DOMINION OF CANADA

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

---

FIRST SESSION—TWENTY-SECOND PARLIAMENT

2-3 ELIZABETH II

BEING THE 96TH SESSION FOR THE PERIOD 1867-1954

---

VOLUME VI, 1953-54

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE NINTH DAY OF JUNE, 1954, TO THE TWENTY-SIXTH DAY OF JUNE, 1954, INCLUSIVE

---

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

---

EDMOND CLOUTIER, C.M.G., O.A., D.S.P.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1954

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 9, 1954

The house met at eleven o'clock.

NATIONAL PHYSICAL FITNESS ACT

REPEAL OF EXISTING LEGISLATION

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 475, to repeal the National Physical Fitness Act.

Mr. Macdonnell: Explain.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to do precisely what it says, to repeal the National Physical Fitness Act.

Mr. Fleming: Why?

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I think before this is agreed to it should simply be explained that it has been ineffective and the minister is taking the proper course.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, for the first time in a long time I am able to agree fully with what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) has said.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

ARMED FORCES—MEDICAL CATEGORIES

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain):

1. What were the regulations and practices in respect of a veteran of world war II who enlisted with an A1 category and was discharged after five years service with an E category?
2. Is such a veteran automatically entitled to be boarded to ascertain pension disability, if any?
3. Is it possible for a veteran who enlisted and did not falsify his medical history to enter the services as A1 category and later to be discharged as category E and medically unfit, and yet not be eligible for pension?
4. If so, under what circumstances?

Mr. Bennett:

1. The conditions governing entitlement to pension for veterans of world war II are set out in the Pension Act, which act prescribes the procedure to be followed by the applicant and the commission.

2. Yes, the service documents of all veterans who served in world war II were screened to determine whether or not a pensionable disability existed at the time of discharge.

3 and 4. Yes, if the lowered category

(1) was caused by improper conduct as defined in the Pension Act; or

(2) was incurred while on leave of absence without pay; or

(3) was incurred when the member of the forces had, during leave of absence with pay, undertaken an occupation that was unconnected with military service; or

(4) was the result of the discovery on service of physical or mental inability to absorb training and when such physical or mental limitation pre-existed enlistment but was not apparent at the time of enlistment and the existence of which may well have been unknown to the serviceman himself.

GARLAND BUILDING, OTTAWA

Mr. Hodgson:

1. Has the Garland building at the corner of O'Connor and Queen streets, Ottawa, been leased by the federal government?
2. If so, what is the term of the lease?
3. What rental is being paid?
4. Is the building being renovated?
5. If so, what has been the cost of such renovations to date?
6. What is the estimated cost to complete such renovations?
7. Were tenders called for this work?
8. If so, what are the names of those submitting tenders and the amount of each tender?
9. Who was the successful tenderer and what was the amount of such tender?
10. What was the original cost of this building?
11. What is the assessed value and taxes per year?
12. Was this building condemned at any time?
13. What use is the government making of this building?

Mr. Bourget:

1. Yes.

2. Ten years from December 1, 1953.

3. $54,450 per annum for 44,000 sq. ft.

4. Yes.

5 and 6. Estimated cost $175,000.

7. Yes, by invitation bids.

8. Leopold Beaudoin Construction Company, $5,000 fixed fee; Doran Construction Company Limited, $6,000 fixed fee; A. Lanctot Construction Company, $6,124 fixed fee; A. Tessier, $22,800 fixed fee.

9. Leopold Beaudoin Construction Company—$5,000 fixed fee up to $175,000—3 per cent for any expenditure over $175,000.

10. No information available.

11. (a) $144,075.00 (assessment); (b) $5,956.64 (taxes, 1954).

Questions

12. We are informed by the city building inspector and city fire inspector that the building has never been condemned.

13. Office accommodation.

DOWNSVIEW AIRPORT—LIGHTING

Mr. McBain:

1. Were tenders called for construction of lighting facilities for Downsview airport?

2. If so, what are the names of those who submitted tenders?

3. What was the amount of each tender?

4. To whom was the contract awarded, for what amount and on what date?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe):

1. Yes.

2 and 3.

| Names of tenderers | Amount of tender |
|---|---|
| Ontario Electrical Construction Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ontario | $14,281.15 |
| Armstrong Bros., Brampton, Ontario | 15,987.50 |
| Accurate Electrical, Montreal, P.Q. | 16,199.25 |
| Canadian Comstock Co., Leaside, Ontario | 17,188.10 |
| Donovan Construction Co., Toronto, Ontario | 18,900.00 |
| Bedard-Girard Ltd., Montreal, P.Q. | 20,300.00 |
| John H. Baldwin Electric, Toronto Ontario | 23,530.05 |
| W. J. Robbins, Electrical, St. Thomas, Ontario | 27,611.03 |

4. Ontario Electrical Construction Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ontario, at an amount of $14,281.15, on May 18, 1954.

INDIAN CARE, PUBLIC HOSPITALS

Mr. Trainor:

1. What was the total amount paid to public general hospitals for the care of Indians, during 1953?

2. What was the amount per patient day?

Mr. Martin:

1. Total amount paid during the fiscal year 1953-54 direct to public general hospitals (classified as such by the province or territory in which located) and as premiums to the British Columbia hospital insurance service covering almost all the native population in British Columbia—$2,302,575.

2. It is not possible to compute an over-all average patient day cost because of the factor of insurance (almost all the native population in British Columbia are covered by the British Columbia hospital insurance service —hence payments are not made direct to individual hospitals but in the form of premiums). The rates paid were the result of negotiations with the individual hospitals and with the agencies operating hospitals or insurance plan. These rates ranged from approximately $4.50 per day to $16.50 per day for bedside nursing care in multiple patient ward accommodation.

SALE OF HOUSES, ARVIDA, QUE.

Mr. Knowles:

1. Have there been any discussions or negotiations, or has there been any correspondence, between the Aluminum Company of Canada and the federal government, or any department, branch, agency or official thereof, concerning the selling of some of the houses owned by the said company at Arvida, Quebec, to its employees, and the possibility of federal assistance or participation in such sales in any way?

2. If so, what have been the subjects of such discussions, negotiations or correspondence?

3. What is the present status of the matter?

4. What terms are involved in any such assistance or participation?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the officers of my department have canvassed the likely departments about this question and no information has come to light and the answer is that there has been none which we can discover. If the hon. member can throw any light on it I would be glad if he would do so.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can throw light on it when I meet the minister privately.

FEDERAL EXPENDITURES, SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Studer:

1. What was the total expenditure in Saskatchewan for the fiscal year 1952-53, by the federal government, including the statutory subsidy and tax rental agreement payments?

2. What was the total expenditure during the fiscal year 1952-53 in Saskatchewan by each federal government department and agency?

3. What was the total amount of expenditures in Saskatchewan by all federal government departments and agencies, since April 1, 1944?

Mr. Benidickson:

1 and 2:

Expenditures by the federal government in the province

| | Thousands of dollars |
|---|---|
| A Direct payments to the provincial government: | |
| (a) Compensation under dominion-provincial taxation agreements | 26,121 |
| (b) Compensation under section 7, Dominion-Provincial Taxation Agreement Act, 1947 (share of net taxes collected from certain public utility companies) | 31 |
| (c) Statutory subsidies | 2,041 |
| (d) General health grants | 1,981 |
| | 30,174 |

Questions

B Direct payments to or on behalf of individual residents of the province:

| | |
|---|---|
| (a) Family allowances | 19,723 |
| (b) Pensions (world wars I and II) | 5,843 |
| (c) Veterans war service gratuities and re-establishment credits | 524 |
| (d) Veterans post-discharge rehabilitation benefits | 107 |
| (e) War veterans allowances | 1,276 |
| (f) Old age pensions, pensions to blind persons (and old age security payments) | 20,150 |
| | 47,623 |

C Interest paid on government of Canada bonds:

| | |
|---|---|
| Estimated amount of interest paid to holders of government of Canada bonds in the province | 13,140 |

D Estimate of major expenditures by government departments or agencies within the province:

| | |
|---|---|
| (a) Agriculture | 7,776 |
| (b) Citizenship and immigration | 1,993 |
| (c) Finance | 782 |
| (d) Fisheries | 12 |
| (e) Justice | 1,309 |
| (f) Labour | 922 |
| (g) Mines and technical surveys | 57 |
| (h) National defence | 19,763 |
| (i) National health and welfare | 1,367 |
| (j) National revenue | 1,497 |
| (k) Public works | 1,592 |
| (l) Resources and development | 2,405 |
| (m) Royal Canadian Mounted Police | 4,023 |
| (n) Trade and commerce | 568 |
| (o) Transport (including C.M.C. and N.H. board) | 1,519 |
| (p) Veterans affairs | 2,328 |
| (q) Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation | 304 |
| | 48,217 |

E Proportional share of federal government's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund

| | |
|---|---|
| Portion allocated to province on basis of proportion of number of insured workers in province to number of insured workers in Canada | 764 |
| Total Expenditures | 139,918 |

83276—360½

| 3. Fiscal year | Expenditures in thousands of dollars |
|---|---|
| 1944-45 | 78,921 |
| 1945-46 | 111,350 |
| 1946-47 | 118,915 |
| 1947-48 | 115,732 |
| 1948-49 | 102,196 |
| 1949-50 | 103,882 |
| 1950-51 | 133,191 |
| 1951-52 | 110,293 |
| 1952-53 | 139,918 |
| 1953-54 | 141,883 |
| *Total Expenditures | 1,156,281 |

*Expenditure figures do not include:

(a) The more general type of budgetary expenditures which are made for the benefit of the country as a whole and which are of direct benefit to all the provinces. In this category are the expenses of the central legislative body at Ottawa, the financial and administrative departments at Ottawa, and the research activities of the national research council.

(b) Payments to the majority of suppliers of goods and services as the payments are in many cases made to the head office of the company and therefore do not lend themselves to an accurate segregation by provinces.

CIVIL DEFENCE WORKERS

Mr. Huffman:

1. How many people are enrolled for civil defence work in Canada?
2. How many of these are full-time civil defence workers and how many are part-time voluntary workers?

Mr. Martin:

1. Over 163,000, according to recent strength reports from the provincial civil defence co-ordinators.

2. Over 82,000 on a "duty" basis; 81,000 on a voluntary basis.

DISASTER PLANNING, HOSPITALS

Mr. Goode:

1. Has any planning been done to prepare hospitals in Canada to operate under disaster conditions?
2. If so, what form has this planning taken?

Mr. Martin:

1 and 2. Yes. A series of hospital disaster institutes is being conducted. One has been held in British Columbia to serve British Columbia and Alberta hospitals. One has been held in Halifax for the Atlantic provinces. In the near future, institutes will be held at the head of the great lakes for this region, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. At least two will be held in the province of Ontario; and two will be held in the province of Quebec, one of which will be in French.

In each instance the staff of a large hospital and, as contrast, of a small hospital, with the assistance of officers of the civil defence health planning group of the Department of National Health and Welfare, prepare a complete plan for the handling of mass casualties. Then the hospital administrators and chiefs of medical services and of nursing services from each of about 15 other hospitals in each area attend a two-day institute conducted by the health planning group of the department. During the institute they receive instruction in the preparation of hospital plans, examine the plans of the host hospital, and discuss these plans on the actual hospital premises. On the completion of the institute personnel from the attending hospitals undertake to carry out disaster plans in their own institutions. In this way about 100 hospitals across Canada, including D.V.A. hospitals, will be able to develop their own plans and to assist neighbouring hospitals in the preparation of further plans.

Another phase of planning which has recently been developed by the civil defence health planning group of the Department of National Health and Welfare is a regulation of casualty flow. By this is meant the general management of casualties at all levels of service, particularly in respect of the flow of casualties through rescue, first aid and medical treatment centres, and includes principles of evacuation and the operational control of health services.

CIVIL DEFENCE TRAINING, MEDICAL PERSONNEL

Mr. MacDougall:

What special civil defence training, if any, is being given to Canadian physicians and nurses?

Mr. Martin:

Arrangements in effect between the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of National Defence whereby candidates attend the A.B.C. warfare defence course held three times a year at Camp Borden have enabled the civil defence health services of the Department of National Health and Welfare to collaborate with provincial civil defence health services authorities in the indoctrination so far of 274 Canadian physicians.

In addition officers of the federal civil defence health services have conducted courses across Canada for nursing instructors on the subject of how to teach the nursing aspects of A.B.C. warfare. At the conclusion of these courses the 1,300 nursing instructors so trained have imparted their knowledge, by means of a series of 12-hour courses, to over 28,000 active, retired, and married nurses across the country.

Civil defence nursing is now part of the basic curricula for student nurses in five provinces.

Home nursing training conducted by the Red Cross Society and the St. John Ambulance Association has now been extended to rural areas and includes at least four hours of intensive civil defence instruction. Arrangements have been made also under which selected students in home nursing are given 44 hours of hospital experience.

Following individual training, team training in casualty services and in particular in the operation of first aid stations is carried out in several areas in Canada. This team training is done through the conduct of first aid station demonstrations in which, following examples staged in the first instance under the supervision of federal civil defence health services authorities, local authorities organize full complements of physicians, nurses, nurses' aides, auxiliary workers and stretcher bearers and actually implement a program of casualty care in the first aid station as it would be carried out under disaster conditions. Usually, as many as 250 people are required for each such demonstration. Actual medical supplies are used and authentic atmosphere is created through the use of the accurate medical and cosmetical simulation of from 50 to 100 casualties. This procedure, in addition to being a training factor, serves to give considerable stimulation to local civil defence organization.

SALE OF WHEAT TO RUSSIA

Mr. Thatcher:

Has the Canadian wheat board, or any other government agency, taken any specific steps since January 1 to sell wheat to Russia?

Mr. Dickey: Approximately three months ago, two representatives of the U.S.S.R. called on officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce and inquired into the availability and prices of Canadian wheat for shipment to the U.S.S.R. The necessary information was provided to them but, to date, there have been no further developments.

P.F.R.A. OFFICIALS' EXPENSES

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Did any of the officials or employees connected with the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act administration, whose names appear in sessional paper No. 10B tabled on June 1, 1954, receive any expenses additional to those set out in the return which were charged directly to the Department of Agriculture?

2. If so, who are such persons and what was the respective amount of such expenses?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. No.
2. See answer to No. 1.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS PURCHASES

Mr. Knowles:

What was the dollar value of purchases made by the Canadian National Railways, during each of the last three years (either fiscal or calendar), from (a) Montreal Bronze Limited; (b) Monsarrat Machinery and Foundries Limited; (c) Smiths Falls Malleable Casting Company; (d) Dominion Brake Shoe Company Limited; (e) Canadian Car and Foundry Company, Limited; (f) Dominion Wheel and Foundries Limited; (g) Montreal Locomotive Works Limited?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe):

The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

It is not the policy of the company to divulge the nature and details of contracts or orders between the railway and other parties for the supply of materials required for company use.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

THE RIOT ACT, ETC.

