LONDON, June 19th, 1916.

THE PRINCE'S PROMOTION.
Captain the Prince of Wales is among the soldiers mentioned by Sir Douglas Haig "for gallant and distinguished conduct in the field." This is the second time that the Prince has been commended for his services at the front. Considering his position, it cannot be said that the Prince's military progress is being unduly hurried. When he left the Navy to join the Grenadiers for active service he had qualified for the rank of Lieutenant. The "steps" in his soldiering career now stand as follows—second Lieutenant, Grenadier Guards, August 8, 1914; departure for the front and appointment A.D.C. to Sir John French, November 18th, 1914; Lieutenant, November 18th, 1914; arrived in England as staff captain on the Staff of the General Commanding-in-Chief, Mediterranean Expeditionary Force, March, 1915. The Prince's previous "mention" was in Sir John French's despatch of April, 1915, which His Royal Highness carried to London. Sir John then had occasion to praise his good work as a liaison officer during the battle of Neuve Chapelle. Sir John added that the Prince had done duty in the trenches. One private in the R.G.A. wrote: "We had a visit from the Prince of Wales right in the firing line. He goes about everywhere, fearing nothing, and the troops admire his courage immensely." Another soldier remarked that he had packed and forwarded to Buckingham Palace the rifle which the Prince had used in the trenches, and with which he had tried to bring down a German sniper.

SOLDIERS AND THE ORDER OF MERIT.
Lord Kitchener's death leaves Lord French as the solitary representative of the Army among the members of the Order of Merit while the sister service can show three decorations, the recipients being Lord Fisher, Sir Edward Seymour and Sir A. K. Wilson, as well as the present First Lord of the Admiralty, who has just received it. As there are several vacancies in the order, it is suggested here that the distinction should be conferred in the near future upon another soldier, Sir Douglas Haig for instance, or Sir William Robertson. Lord Kitchener was one of the twelve notable men upon whom King Edward conferred the Order when it was founded fourteen years ago, and Good Stories From Magazines.

An Irish vicar, having advertised for an organist, received the following reply:—
"Dear Sir,—I noticed you have a vacancy for an organist and music teacher, either lady or gentleman. Having been both for several years, I beg to offer you my services."—The Organist and Choirmaster.

Here is a true story from the front. At one part of the line the soldiers have displayed some ingenuity in naming the trenches, and two men from another division one day came across a trench marked "The Deanery." "Hello," said one, "here's a deanery." Then a head popped up out of the trench, and the chaplain observed, "Yes, and I'm the Dean, so please moderate your language."—The Treasury.

The teacher had concluded her scripture lesson, and to awaken interest said she would answer any questions her class of boys chose to put to her on it. "How did Noah spend his time when he was in the ark?" came the first question. For a moment the teacher did not know what to say. At last she hazarded, "Well, perhaps he fished." "He couldn't do much fishing with only two worms," put in another youngster.—The Mill-gate Monthly.

BANJOLIN.
It is a good many years since the craze for the banjo, which preceded the day of the pirotto trousers. Now there is a fashionable tendency towards the banjolin. This is a hybrid instrument, between the mandolin and the banjo. It is much louder than the former tinkling little instrument, for which Mozart wrote a special part in one of his greatest operas. Unlike the banjo, it rarely gets out of tune. Countess Nada Torby, daughter of the Grand Duke Michael, is an ardent votary of the new instrument, and another is Lord Airle.

