Let us recall the Jerusalem embassy issue. We remember how the last government faced the force of certain Arab governments which came forward and said that we had to behave in a certain way, and because of their threats we did. We changed our national policy in order to accommodate them. We can also see that there are dangers which arise from this foreign force and this foreign power to blackmail, in terms of the Arab boycott, which can threaten the individual rights of Canadians, whatever their origin or religion. Arab power and blackmail can threaten action to put one Canadian business at odds with another, to force one Canadian business not to buy and deal with another, and in fact to question the integrity and the right of certain individuals to work in Canadian companies because of their religion.

Indeed, we realize the power of OPEC oil to affect the economy, to affect our military and strategic future, and to affect our monetary system. This is not new; we have been talking about it for years.

But what is important is that in order to reply to such blackmail, to such bribery and to such dangers in the strategic situation in the world, Canada has been carrying on—I happen to know this from personal experience—not only a program to try to develop alternate sources of energy but also a comprehensive attempt to try to educate the population of Canada to the urgency of conservation of energy.

I remember, when working for a non-governmental organization, coming to the Government of Canada back in 1974 and 1975 and finding that the government was producing and printing all kinds of materials for schools, for homes, for companies and for corporations, which we helped to distribute to citizens to inform them on how to save energy, how to use CHIP, how to insulate houses, how to cut down on the use of oil in homes and factories, and how to cut back on the over use of oil and gas in automobiles. All this was being done years ago; it is not new. This opposition has to be reminded of the publications, which are still available today, which were printed years ago on this subject to help the Canadian population know how to conserve energy. Through these very important programs. I am glad that the opposition has brought to our attention the importance of concern for energy and for energy conservation, for alternate forms of energy and the proper pricing of energy. But we can see that the Canadian government has been involved in a widespread diversification of efforts to reduce our dependence on energy, and to provide not just one answer, but several answers, in a number of directions. The very capable Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has pointed out that we have, first of all, a policy on natural gas, that we have been developing a gas pipeline, for example, throughout Canada. You will remember our pipeline debates, you will remember the discussion of the Quebec and maritime gas pipeline, and you are aware of the Alaska pipeline and of the efforts to use gas as one alternative. Another alternative is coal, another is atomic energy, another is methanol and ethanol the use of which we have been trying to encourage in terms of technology, research and development. We have also been trying to encourage the development of tar sands and the use of heavy oil, implemental oil, solar and wind energy and residual oils.

I know, for example, that when the Conservative party was in power, the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who was then the energy critic for the Liberal party, tried even at that time to meet officials in southern Ontario in what we called the energy caucus. He visited solar plants and schools which were heated by solar energy, and he encouraged the use of solar energy in southern Ontario. I remember his concern about this, and in fact just a few months ago, as a result of the R & D policy of the Liberal government, a large corporation in Brampton extended its dry cleaning plant, augmenting its facilities with solar heating. There is no question that there are many ways in which we in the government try to meet our energy needs with diverse plans, not just with only one answer to the whole subject of energy.

In closing I should like to focus upon one particular area, that is, the area of gas. I agree with the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) when he speaks about the problems being faced by the United States. Perhaps he should have been giving his speech in the House of Representatives in the United States when he spoke about the dangers that were facing the auto industry there and the whole North American auto industry, the decisions concerning which are mainly made in the United States. He was correct when he assessed the problems and the vulnerability of the United States in using oil as its one source of energy.

What the Canadian government has done through the Alaska pipeline is to try to induce the Americans to run the pipeline from Prud'hoe Bay overland down through Alaska, across the Yukon, across northern British Columbia, down through Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, into the United States, both east and west. The Canadian government has tried to encourage the Americans to bring their own resources, other than oil, into the western United States. This would help the U.S. to face its energy problems and not to continue to depend on offshore oil.

We would thereby also encourage the Americans, if they would accept this project, to also consider the possibility of bringing their oil from Alaska overland, to protect the environment of B.C., to protect us from the huge tankers which can smash up and thus destroy our ecology on the west coast forever. I believe the Canadian government is trying to help the United States to recognize its vulnerability to dependence upon the tanker system. If we ever had a war, God forbid, the American tanker system bringing American defence oil from northern Alaska by tanker would be extremely exposed and vulnerable. Bringing it by land would be a much safer solution for all.

The Canadian government is trying to see if we can also expand our own natural gas industry by bringing in a pre-built system, and I hope this will be possible. By bringing some Alberta gas initially to the United States, we will help to increase the awareness of the Americans of their addiction to the use of oil and gasoline and of the need to rely on natural gas more quickly.

The American energy system in the west is too dependent on gasoline and oil. By bringing natural gas from Alaska we would encourage the Americans to become more aware of the use of natural gas and the need for replacement of oil by Canadian gas in the western United States. Americans in Chicago and in the middle American states should also be made more aware of their dependence on oil and gasoline and of the importance of using Canadian natural gas instead. By the conscious policy of the Canadian government to try to bring the American government to encourage the use of natural gas from Alaska, and by building a prebuilt pipeline to get Alberta gas to the United States as a first step to getting Alaska gas going to the United States, we will be able to help the Americans recognize the possibility of using gas instead of oil as a fuel.

This gas project will also induce small Canadian gas exploration companies in Alberta to initiate programs to find more gas which can be used in the eastern part of Canada, which can be used in Quebec and the maritimes, and which can be liquefied and used as a substitute fuel for automobiles and larger vehicles. Canadians have been in the forefront in developing this technology as an alternative. Let us therefore be aware of the fact that in this one field alone the Canadian government is trying not only to provide a substitute for oil, as this resolution does not recognize, to make us more self-sufficient, but is also aiming at improving our economy.

By using gas instead of oil, we will be able to reduce our dependency on foreign offshore oil. We will be able to reduce our balance of payments deficit. It will mean the production of $2 billion worth of steel pipeline which will give jobs to thousands of Canadians in Regina and Hamilton producing the steel and the pipeline for the Alaska line. It will provide tens of thousands of jobs for Canadians involved in laying the pipeline and maintaining it where it is on Canadian soil. In every way this policy, just in the field of natural gas alone, is not only aimed at helping Canada become more self-sufficient and to provide Canadians with a cheaper ultimate source of energy, but it helps Americans to understand and learn of the value of depending on natural gas and it helps Americans to receive this on a safe overland route. Also it provides the United States with a more secure and less vulnerable source of energy. As Americans become more conscious of this, they too will develop new technologies in the use of this vital resource. Therefore they will be able to help their automotive industry and perhaps will be able to change over some vehicles to the use of natural gas.

This whole policy is not just selfish for Canada. In fact it is intended to meet the very criticisms just aimed at us. It is aimed to help the United States to meet and understand its own problems, and for us to co-operate to make it less dependent on strategic energy from the Middle East and their unstable governments, such as were described. I do not believe we should play political games with world problems. Indeed I believe we should co-operate. Therefore I should like to say I am glad this debate was held. It provided us on this side of the House with an opportunity to stand up and point out why our policies in each of the areas are indeed helpful not only to Canada but in fact to the entire western world.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on two points of order. First, I had consultations with the other House leaders earlier today concerning reverting to presenting reports from standing or special committees. There seems to be unanimous consent for the House to revert to presenting reports from standing or special committees to allow the chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to table his report. When he is finished, I will have another point of order to raise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. President of the Privy Council indicates that there may be unanimous consent for the House to revert to presenting reports from standing or special committees so that the hon. member for Sarnia may present the third report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, my second point of order relates to the veterans legislation. Yesterday I undertook in the name of the government to agree to proceed with that legislation under the condition that it was considered through all stages and completed through all stages tomorrow. I want to seek the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to give copies of that bill to House leaders of opposition parties as soon as it is printed. That might be at about 9.30 or ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

I should like to specify that the bill is not printed yet. Our intention was to deal with it later on this month, but since we were requested to deal with it tomorrow I did what was necessary to make sure we could proceed tomorrow. The bill will be printed only in time for it to be distributed to House leaders tomorrow morning. I would not like to set a precedent, but in that particular case, taking into consideration the agreement made yesterday, I should like to have the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to give copies of the bill when printed tomorrow to House leaders of the opposition parties before it is introduced in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Are hon. members agreed?

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On a point of clarification, that does not in any way jeopardize the debate on that bill tomorrow afternoon; it will proceed.

Mr. Knowles: On the contrary, it facilitates it.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE TO PROVIDE COMPREHENSIVE ENERGY PROGRAM

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald:

That this House deplores the Liberal government's indifference to the consequences of the global oil crisis and condemns its failure to provide a comprehensive energy program that would make Canada self-sufficient in energy.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in rising to debate the motion presented on behalf of my party by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). The motion condemns the government for its lack of planning in the field of energy in a manner that would take care of the future needs of Canadians. I take particular pleasure in doing so today, because it was exactly six years ago that I was elected to this chamber, the class of 1974. I remember very clearly the campaign on which we were elected at that time, we of the class of 1974. At that time we were debating wage and price controls, and there were very hard decisions to make.

Miss MacDonald: The Grits do not remember that.

Mr. Friesen: They have a lapse of memory on that score. The prime minister of the day went around saying that it was not necessary. I remember very clearly that western Canada in particular was willing to make very tough decisions to meet the future needs of Canadians. They were willing to do that, even though that concept was not naturally acceptable to us in the Conservative party. We were willing to take that short-term risk for the long-term gain and benefit of Canadians.

I heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) today talk about all the things the government was doing, as though the Liberal Government of Canada is free to do all those things. But I would remind him of an old French proverb which says, "He who drags his chains is not free". I would point out that the Liberal government has some very, very obvious chains it is dragging about which limit its activity. Therefore it is no longer free to do what it wants.

The first one is the chain of deficit financing. The Liberal government talks in grandiose terms of doing what it wants, and all the time it spends beyond its means and imprisons itself to world economic forces. That ought not to be the case if it were running its ship the way it should. The second one is the chain of lack of planning for the future of Canada. The third is the chain of having to depend on offshore sources of energy. Today we are depending on offshore sources of energy when it was just a matter of ten years ago that we were net exporters of oil. Is that planning on the part of the government? Is that being creative? "He who drags his chains is not free".

I want to remind the Liberal government that the western part of the country was willing to take a tough decision in 1974, it was willing to take it in 1980 as well. The major fault

I would assign to the Liberal government is its continuing fault of trying to suggest to Canadians that there are easy panaceas for very difficult problems, that we can spend our way into prosperity, and that no one has to pay the extra cost which energy is naturally costing today. They suggest that we do not have to pay that 18 cents or more for the extra cost of production today. They say that there are easy solutions to very difficult problems. The crime of the Liberal government is that it is doing this at the expense of our children and grandchildren. They are the ones who will have to pay the bill.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening, at which time the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) again will have the floor.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

● (2000)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, as we broke for the dinner hour I was saying that the success of the Liberal party at the polls lay in the fact that they were able to convince the majority of the Canadian people there really are easy solutions to the most difficult problems we face, whether they are in respect of the economy, wage and price controls, energy or, the 18-cent excise tax that was to be placed on gasoline. The Liberal party was able to convince the voters there was an easy solution to this most difficult problem.

An hon. Member: You don't know what it is.

Mr. Friesen: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) loves to talk but he does not perform very well.

The crime of their success lies in the fact that in both cases, in 1974 and in 1980, they made our children and our children's children suffer for a delusion they were able to perpetrate. This is not a matter of solutions they have provided, but postponement of those solutions.

If they had been successful on the political stage at home they would have moved on an entirely different platform, particularly when they move into energy negotiations around the world. It is a different stage, it is different players and there are different stakes. On the world stage it is a matter of survival, not simply a matter of re-election.

Domestically they have been able to pull it off as far as re-election was concerned, but the great concern I am sure of Canadians is that the Liberal government, because its major concern is one of public relations rather than of substance, is going to be snookered when it comes to working with the big players on the international stage.

Incidentally, I might add, it is strange in the last week that the governments of Mexico and Venezuela have announced at least $1 per barrel increases in petroleum prices, without one whimper from the Liberal government regarding what it will cost the Canadian taxpayers for that increase in the price of petroleum products, yet let the premier of Alberta suggest that the price of Canadian petroleum ought to move to at least 50 per cent of world prices and he becomes greedy and selfish. He becomes everything but a Canadian. Somehow there is a double standard in the Liberal party on that score.

I recall watching on television just the other day the president of Dome Petroleum saying that the difference is not a difference between $34, the world price, and $14, the domestic price, but really a difference between $34 and $5, because the $14 per barrel domestic price means that the provincial and federal governments receive the additional $9 and the oil companies receive only $5. However, the Saudi Arabians, the Venezuelans, the Mexicans and those in Kuwait are receiving the full $34 price. Guess where those companies are going to go, those companies which are receiving only $5 on the domestic scene? If they have a choice of $5 return per barrel in Canada and $20, $30 or $35 in the United States, Mexico or Venezuela, guess where they are going to go? We are pretending that in Canada we can suppress the price of energy, keep it artificially low, and still maintain or achieve self-sufficiency in petroleum products.

On the world stage, while countries are mildly concerned about price, they are not concerned so much about price any more as they are concerned about security of supply. That is now the name of the game. It is the future and the existence of those countries about which they are worried. While members have been talking about the tragedy that Third World countries are facing because of increases in the cost of energy, the real question is, will they make it at all? One hon. member referred to this just before the dinner hour. Some of these Third World countries have effectively declared bankruptcy already. They are rewriting their loans. The name of the game in those countries is survival.

If we are to look only at price then surely we are going to lose out on security of supply. The price is important, but on the world stage the very fact that security of supply is an issue, means there is going to be greater competition for a diminishing source of supply. As the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands pointed out in her speech earlier, Russia is competing for world supply now. I do not know how many Canadians are aware of the fact that the greatest producer of petroleum in the world today is not Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Iraq or Iran, but the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union produces almost 12 million barrels of petroleum per day and is a net exporter to the satellite countries. It is also exporting natural gas to western Europe. However, this is the last year in which the U.S.S.R. will be a net exporter. Next year it will become a net importer of oil and, when that happens, hon. members can guess what will happen in the Middle East.

Is it any wonder that the government of the Soviet Union is interested in Afghanistan, Iran, and the Persian Gulf? Is it any wonder that the Middle East countries in wanting to preserve their cash flow over the next 20 years, 30 years, 40 years or 50 years, are diminishing their production? That is why these countries are the centre of interest of all the nations of the world, because supply is the issue of the day.

The issue is not simply price. Therefore it becomes critical as to how sensitive we are in handling our foreign policy. All our friends, including the United States, will be competing for that same limited source of supply. The issue which we must face is how well we can preserve our domestic economic integrity without alienating our best friends. Earlier in the evening the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) mentioned a continental energy policy with some fear. He does not have to worry because it is already here. There is no signed continental energy agreement, but there is a de facto continental energy agreement, because there is one thing which the United States and the other countries are very well aware of, and that is Canada's budgetary problems.

The other countries know that we are in debt and that we need money. They know that Mexico is in the same position. The United States, for example, knows very well that while Mexico has vast reserves of natural gas and petroleum, and is talking about limited sales to that country, it needs the cash flow to raise their standard of living. If they know about Mexico, they certainly know about Canada. They know that we are facing a $14 billion deficit this year. They know that we are $80 billion in debt.

The United States also knows that when the crunch comes, the Liberal government, having created the problem, will try to extricate itself in the easiest plausible way, and that they will sell. Who needs a written continental agreement when one is in the kind of trouble which Canada is in in terms of its fiscal arrangement? I said earlier in the evening that he who drags his chains is not free. The Liberal government has brought the Canadian economy to such a strait that we are not free any more to decide whether or not we will sell. That is why the Liberal government is so anxious to impose an excise tax on natural gas in British Columbia.

Mr. Epp: What about hydro power?

Mr. Friesen: There is also hydro power in British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba. The United States know that they can pull it off because they know that the cash flow is necessary, that the sale will go through and that the federal government will benefit from it.

This leads us to the importance of the pre-build section of the pipeline about which some hon. members spoke earlier. The question is not whether or not the pre-build section of the pipeline will be built; the question is if and when it is built, will this Liberal government ensure that the future of Canada is protected in the transaction?

Just a few weeks ago the cabinet sought more concrete assurances on this matter from the United States. Now, the congress of the United States has passed a resolution reinforcing the intention of the Americans to build the Alaska leg of that pipeline. But what if, after that pre-build section is completed in Canada and we have invested $1.2 billion in its construction and we begin to export natural gas to the U.S., the Americans decide in the ensuing five years, in 1985, that they have a better way of providing their energy, whatever the means may be? What if the Americans decide to cash in the chips? What will Canada do then?

Does this government have any kind of alternatives or contingency plans in case the Americans decide after five years that they do not want to build the Alaska section of that pipeline? What are their contingency plans? Are they, for example, willing to subsidize the pre-build section afterwards? Is there a contingency to increase Canadian sales of natural gas to the United States, because Canada needs the cash flow? Will that contingency plan be to extend the natural gas pipeline up the Mackenzie Valley to the Delta gas fields?

What are the contingency plans, if any, of this Liberal government? There are some limitations to the American proposal. The Americans cannot subsidize the Alaska leg of the pipeline with tax money. They cannot allow oil companies to invest in an equitable way in that pipeline, and they cannot allow Canadians to begin tracking of the costs through the Canadian section. There are some severe limitations.

Recognizing those limitations and the fact that all we have is an international agreement at this time—there is no ironclad agreement on finances—what assurances has the Liberal government extracted from the Americans that Canada will not be left in a greater debt position as a result of that agreement?

The Liberal government is talking about an export tax on energy, particularly natural gas and electricity to the United States. What about the consumptive products in Canada which are produced as the result of consuming energy, the byproducts of natural gas? Will the Liberal government decide that all the resins, plastics and the energy-consuming products which are made from petroleum and petroleum byproducts will be taxed? What is the limit to which the Canadian government, because of its reckless spending in the past, is willing to go in taxing energy exports?

Will the government stop at taxing energy and electricity, or will it include uranium? What about natural gas products? How far will the government go? The fact is that the industrial complex of the United States is already shifting. It is moving from the cold north where so many of the factories have become obsolete. They are rationalizing their industries and moving them further south where less energy is required and it is closer to the sources of energy. They will be closer to the Mexican pipelines and the ships and pipelines which come up the Mississippi Valley.

What implications does the fact that the industrial complex of the United States is moving further south have on Canada's marketing of petroleum and petroleum-products to that country?

Mr. Evans: Oh, oh!

Mr. Friesen: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre is mumbling again, but that is about all he ever does. How far is the Liberal government willing to go to protect the future of Canada? I said at the outset that he who drags his chains is not free. Canada has been chained by indebtedness. The Liberal government has chained itself to indebtedness and, as a result, Canada no longer has the freedom of movement which we enjoyed at one time. Ten years ago Canada was a net exporter, but today we are a net importer. That is why I fully endorse the motion introduced by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands that this government stands condemned for its failure to adopt an innovative energy program.

• (2020)

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I presume that the motion which we are discussing was introduced by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) because, as the former secretary of state for external affairs and with her knowledge and her expertise in international affairs she hoped the debate would take on some international connotation.

Miss MacDonald: That is what I was hoping.

Mr. Mackasey: It is unfortunate that it has not. I must say to the hon. lady, however, that if it has not she should look around at members on that side of the House for the particular reason since most of them insisted, once again, on discussing events leading up to the last election. It boggles the mind somewhat that many, many months after the election, speaker after speaker from the opposition has taken this approach. I feel sorry for the hon. member who set the right tone and raised the international complications and implications of a worldwide energy policy, and who now finds that the debate has bogged down and become a repeat performance of the issues that dominated the last election.

I believe it was a former minister, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), who referred again to the almost immoral action of the NDP and the Liberals in "ganging up", I think is the expression he used, to defeat the government of the day last December. It is unfortunate that he has forgotten that the real defeat was not in December; the real defeat was in February, after the people of Canada had a chance to analyse the policy of the Tory government and found it discriminatory, ineffective, and hardly suited to the 1980s.

Although the government was defeated in December by the collective vote of the opposition parties, that government had an opportunity to be returned with a greater majority, if they had not been so adamant in stating that if they were returned they would introduce again precisely the same energy policy, without the slightest change.

I think that between December and February Canadians, at first glance appalled at the thought of another election so soon, concentrated on the issues. Because the December budget was, in effect, a piece of legislation through which the Tory energy policy was enunciated, it is logical that the debates during December, January, and February centred on it. The government of the day had ample opportunity to explain its policy to the Canadian public, to explain the need for conservation, to explain the need for a policy. The people listened and found that government wanting.

The one conclusion that I came to after listening to the debates and participating in the election campaign, was not that people were particularly concerned about paying an additional 18, 20 or 30 cents for a gallon of gas; that is inevitable—

Mr. Friesen: It is?

Mr. Mackasey: It is inevitable.

Mr. Friesen: All right.

Mr. Mackasey: What is important is that the increase should not be imposed in the discriminatory manner in which the government of the day was prepared to impose it.

When I heard the argument that the price had to be raised in order to conserve gasoline, I knew that it would not convince the farmers in Lincoln. Whether gasoline was $2, $3 or $4 per gallon, they would have to use the same amount to earn a living, or cultivate their land. The people could not understand an energy policy that on the one hand asked them to leave their automobiles at home and use public transportation and, on the other hand, put an excise tax on transportation.

Fishermen could not understand how they were expected to cut back on the use of fuel and gasoline despite the increase that was proposed, when the only way they could survive was to pay the tax and continue using energy.

Once again, the Tory policy seemed to say, "If you can afford the increase, so be it." As usual the farmer, the cab driver, and people who had to go to work by public transit, the fisherman—the little fellow—would be expected to pay the 18-cent excise tax.

It is amazing how insensitive that governent was. It failed to appreciate that the excise tax that already existed did not apply, because of rebates, to the farmer, to the commercial traveller, to the cab driver, and to people who had to use their automobile or tractor in order to earn a living. These people rose up in anger in the last election.

I think hon. members opposite would now agree that, all things being equal, it might have been a little wiser of the Conservative party, during that two-month period, to have suggested that if they were returned they would exempt those traditional groups who, because of their profession or background or way of life, had to use gasoline, and for whom it was not a luxury.

The problem is not how much gasoline costs but, rather, that policies be applied with equity, justice, compassion and understanding—that we do not penalize that segment of society which is least able to protect itself. I suppose in many ways that is the difference between our two parties, Mr. Speaker. We in this party care about people.

If gasoline were to cost $2.50 or $3 per gallon it would not prevent anyone who wants to drive a Cadillac, a Mercedes or whatever, from doing so. Those people can only be attacked through rationing. An extra 18 cents per gallon for the farmer or nurseryman in Lincoln, or the fellow who has to drive 12 miles to the steel company, or people who go to work in buses which pass on the 18 cents in the form of increased cost, shows insensitivity to their position. It is obvious that the government of the day was not defeated on its energy policy; it was defeated because of that insensitivity. I am surprised that all these months later that party still has not realized that they were not defeated in December; they simply were not re-elected in February. There is a fundamental difference there, and one that they should heed.

They had the opportunity to go to the people and say, "Look at the big bad coalition of NDP and Liberals who defeated us. They did not give us a chance. We have only been in office nine or ten months and we have only had six months to study the issues in Banff or Jasper, or whatever secluded area. We were just back and the big bad opposition ganged up and threw us out." When they were thrown out they had an opportunity to explain their energy policy to the public—why they would put an 18-cent excise tax on a gallon of gas even for the farmer, the fishermen or the cab driver. In fairness to the opposition, I must say that they tried, but smug in their arrogance about their policy they went so far as to say, "We would not change a comma—not a semi-colon. If re-elected we will do exactly the same thing."

As a government they may have underestimated the opposition, but they made a more serious error in underestimating the intelligence of Canadians who recognized their energy policy as disastrous, discriminatory, and unnecessary.

I think all of us would agree that we must move to energy self-sufficiency. We must be as independent as we can from foreign sources. The motion of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands reads as follows:

That this House deplores the Liberal government's indifference to the consequences of the global oil crisis and condemns its failure to provide a comprehensive energy program that would make Canada self-sufficient in energy.

We are self-sufficient in energy, Mr. Speaker, we are one of the few countries in the world that is self-sufficient in energy. We have a surplus. At this moment we are exporting natural gas, coal, uranium, copper—you name it. We have a surplus. Where we have a shortage is in oil, a particular form of energy. The prime objective of this government, as the minister has stated on ample occasions, and he repeated it today, is to divert industries and homes from the use of oil, wherever possible, to natural gas. It is not a policy that is unique to Canada. England announced a growing emphasis in this particular field about two weeks ago.

That was the rationale behind the extension of the pipeline to Quebec City and eventually to the Atlantic provinces so that we utilize natural gas as much as possible rather than oil. That is the reason why we are spending millions of dollars in research for other forms of energy for our automobiles. That is the reason why we have brought in such programs—and maybe the opposition did—in the whole field of insulation. The whole thrust of this government is to reduce the use of oil and that has been going on for some considerable time. Frankly, offshore oil is the greatest single contributing factor to inflation in the seven industrialized nations whose representatives met in Venice recently. It is stated right in their policy paper.

I am sure that we all agree with the objective, which is to make Canada self-sufficient. Where we differ with the Conservative party is how we do that. How do we force people to conserve? The previous government of the day suggested putting an 18-cent excise tax on the farmer and the fisherman and maybe he would only fish and farm half of the week. It is mind boggling how such a program could result not only in the defeat of the government in December but in a very definite defeat of the party in office by the people.

It is wrong to say that this government does not have a policy. Its policy has been enunciated a dozen times by the minister. It is reflected in actions. It is reflected by the commitment to the extension of a pipeline through to Quebec and eventually through to the Atlantic provinces, or if Sable Island proves to be the success we think, it will no doubt result in natural gas being available to the maritime provinces—certainly the Atlantic provinces—from Sable Island.

There is another fundamental difference in the policy between the opposition and the government, one that was clearly elaborated and discussed almost ad nauseam during the election campaign, namely, Petro-Canada. Now the member opposite does not like it. Why would he? I would not either, if I was sitting there. But in 1975 the Conservative party made it clear their concept of private enterprise was so pure—and rooted in Adam Smith's time, certainly in R. B. Bennett's time—in no way should the government of the day get involved in such a terrible thing as Petro-Canada.

Mr. Waddell: It is an Irish company.

Mr. Mackasey: Well, we did. In fact we even let the NDP help us a little bit. It is there. The bill was passed in all three stages. I think the Conservatives voted against it, on all three stages as I recall. That is true to their convictions, philosophies and ideals. I will have to say that the Conservatives are consistent because, from the moment they formed the government, they decided to destroy Petro-Canada. They made it clear. They got the head of the Treasury Board to do all kinds of studies and to roam around feverishly to see what private groups would buy PetroCan, at what price and so forth. Just to make it clear where they stood on PetroCan, I think they cut off about $80 million from its budget and made it clear that the company was not to expand and that it was on borrowed time. The word went around among the key people in Petro-Can that they had better start looking for other jobs.

I do not hear the opposition members now getting up in this debate and suggesting when and if they get back into power that they would destroy PetroCan. It has proven to be a very big success. Perhaps it is a surprise to members opposite to find that perhaps the greatest booster of Petro-Canada today is private enterprise. In many of the projects in Canada, especially where it is very risky and where it takes risk capital, private enterprise is sitting down with Petro-Canada and plotting out future moves. For instance, Hibernia, the Beaufort Sea and all these things, which the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) talked about earlier today and which I am not going to repeat, are all concrete examples of how government and private enterprise can act in concert. Unlike the NDP who would buy it outright, we vary to a degree.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: If there are some fresh ideas from that party, I would be tempted at times, but I think I lost all my illusions with that party in the field of energy when a former leader found himself as a director of one of the largest private enterprise oil companies in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: To say nothing of being president of Air Canada.

Mr. Mackasey: I think the hon. lady who introduced the motion did bring a dimension to the debate that is necessary and useful by bringing it onto an international plane. She emphasized the fact that perhaps we do not talk about it enough. But this problem is not unique to this country. We are one of the fortunate countries to have a surplus of energy, even though we have a shortage of oil. Other countries have a shortage of all forms of energy. This is certainly true of the emerging nations.

What did come out of Venice? What did the seven leaders and their officials who discussed the whole thing—what did they think? It was their realization that the OPEC policy, its cartel and the terrible cost of oil, which has become a necessity in this world as we industrialize, are really the main causes of inflation. I often wish the fiscal policies of some of those governments would reflect an appreciation that that is the cause of inflation.

Before the dinner hour I read the documents that came out of that meeting in Venice in order to find out what solutions there were and how they differed from those of the present government. What was suggested? The very same thing which the minister of energy for Canada has suggested ever since he took over the position in May, that is to break the link between economic growth and the consumption of oil. In other words, conserve oil on the one hand, and increase substantially the production and use of alternate energy sources on the other. That is exactly what we are trying to do by encouraging the use of natural gas in this country.

An hon. Member: Are you going to export it?

Mr. Mackasey: Yes. The hon. member is very concerned, as a good socialist, that we will be exporting natural gas. I am fully in accord with the exporting of natural gas to the United States. I have no trouble at all with that policy. I do know that there are anywhere from 8,000 to 11,000 natural gas wells capped at this very moment in Alberta because a market cannot be found. I think it is ridiculous to deny the Americans natural gas providing, as the hon. member stated earlier, that some of the cash flow is used for further development, exploration and refinement of that industry. I have no trouble at all dealing with that argument.

The socialists over there would cap all the natural gas wells other than those with which their former leader is associated, and take the caps off 50 years from now. That is a little silly.

Mr. Waddell: It is profitable though.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member reminds me of something that Bernard Shaw said, "Anybody under 40 who is not a socialist needs his head examined, and anybody over 40 who is, should also have his head examined."

At the Venice Summit it was suggested the major planks of the seven countries for their energy strategy would include increased investment in alternate energy sources. We are doing that. We are providing millions of dollars for a pipeline to be extended to the Atlantic provinces. Provision of incentives to help substitution of oil in both industrial and residential use was also suggested. We are already doing that in Canada. That is part of our policy, to use natural gas, and to use coal and use electricity wherever possible rather than oil. The introduction of new—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I must say I appreciate the comments of the previous speaker. I certainly enjoyed what he had to say. I was somewhat alarmed, however, about his comments regarding the sale of natural gas, recalling a previous member from across the way, a minister, who not that long ago suggested we had enough oil in Canada to last 900 years. I was suspicious that we might be hearing a repetition of that.

An hon. Member: Was he a Liberal?

Mr. Riis: Yes, he was a Liberal. I also appreciated the former speaker's comments regarding one of the pages that the Liberal party tore from the NDP handbook, that of PetroCan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: While recognizing that indeed it was the Liberal party that bore PetroCan, we must keep in mind it was the NDP that conceived PetroCan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Energy

Mr. Riis: I am very pleased to have an opportunity this evening to speak in this debate on what must be the most important topic before Parliament this session and, indeed, the most important topic facing Canadians today, that of energy. Our future is at stake. As the previous speaker from Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) indicated, we are also concerned tonight about the future of our children when speaking about Canada's energy future.

Unquestionably a great deal more attention must be paid to the question of our energy future by both government and Parliament. Listening to the speakers from the government on this issue, I am reminded of my years at university, taking courses in policy-making and planning. My professors would stress how important planning is for business, industry, cities, families and, indeed, government. They would outline the process of planning as being three simple steps. The first was the establishment of a clearly defined goal; second, to identify strategies to attain that goal; last, to implement those strategies in a satisfactory way toward that end.

I suggest that the Liberal government has failed at step one. What is our goal in terms of our energy future in Canada, let alone what is our strategy for our energy future? We are distinguished among nations of the world as being one with no comprehensive national energy policy. Now, like never before, we are in need of one. Now, like never before, we are in need of strong leadership. It really is a political decision and a political priority requiring backbone and courage to come to grips with this very crucial issue.

The tragedy, of course, is indicated here today in the fact that this discussion on our energy future comes up during opposition day. An earlier speaker, the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) indicated that "here is a chance to explain our policies". I ask, is this leadership from a government that waits until an opposition day before this crucial issue is discussed in Parliament? Is this courage being demonstrated by the present government?

In his speech earlier today, the minister indicated that Canada has an energy policy. That will be news to many Canadians. Ask the members of his own party, what is their energy policy? Ask the members of this House what the energy policy is of Canada. Ask the oil companies. They would be happy to know. Indeed, ask Canadians what our energy policy is. I suggest that our inability here in this House to articulate our energy policy indicates the reality of the whole situation. The language we use in a sense betrays our confusion, in that tonight we are discussing a motion concerned with the lack of a comprehensive energy policy that would make Canada self-sufficient in energy.

We have read comments by various ministers and other people within the Liberal party, commenting on the need for energy self-sufficiency. We have energy self-sufficiency today in Canada. We are net exporters of energy in the form of hydroelectric power, natural gas, coal and oil. Perhaps members opposite ought to get together in their caucus and come to grips with just what in fact the wording is, regarding energy self-sufficiency.

I would like to review the dilemma facing Canada in a particular context. Canada has the unique reputation in the world today of being one of the most wealthy nations in terms of its natural resources, thanks to the generosity of nature. However, we are also the most underdeveloped industrialized nation in the world. We devote a smaller percentage of our gross national product to research and development than virtually all other industrialized nations, with the one exception being Greece. We have more foreign ownership of our economy both in absolute and per capita terms than any other nation in the world. We are the only energy-rich nation in the world that has handed its strategic oil and gas industry, and thus its energy future, over to foreign corporations.

In an era of growing energy scarcity, we are distinguished among peoples by using more energy per capita than any other country in the entire world. It is amazing that the rest of the world takes us even half-way seriously. The fact that Canada was even asked to participate at the Venice Summit talks can only be interpreted as a tribute to mother nature, and surely not a recognition of leadership provided by this government. The Liberal government has failed to provide the much-needed leadership during these crucial energy times, and there is little indication of change. Certainly we have heard nothing today that would indicate any change for the future.

It has been seven years since the energy crisis first hit the United States. However, we in Canada never had to face the problems that American citizens faced a few years ago—lineups at the gas pumps and serious shortages of home heating fuel. The prices being paid for gas in the United States, Europe and Japan, we have not had to face. This, of course, has tended to reinforce and prolong wasteful industrial and consumer practices, raising energy comsumption per capita in Canada to record levels. This shows a singular lack of leadership on the part of this government in that it has failed, and I must stress that term failed, the Canadian people. It has failed to develop actively and implement through policy the principles of conservation necessary to build a conserver society.

Surely our first line of defence in this energy battle must be conservation and substitution. The federal government has failed to promote aggressively research and development of alternative energy sources. The Canadian government has indeed supported research and promoted the development of the Candu nuclear power technology, but I suggest that the use of this technology is highly questionable on both safety and moral grounds, and it is certainly unnecessary within the Canadian context. If there exists a country in the world today which does not need to run headlong into the development of nuclear technology and nuclear energy, it is Canada. What country in the world has the energy resources at its disposal that we have? I suggest that we are not heeding that and in fact are running headlong at an unnecessary pace.

A responsible energy policy in our country should have as its foundation a comprehensive conservation program. It is possible, for example, to match the output of a multi-million dollar

Beaufort Sea oil well or a multi-million dollar oil sands plant by simply not using oil the way we do.

There is a very tremendous opportunity to save energy in Canada by re-insulating and improving the design of our homes, by improving energy designs and standards across the country, using automatic thermostat adjustments, more efficient industrial practices, building lighter and more fuel-efficient automobiles, discouraging the use of single passenger automobiles, improving public transit systems in our urban centres and developing solar, wind, wood waste, tidal and small stream alternative energy sources.

A recent study by the Canadian Energy Research Institute indicates that an annual saving by 1985 of no less than 29 million cubic metres of crude oil equivalent is possible if all residential, commercial and transportation sectors were mobilized to introduce and adopt conservationist alternatives. This would more than match the combined output of both Syncrude Canada and Suncor tar sands plants at Fort McMurray by the year 1985, five short years away.

Another way of looking at these conservation measures is that the savings would potentially reduce Canada's current level of oil imports by 35 per cent, a problem which has been thoroughly discussed and examined tonight by a number of speakers. This is a devastating aspect in terms of our balance of payments, and this would be a simple and very humanistic way of dealing with that dilemma.

It is imperative now, before it is absolutely too late, that the Liberal government provide leadership in this area of alternate sources of energy and substitution of energy. Unfortunately, the leadership has not come at the federal government level up until this point.

I use as an example of this a school in my riding of Kamloops-Shuswap where the local school district took the initiative and provided the leadership to construct a prototype school which would be energy-saving, utilizing solar energy for heating purposes. In terms of its energy-saving devices this school has been successful beyond the wildest expectations of the school board and its advisers, and the solar energy component has been extremely successful. I recognize that funding for this prototype was provided by both the provincial and federal governments, but from the federal government only after a considerable amount of time literally begging for a few thousands of dollars to experiment, and that, I suggest, is not the kind of leadership our federal government should be providing in this area.

Something more recent which I dearly hope and pray that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) considers seriously is a proposal from Seymour Arm along Shuswap Lake in my riding. A small community of 300 dwellings and a number of small forest operations plus a few thousands of tourists in the summer now depend upon approximately 50 private generators for the creation of electrical power using one thousand barrels of oil annually. Nearby three streams exist coming off the mountain peaks, and the community wishes to harness the energy in these streams and has asked the federal government for support in its effort. The federal government should provide this leadership. The federal government could provide research and development of small scale hydroelectric technology and provide encouragement and support for the development of this small scale energy project. This would recognize that we want to use our renewable resources. It would reduce our dependency on fossil fuels, and it would provide encouragement to Canadian manufacturing firms.

I would like to end with a modest proposal in terms of Canadianizing our energy industry. Our oil industry in Canada has a very special status. It has repeatedly and with considerable success convinced the federal government and consumers that higher prices are necessary to ensure adequate energy supplies in the future. By and large I suspect that Canadians agree with that. What the oil industry is really saying, however, is that this business is so risky that it cannot afford to go to the equity or bond markets or to the banks to get the necessary capital to finance its exploration in energy supply programs, so what it does is add a surcharge onto the price of oil and gas products.

The consumer provides the risk capital through a higher price in the marketplace, risk capital that the oil companies do not have to pay dividends on or interest on and never have to pay back. Of course the oil companies do not explain this to the consumer because it is not enough. They want even more. That is why the consumer as a taxpayer also provides the oil companies with all those tax breaks, investment tax credits, accelerated depreciation, depletion allowances, super deletion, and deferred taxes. Imperial Oil has now accumulated half a billion dollars in deferred taxes. Rather than worry about collecting those taxes in the future, why not have the government receive ownership equal to the amount of those deferred taxes?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: This would provide Canadians with ten million Imperial Oil shares, at the present value. I suspect that we are not going to see those deferred taxes ever, ever, and I suspect that ten million shares in hand would certainly be a much more appropriate approach. Considering the earlier comments, is it any wonder why the oil companies' profits are so unconscionably high? Would small businesses across our country not welcome those same benefits which we give to the major oil companies, the seven sisters? If Canadian consumers are providing the bulk of risk capital used for exploration by the oil companies through paying higher prices at the pump, they should be receiving an equity position in the oil companies for that investment.

For example, if a person were to buy 4,000 litres of gas from Gulf Canada during the year and, out of an average price of 25 cents per litre, Gulf spends two cents on exploration, then this consumer over the year has financed $80 of Gulf's exploration package. If Gulf common stocks are selling now at $30 a share, then this consumer should be entitled to two and two thirds shares of Gulf for that particular year.

We must give large foreign oil companies credit. The Canadian government has allowed them to charge higher prices, part of which is used, by their own admission, to provide risk capital for exploration and to expand further their ownership and control of Canada's energy resources. They do not have to pay interest or dividends on this money and, what is more, they do not even have to pay it back. It would be a big step into the twentieth century for this Liberal government to recognize that it is the Canadian consumer through paying higher oil and gas prices, and the Canadian taxpayer through generous tax and investment incentives to the oil companies, who are really financing the development of Canada's energy resources. Consequently, we would go a long way in repatriating our energy resources if we required foreign-owned oil companies to provide Canadian consumers and taxpayers with equity ownership in exchange for their, so-called, investment.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the comments of the last speaker, the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), and in his proposal that, in return for some tax concessions, oil companies give the Canadian people some equity. In essence, I want to point out to the hon. member that this is the same line of thinking that we had with respect to PetroCan because there is a far greater difference in benefit, I suggest to him, in having the Canadian people own a corporation and have individual Canadians hold the shares of that corporation, receive dividends from it, go to meetings and take an interest in it, than there is in having that corporation owned by the state. I think there is a subtle distinction.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: I see that some hon. members over there are disturbed by what I am saying—

An hon. Member: So were the voters. Look at what happened!

Mr. MacKay: I believe that there is a much different feeling among Canadians who own corporations individually and collectively in shareholding than there is in their owning of the CBC or of Air Canada. They can be very proud of these corporations, but they do not have the same feeling of participation and ownership in them. I am only pointing that out to say that it is interesting that the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap should bring that line of thinking to this debate, and I should like to discuss this with him some time.

I was also interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), a distinguished member of the House for many years. He castigated us on this side of the House for bringing in matters pertaining to the last few months and the election, and then proceeded to do just that himself and to build a great deal of his speech around it. He was rather selective in his language. He spoke about the benefits that his farmers and fishermen in Lincoln were not getting. I did not realize there were so many commercial fishermen in Lincoln. But he failed to mention the energy tax credit, which is another part of that equation. He talked, and rightly so, about the initiative of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) in bringing this important topic for debate, and I certainly agree with him there. I think all members would agree that she brought an important international dimension to the debate today. She spoke about the needs of the Third World. She spoke about the strategic and even military importance of oil as a commodity. She spoke about the various balances that had to be maintained in our global community. I think we should all commend her for that.

I would have liked to have seen a more direct approach to that sort of thinking from the other side, since it was the Liberal government in the last number of years that had, through sheer tenure of office, the opportunity to do many of the things that they now claim they have done and in fact have not.

I think it would be useful, Mr. Speaker, to put on the record a barn-burner of a speech which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made when he was campaigning in Halifax on January 25. I referred to it briefly before in this chamber. Let us see what he said of the Liberal party's energy policy, following which I will indicate to the House, or perhaps we should all consider, just how far the Liberal party and the government have come to making a start. The Prime Minister said at that time:

> The Liberal plan seeks to achieve energy security at a fair price for all Canadians.

That is very commendable. He went on to say:

> Our energy program for the 1980s consists of seven major commitments. We would start at once to:
> 1) Set a made-in-Canada pricing policy to secure adequate supplies of energy at reasonable prices.

I do not see that this has been done yet, nor do I see any great progress.

He went on to say:

> 2) Achieve energy security through the accelerated development of Canada's domestic potential and the ensuring of Canada's offshore supply.

Again, to be fair, I do not see much progress there either. The President of Mexico came to this country. He had a cordial visit. I think it would be generally conceded that, when he left, Canada had achieved much less in the way of security of petroleum supply than we had hoped or than we had been led to believe would occur.

The Prime Minister went on to say:

> 3) Develop a more balanced energy program through the replacement of oil by natural gas and other energy forms.

Well, sir, I and other members in this chamber have been urging the government to get on with the provision of a pipeline for natural gas to the Atlantic region. That has not been done yet, and despite the specific commitment which was made later on in this very same speech, the most we can get out of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is that it is the preferred option or that he is interested in it. So much for that commitment.

The fourth commitment made by the Prime Minister was as follows:

> 4) Strengthen and expand Petro-Canada as an instrument of national policy.

Perhaps this has been done, and to that extent I commend the Prime Minister and the government for it.

His fifth commitment was:

> 5) Place a new emphasis on conservation and the promotion of energy alternatives.

I do not see any there. As a matter of fact, coming back to something which the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap said, he neglected one item which I think was promised, that is, a closer supervision and discouragement of the kind of use that is made of oil to heat large buildings and private homes. A tremendous amount of emphasis has been placed on the automobile industry, getting them, in an attempt to save petroleum products, to bring out cars that are more energy efficient, and yet there are many buildings in this country which consume enormous amounts of oil and in which the furnaces have nozzles that are not suitable. All they succeed in doing is sometimes causing them to burn twice the amount of fuel that is required and destroying the furnaces in the process. There should be some energy conservation program specifically directed at what I consider to be an almost criminal practice of using precious petroleum to heat buildings in larger amounts than is necessary.

Another point which the Prime Minister emphasized in Halifax on January 25 before the Halifax Board of Trade, was:

> 6) Ensure that Canada's energy sector becomes more Canadian owned and controlled.

I do not see any initiatives there, either.

His last commitment was:

> 7) See that energy becomes part of the larger economic strategy, forming the core of any industrial or regional development approach.

Again, on the seventh commitment I cannot see any tangible progress toward its achievement. Those commitments were made in January of this year. One thing the Prime Minister did not mention, which I would have thought he would have particularly emphasized in the Atlantic region, was some sort of strategic storage program for petroleum. As the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands pointed out, western consuming nations are not equipped to withstand an even temporary interruption of oil supplies.

It is well known to the government that just about a year ago tremendous interest was being shown by a consortium of Home Oil and Gulf Oil to store approximately 68 millions barrels of oil in salt caverns in Cape Breton Island near the Strait of Canso. At the same time another corporation, at the initiative of Power Corporation, were going to store 90 million barrels of oil in an abandoned iron mine on Bell Island in Newfoundland. This type of conservation must, I suggest, be implemented sooner or later. It is particularly appropriate for oil, but it could be extended to other commodities as well, and it should not just be concentrated on the east coast of Canada. Provisions should be made on the west coast as well.

If the western industrialized world is ever held to ransom even for a short time by the Soviet Union or its satellites, we would not have the raw material to survive, whether it is petroleum, cryolite, whether it is chromium, or whether it is some other type of commodity. It is becoming more and more evident, as the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, the former secretary of state for external affairs, pointed out, that our security of supply is becoming more and more tenuous. The Soviet Union has long had its eye on Iran. Some of us can remember the days when the crying prime minister of Iran, Mohammed Mossadeq, was practically a Moscow puppet, and strenuous efforts were required to get the Russians to back off at that time. I think President Truman of the United States had to make extraordinary efforts in that direction.The Soviet Union is not the type of country which would be easily deterred, and it is just as anxious to take Iran as it is to take Afghanistan. Their aims have not changed.

I should now like to quote Lubor Zink, a columnist who is probably not read enough or listened to enough, who does meticulous research. Some members in this chamber may smile at that, but I suggest to members that Lubor Zink is one of the best authorities to whom we can turn regarding the intentions or, indeed, the charting of what the communist world hopes to achieve. He pointed out that Soviet grand strategy is now grounded in the mutual support of military sub-systems on four continents, and he goes on to describe them. Also he pointed out that three-fifths of the world's oil is now nearly encircled by military allies of the U.S.S.R. in South Yemen, Ethiopia, Syria, Iraq and Afghanistan. He indicated that the southern third of Africa, the Saudi Arabia of minerals, is under siege by Marxist guerrillas. Mr. Zink wrote that a good look at these facts leaves little doubt that NATO cannot be sustained if the links of a Marxist commonwealth the Kremlin strategists are forging were to choke off the flow of oil, essential minerals, and seaborne commerce that is essential for Europe, Japan and the United States.

In this hemisphere we have the potential of getting oil from other nations. We do not seem to have done too well with Mexico. I suggest part of the reason we have not, as was indicated by one of our speakers today, is that we do not have the financial muscle any more to make the kinds of deals that are advantageous with some of the oil producing nations.

One country which has been overlooked and which shares the extremity of this hemisphere with us is Argentina. Argentina is rapidly approaching energy self-sufficiency the same as we are. In its territory of Tierra del Fuego, the explorations for oil, some of which are being carried out by Canadian companies, will soon make that country self-sufficient in oil. As well, Argentina is providing a market for Bolivian natural gas to help that country, and it is thinking of entering into an arrangement with Brazil, not only with respect to natural gas but also with respect to hydro power to stabilize the energy needs of that region. It is at potential major suppliers of energy, such as Argentina and Mexico, that this government ought to be looking in order to supplement our own position until we are able to develop some of the alternate sources of energy to which many speakers have referred this evening and earlier in the debate.

We seem to have forgotten very quickly the lessons the OPEC nations tried to teach us. We continue in this country to buy expensive oil from OPEC. We do not want to pay this money to Alberta. We would rather buy it from OPEC. By keeping an artificially low price in this country, we encourage the wasteful consumption of that commodity which costs our federal treasury so much to import. Unless we do something to become more realistic in our attempts to balance the needs of this country, we may very well have to go back to some kind of rationing.

It seems to me that there is something extremely wrong when a country like ours which is selling petroleum and keeping the price artificially low domestically also is subsidizing the automobiles, aircraft and fishing fleets of other nations at the same unrealistically low price. If we are to encourage Canadians in all walks of life without restrictions whatsoever to burn precious petroleum, particularly gasoline, without charging them the proper price, then we may very well have to consider imposing some kind of allocation or rationing on people who do not need to burn this much gasoline to make a living. Right now anyone can go out and drive as much as they wish in as energy-wasteful a car as they want to purchase, without any inhibitions whatsoever. We just wonder how much longer this can go on.

Not many months ago the Prime Minister, in his widely-publicized speech in Halifax, told the Halifax Board of Trade that we must move on our oil problems now, but we must also think ahead. I would like to see some indication that he is thinking ahead and will do something. On page two of the speech he went on to say something very profound when he talked about the OPEC countries. He said:

> I say that what is good for OPEC is not now in the interest of Canada.

I wonder if it ever was in the interest of Canada. We can only reflect and try to learn a bit from the lessons of history how advantageous it might have been if western nations and western oil companies were a little more forthcoming in the price they paid OPEC countries for oil ten years ago. It was only after some of the young, middle-class or upper-class people from those countries had the opportunity to come to western universities, see for themselves what the situation was and then go back to Arabic countries, that they realized how they were being cheated out of a non-renewable resource and how they were selling their resources—in many cases the only resource they had—for something over $1 a barrel, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, while enormous profits were being made and enormous wastes were being caused by the profligate use of that precious, non-renewable resource. But those days are over, and now the western nations and even the Arabic countries themselves are paying for them. This is because of the tremendous amount of inflation and international tensions that are caused and have been caused by the unwise and shortsighted use of a very precious commodity which is rapidly running out.

To be regional for a moment, as far as the needs of Atlantic Canada are concerned, it seems to me that as the development of Hibernia oil becomes more and more promising, there could be no higher or better use of that commodity than to proceed to carry out the project discussed about a year ago by our government and the United States to fill some salt caverns in the Strait of Canso area, or the abandoned mine on Bell Island with some petroleum from Hibernia. At least then we would have some security of supply, and from there we should immediately try to stockpile other sources of petroleum and move into other commodities, whether they be foodstuffs or strategic metals. It does not seem logical or reasonable, taking a close look at the international scene, that the Soviet Union or indeed many other nations will continue to refrain from, if not acts of aggression, then calculated acts in their own self-interest.

We in Canada have not been nearly shrewd enough in the way we have conducted our affairs. I guess all of us in the House of Commons and all of us, period, are equally guilty in that we have not highlighted some of these concerns years ago. If we took better care of our country, if we managed our country better, we would not be in the state of tension and the state of constitutional unrest in which we are today. I only hope the government opposite are not using some of the understandable concerns of this country about the constitution to mask their own incompetence in running this country for the last number of years, which has contributed to this very unfortunate situation for us.

It may be a bit irrelevant, but I must put on the record my own concerns in this respect. I am far more worried about some of the well-meaning but over-enthusiastic constitutional reformers than I am about any separatism either in the east or the west. Basically I think we have a very sound country. It is unfortunate it has not been run better. Rather, if we could fine-tune our Constitution and make some revisions in it, whether it be in telecommunications, an elected Senate or what have you, instead of, to use an old German proverb, "throwing the baby out with the bath water", we would be much better off. Indeed it is refreshing to be here this evening talking about matters of energy, global energy concerns and something which is basic to the autonomy of our country, rather than trying to get through the semantics of some of the rather obtuse arguments being put forward under the guise of national emergency respecting our constitution, a constitution which has served this country pretty well ever since confederation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to take part in this debate tonight to address the motion put forward by the official opposition which may have set a record in this House by its vagueness. The motion condemns this government for its "failure to provide a comprehensive energy program for Canada." I find it a curious position to be put forward by members opposite.

This morning I forced myself to re-read the Speech from the Throne delivered on October 9, 1979. I had anticipated a party which knew what a comprehensive program was not would know what a comprehensive energy program was, and that it would be reflected in the Speech from the Throne delivered by the leader of that party. What I found was four statements, and I would like to read those four statements to you, Mr. Speaker.

First, it stated the way to build a whole nation is to respect our individual parts; second, agreement in principle has been reached with certain coastal provinces concerning offshore mineral resources; third, self-sufficiency in energy by 1990, and this would be accomplished in consultation with the provinces, and seek to encourage a reduction in Canada's over-all energy consumption, and stimulate expansion in our capacity to supply and distribute energy in various forms and, finally, accept and respect provincial jurisdiction over resources.

Let me suggest that members read the Speech from the Throne delivered on April 14, 1980. The first thing you will notice is that this document reflects criticisms made by the leader of my party on October 10, 1979, in his response to the four points I have just mentioned which were put forward by the now right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

The second thing you will notice is that this document offers a ten-point energy plan based on two goals; first, achieving security of energy supply at a fair price for all Canadians and, secondly, strengthening national institutions while at the same time making them more responsive to provincial and regional goals.

On October 10, 1979, Mr. Trudeau stated:

> I need not remind this House that the problem of guaranteeing a sure supply of energy to Canadians at a price they can afford is the most urgent and critical economic issue facing this Parliament.

This position has become a commitment for the Liberal government.

Speaking to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association on May 27 of this year, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), who has already spoken so admirably in this debate, stated:

> Our aim is to give all Canadian consumers a fair deal . . . to keep the economy growing and keep the national debt within bounds; above all, to hold the country together. We need a pricing policy that serves these aims, not the policy aims of foreign and not always friendly nations.

A single national price for consumers of oil is one of the ten policy initiatives referred to in the Speech from the Throne of April 14. Others include an oil price based on Canadian conditions and circumstances; the establishment of the petroleum price auditing agency to report on oil company costs, profits, capital expenditures and levels of Canadian ownership; the maintenance and expansion of Petro-Canada; the creation of a new Canada oil and gas act for preferential rights for Petro-Canada and other Canadian companies of federal land and the establishment of new and more demanding requirements for exploration and development in frontier areas; and 50 per cent Canadian ownership of the petroleum industry by 1990.

A sixth initiative is the reduction of dependence on imported oil by promoting conservation and stimulating production of new domestic energy supplies.

This final area is an area which I have followed very carefully since coming to Ottawa in 1975, especially since becoming a member of this chamber on May 22, 1979. I wish to spend the remainder of my time addressing the issues of conservation and renewable energy sources in this debate.

The energy conservation program which exists in Canada, and I repeat the word "exists" because it does exist, started to come about in a very meaningful way in 1974. It was conceived in that year when the initial OPEC crisis occurred. It was conceived and implemented by an earlier Liberal government. I will deal with conservation in terms of various sectors. There are four sectors with make sense in dealing with a conservation program. First of all there is industry; second, commercial and residential; third, transportation; and, fourth, research and development.

Hon. members who have preceded me in this debate have indicated that the previous Liberal government did nothing in the area of conservation, did nothing in the development of renewable energy resources, and did nothing in the development of alternatives to the use of oil and gas. I tell you that is pure nonsense.

In the area of industrial energy conservation the industry program is operated on a voluntary basis through 14 industrial energy conservation task forces established in 1975. Some of the measures available under this industrial energy conservation program are: first of all, assistance to undertake energy audits at the plant level so that a firm can determine how much energy it is using, where it is not using energy efficiently and what can be done to improve energy efficiency of the operation; second, co-operative government—industry communications programs which include publications, seminars and regional workshops between government agencies, academic and industrial units; a pilot project in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island to provide grants for consultant advice and capital equipment to improve energy efficiency; an industrial energy conservation research and development program to encourage the development of new or modified energy efficient processes; and studies to determine the potential for co-generation in Canada, and the identification of opportunities to improve energy efficiency in various sectors of the industry.

Industry has essentially achieved its 1980 over-all goal to improve energy efficiency by 12 per cent since the program commenced in 1975. The task forces' new goal is to increase efficiency beyond the 12 per cent to 23 per cent by 1985.

In the area of commercial-residential energy conservation, there are several major thrusts in the housing area: there is the CHIP program—the Canadian Home Insulation Program; there is the home insulation program in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia which has some differences from CHIP; there was an oil furnace retrofit pilot project introduced to help individuals improve the efficiency of their oil furnaces in their homes; there were energy efficient new housing demonstrations put on by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; and there was the Enersave program, a computerized home energy audit available free of charge to Canadians. It recommended cost effective actions for reducing energy consumption through re-insulation and thermostat setback techniques. All those measures were in the area of housing. The suggestion was that there has been no energy conservation program at all—I can see that already!

Having regard to buildings outside homes, a national federal policy has been formulated toward the development and application of building energy codes and standards to improve these for greater energy efficiency and energy conservation. In this area there has been an energy conservation task force network providing a forum for information transfer, training, research co-ordination and other activities designed to stimulate energy conservation.

I could go on and on in these areas. There is an internal program in the federal government, the "Save 10 Program" which was to improve the energy efficiency of federal government buildings by decreasing energy consumption by some 10 per cent. That program has been successful. It has saved $100 million in cost to this federal government alone since its inception.

In the area of transportation, Mr. Speaker, there have been all kinds of energy conservation programs introduced since the 1974-75 fiscal year. We have seen standards for the average fuel consumption of new automobiles, fuel consumption labelling, publications such as the "Gas Mileage Guide" and "The Car Mileage Book" and we have seen the tax on automobile air conditioners, which consume a substantial amount of fuel.

There are a number of programs, and finally there are the energy conservation R and D programs. The main priorities of the energy conservation R and D programs are energy efficient buildings, technology, efficiency in automotive engines, alternative fuel activities, energy systems studies, and energy efficient processes for industry. We have carried on a public awareness program to make the people of Canada understand that the energy problem is indeed a real problem, that something must be done, and that action must be taken by the individual because that is the way the transition will come about to reduce the consumption of energy.

Almost every household in Canada has received or been in touch with at least one of the brochures or booklets which have been put out by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, whether it be "One Hundred Ways to Save Energy and Money in the Home", "Billpayer's Guide to Furnace Servicing", the "Garbage Book", "Keeping the Heat In". All these types of information programs were initiated to give the Canadian consumer a means of understanding how they can help themselves by conserving energy. There are similar programs in industry and business.

There are newspaper programs. We have all seen the television and radio advertising on energy conservation. There are films, conservation vans and so on. There are also the vans which went through Europe and which were acclaimed as one of the most advanced energy conservation information systems in the world.

It is amazing that the opposition can say, "Oh well, there has been nothing done, no energy conservation programs introduced at all".

Miss MacDonald: It has been a disaster.

Mr. Evans: The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) says that it has been a disaster. I suggest to the hon. member that while she was the secretary of state for external affairs she learned very little about what was going on in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I suggest that she talk to the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). He will admit that the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources had a vast number of programs which were on line and moving ahead when he took office as minister of the department, and which are going on now. There are a great many more programs coming up.

I was fortunate enough, prior to the election of May 22, 1979, to be part of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and involved in the human behaviour aspects on research energy conservation. We were doing a vast number of research projects on how we could help individual Canadians move from an energy consumptive environment to an energy conserving environment. In fact our research program which we put together in conjunction with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of the Environment was one of the most advanced programs in the entire free world.

We were called upon by countries in Europe and the United States to enter into joint research projects because we were ahead of these countries, not behind them. We were not sitting around doing nothing about energy conservation. We were laying the groundwork for the kinds of energy conservation programs which will be implemented in the 1980s and which will make Canada a leading nation, not a trailing nation, in energy conservation in the free world.

We can talk about what the hon. members for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), and Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said with regard to price not working. All the research we did during the time I was in behavioural research in Consumer and Corporate Affairs indicates just the opposite, that in fact price does work. However, what price does not do is work overnight. The transition between a high consumptive society where there are massive investments by individuals and businesses in capital equipment which is energy consumptive, energy inefficient, takes years, years to replace and to make the transition from an energy consuming society to an energy conserving society.

Miss MacDonald: That is why we should have begun in 1973.

Mr. Evans: We did start in 1974 those programs which are on line and which are now having their effects. They are good programs and they will be improved. The idea that nothing has been done because something did not happen overnight is absolute sheer nonsense. The fact is that it takes time and that it is happening. Price can and will change behaviour, but it does not work overnight.

Over time the difficulties which are being faced right now by, for example, Chrysler and Ford in their automobile sales, because they are selling relatively fuel inefficient automobiles, will be ironed out. People are changing their consuming habits. But it took many years for people to realize finally that in fact the energy crisis is real and that they must switch their purchase patterns from large automobiles to small automobiles. Unfortunately the automobile industry of North America did not pick up the signals which were there at the beginning. They did not change their production patterns. As a result we have seen a massive increase in the sales of Japanese cars, German cars, French cars and other foreign fuel-efficient cars in this country.

If the North American auto industry is to have any future it will have to bring in highly fuel-efficient automobiles. In fact the industry is moving in that direction at a very rapid rate. I am afraid that it waited a little too long before beginning, but it is moving in that direction. The fact is that the signs were there. Canadians and Americans were receiving the price information and energy information which was coming forth through the OPEC crises and the successive increases in oil prices. They were saying, "Something is happening. Is it real? Will it last?" And over six years, seven years, eight years the transition started. And now it is moving and industry will have to make the kinds of adjustments about which we are talking. We are now seeing that the auto industry is in the process of making those adjustments.

It takes time, but the price system works. However, I would suggest that it is not the appropriate way in which to adjust to a situation, particularly in Canada where there is relative richness in energy. It is a form of massive societal masochism to say that we must immediately go to world prices because it is good for the people, because it is somehow good for our souls if we go through a situation of biting the bullet. That term is so appropriate, but the problem is that the bullet is in the gut and they are pulling the trigger.

Price will rise because it must rise. However, in Canada where there is the unique opportunity to make an orderly, stable transition from a highly energy-consumptive society to a conserving society, because of the fortunate state in which we find ourselves, why is it absolutely necessary, as the official opposition would have us believe, that we immediately go to world price which would immediately create massive turmoil in this country, when it is not required?

The energy policy which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is putting forward is precisely designed to avoid the kind of traumatic adjustments which would be brought about by the energy policy which was suggested by the individuals in the opposition. The reason that they are in the opposition is because they did not realize the simple fact that the people do not have to be beaten over the head before they will change their ways. They can be led in the process.

Mr. Lalonde: Listen to him.

Mr. Evans: The kind of research which has been done and which has led to the energy policy—and there is an energy policy, if hon. members opposite could read and understand, but I understand that it is difficult for them—has resulted in a broad energy policy which is guiding the direction in which we are going. In the kind of behavioural research in which I was involved for the government, at the initiative of a Liberal government in prior years, we asked questions such as, "Why do consumers conserve or fail to conserve?" The answer to that kind of question is essential. We asked such questions as, "What incentives could be used to get consumers to change their ways?" That is where the tax progams such as CHIP came from. But first we had to find the incentives which would move people in the direction in which we wanted to go in future years.

• (2140)

What role does information play and how does it play that role in society? We have an energy research program called "Energy Use Display Monitors" in co-operation with the United States that will put a monitor on the wall in the home to show people how much energy they are using when they turn the stove on and how much it costs in dollars and cents if the meter moves faster. They can say, "If I use the stove this way, if I turn the heat up or the air conditioner on, this shows the effect on the cost of energy in my home." These kinds of straightforward research programs—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. The hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate. I felt compelled to deliver an address today on the very important resolution brought forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald).

This is an auspicious occasion for some of us. For those who were first elected on July 8, 1974, this is an anniversary of sorts. I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Postmaster General (Miss Nicholson) is in the House. She is one of those who entered the House at the same time as I, and I just wanted to take the opportunity on this sixth anniversary of the election of a very good group of members to call the occasion to the attention of the House.

The resolution before the House is not only very appropriate at this time but it underscores the desperate circumstances in which we find ourselves today in Canada, due to the inability of this government to realize that not only do we require an energy policy but that we must make a comprehensive examination of the problems facing this country and the world.

This government took office some five months ago. Since then the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has attended a number of international conferences. It has been my impression, and that of many other people in Canada, that our participation in those international conferences has been minimal. Our representatives have sneaked in and out of those conferences as the proverbial Arab slips across the desert, without participation in events and without any real knowledge or understanding of the problems that face us.

I would reiterate the point made by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands in opening the debate when she pointed out that the OECD issued a report today which castigated Canada on its record of oil importation and oil conservation. It is the second worst record of all industrialized nations. That is an indication of the severity of the problem we face as a country and a participant in international dealings on the energy front.

Between 1960 and the mid 1970s world demand for oil almost tripled, while production in the United States, the world's biggest producers, began to decline in 1970. A large body of opinion believes that in 1975 the world reserves began to turn down. The world is now burning some 20 billion barrels of oil a year, and the drills are only adding in the vicinity of 11 billion to reserves. This basic truth has been masked by the fact that recession reduced oil demand, and new oil from the North Sea and Mexico cause a temporary glut. This has now been worked off. Demand now exceeds supply, perhaps by a million barrels a day; no one is quite sure. It is a good guess there is a lot of oil still in the ground. But a guess has no market value. Available oil is a dwindling resource.

In the past technology has baled us out, but our problem today has no precedent. Earlier transitions—from wood to coal, from whale oil to gas—came about because a superior fuel was attainable. This time, I regret to say, there is no bail-out in sight. Research can certainly help to develop new energy sources but, ironically, high energy costs leave less money for research.

In fact the belief that we owe our affluence to our technological breakthroughs seems, in retrospect, to be no more than a half truth. The whole truth is that abundant resources, especially cheap petroleum, made everything from mass air travel to high yield agriculture, possible. Energy-intensive machinery skimmed the cream off high grade resources and gave us the money to fill our homes with appliances and gadgets that give us the energy equivalent of 80 manservants a day. We are now putting out five to ten calories of energy to produce one calorie of food, and already we are looking back on cheap food with nostalgia. It is cheap and abundant energy, not the magic of technology, that has been the essential dynamo of progress.

Now we stand at the end of an awesome discontinuity: the beginning of the end of the petroleum era, the end of living off capital, the end of rising expectations. We will still be using petroleum well into the twenty-first century, but even our optimists realize it will not be cheap. The price of OPEC oil in Montreal is now in the vicinity of $36 per barrel. The higher prices have slowed demand. World recession could bring a brief glut. But the Iranian cut-off revealed how narrow the margin of surplus is. Any serious shortage could bring a surge in price. What are the chances of this happening?

Prophecy, of course, is even riskier than politics. Which of our economic projections considered the Ayatollah Khomeini, or the Arab oil boycott, or the accidental break in the Trans-Arabian pipeline? When you are looking at the mid-east supply and demand—and that is where the crunch will come, because that is where 80 per cent of the oil for export is being pumped—the incredible often looks only too much like the probable.

The main key to supply is Saudi Arabia. The Saudis have had, until recently, enough spare production capacity to hold down the world price if other producers tried pushing it too high. Between 1974 and 1978 they dropped the real price of oil by 20 to 25 per cent. Even now they have set their selling price at something like $28 or $30, well below the price asked by other producers.

The Saudis are concerned about the economies of the western nations, their chief customers and chief investment outlets, and they are afraid that a deep recession would strengthen the communist parties of Europe. As demand has risen, the Saudis have run into pressure problems in trying to raise production capacity and have in the past year reduced the level 10 per cent to their present 9.5 million barrels per day. As the financial cost of controlling OPEC rises, conservation looks even more attractive. Like some other Arab producers, they have more income than they need, and there is no economic reason to deplete their oil so quickly when later it could be worth so much more. After seeing how too fast development brought corruption and chaos to Iran, they might well want to slow their massive industrial development program.

Most OPEC producers hold similar but even stronger views, and it is anticipated on the basis of announcements now made that we can look forward to a reduction of some three million barrels per day. Right now OPEC is producing about 30 million barrels of the 51 million barrels per day the world is burning. The best we can hope for from OPEC in the late 1980s in an increase of 20 to 25 per cent.

This is not too reassuring when we contemplate future demand. The Third World is expected to grow by six or seven per cent. By 1985 this could add 40 per cent to their oil needs which are now about five million barrels per day. For example, the Mexican economy is growing so fast that by 1985 it will probably need half its estimated output of three million barrels per day. By then the OPEC countries, with their huge development programs, will likely be using another five million barrels per day themselves.

Production growth has slowed in the Soviet Union. The Soviets supply nine-tenths of the oil used by eastern European countries, and have told the eastern Europeans not to expect these supplies to be raised. Increased western demand alone could take all of OPEC's late 1980s' production, and if we add this new demand we could possibly all be scrambling for a static supply of Middle East oil in the 1990s.

Nor can we shut our eyes to the tensions in this area. In the last three decades the Middle East has had half a dozen wars, a dozen revolutions, and innumerable assassinations. It is the heartland of terrorism, the politics of desperation, and an endless chain of tankers pass through the Straits of Hormuz carrying half of all the OPEC oil that powers western civilization. A supertanker sunk in the mouth of the straits could cut this lifeline. Significantly, Lloyds of London, the world's leading underwriters, have designated the Persian Gulf a war risk area.

Uncertainty is the order of the day and no one can predict what the price of oil will be next year, let alone in three or four months time. After the oil embargo in 1974, 20 OECD nations formed the International Energy Agency to co-ordinate a common approach to consumption, and much depends on its members meeting their year-end targets: a cutback in consumption of two million barrels a day which is about five per cent of the western world's oil demand. The less oil we use collectively, the less chance of further disruptions and the slower the world price will rise.

Notwithstanding the disregard which this government has shown with respect to its commitments internationally, Canada does have a big stake in the International Energy Agency. Any significant rise in price will intensify conflict between western allies, between the west and the communists and between factions within nations. Every 10 per cent rise in the world price adds one half a percentage point to OECD inflation. A sharp rise would strain the world monetary system and shrink world purchasing power. What price is Canadian self-sufficiency if we cannot sell our goods on the world market? We have to take our part in bringing supply and demand into balance.

Last July Canadian targets were set by the previous government. They were set by the former prime minister, now the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). We agreed at that time to reduce our net imports of oil by 100,000 barrels a day throughout 1980, to hold the 1985 imports to 600,000 barrels.

Recently the late Prime Minister Ohira of Japan spoke to this Parliament and he reiterated the necessity of the western industrialized nations reducing in a substantial way their imports of oil. The present government has not yet come to grips with this reality. At the last Summit there was great pressure on the Prime Minister and the delegation representing Canada to reaffirm the commitments made at the Tokyo Summit.

These targets that we have set for ourselves are not going to be easy to meet. We are pumping crude at the rate of 1.6 million barrels a day, and that is near capacity. It leaves us very little flexibility. In Canada we are burning something like 1.9 million barrels, and that calls for daily net imports of about 300,000 barrels. The production in western Canada is in decline and the most optimistic estimate is that by 1985 we will be short by at least 600,000 barrels a day. Some estimates put the shortage at 900,000 barrels a day by 1985. In 1990, the daily shortfall will grow, and keep growing.

The fact is that this is the background in which the international negotiations and circumstances have taken place. I want to say that notwithstanding the attempt on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to hand out press releases with respect to what has happened at the Venice Summit, there was a great similarity with respect to the resolutions which were brought forward at the Venice Summit to those that were brought forward at the Tokyo Summit. I simply say that to reiterate and underline them. At Venice there was a reinforcement of the commitments made, and an attempt to bring Canada into the mainstream with respect to the western industrialized nations on the commitments that are to be made by Canada on the international scene.

The Tokyo communiqué is interesting and I want to refer to it to indicate the great similarity in wording in what took place then with what the release was with respect to the Venice Summit which has just concluded.

One of the statements made at the Tokyo Summit, which was reiterated again at Venice, was:

> The most urgent tasks are to reduce oil consumption and to hasten the development of other energy resources.

I suggest this statement has a familiar ring.

What were some of the commitments made at Tokyo? One of the commitments was that we pledge our countries to increase as far as possible coal use, production and trade, without damage to the environment. Does that sound familiar? And does this statement sound familiar?

> We need to expand alternative sources of energy, especially those which will help to prevent further pollution, particularly increases of carbon dioxide and sulphur oxides in the atmosphere.
> Without the expansion of nuclear power generating capacity in the coming decades, economic growth and higher employment will be hard to achieve.

Further on we find this statement:

> We reaffirm the understanding reached at the Bonn Summit with respect to the reliable supply of nuclear fuel and minimizing the risk of nuclear proliferation.
> New technologies in the field of energy are the key to the world's longer-term freedom from fuel crises.

These are very familiar statements with respect to the leaders at Venice. It is a reiteration, and yet one would believe from hearing the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy that somehow there was a new attitude taken by the leaders. It is precisely a carrying on of the position taken at Tokyo in which Canada on this occasion was out of step and out of place. Canada was not fulfilling its function on the international scene, and in not doing that it was causing itself to do a disservice to the Canadian people as well.

I was very proud and pleased that my colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, did bring this resolution forward. It does give us an opportunity to point out that notwithstanding the fact that this government has been in power almost continuously since 1963, with the assistance of the New Democratic Party, it has not as yet come forward with a comprehensive energy policy. It is still struggling with the question of pricing with the producing provinces. So I ask what are we faced with now? It is the prospect of going past July 1 with no assurance and no idea of where we are going in terms of pricing in Canada, nor do we have an indication from the federal government or the producing provinces that they are anywhere close to an agreement.

The uncertainty is causing a great deal of concern in the industry itself. It is only reasonable that unless there is some long-term agreement arrived at, the investment that is going to be required to develop our oil self-sufficiency will not be forthcoming. We are getting involved with the Prime Minister going to a conference possibly, he says, at the end of this month within six days of the conclusion of the extension period of the existing arrangement. Do members understand, particularly on the government side, what the consequences will be if there is no arrangement or agreement with respect to energy pricing in this country? Do members have any understanding? Are members quite satisfied now to rely exclusively on imports of oil with respect to generating our industry and heating our homes next winter? What are members' thoughts on the other side with respect to the activities of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy on the negotiations? In my opinion their activities have been shameful, confrontationist, and they have certainly not given any hope to us that there will be any arrangement or agreement for any reasonable period of time.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada look back with some affection to the Progressive Conservative government which, in a short period of time, came forward for the first time in history with a comprehensive, national energy policy benefiting all regions of this country. We had a program that was negotiated with all the provinces of this country and with all the regions of this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, it shows one minute to ten by my watch.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. This clock shows ten o'clock. If there is unanimous consent, the hon. member may have one additional minute. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to conclude this very important and good debate by outlining and pointing out the fact that there was with the last government a comprehensive national energy policy. I want the government to listen to these points. It is within their capability and interest possibly to follow by way of constructive suggestion the initiatives that we had taken in our short time in government. Key ingredients of our policy involved an oil pricing agreement maintaining a competitive advantage for Canadians over U.S. and other world trading countries, a massive substitution program off oil to natural gas and other regionally indigenous energy sources, an effective energy conservation program in co-operation with the provinces, the dramatic development of our country's energy resources utilizing the increased revenues from petroleum and, finally, a firm program of Canadianization of our energy industry through such innovative initiatives as a Canada energy bank. Thank you for the time accorded to me, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT—REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO CORRECT UNFAIRNESS—RCMP PROVISIONS

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, July 3, as recorded at page 2539 of Hansard, I put two questions—perhaps I should say a question in two parts—to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston). My questions had to do with what I regard as unfair provisions in the Public Service Superannuation Act. This is by no means the first time that I have drawn attention to these unfairnesses, but it is my hope that by persisting in this effort, one of these days we will get these unfair provisions corrected.

The first one about which I questioned the President of the Treasury Board last Thursday has to do with the fact that when a retired public servant dies, his widow gets a pension of only 50 per cent of what he was getting whereas, if the wife were to die first, the widower's pension would be 100 per cent.

I know that has been the practice for half a century or more, or for as long as pensions for employment have been in effect. I know that for many years it was accepted as perfectly all right. However, I do not think there is any place for this sort of arrangement in our society any more. If there is anything to the modern belief in equality between men and women, surely it should be practised when it comes to retirement. I suggest that it is completely and grossly unfair that the Public Service Superannuation Act has in it this provision giving, as I say, to the surviving widow a pension of only 50 per cent, whereas it would give to the surviving husband a pension of 100 per cent.

The other complaint I made when I put my question to the President of the Treasury Board last Thursday had to do with the way a pension of a widow, in this case a widow of a retired public servant, is cut off if she marries again. Here too is a practice which has been in vogue for a long time, and society tends to accept it. Society does that because it still has the notion that somehow a woman's place in our economy depends upon her attachment to a man. This turns up in even more sinister ways in other provisions.

I have in mind the spouse's allowance which is paid to some women between 60 and 65 but not to others, and certain other provisions, but they do not come under the Public Service Superannuation Act. I insist that if a woman, by being the wife of a public servant—and it applies to a woman who is the wife of any other kind of employee—has earned a pension which comes to her if the husband dies, that pension should not be taken away from her simply because, to put it in language which I hope people will understand, she finds another meal ticket. Surely that pension is a matter of right. Surely it is not a form of welfare. Surely it is not just income maintenance because she does not have other means of support, and, if it is a matter of right, I think it should persist.

I recognize that when we were discussing this in developing the Canada Pension Plan and made provisions about what happens to a widow, we included in that legislation a provision such that if a widow marries again, she loses the pension while she is married, but if the second husband dies, she has the right to pick up whichever survivor's pension is the better. I remember the amusement we had in the committee when we discussed that and decided that we did not want to make it possible for a woman to marry half a dozen men and pick up one pension after another. It really was a bit of amusement because those second or third marriages do not last long enough for substantial pensions to be built up.

I am back to my basic contention that if a woman earns a pension by being a wife and mother, she is just as much entitled to that pension, as a right, as if she had earned the income in industry or as if she had earned it by investing money or what have you, and I suggest that dropping of the pension of the widow of a public servant because that widow marries again is wrong and that this should be corrected.

I suggested the other day that I hoped that any changes which are made will also be made for the widows of RCMP personnel or personnel of the armed forces, and my hope and belief are that if the government will start setting its house in order in this area, then there will be the necessary improvements in the rest of society. That is why I want a start to be made. I have been at it for a long time. I hope I do not have to keep at it just as long to win these very necessary improvements in our pension arrangements, necessary in the light of our belief today that men and women really are equal.

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to excuse the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Daudlin), who is unavoidably absent tonight because his family is in Ottawa. I will try as best I can to answer the hon. member's question and to give some satisfaction as to the possibilities.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) spoke on many occasions of the benefits provided for widows in retirement plans. He is aware, I am sure, as mentioned in the House last Thursday by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) when he raised the matter, that the government has already begun a general study of the survivors' benefits provided by the pension plans within the civil service. This study was instituted after the adoption of a regulation concerning the application of the Canadian Human Rights Act to the pension and life insurance plans.

Some people think that providing for survivors' benefits favours married contributors rather than single ones; that is why the amendments proposed were deferred so as not to accentuate this discrimination. However, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Human Rights Commission in its statement declared that these benefits are not discriminatory per se although it did add that some aspects of the survivors' benefits programs were incompatible with the principles of non-discrimination.

In the course of its study, the government will take into account the questions raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) as well as other related matters such as the eligibility requirements for retirement benefits when a spouse remarries and the possibility of splitting up the benefits in the case of a divorce, a matter which he did not necessarily raise. This study will encompass all retirement plans within the federal civil service and will obviously require some time to be carried out. Various recommendations concerning the proposed survivors' benefits discussed in a number of studies recently made public will also be studied.

[English]

The issues raised by the hon. member deal with two qualifications on the payment of survivor benefits; one on the amount of the benefits payable, and the other being the requirement that a spouse must have become married to a public servant prior to retirement in order to qualify for benefits. Surviving spouses are entitled at present to approximately 50 per cent of the contributor's unreduced pension. Moreover, if a surviving spouse has minor children, each child receives a pension equal to 10 per cent of the contributor's benefit, so that a spouse with four minor children will receive approximately 90 per cent of the contributor's pension. I know the hon. member knows about all that.

It is quite true that representations have been made in recent years for improvements in the amounts of survivors' pensions; some suggest raising the percentage to 75 per cent, others to 100 per cent.

The second qualification under discussion is the provision in the plans that a survivor's pension is not payable to a spouse of the public servant who married after retirement, or in the case of a retired member of the Armed Forces or the RCMP, where the marriage took place after age 60.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member, regretfully.

Mr. Laniel: All I want to say, Mr. Speaker, is that this is a costly exercise and I am sure that the minister, being fair to everybody, will bring the necessary modifications.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

METRICATION

CALL FOR HALT TO METRIC CONVERSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, as a result of the answer of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to a question on metrication yesterday, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Because the Metric commission has spent $43,238,000 of taxpayers' money since it was created in 1971; due to the fact that it has kept both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) totally in the dark and uninformed as to the wishes of Canadians on the subject of metrication in retail food stores; in light of a survey of 2,046 shoppers done by an independent consulting firm for Dominion Stores Ltd. in the metric test centre of Peterborough, which indicated 88 per cent of shoppers favoured pounds over kilograms; since all major food store chains have indicated that they do not wish to proceed with metrication, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence):

That this government respond to the wishes of the Canadian people, and not to the dictates of the Metric commission, and call a halt to metric conversion in the retail food sector which is slated to proceed on January 1, 1981, affecting some six million Canadians in approximately 21 cities.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LIVESTOCK INDUSTRY—PROTEST AGAINST ARBITRARY CONVERSION TO METRIC SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of great urgency to the Canadian livestock industry. Inasmuch as the reborn Liberal government has resumed its pell-mell rush to metric conversion, an action which is causing great confusion in the agricultural industry, particularly during this period of economic uncertainty, and strong protests from the industry have been communicated to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That the government restore the freeze imposed by the former Conservative government on the arbitrary metrication of the livestock industry, thereby allowing the conversion to go forward by voluntary action rather than by government coercion.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIRPORTS

UPGRADING OF OTTAWA INTERNATIONAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. First impressions are lasting impressions. The first impression a dignitary must have of Ottawa upon arrival at Uplands' dirty-carpeted international airport is that he or she is entering a mine-shaft disaster area. The lounge for VIPs might better be expressed as the "PITS".

The facilities at the air terminal are inadequate; the grounds and landscaping are atrocious. Priorities in many government programs are misplaced: millions of dollars are spent on monolithic structures in Hull, millions of dollars have been wasted on the white elephant known as Mirabel. Local and national pride must suffer because of the second-rate facilities at Uplands. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the upgrading of the international air terminal at Uplands be deemed as an urgent priority of the government.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

STATUS OF WOMEN

REQUEST NATIVE WOMEN BE INCLUDED IN CANADIAN DELEGATION TO WORLD CONFERENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that no native women were asked to participate as part of the official Canadian delegation to the World Conference of the United Nations, Decade for Women, in Copenhagen from July 14 to July 30; that this mid-decade conference is to look at the progress made in improving the situation of women and developing a plan of action for the next five years; that recommendations of the status of women report "Toward Equality" include a call for federal government commitment to native women; that only as a result of their own initiative native women were later invited to go unofficially, and therefore only minimally subsidized, while official delegates go with all expenses paid, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett):

That this House calls for the minister responsible for the status of women to include some native women as part of the official delegation.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

NDP MEMBERS LEAVING CHAMBER DURING QUESTION PERIOD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that—

The NDP walked out in a snit,
While most other members were unaware of it,
Until the socialists to the press did shout,
"The NDP had lost its clout";
Poor Stanley was left with tea and crumpet,
They continued to say "the rest could lump it".
Also on December last in dumping the veterans' bill,
Stanley sent all members home from the hill—

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the new brand of NDP
Be cautious in leaving Stanley at sea;
Instead of causing an internal schism,
They explore all facets of Stanley's prism,
With his saintly quiver and righteous bow,
Relegate him to the second row.

1980 FREE OLYMPIAD

CONGRATULATIONS TO ORGANIZERS—FUNDING OF 1984 EVENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, unfortunately I do not have the talent of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). On a matter of pressing and urgent necessity I would like to move a motion under Standing Order 43.

Last weekend, athletes from Ukrainian, Latvian, Lithuanian, Estonian and Armenian communities of Canada and the United States met in Etobicoke to compete in the 1980 Free Olympiad, an event to protest the staging of the Olympic Games in Moscow and to draw attention to the fact that people from these countries which are captive nations of the U.S.S.R. cannot compete in the Olympics under their own flags. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek):

That this House congratulate the organizers on the success of the 1980 Free Olympiad and ask the Minister of State for Sport or the Minister of State for Multiculturalism to consider seriously any application from the organizers for financial assistance from the federal government for the 1984 Free Olympiad.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

PURCHASE OF TIRES FROM CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In the throne speech we were promised that this government's procurement would be used vigorously to encourage the creation and expansion of Canadian businesses. In light of the fact that the Department of Supply and Services recently purchased several thousand tires from Hungary for use in the Post Office, even though there are over 2,000 Canadian rubber workers unemployed in our tire industry at this time, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House instructs the Minister of Supply and Services to ensure that all future tires purchased by his department come from Canadian manufacturers employing Canadian workers.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

LEGISLATION TO PROHIBIT "CORPORATE BLACKMAIL"—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the recent attempt by the Hudson's Bay Company and Simpsons Limited to muscle their suppliers into providing retroactive rebates, and the uncompromising situation that would develop in the garment industry as a result, all of which has come about as a result of the pleasure of this government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That this House act immediately to pass legislation prohibiting such a move which can be described as no better than corporate blackmail.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

COMMEMORATION OF BIRTHDAY OF QUEEN MOTHER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, in recognition of a significant facet of Canada's cultural, linguistic, constitutional and, indeed, moral heritage, I have some reason to expect that I will gain the unanimous consent of the House on the following motion which is seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That this House instruct the government to mark in an appropriate manner the occasion of the Queen Mother's eightieth birthday on August 4 next either by a special cameo stamp issue, or by striking a silver dollar or other coin in recognition of Her Gracious Majesty, as well as of the heroic example she gave to all citizens in the Commonwealth in standing unflinchingly by her husband, our late King George VI, through all the trials and dangers of threatened invasion and bombing during the last war.

AGRICULTURE CANADA

USE OF LAND IN NATIONAL CAPITAL AREA FOR PLOWING MATCH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this House request the Minister of Agriculture to reverse the decision he made and to thereby allow the Ottawa-Carleton Plowmen's Association to use land used by Agriculture Canada in the national capital greenbelt for the 1983 International Plowing Match, permission for which was previously granted by the hon. member for Elgin when he was the minister of agriculture.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NORTHERN PIPELINES

APPROVAL OF PRE-BUILD SECTION OF ALASKA GAS PIPELINE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It requires a very simple "Yes" or "No" answer. The deadline of July 15 which Foothills Pipe Lines has stated is the final date by which government approval must be given if the pre-build section of the Alaska gas pipeline is to be constructed this year is fast approaching: It is just a few days away.

Will the government tell us, now, whether or not they plan to grant, or deny, that approval?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, yes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is what he wanted.

Mr. Nickerson: Madam Speaker, that is a very simple answer. I must admit it was not quite the answer I was expecting, although I was looking for a similar answer. I would like to address my supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

In the event that approval of the pre-build section is not granted, could the minister confirm that the loss to Canada, at this time of rapidly escalating unemployment, declining economic activity and serious balance of payments problems, would be in the order of 150,000 man-years of employment, much of it in the hard-hit industrial areas of central Canada, and about $2 billion annually in our balance of trade position?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, no, I could not.

Mr. Nickerson: Madam Speaker, I think I will try the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to see if he will be a little more forthcoming. I am very alarmed at the indecision, procrastination and evident inability of the present government to deal with the outstanding pipeline issues.

Will the government quit pussyfooting around with the pipeline and ensure that both the pre-build section and the Alaska gas pipeline in its entirety will be built as expeditiously as possible?

● (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has made a very interesting representation, and I am sure cabinet will consider it.

CONSIDERATION BY PARLIAMENT BEFORE LEGISLATION CHANGED

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? According to the Prime Minister, the government is actively considering whether to authorize this pre-build section in spite of assurances by Senator Olson, the minister responsible for northern pipelines, before a committee of this House that such permission would not be given until there were guarantees for the entire pipeline, as spelled out in the act.

Will the minister assure the House that the government will approach Parliament to seek permission for a major change in both the intent and purpose of the Northern Pipeline Act prior to granting any such approval?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have already answered that very question in the House last week.

[English]

Mr. Andre: Apparently the minister is reluctant to give his assurance to the House at this point, Madam Speaker.

An hon. Member: He gave it last week.

Mr. Andre: The minister is aware that the purpose of this pre-build is to provide transportation facilities to carry the export gas approved by the previous government on December 6, 1979. The minister, then opposition energy critic, described that decision as "one that Canada will live to regret and it may go down in history as one of the greatest sell-outs we have seen."

Given that the government is now looking at ways to authorize this transportation or this sell-out, did the minister flip-flop on his own, or have his cabinet colleagues talked him into changing his position since December 6 last?

Mr. Lalonde: Definitely not, Madam Speaker; definitely not.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): But you did flip-flop.

LEGISLATION TO AMEND NORTHERN PIPELINE ACT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, the matter of this pipeline is a serious issue and the minister should not get out of it. Let me put my question to the President of the Privy Council, if he is there.

Mr. Nielsen: He is not all there.

Mr. Waddell: It is quite clear, Madam Speaker, that in 1978 Parliament approved the Northern Pipeline Act which authorized a pipeline for American gas to be transported from Alaska to the lower 48. The National Energy Board has recommended a pre-build pipeline which will export Canadian gas to the United States.

Can the President of the Privy Council, the government House leader, assure this House that before such a fundamental change is made, legislation will be brought before the House, and that this will not be done behind closed doors by an order in council?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the hon. member to the act that was passed by this House in 1978. If he reads the Northern Pipeline Act, he will see clearly what its provisions are. I have already stated in this House, and I repeat, that nothing will be done by the government that is contrary to the provisions of the act passed by Parliament.

Mr. Andre: The intent of the act is what we are interested in.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I have read the act in some detail. That is still not an answer to our question.

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—EFFECT ON CANADA'S ENERGY FUTURE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): May I put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Madam Speaker? I find it shocking that the minister will not bring this before the House. In light of what was stated in the throne speech about self-sufficiency, and in light of the government's own policy of "off" oil, changing basically the use of oil to natural gas and other energy sources, but basically gas, if the pre-build goes ahead would the Prime Minister not agree that the construction of this export gas pipeline would jeopardize Canada's energy future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the question is hypothetical in its form—"if the pipeline goes ahead". I can assure the hon. member it will not go ahead if it jeopardizes Canada's energy future.

Mr. Waddell: This is precisely what the minister was saying before he turned Judas on us, when he was in the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1425)

Mr. Waddell: The minister has said, as the member from Calgary pointed out, that we should not export this gas for a fast buck. The minister also said, to use his words, that there should be an ironclad guarantee before the pipeline goes ahead.

Could the minister tell this House, now, with a straight face, whether he considers those events and assurances in Washington, the resolutions and the 2 per cent investment by the company in the pipeline, were enough to live up to the test that he set out when he was the opposition critic?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The iron has turned to butter.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the steps taken by the American Congress, as well as the steps announced by the administration and those taken by the private sector, both the sponsors and the producers, are all matters that are before the cabinet and are going to be considered before any decision is made. If and when a decision is made, the hon. member will be apprised of it; I am sure of that.

ENERGY

CONSTRUCTION OF NORMAN WELLS-ZAMA LAKE OIL PIPELINE

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It would appear that the National Energy Board decision on the proposed Norman Wells-Zama Lake oil pipeline will not be handed down until later on, perhaps toward the end of this year.

In view of the fact that this line will carry some 25,000 barrels of oil a day to replace oil presently imported from offshore countries and at a cost exceeding the domestic price, will the minister assure this House that, assuming the National Energy Board finds the line to be a public necessity and convenience and that the federal environmental assessment and review panel does the same, the government will give quick endorsement to the construction of the line?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, if I may answer that question, we will have to wait for the decision of the National Energy Board and also for the results of the environmental hearing before the matter will come to the government for final determination. It is premature to make a decision at this time.

Mr. Neil: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Assuming approval is given by the National Energy Board and by the environmental assessment and review panel, will the minister assure this House that he and the government will not support any moratorium on the construction of the line?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, there are further representations to be heard from the native organizations in the Northwest Territories and the territorial government. To give a firm and hard decision at this time, before some of the representations which they wish to make to the government through myself, is really not giving them a fair chance to present their views. Therefore, I think any decision should be withheld, as I say, until they have that chance.

LACK OF OIL PRICING AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON DRILLING ACTIVITY IN CANADA

Mr. Len. Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, my question arises from that posed by one of my constituents who is concerned about employment in the oil industry. Therefore, I direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Is the government aware that drilling activity is slackening off significantly in Canada and moving to the United States of America, which seems to be a repeat of what was experienced in Canada in 1973? The cause seems to be related directly to the government's indecision with regard to the oil pricing agreement. Is the minister aware of this very serious situation that exists in Canada today?

An hon. Member: Of course not.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the latest report I have seen is that drilling is up—specifically, up 30 per cent compared to the same period when the Conservatives were in office last year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That was a dreadful answer.

Mr. Gustafson: Madam Speaker, it is true there are more rigs. According to the latest figures I have, for July 2, there were 535 rigs drilling in Alberta, Saskatchewan, B.C., the Northwest Territories, the Arctic and Manitoba; but there are 123 rigs down and not turning. However, in Saskatchewan there are 46 rigs turning, while in Williston, North Dakota—a small town—there are 151 rigs turning.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gustafson: Will the minister take seriously this very important situation which threatens Canadian oil exploration at this time?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, in his long list of statistics the hon. member said nothing that contradicts what I have already told him, namely, that drilling is up 30 per cent this year compared to the same period last year when the Tories were in office.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATION TO PREVENT COMBINES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It is of vital importance to consumers and small businessmen across this country.

In light of the recent disclosure that the Hudson's Bay Company and Simpsons Limited are using their combined purchasing power to squeeze volume rebates from small manufacturers and suppliers, and because this practice represents a blatant display of monopoly power that could not only force many manufacturers out of business but also reduce the levels of competition in the marketplace, will the minister inform this House whether or not he will be introducing amendments to the combines legislation that will enable the government to successfully break up a combination like the Hudson's Bay-Sears marketing conglomerate?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I would like to say two things to the hon. member in that connection. First, I will discuss the matter with the director of investigations and research to determine if the practice described by the hon. member is harmful and comes under the Combines Investigation Act. Second, as soon as possible in one of the next sessions of this Parliament I intend to introduce amendments to the legislation on competition in Canada so that it will have more teeth than the present legislation.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I appreciate hearing the comments of the minister regarding the second phase of the competition policy, and I look forward to debating that. I would like to be a bit more specific, if I could. When the minister receives all the information and it becomes clear to the minister that the Hudson's Bay Company and Simpsons Limited have been pressuring their suppliers for rebates, what action will the minister take to deal specifically with this problem?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Surely the hon. member will agree that the director of investigations has limited powers to act under the present legislation, especially as a result of a recent Supreme Court decision. Consequently it is premature for me to predict what the director of investigations might suggest after having examined that file.

ENERGY

EXTENSION OF NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO MARITIME PROVINCES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I wonder if I might go back to the Prime Minister with regard to the pipeline question and ask him to turn his attention to Q & M and the dilemma which faces the maritime provinces in particular.

In Halifax, on January 25, the Prime Minister was quite explicit and clear in putting forward his party's position with respect to the sense of urgency that they attach to the pipeline east to Quebec and on into the maritime provinces. Recently I have been somewhat concerned, and I think we all are, knowing that unless a decision is made very quickly the chance of ever getting a pipeline into the maritimes is virtually zilch, zero, nothing.

Will the Prime Minister indicate whether he will use his good offices to cause, under the appropriate sections of the legislation, the reconvening of the National Energy Board on this particular application, so that a decision might be arrived at no later than next spring or summer as to whether, in fact, it will be possible?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the government still shares that sense of urgency. My understanding is that some difficulties were put forward by provincial governments of an environmental or financial nature. I will inquire into them.

It seems to me that the hon. member is making a very reasonable request when he suggests that kind of a deadline. It is certainly within the same understanding as my sense of urgency. I will undertake to ensure that when we have finished this set of negotiations, we will be in a position to announce our entire energy policy. I hope very much it will encompass the building of such a pipeline.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, I welcome the temperate intervention by the Prime Minister: it gives us some assurance. But, after all, he made the promise last January and it is now the middle of July.

My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The points raised by Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick, in particular, and to a lesser degree by Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia, were in fact legitimate concerns for any province with respect to costing and some other matters.

Will the minister give some indication to those in the maritimes as to whether he favours the development down river from Quebec of a super, major oil port that would handle, for example, Arctic gas, Hibernian oil, imports from OPEC, and so on, or whether he subscribes to the view of the Prime Minister that the government still attaches some urgency to at least giving the maritimes an opportunity to join in the economic activity that is associated with, related to and flows from the activity of a major oil or gas pipeline, in this case a gas pipeline?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think I have already indicated to the hon. member, but I am very happy to repeat when speaking to the question he raises, that the first priority of this government obviously has to be a decision on whether there should be an extension of the gas pipeline to the maritime provinces. That is definitely our first priority.

OVERLAND OIL PIPELINE ROUTE IN B.C.—NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since the United States west coast refineries at the moment are in a surplus supply position, reducing the need for extended tanker traffic down the B.C. west coast, will the minister advise what progress he is making with the U.S. administration to ensure that the preferred Canadian overland pipeline route can proceed in the future?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I took the opportunity at my last meeting with the Secretary of State for Energy of the United States to indicate quite clearly that the federal government still prefers the overland route in terms of the future oil pipeline. This has been the consistent view of this party. We lost no time in reiterating our view in this regard to the American authorities, even though they may have been confused for a certain period as to what the view of the federal government was at the time the hon. member's party was in office.

Miss Carney: My supplementary is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since the government of British Columbia has indicated that it is not willing to proceed with the construction of the Alaska gas pipeline link through northeast B.C. until it reaches a financial agreement with the federal government on the financing of the social infrastructure, will the minister tell us what steps he is taking to ensure that these agreements will be in place in time for the Alaska gas pipeline to proceed?

Mr. Lalonde: These discussions have been taking place over the last several years and they are continuing. This is a continuing issue and it has not been resolved as yet. As the hon. member knows, the whole question of the Alaska gas pipeline has many aspects. This is one of them, and the discussions will carry on.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY WHEN SERVICE WILL BE PROVIDED TO SEPT-ÎLES

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications. My intervention reflects a regional concern. It concerns the French CBC network which for six years has been scheduling the establishment of facilities in the North Shore area. I would like to know whether the minister intends to take action to force the corporation to meet its schedule or even anticipate on the plans established a full six years ago. Land was purchased six years ago in Sept-Iles, yet never since has the corporation shown any interest in a population living along 600 miles of coast and as far as 1,250 miles inland. So my question is this: Does the minister really intend to take action to compel the corporation finally to establish facilities in Sept-Îles, and does he intend to meet with the corporation management so that they follow up on their own commitment in this regard?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I know that for a very long time the hon. member for Manicouagan has shown concern over this matter which is of great interest for the people in his area and in the whole North Shore area. So I would like to indicate to the hon. member that unfortunately I do not have the authority required to compel the CBC to meet the commitments he has mentioned. However, I can assure him that I have already made representations on his behalf to the corporation and that within the next few days I intend to meet with the management to discuss this matter.

Oral Questions

ENERGY

INQUIRY WHETHER EXPORT TAX WILL BE IMPOSED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the last two weeks, the minister has been forced to touch upon the subject of an import tax on all forms of energy. I would like to ask the minister—

An hon. Member: Export—

Mr. La Salle: —pardon me, an export tax. I thank my colleagues for the correction. I wonder if under the circumstances, the minister has asked his officials to draft legislation to this effect, and if not, does he intend to do so?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, my officials have not been instructed to draft any type of legislation on the subject. As I have indicated to a great many Canadians, provincial spokesmen, particularly from Saskatchewan and Alberta, have commented that the people of those provinces found unjust that an export tax be imposed on oil and not on other forms of energy, that the issue had not been considered in the context of a full scale review of the energy policy and that the issue would be considered and reviewed. No decision has yet been taken on the matter.

REQUEST PROVINCES BE CONSULTED BEFORE IMPOSITION OF EXPORT TAX

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the responsible minister whether he can assure the House, since those discussions have been held in fact, that no decision to that effect will be reached without it having been negotiated with the provinces or at least without having obtained their agreement to the matter.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have already had a number of consultations with all provinces on all sorts of energy questions, and it is quite possible indeed that, before a final decision is made, there might be others. However, I find it strange that the hon. member should suggest that a tax measure which, for instance, would fall strictly within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance, should be subject not only to consultations with the provinces but also to their approval. If the hon. member is suggesting that the federal budget prepared by the Minister of Finance should first be approved by the provinces, I feel his conception of the role of the federal government is very strange indeed.

NORTHERN PIPELINE ACT—PROVISIONS RESPECTING FINANCING OF PIPELINES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we would be happy if the budget could be approved by the House of Commons, but we have not seen one yet.

My question is addressed to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can either minister tell us whether the government is considering changing the wording of section 12 of the schedule attached to the Northern Pipeline Act in a way which would change the requirement that financing must be in place for the complete line before approval is granted for the pre-build?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the right hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is aware of the fact that the National Energy Board already made that recommendation to cabinet and, at the time, it refused to consider it until it had more information on the matter and there were new developments. The recommendation of the National Energy Board is still before cabinet and will obviously be either accepted or rejected.

[English]

Mr. Clark: I wonder, then, if I might have an assurance from either the Minister of Energy or the Prime Minister that any change to the schedule which would have a significant effect upon the conditions would be brought before the House of Commons before it is implemented. In other words, I am asking for an assurance that the government will not use the device of simply amending the schedule as a means of avoiding debate in Parliament on what could be a very important change in policy.

Mr. Lalonde: The right hon. member refers to a "device". I would refer him to the legislation which was passed by Parliament in 1978 and which specifically provided for exactly what he is talking about. In section 20(4) there is a provision enabling the National Energy Board to amend conditions. So there is no question about not respecting Parliament or the will of Parliament. Provision for this has been specifically made in the act, so there is no question of using any special device to avoid Parliament.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, we now have a clear indication that the government is planning to change the conditions by changing the schedule and, consequently, changing the intent of the act which Parliament passed.

What I am seeking is a clear statement from either the minister or his superior in energy matters, the Prime Minister, that a change in the act will not be made by amending the schedule without coming to the House of Commons.

Mr. Lalonde: As usual, the Leader of the Opposition chooses to misinterpret completely what has been stated. No decision has been taken, as I have indicated quite clearly. A recommendation by the Energy Board has already been rejected. The matter is presently before cabinet, and when a decision is made it will be announced. No decision has yet been made one way or the other.

AIR SAFETY

DUBIN INQUIRY—TESTIMONY OF MOT OFFICIALS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Following testimony by a Ministry of Transport aviation inspector before the judicial inquiry in Quebec City, Mr. Justice Dubin warned a senior Transport Canada official that he will not tolerate intimidation of witnesses appearing before his commission of inquiry into aviation safety. He also said he would do everything in his power to ensure that no witness appearing before his commission would be harassed or unfairly dealt with.

Will the minister assure us that he, too, will not tolerate harassment or intimidation of employees of his department by any of his officials, and that no effort to tamper with or influence testimony of employees who are to appear as witnesses will be allowed; and will he send a warning in writing to his deputy minister, assistant deputy ministers and all other officials and supervisors in his department to that effect?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I find it interesting that the same judge, the Chief commissioner of the commission, should have found it useful yesterday, to compliment the officials in the air administration branch of my department for their openness, frankness and objectivity in this situation.

The air administrator of my department has repeatedly said, in private and in public, that officials of the department were free to come and give evidence before the commission. He said openly that there would be no penalty attached to such action. I wish to say emphatically—and this is as good as a letter—that it is also my attitude and I will see to it that it is implemented in the future as in the past.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the minister's assurances in that regard. In the present context, with regard to the future treatment of these employees, to make sure that there is no possibility that those employees who appear as witnesses will be unfairly or improperly treated later by supervisors or officials for giving evidence to the inquiry which they might not like, will the minister issue a directive to all officials in his department that there is to be no unfair treatment or lack of consideration given to any employee, no lessening of their opportunities for advancement or promotion, no derogatory insertions in their personnel files, no refusing to speak to or to deal openly and normally at all times with such employees?

Mr. Pepin: My hon. friend is sufficiently sophisticated to know that a statement of that kind might not solve all the problems. There are ways of being unfriendly to a person when you want to be that, as my friend can well imagine. But speaking from the top of my head—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: —and with great sincerity, I might offer to do something even more worthwhile than what the hon. member suggested. I might promise to the House—because what is taking place now is, in my view, a very serious event which might have a traumatic effect on the department—to pay particular attention to the officers who are going to present testimony which might not be friendly to the department, and I promise to meet them and to ensure that they are not hurt in the process.

ENERGY

PROPOSALS SUBMITTED TO ALBERTA ON OIL PRICING AGREEMENT—TAR SANDS DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In reply to a number of questions from this side of the House, the minister indicated that to gain an oil pricing agreement with Alberta he had submitted four proposals to Alberta.

My question is whether they were really four distinctly different proposals, or did the minister submit four times the same proposal? If they were indeed distinct, which I doubt, I should like to ask the minister, what were the differences?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): First of all, I would like to assure my hon. colleague that at least four different proposals were made during the discussions I had with my counterpart from Alberta. These various proposals were all rejected for different reasons. However, I wish to add that the Alberta energy minister and myself have agreed that for the benefit of the negotiations which are in progress, it would be preferable not to give out the details of the offers made.

[English]

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, in a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I should like to ask whether he has considered the fact that he might be able to settle the tar sands, or the heavy oil portion of the agreement to allow these two massive developments to get under way.

He did indicate that Petro-Canada is ready to go and that these companies are ready to go. Indeed, Alsands is not ready to go without a commitment on pricing, Imperial Oil is not ready to go without a commitment on pricing, PetroCan is not ready to go for at least another five years. Has he considered this?

An hon. Member: Marc Lalonde is ready to go right now.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I have indicated that I put forward four different offers on the table and they have been turned down. If my colleague suggests that we should have a special arrangement or separate arrangement for the tar sands development, I certainly would not object to discussing such a proposal. But I must say that I have seen no particular interest in such a separate arrangement for tar sands from my Alberta colleague. I have had no indication whatever that this would go anywhere.

But if my friend thinks that there is a possibility of making real progress by dissociating the general discussions and dividing them, I am certainly willing to consider this and even to communicate with my Alberta colleague to ask him whether he is interested. However, I must tell the hon. member that the meetings I have had lately lead me to believe that this would not be very productive.

RAILWAYS

DECISION ON BRANCH LINES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would he inform the House when the decision on branch railway lines will be made, the lines mentioned in what is called the Neil report, which he indicated he would look at? Was that decision made, and can he announce it to the House?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I will do so quite soon, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Murta: Madam Speaker, "quite soon" is really not good enough in terms of an answer. Can the minister give us an indication whether "quite soon" will be before the end of July, and is he giving very serious consideration to retaining the lines that were put into the permanent network? That is what westerners really want to know.

Mr. Pepin: I am quite aware of the importance of making a decision soon, because uncertainty in these circumstances is not good. But I have to go through the normal process of obtaining the support of my colleagues for whatever action I will take. My recommendation will be going to a committee of the cabinet very soon.

FISHERIES

SWORDFISH—U.S. BAN ON IMPORTS FROM CANADA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In view of the fact that the extensive U.S. market has been closed by U.S. regulations prohibiting the importation of swordfish from Canada since 1971, thereby making the 3,500 tonnes quota for 1980 meaningless, I ask the minister whether he has recently been in touch with the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, which is responsible for the regulation, to request them to lift the ban. If so, what response did he receive?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): I have not been in touch recently with the Food and Drug Administration in the U.S. I know that some efforts had been made before I left office, and I presume they were continued under my successor. I have nothing new to report on that. I am afraid that in fact what we are seeing is what I had warned about some time ago—that the size of the Canadian market was simply not large enough to permit a very economic operation.

Mr. Crouse: Since the Canadian swordfish season opened in June, and the Canadian market is very limited—as the minister stated—will he undertake to present to the U.S. FDA a well-documented report covering scientific research to clarify the fact that the mercury level in swordfish is not significant enough to endanger human health, and request that the importing ban should be revoked so that this approximately $15 million industry could be restored to Nova Scotia?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, I know that a great deal of very valuable and correct information was given to our American friends. They did not act at that time, but I think it is worth going to them again.

TRANSPORT

RECOMMENDATIONS OF TASK FORCE RESPECTING MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Did the minister give any consideration to the recommendation of the grain transportation task force which suggested that the private sector, if certain economic situations were to their advantage, would invest in rolling stock, cars—similar to the situation of the 100 per cent tax write-off on Canadian films? I believe that the suggestion was accepted by the previous administration. Did he give any consideration to that?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, we are giving consideration to everything, and I will add this one to the others.

LEASING OF HOPPER CARS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased with the answer the minister gave, but now I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, because his seatmate, the Minister of Transport, did not consider and accept a principle which was accepted by the Conservative government.

Is he aware that his government will be paying out $275 million to two American banks, the J. P. Morgan Interfunding Corporation and the Connecticut Bank and Trust Company, for leases on Canadian hopper cars?

● (1500)

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I am sure my colleague, the Minister of Transport, is very much aware of all these considerations. He is demonstrating that daily.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: And I am happy to share with him—

An hon. Member: Get your tongue out of your cheek.

Mr. Gray: I am happy to share with him a commitment to improving very soon western grain transportation.

An hon. Member: Beat your chest.

FISHERIES

POLICY ON COMMERCIAL SALMON FISHERY ON EAST COAST

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Has he and his department arrived at a policy yet with respect to the commercial salmon fishery in the Bay of Fundy and other areas of Atlantic Canada? If so, what is that policy?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I hope I understood the hon. member's question. The policy has not changed. Perhaps the hon. member is referring to some newspaper report to the effect that 75 per cent of a fisherman's income would have to come from the fishery before he was qualified to hold a licence. Frankly, I do not know from where the report originated. That is not in the policy. We are discussing the whole area of fisheries licensing, but under no circumstances would we put, in that type of region—which is rather dependent upon seasonal fisheries—that sort of regulation. So I can only knock down what appears to have been a rather mistaken speculation about the whole field of licensing.

Mr. McCain: Madam Speaker, in view of the fact commercial fishermen in the Bay of Fundy and other Atlantic regions where the salmon fishery is now barred will not have a fishing season this year, is the minister now prepared to assure salmon fishermen that they will receive the historic payments in lieu of fishing that was the policy of his department for a number of years? If so, when?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, I really have to remind the hon. member—and he might want to look at this in Hansard when he sat on this side—it was announced that the ban would be continued but compensation would be terminated. The then minister, my predecessor, then realigned his position and I congratulate him for it. But the fact is that no money was left in the estimates to undertake the payment to fishermen. I am now trying to restore this budget, as I am trying to restore a number of others.

NATIONAL ANTHEM

REQUEST THAT RADIO AND TELEVISION STATIONS OPEN AND CLOSE DAILY PROGRAMS WITH "O CANADA"

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Beauce): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Radio and television stations used to end their programming by playing our national anthem, "O Canada". This commendable custom was dropped some time during the 1970s. Would the Secretary of State write a letter to the administration of the radio and television stations urging them to open and close their daily programming by playing "O Canada"?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I feel that the suggestion made by the hon. member touches the heart of every member of the House. It will give me great pleasure to follow up on it and communicate with all radio and television stations as well as with all cable companies in the country recommending that they adopt the policy suggested by the hon. member.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

PURCHASE OF TIRES FROM CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, during the period reserved for presentation of motions under S.O. 43, the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) made a motion. I thank him for having brought to the attention of Canadians through his motion the very progressive policy my department has adopted concerning supply, in using this system to "Canadianize" our industry. Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, when he made these statements, he indicated that we had bought thousands of tires from Hungary whereas in fact we have bought only 192.

Madam Speaker: Order. There is so much noise in the House of Commons that I cannot even hear whether the hon. minister is raising a point of order and decide whether he ought to be recognized. I would ask hon. members to let me hear him so I can see what procedure should be adopted.

Point of Order—Mr. Blais

[English]

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I might indicate that what I was saying was that the hon. gentleman made allegations in the motion under Standing Order 43, which he presented. Those allegations were inaccurate. In effect, the tires were purchased from B. F. Goodrich.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It is sufficiently clear that the hon. minister does not have a point of order but is launching into a debate about a motion introduced under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Therefore, I cannot hear the hon. minister. The hon. member for Edmonton North on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: It is very important. They have not heard it yet.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I need not remind the hon. member "question period" is over.

Mr. Paproski: On the same point of order, Madam Speaker, it was not a question. I just wanted to know whether the minister had cashed the cheque for $12 million.

Madam Speaker: Well, if it was not a question, it seems to me the hon. member has made his representations.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BLAIS—PROCEDURE RESPECTING S.O. 43 MOTIONS

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. Minister of Supply and Services on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, it is a very simple point. During the period of motions under the provisions of Standing Order 43, opposition members make allegations which they do not pursue by asking questions during question period.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I cannot allow such an intervention any more than I can allow members on the other side of the House to use one procedure or another to express their dissatisfaction with answers they received from government members. I think I am being fair in not recognizing members of this side who are not pleased with allegations made during the period of motions under Standing Order 43, any more than I would let hon. members on the other side initiate a debate about an answer they obtained from a minister.

[English]

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): On the point of order, Madam Speaker, I presented some facts. Because I did not put in issue the manufacturing of that company—

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—OFFICIAL REPORT—ALTERATION TO REMARKS OF HON. MEMBER FOR THUNDER BAY-ATIKOKAN

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A matter has just been brought to my attention in respect of a question by the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) and the response given by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), as reported at page 2646 of Hansard for yesterday. I personally checked the blues in respect of this question and answer and the several interjections which occurred at the time. I note that the phrase used in the second to last line of the question by the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan is "300,000 or 400,000 bales of hay". That is not, Madam Speaker, what he said and the interjections, had they been reproduced, would make that abundantly clear. What he said was "bushels", and the privilege of altering Hansard does not extend to members the right to alter the whole sense of what was said. The hon. member is stuck with the word "bushels" and Hansard should record that accurately, rather than in this fashion.

I would prevail upon the Chair, because this has happened before and appears to be continuing to happen, to consider that it might be useful, particularly to newer members such as this one, to point out—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: He is not a new member and should know better. Either that party's caucus chairman, the House leader, or perhaps yourself, Madam Speaker, should once again remind members of the limitations which apply when members make alterations to the blues.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I should like to interject at this time. I had the opportunity, because I sat very close to the hon. gentleman, to hear his explanation when the microphone was turned off. He immediately corrected himself explaining that he meant to say "bales" instead of "bushels".

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. To those of us who were in the House yesterday it was quite clear that the hon. member, when referring to hay, did not use the word "bales" but rather "bushels", and in fact went to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) right after the question period and tried to explain to the minister privately. But I think to all members who were in the House it was clear he used the word "bushels" instead of "bales".

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I do not think this discussion should be prolonged, but I concur in what the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) have said. I would appreciate it very much if you would consider examining the blues yourself and, if you find this has occurred, you could order the appropriate correction to be made.

Madam Speaker: We now fortunately have two ways of checking the record. The reporters take down what they hear from an hon. member and we have the soundtrack from the televising of the proceedings. If the soundtrack has not picked up—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Reference to Committee

An hon. Member: The hon. member should take a lie detector.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It sometimes happens that some words are not picked up by the microphone. However, I need not remind hon. members that they cannot cause Hansard to be changed in respect of something which has been said by another hon. member. Perhaps that hon. member when he comes into the House, after reading Hansard tomorrow and sees what has taken place in the House today, will want to give an explanation or correct himself, if there is a need to do so. I will leave it to the hon. member to ascertain or indicate what he really meant or said in the House on that particular day.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF CANADA—MR. ANTHONY BLUNT—MR. T. HARRIS

Question No. 10—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the National Gallery of Canada purchase paintings through arrangement with, or on the recommendation of, alleged British spy Mr. Anthony Blunt and, if so (a) what are the names of all the paintings (b) what were the dates of purchase (c) what was the amount paid in each case and what was the total amount paid (d) what was the total amount of money paid to Mr. Blunt for his services?

2. Did the gallery purchase a painting entitled "Cleopatra and Augustus" purportedly by Mr. Nicolas Poussin and, if so (a) was the painting certified by Mr. Blunt as an original Poussin (b) was the deal with the gallery completed by British art dealer, Mr. T. Harris and, to the knowledge of the government, is this the same Mr. Harris who has been referred to in the alleged recent British spy revelations concerning Mr. Blunt?

3. Has the government any information that Mr. T. Harris was in any way connected with the Maclean-Burgess-Philby and Blunt affair and, if so, what is the information?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Secretary of State and the Solicitor General as follows:

1. (a) Abraham and the Three Angels by B. E. Murillo
Lamentation by Q. Matsys
Mercury and Argus by J. M. W. Turner
Augustus and Cleopatra by N. Poussin

(b) The date of purchase in the above order are as follows:

1948—Abraham and the Three Angels (by B. E. Murillo)
1949—Lamentation (by O. Matsys)
1953—Augustus and Cleopatra (by N. Poussin)

(c) Abraham and the Three Angels (by B. E. Murillo) was purchased for 8,000 pounds sterling.

Lamentation (by Q. Matsys) was purchased for $31,000

Mercury and Argus (by J. M. W. Turner) was purchased for 7,150 pounds sterling.

Augustus and Cleopatra (by N. Poussin) was purchased for 500 pounds sterling

The total amount paid for these purchases of works of art was 15,650 pounds sterling and $31,000.

(d) Professor Blunt was paid an annual honorarium of 250 pounds sterling a year from June, 1948, to May, 1956, for a total of approximately 1,850 pounds sterling.

2. (a) The painting in question was attributed to Poussin by Professor Blunt in print in 1938, and this attribution was maintained by Professor Blunt in the Burlington magazine as late as 1977.

(b) In so far as the Secretary of State is concerned: The painting was purchased from the Spanish Art Gallery Ltd. operated by Mr. Thomas Harris.

In so far as the Solicitor General is concerned: See Secretary of State's reply to part 2(b) and answer to part 3 below.

3. The policy of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is to preserve the confidentiality of all information it holds on individuals and organizations.

CBC—CBO-AM, OTTAWA—COVERAGE IN BROCKVILLE, ONTARIO

Question No. 52—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was CBC radio station CBO-AM, Ottawa, increased in power in the past few years and, if so (a) on what date (b) to what amount of wattage?

2. Technically, how large a radius is a 50,000 watt radio station supposed to carry in so far as providing good service?

3. (a) Is CBC aware if CBO-AM Ottawa, produces adequate signals in the area of Brockville, Ontario in the constituency of Leeds-Grenville (b) for what reason is it not available on numerous occasions except faintly (c) what steps will CBC take to provide proper coverage for Brockville by the station especially since CBC programming has been eliminated by Brockville's private radio station CFJR?

4. Have complaints been received from persons in the area that they are unable to pick up CBC news programs, particularly "The World at Eight" and "The World at Six"?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Yes.

(a) February 1, 1977

(b) 5Kw to 50Kw.

2. No general answer can be given to this question since it depends on such factors as directional radiation patterns, frequency of the station, ground conductivity and tower height. Also, because of propagation characteristics after dark, most stations alter their broadcast pattern in the evening, as required under international agreement, to protect the coverage area of other stations.

3. (a) The CBC is aware that CBO does not provide an adequate signal in the area of Brockville.

(b) Because of the necessity to protect the coverage area of existing stations on the same frequency, CBO could not be designed to cover the Brockville area.

(c) CBC has constructed an FM transmitter near Brockville which is expected to go into service as soon as signal interference problems are largely resolved. This transmitter will carry the same programming as CBO.

4. Some complaints have been received from people in the Brockville area about lack of reception generally, not specifically about "The World at Eight" and "The World at Six".

CBC—CBO—MR. JOHN McGRATH

Question No. 67—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is Mr. John McGrath a staff member of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation at station CBO and, if so (a) is he with the news department (b) on what date did he join the staff (c) is he on six months probation (d) what are the qualifications which lead him to receiving the job (e) what are his duties?

2. To the knowledge of the government, was Mr. McGrath refused entry to the United States on at least two occasions and, if so, for what reasons?

3. Did Mr. McGrath at one time work for the program "CBO Morning" and did he do research on the opening of mail by the RCMP and, if so (a) did any of his research concern the Octopus Book Store of Ottawa (b) is such research material still in existence and, if not, was it destroyed and for what reason?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): 1. To be answered elsewhere.

2. This question should be directed to the immigration and naturalization service of the United States Government.

3. To be answered elsewhere.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation:

1. Yes.

(a) Yes.

(b) October 29, 1979.

2. To be answered elsewhere.

1(c), (d), (e), 3(a), (b).

The circumstances and terms of Mr. McGrath's employment and assignments as an individual CBC employee are among those details of internal management and administration which Parliament has not, as a matter of custom, required the CBC to provide. The background of this custom was explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

CBC—ENGLISH AND FRENCH STATIONS—CONSTITUENCY OF LEEDS-GRENVILLE

Question No. 71—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What was the total amount of public funds spent in establishing CBC FM English and French transmitting stations in the Constituency of Leeds-Grenville near Maitland, Ontario?

2. Did CBC engineers find that the operation of such stations interfered with radio and television reception by persons in the area and, if so (a) were many complaints received (b) did tests in the past eight months show any improvement in the situation?

3. What are the future plans for the stations?

4. Are the stations inoperative at present and will they continue to be and, if so, what will be done with them?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Five hundred and twelve thousand dollars.

2. (a) Approximately 100 complaints were received because a number of weak FM signals (Radio & Television) in the area were affected when the CBC FM transmitters were tested. The transmitters were installed to replace CBC service formerly provided by a local affiliate, to strengthen inadequate AM coverage areas and to provide a basic French language service for the area.

CBC/DOC tests have established that the CBC signals are in conformity with DOC standards and consistent with the provisions of the licence issued by CRTC.

(b) No.

3. The stations will go on the air as soon as the signal interference problems are largely resolved. CBC will shortly be making available to area residents technical advice on possible remedies to reduce or eliminate the interference.

4. The stations are inoperative at present. See answer to (3).

HULL, QUE.—CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE OF BUILDINGS

Question No. 117—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In each of the past six years, what was the total amount spent by the government on construction and maintenance on government owned buildings or property of any kind in the Hull, Quebec area?

2. What was the total for the six years combined?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by the Department of Public Works and the National Capital Commission as follows: In so far as Public Works Canada is concerned: 1. The following amounts were spent in the past six years on construction and maintenance of government-owned buildings and property in Hull, Quebec:

Fiscal Year	Amount ($000)
1975/76	$ 56,415
1976/77	$ 46,831
1977/78	$ 48,941
1978/79	$ 39,037
1979/80	$ 20,539
2.	$246,211

Note: This includes expenditures on roads and bridges but does not include expenditures for leases or lease-purchases.

In so far as the National Capital Commission is concerned:
1. In each of the past six fiscal years, the following amounts were spent on construction and maintenance on government owned buildings or property of any kind in the Hull, Quebec area:

Fiscal Year	Amount
1974/75	$ 3,738,367
1975/76	$ 4,569,625
1976/77	$ 5,471,095
1977/78	$ 6,169,983
1978/79	$ 7,006,486
1979/80	$ 6,210,970
2.	$33,166,526

PART-TIME WORKERS

Question No. 238—Mr. Herbert:

1. What percentage of all persons employed are in part-time jobs?

2. How many do not work sufficient hours to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits?

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Statistics Canada has reported that in 1979, 12.6 per cent of the employed labour force were part-time workers. Statistics Canada defines a part-time worker as one who usually works fewer than 30 hours a week and does not consider himself or herself a full-time worker.

2. Under the current rules for minimum weekly insurability, it is estimated that about 130,000 individuals who were part-time workers were prevented from establishing a claim in 1979.

JUSTICE—CONTRACTS FOR PROFESSIONAL SERVICES

Question No. 542—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For the fiscal year 1978-79, what contracts for professional services were let for studies, surveys and analyses into (a) present or future policies, programs or information analysis and their efficiency and effectiveness (b) the examination of the administration or internal operation of the Department of Justice?

2. How much was committed on each contract and to whom?

OLD AGE SECURITY

Question No. 836—Mr. Howie:

As of November 1, 1979, how many persons were receiving old age security benefits?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As of November 1, 1979, there were 2,209,133 persons receiving old age security benefits.

RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Question No. 986—Mr. MacKay:

1. With reference to the government's restraint program of (a) 1978 (b) 1979, by province and territory, what (i) was the per capita reduction (ii) was the total reduction in expenditures (iii) were the reductions as a proportion of the national total?

2. For the same years, did the Atlantic provinces bear a disproportionate share of such reductions stemming from programme changes and cuts?

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1 and 2. The Treasury Board secretariat does not have all the information required to address these questions, and such information would be costly to assemble. Moreover, considering program cuts in isolation would provide only a partial and misleading picture, for several reasons. First, it is important not to ignore the rapid growth in on-going programs, such as equalization payments which favour economically weaker regions. Second, there is the impact of certain "tax expenditures", such as the Investment Tax Credit for DREE designated areas and the Child Tax Credit which again tend to favour the economically weaker regions. Finally, other policies, while not having direct budgetary implications, nevertheless have important consequences for particular regions. One example is the extension of Canada's territorial waters to the 200-mile limit.

FAIR WAGES AND HOURS OF LABOUR ACT

Question No. 1,219—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Minister of Labour receive a brief from the Canadian Executive Board of the Building and Construction Trades and, if so (a) did it contend that the 1935 Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act should be updated because it gives advantage to non-union contractors on government tenders (b) has the minister answered any of the points raised in the brief and, if so, what were his answers and to which points?

2. Is the government prepared to consider that government contracts given to contractors should be given either to those who employ union help or to those, although non-union, who pay a fair wage in the area in question?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): 1. (a) Yes

(b) The minister has not answered any of the points raised in the brief.

2. The government's position has always been that employees working on government contract projects should be paid fair wages.

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question no. 971.

[Text]

*ST. JOHN'S AIRPORT—REDUCTION OF RADAR APPROACH SERVICES

Question No. 971—Mr. McGrath:

1. Did the government reduce radar approach services at the St. John's airport and, if so, are the reductions within safety standards?

2. Was there a reduction in man-years and in equipment in connection with the operation of the radar services and, if so, for what reason?

[English]

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Transport Canada advises as follows: 1. At the time of the question, radar approach services at St. John's airport had not been reduced. However, on May 30, 1980, a notice to airmen—NOTAM—was issued advising aircraft operators that it was planned to withdraw the PAR service at the St. John's airport on June 9, 1980. As scheduled, a NOTAM was issued on June 9 advising that this PAR system was decommissioned. This system was decommissioned to enable the relocation of the glide path on runway 17 during the upgrading and modernization of the existing instrument landing system on that runway. All other instrument approach systems will continue to be operated in accordance with existing safety standards.

2. Now that the PAR system has been decommissioned, it will be removed. The immediate reason for the removal of the equipment is to provide a standard threshold crossing height for aircraft utilizing the ILS on runway 17 which will enable aircraft to take advantage of a greater runway landing distance under IFR conditions. The long-term reason is to remove this old equipment to comply with departmental policy to remove precision approach radar systems at an airport when two front-course instrument landing systems are available on separate runways. It is not expected there will be a reduction in person-years as the approved number of air traffic controllers is unchanged and these person-years will be utilized to provide increased staff for the control tower at St. John's. The number of person-years within the telecommunications support area will remain unchanged.

Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion under S.O. 26

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

NORTHERN PIPELINE ACT

AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I ask leave to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the amendments to condition 12 of schedule 3 of the Northern Pipeline Act which have been proposed by the National Energy Board, which amendments, if approved by the governor in council, would subvert the intentions of Parliament as expressed in the original Northern Pipeline Act, and could result in the most massive, wasteful and shortsighted sell-out of a non-renewable energy resource of recent times.

I submit personally that the motion meets the test under the rule; second, the question period today indicated why we need this debate; third, if there is to be a cabinet decision before the debate then it would be useless to have a debate after, we need the debate now; and fourth, no government business will be affected if there is a debate tonight, and it will not affect the pension legislation. I urge you to grant leave, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member gave the Chair the required notice to ask for leave to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26. In his application the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) raises a number of points. He questions the wisdom and legality of the amendments proposed by the National Energy Board to the Northern Pipeline Act. He wants to discuss whether such changes to the act were ever intended when the House passed the Northern Pipeline Act in 1978. He feels that because cabinet must make a decision soon regarding the ratification of the proposed amendment, the issue requires the urgent consideration of the House.

While the hon. member is quite properly concerned about the importance of the subject, the Chair must determine whether Standing Order 26 is the appropriate avenue through which to bring this subject to the attention of the House. On April 30, 1975, as appears at page 5340 of Hansard, Mr. Speaker Jerome ruled that under almost no circumstances can a review of the law be regarded as an emergency provision rather than a continuing legislative concern of this House. Therefore, it does not constitute a proper subject for debate under Standing Order 26.

The hon. member also wants to review the legal authority of the National Energy Board, an entity to which Parliament has given certain powers under the Northern Pipeline Act, for proposing amendments to a schedule of the act. In a similar situation which involved Bell Canada and the Canadian Transport Commission, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux ruled on November 9, 1971, on pages 9467 to 9468 of Hansard:

Motion under S.O. 26

It also appears to the Chair that the hon. gentleman, in the main, is asking for a review or reconsideration of the statutory powers of the Transport Commission . . . It may well be that such a review or reconsideration of the powers of the commission might be desirable, but it does not seem to me that a debate under Standing Order 26 is the appropriate or the effective method for such a review.

It seems to me that Mr. Speaker Lamoureux's ruling applies precisely to the case that we have before the House today.

Finally, Standing Order 26, section (16), states that the right to move the adjournment of the House is subject to the condition that:

The matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration.

The member himself has stated that he raised the matter as early as April 17 of this year. Since then there have been two opposition days dealing with energy policy, one on May 8 and one yesterday, July 8. As well, the Standing Committee on Northern Pipelines, to which all reports and agreements mentioned in the Northern Pipeline Act are permanently referred, has also been meeting. It must also be noted that Standing Order 65(1)(t) states that this committee shall report at least three times in every session.

It would seem to the Chair, therefore, that this subject does not qualify as a genuine emergency and that the House has had and will have other opportunities to discuss the matter.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has obviously availed himself of the opportunity to raise the matter in the House on a number of occasions. The fact that he seems to feel he needs yet another opportunity does not in itself constitute an emergency.

For these reasons I must regretfully decline to accept the hon. member's motion at this time.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, with respect to the ruling which you just gave on the Standing Order 26 motion, I rise again to inform hon. members that Standing Order 26(3) provides:

When requesting leave to propose such a motion, the member shall rise in his place and present without argument the statement referred to in section (2) of this order.

Section (2) simply says that this House will now adjourn. I would like the House to realize that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was perhaps given some latitude which is not permitted by the rules.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Don't be so mealy-mouthed.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I suggest that the parliamentary secretary has made a gratuitous intervention. I happen to know that the original draft prepared by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was a lengthy one, and I counselled him to shorten it. When he stood he read a briefly stated motion. His comments were so brief that I am sure Your Honour does not feel that he transgressed the rule in any way. The parliamentary secretary should save that comment for some other occasion.

Madam Speaker: It seemed to me that the very, very short statement which was made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was quite acceptable. The draft which I received, of course, gave in length many arguments for which the hon. member thought that this motion should be considered, and that is fine. The draft can be very lengthy, but it is helpful for the Chair if it provides all the bases upon which the motion is requested.

However, the statement made today by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, it seems to me, was reasonably brief, I am sure that it was formulated to inform the House briefly of the reasons for which the hon. member was putting his motion.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 15 is acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations pertaining to the confidentiality of certain parts of the information requested.

Perhaps you would be so kind, Madam Speaker, as to call notice of motion for the production of papers Nos. 4, 7 and 22.

Madam Speaker: Subject to the reservations or contingencies expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the House that notice of motion No. 15 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TREASURY BOARD—POSSIBILITY OF TRANSFERRING THE GOVERNMENT'S COMPUTER OPERATIONS TO THE PRIVATE SECTOR

Motion No. 15—Mr. Nystrom:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, memoranda, notes, minutes of meetings and other communications, between June 1, 1979, and February 25, 1980, involving the Treasury Board and relating to the possibility of transferring any or all of the government's computer operations to the private sector.

Motion agreed to.

STUDY—GRAIN TRANSPORT—WESTERN CANADA.

Motion No. 4—Mr. Herbert:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the latest completed study on grain transport in western Canada.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the document requested is of a voluminous character and would require an inordinate cost and length of time to prepare. However, I sent today a copy of the requested document to the hon. member. Therefore, the hon. member is asked to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Transfer for debate.

Madam Speaker: Transferred for debate.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—HYDRO QUEBEC—HIGH TENSION ELECTRICAL LINES CROSSING THE OTTAWA RIVER AND THE ST. LAWRENCE RIVER.

Motion No. 7—Mr. Herbert:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all minutes of meetings, documents, telegrams and letters concerning discussions between officials of the Department of Transport and Hydro-Quebec relating to high tension electrical lines crossing the Ottawa River below Carillon and the St. Lawrence River above Beauharnois.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, again the documents requested are of a voluminous character and would require an inordinate cost and length of time to prepare. I have, however, sent a copy to the hon. member. Therefore, I ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Transfer for debate.

Madam Speaker: Transferred for debate.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REPORT OF PROFESSOR BARNHILL—CARLETON UNIVERSITY—OTTAWA

Motion No. 22—Mr. MacKay:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of a report commissioned by the Bureau of Physical Resources, Department of External Affairs, prepared by Professor Barnhill of Carleton University, Ottawa, in 1979.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the report asked for by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) was prepared as an internal working paper and contains comments on the competence, abilities and personalities of certain employees of the department. As such, it cannot and should not be tabled. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Madam Speaker: Will the hon. member withdraw his motion?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, this report, which was commissioned by R. K. Plowman of the Bureau of Physical Services, is obviously one that is of great moment. The actions of this particular department have been indirectly commented upon. It is the single department within the Department of External Affairs which is totally responsible for the provisioning of our diplomatic and other representatives abroad.

The bureau spends a great deal of money and is of such a character that I think the government would want, particularly if it is committed at all to freedom of information, to commission this report which appears ironically enough to be held back by the very person who commissioned it, Mr. Plowman. It deals with his management style and the style in general with which the bureau is managed.

I would certainly not withdraw my request but request that it be transferred for debate. If the government will not put this information on record, there may be other ways of doing it.

Madam Speaker: Transferred for debate. Shall the remaining motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

STATUTE LAW (MILITARY AND CIVILIAN WAR PENSIONS, COMPENSATION AND ALLOWANCES) AMENDMENT ACT, 1980

MEASURE RESPECTING PENSIONS OF VETERANS

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that Bill C-40, to amend the Pension Act, the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, be read the second time and referred by unanimous consent to Committee of the Whole.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: No. We are waiting to hear from the minister.

Madam Speaker: Yes, I was going to give him the floor. Then I should withdraw "Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?" and give the floor to the hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald).

Mr. MacDonald: Madam Speaker, it is with a good deal of pride that I speak on second reading of this bill dealing with amendments to the Pension Act, the compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act.

As hon. members know, these are economy conscious times. This government is committed to fiscal responsibility and the prudent management of taxpayers' money. But this government has another commitment, a commitment spelled out in the last election campaign by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he promised help to those Canadians who need it most.

This pledge was kept last month when Parliament passed legislation increasing the guaranteed income supplement by $35 per month. Now this government is proposing that Parliament give similar recognition and support to another group of Canadians who deserve our help. I refer to disabled pensioners, the widows and dependants of those Canadians who went to war for us and those many needy veterans and their dependants who are and will be receiving the war veterans allowance.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be a member of a government and of a nation which continues to honour its debt to those who risked their lives so that future generations could prosper in peace. Memories of war may fade but the reality of hardship for many veterans and their survivors is ever present. To recognize this reality is simple justice.

It is symbolic that this bill is being introduced 50 years after war veterans allowance legislation was first passed in Parliament. During the past five decades, ministers of veterans affairs have enjoyed the support of all parties in this House in their efforts to upgrade veterans' legislation. Certainly I am no exception. By volunteering to give quick passage to this legislation, the opposition parties are showing that they continue to share this government's concern for our veterans, their widows and dependants. As the ministerial guardian of their interests, I thank hon. members sincerely for their co-operation.

Mr. Speaker, there are a large number of legislative changes proposed in this bill, many of which are of a minor nature. I intend to concentrate my remarks on two measures which are of overwhelming significance both in terms of financial commitment and the number of people affected.

First is the amendment to the Pension Act. The purpose of the Pension Act is to provide compensation to those members of the forces and their dependants for disability or death which was a result of military service. The current legislation provides that surviving widows will receive a widow's pension if the wartime pensioner died as a result of an injury or disease which was incurred during or was attributable to military service, or if a peacetime pensioner's death arose out of or was directly connected with such service.

In addition, it provides that a widow's pension will be payable if the pensioner was entitled or would have been entitled to disability pension assessed at 48 per cent or more during his lifetime. Originally the cutoff point was 80 per cent but almost 50 years ago it was changed to 48 per cent. This was because it was considered that in cases where a disability was severe enough to be paid at that rate, death from whatever cause could be assumed to be related in some way to the problems and disabilities of service.

The current legislative provisions have been criticized for many years because of the 48 per cent cutoff which results in a widow whose spouse was pensioned at that rate receiving $554.78 per month, while a widow whose spouse received pension at the 47 per cent rate would receive no pension unless death was related to service. At the same time, it has always been recognized that in any legislation which has a cutoff point, there will be some persons who will not receive benefits because they miss that cutoff.

Generally speaking, it has been considered that the earning capacity of a disabled pensioner is not as great as it would have been had he not been disabled. On that basis he may not be able to provide for his widow and dependent children after his death as adequately as he otherwise would have been able to.

Mr. Speaker, we are proposing that there be two systems of widow's pensions payable under the Pension Act. In those cases where pensions for the disability have been or should have been paid at the rate of 48 per cent or more, it can be assumed that service played a part in the cause of death, and the present pension system and rates will continue.

In the cases of lesser disabilities where pensions are paid at less than the 48 per cent rate, we are introducing a system whereby the surviving widow will receive one half of the pension paid to her spouse and that will include the additional amount for being married and having dependent children. It will not include other allowances such as attendance allowance and clothing allowance.

As hon. members know, the previous Parliament was dissolved before the former Bill C-28 could be debated. This present bill is the same as Bill C-28 in its treatment of widows' pensions, but as members will hear later it offers a vast improvement in terms of legislation for war veterans allowance recipients. It is intended by this bill to introduce proportionate pensions for widows and dependent children over a period of six and one-half years.

We are proposing that those surviving widows and dependents of pensioners who were pensioned from the 38 per cent to 47 per cent assessment level should receive pension benefits starting on October 1 of this year. On April 1 of each following year, the cutoff point will be systematically lowered until by the end of fiscal 1986-87 all eligible widows and dependent children will receive pension benefits relating to disability levels of 5 per cent or more.

It is estimated that some 15,000 widows and 600 children will become eligible for proportionate pensions on October 1, 1980. By the time the legislation is fully effective, 26,000 widows and 10,000 surviving children will have received these new benefits. Similar provisions are being made with respect to surviving widows and dependent children of former prisoners of war.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize there will be questions as to why we propose to introduce these improvements over a six and one-half year period. Veterans' organizations have a good understanding of the need for such measures. Financial considerations are an integral part of any proposed new legislation. As things stand, the survivors of the more seriously disabled will be helped immediately.

I am proud to say that when this legislation is passed it will overshadow, in terms of generosity, similar legislation anywhere in the world. I believe this is an extremely positive development.

Mr. Speaker, on the golden anniversary of the introduction of war veterans allowance legislation, this Parliament is being asked to reconfirm a commitment made 50 years ago. It was in 1930 that the Parliament of Canada officially recognized that a small segment of the veterans population could not cope with the negative effects of war and needed assistance. At that time Parliament provided through legislation an income tested maintenance allowance to compensate veterans who, due to these intangible negative effects of war, were considered to be pre-aged and incapable of self-maintenance. It was directed toward those who had served in a theatre of war and who had been disabled during wartime. In a sense, war veterans allowance was regarded as old age assistance, but paid at an earlier age due to the concept of pre-aging.

Joseph Shull, in his book "Veneration for Valour", called war veterans allowance "an annuity, the premiums of which the veteran has paid with his service during war." He said veterans themselves had a more telling description—"the burnt-out pension."

I think both descriptions are apt, Mr. Speaker. Most veterans have no need of these benefits, but there are some who have. Some had their youth and vitality drained in war. The working lives of others may have been shortened by the experience of war. There are others who suffer from disease and other ailments born of wartime hardship.

In any event, wartime experience has caught up with the 94,000 Canadians and widows of veterans who now receive war veterans allowance. About half are under 60 years of age and receive federal income support through our program. The remainder are over 65 and receive federal income support, primarily through the old age security and the guaranteed income supplement programs with a modest "top-up" from war veterans allowance.

This is where a significant disparity occurs. Over the years recipients over 65 have benefited more from the war veterans allowance program than their younger comrades. Basically this has resulted because increases in the guaranteed income supplement have been considered exempt income in the income testing process of war veterans allowance. The recent $35 a month increase in GIS means that the single recipient over 65 is now receiving $70 a month more than those who are under 65. For married couples this disparity has not risen to $85 a month.

One original intent of the act was to provide equal treatment to all veterans. One intent of this amendment is to ensure that this happens again. As I mentioned earlier, Bill C-28 failed to deal with this disparity. Three years ago I set up a task force within my department to review war veterans allowance legislation. These amendments reflect their major findings as far as benefits to clients are concerned.

The most efficient way to erase the disparity I mentioned is to establish a new war veterans' ceiling and, at the same time, assess as income all OAS/GIS payments made to recipients over 65. If our proposals are approved by this House, effective July 1 of this year single recipients under age 65 will start receiving an extra $10 a month, and married couples under 65 will start receiving $12 a month more as the program is phased in over seven years. By doing this and reducing OAS/GIS exemptions by an identical amount each year, we will have eliminated the gap between the two age groups by April, 1986.

The bill also contains an amendment which is designed to ensure that such disparities never occur again and that future GIS increases will be passed on automatically to recipients under the age of 65.

Simply put, those over 65 will receive the same benefits as before while those in the younger category will receive annual increases until full equity is achieved. I should also point out that such increases are additional to the current quarterly cost of living increases provided to all recipient veterans and widows. Naturally, many of those now under 65 will be benefiting from the old age security and guaranteed income supplement program long before the transition period is up. We estimate that allowance recipients now under 65 reach that age at a rate of approximately 4,000 a year. Virtually the same number apply for WVA benefits at ages 55 or 60, so we are finding that the total number of our under 65 clientele remains constant at roughly 50,000.

I would like to point out that a substantial number of WVA recipients will be receiving their first increase in the basic rate since 1973 and they, together with persons coming into the program in later years, will increasingly benefit from this legislation.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is appropriate to quote from a speech made by prime minister Borden to Canadian troops before Vimy Ridge in 1917. I do so because this bill is the most important piece of veterans' legislation to be placed before Parliament in many years, and I believe it is only correct that Canadians, particularly the younger ones, are reminded that this is not charity but a right well and nobly earned. Prime minister Borden told those soldiers:

> The government and the country will consider it their first duty to see that a proper appreciation of your effort and of your courage is brought to the notice of your people at home . . . and that no man whether he goes back or whether he remains in Flanders will have just cause to reproach the government for having broken faith with the men who won and the men who died.

By approving this bill, we will once again be honouring that duty which has been reaffirmed many times throughout our history.

One final word: This government has kept its promise to OAS pensioners with its $35 a month GIS increase. It is now proposing to help our war veterans and their families who have been disadvantaged as a result of service to this country.

In this modern age, society is often accused of neglecting both the contributions of our forebears in building this great country called Canada and their needs as they age and experience infirmity. It is often stated that the measure of the social conscience of a nation lies in its treatment of its aging and dependent population.

The government's continuing concern for our senior citizens was recognized through the latest GIS increase. We are now proposing that similar recognition and support be provided on behalf of Canadians who served their country with valour during a time of war. This is why, as Minister of Veterans Affairs, I am proud to move second reading of this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the main reason I am speaking to this bill is that my colleague and friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), is not able to be here because of illness. I am sure we all wish him a speedy recovery from an operation that he has had.

I would like to welcome the minister back to the House. I hope he does not find today's exertions too much, and I also hope his health will continue to improve and that he will be with us throughout the life of this Parliament.

First of all, when one looks at this bill, it does puzzle us as to what took it so long to arrive here. This is a bill where many of the features have been in effect for 15, 20 or even 50 years. They were unjust when they were drafted and when the bill was passed and they have remained unjust ever since. Some of them are relatively minor. However, I agree with the minister that the bill has two major issues that it approaches and there are several minor corrections made to cure these almost tedious discriminatory effects that have been occurring over the years. That is the part that I cannot understand. I will speak about the minor points first and get to the major ones later.

The first one I note with pleasure. World War I veterans are no longer discriminated against for war veterans allowance. They were required to spend one year or 365 days overseas during World War I before they became eligible for WVA, if I may use the abbreviation, whereas World War II veterans were only required to spend one day overseas. That situation simply baffled me. Ever since World War II, which is 35 years ago, we have had two classes of veterans, namely the World War II veteran who had to spend only one day overseas, the other being the World War I veteran who had to spend one year overseas. This was a ridiculous requirement which should have been amended 35 years ago.

The second one is a minor amendment that provides fair treatment for orphans. There is another amendment with regard to a widow who loses her pension if she remarries. If she should lose the second husband, she can again draw the pension she received following the death of her first husband. That is a progressive move.

There is another amendment here which I welcome; I had not seen it previously. If a mistake is made by the Department of Veterans Affairs which adversely affects a veteran's pension, it can now be corrected within the department rather than requiring governor in council approval.

There is one glaring omission here; I do not think it is the fault of the minister. It is a difficulty I had hoped he might mention in his speech. Maybe he will do that when called upon to answer questions in the committee stage. I refer to the total absence of any mention in his remarks of the Veterans Land Act. There is mention of it in the bill. It has nothing to do with the part of it that I am worried about, namely, the right of spouses under the Veterans Land Act.

A lot of publicity was given to a case about a year ago concerning a woman who shared a business with her husband. The business had a Veterans Land Act loan put on it which immediately made it the sole property of the veteran. The wife no longer had any right whatsoever. If the marriage breaks up, the wife has no right to the home the two of them share. That case may have received more publicity than most, but it is not an isolated one. This is happening all the time.

There is a great difficulty when trying to change this by phasing in a bill to change the terms of 40,000 mortgages in effect under the VLA. I would appreciate it if the minister could tell us if they are still working on that. They were working on it. I had received assurance that an amendment would be ready this spring, difficult though it was. That is what kept us from putting an amendment into the Veterans Land Act when our Bill C-28 was introduced.

Bill C-28 has become fairly well known due to the fact that it has been mentioned almost every Thursday afternoon since this Parliament began sitting. The Conservative government introduced that bill to rectify the anomalies and inequities that we saw in the veterans' legislation at that time. This is what caused me to make my opening remark as to why it took so long for this bill to be prepared.

The first half of Bill C-40 is almost a reprint of our bill C-28. It has exactly the same effect. That bill was there to act as a pattern, and I believe in some ways it did, although there are more changes than I expected in the new bill. We wonder why it did not come in a bit sooner. Why was it necessary for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) to get up in the House of Commons during question period to ask if we could please get this veterans' bill? He asked for that bill sight unseen. Nobody on this side of the House saw Bill C-40 which the minister has just introduced until today.

The Leader of the Opposition offered to free up a day of the House of Commons in order that this bill could be brought in. We guaranteed to put it through all stages today. That was quite an offer to make. When I read a couple of clauses in this bill, I had some second thoughts about the wisdom of offering to pass the bill through all stages without having seen it.

I will get to the two major issues right away. I wish to point out that the history of this bill is that it was brought into the House today because the Leader of the Opposition made an issue of it on Monday. I might quote some of the minister's statements; Hansard is full of them. The minister said he was soon going to discuss the matter with cabinet; he was soon going to talk to his colleagues about it. This might be the first bill we have ever dealt with that has never been to cabinet, as far as one can tell from reading the minister's comments over the last few weeks.

There are two main issues here. The first is the 48 per cent rule, the main reason for the bill in the first place. As the minister pointed out in his remarks, over the years if a pensioner was getting a 48 per cent pension, his widow—generally they were widows, but it could work the other way around—would get $550 odd dollars a month for the rest of her life. However, if the pensioner was getting 47 per cent, she did not receive anything. This is so obviously unfair that it has been the subject of debate and questioning in this House as long as I have been here. Frankly, there seemed to be no progress at all until proposed legislation about a year ago when I asked the staff of DVA to prepare Bill C-28.

At this time I would like to express my gratitude to the staff of the Department of Veterans Affairs. I can tell the minister that he has an excellent staff. They accepted the change in government in a purely professional manner. I only suggested a method of getting around the 48 per cent rule that would base the survivor's pension on the amount of the disability pension. That seemed to free up the log jam which resulted in nothing having been done about the bill before. The staff worked on it with a will. They thought up new ideas on their own. I was very pleased with the bill that came in.

Quite frankly, I think there are some improvements in this bill, but there are a couple of things that I do not think are improvements. Bill C-28 was given first reading in this House on December 6 last year. There was an understanding in the House that it would be passed before Christmas. However, for some reason which absolutely baffles me, the NDP presented a motion to the House which the Liberals found irresistible. It was a chance to defeat the Conservative government. I talked to an NDP member about this today. I was told it was a chance to bring in a motion which the Liberals would vote for. They thought if they brought in one like the Regina manifesto, the Liberals would vote against it. I said: "Don't fool yourself, they would vote for Satan himself in order to get back into the treasury benches".

That bill died on the order paper because of the defeat of the Conservative government on December 13. I find it hard to believe that the hon. member who worked hardest of anyone in this House, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to get justice for pensioners should have seconded the motion that killed this bill on the order paper. That hon. member seconded the no confidence motion.

Today history is repeating itself. Only a few minutes ago the same gentleman seconded another NDP motion that would have adjourned the House today. The minister came out of hospital to appear here today for the consideration of this bill. I could hardly believe my ears a few minutes ago when I heard the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) move that the House adjourn this afternoon to discuss something else, and was seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. member realizes that the motion moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was for a debate on an adjournment motion which, had it been granted, would have taken place at eight o'clock this evening. It would not have interfered with this afternoon's debate.

Mr. McKinnon: I appreciate, as I always do, advice on the rules of procedure that the hon. gentleman provides.

The major issue, as I see it, has to do with the 48 per cent rule. We should look at what it does to widows. Had our bill been passed, payment would have commenced on April 1. With Bill C-40, it is payable October 1. Some 15,000 widows have been without it since April 1 and will remain so until October 1 because the government formed by my party was defeated on an NDP motion.

It must weigh heavily on people with a social conscience that there are 15,000 widows who are not receiving a pension which this House obviously feels they are entitled to. I am sorry the minister appears to have been unable to find the money to pay the widows retroactively. When our estimates were turned in I was informed by a very competent staff that there were sufficient funds in the estimates to pay that bill. It may be the minister has decided to put the money somewhere else. I notice he took quite a bit of credit for putting it into war veterans allowance.

I do not wish to take too much time. There are several complex changes within the war veterans allowance but mainly it can be summed up in this way: Those under age 65 drawing war veterans allowances will receive an extra $10 a month if single and an extra $12 a month if married. This is fine for a start, but there is another part to it. Those over 65 will find that their guaranteed income supplement payment, for the first time in our history, will be considered as income; it will not be considered exempt income, as heretofore. Up until now the guaranteed income supplement has always been considered exempt income in the case of war veterans allowance recipients aged 65 or over. So this is a benefit the aged veterans will lose.

It appears to me that over the course of time this will amount to quite a bit of money and hon. members will find that the bulk of veterans are going through that age now. I have some figures here which show that practically every veteran who is eligible is between the ages of 50 and 65. There are a few over 65 at the present time, some 90,000 but in the age group 55 to 59 we find 264,000 out of a total of some 900,000.

The people who will benefit from this legislation, as can be seen quite quickly, are those in the 55 to 65 age bracket. The minister has told us, suggesting a kind of quid pro quo, that people under 65 will be getting more benefits and people over 65 will get less. To balance it, those who will be aged 65 in a very short space of time will represent the vast majority of veterans and they will get less than would have been the case if they had been left alone with the guaranteed income supplement being considered as exempt income. This is not the impression which the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) gave when he was asked on June 3 by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre:

> Madam Speaker, does the statement just made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) mean that the $35 increase in the guaranteed income supplement will be treated as exempt income under the War Veterans Allowance Act, so that the recipients of war veterans allowance will not have their allowance cut back by virtue of the $35 increase?

The minister replied:

> That is what I was indicating, Madam Speaker.

We find today there is quite a difference. It is going to be counted as income for those over age 65. This is the way I read it. This will be cleared up if the minister wishes to provide the answers during the time we are in Committee of the Whole. I suggest that this, like so many Liberal promises, looks good on the surface; you have to get underneath to determine exactly what is going on. There is a cut here and it seems to me we are moving in the direction that veterans will not be given any treatment simply because they are veterans. They will get the old age pension and the guaranteed income supplement and the idea of treating the guaranteed income supplement as part of their income will deprive them of some income. In the long run, the aim is to treat veterans the same as everybody else; they will get this pension in the same way as if they were drawing OAS and GIS.

I do not wish to take more time as I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will wish to carry on. We look forward to reaching committee stage.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) I should like to commence my remarks this afternoon by extending a warm welcome to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald). We are pleased he has been able to come back to the House this afternoon for what, in the view of many of us, is an historic occasion.

Because it is that kind of an occasion I am particularly glad also to see in the gallery—I trust Mr. Speaker will not call me to order for noting people in the gallery—the deputy minister, the chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission, the chief pensions advocate and a few other officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs and its associated agencies. I do not see the chairman of the War Veterans Allowance Board—I guess he has been transferred to Charlottetown. But, Mr. Speaker, even if there is lots to do back in the store I believe these persons have the right to be here this afternoon for what I have already referred to as an important occasion in the history of our veterans' legislation.

As both the minister and the hon. member for Victoria pointed out, the bill deals with two main sections of our veterans' legislation, namely, the 48 per cent rule that applies to the widows of disabled veterans and the War Veterans Allowance Act. In both cases something is being done that we have waited for over a very long time.

As the minister indicated, when the Pension Act was first brought in, the provision for a widow's pension applied only if the veteran's disability had been assessed at the rate of 80 per cent. About 50 years ago that was changed to 50 per cent, which in practical terms works out to 48 per cent. But there it has stood for 50 years. During that period of time there have been many efforts to get the legislation changed; I think I need hardly say any more to underline my contention that this is an historic day.

Likewise with respect to the War Veterans Allowances Act, we are taking steps to make the position the same for veterans over 65 as for veterans under 65, and we are also ending the uncertainty about increases in the guaranteed income supplement being passed on to veterans or to veterans' widows.

I shall deal a little later with the remarks made by the member for Victoria; I think he has not read correctly the provisions of the bill which is now before us in that respect. Instead of the government being criticized on this point, I think we should give credit. Up to this point we had to ask, each time there was an increase in the guaranteed income supplement, whether it would be passed on to the veterans receiving war veterans allowance. If the member for Victoria will look at page 29 of the bill, he will find there a clause which provides that from here on the ceiling on the War Veterans Allowance Act will go up automatically when there is an increase in old age security or in the guaranteed income supplement.

If you will pardon another moment of personal indulgence, Mr. Speaker—you reach a point, you know, at which you enjoy history, especially when you can look back and say you were there for some of it—at about noon today I took a moment to go into the library and do a little looking into ancient Hansards. I was pretty sure I would find what I was looking for and, sure enough, there it was. I found that it was in the month of May, 1943—that is more than 37 years ago—that I made my first intervention in the House of Commons with respect to veterans affairs. What was it about? It was about the widows of veterans of World War I. So I am hardly entering into a new field when I take part today in a debate dealing with the widows of veterans.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, because of your association with veterans affairs and the veterans affairs committees in the past, and for a while, sir, you were also parliamentary secretary to the minister of veterans affairs, this matter of the 48 per cent rule has been debated time and time again. We had perhaps the definitive recommendation that it be corrected when Mr. Justice Mervyn Woods brought down his report. We had it again in the Hermann report, and on two or three occasions we had recommendations from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs that the 48 per cent rule be corrected.

It is good to know that persistence on the part of many people does pay and that we have reached this point today. Like the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), I should like to give some of the credit to those people we are not supposed to notice, those who are in the gallery today. They and their predecessors, a long line of employees in the Department of Veterans Affairs, have done a good job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: But, sir, we have now reached the point where we are changing the 48 per cent rule, and this is a day to celebrate. Before the afternoon is over, I shall probably have a critical word or two to say about this and I shall have something to say about the things that are not in the bill. The minister may say, "Stanley, I thought you were my friend." Well, I am, and even after I have found fault with some things in the bill and have pointed out some of its shortcomings, I still welcome the opportunity that the House has today to put it through all stages and see that it is written into law very shortly.

What we like about the bill, as I say, is the ending of that 50-year reign of the 48 per cent rule. What it provided has been that where a veteran was on a disability pension of 48 per cent or more, the widow has been entitled to a full widow's pension under the Pension Act. But if the veteran's disability pension was below 48 per cent, there has been no pension whatsoever for the widow.

I suppose there are some readers of Hansard who will wonder how we arrived at the odd figure of 48 per cent. The reason we arrived at it is that the original stipulation was that it be 50 per cent; but then we have another rule which says that all pensions be paid in even figures of 35 per cent, 40 per cent, 45 per cent and 50 per cent. A pension of 47 per cent is paid at 45 and a pension of 48 per cent is paid at 50, and that is how 48 per cent got into the language of this legislation.

To many of us it has seemed grossly unfair that one widow whose husband had been at 50 per cent gets the full widow's pension, whereas a widow next door whose husband had been at 45 per cent does not get it. The minister used to give us a rationale as to why it should stay that way. I am glad for his sake that he does not have to give that defence any more. I am glad for his sake that he can now speak with pride of the fact that he is bringing in this legislation to do this for the widows of veterans.