Mr. Knowles:

1. How many (a) charges; (b) convictions; (c) acquittals; (d) charges not proceeded with, have there been in Canada between January 1, 1919 and January 1, 1954, under sections 89, 90, 92, 94, 95, 96 and 97 of the Criminal Code, chapter 36 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, or their predecessors if the section numbers in question have been altered during that period?
2. What was the "style of cause" in each conviction noted above?
3. How many times has the Riot Act been read in Canada between January 1, 1919 and January 1, 1954?
4. What official (sheriff, deputy sheriff, mayor or other head officer, or justice) was responsible for each such reading, and what official read it in each such case?
5. How many times during the above period has the Riot Act been read in connection with a labour dispute, and when and where did such readings take place?
6. Has the Riot Act been read in Canada at any time since January 1, 1954? If so, when and where?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

P.F.R.A. OFFICIALS' EXPENSE ACCOUNTS

Mr. Diefenbaker:

For a copy of the expense accounts amounting to the sums of $2,794.23, $3,416,13, $2,811.88, $2,534.63, $3,356.84, $2,791.51, $2,609.78, $2,318.64, $2,644.07, $2,447.85, $2,416.88, which according to return No. 10B, tabled on June 1, 1954, represented the respective expense accounts for the year 1953 of the following officers or employees of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act administration, namely: (a) Mr. H. C. Biddell; (b) Mr. E. H. Butterfield; (c) Mr. J. H. Graham; (d) Mr. W. H. Gillis; (e) Mr. M. Hunka; (f) Mr. B. B. Kenny; (g) Mr. M. R. Skelton; (h) Dr. L. B. Thomson; (i) Mr. D. L. Barlow; (j) Mr. Adam Lyon; (k) Mr. J. L. Smith.

P.F.A.A. OFFICIALS' EXPENSE ACCOUNTS

Mr. Diefenbaker:

For a copy of the expense accounts amounting to the sums of $3,424.96, $3,298.38, $3,075.10, and $3,023.86, which according to return of No. 9F, tabled on June 1, 1954, represented the respective expense accounts for the year 1953 of the following officers or employees of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act administration, namely: (a) Mr. F. Carpenter; (b) Mr. J. H. Mitchell; (c) Mr. E. Zahorski; (d) Mr. A. A. Brown.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING POLICING, HARBOUR TOLLS, ETC.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (for the Minister of Transport) moved the third reading of Bill No. 421, to amend the National Harbours Board Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion agreed to?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

POST OFFICE ACT

ENLARGEMENT OF PROVISION RESPECTING DISTRIBUTION OF NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Postmaster General) moved the third reading of Bill No. 473, to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion agreed to?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before this motion for third reading is put, there are a few words I wish to say. Yesterday we made clear by our vote on second reading that we are opposed to this bill. It is therefore not necessary for me to say much on this motion for third reading. However, on checking my files in connection with this matter, in which I have certain correspondence with persons who were interested in seeing this bill go through, I find that, when I spoke on second reading yesterday, I used one figure which was not quite correct. As a matter of fact, from my point of view, the situation is even a little bit worse than that which would be indicated by the figures I used. When I spoke on second reading yesterday I indicated that the saving in trucking costs to Maclean's magazine resulting from the passage of this bill would be of the order of $20,000 or $25,000 a year. I was then speaking from memory. On checking the correspondence that I have in this matter I now find that the saving to Maclean's magazine from the passing of this bill will be something over $36,000 a year. That is Maclean's stake in this measure. That is the amount it is now costing that publication to truck from Toronto to Montreal those magazines going to provinces outside of Ontario. In addition to that $36,000 or more which the passing of this bill will save Maclean's magazine, there is another $9,000 a year which Maclean's magazine will have to continue paying for trucking from Toronto to Montreal its issues which are addressed to subscribers in the province of Ontario. As was made clear yesterday, although this bill will make it possible for the issues going to other provinces to be mailed from Toronto, and that is the main purpose of this bill, that change will not be possible in respect of issues mailed to subscribers in Ontario. In other words, for this magazine there is a total sum of $45,000 a year at present involved in trucking charges, $36,000 of which will be saved by the passing of this bill, if it is passed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the source of those statistics?

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) asks where I obtained these statistics. I have them under my hand in a letter from a gentleman who represents both the Periodical Press Association and Maclean's magazine. The same gentleman and I had an interview with regard to the matter and subsequently we had an exchange of letters. The figures I am giving are figures I have taken from the letter which is now under my hand.

I just want to say this, Mr. Speaker. Maclean's magazine can readily and easily save this entire sum of $45,000 a year in a very simple way. All they have to do is to discontinue the acceptance of liquor advertising, whereupon they would be able to print, publish and mail all of their copies from the city of Toronto. What Maclean's magazine wants to be assisted in doing is to get around the provision in the Ontario liquor control act against the publishing of liquor advertising and, at the same time, to have the benefit of the cheap postage rates which obtain for magazines and periodicals, as provided in the Post Office Act.

Yesterday when we were debating this matter the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) "caught me out" at one stage. He said at one point that there are no cheap rates provided by the Post Office Department. In a quick reply I said I agreed with the Leader of the Opposition and that I had used the term relatively. A moment later I realized that I should not have agreed with the Leader of the Opposition. While it is true that there are no cheap rates on first-class mail, especially since the recent increase in letter rates, nevertheless there are cheap rates provided by the Post Office Department for magazines and periodicals. My statement in that connection stands.

However, Mr. Speaker, as I say, Maclean's magazine wants to have the privilege of circumventing an Ontario law and at the same time to get the advantage of these cheap rates. As I see it, that is the main purpose of this legislation; its purpose is to facilitate a firm in its desire to get around a provincial law. It is for that reason that we voted against this measure yesterday. So far as the members of this group are concerned, that is the issue. As I see it, Maclean's is like the king in "Hamlet": It wants to be pardoned and yet retain the offence. It wants to be excused from complying with the law of the province in which it operates and yet at the same time it wants to get the advantage of these cheap rates provided for periodicals and magazines without paying the penalty which it now has to pay in trucking its issues from Toronto to Montreal. That is what this bill really is, namely an attempt to assist a firm, by federal law, to get around the provisions of a law in the province in which this firm operates. The members of this group think that legislation of this kind should not be brought before this house.

May I also indicate to the Postmaster General (Mr. Cote) that if this law goes through, I will expect an accounting next year with respect to this matter, bearing in mind the wording in the bill which says that no provision granted under this amending bill shall adversely affect the postal revenues. I have in mind in particular the point I made yesterday, namely that all issues of Maclean's magazine destined for the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland are now being trucked to Montreal and carried by the Post Office Department from Montreal to their destinations in those five eastern provinces. If, under this new arrangement, the Post Office Department has to carry those magazines the additional distance from Toronto to Montreal, it seems to me that is something that is going to adversely affect the postal revenues. I would hope that that section of the bill will be observed. If there is that additional cost to the Post Office Department for carrying those issues that extra distance from Toronto to Montreal, I hope that the additional cost will be charged back to any publication getting such an advantage.

There is just one other word I wish to add, Mr. Speaker. This bill came to us by what has sometimes been referred to as the back-door method; it came in from the other place. That fact means that if it is now given third reading, all that is required is royal assent.

It is sometimes argued in this house and in other quarters that the reason for our having two houses in this parliament is so that the other place can take a sober, second look at legislation passed by the elected representatives. I suggest, since there will be no such opportunity for a sober second look at this legislation by Their Honours in the other place, who did not discuss at all what this bill really does, that the argument as to the utility of the Senate as a reviewing body should no longer be advanced. We are opposed to this bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the utterly misleading statements made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) can be allowed to pass unnoticed. The purpose of the bill, and the sole reason the government brought it in, was that American publications are allowed four places to post in Canada and Canadian publications are unfairly discriminated against by being limited to only one.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to place myself on record. I hope there will be nothing alarming to other hon. members about it, but it is extraordinary the number of occasions on which the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) and I are finding ourselves in agreement.

Mr. Pickersgill: My face is red.

Mr. Drew: I do not wish to let go unchallenged a statement which I believe completely misinterprets what is before us. I will not say "misrepresents" but I will say "misinterprets". I am sure that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in putting forward the opinions that he has put forward is sincerely misled as to what the effect of the bill is because I have complete confidence not only in his industry but in his mental integrity as well as his personal integrity. I am certain that he misconceives the effect of this measure.

The bill before us is one which enables the Post Office Department to provide for Canadian publications the same facilities now available to publications from the United States. This is in no way confined to liquor advertising or any other type of advertising. I hold no particular view in regard to the content of one publication or another. My remarks apply with equal force to every Canadian publication. We hear a great deal about the advancement of Canadian culture. I believe that one of the great media in the advancement of culture is the periodical publication. I think that the more we can do to facilitate the distribution of Canadian periodical publications in competition with publications from the United States the more we will do to develop a distinctly Canadian outlook and a distinctly Canadian culture.

To me, with the utmost friendship for the United States, it has been a matter of very great concern for a number of years that by the very weight of numbers of magazines published the publishers in the United States are able to come so close to saturating this market. I am not at all sure that we should not go a great deal further in encouraging Canadian publications in every part of Canada to carry to the people of Canada distinctly Canadian ideas. As an incident of whatever facilities there may be, let us recognize with complete frankness that, where the law permits liquor advertising as well as any other advertising, to the extent to which the number of Canadian magazines distributed is expanded to that extent will the advertising be expanded. That, however, is only an ordinary incident of the expanding publication of Canadian magazines, which all of us should welcome.

If there is to be further limitation with regard to this particular type of advertising, that is another subject. I am prepared to discuss it on its own merits at any time. That is not the issue before us. The only thing accomplished by this measure is to provide further facilities for distribution and that is contained in subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (d) of subsection 1 which permits the publisher to post in "some other postal area approved by the Postmaster General upon his being satisfied that the posting of the newspaper or periodical within such other postal area will promote greater convenience in the distribution thereof and that the application of this section to the newspaper or periodical when so posted will not adversely affect the postal revenues."

That, Mr. Speaker, is an administrative provision. On such occasions as I disagree with the course the government is following I shall most certainly express that disagreement. I have on many occasions and will continue to do so with the utmost sincerity and possibly with considerable vigour. On this particular occasion I believe we should look at the measure as it stands, realize that it is an administrative procedure and that the time for us to decide whether there has been any evasion or otherwise of this provision will be when we have seen it in operation, which operation will be under the Post Office Department. We can then find out whether there has been any permission granted which should not have been granted.

In so far as circumventing any provincial law restricting liquor advertising is concerned, not one word in the amendment in any way provides a means to circumvent those laws. If any province wants to make the law stronger that is for them to do, and this measure cannot change that. By whatever device these publications are now distributed in areas where there is a law against the publication of liquor advertising, that situation will remain exactly as it is. The bill before us provides greater facilities for the magazines of Canada, and I for one want to do everything I can to assist them in competing with magazines from outside of this country.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to delay the house and I shall speak only for a moment or two. I rise now because I was present when the gentleman from Maclean's magazine interviewed the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He met both of us, and there was no doubt in my mind, and I do not think there was any doubt in his mind, as to the purpose of his visit to us and what was wanted from the Post Office Department. He told us about the difficulties the magazine was in because it could not accept liquor advertising under the provisions of the Ontario act. He said it was necessary for the magazine, in order to compete, if you like, with American magazines, to be able to accept liquor advertising. It was solely on that basis that he appealed to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and myself.

I am quite satisfied it was solely on that basis that he appealed to the post office authorities to help them to circumvent the provincial legislation. That is what has been done. I do not know why the question of Canadian culture has been brought into the picture. I am all for Canadian culture, but I hope we shall find better ways to promote Canadian culture than by using the proceeds of liquor advertising. Surely there is some better way than that in a country such as Canada.

Mr. John M. James (Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) has said. While I hesitate to inject my own particular business into this matter, I think it is only fair that hon. members who have objected so strongly to this legislation should know that there are nearly a thousand weekly newspapers in Canada many of which will be interested in this legislation. Let me explain the problem that arises. My own publication is published in Bowmanville, which is on the lake front. It is published on Thursday mornings, and we have a very large circulation in the north end of Durham county. These people cannot get their papers by mail the same day if we ship them by train. They have to go to Toronto and around by the back way. They get them the next day. If we are enabled through this legislation to send our papers to the north by bus, by car, by truck or any other way, and put them through the post office in the village of Blackstock, our subscribers in that area will be able to get their papers on the same day as the people in Bowmanville and other areas get their papers. I know that this measure was welcomed by us, and I am sure by many other weeklies and indeed provincial dailies and metropolitan dailies, with open arms.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Yesterday when this matter was before the house, Mr. Speaker, I was busy in another committee. The case made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) does not need more support but I would like to say a few words. In answer to the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), I would say that if Canadian magazines are at an unfair advantage now all that would be necessary would be for the Post Office Department to put United States magazines in the same position as Canadian magazines, namely required to be mailed at one point in Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Nicholson: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does he realize the United States enjoys this privilege because of an international agreement? Is he advocating that we break our international agreement?

Mr. Nicholson: As I understand it, the international agreement permits the magazines published in the United States to be sent anywhere in Canada, but they are mailed at Canadian centres by agreement with the Canadian postal department. We have no international agreement, as I understand it, that gives United States publications the right to be mailed at a number of different centres in Canada.

There is one other point I should mention. The people of this country have demonstrated that they are behind the Canadian magazines by agreeing to subsidize these periodicals. I have not the figures before me, but if my memory serves me the Postmaster General told us that we are subsidizing Canadian periodicals to the extent of $15 million a year because second-class mail is being handled at a loss. I feel that is a very generous contribution.

My views on liquor are well known. I do not propose to inflict my opinions on the house but I believe this parliament should have some respect for provincial laws. We have heard a great deal about dominion-provincial rights. So long as Ontario has a law that says no publication in that province shall accept or print liquor advertisements, I feel this parliament should respect it. I have been a subscriber to Maclean's for a long time. I believe it is a very good periodical, but I do not welcome having the liquor advertisements come into my house as a subsidized project. I object to this parliament passing legislation that will now make it legal for Maclean's magazine to accept liquor advertisements, to print the magazine in Toronto and mail it in Toronto, in spite of the fact the Ontario law says that is illegal. The parliament of this country is, by law, making it possible for Canadian publications to disregard the law of the province in which they are published, that is Ontario, and I think for the benefit of future relations between the provinces and this parliament we should not vote for the third reading of this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this motion be agreed to, on division?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR ADOPTED CHILDREN, CHANGES IN ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 8, consideration in committee of Bill No. 339, to amend the Pension Act—Mr. Lapointe—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last evening we were considering clause 2. Shall the clause carry?

On clause 2—Salaries.

Mr. Brooks: It is not my intention to prolong this debate. We had a very intensive discussion of this section last night. If anyone had any doubts as to the unnecessary inclusion of this section in the act previous to that discussion, I am sure those doubts should have been dispelled. This debate has clearly indicated that this section is entirely unnecessary. No logical argument has been advanced as to why this provision for the salaries of the commissioners should be included.

It has been pointed out clearly also that this section is of no benefit to the veterans. If the salaries of the commissioners should be increased, there is a provision in the act now for the increasing of those salaries. Our procedure in this connection is one of long standing. I feel it was clearly indicated there would be no hardships inflicted on the commissioners if this section were not passed. It is clearly indicated, too, that this section takes away the rights of parliament. I am not going to debate that any further, Mr. Chairman. It is not necessary.