PACIFIC BLOCKADE.
Satisfaction is expressed here at the institution of what amounts to a pacific blockade of the Greek coast. It is a manifestation of Allied naval strength which ought to bring reflection to the minds of the directors of Greek policy. This method of constraint obtained recognition in international law in the course of last century, and has mainly been used by the stronger naval Powers to obtain, by a method short of war, redress from the weaker Powers who are sometimes inclined to presume upon their very weakness. It has been used several times against Greece, notably in 1836, when the Powers adopted this means of preventing her making war on Turkey. In 1907 the Powers also applied pacific blockade to Crete. Curiously enough, the first use of this potent instrument was against the Greek ports in 1827, which were then occupied by the Turks. This, however, led finally to the battle of Navarino, in which the squadrons of Britain, France, and Russia destroyed the Turkish Fleet. There are two kinds of pacific blockade—one in which the vessels belonging to the state in question are alone held up, and the other in which all vessels are denied access to or egress from the blockaded ports. The latter method has not so large a volume of settled practice behind it as the former. But the merit of pacific blockade is that it falls short of war, although the attempt to impose it on a strong Power would inevitably lead to a prompt declaration of hostilities. Ships attempting to break a pacific blockade are seized, but they are not confiscated as prize. They are restored when the blockade is terminated.

MEASLES.
Hundreds of children are suffering from "Measles" at the present time, and one has to be very careful in trying to avoid complications that often follow them.
A heavy "Cough" is very prevalent during the present epidemic, and "Pneumonia" is the great danger. Avoid this by keeping a bottle of "Stafford's Phosphate Cough Cure" on hand.

CAMPAIGN WHISKERS.
The statesman Hughes, as we most of us know, lets his alfalfa grow; no richer growth has been produced, and there the robins come to roost. And Fairbanks, too, who hopes to win, has ballast on his shapely chin, and Marshall wears a long mustache, to strain his soup and corn beef hash. But there is comfort in this thought: There are no sideboards in the lot. More proudly would our banner wave, if all the candidates would shave, for whiskers indicate a mind unfitted for a statesman's grind. I greatly fear one can't command the confidence of this broad land, or reach the people's trusting heart, if whiskers have a place or part. Yet there is solace in this thought: I'd view this summer's thrilling fight with more of rapture and delight if all the candidates would go to barber shops, where artists mow the spinch off for fifteen cents, and make men look like human gents. I cannot whoop for those who wear a package of ingrowing hair. Yet this one fact must be allowed: There are no sideboards in the crowd.

Your Boys and Girls.

It is a bad plan to allow children to eat between regular meals, then when they should eat a good meal they are not hungry, but nervous, and think only of getting out to finish some pet game. If they are compelled to wait for meal hours, which should be regular, they will be really hungry and be glad to sit quietly at the table and eat a substantial meal, which will improve the digestion and the nerves.

Children should be taught very early that it is not safe to use a handkerchief that has been used by someone else, and for similar reasons the use of individual towels and wash cloths should be insisted upon.

A child should be taught to blow its nose, to submit the tongue and throat to inspections, to gargle, and to regard the doctor as a friend whose visits are to be looked forward to with pleasure. Attention to these suggestions will make the task of the physician at some critical time far less difficult than it otherwise would be. If a child has sometimes been threatened with a visit from the doctor on a means of securing obedience, his fears may be strong and serious drawback to successful treatment.

Second Lieut. F. Rioux.

Mr. Fred Rioux, Assistant Manager of the Reid Nfld. Co. severed his connection with that Company yesterday in order to enlist in the Second Newfoundland Regiment. He has been given a commission as Second Lieut. and takes up his duties to-day. In a short while he will proceed to England, where he will report at the War Office and will probably be attached to some important branch of the Army. Second Lieutenant Rioux is a French Canadian by birth, a practical railway man and telegraph operator, understands engineering, was educated in both French and English, and in all, will be a valuable man to the British Army. Some time ago he underwent an operation at the General Hospital to remove a slight physical defect in order to fit himself for the Regiment.

Although we are now into midsummer no start has been made towards the cleaning up of the margin of Quill Vidi Lake and the attention of the Municipal Council is directed to the matter. Around the head and along the north side of the Lake conditions are disgraceful, piles of filth of all descriptions festering in the sun. People who live nearby and who pass that way are complaining bitterly and it is hoped that the remedy will be applied.

A QUESTION OF JURISDICTION.