I think one of the reasons we have reached this point is that with the passage of time the veterans themselves are becoming older and more of them see the prospect of their days coming to an end and their leaving widows. Since most veterans who are on disability pensions are on pensions below the 48 per cent level, they have become much more concerned in the last decade or so than they used to be about this provision. It has moved up just about to the top of the legislative changes for which the Royal Canadian Legion and other veterans organizations have been asking. When we are handing around credits today, I think we should give a good deal of credit to the various veterans' organizations who have pressed for these provisions.

What is happening is that a 50-year regime is being corrected and from here on pensions will be paid to widows of veterans where the veteran's disability pension was below 48 per cent, but of course not below 5 per cent. We still have a cutoff at the 5 per cent figure.

I might as well come right away to the feature in this bill which I do not like. I was not surprised that the hon. member for Victoria did not point it out because it is the same provision which was in his bill of last December 6, Bill C-28. That is the provision under which this glorious new regime will be staged in over a period of six and a half years.

As the minister said in his speech, if this bill becomes law, come October 1 about 15,000 widows will qualify for pensions under it. But it is going to take another six and a half years for the other 11,000 widows to qualify because, in effect, the threshold point is being brought down this fall from 48 per cent to 38 per cent; but then you have to wait until next spring for it to be brought down a little bit further, and so on down the line, and it will take until April 1, 1987, before all the widows of veterans whose pensions were below 48 per cent will get the benefit of this legislation.

I hope the hon. member for Victoria will not mind—he said some things about me, so I will say something nice about him—if I say that when he brought in his bill last December, he said to me that he was sorry about that provision and that he dared to hope it would not take long before it could be changed. I say the same thing now to my friend, the minister across the way. I know that he is a fighter for veterans in the cabinet. He has to fight all the time. I am sure he did not accept this without a struggle, and I hope he will carry on that struggle.

This House has been used to my asking questions about veterans affairs at least every week, and I suppose that many members think that when this bill is passed, there will be no more questions. Oh, oh, let us see! The next chance I will get, I guess, will be on Thursday to ask the minister when he will bring in an amendment to cut out this six and a half year stage. I am glad to see him nodding his head, and I think he is really on my side. To ask those widows who, according to the terms of the bill are being declared to be eligible, to wait in some cases six months, a year and a half, two and a half years or six and a half years, should not be done. This Parliament cannot do that without bowing its head in shame.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I can tell the minister that I have already drafted an amendment which I shall move when we get to Committee of the Whole, which will read as follows:

That Bill C-40 be amended on page 11 by deleting therefrom lines 14 to 31 inclusive.

An hon. Member: It is out of order.

Mr. Knowles: It is not out of order, do not tell me that. In the House of Commons we might not be able to move certain things, but we can vote against things, and we have the right to vote against those lines being included. If we strike out those lines, then a previous provision in the bill would bring it all into effect on October 1 of this year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: Like the hon. member for Victoria, I regret that it has not been made retroactive to April 1, the same date he had in Bill C-28; but if we cannot get that, at least this right that we are now establishing after 50 years should not be held off for a six and a half year period, or for one and a half, two and a half or three and a half years, as the case may be. As I say, I know how things happen around here. I know that if we were to deny this bill because we do not like something in it, we would be irresponsible. This is what the cabinet has come up with and we must get it this afternoon. But surely this provision is so unfair that the Committee of the Whole will want to support my amendment to bring it into effect for all widows no later than October 1 of this year. As one who has been concerned about a better deal for widows of veterans for a long time, a concern I know I am sharing with many people within the sound of my voice, I welcome this historic day.

Now I turn to the question of the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Here again I think this is an historic day. The minister referred to this being its golden anniversary, but I would like to put it in its proper context. The War Veterans Allowance Act was brought in 50 years ago at a time when the old age pension act, the one which was passed in 1926 and came into effect in 1927, was in effect.

Mr. Parent: Were you here then?

Mr. Knowles: No, but I knew about it; I was aware of it at the time. That pension was $20 a month at age 70 with a means test. I will not tell the whole story of the fight that we had to get that improved, but I can tell the House what it was like. The War Veterans Allowance Act was drafted in that context. It too was a means test pension, and the gist or the heart of it was that it was to be something which would provide for veterans who could not prove disabilities under the Pension Act something a little better than was available to the civilian population. So the amount was a little more than $20 a month, and it was available slightly under the age of the old age pension. I think it was age 60 right at the start and the means test was a little less severe.

But for the civilian population we have moved on and greatly increased the amount. We removed the means test completely from the basic amount of that pension and we have lowered the eligible age from 70 down to 65. Yet for the war veterans allowance its essentials are still much as they were in 1930. It is a means test pension. I know that some like to call it "income tested", but when what one gets is cut short because of something else one has, it does not matter what it is called, it is tough to take.

I think it is hard to argue today whether the war veterans allowance or the burnt-out pension is something better for veterans who cannot prove their disabilities than is the case for the civilian population, which was the raison d'être of the War Veterans Allowance Act. I am not just using this phrase because it came out of the convention in Winnipeg last weekend, but we should be moving in the direction of a guaranteed annual income. I know of no better place to start with that concept than with our veterans.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I think that is what should be taking the place of the War Veterans Allowance Act, or that that is what should be coming out of this in-depth review which the minister said has been going on in his deparment for the last two or three years.

That is my general comment about the War Veterans Allowance Act. I do not suppose anyone has criticized it, particularly its means test provisions, over the years more than I. But at the same time I admit it has been a welcome piece of legislation. The burnt-out pension, which it is popularly called—and many veterans who receive it just call it their pension—means a great deal to them. It has solved many a family situation. Also it is good that the day came when we provided a widow's allowance under the War Veterans Allowance Act as a matter of legislation.

A moment ago I referred to the questions on behalf of the widows of World War I which I asked of the late Right Hon. Ian Mackenzie back in the early 1940s. Actually the questions I put then were when we were going to make these grants being given to such widows a matter of statute instead of being at the grace of the government with a supplementary estimate every year. It is one of the things we won rather early, to put widows under the War Veterans Allowance Act. It has been good legislation, but it was good compared to what was available to the civilian population when it was brought in. In view of what we have done for the civilian population now, we should be doing better. Again I say to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and to all those people in the gallery whose presence I have already noted and welcomed, get to work on a guaranteed annual income for our veterans.

With respect to the changes in this bill dealing with the war veterans allowance, I am afraid at this point I must differ with the hon. member for Victoria. He found it to be something of which he was critical. I think it is good. What the bill is proposing is that payments be made to veterans in receipt of the allowance who are under age 65 at so much a month and it goes up a little bit every year. There again, why stage it? Some of these veterans will not live long enough to get the full amount, so why stage it?

I was going to tell the minister to talk to his colleague sitting beside him, but he is leaving the chamber. His colleague knows how to get billions of dollars out of that cabinet. The Minister of Veterans Affairs needs to get only a few million. I say that veterans are entitled to the increase they will get under the War Veterans Allowance Act immediately instead of its being staged in. But I say to the hon. member for Victoria that when it is staged in in full, the veterans below age 65 will be getting the same amount as those above age 65.

I congratulate the hon. member for Victoria on being critical and suspicious about these people over there. He thought he saw a loss to the veterans because, while the under 65 were getting this increase, the over 65 were to have their GIS counted as income for the purpose of the War Veterans Allowance Act instead of its being exempt income. But what he must note is that this bill raises the ceiling on the income that such war veterans allowance recipients can have, so that they will keep in full the extra $35 they are now getting.

Then the bill goes a further step which I welcome most warmly. Under section 19.5 on page 29 of the bill, it is provided that the income factors, that is the ceiling on the income of war veterans allowance recipients, shall be increased simultaneously with, and by the same amount as, any increase in the amount of each of the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement provided from time to time by amendments to the Old Age Security Act, other than adjustments made under that act in relation to the consumer price index. I do not mind that latter exception because they get it under an escalation clause in the War Veterans Allowance Act. But this indicates that we will not have to stand up any more when there is an increase in the GIS and say, "Will war veterans allowance recipients get it?" It is in the act; it is automatic that the ceiling goes up. It is in two parts. First the ceiling goes up now so that they can keep the $35 they are now receiving, and later on any increases in the GIS will result in an automatic increase in the ceiling under the War Veterans Allowance Act. When my hon. friend reads it, and if he agrees with my interpretation of it, I think he will see that it is something good and something we warmly welcome.

Pardon my repetition, but I am still thinking that this is a pretty important day in the history of veterans legislation, doing as we are something about that old 48 per cent rule. We are now doing something to improve greatly the provisions of the War Veterans Allowance Act, in particular by putting those under age 65 in the same position as those over age 65. I can think of a number of correspondents to whom I shall send copies of this day's Hansard with great pleasure. They were not sure the bill would contain this, but I congratulate the minister for having put it in.

A speech from this corner of the House on a piece of legislation would not be complete without some reference to those things which are not in the bill. I deeply regret there is nothing in it about the way in which the amount of the 100 per cent disability pension is determined.

Just as the minister has solved the problem about the GIS by making it automatic so we do not have to ask for it every year, why did he not include in this bill a provision that the amount of the 100 per cent disability pension would stay at the level of the average take-home pay of the five designated categories in the public service? We decided a few years ago that was to be the rule or the idea. Then, having put the pension at that average in that particular year, we left its escalation to the consumer price index. In a few years it slipped behind and we had to do that again. Now it has slipped behind again. Why not make this just as automatic as the minister has now made the increase in the GIS being passed on to the veterans?

As I say, there is some question about the level of the amount. One can always ask for more. However, the point we have arrived at is not bad, considering what it was back before the days of the Woods report. This is an omission that is unfortunate and I earnestly wish it had been included.

I wish also that the legislation had included an increase in the pension rates payable to former prisoners of war. Again my friend can talk to his colleague sitting next to him; he can tell him a few things. It took a long while to get compensation for former prisoners of war. First we got it for those who were prisoners in Hong Kong, and we greatly improved that schedule so that most Hong Kong veterans are now covered between the basic 50 per cent they get and the disability rates they have received as well. I think the average Hong Kong veteran is now up to 80 per cent or 85 per cent, and quite a few of them are at 100 per cent.

It took longer still to get recognition for those who were prisoners of war in northwest Europe. We obtained that eventually. It took two bites again to get compensation for World War II prisoners of war, and then to get it for World War I prisoners of war. It is still a fact that those rates are pretty low considering the fact that the widow's pension again is determined by the veteran's rate of disability pension, or the combination of the disability pension and the prisoner of war compensation.

We used to say they needed that extra just to get up to the 48 per cent, but now, even though it will not be necessary to get up to the 48 per cent to guarantee a widow's pension, the amount of the widow's pension will still be determined by the level of the pension the veteran was drawing. Just because we have corrected the 48 per cent rule does not mean we are going to give all widows in that category the same pension widows in the upper categories get. It does affect not only the veterans themselves who were prisoners of war, it affects their widows, and I hope something may yet be done.

I do have the odd note here on my desk and I see I had as the other point I wanted to make one that I have actually dealt with already when dealing with the War Veterans Allowance Act; that is the desirability and the need to move into the concept of a guaranteed annual income for veterans.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) wants to get this going while she is still a Liberal cabinet minister. She will have trouble with some of her other colleagues in getting the money for it on a grand scale. The Minister of Veterans Affairs might get some ideas from her.

Those are the three main things not in the bill which I wish were there; the settling of the five-category provision making it automatic, improving the position of prisoners of war, and getting started with a guaranteed annual income for those who are in receipt of war veterans allowance.

Having said that about the deficiencies of the bill, I return to what I said at the start. This is an historic day. Although I deeply regret the revision under the 48 per cent rule is going to take six and a half years to phase in, I welcome the fact that we are making this change and the fact that we are improving the position under the War Veterans Allowance Act. I am glad the minister was able to come back from the hospital and be with us today for this important and historic piece of legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to participate in a debate on a measure involving veterans, and particularly to follow the three members who have had so much to do with helping veterans in Canada. I refer to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), the former minister, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has served long and conscientiously on the veterans affairs committee. We were able some time ago to make a series of recommendations with regard to helping veterans who were war prisoners and those who made it back without having to suffer ignominy.

I want to say I was very pleased this government saw fit not to do what was being suggested by all too many people, namely, the burying of the Department of Veterans Affairs in some other department. I am pleased and proud this government and our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) saw fit once again to bring back the Department of Veterans Affairs, dedicated solely to the welfare of veterans. Although this was put together under the former government, and under the hon. member who spoke previously, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), I am satisfied that had that government been in power a little longer the department would in fact have been divided and there would in effect have been a minister of veterans affairs to look after that particular interest. Heaven knows, as the former minister of national defence he had plenty to do in that portfolio.

I was pleased to hear the former minister commend the staff of the Department of Veterans Affairs, because that is a group of professionals who bring to their jobs a kind of missionary zeal in respect of the necessity to do something. It is too easy to forget these veterans. At age 53 I was not old enough to serve during the Second World War and I feel I have no vested interest in the pensions paid to veterans. However, I feel that I certainly have a responsibility to those who made it possible for me to complete my education, go on to law school and eventually become a member of Parliament. Had they not performed that service, giving of their time, their effort and often their lives, with many of them being wounded during the war, it would not have been possible for people like myself, growing up as the generation immediately following them, to have enjoyed the great life we have enjoyed, and the opportunity to recognize this responsibility. I guess as a teenager growing up during the Second World War it is fair to say our heroes were those who served in the services. We had our athletic heroes, sure, but the ones we really looked up to, and continue to look up to, are those who gave of their time and a good part of their lives in the service of this country.

I want to commend the minister and the former government, for that matter, for making the 48 per cent rule as dead as a dodo; that was an unfair rule. If I may say so, citing a personal experience, my father who served in both world wars, in the Royal Naval Air Service in the First World War and as a squadron leader in the Second World War, suffering primarily as a result of his service in the First World War, was a 48 per cent disability pensioner for something like ten years.

About one year before his death, because his health, believe it or not, improved in so far as his pensionable disability was concerned, he was dropped to 40 per cent and my mother was not entitled to receive a widow's pension. Fortunately, we have changed the legislation so that if that individual, who is now on 48 per cent disability for something like three years, eventually gets better he can in effect plan his estate knowing that his widow will in fact receive a pension. To that extent I was very pleased to see the changes which got rid of that antiquated 48 per cent rule.

I want to pay tribute to the evaders and former prisoners of war who today continue to act on behalf of their colleagues to do what is possible to see to it that POWs get the kind of pensions and assistance which they require. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has already commented upon the fact that we helped the Hong Kong veterans first, because theirs was a textbook case and one that required immediate attention. Gradually, stage by stage, clause by clause, session by session, Parliament by Parliament, we improved the pensions to these particular individuals who served and suffered as prisoners of war or evaders and were able to help people in that particular category. I believe that the present premier of Prince Edward Island is one who evaded escape as the result of being shot down during the Second World War. These people, not being content to act only on behalf of their colleagues and themselves—of course, they have a vested interest since they were POWs—did everything they could to bring to the attention of young people the sacrifices made by veterans during the Second World War.

Mr. John Miller wrote a book about the veterans of Dieppe called "The Forgotten Heroes". Those who have done any research on the matter at all will recall a book entitled "The Shame and the Glory". Books such as these highlight what was faced by these young men. There is a tendency today, and I particularly find it around the schools, to think of veterans as they look today, not as the young men of 18 years, 22 years and 23 years who served during the Second World War. We have an obligation and a responsibility through providing these books and talking to young people to point out to them the sacrifices which were made.

The legislation which we have before us today is first-class. Like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I, too, have one little gripe. It is not so much with the legislation; it is a problem on which I have been harping for as long as I have been here as a member of Parliament. I refer to the fact that we must continually be pressing the Canadian Pension Commission, the War Veterans Allowance Board and pension advocates. We must do everything we can to expedite applications for pensions. It still takes too long to process these matters.

We tried to expedite these matters when we brought in the legislation with regard to the "benefit-of-the-doubt" rule because it was slowing up some of the applications. We brought in a veterans review board so that there would be a body independent of the Department of Veterans Affairs which could look at these particular applications and ensure that no veterans would be shut out.

It seems to me that there is still room for improvement. Some of the pensioners who have applied to increase their pensions find that it takes months to obtain a decision. I must candidly confess that sometimes it takes much longer than months. The veteran is the kind of individual who can face up to reality. He does not mind being told that his application has not been allowed. So would it not be better to tell him that after two or three months, rather than to keep him waiting for some time up to a year before a decision is made?

I would like to add one more thing to which I was privy, and I do not think that I will be violating cabinet secrecy. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre commented on how hard the Minister of Veterans Affairs fights in cabinet. It was my privilege to be a colleague of the minister for some four years, and I can say that he is a tiger in cabinet on behalf of the veterans. I can also tell hon. members that he has many allies in that particular cabinet or this legislation would not have been brought forward.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to rise in this House today to speak on this veterans' legislation. It is legislation which in some small measure will improve the benefits paid to those who have truly served their country, and to the dependants of such veterans. To my mind this bill cannot be passed too quickly.

This bill is not offering the war veterans of Canada any special consideration because of the hardships and debilities suffered on account of their actions in whatever the theatre of action. It is offering simply an opportunity to remove certain inequities and disparities which have existed for far too long. The purpose of this bill is to redress the injustices which certain war veterans and their dependants have suffered through years past.

In other words, this bill is the very minimum which this government can pass. For this reason it is inconceivable that the bill should not pass today. The bill was long overdue when it was tabled by the Conservative government last November. Times and circumstances being what they are, there is no less urgency now.

I would like to congratulate the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) for his initiative and the members on the government side for their co-operation which has made it possible to introduce this bill today.

When the Conservative government introduced the bill last year—or a bill fairly close to what we have before us today—it was recognized that it was the minimum which any government could offer. We knew that it did not begin to go far enough in terms of supporting men and women and their dependants, but that it was a start.

By virtue of the actions of these men and women, it was long past due. It was our intention last year to put through the bill quickly as a first concrete step in improving the lot of veterans. Likewise, it is my sincere hope today that the government will consider passing this bill only as a first step in an area where further improvement must be made.

The minister in introducing the bill emphasized that these are economy-conscious times and that this government is committed to fiscal responsibility and prudent management of taxpayers' money. I say hurrah to that, but it rings a little shallow, for almost every day in this House we talk about cost overruns, a booming deficit and unchecked spending. I ask the government not to practise fiscal restraint against the veteran or his family. These people have been neglected, I feel, because government has found it too easy to put their cause in a lower priority risk area.

We have all attended Remembrance Day gatherings and have been sombred by the thought of those who lost their lives. But those who came back broken and fractured have become somewhat of a forgotten group and are well down on that list of government priorities. I was happy to hear the words used today—that there is the possibility of further additional consideration being given to the relief of dependants of war veterans and war veterans themselves.

The bill will ensure that widows of disabled veterans are treated equally before the government. It does not ensure, however, as everyone in this House knows, that there will be a decent standard of living for the woman who has never worked outside the home, as is so often the case today, and is not yet eligible for old age security.

The bill will at last remedy one of the great inequities which has already been mentioned a number of times today, an inequity which lasted far too long, the 48 per cent cutoff. It was assumed that where a veteran was in receipt of a 48 per cent pension or more, his death was in some way related to his disability occasioned by serving in the interest of his country. But it was also assumed that the death of a veteran receiving a pension of something less than 48 per cent was not related to service, and as a consequence his widow received no assistance. How ridiculous, and slow we were to act!

As it is, it will be six and a half years before that change in legislation reaches all of the 80 per cent of the veterans and dependants who were assessed at lower than 48 per cent. Let us hope that many of them will live long enough that they will see the day when they too will receive the benefit of this golden anniversary year legislation.

I am pleased, however, to see that most of those items relating to the veteran's widow, formulated last year by the Conservative government, are carried forward in this bill. A remarried widow will now be allowed to apply for a widow's pension after the dissolution of her subsequent marriage. The continuance of a dependent parent's pension will now be left to the discretion of the commission rather than being automatically stopped as it has heretofore. It will now be possible for someone who maintains the household and looks after dependent children, after both the veteran and his wife have died, to receive that veteran's pension.

These measures are long overdue and will affect a relatively small number of people but will make an enormous difference to those who should have been assisted before.

The actual disability pension for veterans, even at 100 per cent, is a pitifully small amount, an amount no one in this House would dream of living or subsisting on. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) announced an increase in the basic rate of pension for disabled veterans in May of this year, an increase for which the Conservative party had fought long and hard. We did everything we could in committee to have an amending formula included which would have kept this basic pension adjusted to increases in the pay scales of the five selected categories of public service workers, but to no avail.

I am disappointed that no mention has been made of this in the new bill. Personally, I can see very little advantage these days in a meagre one-shot increase with no built-in protection against inflation. Inflation is a fact of life today and any fixed income simply has to be indexed in some way if a person receiving it is to survive. We may honour the dead, but it seems to me we are treating the veteran rather shabbily.

I should like to interject here that while pensions and pension legislation is one thing, the processing of pension applications is another. This government and the Minister of Veterans Affairs initiated a move of the pension commission as well as the department to Prince Edward Island. A strong commitment was given at that time to the effect that the veteran would not suffer or be hurt by the move. The Legion magazine, in its May, 1980, issue, documents a longer processing time with a reduced number of applications. This is a situation that the department should not allow to continue. The application would not have been made if the need was not there. That need continues month by month as people wait for the processing of those applications.

Speaking further to disability pensions, I believe, as has already been established, that there are special circumstances for the Hong Kong prisoners of war. At the first meeting of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, the minister indicated that, as far as the government was concerned, a prisoner of war was a prisoner of war, that the government would not differentiate, and it has not in this bill.

I believe that the treatment undergone by the Dieppe prisoners of war was so dreadful and so extended as to make them a separate class of prisoner of war. No one who has any idea of what those prisoners went through and how, as a result of that experience, their lives have been affected since, could fail to agree that the present 20 per cent pension is sufficient compensation. It is well documented that the mortality rate among Dieppe prisoners of war is substantially higher than the death rate of other POW groups. There are more Dieppe prisoners of war on pension and those pensioners receive on average a higher pension than others simply because their disabilities are greater. It is well documented too that, as a group, Dieppe prisoners of war suffer a more accelerated general deterioration in health and premature aging than do other prisoners of war. Veterans' organizations across the country are prepared to recognize this fact.

A large number of these Dieppe prisoners, most of whom are now in their mid-fifties, are partially or completely out of the labour market by reason of health or nervous conditions, heart and lung diseases or other disability causing premature death in this group, not to mention the whole range of physical and psychological disadvantages stemming from their four years of maltreatment, degradation and deprivation. The government should be giving these Dieppe prisoners of war compensation of at least 50 per cent, and this bill should be amended accordingly before long. If we do not honour the living, let us at least make their probably shortened lives somewhat easier and more enjoyable.

"Giving" is a misleading word to use. The government is not "giving" pensions to former prisoners of war and other veterans; this money has been earned by those who fought in two world wars. I recognize the words used by a colleague just a moment ago, who said they have given the people of this country the opportunity to enjoy today the privileges and freedoms that are so dear to us. Let us recognize the fact in this House that these people have a right to enjoy a respectable lifestyle. It is the duty of the government to protect and ensure this right. All Canadians owe these pensions to them. It is not a matter of giving—it is a matter of owing to those who fought for our country and who have well and truly earned our respect and recognition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words chiefly in reply to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), who spoke about those over age 65 and about pension increases. I can assure him that they will lose nothing.

The hon. member had another question about the wives of VLA recipients. I am glad to be able to tell the House that this legislation will be forthcoming before too long. We have had a problem dealing with it and getting it in a shape satisfactory to all concerned. I expect to bring it forward before the House recesses, however, depending, of course, on when that is.

I should like to make a correction to my speech, if I may, Mr. Speaker. Apparently there was an error in the text I was reading from. I said that on October 1, 1980, 15,000 widows and 600 children will become eligible under the Pension Act. I should have said 1,500 widows. I wanted to mention that so that it can be corrected in Hansard.

Mr. Knowles: That is too bad. I wish your error had been correct!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Francis in the chair.

• (1700)

On clause 2—

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak for just a couple of moments on this clause. With respect to the remarks which the minister has just made, I want to say that I wish he had made the correction earlier; it would have saved me from doing a lot of mathematics concerning the 15,000 figure rather than 1,500. I also share the feelings of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre about this. As there are so few involved, it might be possible to treat them a little better.

Second, I would like to speak about the war veterans allowance. I welcome the minister's comments about that. I accept his word, of course, that people over 65 will not suffer, which is referred to in Hansard. With due respect, I would like to point out that it was his speech which confused me, not the bill. I can honestly say that I got a copy of this bill after ten o'clock this morning. I know it is very difficult with the short time they gave us, and I imagine there was a great deal of racing around done in the department. Nevertheless, that is when I got my copy and I used the minister's speech more than I did the bill when I spoke.

However, at page 11 of the minister's speech it does say "a new war veterans' ceiling and at the same time assess as income all OAS and GIS payments made to recipients over 65". That left me with the impression that, if you are to assess that as income, then it will have a detrimental effect on them.

On page 12 of the minister's speech it also says "by doing this and reducing OAS and GIS exemptions by an identical amount each year we will have eliminated the gap".

That is about all I wanted to comment on. I am pleased with the remarks that have been made about the bill and the preceding bill, namely C-28. I believe that my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, has some more detailed questions.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, as I said by way of an interjection, I regretted that the minister had to make a correction to his speech and tell us that only 1,500 widows would get the benefit of this legislation on October 1 instead of 15,000. To me that makes it all the more urgent that the main-flow in this bill be corrected.

I realize there has not been very much time since the speeches made on second reading were delivered. However, I wonder if the minister has had a chance to reconsider whether, when we get to class 14 on page 11, he will agree to my proposed amendment to strike out that part of the clause which has a delaying effect.

The other question I would like to put to the minister is, in effect, the same one which has just been commented on by the hon. member for Victoria. Is it crystal clear with respect to the War Veterans Allowance Act changes that the ceiling on permissible income is being raised so that no WVA recipient will lose any portion of the OAS and GIS that he is now receiving, in particular so that he will not lose the $35. Is my interpretation correct that the changes in the War Veterans Allowance Act mean that from here on automatically any increases in old age security and the guaranteed income supplement will result in that same increase in the ceiling on permissible income?

So I have two questions to put to the minister: one about making the changes in the 48 per cent rule effective across the board on October 1; and the other, the assurance about the provision in the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Chairman, I too want to express my satisfaction and pleasure in welcoming the minister back in the House. I know he was hospitalized and that it was only yesterday when he was released from the hospital. I also know how intent he was on bringing this legislation forward before the House adjourned this summer.

[Translation]

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I congratulate myself on being a member of a government and Parliament who offer to my former fellow members of the Canadian armed forces the most generous, the most adequate benefits in the world. As those benefits are being paid to those who have been called the most courageous in the world, the best troops a country could have to protect it, I think it is only fair for the Canadian government to choose to increase benefits that have remained the same since 1973, so that our veterans, those who fought for the allies, those who fought the war of 1939-45 and earlier wars, can enjoy the most generous pensions in the world. I am very happy with this new bill, Mr. Chairman, and trust it will be passed without further delay.

[English]

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, there are two points that I would like to bring to the minister's attention. I also take this opportunity to bring them to the attention of the officials who are in the gallery today.

One particular area to which I think the department and the officials should give consideration concerns the grey area in the granting of pensions. There is some doubt as to whether or not the pension should be either granted or increased. Certainly as a representative of those people, I would be most pleased if the department officials on the pension board or the pension commission would relent just a little and make it easier for the pensioner to get the benefit that probably—more than likely—is his just due. It is this grey area where I think the benefits should go to the individual. I believe it is something that probably would not cost the government that much and it would certainly satisfy a great number of the pensioners involved.

Second, I do not think it is fair for the spouse's income to be associated in any way with whatever should be accruing and could be accruing to the pensioner himself. I know that in some cases the pensioner would have funds available to him if it were not for the wife's income. This is something which is worthy of consideration, and perhaps the minister might have some comment on that.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I did not get up on second reading so that we could get the bill through quickly. However, I would like to make a brief submission to the minister now and ask him what he is prepared to do on the matter.

First, I would like to add my agreement and support for what is being done today and say that I support the remarks made by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

There is still a very small group of veterans in Canada who are totally left out, either by recognition, rights or entitlement to benefits under our veterans' legislation. This small group who have an association were in Ottawa a few weeks ago, and at that time I believe they met with the minister and with members of the Liberal caucus, the Conservative caucus and our caucus. The people about whom I am speaking, if the minister will hear my representation, are probably at most the 200 surviving veterans of the Spanish civil war who were members of the Mackenzie-Papineau battalion who were the first to fight against the Fascists. They were made outlaws in their own country because they violated the Foreign Enlistment Act. They journeyed to Europe by many various and devious ways, to England, through France and into northern Spain. They are in their own right and by all definitions of the word heroes. Many were decorated by the republican government of Spain at that time. Many were wounded, captured, tortured and died in the fight against fascism.

Had the rest of the western democracies listened to them, we may have headed off Hitler sooner than we finally did. They were vilified by some in their own countries, and certainly ignored and deserted by their country. All they asked for when they met with parliamentarians a few weeks ago was recognition as veterans. They were not asking for benefits or anything else, just recognition that they no longer be considered outlaws in our own country.

I hope the minister will take this to his cabinet colleagues so that they do in fact receive recognition as veterans, and more. Upon receiving that recognition, they should automatically get the right to receive veterans' benefits, whether it be disability pensions—and any medical practitioner could assure the minister as to whether their disability is attributable to war wounds—or war veterans allowance. I doubt if very many would even ask for those benefits. We could undo the wrong of all these years if we made the gesture of recognizing these gentlemen as veterans. I do not know if it is still on the statutes, but if it is we could possibly repeal the Foreign Enlistment Act. That may be sufficient.

As a result of the minister's meetings with them, is he agreeable to trying to provide that recognition for at most, I suspect, 200? They only know of 125 but there may be a few more scattered around Canada who have not come forward and made themselves known. Is the minister giving consideration to that? Will he take whatever action is necessary, either by regulation, legislation or whatever else is required, to include as veterans members of the Mackenzie-Papineau battalion of the Spanish civil war, with all the rights and entitlements thereto?

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Chairman, I am a little confused about the procedure. I thought we were going to get answers as we went along. If we could, I would like that, because I am somewhat confused about a couple of matters that, if we were going to Standing committee, would be raised there. I need to know, and I am not sure how to find out since we just saw the bill today, what is counted as exempt income in calculating the WVA now? Is it just the GIS, or the OAS and GIS?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, in what is commonly referred to as OAS and GIS and war veterans allowance, there is a rate that is determined. As far as receiving benefits, in some cases they vary. The recipient of war veterans allowance today probably receives more than ever before in the history of Canada. Let us use a figure of $6,000, which is not the actual figure; I do not have it here today. If their income is over that, they do not receive WVA. Does that answer the hon. member's question? It does not.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Chairman, the minister indicated in his speech and the documents indicate that the discrepancy today between, for example, a single individual under 65 in receipt of the WVA is receiving something in the order of $70 a month less than somebody who is over 65, and the reason for that is the effect of the exemption for the income that is referred to in the speech as GIS. What is indicated is an intent to change the deduction or to change the exemption category to reduce the level of OAS and GIS income which will count as exempt income.

If I can put the question again, what now counts as exempt income in calculating the WVA, GIS or OAS and GIS?

Mr. MacDonald: As I understand what the questioner is referring to, $2.88 is old age security and the balance is GIS. He is also in receipt of WVA. I might tell the hon. member that many times, unless he has the full details, WVA, OAS and GIS is very confusing. If the answer is not satisfactory, please feel free to put it forward again and we will see if we can get an answer.

Mr. Bosley: What I am trying to find out, Mr. Chairman, is where the $70 discrepancy comes from. Can the minister give me some figures which show me how the $70 difference is composed? Is it composed entirely of GIS? It is composed of GIS and OAS? Is it composed of some other exempt income? I understood it to be, and I was really trying to clarify it, OAS and GIS. My problem then became, since OAS and GIS is higher than $70 if you are in receipt of GIS, where does the $70 figure come from that is the basis of the attempt to equalize the payments of which we all approve?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have to confess that I find the hon. member's question a little confusing. When the hon. member is talking of pensions, could he determine for me whether he is talking of the under 65 or over 65?

Mr. Bosley: Both, Mr. Chairman. The minister indicates in his speech that the difference we are trying to resolve is an income difference, a maximum income award to those who have no other income and that a pensioner in receipt of OAS and GIS, and who then gets a WVA over that, is about $70 a month more than somebody who is under 65 who therefore is not in receipt of OAS and GIS.

My problem is this, and maybe I can explain it this way. When you become 65 and start to receive OAS and GIS, you clearly receive more than $70 a month OAS and GIS. What I am trying to find out is how does the difference only get down to $70? I presume the answer is that OAS is counted now when you are establishing the eligible WVA with somebody who is over 65 in receipt of OAS.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, the hon. member is right, it is counted. The $70 he is referring to is really something of a slipback to the fellow below 65. The hon. member has really answered his own question. This is no longer going to be a problem. We have erased this today in our legislation. The fellow of 65 on OAS and other supplements receives a greater amount of money than his colleague or comrade under 65. With the legislation we will put through today, we will be erasing that. It will be on a comparative basis. I hope that answers the hon. member's question.

Mr. Bosley: I would like to ask the minister one last question. At some point in his speech he said, and I made a note, that he is talking about changing the regulations. Is he proposing to change the regulations to change the categories that are now exempt income? He said in his speech that he would be changing the category, that he would be changing the exemption with regard to OAS-GIS income.

I need to be clear on this because I have a large number of veterans in Sunnybrook in my riding. In practice, I understand that to mean the only change in the regulations will not be OAS, because it is already not exempt; the only change in the regulations would be to take GIS income, which has up until now been exempt, and to make it no longer exempt. That will be the only change in the regulations. Is that correct?

Mr. MacDonald: Plus $2.88 OAS.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if I could be helpful on that one point. I imagine that where the hon. member is confused is that he is thinking that maybe all of OAS or all of GIS has been exempt income. That has never been the case. The exempt income, which is now $70, is an accumulation of several of these things which have gone through as increases either in OAS or GIS and which now add up to $70. As the minister has just said, two dollars and some cents of OAS is exempt income, and this means that $60 odd of GIS is now exempt income. These are being removed and the ceiling on the permissible income is being raised, so that in the end there will be no change in the net amount which veterans over 65 receive.

Mr. Towers: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether the minister would comment on the point I made earlier, that is to say, the discriminatory aspect of the pension program—the fact that married couples are discriminated against when the income of the wife is used to prohibit WVA being given to the husband, though if a couple were living common law the income of the wife would not affect the pension of the gentleman concerned. To my mind, this is wrong and I believe the rules should be changed because the present practice is most discriminatory.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, a husband and wife are treated as a family and their incomes are counted together. This can reduce WVA payments, as the hon. member indicated. What the hon. member is asking, I take it, is that the wife's income should not be counted. But, you know, income could be as high as $50,000. So in these cases we apply the rule which applies to GIS.

Mr. Towers: It is certainly not that way in Alberta. We do not have war veterans wishing to receive war veterans allowance while their wives are receiving $50,000. If this type of program is to be carried on, then at least the allowance when the wife is working should be increased. The present arrangement is not acceptable to me or to a lot of people who are caught in this situation.

Mr. MacDonald: The problem is an understandable one and it is one which we face in many cases. Any time we can do what we feel is fair, we certainly do it. Some of these people do receive quite high incomes and it is hard to get money and carry out the program in a way which is fair to all veterans. However, I shall be pleased to consider any suggestions the hon. member may care to put forward.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 13 agreed to.

On clause 14—Pensions to widows of certain members.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated when I was speaking at the second reading stage, I should like to move an amendment to clause 14. There are a number of subclauses in it, and so on. My hon. friend across the way wondered if I could move an amendment which would be in order. It is our undoubted right in this chamber to vote against anything brought before us—to vote against a clause or against a portion of a clause—and that is what I propose to ask the committee to do.

I do not propose anything new. I simply propose we be given the chance to vote against clause (3.2) at page 11 of the bill. If this is approved, if we strike out lines 14 to 31 at page 11, then, of course, the whole clause is left with its provision coming into effect on October 1, 1980. That provision is already in the bill on page 10 where the reference is to the rates set out in clauses 12 to 20 of schedule A. If it were not for this redefinition of what clauses 12 to 20 mean, everything would be fine; it would be in effect from October 1. I might say that those references to clauses 12 to 20 are to columns in the schedule which specify the different pension rates—45 per cent, 40 per cent and so on. If we can get those lines out, then this is an awfully good bill. It puts the provisions into effect on October 1. Therefore, I move:

That Bill C-40 be amended on page 11 by deleting therefrom lines 14 to 31 inclusive.

In the French text, it would be lines quatorze to trente-deux.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Chairman, I challenge the validity of this amendment and offer a few citations for your consideration. First, only the Crown can alter the royal prerogative. Standing Order 62(1) clearly states:

This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the House by a message from the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

I would argue that even though the wording of the hon. member's proposal does not actually call for an increase in expenditure, the effect of the deletion of lines 14 to 32 of this clause would be to increase expenditure. For this reason the motion is out of order since the hon. member does not sit on the treasury benches.

There are two other citations at which hon. members might want to look. Citation 773(7) clearly states:

An amendment is out of order if it imposes a charge upon the public treasury, if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications as expressed in the royal recommendation.

This arose from a decision by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux in June of 1969.

I could go on to cite Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which clearly outlines the same principle in citation 246(3). Rather than read it, I will draw your attention to it. In net effect, I am objecting to the procedural acceptability of the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is perfectly right that a member not of the cabinet does not have the right to propose in positive terms a bill or a motion calling for the expenditure of money. I am not doing that. The parliamentary secretary will contend, quite rightly, that the effect of my amendment is to increase the charge on the treasury because all this money would have to be paid this year instead of over six and a half years. But I know from memory that it has happened a number of times if it is done in this way. Let me put it this way. There is no rule in our procedures or anywhere else which says that we have to vote for everything that is put before us. We can vote against any clause in a bill.

There is also a provision that a clause can be divided into its constituent parts, and I could ask you, Mr. Chairman, to divide clause 14 into its constituent parts so that we could vote for all the other subclauses but not vote for subclause (3.2). All I am asking is that we be given the democratic right to vote against something that is put before us. The effect of that, as I said, will be for the money to have to be paid. I did not see the bill until noon today, and I am sorry that I did not anticipate this to the point of looking up some precedents, but I know that it has happened a number of times that we have been permitted to vote against something, even though the effect of such a vote would be to increase the cost, provided we are not proposing it in positive terms.

All I am asking is that you allow members of the House the right to vote for or against what is put before them, not to be told on a procedural point that we have to vote for what is in front of us.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I must say that I listened with great interest to what I think is a most ingenious argument, an argument the ingenuity of which one would be hard pressed to find against, and I urge you to find in favour of the amendment.

The precedents which have been read by the parliamentary secretary apply to a situation which is not the situation which has been placed before us by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Aside from the procedures, which I think are quite in order, with repect to the amendments, for the reasons given by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I think everyone in the House had better consider the effect of having this matter struck down in procedural terms. The effect of its having been struck down in procedural terms is not to give the House the opportunity of improving upon the benefits that have been proposed in this bill. Because, in fact, the benefits, in terms of the payment out to veterans, will be improved. That goes to the merits of the bill itself.

I think we have to be extremely careful that we do not put ourselves in the position here of depriving members of Parliament of their ability to vote against something that is put in front of them. So I would urge you, Mr. Chairman, with respect, to find in favour of the amendment and to allow it so that not only will the bill be improved in terms of veterans but that as well the right of members of Parliament in dealing with legislation will be protected.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a very short contribution regarding one of the references made by the parliamentary secretary about the power to have bills prepared which involve the expenditure of money. If he would check with Bill C-578 standing in my name on the order paper, which is an act to amend the Pension Act, the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, he would find that there are occasions, exceptional occasions I grant you, when such bills are accepted. In that spirit, I think we should be able to support the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, a very worth-while amendment which I would find quite easy to accept.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to prolong this debate unduly, but my point does go to the heart of responsible British parliamentary government, and that is the ability of the Crown to initiate all spending and taxing powers. While I take the point of the hon. member for Victoria on his bill, all members can allow any bill to be introduced as a courtesy; but it would seem there would be precedents in private members' hour in the past which hold that where such bills infringe upon the royal prerogative, those bills are ruled out of order at that time. Or at least, it goes beyond the realm of a private member to introduce such a bill.

But more specifically to the point is citation 246(3) in Beauchesne's fourth edition, which states:

The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications. In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment—

This is the key point, Mr. Chairman.

—infringes the financial initiative of the Crown, not only if it increases the amount, but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge.

I think perhaps that is more solid proof that this amendment is out of order.

The Chairman: The Chair proposes to recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and then to make a ruling.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I note that the parliamentary secretary has not addressed himself to my contention that members of the House of Commons have the right to vote yea or nay to propositions that are put before us. It is the government that has put before us the proposition containing lines 14 to 31 on page 11. Surely we have the right to say yea or nay to it. To deny that right, to say that we have to accept it, is certainly contrary to the principles of democracy.

I have been trying to find instances in the past when we have voted against certain tax increases and we were allowed to do it, even though, if we had won, the government would have lost money. I do not have the right to make a positive proposal which involves the expenditure of money, but I do have the right to vote against a subclause that has been put before us. I am happy to do it either way. You can divide the clause into its several parts and we could vote for some and against this one. I just think it is simpler to accept this amendment to delete the lines which I have indicated.

The Chairman: The Chair has listened to the argument. The royal recommendation reads as follows:

His Excellency the Governor General recommends to the House of Commons the appropriation of public revenue under the circumstances, in the manner and for the purposes set out in a measure entitled "An act to amend the Pension Act, the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, the War Veterans Allowances Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act."

Clearly the amendment imposes an additional financial charge upon the Treasury. Beauchesne's Fifth Edition is quite specific; it has been cited. Citation 773(7) reads:

An amendment is out of order if it imposes a charge upon the public treasury, if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications as expressed in the royal recommendation.

I fail to understand how it does anything other than relax the qualifications and purposes as expressed in the royal recommendation. In the circumstances the Chair rejects the motion. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is perfectly right when he says that it is open to hon. members to accept or reject clauses put before them, and that is certainly his right in committee. But in the circumstances the Chair rules against the admissibility of the amendment.

Mr. Knowles: Obviously, Mr. Chairman, I accept your ruling, but will you now split this clause into its separate parts?

● (1740)

The Chairman: Then there is a difficulty here. Standing Order 75(1) reads as follows:

In proceedings in any committee of the House upon bills, the preamble is first postponed—

This we have done. It continues:

—and if the first clause contains only a short title it is also postponed—

This we have also done. It continues:

—then every other clause is considered by the committee in its proper order; the first clause (if it contains only a short title), the preamble and the title are to be last considered.

It seems to me that we consider the bill clause by clause. I presume that means the entire clause at each stage. This is the interpretation the Chair is making at this point.

Mr. Knowles: I invite your attention to clause 776 on page 234 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which reads as follows:

A committee has the power to divide a clause or to decide that the first part of a clause shall be considered as an entire clause. A motion to divide a clause must be taken before the clause is adopted.

Of course, I can put such a motion but it is clear—

The Chairman: If the hon. member puts such a motion, we will accept it and take the clause by sections, then.

Mr. Knowles: The rule says that I have to write it out.

Mr. Lamontagne: In both official languages.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That clause 14 of Bill C-40 be divided into its separate subclauses.

If this amendment carries, we will vote on the separate subclauses, and I will vote for all of them except subclause (3.2).

The Chairman: It is moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that clause 14 of Bill C-40 be divided into its separate subclauses, presumably for voting purposes.

Mr. Knowles: Yes.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment to clause 14 carry?

Amendment (Mr. Knowles) agreed to: yeas, 80; nays, 0.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member said that he would vote against all clauses except the last one, it seemed to me—

An hon. Member: That is not what he said.

Mr. de Corneille: If this is done, it then says "(3) subsection (2) shall come into force". If there is no (3) subsection (2), what will be coming into force? I am not quite clear on that.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the hon. member misunderstood. I said that I would vote for all the subclauses of clause 14 except subclause (3.2), lines 14 to 31, on page 11. Now that the committee has voted in support of my motion that it be called by its various subclauses, I trust that is what the Chair will do.

The Chairman: Shall clause 14(1) carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Subclause (1) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 14(2) carry?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I specifically said in the motion "subclauses". While we let clause 14(1) go which had an extra subclause in it, clause 14(2) contains subclauses (3.1) and (3.2). I am asking for a separate vote on subclauses (3.1) and (3.2). I will vote for subclause (3.1) but against subclause (3.2).

The Chairman: Shall subclause (2), lines 27 to 48 inclusive, on page 10 of Bill C-40 carry?

Subclause (2), lines 27 to 48 inclusive on page 10, agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall subclause (2), lines 1 to 13 inclusive on page 11 of Bill C-40, carry?

Subclause (2), lines 1 to 13 inclusive on page 11, agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall subclause (2), lines 14 to 31 inclusive, carry?

Subclause (2), lines 14 to 31 inclusive on page 11, agreed to: yeas, 62; nays, 58.

● (1750)

The Chairman: Shall the remainder of the subclause carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 14 agreed to.

Clauses 15 to 22 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 23—Proportionate compensation payable to the widow in respect of deceased evaders or prisoners of war.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to point out that this clause is an amendment to the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, which is a companion piece to the clause on which we have just voted. Had we been successful in defeating that clause, I would then have asked for a division on this clause; but since it seems that we are slightly outnumbered, I simply make the point that the same change should have been made here, that clause 7.4 on page 19 be deleted.

The Chairman: Shall clause 23 carry?

Clause 23 agreed to.

Clauses 24 to 48 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 49—Regulations.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the printed draft copy of the bill I have has written in it "49—see clause 45". There is nothing in my copy to indicate what clause 49 actually says. May I ask whether it is the same as clause 45? After all, if we are passing something it should be before us in written form. I had to write out my amendments. What is clause 45?

An hon. Member: It is the same as clause 49.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, may I ask whether the copy you have at the table has anything in it for clause 49? Obviously the copy I have is incomplete. Has anybody a copy that has anything other than just "see clause 45"?

The Chairman: In response to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the copy before me has clause 49 which reads as follows:

> Regulations or amendments thereto made pursuant to the said act that are directly related to the application of the said act, as amended by this act, may be made applicable on or after July 1, 1980.

Does that answer the hon. member's question?

Mr. Knowles: It does, Mr. Chairman. I am glad to know it is there. Some members have sent me copies of the bill which have clause 49. The copy I have, which was given to me this morning—I still have it and can show it to you to indicate that I was not fooling—has no clause 49 in it. If the copy you have and that you initial has in it the words you have read, I am satisfied.

Mr. MacDonald: I just want to say, Mr. Chairman, that this is an amended copy. The previous one to which the hon. member was referring does not have that clause, but it is in this copy; you have read it and I hope that clarifies the matter.

The Chairman: The copy in the hands of the chairman of committees is as indicated and I propose to initial it if it is adopted in this form. Shall clause 49 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, before we complete committee stage I am wondering whether the minister will reply to my query in respect of clause 2 regarding what consideration or action the government is prepared to take to provide recognition of and entitlement to the veterans of the Mackenzie-Papineau battalion in the Spanish civil war?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I planned to make some reference in this regard but I see that time is moving on. The hon. member may not know but this is under consideration by the department. I have no answer for him today other than to say that it is under consideration.

Mr. Benjamin: Are you in favour of it?

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall I rise and report the bill?

Mr. Collenette: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I may have missed this, but is there not on page 32 a schedule that has to be carried?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is part of a section.

Mr. Knowles: That is part of clause 44 which was carried.

Mr. Collenette: Then I withdraw that question.

The Chairman: There is no schedule in the bill before me. It is my understanding that the schedule is part of clause 44 and was adopted when clause 44 was adopted.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. MacDonald moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

• (1800)

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise merely to say that despite the shortcomings which we found in the bill, and the improvements which we will have to make later, it is a good bill. It is a good day and we are glad that we were able to put the bill through all stages.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we have dealt with this bill and I, too, think that it has been a good day for Parliament and for the veterans. I regret very much that the government did not see fit to agree with the amendments which were supported by this side of the House, but that is their position.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Would the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council tell the House what we will be dealing with when we convene tomorrow?

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, it has not been definitely decided. There are a number of options. We did plan to continue with Bill S-6 today, and there are also Bills C-3 and C-4. I will undertake in a few moments to obtain a definitive answer for the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

There is also the matter of Bill C-30, which was reported yesterday and which could be brought forward tomorrow. I will undertake to get the information for the House leaders so that they can inform their colleagues.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.03 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PAY-BACK FORMULA UNDER REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to pose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the current pay-out formula from a registered retirement income fund allows for very small pay-outs in the early years of retirement and very much larger payments as the pensioner approaches his or her ninetieth year, and in view of the fact that contributors to RRSPs should be able to draw larger amounts from their pension savings in the early years of retirement when they need the money most—as demonstrated by numerous representations which have been received by the Minister of Finance—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That this House direct the Minister of Finance to take the necessary action to amend the rules governing the pay-back formula from registered retirement income funds so that annual payments to pensioners can be equalized over the entire pay-back period between age 70 and age 90.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POST OFFICE

CRITICISM OF EARLY CLOSING OF POSTAL STATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter as urgent and as pressing as next Monday, July 14, when postal stations in Ancaster and Dundas in my riding at least, and in many other Canadian communities as well, will begin closing a crucial 30 minutes earlier than the normal 5.45 p.m. time, causing great inconvenience to many businesses in these communities.

In view of a formal letter of protest sent to the Hamilton postmaster by the mayor of the town of Ancaster, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean):

That this House directs the Postmaster General to make immediate alternative arrangements to these early closing hours in order not to create even further deterioration of Canada's postal service.

HIGH INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CHARTERED BANKS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

When the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) announced on March 10 of this year that Canada would have a floating bank rate, this government effectively abdicated responsibility for the country's monetary policy. While the Bank of Canada has announced successive reductions in the bank rate, the chartered banks have chosen to pursue their own independent monetary policy, maintaining high interest rates.

The traditional spread between the central bank rate and the chartered banks' prime lending rates has increased by more than 200 per cent since April. In addition, chartered banks' profits, after taxes, in the second quarter of this year are up sharply over the same period last year. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That the government take immediate action to regain control over the country's monetary policy and curtail the monopolistic pricing practices of the chartered banks.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

CHARTERED BANKS' INTEREST RATES IN EXCESS OF BANK OF CANADA RATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my motion is similar to the previous motion under Standing Order 43, also in respect of a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

When interest rates in Canada were rising, the differential between the Bank of Canada rate and the chartered bank prime rate averaged about 1 per cent. Now that the Bank of Canada rate has been somewhat reduced, the chartered banks have not followed suit accordingly, thereby allowing the gap to triple—to nearly 3 per cent. In view of this unfair and inconsistent practice, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to accept the responsibility for directing the financial institutions of this country to stop ripping off borrowers, particularly the struggling small businessman, and disallow the chartered banks to charge more than the traditional 1 per cent above the Bank of Canada rate.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DIVORCE

TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION TO PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of the strong objections of the Advisory Committee on the Status of Women to the transfer of jurisdiction over divorce from the federal government to the provinces, until the impact of this transfer has been thoroughly studied to assess its effect on women, and in light of the opposition of the Canadian Bar Association to this transfer, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this House protest the proposal made by the Minister of Justice yesterday to the provincial ministers that control over most aspects of divorce be transferred to any province that wants it.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CROSS-COUNTRY MARATHON OF TERRY FOX

ADMIRATION FOR MR. TERRY FOX FOR HIS EFFORTS ON BEHALF OF CANCER RESEARCH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. In fact, I believe we may be a bit overdue in this instance.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Garant):

That this House extend its admiration and encouragement to Mr. Terry Fox for his cross-country marathon of hope on behalf of cancer research and, further, that this House support the request of Mr. Terry Fox that other Canadians assist his marathon through their donations to the Canadian Cancer Society.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Madam Speaker: Does the House accept the said motion?

GRAIN—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO IMPROVE TRANSPORTATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, noting that we are only three weeks away from the termination of the Canadian Wheat Board 1979-80 crop year, I want to say it is commendable that there has been a general improvement in the transportation of grain over this past year; however, in numerous specific communities congested elevators still exist and are denying farmers an opportunity to an adequate cash flow at the conclusion of this crop year.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight):

That this House advise the minister to take whatever initiatives are required, which may include special spotting of grain cars or an extension of the crop year, with the objective of relieving all prairie communities of congested elevators prior to the 1980-81 shipping season which will commence August 1, three weeks from now.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DELAY IN PRESENTATION OF McDONALD COMMISSION REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that the McDonald commission, Canada's longest running, most costly and least productive road show, has been in existence for almost three years, and in view of the fact that I have today been informed—and the Solicitor General will no doubt confirm—that there will be yet a further delay in the final report of the McDonald commission, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That in view of this intolerable further delay in the McDonald commission report, the Minister of Justice and the provincial attorneys general immediately begin prosecution and disciplinary action against those members of the RCMP who apparently have broken the law, and thereby reassure Canadians that the rule of law does indeed apply in this country.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE APPROVAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Canada is importing some $3 billion to $4 billion of oil and $1 billion of coal per year. Canada's unemployment rate is rising rapidly, and its balance of payments is rapidly deteriorating. The pre-build section of the Alaska Highway gas pipeline will provide 150,000 man-years of employment, with some 30,000 to 40,000 man-years of employment in Ontario, a favourable balance of payments of $2 billion per year, an investment in Canada of $1.6 billion, with some $360 million in Ontario and Quebec. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright):

That the federal government immediately approve all Canadian aspects of the prebuilt Alaska Highway gas pipeline, while concurrently continuing negotiations with the U.S.A. for guarantees in regard to construction of the northern and Alaska sections of the gas line.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Veillette):

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—EXPORTS OF NATURAL GAS TO UNITED STATES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who will recall that on December 6, 1979, when he was criticizing the decision of my government to export Canadian natural gas he said, as reported at page 2101 of Hansard of that date: and I quote:

—exports of natural gas to the United States should be authorized only on the basis of, first of all, an ironclad commitment regarding the building of the whole Alaska gas pipeline.

I wonder if that remains the position of the minister, or if he has changed his position.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, indeed, when we were in opposition we severely criticized the previous government for having approved the export of gas without having made any effort to get strong assurances from the American government, the American authorities, before approving those exports.

What we have indicated is that we wanted to have assurances, strong assurances and complete assurances, from the American authorities that the whole pipeline will be constructed. This is the matter that the cabinet is now examining, making sure that no approval will be given unless we have satisfactory assurances from the American authorities that the pipeline will be constructed.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I would call that an ironclad flip-flop.

An hon. Member: You know all about flip-flops.

Mr. Clark: As the minister knows, our government approved exports, the pre-build and the whole pipeline. Foothills has now stated that they need a decision by next Tuesday in order to meet start-up requirements for construction this year. Does the government accept that as a firm deadline; and, if not, what deadline do they consider to be firm and applicable in these circumstances?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, from previous experience I thought that the hon. Leader of the Opposition did not like the word "deadline". I understand that the Foothills company have indicated that they needed a decision by June 15. We are in touch with the company—

An hon. Member: July 15.

Mr. Lalonde: By July 15. We are in touch with the corporation and we will assess whether this is really a complete deadline or whether there is flexibility.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the House of Commons would like to know the decision of the government at least by Tuesday, if they could find it in their heart to give it to us.

Let me put a simple question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the Government of Canada made a decision on the pre-build? If so, what is that decision?

Mr. Lalonde: The answer is no, Madam Speaker.

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—EFFECT OF CONSTRUCTION ON CANADIAN ECONOMY

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I appreciate the minister's discomfort: all of us who have been here any length of time say things, either in opposition or in government, that we have to change later.

An hon. Member: To swallow.

Mr. Jarvis: Well, I have said many things I have regretted; there is no question about that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1420)

Mr. Jarvis: But this is not one of them. I think I can assist the minister in his embarrassment, particularly concerning yesterday when his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, could not confirm in any way the impact on the economy of the pre-build portion.

Presuming that the Minister of Energy is the one responsible in cabinet for steering this through, can he give us today—either in terms of man-years or in terms of dollars, including or excluding the multiplier or spin-off effect—some indication of what the industrial impact, in terms of employment and infusions into the economy, might be from the pre-build? If he can give it in terms of regions of the country, I think it will be very helpful to the House.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, first of all, I would like to correct my hon. friend on two points. However, I do appreciate his efforts to help me. First, there is no embarrassment whatsoever as far as I am concerned, and I want to assure him of that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You do not embarrass easily.

Mr. Lalonde: The pre-build will be approved by cabinet only if it is to be an integral part of the Alaska gas pipeline. This is the view of this government. This was put forward in the act passed by Parliament a few years ago, and this is what we intend to stand by.

As far as his second point is concerned, I would like to correct the hon. member in terms of parliamentary or cabinet responsibility. Senator Olson, from the other place, is the minister responsible for the pipeline authority.

Mr. Nielsen: You are the one who answers here.

Mr. Lalonde: But I answer for him here. Third, the benefits for Canada of building the pipeline, even now or at a later date, are very substantial indeed.

Mr. Nielsen: What is this later date?

Mr. Lalonde: When we were considering a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43, the hon. member from Edmonton gave a number of figures which I do not dispute. I think those figures are, indeed, reasonably accurate. I would not want to confirm every single one of them, but in broad terms I would say they do represent reality.

Mr. Clark: Why doesn't Herb know?

Mr. Lalonde: This government is interested in building not only the pre-build portion but the whole of the Alaska gas pipeline, which will benefit all parts of Canada tremendously.

An hon. Member: Get moving, then.

Mr. Jarvis: Madam Speaker, I thought it was the minister who was having trouble with his cabinet colleagues. It may be Senator Olson. So by osmosis through the minister, maybe I can help Senator Olson, because on the other aspect which relates directly to what the minister has called his Canadianization program the minister will be aware that, in terms of the gas-producing companies, it is not a conglomerate of multinationals; indeed, I think it is somewhere in the area of 250 Canadian independents whose future is at some risk in terms of the pre-build section. Therefore, can the minister give some indication to the House as to the accuracy of saying that there are about 250 small, Canadian-owned, independent gas producers whose future rests on the pre-build section? If so, has that evidence been brought before cabinet?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I must advise the hon. member that when his government precipitously approved the project last year, the main beneficiaries were a small number of large multinationals in terms of gas companies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Thanks to our efforts and work, the project now has been somewhat changed and there are a large number of small Canadian companies who will be the beneficiaries of this proposal.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): How?

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—SWAP PROPOSALS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Leader of the Opposition referred to a speech made in this House by the energy critic, who is now the Minister of Energy, on December 6, 1979. In his speech he said this:

> Second, there must be an arrangement for swaps in this agreement with the United States so that down the line, if Canada were to need natural gas, we would be in a position to obtain natural gas from the Alaska gas pipeline—

Can the minister now tell this House if there are any swap provisions in the pre-build proposal? If not, why not?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I can tell my hon. friend that the question of swaps was discussed for several hours with my American colleague during the course of the Summit in Venice. All aspects of this matter were gone into extensively.

• (1425)

As far as the content of any final decision one way or the other, the hon. member will have to wait until a decision is made and then examine the reasons for or against any particular decision that will have been taken by cabinet.

Mr. Waddell: I take it what the minister is saying is there are no swap provisions so far and that is still being negotiated, so we could lose all of that gas.

Let me ask the minister this. He referred to awaiting the cabinet decision. Can the minister tell the House how any decision can be reached on the pre-build when apparently there has been no report from the National Energy Board as to the result of their condition 12 hearings that were held recently? Can the minister confirm to this House that there has been no official report from the National Energy Board? Will he undertake to make any correspondence to Senator Olson or himself, from the National Energy Board, available to this House immediately so that the members of this House, as well as the cabinet, can assess whether the guarantees have been met?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member has some misunderstanding as to the procedure. I am advised by the National Energy Board that they have recommended to cabinet an amendment to condition 12. Before issuing a decision as to whether they are satisfied that the conditions are met or not, they need to first have a decision by cabinet on condition 12. They have to know whether cabinet would be ready to amend condition 12, allowing the recommendation of the Energy Board, before reaching a decision and making it public.

I can also advise the hon. member that I have received no correspondence from the Energy Board. I will inquire from my colleague in the other place, but I do not believe there is any correspondence along the lines to which he has referred.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, the minister is fond of telling me to get the facts straight, but if he reads what he just said he will see that it is an Alice in Wonderland procedure. He is telling the House that the National Energy Board is supposed to make a decision, then they are waiting for the government to decide, and then they will issue the proper decision. That is no procedure at all.

Let me ask the minister a final supplementary. I cannot ask him the contents of the legal opinion, but let me ask him this. Has the government asked for, or received, a legal opinion from the law officers of the Crown or the appropriate authorities as to whether it is legal that the government can approve the pre-build of the pipeline without bringing the matter back in the form of legislation before the House of Commons?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I will try and again enlighten my hon. friend as to the first part of his question. There are two elements in the Energy Board decision, or action. The first is to recommend an amendment to condition 12. The second is to decide, if cabinet were to approve condition 12, whether the conditions the Energy Board announced under condition 12, if it were amended, were met.

These are two different steps. Cabinet could still approve an amendment to condition 12, and the Energy Board could then say within that amendment they come to the conclusion that the conditions they have set have not been met. That is what I tried to explain to my hon. friend the first time he asked the question. There is no Alice in Wonderland problem there.

[Translation]

As for the second part of the hon. member's question dealing with a legal opinion, to my knowledge my department did not ask for a legal opinion—I certainly did not. I suggest to the hon. member that it is not necessary to be a lawyer to understand the bill passed by Parliament. It is quite clear. One only has to read it. The meaning is obvious and I wonder why we would need another legal opinion to repeat what Parliament itself has so clearly legislated. You only have to read it to realize that.

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—JURISDICTION UNDER NORTHERN PIPELINE ACT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): The minister knows, or should know, that cabinet action with respect to the powers exercisable under section 12 of schedule 3 is not necessary. It is the minister with whom that power is vested, or the board. Since the minister seems to have a misconception as to where the power resides under that section, can he inform us whether it is the intention of the government to invoke the provisions of section 14, which would provide the minister with those broad powers set forth in that section and in section 15 of the act?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, unfortunately I am not yet in a position to answer the question raised by the hon. member. As the hon. member knows, these are internal matters pertaining to the operation of cabinet and if cabinet decides to act under the specific provisions of the act, it will reach a decision which will then be made public. Meanwhile, however, I do not think it is advisable to speculate on the possible use of this or that provision in the act.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

VENICE SUMMIT—DECLARATION ON FISCAL AND MONETARY RESTRAINT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Another August 1 is fast approaching, and since at the Venice conference the Prime Minister joined with other nations in signing a declaration which included a statement calling for determined fiscal and monetary restraint, would the right hon. gentleman tell us whether, as reported, consideration is being given to substantial cuts in government spending of a nature similar to those announced by the Prime Minister on August 1, 1978, bearing in mind that Dr. Stewart, the present deputy minister of finance, has indicated that government spending trends in coming years will mean 10 per cent to 12 per cent extra spending for Canadians; in fact, $250 for every man, woman and child—needless spending, if the trend is not corrected—compared to that outlined in the Crosbie budget?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board, on behalf of the government, has indicated several times that restraint was still a practice of this administration and that he was very deeply engaged in following that practice. Every day, I believe, members of this House see examples of the government practising restraint when requests by the opposition for spending in their constituencies are resisted.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: How can you say that with a straight face?

An hon. Member: How about your own members?

Mr. Trudeau: You hear them, Madam Speaker? They are each saying that their riding is an exception. But that is not the case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In the case of the communication to which the hon. member referred, I would point out that the lines which follow nonetheless express a caution that we must ensure that the practice of restraint should not be pursued at the expense of the unemployed. There are cautionary words to that effect, and I think it is fair to say that the chairmen of the European Commission and the Canadian delegation were emphatic on this.

Mr. Stevens: To show some evidence of the restraint the Prime Minister is speaking of, and since it is now 27 months since we last had a fully-passed budget in this House, will the right hon. gentleman at least accept October 10 as the deadline before which a budget will be introduced setting out the government's budgetary program, bearing in mind that if he does not accept this deadline it will mean we have gone into the thirty-first month under his government with an aimless economic policy and no fully-passed budget program in position since April, 1978?

Mr. Trudeau: I think it is fair to say we shall try to do as well as the opposition in presenting a budget within a given date of the day on which we were elected. But since the hon. member is talking about a specific date, I would obviously have to consult the Minister of Finance before making an ironclad guarantee.

INVESTIGATION OF NEAR-ACCIDENTS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport; I hope we shall be acting on air safety a little faster than we are on the economy.

The minister is, of course, aware that two incidents occurred on the west coast, one in Vancouver in which a DC-8 and a DC-737 were involved in a near-miss situation, and another in Victoria in which a 737 and a Beechcraft nearly collided. Would the minister explain what action is being taken by his department with regard to investigating these events, and could he describe the effect of the government's restraint program on the reduction of the general level of air safety in the area?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I am quite aware that there is a debate on the way investigations should be conducted following an accident or a near-miss. That is one of the major points in the Dubin inquiry, and I would have thought the hon. member would agree that it would be very wise to wait until we have the result of the extensive inquiry which the judge has been conducting.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I would point out in relation to the Victoria incident that we have been waiting for years for radar to be put in place in Victoria. The problem is one of expense. But people have already been killed because of the lack of these facilities.

With regard to the business of reporting, the minister is aware that we are not only awaiting some kind of statement or separate investigation: he also promised at the time to give us a report on the incident involving the 737. We are still waiting for that. Basically, I would appreciate hearing something about the installation—

Madam Speaker: Order. I feel the hon. member should ask his question. There is no need for a long preamble, especially to a supplementary.

Mr. Skelly: Could the minister tell us when he might be prepared to report what occurred in this incident, what has occurred in connection with the 737 incident and, specifically, what he might be doing about radar installation at Victoria to prevent future incidents, regardless of what may happen at the inquiry?

Mr. Pepin: I will look into these two incidents immediately to find out whether the report of the inquiry is available. Members of the House are aware, of course, that every day there is improvement in the general equipment of our airports in Canada. Millions of dollars are being spent on that purpose. If the hon. member would like a list relating to airports in his own geographical area, I will be glad to provide him with one.

AIR TRANSPORT

HALIFAX-MONTREAL ROUTE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the cabinet's recent decision to award the Toronto-Halifax route to Eastern Provincial Airways—a decision which, by the way, I applaud—and in view of the fact that CP Air has refused to serve the Halifax-Montreal route, would the minister please tell us what steps he or his officials are taking to ensure that the Halifax-Montreal route, normally served by Eastern Provincial Airways, is served by CP Air or some other carrier in future?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I am, of course, pleased that the hon. member is satisfied with the decision which was made by cabinet. Personally, I was rather sad that CP Air could not find its way clear to accept the compromise we had reached, particularly in view of the fact that at one point in time in the course of discussions with the parties we had the impression that they would.

On the subject of the Halifax-Montreal route which, as the hon. member will recall, EPA relinquished in the compromise we reached, I understand that Eastern Provincial Airways has asked the Transport Commission if it can continue to operate now that CPA does not appear to wish to do so. The Canadian Transport Commission has received this request and is communicating with the other parties, particularly with CPA, to see what they think of it.

INDUSTRY

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—PROPOSALS OF PRESIDENT CARTER

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and it deals with recent statements made in Detroit by President Carter regarding the ailing auto industry.

Could the minister inform this House whether he discussed the proposals set forth by the president during his recent meetings with U.S. officials in Washington; and if he has discussed President Carter's proposals—which I assume he must have—why has he not acted accordingly? Why are we taking a back seat again to every other country in the world as far as the auto industry is concerned?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, in our recent discussions in Washington we discussed a range of matters, including the areas covered by the president's statement. I have to tell my hon. friend that we had already begun acting on the same areas in our own country well before President Carter made his statement. President Carter, for example, first met with the automobile industry on May 14. We began meeting with the industry within days of taking office in March.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: President Carter said that he would begin studying changes in tax laws to assist the auto industry. We already have those kinds of things on the books in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: When it comes to dealing with the problem the Americans are trying to deal with regarding inventory levels of automobile dealers, an initiative taken by my hon. friends—I am trying to be fair on this—in their last budget—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Clark: You have lost the Speaker's vote, Herb.

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. minister is being cheered so much, he must be making a speech.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, under normal circumstances I am a patient man, but I am getting fed up with the runaround of rhetoric we have been getting from this minister for the last four months.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order. No speeches.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, I will leave the rhetoric to the minister, and I will ask him a simple question. Why does he continue to delay in taking any specific and positive action instead of just studies, which he has been doing for four months? Second, is he now prepared to propose forthwith all the positive plans as outlined by President Carter in Detroit and the many other recommendations which he has been receiving from this side of the House and from other interest groups such as the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association of Canada?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is so wrapped up in his own rhetoric that he is not paying attention to what we have actually been doing. For example, we have undertaken some very successful missions with the auto parts manufacturers and with third country importers to facilitate greater exports of auto parts from Canada. Our program to provide loan guarantees to Chrysler alone has guaranteed in large measure the survival of some 40,000 jobs in Canada, something which the hon. member's party was unwilling to do when it was in office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: More.

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, we are proceeding to put in place further action of a kind that the auto parts manufacturers find very acceptable and—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I did not hear the minister's response to that question, so I believe not many people did.

Mr. Kempling: You didn't miss anything.

Madam Speaker: I therefore ask the hon. minister to give his answer in two sentences.

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, we have already taken constructive action which has helped preserve the jobs of Canadian workers and the Canadian industry, and we are going to continue taking that action, unlike the flops on the other side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: You get one more sentence, Herb.

NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW BRUNSWICK—SUBSIDIES ON SHIPMENTS OF COAL TO ONTARIO

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, somewhat reluctantly my question is to the same minister. As the minister is no doubt aware, at the first meeting of the economic Summit in Venice, the right hon. Prime Minister stated that we will encourage long-term commitments by coal producers and consumers. The minister's colleague in the other place has made the statement that he offered to spend millions of dollars to subsidize Pacific Rim sales of coal to Japan.

Is the minister's government prepared to make the same sort of commitment to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in order to enable them to subsidize shipments of coal to Ontario markets?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we are prepared to make constructive commitments to help the coal industry in Nova Scotia and elsewhere in the maritimes, as we are for all parts of the country.

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, I hope we can take that as a commitment that the minister and his government have changed their attitude that the maritime and Atlantic region is a rinky-dink territory.

On the commitment he has undertaken, could the minister now be specific and tell this House what it is that he and his government intend to do to promote the sale and production of coal in the Atlantic region for domestic markets in Ontario?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, I think there already is a form of subsidy encouraging coal production in Nova Scotia, and if we have a specific proposal we will come up with a program at the federal level which will be in the best interests of Nova Scotia coal miners.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGED UNITED STATES PROTECTIONISM RESPECTING IMPORTATION OF STEEL PRODUCTS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. About a week ago, in answer to a question I put to him, the Prime Minister indicated that in his discussions with President Carter he did not raise the important question of the Buy American provisions, particularly as they relate to urban transportation.

As this is an ongoing sign of increasing pressures toward protectionism in the United States, I ask whether the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has raised with the U.S. Administration the very serious concern of Canadians about the most recent example of protectionism, that being the move by New York state to control imports of steel products into the New York state market.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would be very happy to inquire.

Miss MacDonald: That is what you said a week ago.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister is aware of the very important impact that protectionism in the United States is having on our economy in Canada, particularly in the steel industry. Now that he has had one week to think about it, perhaps the Prime Minister could have another week to ask the question of his ministers.

May I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce? At the end of 1979, the Clark government had been working hard to settle the problem of the Buy American regulations as they affected the surface transportation industry, light rail transit. There was some hope at that time that we were reaching a breakthrough with the United States.

Would the minister advise the House the status of those negotiations and whether he raised these matters with Mr. Askew in his recent meetings? If so, what were the responses of Mr. Askew?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, with respect to the initiative begun by the previous government, it was not in a form which enabled us to reach a final agreement with the Americans. We are continuing our discussions very actively because we recognize the importance of this. This was certainly a subject I did raise with Governor Askew, and I might add that our officials on behalf of the Canadian government very actively protested the New York state law regarding steel purchases by that government. We are continuing our efforts because the New York state law does not define precisely what is a "steel product" or the margin of protection. We are making urgent representations to the New York administration to have the application of that law defined as narrowly as possible to protect Canadian interests.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING UNDER RRAP

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is to the minister responsible for CMHC regarding housing in the maritime provinces. In the northern peninsula of Newfoundland, the National Anti-Poverty Organization is assisting hundreds of home owners to repair rundown cottages in remote fishing villages. Since these outstanding efforts are in danger of failing because of inadequate front-end funding under RRAP, will the minister increase RRAP allocations, particularly to remote rural areas in the maritimes and in our north, and will he also revise financing procedures so that delivery agencies such as NAPO do not have to operate under a deficit?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question: it gives me the opportunity to point out that as a result of the government's action in designating, for example, 5,000 additional starts in the public non-profit area, there has been some recovery in housing generally. The announcement of the widening of the RRAP eligibility program has demonstrated, as well, that there is a demand for that. As a result, starts picked up again in the month of June.

In response to the specific question, it demonstrates that the government is pressed by many members requesting new money and new projects to meet demand. I will certainly take the request of the hon. member under consideration. If we can find money from other areas that has not been drawn, we will attempt to respond. I am reminded of the response of the Prime Minister; certainly there are demands for needs, and that is contrary to restraint.

Mrs. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. It seems to me the minister does not realize that not one of those 5,000 units of non-profit housing can be used in the maritime provinces of Canada. His programs simply do not adapt to the circumstances of those provinces. The Atlantic provinces have the highest rate of home ownership despite their poverty and high unemployment—I think they are very proud of this—because most families have built their own homes.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mrs. Mitchell: Inasmuch as—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask her question.

Mrs. Mitchell: Since the minister, in effect, is destroying the co-operative building programs in the maritimes—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mrs. Mitchell: —will the minister assure the House that he will assist maritimers to continue to build and own their homes, particularly modest ones, by extending non-profit mortgage schemes to cover homes built by building co-operatives?

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, I have to reply to the original comments of the hon. member opposite by pointing out that, indeed, 500 of the 5,000 units under non-profit additionally were allocated to the maritime provinces. In addition to that, there are 1,200 unallocated units and I have requests for further allocation in the maritime provinces.

Again, the demand for these non-profit units comes from the area which the hon. member represents. On the other hand she asks for her own riding, for her own province, and then she asks for another province. It is a difficult task to respond to these requests. Yes, the government will continue to analyse this program and we will continue to try to assist the home ownership aspirations of the people of the maritime provinces.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL COMMUNITY SERVICES PROGRAM

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The minister may or may not be aware that recently the Union of British Columbia Municipalities advised all its members that they had been informed the federal government intended to restrict, reduce or even cancel their share of the joint federal-provincial community services program.

Is it the policy of this government to either restrict, reduce or, indeed, cancel their share of the joint federal-provincial community services program?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the program presently in place expires at the end of 1980. I have recommended to the officials of the corporation and to the government that because of the time of year the program be extended for at least one year. It is fair to say, again in response to the question by a member of the same party opposite about restraint, that we should look at the progam to see whether we can afford it and whether indeed the federal government can continue in total or in part; and in what way the program may be used to assist the federal government in its other objectives, for example, in response to the questions of the hon. lady opposite.

Mr. Dantzer: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. As I understand it, the budget, or estimates tabled for this year are in the amount of $246 million. Do they intend to keep to that figure for this year's estimates?

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, I have had the opportunity of meeting with nine of the ministers of housing for the provinces. I have taken the opportunity of expressing to them, as I do to the hon. member, that that commitment will be made. Indeed, I have delivered cheques to show the good faith of that commitment.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

GRANTS TO NATIONAL VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and relates to voluntary organizations. In committee last week, the minister indicated that she favoured the reduction and, indeed, the possible elimination of sustaining grants to national voluntary organizations. There are about 14 of these organizations, such as the Canadian Mental Health Association, Red Cross, and St. John's Ambulance. This relates to the services offered to Canadians by those organizations.

Has the minister changed her mind, or does she still stand by her view that she should reduce or, indeed, eliminate grants? Can the minister indicate when she expects to communicate her intentions to those organizations, and when she intends to meet with them?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, there is no need to say that I never said that. I find it a bit unfair of my predecessor to discuss in this House a long discussion that took place in a committee which I think, by the way, continues tomorrow morning at 9.30. That is not what I said. I presented my estimates, which included the usual sustaining grants to voluntary organizations. I explained in committee the policy of the government. I said that the task force report in the last decade which pointed to the problem of core funding was in opposition to what we favoured. We favour project-oriented action to promote the invaluable work of voluntary organizations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, I waited until the record of the committee came out rather than ask the question last week. If the minister wishes to consult the record, she will see that in fact I used a quotation of hers from the record.

I have a supplementary question. At the same meeting, the minister indicated that the grants were not adjusted for inflation due to an oversight on the part of her department. Would she now assure the House that grants to national voluntary organizations will be adjusted and that oversight corrected in the supplementary estimates?

Miss Bégin: Madam Speaker, I am sorry but I understand even less where my colleague is trying to take us with that question. It is even more unfair because he does not refer to the complete discussion of that topic. I would like to insist on that. I cannot give him the answer he requests because, if I remember well, that was put to my officials. I need technical advice right now which I do not have with me. I am sorry to insist that I do not understand why a question like that can even be asked in the House, when the matter is in committee right now and will be pursued tomorrow morning.

An hon. Member: That is nonsense.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

LAND CLAIMS OF INUIT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Recently the Northwest Territories Legislative Council unanimously passed a resolution supporting the Inuit Tapirisat's position that the ITC would undertake land claims negotiations with the federal government this year only on the assumption that their proposal for a new Nunavut territory would be dealt with by the federal government before any final agreement on the land claims.

Considering this important new support for the ITC claim, would the minister now agree to discuss these political aspects of the Nunavut proposal when his negotiators meet with the ITC soon?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I met with the Inuit some considerable time ago when we discussed setting up land negotiations. I indicated that I would be prepared to appoint a negotiator as soon as they were ready. They said that if during the negotiations on the land claims we wished to raise political questions, we could abridge or at least stall any land claim negotiations until we found out where we were going politically. They agreed to it, and it is proceeding. That is the understanding we have.

DIVORCE

PROPOSED TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION TO PROVINCES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the minister responsible for the status of women. The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, in its presentation to the minister, strongly objected to the proposed transfer of jurisdiction over divorce from the federal government to the provinces.

The minister at that time wholeheartedly accepted the recommendation of the advisory council, indicating he would fight in cabinet in respect of that particular matter. Has the minister communicated with the Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development or the cabinet regarding the position of the advisory council? If not, why not; and what is his response now going to be to that advisory council?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in response to that question let me say yes, I have communicated the concerns of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women to the Minister of Justice. If the hon. member had been looking at the proposals put forward to the provincial ministers, he would know they indicate many of the concerns raised by the advisory council concerning problems of enforcement, problems which are in fact being recognized by the government and are now being negotiated as part of the constitutional problems.

The major concern of the advisory council was the enforcement and custody problems which would be brought about by split jurisdiction. The proposal put forward took those problems into account, and in fact we are negotiating at the present time in light of those kinds of concerns raised by the council.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I am afraid the minister suffers from delusions of adequacy. I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister.

In light of the response of the minister responsible for the status of women and the proposals which have been put forward to the ministers now meeting in respect of the constitution, in the area of divorce will the Prime Minister table in this House the position of the federal government and of the ministers, and what steps will the government take to ensure that problems in respect of custody, alimony and maintenance, as well as the whole question of jurisdiction of divorce, do not end up with our having some sort of Reno or Tijuana in Canada by virtue of the turnover of jurisdiction to the provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the opening position taken by our Minister of Justice at meetings in Montreal is the one which was put to the federal-provincial conference publicly in February, 1979.

Since February, 1979, we have received representations from interested groups, including many organizations representating women's rights. They have pointed out that they have difficulty with this matter. Our minister has been negotiating in Montreal on the possibility of adjusting that to meet the particular problem of execution, under different jurisdictions, of maintenance judgments or alimony.

Here, as in everything else, the federal government is taking an extremely flexible position. We are prepared to accommodate the desires of the greatest number of Canadians and are trying to reconcile those with the desires of the provinces in order to simplify the whole area of family law. This has been our position—not reneging on our February position but indicating there was this real difficulty and that we would be anxious to try to find a solution in co-operation with the provinces.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. This is Thursday, the tenth day of July, and it is a very important Thursday. I wonder whether my friend would have any information for us in respect of what the plans of the government are as far ahead as he would like to see in terms of legislation for next week? While he is on his feet would he agree to designating next Monday as an allotted day—the seventh allotted day for the opposition?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, this afternoon we will study Bill C-30. It is very important that we obtain third reading of that bill, hopefully before five o'clock. That will be followed by Bill C-3.

Tomorrow, after consultation with my colleagues, we have agreed to study certain bills in this order, if possible; C-13, C-31 and C-5 which has been reported from the committee or will be reported later on today. That is the Bretton Woods measure. We will need consent to proceed with that bill tomorrow, but I understand we have that consent. We will then proceed with Bill C-4 in relation to municipal grants and, if necessary, S-6, to terminate the day tomorrow.

[Translation]

As for the next week, Madam Speaker, I confirm that Monday will be an allotted day, the seventh opposition day. Over the remainder of the week, we should no doubt complete what will be left from this week. In addition, we should consider Bill C-18, the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act on which the committee will report today, Bill C-26, the Fort Nelson Indian Reserve Minerals Revenue Sharing Act, Bill S-2 concerning tax conventions and Bill C-34, the Judges Act, if we can agree to hold a reasonably short debate to dispose of that bill at all stages.

That is essentially the bill of fare for the next two or three days.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have one other matter of concern, Madam Speaker. The government made a commitment, as I recollect, to the Canadian Commission on the International Year of the Child to refer the report to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. I wonder when that could be done, on the understanding it would be dealt with in very short order? Would the government House leader consider that, please?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if I have agreement that this can be done today without debate I will agree to present it to the committee; if not, I will consult with my colleagues and try to work out something for tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I thank the government House leader for giving us the bill of fare for the next few days. May I say in respect of Bill C-5 that we will give unanimous consent to that bill being proceeded with at the report and third reading stages tomorrow. I do not think any of the other bills he has listed require unanimous consent, but we do agree on that one.

Just to keep the record clear, what happens to Bill C-34 is still a matter of negotiation. I believe the minister put it that way and I confirm that that is the situation.

In looking over the order paper I have wondered, and sometimes my colleagues have asked me, when we were going to complete the debate on the throne speech. He might tell us some day when we are going to have day number eight in that regard. Surely the government does not want to carry on forever without having the confidence that goes with the conclusion of that debate.

I have just one other thing to say to the minister. He probably does not think it is really Thursday because I cannot ask him when he is going to bring forward the bill regarding veterans. I can tell him that the campaign starts today for a bill to amend the one we passed yesterday in order that 24,000 of the widows who, by that bill, are entitled to their pensions will not have to wait for one to six and a half years to get it. I hope within a matter of months, perhaps when the House comes back in the fall, the minister will agree to the suggestion I am sure the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) will make, that we take care of that fault. We almost did it yesterday but for four votes.

MR. McGRATH—SALMON FISHERY—REPLY OF MINISTER OF FISHERIES AND OCEANS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a point of order arising from a reply yesterday by my hon. friend, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc), to my colleague, the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), in respect of the continuation of compensation payments to commercial salmon fishermen in the maritime provinces.

I know the minister would not want to deliberately mislead the House, and I know that his answer in this respect, in that it was misleading, was inadvertent. He did say that his predecessor terminated the compensation. He knows that when another year of compensation was granted by Treasury Board, that is for fiscal 1979, it was done on the understanding that that would be the final year in which compensation would be made, because fiscal 1979 was the seventh or eighth year of a program which was scheduled to last for only five years.

In fact, that was the reaction which I received initially from Treasury Board, and it was my understanding that I would not be able to get an extension beyond 1979 of the compensation program. However, I did agree to a modified continuation of the program. In that respect we were looking at ways and means of continuing payments to bona fide fishermen who were still active fishermen and terminating payments for those fishermen who were no longer active. We wanted to find a way to continue payments to those fishermen who were still active.

That is the case, and those are the facts. I am sure that the minister, if he searches his memory, will find that it is so.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I obviously would not want to mislead the House, especially in relation to something at which the hon. member would feel aggrieved. I will check my memory and I will check the record. I suspect that my memory came from a rather strong exchange which took place in the House when I was on the other side. In that exchange it was alleged that I had agreed to terminate compensation, instead of Treasury Board having decided that compensation should terminate. If I remember correctly, I made the point in that heated exchange that I did not agree with Treasury Board in this case and that I thought a program should be put in place either to retire licences which were held by fishermen who were not using them, or to arrange for a buy-back or some other means. I felt that the provinces should participate since they benefited from any reduction in the commercial salmon fishing effort on the east coast.

That being said, I take the hon. member's correction as a point well taken, and I apologize for anything which I said which would make it appear as though the hon. member were misleading the House. Obviously, that was not my intention.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CORBETT—REFERENCE TO NEWFOUNDLAND BY HON. MEMBER FOR VANCOUVER EAST

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, as an Atlantic Canadian and a member from the maritime provinces, I rise on a point of privilege. The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) in a question today to the minister of housing made reference to the province of Newfoundland and in the same context went on to make reference to the maritime provinces, which would indicate to the House and to Canada that the maritime provinces include the province of Newfoundland.

Newfoundland is a beloved part of Atlantic Canada. Besides that fact, although the party to my left, the NDP, make attempts to change everything else in our system, that should not give them the licence to attempt to change the geography of the country, simply because they have no members from that region. The fact is that Newfoundland is no more a part of the maritime provinces than is British Columbia, from which the hon. member springs, a member of the prairie provinces.

I would also add that, much to my amazement, the minister seemed to go along with this same sort of attitude and did not differentiate in his response.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I have a feeling the hon. member gave us details he was very pleased to give the House, but I fail to see any question of privilege. I have heard him, but I doubt that I should allow further discussion on the matter.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DOMM—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATORY TREATMENT SUFFERED BY HON. MEMBER FOR PETERBOROUGH

Madam Speaker: The hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Fox) gave me notice that he wanted to add information to that he has already given in reply to the question of privilege of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm).

When the question of privilege was brought up, he indicated that he would come back to the House with additional information. He has already been heard once on that question. Bearing in mind that he indicated that he would like to come back to the House to give more information, I am quite willing to hear him again if the House agrees.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Nepean-Carleton.

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the case in question involves the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) who unfortunately cannot be here today because of another engagement. I wonder if the hon. gentleman would defer—certainly there would be agreement to defer—the information until the hon. member for Peterborough can be present. It may come about, as a result of what the minister says, that there would be an equal disposition of the House to allow the hon. member for Peterborough to speak. If we could, perhaps we should do it all at once. That would certainly be agreeable.

Madam Speaker: Would the hon. minister agree to postponing his statement?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I should be pleased to do so. My statement is really intended to make certain facts known from which stemmed the question of privilege of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), and to throw light on those circumstances, with a view to helping the Chair decide whether or not the question of privilege is valid. Accordingly, I should be pleased to accede to the request of the House leader of the opposition that my statement be postponed to a later date.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, my point of order reverts back to House business, if I may. I would like to ask the government House leader whether or not he can tell us if he is still planning tentatively to have a special debate on the constitution amounting to one day or two days. He did not refer to that matter.

The other question I want to pose is: Regardless of whether or not there is a special debate on the constitution, is he in a position to say whether or not it is the intention of the government to table before the House any documents that might be relevant to us on the constitution which are now being used by the government in negotiations in Montreal and in subsequent negotiations in Toronto and Vancouver? It may be useful to us as parliamentarians to have access to those documents, particularly if there is no special debate in the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the hon. member's suggestion to hold a debate on constitutional affairs or on current negotiations can be taken into consideration, but it will always be easy to deal with that matter either on an opposition day or on an adjournment motion if the opportunity arises this month.

As for his request to table documents, I cannot give him an answer at this moment.

[English]

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my point of order also relates to the question of House business. I would ask my question of either the President of the Privy Council or the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice, who I see is in the chamber.

Earlier in this session we were given an indication that the government would be bringing in, before the summer recess, legislation with respect to the decriminalization of possession of marijuana. Could we have some indication from either the President of the Privy Council or the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice on this question? I am sure that all parties would be prepared to give speedy passage to such a bill.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, with regard to this matter, I would point out to the hon. member that the Minister of Justice will be appearing before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs next Monday, July 14. At that time I am sure he would be only too happy to answer the question raised by the hon. member.

Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, in accordance with the requirements of section 7 of the Extradition Act, I should like to table in both official languages copies of three extradition treaties. Although these are separate documents, perhaps I might present them all at the same time.

The first is the Canada/Federal Republic of Germany Extradition Treaty signed at Ottawa on July 11, 1977. Second is the Canada/Denmark Extradition Treaty signed at Ottawa on November 30, 1977. The third is the Canada/France signed at Ottawa on February 9, 1977.

MR. KNOWLES—REQUEST MEMBERSHIP OF CABINET COMMITTEES BE APPENDED TO "HANSARD"

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A point of order, Madam Speaker. In view of a certain amount of interest in the personnel of cabinet committees, I wonder if the document previously tabled by the Prime Minister could be made an appendix to today's Hansard.

Madam Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

[Editor's note: For document above referred to, see Appendix.]

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I wish to give the Chair notice that I feel that I have a question of privilege arising out of the proceedings which were reported upon today by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) in presenting the first report of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I intend to raise it tomorrow after I have had an opportunity of studying the report.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1970

REFERENCE OF PROPOSALS TO CORRECT CERTAIN ANOMALIES, ETC., TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I move that the document entitled "Proposals to correct certain Anomalies, Inconsistencies, Anachronisms, Errors and other Matters of a Non-Controversial and Uncomplicated Nature in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, and other Acts Subsequent to 1970", be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

I understand, after consultation, that there is no objection to this being done without delay at this time.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—SECURITY SERVICES

Question No. 32—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a statement issued by the press office of the Department of External Affairs on Friday, January 26, 1979, to the effect that the department's security services were being expanded and, if so, what are all the details of this expansion and for what reason was it considered necessary?

2. What will be the total estimated number of employees or personnel as a result of the expansion and what was the total before such expansion?

3. Did Mr. Eldon Black direct the expansion?

4. Were any of the duties that the department will perform under such expansion presently or previously performed, internally or externally, by the RCMP and, if so, what were they?

Hon. Marc MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. No such statement was issued. (There have, however, been two changes in recent years in the security area within the Department of External Affairs. The first was the appointment of Mr. E. P. Black as deputy under-secretary; this appointment, announced on August 3, 1978, did not involve any departure from existing responsibilities nor any expansion of the department's activities in this area. The second was the appointment in February, 1979, of a co-ordinator for emergency preparedness to ensure that the department's existing responsibilities in crisis situations are fulfilled in a co-ordinated manner. Both of these changes were designed to strengthen the ability of the Department of External Affairs to meet its existing security responsibilities. There has been no expansion of personnel apart from the appointment of the co-ordinator for emergency preparedness.)

3. N/A.

4. N/A.

MR. VLADIMAR IVANOVICH GAVRYUSHKIN

Question No. 37—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was the government, prior to May 22, 1979, aware that Mr. Vladimar Ivanovich Gavryushkin, consul general of the U.S.S.R. in Montreal, was the representative of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union in Canada since 1972 and, if so (a) did he maintain contact with certain members of Parliament (b) has he been contacted by employees of the House of Commons (c) did he regularly meet with members of the Communist Party of Canada, representatives of certain trade unions and representatives of the Communist Party of Quebec?

2. Is the government aware that Mr. Gavryushkin was and/or is accompanied on many of his activities by either identified or suspected Russian intelligence service officers?

3. Was the government made aware of these facts prior to May 22, 1979, under IAC brief No. 7/76 and, if so, what action was taken, if any, in this regard?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The government is not aware that the activities of Mr. V. I. Gavryushkin ever went beyond the bounds of internationally accepted norms of behaviour for diplomatic and consular officials.

MR. A. N. POSTNIKOV

Question No. 38—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was a visa granted in December 1975, to A.N. Postnikov, a supposed Russian technical expert, to visit Canada?

2. Is Mr. Postnikov designated in security records as a known member of the chief intelligence directorate of the Soviet ministry of defence commonly referred to as the GRU?

3. Was the government aware, at the time the visa was granted, whether or not Mr. Postnikov had been declared persona non grata by the government of India in the city of New Delhi in 1958, and, if so, for what reason was he admitted to Canada?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes.

2 and 3. It is considered that it would not be in the public interest to comment on questions of this nature.

MR. RYSZARD TRYC

Question No. 39—Mr. Cossitt:

1. To the knowledge of the government, was Mr. Ryszard Tryc an accredited Polish diplomat in Canada and, if so (a) on what date did he arrive in Canada (b) what position did he hold with the Polish embassy (c) was he found dead and, if so (i) on what date (ii) in what location (d) was a post-mortem performed and, if so (i) by whom (ii) in what place (iii) what was the cause of death (e) was any Canadian doctor, specifically a Canadian coroner involved in the case and, if not, for what reasons?

2. What became of Mr. Tryc's remains and if they were returned to Poland, by what means were they returned and on what date?

3. To the knowledge of the government, was Mr. Tryc in any way associated with any intelligence service of any country and, if so, what are the details?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes. (a) September 15, 1978; (b) first secretary; (c) yes: (i) on July 20, 1979, (ii) in his office; (d) yes: (i) by Coroner J. A. Thomson, (ii) in Ottawa, (iii) a massive stroke; (e) yes.

2. Mr. Tryc's remains were returned to Poland by air on July 24, 1979.

3. It is considered that it would not be in the public interest to comment on questions of this nature.

LISTENING DEVICES

Question No. 40—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Have any electronic listening devices or any articles whatsoever commonly referred to as "bugs" been found in any Canadian embassy in Eastern Europe including the Soviet Union within the past ten years and, if so (a) on what dates (b) what was the location of each embassy (c) what was the nature of the device found (d) what was the length of time it was estimated to have been there (e) the exact location in the embassy where it was found (f) in any case, was it discovered who placed the device and, if so, what was the identity?

2. Was a commonly called "bug" found in a vacuum cleaner in the Canadian embassy in Moscow at any time and, if so, what are all details?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It is considered that it would not be in the public interest to comment on questions of this nature.

THE INSTITUTE OF THE U.S.A.

Question No. 78—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was the security committee of the cabinet or any other person whatsoever, prior to May 22, 1979, aware of the existence of an organization in Moscow called "The Institute of the U.S.A. and Canada" and that the Canadian division was founded in 1972, and that the director of the institute was Mr. Georgiy Arbatov?

2. Did Mr. Arbatov visit Canada in 1975 and, while here, did he meet with (a) the Prime Minister (b) the then minister of external affairs (c) various Canadian business executives (d) noted members of the academic community (e) senior members of the Public Service in positions where they could influence Canadian government policy and, if so, for what reasons?

3. Was the government aware, prior to May 22, 1979, that Mr. Vladimar Ivanovich Gavryushkin, consul general for the U.S.S.R. in Montreal, made regular reports to Mr. Arbatov on certain Canadian matters?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The facts referred to were publicly available before the date mentioned.

2. Dr. Arbatov visited Canada early in 1975 at the invitation of the Department of External Affairs, who arranged for him to meet the people indicated.

3. It would not be unusual for officials of the Soviet government to communicate with each other on matters of mutual interest.

CUBAN SUBVERSIVE AND COVERT ACTIVITIES IN THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE

Question No. 79—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is there an IAC brief No. 28/75 entitled "Cuban Subversive and Covert Activities in the Western Hemisphere" and, if so, on what date was it compiled?

2. Was the brief compiled by the security service of the R.C.M.P. and others and, if so, what is the identity of the other groups assisting in the compilation?

3. Did the government apprise the people of Canada of such subversive activities and, if not, for what reason?

4. Will the government consider making a statement on the subject?

5. Will the government, under a freedom of information policy, make known to the Canadian people the activities, contrary to the Canadian democratic process except where such disclosures would have considerable serious harm to a security operation in progress?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It is considered that it would not be in the public interest to comment on questions of this nature.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

Question No. 183—Mr. Herbert:

1. For each fiscal year (a) 1977 (b) 1978, what was the total revenue and net earnings or deficits for the Farm Credit Corporation?

2. For each year, what was the total (a) of direct or indirect subsidies or other benefits conferred by the government on the corporation (b) of loans, advances or guarantees extended by the government to the corporation (c) investment by the government in the corporation both before and after any write-off?

Hon. Eugene Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Farm Credit Corporation replies as follows:

1. (a) 1977-78 — $181,948,860 total revenue
$ 991,002 net income
(b) 1978-79 — $212,098,327 total revenue

There was no write-off.

P.E.I.—FRENCH LANGUAGE SCHOOLS IN SUMMERSIDE

Question No. 267—Mr. Herbert:

How many (a) elementary (b) high schools in Summerside, P.E.I. (i) are entirely French language schools (ii) include full courses in the French language (iii) have French language immersion courses?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): The following information was obtained from the P.E.I. ministry of education.

In the Summerside area there are three elementary schools, grades one-six; two junior high schools, grades seven-nine; one senior school, grades ten-twelve. None of these schools is exclusively French, none has full courses in French other than in immersion. Immersion programs began in two of the three elementary schools three years ago and have now reached the grade three level where 80 per cent of the instruction time is in French (100 per cent in grades one and two). This is a progressive situation and immersion will be offered at the junior high school level when appropriate.

Within a distance of 15 miles west of Summerside in the Evangeline district, one elementary school and one high school are entirely French language schools.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—PERSONS IN THE SX CLASSIFICATION

Question No. 371—Mr. Herbert:

1. As of March 31, 1979 (a) how many persons in the SX classification were employed by the Department of National Health and Welfare (b) how many were (i) Francophones (ii) females?

2. What are the present totals?

3. Was there a structural change in the department since March 31, 1979 and, if so, what effect did such a change have on the number of SX's employed?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

(a) 50;
(b) i) 10;
ii) 4.

(a) 56;
(b) i) 13;
ii) 3.

3. Yes. The Fitness and Amateur Sport Branch was transferred to Secretary of State on June 5, 1979. Four employees in the SX classification working with the Fitness and Amateur Sport Branch were transferred to Secretary of State.

MR. ALEXANDER S. ERESKOVSKY

Question No. 568—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) Was the government notified by the Soviet Union that it desired to replace Mr. Vladimar Ivanovich Gavryushkin, consul general for the Soviet Union in Montreal and, if so, on what date (b) was it known to the government at the time that Mr. Gavryushkin was a representative of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the U.S.S.R. in Canada and was it a matter of record in security files that he was a suspected or confirmed Russian intelligence agent?

2. Did Mr. Alexander S. Ereskovsky replace Mr. Gavryushkin as consul general in Montreal and, if so (a) on what date was his diplomatic visa approved (b) on what date did he arrive in Canada?

3. Were security checks made on Mr. Ereskovsky prior to the granting of his visa and, if so (a) who made them (b) were checks made with the United States authorities in Washington?

4. Has he been labelled as a suspected intelligence officer in the files of any Canadian security service?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) The Canadian embassy in Moscow was informed on December 18, 1979, that Mr. A. Ereskovsky would be appointed Soviet consul general in Montreal; (b) Mr. Gavryushkin was the dully accredited representative of the government of the U.S.S.R.

2. Yes. (a) 18 January 1980; (b) 6 March 1980.

3. Mr. Ereskovsky's visa application was processed in the normal manner. Visa processing is normally carried out in consultation with the security authorities.

4. It is considered that it would not be in the public interest to comment on questions of this nature.

COAL—MINTO AND CHIPMAN AREAS—NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 740—Mr. Corbett:

Is it the intention of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to aid in the extraction, production and/or marketing of coal from the Minto and Chipman areas of New Brunswick and was financial assistance contributed for this purpose and, if so, in what amount and in which sectors?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State, Mines): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: No. EM and R has no plans to aid in the extraction, production and/or marketing of coal from the Minto and Chipman areas of New Brunswick at the present time. Over a five-year period commencing in 1968 the Government of Canada provided $19.6 million to rationalize production in the Minto coalfield.

COMPUTERS

Question No. 809—Mr. Beatty:

As of May 5, 1980, were the identities routinely and automatically logged by the host software of all individuals who attempt to gain access to (a) CPIC (b) computers used for storage or processing of income tax returns (c) computers used for storage or processing of information concerning (i) old age pensions (ii) Canada pensions (iii) unemployment insurance claims (iv) family allowances (v) Canada Manpower?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Solicitor General and Treasury Board as follows: (a) Yes, (S.G.); (b) and (c) Yes, (T.B.).

POSTMASTER GENERAL—LETTER FROM CONSTITUENT OF LEEDS-GRENVILLE

Question No. 884—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Postmaster General receive a letter from the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville dated April 3, 1980, requesting information concerning the reduction in the number of months per year of postal service at Chaffey's Locks, Ontario, and, if so, did he answer the letter and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

2. Did he write directly to the constituent making the inquiry without advising the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville of the department's decision not to assist the box holders and, if so, for what reason?

3. Is it government policy to show equal courtesy to members of Parliament who are not members of the Liberal party in replying to inquiries they make and, if so, for what reason was such courtesy not shown in this case?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General):

1. Yes;
   (a) No;
   (b) For the reason that a copy of the original letter to the constituent sent May 6, 1980, was sent to the hon. member.
2. Yes, the Postmaster General wrote directly to the constituent making the inquiry but not without advising the hon. member.
3. Yes.

   There was no intention of being discourteous to the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville. As the constituent's letter preceeded the hon. member's letter by a few days, the latter was recognized as a follow-up and the response given to the constituent was made available to the hon. member.

CF101 VOODOO FIGHTERS

Question No. 932—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Was a contract let to repair and overhaul spare parts and accessories for CF101 Voodoo fighters at a cost of $3,837,000?

2. How long a period is envisaged for the future use of the spare parts and accessories?

3. How many Voodoos does Canada plan to use in the future and for how long?

4. Is there any program contemplated (a) for repairing and overhauling (b) to extend the life of the Voodoos and, if so, what is its estimated cost in 1980 dollars?

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes.

2. The use of spare parts and accessories is planned until phase-out of the aircraft.

3. Fifty-five until gradual phase-out starting about 1982.

4. (a) Yes. There is a continuing depot level inspections and repair program scheduled to terminate in 1981. In 1980-81 this program will cost $3,837,000.

(b) No.

[English]

Mr. Collenette: While on my feet, I do not usually give a running commentary on questions asked of me, Madam Speaker, about the presentation of these questions, but in all courtesy I think I should point out to the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has just tabled part of the answer sought in question No. 970, and the balance will be brought forward next week, probably on Wednesday.

The reply to the motion of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) for the production of papers No. 16 and to questions Nos. 734 and 735 will also be brought forward next Wednesday.

Motion for the production of papers No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) is being worked on and we will try to have it ready before the adjournment.

Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1980-81

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY

Hon. Pierre Bussières (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-30, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1980-81, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Madam Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Bussières (for Mr. MacEachen) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Madam Speaker, I will be very brief as I do not want to take up too much of the House's time, but I wish to remind hon. members of the purpose of this bill. It is to give the government a borrowing authority for $12 billion. With respect to this, during the second reading debate as well as the debates of the standing committee of the House, many criticisms were heard and I wish to take this opportunity to point out some aspects of the government's policy. First, this request for a $12 billion borrowing authority can lead some to believe that the government has decided not to continue its fight against inflation. For the benefit of hon. members, I would like to repeat that the government still considers the fight against inflation a priority. I would also like to reaffirm the government's wish to reduce its deficit in an orderly manner and by that, we mean in a way which takes account of all situations.

For example, recently some people have expressed their fears because of the form of recession experienced by our neighbours to the south and suggested that the government might examine ways of increasing some expenses to ward off the negative aspects of this recession. This wish to reduce the deficit in an orderly way does in fact take into account the global economic situation and also a wish to continue the programs designed to help the have-nots in our society and those who might be hardest hit by the current situation.

I would also like to point out that during the standing committee's discussions a proposal was made by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) which was also seconded by members of the Conservative party to the effect that the government's borrowing authority should be reduced from $12 billion to $4 billion. Of course, the government objected to such a motion. This motion was linked to the idea that the government should submit a budget and that we should not give it a borrowing authority until it does so even though the government might, after submitting its budget, make another request to extend its borrowing authority up to $12 billion, the need for which it would have explained in the budget.

I would like to remind the House that in April, as soon as he had an opportunity to do so, during the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) took that opportunity to indicate to the House and the people of Canada the requirements of the government for fiscal year 1980-81 and say roughly how much he expected in terms of receipts and expenditures, and justify in this way this request for borrowing authority before the House.

Recently, the government had to face limitations in the implementation of its public debt program because the borrowing authority of $2.9 billion that was available at the beginning of the fiscal year had nearly been all used up. That is why the government needs this additional borrowing authority to continue its treasury bills and negotiable bonds program. The borrowing authority will also have to be sufficient to face the Canada Savings Bonds program when sales reach their peak in November.

Normally, the major part of the sales of Canada Savings Bonds occurs in November while the following months are characterized by net redemptions of those bonds. In the last three years, for example, net sales of Canada Savings Bonds in November totaled on the average $2.1 billion. During the first three months of the current fiscal year, the government raised $2.3 billion of new money by issuing treasury bills and $2.5 billion through the issuance of negotiable bonds. Obviously, to pursue our public debt program, a borrowing authority of $4 billion at this time would not be enough to cover the requirements of the next four or five months.

The previously mentioned issuance of negotiable securities was made possible by redemptions of Canada Savings Bonds totalling some $1.8 billion which actually increased the borrowing authority available to the government. More generally speaking, the proposed amendment would not have allowed the government to carry out a healthy public debt program and to implement it so as to benefit to the fullest from market opportunities.

When the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood moved his amendment, he suggested that he would like to see—I am sorry, it was the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), I believe, who moved an amendment in committee. I hope that the hon. member will excuse me, Mr. Speaker, since he was the one who moved the amendment and he received the support of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood when the vote was taken. I want to make this clear and to ask the hon. member to excuse me and thank him for having pointed out my mistake.

However, as I remember it, during the discussion—I believe that the hon. member for Mississauga South has a good memory and that he will be able to correct me once again if need be—the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood had, for his part, indicated that he would like to see a more orderly system that would enable the government to introduce its borrowing program for the next fiscal year at the same time as its budget; in other words, we would have a budget and then the government would ask for the borrowing power required for the year following the tabling of the budget. I must say to the hon. member that I agree completely with this suggestion and that the government intends to follow this procedure in the future.

On the other hand, it is easy to understand our present situation. We are all aware of the successive elections, and I would like to emphasize that if there is a budget next fall, it will deal to a greater extent with the next fiscal year, 1981-82. This will really be the case as concerns expenditures and revenues. Therefore, this fall, in view of the amendments made to this year's expenditures, the emphasis will be placed to a greater extent on the spending projects of the government for 1981-82 and the following years.

As for revenues, the tax changes will have only a very limited effect on this year's revenues. The first effects on one full year will therefore be felt next year. This will be the case particularly in view of the amendments to personal income tax concerning the holding back of payments, which normally do not go into effect before the next calendar year. It would therefore be appropriate to obtain the borrowing power for 1981-82 following a budget which might be brought down in the fall. The government is willing to consider this procedure if it can result in more orderly planning and consideration of these important financial matters. However, it would seem that any attempt to obtain another borrowing power for this fiscal year following a budget in the fall would give the impression of wasting the time of Parliament and could even represent certain risks for the financial management of the government, as I said earlier.

Consequently, the government opposed the proposal of the hon. member for Mississauga South and maintained its original decision to request this borrowing power of $12 billion which covers the 1980-81 fiscal year.

I did say at the beginning of my comments, Mr. Speaker, that I did not want to abuse the time of the House. I know that other members would like to make some comments and I shall therefore be content with these few words to give other members the opportunity to speak in this debate and to allow the House to be as efficient as the standing committee has been and to conclude third reading of this bill very early today.

[English]

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his kind words regarding the amendment that was introduced on this bill in committee. I must say that I am glad the minister received something out of the committee meeting. On the other hand, we in the opposition received verbiage. We received no promises of a budget date. Indeed, the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for a budget date today. He even suggested October 10, but the Prime Minister could not oblige in that connection.

In committee I asked the minister if he could introduce a budget by September 15. He threw up his hands. I asked him if he could do it by October 1 and he threw up his hands again. I asked him if he could do it by the end of October. He said that he did not know but he hoped so. He said, "In the fall". I want to say right now to the government and to the minister that most Canadians regard winter as coming when the snow flies. The budget had better be out before the snow flies, and I remind the minister that we are not talking of the snow flying in Victoria, British Columbia. We are talking of what happens in western Canada and what happens in some of the ridings in northern Canada. The fall comes pretty early there. We want a budget because the people of Canada want to know where we are going.

As the hon. member for York-Peel pointed out earlier today, this country has not had a proper budget, a proper plan, a proper direction where the statutes proposed were passed by this House, for the past 33 months. It has not been a question of election after election; it has been a question of the impossibility of this government getting down to brass tacks. Even in the three months that we have been sitting in this Parliament we have not been presented with the budget measures involved in the budget statement of November, 1978 or in the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on April 21 last.

Mr. Chénier: What about your budget?

Mr. Blenkarn: We have had nothing but drift, indecision and incompetence from this government. This government's attitude is to ask for a Chargex card so that it can go out and spend money. I say to you, sir, that this government knows how to spend money. It does not know how to budget or to control money, but this government knows how to spend it.

The trouble with this bill is that it gives the government a blank cheque; it allows it to go out and spend $12 billion. This is more money than the ordinary person can even begin to contemplate. The spending of this federal government this year will be in order of $60 billion. The deficit this year will be in the order of $14 billion. We are not sure because they are not sure. The debt outstanding right now according to Bank of Canada figures for July 5 is $74.489 billion. It keeps going up and up. It is forecast that it will be very close to $84 billion by the end of this fiscal year. Where are we going? That is what the people of Canada and this party want to know. We must have some direction from this government.

Total government spending this year would be enough to buy a new home valued at $70,000 for every household in British Columbia. The interest that this government is going to spend will be enough to buy every household in Calgary a new house valued at $70,000. The interest is going to cost every taxpayer $1,187. That interest alone means that the entire income tax of every person who pays personal tax and earns $20,000 a year or less will go to pay just the interest on the debt that this government has incurred.

What we have from this government is nothing but pious hope that they can somehow save a billion. That is what the Minister of Finance said in his April statement. Somehow we will get a blender in terms of the oil price agreement. Somehow we will make up some money somewhere and with that blender and pious hope maybe we can somehow, some day, reduce the deficit. The minister said in committee and I quote:

> In my April 21 statement I said that it was our intention to reduce the deficit as jobs and economic growth resumed in the economy and that is my intention. I think I made it clear yesterday that in light of the current economic circumstances, with a weakening of the Canadian economy that it is my view this year may not be the year to attempt to cut the deficit.

In the election campaign the Prime Minister said it was their intention over time to reduce the deficit. How much time? When is the time up? When do we get the direction? It will never be the right time for this government to balance its budget and reduce its deficit. It will always be jam tomorrow, never jam today. "Alice in Wonderland" would feel at home in Canada with this government.

The whole question of where we are going came up in committee. I want to read into the record a question the hon. member for York-Peel addressed to Dr. Stewart, the deputy minister of finance. I quote:

> I take it then when you have reiterated the statement that expenditures will not exceed the growth of the GNP that indicates a change of policy from Mr. Crosbie's position where he contemplated a zero growth as far as federal government spending was concerned, you in effect are saying as long as you do not go up any faster than inflation plus real growth you are happy—over a three or four year period your expenditure level could easily end up 10 or 12 per cent higher than was anticipated over the Crosbie budget?

Mr. Stewart replied:

> I guess that is the consequence, sir.

They have no intention of doing anything but spending more, building a larger and larger bureaucracy, complicating the affairs of Canada more and more and creating more and more wasteful programs. I draw to the attention of hon. members remarks made by Cliff Pilkey, president of the Ontario Federation of Labour, reported in the Toronto Star of June 21 last, headed "Is our economy managed or is it mangled?" I quote:

> If governments "simply throw the money into the air" in their attempts to improve the wishy-washy economy, the results might be as good as those now obtained . . .
> The attempt to run economies in the closely supervised way in which we run corporations and personal affairs has had many crashing failures. Yet we demand that governments keep trying.
> The disasters are well-documented. In some cases, industrial and employment support programs laid out $4,000 or more annually for each job preserved.
> This week, a couple of economists told the Canadian Council on Social Development that the nation spends billions of dollars every year on income security programs which mostly just reshuffle money within the middle class. Many other studies discover much the same thing.
> What's the point? Think of the rake-off needed for administration and operating costs of moving money around to little purpose. More important, effort is diverted from necessary and productive programs.

This government operates very much like Parkinson's law—"expenditure rises to meet income". In the case of this government, we are going to see expenditure rising to meet borrowing authority. This Parliament has been manœuvred into approving borrowing for undisclosed, non-budgeted and hypothetical expenditures. We are being forced to approve today a pig in a poke with no real explanation, notwithstanding what the minister just said. Notwithstanding the vague outline given to us, what we had was a non-budget, a Mickey Mouse budget. In fact, when my secretary was imprudent enough to ask for a copy of the budget of the Minister of Finance of April 21, the minister's staff said it was not a budget. It certainly was not.

We are being asked to give this government carte blanche. Maybe it cannot reach an oil pricing agreement. Maybe it is just a convenient way of copping out of its responsibility to come to grips with the problems of Canada. The government that was in office before this government had this House of Commons in session for 44 days and produced a budget. This Parliament has been in session since April 14. Monday will be July 14, three months later, and we still have not had a budget. The last government was criticized for not producing a budget until December.

The six-month period that this government will be in office will be up on September 15. This government, which was so great at calling for the defeat of the former government, cannot tell us that it will produce a budget by September 15, six months after taking office. All we have received from this government so far is a Mickey Mouse financial statement. That was on April 21. The important business of the people of Canada conducted in this House of Commons is to make sure that the financial affairs of Canada are in order. The principle job of the Government of Canada is to operate and manage the economy of this country. The only economic statement this Parliament has received to date is the Mickey Mouse statement bootlegged in, as the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) says, during the Speech from the Throne. It is the only thing we have received in this House of Commons, which has been sitting for nearly three months—three months on Monday.

Mr. Paproski: Shame!

Mr. Blenkarn: Why $12 billion? Well, $12 billion happens to be a nice round figure—a billion dollars a month. That is the attitude of the government. It is a nice round figure, a billion here and a billion there—

An hon. Member: That's $23,000 a minute.

Mr. Blenkarn: I asked the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) in committee how much money was needed before the Minister of Finance brings down his next budget. Here is what the minister said: he replied: "Mr. Chairman, that is a very hypothetical question."

Mr. Paproski: A great answer!

Mr. Blenkarn: A hypothetical question, he called it. Mr. Speaker, this is a hypothetical government. This is a government which was prepared to say it would produce some kind of financial accounting in the fall, perhaps in October.

Mr. Paproski: When things are not so good in Inverness, Nova Scotia.

Mr. Blenkarn: One of the things I want to do is to compare some of the costs associated with that statement made by the Minister of Finance on April 21 and the budget which was defeated on December 13 last. When you compare those budgets you will find in the non-budgetary advances a difference of $500 million. In other words, the statement produced by the Minister of Finance, the April 21 statement, contemplates the Government of Canada having a non-budgetary expense of only $600 million, whereas the Crosbie projection of December allowed for non-budgetary expenses amounting to $1,100 million. The difference is $500 million. Where was that extra money going? The extra money the Crosbie budget was spending—this was extra spending—was for energy investment purposes to help make this country self-sufficient in energy.

I want to say that the amount provided in the Crosbie budget was not sufficient, but this minister, when he says we are going to need $11.7 billion, makes no provision whatsoever for energy investment. If he had made the same provision for energy investment—which he has not made—we would have to borrow even more money, even more than the $11.7 billion. Anyway, the hon. gentleman does not know anything about energy investment because he does not really believe in self-sufficiency in energy; the government has no policy with regard to it at all. But if you took it the other way, and if you looked at the Crosbie budget and said: "Well, if you did not spend the money on oil self-sufficiency, what would you have to borrow?", then all you would have to borrow would be $7.8 billion, nearly $5 billion less than is required by members sitting across the way.

One of the problems which arises in connection with this borrowing authority legislation was the subject of discussion in committee, but I think we should explore it again this afternoon. When the House passes a borrowing authority bill of this nature, the question arises: just how much money can a government borrow? At the present time we are at the top limit of borrowing ability. Mr. Handfield-Jones, the government witness in the committee hearings yesterday, indicated that the best the government could do was to place a new bond issue every six weeks, and the maximum the government has been able to borrow in fresh money on the market is about $1.25 billion every six or eight weeks.

Mr. Paproski: And the sports minister wants to issue bonds for sport.

Mr. Rae: Handfield-Jones did not say that.

Mr. Blenkarn: The hon. member says he did not say that. If he will look at the record he will find that I am correct.

Mr. Rae: I was there.

An hon. Member: That does not mean anything.

Mr. Blenkarn: If this bill passes, the government could go to the market and attempt to borrow fresh money, about $1.25 billion. It might be able to go again in September to do so. But if we look at the borrowing requirement we begin to wonder where they are going to get it all. The government's usual program is to go to the people of Canada in November of every year and ask them to buy Canada Savings Bonds. We have all seen the advertising which has been put out in connection with these issues. It is too bad that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is not here because this year I will expect him to discipline more effectively the advertising agency which tries to sell these bonds; some of the promotion which has gone on in the past would put any other person advertising in like fashion in jail.

Be that as it may, the effect of the government's handling of Canada Savings Bonds has been that purchasers have redeemed about $2 billion worth since the beginning of this fiscal year. In the year 1979-80 there was a total reduction in the value of Canada Savings Bonds held by the people of Canada amounting to $1.25 billion. It may well be that, having seen how Canada Savings Bonds are managed, the people of Canada are perhaps a little smarter than some of the market people buying market bonds, and are saying to themselves: Do we really want to trust this government with our money?

Where has the debt been contracted? We are now up on treasury bills to $18.6 billion. As of March 31, 1977, just three years ago, there was only $8.2 billion in treasury bill debt. That is the way things have been going. The market has been able lately, perhaps, to absorb ordinary government commercial bond debt but it has not always been able to do so, and it is very possible, with the level of borrowing the government is contemplating, that we might get into a situation in which the market cannot absorb the debt. Indeed, as reported on June 25 last, the Bank of Canada disclosed that the bank had to increase its treasury bill holdings on that date by $459.3 million. In that week alone, the government had to increase the money supply by a total of $625 million. This was done by the bank, in effect, just printing currency.

As we go along on this and take a look at what the Bank of Canada has to hold in government securities year over year, we find that as of the last statement from the Bank of Canada for this year the Bank of Canada holds $2.368 billion more in government debt than it did a year ago. That situation cannot go on if we intend to have a solvent and sound currency.

The only thing that can be done somewhere along the way in order to solve our borrowing requirements and to get our house in order is to look at certain tax changes. The government has to try something else. If it is going to continue with its over-spending, it is going to have to continue with over-taxing, and so it has to look at certain other places from which to get revenue.

There are several things the government could do. It could do what was suggested in the Crosbie budget, that is, to put an excise tax on gasoline. That is a method of raising money, keeping debt down and making the consumer of gasoline or oil products pay the cost of imported oil. It could do that kind of thing. However, it promised not to do that, so it will not do that.

The government could go to the country honestly and increase the income tax, but it appears it does not intend to do that either. One of the real options it is looking at is getting rid of the indexing in the Income Tax Act. The elimination of indexing could raise money as surely as a tax increase but be less visible. Inflation would do all the work and take all the blame. That is what the Edmonton Journal said on June 16, 1980, and other newspapers reported the same thing. This country knows that the only winner in inflation, if there is no indexing in the personal income tax scheme, is the government, and what a beautiful way of increasing taxes!

That is what the government intends. That is one of the reasons we insisted in committee that we receive from the Ministry of Finance a table as to what happens to the average, typical married taxpayer with two children. This year, without indexing, the taxpayer who earns $15,000 would pay $240 more income tax. That is nearly $5 a week or $20 a month. The taxpayer who earns $25,000 would pay $460 a year more. Some say indexing only helps the rich, but if I earned $100,000 a year—that is four times $25,000—I would pay only $1,300 a year more.

To the well off indexing is not a big deal, but to the ordinary Canadian who works and pays the freight in this country, indexing means a great deal. It means at least a 10 per cent across the board tax increase for him and, indeed, more. If that is the kind of program the government is going to eliminate—whatever fairness there is in the tax system—in order to raise revenue to pay for the spending and lack of direction and concern of the government, then that program will be opposed by this party and, I am sure, by our friends in the New Democratic Party.

A number of other issues were raised in the committee. My friend, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), raised the point that in many cases the provinces have a great deal of money and that their revenues, particularly those of the western provinces, are burgeoning. Three of our western provinces now have heritage funds. They do not even need all their revenue, yet equalization continues to be paid to the province of Saskatchewan. I only single out that province because it can afford a heritage fund, but it can also get equalization because nothing has been done with respect to bringing that problem into perspective.

Back in the thirties there was a great depression on the prairies, and hon. members will recall that we passed the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. I wonder if the prairies will ever be rehabilitated. When a person is put away for life, he normally is paroled after 25 years; but it has been 45 years since this act has been in place, and we are still spending gobs of money on rehabilitating the prairies. We are spending some $30 million to $35 million a year under that program, most of it going to Saskatchewan but a good part going to Alberta as well.

That is the kind of thing I wonder about when we have a government here which is short of cash, which has to go out on to the market to borrow and which strains the financial resources of the country. Some provincial governments have a lot of wealth, and I wonder why the federal government does not come along and say, "Let us rearrange some of the responsibilities and things which are happening".

I mentioned in committee the question of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. That corporation lost half a billion dollars last year, it is likely to lose three-quarters of a billion dollars this year, yet the same management and the same team which was running that corporation is still running it, and its budget this year will give it $1.242 billion. They do not know where they are going and they do not know what they are doing with their repossessed houses, and we do not have a new program from the minister.

A new look at the thing has not been taken, despite studies which have been made. If we were to examine some of those programs, we might be able to reduce some of the costs, overhead, waste and duplication in government, and maybe we could get back to the borrowing requirements of the December budget and not the kind of borrowing requirements, for no investment, which are needed by this government at this time.

I want to repeat that it has been 33 months since we have had a budget passed by the House. I want to repeat the statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), who was the finance critic of the government party when the government was in opposition, that no borrowing authority bill should be passed without a budget. That is the case.

I want to say that Parliament has had the obligation, since the time of King John and Magna Carta, to prevent taxation without consultation, and borrowing is a form of taxation. When we allow a government to borrow, we allow that government to pay interest on its borrowings. That becomes a compulsory requirement for the government, and so it is a form of taxation. This bill represents $12,000 million in further spending.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the question of the government's requesting some $12 billion in borrowing authority gives us an opportunity to assess where we are going in our national accounts. It also gives us the opportunity to ask ourselves certain questions. Why do we borrow money? What is the purpose of this borrowing? What is wrong with the economy and the system of accounting the government has at the moment?

We face an economy which is in recession. Unemployment is going to be up over 9 per cent this year. Inflation will be up over 10 per cent. Real personal disposable income will be down and over-all growth in economy will be down.

Unemployment and inflation are the obvious challenges facing Canadians, but underlying structural problems in our economy are even more severe. We imported $17 billion more in finished goods than we exported. We ran a deficit of some $9.6 billion in our service account in 1979. Over the last 33 years we have exported more than $48 billion in interest and dividend payments out of the country.

The point is not simply, as the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) said, that we need a budget. Obviously we need a budget. We have needed one since we did not get one from his colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). We have needed one since we did not really get one in November, 1978, when the current Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) was minister of finance. We have not had an indication from the government as to where it thinks we should be going since April, 1978.

It is not simply that we need to have a budget in the shorter term; it is that we need an indication from the government that it understands the implications of budgets in the solution of our longer term problems. We need budgets which guarantee, in co-operation with our provinces, that our renewable resources in fact are renewed; that our forests and trees in fact are regenerated so that they can continue to be used; that our fishing supplies and tremendous resource in the fishing field on the east and west coasts are not depleted and destroyed by overuse; that our grain on the prairies can be grown and grown again, taken to the ports and exported. We need to ensure that we transform and refine more of our resources on which we are so dependent here in Canada.

There is much talk of getting off oil. I think it is just important that we in a sense get off the notion that it is solely the export of our natural resources which will provide for the future of our country. Just as it is true that "A barrel of oil sold is a barrel of oil gone forever", to quote the words of the Saskatchewan minister of finance, Mr. Tchorzewski, it is also true that a ton of ore sold is a ton of ore gone forever, a ton of uranium sold is a ton of uranium gone forever. Those resources are being depleted as they are sold. We need to develop an industrial, transport and energy base which is sufficient to provide for the employment of Canadians today and in the future. In fact we need to create a diversified, Canadian-controlled mature economy. We have a long way to go before reaching that goal.

Finally, I think we need a budget which recognizes that the problem and challenge of poverty in Canada and the rest of the world of which we spoke about today in committee is just as important now as it was in the 1950s and 1960s, and as it was in the 1930s. We have an orthodoxy which tells us why it is we cannot take the investment decisions that might lead us out of the current economic morass in which we find ourselves. There is a Liberal-Tory orthodoxy. It was expressed timidly by the minister. It was expressed vividly by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today and by the minister responsible for housing. It was expressed in a slightly more brazen and bald form by the hon. member for Mississauga South, as we might expect. But still the underlying intellectual, if I may use that word to describe it, roots of that orthodoxy are exactly the same; that is, our budgetary deficits are responsible for and contributing to the inflation we are suffering from, that they are so immense we cannot possibly either stimulate the economy or provide for the longer term solution of our problems. In this view it is monetary and fiscal restraint alone which are essential in order to restrain the excess demand which is the main cause, in this view of the economy, of inflation.

In this conventional wisdom, as it is frequently expressed by the hon. member for York Peel (Mr. Stevens) and expressed in a slightly more pallid manner by the Prime Minister, borrowing and debt are evil and wrong. It is what I call a Calvinistic or theological view of the economy which bears no relationship to the hard realities of the economic world. The fact of the matter is that the question is not: Is borrowing good or evil?

The question is: What is the purpose of the borrowing? There is a distinction between borrowing in order to invest for the future and borrowing simply in order to spend. Everybody understands that. The average Canadian understands the difference between borrowing in order to buy his house and borrowing in order to pay debts. There are very few Canadians who can afford to buy a house without having to borrow. That is what a mortgage is. Nearly $14 billion worth of mortgages were arranged last year. I do not think all those Canadians are evil. They did that because they were borrowing to invest. For most Canadians the only investment they will ever make is in their own home. The average Canadian understands the difference between borrowing in order to do that and borrowing from the bank in order to pay off Chargex or being forced to use credit in order to buy groceries.

Businesses account for this in the same way. Look at the annual reports of any business. They are all in the business of borrowing. Look at the debt offerings of public companies. They were up over $20 billion last year. That was borrowing; that was debt; that was people paying interest. But the point of it is that there is a difference between borrowing in order to invest and borrowing in order simply to spend.

To launch a broadside attack on all borrowing or on all deficits, as if all of it was evil, is quite simply ignorant. It is ignorant of the difference between borrowing in order to invest and borrowing in order to spend. It is an ignorance that is generated in our own public accounts. Our public accounts do not make the distinction between investment and current spending. We have no way of telling in our public accounts, because of the way the expenditure is expressed, whether this expenditure will eventually reduce either a budgetary deficit or a deficit on current account. We have no way of telling whether it is an expenditure that is simply a current expenditure which will go up over time and will not generate any return to the government.

We must appreciate that there is a critical difference. It is a tragedy for our country that we now have governments which are so terrified of the concept of borrowing itself that they are unable to make a distinction between the concept of investment and the concept of current spending in the way in which they handle their own accounts.

To say simply that it is deficit spending alone which is responsible for inflation, and that it is the federal deficit which really provides the picture, ignores another reality, and that is that when one looks at the economy of Canada, one must look at what is the deficit picture of all levels of government and not simply at what is happening to the federal government.

The fact of the matter is that in 1979 the deficit at all levels of government was some $3.6 billion less than the deficit of the federal government. Most observers expect that by 1984 the over-all budgetary situation of all provinces, the federal government and local governments will be in balance. There are those who would say that is because the provinces being run by Tory governments are really keeping their expenditures way down.

Mr. Rae: That is completely false. The level of Tory spending is just as high and just as far above inflation as that of the federal government. The reason is related to another cause altogether, and that is the fact that some of our provinces have access to a source of revenue which is growing like Topsy. There is no source of revenue in Canada which has grown with the speed, and which will grow with increased speed, as the revenue we derive from our resources, and those royalty revenues go to the provinces. They increased at the rate of 30 per cent a year in the last decade and we can anticipate that, with the inevitable increases in price for oil and natural gas, they will grow even faster.

The thinking of the Liberal-Tory group fails to recognize that inflationary interest rates also inflate the federal deficit. Finally, Mr. Speaker, the thinking of the Liberal-Tory group fails to appreciate that prices are not coming down, even with dramatic fall-offs in demand. Can we honestly say that because of the collapse in the demand for automobiles the price of automobiles has dropped? Have people not noticed that General Motors announced just ten days ago it was increasing its prices? Does this not run contrary to every principle we would expect to see working in a free market economy? Where there has been such a collapse in demand, there would also be a significant fall-off in price.

Something else is going on in our economy. We are moving away from a market economy where there is a direct relationship between supply and demand, where we can see these effects right away, to an economy that is increasingly controlled by fewer and larger actors. The problem of corporate concentration and restriction on the supply side is what is really responsible for the current round of inflation, be it in the oil products field, the food field, or wherever it is that we are suffering.

The thinking of the Liberal-Tory group fails to recognize a simple fact, and that is that when you analyse a budget you cannot simply look at what is being directly expended or invested; you have to look at what is being spent or invested on the tax side as well. In other words, we have to look at our system of tax expenditures in order to understand why our deficits are as large as they are.

The hard fact of the matter is that our tax system has become more aggressive in the 1970s than it was at the beginning of this decade. We have now moved further away from the notion that "a buck is a buck" than in 1964 when we appointed the Carter commission. We have to recognize the fact that the runaway growth in tax spending, particularly on the corporate side, has contributed not only to our deficit but has also financed corporate concentration and foreign domination.

I want to suggest some proposals from this party of a positive nature to address these problems. They really come in two or three parts. The first is that we need to have a new system of accounting, a new system of public accounts and a new system of budgeting which makes a distinction between investment and current spending and allows the government to say it is investing in a given area, be it energy, as mentioned by the hon. member for Mississauga South, in industrial restructuring funds, or in training of manpower—because investment in human capital is just as much an investment as investment in any other form of capital if you think it is going to give you a return.

On the spending side, government should look very carefully to determine what are those sources of spending which are purely and simply a drain, and which are completely unproductive. Those are the items of expenditures and of spending where we must be determined.

Ironically, one of the ways of closing off those items may be in fact to increase investment. Let me give an example. The oil import compensation fund, the minister has told us, is going to cost us $3.6 billion. With that amount of expenditure—it is a drain and there is no question about that—we have a subsidy which is increasingly large and on which we have to put a handle. I think everybody recognizes that fact. However, finding a handle and reducing that current expenditure can only be done if we invest on the supply side, if we invest in alternative forms of energy and if we invest in urban transportation in such a way as to reduce our reliance on oil, be it Canadian or foreign, but especially foreign oil.

That is why it is that an increase in investment may be necessary in order to decrease the current expenditure we see as not productive. We also argue on the current account side that the government should establish what we call a national heritage account for renewable and non-renewable resources in order that Canadians can see exactly what resources we now have, what resources are being depleted and how they are being replaced, if indeed they are being replaced at all.

We can no longer as a country go on simply exporting from one end of the nation to the other resources which in many cases are not replaceable, without having some sense as to how it is we are using the revenues from these sales in order to generate alternatives and in order to generate our industrial base.

There is also significant room, in our view, for changes on the revenue side. Twenty-four Canadians in 1977 who earned more than $200,000, according to the government's own statistics, did not pay a single penny of income tax in that year. They should be given an award. We would call it the "golden loophole award". It is an award we should be giving on an annual basis. This year we want to make that award to those Canadians and their accountants who have, in a sense, robbed the rest of the Canadian public, because when those people are not paying any taxes other people are paying more. When 520 Canadians who earn more than $50,000 are not paying a single penny in tax, it is the average Canadian who is earning between $10,000 and $15,000 whose rates will have to go up.

Mr. Knowles: Highway robbery.

Mr. Rae: Therefore, we are suggesting that this House establish a permanent committee on tax reform to close those loopholes. I urge the minister that in the budgetary process he give every consideration he can to see that there is a closing of those kinds of grotesque abuses which make a monkey of our tax system. I believe it was Oliver Wendell Holmes who said that every time he paid his taxes he liked to think that he was buying a piece of civilization and that the annual process of paying his taxes was for him one of the sign of being a civilized man. I do not know how we can say that in our present society.

We have a government which does not distinguish between different kinds of spending. We have 224 Canadians earning nearly a quarter of a million dollars apiece who do not apparently want to buy a piece of civilization because they think that they can buy it on their own.

We are also arguing that the government should consider the reimposition of a national tax on Canada's wealthiest estates, an estate tax which would exempt transfers between spouses, family farms and small businesses, but would concentrate on the fact that we have the greatest concentration of corporate wealth and private wealth in our society that we have ever had. The concentration of wealth in Canada is greater today than it was ten years ago, and ten years ago it was calculated that as a result of the decision to eliminate death duties this Liberal government gave a windfall benefit of $4.5 billion to Canada's wealthiest citizens.

It is a tax which, if reintroduced, would reintroduce Canada into the western economies. There is one state in the United States, Nevada, which does not have a death tax. In the western world there is one country, Canada, which does not have a federal tax on estates, gifts and bequests. The revenue implications of something which concentrates on Canada's wealthiest and most privileged elite may not be great. I know that many provinces abandoned the succession duty field because the revenue implications were not that great. Only Quebec is involved in that area now.

In this concept of paying for civilization, every citizen must have faith in the tax system and the feeling that he is not being taken advantage of. That, it seems to us, is a critical tool. One could go on about the changes in the corporate tax system. Our resource taxes have been so depleted by the abuse of the capital cost allowance by the government—not by the companies—by the abuse of the super-depletion, by the abuse of the investment tax credit, that we have now effectively reduced the rate of tax for our largest and foreign-owned resource companies to less than that of a Canadian small business which is in the 25 per cent bracket.

We started under Carter at 50 per cent. We went down to 46 per cent. The banks are now down to 18 per cent. The oil companies are down to under 20 per cent. The average Canadian pays taxes at a higher rate than that. I think it is lunacy when the average guy with a family of two, earning $15,000 per year, pays higher taxes than an oil company or bank. I know the minister will say, "Well, we closed off the income debentures". The fact that they did not close off the income debentures, that they only grandfathered them, means that we have been losing over $300 million a year since November, 1978.

The minister well knows that that is the reason the income tax rate of the banks is absurdly low. It may be of interest to the House that in 1970 our chartered banks paid taxes of about $250 million on profits of about $500 million. Their tax rate was 52 per cent. In 1979 because of this loophole which was organized and engineered by the Liberal government our banks paid taxes of $230 million—$20 million less than they paid in 1970—on profits of nearly $1.3 billion. Then the government comes in here and says that it does not have any money. Of course it does not have any money because it has been giving it away for ten years, not only to the wealthiest corporations but to the wealthiest citizens as well.

This government, since the Carter commission gave its report, has created more loopholes and a more anachronistic, regressive system than when we went into tax reform in 1964. Tax reform is an idea for which the time has clearly come again. It is simply no longer acceptable for this government willy-nilly, budget after budget, to take taxes off here and increase write-offs there, and make little changes here and there which have an over-all impact of a $32 billion tax expenditure budget, almost half the amount of direct federal spending.

I do not need to tell the minister that in contrast to direct federal spending—much of which is directed to Canada's least favoured citizens—tax expenditures goes all the other way. In all the benefits, whether one looks at the RHOSPs, RRSPs or whatever, the people who are at the highest level are those who receive the most income. I think this country has been cheated. I think Canada has been cheated because twice it voted for economic change. It voted for economic change in May and it received the same old orthodoxy, only in spades. It voted for economic change in February, and it received the same old orthodoxy, but this time with a different suit of cards.

An hon. Member: The two of clubs.

Mr. Rae: Yes, the two of clubs, any way you care to look at it. It comes out in a more pallid form. The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is now more evasive and less provocative than his predecessor, but the substance of what the government is trying to do is substantially exactly the same.

Ironically it was expressed very vividly today by the Prime Minister and by the minister of housing. The minister of housing told us today that the government was considering closing down the community services program. Their program provides sewers, bridges and the basic infrastructure for each and every town. This government is telling us that because of the way it has fouled up its own spending and because of the fact it does not have a handle on the difference between investment and money down the drain, it does not have sufficient funds to invest in basic infrastructure for our towns and cities.

It is a lunatic prospect which we see before us. We know what they are like because we had the misfortune of sharing a side of the House with the Liberal party for a certain time. I had the opportunity to travel with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) when we were both members of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Committee, and I know the views he expressed at that time about the gas pipeline. We all know what Liberal candidates were saying in our ridings when we ran against them.

The minister said I am not embarrassed by this change, by the abandonment of the commitment on the pipeline. Nothing embarrasses the Liberals because they do not know the meaning of shame. They are without shame; they are shameless. Just as it abandoned the commitment on the pipeline, so too they left a false impression with the Canadian people—that if they were put back into power they would do something about getting the economy going, and "wasn't Mr. Crosbie's and Mr. Stevens' budget terrible because of the way in which it focused on the deficit?" This government has about as much understanding of the concept, means and notion of borrowing in order to invest as it does of the meaning of honesty, and that is to say nothing at all.

I believe it is time that the government talked sense to the Canadian people about budgets, deficits and the notion of borrowing. That is precisely what we have tried to do with the economic statement which I released today and which I discussed today in the House. We should not be authorizing borrowing by a government which does not have the decency to bring in a budget. Budgets and borrowings should go together because we need to see the purposes for the borrowing before we, as the House of Commons, can agree to allocate money.

We have to bring our method of managing a modern economy into the twentieth century—into the sunlight. We have to bring our tax system into the twentieth century so that it is fair to all Canadians and can be seen as being fair. We have to get governments and civil servants to understand that you cannot have an economy or a budget that is in balance when there is 9 per cent or 10 per cent unemployment. You cannot have an economy or a federal budget which is in balance when you do not know what is going on in the provinces. You cannot conceivably have a budget that is in balance when you are spending over $32 billion on the tax side on concessions.

That is the reason we released the economic statement today and that is the reason we are opposing the government's request to borrow a further $12 billion.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the comments made by the hon. member who just resumed his seat. I was not only shocked and amazed but also amused by some of his observations. For instance, he tried to portray an alliance of some kind—possibly philosophically—between the Liberals and the Conservatives. Of course, he has not been here too long, but if he were to look at history, I think he could not escape the conclusion that if there is any coalition in this House, it is between the Liberals and the New Democratic Party.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Patterson: This was indicated most clearly and decisively in the events of last December when a motion was proposed by the New Democratic Party and supported by the Liberal party.

One or two other statements that he made bear comment, Mr. Speaker. He endeavoured to show that we were proposing restraint as the only way to solve the problems of the country. I suggest this is a very simplistic statement and is far from the truth.

If I understood him correctly, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) indicated that a motion had been proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), and supported by the New Democratic Party, that the borrowing authority be reduced to $4 billion. If I am wrong in that, then I apologize, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hon. member's statements about borrowing, I wonder why members of his party supported the proposal to reduce the authority set out in this bill from $12 billion to $4 billion?

The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) has presented the economic proposals of the New Democratic Party and has ridiculed everything else as far as an economic policy for the country is concerned. He presents his party's views as the sole and sure solution to problems in Canada.

I point out that only a few years ago when the New Democratic Party was in power in British Columbia they carried out an experiment that had catastrophic consequences. I would say God help us if we ever have another government of that party in our province.

I just wanted to make those few observations before dealing with the issue before the House, Mr. Speaker.

This bill concerns an act to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1980-81. In view of the concern expressed by many of my constituents and people across the country about the policies of this government regarding expenditures and additional borrowings, I would be remiss if I did not speak on this bill today and express that concern.

The statement made by a former auditor general—and possibly confirmed by the present auditor general—that spending had gone out of control is very true.

Another institution was put in place with the appointment of the Comptroller General. Some of us felt that he might be of assistance in bringing some order to the wild spending policy of the Liberal government, but we do not see very much difference, Mr. Speaker. I realize that the Comptroller General did not have authority to reduce expenditures but only to make sure expenditures were made in a businesslike fashion.

I am amazed that the Liberal government is now asking Parliament for additional borrowing authority of $12 billion. When the Progressive Conservative Party took the reins of office about a year ago, it was determined to bring some restraint to this program of spending and some order to the chaos created by 11 years of Liberal administration. I believe it did a reasonably good job in this respect, and in spite of the vote of last December, I think a great many people across Canada appreciated the position we took.

While my colleague, the former minister of finance, in his budget on December 11, was able to project a very substantial cut in the federal budgetary deficit over the next four years, some borrowing authority was necessary because of the years of Liberal administration; but he was able to limit his request to $7 billion. This is $2 billion less than the former Liberal finance minister, the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), bootlegged through the House by way of an income tax bill in the fall of 1977. At that time he asked for and received $9 billion.

It is interesting that when the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) introduced his measure last December, the spendthrifts opposite immediately challenged it and cried that it was not necessary. We should remember that the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) said at that time that $3.5 billion was enough. Now their proposal is for $12 billion. I should like to know what happened between last December and today. Surely there is some explanation. The Minister of State for Finance referred to this today when he said that a motion was made in committee to reduce the amount to $4 billion but that the government opposed it. Now we have the paradox that a few months ago $3.5 billion was enough, $9 billion was too much; and now $4 billion is not enough, they need $12 billion.

During the election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or one of his colleagues promised that their new programs would not mean an increase in taxes as there would be a reallocation of existing funds to take care of them. I suggest that this is far from fulfilling a promise, because it is not from existing funds, it is from borrowing another $12 billion. Therefore, as my colleague, the hon. friend from Mississauga South said, this money is actually taxes and hopefully the time will come when we may be able to repay some of this money. But if we keep going the way we are going now, we will never be able to do that.

It took Canada 100 years to reach a budgetary level of $10 billion a year. This is a figure which doubled in the following three years, doubled again during the regime of the former minister of finance, John Turner, and went onwards and upwards until now our budgetary deficit is billions in excess of the $10 billion total expenditure of 1967; and our borrowing alone is $2 billion greater than the total 1967 expenditures. I think this shows just where we are heading as far as government expenditures are concerned.

I think we are heading in the direction which was outlined by my colleague from Mississauga South, and the Speech from the Throne served notice that this type of activity was going to be carried on. Canadians can only look forward to another four years of free spending, to intervention in the marketplace by the Liberal government, to more waste, more patronage and more spending of money which has nothing to do whatsoever with increasing the economic base of Canada and the welfare of Canadians.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) outlined programs not too long ago which involved millions of dollars of expenditure to help make jobs available for people. I say that expenditures do nothing at all to strengthen the economic base of our nation.

I realize that under the present government such band-aid measures may be necessary, but they are no substitute for policies that will strengthen the ability of our country to finance its operations and to promote a strong and vibrant economy in Canada.

I believe I indicated that I did not intend to speak for too long because my colleagues have presented in detail the various objections that we have to this type of program. They have called attention to a great many of the issues that are involved in it. However, I want to say very clearly today that I support wholeheartedly the opposition that has been raised against this bill. We believe that if we are going to develop our economy and we are to place Canada in a position where it can go forward and progress, develop and expand the economy, increase productivity and provide for the needs of the Canadian people without bankrupting the country, then we will have to move in a different direction altogether.

May I say that when my party was in office one of the major goals was to move the country in that direction. It was diametrically opposed to the direction in which previous governments and the government of today leans. So I think in this matter of make-work programs, although they may be necessary at times, we must have policies which will contribute to this particular objective. The programs which have been put in place are an acknowledgement by the government that they do not have those policies in mind and are not able to implement them.

One of the reasons we have raised such objection to this particular measure at this time is that the government has refused to bring in a budget. It has been recommended, urged and demanded that we have a budget, yet we find that up to the present time the government has failed to indicate its intention to bring in a budget at any specific time. Nor has it given us any hope that a budget will be introduced in the near future.

> I will certainly bring in a budget as soon as possible, but I do not see that possibility within the near future, or even beyond the near future.

I suggest that this is blatant arrogance of the highest degree. It seems to me I accepted the premise when I came to this House many years ago that a budget must be introduced. It was expected and it was required in every Parliament in order for the government to have the opportunity to give an overview of the Canadian scene and to say what it intended to do about it, along with presenting its expenditures and revenues so that we are able to assess the programs and the viability of the legislation.

But here we find the Minister of Finance saying that he cannot see even in the near future or beyond that the necessity of bringing in a budget. I think the Minister of State for Finance when he was introducing this measure on third reading today said "if there is to be a budget this fall". I notice that the minister does not object, so I would assume I am correct. I repeat, he said "if there is to be a budget." I find it incredible that a government would take the position that a budget is not necessary, that it is not an important thing, or that we should not be making any fuss about it. It seems that the attitude is that the government will bring in a budget when it wants to bring it in, and if it does not want to bring in a budget, the government will be in no hurry to do so. This kind of thing leaves us up in the air, as it were, as far as the government's assessment of the situation in Canada is concerned and what the government is going to do about it.

I say that is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. A lot of traditions have been thrown out from this place, but this is an absolutely essential one. Maybe it is constitutional; maybe the government has to bring a budget in; but nevertheless the government is taking the attitude that it is inconsequential and that we ought to be able to tell the government to go ahead and borrow, borrow, borrow, and spend, spend, spend, as my colleague has just said, and that we should not have anything to say about it. I say it is not good enough, and I certainly oppose this bill at the present time.

Mr. Mazankowski: Five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It being five o'clock, as the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has suggested, may I deal with one or two matters which the Chair has responsibility to deal with at this point.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Employment—Programs to create jobs; the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty)—Computers—Use by government of Databanks; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong)—Health and Welfare—Health hazards in certain chemicals and pesticides—Review of drugs, pesticides, food additives request for progress report.

Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed the following bills: Bill C-19, an act to amend the Employment Tax Credit Act; Bill C-22, an act to adjust the accounts of Canada and to make related amendments to certain acts, without amendment.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

There being no items on the order paper under the heading of private bills, the House will proceed to notices of motions (papers).

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the government, its departments and agencies and the governments of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the territorial council of the Northwest Territories, since January 1, 1978, relating to the review and restructuring of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before going into the basis for requesting the production of papers as cited under motion No. 19, I would like to provide a little bit of history relating to the importance of the review which was commissioned by the previous minister of fisheries, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), a review of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation commissioned under his ministry.

As a consequence of that, a number of well-known and publicly-known concerns have been raised with respect to the conduct of affairs by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in recent years. The minister, as well as many members of Parliament and individuals in the freshwater areas of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Alberta, northern Ontario and the territorial area of the Northwest Territories, have been receiving expressions of concern from numerous fishermen and groups in those areas with respect to the evolution of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation into its present form. Concerns have also been expressed, in Manitoba in particular, by aspiring businessmen who would like to see competition return to the fish processing, storage and marketing areas.

It is a fact that some 84 per cent of the fish volume caught within the jurisdiction of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation comes from the province of Manitoba, with 60 per cent, and from Saskatchewan, with some 24 per cent of the catch. The lesser amounts of fish caught in the northern areas of Alberta, northwest Ontario and the territories are caught by and large by the native communities. For many years those communities have relied on the income from fishing.

I called for the tabling of documentation relating to the review which was commissioned last October, as I said earlier, by the hon. member for St. John's East because we on this side of the House at least are very concerned that that review is in suspension or is proceeding much more slowly than the previous Progressive Conservative government advocated.

I was surprised by the response of the government in declining our request to table the documentation, telegrams and correspondence relating to this review. I cannot understand why there is a need for secrecy in this matter. What possible confidences might be embarrassing to the federal government were this correspondence to be released? Most of the concerns that have been expressed, including all of those I will indicate this afternoon, are well known to the public. In this enlightened age of freedom of information, it appears in the eyes of the Liberal government opposite that freedom of information is but an ideal. They refuse to put that ideal into practice by sharing with the people of Canada the documentation relating to the progress of this review.

In a public press release under the signature of the previous minister of fisheries, it was indicated that, as a consequence of a meeting of the minister of fisheries with his counterparts from the provinces and territories, a committee of officials would be working on certain tentative proposals which were put before them. By the end of April of this year, that committee was to have reported back to the minister of fisheries and ultimately to Parliament on certain proposed structural changes to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Agency. That report has not yet been forthcoming.

I will now proceed with some of the concerns about the corporation which we would expect to be addressed in that review process and be reported promptly to this Parliament. The original concept of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was a marketing board only, to be engaged in the buying and selling of fish primarily into the international markets, the American market in particular. That marketing board concept did not envisage a vertically integrated corporation which would be into the ownership of vessels or loans with respect to vessels. It would not be involved with transportation of fish, storage and processing. It would merely be involved with the marketing of those fish species, in particular to international customers.

That original concept was recommended by the McIvor commission in the late sixties and advocated by the Conservative government of Duff Roblin in the province of Manitoba. What that concept of a marketing board has become is, as I said a moment ago, a monopolistic, vertically integrated Crown corporation, like so many of our Crown corporations, which handles the product from the lakeside all the way to the consumer, whether the consumer be in the fish buying markets of New York state or Poland.

I suggest what we have now is a system of monopolistic dominance in the fish marketing industry, in the prairie provinces in particular, which is a far cry from what I understand to be the principle of democratic socialism where free enterprise and the private sector can operate in competition with one another. What we have is virtual communism in all of its forms in the example and illustration of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. Complete monopoly powers are reflected in part III of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act to buy, sell, trade and engage in all handling of fish caught in freshwater areas of Canada. This monopolistic corporation comes complete with its mandarins and represents a significant drain on the public purse.

Why all the concern about the corporation? First, it is well known that by taking over all the small plants in northern Canada, particularly in the northern areas of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the territories, the small community native-run fish processing operations have been eliminated. Family employment has been taken away from those communities. The spouses of the fisherpersons, to use that term, and the children that were once involved in a community effort in the processing and sale of fish, no longer have employment. The fishermen catch the fish, it is loaded on trucks, packed in ice and sent to Winnipeg, by and large, where it is processed in a very impressive new fish processing plant, built to some extent with the generosity of the taxpayers of Canada to process and store fish for sale in the export market.

One of the concerns that is well known is that local community centred fish processing operations have been destroyed. Second, it is well known that the advent of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation has led to the gradual erosion of the Co-operative Fisheries Limited, a co-operative in Saskatchewan which was a government-managed co-operative in the sense of the traditional co-operatives of Saskatchewan. It is a co-operative which reflects the movement of co-operativism which has flourished in Saskatchewan over several decades. I commend that type of involvement in the marketing and consolidation of products such as fish. That co-operative effort has been destroyed by this monolithic, monopolistic corporation managed out of Ottawa.

It is also well known to some of the fisherpersons and communities in the north that the trucking of their catch to Winnipeg, Transcona in particular, is very annoying. Furthermore, fishermen in local parts of Canada, whether they be in Edmonton, Saskatoon, Lac La Ronge or Hay River, are not allowed under the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation Act to sell directly to consumers. They are not allowed to sell directly to the public or to local supermarkets or fish markets. The corporation takes the product to Manitoba, packs it in nice boxes and sends it back to convenient Safeway stores somewhere in northern Manitoba where the price is roughly double the price paid to the fishermen. They cannot understand why they cannot sell directly in these regional areas.

This leads to a fallacy in respect of the principal reason for which the FFMC was established. It is often contended that in the interests of orderly marketing and eliminating the so-called illicit buyers of fish who once operated in these regions, big brother government must step in to secure an increase in prices paid to fishermen. So the corporation, in its most recent annual report covering the year 1978-79, tells us that the price paid to fishermen now represents 62 per cent of the sales dollar. But if we look further into the report we find that in fact the amount paid to fishermen came to $17 million last year out of a total sales volume worth $34 million. In other words, the percentage paid to fishermen amounts only to 50 per cent, not to 62 per cent. So there is obviously a misleading reference in the annual report to a 62 per cent return to fishermen. Such a return is non-existent.

What the corporation does is deduct the cost of transporting the fish to Transcona along with the cost of processing and storing it there; it does not concede that these were legitimate costs incurred by the private operators which it replaced. Nor will the corporation admit that when the private operators returned about 48 per cent to 50 per cent of the sales value of the commodity to the fishermen the situation was virtually the same as it is now. If one deducts transportation costs and costs of processing and storage at Transcona, as the corporation does, the fishermen still only get 50 per cent of the sales value of their product. Nothing has changed.

Perhaps I should not say nothing has changed, Mr. Speaker; there is an illusion of higher prices. There is an illusion of price stability. No competition is allowed from the private sector. Private entrepreneurial instincts in the freshwater area are suppressed. Private companies have been forced into bankruptcy—they are not even allowed to pursue the marketing of special products and underutilized species in which the corporation is not interested. This is particularly annoying to people who believe in the free right to do business in this country without government intervention.

Of course, as a result of this federal monopoly there is a yardstick by which to determine whether the fisherman is getting fair value for his product. In the absence of private sector competition how do we know that fishermen are getting the right price? The government says, "Trust us". And now we see this fallacy which is regularly used as a governing principle by some individuals, namely, that the government can always do it better, that the be all and end all of the fish marketing industry is orderly marketing and so-called single desk selling. This is an attitude one often finds, especially in government circles and it is reflective of the big brother era which we are rapidly approaching. I believe the present minister, who is not in his place this afternoon, has a similar philosophy. I say it is the beginnings of communism in this country because it takes away from the individual the right to compete.

Also, in this case, the chairman of the board of the corporation, a political appointee who has close relationship with the cabinet and the government, is engaged in the day to day management of the corporation. He is a political sales agent for the corporation. And in the hands of that one man rests the price paid to fishermen based upon some $34 million of sales each year. This one man and his assistants concentrate their selling effort in certain countries, through certain connections and acquaintances.

How does the poor fisherman ever know he is getting fair value for his catch when there is no standard for comparison? It was my understanding that Crown corporations must operate at arm's length from the government. This means that the board side, the policy-making side, those who are appointed at pleasure by the governor in council, should operate independently of day to day administrative decision-making. I think it is clear in the case of this corporation that they have a chairman of the board, or did so until recently, who is also paid as a consultant to secure markets for the product. I think it is also well known that, in the eyes of individuals and fishermen's groups, there is a lack of dialogue between the corporation and its administrative structure and the fishermen. The policy of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation has not been open to scrutiny and to criticism. I think this is unacceptable.

In my estimation, the notion of orderly marketing is somewhat different from that held by certain individuals within the department of fisheries. My notion of orderly marketing is that you smooth out the bad years of operation by skimming off the good years. This implies holding a reserve account; earnings are retained over the years so that in the poor years prices can be maintained to the fishermen by drawing from the fund. But we have no way of knowing whether the last fiscal year was a bad year or a good year for the corporation. It is a fact of history that the corporation has continually gone back to the federal public purse and to the provincial public purse to subsidize its operations so as to maintain price levels to fishermen. So what happens is that in the good years they pay the best possible price and in the poor years they go to the public trough and pull more out.

The consequence is that the corporation presently carries some $5,600,000 worth of operating loans from the federal government and some $4.5 million worth of direct equity loans which the taxpayers of Canada are underwriting. This is not orderly marketing by my concept. Why is there no reserve account held by the FFMC? It brags about payments to fishermen, even if they are only 50 per cent of the selling price, but it is easy to brag if those payments are subsidized by the people of Canada generally.

The corporation pays interest charges on its indebtedness amounting to a million dollars a year. Why should it? If it were a properly run private corporation it would be holding some reserves to tide it over bad years. We have to ask ourselves whether the corporation has not, perhaps, become an instrument of social welfare and unemployment relief. If that is part of the role of the corporation, so be it, but let the government and the corporation admit it and not do as an hon. member from the other side did this morning, and that is try to blame the provinces for forcing this form of social relief upon them, suggesting the federal government was dragged into this situation so as to provide a social benefit which the provinces desire. After all, it is the federal government that calls the shots in this case. This is a federal Crown corporation and this government cannot weasel out of the situation easily.

There is one further important question which needs to be addressed. Last year, in late 1978 and through the 1978-79 fiscal year, the corporation bragged about the sale of some five million pounds, or $3.9 million worth, of old white fish which had been held in inventory for a considerable time. They bragged about that sale to Poland, eliminating their inventory and being able to balance their books for that particular year. But in so doing, Mr. Speaker, they threw in an access quota to the Polish fishing fleet allowing them to fish for squid off the Atlantic coast. This represented a direct transfer of income from the fishermen of Atlantic Canada into the pockets of the fishermen being served by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. I think the fishermen of Atlantic Canada might well want to ask some questions about the propriety of what was done on that occasion.

I see my time is drawing to a close. I believe there are a number of options to be considered for the restructuring of the corporation. The former minister had been considering these options, ranging as they do from the retention of the status quo to the complete disbandment of the corporation, which would involve selling its assets to the province or reverting to the private sector.

I believe the studies which were undertaken and the joint discussions of provincial and federal officials would have led to a compromise which would have allowed some competition to return to the freshwater areas and which would have created a situation in which the corporation would have reverted to its original function, which would have been to provide a marketing board service and nothing more.

I believe that that report should be filed soon. I would like to see the documentation relating to the review tabled. That is the thrust of the motion before the House. This action, this information and the report should have been presented in April and decisions should have been taken to restructure the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in time for the current fishing season, which would resolve many of the problems to which I have referred.

Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker. I commend to all hon. members the importance of making these overdue changes in the corporation and, as a first step, having this documentation placed before this House.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member came very close to accusing this government of communism.

An hon. Member: He did.

Mr. Flis: I suggest that the hon. member go and live for a year in the Soviet Union; then he would know the difference between a democratic form of government and a communistic form of government and the difference between liberalism and communism.

Mr. Chénier: Apologize.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I should warn the hon. member that it is quite obvious that that was not a point of order. It was debate. However, I will recognize the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that as much as the hon. member opposite, I have visited many communist countries, and what I have seen and pinpointed here is the first signs of what would lead to that type of government being established in this country.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fleming: Unadulterated nonsense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is obliged to recognize a member who seeks the floor on a point of order. I have no choice but to recognize the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) if he seeks the floor again on a point of order. However, I have to point out and underline the fact that the hon. member has had an opportunity, under the guise of a point of order, to enter into debate, and it is the responsibility of the Chair not to permit that. I have no choice but to recognize the hon. member, but it should be on that which is a point of order.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, this is exactly a point of order. My point of order is that the hon. member should withdraw the statement he just made. He just reconfirmed that he is labelling this government what it is not, and I ask, on a point of order, that he withdraw those comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I do not necessarily appreciate the degree of concern the hon. member has with respect to the government's being referred to as communist. The government can be referred to as communist or as the mafia or anything else, but it is a matter of debate, not a point of order.