It was indicated that the commission being a quasi-judicial body should be free from all political influence or even the appearance of political influence, just as the judges of this country are. I am not going to press these points any further, Mr. Chairman, but I again appeal to the minister to have this section deleted from the act. I am sure it will give general satisfaction to all the veterans across this country, and to all the friends of the veterans. I know that the great majority of this country are in that category. If the minister does not see his way clear to deleting the section, I think we are justified in appealing to all members of this committee to vote the section down.

Mr. Hahn: I do not wish to reiterate all the claims and charges that were made yesterday. As I said yesterday, however, I feel that we should not let the control of the spending of money leave this particular parliament or any parliament in the future. We have had too long a struggle in the past to try to obtain it. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley:

That clause 2, section (1), of the bill be amended by striking out the words "the governor in council" in line 16 and substituting in place thereof the word "parliament" and

That clause 2, section (2), be amended by striking out the words "the governor in council" where they occur in line 19, and substituting therefor the word "parliament".

Subamendment negatived: Yeas, 53; nays, 86.

The Chairman: I declare the subamendment lost. Shall clause 2 as previously amended carry?

Mr. Fleming: On division.

Clause agreed to on division.

Clauses 3 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 8.

Mr. Bennett: Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which the Minister of Finance will move:

That subsection 3 of section 31 of the said act be repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(3) Notwithstanding any limitations contained in this section, the commission may, in its discretion, make an additional award not exceeding an amount equivalent to an additional eighteen months' pension where, through delays in securing service or other records, or through other administrative difficulties, beyond the applicant's control, it is apparent that an injustice might otherwise ensue."

Mr. Abbott: I so move.

The Chairman: Hon. members have heard the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the amendment?

Mr. Green: Is the effect of this amendment to extend the coverage to all veterans, rather than have it restricted to veterans of world war II, as at present?

Mr. Bennett: Yes; it restores the act as it is at the present time. In other words, it deletes the present subsection 8 of the bill and makes section 31 (3) applicable to all veterans—those of world war I, world war II and the Korean force.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clause 9 agreed to.

On clause 10—Pension at discretion of commission in certain cases.

Mr. Bennett: I believe the Minister of Finance is prepared to move the following amendment:

That clause 10 be amended by substituting the word "May" for the word "January" in the second line of subsection (5) of section 34 of the Pension Act as proposed to be enacted by the said clause 10.

Mr. Abbott: I so move.

The Chairman: Are hon. members prepared to accept the amendment that has been read, moved by the Minister of Finance?

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 11.

Mr. Bennett: I understand the Minister of Finance is prepared to move the following amendment:

That clause 11 be amended by substituting the word "May" for the word "January" in the second, fourteenth and sixteenth lines of paragraph (a) of subsection (3) of section 36 of the Pension Act as proposed to be enacted by the said clause 11.

Mr. Abbott: I so move.

The Chairman: Hon. members have heard the amendment moved by the Minister of Finance.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 12.

Mr. Bennett: With respect to clause 12 the Minister of Finance will move:

That clause 12 be amended by substituting the word "May" for the word "January" in the second, fourteenth and sixteenth lines of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 37 of the Pension Act as proposed to be enacted by the said clause 12.

Mr. Abbott: I so move.

Mr. Knowles: Will the Minister of Finance explain the amendment.

Mr. Abbott: It is a change in date—just making it a little later.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 13—Additional award.

Mr. Bennett: I understand that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bennett:—will move the following amendment:

That the following be substituted as clause 13 of the bill:

"13. Subsection (3) of section 42 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

(3) Notwithstanding limitations contained in this section, the commission may, in its discretion, make an additional award not exceeding an amount equivalent to an additional eighteen months' pension where, through delays in securing service or other records or through other administrative difficulties, beyond the applicant's control, it is apparent that an injustice might otherwise ensue; but no such payment may be made in respect of any member of the forces who has died for any period prior to the date of death."

Mr. Harris: I so move.

The Chairman: Hon. members have heard the amendment.

Mr. Green: Will the parliamentary assistant explain the effect of this amendment.

Mr. Bennett: Section 42 of the act applies to pension cases where pensions are paid on account of death, while section 31 applies to disability pensions. This amendment restores the act to where it was before Bill 339 was introduced, and also makes applicable all the benefits of that section to the Korean, world war I and world war II veterans.

Mr. Brooks: And it is in agreement with what was decided in committee?

Mr. Bennett: Yes, that is what the committee recommended.

Mr. Fleming: Is it not possible to improve the draftsmanship? In the last clause the amendment reads "but no such payment may be made in respect of any member of the forces who has died"—and I am drawing attention to the last words "for any period prior to the date of death". I am trying to follow it only after a quick reading of it. Is not the meaning that no payment is to be made for any period prior to the date of death in respect of any member of the forces who has died?

Mr. Bennett: The amendment uses the same wording as is in the present act, where it states in section 42 (2):

but no payments may be made under this section in respect of any member of the forces who has died, for any period prior to the date of death.

Mr. Fleming: This is the situation we run into where legislation is thrown at us without the opportunity of previous examination, and there is haste. I put it to hon. members that whether it has been in the statute or not, it is not the language of good draftsmanship. What is proposed now is that "no such payment may be made in respect of any member of the forces who has died for any period prior to the date of death". There is no punctuation after the word "died" and you have the expression "who has died for any period prior to the date of death". Surely, Mr. Chairman, what is intended by the mover in introducing this amendment is rather that "no such payment may be made for any period prior to the date of death in respect of any member of the forces who has died". That is what is intended, is it not? Surely we do not put in the statute an expression like this "who has died for any period prior to the date of death".

Mr. Bennett: The hon. member for Eglinton would suggest a comma being inserted after the words "who has died"?

Mr. Fleming: I do not think the insertion of a comma will remove what is undesirable in the composition here. Surely, what is needed is simply to move these closing words, promote them to an earlier point in the clause, and make it read: "No such payment may be made for any period prior to the date of death in respect of any member of the forces who has died".

Mr. Tucker: This has been in the statute many years, and the committee on veterans affairs very carefully considered this matter. Their attitude is that where a section is meeting with the approval of the veterans all over Canada it should not be changed because it might make some change that was not necessary. Where a section of the act is satisfactory to all the veterans no change has been suggested, except such change as was unanimously recommended by the committee. Having that in mind, I think it is not altogether in order for the hon. member for Eglinton to say that this is thrown at us suddenly. This was considered by the veterans affairs committee and recommended in the report to this house. That report was in Votes and Proceedings, and so far as I know the committee on veterans affairs were unanimously satisfied with this. The veterans of Canada are satisfied with it. I would point out also that the interpretation of this act, in law and everything else, is entirely in the hands of the Canadian pension commission. They know what it means, and they have been interpreting it now for a long time. I suggest it would be unwise to change it.

Mr. Green: Would there be any objection to switching these words around to make the clause absolutely clear? If we took the words "for any period prior to the date of death" and inserted them after the word "made" the clause then would be perfectly obvious and clear, and that would meet the objection raised by the hon. member for Eglinton. The latter part of the section would then read:

. . . it is apparent that an injustice might otherwise ensue; but no such payment may be made for any period prior to the date of death in respect of any member of the forces who has died.

That certainly makes the clause much clearer than it is at the present time, and I do not see that any harm will be done by making that switch in the latter part of the clause.

Mr. Bennett: Mr. Chairman, I have every regard for the abilities with respect to draftsmanship of the hon. member for Eglinton, and in the committee we did listen with great respect to the recommendations made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra during the sittings of the veterans committee, but I do not feel that any useful purpose would be served by the amendment suggested today. The meaning is obvious. I do not think any other meaning could be taken from it. As the chairman of the veterans affairs committee has said, the pension commission has been interpreting this section for a great number of years for the benefit of veterans across this country and I do not think we should change it now.

Mr. Fleming: I do not propose to debate the subject longer. I wish to say if this is a sample of the English language we are using in legislation in this parliament, it is high time we stopped and considered what we are inserting in the statutes of Canada. It is not a question of changing the meaning of words that I suggest by way of alternative. I wish to make it perfectly clear to the hon. member for Rosthern that what I suggest is better calculated to carry out the purpose of the amendment than the language proposed in the amendment itself. Let us understand, Mr. Chairman, that what the government is insisting upon is that we legislate in terms like these:

in respect of any member of the forces who has died for any period prior to the date of death.

Mr. Abbott: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Fleming: There is no punctuation there. You are talking about a man "who has died for any period prior to the date of death". I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if anybody in this house were to sit down and draft this in this form he would not be very happy about it. I suggest also, Mr. Chairman, that what we really mean is in the form in which I have made the suggestion as to the rewording of this clause. As it stands now, without any punctuation, without any qualification of this language, it is just very poor composition and very poor English.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 14 to 17 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 18.

Mr. Bennett: I understand that the Minister of Finance is prepared to move an amendment to clause 18.

Mr. Abbott: I move:

That clause 18 be amended by substituting the word "May" for the word "January" in the fourth line of paragraph (a) and in the fourth line of paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of section 74 of the Pension Act as proposed to be enacted by the said clause 18.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clause 19 agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

RECOVERY OF COST OF MARKING OR REMOVING WRECK—SEAMEN'S SECURITY REGULATIONS

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (for the Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 471, to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Mr. Drew: Is the minister going to make any statement in connection with this?

Mr. L. Langlois (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): As hon. members know, this bill comes to us from the other place, where it was passed without amendment. The Navigable Waters Protection Act, like ancient Gaul, is divided into three parts. The administration of part II of the act which deals with the removal of obstructions to navigation is placed under the Minister of Transport.

At present the act provides for the removal or destruction of any wreck, vessel or other thing that constitutes or is likely to cause an obstruction to the navigation of any navigable water. By section 14 of the act, if navigation is obstructed by a wreck, the minister may cause the wreck to be removed or destroyed. By section 15 he may convey the wreck or its cargo to a convenient place and there sell it at public auction or otherwise as he deems most advisable, applying the proceeds of the sale against the removal expenses and paying any surplus to the owner. By section 16 the minister is authorized to recover the cost of placing signals and removing the wreck from the owner, master or person in charge of the vessel, or the person responsible for causing the obstruction.

As hon. members will recall, by certain decisions of the courts, the right of the crown to recover the cost of removing obstructions to navigation has been restricted to cases where the wreck has been conveyed to a place and there sold. It has been held that the sale of the property removed as an obstruction to navigation is a condition precedent to the recovery of the expenses of removal, unless there is nothing which can be sold. This restrictive interpretation is unduly onerous on the department which, in these cases, endeavours to find the most economical way of removing the obstacle.

It frequently happens that a wreck can more easily and with greater economy be demolished in place or removed and sunk at some suitable location without going to the heavy expense of having the wreck raised and towed to a port or place where it can be offered for sale. In many cases the salvage would not cover the expenditure.

The amendment to section 16 of the act as proposed in this bill provides that the minister may recover the cost of marking, removing or destroying any wreck, vessel or other thing causing an obstruction to navigation, from the owner, master or person in charge of the vessel, or from the person responsible for the obstruction, without the necessity of having the wreck sold. In any case, where a sale of the salvage is made, the owner or person entitled to the property would be credited with the surplus of the proceeds resulting from the sale after deducting the expenses of the department in connection with the removal of the wreck.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a brief statement in connection with the new part IV of the act, as proposed in the bill at present before us, and I would like to draw to the attention of hon. members the fact that this new part deals with the emergency regulations for the security of the great lakes and upper St. Lawrence navigation system. Since these come within the scope of the administration of the Department of Labour, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) is in attendance to supply any information which may be required by hon. members.

The purpose of the new part IV of the Navigable Waters Protection Act is to give authority to the governor in council to enact regulations applicable to seamen on Canadian ships on the great lakes and upper St. Lawrence for the safety and security of Canada, of a nature similar to the great lakes seamen's security regulations, order in council P.C. 2306 of May 2, 1952. These regulations were made under the powers conferred by the Emergency Powers Act, which lapsed on May 31, 1954.

The great lakes seamen's security regulations were first enacted by order in council P.C. 1439 of March 22, 1951, and were designed for the purpose of ensuring that the safety or security of Canada was not endangered by the presence of seamen on board a Canadian ship in the great lakes and upper St. Lawrence river who are found to be undesirable security risks.

The regulations serve to protect the welfare and security of Canada, and were adopted in the light of the existing international situation. However, hon. members should be informed that they were worked out following consultation with the United States authorities and they complement and parallel the United States security screening provisions applicable to seamen employed on United States vessels operating in these waters.

As administered by the Department of Labour through its own officers, and those of the national employment service, it is necessary under the regulations for seamen seeking employment on Canadian ships operating in these waters to be in possession of a seaman's card.

Provisions are contained in the regulations for the refusal or revocation of a seaman's card by the Minister of Labour, if a screening process brings to light any evidence that is derogatory from a security standpoint. Where a seaman's card has been refused or revoked, the seaman may request a review by an advisory committee which now consists of a retired judge of the exchequer court and two representatives of organized labour.

The Minister of Labour is authorized by order to exempt from the operation of the regulations any person or class of persons or any ship or class of ships. Under this authority the minister has by order exempted persons employed on boats engaged in fishing, pulpwood and logging operations, where they do not, as a general rule, pass through any canal or lock; crews of police patrol boats and firefighting boats; and casual labourers employed on salvage or dredging operations.

Penalties are provided for the furnishing of false information as well as for failure to comply with any provision of the regulations. These penalties under the former regulations were of the same extent as are authorized in this new legislation.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as we come close to the end of the session it seems that we are confronted with a number of measures which raise as important issues as could conceivably come before this house at any time.

What has just been placed before us for consideration at this moment raises a fundamental issue which in other days might well have aroused the most vigorous expression of public feeling from one end of this country to the other, as it has in other countries where measures similar to this have been put forward.

In so far as the first part of the bill is concerned, under clause 1, I do not think there is much necessity to extend my remarks. The provisions are fairly clear-cut, though there may be questions about detail. The part to which my remarks particularly refer is the last part of the bill to which a brief reference has been made by the parliamentary assistant.

Part IV consists of section 33 which defines a Canadian ship; defines the term "great lakes" as applied to this act; and defines the word "seaman" as applied to this act. But section 34 under part IV is the more important section. Before discussing that, I should mention that section 35 refers to duration and provides that the act may be continued in force for a period of three years from the date on which it comes into force.

Mr. Garson: Just that part of the act.

Mr. Drew: Yes. The provision is as follows:

> This part shall continue in force for a period of three years from the day on which it came into force, and no longer.

As has been stated by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport, section 34 has the effect of continuing, in statutory form, an order in council made originally under the Emergency Powers Act as P.C. 2306 of May 2, 1952. Mr. Speaker, on various occasions objection has been taken on this side of the house to the wide and all-embracing powers conferred by that order in council and by similar orders in council which place the employment of the individual, his right to work and, in fact, his legal status as a Canadian citizen, in the hands of the governor in council who is given wide-open authority to make regulations which will affect the daily life of the individual who works on the ships in our great lakes. If this power was objectionable in the form of an order in council under a statute, it is many times as objectionable in the form of a statute which would specifically confer these wide powers by the authority of parliament.

