimate that if such a bill as is now being proposed were made law the saving to the Canadian people would be multiplied many times. I think we could assume that on the basis of a saving in this field of only 10 per cent a year of the credit that is made available there would result a saving of $190 million. When one looks at the rates of interest charged by mail order houses and departmental stores, to say nothing of loan companies and finance companies, I think this is a fair estimate to make of the amount of saving which would result from the passing of such a measure as is now suggested.

Mr. Lambert: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Has he factual evidence as to the rates of interest charged by the department stores under their smaller contracts?

Mr. Argue: Yes, Eatons and Simpson-Sears, to mention two well-known firms, charge maximum rates of 54 per cent a year on their small accounts and I have all the figures and all the mathematical computations in my hand. This evidence has been presented in the house on previous occasions and presented in public. It has seldom been challenged. I used it once in a television broadcast in Regina, and then right after the broadcast a voice on the telephone said: "I have been a legal adviser for Simpson-Sears for a long time and your figures are wrong." I explained on the telephone how I had arrived at my figures. The gentleman did not agree over the telephone, so I told him "If my calculations are wrong I will make a public correction during my next telecast over this station, which is one week hence." I never heard from the gentleman further.

The fact is that this is the maximum rate that is being charged by such well known companies as Simpson-Sears and the T. Eaton Company. Last year when a similar matter was being discussed in this house the hon. member for Nanaimo told of a personal experience, how a friend of his, a clerk in a large retail store in Vancouver, was called into the boss' office after he had been employed in the company for a few weeks and told that his percentage of cash sales was much too high. The question was asked as to why that was the case. The employee was informed that the company wished to promote credit sales and this was so because they could charge a very high interest rate on such sales.

If you turn on the radio at almost any moment of the day you can hear some firm advertising something for sale with no down payment. You do not have to pay any cash but I venture to say that in almost every instance the company charges a high interest rate. Oh, they may call it a service charge, finance charge, handling charge, registration fee or something else but according to the law of this country, and as it applies now to small loans companies, any charge whatsoever is considered an interest charge.

The small loans companies by law charge 2 per cent a month on loans up to $300. They charge lower amounts on loans up to $1,500 but there is no limit whatsoever placed on the rate that can be charged by a small loans company or by any other company as the rate on a loan made in excess of $1,500.

A substantial part of retail sales today are being made on a credit basis and when this is done, in the vast majority of cases, there is a high interest charge attached to the sale. I think the high interest charge is a disgrace. I do not think it should be necessary to say that an interest rate of 54 per cent should not be allowed, that it is not something that should be a part of doing business in Canada. The principle of charging high rates of interest is so bad that just making the statement should be sufficient to convince hon. members that it should not be allowed in this country. If one followed through the results of sales promotions and high pressure salesmanship for goods purchased on the instalment credit basis one would find that much hardship results from families having to pay these high interest rates. One would find that this practice places a severe strain on the family budget in tens of thousands of Canadian homes. A great deal of hardship as far as ordinary Canadians are concerned stems from the practice of charging high interest rates.

I think it is now time for hon. members of this house in all political parties to look at this problem and see what can be done to prevent these outrageous interest rates being charged. The Guardian which is a publication of the united automobile workers ran a story in 1956 of a man who had purchased an automobile from a neighbour and took over a conditional sales contract, the money having been secured from the Personal Finance Company. The story relates in great detail how this man was hounded from one job to another by this company despite the fact that a substantial payment had been made on the account and despite the fact that the company had repossessed the automobile and subsequently sold it. This man's livelihood was interfered with because the company garnisheed his wages and as a result of this he was dismissed from one job after another.

The ordinary income earners of this country want something done about this festering sore in Canadian life. We have heard of a Magna Carta in the past for political rights. We need a Magna Carta today to protect the ordinary people in this country against loan sharks and racketeers whether they be so-called reputable business firms, loan firms or any other type of institution. I suggest that this kind of legislation which is now being proposed would protect the ordinary people of this country. The 12 per cent interest rate provided in this bill is, I think, high. Some hon. members on previous occasions have said that the rate should be lower and I think a good argument could be made in this respect but this rate was proposed because it seemed to me that it was so reasonable that very few hon. members could oppose it.

We know that some institutions which do business in the small loans field, institutions that make very few loans in some instances—I am thinking of the credit unions in this instance—are able to make those loans at a maximum interest rate of 1 per cent per month and show a substantial saving and pay a dividend to the members who have done business with them. This rate would in no way affect the credit unions because they are already operating under this maximum. It would not affect the chartered banks whose rates are fixed by statute and even when they make loans on the basis of a discount their rates are still under 11 per cent per year. The establishment of a maximum rate would make it impossible for those companies which are now taking advantage of the ordinary consumer to continue charging exorbitant rates of interest.

Mr. Christian: Would the hon. member for Assiniboia permit a question. Would the hon. gentleman kindly give the date when the charges up to this maximum of 54 per cent were placed on the record?

Mr. Argue: I am not able to give you the date when it was done in the house but I will put it on the record right now. There is an interest charge of $2.25 made by either of these big mail order houses on an unpaid balance of $20 repayable in $5 monthly instalments. Before the hon. gentleman arrives at the rate of interest by means of rapid calculation I would suggest to him that the mathematical computation involved is rather complicated. Although he may have special training in this field I would suggest that he work out the actual rate with some care.

Sales of automobiles in this country are financed largely on a conditional sales basis. I have checked some of their contracts and the rates vary between 15 and 20 per cent or more. That is the field in which a considerable sum of money carries with it these very large interest charges. Mail order houses, small loans companies and others are charging these exorbitant rates. I am advised that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) is going to make some remarks on this bill and he will demonstrate the fantastic interest rates that are being charged on second mortgages to finance the purchase of a home. I can tell the parliamentary assistant that in this very city of Ottawa I have had people come to me who have shown me their papers. In many cases they have had to pay an extremely large bonus in order to obtain a second mortgage which is just another way of saying they have had to pay a high interest rate.

On previous occasions I have suggested that this is a field in which the banks should be doing much more than they are now doing. The Canadian Bank of Commerce in the past has done a commendable job in the field of small loans and it is something which should be promoted by the chartered banks generally. As I read their reports I am led to the conclusion that they have not taken the interest they should in the small loans field in order to increase the amount of business they do in that way.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit a question. What about the responsibility of these individuals who become involved in these excessive interest rates? What about their personal responsibility for keeping out of contracts of that type?

Mr. Ellis: Let the buyer beware.

Mr. Argue: I remember a former Liberal member of this house who is not here today who asked me a similar question when I was making a similar speech sometime ago. He worded it a little differently. He said he thought it was the right of any Canadian to enter into a contract to pay a high interest rate, even 60 per cent a year, if he wished to enter into such a contract. But I want to tell the hon. gentleman that very often the ordinary Canadian does not have any choice. If there is sickness in the family, if there is an emergency that has to be met, he perhaps has to have a sum of money immediately and he has no choice but to take the money where it is available.

Another thing I would suggest is that it is impossible for the ordinary person to realize the very high interest rates that are being charged. There is a friend of mine in this building who is one of the best trained persons in his field who said to me he was taken in in buying a television set by one of those companies. He did not realize the very high rates he was being charged until many months after he had purchased his set. We should not leave it to the responsibility of the ordinary person, in making a purchase or in obtaining a loan, to believe that he can avoid paying these very high interest rates.

I think the figures I have just quoted to show that in this general field of credit there is a total of $1,900 million outstanding indicate that tens of thousands of Canadians, for one reason or another, have had to avail themselves of this type of credit, and since that is so it is a problem with which parliament should deal at this time.

Another reason I would suggest why hon. members should support this being done is the position of the small businessman, the independent merchant. I am one of those who believe that the independent merchant, the independent business proprietor, has made and is making a great contribution to the welfare of this nation. I believe that this is the real free enterprise segment of the Canadian economy and that parliament should not allow this segment of the Canadian economy to be destroyed, to wither away and pass out of existence. I suggest that the ordinary independent merchant is not able to compete with big business firms which are in the field of advancing consumer credit and charging a very high rate of interest for that credit. If they charge such fabulous rates of interest they obviously can undercut, in the retail field, the retail price that has to be charged by an independent merchant.

Mr. MacDonald (Antigonish-Guysborough): May I ask the hon. member a question? Would he consider it fair business practice to charge a credit customer 10 per cent for the privilege of giving him that credit? On the other hand, if I were selling a suit of clothes for cash, would it be fair business practice to offer a customer 10 per cent discount on that suit for cash? I am a clothing merchant, which is why I am asking that question.

Mr. Argue: Ten per cent comes under the 12 per cent suggested in this legislation. I think I have allowed a lot of questions; I think I have been very lenient with hon. members. My time is limited. My colleague wants to speak. I do not want to be discourteous but since my time is limited I think I have already allowed an ample number of questions.

I think all members have received a document from the retail merchants' association of Canada during this session. It is a submission made to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on October 30, 1957, and it asks the government to make provision for credit for small business firms. These small businessmen, as represented by the retail merchants' association of Canada, made this very startling statement in their submission, that credit to many merchants in this country today is available only at a rate of 16 per cent per annum through wholesale houses. That was contained in the submission of the retail merchants' association. They asked that a number of things be done, and they made the following statement on page 4 of the submission:

> The situation is serious. Within the next five to 10 years, unless action is taken now, these large corporate retailers may well control the supply and price of all retail goods to all Canadians. We have seen similar developments in the automobile industry and in the gasoline business.

On page 11 of the submission we find the following:

> There is no doubt that there is an economic war in progress in the retail industry. The power of bigness, not efficiency, controls access to capital and credit.

I suggest that if the government really believes in free enterprise, if the members of the government really believe in free enterprise, if the members of the Liberal party believe in free enterprise in the best sense of the word, they should support this legislation which will reduce the charges that may be made on customer credit and therefore remove some of the disadvantages that affect small business firms at the present time.

I have other ideas as to what should be done to assist small business firms in competing with the great corporations of this country, but I suggest that this is a very urgent problem that requires attention. We should be doing something to deal with the high interest rates which are now being charged and to make sure that this part of our Canadian economy, where there is still a real measure of free enterprise, is not gobbled up by the monopolistic industries in the retail business.

Some rather disturbing figures on unemployment were presented to the house this morning by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr). I think the growing unemployment in this nation is another reason why the government should do something about the fabulous interest rates which are being charged. If we want to see the ordinary Canadian purchasing automobiles and television sets and buying houses then he should have the opportunity to make those purchases at ordinary interest rates. He should not be forced to burden himself and his family with the very high interest rates which are being charged. If the government would take action in the field of credit to reduce the very high interest rates which are being charged it would be possible for many Canadians to buy increased quantities of goods, which in itself would help solve our unemployment problem.