Mr. George Henderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate this afternoon about the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, a Crown venture which has performed, in my opinion, very well and because of its success has been the subject of some discussion.

Mr. McDermid: It will come back to haunt you.

Mr. Henderson: The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) has already expressed, in the clearest terms, his reasons for asking the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) to withdraw his request that copies be tabled of all documents exchanged between the government and the governments of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the territorial council of the Northwest Territories since January 1, 1978, relating to the review and restructuring of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. The minister has requested this withdrawal because a comprehensive review of the corporation is presently under way, and the presentation of the documents presented would not serve a constructive purpose and would be premature.

Furthermore, with all due respect to the hon. member, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has stated that he would be very pleased to table the report on the corporation when it has been completed subject, of course, to the consent of the participating provinces and territories.

It seems to me that this discussion of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, to which I humbly add a few words, is useful and opportune. I say it is useful and opportune because of concern that the corporation has not blown its own horn and has allowed its own record to stand as its voice. The record is good, the voice is strong, but it has obviously fallen on some deaf ears. I have looked at the record and I can say that I am impressed. But before I pursue the exposition of the corporation's record, I feel it important to preface this with an overview of why the corporation was formed in the first place and what it was given as its objectives so that the record can be viewed in this light.

The establishment of the corporation, provided for by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act passed in the 1968-69 session of Parliament, ushered in a new era in the freshwater fish industry. Prior to the control of the freshwater fisheries in western Canada being centralized through the corporation, there were many problems facing this industry. These problems were perceived by the governments of the prairie provinces as stemming from the extreme fragmentation of all sectors of the industry. The prairie provinces were concerned about the recurring weakness of prices for freshwater fish, particularly in the export market, and the well-being of the primary producers who ultimately bore the brunt of weak prices—the fishermen themselves.

The province of Manitoba originally stated its position in a brief to the National Fisheries Conference in January, 1964. Problems of disorderly marketing, too many exporters, poor processing equipment, low quality control facilities and fishermen receiving too low a share of prices, which were constantly fluctuating, led the province of Manitoba to recommend the establishment of a regional marketing board to meet the marketing problems of the industry.

As a result of the concerns expressed by the prairie provinces and because the freshwater fish industry operated interprovincially and internationally, the federal government, the assistance of which was requested, appointed by order in council a commission of inquiry in 1965 to inquire into and report upon the marketing problems of the freshwater fish industry in the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. George H. McIvor, the commissioner, concluded at that time that the export market was weak because there were too many exporters in Canada to counter the control exercised by the few importers in the United States, then taking upwards of 90 per cent of exports. The commission also concluded that the fisherman was the one who was being penalized most directly, and of course he was penalized in his pocketbook as a result of this situation.

To counter this problem, the commission's principal recommendation was the establishment, under federal legislation, of a freshwater fish marketing board. The McIvor commission's recommendations were studied extensively by the federal-provincial prairie fisheries committee, which reported to the freshwater fisheries ministers on April 21, 1967. Their report basically endorsed the commission's report. The outcome of all this study was the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act.

The basic philosophy underlying the legislation was that returns to freshwater fishermen could best be increased through the establishment of a single selling desk with the exclusive right to market and trade in fish interprovincially and internationally.

The corporation was therefore obliged to purchase all fish listed in the schedule to the act which was offered for sale to it by licensed fishermen. It was contemplated in the legislation that the corporation would set initial prices for each species, by grade, at the opening of each season and distribute to fishermen in a final payment any additional earnings obtained through marketing of the catch.

Also, the corporation has the power to make loans for working capital on a seasonal basis to persons engaged in fishing for commercial purposes in a participating province and in the Northwest Territories. The magnitude and complexity of the production and marketing programs which faced the newly-established Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation were considerable. The geographic area served by the corporation covers over 1.5 million square miles, most of it in a remote area, with very limited transportation and communication facilities, as hon. members know.

The approximately 3,500 fishermen who were the primary suppliers to the corporation were thinly scattered throughout this vast territory. They represented several ethnic groups, with many language dialects, which further compounded communication problems. Facilities for receiving, handling, packing and caring for a highly perishable product were in very many cases primitive and/or unsuitable generally. Processing plants designed and equipped to prepare modern frozen foods to serve in a highly competitive twentieth century marketplace were largely non-existent. During its first year of operation, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was confronted with a mercury contamination problem which presented difficulties of staggering dimension in the Canadian industry.

The principle of sharing the high and the low of the market on a seasonal basis with all fishermen was not generally practised prior to the establishment of the corporation. It was quite common for a few seasonal enterpreneurs who might not necessarily depend upon fishing for their main income and were conveniently located in respect to major markets to hire and outfit fishermen for low wages and short terms. The lakes would be fished during peak periods of demand. While this was quite lucrative for the entrepreneur, the fishermen failed to share the largesse. Futhermore, the proximity of these choice markets created a situation whereby the great majority of fishermen struggling to earn a livelihood from limited resources in the more remote unsettled areas generally were excluded from sharing the benefits of the very important high market price periods.

Upon its inception the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was faced with the task of largely reconstructing a fragmented and neglected industry, an industry that had exploited the lakes and species which were marketable in the whole fresh or frozen form with little or no attention given to product development or market management. In its efforts to rectify this situation, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation set out to implement policies aimed at attaining the objectives as defined in the act. The major operational objectives were:

1. To bring about a smooth program of transition assuring as little disruption to fishermen as possible.

2. To develop and implement a uniform pricing system to fishermen.

3. To initiate the concept of single desk selling.

4. To devise a network of private and/or co-operative agents to serve fishermen at the production level.

5. To initiate at all levels a program of quality control.

6. To study and initiate, in co-operation with agents, plans for expanding and upgrading receiving and handling facilities at the production level.

7. To investigate all existing avenues that might be economically utilized to provide adequate facilities to process fish particularly the so-called "rough" varieties into convenience foods, institutional items and new products while concurrently attempting to develop markets for same.

In order to design a uniform pricing system for fishermen prior to the commencement of each season, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation prepared objectives of total production, percentages of the total that are to be filleted, how much will be frozen, how much will be sold fresh, and an estimate of the sales value of each segment. In this manner an estimated sales return f.o.b. point of delivery is arrived at. From this is deducted the estimated costs of packing, processing, freezing, administration, etc., thereby arriving at a price to fishermen for loose fish f.o.b. designated point of delivery. From this loose fish price are deducted transportation costs from lakeside to the corporation, thereby establishing a price to fishermen at the lake. This assures fishermen regardless of their location that they will receive a price related to market. At the same time it does not penalize the fisherman who is closer to the delivery point for transportation costs from remote lakes. This method of uniform pricing is complex because of the numerous lakes involved and the complexities of transportation. There are something like 250 lakes involved.

The principle of single desk selling has been initiated by the corporation consistent with provisions of the legislation. Previously prices for fresh fish were extremely erratic. As might be expected, high prices were in effect when production was minimal, while during periods of peak production prices reflected the oversupply of product. However, through adherence to the single desk selling principle the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation has been able to establish and maintain a reasonable product price. It supplies fresh product to the market in quantities the market can absorb, while the surplus is marketed in either frozen or filleted form.

Integration of the industry from lakeside handling to market has been achieved. The corporation buys fish from fishermen through its agents and sets lakeside prices. Directly or indirectly, it controls the product from the lake to the processing plants into cold storage and to market. It specifies processing methods and product type. It determines the packages or boxes in which the fish is carried and sometimes the mode of transportation. It sets packing and processing allowances. It sells directly to processors, wholesalers, some chain stores, and indirectly through brokers.

The corporation now disposes of virtually all freshwater fish produced in Canada outside of the Great Lakes. This represents approximately 50 per cent of total annual production. This activity involves the main facility at Transcona, Manitoba, as well as processing plants at Hay River, The Pas, Edmonton and La Ronge. Unquestionably, the degree of rationalization and integration achieved to date has had the effect of increasing returns to fishermen.

I am not reluctant to say that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is a success. The record of the corporation speaks for itself. The figures are very plain and clear and provide the evidence that the corporation has lived up to the objectives which underlined its creation over 11 years ago. As the central objective of the corporation is to maximize returns to commercial fishermen, the single most important statistics are the prices to fishermen and the percentage of the final sales dollar returned to fishermen.

Payments to fishermen in the corporation's first year of operation totalled $7,700,000. Payments to fishermen in the fiscal year 1978-79 totalled over $17 million, or more than double; 61 per cent to 63 per cent of each sales dollar is now returned to fishermen, regardless of what the member said. We should compare this to the rate which prevailed prior to the establishment of the corporation. I think it is very important. We should take a look at what was taking place in the freshwater fish business before. It was a rate of only 40 per cent to 55 per cent when the competition between Canadian exporters, and the lack of organized systems, resulted in the downward manipulation of prices for products paid by the biggest buyers, a handful of American importers.

There are other statistics I should like to mention which provide further support to the fact that the corporation has lived up to another of its primary objectives—promoting international markets for and increasing interprovincial and export trade in fish. Net sales during 1969-70 were $14,400,000. Net sales during 1978-79 totalled $34 million. That is a very impressive increase of approximately 240 per cent, with little change in the volume of fish.

The average annual increase in total payments to fishermen has been 12.4 per cent since the crisis years of 1971 to 1973. During those years the corporation was hit with a number of problems, including the closing of some lakes due to mercury contamination and delays in construction of the Transcona processing plant due to a strike, I think, by construction workers. Since then, however, it is obvious the corporation has regained its feet and is continuing its recent impressive gains.

Active international marketing has meant a great deal to the corporation's profit picture. In 1978-79 the corporation's net income was over $5.1 million before final payments to fishermen, by far the highest profit recorded in the history of the FFMC. A good portion of this figure is attributable to a sale of a large quantity of whitefish to Poland. Further marketing efforts of this nature were carried out in 1979-80 and, although final figures are not yet available, there was a substantial sale of mullet to Great Britain at favourable prices, which permitted fishing through the winter season.

I have only a few more figures to quote as I do not want to over-burden hon. members opposite. These figures demonstrate that although a major portion of the corporation's sales are to the United States, and even though I say that is not such a bad thing in itself, the marketing activity successfully increased the overseas component of the sales pie from 14 per cent in 1977-78 to 23 per cent in 1978-79, reducing the U.S. slice from 70 per cent to 61 per cent. These sales figures and the diversification of markets are, according to any analysis, proof of a Crown corporation meeting and exceeding its mandate.

Of course the corporation has had its problems, and will continue to have them in dealing with the many factors affecting a business of this nature and magnitude, as well as in fulfilling its unique function as a Crown corporation.

The management of the corporation has been and has indicated it will continue to be responsive to the needs of its suppliers as well as the interests of the provinces and territories within its area of jurisdiction. I am concerned and hopeful that the corporation will be permitted to continue to carry out its mandate and to evolve, as all such operations must, so that the freshwater fish industry, and the backbone of this industry, the fishermen, will continue to be well served.

Those are all the comments I have to make at this time, Mr. Speaker, and I thank all hon. members for their attention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I had not anticipated speaking at this time as I felt the honour should have gone to my colleague to the left.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The hon. member is quite correct. I should have recognized the other hon. member. If the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is prepared to allow the Chair to correct this error, I will recognize the other hon. member. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) for ceding me the floor.

It is with a great deal of pleasure I rise today to speak in this debate concerning the tabling of documents regarding the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

As a member of Parliament representing many of the freshwater fishermen in the province of Manitoba, this matter is of particular importance to me. No doubt this debate will also be of great importance to all the freshwater fishermen from Thunder Bay to the Rocky Mountains.

Let me say at the outset that the New Democratic Party stands four square behind the concept and practice of orderly marketing of most foodstuffs. Needless to say, we feel the creation of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in 1969 was a positive step for Canadian freshwater fishermen.

I believe it is worth mentioning to hon. members present the situation which confronted fishermen prior to the FFMC being set up. Basically it was an open market, free enterprise system and, as one might well expect, the major beneficiaries of this particular arrangement were not the fishermen or the small local processors, but the large, well-organized American importers. The result was that both the fishermen and domestic processors were receiving inadequate—indeed some might have said subsistent—prices for their catch.

Just this morning in committee the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) made the comment that one of the reasons the FFMC was set up was to protect fishermen in remote or small communities. This is very true, but similar protection was required also for fishermen in larger and not so remote areas. Indeed, in my home town of Gimli there were many fishermen who suffered because of the practices of these private enterprises. Typically, at the beginning of each fishing season the companies which give advance payments to the fishermen so they could buy nets and other equipment necessary, would quote a price for fish at that time. Invariably at the season's end the final price would be lower than the initial quote with little or no final payment coming to the fishermen. In many cases the company owned a man's fishing boat, and in some communities they even owned the house in which he lived. One is reminded of the old coal miner's song about owing one's soul to the company store. This is indeed what the companies in Manitoba and in much of the prairies wanted.

I well remember as a teenager in Gimli talking with friends whose fathers were fishermen. For many years my friends' fathers fished as independent operators. By the mid-1960s most of these fishermen had been reduced to the status of underpaid, indebted employees of these fish companies. At this time in the late sixties it was widely rumoured that there were only two completely independent fishermen left on Lake Winnipeg. I believed the rumour at that time, and I still do.

It was with this background that this legislation was passed in 1968-69. It represented a response by the federal government to a request from the central provinces, led by the government of Manitoba. Rather ironically the minister leading the battle for Manitoba was Sterling Lyon, now the premier of that province, who last fall led the battle attempting to dismantle the FFMC.

The need at that time was for unification of the trade in freshwater fishery products. The perception was that economic distress among primary producers was attributable to fragmentation of assembling, processing, and the exporting operation. In 1969, after discussions dating back to 1964, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was established by federal statute. Its area of jurisdiction is the three prairie provinces and for a while some of Ontario and the Northwest Territories. It was the exclusive responsibility of the FFMC to market fish originating in this area in interprovincial and export trade. The objectives of the corporation were defined as follows: one, marketing fish in an orderly manner; two, increasing returns to fishermen, and three, promoting international markets for and increasing interprovincial and export trade in fish.

Over the ten-year period in which the corporation has been in existence, freshwater fishermen have seen the price per pound they receive for their catch increase by as much as 150 per cent. As the previous speaker has mentioned, the final payments, or total payments, to fishermen last year amounted to $17.2 million. In 1970 they were a mere $7.7 million. That is a substantial increase, and it has meant a substantial increase in the quality of living for the fishermen in the prairie provinces.

I believe it is fair to say that the marketing corporation has been a modest success over its ten-year history and, as well, it has brought some stability to freshwater fishermen's incomes. However, having said that, I think it must be said that fishermen and processors in western Canada are facing some problems.

In the last six months my office has dealt with dozens of fishermen who have been placed on unemployment rolls, or forced into accepting welfare. The problem in Manitoba is not that they cannot make a living fishing Manitoba's lakes and selling their catch to the corporation. The problem is that the provincial government last October decided to change the rules as they pertain to fishing licences. The result was that fishermen who had for years made their living fishing Lake Winnipeg, Lake Manitoba, Winnipegosis, Cedar Lake and many others have now found they do not qualify for a licence under the new regulations.

During December, and January of this year, the fishermen in the various communities discussed these new regulations proposed by the provincial government. There was near unanimous consent that these new rules were not in the best interests of freshwater fishermen.

Discontent grew to such a level that in January the Conservative government, fearing that this unfavourable program would affect the chances of federal Conservative candidates in the affected communities, ordered the suspension of the proposed guidelines. However, by that time much of the damage had been done and unemployment in my riding soared to over 9 per cent. It is really little wonder that my friends to the right did so poorly in Manitoba during the last election; they were faced with the problem not only of defending the policies of their own government but also the policies of acute, protracted restraint that have been mercilessly practised by the Tory government in Manitoba.

I would like to return more specifically to the motion before the House calling for documents concerning the future of the FFMC, such as correspondence between the federal, provincial and territorial governments to be laid before the House. I am of the opinion that this is a worth-while motion, not so much because it will show grave reservations on the part of the partners in the FFMC about its operation, but because such tabling of documents will undoubtedly show widespread and general satisfaction with the performance of the corporation. The information that I have would indicate that there is now general agreement among the participating agencies, after a thorough review of the possible options, that the corporation is functioning reasonably well and that only fine tuning adjustments were necessary.

I would point out that even the province of Manitoba, which was championing the cause of privatization that is so dear to the hearts of my associates to the right, has now come around to a position virtually in support of the status quo. Hon. members may well be asking themselves how a government like the Lyon Progressive Conservative government, the very epitome of neo-Conservatism, could come to the conclusion that the FFMC was not so bad after all. It is like this; in October the government sent up a trial balloon suggesting privatization or competition with the FFMC, but in the months since then they have been surprised to learn that fishermen in Manitoba do not want to see the government make such changes. In fact for the most part fishermen felt that the FFMC was working in their favour and should not be radically tampered with. The power of public opinion is sometimes awesome, and in this case it was powerful enough to change the opinion of a government of the like of the one that now, temporarily, occupies the corridors of power in Winnipeg.

The government of Saskatchewan also had some concerns regarding the operation of FFMC. But they were not concerns about the fundamental principle that the corporation represented. They were, instead, concerns with over-centralization of processing to the detriment of smaller processors in their provinces. However, I believe it can be safely said that some of Saskatchewan's concerns have now been ameliorated.

I believe that the principle of orderly marketing of freshwater fish for which the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation stands is important to the continued viability of the freshwater fishing industry in Manitoba and the other provinces involved. Orderly marketing protects the fishermen from the erratic behaviour of the free market, and in so doing ensures them a stable income. Of course, even orderly marketing cannot protect fishermen from ridiculous licensing practices on the part of a provincial government, nor can it protect them against the ravages of biological transfers that could occur should our country be unable to halt the progress of the Garrison diversion in North Dakota.

I have no doubt that the FFMC has made a large, very positive difference in the lives of freshwater fishermen in Canada. While there were definitely some bumpy years and, I think, some bad decision-making by corporation management, I have no doubt that the FFMC is now well on line. I would strongly oppose any moves made to change its set-up fundamentally and so, too, would a vast majority of fishermen.

There is some room for change and for improvement, but there is absolutely no room to allow the dismantling of the FFMC. To return to the pre-1969 system would be to religate thousands of freshwater fishermen to a poorer quality of life.

Let me give one illustration. During the campaign I visited Matheson Island, an island fishing community on Lake Winnipeg. I remarked to the person showing me around on the number of very handsome large, new houses owned by the fishermen. Without hesitation he told me that these houses had all been built since the FFMC had been set up. Further down the island he pointed out some small, very run-down shacks. These were the houses that had been owned by the fishing companies and which the fishermen had lived in before the establishment of the marketing board. Fortunately, no one is forced to live in such buildings any more.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Madam Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Madam Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

● (1810)

And being returned:

Madam Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-39, an act to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act—Chapter 12.

Bill C-19, an act to amend the Employment Tax Credit Act—Chapter 13.

Bill C-35, an act to amend the Regional Development Incentives Act—Chapter 14.

Bill C-7, an act to amend the Saltfish Act—Chapter 15.

Bill C-15, an act to amend the Livestock Feed Assistance Act—Chapter 16.

Bill C-22, an act to adjust the Accounts of Canada and to make related amendments to certain Acts—Chapter 17.

Madam Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. Therefore, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6.10 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been meeting all day to hear witnesses and to study clause by clause Bill C-26, a bill of great importance to the Fort Nelson Indian Band of British Columbia. At 6.30 this evening the work of that committee on that bill was completed. At this time I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to revert to "Presenting Reports of Standing and Special Committees" so that the report could be tabled this evening.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. Hon. members have heard the request made by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Penner). Is it the pleasure of the House to agree to the request?

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1980-81

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-30, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1980-81, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Mazankowski: I understand the question will be put later. However, I appreciate the enthusiasm of hon. members across the way.

I want to begin by first associating myself with the comments made by members on this side of the House, particularly the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I wish to reiterate the very deep and genuine concern that we on this side have regarding the passage of this bill, which provides spending or borrowing authority of some $12 billion, without having been given some details as to the future plans of the government. As my colleague for Mississauga South indicated, we are giving the government carte blanche authority without having any definitive program outlined in terms of what the spending program will be, and with the lack of a budget, and so on.

I found it rather amusing when the spokesman for the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), said that the people of Canada had been cheated by the introduction of this bill. I find that rather strange coming from that corner of the House. I think it is fair to say that if anyone has been cheated, the people of Canada have been cheated by the activities of the NDP opposition—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: —when not too long ago they exercised their political opportunistic tricks to defeat a government which was attempting to put the economic house of this country in order and to establish some sanity and stability in terms of where we are going in so far as reducing the deficit, and putting into place some discipline in the spending and taxation in connection with the fiscal and monetary policies of this country. This is the typical hypocritical doubletalk we hear from that side of the House. It has become a very significant trademark for that group of people. I must say that particular caucus is the champion of doubletalk and hypocrisy.

We are talking about a lot of money here. When we talk about a bill like this in the House of Commons, we have a tendency to overlook the significance of a million or a billion dollars. It is always very difficult to try to put a billion dollars or a billion of anything into its proper perspective. About a year ago I came across a little definition of a billion which I thought was rather significant. I would like to place it on the record because it does put into perspective the magnitude of a billion. The little definition goes like this.

It is entitled "What is a billion?". A billion seconds ago, the first atomic bomb had not yet been exploded. A billion minutes ago, Christ was still on this earth. A billion hours ago, men were still living in caves, yet more than a billion dollars ago, in terms of federal government spending that was one week ago. I think that brings into focus the magnitude of a billion. If you were to stack a billion dollars one on top of the other, I could not imagine how high that would be, but it would certainly be a very significant pile of dollar bills.

Mr. Bussières: What do you have to say about relativity?

Mr. Mazankowski: There is another rule, in Beauchesne, which says members should be given sufficient latitude to make their point. That is precisely what I have attempted to do. This bill should not be passed until a budget has been presented to the House. It should not be passed until we have heard from the government a statement of its fiscal and monetary policy. I am not sure we have passed the 1978 budget in all its details—

● (2010)

An hon. Member: No!

Mr. Mazankowski: My hon. friend says no. So the last budget we passed in detail was the 1977 one. Moreover, earlier today the minister left us with the impression that there is no assurance of a budget forthcoming this fall. So where are we going in terms of an economic and financial program?

There is a second point and one which is clearly related to our economic fortunes. It is the lack of an oil pricing agreement.

Mr. Blenkarn: We had one.

Mr. Mazankowski: We had one in December. Since then there has been shilly-shallying and wavering. We are farther away from agreement now than we ever were last year. What are the priorities which guide this government?

Mr. Blenkarn: They have none.

Mr. Mazankowski: We have been dealing with housekeeping legislation. I thank my hon. friend from Mississauga. He has made a couple of good speeches and he is helping me with this one. His interventions indicate the depth of his feelings on this legislation. A great deal was said in the Speech from the Throne, but no concrete proposals have been forthcoming to put those varied promises into effect. In spite of all the hoopla at Winnipeg, nothing came out of it to indicate where Canada was going, and I must say westerners are increasingly suspicious of the government. There is not much to boast about in terms of what the government has done for the west. The Speech from the Throne talks about the development of our economic potential. That is sheer rhetoric, Mr. Speaker.

I could quote a passage from a popular magazine in Alberta, The Alberta Report, a magazine which I will bring to the attention of all those who claim to be interested in Alberta. It points out that notwithstanding the government's professed renewed commitment to western Canada, over the last 12 years the Liberal party while in power has made every conceivable attempt to destroy western Canada. The Western Economic Conference in 1973 committed itself to expand markets for chemical and agricultural products in the United States. But it provided nothing.

The same Liberal government promised to improve the grain transportation system. The last year in which this new-old government held office was the worst on record in terms of grain movement. It cost hundreds of millions of dollars, as well as a lot of our reputation.

An hon. Member: You seem enthused.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am enthused because I have a very deep feeling about this doubletalk. I heard someone suggest I should talk about the rest of Canada. I thought members over there wanted to know more about western Canada. They say they are committed to western Canada. I would give them a lesson, if they would shut up and listen. This is the government which in 1974 vigorously opposed wage and price controls—and then introduced them. This is the government which promised federal aid to municipal transport systems—and produced nothing whatsoever. It is the government which, in 1968, called for restraint—and in the next ten years quadrupled government spending. It is the government which, elected after pledging an increase of less than $4.50 per barrel of oil, now says that it meant less than $7.50. That is in a report from The Alberta Report of May, 1980. That is not coming from my lips. That comes from the lips of a dedicated, earnest, and committed publisher in Canada who has witnessed the history of this country and who has seen what is happening.

What are the priorities of the party over there? What about a deep sea fleet? The minister says he is in favour of it, but the rest of the cabinet says we cannot afford it. What about improving the marine sector? There has been no statement of policy from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin). What are we going to do to improve the operations of the Seaway and give its users a greater opportunity to manage and operate it? What about the coastguard service? What are we going to do to improve the effectiveness of that service, particularly in terms of re-equipping the coastguard fleet which, like the state of our armed forces, has long been deteriorating?

The rhetoric we read in the Speech from the Throne has not been followed up by definitive proposals. The only thing we have heard is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) fanning the flames and warning the provinces, comparing the actions of Alberta to the seperatists' motives in Quebec—I hope I do not see the minister nodding his head in the affirmative. The Minister of Transport suggested that Alberta is engaged in a war over economic sovereignty and compared it with Quebec. Shame on that minister! The fact was, they wanted it their way or no way at all. And at the same time the Speech from the Throne lectured us on the need to represent the nation to the west. I ask the government to do likewise—to represent the nation to the west and also to represent the west to the rest of Canada, particularly in the House of Commons and in the hallowed halls of the cabinet.

What are we offered? There is the ludicrous proposal of twinning. I say it is preposterous and insane. If that is representative of the actions we can expect in the future, I am sure the great desire of members opposite to attract political support in western Canada will not get off the ground. All we have heard is double-tracking and doubletalk, and the doubletalk has caused uncertainty in connection with projects such as the one planned for Prince Rupert. The Prince Rupert port development has probably been deferred for a year or six months. I notice that an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail of May 29 said the site preparation planned to start this summer will not get under way at least until fall. Why? The deal has been made but, because of some little detail, the whole thing has been placed in jeopardy and deferred.

Consider the position of the government with respect to branch line retention or abandonment. It is interesting to note that in Winnipeg over the weekend the party opposite took the position that the Government of Canada should reaffirm the present guaranteed status accorded to prairie branch lines so that all branch lines now in the permanent system might remain in that system. Mr. Speaker, if participatory democracy means anything to the government, the Minister of Transport should not now be undertaking a review of a decision which was made by the former government, one which is now the law of the land.

They have cast confusion over the development of Roberts Bank. They cannot get their act together. What about the coal deal in northeastern British Columbia? There is a lot of huffing and puffing, but no action.

We do not know who in this House is responsible for grain transportation. The Minister of Transport says he is not responsible, but in the same breath he says he has to answer. The hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen) would do a much better job. We wish he were in the cabinet—

An hon. Member: So does he.

Mr. Mazankowski: —because I think he would go out and learn. The hon. member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Chénier) does not have to talk because he knows that when my party was in office, and particularly through this former minister, we looked after all regions in Canada, including his own home town.

Mr. Corbin: It took you only three months to take away my passenger train service.

Mr. Mazankowski: That was an initiative which was started by the hon. member's government. Why does he not talk about the passenger services which we retained and which we expanded?

Mr. Corbin: And you did not finish our airport.

Mr. Mazankowski: If I had had another six months, I probably would have given the hon. member his airport, and I would not even have needed a twin to do that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: One of the first things this government did when it assumed office was to announce a reduction in the initial prices of wheat, and then in its press release it said that it was increasing the initial price of wheat. It was increased from the government's original initial price which it announced. We increased it, but hon. members opposite reduced it back to the old level. We increased the initial price of wheat from $3.50 to $4.25. They came along and reduced it. How can the people of western Canada have any faith in this government?

What about the two-price wheat system? We were in the process of establishing a minimum floor price of $6 per bushel based on the cost of production and the realities of the marketplace. This government came along and established a minimum price of $5 per bushel. Our proposal was to have been put into effect on February 1, 1980, and if that had been the case the farmers of western Canada would have been $25 million richer. Under this administration they are $25 million poorer, and the range of $5 to $7 is outdated before it has even been implemented because, right now, international markets indicate that the price of wheat is close to that figure of $7, and it should go up.

Everyone in the grain trade would indicate that wheat prices should go up, and that is why it is important that this government get on with the job. We increased prices, and we were well under way in working out a satisfactory international grains agreement. I wish the minister in the other place, who was a strong advocate of that, would now be as ambitious in that regard as he was when he was in opposition.

What is really happening right now is that the western farmer is subsidizing the consumer. Farmers are selling their wheat domestically at less than the international price. That is not the only commodity with regard to which we have that anomaly. Oil is the other commodity which is sold at less than the world price. As a matter of fact it is sold at about 40 per cent of the world price. Why is it that two commodities which are very precious to western Canada are sold at prices which are far below the world price? In the case of oil the percentage is about 40 per cent, and in the case of wheat it is 20 per cent. Those are our major commodities. Last year the increase in the price of oil did not even reflect the inflationary factor. I believe the inflation rate was about 9.5 per cent, and the price of oil went up 8 per cent.

This Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in this House and across the country compares Alberta to Kuwait. He accuses Albertans of being selfish and greedy and of being fabulously rich. He also says that Alberta is not sharing and is not prepared to share. In other words he is desperately trying to pit the rest of the country against the province of Alberta. I see that as being very despicable. As a matter of fact it is almost treasonous. I want to deal with that issue because, as I said before, there are two commodities which are produced in western Canada and which are sold domestically at far below world prices, and I challenge any hon. member opposite to tell me what other commodities are sold on that same basis in the country. Let them name them.

An hon. Member: Asbestos?

Mr. Mazankowski: Is it any wonder that there is a feeling of alienation and a sense of frustration, both political and economic?

Mr. Cousineau: It is still Canadian oil.

Mr. Mazankowski: Westerners cannot understand why they must pay at least internationally competitive prices and in many cases more for commodities which are sold to them from eastern and central Canada. We do not mind that. That is fair, but what is sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander. It is a reciprocating deal.

This government gets down on its hands and knees and pleads with Mexico to sell us more oil at the world price. What benefit does that give Alberta, western Canada, or any region of Canada? I do not understand the eagerness. At the same time hon. members opposite deny oil price increases to realistic levels. As a result they are scuttling development. They are scuttling megaprojects which are very important. As a matter of fact I am told that the deferral of two megaprojects, the oil sands and the Gold Lake heavy oil project, is costing the Canadian economy some $25 million every day. There is dislocation and unemployment.

On July 7 The Globe and Mail pointed out that any development in Alberta reaps benefits for the whole of Canada, and particularly for the province of Ontario. The article to which I refer reads in part as follows:

> Let us say that the oil price rises to the point where tar sands oil is economically feasible. One $7 billion Alberta oil sands plant would mean, to Ontario alone: $800 million for the iron and steel industry; $370 million for metal-working firms; $325 million for the transportation industry; $740 million for other manufacturers and processors; $750 million for the trade and service sector. That money would be working in the community producing consumer demands, making jobs, increasing government revenues.

Mr. Forrestall: And more dollars for us in eastern Canada.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will get to that. My colleague says "more dollars for eastern Canada", and that is true.

> In total . . . one $7 billion project like the proposed Alsands plant (now in doubt because of Liberal hesitation about oil prices) would generate $23.8 billion in economic activity. Of that Alberta would get $10.5 billion, Ontario $6.2 billion, Quebec $2.9 billion, and the other provinces the rest. "This is just one project. By the end of the century there could be another six similar projects plus one major expansion." For eastern offshore projects other provinces would take the Alberta share.

That is what is being held up as a result of the footdragging and waffling that is going on.

Mr. McKnight: More than we got from the F-18.

Mr. Mazankowski: What is tragic, in my view, is that we have a Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is not really the right kind of person to be negotiating an oil arrangement. I think he is too far abrasive and far too arrogant. Some have suggested that he has about as much negotiating skill as Idi Amin. He has fueled the flames of division and suspicion, and that does not augur well. We hear much about this minister suggesting that Alberta is not sharing, and that it is not prepared to share. That rings a rather sympathetic tune with consumers in central and eastern Canada, but the fact is that Alberta has shared, is sharing and will continue to share with the rest of Canada. What has happened is that these deliberate and antagonistic statements do not augur well for the future unity of the country, and certainly it is not in keeping with the euphoria after the recent victory in the province of Quebec. When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources suggested that Albertans merely occupy a territory, I found it an insult to our forefathers who came west when there was nothing but prairie and bush, and through sheer hard work and determination built a region and a province.

● (2030)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Certainly we are fortunate to have oil under our soil, but when these resources were developed eastern financial interests turned their backs on western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: That can be well documented; it should not be overlooked.

An hon. Member: What has come over you?

Mr. Mazankowski: I feel strongly about this because the other side of the story must be told. The member's minister has been going about this country peddling a lot of bull, as we would say in Alberta. If we want to talk about sharing, since 1973 Alberta has forgone in excess of $17 billion in revenue as a result of the underpricing of its oil. That is worth $8,500 for every man, woman and child in the province of Alberta. That is sharing. Is it prepared to share? The answer is yes.

Under the arrangement worked out by our government, out of every $4 per barrel increase, $1.60 would have gone to the province, $1.24 to the federal government, and $1.16 to the industry, which would have represented a 50 per cent increase in federal government coffers. In addition it is important to note that Alberta agreed to phase in the increase in oil prices up to 85 per cent of the American price or world price over a period of time. It agreed to sell its natural gas to existing markets in central Canada at 85 per cent of the oil equivalent price and 65 per cent to any new markets for a period of five years. It further agreed to fund the extension of the gas pipeline from Montreal to Quebec City. Alberta agreed to accelerate oil sands development, pay for the infrastructure and invest $3 billion to $4 billion from the heritage trust fund in new oil sands plants to produce oil not for Albertans but for the rest of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: In addition, Alberta agreed to help finance five major energy projects in other provinces. Also it agreed to lend $2 billion over five years to a National Energy Bank. As well, it agreed to certain tax changes in oil companies which would channel an additional $400 million from Alberta to Ottawa.

What about co-operation? I must read part of an article into the record because many members opposite do not even read the Ottawa newspapers. On May 22, 1980, an editorial entitled "Barrels of Co-operation" appeared in The Ottawa Journal. I should like to quote from it because I think it is significant. It reads:

> With the emphasis so heavily on conflict between Alberta and the federal government on energy issues, one might get the idea that Alberta has missed no opportunity to make things uncomfortable for the rest of us. In fact, the opposite was the case in the past year. While conflict was talked, co-operation was practised.
> Amidst grave uncertainties about the supply of international oil, Alberta quietly permitted a 15 per cent increase in production of its fast-declining reserves of conventional oil last year. This spared eastern Canada from almost certain shortages of oil during the fall and winter heating season.
> It also saved the country from an additional half billion dollar payments deficit by substituting Alberta oil for almost twice as costly imported oil. But it helped run Alberta's reserves down to 4.7 billion barrels of readily accessible conventional oil and hastened the day—coming very soon—when the maximum daily production of 1.4 million barrels must begin to decline.

Here is an important footnote:

> The Alberta government has an ironclad constitutional right to limit the production of the province's oil to ensure adequate future supplies for its own residents. It can be argued that conventional oil reserves have reached the level at which a lower rate of production would be in everyone's interest—in that current output raises false hopes of domestic oil availability for the future.

Recently the Energy Resources Conservation Board issued a report which indicated that productive capacity will decline to a million barrels per day next year and to 966,000 barrels per day in 1982. The forecast indicates that conventional crude productive capacity will have declined to 688,000 barrels by 1985, and to 377,000 barrels per day by 1990. Indeed it is a fast depleting resource. When I heard the energy minister suggest that the tactics of Alberta can be compared to those of the separatist movement in Quebec, I found it insulting, offensive, and I do not think it is very Canadian on the part of that minister over there.

The government of Alberta has every right to insist on a fair deal—a realistic price for its energy resources. It has every right to receive its legitimate share of the revenues. Surely it is non unCanadian to defend that position. As a matter of fact, it is in its own interest in terms of the constitution, and in the Canadian interest. As I pointed out, it is a fast diminishing resource. If the shoe were on the other foot I am sure the federal government would be taking that same position.

We must not be blinded by the fact that we simply look at price alone. The key is the security of supply, the ability to shift to alternate forms of energy and the ability to develop new sources of supply so that we can become self-sufficient in fossil fuels. Alberta is prepared to do its part. It is prepared to share, it has shared, and it will continue to share. I must insist that the agreement reached by our government and the province of Alberta was and still is in the best interests of Canada, Alberta, the region and all Canadians, so that we can go on developing, building and achieving the goals outlined and enunciated in the Speech from the Throne, have security of supply, to bite the bullet and face the issue, not hide behind some cheap political trickery which embarrasses the government at the present time.

An hon. Member: Swallow your pride.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why does the government not swallow its pride and get on with the job? It should get the deal made so that we can carry on building, so that the projects can go ahead, so that there will be jobs in Alberta, British Columbia, Newfoundland, Ontario, Quebec, and the Atlantic provinces—all of Canada. That is my appeal to that group over there. I hope they are listening.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, at first I did not intend to rise and address Bill C-30, to provide supplementary borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1980-81. It would provide the federal government with the power to borrow $12 billion. However, I feel I must rise a second time. I spoke on this bill during second reading stage, and I should like to address it during third reading stage with some brief comments. I hope it will go through tonight.

It was my understanding this was pushed rapidly on us because in fact the federal government is broke. It does not have adequate funds to run this country of ours. Another thing which prompted me to rise and speak on third reading is that the Liberal government was so much in a hurry to get this bill through that it had a motion to close debate on it and therefore cut off second reading debate. They did this for a couple of reasons. The first was that it was an embarrassment to them, the fact they had to borrow $12 billion to run this country. The second was that the government is broke and it needs money. In fact we are a bankrupt country at this time.

We have things like housing overruns which CMHC cannot pay—the minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has reflected that in the province of Saskatchewan which has asked for funds to come into that province to cover the cost overruns in housing projects administered by the Saskatchewan Housing Corporation, under the responsibility and funding of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In fact I submit to you that this federal government could not pay the province of Saskatchewan the money it has due coming to it, and therefore the Saskatchewan Housing Corporation is put in the uncomfortable position of not being able to pay off some of the housing contractors who were involved in housing projects in Saskatchewan. I hope with the passage of this borrowing authority, to borrow $12 billion for the federal government, the minister will in fact take note of that and listen to what we have been saying for years and years in the House, since he is here in the House tonight, and make sure that the Saskatchewan Housing Corporation is paid the funds that are due to it so it can in fact pay off those debts.

The other things I can think of, Mr. Speaker, that are directly concerned with the constituency I represent, include a school on the Thunder Child Reserve which was approved by Indian Affairs some five years ago, and the Treasury Board has kept bouncing it back, bouncing it back for reproposal from Indian Affairs, and coming back to the reserve. The reserve school at Thunder Child today has been condemned by the federal Department of National Health and Welfare, as well as the Saskatchewan department of health. They have an open cesspool at the school no more than 100 feet away from where the students have to attend. The conditions on that reserve as far as educational facilities are concerned are absolutely deplorable. This is another thing I hope Treasury Board will finally approve funding for which they have already agreed to in the capital expenditures of Indian Affairs, a department which does not have the money to pay for it.

I would like to quote something from a politician in this House who was referring to the financial position of the government. That politician says that this deficit is not here curiously enough because of excessive government spending. Government expenditures increased dramatically in the past since 1974, but it is under control; I think reasonably under control, and yet we are still running a deficit. "The reason is that our tax base is so eroded on the revenue side."

These are words, to my surprise, not of the Conservatives who sit to our extreme right, but words of the minister in charge of the Treasury Board, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston). He says this deficit is not here, curiously enough, because of excessive government spending, but government spending has been excessive over the past decade and it has reached the point now in the 1978-79 fiscal year that public accounts show we have been spending a deficit of over $16 billion. Mr. Macdonell in the Auditor General's report suggests that spending is totally out of control. I hope the minister in charge of the Treasury Board will recognize that. It is not under control, he says in the second part. He says that the reason the tax base has been eroded, and I can agree with that part as it certainly has, is some of the things that happen within this country. I think we have to look at things such as indexing, which is very controversial lately and which arose from this House. The New Democratic Party is in favour of indexing, but we are in favour of a just indexing. The indexing implemented by this government was an indexing that helped those who do not need the help. The indexing the government has been advocating was indexing for people who have the least amount of income and get the least amount from indexing. The people at the higher levels of income, $60,000 and $70,000 per year, would get the maximum benefits from indexing.

To the New Democratic Party that is not a just type of indexing. The type of indexing we agree with is the type of indexing where the people at $70,000 and $60,000 per year income do not need any indexing and certainly do not need the benefits of it. The people who need the benefits of indexing of taxation are those in the lower income scale; those earning $12,000, and those earning up to $20,000 a year should receive the maximum benefit from that.

I think something else which has eroded our tax base, and where there has to be more equity in our tax system, is the many corporate loopholes out there today, not in small business and not in family farms necessarily, but in the larger corporations, indeed in the larger international corporations which account for the $75 billion in foreign ownership in this country, and which stimulate billions of dollars in foreign profits that leave here every year. Those loopholes today we figure, to the best of our knowledge, account for some $16 billion in accumulated unpaid corporate tax. This country cannot afford that. We think that should this government choose to collect the corporate tax which is owing to the people of this country we would not have to approve supplementary borrowing power for $12 billion to help a bankrupt government such as we have here today.

I would like to ask the government to look at other things such as self-administered RRSPs. I think that is an important area where people who have some disposable income can invest in their own Registered Retirement Savings Plans. For example, those who are fortunate enough to own a home should be able to invest in that home each year at the anniversary date and write it off, as they would with an RRSP. I think that helps us in a few ways. One, it helps people reduce the amount of interest they are paying on their mortgages because they pay it off sooner at a much lower rate; they also own their homes within a shorter period of time and, therefore, have a larger disposable or discretionary income to use at their discretion, spending it on what they like.

Supposedly a house is one of the largest items the average Canadian family will ever purchase. If they did have this extra five or six or seven hundreds of dollars extra income ten years sooner than they normally would have it, they would be able to invest. Then we would have Canadians investing in our own economy. I think these are things the government has to look at so that our tax base is not being eroded, and so that we do in fact have money to run our country.

The supplementary borrowing power for $12 billion does not even cover the deficit I mentioned in 1978-79 as $16 billion, or in excess of $16 billion. That is a very large sum of money, enough to run the province of Saskatchewan for eight years.

I think at the same time we have to look at some of the inequities which the government has in its tax regulations and the way it collects tax. I would like to quote again from the President of the Treasury Board when he was referring to our income tax. He said that apart from this tragic lack of compassion and its zealous adherence to the letter of the law rather than its spirit, the Department of National Revenue has also demonstrated that it is prepared to adopt any position likely to result in the collection of tax dollars regardless of whether that position may be inconsistent with the position adopted in another case.

I want to cite a case that was brought to my attention by a constituent just this last weekend of the unfair taxation this government uses when it justifies taxation by whatever means it has to in order to help it get the tax.

I had a lady phone me on the weekend. She is a handicapped person in the city of North Battleford. She had applied one year for her excise tax rebate which she should get as a handicapped person. When she applied for it she found she could not receive it because in fact she had not paid for it; her husband's or family income had paid for it. Then she got credit cards for the next taxation year and every time she travelled she would use the credit cards in her own name to keep track of what expenditure was made on her behalf in travelling. Because she was a handicapped person she should qualify for a rebate on the excise tax. She submitted the claim and the federal government approved it. They granted her $160, I believe the figure was.

In the last taxation year she applied again for the rebate and the answer came back saying she did not qualify for the rebate because, although she made the purchases in her name, it was her husband's income or her family income that paid for it; she had no income to pay for that petroleum, or to pay for that gasoline, so she could not claim the excise tax. They did not only refuse, but they wanted to collect the money which they had paid to her one year before that. That is unfair.

What they are saying is "Pay back money when you don't have an income". That is what they told her in one case, that she did not qualify because she did not have an income. Now they want her to pay back money on an income which she does not have. This government must decide whether it wants to use individual income or family income, but it should not use whichever alternative suits its needs. I think that is unfair.

Such action tends to encourage people to look for ways to cheat a system which is unjust and treats people unfairly. I do not mean to be critical, but we should have some remedy to overcome this erosion of the tax base. It is not fair that 10 per cent of the population has 60 per cent or more of the wealth in this country. Of the other 90 per cent, some of them have nothing. That is unfortunate for many Canadians, particularly those in the 90 per cent portion. The other 10 per cent does not care too much. However, they must influence the fiscal policy or taxation policies of this government.

We must overcome this problem of each year having to approve supplementary borrowing power so that the government can pay its debts or honour the commitments it made. We must achieve full employment within this country, or at least stop the high rate of unemployment which we are so rapidly achieving through the regressive actions of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray). I am thinking particularly of the people in the automobile industry in places like Windsor and Oshawa where these people, for two or three generations, have been dependent upon the automotive industry. Now their jobs are being taken away from them. These people do not know where to turn, and the federal government is not being very responsive to their situation.

There are many small businesses and medium-size companies which have been affected by the high interest rates or the non-action pattern of this federal government in terms of interest rates. We must look at ways to achieve full employment through an industrial strategy. I would like the federal government to lay out at some point their industrial strategy so that we can make some long-term economic plans and develop an economic policy which will gain full employment for all Canadians. As I mentioned earlier, there must be some equity in the taxation system. It is unfortunate that a handicapped person is cheated by this government. I have asked the minister for leniency in this case and other cases, such as the case I cited of the woman in North Battleford.

We must also gain effective control of our resources. We have talked in this House about energy self-sufficiency, but I do not know how we are going to attain that goal. The New Democratic Party has a policy which we have laid out before, but I will not go into that now. Certainly the policies of this government do not attain energy self-sufficiency for Canada.

It is unfortunate that there are other inequities within our taxation system. It is something which I have mentioned in this House before and which I will mention again, because it ties in so closely to overcoming the large deficit which we have in this country. I will say again, as I said before, that Saskatchewan has to pay an export tax every time it sends a barrel of heavy crude across its borders. The reason we export our heavy crude is because there is no petroleum upgrading station in Saskatchewan to upgrade this heavy crude to a state where it can be used.

However, this is a project on which the Saskatchewan government has been working in conjunction with Petro-Canada and Husky Oil, a wholly-owned Canadian company, but it has not reached the stage of operation yet. When that barrel of heavy crude oil crosses the Saskatchewan border, there is an export tax. Of every barrel of heavy crude which crosses Saskatchewan borders, $22 goes to the federal government, $6 goes to the provincial government and something over $6 goes to the oil company. That is unfair to the province of Saskatchewan, that such a disproportionate share should go to the federal government.

Actually what is being exported is not heavy crude, it is energy. There is no export tax on other forms of energy which are exported out of Canada. When Alberta and British Columbia export trillions of cubic feet of natural gas to the United States, they are not charged one cent in export tax. That is discrimination against Saskatchewan. When Ontario and Quebec, I imagine, export power, energy which is generated by nuclear stations or by hydro dams, they are not charged one cent in export tax. Certainly the money which is raised from that export tax goes to subsidize the cost of energy needs in eastern Canada.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anguish: I would appreciate it very much if the members to the right, if they do not know what they are talking about, would please keep quiet until I am finished. They will have a chance to speak once I am finished. We must also take a look at processing our raw resources at home.

Getting back to the Conservatives, I would like to say that the Liberals are not only to blame. The Conservatives are much more to blame with their terrible policies with which they tried to destroy this country. The people to my extreme right in this House have no room to talk, no room whatsoever. They wanted to charge Canadian people for their oil at the world price, something they talked about prior to the election campaign, but the people of Canada said, "You're wrong".

An hon. Member: Moan and groan.

Mr. Anguish: The federal government should take a look at the policy of processing our raw resources at home and not ship them out of the country, which would provide employment.

Some of the Conservatives to my right have mentioned the socialist government of Saskatchewan. I would like to correct them and inform them that it is a democratic socialist government, and I will dwell on that province for a few moments. We are looking at a province, as I mentioned when I spoke on this bill at second reading, which has a democratic socialist government and which was bankrupt in 1944 because of a Liberal government which followed a Conservative government.

An hon. Member: They're both the same.

Mr. Anguish: They are both the same, so it does not matter anyway. Now Saskatchewan has a surplus budget, not the deficit budget—

Mr. McKnight: What year was it surplus?

Mr. Anguish: —which the Liberals bring in and the Conservatives advocate.

Mr. McKnight: What year was it surplus?

Mr. Anguish: I think, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) wishes to drink and come into this House and make accusations—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anguish: —then he should stay in the outer area.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anguish: I would like to say in closing, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, if I heard the hon. member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) correctly, and I would like to check the blues—I hope I did not hear him correctly in the statement which he made—I will be magnanimous and offer him the opportunity—if he did make that statement because of passion or because he was upset and not able to control himself—to consider his words again. If he does not withdraw them, I will have to take further action.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster heard is correct. That is what I said. I would like to offer my apology to him. I would like to withdraw my remarks. It was in the heat of the debate and, also, by the way the hon. member addressed me as he came into the chamber, I made assumptions and accusations for which I apologize.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anguish: In conclusion, before I get myself into any more trouble, the reason that we would like to see this legislation for supplementary borrowing authority go through tonight is the fact that it would place our government in a very embarrassing position if we could not pay our bills. I am a proud Canadian as, I am sure, are the other members of this House, and I would like to see this bill pass this evening.

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, as this is my first opportunity to address this House formally I would like to add my congratulations to those of many hon. members who have congratulated you and Madam Speaker on your appointments. At this time I would also like to wish the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) well. I understand that he is in hospital. I sincerely hope that he is out and back in this House before too long.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to the previous member who represented Calgary North, Hon. Doug Harkness, who served in that capacity from 1953 until 1968. I am told by many members in this House that he was one of the best ministers of defence that Canada has ever had. I would like to also draw the attention of the House to my predecessor, Hon. Eldon Woolliams, who served here from 1968 until February, 1980. I know the gentleman personally. I am sure hon. members will agree that he served honourably. His expertise in many areas such as justice will be remembered for a long time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker, I should like to talk about Calgary and my riding of Calgary North for a moment. Much mention has been made in this House of Alberta generally and of some of its cities, but hon. members should know that most of the people who live in the city of Calgary come from other parts of Canada. Indeed, many people who live in Calgary North do not come from there originally. It may be a surprise to some to learn that 30 per cent of the residents of the new area, Calgary North, come from Ontario and Quebec. We know this because we had to check the figures recently due to some problems we were having with the postal service.

There are many exciting things about Calgary, foremost of which is the Calgary Stampede. Last weekend a member of cabinet attended the stampede. He had occasion to ride a horse, and I am told that he laboured at it for four hours. In case hon. members probably do not know to whom I refer, I must add that he was a good sport about it.

I should like to turn now to Bill C-30, Mr. Speaker, which was introduced by the Minister of Finance on May 22. In his brief remarks on that occasion the minister told the House that he would like to borrow $12 billion, but he gave no reason. We have asked, both in the House and in committee, what he intends to do with the money, but we still have not had an answer. He came like a beggar in the night asking for money, but we cannot find out what he wants to do with it.

This borrowing bill seeks authority to borrow $12 billion for the fiscal year 1980-81. It also seeks authority to borrow in foreign currencies. We have asked about that also and have received a number of answers.

On May 27 when the minister spoke on the second reading of this bill, in a reference to clause 2 he said, as reported at page 1478 of Hansard:

> This clause, the one to which I referred, will serve to confirm the authority of the government to borrow and repay loans in currencies other than Canadian dollars.

That indicates to me that this government wishes to borrow in foreign currency. When we put the question in committee, however, we were told that it did not, that it was only for the exchange fund.

I should like now to make reference to the mini budget brought in by the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. This is not where this borrowing is coming from. When he brought in his mini budget on April 21 the minister told us that revenues this year will be approximately $45 billion, up from $40 billion, for an increase of 12.5 per cent. He told us that total expenditures will be $60.4 billion, up from $53.1 billion, an increase in excess of 13 per cent.

Why is the government spending more money than it is taking in, Mr. Speaker? Why must it borrow? Is it due to the heavy service cost of debt? At the present time 20 cents of every tax dollar goes to service the debt. I do not know why we cannot pay as we go along. Is it because of the increased oil consumption or oil import compensation which now stands at $3.5 or $4 billion, an increase from $1.5 billion a year ago? And we do not yet know what the cost will be because we do not have an oil agreement.

The deficit which the minister discussed and which is related to this borrowing bill has increased from $11.4 billion last year to $14.2 billion this year. The minister said recently in this House that the deficit could even be higher, so he is not sure about it any longer.

Does the government really have to borrow $12 billion? Let us look at the facts, Mr. Speaker. As of April 1, 1980, approximately $2.9 billion was available in unused borrowings. According to the staff of the Department of Finance there was approximately $90 million left by July 1. This means that in the three months from April to July the government spent approximately $1 billion per month, or $33 million per day. That is more than they took in.

Why will the government not produce a budget, Mr. Speaker? They are spending 25 per cent more than they are taking in. Surely the public is entitled to see a budget, and surely this House should be able to examine that budget. We are now being told there may be a budget in the fall. But when is the fall? In Resolute Bay it is in August; are we going to get a budget in August? In Victoria, they do not have fall; they only have spring and summer. Ask anybody from Victoria about that.

We do not know when this budget will be brought in, Mr. Speaker. We have asked about it repeatedly but all we are told is that there may be a budget in the fall. We asked for a commitment on a date, but we did not get one.

Mr. Kaplan: When did you give the opposition a commitment?

Mr. Wright: No minister will give a commitment. All they will say is "maybe" or that they will try. Is it because they want to spend all the money first?

Mr. Kaplan: How did you handle it?

Mr. Wright: At the finance committee meeting the departmental staff went over some aspects of the borrowing by this government, and I should like to review them briefly. We were told that the public is prepared to accept up to $1.5 billion borrowing by the government at any one time. We were also told that they feel justified in coming to the market approximately eight times per year. That does not give them any leeway, Mr. Speaker. It adds up to $12 billion, a nice round figure.

Why is the Minister of Finance holding back? Is he afraid to bring in a budget at this time because revenues will drop? He told us that we will have zero growth this year, but some economists are predicting a 4 per cent decline in growth and we know what that will do to revenues. He has already said expenditures may be higher than he forecast. That is why he does not want to produce a budget and is saying "maybe" we will have one in the fall. Well, maybe we will not. Maybe the government will just spend the money and again ask for more borrowing power.

What is the government going to do with the money, Mr. Speaker? We cannot find out from them. The government has been accused of pork-barrelling. Is that where the money is going? Is it going on such things as shifting a uranium plant? Is it possible that it is going to pay the costs of moving offices to Charlottetown for Liberal supporters? It is possible it is going to pay the expenses for members of the government who are twinned with Alberta, to travel back and forth on government business? I do not know. The minister will not answer these questions. Maybe that is what it is for. We would be more than happy to see hon. members out there, but not on government business. They do not represent that area.

Is the Minister of Finance holding up the budget because there is no oil agreement with Alberta? He has alluded to that, but that is no reason. The problem lies not with the Minister of Finance in this case, but with the minister of energy. The minister of energy will not conclude an agreement. The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) talked about this problem, and he mentioned how Alberta has paid out or forgone large amounts of funds over the years.

I would like now to refer hon. members to another part of Canada in the early 1900s. I am speaking of the maritimes. At that time maritimers were well off. It is not just Alberta now. Back in the 1900s the maritimes had large amounts of hay which were exported. The maritimes also had coal and ships, but they do not have those things any more. They did not allow for the day when they would not have those assets. At the present time the maritimes have a growing and important pulp industry which will keep growing. But if we could take that pulp industry and compress it into ten or fifteen years, I ask what would those people want for their pulp? I can tell you they would want a much higher price, and they would want to put aside the funds so that they would have the funds when the pulp was gone.

Some of the hon. members across on the other side may laugh, but there are many people in the maritimes who are not laughing. When I lived in Inverness 20 years ago it had an unemployment rate of 25 per cent, and it still has 25 per cent unemployment. That is not speculation, that is a fact.

When the minister of energy brought forth this force majeure clause, he cut off all negotiations. Quite honestly, one does not negotiate like that. I suggest to the hon. members on the other side that they should speak to the minister of energy and tell him that this is no way to negotiate in good faith. People do not go around making rash statements or belittling people, whether they are individuals or governments. It is no way to deal as one Canadian to another, as one province to another, or as one government to another. Unfortunately this is what the minister has done. I do not mean to stand here and belittle him because I now live in Alberta. It is a fact of life that the only thing that was discussed during the last weekend I was in Alberta when the Calgary Stampede was on and we went to a number of receptions, was the oil and what type of a minister is negotiating on behalf of the people.

People do not want someone to come to them and say, "This is the way it is." I was in the room when Mr. Leitch, the Alberta minister of energy, received a phone call. I was sitting ten feet from him. He walked to the phone and came back within three minutes. Mr. Leitch is a man who does not anger, and he was red in the face. Everyone knows, and I believe even the minister of energy will tell you, that Mr. Leitch is a reasonable man. That is no way to negotiate the future of our country, Mr. Speaker.

I would now like to return to the subject of the total debt in Canada. It is unbelievable that we have something over $80 billion in total debt in this country. This represents $3,000 for every man, woman and child. I have asked the Minister of Finance what is a good or a reasonable amount of debt, and I have yet to receive an answer. I know the gentleman has more expertise in economics than I do. Therefore he should be able to say. I can guess. Every other member here can guess, but why will the Minister of Finance not at least say what is a reasonable amount? I know what our economists are saying. I know what the World Bank is saying and I know what the International Monetary Fund is saying, but what is the Minister of Finance saying? When he goes to Europe and talks to these people, they tell him what they think, but he does not come back and tell us anything. He has yet to reply to any of the questions in this regard.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised spending restraints in 1968. At least six times afterwards he has promised the same spending restraints, and yet the total debt in Canada has risen from $500 million to over $80 billion. I ask where is the spending restraint? I am sure that there are many members on all sides of the House who recognize this danger. We are all concerned about it. We must start now to do something about it. We cannot put it off for our children to deal with it. We cannot put if off until other members come forth who are not afraid to act. We must act, because it is costing us too much. We cannot stand this burden. The governor of the Bank of Canada stated on May 29, 1980, at page 3:7 of the Proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, the following:

> Our greatest problem lies in recent economic history. When one looks back over the past 25 years it is clear that the basic trend has been toward higher inflation. This tendency predates current popular explanations of inflation like oil price shocks or beef cycles. There is little doubt that the key reason for this slide toward ever more inflation was an effort by public policy—

What he says next is the most important part. His sentence continues:

> —in most countries to achieve and maintain more output and employment from their economies than was consistent with price stability.

Even the governor of the Bank of Canada is telling us that we have to have more restraint.

In the Bank of Canada's annual report Mr. Bouey says that if there is not a curb on public expenditures, capital investment on equipment and machinery sectors will be adversely affected. In other words, the large amount of borrowing which this government has done over a period of 12 years, and continues to do, could be affecting the economy and the expansion of industry.

We are reasonable on this side of the House. We believe the government needs some funds. But how much does it need? The Department of Finance has already stated that about $1 billion is being spent per month. The Minister of Finance has said that he may bring in a budget in the fall. Let us assume that that would be October, which is four months away. This House should approve $4 billion which is enough to get the government through October when a budget is presented and then we, as members, can all examine this budget. We will be even more reasonable than the hon. member, the minister of industry. We will up it by 50 per cent. We will not only suggest $4 billion, which is all that is needed—and the finance department admits that—but we will make it $6 billion, and in that way there will be a surplus. If we do not get the budget by October, you will have an extra couple of months. That is being reasonable. We Canadians cannot go on forever and have our children pay for today's expenditures. We must show restraint. I appeal to members on all sides of the House to show restraint so that our children will not say that our governments did not know how to run the country, that they just knew how to spend money.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-30 because, together with other members on this side, I am totally opposed to this blank cheque type of borrowing. We must realize what Bill C-30 says. In paragraph (2) the minister is authorized to borrow money by the issue and sale or pledge of securities of Canada. That means the government is asking us to sign a blank cheque without knowing the type of securities they are going to give. Are they going to mortgage my home? Are they going to mortgage your home? Are they going to put our national parks up for sale? Are they going to sell our national resources? I would like to know that. They go on with "in such form, for such separate sums, as at such rates of interest" as they deem fit. I want to know what rate of interest they are going to pay. Are they going to pay 25 per cent, 50 per cent? Are they prepared to borrow at that rate? As an ordinary member of Parliament responsible for the purse strings, I should know that.

Here's a kicker. They can enter into any other terms and conditions as the governor in council, that is the cabinet, may approve. I simply cannot give anyone, with my responsibility to my constituents, a blank cheque like that.

I subscribe totally to the views expressed by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). Members opposite should listen very carefully to that member because he did more for Canada as a country than their government has so far in total.

Members opposite might wonder why three Albertans rise this evening. It has to do with our unique history. Albertans learned through the depression what it means to have no money and no access to money from central Canada. We had to bleed. We cut and we bled. We know of what we are speaking.

I am convinced that the huge annual deficit of $14 billion, and the grotesque accumulated deficit of over $74 billion, are distorting all aspects of our Canadian life. Many people wonder how large a billion dollars is. To me, it is a thousand millionaires. When you look at the spending of our government at the national level, you find that we strip a thousand millionaires to their shorts every week with our budget. We strip a thousand millionaires to their shorts every month just for the deficit.

The annual deficit for 1980 will take the equivalent of every cent from 14,000 millionaires in this country. That is just the deficit. It does not pay for the ongoing budget of $60 billion. Members opposite, certainly the cabinet, would be wise to speak to Senator Manning of the other place if they want to find out how deeply we feel about balanced budgets in Alberta. They can speak to their own Senator Olson. He knows the western tradition. He will tell them what we learned about paying for things as you go. It means that future generations can have stability and a freedom to make decisions they might want to make in their time.

One might wonder why this deficit causes such distortion in our Canadian way of life. The first distortion is that the government has an unfair advantage over ordinary citizens and small businesses in particular when it comes to the marketplace. The reason is the government brings in bills like the one I just referred to whereby it can negotiate a loan at any rate, term or condition, and put up security that I as a businessman cannot and therefore have no chance of meeting that type of competition.

The other distortion that is absolutely major in this country is the distortion over energy. What we need in this country and should have by 1990 is about ten tar sands projects on stream. The cost of that would be something like $80 billion to $100 billion. We do not have that money. I want to explain why.

With regard to the oil situation, we have three sources. We have the light conventional crude that is left in Alberta, which is relatively easy and cheap to produce. We are producing about 1.2 million barrels per day and have about ten years' supply left. We have synthetic which again comes largely from Alberta. There is an unlimited amount of that in terms of reserves. However, production costs places this at the going world price at this point. Then we have the third supply, imported oil. We import about 450,000 barrels a day at the world price. Of one thing we can be absolutely certain. Within ten years Canadians will be paying the world price. When the light conventional crude from Alberta is gone, we pay the world price. We might be importing every barrel from another nation or we might be producing it from the tar sands, but we will be paying the world price.

This is where the tragedy occurs. We need to have the money from that 10 billion barrels of light conventional crude in order to fund the synthetic oils. With our accumulated deficit, we do not have $100 billion to put in the tar sands plants, so we need that money. To this point Alberta has already forgone about $17 billion. Where has that money gone? Has it gone into tar sands plants? Absolutely not.

Has the money gone into making central Canadian manufacturing plants more competitive? Do we meet world competition with that subsidy? The fact is we do not. Even if we did, we could say it was justified because central Canada could compete in the world, but it does not. We still need to have tariff protection for central Canada. That tariff protection impacts directly on us in the west because it means we have to pay more for all the products we get. That is the tragedy.

We in the west also have a belief that we own those resources. That belief might seem strange to members opposite, but they just need to read the constitution of the nation. I will read parts of section 109:

> All lands, mines, minerals, and royalties belonging to the several provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick at the Union, . . . shall belong to the several provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick in which the same are situate or arise—

In 1930, by an amendment to the British North America Act, 21 George V, chapter 26 Statutes of the United Kingdom, the same rights were extended to Alberta and Saskatchewan. We feel we own those resources just as Ontario and Quebec own theirs.

Another distortion that we face is the interest that we in this country pay on the national debt. As a result of the $74 billion we face the prospect this year of paying 25 cents or 25 per cent of every dollar in taxes in order to cover the interest on the debt. It will not reduce the principal by one cent. If we want to reduce the principal, we should probably be applying 50 cents of every tax dollar. The government's hands are tied as a result of that so that they cannot respond to the real hardship. Now that we have real hardship in the automotive industry, now that our Saskatchewan and Manitoba farmers are hurt by the drought—

• (2130)

Mr. McDermid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if you would call the government side to order and ask them to hold their committee meetings out in the lobby rather than in the House. We would like to hear the hon. member who has the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills.

Mr. Thacker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was pointing out how much money we spend on simply servicing the debt without reducing the principal. What that has done is to tie the government's hands at a time when there is a legitimate need for government to be involved. There is no doubt that the auto workers are hurting badly and that we should be in there helping them. There is no doubt that the farmers in Manitoba and Saskatchewan are hurting because of a catastrophe which could well be as bad as the depression of the 1930s. They need help. Agrobusiness is something I am more familiar with, and I know they need help.

The Trudeau years, the late sixties and seventies, were good time for Canada vis-à-vis other countries in the world. It was a time when we should have been balancing our budgets so that now, as the result of the OPEC distortion and all of that work through in the world economy, when we need to borrow money to help people, we would have balanced budgets so that we could go into debt legitimately and work our way through it. That is the way the system should work, and I believe that if there were a degree of honesty on the other side, even of common sense, that would be an irrefutable truth that they would agree to. I am convinced that as citizens each and every one of us, irrespective of the party to which we belonged, that we in the upcoming constitutional negotiations ought to protect ourselves from government. We have to protect ourselves as they did in the French revolution, as they did in the American revolution or at the time of Magna Carta, and what we should be insisting in our constitution is that a federal government, or any government, cannot have a deficit except in very restricted circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: One could agree in time of war. One could agree in times of real depression. And we would agree that in times of natural disaster the government should be able to go into debt, and perhaps even for capital projects which would be used by future generations. But for us to have gotten this far into debt, $74 billion—25 per cent of our tax dollars going to service the debt without reducing the principal—an annual deficit of $14 billion piling up—

Mr. Chénier: Repetition!

An hon. Member: You have to say it many times to get it over.

Mr. Harquail: You said you wanted order. Why don't you keep quiet? Get back to your seat so that we can listen to this man.

Mr. Thacker: We are obviously getting close to adjournment. But I was going on to say that for capital projects I would have no hesitation at all in going back to my constituents and saying, "Folks, I want to borrow this money because it is going to be used for capital projects; it can be paid for by future generations." But today, we are saddling our children and our grandchildren with a dept which will give them no benefit. To that extent we should all be able to agree.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke in Winnipeg of economic rights which should be enshrined in our constitution.

There is another distortion, Mr. Speaker. I believe these deficits are distorting the very fabric of our nation and the relationship between those who live in the west and those who live in the middle and those in the east. It is being distorted for no valid reason. The other cause for concern is high interest rates. People phone and write to me almost daily asking why they are so high and have to be so high. The reason is simply that Canada as a nation has a huge international debt. The debt has fallen due and we cannot pay off the note. We have to go hat in hand to the international money market and say; "Gentlemen, we cannot pay the principal; will you renegotiate it, will you relend it?" They say, "Gladly, gentlemen, because in Canada you have resources coming out of your ears; but the rate will be high." One of the members opposite was arguing that all countries have high deficits. But that does not make it right for this nation, Sir. We could have been the unprecedented leader had we stuck with balanced budgets over the last ten years. We could have been out of trouble because the hard truism is that if you do not owe the money you do not have to pay the interest. That is the lesson we know in the west.

Another distortion we continue to come back to arises because I am sure members opposite do not realize the great depth of feeling in the west over this energy situation. It goes back to our perceived feelings of ownership as set out in section 109. Ontario established that in the Supreme Court of Canada. Asbestos from Quebec, nickel from Ontario, hydroelectric from both the major provinces—all those things were sacrosanct even during the thirties when we were hurting badly. They were sacrosanct and we continued to pay world prices for those products. Now, suddenly, for the constitution to be ignored—seemingly we are to be under a different scheme—just does not sit well in the west. This is a very serious matter to which I urge members opposite to pay very close attention.

We in the west vote monolithically. We do not have that tradition of long-time Conservative, long-time Liberal adherence. It was the west that threw up the UFA in 1921, en bloc. We threw up the Progressives. We threw up the Social Credit in 1935, en bloc. We put in Peter Lougheed and his Conservatives in 1971 en masse. And, just like that, the west on this energy question could crystallize around this Western Separatist Party. I do not mean to be an alarmist. I just mean to say to you, Mr. Speaker, as a member who has come down here to try to do my best for my constituents, that they feel very strongly about that.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: Sir, can you imagine what might have been during the last ten years if we had had a government that faced reality? Governments should throw up proposals that they believe the people need and, coincident with those proposals, there should be a taxing plan so that the people can assess the programs, assess the tax, and decide whether they want the programs. If they do not want the programs they do not get faced with the taxes. If that had happened I think the people would still have chosen medicare, they would still have chosen to have a Canada Assistance Plan. But they would have been prepared to pay for it as it grew, and we could have had reasonable tax increasses over the last few years which would not have hurt us much as individuals and we would not be saddled today with this huge deficit. Governments learn by unscrupulous ways to raise money from the prairie people to whom they are proposing the programs, but not a corresponding tax. So these people are really paying for the program, but they do not realize it. What is unfair is that only certain people are paying for the program.

The Government of Canada owes approximately $16 billion of its deficit to the Canadian people and institutions by way of canada Saving Bonds. We owe approximately $18 billion as a deficit by way of treasury bills, and I think we owe about $47 billion to the general public. That is money that is owing to the Canadian people. If it cannot be paid, what is the alternative of the government? I presume its alternative is to have to cancel the debt so that the people of Canada or some of the people of Canada are going to pay, and it is going to have to be by expropriation.

When OPEC increased its prices, had the government levelled with the people of Canada and increased those prices on a reasonable basis as did Japan and Germany—and they still have the strongest economies in the world—we could be right up there as a world leader. We would not be 23 million people sitting on the assets of half a continent and yet going to the international community with our hat in our hand for 450,000 barrels of oil a day. It is absolutely immoral that we as Canadian people are into the international oil market when countries without a drop of oil such as Japan and Germany surely have a prior claim. The developing countries of the world have a prior claim. We should not be where we are in terms of having to import oil. We should be a leader in that respect.

I could speak for a great deal of time, but I want to give other hon. members a chance, and I want to make a plea, mostly to hon. members opposite, that they think very carefully before they make any precipitous moves in the energy field because the depth of feeling in the west is tremendously deep and solid on that issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kempling: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-3, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

[Translation]

Mr. Axworthy moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

[Translation]

Mr. Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, when you put the question, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) was not in the House and the government members passed the motion. I do not see how the hon. member for Winnipeg North can be recognized since he was not even in this House when the question was put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When the question was put, I hesitated to see if there was consent when I asked if it was the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion and it was indicated to me that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wanted the floor. So I recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, members of my party want to reiterate the views we expressed at second reading stage. We oppose this bill because it continues the policy adopted some years ago by Liberal governments and continued by succeeding Liberal governments and by the short-lived—thank goodness—Conservative government of last year and by the present Liberal government, of trying to fool the public that the costs of unemployment insurance are smaller than they are and that the costs of unemployment are much smaller than they are. They have done that and propose to continue to do that with this bill by shifting the responsibility for paying for unemployment insurance benefits to those who are unemployed through the premiums paid for by both employers and employees, rather than paying for the cost of unemployment by the government as has been the case for many years.

When this country first adopted a system of unemployment insurance premiums to be used to pay benefits to those who were unemployed, it was never believed that we would have the rate of unemployment we have at the present time. In the 1940s when the act was first brought into being, we were in a war and we had virtually no unemployment. We had very little unemployment and certainly very little long-term unemployment in most areas of the country through the 1950s and 1960s.

In the 1940s and 1950s Liberal governments said that they believed in full employment and that unemployment would be a very small factor in this country, but they gave up that belief in practice because they refused to face up to the necessity of governments playing an active role, planning, and insisting that our economy work to provide jobs for every Canadian who wants to work.

Not so many years ago the Economic Council calculated that we would have full employment in this country when the percentage of the working force which was unemployed was not more than 3 per cent. That was in the 1960s. It is now substantially more than double that figure. By 1979 the Economic Council in its publication "Two cheers for the Eighties" set the equilibrium unemployment rate at 6 per cent. In economic terms this is the rate of unemployment which can be maintained without creating inflationary pressure in the labour market. In 1977 the Ontario Conservative government called the full employment norm a rate of 5.2 per cent unemployment. From the point of view of policy-making these rates are enormously important inasmuch as government uses them as targets. These rates in effect determine the degree of government commitment to policies which encourage the growth of employment.

It is obvious now that since the Liberals are eliminating the vested interest they had in maintaining low levels of unemployment, this government has simply thrown up its hands. Back in 1971 when the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) was minister of employment, he brought in major amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act in which the target for unemployment was set at 4 per cent. In the legislation we passed in 1971 the hon. member was proud—although he does not talk about it now—of the fact that the premiums paid by employers and employees would pay for the benefits of all the unemployed as long as unemployment was not more than 4 per cent. If the rate went over 4 per cent, the then minister said that the country would pay for unemployment insurance benefits out of general revenue. The minister said at the time that he was proud of it, that it was the reason governments would try very hard to implement policies to maintain the rate of unemployment at less than 4 per cent.

We have since had a whole series of amendments to that legislation, each of which has had a very simple purpose. It was to move the cost of unemployment insurance benefits from the Government of Canada, from the general revenues of Canada, to the premium payers.

In 1971 when the act had its major revision, the unemployment rate was forecast at 4 per cent throughout the decade. Benefit costs up to 4 per cent were to be paid from premiums. As I said, the government would pay for premiums above that level in recognition of its responsibility to ensure adequate employment. In 1975 we had another bill which set out the rate at which government contributions helped to pay initial benefits from 4 per cent up. It was changed to an eight-year moving average rate of unemployment. As the rate has gone up more than twice the 4 per cent, under that provision the premiums go up and the contribution which the government makes out of general revenues is reduced.

In 1977 there was another bill which eliminated two extended benefit phases for which the government, not the premium payers, was previously responsible. In 1978 when Bill C-14 was passed, the Liberals claimed that the measure would save $580 million. In fact the savings were a fraction of that, $180 million. The other $400 million was merely a transfer of cost from the federal account to the premium account. From the early seventies onward when the government's contribution to unemployment insurance benefit pay-outs was 53 per cent, the government share declined to 38 per cent after the 1977 amendments and to something well below that after the 1978 amendments. The intent of this legislation is to reduce it to less than 20 per cent. The department projects that the total unemployment insurance program costs for 1981-82 will be $5.2 billion. The government contributions are projected at $951 million.

When the minister introduced this bill, he said that it would mean the Government of Canada will save $378 million in direct government expenditures. Also he indicated that it was a saving which members of the House would recognize as very important at a time of very severe restraints on government funds available for other programs. The minister was trying to fool the public. Proof for that can be found in a very interesting editorial which appeared a few days ago in the Financial Times. Certainly it is not a very radical publication which can be as accused of being overly sympathetic to ordinary working people. This journal is read by people in the business community. An editorial entitled "Shifting the Jobless Burden Is Wrong" appeared in the July 7, 1980, edition of the Financial Times, which reads in part as follows:

The House of Commons has been debating a bill which will charge almost the entire cost of the unemployment insurance system to the payroll tax on employers and employees.

The bill will be passed, supported as it is by the Tories as well as the Liberals.

But it is bad legislation, wrong in principle and practice. It is based on illusion and will result in fiscal trickery.

I hope the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) is listening.

Mr. Evans: I am.

Mr. Orlikow: It continued:

It violates the principle that the cost of government should be borne according to ability to pay. And it imposes new barriers to the hiring of the unemployed at a time when unemployment is growing.

It went on to indicate that in fact the premiums were a different form of taxation. It continued:

Taxes are justified, of course, to pay for welfare schemes as well as other government expenditures. Most of the recipients of unemployment insurance payments are in genuine need. But Parliament should take a closer took at this particular tax before making it the main source of funds for a $5 billion welfare scheme.

It is regressive. Working Canadians earning less pay a higher proportion of their income than those earning more. It has no exemption or deduction, no allowance for wage earners trying to support families. It is a flat rate charge on wages up to $290 a week in 1980. The employer pays 1.89 per cent of this amount, the employee, 1.35 per cent.

There are two main principles of taxation—ability to pay and benefit received. The unemployment insurance tax corresponds to neither, so every increase in the rate increases the inequity of the tax system. And it works against economic growth just as much as—or more than—any other tax hike.

It is also a piece of fiscal trickery.

It goes on to point out that the argument of the minister that this bill will save government money is nonsense. The government is simply shifting the cost from the general taxpayer to the payroll taxpayer.

Our main reason for objecting to this bill is that we believe the rate of unemployment we have, and the large amounts of money we are spending for unemployment insurance benefits, are completely inexcusable. It is incomprehensible to us that we will be paying hundreds of thousands of people who are willing and able to work, to use our raw materials, and our machinery to produce goods and services which we need—it is incomprehensible that we should pay them well to sit at home doing nothing.

Rather than spending $5 billion for unemployment insurance benefits, we believe we should have from the government plans and programs to put people back to work. Instead of job-creating programs, instead of spending more money and effort on programs to create jobs to put people back to work, the government has cut back on the job-creation programs. This year we are spending less money on job-creation programs than we spent last year. This is at a time when almost every day from every part of Canada there are announcements of plants being shut down, of lay-offs and more people being unemployed.

In 1980 we are not any longer talking about unemployment in the slow growth areas of Canada. We are not talking about unemployment in Newfoundland and the Atlantic provinces which traditionally have had high rates of unemployment. We are not talking about unemployment in the Interlake area of Manitoba which has always had a large number of unemployed. We are talking about unemployment in industrial cities of Ontario among people who have worked for ten, 15 and 20 years and today are being laid off by the hundreds of thousands every week.

These are the reasons we oppose this bill and we want the government to bring forward programs to put people back to work, rather than bringing forth legislation and programs to pay people to sit at home doing nothing. We believe that can be done. Our party has adopted as a fundamental principle the idea that we can have full employment in Canada.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EMPLOYMENT—PROGRAMS TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on May 2 I put a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) concerning direct job-training programs and employment programs of the federal government. You will recall that a little over a year ago when the minister was a Conservative minister for employment in Canada, all direct employment programs were cut back in the Ontario region. Consequently, throughout northern Ontario, these programs which have been very important for seasonally unemployed, to native employment, particularly in periods when the forest products industry was in a slow growth period and so on, there were literally thousands of people on unemployment insurance and welfare.

In my own constituency of Algoma during the last four or five years we have experienced something like 400 to 500 people employed in programs of Canada Works and the Local Initiatives Program. I am concerned that similar large numbers will be seeking employment this coming winter with the slowdown in the economy in the United States and resulting lay-offs in the forest products industry and veneer mills, sawmills, and even in some of the steel mills where there are lay-offs or threats of lay-offs, as well as the general unemployment we experience through seasonal factors with low construction activity during winter months in areas like the north shore of Lake Huron, Manitoulin Island, the north of the Sault area and so on.

I am pleased the minister responded positively indicating there would be an announcement of a program. Since then a program was announced, but that was all—just the announcement of a new program called the Canada Community Development program. I am pleased the minister is reinstating the program. However, I think it is important to know exactly when that program and details will be announced, along with the criteria and the types of projects that will be funded. We should know when the application forms will be available and when the projects will get under way.

I think it is very undesirable to start these projects in November and December often in communities which are building facilities, and I felt the Canada Works program up until last year had solved most of these problems. In fact they were dealing with applications in the spring months, having them adjudicated or reviewed by departmental officials and ministerial advisory boards during the month of July, with the projects getting under way on the first of September, right after Labour Day, when we usually see unemployment starting to cut in seasonally. As a result, projects which were of a construction nature were able to be started, putting footings in and frames up, before the arrival of winter weather, and often completed before the winter months.

It is terribly important that the department move ahead with this on a rapid basis, allowing communities and non-profit organizational groups to know what are the criteria, when the applications and forms will be available, in order to see these projects under way in the early fall months rather than November and December when seasonal difficulties, with the cold and the weather, are already upon us. Certainly in my own constituency there has been a tremendous number of worth-while projects, including community wharves and marinas that have been constructed in places like Gore Bay, Little Current, Blind River, Thessalon and Bruce Mines.

There are a number of communities waiting to complete or go on with projects of this nature. Other communities have built firehalls and medical centres. Perhaps one of the most important and most critical such projects is native housing. We have been waiting now for several months for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) to announce the new native housing programs which are grossly underfunded with something like a capital allowance of $12,000 per unit. That is completely unsatisfactory.

If we could have a clear outline of how this Canada Community Development Program will work from the parliamentary secretary, it would let these community groups get on with the planning and allow this program to move forward. Really, it is getting very late for projects to be approved, adjudicated, and funded for the early fall months.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am sincerely happy that the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) chose to be here this evening to bring up his question, unlike other members who were supposed to be here and for whom answers were prepared but who do not seem to be present.

In any event, with respect to the interesting question raised by the hon. member for Algoma, the minister announced in the House on June 2, 1980, that direct job-creation programs will indeed be reinstated, particularly for high unemployment areas. In addition, the minister announced other initiatives which will create job and training opportunities for over 81,000 Canadians. This includes those Canadians who will be employed under the Employment Tax Credit program, which is presently under consideration in the other place.

The intent to respond to the unemployment situation, as outlined in the throne speech, has been acted upon quickly. The announcement of June 2 has introduced a series of measures, totalling $137 million for this fiscal year, to respond to the critical and immediate employment problems faced by Canadians.

More than $100 million will be used this winter and next year for Canada Community Development Projects across the country, with particular emphasis on areas of high unemployment. Local organizations will be eligible to sponsor projects that are supportive of established priorities, such as fisheries enhancement, energy conservation and tourism development. There will be a basic allocation to each federal constituency for this program, as well as an additional allocation based on the labour surplus rate in the constituency.

I wish to assure the members of this House that the Canada Community Development Projects will be available in all provinces and territories. They will not be restricted to particular regions. Program information and application forms will be made available to the public on July 28, 1980. The application deadline will be September 29, 1980, and projects may start after November 15, 1980, but no later than February 2, 1981.

The Canada Community Development Projects Program is expected to result in about 15,500 jobs for an estimated 19,400 participants. In addition to the Canada Community Development Projects, other new programs include the Canada Community Services Projects, which will provide voluntary organizations with funding scaled over a two-year period to meet pressing social needs. There is also the New Technology Employment program which will stimulate the development and application of new technology by providing wage subsidies to firms and research institutes which hire recent post-secondary graduates who are unemployed or underemployed. Then there is the Local Economic Development Assistance program, LEDA, designed to assist selected communities experiencing high levels of unemployment to stimulate private sector employment through economic development.

These job-creation initiatives are in addition to a number of training program increments and reflect the commitment of this government to expanded and productive direct job creation across the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.10 p.m.

FOREST FIRES

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATION IN UTILIZING FIREFIGHTING FACILITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the very serious loss of trees from forest fires, and the fact that reports yesterday and today indicate further outbreaks of forest fires, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac (Mr. Vankoughnet):

That this House requests the Minister of the Environment to initiate consultations with his appropriate provincial counterparts with a view to co-operating with them in fully utilizing Canadian firefighting facilities.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CABINET COMMITTEES

MEETING OF WESTERN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Prime Minister has tabled a list of cabinet committees which reveals the existence of a committee on western affairs. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That, in light of the government's record on western issues thus far, this House directs the chairman of the western affairs cabinet committee to advise the House as to when the committee will have its first meeting, and whether:

(a) the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will appear before the committee to explain his energy policy, and

(b) the committee will appear before the Minister of Transport to describe to him a grain elevator.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE PROGRAM FOR LAID-OFF AUTO WORKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given the fact that Rockwell International of Canada has announced a lay-off of 300 employees at its Chatham plant and 200 employees at its Milton plant, a further indicator of the serious problems facing the Canadian manufacturing sector, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That the government immediately introduce a transitional assistance program to assist the more than 22,000 auto workers in Canada that are now on indefinite lay-off.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SPORTS

RECOGNITION OF CANADA'S OLYMPIC ATHLETES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and I trust that the House will give this motion enthusiastic support.

In view of the fact that many of Canada's young athletes who have agreed to support the government's decision to boycott the Moscow Olympics over Russia's insatiable appetite for expansionism have trained for years in preparation for the event to represent their country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan):

That the Government of Canada prepare appropriate recognition of all these athletes and their supporters, of whom we are so proud, to show that all Canadians recognize their dedication not only to their sport but their loyalty to their country and its principles of freedom.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

RELIGIOUS FAITHS OF SUCCESSORS TO QUEEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, I rise to present a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, the urgency being the fact that the British Parliament is about to consider a matter affecting this country.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni):

That the new and first made-in-Canada constitution reinforce its insistence on religious liberty by including the desire of the Canadian people that successors to our present Canadian Queen may be an adherent not only of the Protestant but also of the Catholic or other religious faiths.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ENERGY

EXPORT TAX—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with a very important matter.

Considering the growing concern of some provinces because the federal government might levy a tax on energy exports; considering the refusal of this government to disclose its true intention in that connection which has at the same time given rise to a very negative response from Quebec and British Columbia; considering finally that the behaviour of the government on the point is unacceptable for the orderly progress of current discussions on constitutional reform, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson):

That this House unanimously urge the responsible minister to state the intentions of the government in that connection before the federal-provincial conference to be held in September, 1980.

Madam Speaker: Such motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REFINANCING OF AHOP HOMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43.

Whereas the Minister of Public Works, responsible for Canada Mortgage has stated in this House that the AHOP program is 95 per cent successful, and whereas areas such as Brampton, Mississauga and Kitchener have vacancy rates of up to 50 per cent through mainly quit claims and abandonment; and whereas Canada Mortgage is now marketing these vacant units for up to $11,000 less than was paid for the homes originally, causing untold concern to those who have stuck with this ill-conceived program, and whereas they have to refinance these homes with first and second mortgages over the next year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That this House urge Canada Mortgage to guarantee the people living in AHOP homes that they will not be penalized in the refinancing of their homes since the value today is much less than will be their total financial obligation.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

STATUS OF WOMEN

FIRING OF SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO HEALTH MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, in view of the news today that the New Horizons program for many has become a personal Lost Horizon for the special assistant to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who yesterday, in a fit of pique, summarily fired her special assistant for writing a memo to Liberal members advising them of their own legislation; and since on the face of it an injustice has been done to this faithful servant of government who received only two days' notice of this callous dismissal, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean):

That Parliament immediately direct the minister responsible for the status of women, the Lochinvar member from Winnipeg-Fort Garry, to immediately investigate this matter and report back to this House that political embarrassment and not sexist discrimination was the reason for this merciless move by the minister responsible for the welfare of all Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE PENSIONS FOR ALL AT AGE SIXTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

One of my constituents recently has been informed that she will not be eligible for a spouse's allowance. Her husband died just four months before she reached the age of 60. He was 68 years old at the time of his death. She is now expected to live on a widow's pension of some $127 per month. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House condemns the unjust pension law that relegates my constituent and many other Canadians to a life of extreme hardship and poverty, and that this House urges the government to implement immediately legislation making every Canadian, regardless of marital status, eligible for a pension at the age of 60.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

IMMIGRATION

MINISTERIAL PERMIT ISSUED TO GIUSEPPE CALAMUSA

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Immigration and Employment. It pertains to the ministerial permit issued last month to Giuseppe Calamusa.

Armed with the knowledge that Mr. Calamusa had been convicted on three occasions in Italy of serious criminal offences between 1961 to 1965, aware of the fact that Mr. Calamusa came to Canada illegally in 1968 and has been deported on five occasions, aware of the fact that in 1975 he was charged with counterfeiting in Toronto, that in 1976 he skipped bail and that in 1977 he was convicted and imprisoned, my question to the minister is this: how can he exercise his discretion in such an unjustifiable way, especially in light of the fact that the trial judge recommended his deportation?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He was tap-dancing.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, he does not even tap-dance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: In your hotels?

Mr. Axworthy: If hon. members would like an answer to the question, as the hon. member knows, under section 19(2) of the act there is, and always has been, an opportunity for those who have had records to be admitted to this country. In Mr. Calamusa's case he was deported, as the act provided. We did provide a permit for him to return to the country, based on compassionate grounds, namely, there would have been a split in the family because three of his children are Canadian citizens and one of them was very seriously ill.

Those, I think, were proper grounds to allow the gentleman to come back into the country until his affairs could be established and an opportunity given to him to prove whether he was prepared to rehabilitate himself. Those were the grounds upon which the decision was made.

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, I am certainly aware of the illness to which the minister has referred with respect to one of the children. But I ask the minister, what hard evidence did he take into consideration in deciding that the medical treatment this young man could have received in Italy was not as effective as it could be in, say, Winnipeg where he now resides?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, in this case we took into account all kinds of evidence. To repeat, I would say the evidence demonstrated that in terms of the position of the family, to maintain the unity of the family and to provide an opportunity for that family to establish itself in this country, based upon the claims and representations made by many people on behalf of the Calamusas who had spoken on their behalf, including the city council for the city of Niagara Falls, we felt that on balance the family deserved a chance.

Mr. Calamusa did adhere to the requirements of the law, and was deported. There is a permit but if there is any indiscretion beyond that, then he would be asked to leave. But in this case, I erred on the side of compassion and judgment.

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, I am glad that the minister took the point of representations made, because I would like to ask the minister what representations were made by Mr. Joseph Bova, a campaign worker for the minister, on behalf of this particular person, and did Mr. Bova know this Mr. Calamusa prior to the time that he moved to Winnipeg in June of this year?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, quite to the contrary. When the family made their appeal to me, along with others, I contacted Mr. Bova, who is a highly respected member of the Italian community, to ask his judgment and his advice and to see whether he would use his services to obtain employment and accommodation for the Calamusas if they were to resettle. He offered to provide those services as part of his contribution in helping that family make a good place in this country.

METHOD OF DEPORTATION OF MR. CALAMUSA

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the same minister and follows the questions raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Cambridge. I want to pursue the method in which the deportation order against Mr. Calamusa was carried out.

Will the minister confirm that Mr. Calamusa and his family were driven over 100 kilometres from Winnipeg to the U.S. border by two Canadian immigration officials in government cars, and will he confirm that the officials took the Calamusas across the border, waited for them and then returned them to Winnipeg, all at the taxpayers' expense?

Can he tell me why he was deported to the United States, and not back to the country from which he originally came illegally? Is all this action standard procedure of the Department of Employment and Immigration?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, this is standard procedure and has been going on for an awfully long time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: It is unfortunate that members opposite have not taken the opportunity to inform themselves of the proper procedure under the Immigration Act. One of the requirements under that act is that when a deportation order is issued, the Canadian authorities are required to carry out that deportation order and to accompany anybody to the point of debarkation, whether it is an airport or a point of entry. That is the proper procedure, and it was followed, Madam Speaker.

Mr. McDermid: As I understand it, Madam Speaker, standard procedure regarding deportation and re-entry through a ministerial permit is to have the person in question pick up that permit at the nearest Canadian consulate, which in this case was Minneapolis, some 500 miles away. Why was standard procedure waived in this particular case?

Mr. Trudeau: Because we have a heart.

Mr. McDermid: And is it just a coincidence that the Calamusas moved from Niagara Falls to Winnipeg for employment, or was the main reason to be close to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and in fact did he receive this job in Winnipeg before he had his first hearing with the minister, or after?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I would repeat that it is standard procedure to provide this kind of travel to a point of debarkation. The ministerial permit then is simply—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: If members opposite want proper answers they will have to allow me the time and the opportunity to give them. I really cannot hear them over their talking. The proper procedure is to allow those who are given a deportation order to be given a permit that they can then present upon re-entry.

As far as the work here is concerned, I see nothing wrong in someone trying to get away from a climate in which he had received adverse publicity, prompted by both the media and politicians, and start in a new place at a new time. That was the reason they came to Winnipeg, because there were people there who were prepared to help them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REPORT OF OECD ON POLICIES TO IMPROVE ECONOMIC CONDITIONS—BUDGET PROVISIONS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I will address my question to the Prime Minister. The OECD report released yesterday, in Paris, a survey of the economies of all the western countries, said:

—what is needed is a combination of policies directed at reducing underlying inflation, enhancing productive potential and reducing energy dependence.

Does the Prime Minister agree with that statement, and could he outline for the benefit of the House the government's policies with regard to those objectives?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am sorry, Madam Speaker, I have not read the report. I will be happy to take the advice of the hon. member and read it.

Mr. Rae: It is nice to know that the economic affairs of the country are getting the full attention of the Prime Minister at this time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: It is reassuring to all members of the House. This is just amazing: the government is prepared to spend its entire time on constitutional affairs and nothing at all on the economy.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Rae: It is just amazing. Talk about compassion! I would like to address a supplementary to the Prime Minister. The growth rate in Japan in 1980 is predicted to be nearly 10 per cent, and the growth rate in Canada is going to be minus three-quarters per cent for 1980, according to the OECD.

Japan's budgetary deficit is substantially larger than Canada's, on an over-all basis, but the fact is this is the case because it invests in industries in order to carry out some of the objectives that are stated in the OECD report. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is his intention to introduce a budget which will provide for productive investment in energy, housing, capital works and skilled trades which, while it may temporarily increase the deficit, will have the effect of stimulating growth and providing employment for Canadians.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, we have heard about the effects of stimulative deficits. The hon. member knows that we already have a very large deficit in the accounts of this country. If he is arguing that we should increase the size of that deficit, I would just advise him that the Minister of Finance is preparing a budget for some time next fall and he will have the answer then.

Mr. Rae: A final supplementary. Yesterday, the minister responsible for housing stated that the government was considering cutting the community services program which is involved in providing funds for basic infrastructure and other community services in towns and cities across the country. What is the logic of that kind of restraint, when the only effect it can have is to increase unemployment and reduce the ability of our municipalities to provide services for our citizens?

Mr. Trudeau: All forms of restraint are difficult for somebody. Yesterday, in an answer on this subject, I said the government was putting its restraint measures into effect but would not do so on the backs of the unemployed. The hon. member is coming forward with an argument in defence of the municipalities, which are within provincial jurisdiction.

It is certain we have been transferring large sums of money to the provinces and municipalities for various schemes. They are in a much better financial position than the federal government is, and if we are to exercise restraint it has to be in part at the expense of our large transfers to provincial jurisdictions.

DETERIORATION IN CURRENT ACCOUNTS BALANCE—REASON THEREFOR

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I should like to address my question to the acting minister. The OECD reports that Canada will be the only country of the seven major industrial nations to show a deterioration in its current accounts balance in the coming year. Canada's current accounts deficit is expected to be $7.4 billion during that period.

This is based on a forecast that our merchandise trade surplus, which is running at an annual rate of $5.3 billion for the first six months of this year, will drop to only $2.5 billion for the next 12 months.

Does the government agree with this abysmal forecast? To what does the minister attribute this drastic reduction forecast in our merchandise trade surplus, and what urgent action does the government plan to redress this problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State, Small Businesses): Madam Speaker, it is hard for anybody who is not a fortune teller to agree or not with forecasts, whatever their source may be. As far as the economic problems now experienced by the western world are concerned, the government is now developing an industrial strategy which we hope will ensure a better economic future for our country.

[English]

Mr. Thomson: Would the acting minister accept the proposition by OECD, that member countries should continue tight fiscal and monetary policies to contain the inflationary impact of the oil shock, and that what is needed is a combination of policies aimed at reducing underlying inflation and enhancing productive potential?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member wants to elicit from me the basic principles of the Minister of Finance's next budget, and it is not my job to give such information.

FOREST FIRES

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATION IN UTILIZING FIREFIGHTING FACILITIES

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Environment, but in his absence I will address it to his parliamentary secretary or to the acting minister.

In view of the serious loss of trees due to recent fires, and since fresh outbreaks are being reported, has the hon. gentleman consulted with his provincial counterparts with a view to co-operating with them in trying to reduce the loss of this valuable resource? Is he aware that a fleet of 12 to 14 Canadian-owned planes which are well equipped for fighting fires has been grossly underutilized?

• (1130)

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the minister, I will take notice of the hon. member's question and see that he gets a complete answer as soon as possible.

USE OF UNITED STATES AIRCRAFT IN FIGHTING FOREST FIRES

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of, and does he support the policy of his department whereby, while Canadian firefighting planes sit idle, his department is licensing American planes to come in from Michigan to fight fires in Ontario?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if my friend would like to give me specifics on that, I would reply immediately. As a general proposition, it is well known that we favour Canadian operators.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SALARY INCREASE FOR SENIOR EXECUTIVES—EQUITY FOR CLERKS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that the President of the Treasury Board announced yesterday a salary increase of 9.5 per cent for public servants in the senior executive and deputy minister groups, in view of the fact that the government's most recent offer to members of the clerical, regulatory and data processing groups was 7 per cent, and since the senior executive salary range is from about $35,000 to $65,000, while most clerks—85 per cent of whom are women—are making a piddling $12,800 per year, is the minister now willing to improve the government's offer to the clerks to bring it closer to the same dollar value gained by the senior executive group, or at least to a reasonable level comparable with inflation in order to live up to the government's throne speech commitment to treat working women equitably?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the increase for the senior management group announced yesterday is very reasonable, and less—as I indicated—than the amount suggested to us by the advisory group on executive remuneration. This group still lags substantially behind the private sector.

I have also said—and the hon. member knows—that the policy of the government is to establish comparability with the outside sector. That being said, the group in question has opted for the conciliation route. The conciliation board, I understand, is likely to be appointed in the very near future. I am sure that a successful and fair resolution of that particular wage negotiation will take place in the relatively near future.

REDUCTION IN FEMALE STAFF OF DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I think the government should take the lead in this area. My supplementary question will be to the minister of unemployment—the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. McDermid: You were right the first time.

Mr. Parker: I think so. In view of the minister's pretensions as a champion of equality for women, and in view of his vaunted employment strategy for women, will the minister tell the House why he has allowed the women's employment division of his department to degenerate from five officers to one, and why he has no intention of filling the recently vacated position of chief of the women's employment division?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, there is absolutely nothing degenerate going on in our department at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I would like to tell the hon. member that every department and every commission has had the experience of a restraint program which has been applied by past governments but that positions and person-years are available in this area. I have instructed, as part of that restraint program, X budgeting. It came to my attention a few weeks back. I have asked to have them restored.

As to why the position is not being filled, the present incumbent has taken sick leave, and the position is open until such time as it can be filled. She is away for a period of time and we have to determine whether she will return to it or whether we have to start the normal recruitment procedure to find a replacement.

IMMIGRATION

ISSUANCE OF MINISTERIAL PERMITS—DEPORTATION PROCEDURES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I want to pose some questions to the Minister of Employment and Immigration with regard to the Calamusa case.

I was interested in the minister's allegation that the procedures followed in this matter were standard procedures, and I think the House would like to know exactly what standard procedures are. I wonder if the minister would confirm for the House that it is his position and that of the government that it is standard procedure to provide a government car to take a deported person out of the country, hand that person a ministerial permit and then wait and drive that person back from the point outside the country to the city in Canada from which that person was originally driven in a government car. Is that a procedure which is available to all persons deported and allowed special permits?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is a requirement that we provide transportation for those who receive deportation orders.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I think the minister will have to realize that he has to answer for both his comings and goings in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, we would like to know whether he is saying that it is standard procedure for the Government of Canada to provide immediate transportation back, to have the car or other vehicle wait until the person has been deposited for a few moments—in the United States, in this case—and then to bring that person back.

Is that a practice which is available to every person in a situation similar to that of Mr. Calamusa? Is it standard procedure to drive a person out, to wait and to drive that person back?

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that he might be far more preoccupied about his comings and goings at this stage. They might be more politically sensitive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I simply point out that it is a requirement under the act that we provide transportation to the point of debarkation. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would want the Government of Canada to provide common courtesies and to provide transportation back, but there was no transportation across the border.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, unless I misunderstand what the minister has said, we now have an admission by the minister that in this case Mr. Calamusa was driven from Winnipeg to the border, that the Canadian government vehicle waited and that he was then driven back. In other words, the standard procedure was extended from driving to the point of debarkation to encompass a practice where the person was driven back.

Are we to understand that that is standard procedure available to all individuals who have been deported and allowed a special permit? I would like it clarified whether the drive back is now part of the procedure. That is a special two-way limousine service.

Second, the minister indicated that he had received a number of representations from a number of individuals, in his answer to my colleague, the hon. member for Cambridge. I wonder if he would, in light of the quite unusual circumstances involved in this case, be prepared to lay upon the table of the House of Commons a list of all those individuals from whom representations were received in this particular case.

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, in answer to the question, I think the Leader of the Opposition, having been a member of a government for a short time, would realize that there is a requirement for some degree of confidentiality when advice, opinions and representations are received. If, however, the Leader of the Opposition wants to seek out those who did make representations and asks for their permission to make those documents public, I would certainly have no objection to that.

But the representations were made by a number of individuals. This file has been with us for a while. We wanted to take a decision. There were many representations made public, including one from the city council of the city of Niagara Falls, as well as others. A number of representations were made and I think it is my responsibility to accumulate those and make a decision based upon them.

As far as the first part of the question with regard to travel arrangements is concerned, they depend entirely on the circumstances of the case.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CANADAS' PARTICIPATION IN FUSION ENERGY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, yesterday I called the Minister of State for Science and Technology to have him briefed fully on fusion energy processes. He is not here today, as I was assured he would be, so I will address my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Considering the important and even urgent situation involving alternate energy development to reduce our dependency on petroleum, and recognizing the need for non-polluting energy sources, I was concerned and distressed to hear the minister's response and attitude on the question of Canada's participation in fusion development during this week's estimates committee hearings.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is the role of such a minister, who is a lawyer, to prejudge complex scientific research projects and to direct policies contrary to the wishes of eminent scientists and institutions, such as the National Research Council, when such personal decisions could seriously jeopardize Canada's future energy needs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member was very unfair to the Minister of the Environment when he accused him of being a lawyer. I suggest he should look up the curriculum vitae of my colleague.

As to the question of nuclear fusion, the minister testified before the parliamentary committee, at which time he expressed views on advice from officials. The government is reviewing these matters on a continuing basis. No decision has been taken by the government that interest would not be shown in the issue of nuclear fusion. It is a matter that the Department of Science and Technology and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources are following. We are following developments in this field, but at present, as the hon. member knows, no specific budget has been allocated.

We are talking in terms of an energy process which is generally agreed to be decades down the line. It is a matter where, as a first priority for Canada, resources will be allocated. I want to assure the hon. member that the government will be following developments in this respect very closely. The matter may be reviewed at a later stage.

Mr. Gilchrist: Madam Speaker, if that is the case, there must be some misunderstanding by the newspapers of Canada today. Maybe this is a matter of confusion. Vice-president Mondale's office is not confused: an official in his office stated:

Magnetic fusion programs are moving along very well, in our opinion. So well, in fact, that . . . it is time to move magnetic fusion out of the pure research stage.

So it is more than just speculation. Would the minister agree that if Thomas Edison had had such ministerial guidance prior to his 1,000 experiments leading to his noted invention, he would have been told that the light bulb could not be invented and all of us today would have been operating in the dark, like Liberal science policy?

An hon. Member: Election promises.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I should like to advise my hon. friend that he might check whether or not Vice-president Mondale is a lawyer. He might be, and the opinion of Mr. Mondale might not be of much more value in that respect. So we have to check.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION COMMISSION

AMENDMENTS TO REGULATIONS RESPECTING WIVES OF FISHERMEN

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Can the minister confirm to the House that the Employment and Immigration Commission has approved amendments to the unemployment insurance regulations which will enable wives of fishermen to claim unemployment insurance benefits?

Some hon. Members: Of course.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to tell the hon. member that in fact the employment commission has authorized that the wives of fishermen will now be eligible for benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

AGRICULTURE

APPLICATION FOR ACQUISITION OF MAPLEWOOD POULTRY PROCESSORS, ABBOTSFORD, B.C.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. The minister is aware of the application made for the acquisition by Cargill Enterprises of Maplewood Poultry Processors in Abbotsford, British Columbia. Is he in a position to advise me and the House of the present status of that application?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that at one time the producers had recommended to us that we not approve a certain application to obtain ownership of this company. It was Cargill that had applied for the purchase.

At one time the government of British Columbia asked that everything be done to stop this operation, in telegrams to producers, and then there was a slight change of mind. So now we are searching and hoping we can entice someone to buy this plant, because we feel there should be more competition in the poultry processing industry in B.C., because if Cargill had been able to obtain this plant it would have given them approximately 80 per cent control of all poultry processing in B.C., and we think this would be dangerous. We are working hard to try to come up with a solution, but we might not be able to.

Mr. Patterson: I am sure the minister was aware—he alluded to the fact—that there had been a change of mind. It included not only the union representing the workers, but the turkey producers themselves and the government of B.C.

In view of the fact that this has put out of work 135 employees in the immediate area, and is threatening the viability of the turkey producing industry, would the minister assure us that he will continue, on a very urgent basis, to try to reach a decision so far as the application is concerned?

Mr. Whelan: I am sure the hon. member is also aware of the fact that my department ran the plant for approximately three weeks to make sure the poultry were processed. We are prepared to move back in there if necessary, if we are sure that some other potential buyer might be available for that plant. We will have meetings with my officials later. We are very concerned about the employees. We are also very concerned about the processing facilities being operational.

SMALL BUSINESS

INTRODUCTION OF DEVELOPMENT BONDS PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to put my question to the Minister of State for Finance. Recognizing that these are difficult economic times, I am sure everyone in the House appreciates the difficulties being faced by small businesses across the country.

Small businesses were encouraged in April when the minister indicated he would bring in a small business development bond this year. In a press release on June 13, he indicated again that the bond would soon be introduced in the House. At this stage it would appear unlikely to be brought in this session. In view of the fact that it will take two to three months for the banks to implement this piece of legislation on behalf of small businesses, this government might have the distinction of implementing policy after it has expired. Would the minister please indicate to the House when the small business development bond will be introduced?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Madam Speaker, in his question the hon. member referred to the fact that the Minister of Finance has already had, in a new release, the opportunity of indicating what guidelines will govern that technique. I can assure him that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice will give urgent attention to the preparation of that legislation. The minister did indicate, when he tabled the ways and means motion in April, that he wanted that legislation, once it was tabled, to be discussed sufficiently to acquaint the House with the details of its application. In addition, the Minister of Finance still intends to make that information available to small businesses as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Riis: I have a short question, Madam Speaker. Is it true that the minister is now considering excluding operating capital from this piece of legislation?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Madam Speaker, the terms outlined in the news release recently put out by the Minister of Finance will govern that instrument, and nothing has changed since that press release was issued.

PUBLIC SERVICE

APPOINTMENT OF COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF PERSONNEL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the President of the Treasury Board. It is a fact that human resources and the management of those resources is as critical as financial and capital resource management, and training and development are essential components of human resources planning. Given the support in the Lambert commission report and the d'Avignon report and many others, including the latest report from the Comptroller General, can the minister confirm that in these days of new systems, new programs, new techniques and skills he is seriously considering the appointment of a comptroller general of personnel so that the government can maintain, and possibly improve, the quality of the public service, and that among the many responsibilities of this comptroller general of personnel would be responsibility for putting into place a new policy on personnel training and development?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, first let me thank the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier for his interest, support and advice in this entire area. The consideration of the appointment of such a person to such a post is something which is a recommendation of the Lambert commission and the D'Avignon commission.

Accordingly, in my direction of the review of these recommendations I will be bringing forward proposals for my colleagues with respect to the appointment of such a person to such a post. This government shares, as I am sure do all members of this House, the view that human resources are more important than financial resources in managing the affairs of this country.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSAL TO PURCHASE NORDAIR—ACTION TAKEN

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. About ten days ago the minister told one of his colleagues that he would, within the next few days, have a proposal to put before the prospective purchaser of Nordair. Has that proposal been put before the prospective purchaser, and can the minister give the name of the prospective purchaser? What action has been taken on the proposal?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I certainly did not say it in that way. I said that we had in the department established a number of criteria or objectives which had to be achieved. Later, outside this House, I said that we would be in touch with one of the potential acquirers, the group led by La Société d'Investissement Desjardins, to find out if they could satisfy the objectives which we had in mind to achieve. That process is going on now. I should have a report on the conversations held in the next very few days.

LOTTERIES

DISBURSEMENT OF FUNDS ACCUMULATED IN INTEREST

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that $750,000 have accumulated in interest on the unclaimed Loto funds, will the minister begin issuing scholarships and internships, funds for our young athletes in need, before they leave for the United States, and also to help culture and art, because the Secretary of State was complaining there was not enough money in his coffers?

Has the minister decided to stop funding Hockey Canada and will now fund the CAHA? Finally, has the minister allocated the $1.2 million for the native peoples' sports program?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I presume the question is directed to me, although I do not believe the hon. member indicated that it was. The subject of it would suggest that it was.

Mr. Paproski: Good guess.

Mr. Regan: In answer to the series of questions asked by the hon. member, I will attempt to deal with each of them as best as I can remember them. First of all, in relation to the accumulated interest on the two cheques which have been forwarded by the corporation which is running the provincial lotteries for the provinces, each in the amount of $6 million, they have been left as uncertified cheques at our request so that the interest could accrue to the benefit of the worth-while causes pursued by the ten provinces. It is another example of good federal-provincial relations on behalf of this government.

In giving that $750,000 to the provinces, I have to take a back seat to the hon. member's policy, which I am obviously following. While negotiating the handover of the lotteries, he gave the provinces $58 million in revenue which we previously had. I certainly look like a piker in comparison, considering the $750,000 gift to the provinces.

An hon. Member: You always did.

Mr. Lambert: You always were a piker.

Mr. Regan: I will never be able to live up to the generosity which the hon. member achieved. I am sure the hon. member is aware that the interest is accruing to the provinces because those cheques have not yet been cashed. In all probability they will be cashed before long, but I wanted to be in the position of having all the provinces understand that we do so without prejudice because of the incomplete agreement which does not even indicate the term of the agreement which was achieved by letter without a federal-provincial exchange.

With regard to assistance to athletes in training, if that is what the hon. member means when he refers to scholarships, a policy is under way and a great number of first-class athletes are receiving and have received letters recently on their support for the coming year. In relation to the scholarship question, attendance at university, as the hon. member knows, some provinces such as British Columbia have moved in this direction. The federal government does not at the moment have a policy, nor does the CIAU, the universities' organization.

I believe the hon. member had a question—

Madam Speaker: Order. I suppose hon. members opposite appreciate complete answers, but I think I shall have to cut the minister off.

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, my question has nothing to do with the Loto agreement. My question was to the minister of sport. I was so excited that you recognized me that I forgot to mention the minister.

My supplementary question is to the minister of sport. The question I raised has nothing to do with the Loto agreement. It refers to the $750,000 in interest on the unclaimed Loto funds, money which is unclaimed by the winners. It is this $750,000 in which I am interested. What does the government intend to do with this money?

Mr. Regan: Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for clarifying the particular money about which he is speaking. One of the unfortunate aspects is that it is not yet clear what money, if any, will be left over from lottery funds. It is unclear for two reasons. One reason is that some money was held because of unclaimed prizes. The other reason is that in the haste of the previous administration, the interim government, to give away the lotteries to the provinces, they broke agreements with a large number of wholesalers and, as a consequence, there is very considerable litigation against the government. Those funds are being held to see whether or not they will have to be paid out in settlements because of the way in which the members opposite broke contracts.

Mr. Paproski: You are a complete dingbat.

Mr. Nielsen: Unadulterated rubbish.

HOUSING

ESTABLISHMENT OF MORTGAGE EXCHANGE PROGRAM

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Public Works in his responsibility as minister of housing. It concerns the very serious situation which the lumber sector of the wood converting industry and the construction industry throughout the country currently face.

Is the minister's department at this time seriously considering the proclamation of a bill which was passed by this House in 1973 in support of the establishment of a mortgage exchange corporation?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would be happy to take notice of the question asked by the hon. member. I might say that we are cognizant of the turndown in the industry generally. However, I am encouraged as a result of the information on starts for last month, which are back up to 151,000. This is comparable with the starts in March and April.

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, it would appear the minister is not aware of that particular legislation. It was hailed at the time it was introduced as the solution to many problems in the housing industry, particularly with regard to high interest rates.

As the minister is studying this bill and giving it consideration, would he, in his answer—I would accept it in written form—tell me what possible objection there could be, and what lobby there would be against the proclamation of such a good measure?

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, I intend to do that for the hon. member. Of course, high interest rates do not seem to be quite the pressing problem they were about three months ago.

PUBLIC WORKS

DEVELOPMENT OF CARTIER SQUARE, OTTAWA—PUBLIC INPUT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. In view of all the speculation about the future of Cartier Square—from zoos, to galleries, to concrete canyons and skyscrapers—would the minister tell the House if the public will have an input long before the NCC makes any final decisions on the future of this very vital section of real estate right in the heart of the capital district?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am happy to confirm to the hon. member that the public has already had quite an opportunity for input. The committee of Cartier Square interest groups has made representations to me directly as minister, to the chairman of the National Capital Commission, to the city, to the local school board and to local school officials. Many people have had input into the design and consideration for the use of the square up to this point.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, would the minister guarantee that, with all these other proposals and rumours of proposals, regardless of what is finally decided there will be an adequate playing field as part of the development of that area?

Mr. Cosgrove: I am happy to confirm, Mr. Speaker, that this is one of the major considerations of the commission and most public authorities involved, including myself. We are looking at alternate proposals with the objective being that there is an adequate playing field. But the specific location is not known at this time.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ADMISSIBILITY OF TENDERS ON JOINT PROGRAMS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of his absence, I shall put it instead to the right hon. Prime Minister. As many official documents of the Quebec government prove beyond a doubt that only such contractors as have their head offices in Quebec can tender for projects financed jointly and often mostly by the federal Department of Regional Economic Expansion, while the province of New Brunswick opens its doors to all comers for such projects, can the right hon. Prime Minister tell us how, with regard to the freedom of movement of persons, goods and services it will be possible to put an end to that type of balkanizing discrimination through the constitutional reform?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I must say to the hon. member that he has raised an extremely important question indeed. All provinces are in the process, directly or otherwise, of putting up non-tariff barriers. Naturally, a province cannot expect to benefit simultaneously from free access to the whole Canadian market when it suits it, and when the prosperity of its industries depends on the rest of the Canadian market, while in other cases denying to other provinces free access to its own market. That problem is fundamental and I am very happy that the right hon. Prime Minister has made a priority of it in the constitutional review.

MR. CLARK—IMMIGRATION—REQUEST FOR LIST OF MINISTERIAL PERMITS ISSUED

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order related to the ability of Parliament to act on an undertaking that was given in the question period during the exchange between myself and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). I asked the identity of persons making representations in the case in question and the minister said I should seek them out and if I could secure their agreement to have their names published at the table of Parliament that would occur. Obviously the only way I can seek them out is if I know who they are.

I presume the minister, having given that answer, is prepared to identify those people to me privately so that I may seek them out and in order that we might proceed in an orderly way in the House of Commons. I wonder whether the minister could advise the House if I can expect to receive that full list today?

Tabling of Documents

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I will take the position of the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) as notice and see what will be made available.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I was hoping to be recognized before that point of order in the dying minutes of the question period to ask a question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) to which I have given him notice. May I proceed? No order of the day has been called.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member is telling me, if I understood him, that he now wants to put a question to a minister. I must reply that the question period is over and, of course, I cannot recognize the hon. member.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 60, I would like to table in both official languages notice of ways and means motion to amend the Petroleum Administration Act, and ask you to designate the order of the day necessary for the consideration thereof.

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have no question about the propriety of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) moving this motion, as he has done at this time. However, obviously his actions raise some very serious questions on a Friday afternoon as the House is two or three hours from adjournment as to what has developed in vital negotiations in the country that might cause the minister to act.

I am sure there would be agreement on this side of the House—and I have not had an opportunity to consult with my colleagues in the New Democratic Party—for the minister to take a moment or two to indicate what reasons have led him to follow the action he has just now followed.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): The right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has no valid point of order under the rules. Standing Order 60(1) is quite clear. When a minister wishes to give notice of a ways and means motion, he has only to follow the procedure used today by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). There is nothing in the rules whereby the minister should make a statement or this House or the government should agree to any kind of debate on the reasons for this motion or the impact of the motion. Eventually the notice of motion will be followed by the motion and legislation based on the ways and means motion, and at that point the House of Commons will have ample opportunity to discuss the substance of the provisions included in the notice tabled today. Of course, I appreciate the political concerns of the Leader of the Opposition. But since he rose on a point of order, I submit he does not have a valid one.

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the member as government House leader is quite right in his dissertation of the rules. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) had asked whether or not the House would give its consent, and I assume there would be consent given at this time for an explanation by the minister.

The minister could, as my friend knows, make a statement on motions. Will he make a statement on motions? If there is a requirement for unanimous consent to do that, we are prepared to give our consent. We know what the rules say. What we are talking about here is a matter of some import, and it is a matter of extending a courtesy here in the House of Commons on a Friday afternoon in respect of a matter that has caused the government to move in what must be a most unusual way. That is really the point.

Having said that, would the government House leader be prepared as a matter of courtesy to consider allowing one of those processes that would right now permit the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to make the statement that obviously the Leader of the Opposition and other members would like to have made?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I admit the House leader of the Progressive Conservative party (Mr. Baker) knows the rules. He asked that we be courteous and agree today to something that would please his party politically. Often we would also like the rule to be waived and the opposition to show more courtesy so we could dispose of legislation more rapidly. It is obvious, Madam Speaker, that all the Leader of the Opposition or his House leader have to do is to look at the notice of motion that is self-explanatory and they will then get the answers to their questions. As far as we are concerned, I regret to say I am not in a position to give him the consent he is asking for today any more than the opposition, I am convinced, is in a position to give us consent to dispose without debate of several legislative items now on the order paper.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CORBETT—RECOGNITION OF CANADIAN ATHLETES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in a state of some disappointment. It arises from a motion which I introduced today under Standing Order 43 requesting that the government give recognition to the young athletes who would have participated in the Olympic Games in Moscow.

My privilege is that I did not hear any nays, but obviously Your Honour did. It is absolutely inconceivable to me and astounding that any member of this House would not see fit to recognize the dedication and work that these young athletes have put into preparing themselves for this event. In support of their country they have agreed to forgo the opportunity to participate.

How on earth can we expect the young people of this country to have any faith in the future, in the purpose and in the direction of the sort of government we provide for them if we are not prepared to support them in the same manner that they have supported us? I do not believe that these young athletes should be subjected to this sort of treatment by this House as a result of a muffled no spoken from behind a hand.

If there are members of this House who would deny these young people recognition, whether it be in the form of a pin, a plaque or whatever, then they should speak out and let the young athletes know who is denying them that right. But I do not believe our young people should be subjected to this sort of treatment. If there are members of this House of Commons who feel that way, let us hear who they are so that our young people can be aware of the sort of people they are dealing with in the House of Commons. I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that there was no dissent among members of this party.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have to repeat to the hon. member that the Chair is the sole judge of whether there were any nays to a motion proposed under Standing Order 43. I can assure the hon. member that there were nays to his motion. The Chair is not in the habit of identifying them at this particular point in the procedure.

A number of motions have been proposed under Standing Order 43 which deal with congratulating a group or an individual. I believe that my predecessor was rather more strict than I about accepting this kind of motion under Standing Order 43. I am afraid that I will have to look into the number of motions designed to congratulate one group or another. I am sure the House understands that if no rules are set in this respect, there is no reason why we should not congratulate everybody in Canada, even every citizen for the simple fact of being a Canadian citizen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I would therefore ask hon. members to restrain themselves in respect of motions which deal with congratulations. Some of them can be accepted but I shall have to look into the matter.

MR. CLARK—TABLING OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION—IMPOSITION OF LEVY UNDER PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege. I will have to ask your indulgence and I shall naturally resume my seat if you find there is no privilege.

I want to speak about a matter which has to do in a limited way not with the rules of the House but with the courtesies of the House and the kind of consultation that makes not only Parliament work but that makes relations between the private and public sector and between the federal and provincial governments work, and which will be conducive to matters being proceeded with in a fair and positive fashion.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) after the question period, without any notice to us and to my knowledge without any notice to the provinces, to industry or others in Canada, tabled a document which indicates the determination of this government to move immediately with a very significant new refinery gate tax. This appears to have not only been announced today without consultation with any of the people seriously affected, but it seems to be an action taken unilaterally at a time when there is negotiation in process regarding energy pricing between the producing provinces and the federal government. It has been taken unilaterally here in Ottawa in the very week in which we began discussions on a constitution which will succeed in finding an agreement only if there is an atmosphere of fair play on both sides.

Certainly many of the provinces of Canada who met in good faith with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) earlier this week in Montreal will not believe they have been treated in good faith by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources considering the way he has acted regarding this unilateral and very expensive tax he has announced today.

It is difficult for us to determine quickly the exact impact of this tax. It seems to be somewhere between five cents per gallon and 12.5 cents per gallon. I would remark in passing that since February 18 the price of gasoline at the pump in Canada has risen already, including this announcement today, far in excess of the 18 cents per gallon proposed in the budget which was defeated last December.

This tax, which is proposed unilaterally and which has been dropped upon the House and the country as a surprise on a Friday afternoon by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, will apply as well to heating oil and a number of other commodities previously exempted.

As I say, Madam Speaker, I raise the matter not because there is a rule to which I can appeal but because there is a spirit to which I can address myself. There is a spirit of co-operation in this House that calls upon ministers to adopt a practice that we try to follow and I would say that generally ministers on the other side try to follow, that of giving advance notice about matters which will have serious repercussions for the country.

The action taken today is bound to jeopardize the energy negotiations going on between the producing provinces and the Government of Canada. It is bound to jeopardize the constitutional discussions going on in Montreal and which are scheduled for Toronto, Vancouver and later, Ottawa. As recently as this week this House gave unanimous consent to moving forward quickly on veterans' legislation, Bill C-30, but this action has been put in great jeopardy the capacity of Parliament to operate in such a co-operative fashion.

I simply raise this matter with you, Madam Speaker. I cannot address my appeal to any particular rule except that of courtesy, the rule of intelligent conduct in this House and the advisability of proceeding in a way that will allow the House of Commons to function co-operatively. The spirit of co-operation must carry through so that relations between the federal and provincial governments may proceed in good faith, and so that the word of the Government of Canada can be taken as being valid rather than something to be changed and undercut by a surprise announcement by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, without warning or consultation, of a very severe tax imposed by way of an undebatable action in the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has risen on a question of privilege and he admitted at the outset of his remarks that it had absolutely no basis and that he was strictly appealing to parliamentary spirit and courtesy. However, I believe that if he truly respected this institution, he would at least make sure to abide by the rules. On occasion, House leaders meet to discuss the procedure to be followed, and I must admit that until now, I have been getting along quite well with his House leader and that we have had positive results during this first part of the session. However, in this case, he is not raising a valid question. He is using or abusing the rules of the House to debate a question which is certainly important, but there are other occasions provided under the Standing Orders for him to discuss this important issue. Next Monday, the Leader of the Opposition knows quite well—

Mr. Huntington: You are abusing the whole chamber.

Mr. Pinard: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Huntington: You are abusing the whole chamber.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows quite well that next Monday will be an opposition day. He will have all the time needed during the weekend to consider the ways and means motion which was tabled today. If he so wishes, he can include in his own motion the issue of energy and discuss this matter properly according to our procedure. However, I believe that it is not quite honest to appeal to parliamentary spirit and courtesy and thus abuse the Standing Orders in an attempt to discuss a ways and means motion, which is not debatable. Standing Order 15 provides that we do not have to make a ministerial statement. If the minister wanted to make a statement, he is clearly free to do so. He decided not to, as is his privilege, and the Leader of the Opposition is well aware of it.

The procedure adopted today is absolutely appropriate and normal. It so happens that this is a matter of particular interest to the Progressive Conservative party. However, this is not a reason to force the minister into a statement. Once again, meetings are provided which make it possible for the parliamentary leaders to discuss the means to bring about a discussion on various subjects, in an orderly way, in compliance with our standing orders and in a parliamentary spirit. However, Madam Speaker, I submit that in order to elicit this courtesy, to promote this parliamentary spirit, one should not abuse the standing orders as the Leader of the Opposition has just done for five minutes by debating a matter which certainly is not a question of privilege; he has simply made a political statement when he had absolutely no right to do so.

That, Madam Speaker, is what is wrong with the present situation. They try to solicit our courtesy and our co-operation by making ill use of the Standing Orders and this is inacceptable. If the Leader of the Opposition had good reason to proceed in this way, Madam Speaker, I would say no more. But once again, I insist, since the beginning of this session by way of meetings with parliamentary leaders, we have succeeded in making significant progress. We have been able to initiate parliamentary task forces which will benefit Parliament, and in a parliamentary spirit. We have reached a major agreement with respect to supply by providing a few days of Committee of the Whole, in a parliamentary spirit.

We have adopted somewhere between 15 and 20 bills which were technically urgent, always in a parliamentary spirit. I wonder why the Leader of the Opposition makes ill use of the Standing Orders in the name of parliamentary spirit by raising a question of privilege which clearly it is not, to debate in an absolutely inappropriate manner a notice of motion which was tabled in accordance with the Standing Orders and at a time when the House still has at least one week to convene before adjourning for the summer and when the opposition will be given an opposition day which will allow it to address itself to this matter of energy.

Madam Speaker, this is what I am rising against at this time and I cannot accept that the opposition leader, in the name of the parliamentary spirit should appeal to our sense of courtesy while he himself is not going by, not respecting the Standing Orders of the House to make his point.

[English]

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, there is no question that technically under the rules the minister can do what he has done. That is not what we are challenging here; that does not seem to me to be what is at stake. But what is at stake is that for the second time in the life of this Parliament this government has introduced budgetary matter via the back door. That is precisely what we are talking about here.

On April 21 we had the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) making an economic statement of which he did not even have the courtesy to give me notice. Today we have the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) informing this House that the government as of midnight tonight, July 11, will impose a tax on oil. This is not a matter of future speculation—but a matter of government fiat, of which my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), did not have any notice whatsoever, that this government intends to amend the Petroleum Administration Act by imposing a tax on oil produced in Canada and on oil imported into Canada.

We are getting a budget by strip-tease here, Madam Speaker. We are not getting a series of economic policies; we are getting dribs and drabs thrown at the Canadian people from time to time. I think it is quite extraordinary on the part of the minister to introduce aspects of a budget. Will there be a cost of living credit to offset the effects of this increase in price? Will there be an energy tax credit, which even the member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) offered? It was a paltry one, it was too late, it was insufficient, but at least it was there.

An hon. Member: You voted against it.

Mr. Rae: Will that be there? What will be the effect on inflation? What will be the effect on fairness? I say that it is quite extraordinary that in the middle of the day on a Friday—

Mr. Lalonde: What is wrong with Friday?

Mr. Rae: The minister asks what is wrong with Friday. I work on Fridays just as hard as he does.

An hon. Member: We work harder.

Mr. Rae: But I think we can take judicial notice of the fact that there are many members who live in the west of Canada. It is unfortunate that this is a problem which the minister will never have to face, but western members are not always able to be here on Fridays because of obligations in their constituencies. The minister knows that perfectly well. The point of the matter is that 12 hours prior to the imposition of a tax, we are given, without any notice, an indication in this form. I think it is quite an extraordinary way to run the affairs of this country.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was today unable to answer questions in relation to basic, fundamental economic policies of the government because he said that he had been too busy to study what was going on and what was being produced by the OECD. The Prime Minister is too busy to know anything about the economy. Now we have a minister of energy who, 12 hours prior to the imposition of a new tax which will have a dramatic effect on relations between the provinces and the federal government and a dramatic effect on the consumers of Canada, is telling us that this is the kind of tax he plans to introduce.

There is no question, Madam Speaker, that the minister can do this. There are many things governments can do.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: What do you mean? There is no order here.

Mr. Rae: But the test of fiscal honesty and the test of governmental responsibility is not whether or not you can do it, but whether or not you ought to do it.

Mr. Clark: That is right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: Previous governments have fallen despite the size of their majorities because they abused their majority, abused the courtesies of this House and abused the basic fundamental notion that, if taxes are to be introduced into this House, those taxes have to be debated on the floor of the House of Commons prior to the time that they are introduced.

Some hon. Members: Right.

Mr. Rae: It is quite amazing to me—

Mr. Lalonde: You do not know your parliamentary rules.

An hon. Member: Tell him kings have lost their heads for that.

Mr. Rae: The minister said that I do not know my parliamentary rules. I have said to the minister that he can do this; the rules do provide for it. What I am telling the minister is that that is not the question.

Mr. Clark: It is simply reprehensible.

Mr. Rae: The question is whether or not the minister ought to do it. I know that the minister will say today, just as he said yesterday in answer to a question about the pipeline, that he is not embarrassed by any changes in the government's position. There is a simple reason why the minister is not embarrassed, and that is that this is a government that has no sense of shame.

This is a government that was prepared on April 21 to introduce a budget without telling anybody about it. This is a government that on July 11 is prepared to introduce a substantial tax at the refinery on oil and on the importation of oil without telling anybody about it, giving us no notice at all and trying to bootleg it into the House of Commons. This is a government which does not deserve the respect of any serious minded Canadian, Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I will recognize a few more speakers on this question. However, I do want to remind members that they must debate the point of privilege and not at all enter into debate about the fundamental question and the ways and means motion which has been tabled today.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in joining in this debate, touching on my leader's question of privilege, I only want to add a few thoughts. I was going to make the point that has already been made by our colleague from Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) that this is, after all, a budgetary matter that we now have before us.

I would like to re-emphasize what the hon. member said, that we are bit by bit circumventing the entire budgetary process provided for by the rules of this House. I feel that in considering my leader's question of privilege, it must be borne in mind that the rules are very clear. If this is a budgetary presentation, then under Standing Order 60(3), and I quote:

When such an order is designated for the purpose of enabling a minister of the Crown to make a budget presentation, a motion "That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government" shall be proposed.

We are dealing today with something that could have a tax consequence of something like $1,200 million. To suggest that that is not something of a budgetary nature is most strange.

In a question directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) yesterday, I mentioned that we are in the odd position where it is now 27 months since the last wholly passed budget has been received in this House. As has been indicated, there was a mini-budget in April brought into the House, not in the normal fashion but as part of a throne speech debate. In doing that, the rules of the House were circumvented. At least there was no proper budgetary debate where the government was required to show its budgetary program, including expenditure levels and, if you like, the revenue levels such as we are now having brought forth today.

Let me emphasize this point. The precedents of not only this House but of Westminster are very clear in saying that there is a budgetary procedure that must be followed, partly for reasons of secrecy. Think of the odd position we are now put in. The stock exchanges of this country are open literally from coast to coast. Normally announcements of a tax nature such as the minister has indicated are not made until after all exchanges are closed, possibly to avoid unfair advantage as far as investors are concerned. We have literally dozens of listed petroleum companies which will be influenced by this announcement. Their shares are trading on the stock exchanges of this country. We have a minister and a government so anxious to avoid the normal procedures of this House that they are willing to take the risk of having a misuse of this information with respect to the trading of shares of dozens of companies on the stock exchanges of this country.

Let me also draw your attention, Madam Speaker, to an exchange that took place between this minister and my colleague from Joliette (Mr. La Salle) the day before yesterday, July 9. At page 2700 of Hansard, in response to a question put by my colleague from Joliette, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said:

Madam Speaker, my officials have not been instructed to draft any type of legislation on the subject.

That was referring to the import tax on all forms of energy which my colleague from Joliette raised in the form of a question. Two days after we were flatly told that the minister's staff had not been asked to draft any type of legislation on the subject, we are faced with a ways and means motion proposing an amendment to the Petroleum Administration Act that will give the government the power to raise the refinery gate tax by as much as $1.75 a barrel. As I indicated, we use roughly 700 million barrels in this country, which means the tax could amount to $1.2 billion. Relating the matter to the energy consumer, we are talking about a possible 12 cents increase per gallon of gasoline.

This is a budgetary matter and I think the question of privilege raised by my leader should be sustained.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I want to make one very brief point which was suggested earlier by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). According to Standing Order 60, the government has the right to introduce a ways and means motion to this House. The Standing Order reads:

A notice of a ways and means motion may be laid upon the Table of the House at any time during a sitting by a minister of the Crown, but such a motion may not be proposed in the same sitting.

A number of people on this side of the House have stated that the main issue of concern here is the future of the parliamentary system—whether a minister should be consulting others before bringing in more tax measures.

The point I want to make is that we in this country are now in the process of some pretty intensive energy negotiations between the producing provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and the federal government. It is very unfortunate for the future of those negotiations and for harmony in this country to have the federal government do this, I suspect without consultation with either of the producing provinces. Perhaps the minister can enlighten us on this when he rises to speak in a few minutes, but I suspect there was no consultation with the two provinces although the negotiations are already very sensitive and difficult. The government have introduced a tax at a stage which is very sensitive in the negotiations. That is very damaging, very bad and a serious practice for this government to follow.

The other point I want to make why we on this side feel that this is such a bad practice is that there are currently under way some very sensitive negotiations on a constitution for this country. The issue that is the most sensitive of all is the issue of the division of powers and resources in our constitution, how much power should go to the provinces and how much to the federal government when it comes to resources and the revenue from those resources.

Here we have a government in the middle of those negotiations that, I assume without consultation with the producing provinces, has brought in a tax that is going to result in hundreds of millions of extra dollars from resources in those two provinces going to the federal government. This is very damaging indeed to a feeling of good will for the negotiations that just finished their first week in Montreal and will go on for two more weeks in Toronto and Vancouver.

For those reasons, Madam Speaker, I think you should look very positively on the question of privilege raised by the Leader of the Opposition, because what the government has done today is sown more disharmony in this country as well as more division and mistrust, and in essence has again pitted the east against the west. This is very unfortunate. I wish the government would learn to stop doing that type of thing. They often wonder why they do not do better in the west. They often ask why the west is unhappy. Here is one example why western Canadians are unhappy with the federal government.

The government have brought this in in the midst of negotiations on oil. The Prime Minister and the Premier of Alberta will be meeting in about a week or two. The government of Saskatchewan is involved as well. We are also in the midst of negotiations on the constitution where resources, energy resources in particular, are the most sensitive of all issues between the ministers. Bringing in this tax is bound to sow more disharmony and disunity in this country.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I too would like to speak briefly on this question of privilege raised by my leader concerning a matter which again is an indication of the fundamental contempt for the parliamentary process which this government so often shows. I am not going to try and get into the merits or demerits of this tax proposal, but I will try to emphasize in a most graphic way what is going on here.

I hope the people of this country, on a Friday afternoon on a summer day, will be tuned in to what is going on here. How many will appreciate that in the election a few short months ago there was something called an 18 cents tax increase which was supposed to produce $2.5 billion? What the minister has done today outside the House is produce, according to my calculation, a $1.25 billion tax increase with no reference to the members of the House of Commons. Members cannot ask questions about the implications and the effect that that tax will have. It is almost one half of what the 18 cents provoked across this country a few short months ago.

We have tried to make this point before but unfortunately the neophyte government House leader has not got the point because he does not understand what Parliament is all about. There is a minister in Montreal trying to set up a new constitution in an atmosphere which frankly, Madam Speaker, has sometimes in this House been very positive because of things which have happened in the last month or so. But how can those ministers go back to wherever they are supposed to meet on Monday—I suppose it is Vancouver—and crash on the table and talk about natural resources, powers and/or faith and confidence when something like this happens on a Friday afternoon?

This is so fundamental, I was frankly amazed. The minister has problems and he has to lay them on the table so we can ask questions. I am a member from Atlantic Canada, which has no option in terms of imported oil. We have no alternative. This oil refinery tax is going to be undoubtedly $1.75 and up on, perhaps, thermal generation for our electricity. I do not know that. Are there going to be any refund tax credits as we had in our budget? I do not know that either.

What I want to do, Madam Speaker, is try to impress upon the Chair something fundamental. The whole reason for Parliament was the taxing power to try to restrict the King from fighting the Wars of the Roses, with the King going off on the crusades. The lords and nobles used to meet behind the castle walls and try to make sure that they would not have to give so many horses, so much gold, so many troopers or so many wenches to get—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Nowlan: —to get the knights to go off and fight in the wars and the crusades. Then the nobles said: "Listen, Mr. King, there comes a halt." I mean, that is the whole reason the commoners—they were not commoners, we all know that, they were the lords and the nobles. But the thing began because there was a House of Commons and they said they were commoners because they were common in terms of the divine right of the King to do what he wanted to do.

That is how the whole thing started, but let us come down to something a little closer to constitutions. I say this seriously. There is no doubt that the government can do what it has done, just as King George III could do what he did. He could do what he did, but look what he did!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Look what he did, Madam Speaker. Taxation without representation of those 13 colonies provoked something pretty fundamental which has forever changed the geographic landscape of this continent and the world.

I am not saying today that because of this motion there will be that same kind of provocation and fundamental change in the composition of Canada. But there is a fundamental difference between having the power and the numbers to do what you legally can do and yet trample on the thoughts and the fears, the apprehensions and the sensitivities is of those affected by what you legally can do. That is what is going on here.

I quite agree with the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) when he says that in view of what the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) did in April when he presented that budgetary document, a budget by strip-tease—I do not know if it is strip-tease or mummified, but I won't get into that—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: Keep your shirt on!

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) has been here a long time and he should know. It is a tragedy that some of those members opposite did not sit in the opposition a little longer to find out what the frustrations are and what some of the sensitivities are.

It is ironic. This Parliament was supposed to rise a week from Friday, or perhaps two weeks from Friday. I must say I am prepared to get out, but I am also prepared to stay. As the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood and someone else said, it was not a flag debate, it was a pipeline debate. Why is it always pipelines and gas which sometimes bring out the parliamentary struggle? It was a parliamentary debate on pipelines in the hot summer days back in the fifties which fundamentally affected not only the Speaker of that day but also the parliamentary rights of the government.

I know we have just come through an election and we have this new Parliament which we frankly all expect may work for two or three years, but who knows? I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that this type of parliamentary contempt on taxing provisions may be legally within the rules but absolutely tramples on the rights of parliamentarians in this House. There are backbenchers on the government side who will be just as horrified to find out the implications of this taxing bill as any members on this side, as well as the public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: In conclusion, Madam Speaker, we talk about privilege and we all know members who abuse the privileges. We have sensitive egos from time to time and there is not a member here who should not have an ego that sometimes gets sensitized. But I go back to King George III and taxation without representation. We have the representation here, but what is the good of representation in the formal institution of Parliament if it is never consulted? That is the problem, Madam Speaker. My privileges as a member of Parliament representing a constituency in Atlantic Canada are grievously affected if I go home tonight, meet a person on the street and he or she asks me: "What is that tax going to do to me in terms of my processing plant? Am I going to be able to produce apple juice next year? What will it do to my heating bill next year in terms of thermal generation? Because I only have $10,000 from a war pension, do I get a tax rebate because I do not have an income of $12,000?"

Madam Speaker, my rights as a member of Parliament are fundamentally infringed upon because I cannot give an answer to any of those questions. I did not know about this tax until I found out today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps it is good that this is coming up early in the session so that somehow we can try to get some common sense through to the other side. Madam Speaker, there is not a single member here who can answer questions from some of their constituents on something fundamental like taxes. If we cannot answer questions on taxing policies affecting gas, oil and heat, is that not a privilege affecting my duties as a member of the House of Commons?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am very happy to hear from the opposition members that they do recognize that the step which has been taken today is a step which fully and completely respects parliamentary rules.

An hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Lalonde: What has been introduced today, under the rules of this House, is a notice of ways and means, the standard way in which adjustments of the nature made here are made in this House. When such ways and means motions are introduced they become effective immediately, but they are tabled in this House, indeed for debate, to enable the House to consider and debate them. I think every member from the opposition side has had to recognize that the procedure which has been followed here is not only the regular one but the correct one to follow in such circumstances.

I am sure that when hon. members have had time and have taken the trouble to read the notice of ways and means, they will realize that the facts do not correspond to some of the assertions or statements that have been made.

Mr. Clark: What happens to the heating bill of widows in Atlantic Canada?

Mr. Lalonde: This is not an additional $1.75 a barrel. It deals with an increase of $1 to $1.75 of the Syncrude levy that is collected, and has been collected for years in this country, in order to pay the so-called international price for synthetic oil. This is what this does. It is not providing for figures like the 12 cents per gallon that has been mentioned. Again, if hon. members bother to read they will realize—

An hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Clark: What will it cost the widow in Wolfeville?

Mr. Lalonde: I see the loser Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is unable to control himself again.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I am sorry the Leader of the Opposition makes the statements he does because he does not know the facts, I am sure. He will realize it costs half a cent a litre. That is what the hon. member would have realized had he bothered to read the ways and means motion. That is what this motion does.

The point about the impact on federal-provincial relations is raised by my hon. friend. Again I suggest that if he goes back to the ways and means motion, he will realize that this is far from hurting the west or alienating the west. Where does the money go? It goes to pay for the Syncrude levy. It goes in part to the Syncrude and Suncor plants in northern Alberta, and the rest goes to the government of Alberta. This is money going to Alberta.

● (1250)

An hon. Member: All of it?

Mr. Lalonde: Of course. That is what the Syncrude levy is used for. It is used to pay for the synthetic oil at the international price level; the additional income goes to the companies, and then it goes to the government of Alberta in terms of royalties. So there is nothing at all here that is damaging to federal-provincial relations.

An hon. Member: It is not in the notice.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Lalonde: I am on a point of order, I am sorry. There is nothing at all damaging to federal-provincial relations and nothing at all that is not being done according to the standard rules.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Order. The hon. minister rose in answer to a question of privilege raised by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) is seeking the floor on a point of order. I have to hear what he has to say. The minister will be allowed to complete his intervention after this.

[English]

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, the reason for my point of order is that the minister has issued two documents, both of which, in my view, are capable of two completely different interpretations. The document which has been released as a ways and means motion is the one that we saw. We had to go outside in order to get the press release; the minister did not have the courtesy to give it to members of Parliament. They are not sufficiently important. However, the minister is making statements about the press release; he is not making statements which relate directly to the wording of this particular motion.

Mr. Lalonde: Again, Madam Speaker, my hon. friend has only to read the notice of ways and means.

Mr. Rae: Read it out.

Mr. Lalonde: It is on the table. What that ways and means motion means is an increase in the Syncrude levy, which is at the present time at $1, to $1.75. That is the effect of this ways and means motion.

Mr. Stevens: It does not say that.

Mr. Lalonde: I am sorry if my hon. colleagues again have not understood it that way, but that is the effect of that ways and means motion. It is amending—

An hon. Member: Read it.

Mr. Lalonde: This ways and means motion has the effect of amending the Petroleum Administration Act to increase the Syncrude levy from $1 to $1.75.

Mr. Kempling: Where does it say "Syncrude"?

Mr. Rae: The word "Syncrude" does not appear in the motion.

Mr. Lalonde: The word "Syncrude" does not appear in the motion, but it did not appear in the previous motion. My hon. friends should refer to all motions dealing with the Syncrude levy. This ways and means motion has been drafted in exactly the same way, I suggest, as the previous ways and means motion establishing the levy at $1.

Mr. Clark: How were they introduced?

Mr. Lalonde: It is a question of drafting the ways and means motion properly for the consideration of the House and the consideration of the people of Canada. Again, I am sorry if my hon. friends are reacting very quickly. They very quickly have concluded wrongly the effect of this measure. I regret that they have been misled in that sense and that they have reached the type of conclusion they have.

Mr. Kempling: You did the misleading.

Mr. Lalonde: I regret that it has led to this misinterpretation.

Mr. Clark: Perhaps you should have followed the rules of Parliament.

Mr. Lalonde: This ways and means motion is clear. If my hon. friends have misunderstood and misread it, I regret that, but this is clearly what it means, and this is what it is doing.

Mr. Rae: Read the motion.

Mr. Lalonde: My hon. friend is very obsessed with the idea of reading it into the record. It will be printed in the record. My hon. friend did not even bother to read it when he was intervening.

Mr. Rae: Read it now. I was reading it when I was intervening. Read it now.

Mr. Lalonde: Again, Madam Speaker, the effect of this—

Mr. Clark: It is to poison Parliament, federal-provincial relations and energy negotiations.

Mr. Lalonde: —is just to increase the Syncrude levy. It is going to benefit the oil companies operating in the tar sands, and it is going to benefit the government of Alberta, which will see its royalties increased and its returns increased. It will mean an adjustment in the price of gasoline by about half a cent a litre, the procedure which has been followed in this case is the procedure which should have been followed. That is the way to respect the rules of this House, and I submit to my hon. friends that they will have ample opportunity to debate this as they are debating the budgetary measures.

Mr. Stevens: When?

An hon. Member: What budgetary measures?

Mr. Lalonde: As such, I suggest that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has not only abused the rules of the House but also that he has not been helpful in getting the proper understanding of what is being done here to the people of the country. Consequently, I submit, Madam Speaker, that there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We would like the minister to read the motion into the Hansard record. The minister says that the motion he tabled will be printed in the record. It will be printed in the order paper, but nobody outside Parliament sees that. I have taken a copy of his own motion across to him, and I simply ask that he read the motion into the Hansard record right now while he has the floor.

Mr. Pinard: You are wasting our time.

Mr. Clark: That has just begun, Yvon.

Madam Speaker: If there is unanimous agreement in the House that the minister read the motion into the Hansard record, I would tend to allow that just now.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: There is not agreement in the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: We cannot consider two questions of privilege at the same time. Does the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) want to continue his intervention?

Mr. Clark: Read your motion.

Mr. Lalonde: Anybody can read the motion; it is in the record.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: It says that it is expedient to amend the Petroleum Administration Act to increase the levy to $1.75, but it is from $1 to $1.75.

Mr. Stevens: It does not say that.

Mr. Kempling: You are gutless.

Mr. Lalonde: My hon. colleagues, I submit, are not recognizing that this is being done in a way that is completely in order.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure that the minister does not want to mislead the House, because he has just said that there is a question here with regard to the motion. He states that the notice of ways and means calls for the levy to be raised from $1 to $1.75. That is not what is said in the notice of ways and means. The notice of ways and means says, "in any month shall be in such amount not exceeding $1.75". It is quite clear from this, without knowing the background of the notice, that the total increase in the tax is $1.75.

I think it would have been very helpful had the minister brought to the attention of the House that which is presented in this press release which has been released outside the House and which does state that it is from $1 to $1.75. That is what has caused the confusion and the commotion in the House this afternoon. I think it is important that the minister acknowledge that the increase is from $1 to $1.75, but that is not what is stated in the motion.

An hon. Member: One o'clock.

Mr. Clark: Have you the courage to stand up and read it, Marc?

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock, the House took recess.

● (1400)

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, prior to the luncheon recess the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) made the statement that the funds derived from the proposed additional levy, as outlined in his notice of ways and means motion, were to be paid to the province of Alberta.

I am sure that the minister would not want to mislead the House in this respect. I should like the minister to acknowledge the fact that these funds in no way go to the province of Alberta, that Alberta will never touch a cent of these funds. These funds, in fact, are to be paid into the petroleum compensation revolving fund to compensate the producers of synthetic crude for the difference between the domestic price for oil of $14.75 a barrel and the price at which he has presently frozen the payments to the synthetic crude producers of about $35 a barrel.

Mr. Collenette: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Thomson: I would appreciate the minister clarifying—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have to entertain the point of order from the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I would ask that you clarify the situation. Are you going to rule on the question of privilege as outlined by the right hon. member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark)—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Collenette: —or are we, by some spurious points of order, going to have a debate on the substance of the ways and means motion of which the minister has given notice?

Madam Speaker: I am listening to at least another hon. member, and then I will decide whether I will rule.

Mr. Thomson: Would the minister please clarify for the House that in fact the province of Alberta will not receive one cent of these funds that will be paid into the petroleum compensation revolving fund.

Mr. Lalonde: I rise on the point of order, Madam Speaker. I would certainly not want to mislead the House and I am sorry if my statement this morning might have led the hon. member to the wrong interpretation. Indeed, as indicated, the funds go to the petroleum compensation revolving fund and those funds serve to pay for the cost of oil from Syncrude and Suncor.

That fund also contributes to the payment to Alberta of other royalties, capital and operating costs of the companies. So what is coming out of the revolving fund, out of the Syncrude levy fund, goes to the companies to pay their operating costs and the Alberta royalties.

I apologize if I misled the hon. member this morning in this respect. The money pays for the corporations and for the royalties. Part of this money goes to the government of Alberta in the form of royalties. Again, on the point of order, I regret that I may have misled hon. members this morning.

Mr. Thomson: Madam Speaker, in fact—

Mr. Collenette: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Clark: Are you trying to shout everybody down?

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Collenette: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. members please resume their seats. I will entertain a point of order from the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, as I understand what is at issue here, it is the right of the minister to give notice of a ways and means motion.

An hon. Member: You weren't here this morning.

Mr. Collenette: I was here this morning and I heard the whole debate. What we are operating under now is almost a statement by a minister with questions from either side. That is the way in which it is proceeding.

Mr. Clark: Stop lecturing the Speaker.

Mr. Collenette: I understand that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) was speaking on a question of privilege, that he was interrupted once or twice on points of order, perhaps by the hon. member from Calgary. I would ask, Madam Speaker, that you clarify the procedure which we are now under. Are we on statements by ministers with questions coming from either side, or are we talking about contributions to a question of privilege?

Miss MacDonald: He made a statement in the House.

Mr. Collenette: I submit, Madam Speaker, that the hon. member for Calgary South has already contributed by way of a point of order on the minister's contribution to a question of privilege. If you intend, Madam Speaker, to recognize another member as you said a moment ago, then surely it should be a different hon. member.

I hope you will rule on the right of this procedural debate, because we are not on statements by ministers. We are on the whole question of tabling a ways and means motion by the minister.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member has asked me to clarify the procedure we are working under. Perhaps that will satisfy the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), but I will recognize him if he has a further point.

We are debating a question of privilege. From both sides of the House I have allowed and entertained points of order. That is what I just did, because I would not, of course, be able to allow the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to speak twice on the question of privilege. He was answering a point of order, and I have allowed points of order on both sides of the House in the course of this debate. So we are not on statements by ministers; we are still debating a question of privilege.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is right.

Mr. Thomson: Madam Speaker, I would not want the minister to mislead the House into believing that in fact any royalties were being paid to the province of Alberta out of the petroleum compensation revolving fund, because there can be no royalties until there is a profit on the Syncrude projects and there is no profit. I would like the minister to acknowledge that there are no royalties and no moneys being paid out of these levies to the province of Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to see in this discussion on the question of privilege that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) has at least had the courage to correct one misstatement which he made. Perhaps before this debate is through, we will have the minister carry out the procedures more properly than we have seen today, in the spirit of trying to make this House co-operate, as my leader mentioned earlier today when he entered this debate.

When my leader put forward the question of privilege this morning, it was not so that the minister would automatically come to the House and make a lengthy statement. We know that he is operating under narrow legalistic terms; nobody has been arguing that point. What we have been speaking of is the question whether or not Canadians, through their Parliament and through the people whom they choose to represent them in the democratic process to which surely we all adhere, can be legitimately informed of the way they are to be taxed. Surely that is the question which is at stake here.

Surely this is the matter which will be troubling members of Parliament as we attend in this place and a great number of Canadians to whom we in this chamber are accountable in explaining to them what it is they will be required to pay in the way of taxation. I know that there will be many people asking questions of me and others about this new form of taxation, which will probably bring in something in the vicinity of $600 million in government revenues beginning tonight. Many people are going to be asking, "What does this mean to me personally?" What does it mean to people, particularly older people, not to mention the widowed elderly people who are single, people about whom many of us in this House have previously expressed concern? Faced with a new form of taxation, what will it mean to them in the way of additional costs for home heating fuel? That is something which I would like to be able to explain to my constituents as I go out tomorrow, next week or whenever it may be. We have not had that kind of explanation from the minister.

Obviously, it is a budgetary measure and something which should be dealt with in the way we normally tackle budgetary measures, but we have not had that chance in the House. That in itself, unfortunately, will be interpreted by many people in the country, whether it is a narrow legal interpretation by the government or not, as a failing of this House and of the members of this House to be able properly to explain the reasons for the new taxation.

What will it mean to people in one part of the country, such as the Atlantic area, who will suddenly be faced with higher costs for home heating fuel and who have no means of substitution with the oil-fired furnaces which they now have? What do you say to those people?

Mr. Corbin: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: It is all very well for the hon. member from New Brunswick—what is his riding?

Mr. Corbin: Madawaska-Victoria.

Miss MacDonald: The hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria does not care about the older people and the poor people in his riding, but I want to tell him that I care.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: He may think that this does not mean anything in the way of additional costs, but I can tell him from a personal point of view—

Mr. Corbin: Tell it to Premier Hatfield.

Miss MacDonald: —that it means a great deal of difference to my mother who lives in Cape Breton.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: She does not have the chance to convert to other forms of home heating fuel. This will be an additional burden on her and on many hundreds of thousands like her throughout the country.

Mr. Corbin: You are not dealing with the fundamental question.

Miss MacDonald: The hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria does not seem to understand the fundamental question. The fundamental question is whether he is accountable and whether I am accountable to the people of this country for what we must tax them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: That is the question. If the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria does not understand that Parliament, in the final analysis, is accountable for the way in which it raises taxes—

Mr. Collenette: Speak to the question of privilege.

Miss MacDonald: —and spends the money of the people of this country, then he has no fundamental understanding of Parliament. I would say to the hon. member that those things should be taken into consideration. It is not necessary to do so under the narrow legalistic rules which the government all too often tries to use in order to wear out the humanitarian approach which it should use in its introduction of measures. Certainly it may not be necessary, but surely it is the civilized and decent thing to do when you are living in a free democratic society in which you are accountable to the people.

● (1420)

I say to you Madam Speaker, that what we have had here today is a blatant ignoring of the kind of tradition in which we have been schooled for generations, in fact, for hundreds of years as the British parliamentary tradition has evolved over the centuries. It is one which I think will not only bring shame on the minister, but unfortunately could serve to shame the whole institution of which we want so justifiably to be proud.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I am tempted to wonder what the previous member for Prince Albert would say about this procedure if he were in the House today.

I want to be very brief on this point of privilege. I am concerned, as is the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), with the fact that the government is once again trying to sneak in budgetary measures quickly, without adequate warning, notice and proper debate. I am particularly concerned because I had a chance to see the minister very briefly today. As my party's energy critic, I would have appreciated knowing that this motion was coming and would have appreciated getting some notice of his press release. Perhaps then the attitude on this side of the House might have been quite different.

This is not only a financial matter but it does, of course, concern energy. The delicate nature of the energy negotiations and constitutional negotiations in this country has been brought up by many members. I would remind the minister through you, Madam Speaker, that I represent a constituency in a province where the cabinet of that province is meeting with the cabinet of the province of Alberta. I know this is not the time to state my views on that, but I would say to the minister that these are ominous times, and this is a forewarning of some very difficult things that we are all going to have to deal with out in western Canada. I say that very seriously to the minister.

That is why on energy matters, the minister has got to be very careful that he gives the House the widest opportunity for debate and adopts the fairest procedure. Otherwise it will be perceived not just in this House or by members defending these thousand years of traditions of Parliament, but will also affect the very contemporary, difficult problems that we have in the west in dealing with what are almost separatist tendencies. I would ask the minister to remember this in his future actions.

Mr. Malone: We just want to separate from Lalonde.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I am ready to make a ruling on that question of privilege, but if the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) insists, I could hear him, because he was one of those who rose before I began my statement. Does the hon. member insist?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): I appreciate your courtesy, Madam Speaker, and I will attempt to be brief.

I think it will be useful before you make your ruling for us to go back for a moment and remind ourselves of what it was the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) said at the time he rose. He asked not that the minister be compelled by the House or that he be compelled by you to give any explanation of what he was doing, but he asked as a matter of courtesy that there be unanimous consent in the House to allow a minister to make a brief statement simply to explain this measure that he was putting before Parliament.

As so many members have pointed out, no one in this Parliament, certainly no one on this side of the House, was given any advance warning of this very major announcement which the minister was making today of a half-a-billion dollar increase in taxation which will affect the lives of every Canadian.

Common courtesy and tradition in this House dictate that when ministers are making statements of a major policy nature they have the responsibility to indicate to members of the opposition, to the official critics in the opposition, what their intention is in making those announcements so that we do not get major announcements sprung on us without any warning. There is nothing in the rules which requires that, Madam Speaker. No one on this side of the House has insisted that the rules did require it, but parliamentary convention and common courtesy demand that this be done.

There are rules in this House, both written and unwritten, which are important to each of us. I think it is essential that the government go beyond the strict interpretation of the rule book and that it acts with the sort of courtesy that it expected at this time last year when the government was then the opposition. At that time our prime minister, the current Leader of the Opposition, insisted that every minister in his government should extend that courtesy toward the House of Commons.

In Canada today we are talking about constitutional renewal to make the constitution work. We are talking in this House from time to time about the need for parliamentary reform to make Parliament work; in other words, what can we do to change the rules to make it function more effectively. If the truth were told, no change in the constitution and no change in the rules of Parliament would guarantee that Parliament was functional again or that federalism was functional again. What is necessary is that there be a change in attitude on the part of the leadership of this country.

Confederation could be made to work today if the government opposite were prepared to want to make it work. Parliament without a single change in the rules could be made to work today if there were a disposition on the other side of the House to share with Parliament the governance of this country.

Members on this side have pointed out that we have a responsibility toward the people of Canada, certainly toward our constituents, to explain to them the profound new policy announced by the government which becomes effective tonight, and which according to the government House leader Parliament should not have a chance to talk about before we go home for the weekend.

All the Leader of the Opposition did when he got up to intervene was to ask for a statement from the minister, which would have taken a minute at most, yet the government House leader, as the minister of energy was getting up to give that statement, jumped up to cut him off and prevent the minister from making that statement. I am sure that the government House leader's motives were honourable and that all he wanted to do was to expedite the proceedings in the House. But I say to him that the proceedings in the House would have gone on at a much more rapid and expeditious pace if he had shown that courtesy to Parliament and if he had been prepared to allow that brief statement to be made.