Yesterday's issue of the Daily Star contained a criticism, or rather misrepresentation, of the Supreme Court, which we have been asked to correct, and which we should have felt it our duty to correct in any case.

We have been informed of the facts of the case which seems to have given rise to such an absurd misunderstanding. A plaintiff, resident in the jurisdiction of an outpost magistrate, brought suit against a defendant resident in the same jurisdiction.

The Publication of Casualties.

Though we feel it to be largely unnecessary, we have pleasure in adding to what has been said by other papers a word in defence of the Colonial Secretary's Office against criticism of the manner in which it publishes the casualty lists.

The details which have to be attended to in the preparation of these lists are far more numerous, and demand far more time, than most of the public can imagine. We understand that the list, which reaches the Office contains merely the surname and number of each soldier, with a description of his injury, and that the records have to be consulted for his Christian name, his place of residence and the name of the next of kin.

Experiences of Naval Reservist Nath. Somerton.

Naval Reservist Nath. Somerton, of Portugal Cove, joined H. M. S. Briton shortly after the outbreak of hostilities and after putting in several months hard training, left the shores of his native land accompanied by 209 shipmates, on board the S. S. Mongolian, in February, 1915. After an eventful trip in which it was feared the Mongolian would go under owing to her leaking badly, she reached Halifax, where the naval boys were transferred to the temporary troopship Scandinavian and were soon after landed in England.

What's the Simile?

By RUTH CAMERON.

What interesting things words and phrases often are when we stop to think about them! What does "flash in the pan" mean? Of course you find that easy to answer. It means a sudden flash of ability of one sort or another that is not backed up by a steady supply.

But why do we call that a "flash in the pan"? Whence does the simile come?

The question came up the other night, and I found that I had been subconsciously connecting it with the flash of the flash-light powder in the photographer's pan. Of course that is absurd. When you think it out you can see plainly that it must mean the flash of gold in the prospector's pan.

Tracking such phrases to their lair is fun.

Tracking such phrases to their lair is very interesting. There are many which you have used thousands of times without giving a thought to the simile they represent.

For instance, we speak of something as being "all run down." What is the simile? I had to stop and think a moment before I could answer.

Again, we say, a man has "something up his sleeve." As far as I can see, that phrase comes from the gaming table, but strangely enough it appears to have lost part of its significance on the way. For a man to have a card up his sleeve means that anyone having "something up his sleeve" do we mean anything more than that he has something in reserve?

Everyday Etiquette.

"Will you kindly tell me if it is correct for a young lady to take a man's arm while walking out with him?" inquired Kate of her older sister.

"No, it is not considered correct, for a woman to take a gentleman's arm unless there is need of assistance," replied the latter.

French Wounded Came Home in Gay Spirits.

Their Stories Stir Paris to Hopes of Success Now on Scene of Old Defeats.

Paris, July 8.—The wounded from the battlefields of Picardy are coming to Paris. The arrival of the wounded is usually most depressing, but in the case of these wounded their arrival has done more to cheer up the Parisians than anything else since the war began. For one and all were happy, though wounded. Many were laughing and some women were even cheering when they were lifted from the trains to the ambulances, and their cheers brought a new conviction to the capital—a conviction expressed on all sides, that this is a real offensive.

The stories the wounded men told of the methodical and terrible offensive that this one really is, made a scene at the outlying evacuation stations never to be forgotten.

They brought a poignant understanding that just beyond the present battle line there is Saint Quentin, Cambria, Ouat and Lille. There is Maubeuge, of tragic memory; Valenciennes, Namur and Mons and Charleroi, where battles of the same name, but different endings may be fought, again. Eight million on the other side of the line are now counting the hours of deliverance.

The ambulance men and later the doctors at the hospital were amazed at the slightness of a majority of the wounds, far different from those received at Verdun—which of course made laughter and conversation possible. Also, the men were in such condition that they had abandoned none of their paraphernalia, as is usually the case, and in addition, they were simply loaded down with German souvenirs of every description, much of which they flung gaily from their stretchers to the waiting crowds.