I appeal to the government not to brush this suggestion aside too quickly but to consider what is a very important problem for many Canadians and to give this bill its earnest consideration. If the government does not see fit at this time to support the principle of the measure, I suggest that the whole question be referred once again to the standing committee on banking and commerce, that we be allowed to call before that committee representatives of the firms that are charging these high interest rates, that we have before the committee once again the superintendent of insurance and that there be a fair hearing on this whole business of extortionate interest rates. If that is done, I believe that public opinion will so impress itself on members of the house that legislation will be forthcoming.

Mr. M. D. Morton (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I desire to make some comments on the bill before us this afternoon, and in rising to do so may I say that I am not quite sure what the status of this speech may be. Some hon. members have made their maiden speeches in the house. I have risen on three or four occasions on sort of false starts so I cannot claim that this is a maiden speech. But there are one or two observations I should like to make before I proceed to discuss the bill now before us. I have been somewhat amazed at the continual verbosity originating in one corner of the house. The more we attempt to dam it the more the superfluous overflow continues. In my opinion much of this arises from the attempt of the socialist group in the house to tamper with our affairs in the name of a controlled economy. I say not in an unkindly way that, having listened to the debates since I came into the house I am becoming more and more convinced that instead of just private members' days we should have a special day for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre known as Knowles day.

Mr. Argue: Every day is that day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let's not argue with that.

Mr. Morton: I say that not entirely by way of compliment to the hon. gentleman but from the point of view of the self-preservation of some of the private members of the house, especially the newer members, who would have liked to have more opportunity to contribute to the debates.

Mr. Ellis: Why don't you?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Put some bills on the order paper yourself.

Mr. Ellis: There is nothing to stop you.

Mr. Argue: Do not make so many false starts.

Mr. Morton: Let us pass the legislation that is before the house. The more we speak the longer it will be delayed.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Think how long it would take if all 265 members spoke on everything.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Morton: I would not like to figure out how long it would take us to finish. I do appreciate the real problem that has been brought before the house this afternoon by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). I know there is a great tendency in that part of the house to encourage the idea of letting the government do things rather than encouraging our people to stand on their own feet. But there come times when the people need protection and I agree with the hon. member for Assiniboia that this is one of those occasions. Perhaps I might relate some of the circumstances that are developing in this regard and that are typical of metropolitan Toronto and perhaps all other areas. Young couples, because of the high rents they have to pay, seek to buy homes with low down payments. If they buy new homes they are given a pretty fair opportunity under the National Housing Act to buy homes within their means. If they are forced to buy older homes they make a small down payment and have a first mortgage of reasonable size and a very large second mortgage. In some cases there is even a third mortgage.

Then they have to furnish that home and in order to do so they have to buy their furniture on credit. If they have moved to the suburbs some distance from their work they have to buy a motor car also on credit. By the time they are through they have extended themselves beyond their means. Some of them have perhaps bought their furniture from various stores and reaching a point where they cannot finance on that basis they find they must refinance, go to a loan company in order to do so and have to pay another bonus and a larger interest rate.

That problem is coming more and more to a head. There is also an increasing and dangerous problem in connection with second and third mortgages coming due for payment. These young couples are faced with the problem of paying more by way of a bonus to have the mortgages renewed than they have paid off the principal in the past three, four or five years. In my opinion there is definitely a real problem in that regard that must be faced by the government.

We know that the problem of interest rates has been with us from the days of the bible. There are many quotations in the bible with respect to usury. We know that the matter has been discussed by the governments of this country before confederation and since. We know that it has been a difficult problem to deal with. In some aspects there has been a narrowing down of the problem through the passing of various acts incorporating small loan and finance companies and controlling the rate of interest which they may charge. We have the Small Loans Act, the Interest Act and the Pawnbrokers' Act, but the problem facing us today has to do with loans made under contracts which are not covered by the present legislation.

With regard to the rate of interest, I would not like to say that the amount set by the hon. member in the bill is the rate that should be accepted. It may be too high or too low. I do not know. Before we arbitrarily set a rate I believe we should study the effect on the availability of money. It is all very well for us to state what the rate of interest should be but that does not force people to make money available. If the interest rate is not a sufficient enticement for people to make such loans, then we are faced with another problem.

How can these young couples finance themselves then in obtaining furniture, automobiles and so on? What effect is it going to have upon the economy, upon those who manufacture furniture, electrical equipment and motor cars. These are things that have to be taken into consideration. Once we start to tamper with the economy we have to follow through to the end of the implications.

In the bill the hon. member has set a figure of 12 per cent. Maybe the hon. member has the facts and figures to back up that amount and to show that the companies lending money would be interested in continuing to lend at that rate unless, of course, he is suggesting that the government should go into the lending business. I have one or two figures that I think it would be interesting to look at. The hon. member for Assiniboia has referred to certain figures. In the annual commercial review of the Montreal Gazette, issued under date of January 11, 1958, there is an article containing the information that as of June 30, 1956 there was $2,315 million outstanding with respect to loans, which was a 19.6 per cent increase over the previous year and that by the following September there had been an increase of 17.3 per cent over the previous year. Then it goes on to show that in June 1957 the amount was $2,472 million which was a drop in the rate of increase in the amount of money borrowed.

It would appear from the table that the amount that is being borrowed is decreasing. That may be as a result of the present pause in the economy. I think that as of the end of this year, in the Financial Post of January 11, at page 25 it was estimated that the consumers will owe about $2.5 billion which is roughly the same amount as at the end of 1956. There is there shown almost the same amount being owed at this time of year as there was last year, instead of the usual increase there has been in the borrowing of our people. It may be that they are beginning to find that they cannot afford these things. I think there is something to be said perhaps for the suggestion that maybe as a nation or a people we are buying beyond our means. Perhaps we are trying to obtain all the luxuries—or what were luxuries to our forefathers—all at once rather than waiting until we can afford them. Perhaps that is one of the difficulties that has created a demand which is perhaps greater than the supply. When you have a demand which is greater than the supply, naturally those who have the money are going to try to get the best bargain they can get.

I agree that it is a serious problem to protect some of these people from the difficulties they may get into. Many a young couple have been quite startled to find that they have purchased a car, television set, refrigerator or what not and that the payments are too high, and they suggest that the company concerned take back the article they have purchased. It may be six months later or perhaps as long as a year. Then they find that they are stuck because the depreciation on that article has been greater than the amount which they have paid on the loan. Then when the company take it back, either by force or voluntarily, and resell it the young couple are then presented with a bill for the difference between what they have paid and the amount obtained from the sale of the article plus the costs involved in the sale, if it has been a forced sale. Thus they sometimes find themselves with a quite sizeable debt and without the use of the article concerned.

Perhaps that may be the fault of the people for going into the contract. They should have had their eyes open. But unfortunately many of our people do not look at the cost when they go into these contracts. Perhaps in our system of education we have not alerted them sufficiently to the trap into which they might fall by trying to get things just because they like them and without considering the cost they have to pay for them.

Mr. Ellis: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would answer a question?

Mr. Morton: I will try to do so.

Mr. Ellis: It is just prior to six o'clock. I wonder if he would inform the house whether he is going to vote for this bill?

Mr. Morton: If this bill comes to a vote, Mr. Speaker, I would vote for it though not as to the amount. I think perhaps it should be referred to the committee, as suggested by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). I still would like to see experts called to give their view about the amount of 12 per cent. However, I am in favour of the principle of the bill as set out. Otherwise I would not have spoken in the way in which I have spoken. I speak as I do from the experience I have obtained as a solicitor in Toronto in dealing with these young couples who have had this problem. As such we have had to try to assist them out of many of their difficulties. I have already mentioned our problem to our Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) in respect of housing. I refer to the problem that may arise in respect of having to finance second mortgages with the terrific bonuses which they have to pay.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Richard A. Bell (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this seemingly simple bill is one of rather far-reaching consequence. As well, it is a hardy perennial because on several occassions in other parliaments, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) has presented this bill with his usual force and persuasiveness. The attempts to control usury, as has been indicated by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton), by legislative action are now almost as old as legislation itself. It seems to me that we have reached a situation today where our society is built almost completely on credit. The extension of credit is not merely a multi-million dollar business but, according to the statistics which were given to the house by the hon. member for Assiniboia, it is virtually a multi-billion dollar business in our present day economy. Each year seems to see a widening and a broadening of the practice of instalment buying until today it is virtually the rule rather than the exception. Today it would appear that practically all Canadians have pledged their future earnings for past or present enjoyment of consumer goods, and indeed even for holiday trips. The finance company or the acceptance company has become an essential part of our whole social and economic system. I confess that I am one of those who is sometimes troubled by this trend of our society. The old-fashioned practice of thrift seems to be just that, namely an old-fashioned and outmoded virtue.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock the house will revert to the business that was interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Royal Canadian Mounted Police—

Headquarters administration, national police services and training establishments—

396. Administration, operation and maintenance, $7,329,030.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Item agreed to.

399. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $3,351,070.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I have to ask for a moment here because I had intended to move a reduction in this item. Perhaps if it is agreeable to the committee I might move it myself because, after all, I am moving a reduction in the estimates prepared by the previous government. I move:

That vote No. 399, land and air services, construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, be reduced by $250,000.

Mr. Byrne: I second the motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You do not need to second a motion in committee.

Mr. Byrne: I could build my armouries with that.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. minister could tell us if this represents waste and extravagance discovered by the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Fulton: It represents an over-estimation which for the reason I explained earlier, often happens and which we have frequently criticized in the past.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

405. Government's contribution to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police pension account, $986,710.

Mr. Castleden: I would like to ask a question under this item. I see that it is a statutory item with regard to pensions but while we are dealing with the pensions paid to the R.C.M.P., may I say a number of these men are endeavouring to live on a very low pension. Would the minister indicate if he could raise the pension of mounted police who were retired 25 years ago or what an ordinary constable or sergeant would receive as a pension if he retired say in the year 1935? Has there been any increase in that pension and is it possible to increase it by an item here, or I suppose it would require an amendment to the act?

Mr. Broome: I would also like to ask a question with regard to this item. The history of the wage paid to the R.C.M.P. is that it has stayed in a static position for a good many years, to the point that a staff corporal retiring in say 1947 would have had about $2,000, or a little over, in pay and allowances while in 1957 the same staff corporal would have had a total overall pay of $4,800.

