BRITAIN'S PROPOSALS

Sir Edward Fry, chief of the British delegation at the peace conference, has fulfilled the promise of the British government in bringing before the president and the more influential members of the assembly a proposal looking toward the limitation of the world's armaments. While it is impossible in the absence of details to predict with certainty the result of this important overture there is no question about the excellent impression which will follow the introduction of this motion by the leading naval power of the world.

The history of recent naval construction has demonstrated Great Britain's ability and unalterable determination to maintain her present supremacy notwithstanding the efforts of ambitious rivals to pull down her lead. Moreover, Great Britain, from the nature of her position and her imperial organization has more need for sea power than any other country.

The history of recent naval construction has demonstrated Great Britain's ability and unalterable determination to maintain her present supremacy notwithstanding the efforts of ambitious rivals to pull down her lead.

PRESIDENT FALCONER

Speaking at Halifax on "The Place of the Maritime Provinces in the Life of the Dominion," President Falconer of Toronto University should have been at his best. The summary of his address which is contained in our despatches this morning will suggest to some the pleasure which is in store for a St. John audience when the lecture is repeated here as it may be.

In dwelling upon the need for intellectual and moral soundness, the need of cultivating the lasting qualities which make for individual and national greatness in the true sense, the speaker was at once eloquent and impressive. His words are not those of the market place. He is dealing with the ideals which a nation is prone to forget or to underestimate in the rush and pressure of great material development, but one which it cannot lay aside and enduring foundations for the towering structure to be built.

attention rather than less; that the investment in the schools will grow rather than decline. It must be so if the provinces by the sea are to play their proper part in the expansion of the Dominion, and help to give it a well rounded national character and a well balanced organization, and maintain their full share of power and influence.

POWER AND PROGRESS

St. John year by year sees and regrets the waste of industrial power through our inability to harness the river at the falls, and continues to lack the impetus which cheap electrical power would give to manufacturing. Some day, perhaps not far distant, it will be thought worth while to pay some eminent authority on these matters to make a report upon the possibilities of the river as a source of power. The cost would not be great, and while there would be perhaps some element of speculation in the venture the chance for making a discovery of immense practical value seems great enough to warrant the experiment now.

The old question of the falls suggests itself again in connection with a striking address which Prof. Sexton delivered at Riverside during the meeting of the Summer School of Science. Prof. Sexton, who is the newly appointed director of technical education for Nova Scotia, had much to say of the industrial future of these provinces, a subject in which we must suppose St. John to be keenly interested.

"The Maritime Provinces should be the workshop of Canada. They should hold the same relation to Western Canada as the North Atlantic States hold toward the Western United States. We are really better situated in respect to power than is New England. We have almost unlimited coal resources at tidewater. Each of us has a long shore line deeply indented with harbors and bays which offer excellent locations for manufacturing industries.

"Then there is the vast amount of power racing up and down in front of our eyes every day in the Bay of Fundy—instead of being used for the purpose of lapping up the mud on the tide margins. Every square mile of the Bay of Fundy in its upper reaches represents about 8,000 horse-power. If we could utilize this power, say, for seven miles from the shore, we could furnish enough power to establish a city like that of Niagara Falls every ten miles along the shore. Think of a band of cities joining hands up and down our coast. The realization of this is not a mere vision either. Someone will soon be harnessing the multitude of Niagaras that has been racing up and down our coast for centuries. It may be that we may train some boy with a large enough grasp of things in one of our own colleges. If such be the case, all the cost of effort and money will be repaid a thousand fold. In the short interim before this accomplishment, let us prepare our boys in the Maritime Provinces with the best technical training we can get, so that they may manage the great industries that are bound to develop in the near future."

Many who may be disposed at first glance to regard this talk of Prof. Sexton as a rather thin line of speculation may do well to remember that he is a practical man and that he most emphatically records his conviction that the tides will soon be harnessed. His words seem to bring the practical of the falls somewhat nearer the question of defence. If St. John could solve the problem the return would justify a heavy expenditure for experiments. It is clearly a mistake to act on the assumption that the reversing falls are never to be a great asset for the city.

JAPAN'S HIDDEN MOTIVE

The Japanese-American war scare has finally reached Maine. In the states where the war talk raged most fiercely a few weeks ago there is quiet again. But in Bangor the Commercial is out with a defiance to Japan. "Better a jingo than a coward," the editor says, and he adds that with Uncle Sam it is still a case of "millions for defence but not one cent for tribute." The Commercial believes it has hit upon Japan's hidden motive. "As a matter of fact," it says, "we believe that we are just as near to a war with Japan as we shall be for many years to come. The Japanese are a crafty folk and as diplomats the gentlemen who hold the tiller in Tokio leave nothing to be desired. That they have quietly countenanced the inflammatory talk of the radical Japanese press, we believe, and they have done this with a desire to draw us out and ascertain the real sentiment of the people of this country. They wished to discover just what would be the result in certain contingencies."