I talked with several of the wounded soon after their arrival. One man, a Sergeant in a crack colonial regi-

German Mobs Imprecate Kaiser and Crown Prince.

Serious Demonstrations in Berlin, Potsdam and Other Cities—Want Germany Free From Parasites Who Have Led it to Ruin.

London, July 7.—A despatch to the Daily Telegraph from Milan says—"Travellers arriving in Switzerland from Germany report serious troubles in several German cities, among others Berlin. Immediately after the first news was received from the Anglo-French offensive, crowds marched through the streets, shouting "Enough of war, let us have peace." The disorders this time were different from the customary food riots, and seemed far more serious, having all the characteristics of popular revolts.

The riots in Berlin were exceptionally grave. People surrounded the troops to force them to join the revolt, and took the wheels of military wagens and gun carriages and used them for barricades.

The most serious demonstration was at Potsdam last Sunday. A vast mob indulged in imprecations against the Kaiser and the imperial family. Sheets were secretly handed round on which were printed, "Death to the Kaiser, death to the man who wants war, death to the Crown Prince, long live free Germany, free from these parasites who have led it to ruin."

"We were on the old vive for the attack since June 17, which was a superstitious date. That sounded through the trenches as the time the offensive would begin. The heavy artillery preparation, especially on the British front, was far greater than in the Champagne."

Sir James Watson's Opinion Considered Most Valuable.

He says that the commonest of all disorders, and one from which few escape is Catarrh. Sir James firmly believes in local treatment. It is best supplied by "Catarrhozone." No case of Catarrh can exist where Catarrhozone is used; it is a miracle worker, relieves almost instantly, and cures after other remedies fail. Other treatments can't reach the diseased parts like Catarrhozone because it goes to the source of the trouble along with the air you breathe. Catarrhozone is free from cocaine, it leaves no bad after-effects, it is simply nature's own cure.

Beware of dangerous substitutes offered under misleading names and meant to deceive you for genuine Catarrhozone which is sold everywhere, large size containing two months treatment costs $1.00; small size, 50c.; trial size, 25c.

In Such a Spot as Drake Would Chose—Winds of the Sea Sweep Over their Last Place.

Edinburgh.—If I were a sailor should want to sleep at last in my hilltop place like that little Coast cemetery where 33 of the who perished in the great sea have now been laid to rest.

It is such a spot as Drake would have chosen had they been him ashore instead of in North Dros Bay.

There are many golden-eyes here, and forget-me-nots, crimson double-daisies, which flowers that sailors love; with the sea blow over it for ever, the thick growing anemones swirl and dance in a sea surf of whiteness above the blue of countless violets, so these early summer days it is an enchanted tide, having no wetness nor chill, ebbed and above the dead.

Twenty-nine Englishmen, Irishmen, and one Scotsman buried in this little mizen-tillery. The Scotsman had a grave, for he was a Presbyterian; the others were either from England or Roman Catholic. The navy always pays due respect to religious susceptibilities. Five dead were officers, and each a separate grave; the three Catholics were laid together; the remainder were berthed in the trenches holding 12 men apiece.

It had been a wet, blustering day, but the sun was shining brightly when the funeral party reached the cemetery gates. There was no formality of gun camp to convey the bodies. The officers' borne in five two-horse hearse, the men were distributed among horse lorries and a motor lorry never have. Glorious Burial for Heroes of the Great Naval Battle

In Such a Spot as Drake Would Have Chosen—Winds of the Sea Eternally Sweep Over their Last Resting Place.

Edinburgh.—If I were a sailor I should want to sleep at last in a sunny hilltop place like that little East Coast cemetery where 33 of the heroes who perished in the great sea fight have now been laid to rest.

It is such a spot as Drake himself would have chosen had they buried him ashore instead of in Nombre de Dios Bay.