Mr. Nielsen: Parliament is a nuisance to them.

Mr. Beatty: At the very same time as the minister was tabling his notice of motion in the House of Commons, his officials were releasing a press release in the gallery which gave the substance of what we wanted to know. What was it that the minister was doing there? What was the purpose of this new policy? What would be the effect upon the Canadian people? Surely if Parliament is to have any function at all, it is essential that Parliament be entitled to have the same information which is made freely available by the flacks on the minister's staff to the press gallery and to other groups outside of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, indeed, no rule of the House of Commons compels courtesy on the part of any member of Parliament, and certainly not on the part of the Crown. But common sense, parliamentary tradition and the need to have some respect for the people of Canada and for the representatives of the people of Canada should compel every minister of the Crown to treat the House of Commons with the same sort of courtesy which they would expect if they were on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order which I hope will make your task easier. We are at the stage of notices of motions. I tabled the motion and I understand, and the other parties recognize as far as I can see, that it was correct and proper to do that. Once we reach "statements by ministers", if it helps the House I will be ready and available to answer questions. I submit that under this question of privilege we have covered a lot of the substance of the matter, but if there are further questions to be asked, then I will be available and will be happy to expedite matters by answering any questions that may be raised, so far as I can answer them, when we reach "statements by ministers".

I submit that there is no question of privilege here as such, Madam Speaker, but I am ready to help the House proceed and will be available when we reach "statements by ministers".

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I will be very brief on the point of order raised by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I am delighted that he has accepted the suggestion I made an hour and a half of parliamentary time ago. The only question in my mind is what bloody-mindedness in the head of the government House leader, what motives on the side of the government, caused them to waste an hour and a half of the time of Parliament before acceding to this simple request.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I think that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is unwilling to take a good lesson of parliamentary courtesy. Indeed, the time lost was used by his party, and I feel that the time taken up to now was to obtain some explanation from the minister who had the opportunity to speak on this boring question of privilege, who answered questions already put by some members opposite and who is trying to straighten things out, because actually, the Leader of the Official Opposition has enough experience to realize that what was going on was not so much a debate on a question of privilege as questions put to the minister.

The minister merely wanted to straighten things out and co-operate by answering more specific questions, if any, during the last hour and a half. I have much more respect for the members of his party than he has shown today. I do not consider that time has been wasted. They have made their point and explained what they had in mind, and questions have been put. That will spare the minister having to make a statement of an hour and a half. In fact, there is no reason why this debate should last more than a few minutes after the minister has expressed his views and answered a few questions.

To my mind, what we are doing right now is demonstrating that we can be courteous, as the Leader of the Official Opposition wanted us to be, that we have respected our rules, and that if the time spent on discussing the matter, which the Leader of the Official Opposition qualified as time wasted, was indeed wasted, then his party is responsible for it because, as far as we are concerned, time spent on the energy question is not time wasted, it is important time.

[English]

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, as I understood the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, he said he was prepared to make a statement and answer questions if this was the wish of the House.

I wish to make it clear that, so far as this party is concerned, that is our wish.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Under the circumstances, it would make things easier if I gave a ruling on the question of privilege on which we have spent enough time this afternoon. If I were to dispose of the matter, we could then proceed with orders of the day. Hon. members could then deal with the matter they want to discuss in the House today.

I recognize that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) may have felt impelled to rise on a question of privilege on what could in fact be a serious grievance. I can understand that he should have tried to get a statement for his information and guidance. I do understand that his grievance can have some importance; still, I am sure hon. members will also understand that I am faced with a serious dilemma, in that all the interventions we have heard during this debate on the question of privilege clearly established that the question of privilege was in no way founded on a breach of our rules. The Leader of the Opposition indicated so himself. There was no breach of our rules, but rather one of the common courtesies and customs in current usage in this House, and on that I agree with him. I should perhaps read the Standing Order which authorizes the minister to do exactly as he did, namely Standing Order 60(1) that stipulates, and I quote:

60. (1) A notice of a ways and means motion may be laid upon the table of the House at any time during a sitting by a minister of the Crown, but such a motion may not be proposed in the same sitting.

The minister has then clearly chosen a valid procedure, as was his right. It is not up to me to choose the procedure, it is up to the members of this House, and the one that was indeed chosen is in accordance with the Standing Orders, and if I may remind hon. members, none of the participants in the debate has denied it.

I note in passing that one of the objections raised was that this occurred on a Friday afternoon, or more precisely on a Friday morning. I remind hon. members that any day of the week is appropriate for debating issues in the House, whether it be Friday, Monday or Wednesday. Every day, in my opinion, is appropriate, so obviously I did not entertain that argument.

One of the grievances was to the effect that the minister did not make a statement. There again, I must remind hon. members that it is open to the minister to make a statement or not when tabling a ways and means motion. He decided not to do so and I have the impression the debate on the question of privilege came very close to what it would have been had the minister made a statement, since he had to give so many explanations on what had happened. However, if later on in our proceedings the minister should rise to make a statement, we shall see what will happen then.

Point of Order—Mr. Andre

As to the question of all the courtesies that should be extended to the House, hon. members will also understand quite easily that is it is not up to me to discuss them, any more than I have any say in the agreements reached by the leaders of the various parties in the House. It is entirely up to the members and party leaders in the House. I am bound by the rules which say very clearly that what the minister did was in order, which rules the House in its wisdom gave itself. For the benefit of the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), I should like to say that I am bound by the written rules. Customs and practices are a different matter. Of course, I always consult the precedents, but I always consider them in terms of the present Standing Orders.

So I cannot find that there is a question of privilege despite the fact I recognize the grievance was perhaps very important. I suggest that we proceed now with orders of the day.

MR. ANDRE—IMPOSITION OF LEVY UNDER PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise at the earliest opportunity after the minister's tabling of the notice of ways and means motion to raise a point of order which shows, I believe, that the notice of ways and means motion is in fact out of order, and that the minister cannot, through this mechanism, impose a tax as of midnight tonight. I think it is a point of order that has to be discussed and decided on today because of that implication.

The reason for that, Madam Speaker, is quite straightforward and simple. The notice of ways and means motion purports to amend the Petroleum Administration Act in regard to the charge imposed, levied and collected on each barrel of oil processed in the country.

The relevant section of the Petroleum Administration Act is section 65.12, which states that there should be imposed, levied and collected on, in part, (a) each barrel of domestic production and, in part, (b) each barrel of foreign production, and then it reads in the same language as the notice of motion and continues as follows:

—in any month after the month in which this part comes into force, a charge in such amount not exceeding one dollar a barrel as may be prescribed in a tariff of charges for that month made by order of the governor in council.

This act was not introduced by a ways and means motion. It is not a taxation bill but is a statute of Parliament to establish a program for subsidizing synthetic fuels in the country and to establish a fund outside the purview of parliamentary examination, outside the estimates procedure, outside the normal checks and balances available to the people through their representatives—a revolving external fund, by statute, without ways and means associated with it. The act describes this charge as a levy.

The then minister of energy, mines and resources, who introduced the bill, Hon. Alastair Gillespie, describes the bill at page 2314 of Hansard for January 27, 1978 as follows:

The bill also authorizes the funding of this program by a levy on all crude oil refined in Canada and oil products imported to this country.

He quite carefully described it as a levy. At no time in the discussion of this act or anywhere in the act is the word "tax" mentioned. It is not a tax measure at all. It is a statute of Parliament to set up a separate fund to fund a program agreed to, I believe, by all parties in the House. In any event, it was agreed to by Parliament. It is not a tax measure whatsoever.

Ways and means is described in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, section 516(1), page 174, as follows:

A ways and means motion is a necessary preliminary to the imposition of a new tax, the continuation of an expiring tax, an increase in the rate of an existing tax, or an extension of the incidence of a tax so as to include persons not already taxpayers.

That is the definition of ways and means. It is the way in which taxes are changed, not the way in which statutes are changed. The statute has a limitation of $1 on a separate fund. I maintain that the government cannot through this procedure seek to alter the statute. I agree with the government House leader that under Standing Order 60(1) a minister can introduce a ways and means motion. My point of order is that this is not a proper ways and means motion and, therefore, must be ruled out of order. The proper procedure of introducing a bill with first, second and third reading is necessary to change a statute to amend that section of the act.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Maybe it would be better if I recognized the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) first so that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) could answer afterwards. The hon. member for Edmonton West has the floor.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, the objective of my argument has been ably argued by my colleague, but I wish to draw your attention to a parallel situation in which I suggest the government would not in any way dare move by way of a ways and means motion, and that is to increase the charges under the Canada Pensions Act.

Under the Canada Pensions Act, contributions made by employers and by individuals go into the Canada pension fund. The Government of Canada does not contribute one split penny to the Canada pension fund. It is a fund apart. I suggest, in fact I strongly argue, that if it were to be the purpose of the government to try to increase the levies upon individuals and their employers with regard to the Canada pension fund, which they are going to have to do before too long, it would not be by way of a ways and means motion. There must be an amendment to the statute. In fact, it is within the power of an individual member of this House, in my submission, to so move to bring forward a bill to increase those charges. It does not affect ways and means of the government in any way whatsoever.

In this particular instance, this is a levy upon the production of certain categories of petroleum products. The revenues from that go into a fund. The government contributes not one red penny to it, one green penny nor blue penny—not one iota. The Petroleum Administration Act, among other things, provides for the levy. It provides for the accumulation of the moneys and it provides directly as to the distribution of those moneys. I repeat, the Government of Canada does not contribute one penny. This is not a tax.

The definition of a ways and means motion clearly confines it to a tax or a duty. There is excise tax, customs duty, income tax. A ways and means motion is simplified by certain requirements. I was part of the procedure committee when these amendments to our Standing Orders were brought in. I recall the former government House leader from Rosedale wanting this provision to simplify tax changes so that a minister could stand in his place and give notice of the ways and means motion which would then be debated on a date subsequent. Once having been adopted, a bill would be brought in to put into effect that tax change. However, this is not a tax.

Therefore, I submit that the government has to go back to the drawing board. The method adopted by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is the wrong procedure. In saying this, I do not want to in any way prejudge what he was trying to accomplish. I simply say he has gone about it the wrong way. Since when in this House has the end ever justified the means? We have been most conscious about avoiding that. There is no way the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or any of his colleagues in cabinet can justify using a budgetary procedure to move to amend a statute that is not concerned with taxes. I respectfully submit, Madam Speaker, that the procedure adopted by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was entirely out of order.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the argument raised by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) is interesting but unfortunately it is neither fundamental nor accurate. I think that in order to understand correctly—I believe the hon. member had the hiccups and I excuse him, and so does the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), Madam Speaker.

In order to understand correctly the point which is raised, I think it is essential to proceed with an intelligent reading of Standing Order 60(1) which is very brief. I would like to have it put on the record, and I quote:

A notice of a ways and means motion may be laid upon the Table of the House at any time during a sitting by a minister of the Crown, but such a motion may not be proposed in the same sitting.

Madam Speaker, on page 174 of Beauchesne's in citation 514 et seq Standing Order 60 is explained under the heading "Business of Ways and Means." Madam Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition does not feel well and he can be excused if he wishes to leave because as far as I am concerned

I am discussing a serious matter which might be above his head but I would like to be able to make my point as did his colleague. I did not interrupt him out of respect for Parliament and I expect the Leader of the Opposition who brought the matter up this morning, to extend to me the same courtesy.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, the ways and means procedure is provided to allow government to increase the burdens upon the people. This morning in introducing a notice of ways and means motion in accordance with our Standing Orders the minister expressed the government's intention to eventually legislate an increase in the burdens imposed upon the people. This expression of "burden upon the people" is not picked out at random, Madam Speaker, and it certainly was not coined by the two members who raised a point of order; it is taken from Beauchesne's on page 174, citation 514(1) which clearly states that when making a statement concerning the budget or the business of ways and means, at that time a notice of ways and means motion must be introduced if the burdens upon the people are to be increased.

A little further, we find citation 516 which was quoted previously by the member for Calgary-Centre (Mr. Andre); he read citation 514 (1) which is quite right but he should also have read citation 514 (2) and I quote:

Therefore no motion can be made to impose a tax—

—which in this case means, according to section 60, paragraph (1) and according to the interpretation given by the authorities of the business of ways and means, that an increase of the burdens upon the people could be done only by—

—no motion can be made to impose a tax, save by a minister of the Crown, unless such tax be in substitution, by way of equivalent, for taxation at that moment submitted to the consideration of Parliament—

—this is not the case here—

—nor can the amount of a tax proposed on behalf of the Crown be augmented, nor any alteration made in the area of imposition. In like manner, no increase can be considered either of an existing, or of a new or temporary tax for the service of the year, except on the initiative of a minister, acting on behalf of the Crown; nor can a member other than a minister move for the introduction of a bill—

It seems obvious to me, Madam Speaker, that this morning the minister proposed an amendment to an act which implies an increase in the tax burden imposed on the people. And the first paragraph of the ways and means motion mentions that it is expedient to amend the Petroleum Administration Act to provide that each month, effective midnight, July 11, 1980, the charge imposed, levied and collected: (a) on each barrel of domestic petroleum, and so on. So, Madam Speaker, very clearly the government intends in fact to impose a charge on the people, to raise a tax and if this requires amending an act other than the Income Tax Act it does not mean that automatically it is excluded from proceeding through a ways and means motion.

Section 60 and others following as well as its subsections, because there are several, must be read and interpreted not only in light of their literal meaning but also of their spirit. It is the only section in our rules which allows and describes the procedure to follow to impose levies on the people. The present rules of this House do not provide for any other procedure.

So we want to increase a tax and there is no other way—indeed, hon. members did not suggest any—which would allow us to increase that tax except the one used by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources this morning. Finally, Madam Speaker, it is interesting to refer to citation 530 on page 177, again in Beauchesne, and to consider the following:

No augmentation of a tax or duty asked by the Crown can be proposed to the committee, nor tax imposed, save upon the motion of a minister of the Crown;

The definition is already extended further in my opinion. First, the author talked about increasing the charge upon the people, and he is now talking about taxes or duties. Only a minister can move such a motion. It is specified that this should be done by a notice of a ways and means motion.

—nor would an amendment to extend the imposition of a tax to persons enjoying an exemption therefrom be now permitted.

I am trying to understand the point raised earlier by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), who said that the government cannot increase the tax in this case because there is already a statute in existence which provides a tax and which is not the Income Tax Act. If this is what he was saying, I do not accept his argument because it is not essential that the provision which the government wants to change be included in the Income Tax Act for the government to use the procedure provided in Standing Order 60(1), which deals with notices of ways and means. I respectfully submit, Madam Speaker, that the only means at our disposal to increase a charge upon the people, as it is stated in Beauchesne, the only means to impose an additional burden in the form of a tax or duty, the only legal and regular means provided by the Standing Orders is to table a notice of a ways and means motion, which is eventually followed by the motion accompanied by the bill based upon the ways and means motion, and in practice, it is only at that time that the bill can be debated, even though we have had today a preliminary debate to the one which should have been held or would have been held once the bill had been tabled. I therefore submit that the procedure we have followed is quite in order, that it covers exactly the increase required by the minister, and that there is no other legal means to achieve this purpose. I submit that simply amending the Petroleum Administration Act would have been insufficient in this case and that we should have had to table a notice of ways and means, otherwise the members of the official opposition would have risen to object to our procedure for amending the text of the statute.

● (1450)

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): On that last point, Madam Speaker, the government cannot argue there is no other way to do what they want to do. Surely there is another way, the proper way, and that is to amend the statute.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is what Parliament is here for, or that is what I thought Parliament was here for. So that argument falls completely to the ground and I hope you will not be moved by it.

As to the point that the discussion here today is, in a sense, preliminary to a debate because at some time the government may bring in a bill, it is certainly that. If the government brings a bill down, there will certainly be debate on it. We are talking now about an important point of order, the question whether or not the government of the day has moved appropriately under the law.

Madam Speaker, of all the decisions you have been asked to make, this is likely to be the most judicial. The position as it has been put before the House by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) is very clear. The government can, of course, put down a ways and means motion—if they have legal authority to do so. In this case they have not, except under the terms of the Standing Orders of the House. We are not arguing the right to do it. We are arguing whether or not it is lawful in its terms, and it is clear on the face of the document that this is not a tax but a levy. It is a levy for a fund, not for the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It is a different thing. That is the one point you have to come to terms with, Madam Speaker, and it is very important to the House.

It is not by accident that we have established rules of practice here which require in certain circumstances, when it is appropriate and lawful for it to be convenient to the government to table a ways and means motion, that they can table a ways and means motion that is effective.

● (1500)

Equally, when the government enacted the Petroleum Administration Act in the first place, it chose the method by which it would make the levy. The levy would be made by an act of Parliament, and the only way the government can change that levy, under these circumstances in any event, it not being a taxing statute, is by another act of Parliament. That is the question as simply, clearly, and succinctly as I can possibly put it.

Mr. Fox: It is clearly wrong.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): This is important for a number of reasons. An announcement was made today which I am sure has had a tremendous effect on the market. It is an announcement which, under these circumstances, I suggest is inappropriate. Surely the law officers of the Crown could advise the minister differently. Surely they could have done that, but much more fundamental than that is the position in which you, Madam Speaker, find yourself because this motion is to take effect tonight at midnight, assuming it is right, proper and legal, which it is not, in my respectful submission.

This decision of yours is one which should be reserved but really cannot be reserved, and I think the House has to accommodate Your Honour. The House should be prepared to accommodate you so that you can make that decision, and make it today. If Your Honour feels that it is appropriate, I think the House would be agreeable that the sitting be suspended until such time as you have had an opportunity to consult with your officers, because of the fact that it is a Friday and we are heading to an effective time at midnight. I hope the House would be agreeable with respect to that matter. It is for you to decide as to whether you need the time, but that is not the main reason I rise.

The main reason is clearly that there is one way, and one way only by which the government can act with respect to the Petroleum Administration Act because the government chose it originally when it brought in the act. It chose not to move by ways and means but to move by statute, a statute which imposes a levy, which is not a tax. A tax is the only thing subject to a ways and means motion. By statute is the only way this government can appropriately and lawfully move. It may be inconvenient for the government, but it is the only way it can move.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, there is no doubt that the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) has raised a very important procedural—if not constitutional—point, and I am pleased that instead of the rather heated discussion we had earlier about courtesy versus discourtesy we are now having a calm and collected discussion about this serious point. I also feel that it is a difficult one for Your Honour and that you will have to give it very serious consideration.

If I may come to the conclusion of my argument first and then go back and try to point out how I arrive at that conclusion, I would say that the question before us is whether the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) put a title on this piece of paper that it is a notice of ways and means motion makes it a notice of ways and means motion. I have the feeling that the case is very strong for the fact that what the minister is proposing is an amendment to a statute and that the way to bring about that change is by giving notice of an amending bill. The difference which faced the minister, of course, is that we have a certain tradition around this place to the effect that an amending bill's provisions do not come into effect until that bill has been passed and the corresponding statute has been amended. However, the other side of that tradition is that a notice of ways and means motion, which is an amendment to a taxation statute, can come into effect immediately or, as usually is the custom, at midnight that night.

As I look at it, and I am following the argument put forward by the hon. member for Calgary Centre, what we have before us is the Petroleum Administration Act, which has in it certain provisions for charges, and the government, through the minister, wants to amend the Petroleum Administration Act. It seems to me that the only way he can do that is by giving notice of a bill to amend the Petroleum Administration Act.

He could have given that notice today. We would find out about it when we got the documents tomorrow but, of course, such a notice could not carry the provision that the tax be in effect at midnight tonight.

On the other hand, by calling it a notice of ways and means motion he can make the tax become effective at midnight tonight, as has been done times without number. So the question is whether it is a rose because we call it a rose or whether it is something else. The minister put the title on it, and he stood up under "tabling of documents" and said he was tabling a notice of ways and means motion to amend the Petroleum Administration Act. If it is a notice of ways and means motion, then the minister had the right to table it under "tabling of documents", and he had the right to provide for its coming into effect at midnight tonight. However, if it is not a notice of ways and means motion, despite the minister's naming it that, and if it is an amendment to a statute which is other than a taxation statute—a statute which has in it certain charges—then the only way he can do that, unless he has some kind of unanimous consent, is to introduce a bill to amend the Petroleum Administration Act. In my view it is as simple as that.

There is no argument about the right to table a notice of ways and means motion under Standing Order 60(1). There is no argument about the right of the government to give notice of a bill, with the concurrence of the Governor General, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act, but what Your Honour has to decide is whether the minister can turn what is an amending bill to a statute into a notice of ways and means motion simply by putting those words at the top of the piece of paper he gave to us.

I think there is a good deal of merit to what the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said. He said that Your Honour should be given time to consider this important point, whether that means that we recess for a little while or go on with some other business while Your Honour wrestles with this very important issue.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I concur in what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said as to the importance of the point raised by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), but I also noticed the caution with which the hon. member approached this subject, covering both sides of the argument.

I submit that the official opposition is trying to have its cake and eat it too. Hansard will show that the whole argument this morning was that this was a tax or that this was a budgetary measure which imposes a tax on people. We heard all these arguments this morning. On the point of order that has been raised by the hon. member for Calgary Centre, the argument is that this is not a tax, that this is something called a levy, a charge, or something else. I submit that the opposition cannot argue both sides of the street at the same time. In effect what we have here is a ways and means motion, as the government House leader has indicated quite clearly, which fulfils all the conditions provided for a proper ways and means motion under the rules of the House, and the government House leader has cited authorities in support of his point of view.

I submit that when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre states that this ways and means motion amends the Petroleum Administration Act, he can make an argument that that is not in effect changing a tax. As the hon. member well knows, there are taxation provisions in all kinds of legislation, not only in the Income Tax Act or the corporations income tax act, but in all kinds of pieces of legislation there are taxation elements and taxation provisions. This ways and means motion provides for a specific charge, a specific levy which provides the funds necessary for the government to indemnify the companies which are exploiting the tar sands by paying them the difference between the unique Canadian price and the international price, whatever that price might be at that time. At present the levy, the charge, or the tax is not providing adequate funds to provide that indemnity to the companies, and the ways and means motion put before the House raises that tax—

An hon. Member: This is not a ways and means motion.

Mr. Lalonde: —it raises the tax from $1 to $1.75. As such, by whatever name my colleagues wish to call it, it comes under the provisions of our rules as a proper ways and means motion. I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that the procedure which has been followed here, upon the advice of the law officers of the Crown, is the proper procedure to be followed and that consequently, in my view, the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker—

Mr. Collenette: We are all on the same point of order, and Madam Speaker has recognized me. But I will defer, if you want to let someone else speak before me, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You were recognized. Go ahead.

Mr. Collenette: I was only trying to be courteous, Madam Speaker.

An hon. Member: Thank you.

Mr. Collenette: On the narrow point, the point of order of the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), that is, the advisability of your making a decision on the admissibility of the tabling of this notice of ways and means motion, I submit to you, with all respect, that there is no motion before the House and that you are therefore unable to judge as to whether or not what has been tabled by the minister is actually a ways and means motion until concurrence is sought. I would say that only the courts are empowered to do this. I am not arguing the merits of whether or not what the minister has tabled—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I have sat here courteously while the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) heckled my House leader and others. I would ask that he show some courtesy because, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said, we are not now trying to score parliamentary points between parties on courtesy between parties, we are on a fundamental matter relating to the governance of this nation. I submit to you, Madam Speaker, notwithstanding the merits of the ways and means motion, that the minister might be wrong or might be right, but the point is that it is not for the House to decide. This House, and that is you, Madam Speaker, does not have the authority—

An hon. Member: Jeepers-creepers.

Mr. Collenette: —to decide that the document tabled by the minister is or is not a ways and means motion. It is up to the courts to decide. We may be getting into a very difficult point at this time and Parliament will have to deal with it later on, and that is perhaps we should bring in some kind of law which provides for the provisional collection of taxes so that situations such as these can be prevented from arising. But I submit that on the fine point put forward by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton, you, Madam Speaker, with all respect, do not have it within your mandate as the first among equals in this House to accede to the request contained in the point of order of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre).

An hon. Member: That is garbage.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I want to be quite brief. I should like to dismiss the immediately preceding intervention in this way. So far as I am concerned and so far as every other member of the House is concerned, except for the parliamentary secretary, this House of Commons is the highest court in the land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We will make up our own mind as to what our procedures are and we do not need any mealy-mouthed intervention from the parliamentary secretary telling Madam Speaker what her rights and privileges are in this particular instance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I think the matter has been placed before you in very simple terms. It is a very important matter we now face in terms of the admissibility of this suggested ways and means motion. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has indicated that because you call something by a particular name this does not necessarily indicate that that is what it is. Your Honour will, of course, have to consult the governing statute in order to determine precisely the effect of this particular proposal which was put forward by the minister. Let me just use the minister's own words because, as has been pointed out to Your Honour, the fact is that he has, simultaneously with the tabling of this document, issued a press release in which he tried to explain precisely what he was doing. Here is what he, or some functionary in his department and under his authority, stated in the press release:

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Hon. Marc Lalonde, today introduced a ways and means motion to amend the Petroleum Administration Act—

In other words, the minister himself, by his own words, indicated that the effect of this is to amend the provisions of the act. The point by my colleague for Edmonton West is well taken that this involves a revolving fund. The minister himself in his press release acknowledged the fact that a fund is in existence and that the levies and contributions to this fund do not—and he underlines the word "not"—in any way increase the amount of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. He underlines the fact that this is a separate fund. Statutory provision has been made in this connection, and if the limits of that fund are to be adjusted and the amount of the levies into that fund is to be increased, it seems to me to be logical that the way to do it is by way of an amendment to the legislation, not by a ways and means motion.

We all acknowledge that this has an impact on the public, that the public is, in fact, contributing to a fund which is not the consolidated revenue fund. While there may be an obligation by way of a charge on the part of the government with respect to the deficit, that, I think, is incidental to the argument because it is a matter of legislation. I suggest to you, Your Honour, that this matter is of sufficient importance that you might feel compelled—and I think it is incumbent in view of the substantial amount of money which needs to be raised as a consequence of this ways and means motion and the effect of attempting to collect it being found to be ultra vires—to adjudicate upon the appropriateness of the purported ways and means motion brought forward by the minister.

The House always has the right to address itself to your ruling. But the fact of the matter is, it is imperative that you rule on the matter, Madam Speaker, and that it be brought before the House so that there can be some clarity and so that the people of Canada will not suffer from the amount of injury which they would suffer in terms of economy and from the consequences of the confusion which will take place if we do not resolve the matter this afternoon.

Madam Speaker: I feel that it is very important for me to rule on this matter today, but I would like to have some time to consider this very important point of order which has been raised by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), as well as the arguments which have been put forward in support of that very important point of order.

I have tried to note all of the arguments which have been brought forward. I am sure that the clerks at the Table have done so as well. I would like to have some time in order to deliberate with them as to the decision which I should render on this point of order. Therefore, if the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) and others who have risen insist, I will hear them, but time is running short. If they wish to withdraw, I would like now to put someone else in the chair and retire to my chamber so that I may deliberate.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I appreciate your point, but I will only be 30 seconds. The point I wish to make is fundamental, and there is now a calmer atmosphere. Some of the more important points in life are very simple points and this is a very simple point. But it does not take away from its fundamental character.

I heard the government House leader say, I believe, although it was in translation, "This is the only way to do it". I want to go back and accentuate what the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) said and what the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and others repeated. It comes back to what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), said about the opposition having both sides of the street.

Everyone argued this morning in a heated atmosphere on a question of privilege. You ruled on that question of privilege, and we accepted it, but then we got into the specious reasoning that just because you ruled on a question of privilege, we were not supposed to raise a bona fide point of order. That, to me, is absolutely incredible, as was the suggestion that the courts of the land are supposed to dispose of this matter after tonight, when this is the highest court in the land.

But coming to the matter of both sides of the street, when this bill was introduced and passed in, I believe, in April, 1978, it was not introduced by a ways and means motion. The government House leader today in his reply earlier said that that was the only way to do it. Who is trying to have both sides of the street? When the bill was introduced it was not done by a ways and means motion, yet today the government tries to amend it by a ways and means motion.

In conclusion, there are some things that could be said, but the principle is to me so fundamental. I would hope that the law officers of the Crown, in giving you advice on this matter, Madam Speaker, would appreciate my point, that if a government, whatever its political stripe, can amend a statute which levies a charge by ways and means motions, then the Crows-nest Pass law, for instance, could be amended by a ways and means motion. I would suggest that there is not a bill that levies a charge, not a tax but a charge that is a separate fund, that could not then be changed by a ways and means motion.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Don't give them any ideas.

Mr. Nowlan: The government House leader prompted me to make this intervention long before the parliamentary secretary made his incredible suggestion that this place and yourself do not have the right to rule on this matter. Such a situation would make this place so inane that I do not think his suggestion is worth rebuttal. But when the government House leader says that the only way to deal with the matter is the way in which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tried to deal with it, when the very foundation of the bill was not a ways and means motion, then to me, through his argument, he has caught himself in his own petard.

Mr. Friesen: Pinard.

Mr. Nowlan: Pinard by petard, or petard by Pinard. Be that as it may, we have a statutory levy, and the only way to change a statutory levy is by amendment.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I do not wish to indulge in the House, and I think that I can make my point in 30 seconds. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) made the point that there are all kinds of statutes which authorize charges, levies and taxes. Each of those statutes spells out a particular form of amendment. The case which we are making here today is that the government is attempting to amend a statute which can only be amended by the introduction of a new statute here in the House of Commons, by the use of a ways and means motion.

In other words, the case which has been made by my colleagues on this side of the House and, I believe, joined by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), is that we have here a situation where there is a levy established by a statute, a means set out by which that levy can be changed and that statute can be amended. The government today, perhaps inadvertently, is trying to change that statute by an instrument that is not lawful as a means of changing it.

Madam Speaker: I would like to reserve my judgment on this point of order. Rather than suspend the sitting, I think that in the interest of the House the deliberations should continue with someone else in the chair.

Tabling of documents?

Statements by ministers? The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, I am sure that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would agree that it would probably be well for us to await your ruling before he makes his statement. We are prepared to hear him now, but if the point raised by my colleague for Calgary Centre is found to be accurate, he would be explaining a measure which is impossible for him to introduce. Certainly in so far as we in this party are concerned, we would be prepared to revert to statements after your decision has been rendered, if that is necessary.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, having waited that long, I can wait a little longer.

Mr. Nielsen: You may not have to make it at all.

FOREIGN PROCEEDINGS AND JUDGMENTS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING PROCEDURES

Hon. Marc Lalonde (for the Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-41, to authorize the making of orders relating to the production of records and the giving of information for the purposes of proceedings in foreign tribunals and in respect of the recognition and enforcement in Canada of certain foreign judgments obtained in antitrust proceedings.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 216, 378, 731, 732, 757, 839, 855, 875 and 931.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

C.N. TOWER—TORONTO

Question No. 216—Mr. Herbert:

1. What was the total expenditure on the CN Tower in Toronto?

2. What was the total gross revenue and net revenue to date since the completion of the project and from whom were such revenues received?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. The total undepreciated capital cost of the tower was $59 million. Net book value after depreciation as of March 31, 1980, is $55.6 million.

2. Total gross revenue of the tower from June 26, 1976 to March 31, 1980, is $25.5 million.

Total net revenue (net income before interest) from June 26, 1976 to March 31, 1980, is $6.8 million.

Sources of Revenue:

Visitors to sky pod and spade deck	63 per cent
Rental from broadcasters	13 per cent
Rent from restaurant operations	9 per cent
Souvenirs and gifts	5 per cent
Other	10 per cent

EXPORTATION OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS EQUIPMENT

Question No. 378—Mr. Herbert:

In 1978, by value of the equipment exported, to which ten countries did Canada export the most telecommunications equipment?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Ranked by value of the equipment exported, Canada shipped the most telecommunication equipment to the following ten countries in 1978:

Country	$'000
United States	369,814
United Kingdom	38,496
Turkey	14,396
West Germany	12,346
France	11,434
Malaysia	9,074
Saudi Arabia	8,950
Ireland	5,365
Italy	5,041
Libya	4,754

CANADIAN NATIONAL EXPRESS

Question No. 731—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the Canadian National Railways Annual Report for 1979 and with particular reference to the report by CN Express, since 1978, has there been a 41 per cent increase in the operating loss of the branch and, if so, has the minister made any enquiries of the corporation to discern the cause of this large and growing deficit?

2. Did the operating expenses of the corporation rise at well under half the rate for the operating loss and, if so (a) how does the corporation explain this growing drain on its operations (b) what course of action is the corporation contemplating to ensure that such losses are reduced and finally eliminated?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1 and 2. The deficit attributable to express operations in 1979 included special costs of $10 million associated with the introduction of a computer-based control system intended to bring about significant longer-term reductions in administrative and operating staffs. Other major programs are in place to achieve productivity improvements and strengthen market position. These will result in significant staff adjustments which are expected to bring about an overall improvement in financial results. It is clear, however, that these programs will not suffice to eliminate the deficit; that cannot be done unless express is able to withdraw from lighter density areas and make more extensive use of local trucking companies for integrated service to some 400-500 smaller communities. The potential benefits of such changes are currently being examined.

TERRATRANSPORT

Question No. 732—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to the Canadian National Railways Annual Report for 1979 and with particular reference to the report detailed by Terratransport, since the corporation has now been operating this division for over a year and has had an opportunity to review its financial situation and the market conditions, can the corporation state whether there is any prospect that, in the future, it will be able to operate on a self-sustaining basis eliminating its operating loss and, if not, can the corporation state whether this division is expected to contribute to the operating income in a positive way or whether it is expected that it will, for the indefinite future, be a drain on the profit-making divisions of the corporation?

2. What conditions would be required for this division to make a positive contribution to the operating income of Canadian National Railways?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Internal studies conducted by CN confirm the general findings of the Sullivan Commission, i.e. that there is no apparent future role for the railway in terms of significant business opportunities and that continuation of rail operations on the present scale holds no prospect other than for a further deterioration in the present financial performance of Terratransport.

2. The deficit might be reduced in some measure by service adjustments; abandonment of lighter-density traffic sections; or by a major change in focus to, say, an integrated intermodal-type service. Such changes could not be expected, however, to put the rail operation on a commercially sound basis and if the rail system is to be continued as a matter of government policy, then CN must continue to seek compensation for the resulting shortfall.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR—CONSULTANTS UNDER CONTRACT

Question No. 757—Mr. Shields:

Since August 1, 1978, how many (a) administrative (b) policy consultants were under contract to the Department of Labour and/or any boards, commissions or corporations reporting to the minister and, in each case, what amount was paid to them?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour):

(a) Four (4) administrative consultants—total cost $44,662.

(b) Six (6) policy consultants—total cost $114,800.

Four (4) boards/commissions, etc.—total cost $899,-300.

See reports below.

In so far as the Canada Labour Relations Board: none.

Administrative Contracts

Name	Number of Contracts		August 1, 1978 to March 31, 1980 Cost
Smith-Ault and Associates	1		$ 7,000
Ronald Capelle Associates Ltd.	1		$ 1,800
R. G. Consulting Ltd.	1		$ 32,362
Ian Campbell	1		$ 3,500
		Total	$ 44,662

Policy Contracts

Name	Number of Contracts	August 1, 1978 to March 31, 1978 Cost
J. Wanczycki	1	$ 14,000

TEACHING OF SECOND LANGUAGE—NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 839—Mr. Howie:

For the fiscal year ended March 31 (a) 1978 (b) 1979, what amount was paid to New Brunswick to assist in the teaching of a second language?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Under the federal-provincial agreements pertaining to the official languages in education, contributions to the province of New Brunswick in fiscal years 1977-78 and 1978-79 for the teaching of French as a second language were:

Fiscal Year	Amount
1978-79	$1,959,365

Note: Figures reported include payments totalling $430,718 in 1977-78 and $379,953 in 1978-79 respectively which apply to both minority official language education and second official language instruction. No further breakdown is available.

SECRETARY OF STATE—GRANTS TO EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 855—Mr. Crouse:

1. During the year (a) 1976 (b) 1977 (c) 1978 (d) 1979 (e) 1980, what grants, if any, were awarded by the Department of the Secretary of State to the universities or post secondary educational institutions in Nova Scotia and, in each case, were such grants given under programs of general application and (i) if so, what were the programs (ii) if not, what were the special circumstances which formed the basis for a special grant?

2. What was the amount of the grant, in each case?

3. Did the department oversee the actual use of such moneys or monitor its effect and, if so, in each case, by what method?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): 1. In so far as the education support programs branch is concerned no grants were awarded by the department in the years in question to universities or post-secondary educational institutions in Nova Scotia.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

Order Paper Questions

PENSION REVIEW BOARD

Question No. 875—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Are all of the positions in the Pension Review Board filled and, if not, which ones are vacant and for how long have they been vacant?

2. (a) What was the total number of review applications received by the board in the 1978-79 fiscal year (b) how many were dealt with and how many (i) were granted in pension (ii) outstanding applications were there?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs):

1. No.

Vacant Positions	Since
One position on the board	April 17, 1980.
One secretary	March 24, 1980.

2. (a) 1350

(b) 1050 (13 withdrawn)

(ii) 1898

VIA RAIL—BROCKVILLE—LOCAL TELEPHONE NUMBER

Question No. 931—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Was the local telephone number of VIA Rail in Brockville, Ontario, disconnected and, if so (a) for what reason (b) under whose authority (c) was the Department of Transport consulted?

2. Was a WATTS line "800" number assigned in its place and, if so, is the government aware that the service rendered by such a line has resulted in dozens of complaints in the area?

3. Is the government aware that the change in number has seriously decreased service to the public and that some persons are alleging that it has taken them as long as twenty minutes to get an answer?

4. Will the government take steps to obtain the co-operation of VIA Rail in rendering a much faster service to rail passenger users in the Brockville area and, if so, what will be such steps?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): VIA Rail Canada Inc. advises as follows: Yes.

1. (a) To provide RESERVIA Service to the general public in localities served by area codes 519, 705, 613.

(b) VIA Rail Canada Inc.

(c) No.

2. The local telephone number of VIA Rail Canada Inc. was changed on March 17, 1980, to WATTS number 1-800-268-9520 with a total of 11 trunk lines connected to the central reservation office in Toronto. See 3.

3. Because of constraints resulting from training in utilization of new equipment and new personnel, VIA Rail was not able to provide the public at the outset with the quality of service they are entitled to. This has changed and of a total of 8,165 calls received on May 16, 19, 20, 21 and 22, 5,973 calls (73 per cent) were answered within 20 seconds and 2,192 calls (27 per cent) were answered beyond 20 seconds.

4. See 3.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I rise again this week to bring to the attention of the parliamentary secretary question No. 970 standing in my name, which deals with the names of the cabinet committees and the functions of cabinet committees as well as the names of ministers who serve as the members and second alternates on each committee.

The parliamentary secretary will remember that in question period earlier this week the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) undertook to have that information available. When I asked the parliamentary secretary about it earlier this week, he indicated he would speed up the response to this question which has been on the order paper for six weeks. In his answer yesterday the Prime Minister tabled the names of cabinet committees and members. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could indicate the reason for the delay in giving a response to the question. We have yet to receive a description of the responsibilities of the various cabinet committees as I requested.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I did answer this question yesterday. I understand that the hon. member was somewhat busy yesterday and must have left the chamber at three o'clock or immediately after, when the Prime Minister tabled part of the answer he seeks. I know he was not in his seat for the late show either, so I assume he was very busy and did not read Hansard to see that I did address myself to this point and promised to make a full answer next Wednesday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could see that questions No. 810 and 811 are answered next week as there has been some suggestion that there might be a recess. These are important questions concerning the Metric Commission. I hope they can be answered because they should be answered prior to any recess.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Orders of the day.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

The House resumed, from Thursday, July 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Axworthy that Bill C-3, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the third time and do pass.

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I do not plan to speak at length again on Bill C-3 but I wish to take the opportunity once again to bring to the attention of the House the use of the variable entrance requirement. Its application to Canadians is, in my opinion, discriminatory and inequitable.

The fact that claimants now have to wait 18 months for correction of a self-evident injustice is, in my opinion, harsh and unwarranted treatment. The Unemployment Insurance Commission should be able to recommend amendment of the extension of the use of the variable entrance requirement which at present is based on statistics which are unfair and discriminatory.

The commission has recommended that the regulations change the required number of hours of employment from 20 hours or 30 per cent last year, to 15 hours or 20 per cent this year, in terms of maximum insurable earnings. We are told that this will come into effect next January. It was announced today that wives of fishermen will now be able to work for their husbands who are fishermen.

Section 58(t) of the act provides that the commission could increase or decrease boundaries of economic regions so I do not see why it could not increase or decrease certain areas of the country where the application of the unemployment insurance rate is so harsh.

I should like to concentrate on the problem of the extension of the variable entrance requirement, Mr. Speaker, on the harshness of this provision, the cost of its application and the confusion it has created for a certain group of people in Canada. The application of this requirement has had horrendous consequences for my constituents. No worker knows how many weeks work is required in order to qualify for benefits the following winter or fall. He cannot use the last time he applied for unemployment insurance benefits as a guide, because of the variable entrance requirement and because the unemployment insurance rate is forever changing. A three-month statistic is used to change the variable entrance requirement. That means that in December a statistic is used which is based on the unemployment rate in September, a time when employment is high in some areas of Canada.

Another consequence of the use of the variable entrance requirement is that at the time a claimant makes an application he has no idea whether he will have enough insurable weeks to qualify by the time the application is processed.

The variable entrance requirement is changed from month to month. An application made in October will take two or three weeks to process—depending on when the claimant attended at the office. If he went there in the middle of the month, the application will be processed by the middle of November. By that time the office will write to inform him that he now needs a different number of weeks than the number required when he originally made application in October. He then has to find an additional week wherever he can, by November, but by the time he returns to the unemployment insurance office the requirement is likely to have been changed again. The foregoing shows how confusing and harsh the commission is in dealing with claimants.

Just last year the local employment office in my area needed 15 extra people to process applications under the variable entrance requirement, and at that they were running two weeks behind. When someone has been waiting five weeks for benefits and then is told he has to wait longer for benefits to commence, it creates hardship for him.

The variable entrance requirement has created hardship in rural communities as in the case of South West Nova. One person may have to travel 150 miles to the office only to be told that instead of needing 16 weeks in order to qualify this month, he needs 17 weeks. He may go back and tell his neighbour that the requirement is 17 weeks. But the two cases are not necessarily treated in the same way, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the person who needed the 17 weeks happened to go to the office at the beginning of the month or the end of the month—or perhaps it was February and they were basing their unemployment statistics on December figures, but three months back. All of a sudden, in January, he needs 17 weeks, and now in February he only needs 16 weeks because of the unemployment rate changing from month to month.

That is a hardship, Mr. Speaker. It can be because of a different change in the month—because the applicant is not a repeater within that year and therefore really only needs the entrance requirement in order to receive benefits. Unfortunately, he should have received benefits in the last two years or else he would be penalized and would have to receive 20 weeks. Or it could be that the changes occurred in the type of area they were going from. The application of the variable entrance requirements to constituents makes the manpower office deal with an individual case instead of the unit. In other words, there is not one case that comes into an office that is exactly the same. There may be a differing element during the course of the day, the present delivery services faced with maybe seeing 20 cases and there being 20 different elements to the way a person deals with it. For instance, it could be a repeater, a new person who has come into the work force, or someone who has not collected unemployment insurance benefits in the last year.

In my opinion there is a need to state a definite time period in which claimants must work. If there are higher unemloyment insurance rates in some areas of the country, fine, I say make allowances. If there are lower unemployment insurance rates across the country, make allowances, but remember that when economic regions are being put together and you are coming up with an unemployment rate that one part of that economic region is so harshly treated in the use of that unemployment rate in terms of the variable entrance requirements, and repeaters, the commission certainly should be able to make some commitment to the people of that area, in other words, to give them a definite time period for which they must work and know now instead of in December.

In the month of May the entrance requirements will not be as heavy on the claimant as they would be in the month of December because of the three-month-old statistics. I have already said that the commission seems to be able to come up with changes when it wants to see the changes. Last year, eighteen months ago, we were telling the commission it could not go to 20 hours a week because it would hurt a wide group of Canadians. But we have to change this year. Members of Parliament should be told what the changes should be, namely, the people who are concerned with that element of the people. While we have an unemployment insurance program it seems to me that maybe some people opposite want to slim it down, but while there is an unemployment insurance program in operation, let it be done fairly and equitably, but it is not being done fairly or equitably.

I come back to the point of the 15 hours. It may happen in the small rural communities that a plant will be able to provide ten hours this week and ten hours next week. I ask why not combine that time and give one stamp for the 20 hours instead of putting it back to 15 hours when it is generally the case they cannot get the 15 hours if there is no fish or if the plant is not working? There are several other areas I feel strongly about respecting the way this act has come in and its amendments. We have been told by the minister that there will be a task force for 18 months. I have been told that we are reviewing the unemployment insurance program for the last three years, and yet we have amendment upon amendment and it will continue unless the commission is going to base itself on the facts which the members of Parliament are going to show them. It seems to me that this is a useless process. It is hurting the individual. The people who are more aware of it are the members of Parliament.

I am not certain whether or not the task force will be useful. We will have to wait and see. But I know that during the time period, whether it is 18 months, two years or five years, the application of the Unemployment Insurance Act as it stands today, basing itself on statistic regions, is not one that can be looked at across the board as being a fair application.

If one looks at the economic regions, and takes one area, for instance, South West Nova based in Moncton with Lunenburg, what does it do to Lunenburg? It gives it a higher rate of unemployment. It is a highly industrialized area. It has very few economic problems as such. But there the people will have a lower entrance requirement than if the actual facts were being looked at. You could look at another economic region where there is high unemployment, such as the one that includes Truro, Nova Scotia. Truro is not affected by the variable entrance requirements. It is not affected for the repeater provisions because its unemployment rate is lumped in with an area that has high unemployment. I am stating that in terms of South West Nova you can start by lumping them together but the actual payout by the commission is going to be higher one way or the other. Therefore you are not really looking, if you want to put it in the minds of the opposition, at who should be receiving the benefits under this program.

When you have a program such as this you cannot have an application straight across the board without having the commission look at specific areas and define certain regions as requiring a different unemployment rate.

Each time that I have spoken either in committee or in the House I have tried to show that these provisions, the extension of the variable entrance requirements for the 18 months, are harsh as they affect certain areas. There should be a time for which today, if it is 16 weeks a person must earn, that person should know that it will be 16 weeks. In the month of December people cannot be told that it is 19 weeks based on an unemployment insurance rate of September when there is full employment. The effect on individuals is harsh. While we have an unemployment insurance program, as we do today, we cannot have provisions which are not treating all areas of high unemployment in the same way.

For the many reasons about which I have spoken in the past, I must say I am disappointed to see that this bill will pass the House without Parliament having found solutions to the problems which I have said have created inequitable treatment, something which I feel is unwarranted for the next two years.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I just want to add a few words to what the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) has already said. I agree with much of what she has had to say regarding this bill. There are inequities inherent in a variable entrance program. She has mentioned that the variable entry with respect to time creates some inherent injustices. I would add, and she may have mentioned this earlier, that there is also some injustice when it is based on geographical districts. Someone who qualifies on one side of the street may be different from someone who qualifies on the other side of the street.

However, I would like to point out that the most inequitable legislation and regulation can be modified and softened if the right kind of personnel are in the unemployment insurance or manpower offices. I am afraid that that kind of human approach to people on unemployment insurance is being lost in our manpower centres today. I come particularly to the point of the regrouping of the offices, that is, the combining of the manpower offices with the UIC offices. I remember a few years ago when we were debating that legislation in this House and the former member for Timiskaming was suggesting that he remembered the times when the UIC and manpower offices were together and you could see the unemployment board, the jobs wanted board, and the jobs available board, all in the one office. There was an attitude of efficiency in that kind of a system.

Today we have a different technology in society and the way in which the government is bringing those two systems together, I think, is destroying the manpower system. In the unemployment insurance system we have a computer-organized system really. We have a staff in the UIC offices who are systems oriented. They think in terms of systems and computer cards. The people who happen to be on unemployment insurance, the unemployed, are simply cases with which they have to deal in the course of their day's duties. However, the manpower people, particularly in the last years, have been people oriented rather than systems oriented. When you bring together the two offices, the UIC trained people and the manpower trained people, you have a collision course in those offices.

The UIC trained people, who have been systems oriented and computer oriented, are gaining the ascendancy in manpower offices. The irony is that the people who are supposed to be people oriented are computer card oriented. The poor, unfortunate unemployed people coming into the manpower offices expecting to meet a human face are being confronted with people who are systems oriented. The extent to which manpower offices in the last two years have been dehumanized cannot be measured. People coming into those offices have sensed an entirely different shift of attitude toward them in the last two years since the coming together of those two systems. That is the first point.

The second point deals with people working in the manpower offices and what happens to them as the people who have been in the UIC section have gained the ascendancy. The irony is that the people oriented officials in manpower who have had a sensitivity to the unemployed have tried counselling programs and tried to meet the needs of those unemployed, because they are not systems oriented people, are being shunted aside and being dealt with in the most Machiavellian way. The guillotine is falling on them. Think of what happens to these people in terms of their dignity and self-respect.

Let us consider the example of a manpower official who is 55 years old. He has done an incredibly good job in meeting the needs of the unemployed in the area. He has a human face. He has been trying to have a human approach to the unemployed who come to that manpower office. Now comes the golden-haired boy out of the UIC stream. Because he knows the boys at the top in the UIC system, he is the guy who is the frontrunner now. Imagine the 55-year-old man now having to compete for his own job after having been in the job for five, ten, 15, 20 years. Think of what that does to the dignity of that one official.

I can tell hon. members that the morale problem in manpower offices is facing a dimension it has not faced in years. Resignations and transfers are coming in from the manpower section. They are moving out of the system because they cannot stand the dehumanized approach that is being introduced in the manpower centres. Rather than face the continuing ignominous treatment they are getting as the two systems are coming together, they transfer out of the system.

Think of the individual who is now having to compete for his own job, knowing full well that the job description has now been so redirected that the person who is already pre-chosen is going to win, and he is out in the cold. What does that do to him? This is what is happening in the system.

Money, manpower and human spirit are being wasted because of the callous way in which these two systems are being brought together. We have a manpower-unemployment insurance system which is calculated to help the people who are unfortunate now making their own employees victims of the clash that is going on in the combining of those two offices.

As the hon. member for South West Nova indicated, this motion is going to pass this afternoon, but it is going to pass in a very deficient way. It is not meeting the needs of Canadians, and we will live to regret that.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if there are no other members who wish to speak in this debate, we in this party are prepared to consider the debate on third reading concluded. We made it clear at second reading, in the standing committee and at this third reading stage, that we are opposed to the bill. We want to register that opposition by a vote against it. I tell my hon. friend who preceded me, therefore, that the bill will not pass this afternoon, although it may pass when it does come to a vote.

As I say, we would like to have a vote on the motion for third reading. However, there is an understanding among the House leaders that any votes requested today will be deferred to some time next week, on a day to be negotiated. That being the case, if Your Honour will put the question, we will shout "Nay". There are at least five of us here to stand and request a recorded vote. I believe the other House leaders will agree with me that we are prepared to defer that vote to some day next week.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would need only 30 seconds. I do not want to delay the business of the House, and I do not want to prevent the question from being put. I just want to say—and I will be brief—that I fully endorse what the hon. member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) said and as far as we, the members of the four eastern provinces, are concerned, this is only the top of the first inning in a game of nine innings. We have no intention of quitting our fight for greater equity as we have done in the past with respect to the unemployment insurance program.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the agreement made earlier this day, the division stands deferred.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Francis): The President of the Privy Council.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I understood an agreement had been reached but there seems to be some confusion. So I withdraw what I said.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there had been discussion about what we might do with private members' hour. The hon. member for Hillsborough is here and is anxious to proceed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions, private bills.

Order No. 4, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Shall the order stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Stand by unanimous consent. Order No. 6, the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Shall the order stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Stand by unanimous consent.

ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough) moved that Bill C-207, to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this year, 1980, is the centenary of the transfer of the Arctic Islands to Canada by Great Britain. In my view, Parliament could do no better than to mark the occasion by passing Bill C-207, an act to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act.

As sponsor of the bill I shall, in the few minutes available to me, first describe briefly the act the bill is intended to amend. Second, I shall outline the nature of my proposed amendments, and, third, provide something of a rationale for those amendments. Allow me to begin with the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. This act became law on August 2, 1972. It was introduced in order to assert Canada's sovereignty north of the 60th parallel, or at least to exercise Canada's extra-territorial jurisdiction over that vast region. The main legislative purpose was to control the employment of new technology in the north so as to maximize benefits and prevent disasters arising from that technology. The minister of Indian affairs and northern development at the time, now Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), moved the second reading of the bill. In doing so, he emphasized that Canadians must guard against "a trail of unsightly scars which might spoil the northern landscape for years to come."

The principal thrust of the bill introduced on that date was to prevent pollution of Canada's Arctic waters caused by shipping, land installations and commercial activities, for example, oil drilling carried out on the continental shelf. Among other things it prohibited the deposit of waste in Arctic waters, in the Arctic Islands and on the mainland, except under certain special conditions. It has a bias toward the prevention of pollution. For example, there are provisions giving pollution prevention officers authority not only to suggest or require modifications to works perceived to be a threat to the environment but also to prohibit works so regarded. The act also contemplates pollution arising from accidents and unforeseen situations and provides for civil liability in these circumstances. And it addresses the question of clean-up costs and damages.

I wish, now, to make a few general observations about that legislation in the context of my own bill to amend the act. My first observation is that the act was very hastily prepared. It followed the voyage of the American oil tanker Manhattan, which successfully completed its pioneering voyage through the fabled Northwest Passage. That voyage alerted Canada, and the Canadian government in particular, to environmental dangers in the Arctic and to the possibility of Canadian sovereignty being jeopardized. Though the act became law in August of 1972, it had been on the books for some two years before that date. Indeed, it was debated in Parliament as early as April 16, 1970. Thus the original act, the one I am proposing to amend, effectively predated the establishment of the Department of the Environment by a couple of years, a fact which explains why the department was left out of the enforcement provisions.

The purpose of Bill C-207 is to place the Department of the Environment front and centre, where it belongs, in Arctic waters pollution prevention. The present law gives responsibility for the enforcement of the act to various ministers. More accurately, under section 26, the governor in council is empowered to delegate authority under the act. What happened was this: by an order in council dated May 14, 1971, those powers were delegated to three departments. Responsibility for dealing with pollution caused by shipping was allocated to the Department of Transport; responsibility for control of waste deposits was assigned to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and also to the Ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources. The basic problem with such a delegation is that too many departments are now actively engaged in pollution control in the north—at least five when other acts are considered. This situation has led to enormous confusion for industry, government and others. It has confused people as to where responsibility lies. By the same token, it has proliferated authority and thereby seriously weakened accountability. The resultant duplication and overlapping of authority and initiative have hampered effective action to control pollution in the Arctic and in the north generally. My bill seeks, first, to streamline administrative responsibility for the control and prevention of pollution in the north.

Second, and even more important, the bill will transfer responsibility for environmental protection in the Arctic from government departments having a vested interest in industrial development to the Department of the Environment, which does not have such an interest. Indeed, the Department of the Environment was established because the government of the day recognized the danger of assigning environmental assessments to "proponents" of development such as the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

In the Speech from the Throne in 1970, we find the following words:

> There is an inherent conflict of interest . . . between those who are seeking the exploitation of non-renewable resources and those who are charged with the responsibility of protecting the environment.

Yet the Department of the Environment has never been named as an administrator or even as a co-operating agency for the enforcement of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. Because of the conflict of interest arising from the same people being responsible for industrial development and pollution protection, we find there is a great deal of rightful dissatisfaction with measures being taken to combat pollution in the Arctic. Is it any wonder that the government's performance to date in protecting the Arctic environment has been so severely criticized by environmental organizations, by scientists, and even by its own officials?

The most obvious example of this neglect and deficiency relates to resource exploration and development by Dome Petroleum Limited and its subsidiary Canadian Marine Drilling Limited—Canmar, as it is known—in the Beaufort Sea region. The government received applications from Dome Petroleum in respect of certain projects in late June, 1979. They concerned facilities at McKinley Bay for an over-wintering harbour, at Tuk harbour for a deep harbour entrance, and at Wise Bay for a fuelling staging area.

I do not want to get into too much detail about the complexities of the environmental procedures followed in such cases. Let me simply summarize by saying that first there is the initial environmental screening to determine whether any project has significant environmental consequences. A second and later procedure is the formal environmental assessment and review, which applies to major projects and which is brought into the picture if the initial screening identifies a significant environmental impact. All this is co-ordinated by the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office of the Department of the Environment. It is called FEARO. The catch is that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is the federal government's principal operating arm in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. There is clear evidence that that department has been successful in getting the federal government to approve the applications I have mentioned, and others, too, without assessments as to their environmental consequences.

It has done so against the advice of even its own frontline advisory bodies. I have in mind the Arctic Waters Advisory Committee, AWAC; and the Regional Ocean Dumping Advisory Committee, RODAC. The latter, RODAC, recommended, for example, the deferral of issuance of any ocean-dumping or associated land-use permits for dredging or harbour development at McKinley Bay—I use that as an illustration—"until the initial environmental evaluation report has been filed by the company and assessed by the government". Yet that permit, and others, were issued in late August, within weeks of being applied for without such a procedure having been followed.

The Canadian Arctic Resources Committee, in an excellent study by Dr. William Rees published in Northern Perspectives, sums up the situation succinctly, and I quote from that study as follows:

> The over-all conclusion pertaining to EARP is inescapable. Given the "ludicrous" time-frame, skimpy data base, and direct interference from Ottawa, the best efforts of AWAC/RODAC could not satisfy the minimal requirements of a rigorous and effective screening process.

The findings of Dr. Rees are well supported in a confidential report I was able to obtain recently of the government's own Arctic Waters Advisory Committee. That report, which I have in my hand now, is dated February 8, 1980. I do not have time to quote extensively from the report, but let me just highlight a few of its findings and alarming details. Among other things it says:

> Government decision-making processes resulting in approvals for land-based support facilities, and dredging for the approach to Tuk and inside McKinley

Bay, did not meet the minimum standards for adequate environmental review and assessment.

Another quote which has relevance to this point is the following:

It appears that senior officials in Ottawa . . . decided to "avoid any time-consuming and administrative hindrances" in securing the necessary approvals for the proponent (Canmar).

Yet another quotation reads as follows:

Recommendations that were specific and required standards of performance from Canmar or more thorough review which might have caused delays were not implemented or were significantly altered by Ottawa to make them ineffective.

Finally:

The compromise of the environmental review processes has potentially jeopardized not only the environment but the governmental review and decision-making processes as well.

That is very alarming information and those are very alarming findings indeed. The message, clearly, is that the government must be able to manage the total social and physical environment in the Arctic, and it is not doing so in the face of the influx of southern technologies.

The Arctic covers over 40 per cent of the territory of our country. Although vast, it is the most environmentally vulnerable region in all of Canada. Because of the frigid climate and other physical factors, a major oil spill or a well-site blowout—just to cite two examples—would have disastrous consequences for the delicate eco-systems up there and, in particular, for the traditional lifestyle of the native peoples who live in the area. We cannot wait until the damage has been done in the Arctic. The damage may well be irreversible. Environmental screening procedures will have to be tied more closely to the development approval process. I have in mind, especially, the need to streamline the entire process so that, both industry and government can know the rules of the game by which they must operate.

At present there are some 23 pieces of legislation to regulate activities like those of Canmar, to which I have referred. The government needs to examine a process by which a "one-window" approach to legislation and regulation can be achieved. An essential first step in that direction is my own Bill C-207. I urge all hon. members to support it but, more important, I urge not just hon. members but also all other Canadians to consider very seriously the desirability of reconciling the legitimate goal of energy self-sufficiency with environmental goals. I think the two sets of goals—economic goals and energy self-sufficiency on the one hand and environmental concerns on the other—are compatible. They are parallel and can be pursued in tandem.

Bill C-207 is intended to restore the balance between the two sets of goals. We must protect the delicate eco-systems in the Arctic and respect the interests of the native people whom all hon. members keep in mind when they think about environmental matters.

Thank you for your attention, Mr. Speaker, and I urge all hon. members to give every possible favourable consideration to supporting Bill C-207.

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity to comment on Bill C-207 which has been brought before the House by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan). As chairman of the House of Commons permanent standing committee on Indian affairs and northern development in the late sixties I, along with Paul St. Pierre, a former member of this House from British Columbia, had a fair amount to do with making sure that our committee brought forward recommendations to the government in the form of a report which I hope at least helped to push the government into action back in 1969 to implement the original bill entitled the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act.

I appreciate too the underlining of the confusion which does tend to exist about who does what with regard to protecting the Arctic from various forms of pollution which may be related to industrial activity, exploration activity, or exploitation activity. One subject which comes to mind right now is the question of liquefied natural gas which is the process of liquefying it in the Arctic Islands and then transporting it through fairly dangerous waters either to the Canadian east coast or to Europe. Some Commons committee should have a look at that question. As chairman of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, I would like to see our committee have a look at it. However, the problem is which committee of the House has the responsibility for it. Is it the committee on Transport, the committee on National Resources and Public Works, the committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, or the committee which is responsible for the environment? There are at least four committees which might have a kick at that can, and perhaps it is a matter of who gets there first. In any event, it is a subject matter which I hope one of the committees of the House will consider.

However, I am not convinced, even after listening to the very well developed speech of the hon. member opposite, that what is suggested in his bill would necessarily lead to a more effective use of the manpower available in the various government departments. The question has to be put: is it feasible at this stage to move people out of transport and out of other ministries where they have other roles to a specific and sole role under the proposal of the hon. member for Hillsborough. Having said that, I will make some comments on the bill.

[Translation]

The legislation proposes that the powers and responsibilities now vested in the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) be transferred to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). While recognizing the multiple nature of the various functions connected with these collective powers and responsibilities, it is convenient at this point that the matter of powers and responsibilities under the specific provisions of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act only be covered, namely those directly concerned with shipping in Arctic waters and now exercised by the Minister of Transport. The passing of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act was due in part to the recognition by Parliament of recent progress in the exploitation of Arctic resources and their transportation to world markets.

At the time the act was passed, Parliament took a commitment to ensure that shipping in Arctic waters adjacent to land and Canadian Arctic islands would be totally compatible with Canada's responsibility to maintain the special environmental balance of waters, ice covered surfaces and land surfaces of the Canadian Arctic. In addition to the above objectives, certain powers and responsibilities were delegated to the Minister of Transport under the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. These are:

First, the power under section 5(2) of the act, to require that the master of any ship report the deposit of waste or any condition of distress that could lead to the deposit of waste; second, the power under section 6(2) of the act to direct that action be taken by or on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada to repair or remedy any condition that results from a deposit of waste by any ship or to reduce or mitigate any damage to or destruction of life or property that may result from such deposit of waste.

Third, the power under subsection 8(1)(d) of the act to require the owner of any ship that navigates within any shipping safety control zone specified by the governor in council and, subject to certain limitations, the owner of the cargo of any such ship, to provide evidence of financial responsibility, in a form satisfactory to the minister and in an amount determined in the manner provided by regulations established under the act; fourth, the power, under subsection 13(1) of the act, to cause the ship or any cargo or other material on board the ship to be destroyed, if necessary, or to be removed if possible to such place and sold in such manner as the minister may direct; fifth, the power, under subsection 14(1), and subject to the provisions of subsection 26(2) of the act, to designate any person as a pollution prevention officer with such powers as are set out in subsections 15(1) and 15(2) of the act. In addition, the Minister of Transport is being required to ensure that all persons designated as pollution prevention officers are authorized to exercise the powers vested in them in the manner specified at the time of their appointment.

[English]

In addition to the foregoing powers and authority, and as a direct result of the exigencies thereof, the Minister of Transport has, through the Department of Transport, customarily been responsible for the formulation, administration and enforcement of regulations relating to navigation in shipping safety control zones under section 12 of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. These regulations relate to a broad spectrum of activities concerning the design, construction, equipping, manning and operation of ships destined for navigation in the shipping safety control zones of the Arctic and are designed to assure fully the protection of the Arctic environment from the potential effects of both normal ship operations and shipping accidents or collisions.

Among the seven completed regulation projects pursuant to the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the major one consists of the Arctic shipping pollution prevention regulations. This set of regulations lays down the specific technical requirements to fulfil the general objectives of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act and contains particular specifications with respect to the following: detailed construction techniques and materials relating to ice strengthening of ships; operational parameters for ships; construction of machinery and equipment and electronic and other navigational aids and equipment including radio and telecommunications equipment; the nature and construction of propelling power and appliances and fittings for steering and stabilizing; training, competence and certification of ship personnel for navigation in ice-infested waters; with respect to any type of cargo, the maximum quantity thereof allowed to be carried, the method of stowage; the nature, type and quantities of supplies and equipment to be carried for use in repairing or remedying any condition that may result from the deposit of any cargo in Arctic waters; the maps, charts, tide tables and any other documents or publications relating to navigation in the Arctic waters to be carried; details concerning both icebreaker support and ice routing in the Arctic waters as well as ice navigator specifications.

In short, the regulations all pertain to matters concerning the operation of ships as well as safety of life and environment in the Arctic waters.

Two major facets of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act must be understood if the act is to continue to be an effective instrument.

First, in order to ensure the effective carrying out of the mandate, which is the core of the act, and while there are unquestionably several other concerns involved in the act, such as natural resources and energy development, sociological impact on native peoples and the environment, there is a predominent, specific need—and this is what is important and, I am afraid, what is deficient in the proposal of the hon. member opposite—for highly specialized and particular technical expertise in the fields of naval architecture, marine engineering, navigational science and vessel operation techniques. These fields of expertise have been developed over time and presently reside uniquely within Transport Canada as the result of its broad range of responsibilities in the marine transportation field. In this aspect, I am confident that members of the House would agree that it would be counterproductive to divest Transport Canada of its present mandate or to transfer that mandate to any other single department which does not possess the same over-all capability and expertise.

I also want to submit that while the Department of the Environment has a general mandate with respect to the environmental issues, it has not developed and could not develop within an acceptable time-frame the operational and scientific expertise requisite for the regulation of shipping and prevention of operational or accidental shipborne pollution. As for measures subsequent to incidents of pollution involving shipping, while both the Department of the Environment and Transport Canada possess co-ordinated contingency plans for pollution clean-up, Transport Canada has evidenced the propriety of its mandate under the act by its demonstrated capability and experience.

In summary, if prevention of pollution is effectively to remain as a prime objective and concern, Transport Canada's experience and expertise dictate that it is the most appropriate department with which responsibility should rest for that part of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act.

The second major facet of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act which must be understood is that, in so far as it relates to ships and shipping, the provisions of the act relating to pollution prevention and safety of life at sea closely parallel those under the Canada Shipping Act. In fact this is so much so that regulations under the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act refer directly to the Canada Shipping Act and regulations thereunder.

While a nominal legal distinction exists between the two acts, there is in practical terms a very close familial link between them in their origins, the areas they cover, and in the expertise required to administer them, with the result that the two acts are inextricably intertwined. It would not therefore be advisable to transfer responsibility for the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act from Transport Canada because such an artificial administrative separation could only lead to undesirable inefficiences, profligacy of resources, and possibly inconsistency of policy.

In conclusion, it is submitted that based on all the foregoing, no change in the administrative responsibility for the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act is warranted and, therefore, the status quo should be maintained with Transport Canada continuing in its responsibilities vis-à-vis the act and with the Minister of Transport continuing in his delegated function vis-à-vis the act.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I will speak very briefly on this subject. I have to agree with the last speaker when it comes to the matter of transferring the jurisdiction under this act from where it resides at the present with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). It seems only natural to me that all aspects of shipping should come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport.

Most of the technical matters with which we are dealing when discussing Arctic pollution prevention deal with things such as the design of the hull of the vessels, the methods of propelling those vessels, the quantities of the various commodities which the vessels carry, the manner in which the cargo is stored, and the types of navigational equipment which must be carried by those vessels when operating in those waters. Those, to me, would seem to be logical areas which should come under the Minister of Transport.

If we were to transfer jurisdiction for this one area to a different ministry, then I would think that it would require much duplication. We would have vessels being inspected by people from the coastguard and people from environment. Surely this is something which we would want to avoid. It is necessary for us to pass regulations to enable inspections to take place, and that is only right and proper, but at the same time we should make sure that those people who undergo the inspections are subjected to as little duplication as possible. They should be able to get away with one inspection, instead of two inspections by two different people who would be looking at very much the same thing.

This subject is important, because if one looks to the future, to the next ten years to 20 years, the volume of shipping in the Arctic will undoubtedly increase. We can look forward to a day when there will be commercial usage of the Northwest Passage, and one of these days it will be a world major waterway. We can look forward to the development of liquefied gas tankers and oil tankers operating in the Arctic. There are evident dangers involved in this situation, so it is something to which we should address our minds.

I believe that there is a need for better navigational aids in the Arctic. I am told that the electronic navigational aids presently in use are probably not as good as those in use on the east coast and the west coast. These aids should be upgraded, but this will cost money and take time. It is something into which the Government of Canada should be looking.

One of the areas which the Department of the Environment should be looking at in this situation is in fields such as ice reconnaissance and meteorology. If we want to put the ships through the easiest, least risky route, then we need good systems of ice reconnaissance, and to forecast weather conditions in that part of Canada.

So far we have avoided any major oil spills or pollution in the Arctic, and I hope that this will continue. I would like to compliment the public servants who are involved in inspection and regulation in the Arctic. I think by and large they have done a pretty good job and that they are continuing to do so. Most of the marine and land operators in the Arctic take a pretty responsible position because they do not want any major environmental mishaps either. Sometimes we are overly critical of these people who act on our behalf with respect to inspection in this part of the country.

Of course, such work is not completely risk free. If we want to develop oil and gas resources in the north, there will always be some risk involved. One of our goals should be to weigh those risks. We must be prepared to take some risks while at the same time we must do our best to make sure that major mishaps do not occur. Although the present system could be modified somewhat, it is a good system of co-ordinating committees that look after the interests of various government departments that have the responsibility in that area.

Those are my few comments on this bill. I think, by and large, the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act is being administered reasonably well but we must continue to monitor it as more and more shipping goes through Arctic waters.

● (1640)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, as proposed by Bill C-207, does not seem to correspond to the nature and objectives of the act. The suggested transfer of the powers of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) is doubtless founded on an erroneous interpretation of the act considered solely from the point of view of pollution prevention.

In fact, the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act was conceived as the perfect tool for protecting and managing our resources. Administering the whole therefore requires a multidisciplinary approach. The act, as formulated, aims at serving the exceptional needs of the north. On April 16, 1970, the hon. Jean Chrétien, then minister of Indian affairs and northern development, described this act to the House as a legitimate and necessary extension offshore of the jurisdiction of Canada over an area which concerns Canada only. In his opinion the act should continue to reflect the past policies of the successive governments of Canada to protect Canadian interests north of the 60th parallel, for the natives living there, for the untapped resources we want to develop there for the benefit of all Canadians, and for the natural quality of the land and water that cover more than 40 per cent of the Canadian territory. In expounding this theme, Mr. Chrétien stressed that the effect of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act would be to have people understand that the northwest passage should be open to ships from all countries, providing on the other hand the necessary conditions to protect the fragile environmental balance of the Canadian Arctic and to set out clearly for all countries the requirements under which Canada, as a coastal state and because of its exceptional responsibilities to safeguard the northern environment, would welcome foreign ships in its waters.

In passing the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, Parliament supported the point of view that that act is not only a legislative instrument for the prevention of water pollution but also an instrument of resource management to help in the pursuit of a complex set of objectives, including national security and sovereignty as well as economic expansion—the answer to the social and political aspirations of the residents of the north, as well as the development of the transportation technology to support those objectives. Such a major thrust requires, of course, a broad variety of expertise and experience in the responsible agencies. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development must first enforce the sections of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act not dealing with navigation since it has long been the responsibility of the department to meet the particular and varied needs of northern Canada as a whole and he had already put in place the necessary administrative and judicial provisions. Parliament recognized the direct relationship between the act and all maritime transportation in the north by appointing the Minister of Transport to share the responsibilities of implementing the act with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

In the decade just ended, since the passage of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, we have seen many changes and considerable progress. One of the more striking examples is, of course, the huge effort by industry, supported and regulated by the government of Canada, to explore and develop the vast hydrocarbon potential in the Arctic waters; the discoveries in the Beaufort Sea and in the waters which surround the Arctic Islands, as well as very promising indications in the offshore areas of eastern Arctic have shown the importance of these resources for the future of Canada. The development of the Nanisivik mine on Baffin Island has given us an idea of the potential for mining development in the north.

These developments and potential for future economic development in both Canadian and American jurisdictions have brought about increasing pressures for the creation of a more effective and economically viable transportation infrastructure to get the oil, natural gas and minerals of these new facilities to the market. The Canadian Arctic waters have therefore acquired a significant importance for a variety of new interests, and this increased importance has brought about a greater awareness of pollution due to accidents. Regulated prevention of such accidents has therefore become more critical than when the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act was first passed.

On the other hand, the aspirations and political and social requirements of northern residents have become more complex and more important. Through this legislation, the minister is able both to manage the basic resources and to reconcile this objective with other orientations such as independent energy sources and the development of natural resources. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and his officials are now negotiating a variety of claims made by groups which represent the native people of Canada. Several of these claims concern the control of the territories now governed and regulated under the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. For instance, the Inuit have always based the whole of their society and economy on the harvesting of wild life resources which depend directly or indirectly on the Arctic waters, and any regulation concerning these resources must therefore be considered relevant to the final legal settlement of the claims presented by the Inuit to the government.

Another important goal which is being disputed now in northern Canada is the tendency towards decentralization of powers from the federal government to the governments of the territories. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been encouraging for a long time the development of both governments of the territories, directing the process from the start when the north was completely dependent on Ottawa, through the establishment of legislatures in both capitals of the territories, namely Yellowknife and Whitehorse, and through the decentralization of many ministerial responsibilities in favour of the areas to which they have applied up to date and it is now considering actively other steps towards the ultimate goal of establishing responsible governments north of the 60th parallel, as soon as it is feasible, while protecting the rights of all residents of the north. While considering native claims and the decentralization of legislative powers which are crucial and complex matters, we should endeavour very cautiously not to upset the present balance. We should certainly have a specific approach to that matter of power-sharing between the federal departments which are active in the north, in order to avoid complicating matters which are already very complex.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who is now responsible for a wide variety of social, economic and legal realities in the north, including the management and the development of resources and for negotiating any change in those realities, is heading the department which is best able to assume that role, because of the scope and variety of his experience and of his competence in dealing with problems related to matters of a very complex nature which are sometimes interrelated and conflicting. In his capacity as minister currently responsible for the government of northern Canada, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is also the most able to establish and enforce regulations and standards in those areas.

During the ten years since the enactment of the legislation, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has viewed the act as a tool for managing the tremendous resources contained in Arctic waters and the biological, physical and human resources that depend upon them. In co-operation with the Department of Transport and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, which share responsibility for enforcing the act and attendant regulations, the increasing uses of resources have been carefully managed as an interconnected whole. By definition, Arctic waters pollution prevention is a basic objective of that managing effort.

However, the sound managing of resources with a view to obtaining the maximum possible uses, both immediate and long term, without endangering the rights and aspirations of northern residents, is the over-all objective, of which pollution prevention is but an aspect. There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that amendments to the act could be suggested in light of the experience gained over a decade of careful and highly successful management. However, removing the responsibility for implementing the act from groups that developed it does not appear to be an appropriate change.

The skills offered by the Department of the Environment in the various aspects connected with the management and protection of the environment are unchallenged, and the assistance and advice of its officials, whose reputation is well recognized, is always invaluable. However, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development also has these skills, acquired in recognizing and meeting the unique needs for managing and protecting the exceptional Arctic environment. Those specialized skills in the disciplines connected with the environment combine with other pertinent disciplines to enable the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to face complex multidisciplinary problems. The Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act indeed covers such a question and should therefore continue under the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, as originally provided for. I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that the three members representing our great Canadian north, who already are familiar with the problem, the complexity of relations between the various groups, the people and the central government, would wish to deal with people already aware of and in the north, rather then newcomers who would have to start from scratch.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have consulted my colleagues and I understand there is agreement that private members' hour be considered as terminated at this point and that we revert to statements by ministers in a few moments, if necessary, after the ruling by Madam Speaker.

If we return to statements by ministers, I will have something to say first before the minister makes his statement.

Mr. Knowles: You should have spoken to him this morning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I was told that Madam Speaker is ready to render her decision. However, if she is not ready, we will go on with private members' hour. I was told just a few moments ago that she was ready.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I think the confusion is created by the reference made to reverting to statements by ministers. I think if we revert to routine proceedings, it will fill the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we revert to routine proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ANDRE—IMPOSITION OF LEVY UNDER PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

Madam Speaker: I will now rule on the point of order that was raised earlier by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). The hon. member raised a point of order to say that the procedure followed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) was not the correct procedure.

The hon. member says that the ways and means motion proposes to amend the Petroleum Administration Act which was not initiated by a ways and means motion. The hon. member is probably aware that the parent act was in fact initiated by both a ways and means motion and the notice of motion for introduction with an accompanying royal recommendation. But he is, of course, correct when he says that the provision of the parent act which is now to be amended was not covered in the original ways and means motion.

There has been considerable argument about the legality of the particular procedures which the minister is choosing in the present case, but the House will know that the Chair can never pronounce upon issues of a legal nature, it can rule only on questions of order. Therefore I must return to the precise point of order involved in this issue, that is to say, has the minister acted within the ambit of the standing order in tabling a notice of ways and means motion. The substance of that motion, or the effect of that notice, can be of no concern to the Chair. Hon. members will be aware that our records will show that there are many ways and means motions which were never adopted.

I therefore must find that the procedures followed so far have been in order. However, this does not preclude the Chair from entertaining further points of order in connection with the matter at further stages in the process.

I want to close by thanking hon. members for their careful attention and assistance to the Chair in this difficult point of procedure.

The House had agreed that we would revert to statements by ministers after this ruling. It is the pleasure of the House to revert now to statements by ministers?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: The President of the Privy Council on a point of order.

Price of Petroleum

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I would seek agreement to revert to statements by ministers. Of course under the standing orders you have the required discretion to limit the proceedings, taking into consideration the interventions made up to now. As for us, we fully agree that the House should have the opportunity to ask questions of the minister. We hope that after some discussions with my colleagues, the proceedings will not be extended past six o'clock and adjourned even before if possible.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for the discussions that we had. It is our hope that that is not so either. It is difficult to predict, as my colleague knows, because we have not yet heard the minister's statement. However, I want to assure you, Madam Speaker, that there will be nothing to protract any proceedings inordinately that may follow out of this statement.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, my contribution to this not being prolonged is simply to say that we agree.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: In any event I would have to obtain the unanimous consent of the House in a few minutes not to see the clock. I will hear the minister but in a few minutes I will have to interrupt him for that reason.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde).

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, to make things easier for you, perhaps I could point out that it is already five o'clock. Perhaps you might seek the unanimous consent of the House so that we can proceed?

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree that the Chair should not see the clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: I have the unanimous consent of the House. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

STATEMENT BY MINISTER

EFFECT OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION ON PRICE OF PETROLEUM

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am glad the House agreed that we can take some additional time to debate and discuss this notice of ways and means motion to amend the Petroleum Administration Act. This should give time to the House to examine all the aspects of the particular motion and its implications.

The motion itself reads:

That it is expedient to amend the Petroleum Administration Act to provide that, effective midnight, July 11, 1980, the charge imposed, levied and collected on

(a) each barrel of domestic petroleum received for processing or consumption in Canada, and

(b) each barrel of foreign petroleum or petroleum product imported into Canada for processing, consumption, sale or other use in Canada

(c) in any month shall be in such amount, not exceeding one dollar and seventy-five cents, as may be prescribed in a tariff of charges for that month made by order of the governor in council.

As the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) noted before in his point of order, this amends a similar provision in the Petroleum Administration Act which contains similar features.

Pursuant to that ways and means motion, I have today sent a notice to all refiners in the oil industry in general advising the industry of the tabling of this ways and means motion. According to parliamentary tradition and precedence, I am asking the payers of the levy, essentially the refiners, to remit on this basis pending parliamentary approval.

● (1700)

As was usual in the past when such increases have taken place, if approval is not obtained, we have a ways and means motion asking the House for increases in payments by the public or parts of the public. If approval is not obtained by the government from Parliament, the excess money collected will be refunded.

With regard to the increase in the levy, as I indicated this morning when we were debating the question of privilege and we had the opportunity of going a little outside the strict ambit of the question of privilege, the impact is to increase from $1, which was set at the ceiling in the Petroleum Administration Act, to $1.75 the charge on every barrel of petroleum, domestic or foreign, that is processed in Canada.

The charge itself is put in the amendment, as in the act, as a maximum. It is set by order in council on a monthly basis according to the necessity of providing the necessary funds to cover the petroleum compensation revolving fund about which I would like to say a word. The petroleum compensation revolving fund represents a charge on the consolidated revenue fund. As I indicated in the debate on the question of privilege, it is used to pay the additional price that is paid to the two companies in Canada, Syncrude and Suncor, which exploit tar sands and produce oil from the tar sands. At the present time that charge is the difference between roughly $37 and $14.75.

As hon. members know, those companies are now producing at a record rate, for which we are very happy. We hope this type of production will continue in the future. After having met some difficulties in production in the latter part of last year and the beginning of this year, Syncrude is now announcing record production and the Suncor plant is producing at full capacity.

The fund at the present time is in the red by roughly $75 million. In order for the fund to break even at the end of this fiscal year, it will be necessary to add this additional charge of 75 cents a barrel. It is expected that at the end of the fiscal year the fund will have broken even. It is then a matter for the government to adjust the levy according to the needs for the fund in order to ensure that the revolving fund is not unduly in deficit.

As hon. members know, this process has been in operation since at least July, 1978. Various adjustments have been made to it since. Adjustments were made in July, 1978, January 1, August 30 and November 1, 1979, and April 1, 1980. In the space of the last two years, there have been five different adjustments to this levy rate in order to collect the funds necessary from the general consumption of petroleum in order to raise the money necessary to compensate what is owed to Syncrude and Suncor.

Certain questions were raised in the debate this morning about the impact on the provinces and the oil industry. I want it to be quite clear that by this particular measure there is no impact on the industry or on provincial revenue or expenditures as far as that is concerned. There is an agreement at the present time with the oil sands companies to the effect that the government is paying the international price for their production. A couple of months ago, I served a notice of intention to invoke a force majeure clause under the agreement with Syncrude and to invoke a general clause for review of the fees with Suncor. I also indicated at that time that while our negotiations were being carried on with the producing provinces, the tar sands companies would continue to receive the international price. This has been going on since notice was given. It will continue until there is a resolution of the present discussions that are taking place.

One thing is quite clear. The companies under any account or regime will be receiving appreciably more than what is being paid for conventional oil even if they were not receiving the international price. Therefore, there will continue to be a need for some form of revenue collection by the federal government in order to raise the funds necessary to pay to those companies the difference between whatever price will be arrived at for conventional oil, and what price will have to be paid for tar sands oil.

As far as the provinces are concerned, in this particular case the province of Alberta, whatever royalty is owed is owed under the terms of the agreement, whether the federal government has the money in the fund for it or not. If it does not have it in the revolving fund, it has to get it from the Consolidated Revenue Fund and pay it out of general taxpayers' money.

A point of order was raised this afternoon by the hon. member for Calgary South about payments to the government of Alberta. I have checked and it is true that up until now Syncrude has not paid royalties to the government of Alberta. The accounting is not completed but it is expected that this year Syncrude will be in a position to start paying royalties to the government of Alberta.

With regard to the second plant, Suncor, that plant pays to the government of Alberta 13 per cent of its revenues. I am told this is roughly equivalent to about $5 a barrel on its production on the basis of a world price of $37. I am sorry if there was some misunderstanding on each side in this respect, but at the present time some royalties are being paid to the government of Alberta out of the tar sands production. It is out of the Suncor plant, not the Syncrude plant, but it is expected that it will come out of the Syncrude plant during the course of this year.

As this is purely a levy, tax or charge that goes into the revolving fund, I want to point out that no impact on the market should be felt because it does not change the position of any company at the present time. Syncrude and Suncor will continue to receive exactly what they were receiving this morning and yesterday. There has been no change at all by this ways and means motion in the financial position of any particular firm in the oil industry.

I can understand why some misunderstanding might have arisen this morning out of a bare reading of the ways and means motion. Some concern was expressed about the impact of this measure being felt more in the east than the west or more in the west than the east. I want again to reassure my friends that this measure has no differential regional impact. It results in an increase of about half a cent per litre in oil products, wherever they are in Canada. There is no difference at all in terms of its regional distribution. The charges are exactly the same everywhere, and as I indicated it means that the revolving fund, the fund for the tar sands production, is going to be put back in a self-financing position rather than being in the red and even at the risk of exceeding the maximum of about $200 million which I believe has been provided for under the revolving fund.

There was a danger that if the House had adjourned this fund might have exceeded the limits of its borrowing, or, if you wish, its deficit. This is the reason it was felt that in case the House were to adjourn in the next couple of weeks or couple of months—before September, let us say—steps should be taken to ensure that the fund would not find itself in a position where it would have exceeded its authority in terms of maximum borrowing.

I do not wish to take too much of the time of the House since I understand the leaders of the various parties in the House have agreed that we should try not to sit beyond six o'clock. I shall be happy to entertain questions after various members have spoken. I am glad to see that we are recovering the time that may have been lost in the debate on the question of privilege and I apologize if there has been any misunderstanding arising out of the bare reading of this particular motion. I regret any misunderstanding which may have occurred.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, may I thank the minister for his statement and wonder what kind of day this might have been had it started differently. However, although acknowledging that the minister has, some five or six hours too late, come around to making this statement, I should point out it does not really excuse the procedure and approach which have been used, unless, of course, it leads to the change of behaviour which we all hope for. I think this should be re-emphasized because it really goes to the heart of what this institution is about and to the heart of how the public views Parliament and the respect in which it is held.

The procedure was abysmal. What has happened, apparently, is the imposition of a tax in excess of $500 million. It is a very significant tax with a significant and important impact on the economy of Canada. Imagine the outrage if the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) were to introduce an income tax change of that magnitude using this kind of procedure, or a sales tax change, or an excise tax change, or any kind of change involving in excess of $500 million to be taken out of the pockets of consumers in one way or another and redistributed by government in accordance with the law or its own will. That is a very significant step.

There are long traditions—hundreds of years of tradition—setting out the proper way to deal with that kind of imposition by the Crown. Proper procedures were simply not followed today, in spite of what the legal, fine print might say. If, in fact, that is to be the procedure and approach—to do whatever the fine print allows you to do—then we are in for a very chaotic two or three years within which not much will be accomplished.

We as a party—and I believe the NDP too, if my memory serves me right—agreed with the establishment of a tax in the first instance. There is no question that back in 1974, when the Syncrude matter first came up, it was a tax. It was not a levy. A tax was imposed to subsidize the Syncrude plant to give it the difference between the domestic and the world price. That was a tax which had a ways and means motion attached to it.

Subsequently the government and the then minister of energy, the Hon. Alastair Gillespie, decided, for whatever reasons—perhaps because the government wished to create the impression it was holding down expenditures—to take this significant government expenditure out of the consolidated revenue fund and put it aside into a revolving fund. It no longer showed up in the blue book of estimates and no longer showed up in the monthly accounts. It no longer automatically increased government spending, which was the reality of the situation, and this enabled the minister and President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) and others to claim that in a period of restraint they are holding down expenditures. That was the rationale for establishing this revolving fund outside the Consolidated Revenue Fund and defining it as a levy as opposed to a tax.

I am very clear about this. I can refer the hon. member to discussions in committee where, whenever I attempted to use the word "tax", the deputy minister, then Mr. Gordon MacNabb, corrected me. He would say: "No, no, no, it is not a tax, it is a levy." We agreed to that procedure. We agreed because there was a limit of a dollar which seemed reasonable. But it has been raised, and raised very significantly. It has been raised to $1.75. The impact of that is significant. It warrants debate; it warrants discussion; it warrants a procedure quite different from the one we saw today.

The impact at the pump? Two and a half cents. That is no big deal, but the impact at the furnace of two and a half cents is a big deal for a lot of people. The impact on Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island which use oil to generate electricity is a big deal. There would be a significant impact there. The people concerned deserve to be notified by their federal government. They deserve an explanation, in advance, from their federal government.

There is no reason for this kind of covert approach. As a matter of courtesy the province of Alberta deserved to be notified. No one was notified, certainly no one in this House, certainly not the public. Suddenly, at twelve o'clock on a Friday, there is a new tax, a new procedure is implemented, a new levy, a new impact. It is very significant. We deserved to be notified.

Madam Speaker, I also have to draw attention to the real tragedy with respect to energy in this country. It is recognized that the energy situation is mixed in with the constitutional situation where there is a jurisdictional problem. There are tremendous problems in terms of price, constitutional authority and revenue distribution around the country. They require tact and diplomacy in order to be resolved. In a couple of weeks the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Premier of Alberta will be sitting down hopefully to resolve the issue. This will require good will from the government opposite. It will also require good will from the producing provinces. And good will is not engendered by the kind of cheap shots one finds in this document. For example, talking about the levy and the funds therefrom, the press release says:

It contributes to payment of Alberta and other royalties, capital and operating costs.

Now, that is not technically incorrect. But, Madam Speaker, the minister, if he were so inclined, might also have said that it contributes to the profits of Petro-Canada as an owner of Syncrude. It contributes to the salaries of people who are employed in that plant. It contributes to the economic benefit of the people in that part of the country. He could have said all those things. But, no, he tried, and in his remarks again he tried, to leave the implication that somehow this is a levy being imposed upon the whole country which the government is forced into and which is going into the already bulging coffers of the province of Alberta.

That is simply not true, and that kind of cheap shot, which he never ceases to grab an opportunity to use, is hardly going to make it easier for the Prime Minister and the premier to arrive at an agreement, which I assume everybody in this House and everybody in the country wants. I assume nobody wants a donnybrook, a fight or a constitutional crisis, but that is what is going to happen if this approach is continued to be used and if those kinds of cheap shots are continued.

I wonder what the governments of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island are thinking about now when they are faced with electricity rates going up significantly as a result of this levy. Do hon. members not think there might have been a little goodwill engendered had they been warned, telephoned or told about this? It is almost a motherhood statement to say one should consult and advise and let one's peers or contemporaries who are affected know, yet that fundamental and simple thought does not seem to occur to hon. members opposite.

I was curious about the language used by the minister in his opening remarks. He said that the words of the motion are similar to those which are in the Petroleum Administration Act. They are identical. Are we now to see a different procedure again from that which we have discussed and argued? The language there seemed to imply that the government is attempting to develop some new alternative. If that is the case, I hope the government will have the good sense and common courtesy to discuss it with those on this side of the House who have responsibilities in that area, and perhaps we could get on with what the public out there expects us to do, and that is to debate and discuss rationally and act in a way which is to the benefit of the country. We should not carry on with this ridiculous procedure of bringing in new government collections through this back door procedure. These collections will have a horrendous impact.

Before closing I have to say again that another 2.5 cents a gallon has come along. There have been increases; we are going to be getting more, presumably. That underlines the absolute necessity of a coherent energy policy from this government soon, and a budget soon. Because it cannot be said often enough or loudly enough that we recognized what was happening and put in the December 11 budget provisions to help those who are affected and to help those in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island who generate their electricity from petroleum, those on low incomes and those who use heating oil to heat their homes. None of that has been forthcoming from the other side of the House. All we have had is two and a half cents here and two and a half cents there.

Mr. McDermid: Sneaky by degree.

Mr. Andre: Sneaky by degree, and the over-all impact of that is far more horrendous to the consumers of Canada than would have been the case had the December 11 budget been adopted. It is time, for the sake of Canada, to put Canada ahead of pride. I know the government will have to do some flip-flops in order to do the right thing for Canada, but it should take the embarrassment and do the flip-flops and the right things for Canada. The country needs it.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), who just spoke, says that the minister should put Canada ahead of pride. I would like to see him put Canada ahead of private profit. To be frank, whether this is a tax or a levy does not really concern me. What it means is one-half cent per litre or two and a half cents per gallon, as the hon. member for Calgary Centre said. It means taking it out of the average person's pocket and putting into the pockets of oil companies.

That is what it means. It means transfering $500 million away from the average person to the oil companies.

Look at who owns what we are talking about. It is Syncrude. In Larry Pratt's book "The Tar Sands" he sets out the ownership of Syncrude. That "poor" company, Imperial Oil, owns 31.25 per cent. Gulf, that other "Canadian" company, owns 16.75 per cent. Cities Service, that other "small" outfit, owns 22 per cent. Ottawa took 15 per cent, Alberta took 10 per cent and Ontario took 5 per cent. At page 176 of his book Pratt says that the three companies have 70 per cent ownership and, interestingly, Imperial Oil has just enough equity to out-vote the three governments combined. It was a pretty rotten deal, and we are paying for it out of the taxpayers' money.

This is what this debate is really about today. As I understand the minister, the price of oil in Canada is $14.75 a barrel. The international price—and the minister can correct me if I am wrong—is upwards of $38 a barrel. However, the companies in this deal, Syncrude and Suncor, were to get world prices. That was the deal negotiated for them.

The minister brought in the force majeure clause, but according to his words today they are still getting somewhere around $37 a barrel. Who is paying the difference between $14.75 a barrel and $37 a barrel? The Canadian taxpayer is paying it. Tonight at midnight he or she is going to pay an extra $500 million or so, an extra half cent a litre or an extra two and a half cents per gallon.

I hate to say "We told you so". One does not like people who say "We told you so", but Tommy Douglas when he was the energy critic—

An hon. Member: The Husky Oil director?

Mr. Waddell: In 1974 Tommy Douglas said that the government should not go into this deal, that it would suffer for it and that prices would go way up; and that is what is happening.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Tommy Douglas is well oiled.

Mr. Waddell: In 1973 the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources concluded that 30 billion barrels of tar sands oil could be extracted—hon. members should listen to these figures—at $6 a barrel, that the cost would be $8.80 by 1981 and that the yield in after-tax rate of return would be 20 per cent to the operators at $6 a barrel. The C. D. Howe Institute in another report in 1974 urged that Canadian prices rise to this level over the next four or five years to make the tar sands viable. That was $6 a barrel. The companies sponsored their research, and they said that that was not true. Alsands in its application said that the tar sands would really require $18 to $20 a barrel. Imperial Oil in Cold Lake in its application said $14.50 a barrel was required. That would produce profits.

These companies are not in the habit of understating their case. The Foster Research group in 1975 was doing a study for the province of Alberta and concluded that Syncrude would be highly profitable at the figure of $13.75 a barrel. We are paying them $37 a barrel. What a subsidy! Who are we subsidizing? We are not subsidizing the average person who is in trouble or who needs subsidies from this government. The profit of Suncor in 1979 showed a 187 per cent increase.

Mr. McDermid: Over what?

Mr. Waddell: An increase in substantial profits. I will get the figure for the hon. member. I do not have it here, but I will provide the figure to him. Let hon. members look and let them deny that profits are substantial. The report of last year's profits shows the profits of the top 500 companies in the country. Let us look at where all the money is going. It is going to private resource companies. It is going to multinational companies. Let hon. members read the figures and they will see. We are about to give them more out of the taxpayers' pocket. Shell, for example, in 1979 made $243 million in profit.

● (1730)

An hon. Member: From where?

Mr. Waddell: Here. They had a profit of $243 million, and they did not pay taxes here in 1978.

Mr. Nystrom: Disgusting.

Mr. Waddell: Syncrude was making money for its backers long before production started, due to tax write-offs. So what the minister is announcing today is more subsidies for the oil companies.

The four largest oil companies in Canada—my friend wanted some figures so I will give them to him—recorded profits of $1.4 billion in 1979. That was up 55 per cent from 1978. In the first quarter of 1980, the industry's profit rose another 83 per cent.

An hon. Member: How much capital did they expend to get that profit?

Mr. Waddell: What we are doing is subsidizing. My friends to the right are great defenders of the oil companies. The whole point of this matter is that we went into a rotten deal with Syncrude. I invite members to read Pratt's book. It shows that it was a rotten deal for Canada and we are stuck with it.

Mr. Lalonde: We are not.

Mr. Waddell: I hope we are not. We would support the minister if he changed it. I know the minister has tried, and we support that, to make future tar sands projects be run by Canadians in partnership with Petro-Can and Alberta Gas Trunk. That is what we should have done years ago. Nevertheless, the fact remains that we are still dealing with an increase in the tax, whether you call it a levy or a tax, and it will come into effect at midnight tonight when all Canadians who are buying gas or consuming fuel oil will take 2.5 cents out of their pockets and put it again, largely, into the pockets of these oil companies which are already making record profits. It is a scandal, Madam Speaker.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I will be very brief. I have a couple of questions to ask the minister so that I can understand a little more fully the implications of the application of this particular ways and means motion and also what we can expect in the future. I think it is relevant to the discussion.

The minister, in the course of his remarks on statements on motions has said that he has given notice of the invoking of the force majeure clause with respect to international prices. He has pointed out as well that he is continuing to pay international prices while negotiations continue with respect to an appropriate or unique price which I understand he has in mind. May I pursue this matter with the minister because I think it is important. I do not expect him to tell me what the negotiations are at present, but it is important for us as parliamentarians and the people of Canada as well as the industry itself to understand what is involved in the principles according to which the minister will operate.

I understand the minister, in the course of some of his remarks, has referred to the fact that he wants to have the price, which is based upon the operating costs, the capital investment, based upon a realistic price which will allow a profit to be made on investments by the participants in the synthetic oil investments. Perhaps the minister could make a note of these questions and answer them. I should also like to ask him whether or not, as a matter of principle, he considers that a certain percentage of profit is appropriate for the participants in the tar sands investments or projects. If that is the basis upon which he is operating, could he give us some idea as to what a reasonable amount of return on the investment might be in his estimation and whether or not, in the course of his negotiations and as part of his investigation of the whole matter, he will arrange, either through legislation or directly, to have the operations of the synthetic oil plants or projects investigated by the new petroleum price auditing agency which was announced in the Speech from the Throne? Will that new agency play a part in determining what a realistic or reasonable international price might be? Could the minister answer those questions now, following which I might have another supplementary question?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I am available to answer the question now, if the hon. member prefers it. Before answering, however, I should like to make a comment about a point raised by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). Concerning the statement which was made about the fact that the levy is used to pay for the operating costs, royalties, etc., I do not see why the hon. member should be so sensitive to the fact that the royalties are going to the government of Alberta. There is nothing scandalous about this. It is part of the agreement, as I have said. I have indicated the exact amount of money that is being paid. I do not see why he should be so sensitive when this is mentioned among other facts.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister just mentioned something about extra sensitivity. I wonder if he could inform me right now whether it is his view that royalties would not be paid to Alberta if it were not for this. In other words, is he trying to tell the House that it is this particular change in the levy which allows Alberta royalties to be paid and without which royalties would not be paid to Alberta? Is that the point he is trying to make, because if it is it is totally inaccurate.

Mr. Lalonde: The revolving fund is used to pay money, as I indicated in my opening statement, to indemnify the tar sands companies for their production. It is used to pay them the high international price out of which, in the case of Suncor at present and in the case of Syncrude most likely this year, some of it will go into royalties. The money that the companies get goes into paying everything, including royalties. I do not want to spend too much time on this but I do not see why my hon. friend should be so hypersensitive about the fact that the government of Alberta is collecting royalties.

About the similar or identical nature of the resolution, I did not have the exact facts of the Petroleum Administration Act before me so I indicated that it was similar. But if it is identical, it is extra similar.

As to the impact on the consumers of Canada, when the hon. member said it would be greater than the December 11 budget, that must be the overstatement of the year. The hon. member will remember that if the budget had come into effect on December 11, there would have been an 18 cents tax, and on July 1 another $2 would have been added which would have probably have increased the price per gallon of gasoline by about 24 cents. We are talking here about 2.5 cents a gallon or 0.5 cents a litre, as I have indicated. So I think that is an overstatement.

In terms of the specific question raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), we had extensive discussions with the parties interested in building tar sands plants. The companies had started with a discounted rate of return of around 16 per cent. Since then they have raised it to about 18 per cent, and the discussion is still going on. I do not know exactly where it will end, but that is what is being talked about by the companies at present as being a reasonable rate of return. I must say that obviously you have to take into account how much will have to be paid in royalties out of this and what in the end would be left to the companies on a net basis. So one cannot conclude exactly what will be the price set, even if it were different from the international price, because then there is a matter of how much the provincial and the federal governments would take over and above what the companies would be left with. Obviously, as the hon. member knows, these are two different things.

With regard to the investigation of the petroleum monitoring agency, this agency has not been set up as such, but there is in my department, under the Petroleum Act, a division that has been monitoring, petroleum, profits and prices for some time. The information which has been collected is available, and the department has been working on the basis of information collected under the Petroleum Monitoring Act as well as on the basis of the information provided by the companies.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I appreciate very much the report on the negotiations with the promoters of the two new projects, that is Alsands and the Cold Lake in situ plant. I understand that there have been discussions with respect to a reasonable rate of return. I am interested in the application with respect to the agreement and the force majeure clause involved in the present agreement with Syncrude and Suncor.

The minister has referred to the fact that Suncor is apparently making a profit. He gave some figures in the course of his statement. However, Syncrude, as I understand it, has not yet made a profit in its operations. Are the same figures which the minister quoted with respect to future operations applicable to the existing synthetic oil project?

Also, I was not talking about the Petroleum Monitoring Act, with which I am acquainted. I am talking about the new agency which was announced in the Speech from the Throne and which was promised during the course of the election campaign, the petroleum price auditing agency. It was indicated in the Speech from the Throne that this agency would be a very large agency which would be in a position to make exhaustive inquiries with respect to the industry and the oil companies. Is it the intention of the minister with respect to determining what a reasonable price would be for synthetic oil, to invoke and use this particular agency which the government has proposed to set up, or has the government withdrawn from that particular undertaking which it made in the Speech from the Throne?

I am interested in knowing what the government will use as a basis for determining a reasonable price and the general guidelines so that the people of Canada can understand how we will move off the international price, if you will, onto another price which is not necessarily the international price.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the petroleum price monitoring agency will be set up. However, it will not be in operation in time for the current discussions which have already begun and are proceeding. It is the intention of the government to proceed with the establishment of that agency in the near future. The hon. member referred to this agency as becoming a large agency. This does not need to be the case.

The idea is that this agency would encompass at least part of the functions which are now fulfilled by the division which performs the monitoring in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It would then operate as an ongoing monitoring agency and would have the powers which Parliament would legislate in this respect.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I noted the very careful decision which you rendered on the point of order. I noticed specifically that you quite explicity indicated that you were not ruling on the legality of the instrument that is being used here, that you were ruling instead on the propriety of the parliamentary practice which is being following. The question of the legality of the instrument still remains open.

I would like to direct questions to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) flowing from the fact that the legality of the instrument has not yet been resolved. Can the minister tell us whether he has consulted the law officers of the Crown, either before acting as he did today or after the various questions were raised? I have three questions flowing from the point. First, in light of the unusual circumstances and the interest of the House and the country in a $600 million tax increase which may be illegal, would the minister agree to break precedent and to make available to the House of Commons the legal opinion he received from the law officers of the Crown?

Second, could the minister tell us whether the government is confident that the charge being levied, this $500 million or $600 million tax levy increase, is in fact legal in so far as the minister is concerned? Third, could the minister tell us whether the government is now actively considering some other instrument, whether it be an amendment of the act or some other instrument?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, on the first question, this ways and means motion was drafted upon the advice and with the help of the law officers of the Crown. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) knows how these things are done, and they have been done through the normal process, inside the government. There has been no formal legal opinion given on the matter as such, for the good reason that this is a procedure which has been followed historically on many occasions for decades by this Parliament and the British Parliament.

I am advised that parliamentary procedure has been operating in this manner for many generations. Although the rules do not provide for ministers giving legal opinions in the House, I have little doubt about the propriety of the method which has been followed if, as I said, we look at the countless precedents in this country and in the U.K. in terms of the role and technique which have been used when governments employ ways and means motions.

With regard to the other instruments, if after the discussions which will take place with the producing provinces, particularly the government of Alberta, there is an agreement which requires some amendments to some pieces of legislation, obviously the Petroleum Administration Act would be brought back before the House, and there may be opportunity to make specific amendments to that act at that time. But as the hon. Leader of the Opposition knows, this ways and means motion is specifically drafted as an amendment to the Petroleum Administration Act.

While I am on my feet and not wanting to mislead the House, I referred to a ceiling of $200 million in the fund. I would like to stress that this is not a ceiling provided by the Petroleum Administration Act itself or by the law, it is a ceiling set up by Treasury Board in terms of administration. They have traditionally avoided allowing the fund to get above $200 million. This is how much the fund could draw in consolidated revenue if it were in a deficit position.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I have noted the minister's answer. There is no question that ways and means motions have been used to increase taxes where they were legal. The question which was before the House earlier today and which Madam Speaker felt was beyond her competence or requirement to address, was whether in fact this particular legal instrument was legal in this particular case. I gather that the minister is saying that he is persuaded that it is legal, although he has no legal opinion beyond the fact that the ways and means motion was drafted in the normal way by officers of the Crown.

While we cannot expect the minister to answer today, the House, I am sure, would be interested in knowing as soon as possible whether the minister will seek other advice in light of the debate this afternoon to determine whether in fact he is introducing at midnight tonight a $600 million tax increase which might prove to be illegal.

I would like to turn to another category of questioning. The minister has admitted that the imposition which he is introducing tonight at midnight will have a significant impact upon all users of petroleum, including many people who were exempted from the impact of some of the proposals in the budget of last December. Can the minister tell us whether this government is now contemplating any particular aid to consumers of home heating oil and to low income groups who will be less able than other Canadians to deal with this increase effective at midnight tonight?

Can the minister also tell me whether he is contemplating a special deal for provinces like Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, which rely to such a heavy and expensive degree on oil-generated electricity? Is the government contemplating bringing forward some measures to help those Canadians who will be hardest hit by the massive increases that are going to take effect tonight and who are least able to deal with them?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, first of all I should like to challenge some of the statements made by the Leader of the Opposition. He calls this a "massive increase" but I would scarcely call a half cent a litre a massive increase.

As far as the general point raised by the hon. Leader of the Opposition is concerned, I might also point out that we have been able to obtain an extension of the present arrangement without the increase on July 1 that his government proposed of $2 per barrel. This would have meant at least a six cents per gallon increase in the price of home heating fuel, as well as gasoline. The present increase is barely two and one-half cents so there is a substantial difference.

Regarding the specific points raised by the Leader of the Opposition, he knows that this government introduced, as one of its very first measures, an increase of $35 per month in the guaranteed income supplement for senior citizens. That increase, going to those who really need it all across Canada, represents a very significant improvement in their standard of living and is a step that will compensate for this increase many hundreds of times.

As far as the other aspect of the matter is concerned, it will be discussed and considered in the context of a general energy program and strategy once we have concluded our discussions with the producing provinces. I hope to be able to announce a number of measures which will be of great significance in terms of an energy policy, at that time.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I have two very brief questions. I have to note that the minister has now indicated that the government is planning no new help for those Canadians most hard hit by the increase he is making effective at midnight tonight.

My questions concern some of the statements he made in the course of his earlier presentation. He said notice had been sent to refineries. Could he tell the House at what point in time those notices were sent? What is germane is if people outside the House were advised before the House of Commons was.

Second, in response to something said by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) about Syncrude, the minister said "we are not stuck with Syncrude," and I believe I am quoting him accurately. I believe the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway said, "You are stuck with Syncrude", and the minister said, from his seat, "We are not." I may have misheard, but I wonder if that is the case. Can the minister tell us whether he is contemplating any immediate changes in relation to Syncrude and, if so, can he give us an undertaking that there will be a full discussion either with the other participants in Syncrude or related projects or, if this House is sitting, with Parliament prior to the government acting unilaterally?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I am afraid I may have forgotten the first point raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Clark: It concerns the moment of notification to refiners.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I can advise the hon. Leader of the Opposition that the telex to the refiners had been sent soon after the ways and means motion was tabled in this House. I can reassure him in this respect.

As far as the second point is concerned, obviously the reference to the statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and my interjection had to do with the fact that he was implying we were, to use his expression, "stuck with the international price for Syncrude". I indicated that this was not the case because, indeed, I have sent notice of intention to invoke force majeure for a review of pricing under the agreement with Syncrude.

This matter is one I have been discussing rather extensively with my colleague, the minister of energy for Alberta, in various meetings. We have examined various possibilities and we are still examining alternatives. I can advise the hon. member that any step taken vis-à-vis Syncrude would be as part of a general resolution of the current discussions and not individually, and that it would only be part of a total resolution. That is what we envisage at the present time.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, the oil companies are fond of saying a good tax accountant is worth a hundred salesmen but a friendly minister of finance or a minister of energy is even better.

I have four very short questions to put to the minister. First, I understand that once oil is being produced in these tar sands projects, any payment made to Alberta through revenue sharing or royalties will be deductible from federal taxable income. Would the minister agree with that?

Mr. Lalonde: Would the hon. member repeat that, please?

Mr. Waddell: That any royalty payments made to Alberta are deductible from federal taxable income by the company.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I am afraid I would need the advice of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) on exactly what the situation is at the present time, particularly vis-à-vis the Syncrude plant. I would hate to mislead my hon. friend. I would want to be sure I give him an accurate answer on issues of this nature. If he would give me time I shall inquire and give him the information later.

Mr. Waddell: Certainly, Madam Speaker. I think when giving them an extra $500 million the minister might want to find that out beforehand. I am sure he will look into it.

The second question is this. I understand that companies in these projects will be able to claim earned depletion allowances at the rate of $1 for every $3 invested in Syncrude, which will be worth approximately $170 million to them. Can the minister confirm that?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I have to advise my hon. friend that all these questions are being reviewed and re-examined. We are examining this matter at the present time, and once a decision is made as to changes that might be made in various taxation aspects that the hon. member refers to, an announcement will be made.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, I should like to thank the minister for attempting to clarify the question I asked earlier today with respect to the implications of the levy for the compensation fund and the payment of royalties to Alberta.

I have to take issue with the minister, nevertheless, because he seems to insist on attempting to tie the two together. They are in no way connected. There is no money flowing from the compensation fund of the federal government to the province of Alberta, none whatsoever. Certainly the compensation fund is paying the companies and the companies are paying the royalty, but not all of the money that the companies receive is from the compensation fund.

This is a sensitive point and the minister may think that I am splitting hairs, but I have to take issue with this. We are sensitive about it. The minister has been at great pains to paint Alberta as the bad guy in this. I find that extremely objectionable.

I would refer the minister to the last two sentences of his press release issued today, which states:

> It contributes to payment of Alberta and other royalties, capital and operating costs. Recovery by way of federal income tax is minimal.

That statement misleads the public and certainly the media. I think the minister must agree that it leads people to believe that the major part of this levy is a payment of royalty to the province of Alberta. That is simply not true. Certainly the recovery of capital and operating costs would represent, as I am sure the minister would agree, at least 95 per cent of that portion of the compensation fund which is given to the companies. I think the reason there is no recovery by way of the federal income tax is because Syncrude has not made a profit yet.

● (1800)

In response to some of the questions that were put today by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) with reference to percentage ownership of this and percentage ownership of that, that is misleading also.

Could the minister tell the House what the accumulated losses are for Syncrude oil?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I do not have those figures at my fingertips. But I want to tell the hon. member everything indicates that the parties who invested in Syncrude have made a very good investment indeed. As a matter of fact I do not know any of them who are eager to dispose of their investment at this time. All the figures that we have, over the life of the plant, particularly if we were to continue international prices, show that the return on the investment would just be huge, and I mean huge.

Mr. Thomson: Madam Speaker, is it not true that Syncrude lost $65 million last year?

Mr. Evans: Sure, last year.

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, so what? It depends on how much money you are going to make under the life of the plant. You look at the contribution which the federal taxpayer, among others, has made to the building of those plants. It is very great indeed. The federal government has a large investment and contribution through all the fiscal incentives and fiscal advantages that are there.

It was planned all along when the project was put forward that the company would lose money for years. If you look at the figures, what is striking is that it has lost a lot less money in the last two years than was forecast. It will come into a money-making stage, which may very well be this year, well ahead of the plans made at the time when the project was put forward. If you ask any of these people who are parties to the Syncrude plant whether they would be ready to be bought back at the original price they paid plus interest, I suggest that you will not find a single one who would be ready to dispose of his investment.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, if I remember correctly the companies put up about $1.4 billion.

My question to the minister is along the lines of the comments made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Since we, the Canadian people, have in effect put up all the financing, or the majority of the financing, for Syncrude, and we are offering all kinds of tax concessions and write-offs, in other words, we are paying for that plant, and as the minister is saying it is going to be immensely profitable in the years ahead, my question is as follows: since we are putting up all the money, since the public is paying for this, since consumers are paying for it through the extra levies, can the minister tell us whether or not he is contemplating doing the sensible thing, which most other countries in the world have done, and that is taking a greater public ownership within Syncrude, either through the government itself or through PetroCan? The member for Exxon over there is getting nervous.

Mr. Andre: You need the money so you can help Chrysler.

Mr. Nystrom: The member for Exxon is getting very nervous over there.

In the campaign the Liberal party made that commitment, and it is a commitment that all public opinion polls have shown that the people of this country are overwhelmingly behind, including the people of western Canada, as evidenced by what has happened in Saskatchewan.

Could the minister tell us or give us a bit of a preview of what his plans may be for taking over, in co-operation with the provinces, public ownership and control through PetroCan, or in some other way of the future oil resources of this country, particularly the heavy oils?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I am obviously not in a position to reveal any details of plans which the government may be considering at the present time. But I want to assure the hon. member that our commitment to reach a 50 per cent ownership target by 1990 is one to which this government is very firmly committed.

Second, I would like to draw to the attention of the hon. member that the only new tar sands plant that has been announced since this government took office has been a 100 per cent Canadian-owned tar sands plant project in which Petro-Canada is the major partner with Alberta Gas Trunk Line. This is the line that we would want to see pursued and followed with Canadian companies in particular. We hope that our proposals will encourage more and more Canadian financing and participation in tar sands development rather than leaving it mainly or essentially to the foreign multinationals.

Mr. Nystrom: As a supplementary question, is the minister looking at an idea put forward by the Premier of Saskatchewan where a major part of increases in prices of oil are put into an energy development fund in this country so that we can use it as a fund to expand PetroCan rapidly or expand public participation in all future energy development?

Mr. Clark: You voted against that.

Mr. Nystrom: I would like to see the minister propose it. Is he contemplating such a fund where public ownership would be increased very rapidly, the idea having been put forward by the Premier of Saskatchewan?

Mr. Lalonde: In the course of my meetings with my colleague from Saskatchewan, the minister of energy, we had an opportunity of having rather extensive discussions about the proposal by the Premier of Saskatchewan. We are obviously examining a number of alternatives and suggestions. We cannot ignore the proposal by the Premier of Saskatchewan. It is obviously one that one cannot ignore. I tell the hon. member that it is one of several alternatives that the government has to consider before reaching a decision.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a question to the minister in connection with the relation of this levy or tax to his over-all energy package. Is it the minister's intention to introduce into this House bits and pieces of the energy package every week or couple of weeks and spread the impact of the cost of the energy package over a long period of time, or is he proposing after this "sneaky Pete" attempt to gather all the parts together and present them to this House on an omnibus basis so that we can have an opportunity to understand the full impact of the energy program that will be proposed by the government?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I have already indicated to the House the reason why there was some urgency, due to the fact that by September 1 the revolving fund would have been in debt by over $200 million. That is the only measure foreseen in the area of oil and gas pricing in terms of domestic prices. Obviously I have to consider the question of gas export pricing, about which I am in discussion with my provincial counterparts in the next few days in the understanding I have developed with my American colleague. I have to decide shortly whether there should be a further increase in the price of gas exports, but that is not a matter that comes before the House as such. It is a matter I have to consider in the next few days.

As I said, I am in touch with my provincial colleagues about this. The industry has also made representations and I am in touch with the industry. I can assure the hon. member that as far as the government is concerned, we would see as the next step a presentation of a comprehensive energy plan.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, may I just clarify something about this revolving fund? Is it required under the act that the fund be brought into balance each year? In connection with that same question, when the fund is in deficit at what stage is that charged against the Consolidated Revenue Fund? Is that at the end of the year or is it after each quarter?

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the act is concerned, I do not believe it provides for the necessity of balancing the fund. The fund has been set up as an autonomous fund to look after the additional costs of the tar sands plant. As to the point raised by the hon. member, I would have to inquire as to exactly what the practice is with Treasury Board and I will be happy to provide him with the information.

● (1810)

Mr. Wilson: I have a question supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Is it the intention of the minister in connection with these negotiations invoking force majeure to refer to the National Energy Board the whole question of the price which the oil companies, the oilsands or tarsands projects, should be paid? If that is the case, will they be regulated in the same way as utilities such as TransCanada PipeLines, Bell Canada and other such utilities? Is it the minister's intention to move toward that means of establishing the price?

Mr. Lalonde: The answer is, no. We are not envisaging a public utility approach as such.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the debate has lasted a reasonable time. I apologize to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who has risen again, but it being now past five o'clock the House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m., in accordance with Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.12 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PROSECUTIONS, CONVICTIONS AND SENTENCES FOR TRAFFICKING IN HEROIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

Given the fact that Canadian chiefs of police are concerned about leniency in sentencing for drug offences, a perception borne out by statistics which showed that in 1978 there were 201 convictions for trafficking or for purposes of trafficking in heroin, yet only 18 of those convicted received sentences of over five years and only three received sentences of over ten years; five years earlier, however—in 1973—there were 524 similar convictions for heroin and that year 211 of those convicted were sentenced to terms of over five years, 61 of which were over ten years and seven were given a life sentence, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House urge the Minister of Justice to make a full report to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on the prosecutions, convictions and sentencing for trafficking or possession for the purposes of trafficking in heroin, and the advisability of greater minimum sentences for such offences.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—EXPORTS OF NATURAL GAS TO UNITED STATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to present the following urgent and pressing public matter.

Whereas Senator Bud Olson, the Prime Minister's appointed Minister of State for Economic Development, three times rejected by Alberta voters, has failed miserably to persuade the Liberal cabinet to proceed under present legislation with his proposal for the construction of the pre-build section of the Alaska Highway natural gas pipeline, and whereas Senator Olson, hurt by the indecision of the cabinet, is wiggling, fumbling and bumbling in an attempt to erect a smoke-screen to protect the Liberal dictatorship, and whereas the Progressive Conservative members en masse are, and always have been, willing and ready to assist in this endeavour through proper reference to the House of Commons, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That this House challenge Senator Bud Olson to either get our surplus of natural gas moving to the United States market, or resign from his position and give the people the real reasons why progress is being delayed.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—CONSTRUCTION THEREOF—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my motion under Standing Order 43 is in response to a desperate appeal to the opposition for help over the weekend by pipeline minister and Senator Bud Olson, who says he is prepared to give formal approval for commencement of construction of the western leg of the Alaska highway gas pipeline, but finds his colleagues in cabinet reluctant to acquiesce for the reason that a decision in favour of commencement at this time could produce the mistaken impression in western Canada that the government is softening its approach to the west, and that a discovery of the real facts relating to the pipeline has been made and taken into account.

I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the House instruct the hon. senator to render his decision respecting the Alaska highway gas pipeline in accordance with instructions and advice offered to him by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDS FOR NEW SCHOOL ON SASKATCHEWAN RESERVE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Madam Speaker, the children of the Thunderchild Indian Band, near Turtleford, Saskatchewan, up until the summer holidays had been attending a school which has been condemned both by provincial fire officials and federal health offices since 1974. Not 100 feet from the school there is an open cesspool. I am sure hon. members opposite and the President of the Treasury Board would not want their children to fall into a cesspool at the school they attend.

In spite of these severe hazards, and the fact that money for a new school has been approved in the Indian Affairs capital budget for this year, Treasury Board has not consented to release the funds, which means these children will face these conditions for at least another two years. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong):

That this House instruct Treasury Board to make the budgeted funds available so that the work necessary to build a new school may begin immediately.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

RELEASE OF POLITICAL PRISONER, DANYLO SHUMUK, IN SOVIET UNION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

The motion concerns Danylo Shumuk, who is considered by many to be the longest-term political prisoner in the Soviet Union. Mr. Shumuk, whose nephew lives in the constituency of Okanagan North, whose member joins me in sponsoring this motion, is 65 years of age and serving the last two years of a ten-year sentence in a special regime corrective labour colony to be followed by five years of internal exile.

In view of the fact that he is a man suffering extreme ill health, this House passed a similar motion on November 3, 1978. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis):

That this House reiterates its deep concern and strongly urges the Soviet Union to immediately release Danylo Shumuk from imprisonment.

RESTRICTED USE OF AIR-CONDITIONERS IN MINISTERS' CARS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to propose a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the pressing need for gasoline conservation in this country, in view of the fact that Canadian gasoline consumption increased 2 per cent in the first five months of this year, compared to a decline in most other countries, and in view of the increased consumption of gasoline caused by the use of car air-conditioners, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling):

That this House instruct all ministers to put the long-term interest of this country ahead of their personal comfort and advise their drivers that it is not necessary to leave the air-conditioners of their cars running for long periods while they foul the atmosphere as a result of interminable cabinet meetings this summer.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROJECTS IN GASPÉ AND ATLANTIC CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity for which I seek the unanimous consent of the House.

Whereas the December 11 budget provided $50 million for development projects in the Atlantic provinces and the Gaspé, and whereas this additional $50 million would give DREE the largest budget in its history, and whereas the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has indicated his department is not sufficiently funded to meet the development needs of Canada's underdeveloped regions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the government be directed to immediately implement the provisions of the December 11 budget, making an additional $50 million available for regional development projects in Atlantic Canada and the Gaspé, and that these projects be identified by the minister responsible for Regional Economic Expansion.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

NATIONAL ANTHEM

PROVISION OF COPIES OF PROCLAMATION TO MPs FOR DISTRIBUTION TO CONSTITUENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. For years, members of Parliament have been able to encourage knowledge of the fundamental rights of Canadians by distributing copies of the Bill of Rights, and have been able to promote the use of the Canadian flag by sending out copies of that proclamation.

Since "O Canada" has now been confirmed as our national anthem by the passage of Bill C-35 on June 27 and by proclamation by the Governor General on July 1, I believe members of this House will want to promote the widest possible enthusiasm for the anthem by sending copies of the proclamation to schools, organizations and individuals in their ridings, I therefore ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart)—and I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would second it if he could by the rules—

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

That Madam Speaker undertake to arrange the printing of facsimile copies of the proclamation officially making "O Canada" our national anthem, and that these facsimiles be available under suitable conditions to members of Parliament for distribution to the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: The NDP said "No".

KU KLUX KLAN

PROTEST AGAINST OPENING OF OFFICE IN TORONTO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion which I very much hope will have the unanimous consent of the House.

Whereas the Ku Klux Klan has opened an office in the east end of Toronto, and whereas this group has throughout its history preached doctrines of race hatred and religious bigotry and has engaged in systematic violence and intimidation against thousands of groups and individuals, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House reaffirms its commitment to Canada as a multicultural and multiracial society, whose foundations are political, racial and religious tolerance, places on record its opposition to everything the Ku Klux Klan stands for, and its conviction that this organization is not welcome anywhere in Canada, and calls upon all levels of government to ensure that all Canadians are protected from racial attack, harassment and intimidation wherever and whenever they occur and prosecute the perpetration of these attacks with the full force of the law.

● (1415)

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INCOME TAX

POSSIBILITY OF DEINDEXING—EFFECT ON THE ECONOMY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, perhaps I could direct my question to the Prime Minister. My question is, again, with respect to the proposed deindexing with regard to which this government has been doing some kite-flying.

In view of the fact that the OECD, in their current publication, are anticipating that the real growth in this country will be a negative, in the current six months, of 1 per cent, or $2.5 billion, and bearing in mind that Dr. Stewart, before a committee of this House, testified that deindexing will increase unemployment by .3 of 1 per cent, or perhaps 30,000 more people will be out of work in this country, will the Prime Minister indicate why his government persists in studying the possibility of deindexing personal income tax in this country, and goes to the extent of having the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance in effect defending deindexing before an audience in Toronto?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the parliamentary secretary took exactly the same view as the minister, myself and other members of this government in saying that deindexing was a technique of a budgetary nature and it was being studied. I do know if it is continually being studied. I think it has been studied and now the minister and the officials are waiting for a time, when budgetary preparation comes, to raise it with their colleagues or not to raise it with their colleagues.

If the term "kite-flying" used by the hon. member applies, it is to the opposition which is constantly raising this question as though it was something that was with us. We do not know. We are in exactly the same position the opposition was in when it formed the government, in looking at various budgetary techniques. We have the admission that they also looked at that one. We did not make—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And rejected it.

Mr. Trudeau: We knew on budget night that it was rejected, and the opposition will find out on budget night whether we reject it or not. Certainly, when it was admitted that they were studying this technique, we did not spend all our efforts and energies telling them to stop studying. It is something that they looked at, and we are interested in the net results. When the budget comes down, the opposition will have every chance to say whether it agrees with the budget or not.

• (1420)

Mr. Stevens: The Prime Minister could stop this discussion today by simply saying they are ruling out any suggestion of deindexing. He made it abundantly clear that they are considering it. He asks, what is the cost? The cost is $1.5 billion as far as federal revenues alone are concerned.

My supplementary question is this: because at the federal level they are persisting in their study of deindexing federal income tax in the country, has he at least consulted the provinces, which have tremendous revenue at stake with respect to this question; and if not, does he propose to do so before introducing this in his coming budget?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. member enjoined us to stop studying this matter. I will make a proposition to him and to the members of his party: we will stop studying it if they stop talking about it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, when the Prime Minister says something like that, you can be sure it is going to be in the budget, whenever the budget comes down. Speaking about the budget, last Thursday, in reply to a question put by myself as to when we might expect a budget, the Prime Minister stated:

> We shall try to do as well as the opposition in presenting a budget within a given date of the day on which we were elected.

Madam Speaker, I checked that out. It took us 29 weeks—203 days—to bring in a budget. This means that unless he is going to fail in what he said he would do last Thursday, his budget has to be in by September 8. Can we have that commitment today?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I indicated we would attempt to do that, and we shall.

POSSIBILITY OF DE-INDEXING—EFFECT ON LOWER INCOME CANADIANS

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, my question, too, is directed to the Prime Minister. In a statement before the finance committee last week, Dr. Ian Stewart, the deputy minister of finance, stated that the poor would be more affected by deindexing than would those in higher income brackets. Considering this, how can the government be contemplating such an onerous move?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I know we are all aware of the rules which preclude us from commenting on what happens in committee. I understand that even the opposition is aware of these rules.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I think we now see the reason for which the rules are thus conceived; it is because ministers, officials, appear before committees; in this case the deputy minister of finance has appeared before a committee and tried to answer questions of a theoretical nature, because in practice he does not know what the budget will contain because even the government does not yet know, and now, in a sense he is being quoted in the House for being frank and candid and saying, yes, there are many ways of levying taxes, and this is one of them.

I repeat, the government's position has been that until the budget is finally decided, the Minister of Finance and myself, let alone the deputy minister of finance, do not know whether there will be deindexing or not.

Mr. Wright: My supplementary to the Prime Minister is this: someone said in the finance committee meeting that everything is fair game in looking at indexing, whether it be personal and corporate taxes, whether it be sales and excise tax—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Wright: —whether it be the consequences of various forms of deindexing. Does the Prime Minister agree with this statement that someone made? I am not allowed to quote him.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not understand the question. Madam Speaker, I will give the hon. member another chance.

Mr. Wright: Dr. Stuart also said in the finance committee meeting that everything is fair game from the government's standpoint in considering deindexing, whether it be sales taxes, whether it be personal income taxes, whether it be corporate taxes or the various consequences of deindexation. Does the right hon. gentleman agree with that statement?

● (1425)

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Madam Speaker. I do not know if "fair game" is the proper expression, but I have told the House many times, as has the minister, that when you are preparing a budget, you have to look at the panoply of instruments which are available to you. Sales tax is one, indexing is another, and direct taxes is another.

Mr. Nielsen: Petroleum taxes is another.

Mr. Trudeau: Petroleum taxes and excise taxes. If the minister was not looking at all these instruments to determine which would help the economy best, at least cost to the people, then he would not be doing his job either.

Mr. Stevens: Cut your spending; that is all you have to do.

ENERGY

INCREASE IN PRICE OF ENERGY PRODUCTS—DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON CONSUMERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister knows that the 2.5 cents per gallon increase imposed by the government on Friday on consumers of gasoline in Canada involves multinational oil companies in tar sands projects, and guarantees virtually the world price to these companies.

Considering that Imperial Oil, in its application for the Cold Lake project, said specifically—and not very long ago—that $14.75 a barrel would be sufficient to make that project profitable, how does the government now justify imposing the $1 million a day additional charge on Canadian consumers which is involved in bringing the price up to $36 a barrel? How has the government reached its estimate? Why is it so charging Canadian consumers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, there are two questions involved in the problem posed by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. The levy is not there in order to help the multinationals; the levy is there to ensure that Canadian consumers of oils produced from the Syncrude project are compensated for international prices.

An hon. Member: What?

Mr. Trudeau: It is for the same reason that we have oil compensation payments for oil which is imported from abroad. We also have oil compensation payments for oil which is brought out of Syncrude because of its higher cost. That has been the policy which was established by this government when it was the government in the past: I think it was some five years ago. So much for the meaning of the levy.

As to why this is happening now, the reason is that the new policy which this government fought for during the campaign, and which it is attempting to negotiate with the provinces, has not yet been adopted, but I can assure the Leader of the New Democratic Party—and he knows this—that when we bring it in, our policy is a blend of prices, and that there is no intention to pay world prices for oil which does not cost anything near world prices. When that times comes, I hope we will have the support at least of the New Democratic Party, which is doubtful because it is usually on all sides of the fence.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I can tell the House that we are listening to the master on that one. The Prime Minister was vociferous and active in the campaign in saying that the Liberal pricing policy on oil would be that the replacement cost includes both the cost of production and a reasonable profit, if I understood the Liberals clearly on something. The Prime Minister is nodding in agreement.

If this is still the policy, could the Prime Minister tell us what the replacement cost is for tar sands oil, and where he got this estimate; or does the government have no criteria at all for the tax it imposed on Friday, other than giving unneeded additional profits to the multinationals involved?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for describing me as a master. I have not been masterful enough in explaining what I thought was a rather simple point. We are presently under a pricing policy which had been established by this government some years ago.

During the campaign we indicated that we would want to change this pricing policy. We are in the process of attempting to change it now by discussions mainly with the oil producing provinces. We have not yet been successful. Until we are successful, we are acting under the old policy which made some conditional commitment to pay to Syncrude world prices. I repeat that we have not yet been successful in bringing in our new policy because the debate and discussions are going on with the provinces.

I am saying that when the new policy is brought in, we hope with the agreement of the provinces, then the kind of preoccupation mentioned by the hon. member will not be justified because we will have a pricing policy which we hope will bring the NDP in agreement with us. I understand that during the campaign we were saying more or less the same thing on this subject. Even the Tories concede that. I hope that members of the NDP will recognize in all humility that they were following us during the campaign.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, we all notice on this side that the hon. member for Broadview is smiling broadly. I think he is looking forward to the prospect when his party will ally themselves with us in this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister did, indeed, hear me correctly when I described him as a master, but he did not hear the rest. I said he was the master of the non-answer and vanity, and he has demonstrated both here today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: In all humility, as the Prime Minister would say, I would like to suggest that he has not answered the question. Would he, in his final answer, tell the House of Commons and the people of Canada what was the criterion used in justifying the $1 million a day increase which was imposed on the people of Canada on Friday, in light of what I thought was his straightforward commitment during the campaign that the pricing policy would be based on replacement cost, which is the cost of production and a reasonable profit? That must have been the criterion which was used in arriving at the figure on Friday?

I should like to ask him, in that context, why he does not use the force majeure provision which the government can use under existing authority to insist that the original commitments made by the oil companies to produce oil at their submitted prices be adhered to and that the government not provide windfall profits which it is moving toward.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am really sorry that I have not been able to make the Leader of the NDP understand what I have been saying. I will make an effort, and then accept that his judgment is justified that I have been unsuccessful. We have not yet brought in, legislated or announced the new policy for which we fought during the election: it has not been done yet.

An hon. Member: You do not know what it is.

Mr. Trudeau: We are trying to do it—

An hon. Member: Piece by piece.

Mr. Trudeau: —not by applying the force majeure clause, as the NDP suggests, but with the agreement of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. In the meantime, we would prefer not to use force majeure or unilateral clauses to impose our will on them.

An hon. Member: What about the oil companies?

Mr. Trudeau: We are trying to get agreement on the new policy. Until that new policy is agreed upon, I regret that we are not carrying out our election promise. But I hope that within a short period of time we will be carrying it out, and I am saying that there may be some disturbance in the country when we do it. I hope that at that point we will have at least the courageous support of the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCREASE IN PRICE OF ENERGY PRODUCTS—ACTION TO CUSHION IMPACT ON CONSUMERS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. Perhaps he could help me to educate the Leader of the NDP, who believes that last Friday's increase only affects gasoline, whereas it affects all petroleum products, including home heating oil and electricity generation.

As the Prime Minister knows, the government's price increase of last Friday will have a direct impact upon those Canadians who can least afford such an impact, namely, the poor, the aged and, in a regional sense, Quebec and Atlantic Canada which rely so overwhelmingly on oil for both home heating and the generation of electricity. Setting aside, temporarily, the questionable legality of the increase of last Friday, will the Prime Minister acknowledge that the lowest 20 per cent of Canadian income earners are, in fact, the most vulnerable to home heating oil increases? Consequently what measures does his government propose to cushion the impact upon these defenceless Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that argument is a little more difficult to understand, coming from the Conservative party and with the vocal support of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, because twice when the Tories formed the government they increased that levy, once on August 30 and once on November 1—

An hon. Member: By 75 cents.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, by 75 cents. That is exactly the point. Now they are objecting to an increase which they perpetrated twice without thinking of the poor, the lame and the halt, and so on. I suggest that they then understood the reason for this, and they understand it now. They are just playing games.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis: If the Prime Minister wants to talk about games, will he admit that he has embarked upon the strategy of a series of price increases, be it excise tax, refinery tax, special levies and heaven only knows what else, particularly when Parliament is in recess, and will he give us his firm undertaking that the policy will not be implemented, and that the policy will result in higher energy prices than was ever proposed in the Crosbie budget; and he knows it full well?

Will he give us an undertaking that those measures will not be implemented to the detriment of the poor, the senior citizens and those in regions of the country which rely so heavily on oil, without corresponding measures of compensation or tax credits which will minimize the growing disparity between the groups I have mentioned and others in our society?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, we had already anticipated it, in conformity with our election promise, when we had this House adopt the $35 a month increase in the guaranteed income supplement. This was a good beginning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—PROPOSAL OF MINISTER OF STATE FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question was originally directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but since he is probably resting up after his activity last Friday I should like to direct it to the Prime Minister.

Apparently Senator Olson, the Minister of State for Economic Development, in an effort to get his pipeline proposal through, has called for a write-in campaign by Alberta residents in order to assist him in persuading cabinet with respect to this proposal. The poor fellow needs help.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister, so we can better understand what kind of write-in Senator Olson wants to encourage out west, whether he would tell us what Senator Olson's proposal is with respect to the pipeline.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, with regard to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I can assure the hon. member that the minister is not resting: he is meeting in Victoria, B.C., with his counterpart.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: As to the question concerning Senator Olson, I have not heard what he has said. I have a clipping in front of me, according to which he expressed surprise that the Tory opposition, and particularly their leader, is not supporting this project. I am not sure whether or not he is right, because I do not think anyone knows what the Tories think on this. But apparently Senator Olson was telling Albertans that it would be useful if they helped their members of Parliament—of which, unfortunately, we do not have any on this side—to make up their minds on this, rather than just to criticize the government if they did and if they did not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I think that if the Prime Minister wanted to get some members from western Canada, he would not be sending the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to Victoria. The Prime Minister has raised the question of getting representation from western Canada. If he is really serious about it, maybe he would come clean with the House of Commons and the people of Canada as to what the policy is about the pipeline, and what position the government takes with respect to the pre-build.

If the Prime Minister really wants to carry out the proposals made in such glowing terms in the Speech from the Throne about consultation with western members, will he arrange a meeting between Senator Olson and western members of Parliament to discuss the pre-building of the pipeline, so we can give him some assistance in getting this matter to cabinet?

Mr. Trudeau: I will be happy to ask the senator to arrange such a meeting. I think it would be helpful if we had some unified view from the Conservative opposition as to what they think on this. The hon. member for Yukon says we have had it.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, since 1977.

Mr. Trudeau: He wants it. I know you people have had it; but I am not sure if the hon. member is referring to the policy.

Mr. Nielsen: The policy.

• (1440)

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, then I think I can assume from what the hon. member for Yukon said that the Conservative party stands undividedly behind the pre-build. I see them all indicating "Yes".

Miss MacDonald: Where does the government stand?

Mr. Trudeau: So I take this as a matter of record; they are all nodding their assent.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Where do you stand?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: If hon. members bear with me, I will tell them—

Mr. Paproski: Tell us where you stand.

Mr. Trudeau: That is what I am going to do; just hold your horses. It may take a little bit of time, but I will tell them exactly where we stand.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: The law passed by this Parliament in the summer of, I believe, 1978 indicated that we should not proceed with any part of the pipeline unless it was an integrated part of the whole. That is still the position of this government. However, we do not think that one is going against the spirit or the letter of that law by building a section of that pipeline, provided one has the guarantees that it will be part of the whole. That is exactly the position of this government, that one can proceed in stages—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I do not think we have the support of the NDP on this. We are losing them on this.

Mr. Rae: No.

Mr. Trudeau: At this point we are working with the Tories.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I think I can say—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: I think I can say that we are also working with the United Steel Workers of America.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And we are working with the devil!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Trudeau: I did not finish, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: If the right hon. Prime Minister had not finished his answer, then I will allow the Prime Minister to finish his answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: So we have the policy that the pipeline can proceed in stages, provided we have the guarantee that that stage will be followed by the completion of the full pipeline. The sole purpose of the government at this time is to ascertain whether we have these guarantees or not. This is a judgment call. We are trying to get increasing evidence before—

An hon. Member: Bring it before Parliament.

Mr. Trudeau: —proceeding with this decision. The nature of that evidence, once again, will be a judgment by this government—hopefully, as I understand it now, supported by the Conservative opposition—that we have or do not have the sufficient guarantees. That will be the decision taken by cabinet, I believe, on Thursday of this week when we will be weighing the evidence to make a decision as to whether a pre-build will prevent the building of the whole thing or, on the contrary, will encourage it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE PRE-BUILD SECTION—EFFECT ON ENERGY SECURITY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I understand that ironclad commitments now have become judgment calls; that is a change. My question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the pre-build.

Last week, the Prime Minister said that the pre-build would not go ahead if it threatens Canada's future energy security; those were his words. Is the Prime Minister aware of a backstop agreement dated October 25, 1979, whereby Trans-Canada PipeLines Ltd. guaranteed that Canadian gas will flow through the eastern pre-build, actually, for 15 years if Alaskan gas is unavailable? Would he not agree that this agreement really is a threat to Canada's energy security?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is quoting from a document of which I do not have any knowledge. I know the pre-build as presented to cabinet would be a scheme whereby there would be a guarantee of some seven years' flow of gas, after which there would be absolutely no guarantee that Canadian gas continues to flow unless the whole thing has been built.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, may I respectfully suggest that before cabinet makes a decision, the Prime Minister should have a look at these documents? They are a matter of public record.

The backstop agreement means not just more exports of gas—which it means—more than the Prime Minister just said, but since they guaranteed the throughput, it could mean the bizarre situation that Canadian gas destined for Ontario may now have to go through the United States system and back to Ontario. That is bizarre. A government fell 25 years ago over that.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Waddell: In light of this report, the questions raised today and the statements the Prime Minister just made, is the Prime Minister prepared to have a special debate here in the House of Commons on the pre-build issue?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, of course I will make sure that the minister and the department are aware of the document to which the hon. member referred. If it is, as the hon. member said, a public document and not one which he just got privately from his capitalist friends, I am sure the minister has already seen it.

An hon. Member: Husky Oil.

Mr. Trudeau: I just do not happen to have the answer myself. All I can tell the hon. member is that any undertaking made by the government will not be bound by some private hopes or aspirations of friends of the hon. member.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POLICY RESPECTING NUCLEAR WEAPONS AND NEUTRON BOMB

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is also to the Prime Minister, but on a different subject. Yesterday, on the television program "Question Period", the Minister of National Defence stated a major change in Canada's defence policy with regard to nuclear weapons and the neutron bomb. The minister stated:

> I think we have to prove ourselves maybe a little bit wiser to build up a kind of deterrent, and the deterrent at the moment is not our tanks, our navy or our planes. I think the deterrent now is to try to find sophisticated weapons like nuclear weapons.

He went on to name the French neutron bomb as an example. Will the Prime Minister tell the House whether the minister was expressing government policy when he advocated the development and deployment of neutron weapons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have just received a transcript of the statement by the minister. I apologize, but I have not had time to have consultations with the minister. The way I read the statement, he is using—as did the hon. member—the first person plural, "we". It is not clear to me whether he is talking about Canada or whether he is talking about the west in general. I rather think the latter, because he is talking of nuclear deterrents. The House knows—we all know—that Canada does not have any nuclear deterrents and that we have always opposed them.

USE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS BY CANADIAN FORCES IN NATO

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister got to the point right at the end: we have always opposed them and the Prime Minister has always opposed them. He has opposed countries such as France arming itself with a neutron weapon. After the display yesterday, I can well understand why the Prime Minister feels he needs a special adviser in National Defence other than the Minister of National Defence.

Perhaps I could ask the minister my supplementary question. If the minister succeeds in persuading his NATO colleagues to develop nuclear weapons of a sophisticated nature, including the neutron bomb, is it the minister's intention that the Canadian forces in Europe will be equipped with them, or does he wish us to act like Pontius Pilate, keeping our hands clean but encouraging our allies to do otherwise?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, it is true; this conversation occurred during the "Question Period" discussion on television. Obviously, I was talking about the alliance and about the west, because the question was about what kind of deterrent would be credible if by chance we wanted to promote a peaceful means for disarmament and limitation of arms.

I said at the time that the only way we could have a very efficient deterrent would be to have sophisticated weapons by which we could prove to the Russians that we are serious when we want to talk about peace and disarmament, and that we will talk peace and disarmament from strength, not from weakness.

● (1450)

POLICY ON NATO POSSESSING NEUTRON BOMB

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to the Prime Minister and it follows on the comments made by the Minister of National Defence.

It seems to me that the Minister of National Defence, in his answer, once again reiterated his personal support for such sophisticated nuclear weapons as the neutron bomb. I would like the Prime Minister to state very clearly that there is no interest on the part of the government to support in any way the NATO alliance achieving the neutron bomb.

The Prime Minister stated on June 27, in Sweden, in response to a question by a Canadian journalist, that he would vigorously protest to France the possibility of that country using a neutron bomb. It is my understanding that no such protest has gone forward from the Government of Canada. Given the statements of the Minister of National Defence, would the Prime Minister tell the House whether or not he has now gone back on that commitment; or, if he intends to send that protest, when will it be done?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member refers to a statement I made in answer to a question while I was in Sweden. The answer was conditional upon the question being justified in fact. I said if, in fact, France has tested a neutron bomb, we would protest.

Miss MacDonald: It has.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. lady says that we have not protested. I say, in fact, we have no evidence that France has tested a neutron bomb. The statement by the President of France is to the effect that they now have the wherewithal or the know-how to proceed to another stage where they could build a bomb and test it. My information is that France has not tested such a bomb.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I go back to the speech made by the Prime Minister to the special session on disarmament, of the United Nations, in which he very strongly endorsed the decision of the President of the United States not to proceed with a neutron bomb. At that point the United States had not tested such a bomb either.

Because of the Prime Minister's equivocation on this question at the moment, will he tell the House whether or not he will undertake to protest to France the statement made by the President of France, that they have the capability and that they might proceed in that matter? Would he protest to the government of France and ask that they not proceed?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, in the speech which I made at the United Nations, to which the hon. member has referred, I advocated in these matters of research and development the strategy of suffocation. That is still the policy of this government. We are hopeful that all the major powers will reach some form of agreement, perhaps in the international forum, whereby all of them will cease and desist from developing new techniques of nuclear devices. That is our position.

I have not protested research in the laboratories of France, the United States or the Soviet Union about various studies and aspects at which they are looking. However, it is the policy of the government that, hopefully, we will use the international forum to have these countries cease this type of, not experimentation because there has been no experimentation yet, but of developing new and more sophisticated weapons. That has been our policy. But it has not been the policy of our government nor, I believe, of the Conservative government, to protest what might or might not be in progress at the research level before even the knowledge of what they are doing, in fact, has come to us.

NEW HORIZONS PROGRAM

NOTIFICATION OF GRANTS TO ALL MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. It arises from a statement made July 2 by the Minister of National Health and Welfare who stated, in effect, that cheques for New Horizons Grants would be transmitted to the recipients through the member of Parliament for the ridings involved, regardless of politics, and the minister gave her assurance that no politics whatsoever had been involved in New Horizons grants.

Will the minister tell the House whether or not his department will be forwarding New Horizons cheques through each member of Parliament to recipients, according to the policy decision announced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare? In other words, have such arrangements been completed; and if not, will the minister be talking to his colleagues about completing such arrangements?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, there has been no conversation to date. I will look into the matter and report to the hon. member.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

DISTRIBUTION OF PROJECT GRANTS THROUGH MPs

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister, who I am sure—as he is the Prime Minister—will be fully aware of all new government policies.

In view of the new policy announced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on July 2, that New Horizons cheques will be forwarded to recipients through their members of Parliament, regardless of political affiliation, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether this will apply to any other type of government grant, such as DREE, employment programs, Open House Canada, and so on; and if not, will it only apply to New Horizons grants or any other grants where the minister concerned is caught with his or her political hand in the patronage cookie jar?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That sounds like an argument, Madam Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POLICY ON POSSESSION OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. It stems from statements made by the Minister of National Defence which were touched on a little earlier.

The minister said, "You talk lately about the French proton bomb" and went on to say, in apparent reference to the high-radiation neutron bomb France recently said it had tested, "I know a lot of people don't agree with me, but it is the only deterrent we have at the moment". Those are very forceful and clear statements.

Judging from the Prime Minister's response to questions asked by hon. members of the loyal opposition a few moments ago, will he stand in the House and state clearly and unequivocally that he does not support the ludicrous statement uttered by the Minister of National Defence, that this is the only deterrent we have, and that the Minister of National Defence was not speaking on behalf of the government when he made that statement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I thought that in answer to the first question I had made it clear that my reading of the quote I saw of the minister's words was that he was not speaking on behalf of Canada or its defence policy.

Mr. Cossitt: You do answer questions now and then.

Mr. Trudeau: He was saying "we", in the sense of the alliance believing certain things, and that within the alliance we have SALT, the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks. Hopefully, it will extend to all forms of nuclear devices, certainly including this one. That is my understanding of what the minister said.

In so far as our policy is concerned, I also indicated that we had opposed proliferation in the past, we had signed the Non-Proliferation Treaty, and we have been active in the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty. We tried to extend that not only to atmospheric testing but also to underground testing. That remains our policy. We denuclearized Canadian forces.

Mr. Blaikie: What is the minister saying?

Mr. Trudeau: I am talking about the Government of Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: What is he talking about?

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat, I believe that the minister was talking about the western alliance, of which the United States is a member, and they are involved in the SALT talks—I repeat, I have not had a chance to discuss the matter with the minister. I saw this text, which certainly would not indicate that "we" refers to "we, the federal government." If it refers to "we, the members of the alliance", it may be an opinion which he is expressing.

Mr. Rae: Make up your mind.

Mr. Trudeau: It is not the policy of the federal government to propose to encourage either the testing or development of further nuclear weapons.

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister's statement almost bristles with hundreds of supplementary questions. I take it that the Prime Minister has repudiated the statement made by the Minister of National Defence, that the neutron bomb is our only deterrent. Assuming that that is what the minister said, does the Prime Minister clearly intend to dissociate himself from that statement and immediately protest the development of the neutron bomb, if that is in fact what is taking place in France at the moment—immediately and as strongly as possible?

● (1500)

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I just answered the second part of the question of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

On the first part of the question, I repeat very clearly—this is my second to last answer—that it is not government policy to advocate any form of nuclear development of new arms or further deployment of old arms.

An hon. Member: You said that about deindexing.

Mr. Trudeau: I have said that many times, Madam Speaker. Hon. members know that is a policy of the government. They know that this government denuclearized our NATO forces in Europe—the Canadian component of our nuclear forces. It is our government which did that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You did more than that.

Mr. Trudeau: It is our government that is engaged in the purchasing of the F-18, which will not be a nuclear-armed airplane: that should be clear.

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—DATE OF DECISION ON PRE-BUILD SECTION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I should like to put one question to the Prime Minister relating to a round of questions put earlier on the pre-build of the pipeline. The Prime Minister seemed to indicate that the government was looking at the question of guarantees, but he also indicated in his answers a rather close proximity to the date of decision.

Can the House understand that cabinet will be making the decision this week, and that there will be an announcement with respect to the cabinet decision prior to Friday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is my understanding of the timetable the minister has suggested. In his absence, I would not want to give a firm undertaking on his part. I can say, however—as I said earlier—that as of now we are planning to reach a final decision in cabinet Thursday.

RAILWAYS

JURISDICTION OVER CN AND CP LINES WEST OF WINNIPEG

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns a proposal made at a recent joint meeting of the cabinet ministers of British Columbia and Alberta. As you are aware, Madam Speaker, the proposal concerned those two provinces taking control of the rail lines of CP and CN for everything west of Winnipeg.

In view of the importance of these two rail lines to the economic future of all Canadians, what is the government going to do to prevent any further provincial incursions into this type of federal jurisdiction?

Mr. Nielsen: Double-track.

Mr. Andre: One track each.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I imagine that these proposals are being tentatively developed by the provinces with a view to the constitutional debates which have begun and which are being attended by the Minister of Justice.

I can assure the hon. member for Willowdale that under no circumstances will we give up federal jurisdiction on interprovincial transport and on railways.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DOMM—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATORY TREATMENT SUFFERED BY HON. MEMBER FOR PETERBOROUGH

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I rose last week, as you will recall, to speak to this question of privilege but in the absence of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) I acceded to the suggestion made by the House leader for the opposition to await the presence of the hon. member for Peterborough in this House. I should like to provide you, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, it is my understanding, and I stand to be corrected by the Chair, that when a question of privilege is brought before this House there is ample opportunity for anyone in this House to address that subject.

When I brought the question of privilege to the House about there being different classifications of members of Parliament and said that I had been given false documents from the ministry in question, at that time he responded to my charges on the question of privilege after three or four members had spoken it. I stand to be corrected on the numbers.

At that time the minister admitted that maybe there was a mistake made. He also said he would look into my question of privilege. I supplied all my documents and all the foundation for argument to the Chair through Hansard. That is recorded in Hansard of July 3, when I rose on the question of privilege.

My concerns at this time, as a result of the minister rising on this question of privilege, are twofold. First, I would ask the Chair if it is customary that debate can follow while the Speaker of the House is deliberating on the motion I proposed, namely that this matter of discriminatory treatment of members of Parliament by the Department of Secretary of State through the issuance of false documents to me by the department and through the misuse of the citizenship courts for political purposes, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

If Your Honour should decide that the minister may again bring the subject up in the form of debate with new information of further elaboration on statements already made, then I would request that the eight or nine members who spoke to this question on July 3 be given the same opportunity. This would allow all members of the House to be treated equally and to elaborate further on the statements they gave or present any new information that might have come to their attention as a result of my question of privilege.

Despite the fact that this is an opposition day and that I would not like to see the time diluted by further debate on this subject while we are awaiting the Chair's decision, I suggest that as there obviously is to be debate, as evidenced by the minister offering further information, then that is all the more reason my question of privilege claiming that there are two classes of members of Parliament in this House be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. At that time any member of the House could present any information that might assist the Chair in determining whether I have a legitimate question of privilege. I think one speech should be sufficient to cover the point in question.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. For the information of the hon. member, one day last week the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) was not in the House and the next day the minister was not in the House, so we need a bit of co-ordination here. At one point the minister said in reply to the question of privilege that he would like to bring forward some information to the attention of the House on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Peterborough. The hon. member was not in the House at the time the minister wanted to make a statement and bring that information forward, so the House agreed that it would allow the information to be given to the House when the hon. member for Peterborough was present so that, if need be, he could reply to the information. The idea was that the minister would very briefly give the information which he had promised to bring to the House and the hon. member for Peterborough would be allowed to reply briefly if he wished, and that would end the interventions allowed on this question of privilege.

I am ready to rule and I only delayed my ruling, as I did for the question of privilege brought forward by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), because there might have been some similarity. At any rate, I wanted to rule on both at the same time. I am in the hands of the House. If the House still wants to hear the minister's supplementary information, then we will hear the hon. member for Peterborough as well; otherwise I shall rule tomorrow on the question.

An hon. Member: Let us have the ruling.

Madam Speaker: The House will have to wait until tomorrow because I did not bring it with me. I shall rule tomorrow and that will save time for opposition day. However, as agreed the other day, the House now does not want the hon. member to make a further statement?

An hon. Member: That is correct.

Madam Speaker: That is correct.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): On the point of order raised by the hon. member for Peterborough, Madam Speaker, there are two points to be drawn to the attention of the Chair. When the minister who now seeks the floor rose and the hon. member for Peterborough was not in his place, that was subsequent to the time the original question of privilege was raised. The minister had already spoken on the question of privilege. On a subsequent day, he then rose seeking to elaborate on his existing contribution to that question of privilege.

• (1510)

Since you have been in the Chair, Madam Speaker, you have been in the custom of hearing members only once on a question of privilege. If you hear the minister twice on this same question, I submit that any member can be heard twice on the same question, and that should be incorporated in your ruling, if you hear the minister now.

Madam Speaker: Indeed, that is quite correct. I did say that I would not allow the hon. minister to make a statement unless the House agreed, and the House did agree.

The minister had said the following in his intervention when the question of privilege was raised: "I am more than willing to look into the matter and bring back to this House this further information".

I am quoting from Hansard. However, if the House now does not want to hear the hon. minister, I am in the hands of the House and I will not allow the minister to bring forward that supplementary information. It is quite clear that a member cannot speak twice on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fox: Madam Speaker, very briefly I have two points. First, all I was interested in was to bring the facts to the attention of the House to clear up the issue.

Second, I would now wish to reserve a second question of privilege until I have had an opportunity to verify the blues about what the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) actually said this afternoon. The way I understood it, Madam Speaker, he has now modified his statement to say that the minister supplied him with a false document, whereas in his previous question of privilege he spoke about the department deliberately misleading him. Therefore, I want to verify the blues on this matter and reserve my question of privilege until tomorrow afternoon.

MR. GURBIN—DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT INFORMATION TO DEFEATED LIBERAL CANDIDATE

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, the basis for my question of privilege concerns a press release put out by the Liberal party in my constituency on behalf of a defeated Liberal candidate. I would like to table this press release, if I may, and I will leave it with the Clerk of the House.

The issue at large in this press release concerns a place called Dyer's Bay. The following is from the press release:

Tenders will be called next week for the reconstruction of the dock at Dyer's Bay—

Government information was given only to a defeated local candidate and his local party organization. It has still not been communicated to me as a sitting member of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Gurbin: I have followed this particular issue through two governments. I have been talking to the small crafts and harbours branch of the Ministry of Fisheries and Oceans, and I was eagerly awaiting this information.

I believe that this breach of etiquette has affected the fundamental basis of parliamentary democracy. It has threatened my rights and responsibilities as a member of Parliament. I think it represents one party's influence that is spreading by using the financial resources of a government that has responsibilities to an entire country. A minister of the Crown has used his position to selectively distribute information to further the career of a defeated Liberal candidate.

Traditional Canadian patronage and Liberal appointments, as across Canada, are also seen in my constituency of Bruce-Grey. If you add to this the habit as represented in my point of privilege, you have a political tool to ensure that this country will be manipulated by one political party. This practice reflects on the ethics of those ministers, defeated Liberal candidates and local Liberal organizations that use this practice.

As the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) recently learned, members on this side of the House demand the respect that Parliament confers on members by virtue of having been elected. For the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to expand partisan preferential treatment by giving government information first and only to a defeated candidate is an even more, if possible, serious breach of parliamentary ethics. It must stop.

My constituency of Bruce-Grey has given me the honour of representing it in this House of Commons. The democratic process will freshen itself at another election at the call of Parliament. The attempt to manipulate this constituency shows both a lack of respect for the people I represent and a lack of respect for the democratic process. The constitutional difficulties we are experiencing now are not so much a problem with what is written, but the result of the ambitions of those who hold their own interests above the interests of our land.

This point of privilege has serious implications for the future of this Parliament. I ask you, Madam Speaker, to bring forward a judgment that will reflect the tradition and the spirit of parliamentary democracy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I rise to ask that you permit the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) to reply to this question of privilege tomorrow, and that it be held over.

Second, with respect to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Peterborough, (Mr. Domm) and the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), since they fall under a similar heading of rights of members of Parliament, I would ask you to defer your judgment until you have heard the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans on this particular question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: Order, please, I will just answer the parliamentary secretary. I will take this question of privilege under advisement. Indeed, there are some affinities with the other two questions of privilege that have been raised previously in the House. I am not saying certainly that there are affinities, but at least on the surface there seem to be some affinities. I do not know whether I will rule on all three of them on the same day, but I will delay the ruling on this particular one and I will look at the other two to see when I can rule on them.

MR. COSSITT—ABSENCE OF REPLY FROM PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I have a very short question of privilege arising out of a question that I directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I realize under the rules of the House that no minister, including the Prime Minister, is obliged to answer a question. Ministers can, as the Prime Minister did, decline to answer a question and remain seated.

I would like to make this point as my question of privilege, that when the government refuses to furnish information to a member of Parliament or to Parliament in general, and when a Prime Minister arrogantly, superciliously and pompously remains seated on his rump, then it is high time we changed the rules in this House so that ministers and the Prime Minister do have to give an answer when information is requested. We have seen case after case of information being requested in this House, and the answers given are not information at all but simply the extreme example of what we saw this afternoon, namely, an arrogant man sitting on his rump and refusing to give information to the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) usually answers questions very honestly and at length. The member knows that quite well. It is not the trademark of this government to conceal facts. On the contrary, we are quite open. The percentage of answers provided, especially to questions appearing on the order paper, of which the member is an expert, is very high and there is no basis to the intervention of the hon. member.