Japan, the Commercial is convinced, wanted to find out what the United States was likely to do if the Philippines were suddenly seized by a surprise attack in force by the Japanese army and navy. Possibly there may be some excuse for this idea, but a study of recent American reports upon the Philippines would scarcely convince Japan that they were worth a war or the risk of one. There is excellent American authority for the statement that the purchase from Spain has entailed tremendous expenditure now being returned except trouble. American rule over the ignorant and excitable natives is maintained only by keeping a large force in the islands, and the time when the troops may be withdrawn safely is not in sight. Japan is not worrying about the Philippines. The present orators are doing that. To seek Japan's hidden motive is to imply that she deliberately encouraged the idea of war with the United States, whereas in Japan as in America the conservative element no doubt desires peace. The disturbing element now rearing its head in the proposed American naval base in the Pacific. It may be abandoned or modified.

A TROUBLESOME WARD

Ever since Grover Cleveland's Venezuelan message left the odor of powder in the air Great Britain has looked askance at Caracas and the erratic developments, and not a few British journals have predicted that the United States would some day be involved with Europe because of its interest in the peppery South American republic. The London Times, which was quick to accept at its face value Mr. Roosevelt's expansion of the Monroe Doctrine, now suggests that an obvious duty confronts him because of Venezuela's refusal to abide by the award of The Hague tribunal ordering her to pay $2,000,000 to her Belgian creditors. The Times hastens to place upon the United States the moral responsibility "for the behaviour of the state toward which she has shown special solicitude." The London newspaper refers to "those responsibilities which President Roosevelt has more than once declared himself willing to assume," and asserts that "the Venezuelan difficulty affords the United States an excellent opportunity for showing that in fact as well as in theory she is qualified to exercise those functions which President Roosevelt claims a monopoly for her."

This London comment, which has the suggestion of a sting in it, has led the New York Journal of Commerce to recall just what Mr. Roosevelt did say about the relations of his country with the South American republics. In his revised version of the Monroe Doctrine, in his message to Congress on December 3, 1901, the President declared that by the Monroe Doctrine we do not guarantee any state against punishment if it misconducts itself, provided that punishment does not take the form of the acquisition of territory by any non-American state.

The same tenor was the announcement in the message of December 2, 1902. "No independent nation in America need have the slightest fear of aggression from the United States. It behooves each one to maintain order within its own borders and to discharge its just obligations to foreigners. When this is done they can rest assured that, be they strong or weak, they have nothing to dread from outside interference."

It is to be remembered that when the British and the Germans combined in a scheme to collect money from South American debtors by sending a squad of bombards, today, "any suggestion of such a hostile policy in the United States would be excused for suggesting that if the Americans object to the European creditors collecting in their own fashion, the United States government itself should take measures to compel Venezuela or any other forgetful South American state to settle its outstanding bills. This is the logical result of taking Mr. Roosevelt at his word. The Journal of Commerce, however, says with reason that the history of previous claims against Venezuela, which he says, "may suggest the propriety of a suspension of judgment in regard to it in the absence of some details from other than Belgian sources."

It backs up this opinion by recalling the fact that an impartial commission which investigated the formidable claims made by the United States, Great Britain, Spain and Germany in 1893 reduced them to exceedingly small proportions, while an earlier claim which the United States established was subsequently thrown out on the discovery that it was established by fraud and conspiracy in which were involved the American minister at Caracas, his brother-in-law, and a United States commissioner. Lending money in South America is a risky business, and evidence is not wanting that the creditors have sometimes attempted to repay themselves at the expense of common honesty.

THE HAND OF JAPAN

Japan has virtually been governing Korea for seventeen years; but the new disturbance in the Land of the Morning Calm means that henceforth Korea will be practically Japanese soil and that it will be exploited as such. London is disposed to make light of the complaints which the Koreans have made of Japanese injustice and aggression and to regard Korea as part of the spoils of the war with Russia. However brutal this view may seem off-hand, it is sustained by the facts. Aided by Korean weakness and perhaps by Korean manipulators in her pay, Japan is brushing away the fiction of Korean autonomy; and the world is evidently going to look upon the change as one that not only does not interfere but also as one that should occasion no regret to the well-informed. Remember how long Japan has been in Korea, how strongly she is entrenched there, and how much stronger than the Koreans are their new masters, any resistance the weaker people may make will but prolong the pains of reconstruction. One of the best observers who have been discussing the abdication of the Korean sovereign describes the developments of the last few days as the ending of a farce. He says of it:

In marked contrast to its traditional indifference to political issues, Korea is now on the stand and is expected to be through about noon, making the tenth witness. The defence will have seven witnesses and will occupy the court for several days yet. The suit of Brown vs. the Electric Light & Power Company will then be taken up and will take at least two or three days. The last case, Blanchard vs. Dempsey, may possibly be settled, if not it will take several days more.

Bathurst Equity Court.

Bathurst, July 19.—The equity court is still in session and will be for some days yet. In the McGaffigan-Davidson vs. Ferguson suit the last witness for the plaintiff is now on the stand and is expected to be through about noon, making the tenth witness. The defence will have seven witnesses and will occupy the court for several days yet.

Aged 94, Pays Visit to the City.

Mrs. William H. Redstone, of Queens-town, was a visitor in the city last week. She is ninety-four years of age and is in full possession of her faculties. Her memory goes back to the Miramichi fire of 1825. Mrs. Redstone has six children living—Mrs. James Smith, St. John; Mrs. G. A. Peters and Mrs. George McCorkle, Boston; Charles Redstone of Florida and Malcolm and Thomas Queenstown. There are also twenty-five grandchildren and twenty-six great-grandchildren.