Since the pension is computed on the annual wages, the man retiring in 1957 would retire with more than double the pension of the man retiring in 1947. The whole point is that the previous government lagged behind the rising cost of living in adjusting the salaries to the point where they had to increase salaries something like 150 per cent in 10 years. Now that has penalized the man who retired prior to the extremely large increases in annual salaries and it is my belief that something should be done to bring up the pension of the man who retired when salaries were at an extremely low level.

Mr. McIvor: I want to say a word on this too, because when I had my resolution before the house everybody supported it. It is a well known fact that no matter what government it is, if it does not increase these pensions to retired civil servants it is not living up to the promises that it would provide an equal amount to what they had before. The mounted police have never been paid big salaries and we do not want our retired civil servants, who are part of the great family of the government of Canada, living in poverty. I am sure the Minister of Justice will rise to the occasion.

Mr. Fulton: I think there are one or two questions that should be answered at this point.

The present scale of pensions is governed by part V of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act which applies to members of the force engaged since March 1, 1949 and to those members who were engaged prior to that date and who elected to become contributors. The pension is based on one-fiftieth of the average pay and allowances received during the last six years for each year of service. One-half of the pension is payable to the widow. The maximum service is 35 years.

There are still in force a number of pensions under part III of the act, which I do not think I need to detail at this time. Under this part of the act there are some anomalies still outstanding which require adjustment. They apply particularly to the position of those who served in the armed forces and have been re-engaged in the R.C.M.P.

I may say we have the act under consideration at the moment, and it is hoped to take care of most of these questions which have been raised in this case and which are outstanding in the proposed revision.

Mr. Castleden: That does not give me very much in the way of information on the amount that say a constable who retired in 1935 would receive. The pay and allowances at that time were very low. The maximum which a retired mounted policeman could receive would be 70 per cent of what he was receiving over the last six years of service. The man with 25 years service would only be receiving one-half of that amount. I wonder if the minister could provide me with some actual figures as to what such pay and allowances would be.

Mr. Fulton: I would have to give the current pay and allowances to establish that. If a man served for 35 years, as my hon. friend says, he would then get 70 per cent.

Mr. Castleden: That is right and 25 years would be half.

Mr. Fulton: He would get one-half of his pay on retirement.

Mr. Castleden: Yes; could you tell me what the pay was in 1935, say for a constable or sergeant?

Mr. Fulton: You see it is based on the average pay and allowances received during the last six years of service.

Mr. Castleden: Yes, that is right, but a man who retired in 1935 would be getting, after 25 years service, exactly half of what his average pay was from 1929 to 1935.

Mr. Fulton: If he retired in 1935 he would, under the present pension provisions, come under the old part III.

Mr. Castleden: That is correct.

Mr. Fulton: In which I have said there are some anomalies which require adjustment. I could give some examples and I think my hon. friend will agree that I leave out the names.

Mr. Castleden: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: A special constable who had 20 years of service and who retired on December 1, 1937, receives a pension of $432 a year. A corporal with 20 years of service who retired on May 17, 1929 receives a pension of $511.50 a year; a staff sergeant with 20 years of service who retired on August 1, 1928 receives a pension of $620.50 a year; an inspector with 30 years of service who retired on January 1, 1935 receives $1,836 a year. Those are all samples of the rates that are applicable under part III of the act.

Mr. Castleden: If an increase were to be granted in the pensions paid to civil servants would these men come under it?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman. It would require a change in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act to take care of these pension cases.

Mr. Castleden: Would this in any way affect their treatment under the Old Age Security Act?

Mr. Fulton: No, the pensions of the force are not in any way related to payments received under the Old Age Security Act nor, at the present time, when payments are made to them under that act as of right, are their old age pensions reduced by the amount of such police pension payments.

Mr. Castleden: I do not suppose there are too many of these cases but surely pensions of $432, $511 or even $620 a year are in the light of the present cost of living much below what should be available to men who served as long as these men served in the mounted police in those early days.

Mr. Fulton: They seem very inadequate.

Mr. Broome: Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise the question of men who served in the R.C.M.P. during the first world war. I believe that in 1942 the act was changed so that members of the R.C.M.P. came under veterans allowance, but that act did not go back to cover the men who served in the first world war. These men are in an invidious position as compared with the veterans in the force who served in the R.C.M.P. during the second world war.

The other point I make, which I mentioned previously, is that the extremely large increases which were given to members of the R.C.M.P. because their wages had lagged behind, and which took place from 1947 onward, made the position of the men who retired earlier than 1947 equivalent to retiring on about half the pension upon which they would have retired had they served another five or six years. There is a definite injustice being done to the men who retired prior to 1947 and I think also that an injustice is being done to those veterans of the R.C.M.P. who were injured during the course of their duty in the first world war.

Mr. Fulton: I think, Mr. Chairman, that what the hon. member has in mind are cases of what I might call an anomalous character under part 3 which do require adjustment. We hope to deal with the great majority of these cases when we are able to get on with the revision of the act.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, does that mean that the pensions of these former members of the R.C.M.P. will be increased and brought up to what they should be?

Mr. Fulton: That is the objective.

Mr. McIvor: Thank you.

Mr. Fisher: When the chairman broke off our discussions at five o'clock the minister made a brief, snappy political comment which I did not quite get, in connection with the Norman case and I wonder if he would repeat it so that it should be on the record.

The second point is that I directed a question to him regarding section—

The Chairman: That item has been passed. We cannot discuss it further.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is a supplementary item on administration still to be discussed, and my hon. friend can ask his question then.

Item agreed to.

Headquarters administration, national police services and training establishments—

739. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $66,000.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is the item on administration in the supplementaries.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, it is unnecessary for me to repeat the first question. The second one is: has there been any prosecution under section 37, subsection 2 of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act?

Mr. Fulton: To the best recollection of myself and the officials sitting in front of me, the answer to the second question is no. The answer to the first question is, I believe, on the record and will stand there to speak for itself.

Mr. Castleden: I should like to raise a question regarding mounted police who are injured in the performance of their duties. I am thinking of a man who was severely frostbitten in the Northwest Territories a few years ago. Would the minister inform me what is the standard upon which the compensation to such persons is based.

Mr. Fulton: At the present time disability pensions and the continuance of such pensions to survivor, widows and so on is governed by the provisions of the Pensions Act applicable to veterans.

Mr. Christian: I should like to raise a question in regard to the matter of criminal investigation in serious cases, particularly capital cases. I know that in a number of small communities in British Columbia there are often stationed in R.C.M.P. offices one or more R.C.M.P. officers. In many cases these men are young and, of course, it stands to reason they are not as experienced as the more senior officers. I was just wondering if, when a situation arises in which an officer believes there are reasonable grounds for thinking that a capital offence has been committed, the minister or the Department of Justice would not consider flying in men to visit these centres, men trained in scientific and legal matters and experienced in this type of investigation, because I feel this would indeed be doing a great service and it would at the same time be assisting the younger officers in these smaller communities. I should like to hear the views of the Minister of Justice and the commissioner on this subject, to see whether the practice might not be improved.

Mr. Fulton: At the present time there are means available for flying in special investigators in serious cases, such as capital cases, where it is considered necessary or desirable to do so. I suggest, therefore, that if in any such case a special investigator was not flown in it is because the commanding officer did not consider it necessary. However, the commanding officer may call for such assistance if he considers it desirable.

Mr. Christian: I just want to say that I know of a number of cases from my own experience—one involving a capital case and another a drug case—where it would have been of advantage to have followed such a course. I assume that if the officer concerned were to telephone to the main R.C.M.P. headquarters permission for assistance to be flown out would be given.

Mr. Fulton: In the province from which my hon. friend and I come a request would presumably go to headquarters in Victoria, and unless there were such demands on the available resources that they could not all be met it would be a matter for the judgment of the officer in command of the division whether a special investigator should be flown in or not. There could be errors of judgment, but the facilities are there except in very exceptional circumstances where the resources might be overstrained.

Mr. Christian: May I ask the minister whether consideration could not, in any event, be given the question of whether an improvement might be made?

Mr. Fulton: Naturally we are always prepared to consider anything which will improve the administration of the work of the force. Resources are not unlimited but we would be glad to know if at any time the lack of dealing with a particular case was due to the lack of facilities or just what were the circumstances. Therefore it would be helpful if the hon. member would let us know privately what two cases he has in mind and we would be glad to look into them.

Mr. Regier: I wonder if the minister could inform the committee whether any of the municipalities in British Columbia have terminated their agreements with the R.C.M.P. since the recent rather severe increases in the price to municipal governments of the services of the force? Have there been any grievances which have been entered by the municipal governments?

Mr. Fulton: I am informed that there was one municipality in British Columbia which employed the services of one man which has terminated the contract. I recall at least one if not more municipalities in British Columbia that have requested the assignment of additional personnel.

Mr. Regier: I wonder if the minister could explain for the benefit of British Columbia members why when at the time this program was first initiated, I believe some five or six years ago, the agreements that were offered the municipalities were so very one-sided, so much so that most municipalities felt completely unable to resist the offer that was being made. They were offered the services of the force at a ridiculously low rate. However once the municipalities had abolished their own municipal police forces, then almost every year amazing increases were imposed upon the municipalities.

We all know that the increases, or at least a measure of them, were completely warranted by rising wages and the rising of other expenses but the ratio of the increases was quite beyond any possible increase in either the wages of the men or the expense of having the men employed. It appears to some at least almost as if there was a deliberate policy followed of luring the municipalities into the abolition of their own forces at the time and that now the department is beginning to tax the municipalities for a fairer and more equitable share of the cost I wonder if the minister would like to offer some comment about that.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I would say here on the basis of my own recollection of the situation in British Columbia that the history of the matter is actually that the municipalities which gave up their municipal police forces did so at a time when the R.C.M.P. was not responsible for the policing of the province but when we had our own British Columbia police force and the arrangements then would be made between the municipality and the British Columbia police force.

Whatever arrangements were in effect between the municipalities and the British Columbia police force were taken over at the time when at the instigation and desire of the British Columbia provincial government the R.C.M.P. were requested to take over the policing of the province and to assume those contracts which the British Columbia provincial police then had with the municipalities.

It would not be correct to say that the dominion government or the R.C.M.P. lured the municipalities into giving up their police forces and then made any attempt to stick them for the proportionate share of policing the municipalities. I do not know of any case, actually, in which a municipality gave up its municipal police force subsequent to the time when the contract or agreement was made between the province and the dominion government for the R.C.M.P. to take over the policing in British Columbia.