Strictly from the procedural point of view, the hon. member is entirely right when he says that a minister is not bound to answer a question. It would also be right to say that from a procedural point of view there is no rule preventing a member from asking a stupid question and he has been a master of that more often than otherwise. I wanted to specify that there is no question of privilege, that we on this side of the House thoroughly and honestly answer questions and that the member on the other hand has acquired the unfortunate habit of asking questions which are not often very intelligent and cost a fortune to taxpayers, especially those appearing on the order paper.

Madam Speaker: I do not have to remind hon. members who are acquainted with the Standing Orders that a minister may or may not answer a question, all the more so the Prime Minister. Consequently, he assumes, I suppose, the entire responsibility for the fact that he did not answer a question put to him during oral question period. The hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) is probably not satisfied with the situation but the Chair cannot force a minister or the Prime Minister in this case to answer a question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It might be appropriate, given the fact that we are entering what I think most of us hope will be the last week of this part of this session of Parliament, that we look at the order of business which the government House leader has in mind beginning tomorrow. If he could outline that for us, it might be helpful in expediting that business.

● (1520)

Mr. Pinard: I thank the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, Madam Speaker. He had the courtesy of giving notice of his question and I am in a position to give him specific information on the order of business for the House as agreed upon, after discussion, with the House leaders at the end of last week.

First, I should like to state that tomorrow night, at 9.45, the deferred vote on Bill C-3 will be taken. It will be remembered that at the end of the debate on that bill it was agreed to postpone the vote to this week; after consultation it was agreed to proceed with it tomorrow evening at 9.45. Should there be other votes to dispose of at that time, we will be there to do so. Tomorrow, we think it will be possible to dispose of third reading of the following bills, in this order: C-5, C-26, C-4 and also, if possible, at least second reading and referral to committee of Bill C-31. That is what we are suggesting for tomorrow. I have been asked to postpone Bill C-31 till after eight o'clock tomorrow evening. Considering the order of business, I doubt that we could start the debate on Bill C-31 before that time.

With regard to the rest of the week, some bills are now being studied in committee and we hope to be able to obtain final passage of Bills S-2 and C-13. There again, those are the bills which I have had the opportunity of discussing with my colleagues. If time permits, we may also give notice of a bill to transform the Post Office Department into a Crown corporation, a bill which I am told is almost identical to that introduced by the previous government.

Later on, I shall consult my hon. colleagues and try to dispose of at least the second reading of that bill before the adjournment on Friday; it may not be possible and it is not an essential condition but I believe we could be reasonable and agree to discuss the matter after studying the bill on Thursday, or at least reach a conclusion on the matter.

Bills C-34, C-18 and S-6 will have been or could be put before the House before the end of the week, and depending on how business progresses, we could use Thursday as the eighth day allotted to the throne speech debate; Friday could perhaps be set aside to allow the parties to speak, on the motion for adjournment, on subjects of their choice.

So, to sum up, Madam Speaker, tomorrow, if possible, we shall proceed with Bills C-5, C-26, C-4 and C-31; on Wednesday, with the bills that come to us from committee, that is S-2 and C-13, if no other agreement is made on other bills; Thursday will be the eighth day on the throne speech debate, and Friday we can debate the motion for adjournment if we deem it advisable to give notice of it tomorrow or Wednesday depending on how business progresses.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question directed to and answered by the President of the Privy Council. The President of the Privy Council will recall that a week ago today, Bill C-410 was introduced, a bill to abolish the Small Loans Act. At that time the President of the Privy Council said that he would like an opportunity to study the bill.

In view of the fact there have been consultations on this and similar bills to abolish the Small Loans Act, and due to the fact that this is already before the House, is it possible, particularly in view of the fact that we can put the bill through three readings without debate—

Mr. Darling: Now.

Mr. Blenkarn: As the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka says, now. Is it possible we could get that bill through, debate it and dispose of it, certainly this week?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I note the hon. member's suggestion to transmit his remarks to the interested minister and, should the need arise, we will follow his suggestion to the letter and dispose of this bill quickly. But I cannot give him the assurance he is seeking just now.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I would be most delighted to turn over to the President of the Privy Council a letter from his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, addressed to my colleague for Parry Sound-Muskoka, indicating that it is absolutely essential and a priority of the government to dispose of the Small Loans Act. Unfortunately, as the President of the Privy Council knows, the bill has not been introduced by the government. Naturally, we could accept it if instead it were made a government bill, the bill before the House being in exactly the same form that a government bill would normally be.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order dealing with House business. I would like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. About a week or so ago I received a letter from the Minister of Finance in which he confirmed that he was going ahead—I think the words were almost immediately, in the almost immediate future or something like that—with a bill concerning the garnisheeing of public servants' wages in order to put them on an equal footing with the rest of Canadians who do not have the privilege of being protected as public servants now do. When does the President of the Privy Council anticipate that that legislation will be proceeded with?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, concerning Bill C-38 to which the hon. member is probably referring, if there is agreement to dispose of this bill without debate at all stages I have no objection whatsoever to its being approved before Friday. Quite the contrary.

THE ROYAL FAMILY

CONGRATULATIONS TO QUEEN MOTHER ON HER BIRTHDAY

On the order: Government Notices of Motions:

July 10, 1980—The Prime Minister:

That Madam Speaker send a Message to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, The Queen Mother, extending the congratulations of the House of Commons of Canada on Her completion on August 4, 1980, of Her eightieth year, expressing the gratefulness of the people of Canada for the many services Her Majesty has rendered them over the years, including Her many visits, beginning with the first in 1939 when she accompanied Her husband, His Majesty King George VI, on the first visit of a reigning monarch to this country, and wishing Her continued good health and long life.

Madam Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 21(2), this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders later today or at the next sitting of the House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 156, 188, 269, 358, 710, 807 and 1,016.

[Text]

NORAD AGREEMENT

Question No. 156—Mr. Cossitt:

Is the NORAD agreement due for renewal in May, 1980, and, if so (a) is it planned to re-draw regional defence boundaries (b) will Canada be given sovereignty over its own airspace and, if so, what steps will the government take to strengthen the air force section of the armed forces to meet such a commitment?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The current NORAD agreement was extended for one year on May 12, 1980. There is mutual agreement between the United States and Canada to "reconfigure" the boundaries of the NORAD defence regions. This will mean that future NORAD operations in Canadian airspace will be controlled from NORAD region operations control centres located in Canada.

A major step in the modernization of the Canadian Armed Forces to upgrade Canada's contribution to NORAD was taken April 10 when the government decided to purchase the CF-18A as Canada's new fighter aircraft.

Order Paper Questions

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 188—Mr. Herbert:

1. For each fiscal year (a) 1977 (b) 1978, what was the total revenue and net earnings or deficits for the Canadian Film Development Corporation?

2. For each year, what was the total (a) of direct or indirect subsidies or other benefits conferred by the government on the corporation (b) of loans, advances or guarantees extended by the government to the corporation (c) investment by the government in the corporation both before and after any write-off?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows:

	Revenue	Net Cost of Operations
1. (a) 1977:	$632,399	$3,787,745
(b) 1978:	$605,118	$2,624,755

2. (a) 1977: $3,537,046 (parliamentary votes)
1978: $3,343,000 (parliamentary votes)
(b) and (c): None.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—TRANSFER TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Question No. 269—Mr. Herbert:

1. What is the estimated total cost of the move of the Department of Veterans Affairs to Prince Edward Island?

2. Does the sum include any amount for additional communications expenditures or for any additional costs resulting from decreased operating efficiency?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. The total approved funding for the relocation of Veterans Affairs is 23.6 million. This does not include costs for building and land which are under negotiation and may not be borne by the federal government.

2. The Veterans Affairs portfolio does not anticipate a decrease in operating efficiency as a result of its relocation. The amount cited in part 1 does not include any operating expenditures, which will continue to be forecast and accounted for in the normal way.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—PERSONS IN THE SX CLASSIFICATION

Question No. 358—Mr. Herbert:

1. As of March 31, 1979 (a) how many persons in the SX classification were employed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion (b) how many were (i) francophones (ii) females?

2. What are the present totals?

3. Was there a structural change in the Department since March 31, 1979 and, if so, what effect did such a change have on the number of SXs employed?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows:

1. As of March 31, 1979
(a) 40
(b) (i) 10
(ii) 2.

2. As of March 31, 1980
(a) 35
(b) (i) 8
(ii) 2.

3. No.

JACQUES CARTIER AND CHAMPLAIN BRIDGES INCORPORATED

Question No. 710—Mr. Clarke:

1. With reference to accompanying note 1 of the financial statement of the Jacques Cartier and Champlain Bridges Incorporated detailed at page 120, Volume III of the 1978-79 Public Accounts of Canada, when the corporation was created, was one of its objectives that it should become self-sufficient?

2. Are there plans at present to place the corporation on a self-sustaining basis and, if so, what are they?

3. Are there changes in corporate structure or operating methods required in order to put the corporation on a self-sustaining basis and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Jacques Cartier and Champlain Bridges, Incorporated, a subsidiary of The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, advises as follows: 1. Yes.

2. The corporation was formed on November 3, 1978, and is striving to bring the structures up to an acceptable level of maintenance. This has involved abnormal expenditures. It is the intention of the corporation to take the steps necessary to become self-supporting after maintenance costs are stabilized.

3. No.

OTTAWA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—REPAIRS TO OVERPASS

Question No. 807—Mr. Clarke:

1. Has the Department of Transport determined if the deterioration of the surface of the overpass over the airport access road, at the Ottawa International Airport, reflects any serious damage to the carrying capacity of the overpass?

2. Has the department any plans to repair the surface damage and, if so, what is the estimated cost and on what date are the repairs to be carried out?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. It has been determined that the deterioration of the surface of the overpass over the airport access road at Ottawa airport does not reflect damage to the carrying capacity of the overpass.

2. The department has no plans to repair the surface damage.

CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT

Question No. 1,016—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Has the government entered into an advertising campaign announcing the agreement with McDonell Douglas to purchase the CF-18 fighter aircraft and, if so, in what media and at what cost?

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: Soon after the new fighter aircraft contract was signed, the government sponsored a series of advertisements in daily and weekly newspapers in Canada. The advertisements were intended to inform Canadians on the suitability of the McDonnell Douglas CF-18 in meeting Canada's defence needs and the breadth of the CF-18 industrial benefits program and to encourage Canadian companies to take advantage of the new business opportunities the program offers. The advertisements provided the telephone number of the appropriate Government of Canada Business Information Centre from which additional information could be obtained on the benefits program.

This advertising campaign has been completed. The cost of the advertisements was $259,000 to be shared by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and National Defence.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if questions No. 929 and 1,037 could be made orders for returns, these returns would be tabled immediately. I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that questions No. 929 and 1,037 be deemed to have been made orders for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

TRANSPORT—NUMBER OF AIRPORTS EQUIPPED WITH RADAR

Question No. 929—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. What airports under the management of the Department of Transport are equipped with radar?

2. What was the pattern of traffic over the past four years at the airports by (a) all types of aircraft (b) commercial (c) non-commercial users (d) jet and turbo propelled aircraft (e) piston-powered aircraft?

3. What airports under the management of the department, with traffic exceeding 100,000 take-offs and landings per year are not equipped with radar aids?

Return tabled.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Question No. 1,037—Miss MacDonald:

1. How many women were employed by the Department of External Affairs as a (a) foreign service officer (b) secretary (c) clerk for the year (i) 1975 (ii) 1976 (iii) 1977 (iv) 1978 (v) 1979?

2. For the same years, in the department, what was the ratio of women to men in each of the foreign service officer categories?

3. For the same years, how many women foreign service officers left the department?

4. For the same years, how many Francophones were employed by the department as a (a) foreign service officer (b) secretary (c) clerk?

5. For the same years, what was the ratio of Francophones to non-Francophones in the department in each of the foreign service officer categories?

6. For the same years, how many Francophone foreign service officers left the department?

7. What is the ratio of "secretary" to "foreign service officer" in each bureau of the department?

8. What is the ratio of "secretary" to "foreign service officer" in the department in the office of the (a) under-secretary (b) associate under-secretary (c) deputy under-secretary (d) assistant under-secretary (e) special advisers?

Return tabled.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE TO DEVELOP AND IMPLEMENT COHERENT ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT POLICY

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre) moved:

That this House condemns the government for its failure to develop and implement a coherent economic development policy.

He said: Madam Speaker, we have chosen to utilize this, perhaps the last opposition day before the summer recess, to debate the subject of economic development policy or, more particularly, the failure of this government to develop a coherent economic development policy. We intend to show during the course of today's debate that not only does the government not have a coherent or a consistent economic development policy, but this failure has had and continues to have very serious and detrimental consequences for the nation, not only in an economic sense but in a constitutional sense as well.

• (1530)

Last week the prestigious OECD released its economic projections for the coming year showing that Canada will witness its worst economic performance since 1954. When we consider that we enter the coming year with unemployment rates which are already outrageously high, the OECD paints a black picture indeed. At times like these we should be grateful to organizations such as the OECD because they do at least present us with an economic prediction for Canada—something the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has been unwilling to do.

Some solace can be gained—and I am sure this will not escape the government—by noting that all the OECD nations, especially the big seven, face a slowdown in the coming year. It must also be noted, however, that this slowdown is primarily due to the recent increases in crude oil prices on the part of OPEC, increases which Canada has yet to absorb. Perhaps the most distressing aspect of the OECD prediction is that next year, on a per capita basis, Canada will have far and away the largest current account deficit of any of the big seven nations despite the fact that we are the only one of those nations to be a net exporter of energy. In other words, all the other nations import high percentages of expensive energy whereas Canada is a net exporter of energy. Notwithstanding this advantage, Canada's current account deficit with the rest of the world will be the largest of any of those nations. Somehow or other, those other countries have been able to absorb the increase in energy prices and do a better job of maintaining their payments accounts and their competitiveness vis-à-vis the rest of the world.

One might well ask: How is it that these nations are doing a so much better job than Canada given the advantages we possess? One reason, and maybe the principal reason, is that every other nation seems to have a plan, a sense of direction, a development policy, an economic policy or an industrial strategy—some goal against which it defines its own decisions and against which its businesses, corporations and unions can define their decisions and assess their progress. I defy anybody to examine the decisions made by the Liberal government over the last decade and describe the economic development goals or the industrial strategy of this country. I defy anyone to consider its record or its statements or its decisions and deduce from them what our industrial strategy or economic development policy has been as a nation.

For example, some years ago the government indicated that it was in favour of a better balance between the various regions of the country. They wanted all Canadians from coast to coast to be in a position to participate more equitably in the development of the country. As evidence of this desire, they created a new department dedicated to such a goal.

Since then, though, despite the existence of that department and the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars, regional differences in this country are more acute. In 1971 the Liberal government expressed a belief that science and technology were important to Canada and that it was necessary to increase our efforts in this area. As proof of their dedication to this proposition, they created a Ministry of Science and Technology. Since then, Mr. Speaker, the research and development done by Canada as a percentage of the gross national product has decreased from a dismal 1.4 per cent of the GNP to a disastrous .8 per cent of the GNP.

In 1973, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) signed a contractual link with the European Common Market. He was dedicated, he said, to reducing our dependence upon the United States and in consequence he intended to increase our trade with Europe. Since then, trade with Europe as a percentage of our total trade has actually decreased while our dependence upon the United States has increased.

In the course of the last decade during which the Liberal bunch opposite has been managing or mismanaging the economy, Canada alone among the OECD big seven has been going through a process of deindustrialization. When we started, our whole reason as a country was based upon the land. That is how the Canadians who came here originally from Europe earned their living. They were engaged in agriculture, the fur trade, fishing, lumbering and, more recently, in mineral development.

In the course of time, particularly after the second world war, that reliance upon the land was reduced; we became increasingly an industrialized country. We joined the industrialized world with manufacturing and high technology industries, industries which utilized the skills and talents of the people instead of just exploiting natural resources.

That is the history of Canada, as it is the history of every developed country today; countries followed the pattern of development from total reliance on the land to increasing reliance on the skills of its people.

Since 1970, the trend in Canada has been exactly the opposite, so that today we have reached what is almost a position of crisis. In 1970, as for years and years before that date, Canada's trade imbalance in the area of high technology and manufactured goods was of the order of $1 billion, an amount which was more than covered by our trade surplus in agriculture. Since 1970, since the Trudeau Liberals assumed power or shortly thereafter, there has been a continuous straight-line deterioration in our position until today we have a trade imbalance on manufactured goods, the goods which produce the jobs, amounting to $17 billion. In other words, we have gone through a process of deindustrialization, the only western nation to have done so.

Why did that happen? Did the government follow a deliberate policy of deindustrialization? Was the government deliberately following a "back to the land" policy under which we would give up our factories and our manufacturing operations and live off the land again as we used to do? "The Land is Strong" was, we remember, the slogan of a past election campaign. Maybe this was what it was all about.

That is not what they said, of course; their policy was quite different. I have a big file of press releases and statements by various ministers, and what they said in 1971 was that they were dedicated to science and technology and to increasing the amount of research and development done in Canada. As proof of their commitment they created a new department; they were dedicated to eliminating regional disparity and as proof they created a new department. They were dedicated to increasing our trade with the rest of the world and to decreasing our dependence upon the United States. As proof they signed a contractual link with Europe.

An hon. Member: They were dedicated to getting re-elected.

Mr. Andre: They were dedicated to industrial development and, as proof, they were working on an industrial strategy.

Mr. Speaker, in every case exactly the opposite happened. In fact, looking at the evidence, the best way to determine the direction in which the government is taking Canada is to observe what the Prime Minister and his ministers tell us and then conclude that the opposite will take place. In that way a far more accurate picture of where the government is taking the country emerges than if one listens to what they say. They say that research and development must be increased. Exactly the opposite happens. They say that trade with Europe will increase. Precisely the opposite happens. They say that regional disparities are to be eliminated. Exactly the opposite will happen.

The government says it will develop an industrial strategy to make industry the backbone of this country; exactly the opposite will happen.

Looking at the record, one could be forgiven for concluding that the Liberal government is plainly dishonest. However, according to recent evidence, it is not a matter of dishonesty but, rather, a matter of incompetence. It is not that the ministers of the Trudeau government, and there have been many over the years, were dishonest about where they wanted the country to go but, rather, that the Prime Minister and his ministers lacked the competence to take us there.

Many of us have long suspected that that was the case, but a book has been published within the last month which verifies this view and this position. The book to which I am referring is entitled "How Ottawa Decides—Planning and Industrial Policy-making, 1968 to 1980". It conveniently covers the years of the Trudeau administration. It is written by a gentleman who is now a professor at McGill University but who had been for a number of years a highly placed member of the Prime Minister's personal department, the Privy Council office. The author describes how the Prime Minister, his cabinet and his government set about to plan the new nirvana or the Utopia Canada was to become upon the succession to power of this great new guru who currently leads us.

Mr. French describes the sophisticated, highly technical and modern decision-making processes put in place by this Prime Minister when he assumed office. He said to the Liberal party at a Harrison Hot Springs conference in, I believe, 1970 that we no longer had to be just chips of wood on a stream and going to wherever the universe takes us, but that we have control over our own future, that our own view of the future dictates what the future will be and that through these sophisticated planning techniques we would get there. They were sophisticated. There was a cabinet committee system, a Treasury Board system, an expenditure budget process and a finance planning system. They were marvellous systems, but they turned out to be an absolute and total disaster, according to Mr. French, an experienced officer who participated in the process and who now writes as an academic and not as a partisan of any political party.

In particular, Mr. French explains how an industrial strategy for Canada was a specific victim of this chaos which passed for planning in the Trudeau government and how instead of a coherent industrial strategy and a proper economic development policy we ended up with ad hockery and political opportunism, with the industrial strategy as its chief victim. Instead of coherent policy we have had ad hockery of the worst kind. Decisions have been taken or not taken based on short-term political exigencies, the influence of particular ministers, the imminence of an election or byelection or just plain lethargy. One has to wonder how different Canada's constitutional debate might be if, instead of this dismal failure of the federal Trudeau Liberal government with economic policy and industrial strategy, it had developed and stuck to a coherent policy.

The basic argument for a strong central government is that the federal government must have control over the main economic levers in order to manage the economy for the common good. The federal government states—and no one disputes it—that to be a country we must have, at the very least, a common market. There must be a fair and equitable distribution of the nation's wealth. There must be a coincidence of goals. We must have a coherence and a consistency toward common objectives; we must approach, react to or deal with the rest of the world as one strong entity and not be a loose coalition of ten smaller entities.

No one disputes as being a desirable goal that view of a strong central government. However, when we look at the record of the last ten years, we inescapably reach the conclusion that this Liberal government knows not or at least cannot deliver a coherent national economic development policy, and therefore there is great reluctance to extend to it more power than it already has.

I know the Prime Minister and his apologists have a great deal of difficulty understanding people who say they want a strong and united Canada but do not support his position on more economic power for the federal government. If the Prime Minister wants an explanation for that, he need look no further than at his own performance and the performance of his government. The reality is that for ten years people in this country have been looking to this government and asking what are our national goals, what is our industrial strategy and what is our economic development policy. Do we have a coherent set of goals? None is available, as I have pointed out. In fact, the performance of the government and the economy has been in the opposite direction to that which the government indicated as the desirable goal.

Citizens observe this, and as constitutional questions come up and as they ask to whom they want more power to accrue—to the federal government, which has had this ten years of chaos, ad hockery and failure, or to provincial governments, which know and understand people a little better and under which there have not been ten years of ad hockery, chaos and failure—naturally there is tendency to suggest that perhaps we should give the provincial governments a chance, because obviously the federal government has failed dismally. If we want to find the reason for this apparent paradox wherein people are saying they believe in a strong, united Canada but that they want more provincial power, we really do not have to look any further than that, and I wonder how different the debate on constitutional questions might be today if, instead of this kind of failure in economic policy and industrial strategy, we had had a record of consistency, aggressiveness, fairness and so forth from this government and there had been a strategy which had been adhered to by the government.

I know the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde)—because he has said so publicly—and the Prime Minister cannot quite comprehend how it is that some of the Atlantic premiers are supporting the positions of the premiers of resource-rich provinces like Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Prime Minister say that they do not understand. What they want to do is get hold of resource revenue so that they can distribute it more equitably across the country, and they wonder how the premiers of those at the receiving end of equalization, the Atlantic provinces, can object to that.

They do not understand how they can take that position, but it is very simple. Perhaps it is difficult for the government because it involves a degree of mea culpa on the part of the federal government. It involves admitting failures. But the reality is that the Atlantic region has had the experience of dealing with this federal government for ten or 12 years. It has had the experience of seeing the Department of Regional Economic Expansion apparently trying to balance the economic development of this country and seeing the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce trying to do just the opposite. They balance out. It is very interesting. I see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) is here; he will be speaking later today. He should do the arithmetic some day. I did, and I found that the contributions of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to central Canada just about balance out the contributions of DREE to eastern Canada. So that in fact if you average out the two departments across the country, you get about the same thing and we have no regional economic development policy at all. If in fact there had been some consistency and some coherence on the part of the government with regard to economic development or industrial strategy, you would see quite a different attitude on the part of the premiers than you see today.

Ad hockery has caused an incredible amount of inconsistency. I defy anybody in this country to define what our trade policy is. Perhaps the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will provide some elucidation in his speech, but I am certainly unable to determine what our trade policy as a nation is.

As I indicated earlier, the Prime Minister signed a contractual link with Europe which was supposed to decrease our dependence on the United States by increasing our trade with Europe. But our trade with Europe has gone down. It is a mystery to me and I defy anybody else in the country to clarify it. I would welcome clarification on whether we believe in free trade or protectionism in this country, because you can find examples on both sides of that question.

The only thing we have had from this government since the election is the announcement that we are going to get a new Crown corporation. Is that not marvellous! But that is their response to every policy issue affecting the nation. If you have a problem and do not have the answer, create a Crown corporation. That is great. We go out and hire some people, presumably. I do not know where they are. If they know some people who will man this Crown corporation which will cure all our trade problems, why do they not hire them today? Why do they not bring them into government today and pick their brains now? What magic happens to somebody when you bestow on them the title of Crown corporation? How will they suddenly become geniuses and cure our trade problems whereas they are unable to do anything now? Perhaps there is some retired cabinet minister who needs a chairmanship somewhere, so we create a new Crown corporation to put him into it.

I defy anybody to tell me or the country what this government's policy is toward foreign ownership and foreign investment. Sure, they set up the Foreign Investment Review Agency. So far as I know, all it does is to make a lot of lawyers rich. If it has had an impact on Canadian ownership in this country, it escapes me. It certainly has had an impact on the legal profession because if you want to deal, you have to come to Ottawa with a $200-a-day lawyer and appear before the blooming board and fill out all the papers. So it is wonderful for that industry. But what effect has it had on foreign ownership?

The approach of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is also surprising. Almost in the same breath he rises and condemns the multinational resource companies in this country. He says they are awful, terrible citizens. Then he gives $200 million to Chrysler and says he will bring Toyota to Canada. Perhaps this afternoon he will stand up and give us his definition of a good multinational and a bad multinational. I hope he will go beyond the explanation that a good multinational is one which operates in Windsor and a bad one is one which operates somewhere else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: It really is mind-boggling to me, a westerner. My constituents ask, how come that almost in the same day, in parts of the same newspaper, we see the statement: "Doggone it, we are going to force these multinationals and oil companies to become 50 per cent Canadian within a couple of years, or else", and then we see: "We have just given $200 million to Chrysler and $50 million to Michelin." What is the big difference?

Does this government have a coherent policy with regard to foreign ownership? Does it have in its tax system measures to encourage Canadians and give Canadians an incentive to invest in this country? For literally generations the tax system in this country was such that a Canadian could not invest in the Canadian oil business on the same tax basis as an American. In other words, Americans had an advantage over Canadians when investing in the oil business in Canada. For decades delegations came from the west to protest this. Literally, this was the response of one of the ministers of finance in the late 1950s, before 1957: "We do not care who owns the industry so long as we can tax it". Finally, that tax provision was changed, but only temporarily because on January 1, 1981, it lapses and we go back to the old system, unless changes are made, where an American can invest in Canada in the oil business with a tax advantage over a Canadian. If you were dedicated to the principle of Canadian ownership of the industry, Mr. Speaker, you would not tolerate that kind of uncertainty and absurdity.

How about the energy policy of this government? Energy should be an absolute key to economic development and investor policy. I have yet to read the writings of any expert, any think tank or economist who has not reached the conclusion that in the future that industry will come to those who have energy. That will be the key to industrial development in the future. We as a nation, unique among the Big Seven, the OECD nations, unique among the western world, have the opportunity to be energy self-sufficient, to have energy where some of our competitors might not have that option. In spite of that, what does this government do? Are they for self-sufficiency or are they not? Who can tell? It depends on what speech you read and at what time of the year you read it. One says yes, the other says no, and another one yet says maybe.

Even when they say yes—I think that is the recent signal—they do nothing to substantiate that apparent objective. If there were a coherent economic development policy and an industrial strategy in this country and it were based on going back to the land—that is, a coherent industrial strategy, if that is what they choose to have, to go back to the land and abandon the goals of industrial development, manufacturing, and high technology development—then let them state that, put it before the people of Canada and see if they want it. If it is not, if their policy really is what they say it is—that is, to develop industrially, to develop our manufacturing industry, to expand our trade with the rest of the world, to increase the job prospect of Canadians and to decrease regional disparities—then clearly an absolutely fundamental key to that is energy self-sufficiency.

This government could do nothing better for this country than to adopt immediately the policy of the Clark government: first, self-sufficiency; second, help for those Canadians who are least able to adjust to changes which will be necessary, and to provide for relief for those more adversely affected; and third, make sure that the benefits of the economic activity which will be generated from this pursuit of self-sufficiency are spread equitably across the country.

Mr. Paproski: I hope that Bud Olson is listening.

Mr. Andre: Science and technology is an absolute key to the future growth of this country. I once heard an excellent speech made by an economist who said that the key to the future of any country in this world is like a three-legged stool, which is the foundation, consisting of food, energy, and science and technology. Without one of those legs, the stool topples and the country does not make it. We have done absolutely nothing in terms of science and technology—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time of 30 minutes has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Andre: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I assumed I had 40 minutes; otherwise I would have concluded my remarks. However, I will not prevail upon the House other than to add at this point that during the day we will elaborate on this issue. My colleagues, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist), the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) and the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek), we hope, will all have an opportunity to elaborate on some of the points I raised. We hope that, at the end of the day, the government will have a better understanding of where they should be going in this area.

• (1600)

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in addressing the motion before us today, one is immediately struck by the obvious conflict between employment-related political goals and a Canadian taxation structure, particularly in the corporate sector, which appears almost designed to provide incentives to those sectors of our economy least likely to create employment.

For example, for some years now the greatest write-offs and tax incentives have been provided to the capital-intensive oil and gas industry, an industry which perhaps provides the least jobs per investment dollar in Canada. Also it is the industry with the highest level of foreign control in this country, at least until very, very recently. This process continues on down the line with the next lowest taxation level to major resource industries. It continues until we finally come to the area of secondary manufacturing and the retail industry, the areas providing the highest number of jobs per dollar of investment and the highest degree of Canadian control and local ownership. They have the worst treatment under our tax structure. This is the sector where the highest level of taxation is paid.

Why? Surely two of the prime goals of any government, even this government and the previous government, must be to provide the greatest number of jobs for the least dollars and to encourage domestic control of our economy. I think all parties would agree with those over-all objectives, but the opposite is happening and it must be turned around. Not only must the emphasis, the weighting and direction of our taxation policies and strategies be changed to further the objectives of job creation and Canadian ownership, but our taxation structure itself must be altered in order that government taxation spending be seen and not hidden from public view; that visible grants replace hidden tax expenditures such as accelerated allowances and other invisible write-offs and incentives; that the recipients of these grants are then made financially accountable for such incentive grants as are proffered.

In other words, the government and the public should be in a clear position to demand performance and results for public moneys expended. I do not think that is a very revolutionary idea. I am sure other hon. members will agree that demanding value or performance in exchange for payment is hardly a revolutionary concept, but the federal government does not do it.

In spite of gutsy statements in the Speech from the Throne and welcomed ones by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) regarding performance reviews by FIRA, etc., that concept of value for payment is still foreign to our entire corporate taxation system. For us not to deal with the obvious imbecility, inequity and impotence of our current system is the height of public irresponsibility. The refusal of this government and the previous one to demand accountability and performance for taxpayers' dollars leads us to believe that in spite of their claims that they are non-ideological—I believe the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) was on television this morning to that effect—I think they are really Tories at heart. In so far as guiding or directing our economy toward public goals is concerned, their slogan seems to be: "Praise the Lord and pass no ammunition at all". That may be all right in some circles, but certainly it does not do much when one is trying to deal with the very real problems facing Canadians.

Perhaps I am being too harsh in my judgment. The Liberal party, in its alternate on-years or on-periods, at least adopts the slogans and embarks ever so hesitantly on some positive courses of economic action. For instance, unlike the Tories at least they understood, even though under pressure, that a publicly-owned and publicly-directed instrument such as Petro-Canada was necessary if we were to achieve a national energy policy accountable to the needs of Canada.

Through its plans to dismantle, privatize, BCRIC or what have you Petro-Canada, the Tories would have continued to place our future completely in the hands of the oil multinationals. They would have continued to play poker with all their cards face up, with our future and our livelihoods at stake. Of course, the problem is that the big boys do not play the game that way, and traditionally Canadians have always lost the game as a result.

Now the Liberals have Petro-Canada—we all have Petro-Canada—but the government does not have the will to let it do the job. So now we play poker with some cards face up and some cards down, and we still lose. Is it any wonder? The Liberals say that they do not have the money and that the debt is too big. Some hon. members opposite made this point just the other day, that there are problems with the federal government's account, the deficit has grown already to $14 billion and we do not have the bucks to get on with the job. They still refuse to recognize the very vital difference between public spending and public investment. If a government is to enter the marketplace on behalf of the public interest, then it must be prepared to play the game the way it is played by the big boys or our shareholders, the people of Canada, will lose.

Let me refer for a few moments to what happened in this regard in the forest industry in the province of British Columbia under a New Democratic Party government between the summer of 1972 and the end of 1975. The period I want to refer to really starts late in 1973 up until December of 1975. With a direct public investment of only some $20 million in the British Columbia forest industry, within only about two years the government of British Columbia gained for the people of that province several hundreds of millions of dollars in assets and several hundreds of millions of dollars in profits. It gained direct influence and invaluable experience in the most important and vital industry of British Columbia, all for about 20 million bucks. We easily sneeze that much away every day around here.

Very simply, once there is guaranteed access to and the use of a major resource at low cost, the corporation borrows on the strength of that asset. In British Columbia it used to be one cent per acre for what was called a tree farm licence. The corporation borrowed on the strength of that asset which it received from the public. It was a public asset, only one cent per acre then. Using the capital it borrowed on our assets and using the expertise the corporation hired, it went on to develop and expand its base thereby gaining equity and revenue. It served the public need and the public interest of that province. The government hardly needs to dip into its own resources at all.

The giants of the private sector do not. They have not done so for some years. One would not know it when one hears some Liberals and most Tories. I am sure it was true in the dark recesses of the past that, once upon a time when a company required capital, whether it was a public company or private company, but especially in the private sector, it went to the market, issued shares and gained its revenue in the somewhat democratic process of an open marketplace in order to get its investment capital.

Perhaps that is the way the game used to be played, but for years now, in the major segments of the corporate sector, the greatest amount of investment capital for expansion is generated from revenue. With the growth of giant corporations, particularly monopoly enterprises, and the kinds of procedures which are adopted in that area of our economy, the private sector has had for years what amounts to taxation without representation. Those revenues in no way perform the same role as internal corporate revenues played once upon a time many years ago.

This example of what happened in British Columbia is exactly what the corporate sector has done for the benefit of its shareholders, who are often foreign shareholders, for decades. We believe it is time the Government of Canada became as loyal in serving the interests of its shareholders, the people of Canada, as these other managers have always been. It is about time we stopped playing poker with all our cards or some of our cards face up. It is time we stopped going into the ring with one arm tied behind our back. Those are the rules of the economic game, and there is no reason on God's green earth why we should handicap ourselves, as representatives of the public interest, in dealing with the major segments and interests which currently dominate our economy.

It is not only in the area of taxation where we have had problems. It is not only the unwillingness of the government to become directly involved in particular strategic areas. Reference was made earlier in the session to grants, to the extent of $140 million made by both the Ontario government and the federal government, to major integrated companies in the pulp and paper sector in the province of Ontario. According to the stories the DREE grants issued by both the federal government and the Ontario provincial government would eliminate 600 to 800 jobs.

A couple of weeks ago I asked some questions in committee of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) who is responsible for forestry. I asked whether he did not feel the $40 million to $50 million expended by the federal government on those DREE grants to integrated companies, which are perhaps in the healthiest state of any corporations in the whole forestry sector in Canada today, would more properly have been expended in order to expand the role of the Canadian forest service and begin to do what all parties have been advocating for at least the last two years—a major program of reforestation and extensive silviculture in this country's forest industry, which is one of the major national dollar earners.

I asked the minister whether it would not have been better in accord with our national priorities if that investment were made in restocking our forest lands rather than have the federal treasury hand out between $40 million and $50 million, not to mention the $100 million from the government of Ontario, to those companies when they ought to have been helping themselves over the last several decades in any case. The amount concerned was almost exactly the same total amount as was allocated in the current budget for the entire Canadian forest service. Everyone admits that this service has been falling further behind in its ability to deal with the legitimate demands of that industry, in which the basic stock at least has belonged to the people of Canada for the last several years. As a matter of fact, almost since the election of the first Trudeau government the amount going into research in that industry has been declining annually. We have had brave words recently but little else.

The minister replied in that committee meeting, which was about two or three weeks ago, that did I not think it was a public responsibility and did I not think that it was the government's responsibility to ensure that our pulp and paper industry remained productive? I suppose that is all right, but is it not also part of that industry's responsibility? What is the record of that industry in looking after its own situation and keeping its own house in order? If we look at the remarks which were made by an official of the Ontario government as they are reported in The Globe and Mail of April 21, 1980, with regard to the attitude of these companies which were given $140 million in public funds, about $50 million in federal funds and the balance in provincial funds from the province of Ontario, we find he said:

> When things are good, we'll go like a son of a bitch and make good profits, and when they are bad we'll tough it out.

That is the kind of foresight shown by the private sector and we have rewarded them by giving them some $140 million.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said with regard to FIRA that he would like to see some guarantees of performance. That is a laudable objective. However, here we are rewarding this kind of performance in the forest industry, and surely that is incentive for initiative in reverse. We have the whole thing backwards. We are providing incentives to companies which have done an absolutely miserable job in looking after their own interests and our national interests. At what point do we say that enough is enough and look for another way? If the carrot does not work, then we must find another way, whether it be by direct intervention, returnable grants, demanding performance before the money is expended or whatever. Possibly, and God forbid, we could consider the alternative of doing it ourselves. Another alternative would be a mix with some equity from the guardians of the public trust to ensure that we get the performance to which our dollars are entitled.

This whole situation is almost unfathomable to me but, of course, I am only somebody who used to work in the industry. Maybe I do not understand the weird and wonderful world of finance, but it seems to me that, considering we have had governments over a long period of time with whatever education and background they have had, we would be hard pressed to see this country fall more and more into the hands of people and corporations outside our own control than we have allowed to happen over the past several years.

Certainly our basic plant facilities in the pulp and paper sector in eastern Canada are very bad. We have allowed the stock in our forest industry right across the country simply to go to heck. It is just not there. We require tremendous amounts of investment, from both the public sector and the private sector, to ensure that we will have enough of what should be a renewable resource remaining so that we can at least maintain the level of employment found in that industry today. But so far all we have had are words.

With the couple of minutes that I have remaining, I would like to comment on one other area which I know is dear to the heart of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, namely FIRA. That institution, combined with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, contraction or whatever, has committed such unholy blunders, and I am only referring to the ones of which I am aware have occurred in my own constituency. I refer particularly to relatively small companies. I am thinking of a small company which does not make big headlines, a company which was once called F. R. Rotter Lumber Co. Ltd., which then became Salmo Forest Products Limited, then Idaho Forest Industries, and now is Louisiana-Pacific Canada Limited, which is part of the Georgia Pacific Corporation. And the story goes on and on. We found that hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars were being put into that operation in the form of DREE grants. The business was then sold to Idaho Forest Industries. FIRA approved the application, and instead of now having a planer mill operating on two shifts and a sawmill operating on two shifts, it is down to a sawmill operating on one shift.

It is not for lack of a timber resource. They are shipping raw logs across the border, largely pulp logs, and now they have been faced with intermittent lay-offs in the last couple of months. Apparently all they are going to be doing is chipping logs and sending them across the line to feed the Georgia Pacific empire. Maybe it is too late for the minister to get performance guarantees from that company. I do not know if anything can be done now but that is a typical example, Mr. Speaker.

Let me point out one other thing that happened at Salmo, Mr. Speaker. Lousiana Pacific made two applications. The first was rejected because FIRA said there was no tangible benefit to Canada. The owners at that time, Idaho Forest Industries, laid off one of the two shifts that were left in the sawmill. They had already laid off the planers. The company came back to FIRA claiming that Lousiana Pacific said that if they got FIRA approval there would be a tangible benefit to Canada because they would hire the workers back. So FIRA approved the application, Mr. Speaker. That is the kind of game they play—so shallow that children in kindergarten could see through it.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I very much welcome the opportunity this motion gives me to inform the House of some of the efforts and achievements of the new Liberal government in developing Canada's economic potential and specifically in fulfilling the commitment the government made in the Speech from the Throne to develop economic policies that will provide jobs, spur growth, improve regional balance and promote Canadian ownership of the economy.

Within the short space of four months this new Liberal government has demonstrated to the Canadian people both a strong willingness and an ability to act on the problems and opportunities that current economic conditions have confronted us with in all regions of the country. Individual industrial development opportunities have received top priority from the government, which has acted to ensure that the exploitation of those opportunities will result in maximum benefits for Canadians.

Just one example of these positive initiatives is the industrial offsets program. It is a central feature of the new fighter aircraft package and will bring enhanced economic activity as well as a large measure of specific industrial development, worth over $3 billion, to the country as a whole and in every one of our regions. This is a program which can create as many as 24,000 direct and indirect new jobs all across Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in the coming years that program of the federal government will have substantial impact on Canadian technology. The purchase of the new fighter aircraft for the Canadian armed forces was indeed calculated to offer our leading industries such as electronics and aeronautics close to 60 per cent of the over-all economic spin-offs valued at $3 billion. As a result it will foster our advanced technology and allow it to meet foreign competition more effectively in the eighties.

[English]

Another example is this federal government's move to guarantee $200 million in loans by private sector financial institutions to Chrysler Canada Limited beginning in 1982. As a result, we have obtained a commitment from Chrysler that it will invest approximately $1 billion in this country over the next five years in addition to commitments on jobs, production, sourcing of parts and other important matters, all of which will be very beneficial to Canada as the restructuring of this major motor vehicle manufacturer is under way to meet the requirements of the 1980s and beyond.

Our agreement with Chrysler has helped preserve or eventually to restore some 40,000 jobs directly, 14,000 and more at Chrysler itself, 16,000 employed by dealers all across Canada, 10,000 jobs in supplier firms in all parts of Canada and, as well, at least three or four times as many indirect jobs—100,000 and more.

That is not something the Conservatives want to see. They continue to criticize and to indicate that this should not be done. The Conservatives are saying to the Chrysler dealers and their employees—16,000 of them all across Canada in each and every corner of this country—that they want to see them out of work. The Conservatives say they want those—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: —small Canadian businesses to close down. They are saying they want the employees and the 2,200 suppliers—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: —selling $500 million worth of goods to Chrysler—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Gray: No amount of hooting and hollering now will take away the reality that the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) has put on the record.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek) seeking the floor on a point of order?

Mr. Jelinek: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The minister is making accusations that he should either withdraw or back up.

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The House could not hear what went on before. I asked for order in the House and I still do. I hope hon. members will be courteous enough to allow the minister to address the House.

An hon. Member: Listen and learn over there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, what I have said is implicit in the words of the hon. member for Calgary Centre and the words of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) in this House.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I feel that this point has gone too far. The minister has already said that it is implicit in something. I want him to tell the truth to the House and not go on lying to the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is very difficult for the Chair to rule on any question of order. We cannot hear from here if there is shouting from across the House like this. I would ask the House to please give the hon. minister a chance to be heard and the Chair will know if there is order or not.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, if the opposition cannot stand the heat they had better get out of the kitchen.

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Andre: That is the first time we have ever heard that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is the hon. parliamentary secretary seeking the floor on a point of order?

Mr. Harquail: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. minister was interrupted on two occasions by two members of the opposition when he was addressing the House. The last speaker used the word "lying" and imputed that the minister was lying. That was very clear and I am sure it will be shown in Hansard. I should like you to invite the hon. member to take the opportunity to withdraw that now, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Right on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Once again I must repeat that I did not hear the word "lie". I thought that what I heard was his asking the member who had the floor to tell the truth. There is a difference between a lie and asking someone to tell the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): From what I heard, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) was asking the member who was addressing the House to tell the truth, and that is all I heard.

An hon. Member: That is the last time you will get away with that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Order, please. Is the hon. parliamentary secretary seeking the floor on the point of order?

[Translation]

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I do not think hon. members can be allowed to continue to use unparliamentary language, and I distinctly heard the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) ask the minister not to go on lying to the House.

[English]

The hon. member asked the minister—and he seems to say that he said it—to stop lying to this House. I think that is unparliamentary and should be withdrawn immediately.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The point is taken and Hansard will have recorded what was said. I repeat what I said before—I did not hear what went on. I thought I had heard the hon. member asking the minister to speak the truth. If there was any implication that he said that the minister had lied, it will be registered in Hansard and the question of privilege can be reserved for a later time.

Is the hon. parliamentary secretary rising on the same point of order? Nothing has been heard; it will be heard at a later time after consulting Hansard.

Mr. Harquail: I rise on another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. parliamentary secretary on a second point of order.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that you have told the House you did not hear it, the hon. member himself has nodded and agreed that he said it. A number of members have said that he said it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

An hon. Member: That is the same point of order.

An hon. Member: Respect the Chair.

• (1630)

Mr. Gray: I am glad there is such agreement on both sides of the House that the truth is important here. I will continue, as in the past, to respect that agreement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Bend it a little.

An hon. Member: Listen and learn.

Mr. Gray: Our program for Chrysler is enabling the restructuring of what is Canada's seventh largest corporation of any kind in ways that will help it to operate, in areas such as purchasing of parts and research and development, that are much closer to Canada's industrial goals than may be the case at present.

We have also begun implementing a national program for the electronics industry, including a special electronics fund aimed at fostering expansion in our country of the already highly successful electronics industry. We are implementing a new national employment strategy aimed at bringing about realization of our people's legitimate aspirations for higher skilled employment and meeting the changing manpower requirements of the high growth sectors in the economy. These are also examples of the Liberal government's commitment to working energetically, to bringing the benefits of growth, increased international competitiveness, job creation and enhanced economic well-being to Canadians generally.

They also provide a solid demonstration to the Canadian people today that, unlike the Conservative government which preceded us, this government has adopted an approach to national economic development which is activist. In other words, we are not operating as a passive bystander in the industrial development of Canada but rather as an active player.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is the first time I have risen, but I would have to caution the minister, through you, sir, to not deliberately mislead the House. Because the statements he is making are misleading. There is not a program that he has mentioned here today as a Liberal program that was not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. If the hon. member has facts to prove that the minister is misleading the House, perhaps he should bring them forward; but he should not suggest, which is what he is doing.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, there is not a program which the minister has taken credit for as a Liberal program—

An hon. Member: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Members cannot all share the same opinion. I am sure all members would like to debate that point. However, I must say to the hon. member that his turn will come and he will be recognized, but right now the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) has the floor.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from all the interest in truth here and from what the hon. member has just said that the truth hurts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is why you have your hands in your pockets.

Mr. Gray: Because the announcement of the decision to adopt a proposal for new fighter aircraft and the industrial benefits program was made after the government changed. I participated in that announcement. I made the decision, not my hon. friend. The decision to provide loan guarantees to Chrysler was made by the present government and announced by me on May 10. It was not made by the previous government which dithered for five months and put jobs at risk. The electronics program was announced by the previous Liberal government and the previous Conservative government, but it was implemented only after the present Liberal government came into office.

Mr. Huntington: Not so, Herb. That is misleading.

An hon. Member: Listen and learn.

Mr. Gray: What I have been talking about provides solid demonstrations, as I have said, that the present government is adopting an activist approach. As I have said, we are not operating as a passive bystander in the industrial development of Canada, but rather as an active player. This is the role we were elected to pursue on February 18. It is the approach to managing and developing the economy which the Government of Canada is pursuing and will continue to pursue in the interests of all Canadians.

An hon. Member: Where is the budget?

Mr. Gray: I need hardly remind members of this House that during the nine months following the May, 1979 election when the official opposition formed the government, it specifically shunned, in my view at least, an active role for the federal government in the economy. In fact, it seemed almost incapable of any action at all. More than anything else that government's approach was to pull away from direct involvement in the creation of Canada's economic future.

For instance, it was that government's intention, if it had had the chance, to sell Petro-Canada and thus eliminate a powerful instrument of the government and the Canadian people to ensure the positive development of the petroleum sector, one of our most important economic sectors.

Similarly, its members would have removed the government from the position it occupies because of actions of previous Liberal governments of being able directly and positively to assist the aerospace industry through ownership of de Havilland and Canadair as well as the nuclear industry through Eldorado Nuclear, along with a number of other important areas of economic activity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: I could say now that I rest my case, because while the hon. member opposite says they did everything and they were activist, the other hon. member who just tried to interject said that what I am talking about is not appropriate for government. Obviously, they did not intend to do anything worth while in these areas for the Canadian people.

An hon. Member: Tell us about Trident.

Mr. Roy: What about the Arrow?

Mr. Gray: It was also the Conservative government's decision and so, presumably, part of it stance on economic development, to follow the OPEC cartel and make the price Canadians have to pay for oil and gas susceptible to every move of those international oil producers. With one fell stroke they would have robbed Canada's industry of its competitive edge, an edge that we have a right to expect because of our rich energy resources which are virtually unparalleled among industrialized countries.

[Translation]

In fact, this matter concerning oil prices was vital to our economic revival and it will remain so for a long time. To be competitive on foreign markets and stay in the vanguard of technological progress, Canadian industry must take advantage of everything likely to give it an edge over its competitors. We certainly have a highly skilled labour force. We have also an excellent technological base in most areas where markets are developing. However, we have a problem because of the small size of our market as opposed to our vast territory. We must therefore bank everything on what we have that is most precious, that is completely ours; in other words, our natural resources. This is precisely what the Progressive Conservatives did not want to do when they decided to raise the price of Canadian oil to the international level.

[English]

But what else was there in the Conservative program for Canada's economy? Of course, there was a Conservative budget which amounted to the biggest one-time assault on taxpayers' pocketbooks the country has ever seen, which was roundly defeated in this House and at the polls.

An hon. Member: We do not sneak things in on Friday afternoons.

Mr. Gray: And there was the Conservative intention to cede essential jurisdiction with regard to resources and the economy through which the federal government, and in my view only the federal government, can ensure that Canada works well for all its people.

Finally, during the brief Conservative government there was talk of some kind of big conference that would be staged—and I use the word "staged" advisedly—so that the business community and government, perhaps others, could discuss Canada's economic problems and prospects. This talk persisted even as the need for action in the industrial development field grew urgent. As I have said, nothing was done to safeguard the 40,000 Canadian jobs directly dependent on the continued existence of Chrysler of Canada. While nothing was done definitively to launch Canada's microelectronics industry into the ultra competitive world of the 1980s, while nothing was done to implement a coherent national industrial policy for all Canada, and while little else was done, the Conservative government tried to get ready to talk about all this, but only next fall.

Mr. Wilson: Who created the unemployment in the first place?

Mr. Gray: The approach taken by hon. members opposite in relation to their responsibilities as a government for the Canadian economy was consistent. It was consistent with that age old Conservative ideology which sees government involvement in the economy as meddling in the affairs of the private sector and places absolute faith in Adam Smith's concept of the invisible hand of market forces. Not surprisingly it did not and could not work. For the Conservative brand of nineteenth century laissez-faire is unrealistic and wholly out of keeping with present day requirements for substained and regionally balanced economic growth.

• (1640)

We are, after all, living in a time of economic uncertainty, a period when Canada, like every other country, is having to cope with persistent inflation, interest rates that are still high although certainly lower than they were at the time the Conservatives were in office, a slow rate of economic growth, increasing energy costs and the threat of shortages, as well as higher unemployment than anyone wants. Moreover, as we look to the immediate and medium-term future, Canada confronts the bleak prospects for the world economy laid out in last week's OECD report, we face growing competition in international markets in the wake of the GATT agreements, and we can expect to encounter the results of substantially increased government support for industrial development on the part of our major trading partners.

In these circumstances, probably more than at any time in our history, there is for the Canadian government an especially formidable responsibility to be an energetic participant in the economy and to vigorously promote and support optimal development and utilization of the country's human, natural and capital resources.

The Liberal government quite fully appreciates the number and magnitude of the problems which challenge our economy. We know there are no magic or simple solutions, particularly at a time when our major customer, the United States, is in a deep recession. However, we have assumed the responsibility which we believe to be incumbent on the federal government to use all practical means available to protect and enhance national economic and social well-being to the maximum realistic extent possible in our interdependent world.

This is the commitment which we have made to the Canadian people. It is a commitment which we intend to fulfil in accordance with the five principles of industrial development policy which were spelled out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during the last election campaign. Those principles are to capitalize on our energy base to build an industrial sector that is competitive worldwide; to ensure that the federal government is an active player in industrial development; to strengthen our research and technology capacity; to encourage independent Canadian-owned enterprise; and to expand Canadian control of our economy and at the same time increase the benefits to Canadians from the foreign investment that is already here.

I am presenting to cabinet very shortly a proposal for implementing these principles and for giving Canada a far more comprehensive and integrated framework for industrial development policy than we have had in the past. The elements of this policy framework will fulfil the commitments made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign and by this government in the throne speech. The approach which I believe in and which promises to deliver the greatest benefits to Canadian industry, workers and the economy is one which recognizes for government—in co-operation and in consultation with the private sector—an active involvement in the economy and in identifying and developing the strengths of this great country.

For example, through a made-in-Canada price for oil, we will make our energy resources more of an asset than ever before. We have rejected the international cartel price for oil and want to negotiate a fair price, a Canadian price which will ensure companies in every region of Canada a competitive edge in international trade. We want to ensure as well that the large scale energy and other projects which will be undertaken during the 1980s provide Canadian companies with a market for their goods and services—for instance, that the steel is sourced in Canada and that available Canadian workers and expertise are fully used. In this regard I want to say that the northern pipeline is a project with the potential to bring great industrial benefits to Canada. I believe that Canada should have the benefits of the pre-build and of the entire pipeline and a lot more besides.

Another of the methods which we will use will be to target federal government procurement more toward Canadian companies so that taxpayers' money can make a direct contribution towards creating industrial jobs, stimulating international competitiveness for our industries and spurring growth. Each year, the federal government spends billions of dollars on goods and services. We are making new and substantial efforts to increase the number and value of these government purchases that come from companies that operate in Canada and employ Canadians. This policy is already under way and will shortly be expanded and strengthened.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, one of the ways in which we intend to participate in the development of our economy is by sparing no effort to increase our penetration of foreign markets. My department is in the process of setting up two new agencies which will allow us to expand considerably our participation in international trade; on the one hand, we will have an export development council composed of members from the private sector whose role it will be to make recommendations concerning our export trade policies. And it is my colleague the Minister of State for Trade (Mr. Lumley) who is setting up this important initiative.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, we will have a national trading corporation which will help our exporters. This concerns large as well as small and medium-size businesses.

[English]

I want to confirm that one of the ways this government intends to take a very active participation in the development of our economy is through trade promotion. We are in the process, through the efforts of the Minister of State for Trade and Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Lapointe), of developing the concept of a national trading company to improve the ability of Canadian industry to compete abroad. We are also actively developing more effective export financing programs.

Our economic development strategy will also emphasize support and encouragement of more advanced technology in Canada. We will promote and encourage our greatest resource—the well-trained, highly-educated and talented labour force in Canada.

Throughout the country, Mr. Speaker, high technology is recognized as the vital key to contemporary national economic growth and prosperity. That is why the throne speech reaffirmed the government's commitment to increase Canada's over-all expenditures on research and development to 1.5 per cent of the value of the gross national product. We will encourage the growth of high technology, not only in the advanced technology sectors, but also in those subsectors of the mature industries where there is substantial potential for growth.

Also, this government is committed to ensuring that foreign investment, to the extent we require it, adds to our ability to take full advantage of the opportunities that are opening up to us. We will both promote the development of strong Canadian-owned businesses and ensure that foreign-owned companies operate in accordance with Canadian economic goals. We will encourage small and large Canadian businesses to grow and become more competitive and ensure there is a maximum of significant benefits from the foreign-owned companies.

It is my intention to introduce to Parliament on behalf of the government, after Parliament resumes in the fall, a package of measures designed to strengthen Canadian participation in the economy and improve the performance of the foreign-controlled firms in that economy. These measures are, first, that FIRA be required to publish, in advance of a decision to allow or disallow, notice of larger acquisition proposals subject to review under the act. The present act precludes the government from making any information public until a decision is announced. This has often been seen to work against the national interest because there are instances where Canadians, if they were aware that a business was for sale, would be willing and able to make a bid which might be better all round for Canada than the foreign bid.

Second, the bill would provide that financial assistance be provided to Canadians seeking either to compete against bids by non-Canadians to acquire Canadian businesses or to repatriate foreign ownership of assets.

Third, it will provide that FIRA undertake a program of periodic reviews of individual performances of large foreign-owned subsidiaries operating in Canada in key areas like research and development and export activity.

Add to all these government actions, and more, our favourable exchange rate, and I think you have the combination for a strong and vibrant Canadian economy; and this is our fundamental goal for the 1980s.

Moreover, unlike the Conservatives who congenitally prefer inaction and fumble badly when they do manage to act, we have not been content to wait until our industrial development framework was completed, but rather where measures made sense we have moved ahead. For instance, this was the case in the implementation we began of the program to assist the development of the electronics industry. Consequently, for the past four months we have provided decisive evidence to the Canadian public that they made the right choice in getting rid of the Conservative government and electing a majority Liberal government on February 18.

● (1650)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: I think we have given the public confidence that there is in office a federal government which is alive to its concerns, a government which does not intend to give away a central role, a national role, in the development of the economy and is prepared to take immediate action where necessary in the public interest.

Foremost among reactions by this government was our successful effort in joining with others in meeting the threat to our political union posed by the PQ referendum. That referendum clearly demonstrated that a majority of all Quebeckers want to be a part of this country and do not want to turn away from their fellow Canadians with whom they share a significant past and can share a brighter, prosperous future. To me this was the major message of the referendum and we should be pleased with it, especially since an important part of that victory was the role played by the federal Liberal statement of our economic future.

But the referendum has not by itself, nor could it have done so, answered a variety of other questions that are important to Canada's continued viability as a sovereign, strong and economically vital nation. For instance, it has not told us whether Canadians in every region want Canada as a whole to be greater than the sum of its parts or merely equal to the sum of its parts, although I think Canadians believe, as I do, they want a Canada with a national purpose and a strong national government. The referendum has not told us whether the very real differences among our people can be reconciled and accommodated in a renewed federal system that is strong enough to meet the political and economic challenges of the 1980s. But I, for one, believe they can. These are the challenges the government is addressing during this period of constitutional discussion. And the preservation and development of our economic union now becomes of major importance.

Mr. Speaker, I have already mentioned by way of example the industrial offsets of the new fighter aircraft and the assistance to Chrysler as indications of how this government is prepared to take decisions which the previous government was unable or unwilling to take in the interests of all Canadians.

To conclude, I want to say that with the achievements we have already carried out in industrial development we have laid a solid foundation for a great deal of further action within the framework of a comprehensive and integrated national development policy. With the policies we have put forward, with the policies we have begun to implement, with the action we intend to take, we shall be creating jobs and stimulating growth throughout Canada. We want to build, we will build, a better Canada for all Canadians, and I think we are well on our way toward accomplishing that goal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: May I ask the minister a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Gray: I would be happy to do so, if there is time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): This can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Taylor: I would ask the minister: is that not the same speech he made a few years ago, just before he was booted out of the cabinet?

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Gray: No, Mr. Speaker. This is the speech I made which helped get the hon. member and his party booted out of office before they ruined the economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: Would the minister permit a further question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Again this would require unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rose: The minister talked about the great benefits of the $3 billion industrial offsets associated with the F-18A fighter aircraft. Since the figures which he released in a paper on April 10 stated that 47 per cent of the offsets went to Quebec and 41 per cent to Ontario, with only 12 per cent to the rest of Canada, how much of that benefit accrues to British Columbia in terms of industrial offsets?

Mr. Gray: The figures the hon. gentleman mentioned reflect an analysis of how benefits might be distributed in the light of the present distribution of the aerospace industry in Canada. I am working to have all regions of the country, including British Columbia, play an active part in taking advantage of the industrial offset opportunities.

The exact distribution to British Columbia will depend to a major extent on how active British Columbian firms are in bidding for opportunities. I will be happy to see them take advantage of these opportunities and I am already working with them in this respect.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—Shipbuilding—Reduction of subsidy; the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie)—Regional Economic Expansion—DREE grants for development programs in New Brunswick; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong)—Health and Welfare—Health hazards in certain chemicals and pesticides.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE TO DEVELOP AND IMPLEMENT COHERENT ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT POLICY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre:

That this House condemns the government for its failure to develop and implement a coherent economic development policy.

Mr. Harquail: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This is an opposition day and we all agree that the opposition should have this opportunity. They have brought forward this motion, but I think it should be noted that throughout the minister's speech there were interruptions and they would not allow the minister to present his speech in a reasonable, normal fashion. I think it should be observed that those interruptions were brought forward by the very opposition party which brought in the motion today.

An hon. Member: Brilliant!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we have seen a very good example of what we do not need in industrial strategy, industrial development and the industrial development debate in this country today. There is a very good reason why the minister was interrupted from this side of the House. The minister in a very important area to this country chose to be blatantly partisan and, in addition, deliberately misleading to this House on a number of issues. That is something we do not need at this time. We need cool thinking and action on the very important issues which are facing the country today.

With respect to the new fighter aircraft there is a very good reason why action was not taken. The day before the Clark government was about to take that decision the government was defeated. That put the decision off for that three or four-month period and that is why we lost valuable time.

Things were moving along very well on the Chrysler decision but there was an awful lot of delay after the present government took office because of the dithering the minister who has just spoken chose to get involved in. This was in order to look after, the people in his own constituency as carefully as he could without having regard to the broader issue of the country, in a very important decision. But I will come to that in a few minutes. What I was concerned with, and the questions I was placing in the House, was not the validity of the decision but the impact of that decision on over-all economic development in Canada.

Two other matters which the minister raised in his remarks were deliberately misleading. I personally announced the formation of the Export Development Board which he, about five minutes ago, chose to take all for his own. That decision was taken by the previous government and was announced in January, and the hon. gentleman knows it.

The other matter I wish to draw to the attention of the minister is in the area of the electronics fund. My hon. friend from Capilano (Mr. Huntington), the former minister for small businesses, announced—

[Translation]

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, once again I rise on a point of order. I think the House cannot allow hon. members to continue using unparliamentary terms as those which the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) used a little earlier and those which were repeated two or three times by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) who persists in using the terms——"deliberately misleading the House", which are words which are unparliamentary and which have been found to be unparliamentary for years. I want to refer you, Mr. Speaker, to Beauchesne's fifth edition at page 109 where this is made very clear. The hon. member might wish to use another expression which is permitted in the House. He might feel that the minister is misleading the House, but he cannot say in this House that the minister is deliberately misleading the House.

[English]

● (1700)

Mr. Jelinek: I think he is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I think the parliamentary secretary makes a very valid point. I did hear the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) use the expression "deliberately misleading the House," and I think it would be very parliamentary and honourable if the hon. member were to withdraw those remarks.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I did say "deliberately misleading". I admit that, and I would be very glad to withdraw that and agree that the minister was not deliberately misleading. He was misleading out of ignorance or stupidity or for some other reason.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: With regard to the other matter to which the minister referred about which he was misleading and incorrect, he said that the economic development conference we were going to be having was to be held some time this fall. He knows perfectly well that it would have been held in the early winter of this year. What we have seen happen as a result of this government's taking office is a loss in time which has amounted to billions and billions of dollars lost in economic development activity through a continuing deferral of a comprehensive energy policy which we had introduced and on which we were very close to having total agreement between all the provinces of the country. All we have seen over the past four or five months is continuing argument and disagreement between the different levels of government, with the result that everybody in this country suffers, and to me that is one of the most damaging elements of any industrial strategy or lack of strategy.

Finally, let me quote from "How Ottawa Decides" by Richard D. French who, I understand, used to be an official in the Privy Council office in the Trudeau government. Let me quote from page 145 as follows:

> The Clark reforms represented a coherent attempt to resolve certain persistent flaws in the central decision-making process. The arrival of the new government, headed by a Prime Minister with the courage to innovate despite a precarious political situation, created a window through which a breath of fresh air ventilated the corridors of power. Significant features of the Clark reforms appear likely to be retained by the new Trudeau administration which arrived in February, 1980.

I am glad the minister has seen fit to accept many of the innovations brought in by the Clark government. I wish he had the courage and the good manners to give credit where credit is due.

Let me move from here to make a contribution to this debate in what I would regard as a non-partisan manner, in such a way as to bring forward some proper thinking in what I think we all agree is a very important area for the future of this country.

We are moving into some very difficult times in the 1980s. There are some great economic opportunities in the long run but, unfortunately, in the short run we have some very real problems and we have to face up to those today. We have heard from my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), about previous attempts at trying to reach some form of economic development strategy, and I would like to discuss some areas in which I feel this government should be moving today.

I think it is important that the government put its ideas down on paper because we have seen a clear change in direction from previous Liberal administrations. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said that his government will ensure that the federal government is an active player in industrial development rather than just a passive referee. He has also said that the government will be in active participation when the public interest requires it. The minister himself has indicated a clear direction toward economic nationalism in this country. What we do not know is how the government is going to achieve this, and for that reason it is critical that this be put on paper so that the people in the country understand which way this government is intending them to go.

Harking back to the end of 1975, the Prime Minister indicated very clearly the direction in which he wished to take this country. He said that we were going to have more government and that we had to get used to bigger government in our lives. What concerns me today is that this government is trying to sneak in this policy without proper debate, and I look forward to participating, hopefully this fall, in a debate in this area. Because I do not think it is right for the government to bring in ad hoc decisions such as the Chrysler bail-out, the extension of the shipbuilding subsidies, the extension of shoe import quotas and changes to the Foreign Investment Review Act, without our having an opportunity to discuss the total strategy which the government is proposing to follow.

From time to time during the earlier months of this Parliament I tried to elicit from the minister some of the ground rules and yardsticks by which he was going to be making decisions relating to the bail-out of sick companies or assistance to dying industries. To date the only basis on which I can see the Chrysler decision was made was that it was big and involved many jobs.

Miss MacDonald: And it was in Windsor.

Mr. Wilson: My hon. friend says that it was in Windsor, and that is probably the most important basis. I can understand if jobs are involved, but there was very little else in the minister's statement to indicate the basis on which these decisions are to be made. If this government is going to become more and more involved with poking its finger into the workings of the economy, we must know the basis upon which the decisions are going to be made. Any proposal or request for help from the government will be very hard to turn down based on the merits of that particular proposal itself because there will be jobs at stake and there will be communities affected. What we need to have are some ground rules as to how we take those sick companies from the state they are in today at the time the proposals are made to a point where they can make a positive contribution to economic development in this country.

I would like to talk briefly about the proposals regarding the Foreign Investment Review Agency. The Clark government was supportive of the Foreign Investment Review Agency and was in the process of implementing administrative changes to assist in the efficiency and effectiveness of its operations. Unfortunately, as I understand it, nothing has happened with these proposals. They are collecting dust at the back of a filing cupboard over in the C. D. Howe Building.

The other thing we had proposed was the formation of a special committee of the House of Commons to study the operations of FIRA against the background of foreign investment in this country today. Many things have changed since the minister, in a previous incarnation, did his report on foreign investment in this country. One thing is that we have one million plus people unemployed today, and it is for that reason that we have to take a very careful look at how the Foreign Investment Review Agency is to operate.

I urge the minister to state with greater precision the direction he wishes FIRA to take, because one of the problems we have seen in the past is that FIRA has been allowed to drift. There has not been sufficient political guidance as to the direction that the government of the day wished FIRA to take. Everyone—FIRA and Canadian and foreign businessmen—would benefit if the government made a clear statement as to how it interprets two words in the act. Those words are "significant benefit". The act itself is too general. Canada needs a qualitative statement which will shift depending upon the economic and industrial circumstances of the day and which sets out the interpretation of the government of the day of what "significant benefit" means.

The government has stated clearly its intention to strengthen FIRA in three areas. I would like to comment on each of these.

They would have FIRA monitor the operations of foreign owned companies in this country. I urge the government to move slowly on this new mandate. This is a most sensitive area of intervention since it involves government direction over the decisions of management. This would be a new departure for any government. Government should also limit its activities to the larger companies, since this is the area where, if there are problems, the greatest benefit can be achieved.

Prior to embarking on this policy, the government should advise the companies affected in a very clear fashion what the guidelines are. The current principles of international business conduct should be updated and, in areas, expanded upon. These should be submitted to the companies involved well in advance. It would also be useful if the government embarked on a degree of consultation with organizations, such as The Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and others, as to how to proceed from here.

When I was recently in Australia, I met with the foreign investment review board in that country to disucss with them how their approach to foreign investment differed from ours. One of the areas which I found fascinating was the fact that decisions are handed down by a tribunal, which includes retired businessmen as well as the commissioner for the government agency over there. The involvement of these businessmen was described to me as being "astonishingly successful".

I strongly suggest to the minister that this approach be used in the monitoring activities that he has in mind, because private sector representatives could assist greatly in developing the right approach and the proper tone for the monitoring process. In addition, where there are problems I believe a private sector individual will have much greater success in seeking action from the company in question than a bureaucrat who has no direct business experience. I say this because it is easy for a confrontation to develop between FIRA on the one hand and the business affected on the other.

The second area where the government proposed to move is in announcing publicly proposed acquisitions. Again I urge the minister to do so only with those large acquisitions and other forms of acquisitions where there is real significance to the economy. It is essential that the threshold level and other ground rules for such notification be announced beforehand so that the companies affected would be clearly put on notice.

The third area of proposed action is in making financial assistance available to Canadians wishing to take over foreign-owned companies. In this area, the government is putting itself in the position of being both banker and judge and, in certain cases, possibly be broker as well. It is obviously very difficult to be objective in these circumstances. So I recommend strongly that the government separate any such activities from FIRA and, if possible, from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Because I am concerned about the effects of this third policy, I suggest that the government put a clear limitation on the amount of loan guarantees they wish to make. We must not forget that this money would be disbursed without creating one new job in the country. It will also result in funds leaving the country to be invested elsewhere.

In addition to the dollar limitation, I suggest that the government require from Canadian companies a business plan which would set out how the Canadian company would operate in a clear way to bring significant benefit to Canada. There is no point in simply satisfying our nationalistic emotions if, at the same time, there is not a clear plan of how economic development would be improved in this country as a result of the buy-back policy.

Of greater importance, however, than strengthening FIRA would be policies to encourage a greater degree of Canadian ownership in this country. The Prime Minister, in his speech immediately prior to the election, spoke in a vague way of policies to encourage Canadian ownership. I urge the government to bring these forward at the same time as its policies to strengthen FIRA. In this regard the government might consider tax free financial instruments to finance takeovers of foreign firms. They might well embark on a policy of moral suasion in certain industries, seeking companies themselves to take action to reduce the level of foreign ownerhsip.

I have one final point to make. Since the government is looking to FIRA to take on an expanded role, I urge that proper funding support be provided to the agency. In recent months the workload has increased, the backlog has increased, and funding support has been reduced. I do not know whether this is a deliberate attempt by the government to discourage foreign investors because of the slowness of the process. If so, that is a dangerous policy at a time of high unemployment. FIRA should be staffed adequately with professional people in order to ensure that its mandate is effectively and expeditiously carried out.

Another area of concern which I believed should be covered in an industrial strategy is the area of foreign exchange policy, particularly as it relates to the manufacturing industry. Some weeks ago I put a question to the minister in an attempt to ascertain his view on this important subject. Either he did not understand me at that time or he chose to ignore my question, because I did not get an answer. It is essential that a clear signal be given that the manufacturing industry in Canada will not be sacrified in favour of the development of energy mega-projects in this country.

In recent months we have seen a tendency for the government to allow the exchange rate to increase in response to investment flows for energy projects. The resource sector in this country has done extremely well in recent years, but the manufacturing industry has not, as witness the $17 billion deficit in trade and manufactured goods. Management in the manufacturing industry must be assured that the value of the Canadian dollar will continue to reflect the competitive position of the manufacturing industry in this country. Otherwise they will not proceed with investment decisions or trade development initiatives which will lead to an improvement in our manufacturing trade deficit. Again, let us not forget that these investment decisions and trade initiatives will lead to improved employment prospects in this country.

Last fall I asked officials in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to develop a competitive index which would clearly show the competitive position of the manufacturing industry in this country relative to the United States and others competing with us. I had intended this to be issued on a quarterly basis to be used as an early warning signal if we were beginning to lose our competitive position. I also expected it to be useful in the management of our foreign exchange policy so that the level of the Canadian dollar would not get out of line relative to the manufacturing position of this country. There had been one confidential trial run on this index before the government changed, but since then I have seen nothing. I encourage the minister to see whether he can bring this forward.

On the question of our manufacturing deficit and foreign exchange policy, I believe it would be useful to consider the activities of the import replacement division of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. One of the reasons Canada has a $17 billion trade deficit in manufacturing goods is that we are not purchasing sufficient manufactured goods in this country. I believe the government should place a considerably greater degree of importance on this division of the department. The previous industry, trade and commerce critic has expressed some interest in imports replacement, and I hope the minister will follow through on that interest.

Economic Development

In a number of speeches I made last fall I drew the attention of businessmen to the new trading environment as a result of the multilateral trade negotiations. I suggested there was a real opportunity for the operations of multinationals to become more specialized as a result of the reduction in tariffs and of the rationalization which was bound to occur as the MTN was implemented. Clearly one of the areas of opportunity for Canadian subsidiaries is to obtain world product mandates from their parent companies. There is no reason why in many industries Canadian manufacturers cannot be fully competitive with their counterparts in the United States and in other countries. There are many examples of this, the most prominent being Westinghouse, Canadian General Electric, Black and Decker, and the office equipment industry.

Last fall I requested the department to prepare a paper outlining the opportunities, problems, past case studies and operating guidelines of companies with world product mandates. I sought this paper because I felt it would be useful for Canadian management to develop a better understanding prior to the full implementation of the MTN in order that they might be better armed to go to their parent company seeking a world product mandate on certain products.

• (1720)

Also I ask the officials to consider ways in which the government might assist and support Canadian management who wish to make presentations to their parent companies. Again, I do not know what happened to the incentives—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be involved in this motion before us today. I suggest to the House that the motion is ill-conceived and shortsighted, in view of the fact this Thirty-second Parliament was only elected on February 18, 1980, or 146 days ago, and already is in its thirteenth week of sittings. By contrast, under the previous administration 146 days after the Thirty-first Parliament was opened the House had sat for only slightly over two weeks. These past weeks since April 14 have been busy and productive. As of this date, I am proud to note that 23 pieces of legislation have passed second reading and 18 pieces have received third reading.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ferguson: Further, it is interesting to note that our Canadian trade surplus for the month of May was $577 million. Of course, this is at a time when perhaps there is a reluctance to deal with some nations of the world that do not have the same sense of human or international values which we have in our society in this great nation.

As we look at the various comparisons against which we measure our performance, I will not say anything about this Thirty-second Parliament in comparison to the Thirty-first. Our legislative record to date speaks for itself. We will let history be the judge in the years to come. But the comparisons worth noting are comparisons relating to our economy, our standards of living, our system of social welfare, and of course, in relation to Canada itself, comparisons to other countries of the world.

Canada is the greatest country in the world, the envy of the free world. However, bearing in mind that we are a young nation in comparison to other nations and cultures, we are a vast nation in geographical terms and a nation blessed with a diversity of potential, human and natural potential. By comparison to other countries of the industrialized free world, Canada's national debt in relation to gross national product in 1979 stood third best, well ahead of the United States, Britain and Italy. Over the ten-year average from 1968 to 1978, we stood second best among the nations of the industrialized free world in comparing our national debt to gross national product. It is an envious record, but it is based on sound economic management and firm direction by stable government.

But we cannot sit and let technology pass us by; nor can we on this side of the House accept the doom and gloom projections from across the floor. It reminds me of the children's story and Henny Penny when they shouted, "Run, run for your lives, the sky is falling". In spite of all the gloom and doom, by further comparison our trade surplus from May 1979 to May 1980 is more than double that of May 1979. In May 1979 our surplus was $258 million; in May 1980 it was $577 million, or more than double.

If we are to build a better economy in Canada, the businessman, in particular the small businessman, is the backbone or linchpin of this approach, quite simply because among Canadians he is the most dynamic, the person with the ideas, the risk taker. Any society founded on such qualities is certain to be able to improve its lot. Consequently it is quite obvious that small and medium-sized businesses are extremely important in all this industrial strategy for economic nationalism. If we look at the economic picture of Canada, 95 per cent of the exclusively Canadian firms consist of small and medium-sized businesses.

The Speech from the Throne recognized the need for active direction of the Canadian industrial economy so that it responds vigorously to the opportunities and challenges of the eighties. Our intent was acknowledged in that speech to develop economic policies which will provide jobs, spur growth, improve regional balance and promote Canadian ownership of the economy. We intend to capitalize on our energy base in order to build a world-competitive industrial sector.

To those members of the House who saw the premier showing of the film last week on the new Canadian plane, the Challenger, this is the type of a world-competitive industrial sector at which we are looking. I am referring to Canadair and especially the de Havilland Aircraft company with their Dash series. These planes are distinctly Canadian and have returned a sense of pride to our aircraft industry which was destroyed back in the 1960s when the Avro Arrow was scrapped. The Liberal government has provided the incentives and the means to rebuild this industry and restore the sense of pride that we Canadians are among the best in the world.

We intend to ensure the federal government is an active player in industrial development rather than a passive referee. We do not intend to disband our Crown corporations which have developed expertise and technology and then sell them back to Canadians who already own them, or worse still, allow them to fall into private hands that could in turn sell out to foreign corporations which would capitalize on our investments in the future.

Canada's research and technology capacity will be strengthened. We will be encouraging independent Canadian-owned enterprise. It is in this area that we have an exciting contribution to make to the world. Among those pieces of legislation passed by this Thirty-second Parliament are amendments to the Small Businesses Loans Act, the Federal Business Development Bank Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act that provide the background of financing for our small business people and our farmers. But the exciting contribution is the potential of our renewable resources being used to feed a hungry world and to provide leadership, not only in food, which is a renewable resource, but in energy in a renewable form as well.

When we examine the agribusiness sector, we have to include the small business sector which provides 42 per cent of our Canadian employment in the private business sector. We must relate these to those small businesses providing the services to the agriculture industry. The manufacturing sector, the processors and the transportation sector all service this primary industry which contributed almost $14 billion to our economy in 1979. But of our total exports in 1979, only about 10 per cent were agricultural, or about $6.1 billion worth. As indicated in the Speech from the Throne, we will establish a Canadian agricultural export corporation to focus on areas of export potential, to allow our producers of Canada to work together as partners within confederation, to seek out new markets and offer continuity of supply of a quality product to other nations of the world on a long-term basis.

We are one of the few nations of the world that is a net exporter of food. We are the only nation with the legislative mechanisms which will enable us to plan our production to specific markets, either domestic or exports. The spin-off effects of such a venture will benefit all society by providing new jobs and opportunities in the whole agribusiness sector. One of those effects is that, in the long term, we will be able to bring the grain combine manufacturing plant at Brantford, Ontario back into full production.

As noted earlier, our farm cash receipts for 1979 were almost $14 billion and we exported $6.1 billion worth of food. By simple deduction this indicates Canadians must have consumed $7.9 billion worth of Canadian grown food. Based on farm gate prices in 1979, if we assume that each Canadian eats three meals a day, the farm gate cost per meal is 30 cents for food produced and consumed in Canada. This simple illustration should verify that Canadian farmers are the most efficient in the world. Provided with the mechanisms to sell as Canadians, rather than as one province competing against another for foreign markets, we can expand our export sales and further increase our trade surplus.

I am pleased to point out that this concept, developed by people on this side of the House in consultation with producers and organizations, is endorsed by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and that endorsement is included in the submission which will be presented to members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture on July 16 of this week. This move alone is a step in the right direction to update our economic development policy.

● (1730)

Farmers in Canada are ambitious. They like to produce, and through the Canadian Agriculture Export Corporation we intend to give them that opportunity. Before I leave this topic of economic development, I would like to point out that the U.S. department of commerce has recently published a report on the investment intentions of foreign affiliates of U.S. companies. Evidently they intend to expend $11.3 billion in Canada in 1980. This fact alone indicates the confidence of other nations, brought about by the return of responsible and stable government in Canada. But we must exercise caution in this area to ensure that we expand Canadian controls over our economy while increasing the benefits to all Canadians.

In response to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), I believe that the minister has effectively outlined his intentions to beef up FIRA. Hon. members will recall that back in 1966 the U.S. government issued some direction for the guidance of U.S. multinationals and other investors. This led to the promulgation, partly as a defence measure, by the Canadian government of a set of guidelines for Canadian subsidiaries of foreign firms, the so-called Winters guidelines. In 1975 these guidelines were revised and updated and referred to as "New Principles of International Business Conduct". Both the 1966 and the 1975 versions outlined in general terms Canada's expectations of foreign-controlled enterprises in such matters as export effort, sourcing in Canada, and so on. Nor is Canada alone in this area.

Aside from the U.S. action in 1966, many other countries have from time to time provided guidance of this sort. Most significantly, the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development which, as hon. members know, includes in its membership all non-communist developed countries, issued in 1976 guidelines for multinational enterprises. They place a good deal of stress on the need for foreign subsidiaries to observe and, as far as possible comply with, the policies and priorities of host country governments, that is to say, of the governments of the countries in which foreign subsidiaries carry on their operations. In a sense this provides a framework, if any is needed, for a measure of the type the Canadian government clearly has in mind and to which the minister so eloquently referred earlier today.

In closing, I would like to suggest that in total perspective Canada has a coherent economic development policy, and to those of us who have taken the time to make the comparison to which I referred earlier, and when we consider the proposals which I have included in these remarks today, Canada ranks among the leaders in the free world.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I find it strange that the hon. member who last spoke would end his remarks on the note that Canada considers itself a world leader.

In looking at a press quotation of the OECD which was published the other day, they say with regard to Canada:

> As a result, some Canadian economists believe the OECD forecast to be slightly too optimistic, with a consensus developing that Canadian real GNP will actually decline by about 0.5 per cent in 1980.
> Canada is expected to be the only country of the seven major industrial nations, including the United States, Britain, France, West Germany, Italy and Japan, not to show a decline in its consumer price inflation rate over the coming 12 months.
> The OECD expects the inflation rate to rise to 10 per cent in the second half of 1980 and stay at that level in the first half of 1981.
> In addition, Canada will be the only one of the seven nations to show a deterioration in its current account balance during the 12-month period. Canada's current account deficit, which had narrowed to $4 billion at annual rates in the first half of 1980, is expected to be $7.4 billion during the 12 months ending next June 30.

It is hard for me to understand how the hon. member can say that this presents a very optimistic view as to where Canada is going. I heard the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) say earlier what his government would do for Canada. I would like to ask him what this Liberal government has done to Canada over the last 15 years? I say that the Liberal government involvement in the Canadian economy over the last 15 years has ruined the Canadian economy. We are no longer competitive, and that is the problem with our trading position, which is deteriorating seriously and rapidly.

Our unemployment situation is deteriorating and is continuing to deteriorate through the policies of the Liberal government. It talks about economic nationalism. Economic nationalism is a sickness and a disease. The Liberal government believes that Canada can live as an island unto itself, that 24 million people can live in this world and be economic nationalists. That is absolute rubbish. This is the government which has given the Canadian people a national energy policy. What policy? It is a sham.

The only thing which the Liberal government, and particularly the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), have done is to fan the flames and to warn the provinces by comparing the actions of Alberta to the separatist motives in Quebec. That is certainly not a good way of going about getting the provinces to agree. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has suggested that Alberta is engaged in a war over economic sovereignty and compared it with Quebec. Is it any wonder why westerners today cannot understand the federal government and its policies? Why is it that westerners must pay at least internationally competitive prices and, in many cases, more for commodities which are sold to them from eastern and central Canada, but they are not entitled to fair commodity prices for their wheat and oil? What is fair about that?

At the same time hon. members opposite deny oil price increases to realistic levels. As a result they are scuttling economic development in Canada. As a matter of fact, with regard to the two mega projects which Alberta is trying to get off the ground, the Alsands project and the Cold Lake heavy oil project in Alberta, I am advised that the delay in these two projects is costing the Canadian economy $25 million every day.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said that sharing is what Canada is all about. Alberta must share. The producing provinces—Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan—must share with the rest of Canada. Since 1973 Alberta has forgone in excess of $17 billion in revenue as the result of underpricing of its oil. That happens to be worth $8,500 for every man, woman and child in the province of Alberta. That is sharing? The government of Alberta has every right to insist on a fair deal and a realistic price for its energy. It has every right to receive its legitimate share of the revenue. Surely it is not un-Canadian to defend this position, a position which it was guaranteed under the constitution of this country. It is defined in the British North America Act that the producing provinces shall have the right and are entitled to those resources. Now the government wants to change the rules in midstream. The hard part of it is that oil is a diminishing resource. Once it is gone, it cannot be replaced. It is like a capital resource and very different from manufacturing something. When that oil and gas are gone from Alberta, there will be nothing left but bald prairie. That is what the Liberal government is asking us to do—to be farmers and cattle raisers. They are telling us that when the oil is gone we must get back to raising cattle and growing corn. But we want something better than that, Mr. Speaker, a lot better, and we intend to use those funds for the benefit of all Canadians. We want to be part of a Canadian economy and we want to have an industrial base in Alberta: We are going to have it, Mr. Speaker.

There is an opportunity ahead of us. The Canadian economy is in difficulty in terms of balance of payments, in terms of trade, in terms of fiscal deficit. There is no aspect of our economy that is not in serious trouble and deteriorating. The Liberal government must bear responsibility for that. We have had 15 years of Liberal mismanagement.

But we have a chance, Mr. Speaker. Today Canada desperately needs an economic shot in the arm. We simply cannot afford to underutilize any major asset of the country. Western Canadian gas can do for the country what North Sea oil has done for Great Britain. Our large and enormously valuable gas reserves must be utilized for the benefit of all Canadians. It is important that we do not fumble the ball because we may not get another chance.

The Alaska natural gas pipeline is of absolutely crucial importance to the Canadian economy at this time. There is no project in the immediate future that has more economic significance for this country. It is absolutely essential that the pre-building of the western leg of the pipeline which is now being considered by the cabinet be approved immediately so that construction can proceed. With Canada moving quickly into a period of economic recession, and unemployment rising dramatically, and with a deteriorating balance of payments, we are fortunate to have the opportunity to build a pipeline at this time which is of such enormous importance to the Canadian economy not just in terms of the present economic impact but the future health of our economy for many years to come.

While the pre-build is vitally important in terms of the health of the oil and gas exploration industry, it is equally important in terms of jobs and economic activity in all parts of the country. It means a positive impact on our balance of payments amounting to $2 billion per year, and will reduce the federal fiscal deficit by an estimated $1 billion per year. In terms of employment the project will create, between 1980 and 1984, 150,000 man-years of employment. Out of this 150,000 man-years of employment, some 30,000 to 40,000 man-years will be in central Canada.

The new exports approved by the Conservative government in December, 1979, will improve Canada's balance of payments by $17 billion over eight years. Long-term results of this improved situation could be a strengthened Canadian dollar and lower interest rates.

The pre-build section of the line, the western leg, is estimated to cost $1.6 billion. Of this 90 per cent will be Canadian content. Distribution is as follows: B.C., $70 million; Alberta, $650 million; Saskatchewan and Manitoba, $360 million, and Ontario and Quebec, $360 million. Those are significant benefits at this time in the Canadian economy.

Natural gas exports are essential to make efficient use of our natural resource base. Opponents of gas exports express the view that exports are a threat to our future domestic natural gas supply. Opponents of new exports are concerned that additional exports could impair the future expansion of gas in the Canadian market. The Canadian market for gas is relatively small indeed compared to the enormous supplies of gas we have discovered.

As a result of increased gas prices between 1974 and 1980, substantial new discoveries of natural gas have been made. In the last six years drilling activity in western Canada and major improvements in technology have accelerated discoveries and substantially increased the amount of known reserves. Reliable industry sources claim that ultimate potential marketable gas will support a fifty-year supply from conventional producing areas of western Canada alone. The substantial increase in reserves has placed the gas industry in a surplus supply situation and the marketing of natural gas has become a major concern of the industry.

Because of these developments the National Energy Board has re-evaluated its figures for natural gas reserves in relation to foreseeable requirements. The National Energy Board estimated that 66.1 trillion cubic feet of established reserves remain in the conventional producing areas of Canada. We use approximately one trillion cubic feet of gas per year in Canada. If the National Energy Board is correct, and surely it is technically equipped to make the assessment, we have 66 years' supply in the conventional producing areas of Canada today. In addition the National Energy Board estimates that there are ten trillion cubic feet in the Arctic Islands, five trillion cubic feet in the Mackenzie Delta-Beaufort Sea area, and three trillion cubic feet off Sable Island. These are discovered reserves. This does not include the "tight-gas" pools in western Alberta.

In December, 1979, the National Energy Board declared a total of 4.25 trillion cubic feet over a period of eight years as surplus to our domestic needs. The National Energy Board's decision to grant this export volume was on the basis of its valuation that the net benefits to Canada in terms of direct cash flows resulting from the export sale weighed against the alternative of keeping the gas in Canada for future domestic use to be $6.6 billion. In arriving at its decision to allow exports, the National Energy Board stated that the substantial net advantages to Canada from the exports outweighed any uncertainty associated with the security of future energy supplies. The Board stated that these new export volumes would achieve a balance such that adequate supplies for domestic requirements would be assured for a reasonable period into the future but that the level of reserves retention would not restrain the achievement of an appropriate rate of exploration and development.

Approval of the pre-build portion of the pipeline is vital because it will contribute to the financing and completion of the whole project, and the National Energy Board considers it to be in the public interest to dedicate the necessary export volumes until such time as Alaskan gas begins to flow.

The exports allowed through the pre-build section will provide an additional stimulus to the United States to speed up regulatory procedures and financing moves for the over-all pipeline—the Alaska portion and the northern border portion. Pre-building will also extend the timeframe for the construction phase of the entire pipeline project, making it easier for Canadian industry to schedule labour and equipment to meet the project's over-all requirements, and thus allowing increased Canadian content.

In addition, the northern section of the pipeline offers to Canada the advantage of providing future access to Canadian frontier reserves when these reserves prove to be deliverable in economic volumes. Those reserves are in the Mackenzie Delta and the Beaufort Sea.

There are presently 700 firms actively engaged in natural gas exploration in western Canada. A high percentage are independents, almost all Canadian owned, and most are young companies with little or no present production or cash flow.

Concern has been expressed by some, including myself, that many of these small companies with their valuable reserves of marketless gas are susceptible to take over by large American firms. In the last ten years over 100 such firms have been bought out by foreign-controlled firms. Gas exports will allow these firms the cash flow necessary to continue to explore for more oil and gas reserves. In 1979, 70 per cent of the exploration wells drilled in western Canada were drilled by these independents. Canadian content in the industry is rising rapidly, not by government decree but through the energy and skill of Canadian explorationists. The only factor that can interfere with the growth of Canadian independents is lack of markets, resulting in restriction of necessary cash flow.

Young independent companies are disproportionately injured by the present restriction in gas markets. I say disproportionately because it is the major oil and gas producers who are selling most of the gas at the moment, and the independents are in a position where they do not have a market for their new-found reserves. Without markets, these small Canadian independents cannot survive in Canada. There is probably not a single Canadian independent oil and gas exploration company today that has not dedicated a very large part of its budget to the United States, or is considering doing so. I wish to emphasize that I do not exaggerate. Mr. Speaker, it is serious and the reason is very simple. Gas and oil discoveries in the United States are immediately saleable. It will be a tragedy if the young Canadian exploration companies are driven out of Canada because of an inability to market their gas and develop cash flows. They do not want to leave, but they have no choice. I do not see how anyone can blame them for leaving Canada in order to survive.

Fifty-eight companies out of some 364 companies involved in the National Energy Board gas export decision will be making their first natural gas deliveries to the pre-built section of the Alaska gas pipeline. In conclusion, the building of the Alaska gas pipeline and exporting gas, surplus to our requirements, will improve the Canadian content of our oil and gas industry by strengthening Canadian producers. This will enable our Canadian producers to sustain the high levels of exploration activity to prove up additional reserves. Additional reserves will allow us to continue to price natural gas domestically on a subsidized basis at something like half of the export price.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must advise him that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Thomson: May I ask for unanimous consent to continue because I need one minute to conclude my remarks?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to conclude his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thomson: In summary, the pre-build project will create Canadian investment and jobs throughout Canada. It will improve security of Canadian energy supply by allowing the industry to continue to explore aggressively. It will enable us to continue to subsidize lower domestic gas prices and it will provide a return on investment to Canadian investors.

The United States Congress has given Canada its assurance that the entire line will be built, and surely this should be sufficient for Canada to proceed immediately to approve the pre-build portion of the Alaska gas pipeline.

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the debate today dealt mostly with the industrial aspects of the industrial strategy or the close relation between the field of energy and that of industrial strategy. The incentive to industrial growth and the promotion of energy policy are the two most important challenges which we will have to accept during the eighties and in the future.

I will remind the House however that the most important part of our over-all economic strategy for the eighties is not capital investments or the development of technology itself but human beings for whom our economy exists and without whom it would not operate.

The most important aspect of the directions we should adopt for the 1980s concern our endeavours in the field of human resources and manpower adaptation. Our studies have indicated that nothing is more crucial for the future performance of the Canadian economy than the means with which we adapt it so that it is possible to make efficient changes. That is essentially the role of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission.

Of course, the economic society we dream of rests on fundamental needs. It must have the necessary mechanisms to produce the skills needed to face the demands of our future growth.

It must also provide the necessary income and direct aid in cases of adjustment to facilitate inevitable geographic and occupational changes. In particular, it must work for a number of groups in our society which would otherwise lose ground or not fare well and thus cease to be full-fledged and productive members of our society. Wherever and whenever there is a high unemployment rate, it must provide jobs and formal as well as on-the-job training in fields in which skills are required, to ensure that we get maximum benefits from the efficient evolution of our industrial policy.

The House will recognize that it will not be easy to attain such goals. To do so, we must be sure of the direction we have taken, the problems we have studied and the chances of success. We must also foresee adequate planning on the national and regional scale, and be determined as well not to relinquish our objectives once these have been singled out.

Mr. Speaker, this is why the government has decided to create a special committee on employment opportunities for the eighties. This committee, chaired by my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, will concern itself especially with the dearth of personnel in skilled jobs as well as seeking the advice of the greatest number of interested people on other aspects of employment in the future.

[English]

Within employment and immigration, the labour market development task force is undertaking a fundamental review of the nature of the labour market and will work closely with the UI Review Task Force.

When these reviews are completed, the minister intends to establish the key directions for the remainder of the decade. It is, however, already clear that major changes are required. The government has already taken a number of steps to ensure that sound policies and programs related to human resources, people capital, are in place.

We have had, for over a decade, one of the strongest programs of adult occupational training in the western industrialized world. That program has provided retraining, and the upgrading of basic educational prerequisites to skilled training for many Canadians. It has provided language training to enable new immigrants to use the skills they bring to Canada, and it has played an essential role in assisting many, who would otherwise be condemned to poverty, to play productive and rewarding roles in our increasingly industrial society. Over the years the nature of the training provided has shifted toward a more industrial basis, and we expect that this year 55 per cent of the full time trainees will be undertaking apprenticeship or other forms of industrial training.

It is clear, however, that further changes and strengthening of the program are required. In too many of the trade skill areas Canada has been dependent on the now shrinking pool of foreign-trained tradesmen to supply our basic needs. We have been unable to ensure that our native people have the training required to take advantage of the economic opportunities which frequently arise in close proximity to them. We have found that our training programs have not been able to enable those women who wish to do so to break out of job ghettos.

That is why the Minister of Employment and Immigration last month announced new initiatives in these areas. The financial provision for the critical trade skills training program, which is designed to assist industry to generate the skills it finds in short supply, is being expanded from $20 million to $30 million this year. If industry is able to respond in the way we hope, that should constitute a significant step toward providing the high level blue-collar skills which we will need and people will require three, four and five years from now.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m. this day.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

The Deputy Speaker: When the House took recess at six o'clock, the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Dawson) had the floor.

Mr. Dawson: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out this afternoon just before recess, when we talk of industrial strategy, it is important that we never forget the question of energy and particularly, because of the area I am concerned with, individuals, or, in other words, manpower training.

[English]

An additional $10 million will be provided this fiscal year for training our native people in both urban and more remote settings. This will enable them to take advantage of the immense opportunities that will be generated by our industrial and energy developments. We are now working with representatives of native organizations to see how these funds can best be used to create the job potential of native people, and, more than incidentally, help to provide the skills which will be required by western energy and industrial expansion.

To help counter the serious underrepresentation of women in many male dominated occupations, the government has developed an initiative which has stirred the interest of manpower authorities in other parts of the world. Some $2 million has been added to our normal industrial training program budget for this fiscal year to provide employers with an experimental 75 per cent premium to train women in skills and trades in which they represent less than one-tenth of the labour force. We hope that this assistance will induce employers to train up to 3,700 women this year in occupations in which women have traditionally been underrepresented. The program will be expanded next year if it is successful.

These initiatives in the training area—to increase the proportion of our training which takes place in an industrial setting, to increase directly and sharply the provision of high level skills through training, to ensure that our native people can benefit from opportunities, and to begin to right the under-representation of women in important and growing skill areas—are key steps which will serve us well through the 1980s. I wish to emphasize, however, that they are not being carried out in isolation. Important discussions have been held with representatives of some of our most dynamic industrial sectors, the aerospace industry, the petroleum-related industries, etc.

The enhanced revitalized training to which the government is committed cannot take place without the co-operation and drive of the business sector. A skill training strategy which helps industry do necessary training must be and is being carried out with the active collaboration of our key industrial sectors. That collaboration, of course, is a two-way street.

For many years substantial segments of Canadian industry have relied on their ability to attract skilled immigrants from abroad rather than taking the steps necessary to train and develop our own young people and women to meet industrial skill needs. In recent years it has become apparent that such a strategy, even if it were desirable, can no longer work.

Canada's expanding sectors and skill needs are frequently the same as those in other parts of the industrialized world. Rapid rates of productivity and real income growth abroad have brought standards of wages and living in many countries into the same range that we enjoy in Canada and the United States. Increasingly it is simply not possible to attract from abroad the skills that industry needs for the future.

We, and many expanding industrial sectors in Canada, face a dilemma. The types of skills which are most in shortage frequently take 3, 4, or even 5 years to produce. They must be planned for, and the investment in human resources made, long in advance of when they are needed. It is not possible or even realistic to suggest to firms that they should go without needed foreign skills now and wait for four years until they can properly train their own necessary workers.

The basic policy which has been adopted is not to deny firms the opportunity to recruit high skills abroad, but rather to ensure that firms which do seek to attract skilled people from abroad are also doing their fair share of training Canadians to meet future needs. We are, increasingly, asking firms to outline their future manpower plans and to demonstrate the adequacy of their investment in training as prerequisites to the recruitment of already trained persons from abroad. The result is that if the firm can attract persons in skill-short areas from abroad, it immediately gets what it needs, but it also makes provision to train unemployed or underemployed Canadians to fill whatever the future requirements may be.

I might add that, despite our need for skills, our growth is not always even. In a number of important technological areas the ability of Canadian post-secondary institutions to produce technically qualified people is, at least temporarily, running ahead of the ability of the private sector to utilize them. The new technology employment program is designed to fill that gap, by assisting private sector and non-profit research institutes to hire unemployed or underemployed recent technically qualified graduates in priority areas of endeavour. Through this program we expect to enable young Canadians to utilize the existing technological abilities they have developed and to further technological development and the application of technology. Among the priority areas for this program are microelectronics, biotechnology, communications technology, etc.

Training and development of Canadians is critical to our future industrial role and expansion but so is the ability to adjust to the changes which will be generated. Those changes will be considerable and far-reaching in their consequences.

We know that energy and related developments in western Canada will result in differentially rapid employment growth and rapidly-escalating skill needs in that area. We know that the altered pattern of growth between our industrial sectors will result in major changes in the level of opportunity which each can offer. And we know that those changes will not affect all Canadians equally. We know, further, that a wise and forward-looking society does not tolerate progress for some at the expense of others. Our employment and training and financial adjustment policies must enable all Canadians as much as possible to benefit from the opportunities which lie before us. The unevenness of growth, caused by differential rates of expansion, cannot be allowed to leave human accidents in its wake. A blind policy of growth for the sake of growth could not succeed: an economic and industrial growth policy must take full account of the need to enable all Canadians to make the contribution of which they are capable.

We have, for instance, at the moment considerable signs of externally generated recession in much of the country while parts of our nation have full employment. The nature of the American downswing suggests that this pattern may continue for some months and even intensify. It is imperative that we, as a society, make provision for the stimulation of employment in areas and during times of slow growth as well as ensuring that we have a labour force which is adequately trained for the future.

The government is taking very considerable steps this year both to stimulate the employment of additional persons in industry and to bring about the development of jobs in the non-profit sector, particularly in areas of the country where jobs are more difficult to find.

The government is making available, under the Employment Tax Credit Act recently passed by Parliament, a further twelve months of direct wage assistance to industry to help expand employment, particularly in small business. This program, as members of the House know, was extremely successful last year with over 50,000 Canadians getting jobs, mostly in small businesses, as a direct result. We hope that despite the late passage of the bill the measure will make a considerable contribution this year as well. The subsidy offered varies from $1.50 an hour to $2 an hour, depending on the part of the country, and has proven to be highly successful particularly east of the Ottawa River. We hope that, with the support of organizations such as the chambers of commerce, it will play a major role this year as well.

It is clear, however, that a general measure of that kind cannot itself do the whole job. To help fill the gap, to create jobs in places and for groups of people who can be relatively little helped through business-related measures, the government has established the Canada Community Development and the Canada Community Services Programs. Although the Community Development Program will fund projects in all parts of the country, the funds will be concentrated in areas and on groups which suffer most from unemployment. Jobs will be provided in a wide range of federal and provincial priority activities so as to maximize the impact of the expenditures on our longer-run national goals. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) expects shortly to announce the distribution of those funds, the priorities which have been developed, and the details of the new program. It will result in jobs for over 19,000 additional Canadians this fall and winter.

A companion program, the Canada Community Services Program, will be of particular assistance in providing worthwhile jobs for relatively recent labour market entrants in the provision of important community-based services. The planned expenditures of up to $11 million this year should enable the initiation of a wide range of demonstration projects which will both provide employment and serve to fill many of the gaps in a range of community-based social services.

Many, however, of our most serious employment adjustment problems relate not to temporary shortages of work but rather to the extremely work-disadvantaged problems of many Canadians in the medium to longer term. These disadvantages may be a result of our geographic development or may be the social result of generations of exclusion from the main stream of economic growth. A sensible medium-term policy must provide employment development and jobs for such people and in such areas over the medium to long term as well as in the short run. It must be focused to meet local needs for growth, for training in work, and for work itself.

To help achieve that, we have progressively shifted resources from short-term job-creation programs such as Canada Works into the Local Employment Assistance Program which provides medium and long-term employment and training for groups of persons and in parts of the country which are extremely employment disadvantaged. Our financial provision for the LEAP program stands at over $70 million this year, with approximately half that amount being allocated to help meet the employment development needs of our native people. The LEAP program has become a primary vehicle through which we are able to assist the development of small-scale local employment opportunities of long-term benefit to people who most need them.

We have not, of course, neglected the need for private sector employment development in the long term as well. This year the government expects to initiate up to 20 Local Economic Development Assistance projects. Largely in small to medium-sized slow growth communities, the program will initially offer an opportunity to assess and articulate the prospects and possibilities for stimulating private sector employment growth. In its operational phase the LEDA program will enable such communities to provide small-scale financial assistance to small and medium-sized firms to expand or initiate businesses to provide more employment locally. If the pilot projects are able to achieve the success which we hope, the government will give consideration to a possible expansion of the program next year.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): How do you know that?

Mr. Dawson: If it is a success we shall make a commitment to try to give it a bigger budget and make it a better and a bigger program next year.

Employment policy thus provides assistance to adjust to change both through the provision of immediate employment to meet immediate needs and, increasingly, through the provision of medium and long-term employment, often in the private sector, when that is what is required.

I should like to go on, Mr. Speaker, but I see you are on the edge of your chair. Many of the speeches tonight will be dealing with the same problems. We have to be sure, when we talk about industrial strategy, that we give consideration to energy strategy and employment strategy as well.

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I too, will be talking about science and technology and I hope members will stick around to listen because I might make a couple of prognostications and maybe even a wager to make before the night is over.

Research and development means economic progress through product innovations and improved productivity. It means social progress through new and improved medical techniques and through a better understanding of the world in which we live.

Total spending on research and development in Canada today is only .9 per cent of our gross national product, less than half the level of such industrialized nations as Switzerland, France, West Germany and the United States.

The evaluation of the Canadian dollar has given the scientific community an inflation rate that is significantly higher than the over-all national average, but in spite of this the government is contemplating removing the tariff protection on many research materials plus imposition of sales tax which will further add to the cost of research in Canada.

● (2020)

Many Canadian subsidiaries of U. S. firms are required to make payments to their parent companies for research and development done in the United States. In the automobile industry, for example, payments to parent companies for research and development amount to $375 million a year compared with the research and development spending they do in this country of only $5 million. Just think about that, Mr. Speaker; what a lovely free ride for foreign-controlled companies to employ their skilled people and scientists while Canadians pay their salaries! Oh, yes, we Canadians get to assemble their cars, cars which we did not design and which usually are not the best design for Canadian needs, but we do not get any of the real pay-back of world product mandate, royalty generation, and the things which add to Canada's real wealth. Not only does Canada have no part in the design of the cars, it is also prevented from getting its fair share of the manufacture of parts which go into the original models or even the repair parts which later keep them on the road.

In this case we are not hewers of wood and drawers of water, which is our normal situation; we are benders of steel and bolters of bolts, and that does not make us very much better.

It is very past due that we decide to take a firm position with foreign companies, not just to encourage them to do much more research in Canada, but even to force them to do so if they wish to continue enjoying the profits which accrue to them from their sales of products in Canada.

The history of this government, though, does not give us much encouragement to look forward to achieving such results. The Liberal record of research is as poor as the record of economic progress. Both are in the negative. If we were talking about inflation growth in Canada, we could point proudly to the government record. Even unemployment is something we could talk about, if we are looking for a high figure. We could find both in the 10 per cent range. When it comes to annual deficits, that is where this government is at its best. Its deficits are so big that even our ten times larger neighbour to the south has rejected them.

While the Liberal spending record is unsurpassed, the record of progress in economic development has been dismal. I suggest that the reason for this is that the massive spending which has been going on for years has been directed to the wrong things. Canada's wealth is being squandered on grants like LIP and FLIP, unemployment insurance payments and all the other things which help people to live without working, or to work in businesses which are not directly contributing to economic prosperity.

Research and development, which would create jobs instead of perpetuating unemployment, or which would produce goods and earn income for workers who produce those goods instead of paying them to sit idly while workers in other countries produce the goods for us, would be the way to direct spending. Isn't it interesting to look at the statistical evidence of the results of investment in high technology in countries which do that sort of thing rather than invest in the foot-slogging, back-breaking low technology areas and sectors such as we have in this country? For example, the high technology industry in this country which over the last 13 years have enjoyed an annual growth rate of 6.5 per cent compare very favourably against the low technology industries whose growth has been only 4.5 per cent. That is half again as much for the innovative companies. Another major help not only to those high technology companies themselves but also to the consumers of Canada is the ability of strong research-oriented companies to keep their prices down. Their prices in real terms grew at a rate of only 1.5 per cent per year compared with over double that, or 3.2 per cent, for non-innovative companies.

In summary, then, over a 13-year period research-intensive industries saw a 1.4 per cent greater employment growth, 2 per cent more real output, 9 per cent greater productivity—that is almost a whole percent—and yet they still were able to keep their prices down 1.7 per cent over low technology industries. Is it any wonder, then, that U.S. parent companies want to conduct substantial research and do it in their own country, particularly when they can even charge their Canadian subsidiaries to help pay the cost?

There is no point in the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Roberts) talking about carrying on the same old plans which have brought about the situation in the first place when research spending in Canada under successive Liberal governments has dropped from just below 1.5 per cent of gross national product to less than 1 per cent of gross national product. Now the government says it is targeting for 1.5 per cent of gross national product by 1985. Big deal! We had that much when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took over the economic ruination of Canada.

Even if this Liberal government could reach 1.5 per cent by 1985—and I will predict right here and now for the record, timelessly inscribed in Hansard, that it will not even come close to 1.5 per cent by 1985—how would that compare with research spending by other major countries, particularly those which we regard as economic world leaders? Our present level of .9 per cent compares very unfavourably with the 2.4 per cent spent in the United States, the 2.1 per cent in the United Kingdom, the 2 per cent in West Germany, and the 1.7 per cent in Japan.

All the economically successful nations spend at least twice as much on research as we do. Can it be a coincidence that we continue to sell off our resources to pay for a standard of living which we have not earned, that we export our muscle power in order to buy back Japanese brain power, and that we continue to bolt together big American gas-guzzling cars which the Americans generously allow us to produce and then have us experience the massive unemployment in Canada's automotive industry while we continue to purchase the far better designed products of Japan and Germany, the Toyotas and the Volkswagens? It is not a coincidence that the countries which invest heavily in high technology create jobs for their citizens while ours are laid off.

Does our .9 per cent research spending compare well with other less developed nations? Well, you will be pleased to know, Mr. Speaker, that we are just clobbering some nations. For example, we are miles—sorry, kilometres—ahead of Spain, Portugal and Turkey. We have even managed to match Ireland and Italy, but that is where it ends. We do not even measure up to Iceland and Finland.

So, there you have it, Mr. Speaker. We have a disgraceful record of technological innovativeness by a bankrupt group of politicians, and it is this group to which the country looks for leadership in the next four years. The country looks for leadership from a group with a proven record of failure, from a group which must tinker with the constitution of Canada as a smokescreen to hide economic ineptness, a group which would rather argue about constitutional change instead of attitudinal change, about patriation while they deal in procrastination, about working formulas when they should be worrying about just plain working, and all of this in two languages, which probably will not work at all.

What can an opposition member say to a government which does not understand or cannot cope with the real problems of a nation? How can one get through to unimaginative or politically myopic minds which in the Trudeau years carried Canada to lower and lower levels of performance? Could I beg them to read the records and to learn from past mistakes? It is not my imagination; there are official records of lower technological growth, lower productivity, higher unemployment, bigger deficits and bigger debt, higher taxes, no plan for resource development, particularly in the critical area of petroleum energy, and perhaps most important of all, no development of a national will or purpose as exemplified by the appalling condition of our defence forces through lack of good equipment and far too few numbers both in the permanent and militia forces.

Instead of using the American technique of stimulation of high technology research and beneficial spin-off through defence purchasing, this government will reduce purchasing under DIP, the defence industry productivity program, from $31.5 million in 1979 to $26.5 million in 1980. All of this is a sad commentary on a country which in its infancy built a transcontinental railway as a national dream, for a country which built an inland seaway of tremendous magnitude, or for a country which called out to the rest of the world at Expo '67, "Look at Canada, the up and coming world beater". However, all of this was "PT" development, "prior to Trudeau".

Is there any hope that the new Trudeau government will put an unhyphenated Canada first and take the strong and urgently needed steps to develop the country's future in a manner which will instil a national sense of purpose, create thousands of new jobs for Canadian young people who want to work but find a faltering economy, a government which, having misled the Canadian public by promising cheap energy prices could redeem itself by now being honest and admit it was wrong and which chose to pay Mexicans $36 per barrel for all the oil they will sell us but would not pay fellow Canadians more than half that price and at the same time create jobs and investment opportunities here in Canada? Mr. Speaker, when did the Mexicans last invest in Canadian jobs? I suspect if oil were found in Quebec today, we would soon be at world prices.

I hope the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) can see his way clear to deal truthfully with the country and bring in not only the proper pricing formula for oil but also implement the dynamic action needed to capitalize on increased resource revenue to launch the tar sands plants and frontier drilling which will make us self-sufficient in energy by 1990.

Another grey area is industry, trade and commerce. In opposition the present minister declared that increased research and development should be a condition of helping Chrysler but it remained to the Ontario Progressive Conservative government to implement that condition in the Chrysler bail-out.

When will we stop hearing partisan political platitudes instead of constructive job-creating action from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), who personally represents one of the country's ridings most seriously affected by the huge job lay-offs caused by past Liberal industrial policy ineptness?

The third minister of the strike-out is the new Minister of State for Science and Technology. He comes to the plate wearing two hats and carrying two bats. Environment is his first preoccupation and, by working at that, he has managed to keep out of trouble in the vital field of research funding and development, that is, up until this week he kept out of trouble. But now, consistent with the total lack of research policy of past Liberal governments, the new minister who is not a scientist, has voiced serious personal skepticism as to whether or not Canada should have anything to do with fusion energy development.

In spite of eminent scientists from the National Research Council declaring the great need for Canada to join other nations of the world in the costly but potentially highly rewarding field of cleaner, less polluting, renewable energy to be provided by fusion, the minister declares his doubts and Canada, instead of being inspired to another national goal, goes back to cutting wood.

The declared intention of the Ministry of State for Science and Technology is:

To encourage the development and use of science and technology in support of national goals.

The hon. member for Louis-Hebert (Mr. Dawson) has just alluded to the critical importance of technology to economic development and the creation of jobs.

But what are these national goals, other than the 1.5 per cent of gross national product which is only a spending benchmark and not a mission oriented or goal oriented one? Are these goals to be specific science goals such as putting a man on Mars, or developing the world's best information processing system, or solving the world's most pressing social problem, that of universal birth control?

Or are the goals financial ones, increased productivity in Canada and more efficient processing? Or will the long awaited industrial strategy define the goals as being the substantially increased processing of our natural resources and the Canadianizing of our industry by being the technological masters of it?

What are these lofty goals, the building blocks of a Canadian industrial and social purpose? To date the government has failed even to bring in a budget to tell Canadians what this year will hold for them, never mind this decade.

Mr. Speaker, you may well be asking if this criticism is not just talk. We are constantly reminded by the other side that we were the government for only seven months, under seven months, in fact. They told us that the $10.5 billion deficit we planned to bring in this year was a cruel joke on Canadians and would contribute to massive unemployment. They told us that our economic forecast of 1 per cent growth in the economy was terrible, and they criticized our energy pricing arrangements which would have started the greatest economic boom and job-creation opportunity which Canadians have ever seen. They did not notice the five-year science program to revitalize the training of Canadian scientists and the creation of home-grown innovation and technological upgrading which would have included 15,000 additional research opportunities and helped with our energy development.

You see, Mr. Speaker, unlike Liberal ad hoc, off the cuff, short range, expedient political action which varies with the changing political breeze, scientific planning and research requires long lead times and guaranteed funding. Such long-range planning will be of excellent benefit to the country in the vast technological development of new products and new production techniques which could make Canada an economic world leader with less than 5 per cent unemployment. What, may I ask, does 10 per cent unemployment relate to in this country of ours? Surely not to American unemployment, British, German or anyone else's unemployment. This is a country which has all the natural resources it could need, it has the energy to process those resources and the intelligence to do the whole job. Why should we be experiencing 10 per cent unemployment, even in these times?

But such long-range benefits do not pay off in votes at the polls, and this government's long-range plans seldom carry past the next election. Contrast the decade of decline in research spending under this government with the instant revitalizing done by the seven-month Conservative government which brought in a five-year plan for research funding and development and which has breathed new life into the Canadian science community.

Another accomplishment of the previous Conservative government which has gone unnoticed by the present government was the fact that unemployment had dropped almost a full percentage point, not seasonally adjusted, and that new housing starts, thanks to the mortgage tax credit scheme, coupled with the Small Businesses Loans Act, which has yet to be brought forward and may never be, which would have revitalized that extremely important job-sustaining element of our society, would have lowered unemployment levels even more.

They said they knew better how to run the country—and what has the government's first five months in office, after 18 years of tenure, produced? A $4 billion bigger deficit for 1980, higher and increasing unemployment, a first quarter growth—I should not call it growth, I should call it shrinkage—of 0.5 of 1 per cent, no energy-pricing agreement so that we may proceed with development and job creation, no industrial strategy, no comprehensive scientific policy to upgrade the skills of young Canadians and give them jobs, and no prospect of any of these in the foreseeable future.

Now they want the summer off. They want only to talk about constitutional change and hope that somehow the public of Canada will forget about Liberal failure during the next two summer months. Perhaps no one will notice the 2 per cent increase in home heating oil just sneaked through Parliament because they will not be buying it in the next two hot months. Perhaps they hope people will be so used to hearing about the increasing job lay-offs that they will not be furious with their government in the fall. Well, in two months' time when the House reconvenes, this government will have had seven months to achieve the miracles they have been unable to achieve throughout all the Trudeau years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gilchrist: You and I will be back, Mr. Speaker, to examine the record of another seven months of Liberal government. We will then be able to compare seven months of the Liberal government against seven months of the Conservative government. We will not mention that the Conservative government under the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) had to start from scratch. I have made these strong indictments in the hope it will shame or inspire the government to far better efforts for the good of Canada. We will just look at the seven months' record, and I will bet one hundred of highly inflated Liberal dollars after tax on the record of the big C. If you take that bet, Mr. Speaker, you will lose.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State, Mines): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure this evening to address some remarks to the allegation that the government has failed to develop a coherent economic development program. I should like to refer to a speech made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on February 12, 1980, in Toronto. He stated that the Liberals would capitalize on Canada's energy base in order to build a world competitive industrial sector.

One of the first things necessary in order to have a strong industrial base is to have a strong central government. In the last few years we in Canada have seen our federal administration gradually lose its power. This has been a source of a very, very high degree of concern to most Canadians. It has led to things such as one province stating to other provinces that it will restrict tradesmen and workers from coming into its jurisdiction offering their services for available jobs at any given time.

It would seem that also it is the intention of energy producing provinces in this country to maintain a large portion of the energy revenues they are able to obtain. I for one would not, nor would the government, ever begrudge energy producing provinces obtaining a large return on their energy resources. It is important that these provinces and areas that have depleting resources are in fact able to keep the momentum of their economic development going by widening the scope of the development of their future. However, it is also important that the government not accept producing provinces retaining vast amounts of energy and resources which would restrict other sectors of the country from obtaining a fair share of the economic activity and from in fact remaining viable producing regions of the country.

Let me take the case of Alberta. Certainly there is no resentment by the government or by myself that this province should be, for instance, the wealthiest province per capita and per resource income in the country. This is not a factor. Certainly no one in the government or on this side of the House would ever suggest that the economic surge of the west should be in any way impeded. As a member from an Atlantic region of this great country, it is not something that would make me say that we in our area should have equal returns from our resources as would a province such as Alberta. But in the future it is the hope of provinces such as Nova Scotia and Newfoundland that they too will be blessed with resources from energy potential. Certainly it would be the hope at that particular time that the federal government would assist these provinces in restructuring their manufacturing and processing to develop alternate sources of employment and enterprise to keep the momentum in these areas going.

Regardless of which provinces are the economic "have" provinces, we must never lose sight of the goal of reducing economic disparity and in fact hopefully doing away with economic disparity entirely. There are areas which were once sound financially. Industries were located in these particular areas. As these areas become more economically deprived, and as they went through times which were less fortunate economically, these industries became more vulnerable. Should these industries through some quirk fail to sustain the decline in economic activity in a particular region or in the country in general, then the industries which fail will not return to these areas when economic times become better. They will return to the larger urban areas, the more fortunate economic areas.

The areas which have suffered deprivation economically and whose privation in fact is accelerated by the loss of these very valuable assets will not get these assets back. This is one of the lessons we are learning from the monetarist theories in finance. If in fact we let happen whatever is going to happen, then we will encourage the centralization of economic activity in this country through ever-diminishing pockets of economic growth. In fact the rural areas will become diminished in their contribution to this country. The small community will diminish as an economic viability. This is something we cannot allow to happen.

The government has stated that it will use its energy wealth to create the basis for sustained and widespread industrial growth. To do this the federal government needs sufficient revenues and has developed two particular guidelines in this direction. The first one is that the price of oil in Canada should in some direct way reflect the costs of financing it. Second, the revenue-sharing system must be altered so as to ensure that the federal government now and in the future has sufficient revenue to allow it to carry out its basic responsibilities of economic stabilization and revenue equalization across the country. Certainly it is the government's aim.

The aim of increasing industrial prosperity across the country was stated in the Speech from the Throne. Energy-producing areas and economically successful areas, or areas which are increasing their economic strength, demand special attention from the federal government. This is realized by the government. In fact the federal government has acknowledged the needs of the west, the fact the west demands special attention and financing to meet its ever-increasing economic sphere of influence. I would go so far as to state in the House that if we as a country do not funnel more economic resources and financing into the western part of our country, then indeed we are making a very severe mistake.

The government indicated that increased industrial activity must take place in the west. Theirs is a depleting resource. Increased industrial activity in other fields is necessary if they are to achieve the required diversification to carry their economic expansion well beyond the exploration of their energy resources. The increased economic activity outside the resource field is happening already in the west but to a lesser extent than we would like. Head offices are moving into that area, developers and skilled labourers are moving to the west.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am trying to listen very carefully to what is being said by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan). I find I am prevented from doing so by the incessant chatter of members of the NDP who seem to be holding a private conversation or a private caucus.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would ask hon. members of the House to observe order. The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) has the floor.

Mr. MacLellan: I thank the hon. member and you, Mr. Speaker. The development of the west in areas other than resource activity is happening to an extent but less than we would like to see in the country at the present time. Head offices are moving to that area, as are developers, skilled labour and so on. However, I would think that it is the intention of the provincial government in that area—and I know that it is the intention of the federal government—that manufacturing and processing industries establish in that very vital area of our country. This shift will include more dynamic industrial activity in that area. It is the definite aim of the federal government to add secondary processing and manufacturing industries to the resource base of that area.

● (2050)

Along with the development of the industrial base in the west, the government also recognizes that all Canadians should benefit as much as possible from the success of the energy-producing provinces, be they east or west. This policy includes, wherever possible, not letting the investment of Canadians, be that investment in their homes, industry or capital, dissipate through high energy costs or resulting in increased inflation. We must be cognizant at all times of the investment of the average Canadian in this country. We must protect those investments as they exist at the present time. It is not always possible, but it is something of which we must be mindful at all times.

The average Canadian has, for instance, placed a great deal of investment capital in his home. Many of these people have paid off their mortgages and own their homes without having to account to any financial institution or person whatsoever. If that home were to be reduced drastically in value, then a person would lose a life of saving and work, and the only thing that perhaps he has of any monetary value in this world. This is something which we must not forget.

It is with these thoughts in mind that the federal government has introduced other programs along these particular lines, with the idea of developing a coherent economic development policy. The government has committed itself to developing a realistic pricing formula for energy for Canadians. The government wants a revenue-sharing system which is structured in such a way that if the world price rises the national government has shares its needs in order to carry out its national responsibilities. The government seeks a price-incentive system which fosters rapid substitution of other forms of energy for oil. This is one of the reasons why the alternate energy committee was set up and mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

This is why the government at the present time is fostering, as much as it possibly can, ways of immediately substituting natural gas for oil and of investing in coal areas in eastern and western Canada, to protect that valuable oil base. The government has also accelerated the development of indigenous supplies to develop supplies off the east coast of Canada and, until the supplies are brought ashore, to provide an assured foreign supply of oil to that region. That is why the government entered into the recent oil contract with Mexico and why it is so much concerned about ensuring that there is a definite oil supply for eastern Canada in any given winter. It will be monitoring the refineries to ensure that the information being provided to Canadians is in fact correct, and that incorrect information will not mean a winter of privation for eastern Canadians.

It is also important to ensure that the petroleum industry has the incentive to help achieve its energy goals, and that Canadian-owned and controlled firms play a larger role in the energy field of this country. This is why it is the target of the federal government to obtain 50 per cent Canadian ownership of that very valuable industry.

There has been a disturbing increase in company takeovers and the diversification of the oil companies into other economic activities and spheres of economic activity in this country. This is particularly alarming when one acknowledges that the energy-producing companies are in fact securing very valuable, very heavy and very much increased revenues from their source of activities, that they are not only in oil and gas but are now in coal and are branching out into other industries.

If one considers at the same time that the present economic climate has reduced the profitability in other areas of economic activity in this country, it is extremely easy for oil companies to buy up those companies when they are experiencing difficult times. That is why, along with the fact that a great percentage of the revenues from the oil and gas industry will funnel into other countries through dividend payments, we must as soon as possible strive to obtain a larger percentage of Candian ownership and control over our oil and gas industry.

It is also the reason why the federal government is putting such great emphasis on Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada is the foundation on which Canada will develop a large portion of its energy potential. This is why the federal government has granted to Petro-Canada an additional $80 million for investment purposes. Petro-Canada has played a large part in the development and bringing on stream of energy potential of eastern Canada, be it the natural gas off Sable Island or the oil and gas in the Hibernia region.

I submit that one cannot say that the government has failed to develop a coherent economic development policy. However, if we are not careful, this economic development policy, through inactivity, unco-operative other levels of government and indifference of Canadians, will not be successful.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I know now that I am on the right track because the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is applauding.

Mr. Knowles: It is the red face.

Mr. Deans: It is the red face, is it? I have listened intermittently to the debate this afternoon and this evening. If one looks at the motion one cannot help but think how unfortunate it is that the vehicle which we use in order to discuss what Canada's future is likely to be is an opposition motion, before we get around to talking about the economic development which most of us would like to see, the way in which that economic development might be brought about, and the kind of benefits we would hope to derive on behalf of the people of Canada in the short term and the long term.

What we should be talking about and we have been talking about in part is the basic criteria which must be put in place in order to offset the problems which have arisen as the result of the attitude which has become evident through the succession of Liberal and Conservative governments over the last 20 years. It is time to say quite bluntly that we need no more tinkering with the economy, that it is time for us to look at the fundamental aspects of Canada's economy, to make some decisions about what we hope to achieve and how we intend to achieve those hopes.

There have been many changes over the past few years. I have listened particularly to government supporters enumerating the very many government measures which have been introduced. I am prepared to concede that some of these measures have resulted in a degree of success which makes them worth while. However, I think it is fair to say that if one were to judge the state of economy today as it affects the average individual, one would come to the conclusion that Canada's economy in 1980 is not as strong as Canada's economy was in 1970, and that in 1970 it was weaker than it was in 1960.

On balance, we have lost control, if we ever had control, and we have failed to put in place the long-term control mechanisms which are required if we are to derive the maximum benefits.

● (2100)

Why would we worry about the economy? Why not just let it take its course? Why bother? I think, to begin with, the reason is that we have the responsibility here in the House of Commons to put in place the policy measures which will bring about the long-term best results for the majority of Canadians. The economy is made up, I suppose in essence, of labour and capital. Labour does not really understand capital very well. Capital fails to understand the needs and the ambition of labour.

One of the primary cornerstones of any discussion, particularly any discussion about the future of the country, is that we have to set as a principal objective that all of the planning must include an understanding of the kind of community that we want. We want jobs. We want jobs that are safe and secure and reasonably well paid, rewarding both financially and personally.

From the point of view of capital we come to the conclusion—from what has been happening and in reading the financial pages of the many journals that are published, and many in the House of Commons see capital as an end in itself—that the making of money is in itself a worth-while endeavour.

As a nation and as a House of Commons I think we have to look at capital as a resource not unlike gold, oil or wheat. Capital is a means to serve a community's interest. The flow of capital is seen, therefore, like the flow of other raw materials. When we export capital, as we do in large amounts year after year, as opposed to exporting finished goods, we are exporting jobs. As we look at capital in all of its grandeur we have to recognize that it is only when it is put to use in Canada, to develop Canada for Canadians, that it serves a useful purpose.

It is a bit mind-boggling, as one who is not a financial expert, to read in the local papers day after day at times when plants are closing, when people are being laid off, when mortgage foreclosing is taking place and when small business is suffering considerably at the hands of large capital, that the major corporate sector is making more profit today than it ever has in its history. Why is this happening? What is it about the imbalance that has developed in our country? Why does this happen at a time when everyone is feeling the pinch and people are unable to find employment, for instance, the young people who cannot find employment, people who are laid off, where whole communities are down—Windsor is a good example of this—but there are many others all across the country? Why is it that as you read that on one page, you then turn over and read that the third quarter, the second quarter or the first quarter profit margins in industry after industry, sector after sector, are higher than ever before? We should ask ourselves the question are we using the capital generated in a way that will be beneficial for my children, your children, your grandchildren—children that we do not even know—who are going to have to live in a country that we leave for them?

As we begin to look at the economy and the development of Canada, we have to decide that all of the good intentions in the world will not change it. All of the wishing in the world will not change it either. A bit of tinkering by the government from time to time will prove beneficial in a marginal way, but in the long run it will not prove to be of any benefit.

We should approach a revitalization of the economy on a sectoral basis. For the purposes of my argument I have identified nine sectors that should be looked at. We must take a serious look at the depletable non-renewable natural resource sector. We must take a look at what I call, for the want of a better term, the accommodation sector. That includes commercial, industrial and private accommodation. We must take a look at the communications sector in Canada. We must take a look at transportation as a sector and all of its ramifications. We must look at manufacturing as a sector. We must look as a sector at agriculture, food, fishing and forestry because they are renewable resources. We must take a look at tourism as a sector. This is one of the least developed and yet it has considerable potential. We must look at what can be done about it. We must look at energy likewise. And finally we must look at finance as a sector of the economy. So we have nine of them.

In natural resources we have to look at what we have done over the years with the resources that were left to us, that belong to us, from which we are entitled to see some benefit. After years and years of Liberal and Conservative administration we see that we have received little if anything in the way of tangible benefits from the exploitation of our mineral resources. I tell members to travel across the northern part of this country or travel across northern Ontario, if you do not want to go very far, and you will see community after community that was reliant on a mine or on a sawmill which has long since gone by the way. One can see homes that were owned by individuals who lost everything that they had put into them. One can see communities that died because there was no effort made to put back into those communities something that would last and provide some stability for the future.

We have seen the exploitation by foreign interests of our resources, in other words, the taking of those resources from this country to other parts of the world in the raw and semi-raw state and manufactured into the very things that we ourselves must buy. We have seen the value added benefit that we should have received, because they were our resources, accruing to another part of the world. We have seen workers in those countries getting the benefit of the better paying jobs and the benefit of research and development, while our workers ended up working in the mines. This has resulted in our country putting up with pollution, facing the acid rain problem, facing the health risks and, in other words, Canada having to take the short end and receiving little, if anything, in the way of tax dollars from the very resource which belonged to us. For years, year after year, this has gone on. We have seen the export of capital in the resource sector. As Canadian ore deposits decline we see Inco using the capital which resulted from the development of Canada going into Indonesia, and using government capital to go into Indonesia to develop similar kinds of things in that part of the world.

In the area of accommodation, we have had numerous studies but no action on the question of land use, on the question of foreign ownership of land, on the question of adequate industrial use against agricultural land and the loss of agricultural land. We have had discussion and study on regional relocation, and in particular DREE's role, for example, in the relocation of industry. But what have we seen by way of concrete policy that defines what the government's role will be and how, if at all, we are going to try to develop new industry rather than simply shift the pieces around as one might in a chess game? By shifting the pieces around one creates unemployment in one part of the country while trying to create employment in another. That is the kind of policy we are seeing. We have yet to see a statement from the government on housing. Housing is a right. It is the right of everyone to be able to have a decent place to live at a price he or she can afford.

I heard my colleague in the Liberal party who sat down recently saying that people have this investment in their homes and therefore cannot afford to see the value of the home depreciate or go down. Yet the truth of the matter is that it was the policy of the Liberal government in the early and middle 1960s that drove up the price of housing. It was the policy of this government that floated interest rates and did away with fixed term mortgages that drove up the price of housing which caused immeasurable hardship. Today we are feeling the toll of it. Today we are suffering as a result of it.

Where are the policies to deal with that? We have seen the ongoing debate, ad nauseam perhaps in some people's view, but nevertheless necessary on the matter of interest rates and who should control them. It is quite obvious to me that the government must, through the Bank of Canada, if need be, but certainly through the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), have control over interest rates.

I come now to communication, an area of high technology and excellent potential for growth. We see Ottawa and Winnipeg battling over the computer chip industry at a time when there should be some direction and effort made to co-ordinate the industry and get our potential developed and into the world marketplace. We see the kinds of things Bell Canada has done as it affects CBC in communications where the more profitable parts are cut off and given to the private sector, thereby making it necessary for the taxpayer to carry a larger burden. There is no way that makes sense.

There is no rational approach to transportation, no attempt to use the public area in transportation to offset the very high costs of fuel. There is no attempt to electrify when electrification makes sense, and no attempt to use the indigenous transportation methods available to us such as the seaway that could be used to much greater extent than it has in the past. There is very little effort to develop a sensible and convenient passenger transportation system on ground rather than using private vehicles. We need a review of the transportation sector.

The manufacturing sector is the fifth of the nine sectors I want to discuss briefly. We see absolute failure in this sector. It is hard to believe that the government would watch while the auto industry decays before its eyes. It is disintegrating. The whole manufacturing sector of the auto industry is under severe pressure at the very time the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) takes another jaunt to Washington. When he gets there he cannot find anyone who feels badly about what is happening to Canada. While he is there, however, the Ford Motor Company and American Motors are entering into agreements with Toyota, Mazda, and Peugeot to manufacture their products in Canada.

Where is our share, Mr. Speaker? Do you hear any talk about our share of manufacturing or our share of the components industry? We never hear of this from the government and you never hear it from outside either. If you do not push for it you do not get it. We do not push, therefore, we will not get it.

This is going to be the new way of doing things, however. You can see it coming. The Ford Motor Company has made it quite clear that they hope to enter into an agreement with Toyota in the near future. The agreement will mean that Toyota vehicles will be manufactured in the United States. The component parts will also be manufactured there. AMC has indicated that they have a similar agreement and are about to do the same thing. The small car will be manufactured on the North American continent—but where will our share be, Mr. Speaker? When will we hear the government address this and many other problems of the manufacturing sector? It is a sector that has been sorely neglected and which, to a large extent, is controlled by the subsidiary operation, or the parent company in other parts of the world but primarily in the United States. When things do not go well at home they do not look to Canada and say there is a good operation there that they want to keep going. Rather, they take the operation out of Canada and put it back near the parent company because they have an obligation to the government and the community in which the head office is situated.

We all know the end result, having seen it happen over the last few months. A number of companies closed down, not because they were not efficient and not because the workers were not producing—not because there was not a market for the product, but because they wanted to do the manufacturing at home. That was what was in the best interests of the United States economy. That is the kind of manufacturing sector we have, without any degree of economy or any opportunity to enter world markets. It is influenced, if not controlled, by the extraterritorial application of corporate law. I suggest that is another area we should be examining, Mr. Speaker.

Tourism is another area to which we must give some attention. We must learn to take advantage of the tremendous natural tourist attractions that we have in this country. The other day I drove from Ottawa to Hamilton. As I drove through the St. Lawrence area, past Brockville and on to Hamilton, I could not but remark how wonderful and marvellous it was. It is breathtaking, Mr. Speaker, yet we do not have a co-ordinated tourist promotion program. The government does not appear to be interested in it, yet it provides a grand opportunity for capital flow into Canada and a chance to reverse some of the trends.

The discussion goes on about energy, of course. Some of our colleagues, representing Alberta and other places, speak about the need to go to world prices. We have to ask ourselves why we should go to world prices. Just because someone in Saudi Arabia, Iran, Iraq or Egypt decides to hold us to ransom, does that mean we have to pay the same ransom to our own family? Surely to heaven it can be seen clearly that we ought to be doing the same thing these other countries are doing in an effort to develop their industry and their economy. We should be using the money to make the transition that must be made from a heavy reliance on oil to other energy resources, but we are not doing that. We should be talking about a pipeline from west to east rather than from north to south.

We should be talking about an integrated energy policy that takes into account not only petroleum based products but also electricity and all the other methods of developing energy. We need an infrastructure that allows for the transition that must take place from our heavy reliance on petroleum based energy to a more readily renewable resource. We are not doing that and, indeed, we are not even talking about it. We are still caught up in the debate about whether we should be paying $36 per barrel, what we should be doing with the money, how much should be going to the companies, how much should be going to Alberta and how much should be coming to the federal treasury, without any discussion about what is in the best interests of Canada as a whole.

Then there is the question of finance and all the problems we have seen in the recent discussion of the Bank Act and the way interest rates have been manipulated. People have lost their homes because of that manipulation, and people have lost their businesses because they could not afford to pay for the inventory they had to carry.

The high cost of money has made it virtually impossible for expansion to take place in the industrial marketplace, because people cannot afford to pay the high cost. There is no clear direction from the government, however, on what its fiscal or financial policy is. We end up with a void caused by inaction. Inaction in itself breeds lethargy and lethargy means higher costs, because those who are not so scrupulous take advantage of the circumstances.

I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there are some things we might do, and I shall be brief. There are nine areas of concern. We might divide the House of Commons into nine committees and give each of those nine committees responsibility—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the boys in the NDP settle their little row, we will get on with the evening's events.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, could we go back to Ian?

Mr. Simmons: I realize that what the NDP member was saying may be more pleasing to Tory ears than what they will hear me say in a few minutes. Even the NDP agrees with that, Mr. Speaker.

I have been forced to go back to the motion to find out what we are debating. I have listened with some interest this afternoon and this evening to the opposition spokesman in this particular debate. It has been a very worth-while exercise to try to deduce what the subject is from what they are saying. Nothing has been said thus far that would indicate to me that we ought to be talking about the government's alleged "failure to develop and implement a coherent economic development policy."

The least the House could expect from hon. members opposite is that they address themselves to that subject at least once or twice during their remarks, but their batting average on that one tonight is absolutely zero. They have done all the right things, the Tory and the NDP spokesmen, without exception. They did the predictable this afternoon and this evening. They indulged in a veritable orgy of condemnation. They tell us that everything is wrong in this country, there is nothing right any more. Even one Tory agrees with me.

Mr. Wilson: No.

Mr. Simmons: Do I see two?

Mr. Wilson: No.

Mr. Simmons: They do the predictable, the usual business, the orgy of words, the orgy of condemnation, the wrath. They are all worked up, in true Pavlovian style. Once again they perform their little simplistic act to win the approbation of those in the seats next to them. What about the subject at hand? Where is the evidence? Why do they not give us some evidence? Why do they not cite some evidence about this alleged failure to which the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) has drawn our attention? Where is it? Another thing I noticed this afternoon and this evening—

Mr. Wilson: When were you here?

Mr. Simmons: I would not expect the hon. member to know what I am talking about.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: They are tender tonight. They have lost their leader.

Mr. Nystrom: Which leader?

Mr. Simmons: That is what we are all asking. Where is the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) these days, the real leader?

Miss MacDonald: Where is the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Simmons: Up she goes!

Miss MacDonald: Is he out sucking his sore thumb?

Mr. Kempling: He is sucking his thumb again, is he?

Mr. Simmons: Their heart is not in it.

Mr. Kempling: Your foot is in it.

Mr. Simmons: That is what I noticed this afternoon and this evening. They stand up and go through the motions. We got them up to say a few words because they had to punch the day. It was an opposition day, one which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) begged for last week. Where is he now if he wants to talk about so-called economic failure?

Miss MacDonald: Where's MacEachen?

Mr. Simmons: The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has a very good reason to not be here, as the hon. member knows. I have finally found something to incite the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). This evening they stand and go through the motions, but their heart is not in it. Why, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Kempling: That is three times you have said that.

Mr. Simmons: I have to say it four, five, six, seven times for some people.

Mr. Wilson: On a point of order, I am really standing on a point of order to allow the hon. member opposite to get hold of his emotions. He started off on three, possibly four different points and he has not been able to continue any point to its proper conclusion. I would like to allow him the time to rethink his thoughts so that he might make that point which is so telling and so important.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Simmons: I say to the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) that even the Speaker thinks he is making a fool of himself. He should keep his mouth shut so that some doubt will remain. If he opens it, there will be no doubt at all. I advise him to listen. He might even learn something.

Mr. Wilson: From you? Never!

Mr. Simmons: Being in an instructive mood tonight, as I am, I will go over my three or four points again. I thought I was dealing with some reasonably intelligent people. I admit that I assumed that I had a fairly sophisticated group of listeners and would be able to move rather quickly. For the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre, and my apologies to the rest who understood, I will cover the points again. Then I will give to him, in writing, explanatory notes. Who knows, he might understand them.

Mr. Wilson: One.

Mr. Simmons: One, where is the evidence of this alleged failure by this government to have an economic policy? Where is it? I have not heard one shred of evidence this afternoon or this evening. There were a lot of tactics, and I heard a lot of wind and hot air. However, I did not hear one shred of evidence about any lack of an economic development policy, not one.

I ask the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre, does he understand point number one before I move on to point number two?

Mr. Wilson: Two?

Mr. Simmons: There are only two. I have said them twice. I say for the benefit of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre, as I have given up on the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) who is about to give up on himself, I believe—

Mr. Kempling: The golden age of b.s.

Mr. Simmons: The second point, for the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre—

Mr. Wilson: You have not completed the first one.

Mr. Simmons: Why is their heart not in it? Why are they going through the motions? The stomach has gone out of them; their heart is not in it. They cannot even get up for the fight any more. They are still living the night before February 18. They cannot accept what is the case. This is July. This government has been in power for a number of months, but they are still living in the past. They are still wishing their lives away. I finally said something the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre understands.

The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is gone. I had hoped to have a few words with him.

An hon. Member: You are driving us out of here.

Mr. Simmons: We are going to drive a lot more of you out of here next election day. In the meantime, stick around.

An hon. Member: Come to Burnaby.

Mr. Simmons: If that's an invitation, I will work on it. My good friend for Etobicoke Centre is still having trouble getting beyond one. Two comes next, then three. I will talk to the hon. member later about the rest of it. A few moments ago the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain, and I hope he is within hearing distance of my voice, attempted to rouse himself, to bring himself up for the occasion. He tried to give an example. What did he do? He dragged out good old tourism, good old motherhood. What did he say? With expanded chest and full height, he stood up and said, "We have not yet really explored all our potential in the tourist industry." Isn't that brilliant? Isn't that something new and novel? Should he not rush out and have it copyrighted? "We have not exhausted our potential in the tourist industry." That is clear evidence of our failure on this side, that we have not gone out and done all that we could do in the tourist industry.

The hon. member rested his case on that. That is our sin, that we have not done all the job yet, that we are only getting on with it. We have not done it all. That is the indictment he hurls our way. That was the most vile thing he could say about us over here, that we have not completely exhausted all the avenues in terms of tourism.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: They are happy tonight, Mr. Speaker. They look at me. They should be happy, their leader is not here. They are reasonably happy.

Mr. Kempling: Where is Trudeau? Where is MacEachen? Where is Gray? Where are all the economic brains?

Mr. Simmons: I do wish, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: As soon as they are ready. We have all the time in the world. I do wish the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain were here because I want to respond to a couple of the points he made. At one point he lamented the fact that this debate on economic development should be taking place on an opposition motion. I happen to agree with him there. It is unfortunate that the only time we hear a debate in this House—I say, "debate" as opposed to statements—is on a motion such as this about economic development. And why? That is what I ask myself every day during the question period when I sit here and watch, and watch—

• (2130)

Miss MacDonald: And watch?

Mr. Simmons: —and watch!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands is trying desperately but not very successfully to make cheap political points. She does not even do that very well. Where is all her concern for economic development, then? Where is the concern of the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain? If they want to talk about economic development, let them raise some of these matters in the question period or inject it in any number of debates, for instance, on Bill C-30, the borrowing bill, or in discussion of Bill C-3. There are lots of opportunities.

Opposition speakers tell us tonight that the only time we can talk about economic affairs is on an opposition motion. That may well be the case because in very real measure it is the opposition in this House, as in any other, which to a large degree sets the tone and content of the debates. If they choose during the question period to attempt to make cheap political points, that is their problem rather than ours. We have a number of answers for them. We do not have them all, but we are working on those.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: We have a number of the answers but they are afraid to ask the questions.

According to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain, if I may quote him, "It is time to say we need no more tinkering with the economy". This is a welcome announcement. I was glad to hear an NDP spokesman tell us we needed no more tinkering with the economy. It is welcome news, because we on this side happen to believe the same thing.

Mr. Kempling: He meant making a mess of things.

Mr. Simmons: The hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) knows all about making a mess of things. He would know a lot about that. The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain recommended no more tinkering with the economy. Here, once again, the batting average of the NDP is 1,000. They have managed to get on both sides of this issue, too, because during the election campaign they were advocating a great deal of tinkering—they wanted to take over everything and run the whole show. Even since, I have heard some of them imply that the government could do it better than private industry. They want to run the goose that lays the golden eggs clean out of the country.

Mr. Speaker, if we are to have any success with economic development policies the full co-operation of a lot of people is required, including industry which has not in any shape or form pulled its weight as far as research and development is concerned. We have goals which we should like to see achieved.

An hon. Member: What are they?

Mr. Simmons: I abjectly apologize to the fairly sophisticated members of the opposition who are sitting over there at the present time, but I am still pursuing my mandate of a few minutes ago when at the request of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre I undertook to repeat everything two or three times. If it is no longer operative, would the hon. member release me from that obligation so that I could get back to some adult talk?

Mr. Wilson: What are these clearly stated objectives?

Mr. Simmons: Aha! One of them clearly is to see to it that the national expenditures on research and development are raised to 1.5 per cent of GNP by the mid-1980s. Now there is an objective for you! That is a commitment. But, to carry it out, we need—and I will explain number one to the hon. gentleman first; we have discovered that we have to revert back to the game plan—to achieve that objective we need the co-operation of industry which has not been pulling its weight on this particular commitment, Mr. Speaker. We are hoping this will change. We are hoping to get the message out. I agree that it has to be said not once, but twice and several times so industry understands.

Mr. Kempling: Say something thoughtful.

Mr. Simmons: I will give the hon. member for Burlington one single sentence, with thought. But he must give me an undertaking that he will get somebody to explain it to him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: Now, Mr. Speaker, let me turn to the notes I have here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hooray!

Mr. Knowles: Does that mean I shall have no opportunity to ask him a question?

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to respond to the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. But I must.

An hon. Member: There was nothing to respond to.

Mr. Jelinek: There was one thing he said in the 20 minutes allotted to him, and I wrote it down because he repeated it so often. He said that the official opposition does not have its heart in what it is doing because we cannot come up with any evidence which demonstrates a lack of an economic policy by the Liberal government. He nods his head in agreement. Well, I will tell him something. My heart is in it, and so is the heart of every member on this side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: Our hearts are in it because we know that Canada, with all the potential it has, is the richest nation per capita in natural resources, the richest nation in human resources, the richest nation in economic possibilities. Yet what has happened? I will tell the hon. member what has happened. He says he wants facts. Well, in 1970 Canada was the third richest nation in the world, behind only Sweden and the United States. But by 1978 we had fallen to eleventh place under the Trudeau government, and we are falling even faster.

I will tell him a few more things. Federal government spending, for example, will be $60 billion this year. The spending deficit will be $14 billion. The total gross national debt is $105 billion. Interest on debt now costs the taxpayers of Canada $11 billion annually. These numbers are too large for many Canadians to relate to in a meaningful way. If they are broken down, however, their magnitude becomes more meaningful, and I will break them down for the hon. member and for the record because this is the incompetence of ten, 12 or 15 years of Liberal administration. These are facts and figures. The hon. member says our hearts are not in it. They are because we know the potential future Canada has. However, it has been demonstrated that that potential cannot be reached with a Liberal administration continuing to run the country to the ground the way it has been.

● (2140)

To break down those big figures which are so difficult for that hon. member to understand, government spending, for example, will equal $6,800 per taxpayer in this current year, 1980-81. This compares to only $1,600 per taxpayer just over a decade ago, the year before the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office. On a per capita basis government spending this year will amount to $2,492 per man, woman and child in Canada, and it was only just over $500 ten years ago. Government spending is now almost five times greater than it was when the Prime Minister first took office. These are some of the statistics.

The government's total debt is the equivalent of $11,970 per taxpayer. That is just the debt. I am trying to give that hon. member these facts and statistics. In private industry, an enterprise with revenue which only equalled 76 per cent of expenditures and gross debt that was more than double the value of its net assets would be forced into receivership. However, the federal government cannot declare bankruptcy. It has no place to file. The Liberal government just borrows more and prints more, which only goes to feed inflation. Yet what is the Liberal administration considering at this point in time? Well, the Trudeau government is considering an end to the indexation of the personal income tax system. In fact the Liberals want us to pay for their financial sins. A typical taxpayer earning $20,000 annually would see his taxes rise by $1,564 between now and 1985, and lower income families would proportionately suffer even more.

And for what? For the exorbitant spending habits of the government. That is for what. For example, in 1978 the federal government spent $7 million on food, booze and entertainment. That is almost $20,000 per day. Expressed another way, that is the equivalent—and perhaps the hon. member will be interested in this—of 70,000 cases of liquor. The list goes on and on, and I will drop that part of my statement right now.

I just wanted to satisfy the hon. member, who came up with those ridiculous statements during his 20 minutes telling us that there is no concrete evidence to show the mismanagement of the Liberal administration and the fact that the Liberal administration has not developed any economic development programs. It has not. In fact I had hoped that after the Quebec referendum was over and the constitutional debate got under way, which it now is, the Liberal administration would settle down and begin to deal with economic problems. Although constitutional changes are necessary and important, it is my belief that the economy is still the number one concern of every Canadian, and I also believe that unless and until many economic problems and questions are resolved, regional differences are going to continue to grow regardless of how many constitutional debates are taking place.

But what happens? There has been no budget. A budget is the basis for an economic development program, but there has not been one. On April 21 there was a so-called mini-budget, and that mini-budget leaped beyond all precedents and denied members of Parliament the right to debate and amend the motion of approval required for tax measures, and although labelled as an economic statement by the Trudeau government, the proposed measures began taking money out of Canadians' pockets at midnight that same night.

Not only did hon. members opposite try to sneak in tax measures in a mere speech in reply to the throne speech, but the Liberals also attempted to short circuit the parliamentary process by not allowing a proper debate on what are clearly budget matters. A budget—even a mini one—demands debate, especially when it demonstrates a spendthrift direction in fiscal policy. What about the profound arrogance of the Liberals in introducing tax measures which, for the most part, were identical to those on which they defeated the former government just a few months ago?

The mini budget was, however, consistent with the Liberal's political philosophy. First, it stole many of the measures introduced in the budget of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), necessary tax amendments in which the Liberals had already indicated they had no confidence. Second, the Liberal document demonstrated a willingness to spend more and borrow more, as I have just stated, with no apparent concern for the consequences, and the new Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) cribbed some of the Progressive Conservative spending programs and ignored, on the other hand, the balancing revenue-producing and cutback measures. Third, the budget of the Minister of Finance broke the Prime Minister's campaign pledge not to increase the deficit.

The Liberal fiscal policy projected a $14.2 billion deficit in 1980-81, an increase of 13 per cent over the projected deficit of the hon. member for St. John's West. In other words, it offered no help to farmers or small businessmen. It substantially increased government spending. It offered no help to home owners. It just stole some of the positive measures from the budget of the hon. member for St. John's West.

On a general basis, therefore, we can conclude very easily that there is no economic development program present right now or being considered for the future as far as we can see, as far as the Canadian public can see or, more important, as far as the Canadian businessman can see.

There are many areas which can no longer be overlooked. One of them is the ailing auto industry. Just to show the importance of the auto industry in Canada I will read a few paragraphs from a paper produced by the automotive parts industry in Canada. I quote:

> The automotive industry is essential to Canada. The automotive industry has a significant economic history, having played a central role in the establishment of secondary industry in Ontario and the rest of Canada. There are over 120,000 workers directly employed in the automotive industry, over half of which are producing automotive parts. The automotive parts industry supports a great deal of employment indirectly by major purchases of goods and services and through the disbursement of income. It is estimated that the 120,000 industry jobs can be linked to another 520,000 workers in Ontario and 600,000 jobs in the rest of Canada.
> The automotive industry supports one-third of the steel industry and a similar portion of the iron-ore industry. Plastic producers, aluminum casters, glass manufacturers and the specialty products industry are all dependent to a large degree on the industry. In addition, many Canadian cities are entirely dependent on the automotive industry and "live and die" according to the health of the industry.
> The governments in Canada must recognize the importance of this sector in its economic framework and provide an environment in which the automotive industry can survive and compete in world markets.

That is from a Canadian automotive parts industry brief. Having said that, we have heard nothing specific, as evidenced by the minister's answers over the last few months—and I am glad he is in the House today—to questions from myself, from the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) and from other colleagues. I personally have asked the minister to give up specifics on April 16 and 24, on May 5, 13 and 23, on June 25, and as recently as last week, and the minister has yet to come up with one specific program and proposal for the automotive industry in Canada. He had the gall and the audacity earlier today in the debate to tell us—I checked in the blues—that the Progressive Conservatives want 16,000 Chrysler employees out of work. He told us that the PCs want Canadian small businesses to close down. I suggest that if that is not a lie, then it is the furthest thing from the truth.

An hon. Member: Watch it.

Mr. Jelinek: The minister dares, after sitting in the House for only three or four months, to try to turn the tables and blame the Conservative government for the loss of jobs, for the inaction in the automotive industry, when it was under his leadership and when he was Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that the Canadian labour force in the auto industry had decreased. The lay-offs did not begin to take place when the Conservatives were in government. They began to take place when the minister took over.

I realize that it is not solely the minister's fault, that a great part of the problem stems from the negative economic trends in the United States and the ailing auto industry in that country. I also realized, and perhaps it should be stated more often, that the big auto makers are greatly to blame for the problems they are experiencing within their own industry today for not having the foresight to look toward smaller and more efficient automobiles. I realize all those things, Mr. Speaker. But that is not to say that the government can sit idly by without taking any positive steps to assist the program.

The minister went to Washington to meet with his counterparts at a well-publicized, well-touted meeting a few weeks ago. What are the results of that meeting? I will read you from the minister's own press release. The main result of that meeting was that "they agreed to hold further discussions." I tell you, I am fed up with just discussions, the automobile industry is fed up with just discussions, and the unemployed are fed up with just discussions; they want action. There are things that could be taking place today. The minister did not outline an auto pact presentation that he was going to make to his U.S. counterparts. He has admitted that in his press release and in his answers to our questions over the past few weeks. Now he has the nerve to come here and try to turn the tables and blame us. I just hope that the minister will have enough sense either to explain the position he took earlier today, which I called the closest thing to a lie, or withdraw the statement.

There is no excuse, in my view, for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the government to stand idly by and just hold discussions while tens of thousands of Canadians are hit with massive lay-offs. Perhaps the minister has been preoccupied until now with the $200 million package to Chrysler Canada which, as you know, happens to be located in his own riding in Windsor.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He is thinking about the Liberal leadership.

Mr. Jelinek: Perhaps the minister is thinking about the Liberal leadership, as my colleague says. He is certainly acting like that in the question period.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: Perhaps the minister does not realize that the auto industry is suffering in other parts of Canada as well, in such places as Oakville, Oshawa, Brampton, St. Catharines, St. Thomas, to name just a few. Even the Chrysler proposal seems to have been a sham since less than 48 hours after receiving the $200 million loan guarantee, Chrysler of Canada laid off a further 1,400 people without even a peep from the minister and this government. Yet, when the minister gave the loan guarantee, he knew that Chrysler would lay off 1,400 more people.

An hon. Member: Does he care?

Mr. Jelinek: Does he care, my hon. friend for Etobicoke Centre asks. I do not think he can care because he has not taken any action. Why has the minister not taken some immediate, short-term steps while he has taken the long-term steps in renegotiating the auto pact with the United States? The short-term steps I refer to are steps such as removing the 9 per cent federal excise tax from cars assembled or manufactured in Canada. I know it is a small step, but at least it is a step in the right direction. That alone would reduce the cost of vehicles built in Canada and thereby stimulate sales to a certain extent. The loss of revenue from the tax to the government could easily be offset by the saving in unemployment insurance benefits which, as of today, have already reached the staggering sum of $5 million a week within the auto industry alone, not to mention the secondary manufacturing sector.

Why has the minister not taken up the suggestion of eliminating the $100 excise tax on vehicles with air conditioners? If he had talked to the dealers across the country he would know that that alone would help move inventory from dealerships in this country.

Why has the minister not adopted the recommendation to impose quotas on offshore imports of automobiles? It would not be a precedent-setting case. The same government imposed textile quotas when the Canadian textile industry was in trouble, and this side of the House approved that. It imposed shoe quotas when the Canadian shoe industry was in trouble, and we supported that. Why is there not some action? If the minister does not want to accept the recommendations we and other interested groups are making, why does he not come up with some solutions of his own? Lada cars are being sold in Canada and promoted by the minister. That is fantastic. We are buying cars from a country which has invaded Afghanistan and butchered innocent men, women and children. We are doing the right thing so far as the Olympic boycott is concerned and, hypocritically, on the other hand the government is supporting the sale of Lada cars when thousands of auto workers in Canada are unemployed.

Mr. Gray: Are you against selling wheat? Is that it?

Mr. Jelinek: I can see that the minister is starting to become a little nervy over there when he hears the truth from this side of the House, when he hears that there are potential steps that can be or should be taken. I wonder how long he is going to go on meeting with his counterparts and not resolving anything.

It is not as if the government and the minister did not have any options. There are options, and I have just mentioned a few. However, if the minister is unable to deal with the problems affecting the auto industry in Canada, which seems to be the case, and if the minister is unable to improve the provisions within the Auto Pact for the benefit of the auto industry in Canada, which seems to be the case, and in short, if the minister is unable to take any action in this regard, which also seems to be the case, then I urge him at least to bring this whole matter before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs forthwith for an immediate review of the state of the automobile industry in Canada, as well as an over-all review of the obsolete and inadequate Auto Pact in order that all concerned, namely, management, labour, government and opposition parties could come to a positive, fair and equitable solution in a much needed public debate. The minister and the government have options. For God's sake, let us not waste any more time and let us exercise some of those options.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SHIPBUILDING—REDUCTION OF SUBSIDY—COMPARABLE PROGRAM OF ASSISTANCE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, the question which brings me here this evening—and I am sorry to see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) leaving—has to do with an area in which from time to time he expresses concern, that is, the well-being of Canadian industry.

On July 7 I asked the minister whether or not he could give us some information as to where the comparable offsetting program stood which was to come in by way of replacement for the reduction in the national shipbuilding subsidy from 20 per cent to 9 per cent. It seemed to us at the time rather shortsighted for the government to reduce one program before it had completed work and put in place the subsequent program. At the time the minister indicated to me that he was not too concerned about it to begin with. I should like to quote him from Hansard—I do not have the page number—of Monday July 7, in response to my question when he said in part:

> I am advised that most of the Canadian shipyards have relatively full order books to build ships that were eligible for the 20 per cent subsidy.

Elsewhere he argued:

> I believe it is a fact that most, if not all, Canadian shipyards have relatively full order books providing them with work until 1982, in some cases, and in others well into 1981—

● (2200)

The fact of the matter is that we have about 18 shipyards in Canada that are active in this program and in fact rely upon it.

What is the current situation today? For example, two Montreal shipyards are out of work. They have laid off 1,400 workers in the marine area in the last eight months. Approximately 700 of these employees were reassigned to the rail car division, but the work in that division as well will run out at the end of this year. By the end of 1980, six other shipyards in Canada will have run out of orders as well. Therefore, a total of eight out of the 18 will have no new orders by the end of this year.