PARENTS' HOPES HAVE BEEN WRECKED

Report That Missing Robert McGill is Found Proves Incorrect

SUPPOSED ONE IS BUT BOY OF TEN

Word Comes from James Erb That it is His Nephew Who is on His Farm, and Not the Elliott Row Man. The report that Robert McGill, son of Henry McGill, of Elliott Row, who has been missing from his home since May, the Bellisle, has now returned to have no foundation in fact. It has transpired that the story to that effect was all a painful though unintentional mistake, and the hopes of the parents which were at once raised have been dashed to the ground and their grief is even more acute than before.

A WAVE OF TEMPERANCE

The man who said, "There is good whiskey, and better whiskey, but no bad whiskey," had more than half of the population of Kentucky at his back not long ago, and in most of the Southern States drinking was a very general habit until recently. The prohibitionist was the exception. But now Kentucky has "gone dry," disappointing most of the prophets, and an unprecedented wave of temperance sentiment and legislation is sweeping over a vast area of country where formerly a majority of the male population had a weakness for whiskey. Kentucky is perhaps the most striking example of the new order of things, for the Blue Grass state was long the most famous in the Union for its brands of "red liquor." Yet today ninety out of 100 Kentucky counties are "dry homes."

KILLED WIFE AS SHE HELD BABE TO BREAST

Toronto, July 21.—While in a demented condition, probably due to poor health, Adam Lovelock, of Valentines Corners, shot and killed his wife yesterday morning. The woman was in arms, when he procured a shot gun and placed the muzzle close to his wife's face and literally blew the top of her head off. The baby was not injured. T. H. Glenneville, J. P., and County Constable Davidson, of Sunderland, went to the scene of the crime and found Lovelock in an unconscious condition seated in an armchair. Dr. Blanchard was sent for and Lovelock recovered sufficiently to acknowledge taking something from a bottle which the doctor left him to take to his nerves with which he had been troubled. Lovelock was lodged in jail here in the evening and will be brought before Magistrate Glenneville tomorrow afternoon.

PROF. ROBERTSON'S WIFE GIVES 40 SCHOLARSHIPS

Charlottetown, P. E. I., July 19.—Today Dr. J. W. Robertson, principal of the school at Hillboro, St. John's, P. E. I., attended the annual commencement exercises of the Macdonald Consolidated School at Hillboro. This school was founded in 1895 and has a year to run under the support of the Macdonald fund. At the conclusion of that period Dr. Robertson announced that the fund would contribute $1,200 a year for a while towards the maintenance of the school.

North Shore Lumber Mill Burned.

Chatham, N. B., July 20.—The mill owned and operated by Rev. Father Ed. Patenaude, of St. Margarets, Kent county, was destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. A rotary, lath and single mill, together with a quantity of lumber was burned.

Festival at Harvey Station.

Harvey Station, July 18.—The annual festival of the Presbyterian church was held on the grounds of Thos. Robinson by the lake here, on Tuesday afternoon. The weather was all that could be desired and the attendance was fairly good. About 400 people took tea, which was served on the merry-go-round and other sports and the refreshment stand were also well patronized. The net receipts of the festival will amount to about $130, which will be used for church purposes.

The Proper Light for Country Houses

Acetylene does away with all the bother and inconvenience that go with kerosene lamps. There's the disagreeable smell of oil, the everlasting cleaning of lamp chimneys, trimming the wicks, filling the lamps, etc. Then there's the constant danger of your lamp exploding. Wherever you want light you've got to take the lamp with you. You never know when you may trip over something and fall, while carrying the lamp. And what will the consequence be?—probably an explosion, followed by fire. A fire in the country means a total loss of property, apart from the risk of being burned alive. If you have children around where there are lamps, you've got to be constantly on the watch to see that the lamp isn't overturned. But why continue to run these risks when you can have your home lighted with an absolutely safe light—acetylene. It costs very little more than kerosene. To produce acetylene for the greatest lighting power, you need Calcium Carbide—the best and most satisfactory carbide made. You want to know more about carbide, don't you? We shall be pleased to give you information if you send us your address.

Cold Storage Company Advance Nova Scotia Plans--The North End Warehouse.

R. J. Graham, the manager of the Cold Storage Company, now erecting a warehouse near the Long wharf, returned on Saturday from Nova Scotia, where he arranged for six apple-evaporating plants to be built on the line of the D. A. R. Mr. Graham said the location of six plants had been definitely settled and more might be erected later on. The plants would be situated at Bridgeport, Middleton, Kingston, Sheffield's Mills, Cambridge and Auburn, and arrangements had been made to have them built and in working order by Sept. 1, so that advantage might be taken of this year's business.

Attacked Hon. Fred Peters.

Angered because of cross-examination to which he was subjected, Walter H. Stewart lay in wait for Hon. Fred Peters, B. C., at Victoria, B. C., formerly of B. E. Island, at the adjournment of the proceedings in a libel action being tried the other day, and struck Mr. Peters. Much of the blow was a glancing one and did little damage. Bystanders interfered and Stewart was taken in charge and fined $20 for contempt and bound in a hon. $20 to preserve the peace for one year.

A Profitable Picnic.

Dalhousie, N. B., July 18.—(Special)—The annual church picnic, which was held in Balmoral park during the three days this week, was a great success, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. The net proceeds were $1,040.