Mr. Regier: Perhaps I am wrong, Mr. Chairman, but I believe that in the riding I represent that has actually been the case. The municipal force and not the provincial force was abolished in favour of the services of the R.C.M.P. Lest there be any misunderstanding I want to tell the minister that the municipalities in my area are very happy with the arrangement and the population as a whole, I think, is extremely well pleased that the fears some of us expressed at the time of the changeover have not thus far at least been realized and we find that the R.C.M.P. are rendering at least as good service as our local police force used to render. However a number of us have been alarmed a little bit at the rate of increase in the bills that those responsible for the financing of the municipalities have had to meet since then.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I must at once admit that I may have been in error in that I was basing my statement upon my knowledge of the situation. Coming from the interior of British Columbia I admit at once that the hon. gentleman knows the situation in his own municipality of Burnaby-Coquitlam. The only other thing I think I should say is that the requests being made for extra payments by the municipality reflect the general increase in salaries and wages and therefore in the scale of pay and the administrative costs of the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Cameron: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the answer that the minister gave to my colleague, the hon. member for Port Arthur, at five o'clock with regard to this tragic incident known as the Norman case in which he indicated that under the present government such a series of events could not take place. Does that indicate that there has been a change since the minister took office in the control of the material that the R.C.M.P. may collect with regard to any Canadian citizen? Have there been some changes in the security operations of the R.C.M.P. since the minister took office so that this type of thing cannot happen again?

Mr. Fulton: There have been no fundamental changes of a revolutionary character. How will I put it? I could say that one learns by experience and by events and I think it is correct to say that as a result of what we have learned from the Norman case—I do not say what the police have learned but what we have learned—it is my firm belief that such a series of incidents would not take place again.

Item agreed to.

Marine services—

742. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $408,060.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the Minister of Justice with obvious zest moved a reduction of $250,000 in an item in the estimates that had been submitted by the Liberals. The item had to do with the construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment under the land and air services of the R.C.M.P. Now the same minister is asking the committee to vote a supplementary estimate introduced by the Conservatives of $408,060 for the construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, in this case under marine services. So, Mr. Chairman, may I ask whether this is a net saving or is it a net increase simply transferred from one branch to another?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the explanation is that the reduction was moved in an item which appeared under the land and air services, for the construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment. The supplementary now before us, item No. 742, is under the marine services.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I noted that.

Mr. Fulton: As I understand it, it is not possible to transfer allotments as between these two votes and therefore the only way it could be done was by moving a reduction in the one and asking for more money in the other case. The construction program under marine services for the construction of boats, et cetera, went ahead rather faster than had at first been anticipated.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I simply mentioned the fact that what the government is saving on the one hand it is more than spending on the other.

Mr. Fulton: If my hon. friend wants to look at it in that way. If my hon. friend thinks we should not spend this money then, of course, the opportunity is open to him to act accordingly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have no objection. I am just pointing out the attitude of the minister; the zest he has now is different from what he had before.

Mr. Fulton: No, I have equal zest in recommending this because I think we can fully justify it as I could justify the reduction in the other item.

Item agreed to.

181. Bankruptcy Act administration, $48,985.

The Chairman: This item was allowed to stand earlier. Shall the item now carry?

Mr. Fulton: The answer to the question asked by the hon. member for New Westminster and the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary I think I should now furnish to the committee. In 1956, there were 3,849 bankruptcies; to the end of November, 1957 there were 3,010 bankruptcies.

Mr. Hahn: Is the minister in a position to give me the reasons behind those bankruptcies?

Mr. Fulton: I am informed that in this department we do not keep statistics of the nature which the hon. gentleman requests. Our interest in the matter is to ensure that the estates which are bankrupt are properly administered in accordance with the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, but we do not keep statistics with regard to the causes of bankruptcy, the type of business in the bankruptcy courts, and so on. If those sorts of statistics are maintained I believe they would be obtainable through the bureau of statistics.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: That completes the estimates of the Department of Justice.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

General services—
139. Departmental administration, $319,700.

The Chairman: We shall now deal with the estimates of the Department of Fisheries, beginning with item 139 on page 29, with the details on page 215.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Chairman, over the years it has been customary for the Minister of Fisheries to make a brief review of the state of the fishing industry on the first item of his estimates. I think it is a useful practice, and it is my intention to follow it in a brief way. I realize, of course, that in one sense it is a dangerous practice because if all hon. members of the committee avail themselves of the opportunity which I am taking at the present time perhaps it would have the effect of defeating my purpose in making these brief remarks because my purpose in making them is that I may thereby be of some assistance to the committee in examining carefully the estimates of my department.

Since becoming minister it has been my attempt to become as familiar as possible with this important Canadian industry. In an endeavour to familiarize myself with the establishments of the department and of the industry itself throughout the country a few months ago I visited the east and the west coasts. At a later time I hope to be able to visit the industry of the inland waters of this country, which is a very important one, and also the industry in the province of Quebec. I hope to be able especially to visit the Gaspe area and the Magdalen islands because in the Magdalen islands, and they are neighbours of mine, fishing is of prime importance. It will, therefore, be a pleasure for me to visit that area when the opportunity presents itself.

The fishing industry, of course, is not one of Canada's largest or, by some measures, most important industries—that is, if you wish to measure it in the value of the products produced—but it is an industry that is of prime importance. It has a great history and I believe it has a great future. The fishing industry was the first industry in this country after the explorers of Europe found that two continents stood in their way when they tried to reach the Far East by sailing west. On finding that fish were plentiful, fishing became the first industry in which Europeans engaged in this country, followed of course shortly afterwards by the fur trade. It is an industry like agriculture; that is, more of a human industry with more problems than many of our highly mechanized industries. In dealing with the problems of the fisheries we are dealing with the livelihood of a large number of men and women who work closely with nature, and whose livelihood is subject to a great variety of uncertainties. Those uncertainties extend all the way from the catching of the fish to the marketing of the final product.

In the speech from the throne mention was made of the government's intention to strive to secure additional markets for the products of our fisheries. Responsibility for foreign markets rests with my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce; but in the Department of Fisheries we propose to do everything possible to see to it that the products of the fisheries are made available in the best possible quality, not only to consumers in Canada but also to consumers in various markets of the world. The throne speech went on to say:

—to promote the development of international rules to safeguard the living resources of the sea.

Our greatest fishery resources such as salmon, halibut, cod, haddock and other ground fish, and the fishes of the great lakes are, to a large extent, international in character. Other nations besides Canada have access to those fisheries. The same stock of fish which might be caught by our fishermen close to our coast can also be caught by fishermen of other lands further out to sea. In this case successful conservation efforts can only be undertaken by joint international agreements of the nations to whom those fisheries are of common concern.

Up to the present time we have been able to cope with the problem presented by this international character of our fisheries through a series of treaties with the nations interested in their exploitation: for example, the northwest Atlantic fisheries convention between Canada and I think about 11 other countries; the north Pacific fisheries convention between Canada and the United States and Japan; and the bilateral convention between Canada and the United States covering the salmon and halibut fisheries of the Pacific coast and the fisheries of the great lakes. As a result of those conventions Canada, as well as other participating nations, has learned much about the problems of fisheries management in the high seas.

It is now possible to develop international conservation rules of general application which will enable states having coastal fisheries to undertake any necessary measures, not only to safeguard the resources of the sea against over-exploitation but also to manage the resources so that the fullest possible utilization of them can be made on a continuing basis.

I might say at this point that since I became minister of the department acts passed by the last parliament relating to two rather important international agreements have been proclaimed. One brought pink salmon under the salmon commission and the other had to do with fur seals. The first meeting of the international fur seal commission is to be held in Washington next week.

We have, with other maritime states, a great responsibility to maintain and develop these resources of the sea for the benefit of Canada and, indeed, of mankind. As Minister of Fisheries it will be one of my foremost tasks to see that this responsibility is fully met and that efforts in the field of conservation of our fisheries are intensified.

I said that I believe the fishing industry has a great future. I believe this because of the enthusiasm I have encountered not only within the fishing industry itself but also within the department and among the scientists of the fisheries research board of Canada. I should like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the men in the department and the scientists who are mostly attached to the fisheries research board. They have gained for this country a very enviable reputation and are classed among the most capable in the world. I am honoured and proud to be associated with them.

I have been most impressed by the scientific approach that is being taken toward the maintenance and conservation of our fishery resources. Also in the technological field, in the catching, processing, handling and marketing of fishery products, our scientists and technical personnel as well as forward-looking companies in the industry are making this industry as modern as any in the country. I am aware that modern techniques have not yet reached all branches of our fisheries but progress has been very substantial.

As I indicated earlier, fishing is an uncertain occupation. Sometimes the fish appear in great abundance and sometimes they are scarce or do not appear at all. Last year was no exception. Early last summer unusually late ice conditions along the entire Atlantic seaboard appeared likely to curtail the fishing operations seriously. This was the case, but happily as the year advanced the fish became more plentiful and catches improved considerably. On the Pacific coast also the figures of early catches were disappointing but again the later runs did much to restore production and earnings to a normal level.

The over all market value of the fisheries will again approach $200 million. Close to half of this amount goes directly to the fishermen while the balance goes for processing, packaging, handling and merchandising. The fishing industry is highly dependent on foreign markets but the domestic market is becoming of more and more significance. In September the queen's printer published a report prepared for the Gordon commission by the department and the fisheries research board on the commercial fisheries of Canada. This very complete and comprehensive document is the first of its kind ever published and I commend it to all members of the house.

I should like to say a few words in connection with the long-range prospects of the fishery as an industry. As the population of the world increases and especially as the population of Northern America increases the importance of fish as a food will increase at least proportionately and even at a greater rate because as the population increases in any country sources of protein food especially become more restricted. We can learn from the example of other nations that have a very high density of population such as Japan where they have turned to a much greater extent than we have to the sea as a source of nutritious food with a high protein content and many other beneficial constituents as well, such as vitamins, trace elements and so forth that are very vital to a balanced diet. As the use of fish goes up the demand for it will of course increase and with that there will be a tendency toward more competition for the fish and therefore a rise in prices. I should like to quote very briefly from page 85 of the publication to which I referred a moment ago, "The Commercial Fisheries of Canada", as follows:

> The pressure from two expanding populations—

The reference is to the populations of Canada and the United States.

> —upon a resource base which has some obvious limits will have an effect not only on prices generally but also no doubt on the present market orientation of the Canadian trade. In large part, the effect may depend upon the extent to which the domestic market is able to compete with the United States market for Canadian supplies.