In 1981 three shipyards will run out of work in the spring, two will run out of work in the summer, and two in the fall or early winter. By the end of 1981, 15 of the 18 shipyards will have no work. In 1982, the year in which the minister feels very confident that there will be lots of employment and lots of orders for work in these yards, two shipyards will run out of work by the late spring or early summer. Therefore, by the end of 1982 there will be only one shipyard in Canada with any work under way by way of new orders.

Again I will repeat my concern. The Canadian shipyard industry has come to depend in no small way upon the 20 per cent subsidy. It has been extended by successive governments over a significant period of time now. The subsidy was to run out on July 1, and in fact it was allowed to lapse. It reverted back to 9 per cent which was the level of subsidy and assistance in place some years ago. There are two things wrong with that. First, it was done without consultation with the industry. Second, not only was it done without consultation, at the time of the presentation of their annual brief to the Canadian government, to the minister and his officials involved, there was a clear impression left of support for further extension of that subsidy. That word was pretty well spread throughout the industry. The consequence was that yards seeking new orders and in the course of negotiating for new orders were proceeding at a regular, proper business pace. Matters were not being rushed. There was confidence that the subsidy would be extended and that new orders would be forthcoming for Canadian yards during the summer months and early fall.

Now, that did not happen. If one talks to those who are seeking ships from Canadian yards, their position is simply stated, "Why should we order now at 9 per cent when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) clearly indicated that there would be a replacement program?" They are not saying what the replacement will be, but why should they order at 9 per cent when they are expecting and awaiting a comparable program? The best information we have, which the minister was not able to correct the other evening, is that we would get it at some point. He attached some urgency, but he did not say when.

• (2205)

Every week that goes by—it is now July 14—will be a week some point in the future when Canadian shipyards will be out of work. It takes time to negotiate contracts, to complete designs, to identify Canadian content and to put ships together, a lot of time. I wish that the minister were here this evening, and I hope that his parliamentary secretary will at least answer in some way the general question of when we might expect a comparative program and why the subject was not left in place until the comparative program, whatever that is, was brought into public view?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to answer the comments of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) as it also allows me to stress that the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) is also interested in this question of assistance to shipbuilding, as Hansard reports that the hon. member for Lévis put a similar question about the negotiation of new programs on July 8, namely the day after the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Speaker, the 20 per cent shipbuilding subsidy was to expire on December 31, 1979, and the previous government extended it to June 30 of this year. This government does not want to abolish subsidies once and for all, but rather to put forward another long-term shipbuilding program, and to that end, it is considering holding consultations with all interested groups in the industry. The hon. member says the minister cancelled the program without warning the industry. Well, in developing a new program, the minister wants precisely to consult that industry, and the consultations will take place as soon as possible so that the government may make decisions on such a program by the end of the year.

The hon. member asks when the new program will be announced. The government intends to make that decision by the end of the year.

[English]

The hon. member repeated the affirmations of the minister, that most Canadian shipyards had in their books many contracts which would take some of them close to the year 1982. He did not deny the fact that these construction programs will cost the federal government over $250 million for ships, and some of these ships will not be out of the shipyard before 1982. In any case, the objective of the government is to put in place a new program which, as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) said in the House, "would be recognized as cost effective, in the best interests of the industry, its workers and the entire economy". At the same time, I must say to the hon. member that I have noted some of his remarks, and I will bring them to the attention of the minister.

Adjournment Debate

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—DREE GRANTS FOR DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, on July 2 I attempted to have the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané) identify for me the shortfall in respect to the $56 million which the province of New Brunswick hoped to receive from DREE. I suggested to the minister that the shortfall would be in the area of $10 million to $15 million. He indicated to the House that he understood that approximately $50 million would be allocated to New Brunswick, which would seem to indicate a shortfall of $6 million.

My next concern was that the minister take a look at all the estimates in his department and hopefully find some estimates which would not be fully consumed, some of the money of which could perhaps be reallocated to wipe out the shortfall entirely. I am hoping that perhaps tonight or in the next day or so I might get some answers to these questions from the minister.

I would like to refer briefly to the DREE budgets of the past three years. For the fiscal year 1978-79, the expenditures, excluding Devco, were $525 million. For 1979-80 the forecast ependitures are $588 million and for 1980-81 $550 million is shown in the estimates.

If we added the $50 million set out in the December 11 budget for development and expansion in the Atlantic provinces and in Gaspé, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion would have available to him, exclusive of Devco, $605 million in the current year—more money than any other minister of regional economic expansion in the history of the department.

In the House today I proposed a motion under Standing Order 43 to provide that the $50 million be reinstated from the defeated budget and made available to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion but, of course, it was not given unanimous consent. I noticed, however, that the minister shared my sentiments and he at least was nodding assent. I do not know where that $50 million has gone, Mr. Speaker, but I should certainly like to see it go to DREE.

The Devco allowance for 1980-81 would be $60 million. I should mention that the forecast expenditure for 1979-80 was $42 million and for 1978-79, $46 million. I would see, as an added attraction to DREE, a whole new exciting dimension if the selective tax incentives by way of tax contracts with DREE as the operative vehicle, were implemented by the government as was proposed in the December 11 budget. That budget contemplated these tax contracts taking the form of accelerated capital cost allowances for tax credits. I think that in addition to the Regional Development Incentive Act, this new dimension, as a continuing dynamic would be very valuable in the government arsenal in attacking problems of regional disparity.

At the moment the department has under negotiation with the province of New Brunswick three subagreements under the general development agreement. These subagreements involve fisheries, transportation, and the forest industries, three of the most important dynamics for economic development in the whole province of New Brunswick. I would plead with the minister to approve these agreements so that they have the greatest economic impact they can possibly have, and that they have it now. If the minister has to come to Treasury Board and eventually come before this House with supplementary estimates, he will have my wholehearted support.

In order for us to be successful in attacking the problem of regional disparity we have to ensure that every department and agency of government will focus on the problem. It may take the involvement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to bring that focus about. I would therefore ask the Prime Minister to vest in his minister the power to bring about that vital and very important clout so that we can make progress in this regard.

In the province of New Brunswick some of the departments of government that could have this development dimension and have it initiated now, should be mentioned. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce could initiate an expansion of the Saint John Shipbuilding and Drydock Company Limited. The Department of Public Works could get on with dredging the Miramichi River. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) who also has charge of science and technology, could provide facilities and grants for the forestry complex at the University of New Brunswick. The Department of National Defence could play a development role by moving the $49 million facility for base Gagetown from 1985 to 1981 and thus create jobs today. The National Harbours Board could expedite the most valuable Dalhousie-Belldune study and the natural products potash terminal in Saint John. The Department of Transport could lengthen the runway at St. Leonard Airport by 2,000 feet. The Department of the Solicitor General could also play a role by starting building on the minimum security prison at Renous. And the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker, has untold opportunity in capital intensive projects now under way in the maritime provinces to reduce the cost of electric energy.

The Prime Minister very wisely said early in the session that he would like to see bread for everyone before cake for some. I want to serve notice on the Prime Minister and the minister responsible for regional economic expansion that we in New Brunswick are prepared to get bread, but we are sick and tired of crumbs.

● (2215)

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my gratitude to the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) for bringing this matter to the attention of the House this evening. Certainly he supports what the minister responsible for DREE has been saying, as quoted not long ago in The Telegraph-Journal, Saint John, New Brunswick. He said. "We can't do it alone." He has put forward the concept that we will have to have a broader base notwithstanding the fact that we have just passed the tenth anniversary of the structuring and the setting up of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. However, if one looks at a map of Canada, practically all regions now have been designated. Obviously there will have to be a reshaping and rethinking of the whole question of designated areas to correct the question of disparity.

The hon. member has touched on many important points this evening. I think, though, that he will also have to remember that his own government last year signed no subsidiary agreements with the province of New Brunswick during the nine months it was in office. In the last three months we have attempted to revive DREE activities in the province of New Brunswick. Indeed, negotiations are under way now which could result in a commitment of about $90 million by the federal government over the next five years. We have presently under consideration several proposed sub-agreements with New Brunswick relating to commercial development, that is, development of the market square in Saint John, the modernization of the pulp and paper industry, forestry development and industrial development.

If the negotiations arrive at a successful conclusion with the New Brunswick government, DREE's contribution under the Canada New Brunswick General Development Agreement will reach approximately $435 million. When one looks at the history of it, the federal government has committed $435 million in New Brunswick between 1974 and 1979. I think that is very significant and important. This was carried out through the signing of 17 agreements.

These funds have been allotted to the resources sector, to infrastructures, including the highway system, development agreements for underdeveloped areas and to other projects of specific interest and impact. However, as has been pointed out, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion continues to co-operate with the province of New Brunswick.

It is interesting to work on the standing committee of DREE because there is agreement that there be non-partisan debate and that we try to get along to help progress, to succeed, and to have the best results for the dollar spent between the federal and the various provincial governments, specifically in the area of Atlantic Canada. We agree that there must be co-operation. If we are going to accomplish all these things, we will have to have restructuring and co-operation of all the other departments, and we will have to have more money to do it.

As has been stated by a noted reporter, Mr. Surette, in Halifax recently:

DREE, I believe, deserves more encouragement at this point.

With that kind of co-operation we might be able to meet some of your needs.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—HEALTH HAZARDS IN CERTAIN CHEMICALS AND PESTICIDES—REVIEW OF DRUGS, PESTICIDES, FOOD ADDITIVES—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening as a result of the answer I received from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) concerning the feasibility of having our own research and lab facilities in Canada in the field of toxicology.

I have brought to the attention of the government the ongoing study and review of the International Bio-Test Laboratories of the United States which, in 1977, were found to have deliberately falsified and shredded its tests on various chemicals. In fact most of the pesticides available in this country today were tested by the IBT labs, and those tests, which allowed for the registration of those chemicals in this country, were proven to be false and misleading. It was a very serious situation and it continues to be so because these particular pesticides continue to be used in Canada today. There does not exist comprehensive valid studies to show that these particular pesticides are not dangerous to the users and to the consumers in our country.

It seemed to me to be very logical to ask the question: why do we not develop our own centres of toxicology in Canada so that we are not dependent on labs such as the IBT laboratories which have shown themselves not to be very dependable? In fact, Mr. Speaker, in committee a member of the department admitted that it is costing $100 million to redo the tests originally done by IBT. This is not $100 million that the Government of Canada is spending, but it is $100 million that the consumers of Canada will eventually have to pay. At the time the minister suggested I was a bit naive in asking for our own centres of toxicology as we are a small country. I admit that in population we are a very small country compared to the United States and a number of European countries. She suggested, therefore, that we had to continue to rely upon the data we got from these independent labs, mainly in the United States.

I understand it would come close to $8 million a year over a five-year period of core funding from the government to guarantee or to enable us to set up a centre of toxicology that could effectively run tests on many of the chemicals that come on the market in this country. I am sure that even with $8 million over a five-year period we could not establish a centre of toxicology that would do proper studies on all the chemicals that come on the market.

Every year hundreds of new chemicals are introduced. We have to take the studies which the manufacturers of these chemicals present to us. We have to accept their word very often that these chemicals are not hazardous to the Canadian consumer and to the user. We have seen that we cannot very well depend upon the reliability of these studies. It makes a lot of sense for us as a country to take an active part in developing centres of toxicology. If we as a country cannot afford to do the whole job ourselves, then we have to join with other countries, either through the United Nations or outside of it, to develop some international laboratory capacity so that we are not dependent upon private labs, so that we know there are laboratories whose results we can trust.

As we go further into the chemical society, if we cannot trust the labs which tell us whether these chemicals are safe for us, then we are in a very sorry state. If is up to the government, which in the long run has responsibility for guaranteeing the health and safety of the Canadian public, to ensure there are labs in this country or in the world whose results we can trust.

It might be a question of money, but as the case of IBT labs has shown, it is costing over $100 million to review and redo these tests. It is something that eventually the Canadian consumer will have to pay. Why not take the more logical step? Why not develop our own capacity for doing these tests? In the long run it would save the Canadian consumer money. If there were a centre of toxicology in this country I am sure that other countries would use our lab facilities. In fact, I assume that after five or six years such a centre for the study of toxicology would make money for this country.

I wish to use this opportunity tonight to urge the government to consider seriously problems that it has had with private labs in the past. IBT is not the only lab. I ask it to consider seriously recommendations which, I understand, its own bureaucrats have made; I ask it to consider seriously supporting one or two universities across this country so that we can have our own independent source of study and so that we, as Canadian people, might be assured that the chemicals we are using are, indeed, safe.

• (2225)

Mr. David Weatherhead (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) has asked several questions recently on the safety of pesticides tested by Industrial Biotest Laboratories of Chicago, Illinois.

On June 23 the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) issued a press release outlining the problem and listing the chemicals tested by IBT. In addition the minister has informed the provincial ministers of health, environment and agriculture and their counterparts in the Territories regarding this problem.

I wish to inform the House that the minister and the Department of National Health and Welfare are acutely aware of the shortage in Canada of trained toxicologists and facilities to conduct studies to assess the safety of chemicals. As a partial solution to this problem the department has played an active role in the establishment of an international program on chemical safety under the auspices of the World Health Organization. The department is assisting through direct funding of this program, as well as playing a leading role in the safety evaluation of agricultural chemicals and certain food additives. This program will provide Canada with access to expertise in other countries and will permit international collaboration on the safety evaluation of chemicals.

The department is committed also to the work of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development which is involved in developing improved means of detecting potential adverse effects of chemicals and in ensuring that the quality of scientific investigations will be satisfactory.

Industrial development of new chemicals occurs primarily in foreign countries. Extensive growth of private laboratories engaged in safety evaluation of chemicals has taken place in recent years in the U.S. and Europe. In comparison to Canada, which has fewer than five such laboratories engaged primarily in drug testing, the United States has in excess of 100. Since Canadian industries rely heavily on their U.S. or European counterparts to undertake safety studies, they have demonstrated only limited interest in developing Canadian expertise in toxicology.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has played a lead role in assessing resources required to develop and maintain Canadian expertise in this vital field. Development of a first-class, internationally recognized research and training facility in Canada would involve financial commitments of up to $10 million per year for a minimum of eight years. In addition, an initial commitment of $20 million would be required to build adequate laboratories. These moneys are very difficult to find in times of fiscal restraint with so many other priorities in health and other Canadian government policies. In addition, sustained financial support from the public sector would also be required to sustain such a facility.

BEREAVEMENT

CONDOLENCES TO FAMILIES OF VICTIMS OF FIRE IN MISSISSAUGA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. At 9.30 last evening a fire broke out in the Extendicare Nursing Home on Queensway Avenue, Mississauga, causing extensive damage to the facilities, the loss of life of 21 of our senior citizens and the hospitalization of a further 60 of our senior citizens, some of whom are in real danger of losing their lives.

A number of firemen and police officers, in attempting to effect the rescue of persons caught in the conflagration, were also injured. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House extend its sympathies and condolences to the families who have lost their loved ones in the fire at the Extendicare Nursing Home on Queensway Avenue, Mississauga, and extend its prayers to those in critical condition that they will quickly recover, and this House express its appreciation for the diligence and competence of the Mississauga Fire Department and the Peel Regional Police in their heroic efforts to save lives and contain the damage.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

McDONALD COMMISSION

APPROPRIATENESS OF SERVICE OF COMMISSIONER GILBERT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In light of the disclosure of the contribution by Guy Gilbert, one of the three commissioners serving on the McDonald commission looking into the affairs of the RCMP, including the role of the government and cabinet ministers in alleged wrongdoing in a $500 donation to the Liberal party, and Mr. Gilbert's statement, "I believe in the Liberal party. It's the party I want to support", and in view of the concern expressed today in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), a former Liberal solicitor general, that such statements of partisan support may compromise the effectiveness of the commission and its ultimate report, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the House direct the Prime Minister to make a statement on motions respecting the appropriateness of Mr. Gilbert's continuing to serve on the McDonald commission, established under the Inquiries Act to examine, inter alia, the activities of the Liberal government in its relations with the RCMP.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

REQUEST MR. TERRY FOX BE AWARDED ORDER OF CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of Terry Fox's continuing and courageous cross-country Marathon of Hope on behalf of cancer research, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), a non-partisan motion which I trust will receive the compassionate and unanimous approval of all hon. members. The motion reads as follows:

That this House, through its Speaker, send a message to His Excellency the Governor General commending to him Mr. Terry Fox as a recipient of the Order of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

METRIC CONVERSION

REQUEST THAT HALT CALLED TO CONVERSION TO METRIC SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

S.O. 43

In light of a recent interview published in The Globe and Mail in which the Prime Minister is reported to have stated, "Canadian people need protection from governments, which often try to take away basic freedoms", and in order to help fight inflation and keep food costs down, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist):

That this government call a halt to forced metric conversion in the retail food sector on January 1, 1981, and show that the Liberals are prepared to recognize that the major food chains in Ontario and consumers in the three metric test centres do now wish to proceed with metrication, and that the $8 million annual cost of the Metric Commission and the millions of dollars that must be spent to buy weigh-scales, most of which are imported, will only result in higher food costs and more small business bankruptcies during these tough economic times.

McDONALD COMMISSION

DONATION BY COMMISSIONER GILBERT TO LIBERAL PARTY—REPORT OF COMMISSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that when the McDonald commission was established in 1977 the then solicitor general stressed the importance of an independent, impartial judicial inquiry, and in view of the fact, as stated earlier, that the McDonald commissioner Guy Gilbert openly donated $500 to the federal Liberal party in 1979—while a commissioner—stating, "I believe in the Liberal party. It's the party I want to support"—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): It is interesting to see the response of the Liberals to this. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and I am sure I will be supported by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand):

That this House call upon the Solicitor General to explain how this donation to the Liberal party by a member of the McDonald commission can be justified in light of the vital importance of an impartial inquiry; and, further, that the full unedited report of the commission be referred to the all-party Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to avoid any suggestion of Liberal bias even in the publicizing or drafting of this important document.

Madam Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PETRO-CANADA

BIDS ON EXPLORATION EQUIPMENT IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas Petro-Canada in its exploration activity in the Northwest Territories has apparently not enabled northern contractors to bid on its requirements for the supply of equipment, but prefers to bring this in from the south without public tender in the north, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That this House insists that Petro-Canada operate in the north with the same high standards of corporate citizenship required of private operators such as Imperial Oil and Dome-Canmar, with particular attention being given to proper public tender procedures.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

RAILWAYS

REQUEST THAT TASK FORCE STUDY RIGHTS-OF-WAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43. Whereas railway lines interlace urban areas throughout Canada, often occupying extensive land surface areas in the downtown or core areas of cities; and whereas the air rights and the subsurface rights above and below the railway rights-of-way in urban areas have become extremely valuable and useful for high-rise structures as well as for underground or subterranean structures; and whereas much of the surface land for railway rights-of-ways was deeded to Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways through federal government action, and ambiguity exists as to the ancillary rights of such deeds, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That the government move to establish a joint federal-provincial-municipal task force to inquire fully into the matter of air rights and subterranean rights associated with railway rights-of-way in urban areas and subsequently make appropriate recommendations for subsequent government action.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

STATUS OF WOMEN

REFUSAL OF COMPANY TO HIRE WOMEN FOR UNSKILLED JOBS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to raise an urgent matter concerning the rights of women to employment.

In view of the fact that the Fleet Aircraft Company of Fort Erie has consistently refused to hire women for unskilled jobs, and since the Fleet Company has benefited from federal government contracts in the past and is seeking future contracts related to the production of F-18 aircraft parts, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller):

That the federal government implement a policy of compulsory contract compliance and immediately require that Fleet Company sign an affirmative action agreement as a prerequisite for all federal contracts.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion can be put to the House only by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STATISTICS CANADA FIGURES ON UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT PLANS TO CREATE JOBS AND REDUCE INFLATION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the Statistics Canada figures today on unemployment which reveal a sixth consecutive increase in the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate—still 7.8 per cent this month as it was last month, even though it is the middle of the summer—and in view of the fact that the unadjusted June rate of 7.5 per cent is one-half of a per cent higher than last year, we have 887,000 unemployed, up 89,000 from this time last year, and in view of the uniformly poor economic forecasts of decreases in the growth of the gross national product, and the like, will the Prime Minister now tell the House—he has been 12 years in office; this is the twelfth year of his reign—what the government's policies and plans are to combat the high unemployment we now face and the high inflation which is still threatening?

In other words, when is he going to start battling these problems—

An hon. Member: Wrestling.

Mr. Crosbie: —wrestling with these problems? When is he going to start bashing these problems, rather than just bashing the provinces?

[Translation]

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to note, with the hon. member, that the unemployment rate for June was maintained at 7.8 per cent and it is hoped that under the program announced at the beginning of May by the Minister of Employment and Immigration the unemployment rate this fall will quickly decline as soon as the program is put into effect.

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, we can see how seriously the Prime Minister treats these problems now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The death of this government is going to be "Sore Throat"; the Minister of Finance is absent. Would the Prime Minister answer this question, then? In the Speech from the Throne, the government said it would not decrease the deficit at the expense of loss of jobs and higher unemployment. Now the deficit has increased by $3.7 billion, up to $14.2 billion, and unemployment has also gone up since the deficit increased.

Would the Prime Minister explain what his policy is? To what level does he think the deficit must rise before we can have the full employment we would all like to see? Is that the policy? How high does he intend to raise the deficit this year to combat this increasing unemployment?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Madam Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration has just indicated to the hon. member that the unemployment rate has not increased and that there were 314,000 new jobs in June 1980 as compared with June 1979. This is specifically due to the steps taken by this government, so that the negative effects of the very difficult economic conditions will not be felt more strongly by those who find it most difficult to find employment, and by the poor. The figures provided by the parliamentary secretary reveal that the government has reluctantly opted for a slightly larger deficit than otherwise acceptable, but has enabled the economy to remain vigorous.

• (1420)

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —and of the Minister of Finance, who at least has the excuse of a sore throat, I will put my final supplementary to one of the page boys.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order. I have the feeling that we are in for a rough question period. I think we should start off right now by disciplining ourselves.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, at least the page boys might show some concern about the 887,000 unemployed. For my final supplementary I will try the Prime Minister again. His flower is fading today. He does not have his usual bright red flower. Something is wrong with him today.

The OECD has predicted that the Canadian economy will have its worst performance since 1954. That is really something. On June 10 the Minister of Finance stated in this House that it was desirable to maintain the battle against the inflation. Would the Prime Minister explain to the House what his policies are to maintain this battle against inflation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): You just said I was absent.

Mr. Crosbie: You certainly are absent. You are absent from any sense of decency or responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Ask the page boy.

Mr. Crosbie: In the absence of the Prime Minister, again, perhaps I can ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he will show some concern about the 887,000 unemployed. What is his new industrial strategy to put these people to work? The rate has increased for the last six consecutive months. The Prime Minister cannot answer. Will the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tell us what the government's policy is going to be?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I am sorry my hon. friend was not in the House yesterday. We set out our policy at that time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. We do not want the whole question period to be taken up by heckling and cheering, do we?

HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT IN ONTARIO

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, it is a shocking thing to have such indifference about unemployment in this country. If the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is not concerned about the unemployed in Canada, perhaps he is concerned about the unemployed in Ontario; 75 per cent of the unemployment increase since February last year, when he and his government took power, has been in Ontario. His own city now has 15 per cent unemployment. Will he explain that to the House? Why has he turned on his own province and his own city and allowed such unemployment?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we began taking decisive action on these matters even before we became the government, by leading the attack on the incompetent Conservatives, throwing them out—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray:—and bringing about a change of government to a new Liberal government which is capable of and is taking decisive action on behalf of Canadian and Ontario workers.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is again to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. If his attack has been so successful, could he explain to the House why unemployment has gone up every month in Ontario since he has been in office to the point that there are now 22,000 out of work in Windsor, compared with 11,000 when he took office? Why are there 46,000 more people out of work in Ontario today than when he took office, if his attack has been so successful?

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, one reason—as far as I am concerned, at least—is that we have not yet overcome the negative effects on the economy of the Conservative government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: You used that line for six months.

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—POLICY RESPECTING PRE-BUILD SECTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which arises directly from his press conference this morning, and it concerns the important matter of the pipeline. The Northern Pipeline Act clearly states:

> The company shall before the commencement of construction . . . establish to the satisfaction of the minister . . . that financing has been obtained for the pipeline.

● (1425)

Elsewhere in the act "pipeline" is defined to mean a pipeline "from Alaska across Canada"; that is to say, the pipeline is indivisible. Considering that at the press conference this morning the Prime Minister said that if the act said what I have just quoted—it says it in very clear language—the government would either be prohibited from going ahead with the pre-build or would have to amend the legislation. I should like to ask the Prime Minister which of the two options the government is going to choose.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, with regard to the financing aspect, I repeat to the hon. member what I told the press conference this morning, that is, that I am not aware of the particular provisions on the financing and I would defer to the minister on that.

As to the statement that the pipeline is indivisible, I disagree with the hon. member. There is nothing in the act which says it is indivisible. On the contrary, there is a section—section 12, I believe—which permits it to be divided, provided certain guarantees are given, and it is the nature of those guarantees which the government is presently expressing in order to determine whether or not we would let one part go ahead while waiting for the other part to be terminated.

Mr. Broadbent: Just to be very clear on the subject, let me point out that it is true that the pipeline may be divided in terms of the period of construction. But it is equally clear, in terms of the legal advice given to the National Energy Board by its legal advisers, that in terms of the guaranteeing of the financing before any section can be built, the financing of the whole pipeline has to be guaranteed. That is the crucial point. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he agrees with that.

The language which I read out in the first question is unambiguously clear where it says the financing of the whole pipeline must be provided before commencement. "Pipeline" is defined as being a pipeline from Alaska to the American border. Does the Prime Minister agree, then, that before we proceed with the pre-build, a total guarantee has to be obtained for the financing of the whole pipeline?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I just answered the hon. member that on the problem of financing, I am afraid I cannot enlighten him any more than I was able to enlighten the press conference this morning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Find out.

Mr. Trudeau: What is the hon. member behind there saying? They do not feel well over there, Madam Speaker. That is not our responsibility. I am trying to answer the hon. member. I do not know the answer on the financing.

An hon. Member: Find out.

Mr. Trudeau: I will.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the people of Canada, I think will be more than a little disturbed that the Prime Minister, when he is discussing a project which may cost $22 billion, admits—two days before the cabinet is to make a decision on this matter—that he knows nothing about the financing of it. That is an incredible admission.

I should like to ask him if he can assure the House that if the interpretation is as I have outlined it, as the legal advisers have suggested to the National Energy Board is the correct interpretation, after he—the Prime Minister—finally does his homework, will he assure us that we will either have a debate concerning an amendment in the legislation or he will not proceed with the pre-build?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the answer is predicated on the legal advice which the hon. member says was given to the NEB. I admitted that I am not aware of this aspect of the question. I will do, as the hon. member calls it, my homework. I am sure the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is at present, I believe, in Saskatchewan trying to see to the implementation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Now it is the Tories who are a little bit ill because the minister is in Saskatchewan. As I told the hon. member, I am sure the minister will be able to answer the question. I am sorry I am not, but I will inquire.

ENERGY

LEGALITY OF INCREASE IN PRICE OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council, who I am sure shares the concern of all members of the House with the unhappy, unsatisfactory events of last Friday in which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources dealt with raising the ceiling under the Petroleum Administration Act. I believe certainly it was not done maliciously—I do not make that accusation—but likely it was done very mistakenly. Now it appears very doubtful that the 2.5 cents per gallon tax on all consumers of petroleum products is illegal—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Is legal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jarvis: Is legal; I am sorry. Given that situation, is the President of the Privy Council privy to the advice of the law officers of the Crown in this regard? Can he inform the House whether that legal opinion indicates that the measures taken last Friday are abortive, in a legal sense, leaving the government open to the obvious remedies of any citizen of Canada who has been subjected to that tax?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, this point was raised last Friday during the debate on procedure. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had unsuccessfully sought in our Standing Orders some provision whereby we could have introduced this new levy without offending the opposition. Madam Speaker, you handed down a decision to the effect that everything we had done had been perfectly legal and procedurally proper, at which time a new point of order was raised questioning the legality of what I would call, not a new tax, but a new levy or charge on the Canadian people; I remember quite well the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources saying then to hon. members of the opposition that as far as he was concerned, he was satisfied, on the basis of the legal advice he had received, that the procedure was perfectly legal and in order.

Mr. Clark: No, no!

Mr. Pinard: I can hear the Leader of the Opposition saying no. Obviously, he has failed to understand anything.

[English]

Mr. Jarvis: Madam Speaker, I regret I have to correct the President of the Privy Council, but that was not the nature of Madam Speaker's ruling.

Mr. Clark: Nor Lalonde's statement.

Mr. Trudeau: That is not correct.

Mr. Jarvis: That is exactly what the President of the Privy Council just said.

Mr. Trudeau: No, no.

Mr. Jarvis: I wish the Prime Minister would compose himself. I think this is infectious today in the House. Is the government willing to run the risk of a probably illegal levy until this House resumes sitting after the summer recess, or is the intention of the President of the Privy Council to move within the limits provided for him before we recess to legalize what would likely be otherwise an illegal levy upon all consumers of petroleum products in the country?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, what I said to the hon. member is that we have no evidence there is an illegal levy. On the contrary, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources last Friday said very clearly that he had verified, he had checked and he was assured that what he was doing was according to the rules—

Mr. Clark: That is not what he said.

Mr. Pinard: —and according to the law.

Mr. Clark: You are misleading the House.

Mr. Pinard: The opinion we have so far is that everything is legal and I have nothing else to add at this time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SMALL BUSINESS

WAGE SUBSIDY JOB-CREATION PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Small Businesses). Hansard of June 26 will show clearly that the new job-creation program announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration will only produce about 7,500 jobs this year. Could the minister indicate to the House whether or not he is pushing for a wage subsidy job-creation program as a way of aiding the small business sector and creating jobs in the country?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State, Small Businesses): Madam Speaker, I believe the programs proposed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration already take into account the concerns of the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, the direct job-creation program or the employer tax credit which will produce about 4,500 jobs in the calendar year effectively eliminates 50 per cent of the businesses in Canada which could create employment. A wage subsidy program at the same cost could involve the other 50 per cent and double the employment creation for the same kind of expenditure of funds.

Is the minister aware of that kind of information? Has he taken it into account? Is he saying clearly to the House that he will not push for a wage subsidy job-creation program?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Madam Speaker, it seems obvious that the hon. member does not agree with one of the government programs introduced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I shall be pleased to look into the claims of the hon. member, to which I am not willing to attach credence for the time being. Should they be founded in any way, I shall be pleased to take them into consideration and consult my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, in that regard.

ENERGY

LEGALITY OF INCREASE IN PRICE OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I want to direct some questions to the President of the Privy Council relative to his answer a moment ago to my colleague, the hon. member for Perth. I regret I will have to quote from Hansard and perhaps take a moment of the time of the House. As reported on page 2839 of Hansard for Friday, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said:

There has been no formal legal opinion given on the matter as such, for the good reason that this is a procedure which has been followed historically on many occasions for decades by this Parliament and the British Parliament.

What is clear is that the minister had sought no legal opinion, contrary to the words of the President of the Privy Council. The minister had sought no legal opinion on the propriety of the instrument that was used.

Since there is now very real question as to whether or not the tax increase which became effective at midnight Friday is legal, can the President of the Privy Council tell us whether the government, some several days later, has now sought the legal opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the question of the legality of that $500 million tax increase?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, had the right hon. Leader of the Opposition read a bit further on, he would have read as follows:

I am advised that parliamentary procedure has been operating in this manner for many generations. Although the rules do not provide for ministers giving legal opinions in the House, I have little doubt about the propriety of the method which has been followed if, as I said, we look at the countless precedents in this country and in the U.K. in terms of the role and technique which have been used when governments employ ways and means motions.

So, that is what the minister said at that time.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Now answer the question.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I know full well what is in Hansard; I quoted it a moment ago. Also, I was here for all of the proceedings in the House on Friday. The obvious fact is that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at the time was speaking without the benefit of consultation because he was responding to questions that had been put to him immediately before in the House of Commons.

Now we have a situation where it may well be that the $500 million tax increase imposed upon the people of Canada at midnight Friday is illegal. All we are asking is: first, is the Government of Canada looking into the possibility of that being illegal? Second, do they intend to make a statement or to take corrective action in this House before the House rises, or do they intend to let the people of Canada suffer a tax which well may be illegal and let the government rest vulnerable to actions which might be taken in the courts of the land by a number of individual citizens across the country?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Right on.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, once again, has clearly stated in the House is that the procedure followed was pursuant to the Standing Orders, that he followed a practice recognized for decades by both the Canadian and the British Parliaments, and that consequently his action was perfectly normal and legal. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition can question the legality of this procedure in Parliament all he wants. He has a right to question the legality of our methods. But it is not because the right hon. Leader of the Opposition has doubts that we must each time ask for legal advice to reassure him and prove to him that our procedure conforms to a ruling by the Chair which was in our favour. So I will say to him again what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has stated very clearly, namely, that before acting he asked for advice, he consulted with his officials, who encouraged him to act as he did. The Chair recognized the validity of this procedure and therefore there is no reason why we should question the legality of the action taken.

• (1440)

[English]

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, as you will well recall, and as the House does, the decision you rendered on the procedural question set aside explicitly the legality of the action before a court of law. It was not on that that you, Madam Speaker, decided, but on the procedural question, and explicitly left open the legal question.

My question to the President of the Privy Council is whether the Government of Canada, since the matter was raised on Friday, has gone to the law officers of the Crown so that they can come to the House of Commons and give an opinion that is backed by legal advice taken since Friday, that the half billion dollar tax increase brought in at midnight on Friday is legal. Unless the minister can give us that assurance, we must assume that that half billion dollar tax increase may very well be illegal.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I do not think that because you ruled that you should not interfere in a legal aspect which would in principle be the responsibility of the courts, we must conclude that serious doubts exist in the present case as to the legality of the action in question. I am sure you did not mean that. You rejected a procedural argument and based your judgment strictly on the fact that it could lend itself to interpretation by the courts. In this case, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources confirmed very clearly to this House that he had had all necessary consultations and that there was no doubt in his mind as to the legality of that line of action. Again, if the Leader of the Official Opposition has doubts about that, I will inform the minister about them and it will be up to the courts to take them into consideration and rule upon them in due time. However, as far as we are concerned, we have no doubt that the process used was legal.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INITIAL PRICE OF WHEAT—INITIAL PRICE OF BARLEY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, this is my weekly question to the Minister of Transport. For many months the minister of state in charge of the Wheat Board has been promising that he would make a statement on the adjustment of the initial price of wheat, particularly if the price of wheat was strong at the end of this month.

I would remind the minister that it is now $16 a tonne more than it was on April 28. Is the minister prepared to indicate that the initial price of wheat will be increased from the $3.75 per bushel that was indicated earlier to something like $4.25 per bushel or higher?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the promise made by the minister of state responsible for the Wheat Board was that he would do so before August 1, which is the beginning of the new crop year. That still gives him a few days in which to perform.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, may I remind the minister that the minister of state said he would make the adjustment on June 30. Is the Minister of Transport prepared to reconsider the initial price of barley, since at the moment the Canadian Wheat Board commissioners are complaining that they are unable to get enough barley? We need barley both to feed the stock on the prairies and to fulfil contracts overseas. Is the minister now prepared to do something about the price of barley?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, usually the initial price, originally and when adjusted, applies to all board grains; that is, wheat, barley and oats. I presume that the minister of state will make his announcement applicable to the three grains.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

DANGEROUS CHEMICALS USED BY MEAT PACKERS AND PROCESSORS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It has been a well established fact since 1956 that nitrates and nitrites used in the curing and processing of meat and meat products such as bacon, ham and similar products cause cancer when consumed.

In view of the fact that little or nothing has been done to phase out and replace the dangerous chemicals in food, why has the health protection branch of the minister's department, which is well aware of the facts, not been more forceful with the meat packing industry and food processors to ensure they eliminate this dangerous health hazard, when improved technology is already available for the safe curing of meat and meat products and which are not detrimental to health?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I regret, Madam Speaker, but I do not agree with the last part of the question. The use of nitrosamines came under discussion, among other places, at the Commons Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs last week. Technical information was given to the hon. member by officials. Of course, Canada is working closely with other countries and watching the progress of research for additives as replacements for nitrites and nitrates. However, the rate that we are now accepting in the meat packing industry seems reasonable to us. To our knowledge, there are no product replacements. We are nonetheless most attentive to developments in that area.

[English]

Mr. Mitges: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker. In view of the fact that a spokesman for the meat packing industry stated in a press report, referring to the use of nitrates and nitrites, that consumers will never get perfectly safe foods and should not expect them, and in view of the fact that Canadians have every right to expect perfect safety in their food supplies, which is the prime reason why the health protection branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare was set up in the first place, and knowing the minister's genuine concern in this matter, I would ask if she would give real substance to this concern by ordering her department to give the matter the priority it really deserves, in order to give Canadian consumers the food protection they have every right to expect, regardless of her answer to the previous question.

Miss Bégin: Madam Speaker, I understand the concern of the hon. member. I remember he told us that he was a former employee of the Department of Agriculture, I think. He knows the state of the knowledge in that field. He recommended to us at the committee that we should look at the regulations in Scandinavian countries on that subject. I told him, and I repeat to the House, that of course we will be exploring that particular approach to the question and, as with any other development in the field of product replacements for nitrites and nitrates, we will move as soon as that is offered to the market.

BILINGUALISM

FEDERATION OF FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUEBEC—ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMISSION OF FEDERATION AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I direct my question to the Secretary of State. On April 23 last, he met with representatives of Francophones outside Quebec about plans the association has been fostering for a long time about a joint commission, and according to the association's president, the minister seemed to agree to the establishment of such a commission. Could the minister tell the House if he is in favour of establishing such a joint commission and if he is, whether he recommended it, and when we can expect to have an answer to the question?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member has mentioned, I had the pleasure of meeting with representatives of the Federation of Francophones outside Quebec some time ago to discuss the matter of establishing an appropriate consultative forum between the federation and the Government of Canada. In the near future I intend to meet once again with spokesmen for the federation for further discussions with a view to establishing a suitable consultation mechanism. The federation wished to meet with me this week, but as it is impossible for me I agreed to meet them some time next week.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I wish to address a supplementary to the minister.

I would like the Secretary of State to be a bit more specific if possible. I know to what extent Francophones outside Quebec are relying on him to make an explicit recommendation. As the minister gave the federation this opinion during one of their meetings, could the minister at least inform the House that he favours the setting up of this commission? He knows which one I mean, in view of the fact that the federation's president said she was concerned about some information to the effect that the government might be tempted to change its mind. Could the minister assure the House that the government does not intend to do so? Could the minister assure the House that he endorses the setting up of this commission, an urgent matter in my opinion?

Mr. Fox: Madam Speaker, the government does not intend in the least to change its mind as it has never promised to set up a joint commission comprised of members of the government and the Federation of Francophones outside Quebec. The hon. member will remember no doubt that this type of suggestion or agreement had been favoured by his government during the electoral period in an endeavour to elicit votes from certain Francophone circles outside Quebec, a tactic which by the way did not give any results.

Madam Speaker, for our part, I do not think there has ever been any doubt as to our commitment with regard to Francophones outside Quebec either from a constitutional or government policy point of view.

INDUSTRY

LAY-OFFS—EFFECT ON SUMMER EMPLOYMENT OF STUDENTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In recent weeks there have been lay-offs of more than 1,000 workers every working day. As a result of these lay-offs, the opportunities for summer employment for students has dropped by 20 per cent, according to Manpower centres in southwestern Ontario.

● (1450)

I wonder whether the minister has any immediate plans to deal with this problem of lay-offs which is having such an adverse effect on employment of students for this coming summer.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we are very concerned about these lay-offs, and that is why we are developing industrial strategy programs to strengthen the entire industrial base of the country.

We have to recognize, however, that to some extent our problem is due to the weakness of the economy of our major trading partner, the United States. Even though we are putting forward efforts to blunt the impact of that situation, unfortunately we cannot escape it entirely.

Mr. Orlikow: My supplementary question is to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Given the fact that we have almost 500,000 young people up to age 25 unemployed, and that the number of young people unemployed has increased by 70,000 in the last month, does the Department of Employment have any plans for employment programs which will put our young people to work for the summer, who need work so desperately if they are to be able to go back to universities and community colleges?

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member certainly knows that there is a transition period during the months of May, June and July concerning the students who are finishing their studies before getting into the labour market. Traditionally, it has been during the month of June that the unemployment statistics have been a little higher, but when we get to July and August these statistics come down.

I am quite sure that with the programs established by this government we shall be able to increase the number of students working during this summer, not only in the government programs but in the private sector.

Oral Questions

AIRPORTS

IMPROVEMENT OF FACILITIES AT MOUNT HOPE—
MAINTENANCE OF NORDAIR SERVICE BY QUEBECAIR

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I want to make one final approach—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): —on the future plans for Mount Hope airport before Parliament takes off for the summer recess.

An hon. Member: That is in Hamilton.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Will the minister please tell us when he will be in a position to announce a decision on this matter which is so vital to the entire Hamilton-Niagara-Brantford region? Before he answers "soon", can he say how soon is soon?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am sure that my hon. friend, when he goes home, has noticed some improvement taking place at the Hamilton airport. There is new paving on the runways and I presume he is more comfortable now when he lands.

With respect to the over-all program for Hamilton, this is being studied now in the general context of expenditures on airports. I hope to have news for him when he comes back in the fall.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I am delighted the minister can confirm that some of the grass is being paved at the Mount Hope airport. However, I would really like to know whether the minister can confirm the sale of Hamilton civic airport's prime carrier, Nordair, to the owners of Quebecair, and can he assure the people of my area that Nordair's service into and out of Hamilton will be maintained under its new ownership?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, I am quite sure that no purchaser of the company would relinquish the privilege and advantage of serving Hamilton. But I will be making very sure of that before a sale is made.

VICTORIA—PROVISION OF RADAR EQUIPMENT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware that within the last 13 months, at an airport without radar, there have been 19 near misses, many of which could have been avoided had radar been in place?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, we have this afternoon and on other days a clear indication of the needs that Canadian airports have with respect to equipment, runways, terminals, etc. We are trying to satisfy most of these wishes while living within our means.

With respect to radar at Victoria, as I indicated in a letter that I have written to my hon. friend, it is in the program. We do not think Victoria is endangered by the situation that exists now. The hon. member can disagree with that, however. But it is within our program to include these facilities at Victoria.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, it is quite obvious that the minister is not aware that on two successive days on the landing flight path, small aircraft ran into parachutists that were not announced either to the control tower or to the pilot of the aircraft.

An hon. Member: Liberal candidates.

An hon. Member: It was Mackasey.

Mr. Hees: They were those twinning fellows.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): On the second occasion the pilot had to dodge as many as 30 parachutists. They were American parachutists on the flight path, but within the control area of the control tower. Does this, at last, convince the minister that there is a new priority that ought to be assigned to the establishment of radar at Victoria international airport?

Mr. Pepin: No, Madam Speaker. I am aware of two near misses, one that took place at Victoria and one at Vancouver in recent days. I checked on that this morning, and inquiries are being made by the Department of Transport, which is the normal procedure in these matters.

THE CONSTITUTION

INPUT OF NATIVE GROUPS IN DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Given the numerous representations which the government has received from various native groups, the FFHQ and others, for meaningful input into the current constitutional process, has the government now decided on an appropriate means to ensure that the special concerns of groups such as these will be heard in the process?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will remember that following our meeting on June 9 with the premiers, I reported to the House that I had suggested some enlarged type of forum, such as the one suggested by my friend, the Leader of the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Is he still your friend?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, that was a wasted word: he is not even listening.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I reported that the position of the premiers at that time was that we should continue within the restricted forum that we had created for the purpose of the meeting on June 9. I believe that is the position, an honourable one, which was supported by the Leader of the Opposition.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATION BY YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES COUNCILS AT MEETINGS OF FIRST MINISTERS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, at the Liberal party convention in Winnipeg a resolution was passed by the delegates saying "the delegates require that the Yukon Council and the Northwest Territories Council be represented at meetings of first ministers so that the people of the north will be directly represented by their locally elected members."

In view of the position of the government, namely, that the elected officials of these two territories are not to be represented by actually sitting down with the first ministers, is the Prime Minister now rejecting the resolution passed by his own delegates in Winnipeg?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker. The hon. member will realize that I was referring only to the meeting of June 9 encompassing the meetings taking place this summer. I indicated at the time, and I repeat, that we have in the past and will in the future continue to include in our delegations representatives from the territories and representatives from other groups.

Under the present framework of federal-provincial meetings, the premiers, I think quite properly, indicated that it would not be quite right for the federal government to bring a lot of other representatives with a voice and a vote of their own into meetings which until now have been comprised of the 11 first ministers.

FISHERIES

FLOW OF WATERS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—EFFECT ON SALMON STOCKS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I am sure the minister knows he ordered, in late June, that the Aluminum Company of Canada increase the flow in the Nechako River to 1,000 cubic feet per second. The Aluminum Company of Canada has now publicly stated its intention to only increase the flow to 850 cubic feet per second. I have taken the time to contact the officials in British Columbia, and the flow today is only 800 cubic feet per second.

I wonder whether the president of Alcan is the minister of fisheries, or whether the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who is seated here in the House today is. Perhaps he could advise the House today—everyone here—whether or not it is still his opinion today that the flow in the Nechako River, for the protection of salmon stock, is 1,000 cubic feet per second.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the figure of 1,000 c.f.s. is one which was given many years ago. There is a debate on whether or not a figure somewhat below 1,000 would be adequate.

An hon. Member: There was no salmon in those days.

Mr. LeBlanc: We have been measuring and monitoring that very closely. We have made it clear to the Aluminum Company of Canada that if in our judgment, because we have to protect the fish that are moving in and out of that area, the flow was inadequate, then obviously we would go to court if necessary to make sure that the resource is protected.

● (1500)

I have not had a report on this issue since last Friday. I hope to have one when I get back to my office this afternoon. It is not our intention to allow an operation of this type to wipe out the very important run of the fishery.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I assume the minister is telling us it is his opinion that 1,000 cubic feet per second is required, because less than a month ago he ordered that and the Aluminum Company of Canada has come out and said that it does not intend to comply with what the minister said.

We have seen the frontier attitude of the minister in western Canada with reference to Riley Creek and other incidents. Will the minister confirm whether the opinion he held two weeks ago, of 1,000 cubic feet per second, is still held by him today, and whether he intends to use section 20(10) of the Fisheries Act to protect the fishery in British Columbia?

Mr. LeBlanc: The hon. member seems to be totally tied to the figure of 1,000, which was a ballpark figure.

Mr. Fulton: It was your figure.

Mr. LeBlanc: If the hon. member will be patient, I will try to explain. The fact is that 1,000 was considered to be desirable. There are, however, conditions of temperature, that is, how warm the season is or is not, what natural flow comes from areas besides the dam where the overspill occurs. This is being monitored.

I have not had a request from my department to take further action at this time. Following the hon. member's question this afternoon, I will obviously be checking with them. If, in the opinion of the scientists in my department—not my opinion—it is necessary to request more water, then we will do that.

Oral Questions

ENERGY

LEGALITY OF INCREASE IN PRICE OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is to the President of the Privy Council. It goes back to questions asked by the hon. member for Perth and my leader.

It is a very simple question. Does the government House leader have an opinion from the law officers of the Crown with regard to the legality of the tax that was set at twelve o'clock Friday night?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, this gives me an opportunity to quote an answer given last Friday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in reply to a question from the Leader of the Opposition, and I quote:

> Madam Speaker, on the first question, this ways and means motion was drafted upon the advice and with the help of the law officers of the Crown.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, that was a traverse of the question. Being a lawyer, the government House leader will know what "traverse" is. I do not know the word in French, but in English it is traverse. He avoided the question.

My question is, if he does not have an opinion from the law officers of the Crown, does he intend to get one before this House recesses, if it ever does?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as I indicated to the hon. member, this is not a question of being a lawyer or not. The fact is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated clearly he had consulted with the officials, the law officers of the Crown before acting, and the procedure was entirely consistent with all parliamentary practices dating back decades here in Canada and in Great Britain. We have absolutely no reason at all to doubt the legality of the procedure that was followed, and I do not see why the hon. member persists in requesting that in this case, rather than another, we ask for a specific legal opinion. We on this side are not going to ask for specific legal opinions just because members of the opposition, at a time when they think they could be making political gains, believe a procedure could be illegal.

Once again, as I said, precautions were taken, and the procedure that was followed is in order. We acted pursuant to the rules. We have no reason to doubt the validity of the procedure and we have no intention of following up on the hon. member's question.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DOMM—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATORY TREATMENT SUFFERED BY HON. MEMBER FOR PETERBOROUGH—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: On Thursday, July 3 last, the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) rose on a question of privilege with respect to information and documents that he was supplied by officials of the Department of Secretary of State.

The documents in question which he left with officials of the House are perhaps not as clear on close examination as they might appear at first blush. There is, first of all, what he refers to as the usual monthly reporting form of the persons granted certificates of Canadian citizenship with a stamp "Nil report for this electoral district" and which on the top shows that it is in respect of the electoral district of Peterborough for the month of May, 1980. It is dated June 3, 1980.

The next document referred to by the hon. member is dated May 23, 1980, at 10.30 a.m., Peterborough, is headed "Presentation of Certificates" and has the name of the citizenship court judge. There then follows a list of 55 names, beside each of which is a file reference. This document appears to be a list prepared for the judge of those persons without addresses to whom certificates were to be presented that morning.

The third and final document is the same as the first. That is, it purports to be a copy of the usual monthly reporting form showing a list of persons with addresses granted certificates of Canadian citizenship in the electoral district of Peterborough. However, this report is for the month of June and bears a July 3 date stamp. It also contains only 39 of the 55 names set out in the second document, the one that was given to the judge.

Under the circumstances, it is not clearly shown by these documents that the nil return for the month of May was not correct, because the only return with names of persons granted citizenship is for the month of June, and that one is dated July 3, albeit it shows many of the same names. Furthermore, even if they were shown to be incorrect, falsified or altered, which they have not, there is no indication that they were incorrectly of falsely made with intent to deceive the House, which is a necessary ingredient before it becomes a matter of privilege, as the hon. member correctly quoted from Erskine May.

If the hon. member complains about the poor service he is receiving from the Department of Secretary of State because it sent him documents which are incorrect or false and also too late to be of any use, it seems to me that all members could have the same complaint. In any event, the Chair has considerable sympathy for the member regarding difficulties that a member often incurs with respect to citizenship matters. A real difficulty lies, however, in the fact that the hon. member bases his question of privilege on the complaint that his ability to discharge his responsibility to his constituents is severely hampered by not receiving these lists.

While I am only too aware of the multiple responsibilities, duties, and also the work the member has to do relating to his constituency, as Speaker I am required to consider only those matters which affect the member's parliamentary work. That is to say, whatever duty a member has to his constituents, before a valid question of privilege arises in respect of any alleged interference, such interference must relate to the member's parliamentary duties. In other words, just as a member is protected from anything he does while taking part in a proceeding in Parliament, so too must an interference relate to the member's role in the context of parliamentary work.

Under the circumstances, in this instance, therefore, I cannot find a prima facie case of privilege.

MR. TAYLOR—APPOINTMENT OF "TWIN MEMBERS" IN CERTAIN WESTERN CONSTITUENCIES—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) also rose on a question of privilege on Thursday, July 3. His concern was whether public funds were being used by a member of the staff of a minister of the Crown in respect of work relating to the appointment of government members as twin members in certain western constituencies. If so, he suggests it would be an abuse and would amount to usurping and interfering with the elected member and his work in the constituency. The hon. member also had two other concerns with respect to the implementation of the twin member concept. One was whether any public funds were being used by those twinned MPs and, second, whether the mail from his constituents and his own mail to ministers of the Crown was being directed to the twin MP.

The hon. member received considerable support from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), who elaborated on the effect such action could have. However, the right hon. member himself said we have no guarantee that this is the case.

● (1510)

While expressing concern for the preservation of democratic principles, the hon. member for Bow River did not direct the attention of the Chair to any specific instances of improper conduct by any particular member of this House. Furthermore, he will appreciate that, while the conduct of a member of this House may be raised by another member, Mr. Speaker Michener said in 1959 that an hon. member should not be required to submit his conduct for investigation by the House or a committee thereof until he had been charged with an offence by another member.

I therefore feel, in this case again, that I cannot find a prima facie case of privilege.

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—WITHDRAWAL OF UNACCEPTABLE EXPRESSION USED IN DEBATE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order related to an incident which took place in the House last evening. As you will attest, I hope, it is not my general practice to be disrespectful in this House or toward this House. I have too much regard for the institution to behave otherwise. It therefore takes extreme provocation and a blatant display of disregard for the niceties of verbal performance in this chamber to cause me to overstep the bounds of propriety and use an expression which I know to be unacceptable in Beauchesne's sight. I do not deny using such an expression, but I was merely pleading for the truth. I expect others to treat this House with equal respect and regard and when there is an outrageous failure to do so my intolerance knows no bounds.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Such was the case last evening when in an exasperated outburst I adjured the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray), as recorded at page 2869, to adhere to the truth but added an expression meaning the same thing, although it was in a form to which exception is likely to be taken. I offer now to withdraw the offending word and urge the minister to show similar respect for this House and the Chair and to restore his good name by making a similar gesture. He could do so by repudiating the unspeakable assertions he perpetrated yesterday when he attributed views to the Conservatives by putting words in the mouth of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) which that member at no time expressed or espoused and which Conservatives had at no time voiced or would wish to voice.

I withdraw, Madam Speaker, and urge the minister to do likewise.

Madam Speaker: I appreciate the point made by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). Such outbursts of emotion often occur in the House and it is in the spirit of this chamber that a gesture such as the one which has been offered by the hon. member is accepted. The withdrawal is accepted and I think we will not discuss this matter further.

The Secretary of State.

Mr. Fox: Madam Speaker, yesterday afternoon during the course—

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Could I be clear about this? Is the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) seeking the floor on a point of order flowing from the discussions we have just had? Yes or no? Then I recognize the Secretary of State.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FOX—REMARKS IN DEBATE BY HON. MEMBER FOR PETERBOROUGH

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, during the course of the proceedings yesterday afternoon, while we were discussing the question of privilege upon which you have just ruled, the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) made a statement which to my mind raises a new question of privilege on my part. In the course of that debate he indicated he would have been given false documents by the minister himself, by myself. Madam Speaker, I would like to reserve or have clarification on the point—

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. The hon. member for Peterborough is attempting to catch your eye to raise a point of order to correct Hansard to dispose of the matter which has been raised by the minister, thus saving the time of the House.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. All I want to do is to make quite clear how I am handling this matter. The hon. member for Peterborough rose on a point of order. I asked him whether that point of order arose from the deliberations we had just concluded. He did not answer; he sat down again. Previous to that I had recognized the Secretary of State so I did, quite correctly, I think, go back to the Secretary of State. I must hear the Secretary of State and I would be delighted to hear the hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. Domm: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker, pertaining to this very matter. I did nod my head, Madam Speaker, and I apologize for not being more vocal in my interests on my point of order.

My point of order stems directly from the notice given by the minister arising from the discussion here today, and that is that yesterday in this House the minister indicated that he intended to rise, perhaps, on this question of privilege. The point of order is this. At the top of page 2856 of Hansard yesterday the word "minister" appears and I would ask that it be changed to "ministry". It further goes on to explain in the third paragraph, as I detail the explanation, that it is the ministry which is in question, not the minister, as explained in the third paragraph where I say "namely that this matter of discriminatory treatment of members of Parliament by the Department of Secretary of State through the issuance of false documents—"

So I would ask that Hansard be changed to read "the ministry" instead of "the minister" at the top of page 2856, which is elaborated in the third paragraph to explain the error.

[Translation]

Mr. Fox: Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member might do well to withdraw his remarks. In my opinion it would be appropriate that he retract and apologize for having used those words, because substantially what he said in English has been well understood in the usual way we understand words in the House when he said—

[English]

"I had been given false documents from the minister in question".

To begin with, the question of false documents has not been established and once again the hon. member is raising the question of false documents. He knows full well, because I told him yesterday, that of the 53 people sworn in in Peterborough on May 23, only 39 were from his riding. The Peterborough court held a swearing-in ceremony which applied to at least five federal ridings. As a matter of fact, people from any part of the country could receive their citizenship papers from the Peterborough court and the names would not be sent out to the hon. member.

The hon. member also knows that if he received a list on July 3 it was one month to the day after the previous list was sent to him on June 3, a list which was sent to him at the same time as it was sent to all members of Parliament. It is not unusual, Madam Speaker, as we all know, for members of Parliament to receive a nil report list. In the month of June, out of a total of 46 members who received nil report lists, 34 were Liberal members.

So, Madam Speaker, the type of innuendo which has been cast upon the Secretary of State Department by the hon. member is totally without foundation. Not only has the hon. member falsely accused the minister, he has also falsely accused the Secretary of State Department and I would ask him, in all decency as a parliamentarian, as a member who sits in this chamber with the rest of us, to withdraw that type of accusation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: My impression on reading Hansard was that perhaps the matter raised today by the minister as a question of privilege involves a slip of the tongue rather than an intention of implicating the minister. However, I would think at this point that the hon. member for Peterborough, having given his interpretation and explanation of what he saw in Hansard, having raised his question of privilege, and having now heard the minister on his question of privilege, might agree with me that the matter might be closed. Unless some other members wish to continue discussing this question of privilege I would feel the matter should be closed. However, I am in the hands of the House and if other hon. members wish to intervene in the debate I would, of course, have to hear them because it is a new question of privilege.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I would simply like to reserve the right to review the record concerning the statement of the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox), particularly with respect to some of the figures he cited. It may well be that upon a review of that record and in particular of the reference to the document cited "nil", a further question will arise. I would not want to lose the opportunity to raise that question in such an event.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. WRIGHT—BILL C-30—QUESTION TO PRIME MINISTER RELATING TO STATEMENTS IN STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I hope you will entertain my point of order. It is related to a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) yesterday in this House. I was able to check Hansard today, and I believe this is a point of order.

I asked the Prime Minister a couple of questions, and in his non-answer to me he said that we should all be aware of commenting on what happens in committee. The question I asked him related to statements made in committee on July 10 with regard to Bill C-30. That bill has been passed in the House, and I asked him questions which were asked in the committee in relation to that bill. They were incidental to the bill, but they were still asked during that period of time. I have checked Beauchesne, and there is no objection to my asking any question in this House related to any item which was in committee, which has come back to the House and which is the property of the House.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): That is no reason, Madam Speaker, for the hon. member not to have looked into or not to look into what went on in committee. Be that as it may the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has given more details in his answers to the hon. member's questions so that he surely got a more complete answer than he was expecting on the point he had raised. So the Prime Minister started by telling the hon. member, and I recall that very well, that he should be aware of what goes on in committee, but the Prime Minister did not stop at that, he went on with his answer. I do not think the hon. member has a right to complain.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Oberle: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My point of order is not entirely unrelated to the discussions which have been going on here, but it is more with respect to House business. A report in The Globe and Mail seems to indicate that it is the intention of the government to bring in a freedom of information bill before Friday or before the House recesses.

That being the case, I wonder if the President of the Privy Council could indicate whether that is the case, whether such a bill is being introduced and whether it is also the intention of the government, jointly or embraced within that bill, to keep a promise which was made in the throne speech with respect to section 41(2) of the Federal Court Act. Will that also be introduced before Friday?

Point of Order—Mr. Domm

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, we keep our promises, and this very day a notice has been given for the introduction of such legislation.

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DOMM—REQUEST FOR APOLOGY FROM HON. SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, on a point of order, I ask if the Chair would entertain a response from me with respect to a request for an apology from the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox). Can that question or request go without an answer, or would Your Honour entertain my comments on his request for an apology?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Madam Speaker, I suggest the hon. member has a nerve to rise on this subject. Through a correction made to Hansard he has managed to get away with it after having unjustly accused the minister yesterday. Had he had a minimum of courtesy he would have apologized and withdrawn his allegations. Rather, he chose to proceed by way of a correction to Hansard, which does not show much courage to start with. So I regret to see him bring back this subject and try to have a follow-up on the request made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox) who asked him in a very courteous and parliamentary way to withdraw his statements. So not only did he act in a less than courageous way by proceeding through a correction to Hansard, but he should have withdrawn his words, pure and simple, and he should have apologized to the minister for having misled the House.

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I submit respectfully that the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) acted quite appropriately. In fact, I can tell Your Honour that he was seeking the floor precisely for the purpose of correcting the record so that the record would be clear. I think that was an appropriate action for him to take.

Given the appropriateness of his action, I say with respect that it would be inappropriate—if the hon. member feels there is a unjust accusation in something the minister has said—if the hon. member is not allowed to reply. Then the Chair would have both sides of the issue, if there is an issue, before it in order to make a decision.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Come on.

Mr. Waddell: You are wasting the time of the House.

Point of Order—Mr. Domm

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, I think the comments made by the minister require a response. When the minister spoke to me yesterday about his request regarding privilege in the House and with regard to speaking to my question of privilege, I advised the minister at that time—since he has brought the subject up today—that if he brought the subject up again in the House yesterday, I would stand and ask for equal time.

That was our discussion. Having said that, he rose, and he now accuses me when I correct one word—which is further explained in the third paragraph—the word "minister" to "ministry". There could be no doubt in the mind of anyone in this House who has listened to the conversation and my accusations since this dispute first arose over this misleading information that I was directing all my comments and my concerns at the minister's ministry and not at the minister.

Having said that and made my comments yesterday, on which the minister has given notice of his intention to rise on a question of privilege, I then said to the minister that I agree that it is his department that I am criticizing. It is his ministry I am criticizing, and I have offered to change the word from "minister" to "ministry". Having said that, the minister then stood up and pursued the subject by asking for an apology, which I consider is not necessary because I am not accusing the minister.

However, if the minister is not going to assume responsibility for his ministry and if his ministry is negligent and remiss and fails to give the right information out to a member of Parliament, then I do not intend to withdraw my accusation. The minister is responsible for his ministry, and he should not ask for an apology when it is his ministry which is negligent.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, there is just one sentence I should like to utter. I hope the next time Your Honour rules with respect to a question of privilege that there is no question of privilege and that the matter is ended, that Your Honour will not allow hon. members to reopen it under the guise that there is a new point.

Madam Speaker: In reply to the hon. member, I think in some instances there might have been a fine line between discussing a new question of privilege and the one on which I had ruled, but as soon as I felt that that fine line was being trespassed upon, both hon. members came back to the question they were supposed to be debating. It often happens that an hon. member wanders by way of explanation without questioning the ruling. I do not think any hon. member did question the ruling.

However, the hon. member is right. Sometimes there is a fine line and I try to watch it, but as soon as I come to the point at which I want to intervene, things seem to be re-established.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—EDITING OF OFFICIAL REPORT—DISCREPANCY WITH "JOURNALS"

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have two questions of privilege, both related to Hansard. You will recall that on Wednesday, July 9, I raised a question of privilege with respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae,) who referred to "bushels of hay", which expression was not accurately reflected. Indeed, it was changed in Hansard to refer to "bales of hay".

In addition, you will recall in my remarks when I raised that question that I put before the Chair the deletion from the final record of a whole series of interjections which were in the blues, and which I personally read and checked before returning them to the Hansard office .

I want to refer to something even more serious with respect to Hansard, and I certainly do not attribute any motive here with respect to the admirable job being done by the Hansard reporters. But the malaise seems to have spread.

● (1530)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: The members of the socialist party to my left might not be interested in running this place as democratic institutions should be run, on the basis of accuracy, but we are.

An hon. Member: What about the pipeline which is costing only $22 billion?

Mr. Nielsen: On April 28 of this year—I am quoting from an extract from Hansard of that day at page 449—there appeared a motion put forward by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) to this effect, and I must quote it so that the differences become apparent. It reads:

That on the fortieth anniversary of the Katyn forest tragedy, this House sympathizes with fellow Canadians of Polish extraction over the great human sacrifices Poland had to endure during the course of the Second World War and declares that those who lost their lives at Katyn and all other sites of tragedy in Poland will long be remembered.

That is the exact verbatim quotation from Hansard of that day, and what prompted me to look at this matter was the motion of yesterday. But in checking the Journals of April 28 at page 86 and again Journals of April 30, page 104, we find the following:

Pursuant to Standing Order 43, on motion of Mr. Flis, seconded by Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands), it was resolved—That this House sympathizes with our—

I emphasize the word "our".

—fellow Canadians of Polish extraction over the great human sacrifices Poland had to endure during the course of the Second World War and declares that those who lost their lives at Katyn and all other sites of tragedy in Poland will long be remembered.

Madam Speaker, you will notice that there has been the insertion in the Journals of the pronoun "our" and the deletion from the actual motion cited in Hansard of April 28 of the first phrase, namely, "That on the fortieth anniversary of the Katyn forest tragedy".

The differences and omissions give rise to some very serious questions. The first one, of course, is why are the texts from Hansard and from Votes and Proceedings quite different? Why were the changes not made in the House, as they should be since they are changes of substantial nature? What has happened to the televised Hansard; were similar deletions—and I have not checked that—made there? It may be quite adequately explained if an explanation is forthcoming as to who authorized the changes 'twixt Hansard and the Journals.

If we are currently to place any reliance on the accuracy of the written record of this place, these things should not happen without some sort of adequate explanation. Certainly for the future if any reliance is to be placed by students—although why they would want to study these matters in any serious way perhaps might be open to question—they too should be able to rely implicitly upon the total accuracy of the proceedings recorded in this place, and certainly when they are transposed to the Journals.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I rise on the point of order. I am very glad the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has brought this to the attention of the House. I do not wish to comment on the first part of his point of order concerning the bales of hay. It was a rather raucous day in the House and I will leave that to interpretation.

On the question of the Standing Order 43 motion in the name of the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis), I think the hon. member for Yukon makes a valid point. It is one of my duties on the government side to look at motions under Standing Order 43 when members try to obtain the unanimous consent of the House and check them with all sides before presentation is made at two o'clock. I remember distinctly on that particular day that the words as read by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park differed from the written text he had shown me earlier.

I do not think there was anything malicious or deliberate in this. This happens from time to time when a member wants to express some sentiments and perhaps deviates a little from the written text. I would say that perhaps there has to be closer collaboration between what is given to the Journals, which is the actual written statement, and what is actually said by a member when he makes his point in the House of Commons.

Mr. Nielsen: That is what should be recorded in Journals.

Mr. Collenette: We now have three ways of checking. First, we have any document referred to the Journals branch; second, the live voice recording; and third, the transcript of the Hansard reporter. So that this does not arise in future on matters of great substance, perhaps we could improve our procedure or at least, Madam Speaker, have you look into it to ensure that this does not happen again.

Madam Speaker: I believe there are several ways of checking this. We have now in front of us at least three versions, the written, the spoken one, the one in Hansard and an extra one with the televised version. I will have to check on this matter to know whether there have been substantial changes which should not be allowed.

On the first question raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) concerning "bales" instead of "bushels", I would remind the House that some of these corrections, which appear to be slips of the tongue, are normally made as a matter of course by the editors of Hansard. This has been an acceptable custom in Parliament.

I should like to read an excerpt from Erskine May on these practices, defining what exactly is Hansard, as follows:

It is a full report, in the first person, of all speakers alike, a full report being defined as one "which, though not strictly verbatim, is substantially the verbatim report, with repetitions and redundancies omitted and with obvious mistakes corrected, but which on the other hand leaves out nothing that adds to the meaning of the speech or illustrates the argument."

Another quotation from "An Encyclopedia of Parliament" says:

A certain amount of revision is bound to be necessary... For instance, the tangled sentence—

Also there are repetitions, especially when they are subject to interruptions, which seems to have been the case in this particular instance.

—must be sorted out if they are to make sense when committed to paper;

What appears to be a lapsus linguae, of course, can be corrected. Therefore, on the first point, it seems quite obvious that it was probably a lapsus linguae, the kind of correction which is acceptable in Hansard. But I will check the second point to see whether all the versions differ substantially.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, you said something which rather alarmed me with respect to my second point, namely, that there were three methods of checking. May I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that there is only one official record of the proceedings of this House, and that is the record that is taken here by the Hansard reporters, and indeed it is so entitled on every issue we get: it is the "Official Report" of the proceedings of the House of Commons. What is said in the House, the actual wording of the motions that a member uses, is, in my submission, what should appear subsequently in Journals, not something submitted for vetting or whatever to the parliamentary secretary or to anyone else.

With respect to the first point, Madam Speaker, may I again draw your attention to the omission of a whole series of interruptions or interjections that were made after the statement of the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan. In order to make that change meaningful, all those interjections had to be omitted. I find that practice questionable.

Madam Speaker: It seems to me that we should not eliminate the advantage we have of checking what is written in Hansard, taken down by the Hansard reporters in this House which sometimes is not completely audible because of the cheers and heckling that sometimes take place in the House. It seems to me that the televised proceedings offer a unique chance of counterchecking. Of course the official version is the one in Hansard, but I think these other means of checking should be used by the House in order to make sure that what appears in Hansard is exactly what the member said or what he meant, because we do admit slips of the tongue, do we not?

Mr. Nielsen: That was no slip.

● (1540)

MR. GURBIN—DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT INFORMATION TO DEFEATED LIBERAL CANDIDATE

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, on my return today I learned that in my absence yesterday the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) raised a question of privilege concerning the announcement of a small craft harbours project.

First of all, there is no formal procedure in place for announcing the approval of small craft harbours projects, except in the call of the tender which is normally done by the Department of Public Works. Tenders are called, and if members or other parties have shown an interest in particular projects, my office tries to inform them of the approval of the projects, which of course predates the formal calling of tenders.

The point I wish to make is that I have no record of the hon. member for Bruce-Grey indicating an interest in the project at Dyer Bay. Had he approached either myself or my office and informed me that he would like to have detail of the project at Dyer Bay, he would have been told once the project was approved. In fact, many hon. members of the House know that when inquiries are made they are usually answered. Many of his own colleagues have received information from my office that certain projects in which they had expressed an interest were going ahead or had been approved.

When the hon. member for Bruce-Grey contacted my office on July 10, he was informed that the Dyer Bay project had been approved. In my view there is no question of privilege. If there has been a discourtesy, obviously I apologize to the hon. member.

TRANSPORT

BILL C-18—CORRECTION TO THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, I rise to point out an oversight concerning the third report of the Standing Committee on Transport which was considering Bill C-18. I was advised that under clause 2 in the French version of the third report of the Standing Committee on Transport appeared an amendment which should not have been there because it was not considered in committee. The amendment reads as follows and I quote:

Strike out lines 22 and 23, on page 2, and substitute the following therefor:

"ous goods or containers, packaging, means of transport or facilities used in the handling,"

That amendment was not moved because another amendment was substituted therefor and passed. It appears in the report as follows:

In the French version only, strike out lines 5 to 13 inclusive, on page 2, and substitute the following therefor:

« «indication de danger» Toute information destinée à signaler les risques présentés par des marchandises dangereuses, ou la conformité aux normes de sécurité, quels que soient sa forme et son support, à placer en évidence sur ces marchandises et les conteneurs, emballages et moyens de transport utilisés pendant leur manutention ou leur transport ou à l'occasion d'une demande de transport les concernant.»

In the French version only, in clause 21, lines 9 to 18 inclusive, on page 17, the words ou installations should be added immediately after the word locaux. They do not appear in the report; the amendment should read as follows:

Article 21

Retrancher les lignes 9 à 18 inclusivement, à la page 17, et les remplacer par ce qui suit:

Anyway, I will table this document.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MASTERS—RECOGNITION OF GOVERNMENT MEMBERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I will not take up much of the time of the House, but I should like to point out to the Chair that, while I recognize the difficulty in trying to keep order in the House and to give due recognition to all members, I would hesitate to think there is an over-reaction to a request by hon. members on the other side that we not be recognized as frequently as we had been. It occurs to me that today not one member from this side was recognized. I think we did better yesterday by one.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Masters: Certainly I concede the fact that question period is primarily for the opposition, but as a member of Parliament I feel my duties and responsibilities as a member are impeded if I do not have any opportunity to ask questions of ministers. I do not ask for equal time of the opposition to query ministers; I just ask that we have some time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member's point is well taken. I think I can say honestly that there is no over-reaction on my part. I agree with him that the question period belongs to the opposition, and I thought more so in what might be the last week of this session.

NORTHERN PIPELINES

IMPENDING GOVERNMENT DECISION RESPECTING ALASKA GAS PIPELINE PRE-BUILD SECTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, for the serious reasons I made quite clear to Your Honour in a letter which I sent to your office earlier today on the important subject of the proposed pipeline through Canada from Alaska, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the decision to be reached on Thursday by the government concerning the propriety of pre-building a section of the northern pipeline without assurances that the entire pipeline will be built.

Order Paper Questions

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has given the Chair the usual notice of his intention to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26. I must remind him the matter which he seeks to have debated under the Standing Order is not a new one.

The decision to pre-build or not to pre-build a section of the pipeline will be reached by a process set out in an act of Parliament, the Northern Pipeline Act. As the hon. member said in his notice, the decision about to be reached by the government "is of profound importance", but that is not a question on which the Chair has to make a determination. In effect, the hon. member appears to be questioning the adequacy of the legislation which does not provide for debate and decision by the House.

Mr. Broadbent: Not at all.

Madam Speaker: The precedents are most clear. On May 20, 1970, on March 21, 1975, on April 30, 1975 and on many other occasions, the Chair ruled that it would be a questionable practice to debate proposed or existing legislation under Standing Order 26. In fact, on April 30, 1975, my predecessor ruled as follows:

> —that the emergency provisions pursuant to Standing Order 26 ought to be distinguished, or their use ought to be distinguished from those items which, in a regular legislative program of the House of Commons and regular legislative consideration, can come before the House by way of amendments to existing statutes, or in any case will come before it in other ways.

The decision referred to by the hon. member is an administrative decision that may be made by the government in accordance with the provisions of a statute.

● (1550)

I should also remind hon. members that this is not a new matter. It is part of a continuing process that has been raised on several occasions in this chamber and which has also been debated in the Standing Committee on Northern Pipelines.

Hon. members do not need me to set down other ways in which this may come before the House. May I refer them to my ruling of July 9, 1980, where I ruled on a somewhat similar matter raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

It is regretted, therefore, that I have to inform the hon. member that I cannot accept his motion at this time.

POST OFFICE—NUMBER OF PERSONS IN PUBLIC RELATIONS

Question No. 628—Mr. Howie:

How many persons engaged in public relations, publicity or media relations, are employed on staff in the Post Office Department?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Canada Post has a total of 61 employees engaged in public relations, publicity or media relations. Twenty-four are employed at headquarters and 37 in the regions.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—STUDIES ON MARIJUANA

Question No. 824—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1975, what amount was spent on studies related to marijuana by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): $10,945 was provided by the department to the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada (July 1979—April 1980) to prepare a report on the "Use of Non-Medical Drugs among Inuit in Southern Canada". A section of the report studied the use of marijuana.

CANADIAN FARM LABOUR POOL—SUSSEX, N.B.

Question No. 898—Mr. Corbett:

1. What are the services provided by the Canadian Farm Labour Pool (CFLP) to farmers and agricultural workers.

2. Will the CFLP office be closed in Sussex, New Brunswick and, if so (a) will there be alternate facilities established to provide services to farmers and workers (b) will alternate facilities be provided in the area for the training of unskilled labourers (c) what amount of revenue will be lost to the area (d) will the local Agricultural Manpower Board remain as an active advisory board facilitating the area?

3. What would be the approximate annual cost for an individual farmer to perform the services that are now provided by the CFLP?

4. (a) How many employees have been provided through the CFLP to Sussex, New Brunswick area farmers since 1974 (b) how many (i) temporary (ii) permanent positions have been filled?

5. How many persons have received training through the CFLP facilities in Sussex since 1974 and in what skills?

6. Is the manager of the CFLP responsible for many duties other than those required under the previous structure?

7. Does the manager of the CFLP have the use of his secretary on an exclusive basis?

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. The services provided by Canada Farm Labour Pools (CFLPs) are recruitment and placement, worker orientation, worker maintenance, payroll service, and relief milker service. The pools also provide, under the guidance of Local Agricultural Manpower Boards, information and advice on wage rates, employment standards and worker accommodation requirements. They work closely with Canada Employment Centres, particularly where a need for workers from outside the local area, for employment training or for other services, such as counselling, is indicated. In addition, the pools assist, as needed, with the delivery of federal and provincial employment programs and services, generally.

2. The CFLP in Sussex, N.B., will continue operations this year, with the support of the established Local Agricultural Manpower Board. (a) (b) (c) not applicable; (d) Yes.

3. It is not possible to determine such a cost.

4. (a) 338

(b) (i) Sixty five casual vacancies filled (representing employment of less than five days duration).

(ii) Two hundred seventy-three regular vacancies filled (representing employment of five or more days duration).

5. None. CFLPs do not provide training.

6. The major change from the previous structure is that the CFLP manager's sole responsibility is to provide service specifically to the agricultural community. The Canada Employment Centre is responsible for all sectors of the labour market.

7. No. The manager of the Sussex CFLP does not have a secretary but has clerical support available to him, as required, from the local Canada Employment Centre (CEC).

COMMISSION—REVIEW OF SALARIES—MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT—SENATORS

Question No. 924—Mr. Mitges:

1. What are the terms of reference of the recently appointed commission to review salaries and allowances of members of parliament and senators?

2. What is the amount of money, salary and remuneration that will be paid to each member of the commission?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. See sessional paper No. 321-4/20 tabled on May 14, 1980, by the President of the Privy Council.

2. An honoraria of $250 per diem each while on duty as commissioners and a non-accountable living allowance of $90 per diem each and actual transportation expenses while in travel status away from their normal places of residence in connection with the conduct of the commission.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—PROMOTIONS FOR SCYs

Question No. 1,041—Miss MacDonald:

In the Department of External Affairs, how many secretaries classified as (a) SCY-1 (b) SCY-2 (c) SCY-3 were (i) eligible for promotion (ii) promoted in each year 1970 to 1979?

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Appointment files, including promotion records for the ST-SCY group are only maintained for a period of two years following the expiry date of the eligible list which is established by the selection board. Therefore in response to this question our information only covers the years 1977 to 1979 inclusive. It is not possible either to be certain that candidates eligible for promotion (as per part (i) of the question) will apply since employees who may be eligible frequently choose not to apply for reasons known only to them. The figures below reflect only those candidates who met the basic requirements of the competitions.

1977 — ST-SCY-1—Eligible for promotion 252 promoted—195

ST-SCY-2—Eligible for promotion 122 promoted—93

ST-SCY-3—Eligible for promotion 40 promoted—12

1978 — ST-SCY-1—Eligible for promotion 12 promoted—5

ST-SCY-2—Eligible for promotion 1 promoted—1

ST-SCY-3—Eligible for promotion 0 promoted—0

1979 — ST-SCY-1—Eligible for promotion 2 promoted—1

ST-SCY-2—Eligible for promotion 5 promoted—2

ST-SCY-3—Eligible for promotion 1 promoted—1

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—PROMOTIONS FOR CLERKS

Question No. 1,042—Miss MacDonald:

In the Department of External Affairs, how many clerks classified as (a) CR-1 (b) CR-2 (c) CR-3 (d) CR-4 (e) CR-5 were (i) eligible for promotion (ii) promoted in each year 1970 to 1979?

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Appointment files, including promotion records for the CR group are only maintained for a period of two years following the expiry date of the eligible list which is established by the selection board. Therefore in response to this question our information only covers the years 1977 to 1979 inclusive. It is not possible either to be certain that the candidates eligible for promotion (as per part (i) of the question) will apply since employees who may be eligible frequently choose not to apply for reasons known only to them. The figures below reflect only those candidates who met the basic requirements of the competitions.

1977 — CR-1—Recruitment into the department is done at the CR-2 level.

CR-2—Eligible for promotion 48 promoted—30

CR-3—Eligible for promotion 99 promoted—43

CR-4—Eligible for promotion 134 promoted—39

CR-5—Eligible for promotion 43 promoted—25

1978 —	CR-2—Eligible for promotion	43 promoted—	30
	CR-3—Eligible for promotion	83 promoted—	33
	CR-4—Eligible for promotion	17 promoted—	6
	CR-5—Eligible for promotion	17 promoted—	7
1979 —	CR-2—Eligible for promotion	13 promoted—	5
	CR-3—Eligible for promotion	6 promoted—	3
	CR-4—Eligible for promotion	4 promoted—	2
	CR-5—Eligible for promotion	1 promoted—	1

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—SCY POSITIONS—YEARS OF EXPERIENCE

Question No. 1,043—Miss MacDonald:

In the Department of External Affairs, what was the average number of years of experience among those promoted from (a) SCY-1 to SCY-2 (b) SCY-2 to SCY-3 (c) SCY-3 to SCY-4 for each year 1970 to 1979?

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): As was the case of question 1,041 the department does not maintain appointment (competition) records for the ST-SCY group for the years 1970 to 1976 inclusive. Further the principle of promotion based on merit as set forth in the Employment Act restricts departments from according seniority or numbers of years of experience extra marks in the selection process. Employees' applications will therefore from time to time be most complete with respect to exact years of experience and in other cases will simply reflect the minimum requirements called for on the competition poster. Our promotion records therefore do not contain information as to the average number of years experience on all eligible candidates. Public Service Commission regulations in fact permit employees to apply in competitions even though they may have no direct experience in the SCY group. Their indirect or other related experience may in fact be sufficient to meet basic requirements for any competition and any assessment of such an individual's average years of experience would be an estimate at best. It is nonetheless conceivable that an exhaustive review of all promoted employees' file (as distinct from competition or selection files) might result in an estimate of their years of experience at the time of promotion. We estimate that such a review of files might involve as much as 20 working days' (one month) research by at least one employee and we are not entirely sure the results would be very meaningful or valid.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CLERICAL POSITIONS—YEARS OF EXPERIENCE

Question No. 1,044—Miss MacDonald:

In the Department of External Affairs, what was the average number of years of experience among those promoted from (a) CR-1 to CR-2 (b) CR-2 to CR-3 (c) CR-3 to CR-4 (d) CR-4 to CR-5 (e) CR-5 to CR-6 for each year 1970 to 1979?

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): As was the case of question 1,042 the department does not maintain appointment (competition) records for the CR-group for the years 1970 to 1976 inclusive. Further the principle of promotion based on merit as set forth in the Employment Act restricts departments from according seniority or numbers of years of experience extra marks in the selection process. Employees applications will therefore from time to time be most complete with respect to exact years of experience and in other cases will simply reflect the minimum requirements called for on the competition poster. Our promotion records therefore do not contain information as to the average number of years experience on all eligible candidates. Public Service Commission regulations in fact permit employees to apply in competitions even though they may have no direct experience in the CR group. Their indirect or other related experience may in fact be sufficient to meet basic requirements for any competition and any assessment of such an individual's average years of experience would be an estimate at best. It is nonetheless conceivable that an exhaustive review of all promoted employees' files (as distinct from competition or selection files) might result in an estimate of their years of experience at the time of promotion. We estimate that such a review of files might involve as much as 20 working days (one month) research by at least one employee and we are not entirely sure the results would be very meaningful or valid.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO INCREASE AMOUNT OF SPECIAL DRAWING RIGHTS

Hon. Pierre Bussières (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-5, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Bussières (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Madam Speaker, as you have stated, the House has now reached the third reading stage of the bill which aims at increasing the Canadian participation in the International Monetary Fund and which is entitled "An act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act". Hon. members will recall that the International Monetary Fund was created in 1944 during an international monetary and financial conference held in a village in the United States called Bretton Woods, which is why these agreements are known as the Bretton Woods Agreements. As I said earlier, this bill aims at increasing our monetary participation in the fund.

Your Honour has stated that the bill has been reported to the House by the standing committee. The committee has carefully studied the bill. Many questions were raised about it. What is the situation of Canada concerning countries with balance of payments problems and what is the relative position of Canada within the fund? All these questions were examined in depth and with a lot of interest.

I would like to remind the House that the aim of the International Monetary Fund is to promote and ensure stability and order in the exchange rate. I would emphasize also that it strives at developing assistance mechanisms related to the balance of payments so that the member countries can rectify any temporary problem while disturbing as little as possible the international monetary system.

We have also seen, during discussion in committee, that the total subscriptions of member states is now $39 billion in Special Drawing Rights, and it will be remembered that the SDR is now worth $1.50 in Canadian currency. It may also be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that from 40 at the time the International Monetary Fund was established, the number of members has grown to 138, which is due to the number of nations that gained independence over these last 20 years.

The aim of the legislation is to increase Canada's quota to the IMF. It will be remembered that regularly, over five-year periods, fund members are called upon to adjust their quota. Indeed, the quotas are an extremely important aspect of the fund, because they determine the subscriptions of member states to the fund's total financial resources. The size of an individual nation's quota also limits its borrowing capacity under the various mechanisms of the IMF. It must also be remembered that these quotas determine the size of SDR allocations when these are issued. They also are of political significance, because they determine the relative influence of a country within the fund. It will be remembered that in the course of our study in committee, Mr. Speaker, committee members reviewed a table showing the relative importance of various member states, and Canada's relative importance as compared to other nations was extremely interesting. And that increase of our quota within the IMF will indeed allow us to retain that relative position.

Special Drawing Rights are a reserve instrument evolved from a basket of national currencies, a technique that superseded the original technique, that of the mid-forties until 1968, which was based on the gold standard. And currently, the subscription or quota of an individual country to the fund is calculated in the so-called SDRs, and as I said the Special Drawing Right is now worth $1.50 in Canadian currency.

Therefore this bill which amends the Bretton Woods Agreements Act is aimed at increasing Canada's subscription to the International Monetary Fund by replacing the amount of $1.357 billion SDR's by the amount of $2.035 billion SDRs, Canada's quota. This transaction is part of our exchange operations and will have little incidence on our need for Canadian dollars. In fact, the cash payment in Canadian dollars brought about by this increase will amount to ¼ of 1 per cent of the amount, or about $2.5 million. Twenty-five per cent of the increase will be covered by SDRs in the exchange fund; the balance, approximately $748 million, will be covered by term obligations which do not bear interest.

I would like to point out that if all members of the fund accept their respective quotas as proposed, the subscription to the International Monetary Fund will increase, on the whole, by $39 billion SDRs to $59 billion SDRs. This overall increase is designed to ensure a better balance between the importance of the fund's resources and the needs of members of the fund to finance the balance of payments over the next five years.

I would also like to say that Canada's acceptance to contribute this increased quota to the International Monetary Fund had been proposed by the fund's administrators and reinforces Canada's commitment during the recent international conferences to participate and see that the International Monetary Fund plays a much greater role to help countries experiencing problems with their balance of payments or exchange rates.

We know that since 1973, when the oil crisis became very critical, its influence was felt on some currencies and in particular on the balance of payments of certain countries. It has become much more important to consolidate the role of the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and even of private institutions to help countries having difficulties with their balance of payments to better their lot without creating greater imbalances.

Madam Speaker, in concluding my remarks, I wish to thank all members of the committee who took part in the work done in committee with respect to this bill. As I said at the beginning of my statement, the discussions were extremely interesting and I hope that the work done during the third reading by the House this afternoon will be as fast and efficient as that of the standing committee.

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in joining this debate on Bill C-5 I find it strange in our deliberations that we often spend considerable time debating matters of little consequence and yet with other matters that have tremendous far-reaching consequences there is often impatience to get on and pass whatever the matter happens to be. When I say that, I do not mean that there is any sinister motive on the part of members. I think it is largely a direct result of members finding that that which appears to be confusing, ambiguous or hard to grasp is something in which automatically they have little interest and they go on to the next thing that appears to be somewhat easier to understand.

I say that because I ask the House to be patient with me as I mention a few thoughts concerning the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, and the International Monetary Fund. Frankly, we are sitting in a climate as far as the world is concerned that is very unpredictable. We may be closer to an economic collapse than any of us care to believe. I believe the time has come when we, as perhaps the seventh strongest nation in the free world, should be addressing our thoughts, certainly domestically, to what we can do to try to avert this collapse. We should also consider what can we do of an international nature if the collapse is to be avoided.

I felt that in committee we had a worth-while hearing as to what were certain of the minister's views on this bill, the ongoing position with respect to the International Monetary Fund and what was the exposure. In short, I felt that some of the answers given in committee, while perhaps truthful and honest, were quite alarming.

First, I would like to recall for hon. members that as we live with inflation in this country, and to a greater or lesser extent with inflation in other countries, let us not forget that this is a highly unusual phenomenon. Inflation is not a natural thing. The byproduct of inflation, high interest rates, is not a natural phenomenon. I find it is alarming to hear, especially the socialists to our left—even their leader—rationalizing inflation and basically an unsound monetary and fiscal position as if it were something normal. I will come back to that a little later.

Let us not forget that when this country was formed in 1867 the world of that time, as far as economic conditions were concerned, was relatively stable. I think members might be interested to note that as we live with ever-rising interest rates and with an anxiety as far as the investment community is concerned in putting money out beyond five, ten, certainly 20 years, today the average investor is asking what he can get on his money for the next 90 days or one year. He does not want to know what he can get on his money for 20 years because inflation may be such that it has eroded the value of his money and he would lose whatever stake he invested.

Let us not forget that it was never always that way. For example, I have referred to 1867 when the world was relatively stable as far as monetary conditions were concerned. It is perhaps interesting to note that between 1860 and 1876, of 87 foreign government loans of $1 million or more placed in London, nearly half had maturities of terms from 100 years to perpetuity. I say to members, think of the contrast in the mental attitude then with that of today. People then were so confident with the well-being of the economic world situation that they were prepared, in the case of those loans, to put the bulk of their money out for 100 years to perpetuity. Contrast that with the fact that on a recent issue we offered 13.75 per cent on our money for 20 years and there was some doubt whether even at that price the issue would sell.

In committee I referred to an article that appeared only last month, on June 23, in the reputable magazine Forbes. The article is entitled "Recycling Petrodollars—How Much More can the System Take?" I invite hon. members to read this article. In particular, I ask them to note the two scenarios which the writer and the editorial board of Forbes magazine suggest at page 98 of the magazine, which reads as follows:

> At the moment the world faces two equally grim scenarios:
> Scenario one: Lending will continue to dwindle, and there will be defaults from which the various governments will have to rescue their banks. The poor countries will no longer be able to buy goods from the industrial countries, which, in turn, will suffer depressed economies and lack the means to pay OPEC. The entire world economy will sink into low gear. The poor will starve. The rich countries will stagnate. Even the Communists will have nothing to cheer about. The U.S.S.R. and Eastern Europe depend heavily on world trade, and all seek cheap credits.

That is scenario one, Mr. Speaker. The article continues:

> Scenario two: The merry-go-round will speed up again. OPEC will continue raising oil prices. The politicians, unwilling or unable to impose austerity on the industrial countries, will encourage the banks to provide plenty of liquidity both for their own economies as well as for those of the poorer countries; and inflation will move up another notch or two. For a while the faster inflation will enable the poor countries to handle the debts they constantly incur because they will be servicing the debt with dollars that are constantly shrinking. But the faster inflation, with its attendant disruptions, will end up by paralysing the international capital flows upon which everybody's trade and prosperity depend.
> There is, of course, a way out. With a strengthened IMF, the nations might gradually accept a painful but bearable slowdown in their economies while the money supply is brought under control. This is probably the only way out.

I read that into the record as I did in committee because I felt that I would like to have a comment from an official in the finance department as to whether they felt that with those two scenarios, the conclusion of the writer of the article in Forbes was accurate.

For the record, this is what Mr. Hilton, a senior official with the Department of Finance, had to say. He had read the article. He read the two scenarios and he stated:

> I think that the analysis probably could be in greater detail, but I think that the current trend of thinking in the western community is that inflation is the greater danger so that Scenario 2 is really not one that people are concentrating on or more to the point, they are trying to prevent, so it means that there has to be an adjustment process so that there is adequate financing through the world. That financing is important to all countries, both developing and developed and particularly important to a country like Canada where our trade lines are more important to our economic performance than anything else. The problem is whether we have a system strong enough that can adapt and accommodate so that the channels of financing can continue through the 1980s. I think that we have a small period of time.

Think of it, here we are in July, 1980, being told by a senior finance official that, in terms of these economic conditions internationally, we have only a small period of time left to make the suitable corrections. Mr. Hilton went on to state:

> I agree with the conclusion that no one country in the world is going to be able to develop a set of international policies, financial policies or financial actions with which it is going to save itself. It is going to have to be done collectively and the collective implementation of that policy is probably going to have to be done through existing institutions of which the most important is going to be the IMF.
> The possibility of finding some further strengthening of the IMF has been mentioned earlier today and that may be in the form of more direct participation by the surplus countries and particularly the OPEC countries so that the strength and the power of the IMF can be used for the benefit of all its members.
> I think in conjunction with the IMF because there is going to be the poorer countries of the world are going to need to continue receiving financial flows that cannot be expected through the private system, that we will have to transfer some of the aid transfer mechanism and in this connection, the World Bank is the most important organization because it is large. We can move large amounts of dollars and it works in conjunction with the IMF. And, finally, I think that there is probably going to be over the next few years an adaptation of our debt machinery so that countries that do find themselves in payments problems again can work within a collective environment so that there is a modicum of equity throughout the world with respect to rescheduling, both with respect to government and official credits and international credits and also with respect to the private credits because they will continue, I think, to play a very, very strong role with respect to the transfer of resources to all the countries of the world.

I would emphasize this:

So, in brief, I agree with the conclusion that there needs to be a strong IMF and a strong IMF can work to the benefit of all countries both lenders, creditors and borrowers and I think that what we really need to do is adjust ourselves within the first scenario say, so that the adjustment process can take place without accelerated worldwide inflation which is to nobody's benefit.

I read that into the record because so many things that have been done by this government and are being suggested by our socialist friends to the left are totally inconsistent with what we should be doing domestically in relation to the international climate that we have spelled out there. As Mr. Hilton indicated, our time is short. It is very important that we as a nation arrest some of the things that have been contributing certainly to our falling dollar, high interest rates, high inflation levels and our current account deficit with the rest of the world.

Let me first specifically contrast the type of budget we brought in on December 11 with the present budgetary position of this government. Rather than, for example, cut expenditures, this government between December and April, when the present Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought in his economic statement, increased expenditure levels in the country by $2.5 billion. He not only increased the level by $2.5 billion, but actually caused revenues to be lost by giving up certain of the tax revenue measures that our minister of finance, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), proposed in his budget. The loss was $1.2 billion. Therefore, between December and April, our budgetary position as far as surplus or deficit is concerned is worsened to the extent of $3.7 billion further in debt or deficit, or a 35 per cent increase.

When we come down to the actual financial requirements, this government has led us into the position where, rather than have in a current year a financial requirement estimated in the Clark government budget of $8.2 billion, we now find it is estimated at $11.7 billion, a 43 per cent jump in financial requirements between December and April of this year.

The reason I bring this point in as far as the debate on Bill C-5 is concerned is that we must not forget it is the International Monetary Fund which is really our lender, if you like, of last resort. That is the fund we are eventually going to have to turn to if we do not right our own ship domestically. Certainly Italy and Great Britain have done it.

The available credits that are open to Canada in the International Monetary Fund are almost $9 billion, and they may have to be called upon at some time. However, there is absolutely no need for us to have to turn to the International Monetary Fund now or in the future if we take some of the corrective steps that were anticipated in the Clark government budget brought in on December 11. That is why we must first of all accept that we are in a world economic condition that is very precarious. Of the nations that are playing an important role in that world economic condition, Canada is in one of the most serious financial positions.

It absolutely behooves this House not only to encourage but to make suggestions to the government as to how they can correct the irresponsible position which they led us into in earlier years. The reason I touch on the socialists to my left, who like to be called social democrats although I understand they do not have too much democracy in their party in Nova Scotia and certain other places—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Right on.

Mr. Stevens: The reason I want to touch on the socialists is that in their utter frustration, realizing they will never have an opportunity, certainly in this century, of bringing in a budget in Canada, they brought in what they called a shadow budget couched in typical socialist jargon. What could be better described as a socialist budget than a shadow budget?

If hon. members take the time to read some of the measures in that so-called shadow budget, they will see how absolutely irresponsible they are. With the international climate that we face, with a government which has lost control on spending in this country and is forcing us into a financial requirement 43 per cent higher than we felt was needed last December, we have the socialists egging them on to even more spending and a bigger deficit. That silly Keynesian type of rationale should should be left in the universities and practical people should be given a practical opportunity to run this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Don McGillivray in yesterday's Montreal Gazette put it rather well when he stated:

Canada's socialists might have got further in the 43 years since the Regina Manifesto if they had been as tough-minded in analysing their own proposals as they have been in exposing the sins of capitalism. A case in point is the "budget" brought down last week by Bob Rae, the financial critic for the New Democratic Party in Parliament.

What did they say in that so-called shadow budget? This is just a quick summary. They said they felt there should be higher federal spending, a larger deficit and higher taxes. Further, in their presentation of the federal government's accounts they felt there should be differentiation between expenditures which they call investments and expenditures which are not investments. So be it. What the New Democratic Party has done is this: they have looked over their old policies and brought them out again. There is very little, if anything, which is new in the pablum they spewed forth in the form of a so-called shadow budget.

Let us analyse the cost to Canadians should the government in a weak moment ever accept some of the things they are suggesting. For example, the net financial effect of the socialist plan would be to raise spending by a further $3.8 billion.

Mr. Broadbent: Wonderful!

Mr. Stevens: There. Eddie Broadbent said it, Mr. Speaker. He said, "That's wonderful!"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member knows, he must refer to members of the House by their constituencies.

Mr. Stevens: When the people of Oshawa see the rising unemployment in that town they will certainly remember the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and how little he is doing to correct the unemployment in his constituency.

As I was saying, the financial effect of this NDP plan would be to increase total spending, not by the $2.5 billion by which those who sit on the government side have increased it, but by a further $3.8 billion. Their proposals would raise the deficit by $2.1 billion, which would mean a staggering $16.3 billion deficit in this country if the NDP had its way.

I do not think it is fair only to be critical. Some of the socialist spending proposals, taken separately, could be in the public interest. It is difficult to argue against implementation of the Hall report, increased skills training, an energy bank or measures to improve small craft harbours and expand research and development work. In fact, a few of their spending proposals reflect priorities of the Progressive Conservative government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: There is an over-all problem, however, in that taken together, with no offsetting spending reductions in other areas, all the NDP plan does is increase government spending, thus leading to increased inflation. Any employment growth in the short term would very quickly dissipate in the absence of measures to encourage long-term permanent job creation in the private sector.

NDP policies would, in fact, discourage private sector investment. Increased taxes on capital gains would make it difficult for firms to raise new equity capital. The use of straight-line depreciation for tax purposes instead of the existing capital cost allowance would substantially reduce cash flow and would reduce the profitability of new ventures, thus reducing investment.

Let there be no doubt, there are only two ways to finance the deficit. The first is by printing money. This leads to an expansion of the money supply, resulting in increased inflation. The second way is by borrowing money, the line which the government has been left no alternative but to take. This crowds out private sector borrowing and thus raises interest rates. When the government borrows money its total interest costs go up. As a result, the deficit goes up. More money must then be borrowed to pay the interest on past debts. Whether the NDP decided to finance the increased deficit by printing money or by borrowing money or by a combination of two, the result would be higher interest rates or higher inflation or both. This is, presumably, the exact opposite of what they want to happen. Certainly it is the opposite of what is needed in the nation today.

I relate this to Bill C-5 because I believe that what the International Monetary Fund has been attempting to tell its various member nations is simply this: Get back to sounder management of your economies or we shall be obliged to come in.

It is not as though there were no examples of places where the socialists' experiments have been tried and found wanting. We know what has happened in Jamaica. We know the trouble that country has got into. At one time the socialists waxed eloquent about Manley and what a great job he was doing. Our little socialist, now the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), is, of course, a bosom pal of Mr. Manley. But what happened, unfortunately, to Jamaica—its problems as far as the international world is concerned and the terms being set by the International Monetary Fund—could happen here if we fail to act prudently. As far as the United Kingdom is concerned, we have an excellent example of the way in which the socialists, following much the same views as have been put forward by the NDP financial critic in this House, have led that country to a position of crisis, one, hopefully, which is now being solved by a Tory government.

The bill before us is a short bill, basically to increase our contribution to the International Monetary Fund. It is also an extremely important one because of its international ramifications. It allows us, for a brief moment at least, to reflect on the consequences which could happen to Canada if we fail to set our own economic house to rights: eventually, the rest of the world will right it for us. And this has nothing to do with whether the rest of the world believes in socialism or not. There is only one economic law and we have been breaking that economic law.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Having listened to that speech, Mr. Speaker, I am even more convinced that the position outlined by my hon. friend from Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) so ably on second reading was 100 per cent cogent. I say this because it differed by perhaps 180 degrees from what we have just heard from the hon. member, who sits literally and speaks metaphorically to my right.

However, I have not risen today to repeat that we support this bill but for a quite different purpose. Given the answers we received from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in response to our questions on the pipeline and the ruling by the speaker earlier today, I have no option, bearing in mind the seriousness of this issue to the energy future of Canada, but to move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell):

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Nielsen: Shame! Irresponsible!

Mr. Stevens: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

• (1630)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A motion to adjourn the House is in order, and it is not debatable.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Broadbent), which was negatived on the following division:

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

AMENDMENT TO ASSERT PRIMACY OVER OTHER FEDERAL LEGISLATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) moved: That Bill C-214 an act to amend the Official Languages Act (supremacy of the act) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

He said: Madam Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-214 is to assert the primacy of the Official Languages Act over all other acts and regulations of the Parliament and Government of Canada in order to emphasize its status as fundamental Canadian legislation.

If there is one principle, Mr. Speaker, on which this House must be and is, in fact, unanimous, it surely must be that of the equality of the two official languages. The consensus reached on the Official Languages Act, when it was passed in the summer of 1969, is sufficient proof of that assertion. The willingness of the Canadian majority to accept the principle of linguistic equality has made remarkable progress during the last decade.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. If hon. members want to hold private conversations, I suggest they do so in the lobbies. The hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I appreciate your call to order. We therefore have reason to say we are pleased with the progress made. Still, that satisfaction must be tempered by the fact that problems have yet to be solved. I am happy with the fact that our official language policies have remained consistent during the last two years, and this is evidence of the high degree of unanimity among us despite the changes of government.

One may wonder about the priority which that principle of linguistic equality should hold in the scale of values of our Parliament. In other words, should linguistic equality be the cornerstone of Canadian federalism, or just one of its many assets? The government has already answered that question both by way of the document entitled "A Time for Action" and by way of the constitutional changes we have proposed to enshrine linguistic rights in a renewed constitution. For some of us, linguistic equality is one of the main principles of our Canadian federation which must be recognized in a new constitution in order to be protected against any infringement. The supremacy of the principle of linguistic equality, at the very least in terms of federal legislation, is therefore unanimously recognized on the government side and, I trust, on the side of the opposition.

Some will say, Mr. Speaker, that we should wait till the constitutional debate is over before asserting and guaranteeing the supremacy of that principle. Can we allow ourselves, coming out as we do of a referendum campaign bearing on Quebec sovereignty, to exacerbate passions between Francophones and Anglophones with another issue comparable to that of Air Canada and that of les Gens de l'air?

• (1720)

[English]

The federal Parliament has the required political means to prove its good faith in matters of linguistic equality and it must act immediately in all matters within its own jurisdiction. It would suffice to modify the Official Languages Act, as suggested in Bill C-214, by indicating clearly that the linguistic equality rule set forth in section 2 of the act has priority over all other acts and regulations of the Parliament and Government of Canada, unless it is expressly declared that the other acts and regulations operate notwithstanding the linguistic equality rule in section 2 of the Official Languages Act.

This amendment has at least three striking advantages. First of all, it solemnly asserts the fundamental character of the principle of linguistic equality in all matters under federal jurisdiction. In addition, it does not deprive Parliament or the government, whichever the case may be, of the possibility of overruling this restrictive principle if it judges that a more important right or interest should prevail. Such would be the case in matters of public security, for example. Finally, it compels the government to assume its responsibilities before the people and before Parliament, thus dispensing the courts from playing their current role of scapegoats and having to decide, instead of the legislators, whether security, for example, has priority over linguistic equality.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Official Languages Act, as it exists now, does not prevail over any other ordinary statute of the Canadian Parliament. Regardless of its vital importance, it is just a simple and ordinary legislation which can be thwarted by just about any other legislation. As a matter of fact, this rule of interpretation was clearly confirmed, with respect to section 2 of the Official Languages Act, by the Federal Court of Appeal when, in the case of the Quebec Association des Gens de l'air, it handed down the following ruling:

It should not be inferred from the text of the Official Languages Act that Parliament meant that this power (to regulate the language or languages of communication for air navigation) be governed by the provisions of that act. Only a specific intent clearly expressed by the legislator could justify such a conclusion.

When it adopted the Official Languages Act, the Canadian Parliament officially recognized the linguistic equality of the French and English languages in every area under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Parliament and government. It must now, as the courts urge it to, express clearly its intention of making linguistic equality an overriding principle so that in case of conflict between any act or regulation of Parliament or of the Government of Canada and the principle of linguistic equality as expressed in section 2 of the Official Languages Act, the courts as well as federal institutions will recognize the supremacy of section 2. How can it be that after more than a decade since the enactment of the Official Languages Act Parliament and the Canadian government still have provisions which contradict the spirit and the letter of this basic legislation?

How can Canadians take their national Parliament seriously as far as linguistic equality is concerned when they see, for example, first of all, that Criminal Code sections 555 and 556 restrict their right to a bilingual jury to Quebec and Manitoba; second, that certain provisions of the Bank Act, specifically sections 82(3)(d), 89(4)(a)(ii) and 89(4)(b)i) restrict to Quebec the requirement for a bank to advertise in French and English newspapers the sale of seized property; third, that several provisions of the Railway Act, for instance, sections 207, 235, 242, 243, 294 and 366—there are many—make it mandatory only in Quebec that the notices the railways must give the public about timetables and other pertinent data be bilingual; fourth, that section 159 of the Winding-up Act provide for the publication of notices to creditors in newspapers of both official languages again only in Quebec.

It is obvious to me, Mr. Speaker, that such legislative provisions which are still part of our statutes in 1980 and which result in confining bilingualism to the province of Quebec only constitute an infringement of the Official Languages Act which is all the more serious because it is committed by Parliament itself and it is not the first time the problem has been raised in the House and hon. members made aware of it.

For at least the last three or four years several bills were introduced each session to amend those legislative provisions not consistent with the Official Languages Act as well as amend the Official Languages Act itself, each time to no avail. For instance, someone could challenge the right of railways to publish notices in French outside Quebec and on the basis of sections 242 and 243 of that act, challenge the right of a railway company to publish in both official languages timetables on its lines or notices about train arrivals and departures. For example, I quote subsection 3 of section 243:

Such notices, shall, in the province of Quebec, be written in the English and French languages, and, in the other provinces, in English.

[English]

Parliament has asserted in the Official Languages Act its will to grant the French and English languages "equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of Parliament and the Government of Canada". Further, in order to confirm that this declaration of equality was not to be limited to the languages used in providing services to the public but, that it applied as well to the languages used at work, Parliament adopted in June, 1973 a resolution which stated clearly that "public servants should, as a general proposition . . . be able to carry out their duties in the Public Service of Canada in the official language of their choice".

The application of these principles of linguistic equality is an arduous business and gives rise to opposition and difficulties, as the Commissioner of Official Languages tirelessly points out in each of his annual reports. Despite and especially because of that, Parliament must today prove that it is determined to enshrine the principle of the equality of official languages in all of its legislative measures and in any regulatory action taken by the government. In other words, the principle of linguistic equality must have priority over all others unless, by exception, it be expressly declared in the legislation or in the regulations that linguistic equality cannot, for very serious motives, have precedence.

Mr. Speaker, pending the results of the constitutional reform, the federal Parliament can act immediately on all matters that come under its jurisdiction. In these troubled times when the Canadian crisis is more acute than ever and when Francophones demand the same treatment as their Anglophone fellow citizens, it is incumbent on Parliament to assure them that the act meets those requirements.

In my view, further provisions designed to ensure the paramountcy of the Official Languages Act would achieve this goal in a decisive manner. This is an unequivocal declaration which, while stressing the fundamental nature of this act, repeals the other federal legislative or regulatory provisions which are now or may eventually be at variance with the principle of linguistic equality set forth in section 2 of the Official Languages Act.

Mr. Speaker, even if the constitutional crisis had not reached the climax it has reached today, Parliament should hasten to ensure the paramountcy of the Official Languages Act. In my view, in order to show proof of its good faith in linguistic matters, of its regard for consistency and of the necessity to guarantee the Canadian people the most basic equality in the eyes of the law, Parliament has no other alternative.

The election of a separatist party in Quebec, the referendum held by that party on the issue of political sovereignty and the coming election are so many factors which prompt the federal Parliament to act immediately. Mr. Speaker, the least we can do, in spite of some hesitation in approving this private member's bill, Bill C-214, is to refer the matter for further consideration to the new committee set up by Parliament to study the annual report of the Commissioner of Official Languages, which is to make recommendations to both Houses. If there is some hesitation in giving unanimous support to this bill, Mr. Speaker, I would be ready to agree that the matter be referred to the committee for further study, and as my time is somewhat limited because of the vote, I conclude my remarks expressing the hope that other members will give me their support.

[English]

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would agree to withdraw his bill, I would move on behalf of members on this side:

That the subject matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Possibly that would be acceptable to other hon. members in the chamber.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to talk on this subject as a Francophone from another area of the country. However, the hon. member and myself are neighbours in Ottawa. It might be possible, for instance, that because of our experiences and our requirements in the rest of the country, the very narrow principle of this bill might be prejudicial to us rather than helpful. However, I wish to draw the attention of hon. members to something which happened rather suddenly, and I do not even know if the hon. member remembers that he is on a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate that will study the question. It is precisely because it is something that was studied and decided during the previous Parliament and which is now in the implementation stage, the reports of the Commissioner of Official Languages, and I quote the Votes and Proceedings of May 23 as follows:

On motion of Mr. Pinard—

—government leader in the House—

—seconded by—

—his colleague—

—Mr. Lapointe, it was ordered—That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to consider the report of the commissioner of Official Languages, 1978, tabled Tuesday, February 20, 1979, (Sessional Paper No. 304-1/301) and the report of the commissioner of Official Languages, 1979, tabled Tuesday, April 22, 1980—

And we have the reference number of that sessional paper.

Later, on June 9, the House passed the following motion proposed by Mr. Pinard, seconded by Mr. MacEachen, and I quote:

Official Languages Act

That the following members do represent this House at the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons appointed to consider the reports of the Commissioner of Official Languages: Messrs. Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe), Corbin, Gauthier, Herbert, Joyal, Kilgour, La Salle, Nystrom and Stollery.

Some members I see here, let it be noted, might want to participate in this debate. But is that the purpose of this bill? Well, I wonder for my part whether this should not also be referred to the same joint committee. I say that with the text and the recommendations of Mr. Yalden, the Commissioner of Official Languages, we could now consider the problems raised by the hon. member, and I would certainly agree to be on it.

The suggestion was made by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) that the subject matter of the bill of the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) should be referred not to our broadcasting committee but to the joint committee, and then we would have the whole thing to consider, and indeed I think a joint committee of the House and the Senate has the advantage of not being under the pressure of time.

Quite often, we have thoughts that have not matured enough, reflections made without enough consideration for the whole of the country. And here I must warn particularly my colleagues in this House from the province of Quebec. I say in all sincerity that, notwithstanding the fact that I am also a Francophone Canadian, that is a Canadian of Francophone origin and from western Canada, the attitudes in that part of the country are not necessarily the attitudes in this part of the country, not the ideas of central Canada. Indeed, here they want signs to be bilingual everywhere, French and English to be on a equal footing everywhere.

Mr. Speaker, my dear friends and colleagues are not aware of the difficulty we had convincing people in 100 per cent English-speaking communities to accept that any instructions or signs in post offices or elsewhere, such as in the Canadian National railway stations, at the gate of the National Parks or in the mountains either in Alberta or British Columbia, be written in both languages even though not even two per cent of the people who go there would read the French version. These are some of the problems we have seen. As for generalizing the use of French, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier knows that we share the same objectives.

However, perhaps I do not share his views concerning the means to be used. We have spent and wasted perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars in the last decade, and I am thinking about the language program for public servants. This has failed. We simply have to look at the people we know who have gone through the Language School. Some of them have been able to learn the second language, and they are very happy to have done so. However, for others, it was simply torture. First, this has made people hate the language; second, this has cost a lot of money with which we could have achieved results much quicker by asking the co-operation of the provinces to train French teachers. There is a shortage of teachers in the country, a great shortage of qualified people—and I underline the word "qualified"—who can teach French to our young people.

I know quite well that in my area of the country, several school boards have not been able to obtain trained personnel, because it is not the first person named Jean, Pierre, Paul or Marie, with apologies to the ladies who are named Marie, who can teach a second language to children. You must start with the young children if you want to make progress. We have done so in some schools and considerable progress has been made. I am happy to note that there has been some progress, perhaps not as much as we would have liked, but there has been some progress. However, I would not want someone to impose something which might go against the objective of this bill, and I hope that my friend the sponsor will permit us to associate with the suggestion made by his colleague to refer the subject matter of this bill, not to the committee which deals with communications, but rather to the joint committee which was established and of which he is a member with some of our distinguished colleagues who are openminded and who might find, perhaps not right now, but at least in the near future, the means to meet the objective we all have, I hope, because there is no question that every party in this House supports the Official Languages Act. Certainly there is no question from this side of the House as to principle. Quite possibly we may object from time to time to the way it is implemented. Although someone may approve of medical science and recognize that some dentist is supposed to help him, this does not preclude his objecting to the way that dentist goes about it, especially if he breaks a tooth.

● (1740)

In that spirit, Mr. Speaker, if I may move an amendment to that on the order paper accepting the motion made earlier, that the subject of the bill be referred to the Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons established on May 23 with members named by the House on June 9, we would be ready to accept the motion.

Mr. Stollery: Mr. Speaker, we are in agreement on this side of the House.

Mr. Lambert, seconded by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) moved:

That the motion be amended by striking out all words following the term "That" and substituting the following therefor: Bill C-214, an act to amend the Official Languages Act (supremacy of the Act), be not now read a second time, but that the order be discharged, the bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on Official Languages.

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I will take just one minute of the time of the House to indicate that we too are in agreement with this. I point out to the House that the special committee is meeting anyway for an organizational meeting on Thursday, July 17. I think it makes a considerable amount of sense to refer this to the special mixed committee on official languages in which we are studying the Official Languages Act and the application of the act in this country.

I do not want to go on at great length, but I just want to say that our party is one which has been a supporter and promoter of the Official Languages Act—

[Translation]

—since 1969, for 11 years now, and we still support the Official Languages Act in this country. In my capacity as a member of the special committee, I will represent the New Democratic Party to support all suggestions that are fair to the French and English languages in Canada.

[English]

I think there are many things which have to be ironed out regarding the Official Languages Act. The hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is making some excellent suggestions. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) made some other excellent suggestions, and rather than repeat all those things and rehash all of the arguments here in the House, I will save my comments for the committee meetings. I just want to indicate once again our party's support for the principles and the thrust of linguistic equality in our country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on the amendment.

[Translation]

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment moved by Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) agreed to.

Order discharged, bill withdrawn and the subject matter of Bill C-214 referred to the Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on Official Languages.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Shall I call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 5.45 p.m. the House took recess.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO INCREASE AMOUNT OF SPECIAL DRAWING RIGHTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières (for Mr. MacEachen) that Bill C-5, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

FORT NELSON INDIAN RESERVE MINERALS REVENUE SHARING ACT

MEASURE TO IMPLEMENT AGREEMENT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-26, to implement an agreement between Her Majesty in right of the province of British Columbia and Her Majesty in right of Canada respecting the sharing of revenues from the exploitation of minerals in the Fort Nelson Indian Reserve, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There are two motions standing on the order paper at the report stage of Bill C-26. Motion No. 1 is procedurally correct, and it is the Chair's intention to put the motion to the House.

Motion No. 2, standing in the name of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-De-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), seems to be out of order on the ground that it goes beyond the scope of the bill. The long title of the bill reads as follows:

An act to implement an agreement between Her Majesty in right of the province of British Columbia and Her Majesty in right of Canada respecting the sharing of revenues from the exploitation of minerals in the Fort Nelson Indian Reserve.

I would refer the hon. member to citation 773(1) of Beauchesne's fifth edition which is as follows:

An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the bill, beyond its scope—

For that reason, regrettably, I cannot accept No. 2 and I must rule it out of order.

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved:

That Bill C-26, an act to implement an agreement between Her Majesty in right of the province of British Columbia and Her Majesty in right of Canada respecting the sharing of revenues from the exploitation of minerals in the Fort Nelson Indian Reserve, be amended in clause 2 by striking out lines 14 and 15 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"on May 29, 1980, and recorded as document number 321-7/6."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Loiselle) agreed to.

[Translation]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-26, to implement an agreement between Her Majesty in right of the province of British Columbia and Her Majesty in right of Canada respecting the sharing of revenues from the exploitation of minerals in the Fort Nelson Indian Reserve, as amended, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Should the motion not be put by someone who is present?

Mr. Nielsen: It should be put by a minister who is present.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion is put by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). That is how it should read.

Mr. Knowles: That is better.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a brief explanation of the purpose of this bill. The Fort Nelson Agreement is aimed at allowing the Indians of this locality the possibility of maximizing the revenue it can draw from the exploitation of minerals on the reserve. The act gives the governments of Canada and British Columbia a good opportunity to adopt measures which would favour the social and economic development of the Fort Nelson Band.

Among the 573 Indian bands in Canada, those who have the good fortune or the opportunity to benefit directly from the development of resources on their reserves are rare indeed. The report on the condition of Indians published on June 24 states in a striking way that we must increase the financial resources of Indian bands to allow them to improve their social and economic conditions. Now, last January an agreement was reached in the wake of negotiations held between the Fort Nelson Indian band and the government of British Columbia. Recently, the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development had the opportunity to study this agreement of which we can be proud for, despite the contentious issues surrounding aboriginal rights, this is an agreement which was negotiated willingly and in good faith between the Indians of Fort Nelson and the provincial government, and the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development concluded that this agreement is truly in the interests and to the advantage of the Fort Nelson Indians.

● (2010)

Therefore, I recommend that hon. members here tonight adopt this bill on third reading. The bill will provide the Indians of Fort Nelson with considerable amounts which will certainly enable them to take their interests at hand—and this is the basic objective of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—and to decide their own priorities and finance them through the revenues derived from the exploration of natural gas on their reserve.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that my colleagues from the Progressive Conservative Party as well as from the New Democratic Party will be very brief tonight and give their approval to this bill. But I want to mention the excellent support given me by the member from Fort Nelson who supported this bill and I am convinced that such action should not go unnoticed. This is why I say this tonight.

Finally, I should like to point out simply to the House that this agreement applies only to the Fort Nelson Band and that it should not be interpreted at any time by anyone as creating a prejudice as far as the interpretation of native rights in this country is concerned. We ask you to ratify a very specific project, and this bill should not be perceived nor understood as having a wider scope. This is an agreement between the Fort Nelson Band and the government of British Columbia, the band being represented by the Government of Canada. This is why I want to repeat in a very formal way to native associations of the country that if we are fostering this project, if we are encouraging this kind of negotiation between a band and the different levels of government, it remains that it expresses the wish, the will of Fort Nelson Indians, a will which we respect and a behaviour for which we should congratulate them, considering the excellent results that agreement will have for each and every citizen in Fort Nelson.

[English]

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to echo the remarks of the parliamentary secretary. I would be remiss if I did not stand in my place tonight and express some appreciation on behalf of my constituents regarding the manner and the expediency with which this bill proceeded through the House, the co-operation of all parties, and indeed the work of the committee. I want to return a compliment to the parliamentary secretary who can take some credit for the manner in which this bill was handled, for giving recognition to the members of the Fort Nelson Indian Band and their solicitors and for producing for the committee and its consideration a bill which was well thought out and an argument which left no doubt.

Some very serious reservations were expressed before committee by some Indian groups, particularly the National Indian Brotherhood and the Union of British Columbia Indian Chiefs. Indeed, I have had some concerns as well which bothered me throughout the negotiations that were carried on for a period of about five years. These were concerns respecting the implications that this agreement would have on the general idea of claims negotiations particularly in the province of British Columbia where, as all members know, the concept of aboriginal rights or special rights for native people has not yet been accepted. Of course we were all concerned that the claim, as it had been negotiated between the band and the provincial government, in some way could prejudice other claims that were being considered, indeed one particular claim before the courts in British Columbia, namely, that involving the former Fort St. John or Montney Band, now known as the Doig and the Blueberry Bands.

Because of the nature of the agreement and the fact that indeed it is the first time the province of British Columbia has come to the bargaining table and accepted in some way the concept of special rights for native people, all committee members agreed it was important that this bill should proceed in a manner which would not prejudice or injure in some way the agreement reached between the province and the Fort Nelson Indian Band.

The concerns raised by the National Indian Brotherhood, my concerns, and indeed those of the chiefs of the Fort Nelson Indian Band and their lawyers were particularly regarding the ownership of the resource. The agreement, as it is written, indicated that the province of British Columbia agreed to share 50-50 with the Indians in Fort Nelson the revenues or profits derived from the harvest of natural gas from three particular valves which are on the reserve. So, the province agreed to share with the band. In the view of the National Indian Brotherhood, it would have preferred if the agreement had read that the Indians were sharing with the province, in other words, vesting the ownership of the resource with the Indians. As we all know, it would not have been possible to negotiate an agreement of this kind with British Columbia which as I said earlier has not yet accepted the concept of aboriginal rights or title.

Also there was the question of arbitration procedures which involved the trusteeship of the federal minister. If something should go wrong with the agreement—and indeed that is the case with the James Bay agreement—the Indians in Fort Nelson could not initiate by themselves any arbitration proceedings. The federal minister or the trustee would have to do that on their behalf. I do not want to be unkind to this particular minister, but all his predecessors were equally guilty. The trusteeship, particularly in the case of native people in British Columbia, has not been a very honourable one. After all, if we look at the fact that this is the first agreement of its kind in British Columbia, it says very little for the trustee who is responsible for assuring that the legitimate rights of native people throughout our country are being respected and recognized. Certainly that is not true in British Columbia, nor is it true in any other part of the country at this point.

There are some peculiarities in British Columbia respecting court decisions which have set some precedents, and some commissions that date back to the turn of the century. First of all, the treaty was negotiated then. At the turn of the century in 1914 a royal commission tabled certain things in the province of British Columbia which are peculiar to that province. There is also this infamous Privy Council Order No. 1036 whereby in the province of British Columbia the government, for the purpose of establishing and maintaining public works, can in fact expropriate up to one fifth or 20 per cent of Indian reserves. That is unique to the province of British Columbia.

We were all concerned about that measure, but having regard to this peculiarity it was recognized by all members in the committee that it is a landmark agreement and we should, for the moment, be happy with it as it is.

I have a particular concern about the bill. It may well behoove us to recognize the standard clause which we build into all agreements of this kind. I refer to section 17 of the agreement, which reads:

No member of the House of Commons shall be admitted to any share or part of this agreement or to any benefit arising therefrom.

I have no intention of becoming a member of the Fort Nelson Indian Band, although it would be a very lucrative proposition. What I am concerned about is that no member of the Fort Nelson Indian Band cannot in the future ever become a member of Parliament, because he would be a beneficiary forever of this agreement. It works both ways, and that is to me a very serious concern. I do not know any of my constituents who are members of the Fort Nelson Indian Band who want to challenge me for my position but, nevertheless, if he wanted to, he could not because he is a beneficiary of this bill. Hon. members should take note of that clause, and we should attempt to avoid such clauses in future bills.

I would like to outline a brief history of the agreement. There are roughly 300 members of the Fort Nelson Indian Band. They belong to about 35 to 40 families. The agreement provides for a prepayment of royalties and profits that have been taken from the reserve since the wells came into operation. At the present time there is roughly $17 million deposited by the province in a bank account and it is drawing interest. That account has been transferred to the trusteeship of the federal minister.

The calculations over the 20-year period would indicate that there will be roughly $100 million available to the Fort Nelson Indian Band through sharing in this resource. Each family will receive roughly $2 million to $2.5 million through their share. Indeed, for the moment there is no financial hardship which should inhibit my constituents in the Fort Nelson Indian Band from achieving a higher degree of respect and self-determination. In fact they have already made decisions which are in line with recommendations I have made. One of my recommendations was that there should be a corporation and an investment fund established with proper management to ensure that this money will be available to the present generation and future generations as well.

The Fort Nelson Indians are very happy with this particular agreement. They do not feel that they have sold their aboriginal rights, whatever they may be, which are outlined in Treaty Eight. Nevertheless, no one has ever arrived at a definition of what aboriginal title means in this particular context. The natives in Fort Nelson do not feel as though they have sold anything at this point, but that they have reached an agreement which is in line with their legitimate rights and aspirations.

I, like the parliamentary secretary, would at this point propose to the House that this bill be passed without further delay.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-26 formalizes a surrender of natural resources on an Indian reserve to the government of British Columbia. It represents a settlement that is the result of a 20-year struggle by the Fort Nelson Indian Band with the government of British Columbia to obtain a share of the revenue from the exploitation of minerals on the reserve.

The people of the Fort Nelson Indian Band, by referendum, have indicated that this settlement is acceptable to them. They want this bill to pass, because without it they would get nothing. On that basis I will vote in favour of this bill, but I will do so with misgivings because this bill represents one more piecemeal buying-off of Indian claims.

This bill does not embody the kind of settlement which other Indian bands and Indian organizations see as being necessary if they are to get out of the kind of poverty trap that some members of Parliament bewail in a ritualistic manner every so many months. People from neighbouring Indian bands at Blueberry and Doig River have said that they do not want to stand in the way of their neighbours at Fort Nelson and that they do not want to oppose this bill and prevent the settlement from going through. But at the same time they are very uneasy about what kind of precedent this bill will set. In spite of what the parliamentary secretary might say, and in spite of any clauses which may be written into this bill, it does have that kind of effect, that it is one more precedent along the lines of the very unsatisfactory James Bay agreement.

Since 1973 this government has given some recognition to at least the concept of native Indian land claims and aboriginal rights, but the highly touted office of native claims has not been successful in settling these claims. Indeed, the Indian and Inuit people of Canada see that office as a stumbling block rather than as a help in the settlement of their claims. Indian people, denied a proper recognition and settlement of their rights by this kind of bureaucratic stonewalling, are becoming frustrated. The tragic poverty of Indian people, denied their rightful place in our society and their rightful wealth as the first inhabitants of our society, leads Bands to accept settlements which are less than satisfactory, such as we have embodied in Bill C-26.

This bill offers a cash settlement that on the face of it is very generous. However, we must remember that this cash settlement is in exchange for the denial of rights as well as for the sale of minerals. Bill C-26 will make it possible for the people of the Fort Nelson Indian Band to assimilate on fairly good terms with the larger non-Indian society. From my point of view Bill C-26 does not offer much hope that the people of the Fort Nelson Indian Band will be able to develop their own identity, their own culture, and their own economy. It leads to assimilation, not to development.

Indian organizations like the National Indian Brotherhood and the Union of British Columbia Indian Chiefs have indicated that they want settlements of their claims which will allow them to develop their own economic base. In turn, once they have this base, they will be able to develop their total society. Perhaps I can illustrate this by reading from the Nishga Declaration, a statement from the Nishga tribal council in northwestern British Columbia:

> We as Nishgas, are living in a world where dynamic initiatives must be taken to achieve self-determination especially in respect of the natural resources of the Naas Valley, in order to control our own process of development within the larger Canadian society and to make decisions that affect our lives and the lives of our children. We realize that our struggle for self-determination will be a difficult one, but we refuse to believe that it is in vain, if governments and the Nishga people agree to their mutual responsibility for that growth and development. Nishga self-determination of resource development within the Naas Valley is the economic base that will allow for self-determination of the other aspects of modern twentieth century society that makes up this Canada of ours.
> Also, we, the Nishga people, believe that both the government of B.C., and the Government of Canada must be prepared to negotiate with the Nishgas on the basis that we, as Nishgas, are inseparable from our land, that it cannot be bought or sold in exchange for 'extinguishing of title'.

● (2030)

This statement is typical of Indian statements from across the country; it indicates the direction we must go to settlements and cash respecting aboriginal rights. The Indian people want a recognition of their rights, not a real estate deal that will buy them off.

Indian people do not want a life of clipping coupons any more than they want a life collecting welfare. They want a chance to develop healthy societies for themselves and for their children.

The people of the Fort Nelson Band have had a long struggle. After 20 years they think that Bill C-26 represents the best agreement they can reach. Considering the negative attitude of the British Columbia government, and the indifference of the federal government, they may be right. But we must condemn the Government of Canada for making this unsatisfactory settlement seem so desirable and so necessary to these people.

Dealing with more specific issues, this bill has several shortcomings. Although it deals with Indian resources, it is a bilateral agreement between the governments of British Columbia and of Canada. This, of course, reflects the lack of standing Indian bands have in Canadian law—a bill dealing with their resources does not include them. This points to the need for Indian involvement in constitutional talks. The time is past when they should be looked on as wards of the federal government. The time has come when they should be able to speak for themselves and sign for themselves. This becomes crucial when we look at the provisions for arbitration in section 12 of the attached agreement.

This section gives both British Columbia and Canada the right to apply for arbitration in the case of disagreement. But how about the people most affected by the bill? What happens if the people of Fort Nelson are not satisfied with the way in which the agreement is being implemented? There is nothing in this bill that gives them any recourse at all. They must depend upon the good offices of the federal government. When we look at the record of that government over the last 113 years, we cannot be very confident.

Last year this House unanimously approved a resolution calling for an audit of the government's handling of Indian trust funds. That audit has not been forthcoming in spite of the motion, and we are being told that there are difficulties. Indeed, many of the trust funds have not been audited at all since 1942. No wonder Indian organizations no longer trust the federal government. There has been no audit since 1942, Mr. Speaker. The government, however, has the presumption to tell the Indian bands that they have not properly accounted for the funds given to them. The House of Commons, supposedly speaking for all the people of Canada, now faces the same kind of stonewalling that the Indian people had to face when they asked for an accounting. We passed a motion asking for this audit but all we are told is that there are difficulties.

Speaking at the All Chiefs Conference at the beginning of May, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) made a commitment that he would tell the chiefs how the interest rates for Indian trust moneys were calculated. He promised to show a comparison of the rate for these Indian trust funds with the rates paid by chartered banks. The minister promised that this would be ready in two months. Although that time has passed, no such information has been forthcoming. In the face of this kind of indifference, incompetence, and unaccountability, how can we have confidence in an arbitration process that gives the Indian people no access, but instead tells them to rely on the good offices of the federal government?

As I said earlier, I will vote for this bill because it is what the people of Fort Nelson Indian Band want. It represents the best deal they feel they can negotiate. But I regret its inadequacies and I urge the government to clear the way for Indian participation in constitutional talks, a proper recognition and entrenchment of Indian rights and Indian governments. If that happened, inadequate bills such as this which do not touch the deeper problems will no longer be necessary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate the two chiefs of the Fort Nelson Band who had the courage to take the initiative and get this agreement in place that is now before this House as Bill C-26.

The hon. member for the New Democratic Party who spoke said that the Fort Nelson Band was selling out their aboriginal rights for a cash settlement. That is not so, Mr. Speaker. He also said the Fort Nelson Band agreement would give them the funds to assimilate themselves with the rest of society. That is definitely not so.

I should like to point out that three years ago the Department of Justice sought a number of legal opinions to see if, indeed, the Fort Nelson Indian Band had claims to the natural resources that existed in their area. The opinions were to the effect that this was not the case. A private law firm in Vancouver concurred with those opinions and told the two chiefs and the band that this was not the case and that they indeed probably did not have any claim. The two chiefs then approached the British Columbia government and negotiated what is, in essence, a settlement out of court. I think they are to be commended for this.

We, the Canadian people, have said over and over again that the Indian people have to learn to run their own affairs. This is a prime example of Indian people taking the initiative and running their own affairs. They have settled out of court for an immediate cash settlement and also for a partnership with the British Columbia government in the development of resources on the reserve. It goes beyond the reserve, because they will receive 50 per cent of the revenue. In other words, they have entered a 50-50 partnership with the British Columbia government. I think they are to be commended for this.

This agreement can set a precedent, Mr. Speaker, but not one that is going to jeopardize other agreements. The bill has set limits in order to ensure that this will not happen, but it will open a new avenue that will result in many more agreements being reached with different bands across Canada because of the foresight, courage, and integrity of these two Indian chiefs in their approach to this problem.

I support this bill wholeheartedly, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

MUNICIPAL GRANTS ACT, 1980

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-4, an act respecting grants to municipalities, provinces and other bodies exercising functions of local government that levy real property taxes, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): As hon. members are aware, there are seven motions standing on the order paper at the report stage of Bill C-4. Motions 1, 2, 3, 5, 6 and 7 seem to be procedurally acceptable, and it is the Chair's intention to propose these motions to the House separately.

Grants to Municipalities

Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) seems to be out of order on the grounds that it seeks to add an additional annual grant to municipalities which is not contemplated in the royal recommendation attached to the bill. May I refer the hon. member to citation 540 of Beauchesne's fifth edition and Standing Order 62 in this regard. The hon. member for Edmonton East may wish to offer argument on the procedural acceptability of this motion and, if so, I will recognize him for that purpose.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I have been caught with my notes in my office rather than here, so I will speak from memory.

With regard to Bill C-4—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is seeking the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As a convenience to the hon. member, I wonder if we could not take the motions in order? Let us do motions 1, 2 and 3 and then the question of order on No. 4 can come when we get to it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): If that suggestion is agreeable to the hon. members, we will proceed in that fashion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I think I can speak on this matter without necessarily having my notes before me. The first thing I would like to say is that we were very pleased to have the opportunity in committee to hear a number of witnesses from the municipal level of government presenting to the committee the very excellent case with regard to their views for receiving what might be called grants in lieu of taxes for federal property in their constituencies in relation to the services which they provide to the federal government for their facilities. There were, of course, several recommendations made by most of the people presenting submissions to us. One of the most strident ones was the fact that the minister was given arbitrary powers to decide matters of technical importance, for example, assessment procedures. As a result, we have proposed a series of amendments in committee which we hope to bring before the House. Nevertheless, the minister was very accommodating in indicating to us that he would be prepared to set up a committee to review the nature of submissions made in revising the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I would draw to the attention of the hon. member that I invited him to put any arguments he had with regard to the acceptability of his amendment which we thought was not acceptable. If not, we will proceed with the bill on clause 1. If that is the wish of the hon. member, he will be recognized.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, on the suggested amendment which has been ruled out of order, I have already withdrawn that in committee. In fact, that proposed amendment is already withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Therefore, is it the wish of the hon. member to withdraw motion No. 4?

Mr. Yurko: It is withdrawn.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Yurko) withdrawn.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-4, an act respecting grants to municipalities, provinces and other bodies exercising functions of local government that levy real property taxes, be amended in clause 2 by striking out line 12 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

" 'assessed value' means the value attributed annually".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, in concluding my remarks I will speak to the first amendment and the next several amendments and indicate, as I was saying, that the minister was accommodating in committee and said that he would set up a committee to review the suggested amendments. Therefore I made a statement in committee that I would withdraw amendments 1 and 2 on the basis that the minister would give us the assurance that the government would bring this bill back to the committee in one year's time after the committee which he had established, in consultation with representation from the municipalities, would review the suggested amendments.

On the basis of the minister giving us this assurance in committee, which we expected he would do in the House—although I notice he is not here—we would be prepared to withdraw the various amendments we had suggested. I am surprised the minister is not in the House.

Mr. Pinard: He is coming.

Mr. Yurko: Again, on that basis we had agreed that if the minister were setting up his committee, to review this matter and the suggested amendments, not only by members on this side of the House but indeed by members from various municipalities making submissions to the committee, that if he gave us this assurance on behalf of the government that this committee would sit for a full year and bring the bill back in the year, we would be prepared to withdraw the various amendments. This was stated in committee, and it is again stated here in the House.

I find it difficult to put an argument forth when the minister is not even in the House. I say again that I am finding myself in some difficulty without being able to speak directly to the minister and getting his assurance that he gave us in committee. We wanted the same assurance presented to us in the House on behalf of the government rather than just on behalf of the minister. On that basis we were prepared to accept the bill and move it through third reading and therefore expedite the bill accordingly. I am waiting for the minister to hear his assurances before going any further.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have had a conversation with the minister, and he did not tell me that he had any intention of making a statement in the House on behalf of the government giving formal assurance that these amendments or part of this bill would be reconsidered in committee. He has no intention of making such a formal undertaking here tonight. In these circumstances, the hon. member might as well try to justify his amendments. I am informed that the minister should be here in a few moments, and if there is any change in what I have just said, which is not very likely, I am certain that the minister will not hesitate to rise on a point of order to elaborate on what he told the hon. member. However, once again, I am convinced that the minister did not give any formal assurance that, on behalf of the government, he would undertake to reconsider the bill in committee within a year if the amendments are withdrawn. He could perhaps lead the hon. member to hope that he would be willing to suggest that the government reconsider some of the provisions of the bill, but as for providing formal assurance that the bill would be reconsidered in committee within a year, the minister did not tell me that he had done so. For my part, I am not prepared to give such an assurance to the hon. member on behalf of the government. However, it is not too late. No damage has been done, and if the hon. member wants to try to justify his amendments, we are prepared to hear him.

• (2050)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I have heard the request by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) and the reply by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). If the hon. member for Edmonton East wishes to be recognized, it will be to discuss the amendment he has before this House.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order rather than to participate in the discussion. It is with regard to the assurances we were given in committee. The minister not only assured us in committee that he was prepared to set up a committee and report back the findings of that committee to the standing committee in a year, but in fact released a formal news release to that effect which he distributed in committee and released to the members accordingly. On my point of order, I intend to disagree with this statement of the House leader. I wish the minister were here to assure us of the procedure he set forth in committee with regard to reviewing this bill in committee in a year.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: On the same point, Mr. Speaker, this is a new element the hon. member is introducing, unless I misunderstood him the first time. What he is now saying is that the minister did not give him the assurance that the committee in question would reconsider those amendments or the bill or part of the bill within a year. The hon. member says that in committee the minister stated, which would have been followed by a press release, that he was prepared to consider the formation of a special committee which would consider the question and would see that it is referred to the committee. This is another story.

I was not in committee, so unfortunately I can neither deny nor confirm it. I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Savard) is here, but I do not know whether he is in a position to confirm it or not. I see he is prepared to rise on the matter, Mr. Speaker, so I respectfully suggest that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works enlighten us on this.

Mr. Raymond Savard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member just said is in part quite true. We were in parliamentary committee and I believe the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) gave the assurance that, from now on, when the bill is passed, he would consider the possibility of getting together all the groups involved, let us say specifically to meet those people and form a committee, and in the future, to give more information and be more available to those people.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, considering that statement by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Savard) which clarifies the government position on this, I do hope the hon. member will be satisfied with that statement made in the House and he will be able to speak to the amendments he put forward or withdraw them and no longer question the bill at this stage if he is satisfied with that statement made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works, otherwise I cannot object to the hon. member speaking further on the reasons for those amendments.

[English]

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I direct it to the parliamentary secretary who witnessed the same procedure in committee that I did. I would simply like to put forward our understanding of the minister's commitment in committee. It was to this effect, that the minister shall prepare a report on the operation of this act and cause it to be laid before Parliament within 12 months of that act coming into force and that such report shall stand permanently referred to the Standing Committee on Natural Resources and Public Works.

The understanding I had from the minister in committee was that the minister would establish a committee of representatives of several departments of government to consult with the municipalities with regard to the amendments proposed, not only on this side of the House but by the various groups from Quebec and other parts of the nation which make submissions to the committee in the period of a year. As I indicated, he would bring this forward in the nature of a submission. If the parliamentary secretary will agree that that was what was agreed on in committee, I will then indicate that we will be prepared to withdraw the amendments and proceed with the bill.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, if it is correct that the minister made that statement in committee, and I have no reason not to believe the hon. member, then that commitment will be on the record. I am sure that the minister is a man of his word and will live up to his commitment. I do not understand why the hon. member is again seeking confirmation of that statement. If the minister made a commitment in front of the standing committee of this House and that commitment appears in the record of the proceedings of that committee, that should satisfy the hon. member.

Mr. Yurko: Again, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. This has gone on for too long. We have a commitment from the President of the Privy Council that if the statement was made by the minister in committee, he will stand by that commitment. I do not see why we should proceed any further on this. The question is on the amendment. Is there anyone who wishes to address the House on that amendment?

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I hope I am rising on my last point of order. What we are interested in obtaining, and I assume I have obtained this commitment from the House leader, is that this is a government commitment rather than a ministerial commitment. Ministers come and go. What we want is a commitment in the House from the government rather than a ministerial commitment. I would like to hear from the House leader or the parliamentary secretary if they are prepared to give us a government commitment rather than a ministerial commitment.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to listen to the hon. member on the amendments. I have told the hon. member that if the minister made that statement in committee, it will be on the record and he will live by his commitment.

Mr. Nielsen: And so must the government.

Mr. Pinard: That is a conclusion drawn by the hon. member. He has the right to make his own judgment. What I am saying is that it is not necessary that this commitment be made over and over again. If it was made by the minister responsible in committee, the record will show that and he will live by his commitment. I do not see why the hon. member is insisting that the minister come back to the House and say that what he said in committee is the truth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on motion No. 1. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Nielsen: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I declare the amendment negatived on division.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Yurko) negatived.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-4, an act respecting grants to municipalities, provinces and other bodies exercising functions of local government that levy real property taxes, be amended in clause 2

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Yurko) negatived.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-4, respecting grants to municipalities, provinces and other bodies exercising functions of local government that levy real property taxes be amended in clause 2 by striking out lines 37 to 46 at page 4 and lines 1 and 2, at page 5.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the point of this amendment was an attempt to bring some reality to the legislation. This act, according to the government's own statements, is an attempt to provide grants in lieu of aid in the same proportion, or placing the government in the same position as an ordinary taxpayer but, of course, not admitting that the government is liable to a municipality for any tax. The point of all these submissions was to pursue that goal and make the whole thing more rational.

My hon. friend from Edmonton East directed his amendments to that issue and my amendment is directed to it also. It is an amendment to include urban parks as subject to taxation. I understood at the time that the minister was making an undertaking which the government now refuses to honour. I gather he was to set up a committee and that committee would look into the rationality of this act within a year. Since the government is not prepared to back up its minister with respect to this undertaking I certainly do not intend to withdraw my motion. In this sense I speak to it.

I believe it is the due and right of every municipality to be paid proportionately by the federal government. If this is not so, then two things happen. You are asking, say, the municipality of Ottawa, to subsidize the operations of the federal government, or you are asking the city of Vancouver to subsidize the operations of the federal government. I think this is unfair and unjust. It is just not rational. Second, what it does is completely against the Lambert commission report which said that every government department should so handle its accounts that we might know the exact costs of each department. The bill before us and the proposals it contains giving the minister discretion not to pay tax to the municipalities make it very simple to hide the actual cost of government.

For those two reasons I think the bill is irrational and unfair and treats the municipalities of Canada in an unreasonable fashion. Until the act is changed and the government treats the municipalities as if it were a citizen of the municipalities we shall continue to experience problems with the municipalities, as was evidenced by the briefs they submitted.

The minister says, "We cannot afford it; we are following spending restraints." It is very simple. The province of Quebec has passed legislation. It has said, "Fine, we will be subject to the laws of assessment as they exist in the province, but we will phase in the cost because we cannot afford it." That is all we in committee were trying to get the government to recognize. It is a very rational thing. We cannot afford to do it now. Fine. But at least admit the principle and then phase it in. The government with its bureaucratic entanglements was unable to do this, and that was the whole point of these motions.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Dantzer) negatived.

Mr. Bill Yurko (for Mr. Nowlan) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-4, respecting grants to municipalities, provinces and other bodies exercising functions of local government that levy real property taxes, be amended by adding immediately after line 41 at page 13 the following new clause:

"18. The minister shall prepare a report on the operation of this Act and cause it to be laid before Parliament within 12 months of the act coming into force and such report shall stand permanently referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Kaplan (for the Minister of Public Works) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate with the full intention of making my intervention as brief as possible. I realize that the bill we are discussing is similar to measures which have been before the House on other occasions. It is not my intention, therefore, to slow down the proceedings tonight. However, there are a couple of comments I should like to make and I am disappointed that the minister is not here to take note of them. In fact, neither the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) nor the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) is available on this occasion when the bill is before us for third reading.

● (2110)

As many members of the House have pointed out both in the House and in committee, this is a bill which is long overdue, and I certainly associate myself with those sentiments. There is one concern, however, which I would like to raise and draw to the attention of the Minister of Public Works. I trust it will be passed on to him. When Bill C-3 was introduced into the House last December by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), it was my understanding that apart from Ottawa and the national capital region—this immediate region—Kingston and area would receive priority in the administrative arrangements required in the four-year phasing in of this legislation. I was assured of this by the former minister of public works, my colleague, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), and I trust that the present Minister of Public Works will see that that commitment is carried out. The reason why Kingston and area are important in this regard is that one only has to look—

Mr. Knowles: The minister is here now.

Miss MacDonald: I am glad that the Minister of Public Works has arrived, and I trust that he will listen to my supplications with a very real interest, because when I mentioned that there was special preference given in the preceding bill to the position of Kingston and area, it was because of the very large federal presence there and, of course, this area will be a major beneficiary under the bill.

One only has to look at the list of the holdings the federal government has in the Kingston area as presented by the minister in committee to see just how much of a federal presence there is in that region. One can very quickly list them: Bellevue House, the residence of the first Prime Minister of Canada, Sir John A. Macdonald; the Canadian forces base at Barriefield Village; the Royal Military College; and then the large number of federal penitentiaries and related institutions. All of these are located in the Kingston area, and I know that those in the constituency which I represent will be very glad to see the passing of this bill. I trust that the minister will indeed see fit to give Kingston the same priority which was accorded to it by the previous government.

The minister has also stated that over the four-year period which will be required to phase in this new legislation an additional $25 million will be available. In the committee, as I understand it, he was not able to provide a municipality by municipality breakdown of the figures which would be received, how much each municipality or constituency would be receiving when that $25 million is allocated. I realize that because this legislation is bringing more property under the act, that is, property which still has to be assessed, it is not possible to provide the information I request at the moment, but I hope that the minister and his department will work very closely and quickly with municipalities all across the country to see that these figures are made available. Again, the reason is very clear. The municipalities must start their work of budget planning for next year immediately, and without a concrete figure from the federal government as to how much they will receive, it is difficult for them to establish the priorities of spending that they would otherwise be able to do.

I have one final comment. As many hon. members have already pointed out, municipalities in this country face a wide variety of problems. This bill is not going to resolve all of them. However, it represents a move in the right direction, one which we had certainly tried to put into effect as the government.

I note that the minister has undertaken to set up a special task force to deal with problems which affect municipalities and which are not dealt with in this act, and I hope that when his report is made public—as he has mentioned that he would do—all members of Parliament will then have an opportunity to comment on it.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill for the second time. I suppose by now we are all familiar with its specific contents, but I think there are some general principles and concerns which deserve comment.

The bill deserves support because it will give further financial aid to municipalities, and that is worthy and necessary. In addition, the minister's commitment with regard to a task force to look into further aspects and problems with respect to this bill deserves applause, and we will be glad to see that report within the year promised and to see that report come back to the committee for close study.

Even though this legislation deserves support, there are still fundamental problems of principle with regard to it. The basic problem with this legislation is that we continue to operate on the basis of a grant system to municipalities rather than on the basis of the principles of a taxation system. That is, rather than the federal government's acting as a taxpayer like any other taxpayer in a municipality, the federal government reserves unto itself arbitrary authority to decide, in the final analysis, the amounts of money which go to the municipalities and the process by which the money eventually gets to the municipalities.

There was a good number of submissions before our committee, and I think that if the committee had wished to do so it could have had many more public submissions and certainly much more in-depth discussion with the groups which came before it. The other fundamental problem with this legislation is that there has not really been adequate and sufficient consultation and involvement with the people affected by the legislation to come up with what I would consider totally satisfactory legislation.

I am not asking for pie in the sky. I am not asking for something which cannot be done. I am actually seeking something which has been done already in at least one jurisdiction in this country. I think what we need is a reference of this legislation or at least its subject matter back to the committee, with the commitment on behalf of the government that the committee should undertake the drafting of new legislation based upon principles respecting the local taxation authorities rather than upon the notion of continuing the grant system.

This reference would allow for full involvement of municipal groups and organizations and local authorities, including the provinces, in the development of new legislation. In my discussions with some provincial people I have found that even some provincial authorities support many of the central concerns which have been raised by municipalities.

The basic problem with this legislation is that it just does not go quite far enough. The reason that that is important is that municipalities are the level of government which have the least revenue in the country. The federal government, by contrast, has the greatest range and depth of revenues. By not changing this legislation as much as it should be changed, we are in effect asking the poorest levels of government to carry the largest burden while the federal government gets away with carrying the smallest burden in the package.

I note that the minister indicated an interest in revenue sharing when he was speaking before the committee. I think he was referring to the present federal-provincial discussions with regard to the constitution, and if the federal government was interested in pushing adequate revenue sharing at that level, I think that would be something which would be well worth supporting.

However, until we reach that nirvana where the federal government is willing to get behind the municipalities and fight for them to have sufficient and adequate revenues, we have before us this legislative measure. Before we move to a constitutional solution there is a legislative solution, and surely the basic constitution of the country is more than simply words in a document. It has to do with the way we practise government, the way we act. By adopting the kinds of legislation which would be most sensitive to the local municipal authorities, we would in practice be changing the way government is carried out in this country and changing the constitutional practice. I think this should be a notion which should be welcomed particularly in Parliament, because it has always been the tradition of British parliamentary practice to change the constitution by practice or by custom rather than by changing the words of a written document.

It is not only in the area of this piece of legislation itself in terms of revenues for local governments that this bill points to the shortcomings of the policies of the government of the day. I think that the lack of action as it affects municipalities and cities is also a grave oversight. I am thinking of the whole lack of any reference in this session in a comprehensive way to urban policy. When I refer to urban policy I am thinking about the need to co-ordinate the activities of either housing or transportation or programs for intercities in such a way that these things work together. I am thinking now of my own city of Winnipeg where the activities in what was known as the neighbourhood improvement program have often conflicted with transportation activities.

In Winnipeg we have a conflict between an overpass and a neighbourhood improvement program which is benefiting from DREE funds which have recently been announced for the Winnipeg core area redevelopment. We will once again have this kind of conflict of objectives where DREE funds are obtained to redevelop the inner-city and yet the federal government is financing the transportation route and overpass which is going to cut through the same neighbourhood, thus making it a less desirable place for families. In other words, by cutting through another major transportation route, the area would be less desirable for families to live in, and therefore the federal government will be undercutting its own DREE spending.

Another fundamental area in which I find deficiencies in terms of municipal and urban areas is the whole area of Indians in the city. In this session we have heard from the other side of the House the government pledge that by the fall the government will be taking some action with regard to Indians, and yet I heard no commitment to any action for Indians living in the city. We find that there is a great need for action in this area. We hope that when the government announces its action with regard to Indians in the fall, it will include action for Indians living in the city, whether they be status or non-status Indians.

Coming back more closely to the legislation, I should just like to say that this is an improvement over past legislation. It brings about an improvement basically through administrative changes, and while those improvements are welcomed, it would have been far preferable if we had gone back to the basic principle and developed legislation which had real respect for local authority and local democracy and really reflected the desires and wishes advocated to us by representatives of the municipalities in this country.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I will not take up much of the time of the House. I am pleased to see the minister in his place because I would like to address my questions specifically to him. First I should like to indicate to the House that the minister was quite accommodating in committee in meeting the demands of the various members of the committee. He made a number of commitments in committee with respect to setting up a task force and studying the matter for one year, with the assistance or involvement of people in other levels of government. This was a ministerial commitment and we felt that perhaps what was needed was a government commitment. I know that the proceedings of the standing committee are on record, but I wonder if the minister would clarify whether his commitment was a government commitment rather than just a ministerial commitment, because ministers come and go but governments last a little longer. So perhaps he might indicate to us at this time that it was a government commitment which he gave to us in the standing committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before calling on the Minister for Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), I must warn the House that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I just have a couple of quick observations, one of which is prompted by an article which appeared in The Citizen of yesterday, in the editorial pages, referring to "Cosgrove, Friend of the Cities".

It cites two examples of the reason for coming to that conclusion, one that he has had the magnanimity to introduce this bill—which, of course, has been introduced in the previous Parliament by the person who I thought had the responsibility, namely, the former minister of national revenue or the minister of finance, because all the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) does is to assume responsibility for the administration of the provisions of the bill—and the second that the minister gave a commitment, as though it were something new, to participate in the Rideau convention centre, which, of course, was a commitment also given by the previous government. I wonder whether that will sound reasonable for this normally unbiased and impartial newspaper, The Citizen, in so far as the Liberal party is concerned, to have come to those conclusions.

It is something like the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) on Sunday on the program called "Insight", hosted by Mr. Douglas Fisher, who took credit for the implementation of project management and project control, cost control guidelines and control of cost overruns in Treasury Board as if they were something new. Indeed, all those programs were implemented by my colleague, the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), when he was president of the Treasury Board.

A more serious question to which I should like the minister to reply when he closes the debate is whether or not it is his intention to delegate all or part of the authority which is granted to him under the provisions of the bill to the National Capital Commission in so far as the administration of municipal grants in lieu of taxes is concerned because, as the minister knows, there are some 17 municipalities in the National Capital Commission, which body has, over the years, cemented a very close working relationship with those various municipal bodies. It was very strongly put, during the term of office of the previous administration, that perhaps this delegation should be made. While there was no final conclusion, because there was no conclusion of the debate on the bill which died on the order paper in the last Parliament, I wonder what the position of the government or of the minister will be with respect to the delegation of any part of those powers which are granted to him under this legislation to the administration of the NCC.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A few moments ago you suggested that if the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove) were to speak at that point, he would close the debate. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) seemed to go along with your statement because he referred to the minister closing the debate.

May I remind you, sir, that we are at third reading and the minister does not have the right to speak twice, therefore, he does not have the right to close the debate. But I suggest that since he was not here when the motion was moved, the House agree to let him speak any time in the debate. I suspect from the way Your Honour has been smiling and nodding your head that you agree with me he does not have the right to close the debate. He may be the last speaker, but that would be accidental.

• (2130)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's point is well taken. I wonder if we could put it this way: by unanimous consent of the House, perhaps the minister could be invited to speak at this point and close the debate. Is that agreed?

Mr. Knowles: I think we should just give him unanimous consent to speak, even though the motion was already moved in his name. Since he does not have the right to close the debate at third reading—although he may in fact be the last speaker—let us let the rules take their course.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has not observed any other members seeking to be recognized. In the circumstances, by unanimous consent the Chair calls upon the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove).

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, may I be recognized?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer) wishes to be recognized. I hope by the consent of the House I can recognize the hon. member. I apologize, but I did not realize the hon. member was seeking to attract the eye of the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By agreement the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Okanagan North.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words this evening now that the minister is here. Indeed the minister has been designated in publications throughout various parts of Canada as the president of municipalities. I think it is incumbent upon him to prove that particular designation which the newspapers have given him.

Once again I should like to speak to this act. It has been said already that the act attempts to improve the position of the federal government vis-à-vis municipalities. At report stage I said that it does not go far enough. The House should be aware as should this country that the whole place of municipal government in Canada is not recognized fully or appreciated.

I believe in an old political principle, that is, the political principle of "subsidiarity", which indicates that the laws should be made by those people who ultimately will be most affected by them. In that sense the municipal government is probably the most direct, efficient and best kind of government in this country. Certainly we have heard from many people that this Parliament does not work any more because it is overworked. With that understanding one should attempt to give government to other areas, but it is pointless to give responsibilities to other levels of government unless they are given adequate financing. I do not believe the federal government can justify its position vis-à-vis municipalities over the years in terms of financing.

I think the minister will agree with me. In fact the minister agreed at committee that we are not treating the municipalities fairly. His argument at that time was that under existing financial restraints the government cannot afford to pay or to stand in the place of a private citizen in municipalities across the country. I will go along with that. With the deficit the government is running and the built-in expenses which now exist, I think people on this side of the House would agree that now is not the time to solve the whole municipal financial problem because of federal government presence in each municipality. That does not mean to say we cannot admit the principle, that we cannot say we will allow ourselves to be subject to provincial assessors and their appeal procedures throughout the provinces if we do not like that kind of thing, that we will include all our property, including urban parks, docks and whatever which we now try to exclude, that we will attempt to be rational in our approach to municipal governments. Then, every year when we redo this act, we will not have the various assessors' associations, cities and municipal organizations coming to the federal government and spending perhaps thousands of dollars preparing briefs. I gather the minister agrees with the contents of them.

As has been said before by speakers in the NDP and other members on this side of the House, I am merely saying that rather than trying to increase, include and carry on the bureaucratic tangle which now exists in the act, we should rationalize it and place ourselves exactly in the position of a taxpayer. We should provide grants equivalent to the level an ordinary taxpayer, if he existed in a certain municipality, would pay. If we cannot afford it now we could phase it in just like the Quebec government has done. It is the only government in Canada which has recognized in a rational manner its obligation as a senior government to pay fair municipal taxes. Federally we should recognize that principle and perhaps phase it in if we cannot afford it now, which I think is true. That is merely the point I wish to make.

It is incumbent upon the House to encourage and support municipal governments. As I said previously at report stage, I do not think any municipality should have to subsidize the operations of federal government. Under the existing act, municipalities subsidize operations of federal government in their municipalities. I challenge anyone to deny that, that we are not paying our fair share of the taxes. We are doing one other thing. We are hiding the true cost of government.

Any department which owns buildings in any municipality and is not paying its fair share of the taxes is not revealing its true cost of government to the Canadian people. I think it is patently ridiculous that this House should support an act which to my mind carries out those two great indiscretions. Those two matters are really unfair. Therefore I appeal to the minister to carry out the undertaking he gave at committee stage to put this into the hands of tax experts in order for them to study the problem, bring it back to committee within a year and if necessary open up the act to rationalize it.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to thank all hon. members present for what I perceive to be support for the bill before the House this evening.

Today I asked if I could be given an accurate number of the present members in this Parliament who had been elected to local offices, whether municipal offices or school boards, through the democratic process. I do not have that number, but with the support for this particular bill before Parliament on its third occasion, I can only guess that there must be a large number of people who, as I, have municipal experience and understand that the benefits of this act will be an improvement even though, as many members have indicated, it is not Utopia.