NORMAL SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS

To the Editor of The Telegraph: "Sir,—I noticed last week and week before last editorials in the North Shore papers relative to the intricacies of the mathematical papers set at the recent examinations for Normal school entrance. The writer would have done well to call the attention of the public, at the same time, to the lack of judgment displayed in the geography questions. Would any intelligent teacher in drilling his pupils for examination be expected to lay any stress whatever upon places of such relative insignificance as: Trail, Moville, Fiume, Havre-de-Grace, or the cities of the province of mention by the Standard Dictionary authorities in their very latest edition: "Fiume." Neither Havre-de-Grace (a town of some 2,000 inhabitants, situated thirty-six miles northeast of Baltimore), Christchurch (spelt on the examination paper; Christ Church), Fiume, Advolie, or Martitzberg (properly Petermaritzberg), is marked on the maps of the new Canadian geography, nor are prescribed by the board of education. The board has been applied "a pretty picture book." Should not the examiners in setting the questions adhere closely to the requirements as well as to the original exercises wherever possible? Under the present condition of things, taking an examination in Nova Brunswick is as much a matter of chance as playing roulette in Monte Carlo. In the following a rational question to be put to any one but a specialist in statistics: "State approximately the rapid increase in population in six cities or two years?" What mention does the prescribed geography make of such things as "solar eclipses," "the aurora borealis," etc.? Doubtless these are things that should be known by every intelligent student; but why then does their text book ignore them? Can any normal pupil be expected to write out with any semblance of neatness the demonstrations of five propositions in geometry, as well as to do the original exercises in text book in the recent first class paper, in two hours? Is it lawful to give a question the value of 11, when it is wholly without the limits laid down by school law? There is no question whatever of geometrical drawing either in the Hamilton-Smith or in the original list of requirements as given to Normal school candidates, Regulation 32, School Law? Yet, how can such a problem as "Given the perimeter and angles of a triangle to construct it. (Show how to construct it, but do not prove.)" Is not the death of teachers in our province to justify an outcry against such unintelligent, not to say unscrupulous, sufficiency? Let us keep the standard high by all means, but in so doing let us unite in a common appeal to the authorities at Fredericton for both rational and fair in the questions that they set our boys and girls. We want a nation of open-minded, intelligent men and women, not a race of puzzle-solvers. Let the object of the examiners in the future be to test the candidate's individual knowledge, not to mystify them. Frustrating that the principal of the Normal school, Dr. Bridges, will see to it that our candidates be not "plucked" because of their inability to answer questions, either irrelevant or beyond the limits laid down by the department of education. I beg to remain, Mr. EDITOR, Yours very truly,

The Whites & Thing in the World

By MIRIAM MICHELSON (Author of 'The Bishop's Carriage' etc.)

(Copyright, 1907, by the New York Herald Company—All Rights Reserved.)

"I can write, you know. I have written poems for my own paper. Would you like to read them?" Bowman looked up. She was there still, standing by his desk, a slender, open creature, with a spray of peach blossoms rising and falling on a narrow, childish breast, with a crude perfume of staidity about her and—yes, the enveloping glory of innocence, despite the direct look of her eyes and the persistence with which she had fought her way to him and refused now to be discouraged.

"There's nothing, I tell you—nothing for you," the city editor repeated impatiently.

He twitched his green shade to a pug-nosed angle and deliberately turned his back upon her. He was a heavy faced, black mustached hunter of news and driver of men. He hated a weaking when was masculine and, if he could, he would have crucified anything in petticoats rather than weaken his staff and make himself ridiculous by accepting what he called the prevailing contemptible fashion of freak femininity as legitimate journalism.

"I don't see why you won't give me a chance," the girl said, appealingly.

The office boy, peeping in just then, half apprehensive for his own safety since he had permitted this applicant to evade him, yet betraying a malicious delight that so unsuspecting a lamb should make straight for the lion's very jaws, saw Bowman lift his head suddenly. Upon the city editor's face there had come an expression very like that which lighted his own small, impish face.

"A-hem!" Bowman cleared his throat deliberately. "I believe I will, Miss— Since you are so determined, I believe I will give you a chance. There's to be a big funeral to-day, Senator Hollingsworth, you know, millionaire, philanthropist, old family—all that sort of thing. Suppose—be passed his hand over his smiling, bitter mouth—"suppose you get me the names of all who attend, Miss—eh—Peachblossom."

A stifled titter came from the office boy before he rushed to finish his laugh outside. He knew that detail well; it was there were others over which the unit might be made to stumble and fall, but this was Bowman's favorite. He had never yet presented it to a woman, however.

The girl bent clear, childish eyes upon the man at the desk, gravely, gratefully. "Thank you, sir, I will. My name is Pettinelli, though—Theresa Pettinelli," she added distinctly.

She turned and then walked composedly, primly, out of the room.

Bowman's grim mouth did not relax, but above his angry, dark eyes that followed her there came a perplexed frown. No notice had yet received that particular detail in just that way; there was still part of the comedy unacted.

He turned again to his desk and savagely thrust his blue pencil at a proof, as though merely to slide were not sufficient; he wanted to wound, too, the thing he despised. Then the door opened and again she stood before him.

"I forgot to ask you, sir," she said, simply, "how shall I get the names?"

A sneer of satisfaction, which he did not try to hide, bent Bowman's black mustache down at the corners. This was the regulation procedure.