I do not intend to make any further general remarks at the present time except that perhaps it would be well for me to offer one further explanation. As is obvious to all members of the committee, the estimates are exactly those which were presented by the previous government. It is not my intention to have any reductions moved but that is not to say that savings are not being made. Nevertheless, the way we have carried on during the last year by passing interim supply from month to month has put the program of the department out of step especially in such items as construction where most of the money, if it had been voted at the beginning of the fiscal year, would have been spent in a very short period. Because of the fact that these moneys had not already been voted but in most cases were voted one-twelfth at a time these programs were thrown out of step in some cases. As a result, it is difficult—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question just for clarification?

Mr. MacLean: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does that mean that any part of the building program was actually held up for lack of funds at any time?

Mr. MacLean: I would say there have been cases where that is true.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the minister would not mind giving them later.

Mr. MacLean: Yes, I will be glad to do that. As the result of that it is difficult to determine what might be actual savings and what might be actual deferred expenditures which might be required to be revoted in next year's estimates or asked for in supplementaries at a later date. There were also cases in the department where a program which was planned was held up by conditions over which the department had no control. There are a couple of cases where weather prevented certain projects from going forward. As a result of these things I think it is much more logical to wait for a full fiscal year so that we can estimate more accurately what savings can be made.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, first I should like to congratulate the minister on the statement he has made tonight. During his remarks he mentioned that he had visited the east coast last summer. I regret that I did not see him at that time because I believe it would have been worth while if he could have met personally some of the fishermen in that area and obtained their views and ideas on remedies or improvements which might have been helpful to the industry.

In his closing remarks the minister touched on the fact that he felt there would be savings in the department. When the Progressive Conservatives sat on this side of the house we heard the expression "Waste and extravagance" quite often. I would wish him before these estimates are concluded to point out to us any waste and extravagance that he has found in his department during the months that he has been minister.

During the throne speech debate I expressed my opinion with regard to this government's action in increasing the tariff rates on several commodities coming in from the United States and the attitude they had taken in connection with trade with other countries. For that reason I shall not repeat all that I said at that time. But I wish to remind the Minister of Fisheries that we expect him to be the watchdog in the cabinet in so far as this manoeuvring in trade is concerned. We also expect the Minister of National Revenue from Nova Scotia, the Minister of Veterans Affairs from New Brunswick and the Minister without Portfolio from Newfoundland to do exactly that same thing. We feel that it is a job that must be done if this industry in the maritime provinces is to prosper and to carry on as it has in the past.

I know that the minister is well aware of the concerted effort on the part of the fishermen in the New England states to have tariff restrictions placed on the importation of Canadian fish. The tariff board of the United States has on two occasions in recent years endorsed the recommendation of the fishermen of the New England states, and the only friend that the Canadian fishermen had in the final analysis was President Eisenhower who vetoed this recommendation. I believe that right at this present time consideration is being given in congress to some sort of quota or some sort of restriction on the importation of Canadian lobsters. Perhaps many in the committee would not realize that 90 per cent of the lobsters that are caught in the maritime provinces go to the United States. It is the one market that we have for 90 per cent of what we catch, and it is one of the greatest branches of the fishing industry in the maritime provinces. Ninety per cent of that catch goes into the United States. One would realize immediately that any interference with that market would be most harmful to the fishing industry.

We have made every effort to get markets in other parts of the world. In fact, during the last three weeks Conleys Lobsters, a lobster company in the little town from which I come, has made two shipments of lobster to Belgium by air. Nearly 30,000 pounds of lobster have been sent to Belgium in two shipments. A new process has been developed whereby ice is not used. They use just shavings and cardboard cartons.

The vice president of that company was in Ottawa this week and he told me that the last shipment that went out about a week ago had arrived. He was talking with them in Belgium while in Ottawa and they had 2 per cent weaks which is a wonderful record. That is the effort that is being made to try to extend the industry. Everything is being done by industry that can be done. It might also be of interest to the committee to know that the plane that takes these Lobsters from Saint John, New Brunswick, which is where they take off for Belgium, returned to Canada with monkeys from which Salk vaccine is manufactured in Canada. It is quite a contrast.

But that means so much to those in the maritime provinces. The lobster industry is one of the greatest industries we have. The lobster is one commodity for which there has always been a demand. It has never been a drug on the market. It has never been a fish that cannot be sold. It is one that we have always been able to find markets for. But I must say again that 90 per cent of that market is in the United States. For that reason we must be extremely careful that it is not interfered with in any way. The diversion of $625 million of Canadian purchases from the United States to Great Britain will not, in my opinion, be of any help to the maritime provinces. I believe that every maritime member here, if he would be sincere would say the same thing. In fact, I am doubtful whether it would be helpful to any part of Canada.

Mr. Churchill: Nonsense. Why do you not get on the subject before the committee.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The minute I start to speak in this house, I am always interrupted. Here is the Financial Times that I received in my office today. I wish the Minister of Trade and Commerce would read these editorials. There is one that says, "Oh, how we hate the Americans", and I really believe that he is one of them. There is another one appearing in the Ottawa Citizen that I could quote. They are appearing in the press every day. I wonder whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce ever stopped to realize that if the President of the United States had said this, namely that we will divert $625 million of purchases from Canada to Mexico what would have been said in this House of Commons. Surely he realizes that the American people cannot take a thing like that without retaliation.

Mr. Churchill: We buy more from them than they buy from us and you know it.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I do not doubt that. But I am telling the hon. member I am quite sure that the section from which he comes is not in sympathy with the action he has taken in this regard or the action taken by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Churchill: You are wrong.

An hon. Member: June 10 showed that.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): There will be another June 10. And I can tell my hon. friend right now that he is not half as anxious for that June 10 now as he was two months ago.

An hon. Member: We sure are.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): When 700,000 people are unemployed in this country as was indicated today you will not wish for an election.

An hon. Member: You will not be back.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I have heard that for five elections but I hope to be back. I can assure my hon. friend that I will do everything possible to get back. There is no question about that. To show the unreasonable things that are being said in the Tory press today, I am going to read a short portion from an editorial that appeared in the Globe and Mail on January 6, just a day or two ago. It says this:

> There is much we can do to retaliate when the United States kicks us around in this manner.
>
> We can, merely to take one instance, impose 15 per cent export tax on the newsprint we ship to that country—or on the nickel, or the uranium, or the iron ore. Such stern measures are not yet in order, are not yet even to be considered. But if every United States industry that runs into a little bit of recession is to lobby successfully in Washington for restriction upon our goods, we will have to be stern; and we could do worse than prepare our minds for that.

I believe this to be one of the most irresponsible childish statements I have ever read in any periodical in Canada coming at a time when 700,000 are unemployed, and a great portion of them in the pulp and paper industry. The Toronto Globe and Mail comes out with a statement like this and then we expect to maintain friendly relations with our friends over the border. I have lived on the United States border for a lifetime. There are not any people in the world that I would rather have living to the south of us than the Yankees. We never had any better friends than those people to the south of us. One of the greatest friends this country ever had outside of our own country was the late President Roosevelt. We never had a better one. We must maintain these friendly relations. There may be some advantage for the two central provinces in tariff restrictions and manoeuvring with trade, but my mind goes back to 1930—

An hon. Member: Who is talking about tariff restrictions?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am talking about tariff restrictions, and I am talking about the mess we are in in this country today. That is exactly the way in which I describe it. It is nothing more or less than a mess. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. Argue: It is a real mess.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): That is what I have been talking about. From 1935 to 1952 this country enjoyed the greatest prosperity and expansion of any country in the world. I think you have all got to admit that. Regardless of this accomplishment, however, approximately 350,000 Canadians have chosen to leave this country and live in the United States. Why would they leave this country and go to the United States, 350,000 of them in that time? I can assure you that this trend will be much greater if tariff restrictions imposed by that government in any way interfere with the fishing industry in the Atlantic provinces because there is nothing left for those people to do. If anything happens to the fishing industry they must seek employment in some other part of this continent and the only place that can be found is the United States. I hope that we never lose sight of the fact that the United States is our warmest neighbour and always has been, our greatest market, our leading supplier of goods and services, and that we sell a great deal to that country.

I just want to leave these thoughts with the minister because I can assure him that in the maritime provinces there is nothing that is being viewed today with more seriousness than the trade situation between the maritime provinces and the United States. As I say, every maritime member here knows that what I have said is true, that if there is an imposition of tariffs by the United States on the fishing industry the economy of the maritimes will be at the lowest ebb of any time in its history.

I now want to deal with a matter of a local nature. In doing so I realize that the opinions that I shall express will not be endorsed by every citizen in my county and perhaps will not be viewed in a friendly way by the Department of Fisheries. Nevertheless it is one to which I have given a lot of thought and I believe the time has come when something should be done in this regard.

We have in Charlotte county five rivers where Atlantic salmon may be found each and every year. These rivers are New River, Pocologan river, the Magaguadavic river, the Digdeguash river and the St. Croix river.

The federal Department of Fisheries has maintained guardians on these rivers for one purpose only, to prohibit the catching of this fish in any manner other than with a fly or a lure or a floating bait; no commercial fishing in other words. While thousands and thousands of these salmon frequent our rivers, particularly the Magaguadavic and the Digdeguash rivers, these salmon have never been of any value commercially to the citizens of Charlotte county within my memory and they have never been of any value from the point of view of sports fishing.

I do believe these fish could be the greatest attraction imaginable in so far as the tourist business is concerned and they could be responsible for an enormous source of revenue. I wonder why over the years we have protected these salmon in the rivers I have mentioned. I can assure the Minister of Fisheries and his department that in the past 40 years these salmon have not been worth $400 to the fishermen in my county. Last year I went out to the Digdeguash river when the salmon were running and there were thousands and thousands of salmon there. There were many people also who wanted to catch the salmon, but they just would not take the fly although I was told by some who stayed a little late, after some of the officials had disappeared, that they would take a sunken bait.

I think the time has come to find out whether they will take a sunken bait. I think the time has come to go ahead and develop these rivers for sports fishing because I know that the revenue they would derive in this area from sports fishing would be a great deal more than we have ever derived from commercial fishing. If it were undertaken as a proper development I am sure we would not have a sufficient amount of salmon to make commercial fishing successful to any great number of fishermen. In certain parts of our province some of the salmon pools are sold to non-Canadians while our own fishermen are denied the right to fish in those pools.

I do not support this action even though it has been taken by both Liberal and Conservative provincial governments. I am still opposed to that method. I believe the salmon pools in the province of New Brunswick should be open to the citizens of New Brunswick and not sold to non-citizens from any country.

Mr. Churchill: The United States of America, that is un-American.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): In reply to my hon. friend I will give him an idea of what that means in dollars and cents. I believe the Minister of Fisheries will find if he looks back in his records it is estimated that the salmon which are taken out of the Miramichi river are worth about $5 a pound to those who take them out. That may be all right but I do not believe our citizens should be denied the right to fish for salmon in our own rivers in New Brunswick.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Go home Yankee, go home.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): What was that again?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I just quoted that well-known expression "Go home Yankee, go home".