There will be a payment of some additional $25 million to approximately 2,400 municipalities from coast to coast across Canada. I thank hon. members who are present this evening for that support. In particular I thank my House leader and minister for agreeing to put the bill in this position so that it can be dealt with before the recess. In addition, I thank the House leaders of the parties on the opposite side of the House.

Although I have said that this is a small improvement, nonetheless I should like to draw to the attention of the hon. member that the municipalities have not been "hard done by" by the federal government. Indeed, until 1979 the federal government transferred grants in lieu of taxes in an amount which was greater than the total transfer of all provinces combined. If one considers local, provincial and federal government operations in Canada, with local governments doing much of the work of provincial governments, the federal government has carried its weight. This evening we see that the federal government, with the recognition of the efforts of the party opposite which introduced this bill in the last Parliament, has moved a step further in approving the transfers.

I would ask hon. members to refer to the comments which I made in committee in so far as that study group is concerned. I indicated I would address questions with regard to appeal provisions and ministerial discretion. With regard to the other questions raised this evening, given the opportunity, I will ask my department, which has now become the lead department in the administration of this program, to note all the comments made by all hon. members this evening or at any time which this matter was considered by this Parliament, whether the bill was in committee or in its earlier stages.

Mr. Nielsen: Answer the NCC question.

Mr. Cosgrove: I will conclude by saying that I believe the government process in Canada works best when it is a co-operative exercise at all government levels—local, provincial and federal. I believe that it is a remarkable gesture on the part of this House to move to recognize the problems of local governments even at a time when this federal government under its jurisdiction is in the process of negotiating a new arrangement with its partners, the provinces.

Business of the House

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, before the minister resumes his seat, would he kindly answer my question as to whether it is his intention to heave off any of his responsibility under this act to the NCC?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked this question in his comments. I have the opportunity and the pleasure of leading this bill because administration was transferred within the last four months to the Ministry of Public Works. It was heretofore administered and under the aegis of the Minister of Finance. I can assure the hon. member that the question that he has raised will be one of the questions which I will address in the report which I undertook to prepare for committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I see it is quarter to ten or nearly so and there is a vote scheduled for tonight. Rather than start the debate on the next bill now that there is barely a minute left, I suggest to my colleagues that they agree to call it quarter to ten.

I would like to use this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to say immediately out of courtesy for my colleagues that tomorrow we will be considering Bill C-18 first, to be followed immediately by Bill C-31. I have good reasons to believe after consultation through some of my colleagues that Bill C-18 should not require too much time tomorrow afternoon and we will once and for all be able to proceed with Bill C-31 which will allow the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) who has been here since yesterday as well as the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) to make their speeches tomorrow afternoon, and I do hope so.

So the order of business of the House for tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, is Bill C-18, followed by Bill C-31. If tomorrow morning certain bills come back from committees—I am thinking in particular of Bill S-2 and Bill C-13—we would like to call one of those bills as a third item for discussion tomorrow afternoon. I see it is a quarter to ten, Mr. Speaker. I ask that you call it a quarter to ten.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I thank the government House leader for making this announcement about tomorrow. As one who has taken part in the discussions, I think it is reasonable to expect that we can deal with both Bill C-18 and Bill C-31 tomorrow afternoon, provided there are not too many delays in getting started on government business at three o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Pursuant to an order made on July 11, it is my duty to interrupt the business of the House for a deferred division on Bill C-3. Call in the members.

ENERGY

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—CRITICISM OF VOLUME OF EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

As the Canadian government is about to export huge quantities of natural gas to the United States, and as this will create the threat of a shortage as well as an increase in the price of natural gas, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin):

That the House reprove the government for that decision which will force Canadians to pay more in the near future for the natural gas produced in their own country.

Madam Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INTERNATIONAL WHALING COMMISSION

REPRESENTATIONS OPPOSING KILLING OF BOWHEAD WHALES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to put a motion of urgent and pressing importance.

Given that Canada will be sending a delegation to the International Whaling Commission meetings next week, and in view of the fact that the bowhead whale, with a worldwide population of only 1,200, is on the verge of extinction, as verified by the overwhelming weight of international scientific opinion, and whereas the Canadian government recently published an endangered species list which includes the bowhead whale, upon the recommendation of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That the Canadian delegation to the International Whaling Commission be instructed by this House to oppose absolutely the killing of bowhead whales, and to resist with determination any proposals to allocate quotas for the killing of bowhead whales by the commercial whaling fleets of foreign nations.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FLYING TRAINING

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TAX IN CONNECTION WITH FLIGHT TRAINING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Whereas the federal government recently imposed a 9 per cent sales tax on all new small aircraft and related spare parts purchased by flight training schools which, compounded with a 15 per cent increase in landing fees at most airports as well as landing fee increases at Vancouver, Toronto, Dorval and Mirabel—up from $1.65 to $5—has forced these schools to increase their rental rates and lesson charges, and considering how these increases deter the expansion of energy efficient light aircraft travel which is so vital to this country, particularly in remote areas, and that many students take up flying to expand their educational horizons, further facilitating the use of light aircraft travel in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin):

That this government recognize the importance of these flying schools as educational rather than recreational institutions, and remove this tax and roll back increased landing fees which amount to taxation on classrooms in the air which we would not tolerate on conventional classroom facilities.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM DEADLINES—USE OF REFERENDA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Two prominent Liberals, former cabinet minister John Turner, and Quebec MNA and former Pepin-Robarts task force member Soulange Chaput-Roland, issued statements over the weekend critical of the approach taken by the Prime Minister to the reform of the constitution.

Madam Chaput-Roland charged that the Prime Minister was needlessly making life difficult for Quebec federalists by his insistence on an early deadline for constitutional reform and his threat to act unilaterally to patriate the constitution, and that the Prime Minister seemed incapable of approaching constitutional questions in other than a confrontationist spirit. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That this House direct the Prime Minister to make a statement before the House recesses as to the government's position on constitutional reform deadlines and the policy of the government respecting the use of referenda for constitutional amendment.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—FINANCIAL GUARANTEES ON CONSTRUCTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas at least two annual meetings of the U.S.-Canada Parliamentary Committee in Calgary and San Diego have discussed the question of the Alaska pipeline in some detail, and whereas it has been consistently demonstrated at those meetings that an export-directed pre-build pipeline may be in the immediate interests of the United States but, without guarantees, makes as much sense as building the middle floors of a skyscraper without knowing whether or when the upper floors may be built, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That this House reaffirms the consistent position of the majority of the Canadian delegation to Canada-U.S. meetings that the Canadian section of the Alaska pipeline will only be built when there are firm and irrevocable guarantees that all sections of this transport pipeline will in fact be built.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Ironclad.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

POEM ABOUT MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to place before this august assembly a matter of urgent and pressing importance.

I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That we offer apologies to Robert Service and John Milton for taking poetic licence, and offer the following epic entitled "The Laddie that's Known as Lloyd, or Closing the Bar".

A bunch of the boys were whooping it up in the Axworthy boys' saloon;
The hour was late, the beer was great, and the lonely western Liberals bayed at the moon;
Elbows were bent, and so was the law.
Leadership talk was out in the raw.
Young Lochinvar from Winnipeg footed the bill;
Now, the Liquor Control Commission is wishing him ill.
Talk ranged from the status of women to interim supply,
And all those goodies that money can buy.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Hooray.

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—ACTION TO RELIEVE CONGESTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 41.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: Standing Order 43. It seems we are all in need of a summer vacation.

In view of the 31.8 per cent increase in passenger activity at Toronto international airport in the last four years, resulting in growing and sometimes intolerable congestion, particularly in terminal 1, where it sometimes takes well over one hour to process departing and arriving passengers, and because during the same period of time no substantial improvements have been made other than, perhaps, cosmetic, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to act forthwith upon the conclusions already reached as a result of consultations regarding the SOMPS report.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CONDEMNATION OF PERSECUTION OF RELIGIOUS MINORITIES IN IRAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a grave matter of urgency which I hope will receive sympathetic support on all sides of this House.

In view of at least 26 more Iranians dying on Monday before a firing squad, including two leaders of the Baha'i religious sect, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille):

That this House of Commons deplores the continued persecution of religious minorities in Iran, especially the 200,000 Baha'is, and urges that this total abuse of religious tolerance be brought to the attention of the Human Rights Committee of the United Nations.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ASSISTANCE FOR ATLANTIC PROVINCES—DREE GRANTS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will recall that in 1968 he had two great themes when he came into power in Canada. One was to overcome regional disparity in Canada.

I want to draw to his attention that in real, 1971 dollar terms, DREE spending by the government decreased 22 per cent between 1970 and 1978, while other government departments' spending, in real terms, rose 60.6 per cent. DREE spending is now only 1.2 per cent of total government spending, whereas it was 2.5 per cent in 1970. Whereas Atlantic Canadians earned 34 per cent less in earned income than Canadians generally in 1974, by 1978 they were earning 34¼ per cent less.

In view of these facts, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will make a commitment that the government will give first priority to the overcoming of regional disparities in Canada. Will he make a commitment? Will he review his position on offshore mineral resources so that the people of Atlantic Canada can be given a chance to develop their own earned income now that government assistance in this way has failed so miserably despite these great efforts?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the situation in the Atlantic provinces obviously is one of disparity compared with richer parts of Canada. We have many policies to attack that. DREE is only one of them.

When we refer to the energy policy of which the hon. member talks, I can assure him that it is the policy of this government, in our energy policy in the past and in the future, to ensure that the maritimes and eastern Canada have, indeed, received equalization funds to the tune of many billions of dollars since we brought in our energy policy.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: When was that?

Mr. Trudeau: Since 1974. If we have the support of the House for the energy policy we proposed during the campaign, the Atlantic and other parts of Canada would benefit greatly—consumers as well as industry.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, Atlantic Canadians do not want to be subsidized by the rest of Canada. They do not want hand-outs; they want to earn their own way.

The figures show that despite attempts by the government since 1968 to overcome this, the proportion of earned income of Atlantic Canadians compared with the rest of Canada has declined, not increased. We are not being given the chance to earn our own way. That is what we want. Would the Prime Minister specify what new initiatives he is taking? One suggestion would be to confirm ownership of offshore mineral resources in the provinces. Let them earn their own way, rather than give them equalization.

Second, would the Prime Minister give orders to his ministry to expedite the development of Lower Churchill power resources? The reports are now in to his Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and to the Newfoundland government. Will the Prime Minister expedite that? What actions will he take to expedite economic development in Atlantic Canada—not hand-outs? They are not working.

● (1420)

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, hand-outs have certainly never been our approach. But when the hon. member complains that there is not enough money in DREE, for instance, and then goes on to say that the maritimes do not want to be subsidized, I fail to see how he is consistent in suggesting that we put subsidies into the Atlantic provinces in order to create economic growth there. That has been our policy.

I cannot understand the hon. member, who is certainly in disagreement with the Atlantic premiers, when he says they do not want any form of subsidy. They hope eventually to reach the stage of economic growth where they can help the rest of Canada, and this is our hope too. The commitment we have made regarding the offshore is that until the provinces with resources off their shores have reached the average income in Canada, we intend to see that they get the overwhelming part of the resources from the offshore, precisely so that they will not have to receive subsidies.

We do not count DREE as one aspect of subsidy, as the hon. member seems to do, as against comparative statistics on income. I know that the statistics show that since DREE was instituted in 1969, the migration from the maritimes has been reversed. I think this shows that people are now moving to the maritimes because they see that in the ten years of Liberal federal government they have been given a chance to prosper.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I have a final supplementary question, Madam Speaker. People are moving back to the maritimes because under Liberal government there is no opportunity anywhere in Canada, and they might as well move back to the Atlantic provinces where the Tory provincial governments are.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I cite the figures that government spending has increased, in real terms, 60.6 per cent from 1970 to 1978, while DREE spending decreased 22 per cent, to show the Prime Minister that he is falling down in his commitment to the people of Atlantic Canada.

I should like to ask him this: would he give his ministry directions to expedite economic and industrial development projects, such as the Synchrolift in the dockyard owned by the government in St. John's harbour which will create jobs, or institute a policy of building east coast fishing vessels in east coast shipyards, something that was done in the budget of December 11; or would he direct his Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to help expedite the opening of the Come-by-Chance oil refinery? These are all things which will create employment and wealth in eastern Canada. That is what we want—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Madam Speaker, and it is essential and at the very core of the energy policy which we will be proposing to this House, and which I will be discussing with Premier Lougheed next week, that this great windfall in energy prices serve to benefit all Canadians and permit us to expedite the very projects with which the hon. member is concerned. This makes me hope that we will have the support of that party when we try to redistribute the wealth which is coming to this country from windfall OPEC prices.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OFFSHORE RESOURCES

INDUSTRIAL BENEFIT TO PROVINCES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, the words of the Prime Minister, of course, are welcome if we could understand and believe that in fact he would give a directive to his ministry to undertake those things. But it is a little difficult to believe him when neither he nor any of his ministers—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Forrestall: —called at the constitutional conference to take place at Acadia University, the first one in Atlantic Canada recently, to back up—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder if the Prime Minister, in light of what he has just said, could give us some assurances—a personal commitment—that the hydrocarbon resources of Hibernia, of the eastern Arctic, of offshore of the Sable shelf, will produce the industrial benefit in the maritimes or in Newfoundland and not be deflected to central Canada. Would he give us that assurance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, that is a very reasonable position. It is certainly one that this government takes, that the fallout from offshore resources benefit largely the provinces which are neighbour to those resources. I have stated quite clearly in my policy statements on the offshore that this would be our intention, and I am glad to approve the hon. member's policy in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: We are a little leary of gifts. What we want, as the hon. member for St. John's West indicated, is to get out from under transfer arrangements. The Prime Minister knows that we exist in Atlantic Canada on the basis of government to government, and government to people transfers of money.

● (1425)

I am asking the Prime Minister for his specific assurance that hydrocarbon development in any petrochemical industry, or in any other significant industrial development which comes out of hydrocarbons we are talking about, in fact will take place in the maritimes or in Newfoundland, not in Quebec or Ontario.

An hon. Member: That is the same question.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I just answered in the affirmative. The hon. member said that he is wary of gifts. Why does he ask me, if he does not want to be given this assurance?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—FINANCIAL GUARANTEES FOR CONSTRUCTION OF TOTAL LINE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The language of the Northern Pipeline Act passed by Parliament two years ago, which I read out yesterday, is unambiguously clear where it says that the financing of the whole pipeline must be provided before commencement of the pipeline.

"Pipeline", I repeat, is defined as being a pipeline from Alaska to the American border. Does the Prime Minister now agree that before we proceed in Canada with what has been described as the pre-build, a total guarantee must be obtained for the financing of the whole pipeline?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in fact that is what condition 12 indicates, condition 12 of schedule III, I believe it is. That is what it says. But the act also permits condition 12 to be amended, provided the financing is assured for that particular part of the pipeline which is to be built, and provided that the government is satisfied the financing of the remainder of the pipeline can be obtained. That is what the act says, and those are the conditions under which the government is acting.

An hon. Member: The NDP invented that.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the act is very clear, that "pipeline" is defined as being a pipeline from the southern 48 states through Canada to Alaska. That is what the act says. That is the kind of guarantee which must be obtained under the act before one can proceed with the building of any part. There is no doubt about that.

Last March, the Prime Minister said that the American administration told the Canadian government that we would be "damn fools" if we went ahead with the pre-build without 100 per cent guarantees in place for the entire pipeline. Since the Prime Minister agreed with that at the time, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources since then has said that we need ironclad guarantees—

An hon. Member: Old ironclad.

Mr. Broadbent: —and since only 2 per cent of the financing has now been guaranteed, why is the Prime Minister even considering an option which the Americans themselves have described as a "damn fool" option for Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, as I answered in the House a few days ago, we in the government must be of the opinion and of the assurance that the whole pipeline can be financed. Otherwise, indeed we would be "damn fools" to authorize a part of that pipeline. That is why I say there is a value judgment to know whether the guarantees we have are strong enough; whether they are 100 per cent; whether they are ironclad or not. That is the judgment we must make, and that is the judgment cabinet will be making.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, obviously we have "Mr. Flexible" as Prime Minister in terms of interpretation of the law. The law asserts very clearly that the guarantees must be in place, not can be put in place.

Some two years ago the Minister of Finance, who was then responsible for introducing the pipeline bill, said that one of the few reasons it was importrant to Canadians was that it would make it possible at some point in the future for Canadians in the south to have access to some five trillion cubic feet of gas in the Canadian Arctic.

Would the Prime Minister not agree that unless we obtain ironclad guarantees for the whole pipeline, Canadians in the south may never have access to our natural gas in the north, which we need?

● (1430)

Mr. Trudeau: No, Madam Speaker, I do not agree with that. When the hon. member referred to the law, I referred him to condition 12, section 3, which does say what the hon. member says it says. But the law also says that under section 20(4) of the act that condition can be amended by the governor in council authorizing a decision by the National Energy Board. That is what the law says; that is what the law of this Parliament says. This is what we have to decide as a government: shall we authorize the amendment of condition 12, or not?

We are saying we will only authorize that if we are assured that the whole pipeline will be built. That, I repeat, is the value judgment. What is the nature of those assurances? That is exactly what this government is examining. I am sure that is what the people of the country are examining. As the hon. member knows, the United Steel Workers of America are very much in support of this pre-build.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The government and the people of Alberta are very much in support of it—

Mr. Crosbie: And the "ironclad" workers.

Mr. Trudeau:— and those who have discovered gas and want to sell it are very much in support of this.

Mr. Crosbie: And the makers of "ironclad".

Mr. Trudeau: All these people who are interested in jobs for the workers and in further exploration for the benefit of Canadians are saying to us, "Look; will you study this seriously?" Our answer to that is that we will have to be assured that the whole thing will proceed.

An hon. Member: Ironclad guarantees.

Mr. Trudeau: I see the Tories are talking about ironclad.

An hon. Member: No; Lalonde did.

Mr. Crosbie: The iron duke did. Old iron head.

Miss MacDonald: He is just another Cromwell.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Madam Speaker, we will have to make the judgment that the guarantees are ironclad. When you can say an ironclad flip-flop, I am sure ironclad has a lot of meaning for a lot of people.

Mr. Broadbent: Especially you.

Mr. Trudeau: I heard the Leader of the Opposition use that expression, "ironclad flip-flop". Madam Speaker, I am saying to this House that we will have to have that assurance.

An hon. Member: That is Liberalism.

Mr. Trudeau: That is why the decision we have to take is a very difficult one. I am thankful for the interest of the House. At least the position of the NDP is very clear; they do not care about the jobs. But the position of the Tories is not always clear.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport, who seems to be temporarily out of his seat.

Mr. Crosbie: He is temporarily dislocated.

An hon. Member: He has gone on the blink.

Miss MacDonald: He is off the rails.

Mr. Howie: In view of Canada's continuing balance of payments difficulties, impending cargo restrictions and the underemployment of Canadian seamen and shipworkers, when will the minister take a decision on the establishment of a Canadian merchant marine, which has the potential of being one of Canada's great industries?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the idea has been around for some time. It has been debated. It is debated more now than it was. I understand that there are continuous meetings between ship owners and shippers to develop ideas. Personally, my view is that it should develop on a progressive basis.

At the moment there are a number of possibilities being explored. One of the most plausible or productive is the export of oil to Mexico. There are a number of companies interested in that now. I am aware, and I am pushing and doing my best to support efforts in that direction.

Mr. Howie: I had hoped that where a general policy decision had been taken by the former government, the minister might be able to give us a definite date when he could make a decision on the principle.

Does the minister have under active consideration a proposal to close the Canadian Arctic north of 60 to all but Canadian-built or registered ships within the next five years? If so, when does he contemplate taking a decision on this matter? Is this decision part of the comparable program to replace the 20 per cent subsidy on shipbuilding in Canadian shipyards? Is it related?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, I cannot answer the hon. member's question; I need more information.

FISHERIES

FUTURE OF FISHING VESSEL SUBSIDY PROGRAM

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and it concerns the vitally important question of the future of the fishing vessel subsidy program.

This year the minister is operating with an unusually high carryover in his vessel subsidy program due to a number of reasons, the main one being the difficulty the Newfoundland loan board had last year. Because of this high carryover the minister will be unable to approve any new subsidies for this year.

Since the minister indicated that he was attempting to secure additional funding for the program from his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, so that the program could continue, could he inform the House, today, how successful he has been in securing additional funding for vessel subsidies, so that the fishermen of Atlantic Canada may know what the federal government's intentions are for the subsidy program this year?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, we are having trouble with the vessel subsidy program because of a decision by the previous government of which the hon. member was a supporter: that was to leave in the estimates for the current year the sum of $2 million, which in fact only covers the carryover from levels of funding which had been $10 million two years ago and some $8 million last year. Obviously, there was a carryover which has to be covered.

The previous government decided to do away with the vessel subsidy program. The budget of the former minister of finance of the Tory party suggested a plan which was very helpful to large, organized bodies like big companies, but in fact left individual fishermen high and dry. That is what we are trying to restore. We are trying to repair the damage of that policy.

Mr. Gass: By way of a supplementary, Madam Speaker, could the minister confirm to the House that major changes to the program are not being planned by his department for future years, changes which will see the subsidy drop from its present 35 per cent to something substantially lower?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, we have had constant discussions with provincial governments. Some have programs where there is zero per cent interest on their loans, others have commercial interest rates, and others have 8 per cent. We are trying to co-ordinate these programs.

We have also looked at the possibility that a lower percentage of the subsidy might, in fact, achieve the same aim. No decision has been made. I am trying to restore the program to at least an adequate level of funding, which is what the previous government did not do.

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—FINANCIAL GUARANTEES BEFORE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I should like to return to the Prime Minister and the line of questioning begun by the hon. member for Oshawa. I might say that we find it very difficult to hear, from the man who wants to entrench a bill of rights in the constitution, the notion that an act of Parliament can be fundamentally changed by order in council.

Mr. Trudeau: That is what the law says.

Mr. Waddell: My question is this: without agreeing for a moment that the government has the authority to change the act—putting that aside—is the Prime Minister telling this House that one of the options he is considering is changing the Northern Pipeline Act so that he can go ahead with the pipeline without the ironclad guarantees, or going to an option which the Americans have called a damn fool option?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I find that the preamble indicates the hon. member certainly has a lesser understanding of the act than his leader does.

An hon. Member: That is not hard.

● (1440)

Mr. Trudeau: We are not arbitrarily changing the act against the will of Parliament. Section 20, subparagraph 4, of the act states that the terms and conditions can be amended by the National Energy Board with the approval of the governor in council. That is what Parliament said could be done. We are not trying to shirk our responsibilities.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, Canadian people know very well that the Prime Minister is trying to skate around this matter and sell them a bill of goods.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You don't understand.

Mr. Waddell: The Prime Minister said that he would do his homework on this issue. Last Monday I asked him about the backstop agreement with TransCanada PipeLines. I suggested to him that by that agreement they are obligated to guarantee the shipment of gas out of Alberta to the United States for 15 years—some 4.5 trillion cubic feet of gas. That is much more than the amount which is needed for the pre-build section.

Has the Prime Minister had a chance to look at the matter, and is he prepared to consider it? Does he not recognize a big sell-out of Canadian gas when it hits him in the face?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, this matter was examined by the National Energy Board and no export will be authorized by the government unless, first of all, the Energy Board is convinced that all the conditions concerning future security of supply for Canadians are guaranteed.

Secondly, the government itself must be convinced that the Energy Board is right. This is the situation under the law as it stands at the present time, and it is what we intend to follow in the future.

VETERINARY COLLEGES

SUPPORT FOR PROPOSED COLLEGE IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Given that each year Canada must import a number of veterinarians because the three existing Canadian veterinary colleges are unable to accept anything more than a very small proportion of the applications from qualified Canadians, is the government committed to supporting the proposed Atlantic regional veterinary college; and if so, what is the share of the cost which it is prepared to meet?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am sorry, but I am not on top of the problem of veterinary colleges. There may be an acting minister or a parliamentary secretary who can fill me in on this matter.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

PROMOTION OF INTERNATIONAL SALE OF SEED POTATOES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, the potato industry of the maritime provinces grows the best seed potatoes in the world from the cleanest soil in the world.

In view of the potential markets for this product, and in view of the industry's capability of being affluent and independent, provided sales and agricultural expertise are combined in the consulates of the world, has the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in view of representations made to him by officials and growers from Atlantic Canada, taken any steps to put the expertise of sales and agriculture combined in consulates in areas in which this type of high-quality product could be sold to assist Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we have been working actively on this matter, particularly with respect to the European Community. We have been increasing our efforts to clear away certain obstacles in the export of seed potatoes to that important market area, and we will continue to do so. We also committed ourselves, in the Speech from the Throne, to organizing a new agricultural export corporation which will be able to work in co-operation with my department to facilitate exports of seed potatoes and other Canadian agricultural products.

Mr. McCain: Madam Speaker, while the European Economic Community is a very important market for this product, the market is much broader and much wider than has been described by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The market is international. I would ask him, therefore, to consult with the industry, with maritime officials, make a list of potential markets and to assure Atlantic Canada that this industry could be independent with the proper representation in foreign consulates.

I would like to say that the interjections by the maritime members with respect to representations on behalf of the maritimes indicates their guilty conscience and their incapacity to represent Atlantic Canada as Liberal members.

Mr. Gray: Madam Speaker, we have already been consulting with the people mentioned by my hon. friend. My colleague, the Minister of State for Trade, recently met with a major spokesman of the New Brunswick seed potato industry. We have taken aboard those kinds of views and, in particular, the views of our very active and capable Liberal members from the maritimes in a way which will lead to a greatly expanded export of maritime seed potatoes to all relevant markets in the world.

ENERGY

RESOURCE OWNERSHIP UNDER CONTROL OF PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the right hon. Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister meets with Premier Lougheed later this month to discuss oil policy, will he take into account a recent Gallup poll which shows that only 16 per cent of western Canadians favour the constitutional position of Mr. Lougheed that resource ownership be under the total control of the province?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Don't believe it for a second, Pierre.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it has always been the position of the Liberal party—and I stated that in so many words in the throne speech debate in this House a few months ago—that when there is a conflict of interest between a regional interest and the interest of the whole nation, the people of Canada would support action on behalf of the interest of the whole nation.

Mr. Crosbie: Right on.

TRANSPORT

RECOVERY OF DAMAGES FROM OIL SPILL OF "KURDISTAN" AND CRASHING OF SOVIET SATELLITE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice, I put my question to the Minister of Transport who must have knowledge of all these matters.

Mr. Crosbie: Some hopes!

Mr. Corbett: Would the minister explain to the House the government's plan to sue the Nile Steamship Company of Great Britain, a respected employer of hundreds of British subjects, over the sinking of the tanker Kurdistan in the Cabot Strait in March, 1979, for the amount involved, and advise whether or not it is his government's intention to sue the Soviet Union for damages incurred in 1978 when the Soviet nuclear satellite, Cosmos 954, crashed into Canada's northland, which it apparently cannot collect?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, indeed I do have a note on that subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: The company-owner of the ship had taken legal action to limit its liability to $3 million. The cleaning-up operation has cost the Government of Canada $6.9 million, and the government opposed the company's action by filing a statement of defence in court on July 15. Action on this matter is not expected to commence in court until after a U.K. formal inquiry which is scheduled to begin in January, 1981.

Mr. Nielsen: Now for the second part of the question.

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer to the first portion of my question. However, he neglected the second portion of my question, which is whether or not the government intends to sue the Soviet Union for the cost of the Cosmos incident. Canada's claim in the Cosmos incident is slightly over $6 million, despite the cost to the minister's department and other departments of about $14 million.

In view of that fact, how can the minister justify our suing a friendly nation such as Great Britain, or a company associated with Great Britain—without any apparent negotiation—while not suing Russia for a multimillion dollar bill which is only half the real cost? Can the minister explain to the House why his government is so intimidated by the Russians and so anxious to appear friendly that they are prepared to write off millions of dollars without using the same tactics that they use on their supposed friends and allies?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, I thought I mentioned everything on the subject of the ship which is my responsibility. I even have the names of the lawyers who will be acting for us on the matter. However, with regard to the Cosmos and our relationship with the Soviet Union, I will have to bring that matter to the attention of the Minister of Justice.

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—FINANCIAL GUARANTEES BEFORE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister and it is with regard to the northern pipeline. I am sure he is aware that the section Caroline south to the American border is, in fact, the cheapest section of the line. In meetings which I had recently with Senator Ted Stevens of Alaska, he indicated that the Americans are actively considering moving their gas from Alaska down to the continental United States by tanker, which brings me to the real point. Would the Prime Minister tell the House what sort of guarantees, or what does he expect to be in place for the Americans to construct their connecting line if we are, in fact, going ahead with the construction of the Caroline south section?

● (1450)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, our most recent meeting with Senator Ted Stevens was to the effect that he was in full and complete support of the Alaska gas pipeline route. He was one of the leaders of the Republican minority who pushed the resolution through the Senate, and he voted for it, expressing total and unanimous support of the American Senate for the construction of the Alaska gas pipeline before 1985.

Mr. Fulton: My supplementary is to the Prime Minister. I appreciate what the Minister of Energy has told us; however, it is a sort of conflicting view. They are looking at tankers to move it, and yet they are supporting the line. Obviously, there is a contradiction there without some kind of guarantee. What are we to expect, the tankers or the line?

My question to the Prime Minister goes back to the Northern Pipeline Act, schedule 1(2), under the subtitle Expeditious Construction Timetable. The agreement between the two governments was that the Alaska section would start one year prior to the Canadian section. I wonder why the Prime Minister and the government are moving so quickly to change that, so that the pre-build section will come first, in light of the tanker section, instead of what was agreed between the two governments—that the Alaskan section would come first, guaranteeing it to Canada.

An hon. Member: That was amended.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, one of the reasons we would be moving, if that is the decision we take, is because it would mean a lot of jobs for Canadian workers and a lot of revenue for Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: That is one argument that I must say is very strong, at least from the point of view of our party. When you get telegrams from steelworkers all across the country saying that they favour the pre-build, it is obviously something we must put in the balance.

In so far as what the act says, I repeat my earlier answer: section 20(4) indicates that condition 12 can be amended: in fact, it has been amended by the National Energy Board. That section, as amended, says that we have to have the assurance that the pre-build will be financed and we have to have the assurance that the whole thing can be financed.

An hon. Member: Will be built?

Mr. Trudeau: I am sorry; the hon. member has not read the section as amended.

An hon. Member: You cannot change the whole.

Mr. Trudeau: As amended, condition 12 requires that the minister and the board be satisfied, first, that financing for the pre-build has been obtained; and, second, that financing for the remainder of the pipeline can be obtained.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: That is what the amended section says.

An hon. Member: By the National Energy Board?

An hon. Member: Have you approved of that?

Mr. Trudeau: That is what we are in the process of looking at, Madam Speaker. The opinion of hundreds of thousands of workers across Canada has some weight with us, if not for the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Northumberland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Keep going.

ENERGY

JUSTIFICATION FOR RAISING PRICE OF NATURAL GAS

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Of course I am going to keep going; I have been recognized by Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Go get them, George.

Mr. Hees: I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—the original "Mr. Ironclad". My question is this. As there never has been any economic justification for the price of natural gas increasing at the same rate as that for oil, following the increase of OPEC oil prices which have taken Canadian oil prices steadily upward, there has been no economic justification for raising the price of natural gas.

Is the government considering increasing the price of natural gas at a rate no greater than the increase in the cost of production, so that our very large and steadily increasing supplies of natural gas in this country can be made more attractive for heating homes, factories, stores, office buildings, apartment houses and for industrial production? In this way we can bring Canada to a state of self-sufficiency in oil in the shortest possible time so that oil can be used only for transportation and plastics.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his very helpful contribution. I will just say that the latest increase in the price of natural gas has been for exports to the United States. The domestic price is much lower than the equivalent world price of oil.

The increase in the price of natural gas shipped to the United States, and relating it to the substitution price for oil, was made under the Conservative government in January. I would expect that my colleague is not blaming the government of which he was a member for having done it. As far as this country is concerned, I am glad that we have the full support of the hon. members—

Mr. Clark: Herb does not understand the difference between Canada and foreign countries, either.

Mr. Lalonde: —and, I hope, all hon. members of the Conservative party in making sure that both in gas and oil Canada will not be tied to international prices.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Madam Speaker, I was not speaking of the price of natural gas exported to the United States. I am talking about the price of natural gas in Canada. The minister knows very well that each time the price of oil in Canada has been increased following OPEC price rises, the price of natural gas has been increased by the same proportion. It is that that I am talking about.

I ask, in the interests of encouraging the use of natural gas for the uses I have mentioned, that in future the price of natural gas be increased only to accommodate increases in the cost of production, so that this very valuable fuel may be used for heating, and make oil available only for transportation and for plastics.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, again the contribution by the hon. member is very interesting indeed. He will remember that under Liberal governments we always refused to raise the cost of fuel each time there was an increase announced by OPEC. The Conservative budget, however, wanted to tie in raising the price of oil to international prices.

Mr. Clark: That is not true. That is a deliberate falsehood.

Mr. Neilsen: That is a deliberate falsehood.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Your nose is growing.

An hon. Member: Carry on, Pinocchio.

Mr. Lalonde: The Conservative budget wanted to tie the raise in the Canadian price of oil to international prices. We have objected to that. This was rejected in Parliament and rejected by the country.

As to the question of the price of gas, the suggestion of my hon. friend, as I have said, is going to be examined with great care, like all his other suggestions.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

CANADA-U.S. EAST COAST FISHERIES TREATY—ATLANTIC ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): My question is to the Prime Minister. It is going to try to bridge some questions on Atlantic Canada with the northern pipeline. My question to the Prime Minister is this: what further guarantees on the pipeline does he have that are better than the guarantees he has, as a government, on the fishing treaty on Georges Bank?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that the situation is a bit reversed. In the case of Georges Bank we had the guarantee of the Administration, but we did not have that of Congress—nor do we have it yet. In the case of the pre-build, we have the guarantee of Congress and we are hoping to get a guarantee from the President. So we will have both.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the Prime Minister's answer, and only time will tell how valid those guarantees, ironclad from "iron head" over here, are.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Big man; big mouth.

Mr. Nowlan: The iron duke, then.

An hon. Member: That is better.

Mr. Nowlan: My supplementary is for the Prime Minister. A number of questions have been asked by my maritime and Atlantic colleagues on many problems affecting Atlantic Canada. Because we have not been able to ask about matters of concern such as commitments to Sysco, Georges Bank, Q and M Pipe Lines; recognizing the Prime Minister's concern and very involved activity in terms of the referendum vote in Quebec, and the fact that his government at an earlier time—because of western alienation—had a western economic conference to help focus attention on western problems, and in view of the fact that in Atlantic Canada we feel a little left out because of attention and preoccupation with other large matters, I ask the following question.

● (1500)

Would the Prime Minister consider having an Atlantic economic conference some time in the foreseeable future, after September, to focus with the four Atlantic provinces and representatives on the Atlantic area problems, and have that conference in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. member is making a worthy suggestion that we will consider; but it seems to me that the premise of his question is very flimsy. In his very constituency, this government has just made a grant of $43 million to Michelin. Very recently, this government announced the decision on the EPA.

An hon. Member: You would not go there.

Mr. Trudeau: I don't think it is fair—

Mr. Clark: That is also where Acadia University is.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not think it is fair to assume that this government has not been preoccupied with the Atlantic provinces. These two examples, one in the hon. member's very constituency, prove that it has.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—JUSTIFICATION FOR ALLEGED ACTION IN CONTRAVENTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, may I put a further question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that section 20(4) of the Northern Pipeline Act gives the National Energy Board, on approval of the government, power to amend the financial arrangements set out in condition 12 in schedule III, but does not give it any power to change the definition of "pipeline", which in the act is given clearly as a line for the transmission of natural gas from Alaska across Canada, and so on, how can the Prime Minister justify using that order in council power to confront us with something that is totally different from what this act is all about?

This act is about a pipeline as defined in section 2 of the act. Is not the Prime Minister abusing that order in council if he uses it, in effect, to change the whole project?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if in fact it was something totally different, then the hon. member would have a very valid point. But everyone who has been talking about the pre-build has not been talking about something totally different: they have been talking about building, in stages, a part of the entire pipeline.

If it were, in some other area, doing some other thing, I think the argument would be that it is a different pipeline. But when you are building a pipeline of a certain distance, and you decide to proceed with one part of it first, you are not doing something different: you are proceeding in stages toward the whole. That is the judgment we have to make—will the whole be built if we do the part. That is a judgment we will be deciding on tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if it is correct that nowhere in the act is there any reference to the pipeline other than the total, indivisible project, and if what is now proposed is something else, is it not something other that the act provides?

May I also ask the Prime Minister if he is aware of the fact that this House got into serious trouble in 1956 because the government of the day defied Parliament to put through a commitment that C. D. Howe had made to American financiers before he consulted Parliament? Does the Prime Minister want that to happen again?

Mr. Trudeau: Unlike the hon. member, Madam Speaker, I was not here in those days and I am not sure of the value of that parallel.

Mr. Clark: You were writing about it.

Mr. Trudeau: Once again, I understand the concern of the hon. member and his party. It is a concern that we share. That is why it has not been a decision which was easy and which has been made yet. Once again, when the hon. member says that nowhere in the act does it talk of building a part: that does not mean you have to build the whole thing at the same time, which is a physical impossibility.

To take comparisons which may seem simplistic, but which I think will make the hon. member understand, when we built the Seaway, we did not build every canal at the same time. The important thing was that it was going to be an effective part of a Seaway which would eventually exist. The same with the Trans-Canada highway: it was built at different times, even in different decades, but the same law applied because it was a Trans-Canada highway. This is the way we see the pipeline. It would be preferable—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I see the Leader of the Opposition harping. We have not heard from him as to what he thinks would be good for the country and for Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: We may end up agreeing or disagreeing with our friends in the New Democratic Party because some of them, like the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood, are friends.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Why didn't they join the cabinet?

Mr. Trudeau: They could have joined the cabinet. This we know, Madam Speaker, but we will never know if we will have agreed or disagreed with the Tories, because they don't know what they think.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

COASTGUARD

INADEQUATE FACILITIES FOR MARINERS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that Captain Gordon Hallett, of Lockeport, Nova Scotia—master of the Lady Anne III—had to steam 180 miles from Georges Bank to Shelburne, Nova Scotia, due to the inability of the Canadian coastguard to provide a helicopter to save an injured seaman, I ask the Minister of Transport if he is aware of this situation. If so, what steps is he planning to take so that more adequate protection is provided our mariners when an emergency arises?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the particular case referred to by the hon. member, but the search and rescue program of my department has been a major preoccupation of mine. I wish to underline the fact that, for example, there will be an increase this year over last year from $3 million to $13 million allocated to the marine aspect of the search and rescue program.

I will inquire about the particular matter referred to, but I want to assure my hon. friend that the search and rescue program is a major preoccupation of both myself and my department.

Mr. Crouse: Since it is obvious our Canadian coastguard, as the minister has indicated, requires improvements in order to cope with our present situation, will the minister consider the construction in Atlantic Canada of at least two additional coastguard ships that are equipped with helicopters in order to more effectively patrol our 200-mile fishing zone? That is a whole lot more water than we ever had to patrol before. We would then be in a position to save the lives of our mariners when catastrophe strikes.

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, a few months ago I rejoiced in the opening of the coastguard college in Sydney, at which time I was present to mark the ceremony. I am now working on the possibility of extending the athletic facilities of that school.

With regard to vessels, we now have six in the program. I cannot tell the hon. member if they will be located on the west coast or the east coast. I will find out and report to him accordingly.

SPEAKER'S RECEPTION

CHANGE OF VENUE

● (1510)

Madam Speaker: Because of the menacing weather, which the Department of the Environment has confirmed will be increasingly menacing by the end of the afternoon, the Speaker's reception, which was to be held at Kingsmere, will be held instead in the Railway Committee Room, Room No. 253D.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GURBIN—DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT INFORMATION TO DEFEATED LIBERAL CANDIDATE

Madam Speaker: On Monday the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) raised a question of privilege in which he complained that certain information in which he was vitally interested had been made available in his constituency by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans on a partisan basis, and that it had not been communicated to him.

As the hon. member knows, we have dealt with similar cases this session and in each case the Chair reached the conclusion that an hon. member's grievance cannot be proceeded with as a question of privilege unless it can be shown that the act or the omission complained of was clearly related to the hon. member's parliamentary duties. The hon. member for Bruce-Grey probably had a very serious grievance—I do not dispute that. The minister responded to that grievance in his reply to the question of privilege, and therefore I cannot see that there is a further role for the Chair to play in this matter.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. McCAIN—REPLIES BY MINISTER OF FISHERIES AND OCEANS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I do not know whether it was intentional but I believe the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) misled Atlantic Canada in the course of some of the remarks he made in response to questions. For instance, he said that his predecessor in office was going to spend only $2 million in fishing boat subsidies. I believe, in answer to an earlier question, he referred to the number of envelopes which pertained to federal estimates and expenditures.

When the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans gets around to opening all the envelopes which relate to expenditures on the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada he will find not only that his predecessor had decided to spend as much money as he had previously spent as minister of fisheries but that in the various envelopes there was a very substantial increment in both the intentions for expenditures in subsidies to fishing vessels and for the maintenance and improvement of small craft harbours. I just want to straighten this out for Atlantic Canada. When the minister gets all those envelopes opened I am sure he will find that what I have said is absolutely in accordance with the facts.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member did rise on a point of order, did he not?

Mr. McCain: Yes.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I will reserve my right, with your permission, to comment on the hon. member's point of order. But if my memory is correct the estimates for fishermen's vessels' subsidies contained a very modest amount. As to whatever was targeted for small craft harbours and so on, the reality is that the estimates we have before us, the only ones we can deal with, do not contain provision for the campaign promises made by hon. members on the other side.

Import Policy

MR. CROSBIE—REPLIES BY MINISTER OF FISHERIES AND OCEANS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order as was raised with respect to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc). If the minister checks the facts he will discover that there was $50 million additional spending provided in the estimates this year for eastern Canada, $25 million of which was to have been devoted by the prior administration to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans for employment-creating projects in eastern Canada—particularly small craft harbours—which funds have apparently disappeared since the change of government. The Minister of Fisheries has been unable to locate them, unless he has done so recently, so his colleagues are keeping from him $25 million which he would have had were he his predecessor. And that money could have been used as subsidies for fishing vessels as well as for small craft harbour projects, or whatever.

Madam Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member would not agree that his point of order should stand over since the minister has asked that he be given the opportunity to look into some of the information, thus allowing us to proceed.

POLICY RESPECTING IMPORTS

TABLING OF WORKING PAPER

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I should like to table in both official languages a working paper entitled "Proposals on Import Policy".

[English]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Just a minute ago, Madam Speaker, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) tabled a discussion paper on import policy. I am told he has held consultations with the other parties and that there is unanimous consent to agree to the following motion:

That the discussion paper on import policy, tabled this day, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes, Madam Speaker, there has been that type of consultation and it is agreeable to us.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES—STUDY FOR RELOCATIONS—HULL, QUE.

Question No. 13—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the government carry out a study to modify a building in Hull, Quebec to be used for the relocation of the Public Archives of Canada and, if so (a) on what date and who authorized it (b) was the study completed and, if so, on what date (c) was the estimated cost of such building modifications $40,000,000 and, if not, what was it?

2. Does the government intend to proceed with the project and, if so, for what reason?

3. Will the government consider cancelling the project?

4. Is it a question of space in existing accommodations and, if so, will the government consider extending such accommodations rather than moving a further government establishment across the Ottawa river?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) A preliminary study conducted by Public Works Canada employees is currently under way based upon the Treasury Board approval in December of 1977 of a departmental recommendation which resulted in the previously announced move of the Solicitor General to Hull being deferred, and in which the possible moves of portions of Public Archives and others was discussed.

   (b) The preliminary study is not yet complete.

   (c) The cost of building modifications will not be $40 million. The department had included a sum of $82.88 per square metre in their program for building fit-up approximately 23,233.63 square metres. The resultant estimate is therefore $1,925,000.

2. Yes, to provide for necessary relocation and expansion requirements of Public Archives' facilities with the least capital expenditure.

3. Until the final estimates of cost are made and approved, the scope of any project is subject to review.

4. A new facility for Public Archives is included in the long-range program but constraint in capital expenditures requires that a solution be found for immediate expansion requirements with a lower cash outlay in the short to mid-range period.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—PERSONNEL

Question No. 47—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is the total number of personnel in all divisions of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police at the time the answer to this question is compiled and how many are (a) male (b) female?

2. Does the government plan to expand the size of the RCMP?

3. Does the government plan to increase the percentage of females in the RCMP?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General):

1.

	(a) Male	(b) Female	Total
Regular Members	12,664	289	12,953
Special Constables	1,169	170	1,339
Civilian Members	1,027	600	1,627
Public Service Employees	646	2,749	3,395
	Total 15,506	3,808	19,314

2. Yes. Treasury Board has approved a net increase of 185 person-years and related positions effective April 1, 1980.

3. Yes. In line with government policy, the commissioner has expressed the need for increased participation of females in law enforcement. Reduced numbers of females applying for the force have necessitated offering procedural preference to these candidates in order to meet such goals.

MR. PIERRE FRANCHE

Question No. 101—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On the date that Mr. Pierre Franche was appointed Chairman of the National Harbours Board, who was the Prime Minister of Canada?

2. What is a detailed history of Mr. Franche's career in the Public Service?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. The Right Honourable P. E. Trudeau.

2. The detailed history of Mr. Franche's career in the federal public service is as follows:

1967—1970 Department of Regional Economic Expansion
— Federal administrator for the socioeconomic development plan for the lower St. Lawrence and Gaspé region
— Acting regional director, province of Quebec

1970 Secretary of State
— Senior management adviser Citizenship Program

1971 Department of Indian and Northern Affairs
— Assistant director of the national and historic parks branch

1973 Department of Indian and Northern Affairs
— Director of policy, planning and research, Parks Canada

1974 Department of Indian and Northern Affairs
— Assistant deputy minister, finance and administration

1975 Department of Transport
— Special assistant to the marine administrator, Ports Policy Task Force

1976 to the present, chairman, National Harbours Board.

SUPERANNUATION

Question No. 348—Mr. Herbert:

For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1979, what amount was paid to pensioners from the (a) Public Service Superannuation Account (b) Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (c) Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Defence and Treasury Board as follows:

Treasury Board:

(a) The amount paid in annuities to pensioners from the public service superannuation account during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1979 was $297,159,923.

(c) During the fiscal year ended March 31, 1979, the amount of indexing payments made to public service pensioners from the supplementary retirement benefits account was $8,315,665.

National Defence:

(b) $219,612,443.46

(c) As it pertains to military pensioners—$65,685,204.66

LABOUR—PERSON-DAYS LOST

Question No. 535—Mr. Orlikow:

How many man-days of work were lost in (a) 1977 (b) 1978 (c) 1979 as a result of strikes, industrial accidents, illness or unemployment?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Labour and Statistics Canada as follows: Labour Canada:

Person-days lost directly as a result of strikes and lockouts in 1977, 1978 and 1979:

	1977	1978	1979(P)
Federal jurisdiction	501,130	766,260	766,530
Provincial jurisdiction	2,806,750	6,626,560	7,067,700
	3,307,880	7,392,820	7,834,230

Estimated person-days lost as a result of employment injuries and illnesses (including industrial fatalities)* in 1977, 1978 and 1979:

	1977	1978	1979
Federal jurisdiction	790,000	857,000	Figures
Provincial jurisdiction	10,593,000	11,420,000	not yet
Total Canada	11,383,000	12,277,000	available

* — Temporary impairments, permanent impairments and fatalities are estimated at an average loss of 25 days per case.

P — Preliminary

Statistics Canada:

Estimates of person-days lost due to unemployment in (a) 1977 (b) 1978 (c) 1979 are as follows:

	(in millions of person-days) 1977	1978	1979
Unemployment	213.4	228.7	210.3

Estimates of person-days lost in (a) 1977 (b) 1978 (c) 1979 due to illness (including illnesses or accidents of non-industrial origin) are as follows:

	(in millions of person-days) 1977	1978	1979
Due to illness	56.4	61.6	61.0

It should be noted that the above data are necessarily rough estimates derived from the labour force survey. Since the survey was not designed to produce direct estimates of person-days of unemployment or losses due to illness during the course of a year, substantially higher or lower estimates could be produced using different estimation methods and assumptions.

Note: Estimates of person-days of work lost in 1977, 1978 and 1979 as a result of strikes and lockouts, and employment injuries and illnesses (including industrial fatalities). See reply by Labour Canada.

SOLICITOR GENERAL—NUMBER OF LAWYERS EMPLOYED

Question No. 618—Mr. Howie:

How many lawyers are employed on staff in the Department of the Solicitor General?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): The Department of Justice has assigned lawyers to serve the Ministry of the Solicitor General as follows:

four —Ministry secretariat
two —National Parole Board
one —Royal Canadian Mounted Police seven Total

NOTE: (1) The Correctional Service of Canada does not have lawyers on its staff. However, legal assistance, when required, is provided by lawyers seconded to the ministry secretariat.

(2) In addition to the one seconded lawyer shown above, the RCM Police have three members of the force who hold law degrees, are employed in positions requiring such a degree and have been called to the Bar.

STATISTICS CANADA

Question No. 734—Mr. Nystrom:

Was the responsibility for Statistics Canada transferred in June 1979 from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to the Treasury Board and, if so (a) for what reason (b) who initiated such a move?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): (a) and (b) Responsibility for Statistics Canada was assigned to the President of the Treasury Board by the governor in council on June 5, 1979, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister of the day. The Prime Minister is responsible for recommending to the Governor General the appointment of ministers and the allocation of portfolios and responsibilities among them according to his assessment of the most effective organization of the structure of government as a whole.

Question No. 735—Mr. Nystrom:

Is it the intention of the government to transfer the responsibility of Statistics Canada from Treaury Board to another more appropriate ministry?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Responsibility for Statistics Canada was assigned to the Minister of Supply and Services on June 13, 1980, by order in council PC 1980-1620. The Prime Minister's announcement on June 17 noted that "The President of the Treasury Board had retained temporary responsibility for Statistics Canada and had continued and tabled in April departmental studies of the agency which had been commenced by the previous government."

POST OFFICE—CURTAILED POSTAL SERVICE

Question No. 886—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Mr. J. H. Cottrell, A/Manager, operational services of the eastern district of the Ontario postal region, Post Office Department, write a letter to Mr. Don Warren, chairman of the Chaffey's Locks improvement committee on the subject of curtailed postal service and, if so (a) on what date (b) did the letter state in part "the reduction of service in this instance was in line with the eastern district policy on summer offices"?

2. Is there a different policy in the eastern district from that of other districts across Canada in regard to summer post offices and, if so, for what reason?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): 1. Yes. (a) 6 May 1980. (b) Yes.

2. No.

CANADIAN PENSION COMMISSION

Question No. 1,275—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What is the required (a) total membership (b) distribution by province of the Canadian Pension Commission?

2. What is the (a) name and date of appointment of each member (b) distribution by province of the commission?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs):

1. (a) The Pension Act provides that there shall be not less than eight commissioners, who shall be appointed by the governor in council who may, in his discretion, increase the number of commissioners to fourteen. In addition, the governor in council may, from time to time, appoint not more than ten additional ad hoc commissioners, for a period not in excess of one year. Commissioners, and ad hoc commissioners, on the expiry of their terms of office, are eligible for reappointment.

(b) There is no required distribution by province of the Canadian Pension Commission.

2. The attached list gives (a) the names and dates of appointments of each member of the commission, and (b) the province of residence at the time of their appointments.

2. (a) (b)

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS ACT

MEASURE TO IMPROVE PUBLIC SAFETY

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-18, an act to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport.

Madam Speaker: As hon. members are aware, there are five motions standing on the order paper at the present stage of Bill C-18, an act to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods. All the motions, in the opinion of the Chair, seem to be procedurally acceptable and it is my intention to propose them to the House separately.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River) moved:

Transportation of Dangerous Goods

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-18, an act to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods, be amended in clause 3 by striking out lines 30 to 38 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"this act applies to all vessels of Canadian or foreign registry operating within the Canadian 200-mile economic zone on the east and west coasts".

He said: Madam Speaker, my brief remarks on this amendment stem from the great concern I have about the weaknesses in this bill. It seems to be drafted in such a way as to present a great many difficulties, not the least of which is that dangerous products transported by sea on the east and west coasts of Canada seem not to be covered by this legislation. In committee we dealt at length with this, and I would like to read into the record of the House what the government proposes in this situation.

● (1520)

In clause 3(5) the government proposes that this legislation not apply to any transporting of dangerous goods in bulk in ships or vessels that is governed by or under the Canada Shipping Act. Subclause (6) says that for the purposes of subclause (5) "in bulk" would mean confined only by the permanent structures of a ship or vessel, without intermediate containment or packaging. As far as we are concerned this eliminates a whole class of transportation in which dangerous goods are being carried, and as a rationale for doing this the government put forward the idea that it is adequately covered in the Canada Shipping Act. I submit that it is not adequately covered in the Canada Shipping Act. I hope we will be able to demonstrate that, but before we do that I point out that Bill C-25 with regard to the same thing—I bring this to the attention of the Conservatives in the House today, and I hope they will be prepared to support my amendments—was silent on this issue. That silence would have allowed the act to pertain to the transporting of dangerous goods on the west coast of Canada and on its east coast under these circumstances. The Conservative bill recognized this problem, and the Conservatives were willing to deal with it, but the Liberal bill presently before us excludes this area of very severe concern.

I would like to deal with some examples regarding the Canada Shipping Act, which the government feels is adequate to deal with dangerous cargo. If we go back to 1917 and the Mont Blanc in the Halifax harbour, there was a dangerous cargo involved, and its impact was substantial. There are all kinds of examples of this today. We are concerned about preventing loss of life and massive damage which could be caused by commodities carried in large cargoes. The government feels the Canada Shipping Act is adequate. However, a series of sections allow tremendous discretion to the master of a vessel.

The second thing is that if dangerous goods within a vessel are improperly handled, there is a maximum penalty of $1,500. I suggest that that is ludicrous and that $1,500 in the present circumstances is just unthinkable. We have argued vehemently that fines of $50,000 and $100,000 are nominal when we look at such things as the Mississauga accident and a variety of other potential accidents. Clearly, the Canada Shipping Act is just a token consideration. It is inadequate. I urge the government to support this amendment, and I urge the Conservatives also because of a precedent in their bill.

Other members of the government have made a considerable issue of the suggestion that penalties and liabilities imposed are adequate. We have the maritime pollution claims fund, and they claim that as far as oil tankers in our waters are concerned the fund is sufficient. The fund is put up by the Government of Canada through taxing the people who transport dangerous goods, such as oil, up and down the coasts. Hon. members opposite point to a multimillion dollar fund. There are a couple of points I would like to make in this regard. That fund is inadequate. We want inspection procedures, and we want penalties which would allow for prevention of accidents. There are not too many people who live on the west coast or on the east coast who are interested in liability or funds to meet liabilities after spills occur.

What we are interested in is prevention, and on that basis I urge the government to support the amendment we have put forward and to allow the transportation of dangerous goods legislation, as weak as it is, to apply to marine transportation and bulk cargoes. There should be a stiffer regime of penalties and more thorough and rigorous inspection procedures.

The government has said that in the liability sphere there is adequate protection for the people of Canada. The government suggests that if there is an accident and a ship blows up or releases a tremendous amount of chlorine gas in some small community on the west coast or the east coast of this country, the liability provisions provided in the Canada Shipping Act are adequate. I will just refer to section 647 in part IV where the maximum liability should an accident occur is 3,100 gold francs for each ton of a ship's tonnage. When we come right down to it, that is $83.50. For a ton of chlorine gas released in a small community—in many communities it is right beside the dock—or for a ton of nitroglycerin or any other dangerous product that amount of $83.50 will not go very far in cleaning up damage or dealing with loss of life or the disruption which would occur.

I suggest that the provision for liability is inadequate. What we are aiming at is prevention, and beyond prevention we are looking at some very weak provisions for liability and for compensating those who will suffer damage. I suggest to the government and to the Conservative members in this House that we require provisions for more stringent penalties for violation and a more rigorous application of inspection procedures.

There is one other feature in this amendment, and that is that the law should apply out to the 200-mile limit. It should go beyond Canada's immediate jurisdiction and its territorial waters. I know that this has been challenged. The United States just recently reiterated that it has no intention of complying with a Canadian law which would impose restrictions on free navigation, as it has been put, or innocent passage of merchant vessels going about their business in the 200-mile limit. The Americans have even extended that statement to suggest that they feel that innocent passage of merchant vessels going about their business, even within territorial waters, would not respond to Canadian law or any other international law in the area.

I think it is very dangerous to allow such a situation to exist. To quote an example, not too long ago a tug was hauling a barge from Alaska to the lower 48 states. This would have been about May 9, 1980. It was just recently. The barge was carrying a number of barrels containing some very dangerous chemicals. There was a storm and those barrels went overboard. They were clearly beyond our immediate territorial waters, but they were within the 200-mile limit. A barrel washed up onto Canadian territory. What was happening was that an American vessel was carrying extremely dangerous goods in an intermediate container. It was loaded and handled in an improper manner. The end result was that it washed up on a beach in Canada where children could have come along, kicked the barrel open and been killed. The result could have been many other dangerous scenarios.

I would suggest to the government, and again to the many Tory members, especially the ones who come from coastal ridings where this is a possibility, that they have an obligation to vote for this amendment because we have to extend jurisdiction into that economic zone to control the transportation of some of these dangerous goods that are going to affect our citizens.

I would just like to elaborate a little more on this particular example because the Americans, when they were aware that those dangerous goods were floating free in the ocean and in danger of washing up in Canada and creating a danger to Canadian citizens, did not bother notifying Canada or assisting in the search for those goods. We became involved in a token search and, if you reflect back a little further, we sent a bill to the Russians for doing exactly the same thing and insisted on payment for a very costly search. I think in this particular incident we should have conducted a thorough search, and should have submitted a bill for that search to the United States, with a very stern reprimand for acting in a very negligent manner on this issue. There is a vacuum in the law here, Mr. Speaker. We should have a law that allows us to exert jurisdiction in this matter over the 200-mile limit. We have set a precedent for it.

An hon. Member: We have the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) here.

Mr. Skelly: Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) might be concerned about this issue because it does relate to our relations with the United States. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, the problem in front of us is what we have to do to apply Canadian jurisdiction in this area. My amendment, I am certain, if accepted by the government and some of the Tories in the same area, would fill this vacuum. In the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act we have simply said that vessels that are going to be working within Arctic waters, even though they are not technically within our territorial waters, are going to submit a declaration that goods are carried in a manner which conforms to the regulations. They are going to submit, if necessary, to an inspection before those vessels travel in those waters. I suggest to the government that the same thing should occur here.

Many vessels have been built to carry particular products. Once cleared and the passage worked out, there would be no problem. What we are looking at is the rather ad hoc itinerant traffic which carries dangerous drums of chemicals in an improper manner and proceeds to a 200-mile limit where we might want to have a declaration stating how those goods are to be carried and how to protect Canadian citizens from being harmed by these dangerous goods. We might want to inspect those vessels, or least have the opportunity to do so. I would submit to the government that this amendment provides that mechanism.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I think that the Conservatives, by leaving their bill silent on this issue left the opportunity open under section 28 for the minister to make regulations dealing with this. It provided an opportunity, should we need it, to fill this vacuum. The Liberal bill clearly does not provide an opportunity to move into this area if it is demonstrated to be necessary. Their plea that the Canada Shipping Act and maritime conventions fill the bill is clearly inadequate, and I would ask them to withdraw that. I submit that $1,500 in this day and age is a completely inadequate penalty. The liability provisions are inadequate when we look at some of the things that are going on around the world, the enormous costs of clean-up and repair of damages. So what we need is a stronger regime of penalties and a more rigorous inspection.

In the final analysis, what we have off the west coast of Canada is the example of the American tug dropping barrels into the sea. We have the example of tankers of chlorine lying at the bottom of Malaspina channel which could rise and create a cloud of chlorine gas around certain areas. There are numerous members of the House in both parties who have said they are opposed to tanker traffic and the tremendous danger it could create going up and down the coast. What I would ask them today is to stand up and be counted in supporting this amendment and at least to keep faith with many of the election promises they have made.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we submit that the transportation of dangerous goods involved in ships should remain subject to the Canada Shipping Act regulations. The regulation of bulk cargoes which fall within the specific or general connotation of dangerous goods involves matters of ship design, construction and operation. In the case of crude oil and refined petroleum, tankers are specially designed, taking into account the dangerous nature of cargoes carried as it affects the requirements for hull, machinery, and additional safety equipment.

The Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization establishes the code for the construction of equipment of ships carrying liquefied gases in bulk. The same organization has established a code for the construction and equipment of ships carrying dangerous bulk chemicals. In other words, the ship itself is the container. In the case of bulk cargoes, by far the majority are carried in vessels for which the hulls are of a particular design to load, transport and discharge such cargoes under safe conditions, including special consideration of matters such as stability, ventilation, and measures against inroads of the sea. All of the above require the full range of disciplines, that is, naval architecture, marine engineering and nautical sciences which are required to make and implement regulations which come under the Canada Shipping Act dealing with the safe design, construction and operation of any ship.

In all of the above cases, vessels are required to carry certificates of inspection, certificates of fitness, and international convention certificates which are issued under the Canada Shipping Act. Any vessels in Canadian territorial waters are already subject to Canadian legislation. Canadian vessels anywhere in the world are subject to Canadian legislation, and that is under the Canada Shipping Act in the case of bulk shipping.

The second effect that this amendment would have is that it would be a motion which would be in discord with the Territorial Seas and Fishing Zones Act which establishes the limits of Canadian jurisdiction over the seas to something like 12 miles. This would also be declared ultra vires by a court as trying to impose Canadian jurisdiction over waters which are not within the scope of this bill. Therefore it is the view of the government that this motion should be opposed.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member from the NDP has indicated is that there are certain limitations to this bill which possibly can be governed by section 28 of the act and also by the regulations. But I think that is one of the major weaknesses of the bill in that, to a large extent, we are looking to the regulations to handle the requirements of the act. This is an umbrella bill. It does not attend to the problems in itself, which are presented by the movement of dangerous goods.

I raise this point because many residents in my riding of Etobicoke Centre have become very concerned about the movement of dangerous goods in the past year, particularly following the disaster in Mississauga. May I remind hon. members that the disaster occurred five to seven minutes west of the borough of Etobicoke where there are many residents who would have been affected by an accident of that kind. Of even greater concern is that last year again there was considerable discussion of the plans of CP Rail to add a third rail line in Etobicoke, which in itself would allow for increased freight movement and increased speed of such freight movement. Some of the houses directly affected by this third rail are only 50 feet from the proposed line.

In January there was a hearing of the Canadian Transport Commission on this whole matter. In the opinion of the residents most affected, it was a very unsatisfactory hearing. They applied to the department, as well as the Department of Justice, for counsel to be supported by the public purse in order to present their case, which is a very broad case affecting many, many parts of the country, in particular many parts of the city of Toronto. This was turned down, and at very short notice the residents were required to present their own case to the CTC. They felt the results were not satisfactory, and they are anxiously awaiting the results of that hearing before any further action will be taken.

I wish to address the question of regulations this afternoon because, unfortunately, as has been the case in many pieces of legislation brought forward by the government opposite, much government in this country is by regulation now. Those regulations, as they apply to this act, will make or break the intent of the act. On a number of occasions I have urged the minister to consult widely on the form and the content of these regulations. I have urged him to educate himself on the practice of shippers and the concerns of residents most directly affected.

In particular I asked the minister if he would be interested in meeting with representatives of the Metropolitan Toronto Rail Action Committee. I think the committee now is composed of over 15 ratepayers' associations in the metropolitan Toronto area that have vital concerns about the movement of rail transport through residential areas of metro Toronto. To date the minister has not seen fit to meet with these representatives.

Today I want to put on record concerns expressed to me at ratepayers' association meetings. Freight moving from Sarnia to points east and north of metropolitan Toronto moves right through residential areas of metropolitan Toronto such as Etobicoke, Parkdale, Rosedale, Don Valley West, East York, and into parts of Scarborough.

Recently I mentioned in the House that CP Rail is soliciting business out of Michigan to move goods to the New England States through residential parts of metropolitan Toronto. There is movement back and forth in the delivery of dangerous goods in the Toronto area, over to Scarborough and back to points west of Scarborough. They do not feel this increased movement of dangerous goods is necessary. Finally, dangerous chemicals are shipped from Sarnia, through metroplitan Toronto to Montreal, and similar types of chemicals are shipped from Montreal to Toronto and points west of Toronto. The people in M-TRAC feel it is worth considering whether there can be some exchange of these chemicals. As I understand it, basically they are similar chemicals with different trade or product names.

These are some of the concerns which have been expressed. I believe they must be dealt with in the regulations. I appreciate some of these things must be dealt with by regulation, and I am sorry others are not dealt with directly in the act. As I have said, on four occasions I have implored the minister to meet with representatives of M-TRAC before these regulations are brought down. I have done this through personal conversation, by letter, by a motion under Standing Order 43, and also recently with a question in the House. By consulting personally, by hearing first hand the concerns, and by attending a meeting of the affected residents, I am sure the minister will have a much better understanding of the direction which the people directly affected in residential areas feel the regulations should take.

My final point concerns the whole area of inspection and the administration of the regulations under the act. The inspector plays a very delicate role, and the minister must give a very delicate set of directions to the inspector. On the one hand, he must be aware of and concerned for the interests of the shippers so that the economic costs of the administration of the act do not outweigh the benefits achieved. On the other hand, he must not be totally concerned with the concerns of the shippers because it is the people living in the areas that are so close who are directly affected. My riding of Etobicoke Centre is affected in two ways. It is affected by the CP Rail line going through the centre of Etobicoke and also the major highway running through the centre of Etobicoke. I ask the minister to take great care in the direction he gives to the inspectors in order that the administration of the act will not favour unduly the interests of one side or the other affected by the regulations concerned.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I want to intervene very briefly just to place another view of the amendment in front of us. The remarks of the parliamentary secretary are shared largely by the official opposition, but I want to extend the parameters touched upon by the mover of the amendment. This brings the whole question of marine transport somewhat into focus.

I think it is fair to say that in the course of discussing this matter in committee there was an interjection by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Penner) which I thought had a lot of validity. It caused some extensive discussion with respect to the attitude of this House to sea-marine matters in general. I think the proper or the best way to dispose of the concerns raised by members of the New Democratic Party in this respect will be realized when the chamber gets on with the work of dealing with books 3, 4, and 5 of the Maritime Code. We have books 1 and 2, with the exception of the coastal shipping provisions.

The hope of all of us in this chamber—certainly those members on this side—is that when the House resumes in the fall or at an early date into the new session the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) will move himself, if that is at all possible, to put before the chamber the provisions contained in books 3, 4 and 5 of the new Maritime Code. Having said that and reiterated that, it is only when we have had a discussion in this chamber and in committee with the industry and community of interests involved that we will begin to address ourselves to the major and significant outstanding problem in marine transportation in this country.

With that caveat, and with the understanding given to us by the parliamentary secretary and others during the course of the discussion of the amendment in committee, I would indicate to the parliamentary secretary that we are prepared to support the position of the government so that we might not mislead anybody into believing that Bill C-18 contained provisions that, in our view, are sufficient to meet all of the concerns which are very broad and obviously go beyond the requirements of the bill.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a last ditch appeal to the parliamentary secretary. I wish the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) would not leave just yet since this is something he will end up having to deal with. The monkey will be on his back. I see he has left anyway.

The limit of Canadian jurisdiction—12 miles or 200 miles—under our economic and fisheries zones, begs the question. The reasons given by the parliamentary secretary for the government not wishing to accept this amendment border on unreasoning stubbornness. If, as, and when the Canada Shipping Act is amended, it will provide more adequate law covering the transportation of dangerous goods in bulk in vessels up to 200 miles out to sea. That would be fine, but we are not going to get such a provision tomorrow.

At the moment the situation is that a rust bucket flying a Panamanian or Roumanian flag and carrying a $1 million cargo on which it can collect up to $300,000 in freight charges, say, might be liable to a fine of $1,500 under the Canada Shipping Act. That is surely sufficient evidence of the lack of provisions under that act.

I am not optimistic that there will be any speedy amendments to the Canada Shipping Act which would bring its provisions and its jurisdiction up to the standards of the transportation of dangerous goods act. We might get some amendments every year or two or three years.

I would say to my good friend, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), that I am even less optimistic about any kind of speedy decisions on all aspects of the Maritime Code. They will take another two or three years.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, as and when the government amends the Canada Shipping Act and as and when the Maritime Code is revised, they could then include in appropriate legislation the repeal of this provision that we are proposing in the transportation of dangerous goods act.

My point is that the Canada Shipping Act is inadequate. The Maritime Code is not in place. Until such time as those two measures are in place and are sufficient, surely we need some kind of measure that covers these dangerous bulk commodities in vessels up to 200 miles out to sea, in our economic and fisheries zones.

When the government brings in amendments to the Canada Shipping Act it could repeal this particular amendment, if it were accepted today. That may be a year or two years from now. This party fails to understand the government's unwillingness to make a provision to see us through this interim period at least. I would hope that the officials in the House who are here to provide assistance to the House and to the parliamentary secretary would quickly send a note to him saying, "With those kinds of things that we have here in the future about the Canada Shipping Act and the Maritime Code, this amendment could be accepted until such time as we do the other pieces of legislation."

This is just too big a problem, with the possibility of a disaster, because of the transportation of a dangerous commodity in bulk in some rust bucket 100 miles off our coast on which we can impose only a $1,500 fine. It is not as if we have not had problems in other instances, whether with the British government, the Russian government or whatever. We do not have anything in place that is of any consequence and that would serve as an incentive for maritime shippers to do a better job with the transportation of dangerous goods in bulk or that would deter them from taking any chances. All it is going to cost them is a $1,500 fine out of a freight charge of $100,000 or more. They will take their chances and pay the $1,500 fine.

That is all we are asking for, Mr. Speaker. We are not suggesting this would be the be all and end all forever. Until the Canada Shipping Act and the Maritime Code are amended, however, we do not have anything to cover this kind of situation. I hope the parliamentary secretary will reconsider the government's position on the amendment and will accept it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion is lost on division.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Skelly) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As the Speaker indicated earlier this afternoon the motions are being taken separately. I will now move to the next motion.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Transportation of Dangerous Goods

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-18, an act to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods, be amended by deleting clause 10 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"10. It is sufficient proof of the offence to establish that it was committed by an employee or agent of the accused whether or not the employee or agent is identified or has been prosecuted for the offence."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment endeavours to do away with what has happened too many times in various areas of the transportation industry in Canada. Where there is wind and where there has been a mishap, a spill or an accident, too often the employee on the ground or the employee next to it, is taken out of service, is given demerit marks, is subpoenaed to a coroner's inquest or is charged with manslaughter or a lesser offence. This amendment would make companies responsible for the actions of their employees. The way the bill reads at the moment it could encourage a sort of fancy footwork on the part of corporate lawyers and officers, trying to fit corporate activities into definitions of reasonable.

In particular, clause 10 invites corporations to avoid penalty by pointing fingers at specific employees. We contend that the only way to ensure compliance with the act and its regulations in the corporate context is to impress upon corporate directors, officers and officials the fact that the corporation will be liable for the actions of its employees. If that is law, then surely one can be more reasonably confident that the corporation will be sure to give proper instructions and see to the carrying out of those instructions by its employees. I do not suggest that if an employee was wilfully negligent, the corporation would not be absolved. I submit that if through a court, hearing or inquiry, the corporation can prove that it carried out proper instructions, continuing instructions, supervision, and seeing to it that the employees followed those instructions and implemented them, then it is not to blame. However, if an employee still wilfully, criminally and deliberately disobeyed those instructions, then that employee would still be liable in those kinds of circumstances.

I would like to cite an example from my own experience during my many years on the railroad. It involves a section foreman who was awarded the prize by the company for three years in a row for maintaining the best section in the whole division. When there was a mishap and eight cars were in the ditch and a locomotive was upside down, it was felt that a broken rail was the cause. Who received the demerit marks, was taken out of service and lost pay? It was that section foreman. He had carried out all the procedures available to him which he had been instructed to follow by the company. But though the company had reduced its maintenance procedures, lengthened the number of miles of track that he was to patrol and reduced his crew from four men to three men to two men, he still had to inspect the track adequately. Of course, he was just not able to do the job even though he worked after hours and did not put in any claims for overtime. This section foreman was the one who received demerit marks and was taken out of service.

None of the company officers or the corporation itself was given a slap on the wrist for what was obviously inadequate maintenance, provision of personnel, equipment and worn out rails. The employee was the one who got it. Surely our amendment covers that kind of situation. If an employee wilfully, deliberately and negligently disobeys the instructions, training and use of the equipment and material provided to him to provide for the safe transportation of dangerous goods, he is still individually liable. We are trying to plug the availability to officers, and corporate lawyers on behalf of corporations of the move which leaves the blame placed upon the shoulders of one or more individual employees.

It is a collective responsibility, and the first part of the responsibility belongs to the corporation concerned. We hope that the government has reconsidered its position since we discussed this matter in committee and that it is now prepared to accept this amendment.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that this bill is not only designed for the railroads.

Mr. Benjamin: I was using the railroads as an example.

Mr. Bockstael: The hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) used the example of the railroads. This bill applies to all modes of transportation, all people who contract or are engaged in that work. The deletion set out in motion No. 2 is a very serious one since it removes any possible defence on the part of any employer for the employees' actions and would make the employer liable even if he could show that he exercised reasonable care. In other words, he is presumed to be guilty without proof or identification. In other words, it changes the common law doctrine which absolves an employer for liability for the actions of its employees outside the course of their normal duties.

This amendment would conceivably encourage carelessness, negligence, recklessness and subvert the legislative or regulatory controls normally applicable to employees. The government recommends that this motion be opposed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion is negatived on division.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Benjamin) negatived on division.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-18, an act to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods, be amended in clause 17 by striking out line 23 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"sion or escape and shall, as soon as possible in the circumstances, restore the natural environment as nearly as practicable to its previous condition."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion we are proposing here would require those in charge of dangerous goods which were involved in an accident during their transportation to restore the natural environment, as nearly as practicable, to its previous condition following that accident. I appreciate that the government is up tight because it does not want matters of the environment in this bill to the extent where it transgresses other environmental laws, either federal, provincial or municipal. We appreciate that fact.

We believe, from what legal advice we were able to obtain without fee, that anywhere and everywhere we used the word "environment" in this legislation or in our amendment, it applies only as it relates to or is as the result of the transportation of dangerous goods, and nothing else. This motion applies to the environment only with regard to incidental transportation, so as not to invade what might otherwise be of provincial jurisdiction or municipal jurisdiction.

There could be room for the constitutional argument that provincial environment legislation does not apply to railway accidents. We submit that there is room because that is an area of federal jurisdiction. This amendment would fill such a gap. There could be an equivalent justifiable argument with regard to interprovincial trucking. Each province may rule upon rates, conditions of transport and so on, and even agree upon these subjects interprovincially. In other words, the federal government has allowed the provinces to have most of the say in matters of interprovincial trucking.

We submit that in the transportation of dangerous goods interprovincially and where one province's laws and regulations are lax and weak compared to its neighbouring province and there is a spill which harms the environment, this law would apply. It would apply with regard to the process of cleaning up and fixing up the local environment after the spill, in other words, restoring it to its original state as much as is practicable. That is all we are asking. This restoration would come after, and sometimes long after, the emergency measures to remedy dangerous conditions have been completed. Therefore, it would not interfere with any immediate or current emergency measures. It has been suggested in committee that this amendment would interfere with any kind of emergency action being taken immediately upon an accident. We submit that that is not the case. I want also to remind the House that our point of view of this coincides with what has been recommended by the Canadian Environmental Law Association.

I am not a lawyer, and I confess that we have relied to a great degree on the opinion of those eminent legal people who have specialized in law as it relates to the environment. Their work in fact recognizes that any amendments to this legislation in terms of the environment must be restricted only to where it pertains to the transportation of dangerous goods and nothing beyond that. Federal or provincial environment laws would take place, take effect, or take over anything beyond that harms the environment as it relates to the transportation of dangerous goods.

We think the government worries overly much on this one, that the amendment is restrictive enough, that it would not interfere with provincial autonomy or jurisdiction. In fact it could fill some gaps probably welcomed by many provinces. I understand the provinces have been most co-operative in discussions with the government on joint action in implementing this legislation. We feel that the amendment is narrow enough to apply only to the environment being restored as a result of a spill or an accident due to the transportation of dangerous goods, and nothing beyond that.

We hope that the government has reconsidered and thought about the arguments that we have put forward, and has had a recommendation from the officials that this amendment will be acceptable.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the clause in its original form was meant to handle emergency measures consistent with basic public safety. This would hold any person having the responsibility to report or having "the charge, management or control of goods" to restore the natural environment after an accident even if that person is in no way responsible for the emission or discharge. This motion interferes with the provinces' control. It would conflict with environmental protection legislation being enacted in the provinces. I repeat, a person having the charge, management or control of dangerous goods may not have caused or even contributed to the causation of the discharge and thus should not be held responsible for this activity.

The actions needed for restoration of the environment might be completely beyond the resources of the person burdened by this proposed responsibility. We recommend that this motion be opposed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on the amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on motion No. 3. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Benjamin) negatived.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-18, an act to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods, be amended in clause 20 by striking out lines 6 to 8 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"danger to the health or safety of the public or damage or danger to property or the environment, the minister may direct a public inquiry to be made in the manner directed".

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a long struggle. I want to say at the outset, and I wanted to say it earlier, that members from all parties in the House and in the committee along with officials in the department have done a lot of work on this bill so I do not want in any way to denigrate the great efforts made by members of the committee, the parliamentary secretary and the officials. But again we have an amendment that we feel improves and strengthens the legislation. All parties are agreed that we want the legislation. I do not think there is any disagreement that wherever we can improve or strengthen it, all parties should do so.

Our motion No. 4, would add danger or damage to the environment to the list of reasons for calling an inquiry into the spill of dangerous goods during transportation. It would also provide for public hearings. Again, we have been very careful to word our amendment to make it as narrow as possible so that there is no way that it could go beyond this legislation. There is no way it could interfere with, contravene or in any other way injure the interests of a province which has jurisdiction, or in any way encroach upon federal or provincial environmental laws that apply to everything else other than the transportation of dangerous goods. We have tried to be exceedingly careful in the wording or our amendment.

I think there was general consensus and agreement by all sides in the House concerning the validity and desirability of providing for public hearings. I am confident that there is no argument on that aspect of our amendment.

The Canadian Railway Labour Association in its submissions to the committee and to the government has called for public hearings. The committee accepted an amendment of ours which we appreciated. It requires the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to publish all inquiry reports instead of being able to keep them confidential. We appreciate the amendment that was accepted in the committee was useful, and we appreciate it being accepted by the government and all other members of the committee. But this motion No. 4 would extend public participation and information a little bit further, including environment as the result—and I repeat—of an accident or a spill as a result of the transportation of dangerous goods. Therefore, it would include environment only in that narrow context as a reason to hold an inquiry as recommended not only by the Canadian Railway Labour Association but the Canadian Environmental Law Associaton.

I believe our motion says "The minister may". It does not say "He shall". It says "The minister may direct a public inquiry." He may direct an inquiry into other aspects than are in the bill. We are only adding the aspect of environment where the minister may direct an inquiry. That may be immediately upon, close to, subsequent to, or some time after a mishap in the transportation of dangerous goods as it affects the environment.

The example cited by my colleague the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) of tank cars of chlorine gas lying at the bottom of an inlet may not produce effects on the environment that can be seen until several years after the mishap. That occurred during the transportation of dangerous goods. If those tank cars rust, as they will, the chlorine gas will escape. Some community may be affected and therefore evacuated. Surely it is not beyond good reason and good sense to have a law whereby the minister may cause a public inquiry to be held as a result of the aftermath of that mishap and the subsequent leakage as it affects the environment. Even if it does not affect any people, it will certainly affect the environment. The minister and his officials may use their own good judgment, and I am assuming the word "good", in all cases. Surely it is not unreasonable to have that in the law.

As the bill reads now, if Mississauga or MacGregor had happened in some isolated area where there was no immediate danger to life or property, the minister could not call an inquiry. Had those mishaps occurred in an isolated area and the only damage was to the environment, and not to persons or property, nothing else would have happened. The stuff would just lie around. Who would inquire into or have the responsibility when it only affects the environment?

This amendment is deliberately narrow enough for the government to accept easily that it be incorporated into the law. I am perfectly prepared to trust and rely upon this and subsequent ministers of transport to use their good sense and judgment as to whether to call a public inquiry as it affects the danger to life, property or the environment.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to accept insertion of the word "public" before inquiry. This we have agreed upon. We cannot accept insertion of the words "or the environment". The reason is that it falls within the purview of either or both the federal or provincial ministers of the environment who already hold those powers of inquiry. We hold to the original statement that if the members of the New Democratic Party are prepared to submit an amendment, we will approve insertion of the word "public", but we refuse insertion of the words "or the environment".

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues who have been working on this bill would certainly prefer the amendment put before the House in the name of the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). However, we recognize that there are times in this place when, if you cannot get all you are asking for, it might be a good idea to take part of it. Since the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bockstael) has indicated that the government would accept this amendment if the words "or the environment" were deleted, we are prepared to go along with that. That does not mean any change of conviction on our part. We think those words ought to be in there, but it is better to get something than nothing. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper):

That motion No. 4 be amended by deleting therefrom the following words: "or the environment"

I hope my handwriting is legible, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Knowles) agreed to.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Benjamin), as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-18, an act to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods, be amended by deleting the long title and substituting the following therefor:

"An act to promote public safety and the protection of the environment in the transportation of dangerous goods".

He said: Again, Mr. Speaker, in the narrow context of the law as it applies to the transportation of dangerous goods, we are moving an amendment that would include the word "environment" in the title of the bill. I remind hon. members that this is the third version of the dangerous goods bill. It is bill No. 3, the grandson bill on the transportation of dangerous goods.

The wording that we are proposing in the long title is "an act to promote public safety and the protection of the environment in the transportation of dangerous goods". We are adding "and the protection of the environment". It was in the title of Bill C-17 proposed in 1978 by the previous Liberal administration. I do not understand the hang-up about having it in the grandson bill on transportation of dangerous goods, Bill C-18.

To repeat, it applies only to environment coincidental to the transportation of dangerous goods so as not to invade provincial jurisdiction or other federal laws relating to the environment. The argument could and in fact does apply that provincial environmental legislation does not cover railway, international marine, interprovincial trucking, interprovincial or international airline transportation of dangerous goods. The law of any one province can apply to that. I am no lawyer, but even a dummy like me knows that much about it.

To counter some of the arguments I expect from the parliamentary secretary, the bill already invades provincial jurisdiction over trucking within a province for regulation purposes. It already invades provincial jurisdiction. I understand that by agreement there have been magnificent negotiations and discussions between the provinces and the federal government regarding this legislation and that the provinces are anxious to co-operate so there will be no duplication. They accept invasion by regulation into their jurisdiction when it comes to trucking. If the federal government is so concerned about other levels of government, why not write in a statutory right of compensation for municipal and provincial police forces and fire departments for emergency measures imposed on those levels of government? It seems to me that the federal authority is trying to have it both ways.

● (1630)

If a Mississauga or a MacGregor were to happen in an isolated area where, again, there was no immediate danger to life or property, the act would not apply. For example, it would not apply in the case of spills on railway property unless protection of the environment is included. The objective should be for the federal government and the provinces to work out a comprehensive program to deal with dangerous goods, from the cradle to the grave, so to speak. But we believe the inclusion of the words in the long title "and the protection of the environment" is appropriate and fits in with actions both the federal government and the provinces will be taking to protect the environment in relation to the transportation of dangerous goods. Surely the proper place for this terminology is in the title to the bill.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I should like to make a few comments at this stage. I shall be brief, but I hope the parliamentary secretary will pay attention to what I have to say.

I know there have been four attempts in recent years to pass legislation of this nature. It is extremely important, therefore, that we should get the bill through as quickly as possible because we all have an interest in improving the situation with regard to the transportation of dangerous goods. This desire is highlighted by the Mississauga train derailment last year. One result of that accident was an increased public awareness of the need to establish rules governing the transportation of dangerous goods.

The House should remember that while accidents on the scale of Mississauga do not happen every day, thank goodness, other accidents with very serious ramifications do occur frequently. I saw one such accident just the other night while driving from Ottawa to Kingston—and I might say that that in itself is a hazardous occupation! Just the other night, though, I was confronted at first hand with the result of a transport truck accident involving the spillage of powdered caustic soda, a very corrosive substance. The driver of the truck was badly burned by the soda, and members of the emergency crew who was there to help out were also burned. This came about because the truck driver and the others closely involved were not immediately washed down—it was not known for some time whether or not water would aggravate the situation.

While we can make provision for special handling, packaging and labelling of dangerous goods, we must also see to it that the various emergency services receive adequate training to enable them to deal with the results of accidents involving such cargoes. I have in mind members of police, fire and ambulance services.

In the past several months a great deal of concern has been expressed throughout eastern Ontario with regard to shipments of radioactive nuclear waste. The parliamentary secretary will be aware of this. Much of the public awareness has come about as a result of publication of an excellent series of articles on this subject in The Kingston Whig-Standard highlighting the dangers which are inherent in shipping radioactive nuclear waste. In this case spent reactor fuel which has become highly radioactive after use at Chalk River is shipped some 1,100 miles to a United States refining centre in South Carolina. The route of these shipments passes through much of eastern Ontario, a section of the country which is fairly thickly populated.

I know it was explained to us in committee that when this material is shipped, a security plan is in effect and that the police are made aware of its movement. But who else is made aware of its movement? Are other emergency services, such as ambulance crews, made aware of it? It would appear that apart from the police none of the emergency personnel such as fire and ambulance people are told. And even if they were to be informed, do they have adequate training and knowledge to enable them to deal at a moment's notice with the kind of accident which might take place? It would appear not.

I would draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to the statement made in committee by Mr. Beare of the Atomic Energy Control Board. According to him, the only training offered to emergency officials who might be called upon to deal with a nuclear accident is a one-week once-a-year course at Chalk River. Mr. Beare suggested that the AECB and the Department of Transport might work together to provide special courses for fire and other emergency officials who could be called upon to deal with accidents. I might add that at the present time similar joint courses between the two agencies are being held to train mine inspectors. This is an example of the way in which we might go about making training available to officials who might have to deal with a nuclear accident.

I believe it is incumbent upon the minister to proceed along the lines of this suggestion and apply it across the board to those who might have to deal with an accident resulting from the transportation of dangerous goods. Far too few of them receive adequate training at present to enable them to do so, as was certainly exemplified in the case of the accident I witnessed the other night.

There is one other matter I should like to draw to the attention of the parliamentary secretary. A study done recently by a consumer group in the United States has shown that the shipper who has the contract to take the nuclear waste from Chalk River to the United States plant in South Carolina had 152 accidents while moving nuclear material in the period between 1974 and 1978. The shippers of that company had these accidents during that period. Yet officials in AECL who give out the contracts claim that the company's past record is very good. So on one hand we have particulars as to the accident rate of that company or its shippers in the United States while on the other, here in Canada, AECL is saying they have an excellent record. I am worried that the agencies responsible for regulating the shipment of nuclear material are not as impartial as they might be.

● (1640)

I would like to ask if a study similar to the one done in the United States has been carried out by AECL. We do not know. We simply have to accept on faith that the shipper is a responsible company and that AECL is regulating it just as closely as it should be. I just do not want to go on the word of AECL without seeing documentation to back up that claim.

I think the parliamentary secretary would agree that a company's accident record should be a major consideration when it comes to contracting the movement of nuclear materials.

I said that I do not wish to delay these proceedings any longer than they have to be, but I express the very sincere hope that the parliamentary secretary—and through him the minister—will agree that these points are certainly worth considering, that they are very important, and that he will see that they are put into effect just as soon as possible.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have just one observation with respect to the amendment to the title proposed by the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). It occurred to some of us in the committee that the proper amendment to the title might very well have been in the long form, the Marchand-Mazankowski link, and in the short form, the Ellison connection.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will digress from the motion for a moment to respond to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). I will certainly take her recommendations to the minister. They are valid considerations for us to deal with along with the Atomic Energy Commission.

The hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) wishes to amend the title, and I think it is important for us to stress that the value of the bill rests on its implementation and its regulation, which calls for the co-operation of both the federal government and the provinces. The provinces have generally supported this bill under its present title, and it was within the realm of the provinces that there was objection to calling this or implying that this was also an environmental bill. The inclusion of such a reference in the title might be misleading since the words could be construed at some future date to allow for amendments to the act which might involve the environment, remedial measures, compensation, and new regulatory powers which are outside the proposed ambit of this bill. It could also raise objections from the provinces that the bill is ultra vires the federal government.

We recommend that this change in the title be opposed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will be please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Motion No. 5 (Mr. Benjamin) negatived.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-18, to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles: By leave, now.

Mr. Lamontagne moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I want to preface my remarks at third reading by saying again that all members of the committee, departmental officials, the parliamentary secretary and the minister did much work on this legislation. I particularly want to recognize the assistance officials gave us with their comments and their answers. We did not necessarily like them all, but the officials were very forthcoming during the committee hearings, and I wish that could happen on every piece of legislation with which we deal in this place.

While all parties support the passage of legislation regarding the transportation of dangerous goods, as legislators we also have an obligation to tell the public that this act will not eliminate all of our concerns about the movement of hazardous substances.

The illusion that this act will prevent disasters must be dispelled. Some day another train, truck, ship or plane will spill its deadly cargo on an unsuspecting neighbourhood, shattering what is presently being looked upon as the security—and we call it false security—of this legislation. Maybe luck will be with us again and the neighbourhood can be evacuated. Let us hope so.

What the act will do is provide for proper classification, packaging and identification of all dangerous goods being transported—with stiff penalties for non-compliance—which in itself is significant, but it will not deal with safety of transport vehicles per se. In fact, the following statement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport, indicates that. He said:

> It is important to note that the bill does not establish safety standards and procedures respecting the safe operation of any mode of transport or any industrial activity . . . it addresses only the special question of dangerous goods.

In other words, this legislation will not, for example, require adequate maintenance of railway lines or trucks or prevent some worn out boxcar somewhere on a train from causing the derailment of another car carrying chlorine, for example. The government is leaving policing of safety to other authorities such as the Canadian Transport Commission, but the CTC must be given the resources to do the job.

In the past three years the staff of the Canadian Transport Commission, including staff in the rail safety division, has been cut back. There is no argument that that kind of restraint must be lifted, yesterday. In fact the estimates have called for a progressive reduction in the number of safety inspectors working for the CTC over the last three years under three different governments, two Liberal and one Tory.

There are some shortcomings with regard to our dangerous goods legislation which need government attention. For example, there is no opportunity for the general public to make representations regarding the adequacy of the legislation's regulations, although government members did support an amendment of ours to provide freedom of information regarding reports of inquiries into accidents involving dangerous goods.

The legislation should also be amended further to include a compensation scheme, funded by industry and administrated by the government, which could compensate people for immediate needs after a disaster and then collect expenses from those responsible for a spill later on through the courts. This would avoid such situations as the one at Mississauga, for example, where the CPR provided money only for immediate needs, if people signed away their rights to further action. Let us remember that we are looking at possible damages of hundreds of millions of dollars in some cases. What if the company concerned went bankrupt? Who pays?

I suppose the best way to reduce damages is to improve safety. In conjunction with this legislation the railways must be required to modernize their operations and hire adequate complements of staff to inspect and maintain facilities. We can have all the transportation of dangerous goods legislation we like, but if the facilities and infrastructure for the transportation of dangerous goods are worn out or inadequate, this legislation will be of little help. It will be after the fact.

● (1650)

Would you believe, Mr. Speaker, that between 1956 and 1977 the railways alone eliminated 60,000 jobs, 30,000 of which were cut from maintenance, directly affecting safety, not just in the transportation of dangerous goods but all other kinds of safety? Of course the railways should not be singled out. I only use that as an example. More stringent safety procedures must be required of all modes of transportation, and I draw that to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) because I presume that a satellite carrying radioactive material is transporting a dangerous good, and international, let alone the national, ramifications must be apparent to him as well.

If public concern over Mississauga or MacGregor is translated into shifting the movement of dangerous goods from rail to truck, we will not be better off; in fact, we could be worse off. However, the reality is that the Minister of Transport is not God, and he has professed that on a number of occasions. Even with the most stringent regulations, even with a bill with many teeth in it, even if the transport companies did everything humanly possible to prevent accidents, some accidents will occasionally occur. This legislation will not solve all of that, but this does not mean that we cannot significantly reduce the number of accidents, which must, in the short run, be the primary objective. However, some will be missing the boat if we do not emphasize the long-term solution to be the reduction of our society's dependence on non-renewable materials which are themselves dangerous or are made from dangerous goods.

Chemical technology is outstripping our knowledge of its effects. Sixty-three thousand man-made chemicals are now in use, a thousand more are added to the list each year. Transportation is only one aspect of the problem. There is also the manufacture, storage and disposal of these projects. As a society we should ask ourselves if we want to continue producing so many hazardous goods and if we should not be treating them comprehensively from the cradle to the grave.

My purpose in making these remarks is not to alarm unduly but rather to point out that the job has just begun and we should not be content to rest on this one piece of legislation.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I also will be very brief with respect to this piece of legislation. As we know, the need for this type of bill, for bringing together a number of perceived areas, started back seven or eight years ago under that distinguished gentleman who is now in the other place, the then minister of transport, Senator Jean Marchand. At the time the only real concerns which were being contemplated were in the areas of road transportation, as has been mentioned. But over the years there has been an evolution of thought, a continuation of very dedicated work by officials, indeed, a succession of bills, starting with Bill C-53, followed by C-70, C-25, and now C-18 in front of us. Because each one of them has changed and grown, they have demonstrated the need for a comprehensive piece of legislation, one which at once affords levels of protection which a bill like this can accomplish but at the same time provides us with a legislative basis upon which regulations can be brought forward which will lend substance to the protection of the public and, as my friend the hon. member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) keeps referring to it, the environment, because that is not unimportant in this context.

I recognize, together with those requirements, requirements for the safe handling, identification, training, proper inspection, a little light on investigation, a little light on where transport begins or ends. On the other hand, it seems to me that the perceived requirements of society here in Canada today—and I think this is rather important—should not place undue economic or legal restraint upon the private sector, or where applicable the public sector, which must, on a daily and continuing basis, move dangerous or hanzardous projects around the country. That in itself is no small achievement, brought about by the collective efforts of a small but dedicated branch within transport which is responsible for dangerous goods and a succession of ministers of transport.

The bill as well presents us with some pretty broad guidelines which are fully understood by the provinces, guidelines with respect to regulations which will flow from them. These are pretty broad and clearly understandable guidelines, not only to provincial authorities but to industry and the community of interest which will have to operate within them.

The bill is comprehensive and it lends the necessary statutory authority which at this time is perceivable to all of us. It may not, as some of us might have wished, have gone a little further in certain areas, but I do not believe that to be a limitation on the capacity of this bill because if bills of this nature, indeed most legislation which comes before the House in this broad category, are not living, breathing things capable of change from time to time which reflect need, change in regulation which accommodates that need, change in the legislative character by way of amendment here on the floor of the House to accommodate need, if we have not achieved at least that in this bill, then I believe it could be properly said that we have failed. On the contrary, this bill means all of this.

If the distinguished member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) were here, he might want to make that point today and to emphasize that there is not a single thing in this piece of legislation that puts any barrier in front of the regulatory process to accommodate, and that is what we have set out to do. I think that if the former minister of transport were here he might have made another point with some pride, that is, that as we have developed over the years—I suppose other former ministers of transport could also take some pride in this—as this bill and its regulations have developed and are yet to be clearly and finally set forth, we have been leaders and not followers.

The bill is innovative in its approach to the statutory requirement for regulation and it has been paralleled by neighbours to the south. In short, we have been the leaders not the followers in the development of comprehensive and, in my judgment, good legislation. The bill was produced with the fullest and broadest co-operation of the industry, the provinces, our neighbours to the south, and indeed a very broad range within the international community that will be subject to this law when in fact they are in operation in whatever mode in this country. It was acceptable to them; it was clear and concise, in their judgment. Again I think that is a credit to the process which brought this together.

As I have indicated, all of us should show some respect and appreciation for that small but very active group within the department who have responsibilities in this area. We have some obligation to wish them well and thank them for the nitty-gritty of putting together the regulations under it. I am satisfied on two accounts. I am satisfied with the competency of that staff and the innate good sense of the chamber to react to need when it is perceived, although seven years might be described as a damnable length of time to achieve and accomplish something as fundamentally good and sound.

Generally we on this side of the House are satisfied that the bill provides capacity for easy amendment and flexible regulations in areas where it falls short, where it fails, or where new understanding is required of intermodal movement of goods in this country, in and out of it, through and over it, or around its waters. I have less certainty respecting the administration of this bill and would express the hope that the wherewithal, as mentioned by other members in their deliberations, for adequate training will be made available. Certainly the Canadian Transport Commission is one vehicle, but it is not the only one. The inspection services contemplated as being the inspection authority within the meaning of this act, no matter what other act they may be operative under, require assistance in the form of upgrading their information, professionalism, and capacity to ensure that this bill and its regulations operate in the interest of Canadians, that it operates effectively in the protection of our environment without infringing upon the jurisdiction of the provinces.

In the course of its public hearings respecting this bill, the committee heard a wide cross-section of Canadians, including consumer groups. I think this morning we were criticized by one consumer group that we had failed as a committee or as a Parliament to pay attention to its views. Simply that is not so. In putting together the list of witnesses, the Standing Committee on Transport was conscious of the broad section of briefs which came before it. The committee chose representative groups and acted arbitrarily. I will explain why in a moment, but it accommodated the broadest interests of groups. In response to dozens of briefs, the government—and it is a credit to them—offered numerous amendments. We heard the concern of the New Democratic Party for amendments in certain areas. We on this side offered and debated amendments to this piece of legislation. So I think it has had good public exposure before arriving here this afternoon.

As I indicated, the bill is a living thing, and as with all such living things it will grow and change from time to time. I am confident that in that growth and change, because of its character and nature, it will reflect the legitimate needs of the safety of people and the environment. I am satisfied it is in competent hands. That leaves only to be said that we on this side extend our appreciation to the parliamentary secretary for the knowledgeable and professional manner in which he dealt with this matter in committee and in the House. We are anxious to get on with this today. I think it is pertinent to put the reasons for the need for this legislation on the record, that is, beyond the obvious ones.

We were contemplating the adjournment of this chamber at the end of July, but it was decided that we would move quickly, although I hardly think seven years is too rapid an approach, to deal with this piece of legislation today and to have it looked at by the Senate. It is a matter of some regret that now we are referring this bill to the other place, leaving them only a matter of a few short days in which to contemplate it, review it, and let us have their considered judgment respecting it. It is important to say that. If this bill were not dealt with in the closing days of this session, there is a probability—always we seem to refer to possibilities; I think this is more of a probability—we would have returned to this chamber around Thanksgiving or shortly afterward only to find, because of other pressing matters, an urgency to wind up this session and commence a new one. If that happened, the bill might very well have died, and then it would have been necessary to reintroduce it in all of its stages, thus causing further delay.

Mr. Knowles: It will not be a new session in the fall; it will be the same session.

Mr. Forrestall: I do not think this session will last much beyond one or two days after our return. It may; I may be wrong. In any event, it would have called for a total reworking of this particular piece of legislation. That would have been the fifth time around, and it would have been unacceptable.

I hope the Senate is able to consider it and that the matter will be dealt with so that the proper authorities can get on with their two to three-month job of putting together the regulations in the hope of meeting a satisfactory application date for this piece of legislation before December 31, 1980.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the members of the Standing Committee on Transport and the members of this House in all parties for the intense interest and valuable contributions they made to bring the bill to this stage. Also I want to make reference to the previous minister of transport and his contribution in bringing the bill to the stage it was at when the House adjourned last December. It is on the foundation he prepared that the committee was able to deal with it more speedily and bring it forward today.

Also I want to mention the officials who have been so helpful and have demonstrated their expertise in this field. They were an asset to have at our side to ensure that members of all parties have a better understanding and grasp of the intent of this bill. We all owe them a great deal of thanks and gratitude for what they have been able to provide to us.

● (1710)

May I underline, Mr. Speaker, the fact that the Standing Committee on Transport gave careful and detailed consideration to this bill. The amendments proposed as a result of assessing submissions made to the standing committee have, I believe, strengthened the bill in some respects and brought it into balance. I should like to add that all of these submissions were of value and this House should recognize the work that went into their making.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am very satisfied with the bill which has been reported to us. This bill has already been introduced three times in the House and I know it is important to have it adopted before recess so that the regulations will be published as soon as possible; I therefore urge members to participate with me in the third reading of Bill C-18 so that we will be able to refer it for study in the other place.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it appears that I have the opportunity to give the benediction on the transportation of dangerous goods bill. Although I want to acknowledge the efforts that have gone into the formulation of this legislation—work which long precedes my arrival in this august chamber—I feel that it is somewhat appropriate that I have the opportunity to speak at this stage. My first question in this House was put in October, 1979, to the then minister of the environment, asking when the transportation of dangerous goods bill would be brought forward. It was only a month after that question that the events in Mississauga occurred, and only shortly thereafter that the move to bring in the bill gained momentum. I think we need to be reminded of that, Mr. Speaker.

I am willing to participate in the non-partisan atmosphere which prevails in the House this afternoon, and I should like to extend my congratulations to the committee on the work it has done. I was not a member of that committee so I extend my congratulations to it, to my colleagues for the quality of their amendments, to the officials and everyone involved.

With respect to this bill, as with so many other things, we must realize that we are at third reading stage today because incidents like the one at Mississauga happened, and not entirely because of our own foresight.

As I said earlier, the question I asked in October, 1979, concerned not only the transportation of dangerous goods but also the disposal of dangerous goods. I was reminded of that when the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) expressed concern about the transportation of radioactive material. Another concern that many people have about radioactive material is its disposal once the use for which it was being transported has been executed. Of course this concerns not only radioactive material but many other dangerous products as well.

We have to realize two things about the limitations of what we are doing today, Mr. Speaker. It has already been pointed out that the bill is only concerned with the transportation and packaging of dangerous goods and not with the safety of vehicles and transportation systems responsible for carrying those goods. The bill does not address the much longer-term problem of disposal of dangerous goods. This is something that I hope members of the government in particular will note, and that we will not have to wait for an accident like that at Mississauga before we begin to take the problem of disposal of dangerous goods seriously. As a logical extension of the concern of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, I hope we will not wait for a disaster before legislation is brought forward to deal with the disposal of dangerous goods and, in particular, the disposal of radioactive waste. Of course we would not have that problem in the first place if we were to abandon our foolish commitment to nuclear power. It looks as if the government is committed to nuclear power, however, so we must take very seriously the problem of the disposal of radioactive waste.

Perhaps I am something of a party-pooper and am taking the gleam off the mutual admiration society that we seem to have become this afternoon when dealing with passage of this particular bill, Mr. Speaker, but I want to put these points before the House.

Another matter I want to deal with is the concern felt in my home town of Winnipeg. It is unfortunate that the public's attention and heightened awareness of the problem which the transportation of dangerous goods poses has come about as a result of incidents like Mississauga, MacGregor and the methanol spill at the CPR yards at Winnipeg. Unfortunately, this did not lead to a stronger commitment by the federal government to rail relocation in Winnipeg.

One of the ways in which we can reduce the danger to life, to health, to property and the environment, is to take seriously the opportunities to reroute these products in our major residential areas. It seems that in spite of the awareness created through recent events and the debate on this bill, the government has not been inspired to do anything more decisive about railway relocation in Winnipeg—not just for the sake of safety but for the sake of revitalization of the inner city of Winnipeg. I regret that this opportunity to realize the value of rail relocation is passing with the debate on this bill and that no other opportunities present themselves in the House to speak on this issue from this angle.

Given the brevity of the last Parliament, Mr. Speaker, some of us have had the opportunity to become veterans very quickly. This is one of the first bills that I have had the opportunity to see go through from beginning to end. I will be interested to see whether the intention of the bill becomes reality when I see the quality of the regulations. I will wait also to see the depth of the government's conviction to ensure the regulations are enforced. We all hope the government will act in other ways that will promote the safety of persons, property, and the environment by lifting the various restraint programs which are presently imposed upon the Canadian Transport Commission, for instance.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak for a very short moment to say how much I appreciate this bill and the work which has gone into it. We on the west coast are very accustomed to the difficulties of transporting materials, dangerous and otherwise. I believe that this bill will do much to alleviate the dangers which we face in this area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

IRANIAN ECONOMIC SANCTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that Bill C-31, to provide for the imposition of certain economic sanctions against the Islamic Republic of Iran, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

He said: Members are well aware of the circumstances that have led to the introduction of this bill. The seizure by Iranian militants of the American Embassy in Tehran on November 4 last year, and the subsequent detention of its staff, constitute grave violations of international law which call for an unequivocal response from the international community.

The strong protests which Canada and other countries have already made to these violations are not an over-reaction to a mere breach of diplomatic form. On the contrary, the hostage crisis is a fundamental challenge to the centuries-old evolution of orderly relations among states. Without the assurance that governments can confidently exchange diplomatic missions, and that host governments will accord them immunity and protection from acts of violence such as we have recently seen in Iran and in other countries, interstate co-operation will be in grave danger.

That Iran, over the past year has been trying to evolve new government institutions and has so far lacked centralized authority is, of course, a factor which we must keep in mind in deciding the nature of our response to the hostage crisis. However, the internal situation in Iran cannot in any way be used as an excuse to look the other way when a violation of international law of this magnitude occurs. The international community would do so at its peril.

The threat which this crisis poses for the international community was recognized by the United Nations Security Council, which last December passed without dissent, and with even the support of the Soviet Union, two resolutions urging respect for international law and demanding the release of the hostages. The second resolution called for sanctions against Iran in the event of non-compliance by that country with the terms of the resolution. Its purpose was ultimately frustrated when the Soviet Union vetoed the draft calling for specific sanctions against Iran which the Americans introduced on January 10.

The cynical Soviet veto, however, cannot obscure the fact that the international community, both then and now, condemns the hostage affair. In addition to the overwhelming support given to the Security Council resolutions on Iran, this condemnation from the international community has been reiterated by the International Court of Justice which, first in December and then again in May, ordered Iran to restore the embassy to the U.S.A. and to free the hostages. These unequivocal judgments by the UN and the International Court of Justice fully justify the international community in applying economic sanctions against Iran.

After the sanctions resolution was vetoed on January 13, the American government requested a number of friendly governments, including Canada, to apply the measures foreseen in the resolution, notwithstanding the Soviet veto. This American request was subsequently held in abeyance when it appeared in late January that a more cohesive and pragmatic administration was emerging in Iran, and that the UN might be able to mediate the dispute. Regrettably, that has not proved to be the case. Even now that that Parliament has finally come together, a solution appears to be no nearer.

The decision by the European Economic Community and Japan on April 22, and by Canada on April 23, to impose limited measures against Iran was in response to a renewed call for support from President Carter on April 8. At the time they imposed these limited measures, the EEC, Japan and Canada stated that if there was no decisive progress in the hostage situation by May 17, further measures would be taken against Iran. No decisive progress was achieved, and on May 18, EEC countries, followed by Japan, decided to implement the kind of measures contained in the vetoed Security Council resolution. On May 22 I announced that Canada was taking parallel steps by placing controls on the export of goods to Iran and by introducing into the House the legislation to which I am speaking at the moment.

I have already explained that the government has been prompted to take these steps out of its concern to uphold a fundamental rule of international law which is vital to the conduct of international relations. It follows from this preoccupation that we would like to see as many countries as possible support such measures, so as to impress on the Iranians that a prolongation of the hostage situation will inevitably lead to their further isolation in the international community. It was this consideration that led us to co-ordinate our recent actions with the EEC countries, Japan and Australia. It is for the same reason that I hope the House will give immediate approval to this bill, and thus put Canada in a position to implement, in concert with our allies, the range of measures supported by a large majority of the Security Council.

In addition to considerations of legal principle, there are compelling political reasons why Canada and other countries should support economic sanctions against Iran. These measures go at least some way to reassure the Americans that the international community is prepared to show solidarity in confronting an illegal situation that is deeply frustrating and galling to them, and is indeed intolerable for all law-abiding states.

In our view patience is required to allow the Iranian political scene to evolve, and imagination will be needed to find a formula for the safe release of all the hostages. Canada will do what it can to support initiatives that have some chance of securing the hostages' release through negotiation. Meantime, however, we cannot accept that no action be taken. We must demonstrate to the Americans as well as to the Iranians our determination that justice in terms of international law is available to all countries. Economic sanctions, in addition to their value in adding to the pressures on Iran to release the hostages, serve this symbolic purpose.

There is a point I should add about Canadian-Iranian relations in the longer term. I have already assured the Iranian foreign minister in a personal message on May 12 that we are not mounting sanctions against Iran because of any hostile attitude toward the Iranian government and people, or out of any desire to intervene in Iran's internal affairs. Canada strongly supports the independence and territorial integrity of Iran. It looks forward to the day when the hostage crisis is resolved and it should once again be possible to resume the full range of friendly contacts between our two countries.

Turning to the nature of the legislation now before the House, the Security Council resolution proposed by the U.S.A. on January 10 required all states to take a number of measures against Iran in the areas of trade, transport, finance and diplomacy. Some of the measures, such as the placing of controls on the export of goods to Iran and restrictions on diplomatic personnel, can be taken by administrative measures in Canada, and this we have already done.

Had the U.S.S.R. not vetoed the resolution, all of the other measures could have been implemented under our United Nations Act. The Soviet veto made this impossible and the government has therefore proposed that Parliament enact new legislation that would enable the imposition of economic sanctions against Iran. The bill follows the draft resolution very closely and is designed to put the government in the same position it would have been in had the Soviet Union not cast their veto.

The government recognizes the exceptional character of this bill and has therefore drafted it in narrow terms intended only for the implementation of the January 10 draft resolution. We have provided an opportunity for parliamentary review and debate of regulations made under the new legislation. The bill also contains provision for its expiry one year after the day it is assented to, unless expressly extended.

In conclusion, let us hope that circumstances will ensure that the need for and hence duration of this legislation will be short-lived. The just announced release of one Iranian hostage appears not to indicate any general change of heart, but once the new Iranian parliament has been able to establish its working procedures it should be able to turn its attention to the hostage question. With their country facing increasingly urgent and difficult problems at home and abroad, more and more Iranians may come to see the hostage crisis as an unnecessary impediment to the solution of these other problems. As soon as the hostages are released, the government will move quickly to repeal the legislation now before us and will resume its efforts to renew relations with Iran, for which we think there is considerable scope.

Although the motion as you have presented it, Mr. Speaker, was to refer this bill to the Standing Committee on International Affairs and National Defence, I believe there may be unanimous disposition on the part of the House to deal with the bill in all stages today after members have finished their speeches on second reading, and I hope that that will be the procedure which is followed.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the House that this party is in agreement that the bill proceed through all stages today, and I would like to reassure the minister of that.

In recent days the release of one of the American hostages from Iran has dramatically focused, once again, the world's attention on the detention of American diplomats in Iran, and that makes more relevant the debate we are having on this bill today, which is to provide for the imposition of certain economic sanctions against the Islamic Republic of Iran. We hope and pray, sir, that Mr. Richard Queen's release is no isolated incident, and that his 52 comrades will soon follow his path to freedom.

It is now 255 days since the American embassy in Tehran was overrun by the so-called student militants. It is more than eight long months since the American diplomatic personnel in the U.S. embassy in Tehran were seized as hostages. Throughout this long period, Canadians, of all the peoples in the world, have been front-line observers of the personal anguish and the national anxiety which these events have stirred in our American neighbours. We are reminded daily of their concerns through the medium of television and radio, and through personal contacts with our neighbours to the south.

Canadians are a people who know and cherish our liberties and who understand and respect international order. The flagrant disregard for both of these, that is, of liberties and international order, by the leaders and by the people of Iran, has evoked in Canada a deep and genuine concern for the well-being of the American hostages, and a symphathy for those in the United States administration and in the government who have so patiently worked for the resolution of this crisis.

As Canada's foreign minister at the time of the embassy takeover, I was very much aware of the sentiments of Canadians as well as the concern in most nations over the disregard for international law regarding diplomatic immunity. Canadians recognized that the very foundations of international law and civilized diplomacy were being called into question by the situation in Iran.

Canada's involvement in this international crisis was heightened on November 9, five days after the embassy takeover when Ambassador Ken Taylor was authorized by then prime minister Clark to provide refuge to six American diplomatic personnel who were outside the U.S. embassy at the time of the seizure. That decision to offer sanctuary to our American house guests and the vital necessity to keep it a closely guarded secret so as to protect them, made the Canadian government's reaction to events in Tehran more difficult and more complex. I would like to explain why.

As a government, we were determined to do all we could to lead international opinions, organizations, groups and nations in pressing the Iranian authorities, who were often incapable or unwilling to govern, into releasing the American hostages. We were trying throughout to take a lead in that regard. At the same time we were well aware that initiatives that were too isolated or too high profile, initiatives which would have had the effect of focusing unusual attention on the Canadian embassy, could endanger the American hostages, our house guests, and our own foreign service personnel in Tehran. Yet we were determined to play a vigorous role, both public and private, in seeking a resolution to this situation.

So, on November 27, as a result of a Canadian initiative, a meeting of Commonwealth representatives was held in London. As a result of that meeting a joint communiqué was issued protesting the actions of the Iranian militants and appealing for the release of the American hostages. Later, on December 4, at the United Nations, Canada welcomed the Security Council resolution calling for the release of the American hostages. On December 13, at the NATO ministerial meetings in Brussels which I was attending, the foreign ministers called upon the Iranian authorities to set at liberty the American diplomats.

While these public statements were important, the government recognized that further steps had to be taken, including economic sanctions, and that they should be considered by all concerned nations. This required ongoing consultations if effective sanctions were to be imposed. Because of the secret harbouring of the Americans in our embassy, regular consultation and contact had already begun between Canada and the United States officials as well as between Secretary of State Vance and myself.

In early December I met with senior U.S. officials in Paris to discuss, among other things, economic sanctions against Iran. Indeed, as a result of those meetings, then prime minister Clark privately communicated a set of guidelines to be followed by Canadian banks regarding banking business with Iran. We had also begun other sanctions of an economic nature, some of which are referred to in the legislation before us today.

[Translation]

Because we are neighbours to the United States, we Canadians are aware of the feelings the hostage situation in Iran has aroused among Americans. That is why Canada has acted so promptly to establish various organizations which would help liberate the hostages. Moreover, it was natural that the Clark government readily agreed to lodge the six American diplomats in our embassy in Tehran.

I am proud of the measures taken by the Progressive Conservative government. Our government spared no effort to remedy this shocking incident of hostage-taking in Tehran. My party still strongly supports this approach.

• (1740)

[English]

Because Canadians understand, more than any other nation, the enormity of feeling that the hostage situation in Iran has aroused in the American people; because we were so deeply involved in urging various international organizations to seek an earlier resolution to this situation; and because of our overriding concern for the safety of the six Americans and our own personnel in the Canadian embassy in Tehran, it was only natural that, as Canada's foreign minister, I went to New York on December 30 to urge the Security Council to adopt the American resolution calling for the release of the hostages, and if that was not forthcoming, to impose economic sanctions against Iran. This was perhaps not the normal thing to do, given that Canada is not a member of the Security Council at present, but I felt that the circumstances compelled my personal intervention.

In calling for the implementation of economic sanctions, I stated at that Security Council meeting that such action would be "a powerful, positive and peaceful step to help resolve this intolerable situation which threatens the peace, order and good governance of the world".

That American resolution, the text of which is substantially the same as the legislation before us today, was subsequently vetoed by the Soviet Union in the Security Council on January

13. Certainly, sir, if these measures were warranted in January, they are even more deserving of our support six months later, with the American diplomats still being held as hostages.

Securing international support for economic sanctions against Iran has not been easy—indeed their total effectiveness is not assured even after months of consultation. But then nothing about the international effort to free the hostages has been easy; it has involved a very real element of personal risk, delicate diplomacy, and considerable danger, for individuals and countries. That was true when the Canadian government gave refuge to the American diplomats, when we communicated guidelines to the banks, when we spoke out in international forums. But I am very proud of the steps taken by the government of which I was a member. In the face of this outrageous violation of international law in Iran, we did what we could to help resolve the situation. And my party continues to support, and strongly support, that approach and the bill that is before us today.

There is, however, one aspect of this entire episode which has deeply troubled me and many other Canadians, and it concerns the behaviour of the then leader of the opposition, the right hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau). In his role as a Privy Councillor and as leader of the official opposition, he was informed shortly after the decision had been taken to provide sanctuary to the six American diplomats, of this secret and very delicate mission. Presumably he would have understood the danger to these American diplomats if their whereabouts had become known. Presumably he would have recognized the difficult balancing act the government was involved in, in which we were making every effort in various international organizations to seek a resolution of this crisis, including by means of sanctions, but doing it in such a way that would not endanger the lives of our Canadian personnel in Tehran or the safety of those Americans we sought to protect.

And yet day after day, in a partisan fashion, the right hon. member sought to embarrass the government over what he portrayed as the government's lack of action and lack of support for American efforts to release the hostages. As he said to me on November 27, during question period in the House of Commons, "we will soon be condemning this government if it continues to take such standoffish attitudes". Yet he knew better, he was one of the very few to be privy to what was taking place at our embassy in Tehran. I say, sir, that his conduct throughout this period was one of the most cynical displays of opportunism and political gamesmanship this House has ever witnessed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have read in the past few days that the Iranian acting ambassador to Canada has stated that if Canada's relations with Iran are to improve, we will have to apologize to Iran for helping in the escape of the U.S. diplomats. I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that most Canadians find that piece of gratuitous advice downright insulting.

The rescue operation carried out by Ambassador Taylor and other Canadians, both in Tehran and in Ottawa, is a matter of great national pride. We certainly have no apologies for compassion, for bravery, and for plain good neighbourliness. Our pride, however, is tempered by the fact that there still remain 52 American diplomats in Iran. It is our hope that the sanctions for which this bill provides will be an effective instrument in securing their freedom. To this end, my party supports the bill before us today.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we deeply regret the need for this bill. We have some concerns about it, but we are prepared to give it our support. That includes our willingness, at the conclusion of the second reading debate, that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole so that it can be dealt with through all stages before we rise at six o'clock. I said that we have some misgivings or concerns about the bill, but it is a fact, as stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), that our world is in a bad way if the traditional immunities enjoyed by diplomatic personnel in the countries of this world are violated or diminished, and we have to give very serious consideration to what has developed because of the hostage-taking incident in Iran.

We join with others in expressing our concern for the people of the United States in the long trial they are going through with respect to this matter. We earnestly hope that some time very soon it will be resolved. We are also concerned that there are so many incidents affecting diplomatic personnel in other parts of the world. As I say, we join with others in this House in the belief that this is a matter which deserves very serious consideration.

I said that we have some concerns. I do not intend to spell or spin them out. We note that boycotting by certain other nations is sometimes not carried out very effectively. We know of boycotts which are there on paper but are violated in various ways known to us all. We sometimes wonder whether economic boycotts have any effect in resolving a situation, whether they do anything more than stiffen the spine of those who are boycotted. Yet we are prepared to admit that this situation is so serious that we have to place in the hands of the government the power contained in this bill if the government feels that such power has to be used. I must also say we wish that in circumstances like this our friendly neighbour to the south, the United States, would do a little more consulting before it takes positions and initiates actions which it expects us to follow—this is a view which is understood, I think, by most observers of international relations.

Nevertheless, having said these things, we recognize that the kind of power contained in this bill is something the government should have, and for that reason we are prepared to support the measure.

The main reason this bill is necessary is, of course, because of the hostages being held in Tehran and elsewhere. The other immediate reason was the veto on January 13 by the Soviet Union of the resolution which had been presented to the United Nations Security Council. Had that resolution been passed, this action today would not have been necessary. As the minister has said, this bill simply places the Canadian government in the position in which it would have found itself had that resolution passed. I commend the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the government of which he is a member, on recognizing how serious a matter this is.

This is a temporary piece of legislation. I notice it is to be in effect for one year from the time it is given royal assent, unless it is extended, but that it cannot be extended longer than for a further year. There are also limitations with regard to actions which can be taken under the bill. The government has to lay its proposals before Parliament, and Parliament has the opportunity to approve or negate them as it wishes. These precautions having been taken with respect to a serious operation, we are prepared to support the bill through all its stages this afternoon.

Mr. MacGuigan: Just another sentence. I feel that since the critic opposite has introduced a somewhat partisan note I shall make a brief comment—

Mr. Knowles: "If he speaks now—"

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I have to advise the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), that if he speaks now he will be closing the debate at this stage.

Mr. Stollery: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, when you refer to closing the debate at this stage, does it mean we shall not move on to the report stage this afternoon?

An hon. Member: Report stage?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): We can go into Committee of the Whole as requested by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his opening remarks. It was requested that the motion be changed to read "and referred to Committee of the Whole". Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacGuigan: When I suggested I would finish in a sentence or two, I meant that literally. I merely want to say that since the then leader of the opposition had certain knowledge secretly, he nevertheless had to behave publicly to ask the questions which those in his own party and those in the public rightly and reasonably expected to be put to the government. Even looked at objectively, apart from that consideration, the fact that the government of the day was rightly sheltering the American hostages doesn't mean that they could not also have been engaged in some alliance-related activity.

Miss MacDonald: They were.

Mr. MacGuigan: The hon. member says "They were."

Miss MacDonald: And I detailed them.

Mr. MacGuigan: Well, that is a possible interpretation. But I think the people gave their final judgment on this and many other issues on February 18.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Miss MacDonald: Forget the ending.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Ethier in the chair.

On Clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Stollery: I have a question or two to ask, Mr. Chairman. My first question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs at this stage of the bill has to do with a matter which has troubled me—possibly he can allay my concerns. They have to do with the practical effects of this bill on the well-being of the hostages—their effect on the freeing of the hostages.

Are we looking at a bill which involves a question of principle, are we talking about the principle of supporting the Americans, or are we talking about a bill which is likely to have a practical effect in relation to the freeing of the hostages? Personally, I am interested in freeing the hostages and I believe this should be foremost in the thoughts of hon. members when they address the internal problems of Iran. We have read a great deal about these problems in the press. There are many. For some time it has been questionable whether even the elected government controls the government or whether it is controlled by the Ayatollah movement. What practical effect will the imposition of sanctions have on the well-being of the hostages? Might it not be argued that sanctions will have no practical effect because we do so little trade with Iran anyway, and that the imposition of sanctions might, indeed, be harmful to the well-being of the hostages who are being held in various parts of that country?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, by no stretch of the imagination could these sanctions hurt the hostages. This action is similar to that which has already been taken by members of the European Economic Community. If it was going to hurt the hostages it would have done so in that case as well. It will help in the sense that it puts some pressure on Iran, although not very much in our case; in our case the primary effect of the legislation is one of principle and of symbolism as I explained in my address.

Mr. Stollery: I have another question, Mr. Chairman. When we talk about sanctions I am more interested in things which have a practical effect, measures which in fact are likely to do something to assist in the freeing of the hostages, something which, to my mind, is a serious business, not just because of the incident in Tehran. There was the recent example in Columbia or Venezuela. There has been a series of such incidents. Quite frankly, I am not sure whether I am interested in resolutions which seem to me to be public relations gestures, if I might be candid about it, and I would like to know if the government is contemplating something which would have some practical effect on the status of the hostages in Iran.

● (1800)

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, the government is not contemplating other measures beyond those taken and those in this bill. Perhaps the hon. member has a different view of this legislation from others in the House, in which case he has his usual remedy.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock the committee—

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if I am wrong, but I think there is an agreement, or there should be an agreement, that Your Honour does not see the clock.

Mr. Huntington: Tell the guy behind you.

Mr. Pinard: I am not blaming the opposition. I am not blaming anybody. I am just asking if there is agreement that Your Honour does not see the clock.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think there would be agreement that we not see the clock, and I hope we can get through the balance of this bill this evening. I hope that would convenience the House and that we could do that.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Stollery: That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. Knowles: Since when are you the member for Winnipeg North Centre?

Mr. Stollery: I am a member of this House, and I have the same rights—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, since you did call on me, may I say that as we all know, there was no House order about it, but there was an agreement or understanding that we would finish this bill before we rise. I believe the government House leader has the right to expect that that will be carried out. That is so, as far as we on this side are concerned.

The Deputy Chairman: We will therefore not see the clock and carry on with the legislation. Was the hon. member for Spadina seeking the floor?

Mr. Stollery: I will go back to my line of questioning, Mr. Chairman. In the interests of passing this bill today I suppose we are not seeing the clock at six o'clock, although it does strike me that that requires unanimous consent.

I would like to put once more to the minister clearly, and I appreciate the fact that the bill was only brought to us—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I thought we had received unanimous consent. Is the hon. member saying he is not giving his consent that we not see the clock?

Mr. MacGuigan: You have already called that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Huntington: We talked about an agreement.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 7—Tabling in Parliament.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, may I just say, in accordance with some of the remarks I made at second reading, that we welcome the fact that clauses 7, 8 and 9 are in this bill.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 8 and 9 agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being after 6 p.m., the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(2).

At 6.05 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

METRIC CONVERSION

IMPLEMENTATION OF METRIC SYSTEM—REQUEST COMMISSION BE ABOLISHED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to place before this House a matter of urgent and pressing importance. Due to the extreme antipathy of more and more Canadians toward the government's method, to date, of implementing the metric system, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the government, if nothing else, abolish the Metric Commission and enter into a voluntary system, supported by Industry, Trade and Commerce, if necessary, thereby restoring the faith of a large number of Canadians in the democratic system of government, not to mention their rights.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

MOOSE JAW—REQUEST GRAIN ELEVATOR REMAIN IN SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the uncertainty about the future of the Canadian government elevator at Moose Jaw and the effect this has on employees, and in view of the importance of this facility to the grain handling and transportation system, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the Minister of Agriculture give a firm commitment that the said terminal will remain in service as an integral part of the grain handling and transportation system, and under no circumstances will he consider mothballing the facility.

Madam Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TOBACCO FARMERS—EXEMPTION FROM TAX INCREASE ON PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, I rise, under the terms of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that tobacco exports exceed $1 billion annually, and that the tobacco industry suffered disastrous setbacks last year because of blue mould, and considering that tobacco farmers are extensive users of petroleum products in greenhouse operations, in the field, planting, cultivating, spraying and irrigating, as well as in kiln-curing of the leaves, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That in order to ensure the viability of the industry in Canada, the government take steps to exempt tobacco farmers from the recent tax increase on petroleum products for the 1980 crop year.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

STATUS OF WOMEN

EQUALITY FOR WOMEN IN ALL PHASES OF THE ECONOMY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), I move:

That this House notes that today in Copenhagen, Canada is signing the United Nations Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women, and this House therefore calls on the government to take affirmative action to establish equality for women in all phases of our economy, in employment opportunities, access to adequate training and upgrading, the provision of adequate daycare facilities, equal pay for work of equal value, a guaranteed level of income for women below pension age, and equality between men and women in all pension plans.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

P.E.I.—SERVICING OF FISHERMEN'S LIFE RAFTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that my motion of May 16, requesting the minister to re-establish the service depot for life rafts in Prince Edward Island, has generated the consideration of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and that a service depot may soon become a reality, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That this House request the Minister of Transport to extend the deadline for certification of life rafts so that no fisherman from Prince Edward Island will be forced to ship his life raft out of the province, at additional expense, for servicing when soon a servicing facility will be available on the Island.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION FOR GASPEREAU FISHERMEN ON SAINT JOHN RIVER SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The trapnet gaspereau fishermen on the Saint John River system had a disastrous year: their catch was barely one-third of what it normally is.

The disaster was compounded by the fact that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) would not allow the fishermen to fish the normal duration of their season, despite representations to him on their behalf. This is in direct conflict with the image of compassion that the minister has attempted to create in this House. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass):

That this House instruct the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to arrange for suitable compensation for the families of fishermen for their loss of revenue caused by his indifferent attitude, so that they will not suffer undue hardships for the remainder of the year.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CALL FOR SUSPENSION OF MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO ANTI-DEMOCRATIC REGIMES IN CENTRAL AMERICA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to put a motion of urgent and pressing necessity before this House.

In light of the unanimous approval given yesterday with regard to the Iranian situation, in view of the almost daily reports of mounting political repression, violence and genocide in El Salvador, including the murder of journalists, priests and other workers—now reaching civil war proportions—and in view of Canada's lack of a clearly defined policy with respect to Central America at a time when our ally, the United States, is giving $5.7 million in military aid to the rightist-controlled junta in El Salvador, a junta which has no popular backing, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House directs the Government of Canada to put pressure on the U.S. government to suspend all military assistance to anti-democratic regimes in Central America; and, further, that this House responds to the urgent representations of the Guatemala Democratic Front Against Repression, and more recently the El Salvador Democratic Revolutionary Front, in their meetings with Canadian officials and parliamentarians by sending a fact-finding delegation to Central America as tangible evidence of our concern for human rights and improved relations with the peoples of that region.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSION

DEBATE ON FURTHER IMPLEMENTATION OF METRIC SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that I have received an extremely negative response from the constituents of Simcoe South to a questionnaire, plus a petition of protest regarding metric conversion, and in view of the fact that a group of Alberta citizens, because of the present government's ironclad position, has resorted to civil disobedience by changing metric road signs—costing tens of thousands of dollars—and their spokesman maintains he fought in World War II in order to preserve the freedom he feels is abrogated by the imposition of metric without approval by Parliament, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That no further implementation of the metric system be made in this country unless the system is adopted in conjunction with our major trading partner to the south and until the measure is fully debated in this House.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

CALL FOR INVESTIGATION INTO AFFAIRS OF PORTAGE VIEW INVESTMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I rise concerning the shocking and scandalous revelations that taxpayers are stuck with half a million dollars in unpaid rent by the financial failure of Portage View Investments' food and beverage operation in government-owned Hull Place du Portage complex, the restaurant company being headed, controlled and connected with high echelons of the Liberal Party of Canada. Therefore, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That an immediate parliamentary investigation be ordered into Portage View Investments, terms of reference to include why the company was given an untendered exclusive 20-year contract, connections with the company of both former Quebec Liberal premier Lesage's relative, Guy Lesage, treasurer of the Hull Liberal Association and Jack Pelech, former law partner of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, all connection with the matter on the part of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and formerly minister of labour, which department occupies the building; and, finally, thorough examination of whether this sordid incident is a direct result of Liberal government filthy, pork-barrel pay-off politics.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—DECISION ON CONSTRUCTION

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister, if I may have his attention. Am I correct in presuming that cabinet has now met and finally decided on the pipeline? If such is not the case, would the Prime Minister indicate when that decision would be made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, we did meet this morning but, as hon. members know, the House is meeting earlier than had been planned originally and we have not been able to finish the discussion on the pipeline. I am sorry. We hope to meet again.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot understand the disappointment of the Tories, since they have not expressed any views on this.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: We are planning to meet again at five o'clock this afternoon to discuss the matter further. In the meantime, if the parties in the House wish to make any representations, we would be happy to hear them.

Mr. Jarvis: To assist the Prime Minister and his cabinet colleagues, I will repeat the assurances made as long ago as 1977 with regard to this party's commitment to both the pre-build and the whole pipeline within the confines of the act, and the party's position on December 6 with respect to gas exports, despite the fact that it was called the greatest sell-out in Canadian history by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. That is the position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: How about that ironclad agreement?

Mr. Jarvis: As Senator Olson, who is the minister responsible, may not report in this House, will the Prime Minister indicate his intentions in so far as bringing this matter before the House is concerned, in a preliminary sense at least, and will he confirm that it will be a statement on motions and indicate when that statement might be made in the House?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I hope the hon. member will permit me to say that my understanding is that on behalf of his party he was supporting the pre-build. Did I understand correctly?

An hon. Member: As part of the whole pipeline.

Mr. Trudeau: As part of the whole pipeline, all the way—

An hon. Member: You were saying?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Madam Speaker, I am very happy to have that assurance.

An hon. Member: Ironclad guarantee.

Mr. Trudeau: That is right. I understand that many Albertans were distressed by the inability of the Conservative party to make up its mind, because I think we all know that the province of Alberta and the people of Alberta are—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I am afraid—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. There are too many interruptions for one answer and it is difficult for the right hon. the Prime Minister to give his answer. Could we have some order?

Mr. Jarvis: I have a final supplementary question, Madam Speaker. The Prime Minister may wish to take the opportunity to indicate when that statement on motions will be made in the House.

● (1120)

The Prime Minister will recall that on December 7, when he was leader of the opposition, he referred to the commitment his previous government had received from Mr. Schlesinger on behalf of the United States administration, being a commitment with respect to the whole pipeline, that commitment being a condition precedent to the pre-build.

Yesterday, the Prime Minister is reported to have said to a journalist that he was asking the United States administration for assurances and hoped they would be received in time for the cabinet meeting. Again, this was from the United States administration.

Has the Prime Minister received those assurances? Would be undertake to table both the current assurances and the Schlesinger commitment of some months ago in order that the House may see what differences, if any, are contained in the United States commitments?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, on the Schlesinger commitment, I think I made it clear at the time that the Secretary Schlesinger had told me verbally that we would not be wise to proceed with the pre-build if we did not have guarantees that the whole line would be built. So, I cannot table anything—that I can remember in my recollection—in writing from Secretary Schlesinger.

In so far as the other part of the question is concerned, yes, it is true we are trying to obtain at this moment further assurances which will permit us to make our mind up for the pre-build, if those assurances are forthcoming. Some of them are from the United States, and I must say that we are trying to get some view on this from the province of Saskatchewan.

We know that Alberta, the people of Alberta and the government, are strongly favourable to the pre-build. But over the past weeks we have not been able to reach anybody in a responsible position in Saskatchewan to say whether they—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —favour it or not.

Mr. Crosbie: Get on the telephone; try the telephone.

Mr. Trudeau: We have tried the telephone.

An hon. Member: Call collect.

Mr. Trudeau: Strange as it may seem—

Mr. Crosbie: Roy Romanow is in Toronto; Romanow is right in Toronto.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, there is a loud-mouth over there who is really not being very helpful; I believe he is from St. John's Newfoundland. He should be reminded that he is sitting here now. He is not in St. John's trying to shout across the way. Perhaps the people of the New Democratic Party can help us get in contact with the premier or some responsible minister, but that is the situation.

Mr. Jarvis: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister, likely inadvertently, did not indicate to us when that statement on motions will be made. Can he give us his target date for that?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, we are meeting again at five o'clock. I indicated if the decision is reached I would hope we would have the consent of the House to make a statement on motions at eight o'clock.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You have it.

Mr. Trudeau: I have not said whether or not we will be able to reach a decision at this cabinet meeting at five. But if we do, certainly I would undertake to ensure that a statement on motions would be made. It would be made in the other place by Senator Olson if the House is sitting.

Some hon. Members: Shameful.

Mr. Trudeau: But certainly I would be happy to consult with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to see that he would make a statement here in this place, too.

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—DIFFICULTY IN REACHING DECISION ON CONSTRUCTION—EXPORT TAX

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I wonder if he is able, without violating cabinet confidentiality, to enlighten the House as to what is the difficulty in arriving at this decision.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: For what reason is there this apparent delay in coming to a decision? Can the Prime Minister assure us that it is not because he would like to await announcing the decision until after we have left?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member is aware of the nature of the problem posed to us; it has been discussed in this House for the past several days.

The first question is: are the guarantees we have received for the pre-build sufficient and complete for the pre-build now? The second question is: do we have sufficient guarantees that the whole line can be built? Those are the terms on which condition 12 has been amended; I read them in the House yesterday.

● (1125)

As I have said many times, the government is weighing the evidence. We want to make sure that the pre-build is financed and that the whole line can be financed. This requires a certain amount of evidence, some of which we have obtained as of now from the U.S. Congress. Other parts and other assurances are still forthcoming, or hopefully will be forthcoming, and until we obtain them I do not want cabinet to reach a decision.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister indicated to the House yesterday that the economic benefit to Canada, the jobs that would be produced and the health of the junior Canadian gas producers, was very much on his mind as he contemplated this decision.

As he is aware, an equal and perhaps larger threat to the health of these junior gas producers is the possibility of a natural gas export tax. Could the Prime Minister give an assurance to the House now or, barring that, will he be assuring the producing provinces in the near future that the government is no longer contemplating a natural gas export tax? I am sure he would realize that granting the pre-build and imposing a natural gas export tax would neutralize the whole situation; in fact, it would result in a net loss to Canada as opposed to a benefit.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the hon. member is obviously expressing an opinion which is his own. The pre-builders themselves are not of this view. I can tell the House now there is no guarantee that there will never be an export tax. There has been one on oil since 1974, and we do not reject any possibility in advance. That is still to be negotiated and discussed. But if some of the pre-builders have the same confusion as the hon. member from Calgary, they had better tell us, because if they do not want to pre-build in the knowledge that this Canadian government might some day exercise its constitutional right to tax exports, they had better cease the discussion.

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—FINANCIAL GUARANTEES FOR PRE-BUILD SECTION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Diane Hall, vice-president of Foothills Pipe Lines, the company that is going to build the pre-build, had this to say, as reported in the Financial Times for July 14, 1980:

> But we don't know in the end whether there will have to be an American government guarantee for the Alaskan portion or some kind of other comforts provided to the lenders by the U.S. government—

My question is simply this: if a senior officer of the company building the pipeline does not know whether financing can be obtained, how on earth can cabinet seriously consider that financing can be obtained?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have not read the statement from which the hon. member has just quoted.

Mr. Crosbie: Obviously.

Mr. Lalonde: Secondly, the National Energy Board is the agency that has to be satisfied that financing is to be obtained for the pre-build section and can be obtained for the rest of the section.

Mr. Crosbie: Cabinet.

Mr. Lalonde: Then the National Energy Board's recommendation goes to cabinet and cabinet has to make the decision.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, my supplementary is for the same minister. Perhaps the minister read the Report on Business this morning; in particular I am referring to Thomas Kennedy's article from Calgary where he quotes the industry's reaction to the pre-build as follows:

> —said industry concern centered on substantially more gas exports "as soon as possible" and little else.

Kennedy further reported that the western producers said:

> —they "have a vested interest" in delaying construction of the rest of the $20 billion—

He is referring to the northern part of the project. The article continues:

> —in order to sell more of their surplus gas south of the border.

My question to the minister is this: where does it stop, in view of his off-oil policy, substituting gas for oil in eastern Canada? Where will he draw the line now, if he approves the pre-build, in exporting all that Canadian gas to the United States and, of course, losing it for eastern consumers?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member has indicated the condition: he said "if the pre-build is approved". So we have to carry the discussion on this hypothetical condition. Cabinet will make a decision, and until then I have to answer on the basis of a hypothesis.

● (1130)

As far as the question itself is concerned, I want to give the strongest assurance to the hon. member, the House and the country—

Mr. Crosbie: Ironclad?

Mr. Lalonde: Ironclad if you wish—that no export of gas will be approved by this government unless we have the complete assurance that there will be plenty of gas for all future Canadian needs under the formula which has been applied by the National Energy Board over the years. I hope that I have made it quite clear and that it is clearly understood.

As far as the Energy Board itself is concerned, and as the hon. member knows, it has approved and recommended the export of a certain quantity of gas which, in the view of the Energy Board, is a surplus reserve. This does not include Arctic gas. In the view of the Energy Board, this gas can be exported without endangering the needs of Canadians in the future.

Moreover, the Energy Board has indicated that this export would be approved only for seven years. They have required that the depreciation of the pipeline be made over that period so that nobody, but nobody, should expect that if the pre-build were to be approved, there would be more gas flowing through that pre-build after the expiry of the permit provided for by the Energy Board. That is quite clear, and that is the view of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer. I might point out that my constituents in British Columbia, a province which, incidentally, opposes the pre-build, remember the assurances which were made by his predecessor with regard to oil, that we would have lots of oil, but now we do not have lots of oil.

In the Toronto Star, July 16 issue, it was reported:

> Union leaders say they have rejected appeals from Northern Affairs minister John Munro to support the Alaska Highway gas pipeline because it would be a "sell-out" of Canadian natural resources and won't provide promised jobs.

What further assurances can the minister give the working people so that they will not have to settle for one-tenth of the loaf but, rather, they can have the whole loaf; in other words, they will have all the jobs in the whole project up to the north?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, there are two elements to this question. With regard to the first one, I would like to quote a telegram which was sent on behalf of the Ontario steel workers:

> On behalf of the 100,000 members of the United Steel Workers of America in Ontario, I wish to add my voice to that of director Len Stevens, district No. 3, of the United Steel Workers of America urging the government to proceed with the Foothills, Alaska highway natural gas pipeline.

It is signed by Stewart Cook, district No. 6 director of United Steel Workers of America in Ontario. I have telegrams from the American Federation of Labour and other unions. That is what I have to say in so far as the views of labour are concerned.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They voted against the pipeline.

Mr. Lalonde: With regard to the other point, I would like to again state quite clearly that this government would consider approving the Foothills pipeline only if it were convinced that it would proceed as a part, and only as a part, of the total Alaska gas pipeline. We do not support, we do not favour, and we will not support the notion or concept of a stand-alone pre-build project.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Now you are talking.

ENERGY

NEED FOR CONSERVATION PROGRAMS TO ACHIEVE ENERGY SECURITY

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns his responsibility to ensure energy security in this country.

As the minister, I am sure, is aware, yesterday the Ontario Economic Council indicated that our failure to deal with energy shortages in Canada could lead to, in their words, "open conflict between classes, regions and countries". I am sure the minister is also aware that the International Energy Agency report of a week ago indicated that Canada has the second worst record in the world with respect to developing good conservation programs.

Can the minister tell the House why his government has failed to develop good conservation programs so that we may decrease our reliance on foreign oil?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that the IEA report refers to the year 1979, when his government was in office.

Mr. Jarvis: Come on, Marc.

Mr. McDermid: Be careful now.

Mr. Crosbie: Be serious, Marc.

Mr. Lalonde: If hon. members will read the report, they will see the year to which it refers. Also, the IEA report examines only federal expenditures and compares them with other unitary countries in which expenditures are all concentrated within the national government. Under Canada's federal system, expenditures are divided between two levels of government at least.

An hon. Member: Pass the buck.

Mr. Lalonde: I would submit that it is quite inappropriate to compare the expenditures of a central government in a unitary state in which there is only one level of government with the expenditures of federal states such as Canada, and to try to make a comparison on the basis of such figures.

In so far as the other point raised by the hon. member is concerned, we have indicated consistently and recognized the need for the price of petroleum products to increase in this country. However, we disagree with the notion that they should be tied to international prices. This, by the way, is also the view of the Ontario government, as the hon. member well knows.

We believe that it is possible to achieve conservation and substitution without tying Canadian prices to international prices. While we recognize that prices must rise, much can be achieved by conservation and substitution without hurting the Canadian consumer to the extent of paying international prices.

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, most Canadians have heard words for years now. I expect that most Canadians are interested in knowing what programs the minister has in mind with respect to renewable energy resources, particularly in the area of solar energy. We would like to hear what initiatives and what month, or even perhaps what year, the minister might announce those programs. Words alone are not enough.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, we have already announced the intention to set up the alternative energy corporation as a subsidiary of Petro-Canada. The amount of $20 million has been assigned by Petro-Canada for that particular purpose. At the present time we are interviewing people to choose the person who will assume the function of chief executive officer of that corporation. I hope we will be able to make an announcement in that respect before long.

As far as broader measures are concerned which would go over and above those which have been announced by previous Liberal governments, I can advise the hon. member that we are working very actively on these measures. I hope that as soon as discussions on pricing are concluded we will be able to announce our program and plan of action, knowing what kind of resources the federal government can count on to fulfil its responsibilities in this particular area.

Mr. McDermid: Another Crown corporation; is that your answer to everything?

BUDGET FOR PROGRAM ON RENEWABLE RESOURCES

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since the United States is spending $1.163 billion on renewable projects, and over $80 billion on synthetic fuels this year alone, whereas Canada will spend only $13 million, or less than that for this year, does the minister not believe that he is over-concentrating his proposed off-oil program on non-renewable energies, and is he not embarrassed by the small budget which has been allocated this year, given the urgent Canadian needs in energy?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In a way, Madam Speaker, I would agree with the hon. member that the amount earmarked for the purpose he mentioned is indeed insufficient. I entirely agree with him. That is precisely why I hope we will obtain the support of all members of the House in the current negotiations on the review of the oil price so that the federal government, the national government, will be assured of all necessary resources to assume its responsibilities and thus help all Canadians attain energy self-sufficiency, so that Canada as a whole may quickly gain independence as far as oil products are concerned.

• (1140)

[English]

Mr. Schellenberger: A supplementary question, Madam Speaker. If we do not begin a reasonable solar program very quickly using the present technology, incentives and abilities that we have as Canadians, are we not just designating Canada as an importer of that technology and hardware, as was shown in a recent federal government PUSH program in Montreal where the solar panels could not be designated in Canada and had to be brought from the United States?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Once again, I will go further than my hon. colleague. His comments indicate the necessity for the Canadian government to have at its disposal much greater resources than in the past to assume its responsibilities in the energy field. Just the same, Canada is at the forefront, it is among the first countries for technology in the energy field, whether hydroelectricity or synthetic oil. Obviously, we also have excellent researchers working in the field of windmills and solar energy. It is clear, however, that we must grant much more support than ever to those energy sources. I would like to reassure the hon. member and tell him that this is truly part of our objectives. I thank him for his interest in that area.

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—FINANCIAL GUARANTEES—SWAPS OF NATURAL GAS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I do not think there is any question that the guaranteed financeability of the entire Alaska gas pipeline is the main concern of this party and, I think, of many members of this chamber.

The second main question, however, is in relation to the swaps of Alaska natural gas. Since the minister and the Prime Minister have indicated that a decision is going to be made in about five hours regarding the gas pipeline, I would remind the minister of something he said on December 6, 1979, when he was obviously stating his priority:

> Second, there must be an arrangement for swaps in this agreement with the United States so that down the line, if Canada were to need natural gas, we would be in a position to obtain natural gas from the Alaska gas pipeline—

I wonder if the minister could tell the House and all Canadians whether he has anything in writing that he will be taking to cabinet this afternoon which indicates there is an agreement for swaps of Alaskan natural gas for gas that we would export through the pre-build.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): First of all, Madam Speaker, I should like to note with interest the support of the hon. member's party for the concept of an Alaska gas pipeline, because I am advised that his party voted against the pipeline in 1978.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Lalonde: If this represents a change of policy for his party, it is a welcome change and it is not the first time that this has happened. We are happy to see them on our side.

As far as the question that he has raised concerning the swaps is concerned, if there were to be a decision in favour of the pre-build, I would intend to comment on this particular matter if I were called upon to make a statement.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I think a very interesting diversion was just attempted by the minister. I said that the prime concern of this party and of many members of this chamber is the guaranteed financeability of the entire gas pipeline. I think the whole question of credibility is something that people in this country would like to know about.

Not too long ago, one of the minister's predecessors said in this House that we had 900-odd years of oil and an endless supply of natural gas. I wonder if the minister would perhaps tell the other members of cabinet and members of this House, taking away the amount of natural gas that would be exported through the pre-build, how many years of surplus are known now in Canada of natural gas? How many years would it be before we would be in a negative position with no natural gas surplus?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I will be very happy to provide the exact figure to the hon. member in terms of an exact number of years. He has to realize, however, that the way it is being calculated at the present time by the Energy Board excludes the known and produceable reserves in the Arctic. I will have to ask the Energy Board, in order to answer his question—

An hon. Member: All frontier sources.

Mr. Lalonde: I will have to ask the Energy Board to provide me with the information for which he is asking. If it is possible to obtain it, I will be very happy to provide it to him in terms of the exact number of years.

Mr. Nielsen: You mean you don't know?

An hon. Member: How can you make a decision?

An hon. Member: I hope you know by five o'clock.

Mr. Lalonde: The NDP is again getting into a fit, I see, Madam Speaker. It is very simple. The formula that exists at the present time, and which the NEB applies, is a well-known one that is accessible to all hon. members. It is a formula that provides for at least 25 years of supply, I believe more like 29 or 30 years of guaranteed supply of known and accessible reserves, excluding the Arctic. That is the exact formula.

Mr. Nielsen: Sixty-six.

Mr. Lalonde: The hon. members asked a question of a more general nature—of all gas, how much we have.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lalonde: I say the NEB has not calculated that to my knowledge, but I will inquire and give him the exact answer as soon as I have the information. The cabinet has the information in terms of the known reserves of—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF COAL INDUSTRY IN NEW BRUNSWICK AND NOVA SCOTIA—POLLUTION CONTROL

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the commitment made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to the House a couple of weeks ago to have the government assist in the development of the coal industry in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, can the minister tell the House how much money his department has earmarked, or how much money the government has earmarked, for pollution control of potential coal-using facilities, and how quickly the government will move in implementing controls which will ensure an orderly transition to coal-utilizing facilities?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, this question is being examined and reviewed at the present time. I would have to give the same answer to this question as I gave to the previous one concerning renewable energy: that is, we are waiting for the conclusion of our discussions on energy pricing before we will be in a position to know how much money will be available to the federal government to achieve the kind of purpose to which the hon. member is referring. Once this has been done, we will be able to let the house and the country know in a short time how much money will be available.

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question deals with the estimation that the development of the coal industry in some parts of the east will triple sulphur emissions and the subsequent effects of acid rain.

The minister's colleague, the Minister of the Environment, lauded the Tory minister of the environment in Ontario as being courageous for his bold strides in implementing sanctions against Inco. Surely the minister does not want to be known in this House as being chicken, so I ask him to be more specific. Can he be more specific on dollars, dates and deadlines in order to ensure the growth of the coal industry in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in an acceptable environmental fashion?

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, my hon. friend has referred to the laudatory comments that my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, addressed to the environment minister of the province of Ontario. I wish he were in a position to make the same laudatory comment vis-à-vis the environment minister of the province of Nova Scotia, whom my hon. friend knows very well.

Obviously, the provinces have a big role to play in this respect and we are in consultation with them. The hon. member knows that as far as this type of pollution control itself is concerned, the provinces have a big role to play. As I indicated, we are examining the whole question at the present time in terms of how much money would be available out of a new oil pricing agreement. After that, we will be able to announce how much money is available to help the relevant provinces fulfil their responsibilities.

AGRICULTURE

ALLOCATION OF PETROLEUM FUELS TO AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY—PRODUCTION OF GASOHOL

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. The minister will be aware that last summer the Energy Supplies Allocation Board, in their revised manual on petroleum fuels allocation, removed agriculture from the top priority classification, which was the critical classification, and put it in the essential classification.

I should like to know from the minister how these priorities are determined. I would also ask him to use his persuasive powers, which we all agree are formidable, to see that agriculture is put back in the top priority classification list for agricultural usage across the country.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we have done some checking. If the information that has been given to me is correct, there has never been any official documentation or recommendation given to the government that that position should be changed by the Energy Supplies Allocation Board.

I cannot say any more. That is a board that can make recommendations to the government. The government can either accept or not accept their suggestions. If the information I have is correct, it has never been submitted to the government.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, I have a question along the same lines for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It has to do with the announcement made about a month ago by Mohawk Oil that they would begin production in Canada, for the first time, of gasohol. This was accomplished largely by the province of Manitoba exempting the production of ethyl alcohol from some provincial taxes. Would the minister consider the same kind of removal of the 7 per cent excise tax from the production of alcohol, to encourage the production and thereby help us to become self-sufficient in liquid, portable fuels in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I will be very happy to take under advisement the suggestion made by the hon. member. In fact, I can tell him that we are reviewing this whole situation of the new energy policy that we are developing.

I assume, hope and expect, that the task force which has been set up by this Parliament under the able leadership of the hon. member for Pontiac, I believe, will examine this question and that we will benefit from the advice that this task force will bring to us, since it would represent the views of all parties in this House.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED PROBLEMS OF SALARIES AT SAINTE-ANNE-DE-BELLEVUE, QUEBEC

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Several of my electors have informed me of the difficulties they have experienced with regard to the services at the veterans' hospital in Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue. The patients in that institution have been deprived of basic care due to staff shortages. It seems that nurses working in federal institutions are earning less than their counterparts in other institutions. Can the President of the Treasury Board tell the House whether he has taken steps to remedy the situation?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for her question. We are dealing here with a rather difficult situation which stems from the regional inequalities that exist throughout Canada with regard to nurses who work for the federal government.

[English]

I would like to assure hon. members that we are looking into the situation. There is a mediator.

Mr. Stevens: You are studying everything.

Mr. Johnston: We are doing everything. Unfortunately, my predecessor offered a mandate of 8 per cent to the people who were 40 per cent behind the market.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Johnston: I would just like to add that, in keeping with our philosophy of ensuring that people in the public service are paid on a basis comparable to those in the private sector, we will be making a settlement which may be perceived as being more generous than usual, but it will be in order to meet that philosophy of comparability across this country.

Mr. Stevens: Another CUPW.

Mr. Johnston: I might add, Madam Speaker—

[Translation]

—that those nurses are working under extremely difficult conditions, for instance, in isolated areas. There is a problem, and we shall solve it soon, equitably and fairly.

ENERGY

PROGRAM TO DEVELOP SOURCES ALTERNATE TO OIL

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the Speech from the Throne the government promised steps to encourage more rapid substitution from oil to other energy sources in order to substantially reduce the dependence which we have on oil. Also, we were promised policies to encourage consumers to switch from oil to natural gas, electricity or some other form of alternate energy.

Other members and I have had requests from industry and consumers to make that switch easier. They want the policy. They want the steps. Can the minister tell this House what the government is doing now, today, to make those promises come true with regard to alternate energy sources and the ability to switch from oil to other sources?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the first step has been taken. Very soon after the appointment of this government, it was announced that accessibility to natural gas would be extended east of Montreal, at least as far as Quebec City, with branch lines covering the rest of the province of Quebec.

[Translation]

As for the other measures to be announced, as I have said, we have already announced that the government has approved the extension of the natural gas pipeline to Quebec City in order to serve the Quebec population. We have also indicated that the extension of the natural gas pipeline to the Maritimes remains a top priority of the present government. We are also in the process of studying several other measures which should be announced in the near future, provided we have been able to reach an agreement on oil prices, which will represent increased revenues for the federal government and enable it to give Canadian consumers the help they need to speed up the switch from oil to other forms of energy.

HOUSING

ENCOURAGEMENT OF HIGHER STANDARDS OF HOME INSULATION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the minister of housing. Summer and fall are high activity periods for home insulation. In the Speech from the Throne, promises were made. What measures has the government taken to encourage the higher standards of home insulation that were talked about in the Speech from the Throne? Second, when will the government announce the improvements promised to the existing home insulation program?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the president of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation recently asked for support of the government in additional funding for insulation purposes to ensure that at least the present levels of funding are continued for that program. Second, in the area of standards generally, I indicated in a response earlier that the Canadian Standards Association hopes by the end of this month to have completed a review on the whole question of the standards, qualifications, adequacy, etc., and that report I think will be coming shortly.

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—CONSTRUCTION OF ALASKA SECTION—DEBATE THEREON

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. It concerns the natural gas sell-out. Since we have no more guarantees today than we had in 1978, and since apparently nothing exists in writing from the United States to guarantee the matters of swaps, completion date, or financing, can the minister, first, tell the House when the Alaskan section will be built? Has he anything in writing?

Finally, since this is a matter of extreme importance to the people of Canada, and since there is some question about the prudence of proceeding at this point, can the Prime Minister assure this House that he will come before the people's elected representatives and discuss this major issue in a very, very serious way, and not do it in a manner which he is entitled to do by the law but would be imprudent to proceed with—in fact, contemptuous to proceed in that way.

● (1200)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I cannot speak for the other side of the House, but as far as we on this side are concerned we have been doing exactly what the hon. member suggests, discussing it in a very serious way both in the House and in cabinet, and by making sure that every piece of evidence, both pro and con, is studied with care.

REQUEST THAT NORTHERN PIPELINE ACT BE AMENDED

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Normally, when something of this magnitude is done, there is an amending bill. Will the Prime Minister consider bringing in an amending bill?

Since there is a real problem in this country over this project, having to do with future energy supplies, the price of energy, jobs and the economy in general, has the Prime Minister considered, instead of building this line to the United States, using the same amount of financing to extend the pipeline to serve the people of Atlantic Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker. The minister and the government have indicated several times that it is one of its policies to extend the pipeline from Quebec City, the section which is to be built now, to the maritimes. But for that we need the permission and co-operation of the maritime provinces, and we have to make sure that the markets are there and that they exist. This is the discussion which is going on now.

As the hon. member knows, the National Energy Board has been seized with an application to proceed with the Quebec and maritimes pipeline and the evidence is being gathered now. We are as anxious as any party in this House to see that that line is built through to the Atlantic, but we need the co-operation of the provinces and we need the authority of the National Energy Board giving us the assurance that it can be financed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FULTON—ANSWER OF MINISTER OF ENERGY DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege concerns the Minister of Energy. In response to my supplementary question, he stated that the New Democratic Party had voted against the construction of the northern pipeline. I would quote from page 4123 of Hansard for April 4, 1978, where Mr. Cyril Symes said:

I want to reiterate the stand of the New Democratic Party in favour of the building of the northern gas pipeline, the Alcan pipeline as it is called.

Our concerns and, indeed, our reasons for voting against the bill that we have before us—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: He continued:

—are that we feel it is inadequate and it does not represent the true interests of Canadians and Canadian companies.

An hon. Member: You opposed it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Message from the Senate

Madam Speaker: Order. I am in the habit of listening to what the member has to say when he raises a question of privilege. I cannot rule upon it before I have listened to it. That is what I was doing. I would ask the hon. member to be brief, as he usually is, and to try to indicate to me how his question of privilege arises.

Mr. Lalonde: There is none.

Mr. Fulton: The point I was trying to make was that the Minister of Energy indicated that the New Democratic Party was opposed to the construction of the pipeline, which is not true. What I said in my question to the minister was that our prime concern was the financial viability of the entire line.