"You will station yourself at the cemetery gate," he said slowly, "and as each carriage comes up jump in, tell the mourners you come from the News and want their full names. That's all."

She looked at him for a moment, and his mocking, tired eyes, like black stars in a pool of leathery, wrinkled skin, met hers sarcastically. But no conception of his attitude could have come to her, for he stood a moment longer, as though considering the means he suggested, then bent her head. "Thank you, sir," she said with provincial politeness, and went out, shutting the door behind her.

Bowman threw down his pencil and roared. The sound of his sardonic laughter brought the office boy in with a pretence of having heard a call, and the two laughed together, the city editor with an open-jawed delight in his joke, the boy discreetly accompanying him.

They laughed again, and the office, with whom the joke had been shared, laughed with them, when the paper went to press that night without the names of those who had attended the funeral of Senator Andrew Hollingsworth. And they laughed even more heartily when, two days later, the office boy piloted the girl through the local room, choosing the most roundabout route to Bowman's office, and giving the staff an indicating wink behind her back that betrayed her identity.

"Miss Peachblossom, eh?" he announced, throwing Bowman's door wide open with a significant glance.

Bowman, who had been sitting listening to his star reporter's confession of utter failure in his attempt to interview the sensational murderer of the day, looked up preoccupied as she entered, his black brows knitted in thought. In his intense concentration he had for the moment completely forgotten the girl.

"I have brought you the names, sir," she said with a stiff little salutation that included Drake, the News' special writer. "Names?" repeated Bowman; "what names?"

"Oh, Moses in Egypt!" he looked from the paper she had lain on the desk to the girl standing beside it. He was weary of the joke—even her getting the names was not a unique ending to it—and his mind, baffled by difficulties, was ceaselessly searching for a way to get the thing he wanted, a pen study of Manly, the murderer.

"Can't you bully Shaw, his attorney, Drake?" he asked, so absorbed that it required more effort to notice the girl than to ignore her. "Tell him we'll roast purgatory out of him the first chance he gives us. Tell him!"

"Oh, it isn't Shaw," Drake's fine, fastidious voice broke in, irritated by the rare failure, by Bowman's obtuse blundering and by being made witness to an indignity to a woman. "Shaw's all right. He's a blackguard—a burly shyster who's playing the case for all the notoriety he can get out of it. It's the man himself, Manly. The fellow's head is turned by the attention he gets. He actually is so puffed up by being an object of interest that he can't see the nose that's already dangling over his head. But we can talk it over later." He rose, glancing at the girl, who stood patiently waiting, the delicate bloom of her country-bred face coming and going as he listened, open-eyed.

"Eh—what? Oh! What d'ye bring these things to me now for?" the city editor demanded of the girl, with an intonation that was almost a blow.

She looked down on him puzzled. "I thought you wanted them, sir. Didn't you say—"

With an impatient shove Bowman pushed the sheets of paper into the waste basket.

"The worms have begun on Hollingsworth by this time," he growled. "Suppose you get me their names."

Drake, who had just reached the door, stopped. He had often felt like kicking his city editor, but he really thought he was about to interfere this time, when the girl's voice came to him. It was a high, clear, immature voice, pretty and delicate as the fruit blossom she wore at her belt or the soft radiance of her babylike skin, yet subtly lacking the modulation of culture, it seemed to him, as the flower lacked perfume and the face lacked soul.

"You mean it is too late?" she was saying, unperceived by the hard significant of Bowman's tone. "I'm sorry. You see, sir, I could not get them the way you say so."

With an unintelligible mutter that might have been an excuse the city editor got up from his chair, brushed past her and went into the next room. He pulled Drake along with him and closed the door behind them.

After half an hour the office boy went in to her. "Bowman's gone out," he said, saying her with contemptuous curiosity.

"Has he? Well, I'll wait, then," she said gently.

The boy started, opened his mouth, shut it and went out with a long drawn whistle.

An hour later he came in again to say that Mr. Bowman had telephoned that he would not be back for a week; he had gone out of town.

She rose regretfully and followed him out into the local room, remembered that she had taken with her an illustrated magazine that had lain on the city editor's desk, retraced her steps unguided to replace it and found Bowman just sitting down to his work.

"How lucky!" she said, smiling faintly down into his raging eyes.

"Why do you stare at him so?" Drake asked the girl, irritably. Despite his horror at such an experience for a woman he had helped her to a seat beside his own when he heard her inquire for the reporters' table.

"Why?" she stammered, blinking, as though the suddenness of being called upon for speech had staggered her. "Why was I staring? . . . Isn't it terrible?"

He looked down upon the shell pink of her childish face with his quivering, pointed chin, his thin, sensitive nose and eyes lifted still toward the prisoner, who had moved his chair further to the right and bent forward, watching her curiously.

To Drake looked repugnantly inhuman, yet, like some old-young saint, so detached from the world, so mediocrally ignorant of life, so capable of touching pity yet miraculously escaping defilement, so adoringly trustful and confident in her attitude of faith—and before such an altar!

"Have you read any of the evidence?" Drake asked. A confused sense of helpless disgust came over him.

"Of the awful things they say about him—you don't believe them? Think how terrible to say such things of an innocent man! And he's so young—"

The reporter turned to his work; but in a moment he had put down his pencil again.