For years we argued against the continuance of the Emergency Powers Act. Finally, under the pressure of our continued insistence, that act was allowed to drop. We welcome, even at this late date, the abandonment of a measure that was, in our opinion, undemocratic at any time and was certainly utterly undemocratic at a time when the reasons which had been used to support its original enactment had substantially disappeared. We are now asked to confer upon the governor in council—which means the government—the power to make such regulations as are considered necessary or desirable in the interests of the safety or security of Canada respecting the employment of seamen on board Canadian ships in the great lakes. Subject to certain limitations the governor in council—or the government in fact—may then impose penalties not exceeding a fine of $500 or imprisonment for a term of three months or both fine and imprisonment.

Mr. Speaker, we have had a number of discussions with regard to the unsatisfactory situation which arises in connection with steps taken in relation to what is described as security, where the basis upon which those security provisions which will be in force is not fully stated to parliament and is not declared in clear statutory form. The parliamentary assistant to the minister just made a statement which I would impress upon all hon. members in dealing with this subject. He indicated that this legislation would permit appropriate steps to be taken to prevent the presence on Canadian ships in the great lakes of those who have been found to be undesirable security risks. May I emphasize and re-emphasize those words: To prevent the presence on Canadian ships in the great lakes of those who have been found to be undesirable security risks. Mr. Speaker, by what test have they been found to be undesirable security risks? By whom have they been found to be undesirable security risks? Is it because they are communists? Is it because they are associated with communists? Or is it for some other reason which has not yet been mentioned?

Most certainly this parliament should not by statutory authority confer power of that kind upon the government now or at any other time where we are not actually confronted with the immediate and dreadful necessities of war which limit the time within which parliament can deal with problems of this kind. The one excuse that can ever be offered in wartime, or in a state of apprehended war, or in the period immediately following a war, for limiting the rights of the individual, under our traditions and laws, is that the impact of war or the threat of war limits the opportunity to offer to the individual those ordinary rights which we should so jealously preserve. Then there may also be questions of secrecy involved, but they certainly do not apply at a time when we are living as close to normal as most of us will live for the rest of our lives. Unless we are prepared to concede that we are never going to return to real democracy in Canada, now is the time to get back to the principles of democracy because we are as close to normal as we are likely to be within our lifetime.

This section makes it possible for the government to deal with the rights of the individual according to its own concept of what is good for the safety of Canada. Throughout the history of our democratic system, Mr. Speaker, it has been the purpose of the parliaments which have followed our traditions not to leave the safety of the individual to the whim of any government, no matter how highly we may regard their personal desires to be fair, honest and just. We recognize the fact that human beings, under stress, are likely to do things that do not conform to the strict tenets of our democratic standards of justice and freedom. We have therefore insisted upon the supremacy of parliament to pass laws and upon the rule of law which says that no man shall be imprisoned or limited in his rights except by a law which defines his position in society and the offence for which he is to be haled before the courts.

This section leaves the matter wide open. No matter how much any one of us may dislike communism or no matter how much we may hate it, we should not go to this length. No matter how much I may hate communism, as I do, I am not prepared to entrust this or any other government with the decision as to what constitutes communism when this government has said that it cannot define communism. It says that it cannot define communism or communist activities for the purpose of the Criminal Code. It says that any attempt to do so might be entering the field of political thought and political freedom. May I say this, Mr. Speaker. If the government cannot define communism for that purpose, it should not be entrusted with the power to say what communism is when it is acting behind closed doors and when the man who may be affected has no opportunity to defend himself before the courts. Yet that is precisely what we are asked to do. We are asked to give the government undefined powers which are not subject to supervision by the courts and which are not subject to the regular processes of appeal which assure that even our impartial judges may be corrected where they have erred, as they so often do in good faith, as the judgments on appeal demonstrate when we look at them from time to time.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to labour the arguments I have made on this whole problem of delegated legislation. We have argued this question over and over again in relation to other measures. Nevertheless, those arguments become increasingly sound as we see, throughout the world today, the uncertainty in the minds of other people as to what our system of democracy really is. When we try to place before people living under authoritarian governments the virtues of democracy they say to us: Well, do you not give people the power to limit freedom, to deny people work by dictate, as we do? If one is honest the answer is: Yes, in certain cases we do. If we want to be able to convince others of the purity of our democratic process, let us avoid as we would avoid the plague the adoption in the name of convenience of those methods which, under the name of democracy, are nothing but authoritarian dictates no matter what we call them.

Here is a case before us where, without in any way challenging the good faith of the government or the intentions with which it puts this bill before us, the opportunity is afforded to remind them that when we seek to impress upon our own people and others the virtue and value of democracy and freedom we should make sure that the laws we pass conform to the strict principles of that system which we hail as having such great virtue. It is not, as a matter of fact, something new, something that has not been discussed. It is more than four hundred years since people thought they had dealt with legislation of this kind.

There was, as many people will recall so well, a principle of delegated authority known as the Henry VIII clause under which Henry VIII, by an act of parliament, was given certain powers of proclamation extending his authority beyond the ordinary supervision of parliament. That in itself was regarded with some concern in those days when we had not advanced nearly as far as we have in recent years toward the modern concept of the responsibility of parliament. That Henry VIII clause, however, was regarded even then as something that departed from the full authority and responsibility of parliament. In recent years there has been a return on far too wide a scale to what we know as the Henry VIII clause.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is something that should not be before us now because whatever may be thought necessary in the form of ordinary administrative legislation we certainly should not limit the rights of the individual in this way. The arguments that were put forward by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) in support of the method of screening civil servants, to which we so strongly object, did at least relate to the employment of civil servants who are under the authority of the government. Unsound though we consider the argument presented on that occasion, that argument cannot be put forward in support of the present situation because these men are not employees of the government of Canada.

The parliamentary assistant to the minister has said that this provision was worked out following consultation with the United States authorities and that it parallels the United States security provisions. Without any reflection upon the United States or the United States government, and retaining the great admiration I have for the government and the people of that country for many of the excellent things they have done, the way that the government of the United States acts in relation to security is not something that I want to see repeated here in Canada in any form. That is not a guide for us today. The methods by which they are dealing with security, by television, by radio and through the press, are something that it would be wise for us to regard as an example of that which we should not do rather than as an example to follow.

However, there is one reason why perhaps security measures on their side might be satisfactory and yet not be satisfactory for us. It must be remembered that under the rules of the congress of the United States there are wide-open committee inquiries which make it possible for the representatives of the people to find out what has been done on any occasion with respect to any individual in a case of this kind. We may or may not like that method. At least it brings the matter out into the open. This loose method, which we do not regard as satisfactory in relation to employees of the government, is much more unsatisfactory in relation to other employees.

One of the provisions in this measure is that the governor in council, which is the government, may make such regulations as are considered necessary or desirable in the interests of the safety or security of Canada. Then we are told that one of the ways in which this is to be enforced is by the revocation of the certificate that the seaman has. This brings me to a further reason why I have some concern about these special provisions relating to seamen on the great lakes. We have heard already in the house some reference to a man named Hal C. Banks. This subject is one which will be discussed at greater length on another occasion, but when the government seeks methods of this kind to permit it to deal with safety and security measures with regard to seamen it perhaps is appropriate that we recognize the almost limitless power of this man, Hal C. Banks, with relation to seamen working on the great lakes because of his authority over the unions operating on the lakes.

I have great concern about the way in which the government deals with this problem when I find that they have shown such an extraordinary lack of interest with regard to the background of Mr. Hal C. Banks. The government approved, and in approving accepted its own responsibility, Mr. Banks as our representative at a certain labour conference at Geneva. Mr. Banks has also been permitted to stay in Canada not in his original capacity as a special organizer brought here for a particular purpose but with the idea of his becoming a resident of the country. We know that the government was informed about Mr. Banks' background before he came here. Mr. Banks, because of the position he occupies, receives very large sums of money from the seamen of Canada. I think the government is well aware of how large those sums are, running into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. Banks also has very wide powers respecting the right of seamen to work on the great lakes through his position in these unions. Yet the government was aware and is aware that Mr. Banks had a record in the United States that would not ordinarily commend him to a position of great responsibility with regard to matters of this kind. The government is well aware that convictions for very serious offences were registered against this man in the United States. The government is well aware that he showed his appreciation of the hospitality extended to him in Canada by getting convicted here for smuggling a large quantity of cigarettes very shortly after his arrival.

Mr. Harris: I had expected this debate might arise on my estimates, Mr. Speaker, and I would not want to engage in it here at the moment. What my hon. friend has said is not quite correct. If we leave it at that, we will not get into another debate.

[Mr. Drew.]

Mr. Drew: In what way is it not correct?

Mr. Harris: He did not smuggle the cigarettes.

Mr. Drew: Does the minister suggest he was not convicted in connection with smuggling cigarettes?

Mr. Harris: He was convicted of having cigarettes that had been smuggled, which is a slightly different matter.

Mr. Drew: He was convicted in connection with the smuggling of some 30,000 cigarettes.

Mr. Harris: No, the conviction was with respect to having cigarettes which did not have the excise tax stamp.

Mr. Drew: He was a receiver of smuggled cigarettes?

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind hon. members that they are now considering the second reading of a bill. Great latitude has been afforded to hon. members to debate the second reading of this bill, but I do feel we should not anticipate the committee stage.

Mr. Drew: I was referring, Mr. Speaker, to the statement in connection with the certificates seamen must have, and pointing out that along with the certificates which the government could grant there are also those certificates which are given under the authority and influence of a man named Hal C. Banks. I should like to refer the minister to a summary, which I know to be in his possession, of the charges and convictions concerning this man, and which refers to smuggling cigarettes in Montreal for which this man was fined in 1952. If there is some refinement in regard to the details, that is something I should be happy to hear about in more detail. However, that is the entry on the form which I know was placed before the minister in connection with this matter.

I come back to this, that we are told one of the things the government would be directed to do under these orders is to deal with the right of a seaman to work by revocation of a certificate or otherwise. Perhaps I shall not go farther as to the government's interest in this until we do discuss the matter in detail on the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. There is also the question of the right to work over which this man to whom I have referred, and about whose activities the government is so well informed, has some control. I put that forward for no other purpose than to refer to the introduction of the subject by the parliamentary assistant.

I point out that we should not be passing any loose regulations of this kind submitting the seamen on our ships to any possible restriction of their right to work, unless we know exactly what the grounds are upon which they will be denied the right to work. I should like to be sure that in this country anyone who is actively working for that international form of treachery known as communism would be dealt with properly under our laws. I believe that should not be done unless there is a law defining what the offence is. I believe it could be defined in the Criminal Code, and I believe that is the place for it to be defined. I then believe we might well be asked to consider a section of this kind that would say that a man convicted of any offence under the Criminal Code, which has to do with loyalty to Canada or loyalty to the state, shall not be permitted to work on these ships. This would be following the proper practices under our traditional procedure. To say, however, that the government shall have a wide-open power according to its whim at any time to say who can work and who cannot work, what shall constitute an offence and what shall not, to define a crime and impose a penalty without parliament's knowledge, is in my belief a step retrograde by 400 years. This carries us back to what has so long been known to lawyers as the Henry VIII clause. I would point out that even the Henry VIII clause was not as wide open as that. I believe this is a good time, when we are talking about the struggle between freedom and democracy on the one hand and totalitarian authority on the other, to make sure we do get back to the supremacy of parliament and the rule of law. I, therefore, shall oppose the section.

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): I wonder whether the next speaker would mind if I made a few remarks at this juncture. It is not my desire to enter into the debate, and my only reason for doing so is to clear up perhaps one or two points that were left by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and also add to what was said by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport. I believe the Leader of the Opposition inferred just now that under the regulations, and consequently under this bill, it was proposed that the Minister of Labour should be given authority to define "communism" as such. I can assure him that was not the object of the regulations, and certainly it is not in the bill which refers to regulations considered "necessary or desirable in the interests of safety or security of Canada." There is no reference whatever to communism and there is certainly no reference to the part played by the leaders of labour organizations.

The purpose of part IV of the bill now before the house is to provide legislative authority to continue the powers granted to me, as Minister of Labour, by the great lakes seamen's security regulations. As the parliamentary assistant has said, these were originally established by order in council P.C. 1439 of March 22, 1951, under the authority of the Emergency Powers Act. They were later amended and finally consolidated by order in council P.C. 2306 of May 2, 1952.

The Emergency Powers Act lapsed on May 31 this year, but because the government did not ask parliament to extend the life of that legislation it does not necessarily follow that all the authority it provided can prudently be permitted to vanish with it. The government has carefully examined all the orders made under this act and has reluctantly concluded that, in a few cases, present circumstances require that other enabling legislation must be sought. The great lakes seamen's security regulations is such a case. I can assure the Leader of the Opposition and the house that it certainly would be the desire of the Minister of Labour and the government, if it were at all possible, to follow some other course than taking this step now proposed, if there were a practical course.

These regulations require all seamen plying the great lakes system in Canadian vessels to obtain an identity card, known as a seaman's card, issued by the Department of Labour, without which they may not sail. The Minister of Labour is empowered to refuse such a seaman's card to any applicant whose presence on board a Canadian vessel in the great lakes might prejudice the security of Canada. There is no reference there to the question of communism.

Hon. members will no doubt recall the circumstances under which these regulations were first established. In the summer of 1950 the United Nations took action to resist the aggression of North Korea against the republic of Korea. At that time, there was naturally very close consultation between the governments of Canada and of the United States on all matters pertaining to the police action of the United Nations in the Korean conflict. And, of course, that consultation and co-operation has existed and continued all through the piece. The question of national security in both countries was reviewed with particular care and it was agreed that special measures should be taken to afford greater protection against possible sabotage in that very important link in our transcontinental transportation facilities, namely the great lakes-St. Lawrence system. Consequently, co-ordinated steps were taken in both countries before the opening of the following navigation season. That was the season of 1951. This was done by presidential directive in the United States and by order of the governor in council in Canada.

Although more than 30,000 applications have been received and processed since that time, I am very happy to say that it has not been my unpleasant duty except on very rare occasions to refuse cards to these applicants. In these infrequent cases, the applicant's loyalty had been in such serious doubt, and hence the risk to a vital communications system was sufficiently grave, that I had no alternative, in conscience, but to refuse identity cards to this handful of people. Only a tiny fraction of the seamen involved have had to be prevented from sailing, but of course only a tiny fraction would have been required to do damage. Whether or not such persons would in fact run the risk of committing acts of sabotage we cannot say with certainty; but we do know that such acts have been committed elsewhere with serious results.

While I had intended to give the information at the committee stage, perhaps at this stage the house would like to have a summary of the figures under the regulations.

As of April 26, 1954, a total of 30,540 applications had been received and processed under the regulations. Some of the applications were imperfect, and the persons who made the applications could not be traced when the national employment service attempted to follow them up. Of the remainder, 29,971 were sent to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for checking. Of these, a total of 29,571 had been screened, while 400 cases were still under investigation.

Of the 29,571 applicants screened, a total of 29,422 were cleared and 149 applications were questioned.

Of the 149 cases which were questioned for the reason that information had been received having a possible bearing on security, 122 were cleared as the result of a study of the circumstances by the minister's panel of advisers, while 20 were refused regular seamen's cards and seven cases were in abeyance, pending a decision as to whether or not cards should be issued when the individuals can be traced.