There are many golden-eyed pansies there, and forget-me-nots, and crimson double-daisies, which are all flowers that sailors love; winds from the sea blow over it for ever; and the thick growing anemones sway and twinkle and dance in a breaking surf of whiteness above the rippling blue of countless violets, so that in these early summer days it is as if an enchanted tide, having neither wetness nor chill, ebbed and flowed above the dead.

Twenty-nine Englishmen, three Irishmen, and one Scotsman were buried in this little mizzen-top cemetery. The Scotsman had a separate grave, for he was a Presbyterian, and the others were either Church of England or Roman Catholic, and the navy always pays due respect to religious susceptibilities. Five of the dead were officers, and each had a separate grave; the three Roman Catholics were laid together; and the remainder were berthed in two long trenches holding 12 men apiece.

It had been a wet, blustery morning, but the sun was shining brightly when the funeral procession reached the cemetery gates. There was no formality of gun carriages to convey the bodies. The officers were borne in five two-horse hearses, and the men were distributed among four horse lorries and a motor lorry. Yet never have I attended a funeral which impressed me more. At the head of the cortege marched the pipers of a Scottish regiment, playing "The Flowers of the Forest," which lament alternated with solemn funeral music played by the marine bands of two world-famous fighting ships.

The Chief Clerk.

Over three hundred blue-jackets and officers were in attendance, the officers, tight-lipped, impassive, for to betray emotion is against all naval tradition; the men marching with mechanical precision, their hands, some, bronzed faces expressing neither grief nor triumph, although friends who had been dearer to them than brothers had gone from them forever in a blaze of glory. Even the black-robed women, the victims' mothers and wives, seemed to share in the general self-restraint. There was little outward exhibition of affliction—no hysterical sobbing, no terribil sorrow—though anguish beyond expression shone in the dry, bright eyes. Close to Admiral Sir Robert Lowry walked the chiefest hero of the fight—Admiral Sir David Beatty short of stature, but broad of shoulder, with stern, well-cut features and an eye like an eagle's, he seemed the literal embodiment of the navy's resolute spirit. Power and purpose veritably radiate from this remarkable man. And he has the grand unconscious dignity of a Roman Emperor.

The three burial services—Presbyterian, Church of England, and Roman Catholic—were conducted simultaneously, and each coffin was covered with a Union Jack, fit wind-sheet for the gallant body it enclosed.

There was no singing of hymns, neither did a firing party crash out a salute over the dead. What need? It would have savoured of anticlimax.

Belgium's Queen.

The Queen of the Belgians was born Elizabeth, Duchess of Bavaria, and from the moment she was able to understand, her teachers and tutors impressed upon their little Royal charge the importance of studying with all her heart and mind if she would do honor to the ancient and historic house of Bavaria—the most ancient in all Europe.

Elizabeth was willing and promised to do her best. She almost lost her health in her heroic efforts to become a scholar, but she came out triumphant, and is to-day one of the most learned princesses of Europe. She won the degree of doctor of medicine, and the precious pigskin hangs on the wall of her study.

When she was a girl in her teens she solemnly swore she would never marry. No. That question was settled once and for all. Her argument was that any one could marry; besides, she had studied so hard she decided it would be best to serve her country by improvements in one way or another, in a civic way, especially, all along the line.

For a girl she certainly had the most stupendous ideas, and she insisted upon having them carried out. The first was to build a few extra fine roads. Then, shortly after she graduated as a doctor of medicine, she was the means of having several hospitals built, mostly for the benefit of the poor, but equipped with every present-day convenience for their comfort and quick recovery.

Aside from all the latest material improvements introduced into these houses of health, as they are sometimes called, the Princess Elizabeth was, and still is, a firm believer in the psychology of health—such as reading to a patient or having some one sing or render an instrumental solo as the suffering patients wearily wait for their well-day to come.

She was just about the happiest girl alive at this time. Everything was going her way, and she secretly con-

For Conspicuous Gallantry.