Madam Speaker: I understand very well that the hon. member wished to get some corrections on the record, but obviously this does not constitute a question of privilege. Rather, it is a grievance he is expressing. He has done this by way of a question of privilege, which he knows is not the proper way to indicate that he is not in agreement with the answer he received from the minister.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, would the government House leader tell us about the business he intends to bring before the House for today and tomorrow? We know that today is to be devoted to the throne speech debate, of course, but I am thinking more of tomorrow.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, tomorrow we intend to introduce the motion for the adjournment of the House. If there is no debate or if the motion is agreed to, we shall adjourn as soon as it is adopted.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS APPENDED TO "HANSARD"

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) just now tabled a number of agreements between Canada and foreign countries. I wonder if at least a list of those agreements which are tabled might be appended to today's Hansard, so that there is a record of what agreements there are, and with what countries.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): That certainly would be agreeable, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Is it agreed that they be tabled and appended to today's Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It is so ordered.

HUMAN RIGHTS

DOCUMENT ON RECOGNITION OF EQUAL RIGHTS FOR INDIAN WOMEN APPENDED TO "HANSARD"

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise on a similar point of order. In view of the general interest in the declaration just tabled by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette), I wonder if it could be agreed that it also be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

Madam Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It is ordered to be appended.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McKINNON—COMMITTEE STUDY OF NORAD AGREEMENT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It was my understanding that today we were going to have a request to refer the matter of the NORAD renewal to committee.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. We will come back to the hon. member's point of order later. We were dealing with another matter. I will come back to the hon. member later for orderly proceedings.

POST OFFICE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I understand it is difficult for Parliament to discuss fully this legislation at this moment, but I had discussions with both House leaders of the opposition parties who assured me of their co-operation to facilitate the passage of this bill in the fall.

Thus I hope hon. members on both sides of the House will take advantage of the summer to familiarize themselves with this legislation and that very soon we will have a Crown Post Corporation in Canada.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I think it is a case where all parties of the House of Commons have expressed themselves in favour of the principle of the Post Office being made into a Crown corporation, which I gather is the intent of the bill introduced today.

As the minister said, we have not had an opportunity to look at the details of this bill, which I have heard described at least as being somewhat different from the bill which was put forward by our government. I want to assure the minister that there will be no untoward debate, but any binding, ironclad commitment—to use a phrase that has become famous in the House—would have to await the study of the bill. I hope that is of some assurance to him.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, we are happy to give the same assurance. We hope that this bill can be dealt with as soon as possible.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McKINNON—COMMITTEE STUDY OF NORAD AGREEMENT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I rise on the point of order on which I have already spoken. I wonder if the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) has had time to think about it, and could tell me about item No. 4, on page 9 under government business on the order paper?

My understanding is that it was to be brought forward today. If we do not settle it before the adjournment, it will deprive us of an opportunity to do some planning in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to reconsider this NORAD agreement.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if I can have agreement to have this motion passed without debate today, I would be glad to propose it. If there is no such agreement today, I will be glad to speak to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) and to the hon. member and try to reach some kind of agreement for tomorrow, if possible. But I cannot give a guarantee. If I can have the assurance that there will be no debate at all, there would be no problem and the motion could be passed by this House.

Mr. McKinnon: I can give the President of the Privy Council the assurance, on behalf of our party, that five minutes will be all that is required for debate of this item.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I will speak to the Minister of National Defence. I would also like to give him a chance to say a word if he is here tomorrow. He is not here today, so obviously the item cannot be brought forward today.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I wonder whether item No. 15, at page 10 of today's order paper, standing in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), is to be brought forward today.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): The motion is in the name of the Prime Minister. I think it would be preferable if we were to wait until tomorrow. It is certainly our intention to introduce this motion before the summer break, so obviously it will have to be brought forward tomorrow. If the Prime Minister is not here tomorrow, I will see to it that somebody else brings it forward.

● (1230)

I should like to say that obviously this will be done if there is agreement that there will be no debate at all. I do not expect any debate on this kind of motion.

Madam Speaker: With the permission of the House, we will proceed to questions on the order paper.

CANADIAN MINT—ISSUANCE OF PAPER MONEY

Question No. 72—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In each of the past five years, what value, by denomination, of paper money was issued by the Mint and what was the over-all total for the years?

2. What was the cost of production?

3. What was the face value of paper money withdrawn from circulation and destroyed?

4. What is the present estimate in circulation of (a) $1 bills (b) $2 bills (c) $5 bills (d) $10 bills (e) $20 bills (f) $50 bills (g) $100 bills (h) $1,000 bills?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State, Finance): 1. The Royal Canadian Mint is not responsible for the issuing of paper money in Canada. Notes issued by the Bank of Canada as at December 31, in each year, were as follows (thousands of dollars):

Denomination	1975	1976	1977	1978	1979
$1	216,747	220,112	234,887	245,366	257,372

$50	485,584	580,126	678,710	800,487	931,895
$100	1,451,646	1,587,884	1,816,263	2,114,160	2,382,804
$500	25	25	24	24	24
$1000	163,141	186,683	212,648	256,575	289,321
Total	7,270,166	7,800,166	8,625,667	9,526,825	10,301,873

2. Bank note costs in each of the past five years follows: (thousands of dollars)

1975	1976	1977	1978	1979
12,126	14,948	14,043	15,243	18,685

3. The value of paper money withdrawn in each of the past five years follows: (thousands of dollars)

1975	1976	1977	1978	1979
2,270,587	2,937,564	3,101,647	3,098,283	3,354,406

4. The estimate of the number of notes in circulation as at December 31, 1979, by denomination, follows: (thousands)

$1	257,372
$2	99,474
$5	79,512
$10	128,207
$20	228,092
$50	18,638
$100	23,828
$1000	289

PROPERTY—YORK STREET—OTTAWA

Question No. 97—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What has been the total cost to the taxpayer, of the government-owned property at 10-12-18 York Street, in connection with the building, including acquisition, architects' fees, renovations, purchasing of contents and all other items whatsoever?

2. Does the National Capital Commission plan to rent the premises to Canterbury Foods Limited of Toronto, Ontario, to operate a restaurant known as the Crock and Block and, if so, what are all of the important terms of the proposed lease?

3. Will Canterbury Foods Limited pay the government for approximately $50,000 worth of foreign wines purchased by the government from public funds for use by the originally planned lessee, By-York Developments Ltd. and (a) if so, what will be the purchase price (b) if not, what does the government plan to do with the wine and has any disposal of wine to this date been in accordance with the regulations of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario?

4. Did the arrangements for leasing to By-York Developments Ltd. cease and, if so, what is the total amount of additional funds put into the project by the National Capital Commission before the rental to Canterbury Foods Limited?

5. With respect to approximately $50,000 of public expenditure on antiques to be placed at the restaurant, will these be retained under government ownership and, if not, will they be sold to the lessee and, if so, for what amount?

6. What is the estimated time that it will take the NCC to recover from a new lessee, all public funds spent to date or still to be spent, on this venture?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): 1. $5,880,291.

2. A portion of the premises has been rented to Canterbury Foods Limited of Toronto, for the operation of a restaurant. The lease is for 40 years including the original term of 10 years and two (2) lease renewal options of 10 and 20 years. The annual rent is $100,000 plus percentage rents on gross revenue in excess of $2.5 million.

3. The successful tenderer, Canterbury Foods Limited, will not be purchasing the wine from the commission. Since the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario had informed the commission that it could not sell the wine to any other licensee or private individual, and that an intergovernmental transfer of the wine would be acceptable to the board, the National Capital Commission made arrangements to dispose of the wine to other federal government departments and agencies. The wine has now been fully disposed of to other federal government departments.

4. Yes. The arrangements for leasing to By-York Development did cease. To date, $188,779 has been spent by the commission to finish the common and public areas of the building. It is anticipated that further expenditures of $7,000 will be required.

5. The artifacts placed at and incorporated in the construction of the leased premises will be retained under government ownership and will not be sold to the lessee.

6. At this time it is not possible to estimate the date of recovery as only part of the building has been leased.

CURRENCY IN CIRCULATION

Question No. 107—Mr. McKenzie:

What is the total amount of cash in circulation in Canada outside of banks and other financial institutions?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): As at March 31, 1980, the amount of currency circulating outside banks was $9,077 million, consisting of $8,120 million of Bank of Canada notes and $957 million of coin. Currency holdings of other financial institutions are not available and are included in the figures provided above.

EASTERN ONTARIO SUBSIDIARY AGREEMENT—FUNDS FOR LEEDS-GRENVILLE

Question No. 151—Mr. Cossitt:

Since December 12, 1979, under the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement, what was the total amount of funds committed to date and what is the total amount under consideration for the Constituency of Leeds-Grenville?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: From December 20, 1979, to April 14, 1980, a total of $5,904,538 was committed by the federal and Ontario governments under the various program areas of the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement.

There is at this time no authorization of funds in support of projects specific to the Leeds-Grenville constituency. However, a number of municipal outlet drainage projects are under consideration for near future implementation in the constituency area. It is estimated that the total cost of these drains during the 1980-81 fiscal year could amount to approximately $125,000.

INTERNATIONAL DEBT—FOREIGN BORROWING

Question No. 246—Mr. Herbert:

1. In each of the past five years, what was the net increase in foreign borrowing of (a) the government (b) the provincial governments and their agencies (c) the municipalities (d) Canadian companies?

2. As a percentage of the gross national product, what was the country's net international debt (a) in 1966 (b) for the latest date for which such information is available?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports: 1. The net increase of foreign borrowing in each of the past five years by sector is shown in the accompanying table.

Sector	1975	1976	1977	1978	1979
			($ billions)
(a) Government of Canada	0.2	0.8	0.5	4.0	0.6
(b) Provincial governments and their agencies	3.1	4.9	2.9	2.4	1.6
(c) Municipalities	0.4	0.7	0.6	0	0
(d) Canadian companies (non bank)	1.7	4.2	2.2	2.0	3.1

2. As a percentage of the gross national product the country's net international debt was:

(a) in 1966—38.8 per cent (b) in 1979—26.5 per cent.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COSSITT—ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS UNANSWERED

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact the House will be adjourning shortly for the summer, presumably tomorrow, I think it is in order for me to raise this particular point of order in regard to four unanswered questions.

I know the parliamentary secretary and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) are well aware that there are those of us on this side of the House who are not very happy, as far as speed is concerned, about the way certain questions have been answered by the government. Referring to questions I have on the order paper, I should like to mention four specific questions. They get worse as they go along, timewise.

First, question No. 28 concerns certain tendering policies of Canadian National Railways. As of this day, the question has been on the order paper for two years and 20 days. In my opinion, it is inexcusable that it has not been answered.

I have raised question No. 15 as a point of order on at least five other occasions. It has been on the order paper, as of today, three years and 17 days. I think it has come to the point where the matter has become utterly ridiculous.

Briefly, the question deals with Martin Goldfarb and Goldfarb Consultants Limited who, of course, work for the Liberal party. The question concerns what they have received from the government in the way of government contracts over a specifically mentioned period of time. I have been told and told this will be answered soon. It is always "soon", but soon never comes. After three years and 17 days, I think I am safe in assuming that the government does not know, and needs to be given a dictionary to find out the meaning of "soon".

The third question is No. 29, concerning the return of the Taschereau papers dealing with matters of espionage in Canada to the Public Archives for a further ten years on the orders of Michael Pitfield and, as far as I know, not under any particular statutory permission that would allow such a thing. This question went on the order paper on June 4, 1978, which is two years, one month and two days ago, as of today. I think that is a disgrace as well.

Finally, question No. 30, concerning the Canadian Transport Commission is a very simple one. How many members of the commission have Air Canada passes; how many of their wives have Air Canada passes; how many employees, people connected with the commission, and so on, have Air Canada passes? I would not think it would take long to find out the answer. But it has taken the government four years, one month and six days, as of today, and it has not been answered yet. When a question sits for over four years on the order paper, I suggest there is gross negligence on the other side of the House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They tabled the freedom of information bill today.

Mr. Cossitt: As our House leader has just drawn to my attention, the government tabled the freedom of information bill today. This shows how interested they must be, really and truthfully, in freedom of information; in other words, absolutely nil.

I find it very difficult to understand why the answers are not forthcoming. One assumes, after four years, that they never will be forthcoming. One assumes this government has no sincerity whatsoever on matters of providing information to the House.

When I raised one of my last points of order in regard to one of these questions, I forget the exact words, but to sort of colloquialize and summarize, the parliamentary secretary said, "Don't ask me; ask the President of the Privy Council". But he was not here at that particular time. He is here now, so perhaps he, in all his wisdom, can tell the House more than his assistant could as to why questions sit on the order paper for three and four years without anything being done about them.

I think it is high time that members on this side of the House have every right to not only ask, but to come a point of demanding that the government get off its back seat and answer questions placed by the opposition which are really an attempt to elicit information to which Canadians and members of Parliament are entitled.

Why would the government hide from the Canadian people who has passes from the Canadian Transport Commission, or whose wives have passes? What is behind it that they do not want us or Canadians to know? Why do they not want the Canadian people to know what Martin Goldfarb and Goldfarb Associates Limited, who are close to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), got out of the government in the way of contracts? I know I have gone far enough, but may we have an answer?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is taking a little more time than is usual for this proceeding.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the hon. member takes the same kind of liberty with the House in bringing this up on a point of order as he does in putting questions on the order paper. I will have to do a tally—perhaps I can do it for tomorrow morning—of the number of questions asked by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) out of the total put on the order paper.

An hon. Member: That is his right.

Mr. Collenette: He costs the taxpayers of this country quite a lot of money in answering these questions. That is his right, but I would say that not one day goes by without the tabling in the House of at least one or two questions by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville.

I am doing my best, but I should like to raise one point. The hon. member mentioned the delay in answering some of these questions. I should remind him that the Liberal party has not been the government for all of the last four years. There was ample time during the time of the last government to ask this so I find it somewhat insulting.

The hon. member took a shot at the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox) on freedom of information. His colleagues in the Conservative party talked about freedom of information, proposed to introduce a bill, but would not even answer one of their own members whose questions had been on the order paper for quite a while. I think that bears some explanation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, there are two aspects of the answer of the parliamentary secretary which rather surprise me. The first is that he did not take into account the fact that the questions are quite old, quite ancient. I think the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) would be delighted if, as well as answering the most current ones, the parliamentary secretary went back to answering some of the more ancient ones. His complaint with the government is that questions have been on the order paper for a number of years; not just weeks, days or months.

An hon. Member: You did not answer them when you had the chance.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The unfortunate part of the answer concerning when our party was in power is that if the two parties had not been so quick to defeat the government, we would have answered those questions because we thought they were quite straightforward.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Some time in the next five years.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I want to make sure that another matter is clear on the record. In the course of his answer, the parliamentary secretary referred to the freedom of information bill. He indicated that we had tried, but did not introduce a freedom of information bill. On this day, particularly, I think it is important—and the parliamentary secretary can read his answer—he does not understand and recollect, because he was not here, there not only was a bill prepared by the Clark government over the course of the summer, but it was introduced as Bill C-15, approved in principle at second reading and was before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I had the privilege of carrying that matter. I just want to make sure the record is clear, so it does not appear on the record that we did not move.

As a matter of fact, I have the privilege of reading the freedom of information bill tabled by the minister today. I congratulate the minister on two grounds. First, I congratulate him for the scope of the bill. I think it is a first-class bill. In some areas he has improved upon ours and in some areas we will have to look at things, but basically it is a first-class bill. It attributes to the public the right of judicial review which is the underpinning of freedom of information. I congratulate him on that. Also, I congratulate him warmly on being a good thief and recognizing the good things to steal.

● (1240)

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, on this last point, I shall transmit the warm congratulations of the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party to the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox). At the same time, I would like to come back to the question raised by—

Madam Speaker, the hon. member believes that the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications committed a theft by taking the valid provisions of the bill which was prepared following many speeches made in the House by Liberal members.

I believe that, to do justice to all members of this House, this bill meets the wishes of all Canadian parliamentarians. I think that the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party was sincere when he congratulated the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) for having taken the initiative to improve the bill introduced by the Progressive Conservative Party.

With respect to the first remarks by the parliamentary leader to defend his colleague who is the expert on order paper questions I will say that for the questions which are very dated, his government had ample time a few months ago to comply with the requests made by the member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt), and if it is true that Bill C-15 would have been presented at that time and referred to the committee by the Progressive Conservative government, although in a much less perfect state than ours, one would be hard pressed to understand why the Progressive Conservative government of the time did not follow up on it and provide answers to the questions asked so long ago by the member for Leeds-Grenville.

In any event, Madam Speaker, the parliamentary secretary does a splendid job with respect to answers to questions on the order paper in general and he averages very well in giving answers to questions asked by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville. This is very commendable and indicative of the government's willingness to give complete answers. We do the necessary research and I can assure all hon. members that this is the way we intend to proceed for the remainder of the first part of the session and the next session, that is to say, to provide the required information not just in a superficial way, but after exhaustive research; this might explain some occasional delays in answers given to questions on the order paper.

[English]

MR. COSSITT—RIGHT TO PUT QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I would like to refer to remarks made earlier by the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette). He referred to the number of questions that I have placed on the order paper. If I remember correctly, he said that he would try to determine the over-all percentage and tell us tomorrow.

That is not a matter of privilege, but what I think is, is the fact that he used the phrase that I was taking the liberty of placing questions on the order paper. If it is not the liberty of any member of this House to place questions on the order paper, then our privileges are being denied by the Government of Canada.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Cossitt: In addition, and I believe I am summarizing correctly what he said—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Cossitt: I will not sit down until I have had my say. He said that I should not do this, that it costs the taxpayers a lot of money. This is, in effect, what he said.

An hon. Member: Use good judgment.

Point of Order—Mr. Cossitt

Mr. Cossitt: I think I have more judgment than the hon. member. When the day comes, Madam Speaker, that the government of this country tells members on this side of the House that they should not ask questions because it costs money—when, incidentally, they are the biggest spenders from the public trough that we have ever seen—I take that as a threat to members of the opposition saying that, in effect, we are not supposed to ask questions. In other words, do not rock the boat. What are we here for? We are here to find out what this government is doing, whether it is doing a good job. If it is not doing a good job, why it is not, and what can be done about it.

One other thing, Madam Speaker, we were highly criticized on this side of the House about my raising this point, and that our government did not answer these questions. Let me remind the House that these questions were submitted two years, and I think in one case three and a half years, before this government came to power. When it was found that this government across from us now had done nothing about the questions, how on earth did it expect the information, which in some cases is a bit intricate, to be compiled in a matter of a very short time when it had done nothing for three to four years? That is gross negligence.

As far as privilege is concerned, I do not intend, Madam Speaker—nor do I think any other member on this side of the House should have to contend with the same thing, either—to sit here and be told that we should not spend taxpayers' money by asking legitimate questions of a government supposedly interested in freedom of information, or that we are taking liberties—

Mr. Pinard: Abusing.

Mr. Cossitt: —when we put questions on the order paper. We are not taking liberties; we are exercising our rights. Abusing our rights, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) just said. That may be his opinion, but I am sure it is not the opinion of the people of Canada. A few years ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself called us—and I know they will all agree—"a bunch of nobodies", but when the opposition of this country is given—

An hon. Member: Wasting the time of the House.

Mr. Cossitt: Wasting the time of the House, the hon. member says. That is the point I am trying to make. That is what he has told me, that we are wasting the time of the House and the taxpayers' money by asking questions. If it has come to that, then I suggest that this House dissolve, that the Prime Minister go up to his office with his cabinet and run the country by edict or dictatorship and let everybody go home.

I think it is time that we got a decent answer. I should not suggest that because that is what is going on right now, anyway: this Parliament has been made a farce by the Prime Minister, by his backbenchers and his frontbenchers.

An hon. Member: That is unparliamentary.

Point of Order—Mr. Cossitt

Mr. Cossitt: As far as I can see, nobody in this House has any authority over anything. This government does what it wants. It does whatever the Prime Minister wants or what the President of the Privy Council wants, and only questions that will not hurt those dear little people across the House ever get answered.

They talk about the number that have been answered. The number that they have answered of mine have been non-answers. You can put some words on paper, but that does not mean those words constitute an answer. In most cases they have been absolute non-answers. This government has been hiding behind such phrases as: it is not in the public interest; it has never been done before; and all that sort of silly stuff.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Cossitt: Our government, when it was in office, came out with straight, direct answers to questions and did not hide behind the bushes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: I conclude my question of privilege by saying—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: I know they will be glad if I conclude, because they do not like the truth—and they never did. The sooner they stop hearing it, the better, I suppose, for their sorry, sad ears.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They would not know it if they fell over it.

Mr. Cossitt: I would like to conclude by saying that it is high time the opposition in this House was no longer threatened or accused of exercising liberties and spending too much money when they do what they were sent here to do, and that is to ask questions of the government.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I do not want to prolong this debate, but as usual the comments made by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) are somewhat unproductive when there is business before the House which needs to be done. He did misrepresent some of the things I said and I am sure the blues will bear me out. I am not saying it is deliberate, because no member of this House does that.

An hon. Member: He knows not what he says.

Mr. Collenette: I would like to make the point, however, that at no time did I say the hon. member should not put questions on the order paper. That is the right of every member of this House. What I was trying to do was to point out the inordinate number of questions which the hon. member has on the order paper in proportion to the rest.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He is a very hardworking, active member.

Mr. Paproski: He is a hardworking member.

Mr. Collenette: I also point out the number of questions that were answered by this government. On the question of the word "liberty", the hon. member knows that when one uses the phrase, "take the liberty of", it does not impute any motive; it is strictly a comment on the fairness or the propriety of a certain course of action. I would say that it is inappropriate and a little unfair for the hon. member to take so much liberty, if you will—

Mr. Paproski: Do you want a crying towel?

Mr. Collenette: —with the rules of the House and the privilege to put questions on the order paper. I submit, Madam Speaker, that you do not have a question of privilege before you; it is somewhat a question of debate. In any event, I think I did have the right to correct the record somewhat because readers of Hansard might have been misled by the hon. member's comments.

● (1250)

Madam Speaker: This is, obviously, not a question of privilege but a matter of grievance. The debate which followed the grievance by the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) might have been legitimate, or it might not. However, with the explanations of the hon. parliamentary secretary—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Such as they were.

Madam Speaker: —perhaps this House is a bit more aware of what exactly was said on both sides. At any rate, one can always read Hansard and look into the exact meaning of what members say in this House. But I cannot see a matter of privilege.

[Translation]

The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered.

[English]

Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE QUEEN MOTHER

CONGRATULATIONS ON EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, since the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) raised a question with regard to motion No. 15, I have had consultations with my colleagues from the other parties, the House leaders. There seems to be agreement that if the motion is put today, there will be no debate.

I would be willing, with the consent of the House, to put motion No. 15, in the name of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I understand that there is agreement that there will be no debate.

Madam Speaker: Does the suggestion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) have agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Prime Minister) moved:

That Madam Speaker send a Message to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, The Queen Mother, extending the congratulations of the House of Commons of Canada on Her completion on August 4, 1980, of Her eightieth year, expressing the gratefulness of the people of Canada for the many services Her Majesty has rendered them over the years, including Her many visits, beginning with the first in 1939 when she accompanied Her husband, His Majesty King George VI, on the first visit of a reigning monarch to this country, and wishing Her continued good health and long life.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PYRAMID COMMUNICATIONS LIMITED

MEASURE TO REVIVE COMPANY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, there has been agreement between the three parties that Bill S-8, a private member's bill which was passed through the Senate yesterday would be brought before the House. I do not think that there is any cause to hold up the bill.

The sole purpose of the bill is to revive a company known as Pyramid Communications Limited which through some inadvertence allowed their charter to lapse. It is now imperative, in the circumstances, that the company be revived and it be deemed not to have been dissolved, in order to allow the company to dispose of certain real estate holdings which it hopes to sell.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I would like to confirm these consultations. To be correct, I understand that Bill S-8 is a private member's private bill. The bill was passed by the Senate without amendment, and there is some urgency to it. We on this side will agree to have the bill sent to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, which we hope will meet later today on this particular bill.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I want to express agreement on this matter. There were consultations. While I am on my feet, I would also like to express my thanks to the staff of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) who facilitated the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) after we were in touch with them.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, there were such consultations, and we are willing for this bill to be sent to the standing committee.

Madam Speaker: By unanimous consent, Mr. Darling, seconded by Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton), moves that Bill S-8, an act to revive Pyramid Communications Limited, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, and that the provisions of Standing Order 103(1) be suspended in relation thereto.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Monday, May 12, 1980, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Côté for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I find myself in a very odd position, having spoken back on May 12 for nine minutes, I believe, when the address was last before the House on its seventh day. As you can see, I have the floor once again.

It is very unusual, because this is the third occasion on which I have tried to complete one speech. I started off on May 12, on the seventh day. Then on May 22, hon. members of the New Democratic Party, on their opposition day, kindly facilitated a constitutional debate in which I proceeded to say a few words. I would like today to conclude my speech of the last couple of months. In a sense, it is somewhat novel because I have had the benefit of being able to use current events which have intervened between the various debates to update the message which I was trying to bring to the House.

There are a couple of minutes left before one o'clock and I would like to summarize, since it is sounding somewhat like a serialized speech, the points which I want to make. On May 12, when the seventh day of the address was allotted, I tried to make the point about the entrenchment of minority and language rights in any new constitution. This is something for which members of this party have stood for years. It is something to which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) attaches a particular importance. I would hope that there is a similar sentiment on the other side of the House and in all parties.

I realize that some of the provinces are somewhat reluctant to entrench language rights in the constitution. I would hope that the deliberations which are now under way under the chairmanship of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) will bear some fruit. As I mentioned on May 12, one of the imperatives in constitutional reform is that we entrench minority and language rights in the new constitution.

On May 22, a couple of days after the referendum in Quebec, I had the benefit of putting my particular message in the context of the result of May 20, which members on both sides of the House applauded and which has spurred on the whole question of constitutional change throughout the country. I again implored the provinces to try to facilitate some entrenchment of minority and language rights in the constitution. I wanted to continue then, before my time elapsed, on the whole question of constitutional change from the perspective of a member of Parliament from Ontario.

I think that members of Parliament from Ontario, notwithstanding their party, and members of the legislature of Ontario have a particular role to play in the constitutional debate which is before the country. There have been comments thrown back and forth in this House about the attitude of Ontario vis-à-vis the sharing of benefits and wealth in this country. I would like to call it one o'clock in a couple of minutes and come back after the break to talk about sacrifices—perhaps that is a strong word—or the accommodations which must be made by Ontario, the richest, province in this country, to ensure that there is equality of benefits, revenue sharing and opportunity throughout this country.

The Atlantic region and the western region have historic grievances against Ontario and confederation as it has developed, and I am in sympathy with those arguments. I would like to talk about this subject after the break in the context of the negotiations which the Prime Minister is about to undertake with the Premier of Alberta on the setting of an oil price. If I could have agreement, I would call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. As it happens, it is one o'clock. We will recognize the parliamentary secretary when the House returns at two o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

● (1400)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. When the House rose at one o'clock, the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) had the floor.

Mr. Collenette: As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, this is a somewhat truncated speech and I shall try to finish with some dispatch.

Before the lunch break I talked about the constitutional debate in the context of the division of powers, especially as it affects Ontario. I think it is crucial that members of Parliament from Ontario and members of the legislature of Ontario enter into the constitutional debate that is now going on, especially in view of the negotiations that the Prime Minister will be having with Premier Lougheed in a couple of weeks' time.

My point is that the discussions now under way on the whole question of oil prices could have serious effects on the future of this country. I hope that the rhetoric on both sides of the argument—for the producing provinces in western Canada and for the consuming provinces, such as Ontario—could be in language a little less inflammatory than that which has been used. It is not for me to stand in my place and admonish any member of this chamber, but those of us who view the issue with some alarm and those of us who inflame passions in this House are doing a disservice to the country. I hope that over the next few weeks when Parliament will perhaps not be sitting we will cool our rhetoric somewhat.

Before lunchtime I talked about the way Ontario has benefited from confederation. We can look back 100 years and realize that in 1867 the maritime provinces were somewhat wealthier than they are today, given the proportion of the GNP at the time. The people from Atlantic Canada can argue that they have suffered over the years and that only with equalization has a measure of parity been achieved in the country. I am not arguing against equalization; it is one of the great concepts that we have in Canada today. I think people in Atlantic Canada, however, would argue for the need for development of their own potential and also that the freight rate structure in the country has hampered the development of industry in eastern Canada. The same arguments, of course, are made in this House by members from western Canada.

Those of us who come from Ontario must realize that if this country is to continue, that if there is to be a common market, as the Prime Minister describes it, where there is free movement of labour, goods and people across provincial boundaries, then concessions have to be made by all provinces and particularly by Ontario.

When the Prime Minister meets with Premier Lougheed in a couple of weeks' time I hope that he will not just be discussing the oil price in its narrow context but will talk about other concessions that will be made by central Canada to western Canada. I hope there will be recognition of the fact that, after oil and gas is taken from the ground, an industrial base must be established in order to create the wealth needed by western Canadians. I think this is what Mr. Lougheed wants but I believe we have to strip away the inflammatory language on both sides and agree on the basic thrust that economic growth in this country is moving west. That is not a bad thing, Mr. Speaker.

At the weekend, Mr. Speaker, I was reading the Toronto Star. That is the bible for those of us who come from Toronto.

An hon. Member: The Liberal members.

Mr. Collenette: The inside section of the Toronto Star dealt with the problems in Ontario's mines, farms and forests. It referred to their vanishing. The point made was that through mismanagement by the provincial government, farm land was being lost, resources were being destroyed—

An hon. Member: By the Conservatives.

Mr. Collenette: It is a Conservative government, I should add, in Ontario. Fishing was also being depleted.

I think one could also read the article in the context of the need for a slowing of growth in Ontario. It refers to the fact that much of Canada's prime farm land in Ontario is being developed for urban sprawl, or whatever, and that the pressures of growth are taking their toll on the natural environment in Ontario. As I travel around Toronto I notice the crowding and I cannot help but feel that Ontario should perhaps grow more slowly, as in the past. There has been phenomenal growth since the Second World War, and this has given rise to a number of problems, some of which are described in the article. I would urge hon. members to read this article which appeared in Section B of the Toronto Star on July 12.

Politicians from Ontario should welcome the fact that the industrial impetus is shifting to western Canada. Perhaps it is time for Ontario to concentrate on trying to improve the manufacturing industries in which it does well, such as communications and transportation equipment, and leave the processing of raw materials to other parts of the country. Let those areas develop these particular industries.

I hope that when the Prime Minister meets Mr. Lougheed, he will discuss a whole range of things. I hope he will discuss an energy conservation package, not just prices. There has been some talk in the Toronto press about de Havilland Aircraft of Toronto which needs to build a second plant for the Dash-8 aircraft, perhaps locating that plant in Alberta. I have no objection whatsoever. I have de Havilland workers in my constituency. If that plant is built in Alberta, Saskatchewan or anywhere other than metropolitan Toronto where the existing plant is, it will still help the economy in Toronto. There will still be some 2,000 jobs generated for parts. However, the assembly of that aircraft could be done elsewhere in the country.

When people in western Canada, especially the premiers, talk about all the industrial expertise and industrial growth occurring in Ontario, they have a point. I hope there will be some trade-offs made by the Prime Minister and Mr. Lougheed. We in Ontario expect to pay lower than world prices. I believe we should. The policies enunciated by this government when in opposition and through the election were the right ones, I believe. We should not be held up to ransom by any oil sheiks across the world, or cartels of any description, especially when we have an abundance of those resources in Canada.

When we in Ontario expect lower prices, we should be prepared to make some kind of trade-off. In annoys and bothers me when the deputy premier of Ontario views a potential export tax on hydroelectric power as being discriminatory against Ontario. In this case I agree with Premier Blakeney. If we are talking about the export of resources, whether they are manufactured or come straight out of the ground, there should be some equality of approach. I can understand the attitude of western Canadians on this. My only hope is that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) will take this into account when he is having discussions with the western provinces.

Having said that, and having said some pretty harsh things that I am sure some of my constituents would not want to hear, we must make it absolutely clear that we cannot allow any one part of this country, any one province, to amass a fiscal base that will erode the financial integrity of the nation as a whole. That is what is happening with the development of the heritage fund in the province of Alberta.

Look at other federal states around the world. Look at the United States and Australia where there is a similarity, where there are natural resources, oil and gas, being taken from the ground. If you look at the take from those countries that the member states have equivalent to our provinces, you will see that the resource producing provinces in Canada enjoy an unparalleled advantage.

We see the Premier of Alberta going around the country trying to get support for his position, promising money, in effect trying to buy off, if that is the word, or trying to use his money to buy favour from, say, the maritime provinces. My colleague from Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe knows this only too well. That bothers me, Mr. Speaker.

What we are developing in this country is two central banks. If you follow the philosophy of Mr. Lougheed through to its logical conclusion, there is very little difference between his concept of Canada and that of Mr. Lévesque. We have just been fighting against that concept, the concept of co-equal states in this country. We either have strong national institutions that can govern on behalf of all Canadians, that can redistribute the wealth, that can see that the wealth of this country is shared, or we become separate states. We fought against that on May 20.

My colleagues from Quebec should be applauded, as well as members on all sides, including the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), members of the NDP or the Leader of the NDP, for taking a non-partisan approach on the question of Quebec. However, I would submit there is very little difference in the grand design that Mr. Lougheed has—the concept of co-equal states, that the federal government is just another government with certain responsibilities in all the provinces, and that the provincial governments are paramount. This was not intended when the BNA Act was drafted in 1867. I would hope that we would arrest this trend.

Speaking from my point of view and I hope that of all members of our party, we are prepared to compromise. We are prepared to see that there is equity among the trading and financial arrangements of this country. But we cannot allow the nation state of Canada to be held up to ransom by any one of its component parts, whether that is a government in the province of Quebec, a government in the province of Alberta, or elsewhere. We should emphazise and not take lightly the fact that the people of this country have a very difficult decision to make within a matter of months. The rhetoric will escalate. I only hope we can try to work things out in a compromising way. The rhetoric will escalate and Canadians will have to decide.

We had a bill before us in the Thirtieth Parliament calling for the establishment of referenda. I submit, and I am talking here as a private member obviously, that if there is failure to agree on any constitutional change, if there is failure to agree on oil pricing, the people of Canada are going to have to decide once and for all whether they want this competing power game between bureaucratic and political elites to continue to the detriment of the well-being of the collective good of all Canadians.

We have only a few months to resolve these questions. I hope that we can patriate our constitution. I hope that the premiers of the consuming provinces, especially Ontario, will not react if concessions are made to legitimate western applications. On the other hand, I hope that the premiers especially in western Canada and the governments of western Canada, above all Mr. Lougheed, will not try to press their point to its logical conclusion.

There are changes we can make in the constitution which will bide well with western Canadians. We can redefine in any new constitution the provincial ownership of resources clause. We can put limits on the declaratory power. We can perhaps even talk about doing away with the federal power of disallowance which has not been used in 30 years and which perhaps is an anachronism in a modern sophisticated state.

There are concessions we can make; I think our government is prepared to make them. I would urge that they make concessions. I urge that members in my caucus from Ontario, and opposition members from Ontario, help to sell that position in a non-partisan spirit. If we divide on party lines on constitutional change over the next few months, then this country is in for a very rough ride indeed.

I know, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of members who wish to seek the floor. I am sorry that my remarks have been somewhat truncated because of the unusual circumstances. In conclusion, there are members from Ontario, certainly myself as a Liberal member from Toronto, who are prepared to go out in our constituencies and talk in metropolitan Toronto of the need for a deal for every region in this country, even though that will perhaps hurt in some way the opportunities of our own constituencies.

We have to look beyond normal electoral considerations in trying to get re-elected. If we cannot resolve this basic question, we may never get to another federal election in the way we used to. I do not want to be an alarmist, but we have to look at this question very seriously. I hope all members on all sides will do their best to try to sell to their constituents a policy that will give equal opportunity, fairness, and enshrine the principle of sharing right across this country, no matter where one lives.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in our discussion on this the last day of the debate on the Speech from the Throne. I request, Mr. Speaker, that you be kind enough to add my name to the long list of others who have congratulated Madam Speaker on her appointment.

I wish to speak for a few moments about my constituency, the federal riding of Cariboo-Chilcotin. It is a relatively large riding located in the main in central British Columbia. It is about 42,000 square miles in area, just slightly smaller than the area of England. It extends approximately 400 miles from the Pacific port of Squamish in the south to the town of Quesnel in the north. About 75,000 people live within its boundaries. Its major industries include lumbering, pulp and paper, mineral production, cattle ranching and tourism. The riding is divided almost in half along a north-south axis by the mighty Fraser River, the single most important producer of salmon in the world.

The largest portion of the constituency is located inland and has come to be called cariboo country. This area was opened in the 1800s by the gold miners and cattle ranchers. The famous boom town of Barkerville, which in its heyday was the largest community north of San Francisco and west of Winnipeg, is still very much in existence. It has been completely refurbished and is now one of Canada's most popular tourist attractions.

At the southern end of the riding we now have a very ambitious world-class resort being constructed at Whistler in Garibaldi Park. Millions of dollars are being expended on skiing and other recreational facilities. When completed, approximately 26,000 skiers will be accommodated on a daily basis and skiing will continue for 11 months of the year.

It is important to note that inland we have the Hat Creek coal deposit, one of the largest in the world. We also have Canada's largest cattle ranch, the Gang ranch. To add to all of this, Mr. Speaker, we have within the boundaries of my constituency 37 Indian bands. I am proud to represent the people of Cariboo-Chilcotin, and especially the native population which makes up a large percentage of my constituents. It is in this particular regard, Mr. Speaker, that I intend to frame the remainder of my address.

I would like to turn to the issue of Indian affairs in Canada. Recently we have had two indications of the depths to which our Indian policy has fallen. The most offensive of these was the case of Sandra Lovelace who has been forced to resort to the United Nations human rights committee to seek justice. This puts us in the same elite group as the Soviet Union, Chile and Idi Amin's Uganda. To say that this is a national disgrace is an understatement. That our system cannot deal with this matter of equal rights is almost beyond comprehension. This is not an issue which has suddenly sprung up on the government; it is a problem which has been sitting in front of us for 111 years.

The second indicator is a recent report on Indian conditions by Mr. R. H. Knox of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Although the report is just a rehash of old statistics presented in a glossy new format, it is useful in bringing public attention to the plight of native people. This is necessary because the Speech from the Throne almost ignored the issue.

If the House will bear with me I will restate the government's native people's policy, as given in the Speech from the Throne:

Expanding native opportunities and training women for new occupations will receive strong emphasis.

That was the limit in the area of native policy as laid down in the throne speech. I am sure that our native chiefs, whose people face a suicide rate which is about three times the national average, were reassured by this comprehensive new policy. They have been waiting since 1968 for the "just society", so I suppose they will be equally patient in waiting for these "expanding native opportunities" which are receiving such "strong emphasis".

I would like to suggest to the government, if it is not too presumptuous of me, some methods as to how native opportunities can be expanded. We could begin by reviewing the government's policy on trust funds set up for native bands. These trust funds have apparently been used more as a source of cheap revenue to finance government spending than to help the native people. Recently native chiefs estimated that they are losing in the order of $10 million a year through the mismanagement of funds held in trust for them by the Government of Canada. How could this happen in a just society?

The answer is much simpler than one would expect. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) is in a conflict of interest situation. He is the legal trustee for all native trust funds and as such, he is expected to ensure to the best of his ability that these funds are used in such a way as to maximize the benefits to the bands. On the other hand, he suffers under the mantle of a minister of the Crown and as such it is his first duty to act in the best interests of the Government of Canada. He fulfils his mandate as a minister of the Crown by depositing the trust fund moneys into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The money in the Consolidated Revenue Fund is then used to finance the deficit which has made this government a legend in its own time.

Unfortunately, the Indian bands do not get a fair return on their trust funds. At the recent all-chiefs conference held in Ottawa the minister made a commitment to undertake a comparison between the interest rates paid by chartered banks and the government rate paid on the trust funds. This the minister promised to do within two months of the time the conference was held. That deadline has now passed by some three weeks. Pending the tabling of this now overdue report we are left to depend upon the statements of departmental officials. At a recent meeting of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development we were informed that the government rate was "significantly lower than the rate of interest you would get from commercial banks". Two days later the same committee was told that the two rates were competitive in the long term. I would tend to put my faith in the former statement because, in the words of John Maynard Keynes, "in the long term we are all dead".

However, there is an additional aspect to the conflict of interest situation I have described. The hon. member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) pointed out last Tuesday night that the audit of the government's handling of these funds unanimously ordered by this House last November has not been forthcoming. As the hon. member indicated, we have been told that difficulties exist.

The difficulties are twofold. First, the government, the trustee, has lost documents relating to the trust funds. These documents have apparently been devoured by the Public Archives of Canada, never to be regurgitated again. This has left a gap in the trust fund records. I find this action on behalf of a trustee to be irresponsible at best. Imagine, if you will, that you have set up a trust fund with your lawyer, Mr. Speaker. This trust fund would be for the purpose of ensuring the financial security of your children. In ten years you ask your lawyer for a status report on the fund and your lawyer replies: "I am sorry, but I cannot do that; I filed your financial records and in the interim they were lost". Your first action would be to fire the lawyer, your second action would be to sue him for his gross incompetence, and you would probably wish to have him disbarred as well to ensure that he never did it again.

The Indian bands, unfortunately, do not have this recourse. They cannot fire the minister as a trustee. Their position is similar to that of a minor in this respect. They cannot sue the government, and they cannot depose the government for its incompetence.

The second facet of this problem is the complexity of the accounts themselves. There are some 1,100 accounts which must be audited. Combined with the gaps in documentation, the result is an auditor's nightmare. How could a responsible trustee allow this situation to develop? The trustee's conflicting interest with his role as minister of the Crown not only allowed this to develop but might even have precipitated its development. If we are to return to that nirvana, the just society, then the government must eliminate this conflict of interest. This would go far toward expanding native opportunities.

I would now like to open a specific area where there is considerable scope for the expansion of native opportunities in British Columbia. In British Columbia in the early part of this century a provincial commission was set up to "review conditions of Indian affairs in British Columbia". This body, known as the McKenna-McBride commission, was essentially established to modify the size of British Columbia Indian reserves, in full consultation with the Indian people. This was agreed to by the federal government because of the conflict over the size and legal ownership of reservations which had existed with the province for over 40 years.

Even in these early times a conflict of interest existed with the department of Indian affairs and its role as trustee. Here was the federal government agreeing in many instances to reduce the size of its trust. However, the federal government did include the proviso that, and I quote:

—the reserve shall, with the consent of the Indians, as required by the Indian Act, be reduced to such acreage as the commissioners think reasonably sufficient for the purposes of such Indians.

What had happened was that when certain reservations had been set up at the very beginning, the Indian population had been decimated by smallpox. The white population then saw Indian people as a handful living on various reserves, and this commission was set up ostensibly to reduce the size of the reserves and sell the land to the white population.

What sane person would voluntarily agree to reduce the size of his holdings? As hon. members can imagine, the Indians did not agree to the reduction of the size of their reserves. In most cases they did not even realize that they were losing their land. By the time the report of the commission became law in 1916, 35 cutoffs amounting to 36,000 acres had been taken from the reserves. These cutoffs were, of course, completely illegal because of the lack of consent of the Indian people. There was no consultation.

I would like to emphasize at this time that what we are talking about here is not the settlement of new claims but, rather, the return of land to the legal owners. There is no question that this land belongs to the Indian people because it was outside the mandate of the commission to cut off lands without the consent of the Indians.

The situation which developed was that British Columbia acquired legal title to the cutoff lands with the requirement that the province turn over 50 per cent of the proceeds from the sale or other disposition of these lands. This amounted to only $90,000 for the Indian people. Much of the land was sold for $1 an acre, and it was prime agricultural land.

The Government of Canada acquired title to all British Columbia Indian reserves as a result of this commission. It is true that Indian reserves were increased in size by 85,000 acres, but I would like to emphasize that these 85,000 acres were far below the quality of the cut-off lands, and in most cases it was a matter of trading acreages in valleys for barren mountain tops.

Ever since the lands were lost in 1916, these affected bands have been trying to get their land back. The Squamish band has been a leader in pressing the case with the federal and provincial governments. One half of the Squamish band is in my riding and the other half is in the riding of the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington). The Squamish band lost between 130 and 132 acres on the north shore of Burrard Inlet near the mouth of the Capilano River. The northernmost footings of the Lions Gate Bridge sit on Squamish band cut-off land. The bands' lawyer estimated in 1976 that this 132 acres of land would be earning $786,590 a year in rent, and this is a very conservative estimate. This is the rent which would accrue to this band if it owned the land at present.

The province has agreed to return about 30,000 acres of cut-off land, which it retained control of, to the reserves, to compensate the bands for assessable damage and compensate for certain lands it wishes to retain for public purposes, mainly for parks. The federal government would compensate the bands for the 3,200 acres sold to third parties; in other words, for the encumbered land.

It is with the federal government that the Indian committee which represents the affected bands is at odds. The federal government offered the bands the market value at the time of taking, 1916, for the principal portion plus a very low rate of interest on this amount. This is about 10 per cent of what this land is actually worth at present. On March 9, 1979, the federal cash offer was increased to $14.4 million for all claims. It is estimated that the real estate value of the Squamish land near the First Narrows Bridge alone is worth $30 million.

In closing, because of over 60 years of procrastination the situation is now very difficult. We cannot expect these people, who have waited patiently these many years, to settle for 1916 values for encumbered land. On January 3 of this year the Squamish band decided it could wait no longer and submitted its case to the federal courts. It will be an interesting case, and I sincerely hope justice will finally prevail.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have had the usual discussions with representatives of each of the parties in the House, and I believe there would be unanimous consent to revert to the presentation of reports from standing and special committees for a minute.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member seeks unanimous consent to revert to presenting reports from standing and special committees. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Côté for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, first of all I am grateful to have this opportunity to address the House for the first and, I hope, not the last time. I am also happy to say that I am proud to speak in the name of the people of Lotbinière who did me a great honour by electing me as their representative here in Ottawa. Lotbinière is a riding which has undergone some changes, mostly since 1968. I will say first that it is bounded on the east by the constituency of Lévis, which is represented in the House by the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) whose presence in the House I want to acknowledge because he has been instrumental in my election here. It extends northward to the St. Lawrence river, southeasterly to the constituency of Frontenac, southwesterly to Richmond, westerly to the constituency of Drummond and northwesterly to the constituency of Richelieu.

As I said earlier, Lotbinière underwent some change in 1968, when some parts of the riding were part of the Drummond-Arthabaska constituency, especially the Bois-Francs area. In addition, the constituency now extends further towards the Quebec area where various municipalities belonged to what was called the old Lotbinière. It is a semi-rural constituency made up of several towns and 57 municipalities in all. I am therefore proud to be here and address mainly my constituents of Ste-Cécile-de-Lévrard, my birthplace, the people of Victoriaville, of Arthabaska, Princeville, Daveluyville, Ste-Croix and Laurier-Station, which, by the way, is so called because one of our distinguished prime ministers, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, had stopped there. That is why it was called Laurier Station.

The riding, of course, is rich in parliamentary history; as I said, Sir Wilfrid Laurier made his mark on the Victoriaville-Arthabaska area, mainly in Arthabaska. He was a lawyer and had a practice. Later, he became Prime Minister of Canada, and probably one of the greatest prime ministers in our history. The riding of Lotbinière has also been represented in the House of Commons for several years by the Hon. Hugues Lapointe, former lieutenant-governor of Quebec. Trained as a lawyer, he served in the armed forces and was later appointed lieutenant-governor of Quebec.

Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin, now Minister of Transport, was once the elected member for this part of the riding as well, which was then called Drummond-Arthabaska. This riding was also represented by the former leader of the Social Credit party, the late Mr. Fortin, who died in a car accident in the summer of 1977. The riding also produced some painters such as Suzor-Côté, one of our great Quebec painters who lived in Arthabaska in the riding of Lotbinière.

Of course that riding has also made a name for itself in the world of sports since many people from the Victoriaville and Bois-Francs area, such as Jean Béliveau, Gilbert Perreau and Gilles Marotte, have done them proud as well as the riding of Lotbinière. I am very pleased for my riding with the Speech from the Throne and the various programs and other measures it announced for creating employment in the small and medium-business sector. On page 6 of the speech, Mr. Speaker, the basic objectives of the government are outlined, namely to give work to more Canadians in those groups, such as the young, women, our native people and the handicapped, who have a harder time getting jobs.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the government will change those programs and re-allott funds to better meet the needs of those groups. Already, Mr. Speaker, many things have been done with regard to that situation; as far as my riding is concerned, there certainly is need to create jobs for the present situation is really serious. Even the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), who was here this afternoon, spoke about the job-creation program some time in June. For the current fiscal year, he announced on June 2 a $137 million program designed to meet the critical and immediate job problems many Canadians are facing. Over a $100 million of that amount has already been earmarked for winter community development projects, especially in high unemployment areas. As for the riding of Lotbinière, these projects are undoubtedly very useful and enable a great many people, especially young people and even women, to join the labour force under these various programs, such as the community services development program and the local economic development assistance program. This situation is also very important for a constituency like Lotbinière where there are many industries such as the furniture industry and related industries, the textile industry and its by-products. The furniture industry has experienced some problems in the Lotbinière constituency, particularly in the main area around Victoriaville. Fortunately, the situation has now improved thanks to some federal assistance and to programs that were already being implemented and have only recently been amended. I am referring to the small business program mentioned on page 5 of the throne speech to assist industries by raising the ceiling for loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act and for farm improvement loans to $100,000.

I am proud, Mr. Speaker, that the Speech from the Throne mentions these things which will allow Canadians, my constituents, and the industries operating in the riding of Lotbinière to receive these benefits. For example, the employment tax credit program, covered by Bill C-3 which was passed recently by the House, will assist young people starting off in the work force and help some industries facing cash flow problems to hire people with the aid of federal programs such as the employment tax credit program. To enable employers to hire new people who, we must admit, Mr. Speaker, are not always experienced, require considerable investment. This employment tax credit is indeed an excellent program for many Canadians and, obviously, also for my riding.

There will be a concentration of furniture and textile plants in the riding. Those have sometimes been said to be soft industrial sectors. Considering what exists in Lotbinière and the programs of the Canadian government, it can be said the Trudeau government through those various programs has reached a happy medium in those industries and allowed a good many Canadians to have decent work and earn a living for their families.

When one considers the programs that apply in Lotbinière and naturally to all Canadians, one can see, as it is said on page 5, that the government is very concerned about the employment situation in Canada. It is hoped that later on the municipalities, with the consent of the provinces if necessary, will be able to introduce programs such as Canada Works. I know that recently municipalities including Lotbinière were unfortunately prevented from introducing Young Canada Works projects by our provincial government which thus caused the rejection of many projects and a lot of trouble to some people. The forthcoming programs that have already been adopted following the throne speech allow for optimism about the employment situation in Canada in future years. The Trudeau administration tried to develop that very kind of program which is sought out by the Canadian people, and as I said earlier, it started on June 2. I refer to Mr. Axworthy's program.

While we can talk about those programs, I think what we should do in fact is publicize them. That being said, I also invite my colleagues on both sides of the House to publicize the various employment programs of the Government of Canada. We should tell the Canadian people what are the existing programs. You will see there are a lot of programs, if you read the document issued by the minister on June 2, 1980, which refers to native training programs, to the training of women to occupy non-traditional occupations, to local job-creation assistance. How many Canadians do not know of these programs? How many Canadians are not aware of this situation? Of course, there are departmental press releases, but I think that members have an important role to play with respect to these programs, and that is to make their constituents aware of them by telling them how the Canadian government is helping the community through job creation.

We must therefore tackle this problem. I shall return to this matter later on when dealing particularly with the question of Canadian unity and the situation in Quebec between April 15 and May 20, the referendum period. Therefore, we must make those facts known to the Canadian people, and I think one of the duties of a member of Parliament is to tell his constituents and Canadians in general: "Listen, the Canadian government has implemented various job-creating programs. You must take advantage of them and provide opportunities for the unemployed to benefit from government aid. Thus, the wheel is set in motion, because workers pay taxes and therefore get the economy going. This very urgent publicity problem must be tackled, because in the province of Quebec particularly, where the riding of Lotbinière is located, we are deluged with publicity to the effect that it is the provincial government which is doing such and such a thing. How many social programs are there in the field of job creation, aid to municipalities whose costs are shared between the Canadian and the provincial governments? How many citizens do not know this? Mr. Speaker, many citizens do not know the extent of the federal participation. We must therefore tackle this problem and inform the Canadian people that the federal government is everyone's government and that it can help them in the field of employment just as I have said.

Of course, I could not make my speech without talking about farming and, there again, at page 5 of the Speech from the Throne, reference is made to agriculture. Since that time, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious we had to discuss certain problems in the House, and the budget of the Department of Agriculture and the agricultural policies enabled Canadian and Quebec producers to maintain their position. In the past, it is true we had problems in agriculture. We even saw farmers come here on Parliament Hill to demonstrate. But that situation went back to normal, and I think our Canadian and Quebec producers are very happy. So we have to continue in the same vein.

In my riding, Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to point out to the House that even that farming business is important. Many breeders are renowned and even go to major exhibitions like the Toronto exhibition and won prizes there. I am speaking of breeders like Messrs. Pepin and Tourigny who were master breeders in Canada as farm producers of the Holstein breed.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, we can only be happy about the situation of farmers who are having problems today like any other class in society but, nevertheless, I think we can say that farm producers have their place in the sun in Canada. The policies implemented by the government of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the policies that have been implemented in the past 12 years, since 1968, have enabled Quebec farmers to hold an enviable place in our Canadian society and earn revenues comparable to those of people in other classes of society.

I admit farmers will say they have to make huge investments and spend a lot of money to start their businesses. It is obvious that agriculture today is no longer a small undertaking, it is a business in which a good many Canadians succeed through hard work like in any other area. Mr. Speaker, I can only be happy with that situation given the Speech from the Throne which applies perfectly in the riding of Lotbinière.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, when reading the Speech from the Throne, I can only rejoice that the criminal law situation is mentioned. As I have a law practice in the Victoriaville area of the Lotbinière constituency, I am more than happy to see the following reference on page 5:

> The serious problem of violence against women will also be addressed along with other amendments to the Criminal Code, and efforts will be made in concert with the provincial and territorial governments to improve health and social services for women who are victims of violence.
> It is time, too, to move cannabis offences to the Food and Drugs Act and remove the possibility of imprisonment for simple possession.

Mr. Speaker, after eight years as a trial lawyer, I know that many Canadians wonder about the situation relating to the Food and Drugs Act and the cannabis offences. When the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) made some statements that made the headlines about this situation, many people were concerned that the government wanted to legalize cannabis and therefore wanted Canadians to use this drug. I believe it is important for me to state clearly to this House, to the constituents of Lotbinière and to the Canadian people as a whole that the government of Canada has no such intention. Rather, the government wants to restrict the penalties provided under the law, especially with regard to simple possession of this drug. It is often said that we profit by our mistakes. If a youth makes a mistake in this area, and if he is given, as an example of drug traffic, only a few ounces or a gram of this drug, he can be imprisoned for a minimum of seven years. Should a 20-year old Canadian who has had an unfortunate experience in this area automatically be imprisoned for seven years?

It is mostly this situation that the Minister of Justice dealt with when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and many people, perhaps mostly police officers, have been saying: "This problem is serious and the government wants to legalize it." This is not true, Mr. Speaker, because as I said earlier, the government only wants to simplify the situation and lighten the sentences for simple possession of this drug. I feel this is quite important. Many jurists and lawyers have stated before the courts that the law should be changed, and I believe it is because the government of Canada has listened to them that it wants to bring amendments before this House. Of course, Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne also mentions Canadian unity. When the Speech from the Throne was read by His Excellency the Governor General, Mr. Schreyer, on April 14, the next day, as everyone will recall, Mr. Speaker, the government of Quebec launched its referendum campaign.

In the Speech from the Throne, on April 14, we were told:

> That is why my government hopes that the referendum, to be held in Quebec sometime during the coming weeks, will be a time when Quebeckers affirm their will and their right to be fully Canadian, a time when all Canadians will reaffirm their desire to live together in the country to which we all belong, and which belongs to all of us.
> Because my government wants to strengthen the spirit of Canadian unity and nurture the seeds of renewal, it promises to interpret a vote of No to sovereignty-association as a vote for the rebuilding of the Canadian federation. My government also promises to give effect to a No vote by mobilizing all the forces at its command in order to ensure the renewal of the federation in a spirit of respect and justice for all.

Mr. Speaker, today, everybody knows, of course, that on May 20, 1980, Quebeckers said no to sovereignty-association and yes to Canada. They said yes to Canada because they believed that they would find security in Canada and something basic. The empty words of Quebec politicians who supported sovereignty told us that we had nothing to lose, that we are going to negotiate. They did not say exactly what was implied in sovereignty-association. Quebeckers made their choice. They said no to that insecurity and uncertainty. So, they said yes to Canada and to a renewed Canadian federation. In that regard, in terms of renewing our Canadian federation, considerable progress has already been made. Just after the referendum, the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) invited provincial premiers here in Ottawa, and on June 9, a meeting was held at which a few statements of principle were issued, some points raised for future discussion; more recently, the minister in charge of federal-provincial relations, the Minister of Justice and Minister of State in charge of Social Development (Mr. Chrétien) met his counterparts in Montreal. This week he is in Toronto; next week he will be in Vancouver.

Quebeckers were right, then, in saying Yes to a renewed federation, because that renewal was launched immediately in an effort to show Quebeckers that their vote in support of federalism was not just wishful thinking, and that the Quebec MPs, the 74 and even the 75 who said no to that travel into the unknown bid by the PQ government, wanted quick action. And I submit rapid progress has been made to date. Even in today's newspapers, as in days past, we see discussions are going on between provincial ministers in charge of federal-provincial relations and the federal minister, Mr. Chrétien. A consensus is sought on many points and already some aspects have been referred to a committee of officials, such as family law, communications, fisheries, and a statement of principles. So, in a very short time, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government, the Liberal administration, here in Ottawa has proved to Quebeckers and Canadians that they want to renew the confederation and want to keep the promise they made, the one hon. members from Quebec made, to work diligently to that end.

Of course, in respect of this whole issue, I referred briefly to it when speaking on federal programs. I think members of this House must, even now, draw the attention of Quebeckers and Canadians to existing programs at the federal level and show what the implications are of the federal government as far as provinces are concerned. How many Quebeckers, how many Canadians have hon. members met who were surprised to hear about the federal government's participation or to learn that such and such a Canadian program existed!

Mr. Speaker, I think that it was a good way to show the Canadian people that the Government of Canada is not only concerned with external affairs, armament or disarmament matters, but is also anxious to make sure that all Canadians, whether in Quebec, Newfoundland, Saskatchewan, the Yukon, the Northwest Territoires, or any other province, really feel like Canadians, are really involved with their government and aware, either in Saskatchewan or elsewhere, of all the programs it has set up to provide them with jobs or health insurance or what have you.

Quebeckers in particular acknowledged this fact during the referendum campaign; in their case, I suggest that the federal government was right in explaining the situation to them, the actual facts, the reason why they should remain in Canada with other Canadians to share with them a stronger and more united Canada, in short, to be really first-class Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude with these remarks on Canadian unity. I was very proud when I first read the Speech from the Throne to realize that this Canadian government is meeting head on the various problems now facing us. I have dealt briefly with the various issues, Mr. Speaker, but I am very happy to speak in the House and tell my constituents that thanks to the Speech from the Throne, we will be able to prepare many pieces of legislation—some of which have already been introduced and adopted—to improve the lot of Canadians, Quebeckers and also, I hope, the people in my constituency of Lotbinière. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I endorse the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, and give my unqualified support to the government of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and a privilege for me to take part in this debate in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I will start out, as many others have done, by congratulating Madam Speaker, through you, on her appointment. We have had a chance to see how she conducts the affairs of this House, and we all agree that she is going to be a first-class Speaker.

In addition, I would like to thank the constituents of Portage-Marquette for returning me here. I was first elected to the House of Commons in May of last year. I had the opportunity and the privilege to run as a candidate again and I was elected once more to represent the constituency of Portage-Marquette.

Portage-Marquette is a large rural riding in central Manitoba. It stretches approximately 15 miles east of Portage la Prairie all the way to the Saskatchewan border. It is over 200 miles in length. As I have said, it is a largely rural riding, Portage la Prairie being the largest city with some 15,000 people. It takes in a good many small towns which are and have been servicing agricultural communities, such as MacGregor, Austin, Carberry, Gladstone, Neepawa and Minnedosa. The riding stretches to the Saskatchewan border where we find towns such as Shoal Lake and Russell.

My riding is a great productive agricultural one. Not only are vegetables grown in the riding, but they are also processed at Portage la Prairie and Carberry. Many diverse crops are grown. We also find considerable livestock including both cattle and hogs. I thank the people of Portage-Marquette for seeing fit to return me here for a second term in this House of Commons.

Now I would like to talk a little about some of the items mentioned in the throne speech, specifically under the heading "Developing our Economic Potential". In that section there is a reference to agriculture. At this point I will quote from the Speech from the Throne. At page 6 of Hansard for April 14, 1980, the speech reads as follows:

> My government regards the production, transportation, handling, and marketing of prairie grain as a national priority. Rail facilities will be upgraded, and port facilities improved.

This was welcome news in the throne speech, but unfortunately since that time a lot of things have happened which have been exactly opposite to maintaining and upgrading rail facilities. In this connection I refer specifically to an article which appeared in The Brandon Sun for Saturday, July 12, 1980. On the front page the article is headed "Reeve blames Liberals for loss of Miniota CP line". The first paragraph reads as follows:

> Blanshard Reeve Frank McPhaden blames the re-election of the Liberals and not a last-minute appeal for the loss of the Miniota CP Rail subdivision.

This seems to me to be very strange when one reads the throne speech in which it says that rail facilities are going to be maintained.

Because we have such a large rural riding, grain transportation facilities, and rail facilities in particular, are extremely important to the riding of Portage-Marquette. Yet the reeve in my riding blames the Liberals for the loss of a rail line. That is only one line, namely the Miniota subdivision. It is a line that is in very good shape and it is made up of 85-pound steel. It is in about the same condition as some lines that are being upgraded. It would not entail very much maintenance, if any, to keep that line in operation and the Liberals are being blamed for the loss of the line.

In addition to that, there are several other branch lines in western Canada about which concern is being expressed for their survival because of statements which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has made. A month ago at a committee meeting on June 5, the Minister of Transport called into question the maintenance of some 30 branch lines which had been put into the permanent network by the previous minister of transport, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). Approximately 1,000 miles of these lines were put into the permanent network as a result of a study by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). This study was conducted during last summer and it resulted in the report which has come to be known as the Neil report. The then minister of transport acted upon that report and as a result, and through orders in council during the first week of January, approximately 60 per cent of the line at which the hon. member for Moose Jaw looked was put into the permanent network.

Since then, the future of these lines has been called into question. It is causing much concern to the producers in western Canada who, as a result of the orders in council, thought that this branch line issue had been settled. The Minister of Transport said at the committee meeting that he was not willing to accept the criteria on which the decision was made by the hon. member for Vegreville to put those lines into the permanent network. This to me is a very unfortunate situation because what we have now is a case where the grain companies and the two railway companies involved, the CNR and the CPR, are now uncertain about the future of these lines.

My concern is that if all these lines are not kept in the permanent network, they will probably be referred to the Canadian Transport Commission. This means that they will have to go through the regular process of holding hearings before a decision can be made on what should happen to them. This could take three years, four years or perhaps as much as five years. During that period of time the rail companies will not know whether they should spend any money on these lines and, in all probability, they will not spend any money because of the uncertainty that if they do spend money and the line is abandoned, it will be money which was not spent wisely.

In addition, the grain companies will not be in a position of certainty to know whether or not they should maintain their facilities. What we will have is a situation, if it is allowed to drag on, where these branch lines will be abandoned simply because of the indecision of this government. This is strange to me considering that the government said in the throne speech that "rail facilities will be upgraded and port facilities improved".

It seems to me that what has happened in the three months since the throne speech has been exactly the opposite in terms of rail facilities. I find that very unfortunate, and I urge the Minister of Transport to clear up this matter and indicate that he is willing to see the lines which were put into the permanent network by order in council remain with service guaranteed to the year 2000. I urge the minister to see that those lines remain. The sooner he makes a statement to that effect the sooner he will get rid of the uncertainty which clouds these lines in western Canada. It is affecting something like 7,000 or 8,000 producers in the three prairie provinces, and the sooner that decision is firmly made, the better it will be for everybody in terms of knowing where they are going with regard to rail transportation.

The next thing which was talked about in the throne speech after rail facilities was that port facilities would be improved and upgraded. I would like to make reference to two ports, the Prince Rupert project and what is going on in the port of Churchill.

Churchill has exported not a lot but a significant amount of grain. This is very important to the people in that town who depend on grain for jobs during the summer. It is basically the only employment available to the port of Churchill over the summer. I had the privilege of travelling to Churchill with the former minister of transport last November 21 when the MV Arctic came in with the icebreaker Pierre Radisson. In using the icebreakers, the season was extended by approximately three weeks. This was a boost for the port of Churchill and it signalled to that port that the previous government was serious about trying to make as good use of that facility as it possibly could.

As I found out during my trip to Churchill, Canada has one of the best icebreaking technologies in the world. It was a very good idea to make use of that ice-breaking technology in terms of extending the shipping season at Churchill. Our record as a government in terms of making use of the port of Churchill is excellent. As I said, we extended the shipping by making use of ice-breaking technology by some three weeks, which had never been done before.

It was also the intention at that time to bring in an icebreaker to open the port earlier than usual. If the government had followed that plan, the port of Churchill would have opened earlier than normal. Unfortunately, what it looks like for this year is that the port of Churchill may not be in a position to ship very much, if any, grain at all. I have a telex dated July 4 which says:

> Canadian Wheat Board announced on July 4 that no grain would move through Churchill this season unless farm deliveries increased.

They are blaming the fact that farm deliveries are down for not having enough grain to get to the port of Churchill. That is a rather flimsy excuse. If the government were really serious about making use of the port of Churchill, there were three or four months prior to July 4 during which farmers were delivering grain and the CN was hauling grain to Churchill. If the government had been serious about making use of the port of Churchill to the extent which it can be used, it would have had grain shipped to that port ready for export. I find it unfortunate that we will not be able to make use of the port of Churchill this year to the extent it should be used.

I would like to refer briefly to the port of Prince Rupert, which has long been known as a good port. The facilities there for handling grain are not necessarily what they should be in terms of meeting Canada's exports in the future. The goal of all parties, I think, is to increase our exports by 50 per cent, or to attempt to get to a point where we can export 30 million tons of grain out of Canada by 1985. To do that, we must make better use of the port of Prince Rupert.

Within two months of the previous minister of transport, the hon. member for Vegreville, assuming office he had a memorandum of understanding on the construction of the new facility at Prince Rupert. This required a considerable amount of negotiation, I am told. There was a considerable amount of good will on both sides in order that this agreement of understanding could be signed in such a short time. Within less than two months of the now Minister of Transport assuming office, he called into question the whole construction timetable in so far as the port of Prince Rupert was concerned. The Minister of Transport did this by questioning the amount of money which the federal government would be willing to put into the port to handle the cost of some of the infrastructure. In addition, upon assuming office the previous minister of transport, the hon. member for Vegreville, also approved the site at Ridley Island and reached an agreement with the consortium, based on some $40 million of federal government money being available to handle the cost of some of the infrastructure. Unfortunately that has been delayed. The deadline for signing the agreement, I understand, has been postponed three times from the original date of March 30, 1980. The final date for signing, as I understand it, has not yet been set.

What we have seen in the period of time that this government assumed office is that the port of Churchill will not be used to the extent that it should be and that the timetable for the construction of facilities at Ridley Island in the port of Prince Rupert has been delayed.

I find the concern of the government over spending money to see that western Canada is in a position to export some of its products, which would contribute to the benefit of the whole country, inconsistent with the statement in the throne speech that rail facilities will be upgraded and port facilities improved. It seems to me that what has happened during the three months since the throne speech is the exact opposite to what was referred to in the throne speech.

Another area of transport to which I would like to refer concerns air service to the city of Brandon. My constituency runs very close to the city of Brandon. In fact, the Brandon airport is in the constituency of Portage-Marquette, so this matter if of very great concern to me as well as the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) and other hon. members from western Manitoba and southeastern Saskatchewan. Last November the then minister of transport changed the air transport policy to allow a regional air carrier to apply for a route between Calgary, Brandon and Toronto, but nothing has happened since then. PWA applied for that route but no hearings have been scheduled, although I am told they are supposed to be held in the fall.

Almost a year after the policy was changed by the previous minister in order to allow an adequate service between Brandon and points east and west, nothing has happened. Brandon is a productive and aggressive community of some 40,000 people and services an area of some 140,000 people in southwestern Manitoba, so it needs and deserves a jet air service. The government has done nothing to see that the service is made available, however. I find this rather unfortunate, Mr. Speaker.

Just this week I was somewhat infuriated when a press release came to my attention stating that Frontier Air Lines had been granted a licence to serve Saskatchewan cities. This is an American airline based in Nevada, yet it was granted a licence to fly between Saskatoon, Regina and Minot, North Dakota, and on to Denver without a hearing being held. This foreign carrier applied for and was awarded a route without a hearing, yet a Canadian carrier willing to provide a needed service that would be well supported, and without subsidy, was told that a hearing was necessary. PWA was the only applicant for the route to service Brandon. The government does not seem to have the courage to instruct the CTC to set a date for that hearing. This is a rather shocking way to deal with constituents, Mr. Speaker.

In his remarks the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) said that he was interested in a fair deal for all constituents in Canada. I take him at his word and hope he will prevail upon the Minister of Transport to set a date for a hearing so that we can supply a first-class air service to an area of the country that so badly needs it. This is particularly important in view of the fact that a licence was granted without a hearing to an American airline to serve an area of western Canada.

In the throne speech the government said that a meat import act would be introduced in order to protect consumers and producers. The drought in western Canada is serious and will cause problems for the rest of this year and next year as well. That is assuming that we have normal rainfall and a normal growing season for 1980-81. Cattle and grain produced now will not necessarily be sold for another year. The lack of moisture over the last six months has already had its effect on what will be offered for sale in 1980-81.

The cattle industry has been calling for a beef import law for a long time. It was sorely needed in 1976 when Canada was the only major importing country with open borders for beef. In that year both Australia and New Zealand sold very large quantities of beef in this country at prices lower than those in the United States. At that time the United States had a beef import law which protected cattlemen and precluded excessive imports from offshore.

When the Conservative government was formed over a year ago, one of its priorities was a beef import law. I understand that the legislation was ready and would have been introduced in the last week before Christmas. This government, however, has shown no intention of introducing such legislation in this session. This is a very important piece of legislation, as beef producers are now making the decision whether to increase or decrease the size of their herds. The lack of rainfall and the resultant lack of feed has led to the present critical conditions. If producers knew that the government cared enough to protect them from excessive imports such as was the situation in 1975-76, they would be encouraged to breed more animals and thus make more beef available.

Unfortunately the government has not seen fit to give this legislation any priority. I would argue very strongly that it should be brought forward and dealt with as quickly as possible.

Last year, with some other members from this side of the House, I had the opportunity to sit on a beef import consultative committee which made recommendations on what the beef import legislation should contain. The guaranteed minimum access levels that Canada is committed to under the GATT negotiations imposes certain limitations on the legislation but if the legislation the government proposes is anything like the legislation the previous government intended to introduce, I am sure it would receive support on all sides of the House and could be dealt with very quickly. It is unfortunate it was not brought forward in this session. It should have been the law of the land by now and would certainly have been of use to beef producers when planning their future beef herds.

Another area of concern is the Two-Price Wheat Act. The government has not seen fit to introduce a bill on this subject but instead a Senate bill to amend the act is before the House for consideration. This is an urgent problem. As a poor crop is expected in western Canada, this bill would be welcomed by producers who will have less for sale this year than in previous years. If the government were serious in its attempts to have this bill passed, I am sure it would receive the support of this side of the House. Unfortunately, however, it has been dealt with as "filler" legislation brought in on three or four successive Friday afternoons in order to round out a week's activity. It deserves better, Mr. Speaker.

I have one more comment to make before I close, Mr. Speaker. It is unfortunate that the government has not set the initial price of wheat higher than the present level. The initial price for the next crop year is 25 cents per bushel less than the initial price producers are presently receiving. I find this rather shocking in view of the fact that grain prices have increased. There is really no reason why initial grain prices could not be increased substantially.

I should now like to refer to some comments made to me in the House on May 16 by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), as reported at page 1176 of Hansard. At that time the Farm Improvement Loans Act was under debate. I was making the point that producers would be interested in receiving more for their products so that they would not have to borrow money. When you borrow money you have to pay it back. I urged the minister seriously to consider increasing the initial price of grain. I had been referring to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board who sits in the other place when the Minister of Agriculture replied as follows:

He is, and he is very much aware of it.

I replied that I heard the Minister of Agriculture talking about increasing the initial price and he replied, "It will be done."

That was May 16, Mr. Speaker, but so far we have not seen any action. I would encourage both the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board to increase the initial price of wheat. This is something that could be done very easily, would be well received and is long overdue for western grain producers.

In closing, in the three months since the throne speech was delivered on April 14, we have seen some great inconsistencies in what is contained in the throne speech with regard to agriculture. If the government is serious about keeping some of the commitments it made in the throne speech, I urge that it look very seriously at addressing some of the problems I have tried to point out here this afternoon.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it is really encouraging to see a western member occupying the Speaker's chair in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: At the conclusion of his remarkable speech when he was urging the building of a Canadian transcontinental railway, Sir John A. Macdonald, then prime minister of Canada, had this to say as reported at page 494 of volume one of the Hansard debates of 1880-81:

I can trust to the intelligence of this House, and the patriotism of this country, I can trust not only to the patriotism but to the common sense of this country to carry out an arrangement which will give us all we want, which will satisfy all the loyal legitimate aspirations which will give us a great, an united, a rich, an improving, a developing Canada, instead of making us tributary to American laws, to American—

—gas companies—

—to American bondage, to American tolls, to American freights, to all the little tricks and big tricks that American—

—gas companies—

—are addicted to—

I have made a change in two places in that speech by Sir John. In two places I changed the word "railways" to "gas companies". Otherwise that is the verbatim statement of Sir John A. Macdonald in this very House in discussing the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. Kempling: How can you change words and say it is a verbatim statement?

Mr. Waddell: I want to use those remarks and refer to a decision that is being made this very afternoon by cabinet somewhere in this building, or on the Hill, probably one of the most important decisions for Canada. In the Speech from the Throne, the government in its own words says that pipelines are really like railways; that what railways were in the nineteenth century, pipelines are in the twentieth century. Today the cabinet of Canada must decide what they are going to do about authorizing the pre-build of the Alaska highway natural gas pipeline.

The minister of trade was here a minute ago. I thought he might be interested in this. The economic development agency in the United States, in a pre-hearing procedure this week, suggested that it might have the United States back out of Canadian gas imports, back out of the sales. I suspect that cabinet this afternoon must be asking itself why we are sticking our neck out in approving this pre-build if the Americans are going to act that way. I suspect that is one of the elements in the delay today, yesterday and before that.

I like to think that myself and my party had something to do with the delay in pressing for rejection of this crazy scheme, but I think I am honest and probably realistic enough to know that the delay was probably a deliberate action by cabinet, that they were about to make a very big mistake and the Americans do not deserve to get this handed to them on a platter.

I equated pipelines with railways and I quoted Sir John because the pipeline issue today involves some of the issues that involved railways in the past, including the whole issue of Canadian independence. The whole issue of Canadian energy security is the reason for some of the questions I put in the past week and a half to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). It also raises the whole issue of the role of Parliament.

In addition to the members and the press, I notice there are full galleries in the House today with many Canadians visiting here. I would like to try and simplify what is involved in this so-called pre-build. I suspect that most Canadians do not understand it, or better still are just coming to an understanding of what the whole issue is about before it gets railroaded past the House of Commons and through cabinet by the gas and oil companies.

This goes back to 1968. In the late sixties oil was discovered in Prudhoe Bay, on the north coast of Alaska. I have been there; it is a very desolate place. In winter the temperature goes down to about 78 below.

Mr. Nielsen: That's warm!

Mr. Waddell: The member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) says that is warm. I say it is a cold, desolate place. To use the words of an engineer who, in his Louisiana accent, said, "We have a real elephant here.", they do. They found oil there in the late sixties. Of course, the large multinational companies cornered the oil fields and the market. Coming from Alberta, Mr. Speaker, you know that when they pump for oil, there is gas as well. Sometimes the gas is injected back into the well to keep up the pressure. That is what is happening in those great fields in Prudhoe Bay, Alaska, at this moment.

A pipeline was built to take Alaskan oil to the lower 48 states. Unfortunately—and I say that because it was probably the wrong direction—this pipeline, which ended up costing $8 billion and was supposed to cost $700 million, went from Prudhoe Bay to Valdez. I have been the entire route of the pipeline. Let me tell hon. members that it is an engineering marvel across Alaska. The problem is it drops the oil in Valdez, on the southern coast of Alaska, and the oil has to go by tanker past the magnificent beaches of British Columbia, near my colleague's riding and my own on the west coast of B.C. These beaches are in danger of a big oil spill. However, that is another matter. The pipeline should have been built down the route of the Alaska highway. It would have made more sense. However, the government of the day did not have its act together—and we have the same problem now—and could not get the approval in place for the overland pipeline, so that is the way it was build.

So much for all that oil. It is going now. What about the gas? They need the gas. I am told by an expert in Canadian gas that the gas is worth between $100 billion and $125 billion, a lot of money. It is just sitting there. It will have to be brought out as it is needed in the United States. There was a proposal that Canada help the Americans. Why not? We will help them out if we can.

The notion was that they build a pipeline. They were going to build a pipeline from Prudhoe Bay through the Mackenzie delta to pick up Canadian gas, bring it down through the Mackenzie valley and take it down to points in the lower 48 states and in part to eastern Canada. There were disputes and hearings about it. That is what the Berger commission inquiry into the Mackenzie valley pipeline proposal was all about—something I spent three years of my life working on. There were magnificent hearings and there was magnificent public participation in that inquiry. It was pretty obvious that we were not ready to bring our gas down, first of all because we really did not have it on stream in the Mackenzie valley and, second, because we were not ready in terms of the social impact on the native people and other people in the Mackenzie valley to have the pipeline constructed.

● (1540)

It was therefore suggested by Bob Blair of Calgary that another pipeline be built to follow the route of the Alaska Highway and that it bring American gas to American markets. That made sense. We were giving it access across our country, but Canada would benefit because we could hook up to our reserves in what we call the Dempster lateral from Whitehorse up to the Beaufort Sea.

Mr. Nielsen: Dawson.

Mr. Waddell: Dawson, to be precise, a little north of Whitehorse.

Mr. Nielsen: A little over 350 miles away.

Mr. Waddell: We were going to hook that up, plus we were going to provide some jobs, get some construction contracts.

What was the position of our party in the House of Commons? Let me make the position of our party very clear on that issue. Our party is a democratic party so we are bound by our convention resolutions. Our convention in 1977 passed a motion to the effect that we were agreeable to that pipeline provided there were proper environmental safeguards in place and provided that there were sufficient jobs for Canadians. The Canadian government, as in the case of many other things, made a hash of the negotiations with the Americans and did not get a really good deal for Canada. We approved the pipeline in principle but we voted against the specific bill because it did not give those particular job guarantees and so on. That was our position. We are not against the notion of the pipeline.

That is what happened and Parliament passed the northern Pipeline Act in 1978 for a gas pipeline to transport American gas through Canada to the lower 48 states. That line was set out, and it is interesting to read the speeches of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) and other people who took part in that debate. If you read those speeches it becomes quite clear that Parliament was to be consulted. The Minister of Finance said that in his speech, as reported at page 4120 of Hansard of April 4, 1978.

The President of the Privy Council told us not to worry, as reported at page 2894 of Hansard of February 15, 1978. He said the whole pipeline would be built, that there would have to be financing for the whole pipeline, that we would be protected against non-completion; and in all the committee hearings there was statement after statement by one government member after another that legislation would ensure that there was financing for the whole pipeline and that there were commitments that the whole thing would go. The Americans, they said, wanted the pipeline and they should finance it. Well, that made sense.

Problems erupted. The Americans, for whatever reason—and I will suggest a reason in a moment—could not raise the money to finance the pipeline. Exxon, to be specific, was giving the pipeline agency difficulties in putting in a financial guarantee for the building of the pipeline in Alaska. I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker. That gas up there is worth $100 billion to $125 billion. The oil company is in no hurry to get it out. Leave it in there for a few years, until the 1990s then bring it out. It will be worth four, five, ten, 20 times that amount—some $500 billion. They are banking it up there, that is what is happening. Where can they get gas in the meantime? "Let us call on our good friends in Canada." So they approached Mr. Blair.

Let me go back for a minute and remind the House that Canadian arctic gas executives from Toronto once said—and I was there at the time—"This guy Blair will never be able to get the financing for this line." So he said: "Sure I can get the financing for the line", and he was made businessman of the year. He was a wonderful man; he said he could get the financing. But the others were right, Blair could not get the financing, so he came back and proposed to the Canadian government: "Well, let's just amend the act; let's make a pre-build of the pipeline. Let us take Canadian gas and pay for the whole pipeline by shipping out Canadian gas."

Today the Government of Canada—and I cannot believe the Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) can sleep at night after making this decision—is prepared to okay an export pipeline to take away Canadian gas, to suck out Canadian gas and to send it to the United States, two trillion cubic feet of it.

I raised in the House, to the yawns of the ministry, another agreement. It was called a backstop agreement. In that backstop agreement TransCanada Pipelines, a Canadian company, said they would guarantee that gas would go through there. So we saw the ludicrous situation that if the whole line is never built and it never takes Alaska gas, not only will we first of all sell our Canadian gas at cheap prices, but we will even guarantee that gas will go through there. This means that TransCanada will have to send Ontario gas down from Ontario, through the pipeline, and back into Ontario.

I called it bizarre in the House of Commons. We had a great pipeline debate about keeping the pipeline in Canada and about shipping Canadian gas through Canadian pipelines. I find it strange. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, you may say: "Well, Canadians are not stupid; obviously, if they are going to send this gas out, if they are going to send out all this Canadian gas, now up to four trillion cubic feet, from Alberta, here is what they will do. They will get an agreement from the Americans; we will swap; we will give them that gas now and then, when they build the whole pipeline up to Alaska, we will get Alaskan gas."

I asked the minister about this and I discovered there are no swap agreements in the scheme. So what do we do? We sell out all the cheap Canadian gas and then later on we will have to pay a lot of money, two, three, four times as much. Canadian consumers, out of their pockets, will have to pay that because we sold all their gas off at a cheap rate to the Americans with no swap provisions. I asked the minister about this in the House. Do you know what his reply was, Mr. Speaker? He said, "Well, when I was at Venice last week I had some discussions with the American secretary of the interior and we tried but we didn't really get anywhere."

I asked him about guarantees. I said that if you are going to pre-build this part in the south, how about a guarantee that the whole thing will be built? After all, this is a $600 million project. That whole project will cost $22 billion, $8 million of which is incurred in Canada. Wouldn't that make sense? The minister of industry must be concerned about jobs, of course he is. But what is the point of providing one-tenth of the jobs if, when you hold out and are tough and you put this thing over for a year, you postpone it for a year, you could go back and really get American guarantees? I tell the minister we could get the whole loaf, not just one-tenth.

Senator Olson sends telegrams. I have seen his telegrams. Senator Olson, the lobbyist for the oil and gas companies, goes out and gets these telegrams. They are from gas companies and from some trade unions—

Mr. Gray: A lot.

Mr. Waddell: No, from some, not all of them; from some trade unions who are worried about immediate jobs, as well they should be. But other trade unionists realize that in the long term there are ten times more jobs there, and in the long term there will be jobs in terms of constructing a pipeline to the maritimes. But it has stopped at Quebec; they wouldn't make a pipeline to the maritimes. There would be jobs in terms of making a pipeline to Vancouver Island. We have had no commitment on that.

Now, I ask this question, Mr. Speaker. As the cabinet makes its decision today, where does the minister of energy stand? I have a great deal of sympathy for him because I think that one part of his energy policy—to move Canadians off expensive imported oil to cheaper Canadian gas—makes a lot of sense. I think that makes sense, and I think it makes sense to Canadians. But it surely does not make sense to Canadians if they are told that and then told that we sold all their cheap gas five years ago.

I cannot see how the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources can live with that. When he was in opposition he said he would agree with the pre-build if we got some gas swaps and some ironclad guarantees that the whole line will be built. I asked him in the House, "Can you stand up with a straight face and tell me that those are ironclad guarantees?" I was referring to a resolution of Congress which does not bind the future Congress and which does not spend one bit of money. There was a commitment by private companies to do studies. There was reference to 2 per cent of the project. I know the government has a letter in its back pocket from President Carter which says he is in favour of it too; but he is not prepared to commit money, and we do not know how long he is going to be around. However, it is no commitment at all, and I do not say that in a partisan way. I say wait, we can get a better commitment.

I hear some Liberal backbenchers putting in their two cents' worth. Let me address some remarks to them. One of the big issues in this particular matter is the role of Parliament. There was a Northern Pipeline Act passed. That was what Parliament wanted, and hon. members opposite said that there have to be guarantees. The Prime Minister says he is going to get around parliament; he is not going to come back and he is not going to have a debate. He will not have a debate in Parliament. He will not bring in a change in the act. He says it is like the St. Lawrence Seaway and that this is only building one little part. You build one lock and then another lock. Does that make sense? It is like approving the St. Lawrence Seaway and building the Erie Canal. It is approving a transport pipeline from Alaska and building an export pipeline from Alberta, and that is not logical.

The Prime Minister was being a sharp Philadelphia lawyer in deflecting those questions. He knows full well that it does not make any difference, but I think one of the reasons he is afraid to have a debate on this matter is that he would have to have a vote if he brought in legislation, and I suspect and hope there would be some Liberal members from the industrial cities of the east who might oppose such legislation.

What are they going to tell their constituents? Are they going to tell them that it will cost four or five times as much for gas in the future because of this decision? How are they going to explain that? Some of them might vote against it.

I refer hon. members opposite to the Liberal Party of Canada convention program, projet de manifeste or discussion paper at page 50, where it says the following:

> The Government of Canada must be in the position to judge the energy security of each region and area of Canada. The operations of the oil and gas industry must be thoroughly understood and the national interest assured.
> (a) As far as is practicable, a distribution network should ensure that all regions of Canada are linked to the provinces rich in energy resources.

Look at what the government is doing. It is taking gas and selling it out to the United States. Hon. members opposite are making a farce of their own energy policy. They are making a farce of their own convention policy. Is that the leadership that this government is giving? I hear about the new Liberals. Where are they?

Mr. Tobin: Right here.

Mr. Waddell: Are they prepared to stand for this program? Where are the new ideas?

The discussion paper also states, and I quote:

> (b) Exports of energy or energy sources should be very carefully assessed to guarantee Canada's long-term interests.

If the government approves the pre-build, the government will sell out our cheap gas to buy back expensive gas in the future.

I want to conclude by making reference to two things. I want to refer first to the position of my own province of British Columbia. If British Columbians and the government of British Columbia are worried about a proposed export tax on gas, that is chicken feed compared with what this pre-build is going to do. This pre-build will lock in all the gas in British Columbia and all the gas exports. It will be the end of the present markets for British Columbian gas. I am surprised at my hon. friends to the right, the Conservatives. I am shocked. There are 16 members from British Columbia, and not one of them has put British Columbia's interest ahead. It was the Prime Minister who had to stand up and count noses— "Are you in favour? Are you in favour?"

The other day the Conservatives tried to take cheap political advantage of the Liberals on the issue. They did not set out their own position, and it turns out that they are in favour of the pre-build. As a matter of fact, they approved a lot of gas exports. The 16 Conservative members from British Columbia are selling out British Columbia. I do not think he intended to do so, but in a sense the Prime Minister misled the House this afternoon when he suggested that western Canada was for this pipeline.

I read the telegrams from Premier Lougheed and the gas companies. What about those gas companies? Let us be fair; they are Canadian gas companies. They have a cash flow problem, and they have a surplus of gas. Last week Evelyn Gigantes, the MPP from the Ottawa area and our party's energy critic in the Ontario House, and I proposed that Ontario buy $1 billion worth of gas from those small companies and bank it in the ground in Alberta. We proposed that it not be given away to the Americans but left there for the use of Canadians in a few years. I see an hon. member shaking his head. That proposal sounds sensible to me. It sounds like a sensible idea, and if the hon. member has reasons why it would not work, I wish he would tell me. But it seems to make sense for Ontario, Quebec and other provinces.

Let me conclude finally on this note: We on this side of the House take a position which is quite clear: we are against the pre-build. We think it is a sellout. We think it is different from the act. We think we can get a better deal. We would agree to the pre-build if we could get two things. The first is gas swaps so that we could get gas later on and keep our energy security. The second is that we get guarantees that the whole line will be build.

I am not known for being non-partisan, but I am trying to say this in a non-partisan way because I know the cabinet is meeting. The Prime Minister asked for representations, and I am giving him my representations in the best way I know. It seems to me that the policy put forward by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when he was opposition energy critic was a sensible policy. He was right, and now hon. members opposite are going to turn around and destroy their whole energy policy.

In any case, I want to finish by saying that we on this side of the House have said that there is another issue. Oh, it is perhaps not as well known or as big, but it is just as important. That issue is the rights of Parliament. That is why we are digging. We are digging in because Parliament really is becoming obsolete. The power has been centralized in the cabinet. We really have a dictatorship between elections.

Do hon. members opposite want to take away the whole intent of the law of Parliament without coming back to Parliament? They have the votes. Let them come back to Parliament and pass an amending act. We will wait here. We get paid to come here, not to go home and take three months' holidays. We will wait, listen to the debate and vote. Let us get the guarantees and the issues out so that the Canadian people will understand. That is what Parliament is all about. That is what Sir John A. Macdonald was talking about when he spoke in Parliament.

The Prime Minister asked for representations today, and on behalf of the New Democratic Party I have tried to give those representations.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I will start out by saying that the best proof that democracy is alive and well in Canada and that we have not in fact been reduced to dictatorship is the fact that the kind of rhetoric we have just heard is listened to—although perhaps not always quietly—and put up with in this most distinguished chamber. I want to tell the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) that I was impressed by his arguments, by his style and by his ability to communicate his thoughts. He almost had me going for a while. If only the hon. member and his party were consistent, I think he would have had me going, perhaps trotting across the floor or something or other.

• (1600)

If the hon. member and his party showed the same kind of concern, the same kind of conviction in Canada during April and May when the referendum was on, that he showed in the House today, I may have taken him seriously, Mr. Speaker. At a time when most of us in this House—and I give the Conservatives and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) credit—were concerned about the future of this country, at a time when most of us in this House miss no opportunity to stand up and be counted for Canada publicly—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: —at a time when we did that, where were the NDP? Silent. Let me tell you why, Mr. Speaker. We have opposite a party of media junkies. They must have their daily or weekly fix.

Some hon. Members: Ha, ha!

Mr. Tobin: We all know that for some time we have been talking about adjourning this session.

An hon. Member: Who is taking a fix now?

Mr. Tobin: We have been talking about adjourning the House tomorrow, and all of a sudden we have developed in the benches opposite a matter of great national concern. On Friday hon. members are going to represent the Canadian people perhaps until three o'clock or four o'clock Saturday morning, because I will be here. They are going to put on a little display, another fix. You can see them jittering in their boots. Anyway, they have had their fix; now just sit quietly and I will tell them what the government has done since we brought in the throne speech three months ago.

An hon. Member: Yes, fill us in.

Mr. Tobin: I would like to examine some of our policies and enlighten them on the good things we are doing.

I would like to express a number of concerns, Mr. Speaker. We spoke about the importance of responding to individual needs—nothing that hon. members opposite know anything about; they have a cloning process over there. We wanted to bring some assistance to those who need help most in Canada, in particular senior citizens. We have done that. We brought in legislation which will mean a $35 increase, as we promised those receiving the guaranteed income supplement in Canada. My only concern about that is that some of the provinces in Canada—I can single out my own, Newfoundland—are not passing on that $35 to senior citizens; they are pocketing most of it and putting it into general revenue.

The hon. member opposite was talking about energy. That is one of the issues mentioned in the throne speech. This is the party which in the last federal election published a paper called "An NDP Made-in-Canada Energy Policy". It was 26 or 27 pages long. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, there was absolutely no reference to that great energy potential in Canada today, Newfoundland's Hibernia, and Ben Nevis in Nova Scotia. I think it was 42 pages long. I think they had the idea that probably Canada stopped at Toronto. As a matter of fact, the election results would indicate that, so far as the NDP is concerned, Canada does not go any further east than Montreal because they have been wiped off the electoral map in Atlantic Canada. And is it any wonder?

Mr. Knowles: How far west do you go?

Mr. Tobin: We go right across the country.

An hon. Member: This sounds like Newfie blarney.

Mr. Tobin: Listen here, m'son, I may twin with you!

Some hon. Members: Ha, ha!

Mr. Knowles: You stopped at Waverley Street in Winnipeg.

Mr. Tobin: First, let me speak for a moment about the Canadian energy policy in Newfoundland. In my province we have on our doorstep today, as we are told every day the estimates are higher, massive potential for development which is becoming more certain every day. We believe in our province and we look upon this potential development as an opportunity to strengthen our social and economic fabric. But despite what some provincial politicians are suggesting, we also look upon this potential bonanza as an opportunity for a province which for 31 years has been sharing in the wealth of this country, the tax dollars of this country, to contribute to the well-being of all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I become a little upset with the opportunistic type of comments and with the politicians in this chamber who want to raise falsely the expectations of Canadians and who carry the proverbial stick with the perpetual carrot dangling from the end of it. The Quebec referendum is the best example. I do not know how you can live with yourselves.

An hon. Member: It is sad.

Mr. Tobin: It really is sad. We in Newfoundland expect the lion's share of Newfoundland's offshore development, but in terms of strengthening our economy and our social fabric, we also look forward to sharing with the rest of the country.

One of the things about which we are concerned is what we hear more and more every day from the provinces, and this is why the constitution must be repatriated. For example, in my province we hear that only Newfoundlanders will work in Newfoundland, says Brian Peckford; and only Nova Scotians will work in Nova Scotia, says John Buchanan. Only Newfoundlanders will catch fish in Newfoundland waters, says Brian Peckford; and only Nova Scotians will catch fish in Nova Scotia waters, says John Buchanan. And René says the same about Quebec. All across the country we have premiers who claim to the representing the best interests of their people, who claim to reflect the aspirations and concerns of their people, who, I think, are really divorced from the concerns and aspirations of their people.

We talk now about an oil pricing agreement, and whether or not we will go to world prices, which Alberta would desire. I am sure we are going to reach a reasonable compromise in these oil pricing talks, because I can tell the House now that Newfoundlanders are good Canadians and Newfoundlanders look forward to sharing the potential of our shores with all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: But, as we say at home, what is sauce for the goose had better be sauce for the gander. I would be disheartened and surprised, shocked in fact, if we saw an oil pricing agreement with Alberta that was not in the best interests of all Canadians. Because we are going to go to Newfoundland very soon, all of us, to tell Newfoundlanders: "Let us have a sharing of resources to the benefit of all Canadians". I hope we will practice very soon what we shall be preaching in the months and years ahead.

Earlier I mentioned another area on which I am pleased to hear our government is taking action. We have singled it out in the throne speech. It is the question of the free movement of goods and people across borders, an issue about which many of us in Atlantic Canada are concerned. After a few months here I have confidence that this principle is one that this government will do no less than enforce in this country.

With regard to Petro-Canada, I have to get a poke in there. Do hon. members know that Petro-Canada is a 25 per cent owner of the Hibernia oil development off the shores of Newfoundland? We have heard members opposite talking about the Liberals' lack of concern for Canadians. The same members opposite would like to take credit for Petro-Canada. In the Speech from the Throne we indicated that we would strengthen Petro-Canada. We have done that with $80 million. It is a national oil company whose concern is the Canadian people.

• (1610)

I said that I would be short, but as a rookie member of Parliament I should like to say simply that I have sat in the House and have not said a great deal. I am a cynic by nature, but by sitting on this side of the House I have found men, particularly in cabinet, who are men of principle and integrity. They have lived up to the thrust, ideas and convictions put forward in the throne speech debate. I look forward to a very successful four years, five years, ten years, or 15 years on this side of the House.

Mr. Knowles: You are not staying very long, are you?

Mr. Tobin: I would only say one other thing. Perhaps one could call it naive, but as a rookie politician I was surprised, on matters of national importance and concern regarding the energy pricing agreement and the referendum, at the amount of politics.

Like everyone else, I put the best possible face on the policies of my party; that is fair. But there really comes a time when we must put our partisan considerations aside. I say this is one of those times in Canada. Literally the country is being torn apart at the seams. We fail to realize it is not the people of Canada who participate in that tug-of-war at all. The regional and national politicians, with what could sometimes be called more ego at interest than people, make true or false statements which are self-serving. They present their own cases and enhance their own chances at re-election. If anything, that kind of rhetoric by politicians today, at a crucial time in our history, causes me to wonder about the quality of people who are elected and sit as top dogs in some posts in this country. It causes me to wonder if they have the ability to recognize that this is a time of crisis in Canada.

As a young member of Parliament and one who is perhaps naive, thank God, I should like to leave a short message on behalf of the average Joe who sent me here. I address this message without being partisan, not only to my own party but to the other side of the House, particularly the corner of the House. It is time to stop playing games, it really is.

Having said those few words—and I am sure they will mean a lot back home—I take my seat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate have passed Bill S-7, to provide for the prohibition of certain international air services, to which the concurrence of the House is desired.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Côté for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne with some mixed emotions. My emotions are mixed by many things. They are mixed by the fact that this is the third speech I have written because over three months have transpired since the Speech from the Throne was delivered. I sympathize with the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette); he had the same difficulty, only he had to do it in three different stages.

Also my emotions are mixed by the government's record since April 14, the heat of July, the imminent return to our constituencies and families and our frustrations at both the lack of action, on the one hand, and the method of action, on the other.

It is my understanding that the Speech from the Throne is designed to outline the government's legislative program and what it will do, its philosophical attitude toward its term of office. Since my remarks provide me with an opportunity to review what the government has done, I should like to review the Speech from the Throne. I say to the member who spoke before me that when he commenced to address the Speech from the Throne, he indicated that he would review the great number of things his government had done since April 14. I took pen to paper and thought that I would make sure I did not miss anything. I made note of the $35 GIS increase, the $80 million to Petro-Canada, and then I stopped writing because that is all there was.

An hon. Member: You missed something.

Mr. Lewis: If the hon. member sticks around, he will not. In the original Speech from the Throne, His Excellency referred to the opportunity he had to visit the provincial capitals and the Northwest Territories during his first year of office. I make reference to that because of the fact he mentioned he was looking forward to visiting smaller communities across our vast and beautiful land. We in the riding of Simcoe North were pleased in June when he visited us. He has become a man of the people. He moves among the people very readily. He and his wife bring a grace and a presence, a warmth and a tradition of that office to the country of Canada. I am pleased to say that he is very, very well received in the country.

The Speech from the Throne referred to serious challenges. Canadians everywhere would agree that we face serious challenges, though we are fortunate enough to have great opportunities. The people of my riding will face those challenges in the 1980s as they have in the past. There is a determined resilience and an energy in my constituency and all of Canada to conquer the challenges of the eighties. The Speech from the Throne called for action. We commend the government's desire for that action.

Reference was made in the Speech from the Throne to the accumulation of essential legislation left from previous Parliaments. We were asked to dispatch that backlog expeditiously. It was suggested that the government is relying on the good will of members and senators of all parties. I was a new member during the last Parliament and I watched members opposite to see what good will was all about. I saw them debate the budget of the hon. member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) of the fall of 1978 for 21 days during the fall of 1979 although it had not been changed. Where was that good will last fall? Where was that good will on the night of April 21 when the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) introduced a ways and means motion which was substantially what he condemned in December? Where was that good will when our party and the New Democratic Party were denied the traditional right to review that legislation? Sure, it was a ways and means motion, but Your Honour and I know it was legislation. Where was that good will?

I understand the Minister of Finance is suffering from a throat infection. It is no wonder, because that throat has had to swallow a lot of pride. If there was any good will left after April 21, it was blasted out of the water on July 11, which was a Friday, late in the week, when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) introduced his infamous tax on Canadian people. I know Mr. Speaker's background is that of a lawyer. There is a saying in the courts, "If you come to court demanding equity and justice, you must come with clean hands". I say to the government, "If you come to us relying on our good will, you must demonstrate good will yourself".

Reference has been made today and in the throne speech to the referendum in Quebec. On May 20 the people of Quebec went to the polls. Sixty per cent voted to remain a part of Canada and 40 per cent showed their dissatisfaction. I think 100 per cent deserve a better deal from this government. One hundred per cent of all Canadians deserve a better deal from the federal government.

I wonder where the Liberal party has been for the last 17 years. Why was this dissatisfaction on the part of Quebeckers allowed to reach the point where they challenged the federal government, which is controlled in all its aspects by an overwhelming Quebec Liberal caucus? That feeling of dissatisfaction pervades all provinces. Unrest is evident everywhere because there is a lack of understanding. We do not like the method of negotiation, we do not like the province-bashing and we do not like the people who were sent to negotiate. Whatever the results of the referendum, we want to solve the problems. The government wants to anticipate them; we want to solve them with understanding. There are no winners and there are no losers when the constitution is debated. Canada and Canadians must be the winners.

It is my specific responsibility as a member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition to monitor, criticize and review the efforts of the minister of housing. In pious tones in the Speech from the Throne—one of the things that was missed in the list—it was stated that we are going to assist those unable to bear the burden of renegotiating their home mortgages in the present abnormal situation so that the spectre of foreclosure will be avoided. We know of no specific programs. We know of no specific help. And as the government said, the interest rates are coming down because the country faces a recession which this government is leading us into. We know that this government has accepted quit claims just as subway conductors accept transfers, as people abandon their homes leaving CMHC to resell them at prices that are lower than those of their neighbours who stay.

The Speech from the Throne said that we are going to encourage higher standards of home insulation. I commend the minister because that study has been made. I do not want hon. members to think that I am just picking the things that were not done. The study has been made, the study was necessary, and on this side of the House we look forward to receiving the results of that study.

The Speech from the Throne also talked about an improved Canadian home insulation program. Where is it? It is now July. We are coming to the month of August. It is insulation time but there is no program. There are no improvements.

I am pleased to see that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) is in the House. In the Speech from the Throne there was reference made to the increased effort to develop critical trade skills. I would implore the minister to concentrate on that. We are faced with a double tragedy in Canada. We have a rapidly aging population of skilled tradesmen and we have young people out of work. We have to take action at all levels to curb this problem.

I know that the role of the federal government does not get into education; that is the responsibility of the provinces. However, there is a part for the federal government to play in co-ordinating the on-the-job training and the tax concessions that can be worked on. In my riding there are some very good people in the minister's department who go out to seek those opportunities. What we have to do is to push that program right across this country. There are link community projects which link the high schools and community colleges. The federal government and manpower department should be pushing that on-the-job training. It is vital to us because of the rapidly advancing average age of our skilled tradesmen.

In the Speech from the Throne it is suggested that the government will enter into a new partnership with voluntary agencies and local organizations in a program of community service. This suggestion concerns me. People might ask why. In my opinion, the LIP grant mentality of the Liberal government over the past decade has eaten away at the morale of the volunteer segment of society.

Once upon a time Canadians performed a service to the community because they were concerned for humanity. There were worth-while community projects which Canadians accepted as part of their duty. Those programs are now being performed by civil servants, pseudo-civil servants and people working on grants. The government takes longer. It spends more and it destroys the will of Canadians to contribute to their communities. I urge this government to take a long, hard look at the volunteer sector of society. I suggest that we make it a partnership with a purpose and not a partnership by purchase.

Terry Fox is running across Canada to raise money for cancer research. He should become a symbol for Canadians to show what we can do in the volunteer sector of society. He is not working on a grant; he is working on a lot of determination, effort and concern. He is raising money by that dedication and concern. He will do it the way we used to do it before the federal government got into the business.

I wish to deal briefly with energy policy. I commend this government for recognizing that we need an energy policy in 1980. I will not talk about the 1970s or the 1960s when the government did not think we needed one. It has been suggested that a made-in-Canada price will solve everything. We think that the petroleum price auditing agency will act as a watchdog. There are a lot of questions to be asked. We are going to hold this government to an energy policy. Our party fought the last election on the basis that we were committed to one price for Canadians. We felt we should pay our way. We did not want to lay our deficits at the feet of our children and that meant an excise tax of 18 cents per gallon to pay for the courage of our convictions.

It has been suggested in the Speech from the Throne: "My ministers do not intend to impose an 18-cent increase in the excise tax on transportation fuels and the made-in-Canada price will result in a lower price to consumers than the one proposed in the budget of the previous administration." Those words are as infamous as the words "We will never impose wage and price controls."

The tax of 2.4 cents per gallon on heating oil will result in a higher tax for consumers than that proposed in the budget by our party. The tax of 2.4 cents per gallon is to permit the world price to be paid for tar sands energy. Not 85 per cent of world price, but world price. That is what we said we would never move toward.

I say that the Liberal party has cast adrift the Liberal candidate in my riding in the last election. He has had some problems. In 1974 in Scarborough West, Alan Martin said "We will never institute wage and price controls". In 1979 he went back to the same people. In 1980 he tried my riding and he said "The Liberals will not impose an 18-cent excise tax on transportation fuels". He did not say that it would be less, he did not say it would be more. He forgot all about home heating oil. He said that the Liberals would ignore world price, and that was an ironclad guarantee. I said that Mr. Martin had been set aside and cast adrift by the Liberals, but really he has not. He has been awarded a contract through the ministry of energy. For 15 days' work he is paid $7,300. My pay, as a member of Parliament, for one year is $30,600.

An hon. Member: Tell the truth.

Mr. Lewis: Let us talk about his expenses now. His expenses for 15 days are $10,300. My expenses for a year are $13,500. I am pleased to have that in the record.

This government promised to reduce the federal deficit in a planned and orderly manner. We want to know when that will start. What was denounced in December was clutched to the bosom of the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) in April as a drowning man reaches for a life raft. The deficit is larger. The planning is absent. We agree with the premise: Canadians want effective government, not necessarily less government. We feel they want it while they are still alive.

● (1630)

I want to deal briefly with our economic potential because I have touched on many other matters. On April 14 the government said that it would reduce the deficit. One week later the deficit went up from $11.5 billion to $14.1 billion.

There is another ray of hope in the Speech from the Throne; this government reaffirmed its commitment to increase Canada's over-all expenditures on research and development to 1.5 per cent of the value of the gross national product. Where was that commitment in 1973 when the rate was 1.01 per cent, in 1974 when it went down to .98 per cent, in 1975 when it went down to .97 per cent, in 1976 when it went down to .93 per cent, in 1977 when it went down to .92 per cent and in 1978 when they broke the barrier of .9 per cent and it went down to .8 per cent? We do not know to what depths it will plunge in 1979. The government must stop paying lip service to research and development and begin to do something about it.

In closing, I want to take issue with two direct references which are of a regional nature found in the Speech from the Throne. They disturb me greatly. First, the government suggested in the Speech from the Throne that members who represent the people of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia have a responsibility to represent their constituents to the nation. It is then suggested that they have an extra responsibility in the present circumstances to represent the nation to their constituents.

In my opinion that is a direct insult to every member in this House from those provinces. As a member from Ontario, I take exception to those remarks in the Speech from the Throne. The root causes of western alienation, as I understand it, are in that kind of thinking which destroys good will, determines enemies and divides our country. We sat here in the Parliament of Canada listening to Liberal cabinet ministers and backbenchers finally representing the nation to their constituents because of the Quebec referendum.

This remark in the Speech from the Throne is a cheap shot at the hon. members from Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia from both parties and I resent it. Those of us who make an effort, not by twinning, to know the members from those provinces know that they are men and women of good will and that they are conscious of the balance between representing their constituencies and representing their country. They do not need to be reminded in this insulting manner. I think that everybody should make an effort, not just from day to day but every day.

It has also been suggested that there are some problems in central Canada. In central Canada it is said that there are some who fear that the economic strength of this region is somehow slipping away, and this has led to envy and bitterness. If that feeling exists, it only exists among members of the Liberal party. As a Progressive Conservative from Ontario, I can tell this House that we do not fear for our economic strength. Sure, there are momentary concerns, but they are always surpassed by an inner strength and resilience which can be found in our province and which some of the members opposite will always envy.

We were a founding partner in confederation and we intend to be a continuing partner in confederation. We reject the envy and bitterness as the problems of lesser men and women. We have faith in our party, in the people of Ontario and Canada which rises above the fears expressed by the Liberal party. Do not worry about the people of Ontario; we are participating partners and dedicated to a strong, united Canada and always will be.

In closing, I would say, as was mentioned by the hon. member who preceded me, that it is time for all of us to think of our country first and our province second. Canada is one country. Let us close ranks and prove it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, since the throne speech debate was interrupted on May 12 last, a major event occurred in the Canadian political life, when a majority of Quebeckers voted against separatism advocated by the PQ party and against its vague project of sovereignty-association, expressing quite clearly their desire to remain in Canada, a Canada where each province will feel more at ease and will benefit from a fairer economic distribution.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it can truly be said that the referendum results have relieved the Canadian people, more especially in Quebec where the tensions among the various classes of society or within families had greatly increased during the referendum campaign. The recent public opinion poll made by the Quebec Employers' Council, of which I have a copy here and which appeared in the July 10 issue of La Presse, shows that the defeat of the separatist option of the Quebec government had a very positive effect in business circles, judging by the satisfaction expressed by Quebec business leaders in that poll at the economic, social and political climate in the province.

Mr. Speaker, 93 per cent of the business leaders polled found the social climate good or acceptable in Quebec since the referendum, while 82 per cent feel the same about the economic climate and 78 per cent are optimistic as to the political climate. That is a significant improvement over a similar poll taken six months before, that is in January 1980, and over all such previous polls taken before 1976 as well. Now, the Quebec premier, Mr. Lévesque, stated following this poll that it would be absurd, that it would be "the height of absurdity to relate the result of the referendum to the improvement in the psychological climate in the Quebec business community.

However, as Yvan Guay, a leader-writer in La Presse, wrote in the July 16 issue, the president of Devencore Realties, one of the largest real estate firms in Montreal, stated recently in an interview with a Gazette reporter that the No-victory in the referendum had given new impetus to construction work in Montreal. Also, the deputy-manager of investment services of A. E. Lepage Company stated that he had made more business deals in the four weeks immediately following the referendum than he had in the five previous months. And a great many other brokers with him, Mr. Speaker. I will not quote Mr. Gray's, in view of the harsh judgment on Mr. Lévesque's biased analysis, but I agree with him when he states in the same article that social peace and political stability are two major factors of a healthy economic climate.

On the basis of these premises, while most Canadians and Quebeckers are anxious to see the current constitutional negotiations come to fast and concrete results, I should like to deal for a while with the present government's concern for the future of our economic development and, more specifically, for putting together a train of economic policies likely to create jobs, accelerate growth, ease regional imbalances and favour Canadian control over our economy, as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. I have been nonplussed by the negative critics voiced by several hon. members from the official opposition this week during the debate on the Progressive Conservative motion, who apparently failed to recognize that over the past four months, the government had shown its firm determination and ability to deal with the problems and avail itself of every possibility resulting from the current economic context, and who dared even deny the fact that we had already implemented some elements of a policy of economic development and industrial strategy.

Mr. Speaker, the planning and drafting of a comprehensive economic and industrial development strategy cannot be done without putting together all the elements of the problem if that is to be done responsibly. And it cannot be done without taking into account the impact such a strategy may have on the orientation of the economy in coming years. So it is understandable that while they have defined all the basic elements of that strategy, as I mentioned earlier, the government should momentarily defer its announcement but you will readily admit that they have in the past four months given priority to that industrial development, job creation, economic growth and regional distribution.

A central factor in the government's initiative was the decision that led to the decision concerning the F-18A planes which is going to promote economic activity and bring about an industrial development of over $3 billion for all of Canada, spread out over various regions, and that will be particularly beneficial to Quebec. When the contract was signed the economic fallouts for Quebec were estimated at $1.573 billion, and as a result of the interest shown by Canadian and Quebec firms, the economic fallouts for both Quebec and the rest of Canada will probably, as we read in several press reports recently, be much greater.

That program, Mr. Speaker, could create up to 24,000 direct and indirect jobs across Canada. The purchase of the new fighter for the Canadian Forces is also a key element in the development of high technology industries like the electronics and aviation industries which will result in promotion of our high technology and allow it to face more effectively foreign competition in the 1980s while at the same time resulting in economic fallouts worth over $3 billion.

There is also, Mr. Speaker, this government's commitment to guarantee private sector loans to the Chrysler Corporation of Canada starting in 1982 for a total of $200 million. At the same time, in return, Chrysler promised to invest $1 billion in Canada during the next five years, in addition to its commitments with regard to job creation, future production and the purchase of parts in Canada.

Everyone knows, of course, that the North American automobile industry is currently going through hard times. The newspapers are full of articles on the subject. And the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) is personally involved in various connections with the industry; his recent visit to Washington, as well as his statements, prove that he is determined to ensure Canada a continued profitable participation in the automobile sector. I would much rather have heard the hon. member for Hamilton-Mountain (Mr. Deans), every time he intervened, encourage the minister in his efforts and actions, rather than try to see the mote in his brother's eye, inasmuch as our minister has proved his will to save jobs and his concern for Canadian workers. The same thing happened last week or the week before when I heard the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) put questions about to the inquiry undertaken by the RCMP into Space Research, as well as the subsidies or loans granted Valleyfield Chemical Products, a firm located in my riding.

Well, I would have preferred more positive questions than those asked by a member who simply wanted to know who the guilty party would be in this matter. We forget that, in subsidizing Space Research and in creating the Valleyfield Chemical Products Company, the federal government took over a business which employed 250 people, and that there are now about 650 employees on the company's payroll. For my part, I believe job conservation is more important and as I said, I would have preferred to hear hon. members urge the government to tidy up what might have been some loose ends in this organization or in these businesses or even with respect to its past, but to deal mainly with preserving these jobs.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to international trade, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has already had a dynamic influence on foreign markets by creating the position of Minister of State for Commerce and, since his return, the possibilities are limitless. The dynamic measures taken by this minister and the creation of an agency to deal with foreign trade will be of great help to exporters and enable the Canadian industry to sustain foreign competition more easily on international markets and on the Canadian market. Obviously, everyone in the House is aware of the views of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) on economic nationalism since he is the author of the famous report published some 10 years ago which called for more stringent measures to lessen the foreign stronghold on the Canadian economy, and led to the creation of the Foreign Investment Review Agency, FIRA. The government is severely criticized and some people ask for tighter legislation on foreign investment control, and yet they express doubt about the government's willingness concerning the amendments it intends to make to the Act.

During the last election campaign and in the Speech from the Throne, the government made known its intention to extend and reinforce FIRA's role, and the minister mentioned in his speech in the House on July 14 that he is contemplating submitting a series of measures to this effect which would reinforce the Canadian participation in the economy, improve the role of foreign companies in our economy. As a result of those prospective changes, Mr. Speaker, FIRA will have to publish before taking any decision the list of all major proposed take-overs which are under review, a procedure that the legislation does not authorize at present. The agency will also be authorized to undertake a periodic performance review of some Canadian branches of foreign corporations in key sectors such as research, development, high technology exports and so on. This is important.

I hope that the same companies will not always be the subject of such performance reviews but that they will be done in an orderly manner and will also deal with the small Canadian companies which can be branches of large international corporations. Those amendments will provide for some financial assistance to Canadians who would like to compete against foreigners and purchase Canadian companies, or buy back the equity held by foreigners in Canadian corporations, or still purchase branches of foreign corporations which would become available.

● (1650)

We also heard last month the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), who was here earlier, announce certain new initiatives in the field of employment, and especially of training, which shows the concern of the government for an essential aspect of the approach we will have to take for the eighties in the area of human resources and manpower adaptation. In addition, the recent establishment of a special parliamentary committee, a task force on employment opportunities in the eighties, will enable the government to obtain the opinions of the greatest possible number of people concerned about future aspects of employment, and especially the needs in specialized fields.

Mr. Speaker, since energy is closely related to the industrial strategy, unlike the Progressive Conservatives who wanted to get rid of Petro-Canada, the government sees in this organization a tool for economic development, to develop our energy resources, and the very basis of our economic development if we also set a Canadian price for our oil. This week I heard certain western members complain about paying the same price as anyone else for consumer goods from the east and about paying the international price for certain products that westerners must buy, and claiming the right for the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan, the producer provinces, to receive the international price for their oil.

For my part, Mr. Speaker, I do not quite agree with all this. My colleague who spoke before me talked about Newfoundland and about the possibility for this province to understand the Canadian entity, the concept of sharing in Canada. As for me, I submit and everyone in this country must realize it, that the international price of oil is an inflated price which does not necessarily reflect production costs. I am prepared to accept the responsibilities of a policy that will ensure that all provinces will benefit from their natural resources, oil or whatever, in an equitable way. But it is through dialogue, through mutual understanding that we will be able to keep moving forward in Canada, while sharing at the same time.

Mr. Speaker, rather than submitting our economy through all the ups and downs created by international producers, we will be in a position with Petro-Canada, with a made-in-Canada price, to maintain our competitive edge on world markets, since our energy resources put us among the top industrialized nations. The new Canadian strategy for industrial development must clearly take into account the future potential of the western world economy, but also the current Canadian industrial structure and certain directions and alternatives that are now open to us on the economic level.

There is increasing reference to gradual liberalization of trade between most GATT members, which means for Canadian businessmen a significant opening of new markets in nearly one hundred nations across the world. During a meeting I attended this week, there was mention of textiles and someone suggested: In the United States things are going because they have a large market. Liberalization of trade will give us access to such a market if trade barriers are abolished. But if they are, there will be more pressure, especially in the weak industries.

Mr. Speaker, I think that even if we must accept stiffer competition on our domestic market, the government should assume its responsibility and protect its own economy. So, it is more than ever necessary to have a well structured economy to face this increasing competition from outside and this is why this government wants to play an active role in the economic situation of 1980.

If we had not purchased, as the Liberal government did, De Havilland and Canadair, I wonder what would have happened to the Canadian aeronautical industry and our country would have deprived itself of a high technology industry which allows most industrialized countries to compete on international markets and create highly specialized jobs. So we will continue to support actively the efforts of those two companies in particular, as well as those of other Canadian manufacturers and exporters, by giving them, through the Export Development Agency, government support like that given by Japan and many other countries to their exporting companies.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal government is committed to support advanced technology industries on which our economy will depend even more in the coming years, but it is also necessary to maintain the hundreds of thousands of existing jobs in the automobile industry to which I referred earlier or other more vulnerable sectors such as textiles and footwear. I know that cabinet was supposed to make a decision today concerning the extension of quotas for footwear. Also, this week, the Textile Board has presented to the minister its report that will guide us in the evaluation of the future policies of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In those last two fields, while we should allow competition from developing countries, because we must share not only in Canada, access to the Canadian market should be regulated to maintain not only our jobs but also our productive capacity to produce Canadian goods specially designed for Canadian consumers by our Canadian technology which is growing more competitive in those sectors.

Some industrial sectors in foreign countries receive greater government aid because of increasingly stiffer competition and of the very high costs of automation of production, which leaves manufacturers with no other alternative than to amalgamate and seek government help. For an industrialized country like ours, it is of vital importance to maintain within our territory, a production and research capacity in a variety of sectors whose products are part of the daily lives of Canadians.

This brings me to the topic of research and development, priority areas for the future in which this government wants to invest as much as other industrialized countries; it is seeking to increase investments in research and development from 0.9 per cent to 1.5 per cent of the gross national product. To achieve this goal, one of the means the government foresees is tighter control over the operations of multinational companies on our territory and, while still encouraging foreign investments, ensuring that these operations are consistent with present and future interests of Canadians. Mr. Speaker, coming back to the matter of Canada's political future, even though the results of the Quebec referendum helped restore a certain social, political and economic confidence, the problems of Canadian unity are apparent even in this House, despite the good will displayed by members, these problems which are also of an economic nature, are far from being solved. Faced with increasingly stiffer international competition, Canada must solve its domestic problems as soon as possible and form a common front to face its competitors. The provinces, the regions, do indeed have their own particular aspirations and claims, either in the field of energy, natural resources or whether they be of a cultural or linguistic nature, but that, Mr. Speaker, is the essence of our diversity. We must, however, transcend these differences as soon as possible to put the economic machinery back into high gear by taking into account our exceptional natural resources, our highly skilled and diversified manpower and develop an economic dynamism which would help us overcome our handicap because of the small size of our market compared to the vastness of our territory. This economic dynamism, Mr. Speaker, this confidence which is so essential for the progress of the Canadian economy is precisely the key to our future.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I too am very pleased to be able to add a few final remarks to the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne this afternoon. In so doing I would like to talk a little about energy, about the pipeline, and I do so, of course, mainly from selfish motives, the main motive being that 450 miles of the Alaska highway gas pipeline will be eventually located in the constituency of Prince George-Peace River, that great part of our country which I have the distinct pleasure to represent in this House.

Much has been said about pipelines, both oil and gas, in recent weeks and months since we began this session of Parliament. One cannot speak about oil or gas, or about the Alaska highway gas pipeline, or the polar route or any of these energy schemes, without first projecting them against a global background. Today I particularly want to say something about economic nationalism and about nationalism in terms of energy politics.

When one looks at the global energy situation, in the period since the Second World War, if you look back over the last 30 or 40 years, you will find that the statistics indicate that our demand on energy over the last 30 years doubled roughly every ten years. Indeed, comparing this statistic with the increase in the western world, at least, of the gross national product, one finds it is identical. In other words, gross national product in the western world increased or doubled every ten years. One can then make the correlation, or project ahead, by saying that the gross national product, or the improvement of the quality of life of western countries, will be directly related to the availability of energy in the future.

At the present time the total producibility of oil—and I am talking here exclusively about oil—is in the neighbourhood of 60 to 65 million barrels a day. We know, on the basis of projections which have been put together not only for the producing but also by the consuming countries and which are in the main quite accurate, that unless we can expect an increase in the total producibility of world oil of 1 per cent per year for the next five to eight years, and beyond that, we will have to begin to live with the situation where supplies of conventional sources of fossil fuels and energy sources will decline. Up to the year 2,000—in fact, after the year 1985—we must expect a decline beginning with 1 per cent per year and then accelerating at a much faster pace.

If we go back to the relationship with the gross national product, we find a very frightening picture, because we would have to accept the fact that the economies of the western world would no longer be able to grow. In fact the economies of the western world would inevitably decline if we continue to rely on the conventional methods of driving our industrial machine and sustaining our enviable lifestyle. It is a frightening picture as well, because many say that an economy of the type we have built for ourselves in the western world cannot survive unless there is an element of growth.

Many say that a business cannot survive unless there is an element of growth, an opportunity for people to progress within an organization. Indeed, many say that if our economies cannot survive at the present level and cannot grow, our political system is in jeopardy. And many say that this is a very important component of the oil politics which the east bloc countries and the Soviet Union are relying upon to destroy capitalism and the system of western democracy. That is basically the global picture.

If one now turns to the situation in North America, it is no secret that we in Canada and in the United States are using the lion's share of the world's energy resources. We are wasting more than we are using, of course, and we are criticized not only by our partners in the western world but, in the United Nations and other forums, by other nations which look upon us as irresponsible people who have little or no concern for the legitimate aspirations of people in other parts of the world.

If you look at North America you are confronted, first of all, with the demographic situation—260 million people on the North American continent; we in Canada number 23 or 24 million. When we talk to our rich neighbours to the south, we are immediately confronted with their attempts to establish some kind of North American energy approach. We in Canada have, of course, always rejected that, because when it boils down to where the potential for future energy reserves lie, they lie in Canada. Since we number only 23 million people we should, of course, be very careful about how we share this energy, particularly with our friends to the south, but with other countries as well.

This is okay up to a point. But I want to portray a hypothetical situation, and this message is directed to my friends in the New Democratic Party, those great economic nationalists and energy nationalists. I want to portray a situation in the year 2000. Energy is extremely short and the world population has grown from four and a half billion to six billion people. Most of the new population is based in the Third World. They, of course, will have achieved a much better lifestyle and in so doing they will have placed incredible demands on the world's deliverability of oil and other energy resources, and the world is running out of fossil fuels. But we in Canada have been very prudent because in 1980, 1982, 1983 and 1985 we were very careful not to export any of our fossil reserves—gas, oil or anything else—to the United States or to any other country. So here we are.

• (1710)

The rest of the world machine has ground to a halt. People are freezing to death and sitting in the dark, but here we are in Canada with the lights shining brightly, our machines running at full tilt, and we are continuing this lifestyle which we have enjoyed and which our forefathers have built for us. Well, sir, I do not think that even my friends in the New Democratic Party are so naive as to think that that is actually possible and that we can actually totally isolate ourselves from the global situation of energy politics, and from the global situation of demographic politics, and sit here in Canada on top of all our wealth and enjoy it just for the benefit of ourselves and those who may come after us. The reality, as all of us know, is of course much different.

Instead of a continental energy policy we should be talking about continental energy co-operation. It is indeed against that background—I give credit to the former government, and I would even like to give a little credit to the present government—that some of the decisions that are relating to the most prominent project at the present time, the Alaska highway gas pipeline, have to be made.

We have to consider first of all that this particular project was planned to deliver gas which is exploited or harvested in Alaska to the lower 48 states. The Americans came to us in 1970 when the same question was raised in connection with delivering oil from Alaska to the United States. They came to us then as well, and told us that the most expedient, best, safest and cheapest way would be to run a pipeline through Alaska and through Canada, and to utilize as much as possible existing conduits and existing facilities to bring this important resource down to their markets. At that time we procrastinated.

In fact much of the debate which has been going on here in recent days went on in 1970 and 1971 as well, when the Americans wanted to bring oil down. We in the west, and particularly I in northeastern British Columbia, never had any doubt that that was the proper route to take. I was selfishly motivated, of course, because I realize probably more than anyone what the economic benefits of that kind of system and that kind of industrial endeavour can be. However, at that time we frustrated the process so long that the Americans finally said that they could not wait forever. They were in dire need of this resource. They had to secure their own energy needs and to find some other alternative, and they did.

Alaska delivers to the United States roughly two million barrels of oil a day. The Americans built the Alyeska pipeline through Alaska, and facilities at the Pacific Ocean to load tankers to deliver that crucial resource down the west coast to the United States. As soon as the system was built, we went running down to the United States to say that we were worried about those tankers going down the west coast and that there could be accidents. We were worried that they could break up. They are vulnerable in a strategic sense. What if we ever got into a war with the Japanese? I hope it would not be with the Japanese, obviously, but the Russians might come and blow those tankers out of the water. What did we do?

The Americans frankly told us that they had asked us to build a pipeline through Canada but that we did not want that. Then we did not want tankers either. Here we are now in 1980, the Americans are now ready to deliver another 800,000 barrels of oil daily, and again the prospect of a pipeline is being discussed. Let us remember that 1,200,000 barrels are already proceeding by tanker, and again we are procrastinating. The Americans have really given up on us, and they are now building additional facilities to handle this additional oil. They are shipping that down by tanker as well, thus rendering our west coast very vulnerable in terms of the ecology and the environment.

That is some of the background to the pipeline politics in the west. That is another component of pipeline politics which is being considered as we make a decision on the Alaska highway gas pipeline.

The pipeline was always intended to serve the purpose of North American energy co-operation. There are some very significant industrial and economic benefits to Canada, but the pipeline is also planned to accommodate the delivery of our own gas from the Arctic to the south. All my friends have heard of the Dempster Link and the concept of building a pipeline from Inuvik to absorb the gas which is in the Beaufort Sea, and bringing it to the Alcan or the Alaska highway gas pipeline and joining it at Whitehorse, Yukon. The American line is so designed that it increases in size at Whitehorse and all the way down to the United States border to accommodate the delivery of our Canadian gas. Imagine, the Americans are prepared to pay the additional cost of increasing the size of the conduit to accommodate the delivery of our own gas. So it is not just an American pipeline or a pipeline which is just in the American interest. There is a very clear Canadian interest connected with this pipeline as well.

The question of the pre-build is not a new concept with has been thrown in in the last three or four weeks. It was always talked about from the very beginning. It was always felt that it may well facilitate the financing of the whole scheme. We talk about $22 billion, $25 billion or $26 billion. Can anyone here really imagine the amount of money that is? It is money which is to be spent to a great extent in Canada. It is money which is to be spent to a great extent in Ontario, the industrial heartland of our country, where the pipe will be manufactured and where workers in the foundries will be making valves and other important components. In fact the Americans are really angry with us because they are totally out in the dark. Canadian firms have under-bid the Americans for the pipe every time, and the Americans are very angry. Imagine, one of the main components of the pipeline is of a size which the Americans cannot manufacture at all. It all has to be manufactured in Canada, and the Americans are saying that we are not fair.

American firms claim that we have too much of an advantage because of the difference in the dollar, but still the Americans have said "Let's go ahead". It is a competitive thing. After all, it is free enterprise. We want to get this project under way in the cheapest possible way, and as it happens Canada will get the lion's share of that $25 million that the project will cost.

It was always said right from the beginning, as I set out to say, that the pre-building of the line is almost essential to the financing of the whole. There never was any doubt that we have surplus gas in Canada which in the short term should be exported to the United States. Again I want to take hon. members back to the global picture and to this hypothetical situation I have explained. We have surplus gas. We have instructed our Energy Board to use a formula to ensure that over a certain period of time our energy needs are secure. The energy board is required, first of all, to look at the catalogue of proven reserves, identified reserves, and reserves ready for market, and to compare those with the demand which could possibly be placed on these reserves over a period of 25 years. In doing so the board is required to take a look not only at the present demand but also at the obvious necessity to convert major industries away from oil to natural gas and the obvious desire to extend pipeline systems to the maritimes and Quebec, to get away from reliance on foreign oil to generate electricity and to convert homes to natural gas.

● (1720)

Having taken all that into account, the National Energy Board is then required to protect all these needs over a period of 25 years. Anything that is surplus to that should be made available for export. Last year the Conservative government decided that at that time we had 3.75 trillion cubic feet of natural gas available for export. I should also say that the National Energy Board is required to adjust these figures from year to year. That takes us to the year 2005, and one does not have to be much of a futurist to realize that the energy picture in the year 2005 will be quite different from what it is today.

When one looks around the world—and again we are babes in the woods—one finds that billions of dollars are being spent every year now on the research and development of more exotic forms of energy. The sun projects on the earth more energy in ten minutes than we have in our total fossil reserves. It is mind boggling to contemplate what that source of energy could do and will have to do in the future to sustain the lifestyle we now enjoy, and indeed enhance it, not only for ourselves but for Third World countries. One does not have to be much of an optimist to be optimistic about the future of energy. So I say that 25 years is a realistic and indeed a very optimistic time period in which to secure our energy future. In fact there is not a country in the world today, other than probably Mexico, Venezuela and some Middle Eastern countries, which has the luxury of being able to plan ahead for 25 years in an optimistic way.

Now I should like to speak about the concerns of the local area for which I have special responsibility. The situation in British Columbia is somewhat complicated and I intend, of course, to ask the government, once the decision with regard to the pre-build line has been made, how discussions with British Columbia are proceeding and their requirement for a statement of acquiescence with respect to the pipeline. At this point there is no agreement with the province of British Columbia on the final terms and conditions which will be attached not only to the pre-build leg of the pipeline but, what is more important, to the major portion of the pipeline of which 450 miles traverse northern British Columbia. Unfortunately, British Columbia has not been very aggressive or very active in participating or contributing to the study of the terms and conditions of the pipeline.

I suppose it is for the first time that most of my colleagues here would hear of a report that was published about three weeks ago called "Forgotten Land, Forgotten People." It is the final study of socioeconomic conditions relating to this pipeline, a study which followed the Berger report on the Mackenzie valley, the Lysyk study with regard to the Alaska gas pipeline which was held in the Yukon. This particular study, which was conducted by Winston Mair, who was the inquiry commissioner, deals entirely with northeastern British Columbia. The title of the study "Forgotten Land, Forgotten People" is probably a little exaggerated, but it says something about the northern parts of our provinces.

We here in Ottawa have a more direct relationship with the territories because we still operate, to a certain extent, under a colonial system and we think of ourselves as colonial masters of the territories, something which I do not like and which has been challenged at least by my party on every occasion, and something about which we had very definite policies and plans. Nevertheless we know a little more about what goes on in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon than we do about what goes on in the provinces, because that is really their domain.

I have just published a report out of my own office which tells a little about the rip-off of northerners. I am not now straying away from the energy theme of my contribution today; I am just talking a little about the north because it is in the north that our energy future lies. In fact when we talk about the economic benefits which will be derived from the Alaska highway gas pipeline, the lion's share of these benefits will accrue to Canadians in all other parts of the country except the part where the pipeline will be located. In fact the economic benefits there will not be benefits at all; there will be horrendous problems associated with them. We are not strangers to massive projects such as that, particularly in northern British Columbia.

We have seen the construction of the Alaska highway itself and the construction of one of the largest hydroelectric projects, the Bennett dam, and we have experienced these kinds of industrial schemes where thousands of workmen are dumped into small communities which are already short of essential services. They impose their demands and needs on the area for short periods of time, and then they all go away while the local people are left holding the bag. Of course, we look with favour and excitement to the construction of the pipeline.

The report "Forgotten Land, Forgotten People" talks about the aspirations of the northerners in British Columbia in connection with this pipeline. It talks about the native people. In this case, while the natives have raised some questions that are as old as time, and some concerns about further assimilation and integration into the wage economy into which they are not ready to be assimilated or integrated, generally the natives in northeastern British Columbia also are excited and optimistic about the potential benefits which this project could offer them.

We have raised some legitimate concerns because while there are some real economic and industrial benefits which will accrue to all Canadians, any negative side effects of this project will be suffered only by the people who populate the land where the pipeline is located. Indeed, Mair accepted in his report many of the recommendations that I made in my submission to his hearings, namely, that we must develop a technique by which the amenities, the social services and the infrastructure in terms of transportation and communication and other things which might be required to accommodate not only the work force which will be building the pipeline but those who will be operating it in the future, must be paid for either by the proponents of the pipeline, or through some other scheme by the rest of the Canadian taxpayers who will, after all, receive the lion's share of the economic benefits.

I have proposed the imposition in northeastern British Columbia of a benefiting area tax which would tax the pipeline right away. The money which would accrue from such a taxation scheme would be used entirely to upgrade the transportation and communication infrastructure to help the small communities absorb the new work force which will be locating there permanently by providing them with sufficient means to build local services such as sewers, water, and even some recreational facilities, hospitals, and so on. The idea was certainly considered favourably by the government and recommended by the inquiry commissioner who was exposed for some period of time to the realities of northeastern British Columbia. It has been a somewhat uphill battle to convince British Columbia to join in the scheme and to allow for a change so that the people in the north who sit on top of the energy will share on a fair and equitable basis in some of the benefits that will accrue.

Briefly I referred to the report published out of my office. If I may digress a little, I spent two years researching in order to point out, not only to my friends in the House of Commons but to all Canadians, some of the very real disadvantages which 5 per cent of Canadians living in 80 per cent of our land mass suffer as a result of the discriminatory tax regime in the country. I would encourage all my friends to read the report; it is available out of my office. In the report I pointed out that those 5 per cent of Canadians pay $470 million in unfair taxes every year. The report marks the beginning of a crusade I intend to take up over the next year in the north and in the south as well. It will encourage Canadians not only to remove the disparities, but to establish an equitable and fair system in the north to entice and encourage other Canadians, particularly young ones, to move away from the artificial, plastic and concrete environment of our cities, which are sustained by the resources of the north, to join in the excitement and the available opportunities of the north.

I notice I have reached the end of my time. I wanted to get that plug in because I am a little excited about this document. It may well be the most important thing I will do in my political career, particularly if my ideas are accepted by the government. Of course they are already accepted in the fact that federal public servants posted in isolation in the north are receiving very, very significant northern allowances and benefits which are not available to other northerners. I wanted to get this plug on the record today before the House recessed because I hope a lot will be heard about the report in the summer months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Côté for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): This being the second Speech from the Throne to which I am exposed since becoming a member of the House, Mr. Speaker, I must confess that my reaction this time is quite different from the one I had when I heard the first one under a Progressive Conservative administration.

When I rose to deal for the first time with the address, I remember I was highly pessimistic, while this time around I am quite optimistic. A few minutes ago, as I was going over the notes for my speech of a few weeks ago, I came across my election pamphlet and realized that nearly all the promises which my party and I had made to my constituents of Shefford are part of the first Speech from the Throne, and that the local projects to which we had committed ourselves are being carried out just now.

While dealing with the Speech from the Throne, I think I can inform my constituents of the steps the government has taken and its attitude toward its commitments.

● (1740)

I think it is very important for us all to keep in mind what responsibility is all about and particularly for voters to realize that at a certain point in time politicians can make commitments and then keep them. I think that is probably going to be the trade mark of this Parliament and this government.

Like all my colleagues I would like to talk about the constitution because I think it is the vital element that is keeping us in active politics, particularly these years, and in commenting the result of the referendum I think my colleagues and I have all worked very hard to get a No-majority in Quebec, and I am thinking in particular of my colleague, the Hon. Jean Chrétien, the Minister of Justice, who certainly managed to give all members from Quebec and several citizens of Quebec the desire to win. I think we should pay tribute to him, and particularly for me it was an honour to work by his side. Now that the results are known, I think we should above all not take anything for granted but our leader, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in accordance with the commitments he also made at the time of the referendum, had promised to get intensive negotiations going.

I think the government agreed to meet its commitments toward Quebeckers. We are now witnessing a series of federal-provincial conferences and we realize that the will to change is not only in the speeches of politicians but in reality, and I think it is hoped that the provinces which are all sitting around the table these days, will want to co-operate with the federal government and allow it to deliver the goods to all Canadians, and Quebeckers in particular.

I think there is only one obstacle to that quest for renewal, and it is perhaps the presence at that table of PQ ministers who are acting every day like offended virgins and want to have us believe after the results of the referendum that they have become federalists and want to improve the federal system. I must admit that I am looking forward impatiently to an election in our province so that the Quebec negotiators sitting at that table will have that will of renewal and that openness of mind that will allow considerable improvement to this country, and particularly our constitution, to meet in an increasingly better way the aspirations of Canadians.

I think many had an opportunity to hear the speech of Miss Bégin, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, when she called for the participation of the people in the process of renewal. I think that participation by the people is essential because if Canadians do not have a means of expressing themselves in this constitutional renewal, if they do not have a channel to go to to voice their claims, I am afraid they are going to witness, as my colleague from Newfoundland suggested earlier, a cock-fight between federal and provincial politicians, and if the people are not in on it, it could be difficult for them to see through all those fights that are taking place around the tables and all those political wars.

So, as members of the Quebec Liberal caucus, we are striving to create a committee which could convey to the government and federal negotiators the considered opinion of the people—and when I say the "people", I mean it in the noblest sense of the word—the people who also want to have their say. I think that all those constitutional exercises should really aim to achieve a better administration of the affairs of State, but above all, to better serve the citizens.

I appeal to all of those who are involved in those negotiations to really keep that objective in mind, and perhaps to set aside, to a certain extent their self-interest or even, perhaps, in some cases, their thirst for power or a for a bigger share of the cake and to manage the country with greater concern for its citizens. If the federal government is better suited to deal with some areas of jurisdiction, by all means, let it keep it or even get it but, on the other hand, if provincial governments are better equipped to deal with some other spheres of jurisdiction, then, well and good, let us hand them over to them; but above all, let us make sure that it will be for the benefit of the citizens and not for the glory of a some politicians. To pursue along the lines of our commitments, I think that especially in my constituency industrial development is one of the key aspects of the economy and, the fact that the Montreal area has been designated for the purposes of the DREE grants program is a great boon to our economy. All the new businesses in our area—there have been hundreds in the last few years—were set up largely through DREE grants and the fact that it has been decided to extend the program in the eastern townships region will allow us to create new jobs.

A little while ago I heard an hon. member say that the textile and rubber industries were very important in his riding and, these industries are considered important in mine as well but it is widely accepted that these industries must also be buttressed by other related industries or other high technology industries likely to provide workers with viable and profitable jobs in the area. I have in mind industries such as General Electric and that is why I was happy with the Canadian government's decision regarding the F-18, because the company involved has promised to build a plant in the eastern townships thereby creating some 650 jobs; it is very important for us that we should develop this new technology and the F-18 program will certainly provide for it and create new job opportunities for the young people coming out of the universities, the CEGEPs, etc.

I was particularly interested in the proposed grants for a $237 million contract to build military trucks; and I hope a decision will be made on this matter in the forthcoming months.

Mr. Speaker, the Bombardier company is located in my riding. It is keenly interested in this contract to build military trucks and would be ready to create new jobs in my area and, I think that the cabinet's gesture in asking Bombardier to make a bid for this important project is already most encouraging for us. You know, when the company's founder, Joseph-Armand Bombardier, started his snowmobile business, he thought it would be the vehicle of the future. Unfortunately, it has become a rather expensive recreational vehicle and the sales volume has not been increasing and in diversifying its production, Bombardier could include military trucks. Now, the advantage for us would not only be the Canadian contract for 2,800 trucks but the subsequent opportunities for exporting these trucks throughout the world and creating a viable industry in our area. That is why I am happy that we have asked Bombardier to make a bid and I hope the government will consider it favourably.

Another economic development project which is very important to us is the development of Mont Orford as an international tourist area. We know that DREE is negotiating with the Quebec government to include Mont Orford in the tourist development area. You can be certain that I am trying very hard to give to that area of my riding a year round tourist industry which could also create permanent employment. Speaking of job creation, I was very pleased to publicize the announcement made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) about the $137 million program to create new jobs, particularly for development and community services projects.

Earlier, I heard a Progressive Conservative member criticize those programs that will allow us to create jobs and give work to people who want to work. If he does not want that money in his riding, we are going to take it. Maybe there is no unemployment in his riding? Very well, we will take that money! That type of program is very important to us and I protested against the disappearance of Canada Works Program that the Progressive Conservatives were going to abolish because it is important for us as well as for various organizations and our community. Senior citizens, the handicapped, all kinds of volunteer organizations have taken advantage of it and we want also to train our unemployed because, in an area like ours, young people have problems to find work and that kind of project will allow them not only to continue their search for a permanent and profitable job but also to gain a diversified experience while serving the public. I certainly prefer to see our young people and our unemployed work in those community projects rather than drawing unemployment insurance to stay at home. Idleness is the root of all evil and it might be true! The summer projects that have been announced made me very happy. Almost $150,000 have been spent in Shefford and if this is a waste for the Progressive Conservatives, for us it is indeed a good investment. During this summer, some 40 or 50 young people are trying to help their community thanks to those federal programs and this makes us very happy.

The maintaining of the employment tax credit is also very important to us. A number of firms have been and will be benefiting from the extension proposed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. And speaking of employment and immigration, I wish to mention something which is of particular interest to me, the in-depth review of the whole unemployment insurance program announced by the minister. As a member dealing with some 40 to 50 unemployment cases each week, I want to take an active part in that kind of review of the unemployment insurance rules because often, quite honestly, the complexity of the regulations and the lack of understanding displayed by some officials will discourage some unemployed, and will even have them feel they are almost treated like tramps. Often it is the result of an accident they suffered in their life. I know of persons who have been working for 30 and 40 years, who had to go on unemployment for all sorts of reasons, and I feel that the regulations should be, perhaps not eased up but simplified. It is therefore with much pleasure that I welcome the review and also, if I may, I would like to suggest to the government that people between 55 to 65 do not have enough programs tailored for them, although they have specific problems. We have established employment programs for the young, for women, for natives, for almost everybody but that group of workers. In my view, when someone loses his or her job at 55, it is very difficult for them to go and apply here and there. He or she may apply, but getting a job is another thing. This is a problem which will have to be tackled because in my area, especially in the textile industry, there have been numerous lay-offs. Right now many workers are at a loss. They can go on unemployment for 52 weeks but that only leads them to age 56. Then they face some problems. I therefore urge the government to look after that specific group of people because they have specific problems.

● (1750)

Over 65 years, there are senior citizens. I am therefore happy to see that we have honoured our commitment made in the Speech from the Throne by adding $35 guaranteed income to the supplement.

Many people in my constituency who will receive the supplement for July will benefit greatly from this initiative.

However, there is a sombre note in all this. The Quebec minister of social affairs has taken away $20 of these $35 for all senior citizens in nursing homes, and this same minister has had the gall, and it really takes a lot of gall to do this, to announce to the senior citizens that he was giving them an increase. At the same time, instead of giving them an increase, he is taking away $20 from them. I think that this should be pointed out to all senior citizens in nursing homes. The federal government decided that senior citizens needed $35 more, and the Quebec government appropriates these funds, for what purpose, I do not know, perhaps to pay for the referendum. It has appropriated part of the money that the federal government was giving to senior citizens.

As concerns housing for senior citizens, I believe that the minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation is taking vigorous action to make up for the shortage of housing for older people. I hope we will all make more efforts to enable non-profit organizations to start building such housing or renovating senior citizens and low income housing.

With the rents at their present level, many senior citizens have a hard time finding proper housing. I believe we have an obligation in this matter, and many non-profit organizations are willing to contribute to building new housing, but unfortunately the funds are insufficient and I would certainly like to see, in the weeks and in the months ahead, additional funds earmarked for this program which, by the way, is much better than a direct government construction program because I would rather see volunteers getting involved in housing rather than some government officials and going through tender after tender because that always ends up costing twice as much as expected, whereas non-profit organizations can certainly play a major role in building. As far as renovation is concerned, I am very happy to see that the government granted the major city in my riding $1,367,000 last week to upgrade the city core. This is a cost-sharing project where the federal government contributes 50 per cent, the province 25 per cent and the city 25 per cent. That is true co-operation between governments and that will help make downtown Granby a good place to be. I think everybody will benefit. Hopefully, this federal contribution will give Granby, which is called the princess city of the eastern townships, a greater role to play.

The throne speech spoke a great deal about energy. Rereading the election pamphlets I realized that most of our commitments are fulfilled. We promised Canadians that there would be no unfair 18 cent tax. To my knowledge, there is none. We promised Canadians to do our utmost to give them a made-in-Canada price for oil, and we are still doing our utmost to achieve this and we also want to set up an oil prices monitoring agency. I think that will come soon and I think it will help reassure Canadians who think that the large multinationals make excessive profits and charge too much. I think that is commendable, and the sooner the better. But those are all commitments we made during the campaign and we are living up to them and making them realities. There have been references to the increased role of Petro-Canada. I think that with the re-election of our party Petro-Canada can have no fear for its future because we believe that agency can play a most important role.

I heard a member opposite talk about the metric system earlier. Several opposition members are complaining that the conversion to the metric system is not working in their area. Yet our area has been designated for metrication. I do not know why my Progressive Conservative colleagues received so many complaints, because the people in our area where the very same process is going on, while they did not know what to think at first, did not go so far as to sign petitions and make all kinds of representations as people in other areas did. They understand that it is the system of the future and that we had—

Mr. Lapierre: That system is international, as my hon. colleague says. I think that people in our area were very quiet, although we normally have a tendency to protest and we found nothing awful about that. I invite my colleague who has problems in his constituency to come and see how well it worked in our area.

One of my favourite subjects, which is mentioned is agriculture. I see that my colleague from Saint-Hyacinthe is smiling. He is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I want to commend him for his efforts, because since our return to Parliament, I have had the opportunity to work with my good friend, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, and I know how concerned our caucus is about the problems faced by the farmers. In my area in particular, there was a strong demand for the creation of a Canadian Agricultural Export Corporation. We are confident that it will not be long before that corporation is established, and that it will enable our producers to export and to sell their products. We hope that they will use it as an instrument of development.

There is also the pork marketing problem. I think it affects a good many of my constituents who earn their living directly or indirectly from the pork industry. Several have welcomed with great satisfaction the price stabilization program for pork growers. Unfortunately, the Quebec government has not done so well for the piglet producers of that province.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to my colleague for interrupting him, but I think the House would give unanimous consent if we were to revert to the presentation of reports from standing or special committees.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Pursuant to what I understood earlier this day, there is an agreement between the representatives of the parties in the House that the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) would rise to seek the unanimous consent of the House to table a committee report. I understand that the tabling will be followed by a motion for report stage and third reading by the hon. member who sponsored the bill. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Côté for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I can recognize the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) but I see the clock reads six. If I may, I would suggest that I call it six o'clock with the understanding that I will recognize the hon. member at eight o'clock this evening.

It being six o'clock I do now—

Mr. Collenette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as a courtesy to hon. members I would point out that there is a likelihood at eight o'clock of seeking unanimous consent to revert to statements by ministers as was indicated earlier today. We do not know yet, but I would advise the House that this is a possibility.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I take it that if a decision is made and consent is sought, it might be sought at later than eight o'clock this evening if the meeting of the government goes on later. I understand that it is to be whenever the government is ready, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Collenette: It should be eight o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. If the government has something to say we shall listen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May we proceed with calling it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6.02 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. Côté for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Madam Speaker, before we adjourned for dinner, I was addressing the House on agricultural matters and particularly on commitments the government made in the Speech from the Throne. I was saying that the Canadian Agricultural Export Corporation which is to be established during this Parliament is in my opinion one of the best actions to be taken for the benefit of the Quebec agricultural community in particular. There are the hog producers, the poultry farmers and many other agricultural groups in Quebec who are anxious to expand their businesses and are making major investments. I think the government is very sensitive to their requests and surely we will all benefit from it.

There was also this question of the Canadian postal service which was discussed at length during the last election and I am pleased to note that yesterday the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) introduced that famous bill for the setting up of a Crown Corporation. I hope that the change to a Crown Corporation will enable us to restructure our postal service, because up to now there were all kinds of irresponsible decisions made in some post offices in my constituency and I hope that the problems in Rock Forest and in other places in my constituency will be solved by that revamping of the department.

Madam Speaker, I think that this government is certainly honouring its commitments towards Canadians and I hope that during the constitutional talks in the forthcoming weeks with all the work performed during the summer, Canadians will be in a position to expect a new constitution in the shortest possible time. I know that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) will deliver an important speech this evening and, while being responsible for the promises made during the election campaign and in the throne speech, I am convinced that his wise decision and that of the cabinet will be another step toward a price made in Canada, self-sufficiency, and the creation of jobs in the energy area and those areas of the future.

To conclude, Madam Speaker, I will say that I expect much of this Parliament, that I am quite proud to be a member on this side of the House and that I will do my utmost to fulfil our commitments.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, further to the request addressed to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during the question period, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is willing to make a statement, provided the House agrees to revert to Routine Proceedings, statements by ministers, even if it means sitting beyond normal hours, if need be, to allow us, before adjourning, to vote on the motion for debate on the address in reply on the eighth and last appointed day.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, there have been those discussions and there is that agreement from this party to facilitate the business of the House.

Mr. Knowles: This party also agrees, Madam Speaker.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to reverting to statements by ministers?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NORTHERN PIPELINE

APPROVAL OF ALASKA GAS PIPELINE PRE-BUILD SECTION

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I want to thank the House for giving me the opportunity to speak at this time on a subject that is of interest to this House and the country. I wish tonight to make a statement concerning the pre-build project of the Alaska pipeline. I wish to state from the start that the government has taken a decision to approve in principle the construction of the Alaska pipeline.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

In 1977, Canada and the United States signed a bilateral agreement for the construction of the gas pipeline. In 1978, legislation to implement the agreement was passed by Parliament. Since then, two important developments have altered circumstances. First, the estimated completion date for the pipeline was set back from January, 1983, to the end of 1985.

[English]

There has been, therefore, a delay in the original time for the scheduled completion of the line from 1983 to 1985.

The second major change relates to the proposed pre-building of the southern segments of the system. Its initial purpose of exporting Alberta gas to western and mid-western U.S. markets has taken on considerably greater importance. Pre-building has become of prime importance in two ways: first, as a means of facilitating the completion of the entire project; and, second, in terms of the substantial and widespread economic benefits it promises to provide Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I am sorry if some members of the New Democratic Party are feeling sick. I am sure there must be a doctor in the lobby to take care of them.

An hon. Member: Why don't they just walk out like they did the last time?

Mr. Lalonde: In its original conception, as indicated, the southern portion of the line was to be built only moderately in advance of the remainder of the system in the north. The effect of the delays I mentioned has been the pre-building can now take place well in advance of construction of the rest of the system.

• (2010)

There has, of course, been another development. In the intervening years the volume of Canadian gas surplus to our needs and available for export has grown from some 800 billion cubic feet to around 4.5 trillion cubic feet. A number of steps have been taken by the government to take this changing situation into account.

First, the National Energy Board made the following determination: if pre-building were to be undertaken on schedule, with commencement of the construction of the western leg this summer, then it would be necessary to modify condition 12 of the Northern Pipeline Act. Because of the delays which I mentioned it would have been quite impossible for Foothills (Yukon) in these very different circumstances to meet the original requirement of establishing that financing had been obtained for the whole line in Canada.

Second, on April 2, the National Energy Board issued an order amending condition 12, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. The amendment required Foothills to satisfy both the Board and the minister responsible for the Northern Pipeline Agency on two major points. First, they had to be satisfied by Foothills that financing had been obtained for pre-building of the southern segments of the system in Canada. In the second place, they had to be satisfied that financing could be obtained for the remainder of the system before construction of the pre-build would be authorized.

Third, also on April 2, Senator Olson requested the NEB to hold public hearings in order to obtain evidence as to whether Foothills could meet the terms of condition 12 as revised with respect to financing. At the same time, however, he advised the Board that the government intended to defer consideration of its order on this condition until it could also consider two other closely related matters. One was the pending recommendation of the NEB with respect to applications from Pan-Alberta. The latter had requested a licence to export an additional 500 bcf of gas remaining in the unallocated surplus previously identified by the board as a means of establishing the financial viability of the pre-build.

The other matter requiring consideration was the position of the United States government—its view as to the financeability of the pipeline system within its territory and the outlook for its timely completion.

Let me deal with the last issue first. The government has before it information on a number of steps which have been taken in the United States to encourage and facilitate the commencement and expeditious completion of the project by late 1985. These steps include recent decisions by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission certifying the pre-building of the western and eastern legs of the system in the lower 48 states for the initial purpose of transporting surplus Alberta gas pending the through-put of Alaskan reserves. They include also the June 19 agreement between the major gas producers in Alaska—Exxon, BP, Sohio and Arco—and Northwest Alaskan, the pipeline sponsor in that area, on the sharing of some $500 million in expenditures to complete final design and engineering work required to construct the pipeline and conditioning plant in Alaska, and to arrive at final cost estimates. On June 19 the producers and sponsor also signed a statement of intention in which they undertook to work together to facilitate the financing of the pipeline and conditioning plant in Alaska with a view to achieving completion of the system by 1985.

As hon. members are all aware, the strong and continuing commitment of the U.S. Congress was forcefully expressed through a joint resolution unanimously approved by both Houses within the past few days. This resolution emphasized the conviction of Congress that the Alaska pipeline remains—and I quote—"an essential part of securing this nation's energy future and, as such, enjoys the highest level of congressional support for its expeditious construction and completion by the end of 1985."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I might say that this resolution was passed by Congress at the urging of the Canadian government represented by Senator Olson in those discussions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Finally, the Canadian government took account of the assurances which President Carter has indicated the U.S. government was prepared to make with respect to the financeability and timely completion of the system within its territory, given the developments to which I have just referred. Based on all these factors, and on the formal assurances which President Carter has today provided in a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Canadian government is prepared to accept the U.S. government's judgment that the project within its territory can be financed and will be completed expeditiously.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: With the permission of the House I should like to table copies of the joint resolution of Congress and the statement of intention by the producers and pipeline sponsor in Alaska. I am also pleased to table a copy of the president's letter of today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I apologize for the fact that the president's letter has not yet been translated into French—it has only just been received—but the other documents are in the two official languages.

Based on all these factors and on the formal assurance that President Carter has provided today, again, the government has accepted the United States' commitment assuring timely completion of the whole project. I repeat—timely completion of the whole project.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The government is also prepared to authorize additional exports recommended by the National Energy Board through the pre-build system in order to establish the financial viability of that stage of the project. It also approves the amendment to condition 12 made by the Board.

Madam Speaker, I referred earlier to the hearings undertaken by the National Energy Board on the ability of Foothills to meet the revised condition 12. In a statement following these hearings, the NEB raised four matters of concern with respect to the financeability of the project in Canada. All these matters related to issues involving decisions made in the United States. Foothills itself initially raised all these issues as being potential problem areas. However, in response to an inquiry on this matter by the NEB, Foothills indicated that because of more recent developments it was confident that these issues had been, or would be, satisfactorily resolved.

However, it still remains necessary for the Board, and Senator Olson, to make a judgment as to whether Foothills is, in fact, capable of meeting the requirements of condition 12, as amended, with respect to the financing of the project in Canada. I expect that both the Board and Senator Olson will be in a position to reach a decision on that question within the next few days. Assuming this last issue of policy is satisfactorily resolved, the way will finally be cleared for a start on construction of the Alaska highway gas pipeline. The southern segment will commence within the next month.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2020)

Mr. Lalonde: It has been suggested in some quarters that the pre-build would amount to the construction only of an export line and represent a very different project than that provided for in the Northern Pipeline Act. Such an allegation is completely groundless. What is proposed is the construction, in two stages, of a fully integrated system capable of carrying Alaska gas to the lower 48 states and providing access to Canada's own gas in the Mackenzie Delta.

I spoke earlier of assurances by the United States government. We are satisfied that the United States Congress and the United States administration are fully committed to building their portion of the line by 1985. We base this not only on the assurances already received but on a recognition of the absolutely vital national interest of the United States in gaining access to its gas at Prudhoe Bay, which represents more than 10 per cent of all its established reserves and its largest single new source of energy for the foreseeable future.

First, as I stated earlier, construction of the southern segments for the initial transportation of Alberta gas would spur completion of the entire project. It would provide an early cash flow to pipeline sponsors which would be a big help to them in financing the remainder of the pipeline.

Second, by stretching out the construction timetable it would also ease the strain on skilled manpower and the supply of goods and services, and ensure a very high level of Canadian input into the project. In other words, the pre-build fits in with the current economic cycle of the country.

Finally, pre-building of the western and eastern legs and the initial export of surplus Canadian gas will provide substantial economic benefit to this country. According to estimates, this will result in direct capital expenditures in Canada of a total of $1.6 billion, the benefits of which would be felt right across the country in terms of jobs and output.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Of this amount some $655 million would be spent on the pre-build facilities themselves and another $935 million on installation of the production wells, conditioning plants, and the gathering and other facilities required to deliver the gas to the Foothills pipeline. The pre-build project and associated developments would create employment directly and indirectly over the period between 1980 and 1984 of 150,000 man-years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!