Mr. Pickersgill: With approval.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Yes, with approval?

[Mr. Stuart (Charlotte).]

During recent years, in fact during the last two years, our provincial government has made every effort to develop tuna fishing on the west side of the bay of Fundy. I was on the water there for 25 years and when this idea was first in the minds of the officials in Fredericton I predicted that it would never be a successful venture because in my experience on the bay of Fundy there is only one year in eight when tuna fish appear. I am told by the fisheries research board—and it seems most reasonable to me—that the ony time we ever get tuna fish is when our water temperature is higher than normal. For that reason I thought it was a most unreliable undertaking and something that would never be successful.

We nevertheless have spent many thousands of dollars in trying to develop a tuna fishery there. I believe we have an industry in sports fishing and that such a sports fishing in this area would mean thousands and thousands of tourist dollars. We have, for instance, pollack which is one of the finest fish that ever came out of the sea. It is a game fish and it may be caught in the hundreds, in fact last year it was caught in the thousands. I believe in the development of these fishing grounds where the fish can be caught and I believe it might be well for the Department of Fisheries to consider placing a great deal more emphasis on sports fishing in areas where the tourist can take advantage of it.

To support what I have said I want to quote from a bulletin which I will hand to the minister when I have finished because I am sure he will be most interested in it. This bulletin is published by the sports fishing institute of Washington and it has this to say:

> The first national survey of fishing and hunting in the United States was carried out during January and February 1956 by Crossley, S-D Surveys, Incorporated, New York City, for the U.S. fish and wild life service. It revealed that 25 million sportsmen, sportswomen and sports-youngsters spent $3 billion on 500 million days of outdoor recreation while fishing and hunting during 1955.
>
> America's most popular form of outdoor recreation—sport fishing—contributed the lion's share to the financial pot. About 21 million anglers fished regularly in 1955 and poured $2 billion—an amount greater than Canada's total national defence budget item—into U.S. business coffers in 1955. These Americans invested a major share of their total leisure time—about 400 million days—relaxing by means of the contemplated sport. Individually, anglers spent about $92 each year on the needs of their sport. They also utilized 19 days of their annual leisure time out fishing at an average daily cost of nearly $5.
>
> To a considerable extent anglers pursued their sport afloat in outboard motor-powered boats. This fact was not given the emphasis it deserves in the survey report published by the fish and wildlife service.

Then it goes on to say further down:

Fishing and hunting—among our most popular forms of outdoor recreational use of leisure time—together generate a whopping $3 billion of business annually. This is only a little less than 1 per cent of the gross national product. Study of the statistics published by the U.S. department of commerce in its survey of current business for July, 1956, yields interesting comparisons. They help interpret the relative importance of this giant new outdoor recreational industry that is so closely dependent upon good conservation of the fishery and wildlife resources.

National outlays for the pursuit of fish and game, totalling $3 billion, are only a little less impressive than our international trade with the rest of the world. In 1955, for example, the net purchase by the rest of the world from United States business as a whole was approximately $3.8 billion.

It may be more meaningful to many people to compare the $3 billion of sportsmen expenditures to federal receipts. Among other federal tax receipts in 1955, the excise tax on liquor amounted to about $2.8 billion. The tobacco excise tax was considerably less, at nearly $1.6 billion. All other federal excise tax revenues added up to less than $5.5 billion. The state and local levels are even closer to home. At these levels income taxes, death and gift taxes, motor vehicle licenses, property taxes, and liquor and tobacco sales taxes must all be combined to reach a total (about $3.3 billion) . . .

Even all state gasoline sales tax revenues (about $2.5 billion),—

Which is about half a billion dollars less than what sport fishing is worth to the United States.

There is one other part of this I should like to quote, and this is the part which I think is most interesting to the Department of Fisheries, the third paragraph:

Despite all the attention and help which the (United States) federal government has for many decades granted to our historically-important commercial fishing industry, it remains only half as significant as sport fishing ($2 billions) to the American economy. According to a recent report by the United States Department of Interior, the ultimate retail value at consumer level of all commercial fish produced by this highly organized, mechanized, and subsidized industry is only slightly in excess of $1 billion. Though undoubtedly far below its optimum potential as a top revenue produced in ocean areas, all sport fishing is already twice as important as all commercial fishing nationally despite little federal help and much industry discrimination. Already, the value of salt-water angling alone ($489 millions) is about half that of all commercial fishing, and growing rapidly.

Since then I have seen an article in the press of the United States stating that there are only three species of salt water fish in the United States that produce a greater revenue commercially than they do for sport fishing, so I really believe the time has come when this matter should be given a lot more attention in this country of ours.

There are many other items I should like to read from this report, but I am going to leave it for the attention of the minister, such headings as—"The Hypothetical Angler", "Who Benefits?", "Expanded Research Need", "Conservation and Politics", "Multiple Use of Water Supplies" and so on. All these things are very interesting, and together with this, when I do give this document to the minister, I should like him to draw to the attention of the Postmaster General the postage stamp used in the United States to bring this matter to the attention of the American people.

There is one other item I wish to touch on very briefly, and the reason I am speaking on so many different branches of the industry tonight is the fact that I will not be here tomorrow, so I should like to cover as much ground as possible before resuming my seat. I realize that this particular matter does not come within the scope of the minister's department, though it does affect the fishing industry. The sick mariners services came into effect at the time of confederation as the result of a protest from the province of New Brunswick about seamen dumped ashore from foreign vessels and then becoming the responsibility of the province. Since that time the service has been broadened to embrace many who were not eligible for benefits under the original plan. Many now engaged in the fishing industry qualify for sick mariners benefits as a result of the amendments to the act over the years. This service provides much needed protection for our fishermen. I have personal knowledge of many cases where these benefits have been of inestimable value when prolonged illness was far beyond the financial capacity of individual fishermen.

This service provides protection for many who could not afford to enter into the ordinary insurance plans; the premiums would be prohibitive for those with small incomes. I was eligible for the benefits of this generous protection for many years. Fortunately, it was not necessary for me to apply for benefits and for this I am most grateful. I have had extensive experience with those fine men who administer this service. Their prompt attention to the individual applications is recognized and appreciated not only by the fishermen but the doctors in all areas where this service applies.

There is one point, however, that should be fully investigated. I would suggest that the Department of Fisheries might lend a hand in the investigation. I refer to insured fishermen living on the international border who are obliged to be in the United States very often where their production is normally sold. In case of accident, or sudden illness, they enter a hospital or call at a doctor's office in the United States, and even though they may be 100 miles from a Canadian doctor, or hospital, their application for benefits will be disallowed by those who administer this act, even though it was an emergency case.

Many cases such as I have described are brought to my attention. One, in particular concerns a hard-working, honest fisherman whom I have known for many years, living on Campobello island. He experienced an illness of long duration. The nearest doctor was in Lubec, Maine. An auto ferry connects Campobello with this town in Maine, a 10-minute trip across Lubec narrows. The nearest doctor he could reach in Canada would be approximately 70 miles. His health would not allow him to travel the 140 miles, return trip, to a Canadian doctor. The doctor in Lubec, knowing his financial circumstances, adjusted his charges for calls at his office and for medicines he provided. I am sure the cost would be comparable to any service provided in Canada. Nevertheless the prolonged illness resulted in an accumulated bill of nearly $400. If this fisherman had entered a Canadian hospital the cost would have been three times this amount or more.

The Department refused to assume responsibility for this expenditure. There was no provision in the act which would cover cases such as I have outlined. I believe the act should be amended to take care of these emergency cases taking into consideration the fact that it was impossible to reach a doctor in Canada under the circumstances.

Many United States fishermen, particularly captains of freighters, have experienced the same thing while plying in Canadian waters.

Mr. Broome: Did you bring that up with the previous government?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): No, I did not. I will be honest, I did not, because until last year this had not been brought to my attention as a serious thing. But there were three or four cases that year which were really serious cases. I would not have hesitated about bringing this up before any government. That is not in my make-up. I would be as willing to take this up with a Liberal government as with the Conservative government.

Mr. Gardiner: And more liable to get action.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): And more liable to get action. I believe some sort of a reciprocal agreement might be reached between the governments of Canada and the United States to cover cases such as I have outlined, since the United States seamen, as well, are covered by a similar insurance plan. This is a matter of great importance to those who go down to the sea in ships, and I can tell hon. members of many cases from my personal experience and knowledge of men who just could not have borne the expenditures connected with their illness without the benefit of this great service.

[Mr. Stuart (Charlotte).]

I am going, just once more, to refer to a very touchy matter. I am going to remind the minister once more of the great worry there is in the maritime provinces at this time about possible retaliation by the United States which might do a great deal of harm to our fishing industry. I believe this is under consideration in Washington at this very moment. The hon. member over there may smile, but I was in this industry for 25 years, and I believe I have some knowledge of it, and that I know the worry connected with it. I may state also that I went through the hungry thirties in this industry; I went on salt water four years alone to try to make a living, and for these reasons I believe I have some firsthand knowledge of what fishermen must go through in order to make a livelihood. Things are not good in the fishing industry today and I can assure the minister—and I know this is realized by every maritime member in this house and, I will say also, by the members from the Pacific coast—that this is a most serious thing—

Mr. Broome: What is it?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): They have a fishing industry out there, too, if the hon. member does not know it.

An hon. Member: We sell to the U.S.A.

Mr. Broome: No, no. I am sorry, my friend, but may I interrupt you for a moment. We sell no salmon in the United States whatsoever.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Where does your wood and pulp go, to Alaska?

Mr. Broome: We are not talking about pulpwood but about fish. Do not try to tell me that you are doing business with the United States.

Mr. Baskin: There is too much pulpwood going to the United States, too.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): There is too much pulpwood going to the United States? I want that on the record. I want to show it to my friends in Charlotte because at this time 85 per cent of the pulp producers in my county cannot sell a cord of wood and if you can sell it for them they will appreciate it very much. They have the wood and the energy and they are willing to work but there is just no market there for them. Perhaps you think that these restrictions on the sale of Canadian commodities in the United States are a joke. I will admit that the Globe and Mail suggests we should put some restrictions on and as long as the press of this country supports such childish notions as that I do not know what we might expect. The maritimes and western provinces including British Columbia need this natural market to the south of us. We cannot survive without that market.