As of April 26, 1954, seven of the persons denied cards had made requests for a review of their cases by the minister's advisory committee. In the case of one of these, further investigation resulted in the person being cleared without a review by the minister's advisory committee. In three cases the committee confirmed the minister's decision to refuse a seaman's card. Two requests for review lapsed, one for the reason that the subject was deported and no further action was required under the great lakes security regulations, and the other for the reason that the person concerned did not present himself for a hearing. One request was still pending at that date.

During recent weeks, the government has discussed at some length with United States authorities the possibility of allowing these regulations to lapse with the Emergency Powers Act. In the light of the present international situation, however, we have come to the conclusion that it would be imprudent not to continue these regulations. I regret that it has not been possible to introduce this measure before now. However, the vast majority of the seamen now sailing the great lakes have already been screened and, if parliament sees fit to approve the measure now submitted for its consideration, no great harm can come from this short hiatus between the date of the expiration of the Emergency Powers Act and the present time. I should add that it is not this government's intention that these security control measures should continue indefinitely, and that is why enabling legislation is now being sought for a period of three years only. If, at the end of three years, present international tensions have not slackened, it may be necessary for the government to ask parliament to renew this section of the bill for a further period. If, on the other hand, there should be sufficient improvement in the international situation before then, the government will be only too glad to take the first opportunity to cancel the regulations even before the enabling legislation has ceased to have effect.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, without attempting to enter the debate again, in view of the explanation given by the minister and conceding immediately that there must be some regulatory authority in regard to possible sabotage, can the minister explain why it is desirable to have such wide-open and undefined powers as these, instead of having some over-all section of the Criminal Code or, if necessary, a separate act which would apply to all vital means of transportation, and such vital operations as hydroelectric power plants —which, perhaps, are even more critical than ships, in the general picture of security.

I would ask the minister if consideration has been given to the enactment of a provision that would apply to all these, rather than attempt to put it in, piecemeal, in a single act, with such indefinite authority as is contained in this section?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that other hon. members who wish to participate in the debate should do so, so that we can reach the committee stage and have answered the various questions which apparently hon. members are anxious to ask.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in connection with this bill. Earlier this morning the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) mentioned that, because of some phenomenon of which he was not aware at the moment, he had found himself in accord with the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) on a number of occasions. At this time I find myself in the same position in respect of the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Drew: Do not become alarmed by it.

Mr. Knowles: But it is not a threesome.

Mr. MacInnis: I am not shutting out the Secretary of State. Indeed, I would be glad to include him.

According to the explanatory note, there are two purposes in the bill. The first makes provision whereby the minister may recover the cost of marking, removing or destroying a wreck. To that I have no objection.

The second provision in the bill is one whereby the great lakes seamen's security regulations, made under the Emergency Powers Act by order in council P.C. 2306 of May 2, 1952, may be continued in force for a period of three years.

The Emergency Powers Act had a life of one year and, if not renewed, expired at the end of that time. This year it was allowed to expire. We find here the peculiar situation in which the government now wishes to enact by order in council the power it enjoyed under the Emergency Powers Act, and wishes to have that power, not for one year, but for a period of three years.

When we turn to the section to which reference was made by the Leader of the Opposition and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) we find this:

> The governor in council may make such regulations as he considers necessary or desirable in the interests of the safety or security of Canada respecting the employment of seamen on board Canadian ships in the great lakes.

We have spent several sessions, or parts of several sessions, on the Criminal Code, in which all items that could be connected with sabotage, or anything done that was contrary to the security and interests of Canada were provided for by law. We have the law in the Criminal Code to provide for such things. Why is it necessary now that the government may prescribe the penalties to be imposed on summary conviction for violation of any regulation made under this clause? No one knows what the regulations may be, but we are supposed to approve the penalties laid down in the act. It is said that:

> . . . such penalties shall not exceed a fine of five hundred dollars or imprisonment for a term of three months or both fine and imprisonment.

To me it is a most amazing thing, particularly when we have spent years, let us say, on perfecting a Criminal Code, that we should be asked by the government now to give them the authority to impose penalties for crimes which they have not defined. I just cannot conceive of that as being good law for the Dominion of Canada. It might be for some other countries, but it is not a good precedent for this country to follow.

There may be some difficulties here, but surely we can get around them without resorting to this kind of legislation or the kind of governmental action that is outlined in this bill. If we adopt it here, are we not setting the precedent for adopting it in other circumstances? The Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) shakes his head, but my understanding is that as a matter of fact the situation is becoming such now that the moment the government finds itself, or thinks it will find itself, faced with any opposition in the house in regard to any measure, the next step is to circumvent that by bringing the thing about by order in council. We had an indication of that yesterday, and it is becoming the normal thing.

I suggest that this is a very dangerous precedent to follow. I cannot understand the minister, who I know has a high regard for the rights of citizens, the laws of this country and the rule of law, supporting this legislation. This is not the rule of law at all. How can he propose a measure of this kind? During the luncheon recess he should have another look at it to see if there is not some other way to meet any situation that we may be confronted with on the great lakes.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I should like to suggest to the ministers concerned other considerations in addition to those put forward by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacInnis) which they might take into consideration during the luncheon recess, and as a result of which I express the sincere hope that it would be decided as being in accord with the traditions of this country if this particular proposal were abandoned.

The Leader of the Opposition has referred to our intense dislike of and our opposition to any suggestion that the government should be given the right in advance to define crimes, which definition would not have the approval of parliament, because parliament would know nothing about it, and to impose penalties on Canadian citizens for the commission of those crimes which in themselves were not known as such to the Canadian citizens as crimes. In addition, sir, the Leader of the Opposition has said that in our view it is time, if Canadian seamen or any other group of Canadian citizens are to be proceeded against because they are considered to be undesirable security risks, that what we mean by an offence against security in that general sense should be defined in the general law, and that no one group of citizens should be singled out for treatment different from any other.

In answering that proposition the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) stated that these regulations which it is desired to continue now under the authority of this bill, if it becomes law, have no reference to communist activities. Well, sir, that of course is a statement which I respectfully suggest—

Mr. Gregg: I said no relation to communism as such.

Mr. Fulton: Very well. I respectfully suggest that on reflection the minister will realize that is not an accurate summary of the situation. The inaccuracy of that position can be gathered by a reference to the words which the Minister of Labour himself used. He referred to the necessity of those regulations because of the protection which they give against sabotage. He also referred to the application of the regulations whereby seamen's cards had been withheld—and I am quoting his words here as I took them down—because the applicants' loyalty had been in such serious doubt that it was considered necessary to withhold them. He said that certain of the applications had been sent to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for checking and screening. Well, there can be no question in the mind of any reasonable man that what was suspected in this case was that the applicant had communist sympathies. That is what this business of screening means.

Mr. Garson: Are communists the only traitors? Is every traitor a communist?

Mr. Fulton: By no means; but the Minister of Labour has said, and the Minister of Justice himself knows of course, that these regulations were brought in at the time of communist aggression against Korea. It was suspected that those who might commit acts of sabotage, following that outbreak of hostilities in Korea, would do so because of their sympathy with what was going on in Korea, and that they would be communists or communist sympathizers. I do not think the point really merits further discussion because it is the merest verbiage to try to suggest to us that those regulations do not have as their object the refusal of cards to seamen on the ground that they are suspected of communist sympathies.

Since it is one o'clock, I might continue the debate after luncheon.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

---

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose for lunch at one o'clock I was just detailing some of the objections we felt to the method being followed of providing for the security of Canada, and for security screening authority which is to be given under this bill to the governor in council to make regulations providing for the screening of seamen, and providing penalties which in effect give them power to try a crime and impose a penalty for that crime.

We take the position in connection with this matter of security that the offence envisaged in what constitutes a breach of security or loyalty to Canada should be defined under statute, and that all persons should then be in the same position so that a man cannot be proceeded against except for a breach of a provision to which parliament has agreed, and not of one laid down by governor in council.

As the result of departure from the principle embodied in that type of legislation, and as a result of the action which the government has taken here, you can see, Mr. Speaker, that we are getting ourselves into an absurd situation.

Not only is it undesirable from the point of view of the principle involved; it is absurd in its application in this instance. What has happened here is that we have brought in an amendment to the Navigable Waters Protection Act and that act, up to the present time and by its very nature, is concerned with the matter of the provision of aids to navigation, and the physical surroundings of our waterways. Then suddenly, as an addition and as a sort of bunion on the body of the act, we have something which deals with an entirely different subject, the matter of the security of Canada from the point of view of whether or not a person is loyal, and whether his security qualifications are acceptable to the government. That has nothing to do with the protection of navigable waters.

The place in which to lay down your security provisions is in the Criminal Code, the statute having to do with the provisions which are applicable to all the people of Canada, and not by way of an addendum or appendix to a bill in which it forms a most unnatural part.

What is going to be the result of this sort of situation? Are we to suggest that it is more essential or more desirable that seamen should be loyal and should be qualified, from the point of view of security, more on the great lakes than in any other port in Canada? Are the seamen working on the boats plying between Vancouver and Victoria in a less strategic position to do damage to Canada than those on the great lakes? Of course, the consideration given to these men is exactly the same, but because there is no general law defining what is meant by offences of this type there is to be this excrescence, in the technical meaning of that word, on the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

What is going to follow is that we will have to have a number of individual statutes covering a number of individual cases whenever security is felt to be of importance in employment of this type. Therefore, that is one other illustration of the desirability of getting this thing out of statutes of this sort and having it covered by general enactments so that all the people of Canada know where they stand.

I feel it may be interesting and proper to observe that in this case, Mr. Speaker, under the regulations which were enacted under the Emergency Powers Act on May 2, 1952, there is provision for a method of appeal by a person who feels himself aggrieved as a result of a decision by the minister. I make that remark in passing because I think it is interesting in the light of the recent discussion we had here when it was held that there could be no possibility of an appeal procedure.

But, sir, that is merely an observation in passing, and I think that the important thing for the House of Commons to bear in mind in this case is the principle involved.

It is certainly important that those engaged in navigation in Canada should be loyal and should not have communist sympathies. But while it is desirable to ensure that, I think this House of Commons has to ask itself the question whether it is proper to give the governor in council authority to lay down standards of security and standards of loyalty which are not communicated to the people as a whole, and in effect, provide for a crime by regulation instead of under the Criminal Code or some general statutes.

I am convinced that it is possible to do it in the other way and that this constitutes a breach of the principles of democracy. I therefore have no alternative but to vote against the bill on second reading for these reasons, as well as for those given by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacInnis).

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): Mr. Speaker, I am in full agreement with the previous speakers regarding their opposition to section 4 of this bill. The two houses of parliament have spent a total period of some three or four years revising the Criminal Code. There is included in that code just about every possible offence the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) and his department could think of over that period of years.

The Criminal Code is supposed to provide for the safety and security of Canada in so far as all citizens are concerned. But what the government is asking for in this legislation is the privilege of writing a special criminal code to apply to seamen on the great lakes.

It is quite possible that the prevailing conditions of employment for seamen on the great lakes may differ somewhat from the conditions of employment pertaining to employees in other fields, but surely it would be more democratic, if such a difference exists, to have these special offences written into the legislation so that all may know what these offences are for which a penalty up to $500 or three months' imprisonment can be imposed.

The government here is asking not only for the incorporation into legislation of orders in council which have been passed pertaining to the employment of seamen, but also for a blanket order to make any regulations, including those which were made under the Emergency Powers Act, for the next three years covering the employment of seamen on the great lakes.

We in this house all agree that democratic freedom should not extend to the point of giving to the enemies of democracy the freedom to destroy democracy itself. On the other hand, if in our defence of democracy we adopt the techniques of the dictators—and that is what the government is doing in asking for this power and it is what parliament will be doing in granting the government the power for which they ask under this legislation—there is a danger that we shall undermine the whole spirit of democracy. As a result of its long tenure of office and as a result of its overwhelming majority in parliament, it would seem to me that this government has gradually, bit by bit, taken unto itself more and more power. Perhaps unconsciously here they are asking for just a little bit more power, namely the power to write a special criminal code that shall apply to a special group of people, namely the Canadian seamen employed on the great lakes.

I think that is asking too much of this house. If there are prevailing special conditions requiring special regulations, for the breach of which penalties of $500 or three months' imprisonment must be applied, then let us know what they are and let us have them incorporated into legislation or into the Criminal Code; but let us not give to the government any blanket order to make any regulations they like and to have those who violate those regulations subjected to imprisonment for three months or a fine of $500 for breach of some regulation about which the House of Commons has no knowledge.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this debate but when I perceive a number of my hon. friends on the opposition side taking a position which, I must confess, I myself would take if I entertained what I must regard as the wrong impression of this legislation which they appear to entertain, I think I should try to distinguish between the principle which they think is involved in this legislation and the principle which is actually involved. They have all said that in the Criminal Code we should provide for the security of our country—

Mr. MacInnis: We have done so.

Mr. Garson: —by making a crime those actions which would endanger the security of Canada. With that statement I think no person will disagree. But those hon. members who were on the Criminal Code committee will recall that, as was said by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Noseworthy), we already have all of these crimes fairly carefully covered in the Criminal Code. Indeed, the very crime which this present bill is designed to protect against is covered under the sabotage section, namely, section 509A of the present code. However, I think the point which my hon. friends overlook is this. Where we have a canal system such as we have on the great lakes, the wrecking of which would tie up an enormous amount of shipping which is absolutely vital to our economic welfare, it would be of extremely small comfort to the Canadian people to know that the man who got on the ship and placed there a bomb which would blow up any of these canals could be then convicted and sent to prison under the section of the Criminal Code prohibiting his crime.

Surely some confusion of thought has arisen here. I believe that this idea that when this matter is covered by the Criminal Code, the idea that we can pass that section of the Criminal Code and say: "Thank goodness we have taken care of the situation", is quite an erroneous one. What we are attempting to do in the present bill and in the seamen's regulations which were passed pursuant to the Emergency Powers Act is not, as is done in the Criminal Code, to make it a crime to do a certain thing and then, after it is done, to punish the person who is guilty of doing it. What we are endeavouring to do here is to prevent a crime from taking place by taking just some elementary precautions to see to it that that small fraction of Canadian seamen who might likely commit an act of sabotage on the great lakes are denied access to a position in which they could commit an act of sabotage.

I will agree that the powers here are rather extraordinary and that, if they were handled in an arbitrary manner, abuses could result. But when the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) this morning told us that in respect of approximately 30,500 applications for seamen's cards which had been received under those regulations, less than two dozen had been rejected, I think that any Canadian with any sense of proportion at all will find it hard to believe that out of some 30,000 odd applicants for seamen's cards, the denial to less than two dozen Canadians of access to key points on our canal system is a fairly small price to pay for the protection of the greatest internal shipping route in Canada.

I do not think there is any member of this house who does not know as a most simple fact that if the Welland canal, for example, were put out of operation for any considerable period of time, the economic loss to this country would be almost incalculable. Surely to goodness it is not unreasonable that we should ask for precautions to be taken under which, out of some 30,000 applicants, less than two dozen seamen are denied access to a position in which sabotage might be committed by them. If this government did not take a step so simple and so elementary as that, I think that it would be deserving of condemnation.