"You are also—do you also approve of what you think of his mother?" he demanded.

A burning blush swept in an agony of shame over her face.

Her wordless repudiation of the woman who had been his mother, so detached from the world, so mediocrally ignorant of life, so capable of touching pity yet miraculously escaping defilement, so adoringly trustful and confident in her attitude of faith—and before such an altar!

"That mother of his has the sort of spirit to express which the Orientals invented a belief in ghouls. She'd pick her son's dead bones if there were money or notoriety to be got out of it," he growled.

The girl beside him drew in her breath, as at some sharp, internal pain.

"Down it," she laid a timid hand for a moment on the edge of his sleeve, doesn't it make you long to do something—something—anything to make up to him for it? Don't you feel you just must?"

Drake looked at her. In a second he had mentally marshalled all the facts to lay before her, what he knew about this man and had written, what he knew and could not print. Then resolutely he turned to his work. There could be no thoroughfare between such a mind and his own.

Yet once, toward the end of the day, an irritated sense of her helplessness and crowd, the fascinated horror in the women's eyes, the loathing in the men's.

Though incapable of analysis in words, Manly was too alert not to feel it all. It was all familiar, yet not altogether unpleasant at this stage, for Manly was his mother's son. The excitement, the pre-eminence of his position, being watched and courted and written about and photographed and sketched; the sense of being the pivot upon which the great drama revolved the whole long day, and day after day and week after week; the shrewd satisfaction in deceit, the impudent defiance of authority, the consciousness of being puffed against the world, which through respect for its own forms of law—the forms by means of which he intended to go free despite it—elevated him, if only temporarily, to a pinnacle where no man's hand dared touch him, though every man's hand ached to get at him—all this Eustace Manly felt. It is the consciousness of greatness. His was the greatness of infancy, but its manifestations differ from the other sort only in the way one looks at them, and given an oblique vision, the thing looks as delectable to a murderer as to a martyr.

A martyr—there was nothing more alien to Manly's nature than this. And yet in the rare moments when confidence deserted him he had faced the improbable alternative of conviction; at night once or twice, when he had walked in his cell and missed the tense, upholding strength of the crowd, the court and the warring attorneys then he had seen himself sketched, vaguely and with strong distaste by the press and written about in his defence for this other gentler, reproachfully holy one.

And yet even now, as he turned from greeting his mother—their morning caress had become as studied as actors' embraces—and faced the reporter's table he saw himself suddenly, unreasonably in the unromantic role. And in the same second he became aware of a different glance, a different judgment, a different pair of eyes to meet.

They were lucid, shining gray, crystal pools that had nothing to reflect, for behind them was a soul as clear and shallow as glass, and of all things looked upon by virtue of its innocence they saw nothing blacker than themselves. They were bent upon him, these clear, creature eyes, with such an intensity of personal sympathy, warning, elevating, intoxicating him, that Manly had looked into them for a long moment before they became conscious and wavered. And even then it seemed to be only because the reporter, whose name Manly knew to be Drake, had deliberately thrust his shoulder between, shutting out their view.

his own responsibility—the noblesse oblige of superior craftsmanship toward incompetence—prompted him to speak again to her. "What line are you going to take?" he asked kindly. "I write a general sort of a story, you know, covering the whole thing. There's a shorthand report that goes, besides. Don't you think it might be well for you to specialize? You might roast the mother. Show up her vanity, her absurd airs of ladyhood on such a stage, her incredible enjoyment, eh?"

She shuddered. "Oh, I couldn't, I couldn't!" she gasped.

He looked from her trembling lips to the paper before her. She had not written a line.

Drake gathered up his notes and left the courtroom. An indefinite feeling of discomfort he had been laboring under fell from him as he took a car to the office, his mind busy with preliminary arrangements of his material. Nor did he think again of the girl till Bowman, in his shirt sleeves, came into his room late that night with some pages of copy in his hand, a demonic delight in his eye and a voice that was husky with sardonic laughter.

"Let me read it to you, Drake. It's the richest thing I've come across in all my life. Oh, you've just got to listen. I'm a regular ancient mariner since I hopped on to this. No, I don't care whether you get them by twelve or by doomsday. I've read it to every man in the office and I'm not giddy yet. Just listen to this. It is simply you, chastely headlined 'Letters from the people, you know—a girl's view of the case, signed 'Peachblossom.' It'll make a hit, it's so genuine. The only danger is that we may be accused of faking it—it's too impossible; or a mob may wreck the office to show what becomes of papers that print profanity. You can't tell what it'll attract attention. I promise you." It did.

STILL HUNTING FOR HARTLAND FIREBUG

Lorne McNally Under Arrest as Result of Investigation

Several Parties Suspected and They Are Likely to Be Apprehended Soon—Man Declares His Residence Was Soaked With Oil While His Family Were Absent at the Fire.

Hartland, July 21.—Following the investigation into the origin of the fire of a week ago, Lorne McNally, a resident of this town, is in Woodstock jail. He was arrested Saturday by a town constable and examined before Justice Barnett.

The story he told in attempting to exonerate himself did not wholly satisfy the justice, and he was held for further examination.

Several suspects are under surveillance and arrests will probably be made in a few days.

McNally is a laborer. His arrest occurred in a peculiar way. Mrs. G. C. Watson, one of the victims of the fire, said that you should have set this fire." She thought McNally exhibited confusion at her words and her suspicions were aroused. The arrest followed.

