DR. JACK'S WIFE

By ST. GEORGE RATHBORNE

Author of "Dr. Jack," "Captain Tom," "Miss Caprice," Etc., Etc.

The Chilian guide stops. Not a word is spoken, but Doctor Jack knows they have arrived at their destination. He bends forward to whisper words in the other's ear, and his manner is that of a Bonaparte—think of the honor of si man having authority.

"Is this the place?"
"Si, senor," comes the muffled reply.
"Where did you see him?" "Where did you see him?"

"Notice this high wall, senor—here is a grating in it—once the Sisters used to live beyond and walk in the garden, but it has been a private park for some time. An English senor bought it."

"Ah! yes, and you saw this man who gave you the reals and the note—"

"Through the grating, senor, just as darkness was creeping over the hills."

"That is enough."

He vasnishes in the surrounding gloom like an evil spirit, and Doctor Jack is left face to face with a dilemma and a high stone wall. This must be scaled. If Kirke Smith is on the other side a prisoner, he must be given assistance. Jack is confesses that the situation looks very odd to him. He finds it hard to believe that the Texan whirlywind could be caged in this way, and yet positive evidence has been given that this is so.

Speculation may do for another time. Just at present he needs action. His first move is to run his hand over the wall, and find eut the nature of the material composing it.

wall, and find out the nature of the material composing it.

After that he walks along to discover some method of scaling it. The fact that an English senor new owns the place is pregnant with great significance in his eyes—it means that the man who hates him, and who has vowed to wed his widow, is the proprietor.

As he gropes along, he makes a discovery that brings him to a halt. At one point a tree grows near the wall—rather a small one, it is true, but quite large anough to give him to a halt. The proprietor whose after they have made good their as mall one, it is true, but quite large anough to give him to a halt. This he pro-ceeds to ascend, and in five minutes crouches on top of the wall.

To lower himself is the next task. It would be easy enough if Doctor Jack was in the habit of carrying a rope upon his person. Unfortunately this is foreign to his principles, and he must bridge over the difficulty without such friendly support

After a short investigation he is ready to make a move, and swings himself from the wall to a window which has a deep embrasure, and iron rods across its face as though it marks a jail.

From this he is enabled to reach another point below. Thus the agile American descends step by step until he cast finally reach the ground by dropping.

Thus far he cannot complain. If the balance of the work is as easily accomplished they will be on their way before long. But where is Kirke—can it be possible the Chilian has deceived him—that this is not the place after all where the other gave him the note? He has not a very high opinion of the class to which his informant belongs. There may be some deep motive that would influence the man to deceive him.

Doctor Jack remembers that in olden times he and Kirke used to have a code of signals. Perhaps the Texan might remember them now. He utters a little member them now. He utters a little flute-like call, which one might easily believe proceeded from some bird in among the branches of a tree, has thrust a pole.

Not yet discouraged, Jack moves along now and again repeating his signal. Finally he receives an answer. It thrills him through and through. Kirke is not far away, and has at last heard his call.

He again whistles, drawing nearer all the while, the answer becoming more distinct. One thing he has already made certain of, the sound comes from the house itself. He has had a glimpse of a light once or twice, though, generally speaking, the building is wrapped in darkness.

Such being the situation, it necessitates more speed on their part in order to gain an exit. By degrees Lector Jack is picking up some ideas regarding the lay of the land—which is the front of the house, for he believes, yes, he is sure it faces on a street at the point where he reached it on the wall.

The opening is now complete, and Kirke hastens to accept the invitation it offers; pushes his body through, hangs by his hands, and then recklessly lets go without more than a guess as to the distance that may be between his 'feet and the ground.

By this time Doctor Jack and his sturdy companion will have put some distance between themselves and the point of danger. They loss not a second

The Chilians keep up a great racket.
It is understood that barking dogs do not bite as a general thing, and the more noise that is made, the better they are pleased. It gives them a pretty good didea of the location of their foes, and thus they may avoid them.

Once clear of the affair, they head for the rendeavous, intending to join the dude and Avis, when, everything having been arranged, the whole party can go on board the steamer which leaves Valparaiso at dawn.

As they approach the place selected as the rendeavous, Jack begins to feel anrislous. Only one thing could occur to worry him now, and this is in connection with Avis. What if Lord Rackett has followed Larry and his charge from the hotel, and pounced upon them with a couple of hirelings? This would be a terrible condition of affairs. He groans as