It therefore seems quite idle to argue that there is involved here the idea that we have discharged our responsibility to the Canadian people by prohibiting sabotage, as we did in the Criminal Code, and by saying "Thank goodness that question has been taken care of; we do not need to worry about that". Surely the Canadian people expect us to take these other precautions; and we take them, may I say, Mr. Speaker, without an unwarranted interference with civil liberties.

My friend the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) said that he was not inconsistent because he had always advocated that in the Criminal Code we should prohibit communism. He also said he thought a definition of communism could be devised under which it would be possible to prohibit it. But if we attempted to prohibit communism we should be making it a crime for a man to hold and to preach certain political doctrines. In this way, it seems to me, we would be clearly interfering with his freedom of thought and of speech. But even those who believe in freedom of thought and of speech will nevertheless condemn overt acts of disloyalty to their country. Here we are not attempting to condemn these overt acts but rather we are trying to prevent them. In reply to what the Leader of the Opposition said this morning I would say that it would be quite wrong for us to put any provision in the Criminal Code which would make it a crime for a man to entertain or to attempt to inculcate ideas, but when he passes from ideas to disloyal overt acts then the most free country in the world is entitled to take steps for its protection against his disloyalty. The only question that arises then is as to whether such steps are reasonable.

I think my hon. friends will have quite a hard time convincing the majority of the Canadian people that steps that are taken which deny access for less than 24 seamen out of 30,000 odd to positions in which they might commit sabotage are unreasonable. I do not think my hon. friend will ever be able to convince the Canadian people that that is the case.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) has spent several minutes in vehemently knocking down a straw man of his own creation. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) said this morning quite frankly that he realized there had to be regulations. Indeed, he broadened out the problem and mentioned in particular the danger of sabotage in hydroelectric installations. His suggestion to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) was that the situation should not be left in this wide-open uncontrolled manner but that there should be some measure of spelling out in the statute. The Leader of the Opposition was very practical about it. As I say, he did not believe at all in the position suggested by the Minister of Justice. Of course he would be in favour of prevention, as the Minister of Justice said. Of course he did not argue that we should wait until the trouble was over and then seek to punish somebody when the damage was done. The hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) also suggested something along the same lines.

I think we hoped that there might be a reply from the Minister of Labour. Meanwhile it is not surprising that we see our old friend back again. When we see the emergency powers bill, which we thought we had buried on the 31st of May, alive and kicking again on the 9th of June, it almost reminds one of the old saying, the king is dead, long live the king. I understand there is a French proverb, plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose. Here it is back again. It is not surprising that we are a little troubled. We were told last night that any special powers were justified on the ground of flexibility. That is a blessed word. I have looked it up and I understand that it means you can be pushed around easily, that you are very malleable. Perhaps we in the opposition have got to that stage.

I do not wish to take up time, but let me say again that the Minister of Justice has been knocking down a straw man. He has entirely misrepresented what the Leader of the Opposition said. What the Leader of the Opposition said, and I think I may say the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacInnis) agreed, is that the way the section reads now the governor in council may prescribe penalties to be imposed on summary conviction for violation of any regulation made under this section. That does not sound as if it were restricted to the rather limited application outlined by the Minister of Justice, that all that is going to be done is to prevent some evil-disposed person from sailing on the ships, with which we will all agree.

As the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway said, the way this now reads it does not sound like the rule of law but like the rule of the cabinet. That was what the Leader of the Opposition was objecting to. Again, at the risk of repetition, let me say that he pointed out most clearly that he realized there should be regulations and it was a question of how they were to be proposed and to what extent they could be spelled out so that parliament could have a hand in the matter, instead of its being behind closed doors and in some mysterious fashion that nobody knows about.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have been following the discussion on this question, and I sense that even the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) are not too happy over what they consider to be the necessity for the introduction of a measure of this kind.

Mr. McIvor: They look happy.

Mr. Barnett: In other words, they would prefer it if the situation were not such as to make the introduction of this sort of measure necessary as they view the situation. It seems to me that, in the words of the minister, if the powers granted here were abused it could be a dangerous thing in a democratic society. For that reason I believe that members of the house should scrutinize carefully the introduction of this type of legislation which singles out a certain segment of the working people of Canada for a special form of attention.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) pointed out the sort of thing that could happen. He asked why, if such a provision were going to be made applicable to seamen on the great lakes, it should not also apply to workers in power plants. If it were made applicable to workers in power plants why should it not apply also, for example, to workers in the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company in British Columbia? One thing could lead to another.

For that reason I think the house should at least canvass all possible alternatives to the approach to this matter that is taken by the proposed amendment to the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I have taken the trouble to look at the Canada Shipping Act which in part III deals with matters affecting seamen. It seems to me that some of the problems that are supposed to be dealt with by the proposed amendment to the Navigable Waters Protection Act are in a sense covered by the Canada Shipping Act. For example, section 250 and following deal with provisions as to discipline. Section 250 reads as follows:

> If a master, seaman, or apprentice belonging to a Canadian ship, by wilful breach of duty or by neglect of duty or by reason of drunkenness,
>
> (a) does any act tending to the immediate loss, destruction, or serious damage of the ships, or tending immediately to endanger the life or limb of a person belonging to or on board the ship,
>
> (b) refuses or omits to do any lawful act proper and requisite to be done by him for preserving the ship from immediate loss, destruction, or serious damage, or for preserving any person belonging to or on board the ship from immediate danger to life or limb, he is in respect of each offence guilty of an indictable offence.

In section 256 there are certain provisions for protecting the master and officers of a ship from assault. Subsection 1 (e) reads as follows:

> If he combines with any of the crew to disobey lawful commands, or to neglect duty, or to impede the navigation of the ship or the progress of the voyage, he is liable to imprisonment for a period not exceeding three months.

Subsection 1 (f) reads as follows:

> If he wilfully damages his ship or steals or wilfully damages any of her stores or cargo, he is liable to forfeit out of his wages a sum equal to the loss thereby sustained, and also, at the discretion of the court, to imprisonment for a period not exceeding three months.

Subsection 2 says:

> Any imprisonment under this section may be with or without hard labour and the court may discharge the seaman from his ship.

Then, section 187, subsection 1, says:

> Where a seaman is discharged before a shipping master the master shall make and sign, in a form approved by the minister, or any form approved by the proper authority in that part of Her Majesty's dominions in which the ship is registered, a report of the conduct, character, and qualifications of the seaman discharged, or may state in the said form that he declines to give any opinion upon such particulars, or upon any of them, and the shipping master before whom the discharge is made shall, if the seaman desires, give to him a copy of such report (in this act referred to as the report of character).

Subsection 2 says:

> The shipping master shall transmit the reports to the minister, or to such other person as the minister may direct, to be recorded.

Subsection 3 says:

> Every person who
>
> (a) makes a false report of character under this act, knowing the same to be false;
>
> (b) forges or fraudulently alters any certificate of discharge or report of character or copy of a report of character;
>
> (c) assists in committing, or procures to be committed, any of such offences as aforesaid; or
>
> (d) fraudulently uses any certificate of discharge or report of character or copy of a report of character which is forged or altered or does not belong to him;
>
> is in respect of each offence guilty of an indictable offence.

Then, section 258 (1) says:

> A seaman who, on or before being engaged, wilfully and fraudulently makes a false statement of the name of his last ship, or alleged last ship, or wilfully and fraudulently makes a false statement of his own name, is for each offence liable to a fine not exceeding twenty-five dollars.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that when we have an act such as the Canada Shipping Act which deals with questions relating to shipping, when we have set forth in that act provisions against offences that will cause damage to a ship or its cargo, when we apparently have wide powers already set up in regard to keeping track of the character of seamen and provision for any fraudulent representations in that connection, we already have a framework which, possibly with some judicious amendment, would take care of this particular situation. It would cover the dangers outlined by the Minister of Justice, without making the special provisions outlined here that, in effect, give unlimited powers to the governor in council, who would have discretion to make regulations covering the danger of sabotage in the great lakes area. It seems to me some consideration should be given as to whether it would not be possible to deal with the matter under the existing statute. I, for one, would like to hear from the responsible minister some explanation as to why the government apparently prefers to take this approach by the introduction of this new part to the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport, when he spoke introducing this legislation, said that like ancient Gaul it was divided into three parts. I believe it was the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, or if not it was someone in his day in parliament—no, it comes to me now that it was the late Sam Jacobs—who, when confronted with a piece of legislation which had been characterized in that way, replied "Yes, but all the gall is in the third part." That is the way we feel about this bill. There is a good deal of gall in the third part; indeed the government has a good deal of gall in bringing this matter before parliament.

The offensive part of this legislation, Mr. Speaker, is the part having to do with the continuing in force of the regulations affecting great lakes seamen, and it is that which has been discussed for the most part by those who have taken part in this debate. May I point out that this part of the legislation deals with persons, with security and with crimes. Surely, if legislation of this kind was to be brought before parliament it should have been brought in in the name of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson). If it could be argued that it had something to do with labour matters, perhaps there might have been an excuse for it being brought in in the name of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg). But certainly, this provision has no relation to the protection of navigable waters.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I am going to make a confession. That may not be a good thing to do in these parts, but I shall take a chance. It happens that the group to which I belong has given me as whip, amongst other duties, the duty of watching the legislation that comes along and making sure that all matters that we want to discuss are brought to the notice of the particular members in our group who specialize in particular fields.

I knew that legislation respecting great lakes seamen was coming. I saw references in the press to the fact this matter had been discussed in the other place, and I was watching for it. I had already indicated to certain members in our group that when it came here I would draw it to their attention. I believe members generally will agree that not many things around here escape my notice. Despite all that, despite the fact I was watching for this legislation, I missed it. I did not think, when I saw a bill to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act, there would be buried in it a section the purpose of which was to carry forward the great lakes seamen's regulations which were in effect under the Emergency Powers Act.

Now, I make that confession to underline the fact the third part of this bill really has no place in this legislation at all. The Minister of Justice, in his plausible attempt to defend this legislation, talked about the right or duty of the government to take certain elementary precautions. What were the precautions he said the government should take? He said that they should prevent that small minority, and he put it that way, who may be likely to engage in sabotage of one kind or another from obtaining employment on ships plying the great lakes system of this country. That is all he talked about.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend does not put that in precisely the way I put it.

Mr. Knowles: I will permit the minister to do it, then.

Mr. Garson: I said, gaining access to a position in which they could commit acts of sabotage; there is quite a difference.

Mr. Knowles: But the section relates to, and puts it in these words, "respecting the employment of seamen on board Canadian ships in the great lakes". I think that, regardless of the words the minister has now used, I have to interpret what he has now said as relating to the gaining of employment on ships plying the great lakes. When one couples what was said by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) with what was said by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg), it seems to me it is clear that what is involved in the regulations to be made under this section is the question of employment on ships plying the great lakes.

Since when has it been a crime to seek employment? Since when has it been decided that we shall have on our statute books laws making provision for the imposition of penalties of $500 or imprisonment for three months, or both, for the seeking of employment? There may be a case to be made for screening, which would result in certain people being denied the right to obtain certain employment. And even that would need to be gone into. Other hon. members, including the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), have done so.

But surely there should not be attached to provisions referring to the seeking of employment the right of the government to impose a penalty of $500, or three months' imprisonment, or both fine and imprisonment. I suggest that this is going just a little too far. I do not need to repeat the arguments which have been made by the Leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacInnis), the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) and others. Surely we should look at this in its proper perspective, and realize that the government is asking, under the pretext of this legislation, for much wider powers than it has any right to have, or to ask parliament to give it.

I plead very strongly and earnestly with the government to reconsider this whole matter. The third part of the bill deals with a subject matter entirely different from the scope of the bill. Like some other measures, it came from the other place, and was dealt with first over there. It was presented to us this morning, not by the Minister of Justice, who should be dealing with matters involving crime and punishment, not by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg), who has been responsible in the past for the administration of great lakes seamen's regulations, but by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport. Even if it had been the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) I do not think it would have been proper. But the fact that it did have all these other involvements has meant that the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Labour have felt that they should participate in this debate.

Mr. Speaker, this parliament is being faced with altogether too much of this kind of legislation. We have too many requests of this kind in which parliament is asked to turn over its rights and powers, and all kinds of authority, to the government. I wonder when the day will come when the government will bring in a bill in which it will ask parliament to give to the government the power to do anything it pleases when parliament is not sitting—whereupon it would probably move that parliament be adjourned.

[Mr. Knowles.]

In my opinion this legislation goes too far. There is far too much gall in the third part of it, and we shall oppose this bill.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for having given me credit for stating my views. I must point out to him however that, while I did rise to my feet on one or two occasions, someone beat me to it. Nevertheless there is something I should like to say.

Mr. Knowles: I must have been reading the hon. member's mind. I did see him on his feet.

Mr. Low: The fact is that I have been giving this whole matter the most earnest consideration and attention. Certain thoughts have been running through my mind as I have listened to the debate, and considered the points made by all hon. members, from the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) until the present time.

In the first place, we have no Emergency Powers Act now. Whether that is because hon. members in the opposition have spoken so continuously against it, I cannot say. The fact remains that the government does not have the Emergency Powers Act to fall back upon today.

Then, secondly, everyone knows that today, while we may not have a state of emergency, in reality this is a time of great danger; and certainly the government must have ample authority to meet the dangers that beset us. No one can deny that the government does require perhaps unusual authority to deal with the dangers that beset our country. I would not be averse to giving it ample power to prevent any possible acts of sabotage, or any danger of that kind. I am not so greatly concerned about the matter of giving power to the government. Let us give them all the power they need to deal with the situation realistically and firmly. But I think hon. members who have spoken thus far have made a good case. Certainly we do not want to be parties to giving them powers we do not know about, or that they can extend into greater powers we are not thinking about at the present time.

I believe that is the crux of the whole situation. I should think the government could bring before us an amended section 34 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act spelling out in more or less detail exactly what it requires. I do not think any of us would have any hesitation in giving the government the powers it requires, even to the extent of screening workmen to a point where the government might deny to even more than two dozen persons the authority or the right to work on ships on which they could commit acts of sabotage.

I am willing to give consideration to any proposal the government may make that would make it clear to us exactly what it is trying to prevent, and what it must do. If the government will spell out something I will be very glad to give it consideration. Under the circumstances, however, I must go along with those who have spoken already against giving wide and indefinite powers as set out in section 34. I would like to hear the minister, or some other member of the government, place before us something in specific terms. If so, I would give it my support.

Mr. Speaker: Without finding fault with anything that has been said in debate thus far, at this juncture may I observe it strikes me that, while it has been pointed out that there are three parts in the bill, all the debate has revolved around section 34. There has been a complete omission of the other two parts, with which, it would seem, hon. members are in agreement.

It strikes me that this debate could take place in committee on section 34, where the questions hon. members are anxious to ask could be answered. I am led to these remarks by the closing words of the hon. member for Peace River, who is anxious to learn the views of the various ministers concerned with section 34. Apparently no disagreement exists with respect to the other two parts. I have allowed the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and members who followed in the debate to refer to the sections because this is an amending bill, and perhaps it would have been difficult to discuss it without referring specifically to some of the contents of it. But now, as the debate on second reading carries on and we hear nothing about the other two parts and the entire discussion revolves around section 34 —I am not making a ruling—I ask hon. members whether they would not consider, in the interests of order in the debate, restraining themselves at this moment and carrying on in the fashion they wish in committee on section 34.