Business, demoralized since the fire, is resuming its natural trend, but the people's indignation at this plain case of incendiarism is more than passing excitement. The parties suspected of having instigated the conflagration are openly named in ordinary conversation on the street. Opinion is unanimous as to who these people are, but there is a small faction who believe that the incendiary idea is baseless. The large majority are of the opposite opinion.

The first work of fire bugs in Hartland occurred in 1869 when evidence showed that the fire which originated in the building owned by George R. Burt, and occupied by A. Thornton & Sons and others, was the result of a deliberate plan. The next evidence of incendiarism appeared in 1879, when the old school house was burned, a fire having been seen kindled in the woodshed attached thereto. When this blaze had attracted the firemen with their apparatus, another fire was discovered in George Burt's building at the opposite end of the town from the site of the fire of ten years before. A tedious investigation into the origin of this fire resulted in only the chaffing of previously existing factions, but the tenor of opinion brought the parties under the ban of suspicion, who are now believed to be implicated in the present fire. The same unanimity of opinion holds that the fire which destroyed Thornton's hotel ten years ago, was the work of a firebug.

The Burt building, above referred to, was not burned in the late fire, but it was when the firemen were putting up the fight of their lives.

That the same mind that planned the school house fire laid the scheme for the last conflagration is evident in the fact that preparations had been made for the starting of a fire in the premises of a Mr. Carney in a remote part of the village. After the Carney family had gone out in response to the general alarm, some person entered the house and heavily saturated a buffalo robe and some bedding with oil, which Mr. Carney declares could only have been done in his absence.

The fire commissioners have announced a reward of $100 for evidence that will lead to the conviction of the parties who set the Hartland fire.

The loss by the recent fire is now estimated at about $50,000 with $20,000 insurance.

A Glassville Golden Wedding.

Glassville, N. B., July 19.—On Thursday afternoon, July 18, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William Lyon, of this place, was the scene of a very pleasant social gathering, the occasion being a reunion of their family on the semi-centennial of their marriage, with a presentation to the bride and groom of fifty years ago. Assembled under the parental roof were four sons, five daughters, four sons-in-law, three daughters-in-law, and thirty grandchildren, the only absentee of the family circle being the youngest, by one of the sons, having settled in the Orange Free State, on the close of hostilities in the Transvaal, serving under Col. Baden-Powell.

A banquet was provided in the residence, to the assembled relatives and guests, where a presentation followed, of a handsome gold watch and chain to Mr. Lyon, and a massive gold wedding ring to Mrs. Lyon; and as the sun was dipping low in the western horizon, a family group was formed, in crescent shape, and photographed by a special artist for the occasion.

HONOR FOR DR. BAYARD FROM HIS ALMA MATER

Edinburgh University to Confer Upon Venerable St. John Physician the Degree of Doctor of Laws.

On Friday next the honorary degree of doctor of laws will be conferred upon Dr. William Bayard, of St. John, by Edinburgh University. Yesterday Dr. Bayard received the following telegram from Sir William Turner, vice-chancellor of the university: "Edinburgh University desires to confer upon its distinguished doctor of medicine of 1837 the honorary degree of doctor of laws in absentia on July 28."

Dr. Bayard has replied that he will accept the degree.

The Utica Saturday Globe of July 13 publishes an excellent picture of Dr. Bayard and the following article dated St. John:

William Bayard, M. D., LL. D., of this city, may be fittingly termed the Nestor of the medical profession of Canada. Next month he will celebrate his ninety-fifth year. The St. John Medical Society has appointed a committee to suitably arrange for the commemoration of his seventieth anniversary as a medical man and the event will be celebrated with enthusiasm in this city, where our subject is beloved by all who know him. Dr. Bayard, notwithstanding his advanced years, still continues to visit patients. Our subject is a son of the late Dr. Robert Bayard, of St. John, formerly a lieutenant in the British army, and is of Huguenot extraction. He was born at Kentville (N. S.) in August, 1813, was educated at Fossilham (N. Y.), and at Edinburgh University, where he graduated an M. D. in 1837. Returning to St. John he practiced his profession in conjunction with his father for many years, and after the latter's death, on his own account.

He has long been recognized as a leader and at the head of the medical profession of New Brunswick and has held every office of honor within the gift of his country, including the chairmanship of the board of commissioners of the General Hospital of St. John, an institution which in a large measure owes its existence to his efforts. He has been chairman of the Provincial Board of Health, president of the Council of Surgeons and Physicians of New Brunswick, delegate from New Brunswick to the International Congress on Hygiene and Demography, held in London in 1881, and was elected president of the Canadian Medical Association in 1891.

His address on the use and abuse of alcoholic drinks delivered in 1887 attracted wide attention from the medical and secular press and his address before various medical bodies and his pamphlets on different diseases and their treatment have been widely read and very favorably received.

In 1886 Dr. Bayard was elected president of the United Empire Loyalist Association of New Brunswick, a position of honor which has been a foremost figure in that province in the promotion of every good work.

TO ENLARGE MILITARY STORES BUILDING

Government Architect Here from Ottawa and Will Make Inspection.

The military stores building in the barracks square is to be lengthened forty feet and have another story placed on it to give additional accommodation which is said to be greatly needed. It is expected the work will be done this fall.