A Regimental Order just issued contains what we believe is the first intimation of the nature of the act which won for Private W. J. Gladney, the coveted reward of the Distinguished Service Medal. The official notice runs:

"417 Pte. W. J. Gladney, 1st Bn. (now attached to 2nd Bn.) 1st Newfoundland Regiment.

"For conspicuous gallantry. He went out alone to within 25 yards of the 'enemy' trench, located four machine guns, shot two sentries, and brought back a valuable report."

Conspicuous gallantry indeed, and well deserving of the distinction!

gratulated herself on being about the only Royal Princess working out practical results worth while. Doing something for others, that was the idea.

Alas! Her happiness could not last much longer. She thought that her word, given as a Royal Princess that she had foresworn marriage, would be taken seriously, above all by her mother. Unforeseen fate, she was the one who came to her daughter and said:

"Only dear, it is nearly time for you to marry, and I have chosen the finest prince in all Europe for you."

The Princess Elizabeth could hardly believe her ears. She looked at her mother in consternation.

"What has been the use, then, of all my hard studies? My idea was to achieve fame all by myself."

Her mother smiled indulgently and explained that she could carry out her idea of living with twice as much happiness, because, by her side as her husband the future King of the Belgians. He knew her ambitions and desires and would willingly work with her in double harness if she would only consent to be his Queen.

She accepted him under no misapprehension. Everything was made plain as to the difficulties of reigning as the Queen of Belgium, for together they would be obliged to discount by their good deeds the unsavory reputation of the young Prince's uncle, the then reigning Sovereign.

Elizabeth was as brave as she was good. She promised to do her best.

They have three charming children, two boys and a girl. The Queen has brought him up herself "by hand," as she herself admits. Then she smiles that slow, sweet smile at the American expression she has used.

She is a real musician, her favorite instrument being the violin. This she has taught her eldest son, the Duke of Brabant, the others having chosen the piano.

Then came the war; the King's place was to be with his men, right in the centre of the fighting field. The Queen said her place was by his side, no matter where he went, for if anything seriously happened to him, life would be at an end for her too.

"But I shall be in the trenches, standing in muddy water for hours at a time."

"Then I go too." And so she did.

But before she went she pawned every one of her magnificent jewels, keeping only, and always wearing next her heart, that long gold chain and little gold heart the King had placed around her neck when she put her hand in his and promised to help him govern Belgium as his Queen.

The Queen of the Belgians has won the love of the nation she has adopted as her own, as much by her womanly as by her Royal qualities. It is interesting to know that before the war caused the Royal children to find a new home in England, it was Queen Elizabeth's daily habit to visit her children's schoolroom and take part in the work of teaching them. She was practically well fitted for this work, for she was an excellent student herself and knew just what to do to inculcate a love of study in them.

Queen Elizabeth is certainly a thoroughly enlightened woman and a great reader. She dislikes pomp and display and has never tolerated it. She likes to get at the heart of things in this way finding out for herself personal inspection the exact needs of these people. Shortly after her visit follow the improvements she has mapped out for their betterment.

No other queen has faced the fire of actual battle. She has seen with her own eyes her brave soldiers as they fell, and she has been there to administer instant relief.—The Bits.

Dust and Flies.

This is the time of the year when the dust from the streets, and flies are in the air and watching their chance to alight on your bread and bring dirt and disease to your children. Guard against them by buying Lynch's Pan-Dandy Bread, white, and brown, wrapped and sealed by machinery in a dust and germ proof wrapper; it is the only bread in Newfoundland that is made, wrapped and sealed by machinery. Ask your grocer for it. Did you get any of Lynch's Beauty Cake, yet? Oh, what a beauty cake! the best in the land. Ask your grocer for it.

Molasses Importations Short.

Since the beginning of the present year the importations of molasses into this port are approximately seven thousand puncheons, or about five thousand below last year's corresponding importations. Notwithstanding it is estimated that by the close of 1916 the importations will exceed, at least by twenty-five per cent, the amount of molasses brought here for the whole of 1915, owing to the current high price of sugar.