Mr. Low: I apologize if I was out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member was not out of order. That is not the reason I rose. He suggested that he was anxious to get some replies, and I thought that I would make these observations because, as he does realize, if the parliamentary assistant, who opened the debate on this measure, replied he would close the debate; whereas if we were in committee on the bill and were discussing section 34 the hon. member could have his reply and could ask any further questions not only of the parliamentary assistant but of others such as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) who have spoken in this debate. The hon. member cannot ask for further clarification before making up his mind because these two ministers cannot speak again. The only one who can speak now would be the parliamentary assistant, who opened the debate on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), and should he be called upon to speak again he would close the debate.

Mr. Low: Perhaps we could get the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) into this.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): I quite understand your point and your misgivings about the debate, sir, but with all due respect to you I would point out that a very important part of the principle of this bill is involved in this particular section that shall be nameless. Not only that; there is another principle involved, one to which members of this group and, I think, of the official opposition have taken exception, and that is the principle of including this type of thing in this particular sort of legislation.

Mr. Speaker: May I at this moment interrupt the hon. member and tell him that these arguments have already been made by three, four or five speakers before him. If I were to put into force the standing order, which I think is standing order 40, to the effect that repetition is not permitted, not only repetition in one's own argument but repetition of the argument of others who have participated in the debate, I think I could perhaps persuade him that he should not pursue his point until we are in committee of the whole on the bill.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Then I shall proceed, if I may, to the discussion of what seems to be the important principle of this bill, namely, the inclusion in it of a measure that should be somewhere else, and not only that, but the inclusion of something which obviously will not have the effect the government pretends it will have.

Some few days ago the Winnipeg Free Press, an ardent, not to say sycophantic, admirer of the Liberal government, saw fit to publish an editorial in which they were viewing with grave misgiving the evidence of intellectual and administrative degeneration in the Liberal government. What they are going to say when they see a report of today's proceedings, I do not know, but I have heard a number of fatuous and puerile arguments from the government benches. With all due respect to the Minister of Justice, I do not think he really could have expected us to take seriously the arguments he presented a few minutes ago. He said this particular measure must go in to protect the Welland canal, among other things. Mr. Speaker, I am going to suggest this. I have a higher opinion of the intelligence of any possible subversive elements in Canada than to imagine that one of them who has in mind the blowing up of the Welland canal is going to all the trouble of trying to get a job on one of the steamships on the lakes. I suspect he will take the bus down and will go and blow it up that way, or if he does not want to do that, if he wants to do it more easily even, if he has some nautical aspirations, then he will buy a ticket on one of the passenger boats and drop it overboard as he goes through. What nonsense!

Does the Minister of Justice insist on screening all the employees of the Canadian Pacific who go through the Rogers pass tunnel? Does he insist on screening all the employees of the Canadian National Railways who go through the Fraser canyon, any one of whom could toss a bomb which could destroy and disrupt the trade of Canada just as effectively as the destruction of the Welland canal—and more effectively, because it would cut off the Canadian west coast of this country? What nonsense!

I have had some experience with screening propositions, Mr. Speaker. About eighteen months ago I had to sign an affidavit that I would not reveal any state secrets that might be involved in the waste of public money on naval vessels in a certain dockyard in Canada, and I had to sign an affidavit that I would not reveal anything that came to my knowledge in the course of my employment. The young man who was giving me this security test, which was a very solemn affair, told me that he would leave this with me and I could study it for a few minutes and he would be back later and then we could sign it with all due solemnity. When he came back I signed it. He said: "Have you read it?" I said: "Yes, I have read it". "You can understand it?" I said: "Yes, quite easily". I rather shattered the young man. I said: "You know, this thought occurs to me, that if I were a Russian spy I would sign this without the slightest hesitation, and if that is the only means you have of keeping subversive elements out of the yard, then this yard is in a bad way". Whereupon the young man said: "But you forget this; having signed this, you are now liable to 14 years in the penitentiary". I suggested that 14 years would not be a circumstance to what would happen to me if they caught me with a bomb in my pocket. Mr. Speaker, this thing is so patently ridiculous and absurd that I hesitate even to attribute it to this government. I suspect, sir, that this is the result of pressure from somewhere else. I suspect that this is the result of pressure from a place where a considerable measure of hysteria is prevailing at the present time, and that our government is doing this to reassure people somewhere else outside of Canada that if at some time these people discover someone on one of the lake boats, one who took part in a peace rally, a May-day parade or, like the Minister of Justice, sat on the platform with a Soviet representative, the government of Canada will be prepared by regulation to cut off his head and take him off that ship.

I cannot see that there can be any other explanation for this ridiculous and fantastic piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, which in the first place gives to this government the power to create crimes, to say that this shall be a crime. If they are going to be able to do this by order in council, what are they going to constitute as a crime tomorrow? Perhaps they will constitute as a crime the saying of rude things that are said about the Liberal government of Canada, and there will be an awful lot of us in the penitentiary.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this government had better tell anybody who is bringing pressure on them that we have our own methods of safeguarding our way of life in Canada; that we are not impressed with the methods employed in other places; that reasonable precautions are taken and that we are still able to look after our own affairs in this country, because otherwise the only explanation that I have—it is not an explanation—the only explanation I have is that this government has gone slightly daft.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to almost all of this debate, and as yet I have not heard any explanation satisfactory to myself why parliament should be asked to make suspected wrongful thinking an offence on the great lakes. This is the first time that parliament has been asked to create a territorial offence. I think it is a dangerous course of action and one that indicates that what the government is trying to do is to bring legislation into effect, allegedly for the security of Canada, while afraid to face the issue and place that legislation before parliament.

I cannot agree that parliament should be asked to grant these comprehensive rights asked for under this bill whereby the governor in council will be authorized to have undesignated powers to do undefined things for unanticipated offences not yet committed. That is what this legislation in effect does.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) said it is not a crime to entertain wrongful ideas so long as they are not overt acts. With that principle, Mr. Speaker, I agree.

However, if parliament grants this power as asked for by this back-door method it will in fact be making it a crime, within the designated limits of regulations about which we know nothing, to create an offence for alleged wrongful ideas.

What is the offence to be? Guilt by association? That is something which, I think, should be debated in this house—the concept too often regarded in neighbouring countries as a reason for destroying the reputation, if not the livelihood, of those who have committed no offence other than being suspected of wrongful thought. When I think of those who say there should be guilt by association I often wonder what the position of members of this House of Commons would be who sat in this house for three or four long years with a member who was a communist and who was afterwards convicted as a traitor to this country.

This type of legislation granting to the governor in council the power to do that which the council of the governor is afraid to bring before this house in direct legislation is a negation of parliament, and as far as I am concerned I am going to vote against it.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Garson, for Mr. Chevrier) which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Anderson
Applewhaite
Arsenault
Ashbourne
Balcom
Benidickson
Bennett (Grey North)
Blanchette
Boisvert
Boivin
Bonnier
Boucher (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Boucher (Restigouche-Madawaska)
Bourget
Breton
Brisson
Brown (Brantford)
Brown (Essex West)
Buchanan
Byrne
Cameron (High Park)
Campney
Cannon
Cardin
Caron
Carter
Cauchon
Cavers
Clark
Cote
Crestohl
Croll
Dechene
Decore
Denis
Deschatelets
Dickey
Enfield
Eudes
Eyre
Fairey
Fontaine
Forgie
Fraser (St. John's East)
Gagnon
Gardiner
Garland
Garson
Gauthier (Lake St. John)
Gauthier (Nickel Belt)
Gauthier (Portneuf)
Gingras
Gingues
Girard
Goode
Gour (Russell)
Gourd (Chapleau)
Gregg
Habel
Hanna
Harris
Harrison
Healy
Hellyer
Henderson
Henry
Hosking
Houck
Howe (Port Arthur)
Huffman
Hunter
Jutras
Kickham
Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough)
Lafontaine
Langlois (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere)
Langlois (Gaspe)
Lapointe
Leduc (Gatineau)
Leduc (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle)
Legare
Lesage
Lusby
MacDougall
MacKenzie
MacNaught
Macnaughton
McCann
McCubbin
McCulloch (Pictou)
McDonald
McIvor
McMillan
McWilliam
Maltais
Mang
Martin
Masse
Matheson
Meunier
Michaud
Mitchell (Sudbury)
Monette
Murphy (Westmorland)
Pearson
Philpott
Pickersgill
Pinard
Pommer
Poulin
Pouliot
Power (St. John's West)
Proudfoot
Prudham
Purdy
Ratelle
Reinke
Richard (Ottawa East)
Roberge
Robichaud
Robinson (Simcoe East)
Ross
Rouleau
St. Laurent
Schneider
Shipley, Mrs.
Simmons
Sinclair
Smith
Stick
Stuart (Charlotte)
Tucker
Viau
Villeneuve
Weaver
Weir
Weselak
White (Waterloo South)
Wood—139.

NAYS

Messrs:

Aitken, Miss Argue
Balcer
Barnett
Bell
Bennett, Miss (Halton)
Blackmore
Blair
Brooks
Bryson
Cameron (Nanaimo)
Campbell
Cardiff
Casselman
Castleden
Charlton
Churchill
Coldwell
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Drew Dufresne
Ellis
Fairclough, Mrs.
Ferguson
Fleming
Fraser (Peterborough)
Fulton
Gillis
Green
Hahn
Harkness
Herridge
Holowach
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Johnson (Kindersley)
Johnston (Bow River)
Jones
Knight
Knowles
Leboe
Lennard
Low
Macdonnell
MacInnis
MacLean
McBain
McCullough (Moose Mountain)
McGregor
McLeod
Michener
Monteith

| | |
|---|---|
| Montgomery | Robinson (Bruce) |
| Murphy (Lambton West) | Rowe |
| Nesbitt | Shaw |
| Nicholson | Starr |
| Nickle | Stewart (Winnipeg North) |
| Noseworthy | Thomas |
| Nowlan | Trainor |
| Pallett | Tustin |
| Patterson | White (Middlesex East) |
| Pearkes | Winch |
| Quelch | Yuill |
| Regier | Zaplitny—76. |

Bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. The house in committee of the whole on Bill No. 471, an act to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act. Clause 1.

On clause 1—Recovery by Her Majesty from owner, etc., of costs of placing signals, removing wreck, etc.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I rise at this stage for the purpose of making a suggestion to Your Honour which, if accepted by you and by the committee, I think might facilitate the orderly discussion of the bill. The bill consists of only two clauses but it seems to amend four different sections of the act. I wonder whether it might meet with your approval if we were to discuss each section of the act by itself rather than merely the two clauses of the bill as two separate proposals.

The Chairman: Is that agreeable to the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2, section 33, agreed to.

On clause 2, section 34—Regulations.

Mr. Fulton: This is the clause to which of course great objection was taken. The matter was discussed fairly fully on second reading, and now we can ask questions in detail. I suggest that one of the absurdities of going about the matter in this way is illustrated by the fact that the government, which considers it necessary to take these security measures, has to introduce an amendment to the Navigable Waters Protection Act which of course has nothing to do with security. But this clause only has reference to the great lakes. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Prince Albert, the effect is to create a crime with reference to a particular territory alone. What about the seamen working on the Vancouver-Victoria boats? Is it to be suggested they could not do equal damage by blowing up a dock at Vancouver or Victoria? How on earth is it proposed to deal with a situation of that sort in the absence of legislation of general effect? Has any of the ministers an explanation of that anomalous position?

Mr. Gregg: Before an answer is made to my hon. friend's question, and since on second reading a number of speeches were directed at this section of the act and the regulations made thereunder, I should like to make some comments on the points that were raised. The hon. member for Greenwood quite naturally expressed a desire to know more about how these regulations had been dealt with. The same applies to the hon. member for Peace River who asked the question: What is involved here? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in his turn stated that there was no connection whatever between section 34 and the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I think we can take some exception to that because if he will cast his mind back a few years to just prior to 1950, the sabotage and destruction of property along the waters of the St. Lawrence certainly had something to do with the protection of that waterway. Without developing that, he went on to state that authority was being granted here by which the government may fine people for seeking employment. I know he did not really mean that because, as he and the committee are well aware, the regulations which were set up under the order in council were tabled in the house and do not provide for such a fine.

The regulations were first tabled by my parliamentary assistant back in 1951, and the amalgamated regulations and amendments thereto were tabled by the Prime Minister in 1952. The fines set out under the regulations have nothing whatsoever to do with the seeking of employment. They read as follows:

> Every one who,
> (a) knowingly furnishes any false information or material in or in support of an application for a seaman's card or in a certificate required by subsection 2 of section 19, or > (b) contravenes or fails to comply with any provision of these regulations, > is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or to imprisonment not exceeding three months or to both such fine and such imprisonment.

Under that regulation we do not fine people for seeking employment. I want to make that very clear.

Mr. Fulton: Would the minister read section 5 of the regulations?

Mr. Gregg: Section 5?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Gregg: It reads as follows:

No person shall accept employment or act as a seaman on board a Canadian ship in the great lakes, unless he is the holder of a provisional or regular seaman's card.

It is in connection with what was implied in the question of the hon. member for Greenwood that I want to give the committee a fairly full report as to what is involved under the existing regulations because the procedure, if the bill is put into effect, would be the same as under the former regulations. I will try to outline the situation as briefly as I can.

A seaman seeking employment on a vessel operating on the great lakes and upper St. Lawrence must make application to a local office of the national employment service for the issue of a seaman's card and must be in possession of either a provincial or a regular seaman's card to secure employment. You may ask the question at this point: Why were the Department of Labour and the national employment service chosen from among all the departments of government to act in this regard? I think there were two points involved. One of them, which is quite important, was the fact that my department and the unemployment insurance commission from day to day have a good deal to do with organized labour, the workers of Canada, and perhaps were as well equipped as anyone to discuss both with organized management and with organized labour all the factors involved in this proposed step that was taken under threat of emergency back in 1950. And so it was.

We discussed the matter at that time with the dominion marine association of Toronto representing the shipping companies or employers. We discussed it fully with the representatives of unions operating on the great lakes, namely, the Canadian merchants service guild—deck officers—the national association of marine engineers and the international seafarers union. I may say that after a full discussion of all the points involved none of the organizations, either employer or employee, expressed any disagreement with the step involved. There were differences of opinion of course as to how it could best be accomplished.

The second reason why the Minister of Labour was chosen to administer these regulations was the fact that he was responsible for the 230 national employment offices across Canada and it did appear that those offices and their officials would be best equipped to do the routine work for the convenience of applicants seeking work.

This is the procedure that we have been following. We issue provisional cards to new applicants as they appear at the local national employment offices. Such cards are valid for sixty days. During that period of time the individual's application form, accompanied by photographs and fingerprints, is turned over to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for investigation. After the application has been screened, a regular seaman's card has been issued to him by the national employment office in exchange for the interim or provisional card issued at the time of this application, providing of course that it is not withheld for the reason the Minister of Labour has been satisfied that the presence of the applicant on board a Canadian ship in the great lakes might prejudice the security of Canada.