Mr. Pickersgill: So does Ontario.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Any artificial manoeuvring with that set-up will be harmful to the maritimes and to the prairie provinces and I think generally harmful to other parts of Canada. I will leave that thought with the minister and urge upon him the necessity of his being the watch dog in the cabinet together with the other members of the cabinet from the maritime provinces to see that the fishermen in that area are protected. I thank you.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I would like first of all to join with the hon. member for Charlotte in extending my congratulations to the minister on his appointment to this portfolio. I would also like to say that I was very pleased that the minister took the opportunity soon after he assumed office to make a familiarization trip to the British Columbia coast. That, I take it, was some indication that he intends to be the Minister of Fisheries for Canada and not simply minister of fisheries for the Atlantic provinces. As a matter of fact, I believe the last two previous ministers of fisheries have been from the British Columbia coast so I suppose those of us in British Columbia really have no cause for complaint that the present Minister of Fisheries happens to come from one of the Atlantic provinces.

I believe I am correct in saying that in his remarks the hon. member for Charlotte dealt principally with the marketing aspects of the fisheries industry in Canada and so with a view to adding a little variety to our discussion I shall try to deal, in the first part of my remarks at least, with matters relating to conservation and development and increasing of our fisheries resources.

If I were looking for a text for my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I could easily find one in the Fisheries Act itself which is, of course, the principal document which must govern the activities of our Minister of Fisheries. As a matter of fact, I could probably find several texts because there are various sections of the act that deal with this matter. For example, section 48 gives the minister the power to set apart rivers and other waters for the natural or artificial propagation of fish. Section 62 gives him power to deal with people who destroy places where fish are propagated and section 57 contains some provisions which provide that payments must be made in lieu of the destruction of fisheries resources. The particular section of the act that I will quote in part is section 34 which reads as follows:

> 34. (1) The governor in council may make regulations (a) to prevent or remedy the obstruction and pollution of streams.

Most hon. members of the house who have followed previous discussions on fisheries estimates will realize that this matter of streams in relation to the fishing industry is of very great concern to those of us who live in British Columbia. The question of what is going to happen to the future of our salmon industry is tied in very directly with what is going to be done in, on or around the great streams of our province. Incidentally, I suppose I probably could, if I wished cite the names of some British Columbia streams that would be just as unpronounceable and difficult to spell as were some of the names of streams referred to earlier by the hon. member for Charlotte.

In view of the proceedings that took place fairly recently in connection with another part of the activities of this house I felt that in drawing to the attention of the minister this particular section of the Fisheries Act I would also like to draw to his attention, to remind him and to place on the records of the house for the benefit of hon. members generally some statements which were made earlier this year in the standing committee of this house on marines and fisheries because the question of the requirements of the salmon industry, if it is to continue to grow and expand in our province, is very closely related to some of the questions that involve the providing of power in our province.

The marine and fisheries committee of the house had before it Dr. Royal, director of the international Pacific salmon commission. On page 18 of the proceedings of the committee, in answer to a question addressed to him, Dr. Royal made a statement on the problem which I would like to draw to the attention of hon. members at this time when he said:

> I would particularly like to make a statement in order to bring home the need for arriving at an equitable settlement with the United States in respect of the Columbia river, more than anything else. Because, without a settlement in respect of the Columbia river, it may be necessary to have power dams on the Fraser river, and there is no answer to the problem of fish versus power on the main Fraser.

I would particularly like to emphasize that statement, Mr. Chairman. I think it would be in the interests of this discussion if I were to go on and detail some of the reasons that were given by Dr. Royal for making that statement. He went on to say:

> You cannot, for instance, have one dam on the Fraser river. You can talk about building one dam on the Fraser river, but you have got to have several. Any one who is an engineer knows that when you have a spring flow of 280,000 cubic feet per second, and a winter flow of 12,000 cubic feet per second, and you have to provide industry with power all year round, you have got to modify the spring flow and raise the winter flow. So, there is not such a thing possible as one dam.

Another thing that must be considered: what government is going to say that you can have one dam on the Fraser, but after that, no one can have any more? That is not democratic psychology, if you will pardon that expression. Once it starts, it needs full development of the Fraser river, and coincident with the full development is the destruction of salmon. I could take half an hour to tell you why, but I can assure you, gentlemen, that there can be no such thing as dams and salmon on the main Fraser river.

He then went on to explain that negotiations had been proceeding with the British Columbia power commission in respect to the development of certain power resources in the Fraser river system which can be developed without damage to the salmon industry.

Later on, on page 19, he says:

If you can get the Columbia river development, by agreement, isolating it from all of these international ramifications, then everyone will be willing to develop the Columbia river, and to bring the power to wherever it is needed—whether it is to the Kootenays—to the lower mainland—or even Victoria. But, it is important that the agreement be settled, because they are going to need power.

Now, I am not going to suggest that either atomic energy or gas plants is the answer today, but I am going to say this; that if you read the technical literature of atomic energy, you will know that Canada and the United States are producing 30,000 tons of uranium a year now.

Further questions were asked Dr. Royal by members of the committee and on page 19 he says in answer to a question:

When you put a series of dams on the Fraser, you will be interfering with the normal migration. You are dealing with fish, and all the ingenuity of man cannot teach a fish to swim over a vertical flow without hesitating, nor will it teach a fish to swim into water that has suddenly been lowered 10 degrees lower in temperature than that which he has an inherent ability to accept as normal. If for instance you lengthen the migration period of the Stewart lake race, which migrates a distance of 850 miles at a rate of 30 miles a day without eating, for three days it will seriously interfere with the fish's ability to propagate itself. If the time were lengthened to six days they would not even get there.

Then, he goes on to describe some of the plans which have been discussed to put dams on the Fraser river, and he has this to say:

There is not a fish in the Fraser river which would get to the spawning grounds if delayed 12 days. Some of them will in six days but none in 12 days. Even then we have the problem of downstream migrants. We have a tremendous river, we have debris, and a huge volume of water. These fish are coming down the river just like chips following in the current. They have no shore line or bottom to orient themselves and you have to put something there to say, no you do not go there you go here. But every instinct that a fish has says, I have got to go with the current, there is something wrong here but I must go with the current. There is your problem.

You will hear a lot about easy ways of solving the fish problem, but if they ever do develop the Fraser river I am saying here on record that it cannot be done and have the fishing industry as you knew it in the past and as you know it today.

Those remarks of Dr. Royal to the committee are certainly borne out by the opinions that have been expressed at various times and in various places by our Canadian scientists, and I certainly agree with the minister in the praise that he gives to the fisheries scientists of Canada. It is from those people that we have been able to derive the knowledge that this is no simple problem. I know that even if one considers a relatively small problem of attempting to accommodate fish and power the complexity multiplies almost beyond imagination.

Over on Vancouver island, in the area in which I live, there has been a good deal of discussion about a possible power development. I hold in my hand the preliminary report on the fisheries problems relating to the proposed power development of the Somass river system which, after all, is a relatively minor river and actually, speaking in terms of the size of our salmon fishery in the province as a whole, involves a relatively small proportion of our salmon stocks. But even to deal in part with the problems of maintaining those fish runs and at the same time carry on a power development involves even to a layman like myself some almost insurmountable complexities. How vast then must be the problem from a scientific and engineering point of view if one is to think in terms of the main Fraser river system. I have deliberately introduced evidence into this discussion which I think is the best scientific evidence available to us in the world, because this is perhaps one of the major matters of public concern in the province of British Columbia at the present time.

I noticed that in his introductory statement the minister did not give us any clear-cut policy declaration on this matter as to the position of the government of which he is a member. As I recall it, the policy in this respect stated by the previous minister of fisheries was fairly well known. He made it quite clear that as far as he was concerned no salmon stream in the province of British Columbia, on the basis of our present scientific knowledge, should be developed for power until we had used all of our non-salmon streams, and that even after that had taken place the whole question of the use of salmon-spawning streams for power purposes was one which would have to receive very careful assessment and review. Before this item carries I hope the minister will give us as clear-cut a statement as to where the government of which he is a member stands on this important question. I am happy to say that I felt fully able to support the policy pronouncement by the previous minister in this respect and I hope I shall be able to say that I am prepared to support the policy statement which the present minister will give in this respect.

The whole question, Mr. Chairman, of course, has aspects and ramifications that go far beyond the federal Department of Fisheries itself; but I think the power that rests in our present constitution and under the authority of this parliament with the Minister of Fisheries is pretty clearly defined in relation to what can or cannot be done in this respect, and that in many ways one can fairly say that the Minister of Fisheries has the whip hand in this matter. Therefore I think the people of British Columbia are entitled to know where he stands upon it.

I was saying, however, that it has aspects which do go beyond the narrower limits of the responsibility of a federal Minister of Fisheries. It has, of course, ramifications that go into the field of activity that is carried on as a result of decisions made in the legislature of our province. I think one of the broader aspects that the people of British Columbia are going to have to take into consideraion involves some of the assumptions that have been made that the present lopsided development of our province is necessary and desirable. By that I mean to say that in a province which would easily swallow two or three fair-sized European countries within its borders most of the population is at present concentrated in one little corner.

Some of the statements made about the development of power on the Fraser or on the Columbia seem to be predicated on the idea that endless expansion of power requirements for the population in that one little corner of the province is something which is going to have to continue and should continue. I am not suggesting this is a matter which the Minister of Fisheries should solve tonight but it is a question about which I believe the people of British Columbia should be thinking a great deal more than they have. Some of the statements revolving around the question of bringing Columbia river power into the lower mainland area are predicated on that assumption.

Yet we have vast areas of the province which are among the most sparsely populated parts of the country and not all these areas are areas that are covered by 10,000-foot mountain peaks. Various suggestions which have been made relating to the whole question of power and the use of the Fraser or Columbia or both for power purposes are affected by proposals for the development of power and other resources in the Rocky mountain trench. That, of course, is a subject of considerable controversy in the arena of discussion in British Columbia. I know that when C.C.F. spokesmen in the legislature of British Columbia have objected to what is known as the Wenner-Gren arrangement or deal, suggestions have been made that the C.C.F. is opposed to the development of the Rocky mountain trench. Naturally I have had the opportunity of discussing the matter quite thoroughly with some of these people and I should like to say that to my knowledge there is no objection to the development of that particular part of our province or of any other part of the province but rather to the particular method which the present provincial administration apparently wishes to follow in that development. That method, of course, is to place an area almost the size of England in the hands of one private development corporation.

Mr. Patterson: That is not right at all.

Mr. Barnett: I have seen the memorandum of intent.

Mr. Patterson: I have too.

Mr. Barnett: I have seen the memorandum of intent and I have read it several times.

Mr. Patterson: So have I.