T. W. Fuller, architect of the military section of the public works department, Ottawa, arrived in the city on Saturday to look over the building before preparing the necessary specifications. Speaking of the object of his visit Mr. Fuller said he understood the department of militia, after conferring with the local officers, decided in the spring to increase the accommodations in the store building and in consequence a requisition had now been received by his department to undertake the work. Besides enlarging the building instructions had been given that a new electric elevator be installed. He expected that tenders would be called for at an early date.

In reply to a question Mr. Fuller said he had received no information as to the erection of a new drill hall in St. John. The matter would not be referred to his department until a site and other important questions had been decided between the local authorities and the militia department at Ottawa.

While speaking of drill halls Mr. Fuller mentioned that in all new buildings it had been decided to abandon the old system of placing racks for arms and accoutrements of the infantry and in place to give each man a steel locker and a key where his kit and everything necessary to place him in the field could be kept. The advantage of the change would, he thought, be generally admitted.

Mr. Fuller, who will be accompanied by Lieut. Col. A. J. Armstrong, chief of the ordnance department, will make an inspection of the stores building today and will leave this evening for Ottawa.

SIX AND A HALF YEARS FOR EDMUNDSTON BURGLAR

Edmundston, N. B., July 19.—The trial of S. R. Forsyth, a Nova Scotian, charged with breaking into J. W. Hall's store here on June 1 last and stealing money and goods, and breaking into the Tennis courts railway station at Clair on the following day and stealing about $21 there, and for attempting to break jail, was held before Judge Carleton during the present week. The prisoner pleaded guilty to the jail breaking charge and not guilty to the others. The jury found him guilty in both cases. The accused defended himself and showed himself to be a bright young man, whose energies would make him a useful citizen if applied in the right direction, but he failed to convince the jury of his innocence. Judge Carleton this morning sentenced him to six years and six months.

A Willamantic (Conn.) family residing in the more densely populated part of the city, is engaged in the dairying and poultry industries on a small scale. They own two cows and twenty-five hens, and yet do a large business in their neighborhood

PITCHED BATTLE BETWEEN CANADIAN AND ENGLISH GIRLS

Kingston, Ont., July 22—A working force of the Dominion Cotton Mills here has been receiving accessions to its branch force from English immigrants arriving at intervals this season.

At lower wages than those given their native, and this fact has had a tendency towards crowding the latter out.

The case was expounded and this culminated in a pitched battle between the English and Canadian girls.

The fight was earnest and soon got beyond the ability of the management to stop it, and the police were brought on the scene and order was finally restored.

EVOLUTION OF STRENGTH AND WHAT IS EXPECTED

Here and elsewhere are almost a unit in opinion that this retrenchment will run its course through every line of activity.

Already the curtailment of expenditure on new work by railroads and by industrial (including telephone) organizations has led to a collapse in the price of copper and to weakness throughout other metal markets.

Recession Not to be Viewed as a Casualty.

Here a word of comfort may be offered the stock market. The mistake that is being made is to view this return to a sane level of values as proof of disastrous conditions.

It calls for no profound reasoning to comprehend that this retrenchment will tend to bring about normal conditions in the world's money markets.

Whereas, it has been demonstrated that there is not enough money capital to carry on business at an absurdly artificial level of prices, there is little doubt in the minds of those qualified to judge that the supply of capital is adequate for all reasonable needs, and that, moreover, the curative process now at work will be ultimately beneficial to everyone.

Therefore, the industrial recession now underway is not to be viewed as calamity, but as necessary and in reality desirable. The weighty views of our leading bankers reproduced in these columns on Saturday make this plain.

A more hopeful view of stocks was engendered last week by the success that attended the professional marking up of quotations. Slightly lower rates for money have also been noted.

They will, upon completion, cross the Atlantic under their own steam, and will, upon reaching Quebec, be cut in halves and towed up the Lawrence, and so on to some point on Lake Erie, where they will be put together. These vessels will add enormously to the capacity of the company's lake fleet.

Another vessel for the C. P. R. is approaching completion at the shipyard of Gray, Sons & Co., at Birkenhead. This is the Princess Ena, which is expected to be ready in August. She is intended for the Pacific service, and when built will proceed to her destination by way of Cape Horn.

The two new steamers for the great lakes, which are to augment the existing fleet, are expected to be entirely finished in October. One of them was christened the Keewatin by Mrs. G. M. Bowditch, and the other, which has been named the Astoria, was launched last week. They have been built by the Fairfield Co. on the Clyde, and have now to receive their engine equipment.

Another vessel for the C. P. R. is approaching completion at the shipyard of Gray, Sons & Co., at Birkenhead. This is the Princess Ena, which is expected to be ready in August. She is intended for the Pacific service, and when built will proceed to her destination by way of Cape Horn.

The two new steamers for the great lakes, which are to augment the existing fleet, are expected to be entirely finished in October. One of them was christened the Keewatin by Mrs. G. M. Bowditch, and the other, which has been named the Astoria, was launched last week. They have been built by the Fairfield Co. on the Clyde, and have now to receive their engine equipment.

They will, upon completion, cross the Atlantic under their own steam, and will, upon reaching Quebec, be cut in halves and towed up the Lawrence, and so on to some point on Lake Erie, where they will be put together. These vessels will add enormously to the capacity of the company's lake fleet.