Mr. Barnett: And I have listened to it being discussed. However, as I say, my main purpose in bringing this subject into the discussion is because it has been related to the whole question of power development in the more southerly rivers.

Mr. Blackmore: Just because you want to play dirty politics.

Mr. Barnett: Of course, when people say things with which the hon. member for Lethbridge does not agree and about which he probably does not know a great deal he always suggests that it is dirty politics.

Mr. Blackmore: You do not now know anything about it.

Mr. Winch: When you refer to dirty politics, what is it that is before the courts of British Columbia now?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rea): Order.

Mr. Barnett: I am just trying to recall where I was. I was saying that this question is one of great importance and in order to clarify what I have in mind to say I was trying to point out that, contrary to allegations that have been made that the C.C.F. is opposed to the development of the northeastern part of the province, our opposition has been to the particular method which the present provincial administration proposes to follow.

Mr. Hahn: You find the money and we will perhaps do it another way.

Mr. Barnett: Starting from that point and assuming that the provincial government of British Columbia really wants to see the development of that part of the country take place, as does the C.C.F.—

Mr. Hahn: You would not know it.

Mr. Barnett: —I come now to the point I wish to make.

Mr. Patterson: Are there any fish up there at all?

Mr. Barnett: Perhaps it might be wise to decide that the time has come to carry out the kind of dreams for the future I have heard expressed by some of the old time citizens of Prince George. Rather than attempting the difficult feat of transporting power over long distances, it might be wise to begin thinking in terms of having our industries and population a little closer to the power sources.

Mr. Beech: What has that got to do with fisheries?

Mr. Barnett: By that I mean to say that if engineering studies reveal that the proposed development of the Peace and its tributaries is a feasible one, one which is in the interests of the province and can be done without affecting too adversely the interests of any adjoining province, then it might be wise to go into that thoroughly with a view to postponing at least the day when a decision might have to be made with respect to the alternatives of fish or power on the Fraser river system.

I make this suggestion to the committee at this time so that the present Minister of Fisheries, coming as he does from the opposite side of the country, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, may have in his mind some of the things that are going on in British Columbia in this connection and some of the views which are being expressed. I sincerely hope that when members from the party across the way take part in the discussion they will be prepared to offer the minister the benefit of their advice.

Mr. Hahn: Do not worry about us, we will look after ourselves; we are quite capable.

Mr. Barnett: To come back more directly to the question of fisheries, may I say I think one of the most important things for us to have at this stage is a clear-cut statement of the position of the minister, speaking on behalf of the government he represents, outlining their view on the preservation or otherwise of the great salmon industry of British Columbia. While we all hope that our scientists may be able to find a way to resolve some of these complex problems and while I am prepared to urge that much greater resources be devoted to scientific and engineering investigation of these matters than has heretofore been the case, nevertheless I think that until these conditions are met we should know whether or not we are in fact going to have a salmon industry to conduct research with respect to the main streams of the province.

At the same time, Mr. Chairman, in discussing the future of the salmon industry as it is related to the present and potential resources of the Fraser river system, I think we should not overlook what we may be able to do to enlarge that industry by the proper cultivation, if I may use that word, of some of the many other salmon streams along the coast of British Columbia. I have read some of the reports and have referred to them before in the house about the destruction that takes place of potential salmon runs as the result of flash floods on our streams along the coast. I have had discussions with people who live and work in the areas. They have described to me how obstructions develop. Because these streams are largely unattended and proper precautions have not been taken to control the flow or to prevent the building of log jams, much of what might be future salmon runs is lost from these streams either because of washing out of the salmon eggs or on other occasions and under different climatic conditions because the water level in the stream is not such as—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rea): Order. I have to remind the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Barnett: If I might finish my sentence, Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate the courtesy. I notice that it is almost ten o'clock. Unless it was desired otherwise in the committee, perhaps I could be allowed to continue, with the idea possibly that the next speaker would be first at the next sitting.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rea): Has the hon. member leave of the house to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Barnett: As I was saying in discussing the question of the development of our smaller salmon streams, as I understand it, not only are the future runs lost as a result of flash floods and the forming of log jams but also on many occasions because no development of these streams has taken place for any controlled level of flow the spawning salmon are not able actually to get up the streams to the spawning grounds.

I am sure that the Minister of Fisheries can be very well and completely advised on these problems by the officials and scientists of his department. My only point in raising these matters in a very general way and possibly with not complete accuracy in every detail is that I feel the members of this house generally should appreciate what might be done greatly to expand this source of high protein food to which the minister was referring in his opening remarks. His opening remarks made reference to the fact that the population of the world is increasing and to the fact that the population of the world was going to have increasing difficulty to find adequate sources of high protein food. With all of these phrases he used in his opening remarks in that connection I agree most thoroughly.

All I am suggesting to him is that he should translate those remarks into some specific statement of policy as far as they apply to the future of the salmon industry of British Columbia. These are things with which we cannot deal in generalities in view of what is happening in that area. If one is to agree that the future of high protein food is important, these are matters on which we must take a firm stand now. I am sure the minister is aware that, as I understand the statements which have been given to us by the scientists, it is not a matter of deciding that we are going to have our power now and our fish later, particularly with reference to the sockeye our most valuable salmon species, but that once those particular species of salmon are gone, they are gone and, to use the old phrase, they will be as extinct as the dodo. No matter how able or how clever our scientists may be, there will be no way of bringing them back. If this question of protein food to meet the future needs of mankind is as important as the minister suggests it is, I think he should back up his words as I suggest with a fairly definite statement as to how we are going to meet the more immediate situation.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, may we call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, let us have a speech.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rea): Shall I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask what the business of the house is for tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall continue with the fisheries estimates. Then we shall take the estimates of the Department of National Revenue and then the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Chevrier: And on Monday?

Mr. Green: Provided the motion which appears in Votes and Proceedings today is adopted by the house tomorrow, Monday would be a government day. We would commence with item No. 7 on today's order paper, second reading of a bill in respect of a loan to the government of New Brunswick; then item No. 8, which has to do with electric power development in the Atlantic provinces; then item No. 5 on today's order paper, second reading of a bill to provide for stabilization of prices of agricultural commodities; then item No. 2 on today's order paper, second reading of a bill to provide for annual vacations with pay; then item No. 4, second reading of a bill to implement an agreement between Canada and Australia in respect of income tax. The same program would be carried into Tuesday.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the minister any ideas about Wednesday?

Mr. Green: I am not sure about Wednesday but probably it would be a continuation of this legislation, although we may have to go into estimates. If we do so, we will consult with the parties to come to an agreement about what should be taken up.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to the order of the house passed on December 2, 1957.

Question

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

R.C.A.F. STATION, SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.

Question No. 263—Mr. Stuart (Charlotte):

1. Have any improvements been planned for the Royal Canadian Air Force station at Summerside, Prince Edward Island?

2. If so, (a) of what nature; (b) at what estimated cost; (c) when is it expected the work will be started?

Answer by: Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence):

1. Yes.

Nature	Estimated cost	Work to be started
2. (a)	(b)	(c)
Underground electrical distribution and communications system part 2	$ 450,000	Spring 1958
Interior painting of hangars 1 to 5	73,750	Winter 1957/58
High intensity approach and runway lighting	45,000	Work has started
Maintenance hangar	3,000,000	Summer 1958
Readiness hangar	400,000	Summer 1958
Anti-corrosion hangar	524,000	Summer 1958
Armament storage and assembly facilities	557,000	Summer 1958
Airfield development and roads	830,000	Summer 1958
Bulk fuel handling facilities and rail spur	390,000	Summer 1958
Central heating plant, water, sewage and electrical services	1,254,000	Spring 1958
Grading and fencing	380,000	Spring 1958

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Combines Investigation Act—

179. Restrictive trade practices commission, $79,465.

180. Office of investigation and research, $455,375 (amended, reduced to $435,375).

181. Bankruptcy Act administration, $48,985.

B—Penitentiaries—

182. Administration of the office of the commissioner of penitentiaries, including $60,000 for grants to recognized prisoners' aid societies, as may be approved by the treasury board, $482,446.

183. Operation and maintenance of penitentiaries, including supplies and services relating thereto; administration, operation, repair and upkeep of buildings, works and equipment; maintenance, discharge and transfer of inmates; compensation to discharged inmates permanently disabled while in penitentiaries, $11,002,925.

184. Construction, improvements and equipment, $2,365,555 (amended, reduced by $1,000,000).

Headquarters administration, national police services and training establishments—

396. Administration, operation and maintenance, $7,329,030.

397. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $912,129.

Land and air services—

398. Operation and maintenance of divisions, $26,472,859.

399. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $3,351,070 (amended, reduced by $250,000).

Marine services—

400. Operation and maintenance, $1,432,229.

401. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $1,369,311.

402. Grant to the Canadian association of chiefs of police, $500.

403. Grant to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police veterans' association, $300.

Pensions and other benefits—

404. Pensions to families of members of the mounted police who have lost their lives while on duty, as detailed in the estimates, $6,439.

(S) Pension to Basil Burke Currie (vote 405, Appropriation Act No. 6, 1956), $685.

405. Government's contribution to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police pension account, $986,710.

A—Department—

General—

626. Expenses of the Royal commission on the criminal law relating to criminal sexual psychopaths, $7,500.

Loans, investments and advances—

Justice—

Penitentiaries—

660. To extend the operation of the revolving fund established by vote 628 of the Appropriation Act No. 2, 1955, to authorize the acquiring and managing of any stores or materials required for penitentiary use; the amount to be charged to the revolving rund at any time not to exceed $600,000; additional amount required, $300,000.

A—Department—

697. Remission service—further amount required to provide for a grant of $1,000 to the Canadian Corrections Association, $1,000.

Yukon territorial court—

698. Administration, including administration of justice—Yukon territory—further amount required, $10,000.

B—Penitentiaries—

699. Operation and maintenance of penitentiaries, including supplies and services relating thereto; administration, operation, repair and upkeep of buildings, works and equipment; maintenance, discharge and transfer of inmates; compensation to discharged inmates permanently disabled while in penitentiaries—further amount required, $39,000.

700. To provide for a credit to the revolving fund established pursuant to vote 628 of the Appropriation Act No. 2, 1955, to meet the deficiency arising from over-valuation of inventory, $6,642.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Headquarters administration, national police services and training establishments—

739. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $66,000.

740. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $63,100.

Land and air services—

741. Operation and maintenance of divisions—further amount required, $290,000.

Marine services—

742. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $408,060.

Pensions and other benefits—

743. Government's contribution to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police pension account—further amount required, $111,088.

END OF VOLUME III