Where the screening of the application takes longer than 60 days, as was frequently the case at the beginning, it is not the practice to bar the seaman from employment but rather he has been permitted to continue sailing under his provisional card until the security screening has been completed. Where no derogatory information relating to national security is disclosed by the screening, a regular seaman's card is issued as a matter of course, and in my statement earlier I indicated to the house that that applied in a total of over 30,000. Where information bearing on national security is uncovered, that information concerning the application is dispatched to and considered by the Minister of Labour and his advisers.

Information received from the R.C.M.P. or any other source is assessed by the minister, and if he feels that the information received is sufficient to warrant the denial or withdrawal of a seaman's card, he so withdraws or denies it. In cases where the minister is satisfied the presence of the applicant on board a Canadian ship in the great lakes might prejudice the security of Canada, the applicant is so advised by a personal letter from the minister delivered personally by an official of the national employment service of the unemployment insurance commission. The seaman is then required to surrender any valid provisional or regular card. At the same time, if the question is raised by the seaman he is advised that he may, by an application in writing to the minister, request that his case be reviewed by the advisory committee. This advisory committee is composed of a retired judge of the exchequer court and two representatives of organized labour appointed after consultation with responsible national bodies of organized labour.

Upon receipt of a request for review, the minister asks this advisory committee of not less than three in number to investigate all the available information, and report its views with respect thereto to the minister. In practice, where the need to appoint an advisory committee has arisen, a committee of three persons has been appointed consisting of the retired judge, to whom I referred, as chairman, and two other members representing organized labour. Under the present regulations the advisory committee, subject to the direction of the minister, furnishes to the person who has requested the review such information made available to it as in the opinion of the committee it is possible to furnish to him without prejudice to the security of Canada and to the public interest. The committee also affords the individual an opportunity to make representations to it either personally or with the assistance of counsel.

The minister may, after considering the report of the advisory committee, grant or refuse to grant a seaman's card to the person requesting the review, and the minister's decision is final. The minister's decision is conveyed to the person requesting the review in writing. I can add that in each case I have followed sedulously the recommendations of the advisory committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In how many cases did the advisory committee recommend a change?

Mr. Gregg: I am afraid I sent my notes to Hansard. It would not be complete to mention just one item out of a number, so perhaps I might repeat a portion of my remarks.

On April 26, 1954, there was a total of 30,540 applications received and processed under the regulations in the manner I have described. Some of the applications were imperfect, that is had not been made out properly, and some persons who had made applications could not be traced when the national employment service attempted to call them up. Of the remainder, 29,971 were sent to the R.C.M.P. for checking. Of these a total of 29,571 had been screened at that date, April 26, while 400 cases were still under investigation. Of the 29,571 applications screened, a total of 29,422 were cleared and 149 applications were questioned. Of the 149 cases questioned for the reason that information had been received having a possible bearing upon security, 122 were cleared as a result of the study of the circumstances by the minister's advisers, while 20 were refused regular seaman's cards and seven cases were in abeyance pending a decision as to whether or not cards should be issued.

As of April 26, 1954, seven of the persons denied cards had made a request for a review of their cases. In one of these cases a further investigation resulted in the person being cleared without a review by the advisory committee. In three cases the committee confirmed the minister's decision to refuse to issue a card. Two requests for review lapsed, one for the reason the subject was deported and no further action was required under the security regulations, and the other for the reason the person concerned did not present himself for hearing. One request is still pending.

Mr. Drew: I wish to direct my remarks once again to one aspect of this measure before us with which I did deal this morning and which the Minister of Justice in turn dealt with following what I had said. The Minister of Justice spoke of the fact that 24 dangerous men had been kept off ships as a result of this measure, then effective under the Emergency Powers Act. He asked if we did not believe it was a good thing that was done. Of course, we believe it is a good thing to keep dangerous men off ships. We believe, however, it should be done under a proper legal process. We believe it should be done under a law that is known to the person affected. We believe it should be done under a law which permits appeal to the courts and protects the right of the individual. We believe it should be done under a procedure that is consistent with our long established ideas of an open trial, except in those extremely unusual cases where some secrets of immense importance might possibly be under consideration. However, that does not affect the cases before us, so far as can be ascertained.

What we have been pointing out is that if there are dangerous men, those dangerous men should be dealt with under methods which do not infringe upon that democracy and freedom that we presume such dangerous men would wish to destroy.

One point which has not been dealt with effectively by the government is the point we make that this is brought up in a very improper way, under an amendment to the Navigable Waters Protection Act. As has been so aptly pointed out by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), this is creating a list of undefined offences in respect of which there may be punishment by a method, in itself not defined, and limited to a particular geographical area. Not only is it limited to a particular geographical area, but it is limited to a particular occupation.

May I ask just a few questions which, in themselves, it seems to me, seem to give the answer to any suggestion that this is the proper way to deal with offences of the kind

I have mentioned. If we are trying to deal with dangerous men who are making an effort to sabotage important transportation equipment, or any other equipment in our economy or society at this time, then why deal alone with steamships in a limited area? Why deal with a limited means of communication, with a limited activity in a limited area? Why not define the offence and make it applicable to anyone, under the jurisdiction of Canadian courts? If dangerous men are to be prevented from committing sabotage, or otherwise from undermining the security of Canada, why should that not apply below the Victoria bridge at Montreal as well as above it? Is the danger any less because it happens to be on the mighty St. Lawrence, right down to its mouth, below the Victoria bridge? I do not think so.

Is the danger any less on the Peace river, the Athabasca river or the Mackenzie river, where the uranium bodies are the most precious in the world today? Is it any less on the ships between Great Britain and Newfoundland? Is it any less on the extremely important ships carrying precious freight between the mainland and Vancouver island? Is it any less in those ships plying the waters of Hudson bay? Is it any less on the other lakes, not included in what we define as the great lakes? Precious cargoes of immense importance to Canada may be moving in those lakes.

And that applies only to the ships. What about the coastal ships under Canadian registry carrying vitally important traffic? What about the coastal ships carrying alumina up to Kitimat, in northern British Columbia? What about the ships carrying alumina up the St. Lawrence and up the Saguenay, to the Shipshaw plant in Quebec? They would not come under this clause in the bill, as related to the Victoria bridge in Montreal.

Let us look at other things; let us look at some of the other means of transportation. What about sabotage on the railways? What about sabotage on the air lines—because, after all, we know of cases of sabotage on the air lines. And they form an extremely important part of our communications system. What about sabotage in the great communications system that provides the nerve centres—the telegraph lines, the wire lines? That would be a good place for sabotage, if someone wanted to destroy their effectiveness.

What about the pipe lines that carry the oil; what about the refineries and the storage centres in the country? Are not dangerous men likely to do harm there, and in exactly the same circumstances, and with the same disloyalty as is dealt with here? What about the gas pipe lines, and the distribution equipment which is likely to be so important —and was so important in the last war? What about the private companies producing military equipment? Would not dangerous men, with sabotage as part of their plan, be just as dangerous there as on any ships? What about explosive plants carrying out production for the government? Would not sabotage there be more effective and more destructive and more far-reaching than anything that might be done in any single ship on the great lakes, in the ordinary course of events?

And, Mr. Chairman, what about foreign ships that ply our waters so regularly, and now carry so much traffic? May I remind this committee that if there is a hydrogen bomb or an atomic bomb exploded in the vicinity of Toronto or Hamilton, or any of our inland cities, it will not likely be carried by aircraft; it will likely be carried on a ship, where it can be hidden easily. That is well recognized. There is even greater danger of the transmission of a hydrogen bomb or atomic bomb by ship than by aircraft.

Of what use is a measure to limit the activities of dangerous men if it does not deal with foreign ships?

Mr. Garson: Would the Leader of the Opposition permit a question?

Mr. Drew: No. I would prefer to continue until I have finished. I welcome the minister's interest, and I shall listen to him with interest; but when asking a question, because of his interest in the subject he has the habit of making a speech within a speech. I would prefer to finish my remarks.

Mr. Garson: It might be an embarrassing question.

Mr. Drew: No, it would not be embarrassing at all. The minister never asks questions which are embarrassing, but they can be disturbing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Sometimes they are embarrassing to himself.

Mr. Drew: I would prefer to continue, because I wish to keep the context clear.

I am simply pointing out how ineffective as well as improper is a limited provision of this kind—one that is limited not only as to geography but also as to the particular type of transportation and particular occupation involved.

What about known communists in the uranium mines in Canada? That is a question that relates directly to this. What about known communists in the heavy water operations being carried on by a private company on behalf of the government? And, as the minister well knows, a communist-led union is the recognized bargaining agency in that extremely important operation—as are also communist-led unions in the uranium mines, at this time.

If we find dangerous men in our ships, how about a law which will apply to everyone, and keep dangerous men out of all these other operations? And then let me come back to what, after all, is the very lifeblood of our productive system; I refer to electricity. Everyone knows that we are more dependent than any other country in the world, for our immense industrial production, upon electricity. A comparatively small team of highly trained saboteurs could paralyse the industrial production of Canada, if they were permitted to do so without interference. Why not have a law with general application which would make it possible to deal with such people?

And may I say something that I know the minister knows about—that there are known communists in some of our big hydroelectric plants today, and we have no law to deal with them at this time, although that is where they present a danger to Canada at this time.

For several years we have been asking for a simple, workable and clearly defined law that would define this kind of danger to which the minister refers. We have been asking for a law, not one to deal with any particular activity by name, but rather by a definition of that activity. We want an effort on behalf of any foreign power opposed to the safety and security of Canada to be an offence defined by law and punishable in our courts by Canadian jurors, and not punished behind closed doors by undefined laws, by undefined agents, and under terms that not one of us will know about if we give this power to the government. Now, with these powers, unsatisfactory in form, unsatisfactory in extent, this is a good time for a return to democracy, and this is a good time for the government to comply with the request we have made over and over again to define the offence with reference to a foreign power which is seeking to undermine the security of Canada and place it in a form that will make it possible to bring these dangerous men, to use the term employed by the Minister of Justice, before the courts of Canada, where Canadian jurors, with that justice which is the pride of Canada, can decide whether they are innocent or guilty, and if they are guilty, where they will be sent to jail, where they should be, if they are trying to undermine the security of our country.

[Mr. Drew.]

Mr. Knowles: I should like to return for a minute or two to the comments the Minister of Labour made in reply to something I said when we were at the second reading stage. The minister felt that I could not really mean it when I interpreted this section as making it possible to impose a penalty on a person because he sought employment. The minister, in answering me, read certain of the regulations under P.C. 2306 of May 2, 1952, and suggested that what was in the government's mind was the matter of providing penalties for any false declaration. As was brought out by the question put to him by the hon. member for Kamloops, there is included in the regulations No. 5, which reads:

> No person shall accept employment or act as a seaman on board a Canadian ship in the great lakes, unless he is the holder of a provisional or regular seaman's card.

I look at the end of P.C. 2306 and I find that it says that everyone who contravenes any of these regulations—

> . . . is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or to imprisonment not exceeding three months or to both such fine and such imprisonment.

I admit it is far-fetched, but I suggest the possibility is right there that if a person manages to get employment as a seaman on board a Canadian ship on the great lakes, contrary to the provisions of this order in council, he could be charged and sentenced to a fine of $500 or to three months imprisonment, or to both such fine and such imprisonment. But, Mr. Chairman, apart from all that, may I point out that we are not voting on these regulations; we are voting on a section that is to be written into a law that will permit the government to make regulations. We are led to believe that the regulations that will be made will be the ones that are now in effect; we are led to believe that these regulations will be continued. That is not what we are voting on. We are voting on a clause which says, and I think the clause should be put on the record in its entirety:

> The governor in council may make such regulations as he considers necessary or desirable in the interests of the safety or security of Canada respecting employment of seamen on board Canadian ships in the great lakes, and may prescribe the penalties to be imposed on summary conviction for violation of any regulation made under this section, but such penalties shall not exceed a fine of five hundred dollars or imprisonment for a term of three months or both fine and imprisonment.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that under that wording there is nothing involved but the matter of employment of seamen on board Canadian ships in the great lakes, and the right given to the government to impose penalties for people who break regulations respecting such employment. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that what we are voting on at this time is not order in council P.C. 2306; what we are voting on is the clause which I have just read, which gives extremely wide and undefined powers to the government in this field.

In this connection may I remind the government that this is not the first time the house has had to deal with a situation where emergency powers were expiring, and where the government wished to continue in effect some of the regulations that had been passed under those emergency powers. I have in mind what happened in 1946 or 1947 when the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, or whatever that long name was, was expiring and the government was not yet ready to get along without all the regulations that had been passed under that act. I believe, if my memory serves me right, there were 57 of them which the government wished to continue in the "Heinz 57 varieties" bill.

But in that instance, even though there were some of those 57 regulations which members of the house objected to, at least what the government did was to bring in a bill continuing in effect those specific regulations, further providing in that legislation that none of those regulations could be altered. It was provided that the government by order in council could repeal any of them, but any regulations that were repealed could not be reinstated by the government afterwards. Whether we liked what was in those 57 regulations or not, at least we knew what we were talking about.

I submit, even though we might have disagreed with some of the sections of the regulations which the government might have asked us to vote on, it would have been better in this case to bring this matter before us, certainly not in the Navigable Waters Protection Act but in a bill properly named, and that it might have been brought before us in that form so that we would know exactly what we were voting on, rather than be asked to grant these wide powers without any restrictive definition as to what the government can do. We feel very strongly that the government's proposal in connection with this matter should be reconsidered even at this late date.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friends of the opposition who have just spoken, the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, seem to be under the impression that we have created now or are attempting to create in the present bill a sort of supplementary Criminal Code with some new crimes and severe fines and penalties that have not heretofore existed.

As my hon. friend said, the Minister of Labour has stated that an order in council has been passed which we propose to continue. That order in council is not in any sense secret. It was tabled back in 1951. It has been a matter of public record ever since. It might be pointed out in reply to the point which the Leader of the Opposition made, that he wanted a law which was open to the public and offences under which would come before the courts and before a jury of the accused's peers, so that the person accused would have a fair trial and the like—in reply to this argument it might be relevant to point out that in any prosecutions under this order in council the prosecutor would have to invoke it. The order in council would have to be produced in court, would have to be proven, and then the crown would have to prove that an offence took place under it; and the only reason why there could not be a trial by a jury of the accused's peers is that the only offence provided for under the order in council is an offence punishable upon summary conviction by a fine or by a maximum imprisonment of three months. Therefore, the only reason why a man could not get a jury trial is not because the order in council was secret or a prosecution under it did not come before the court, but because the penalty is so small that it would be punishable on summary conviction and would not therefore get before a jury.

I would like to point out in addition to that that the order in council does not define any new series of crime. All that it provides is that it is an offence under the order in council to knowingly furnish false information, or to contravene or fail to comply with any provisions of the regulations. In other words, the only offences created by the order in council are those offences which it is necessary to create in order to carry out the administration of the order in council.

Mr. Knowles: But we are not voting on that order in council.

Mr. Garson: I will deal with that point in a moment if my hon. friend will give me time. Under the order in council we are not creating any new series of serious offences such as sabotage nor are we dealing with the prosecution or penalty for sabotage. Such provisions, as the hon. members of the opposition have correctly pointed out, will remain in the Criminal Code. But the purpose of this bill and of any order in council passed under it is not to set up a its purpose at all. The purpose of this legislation is to try to prevent the commission of crimes rather than to prosecute and imprison people for committing them.

I do not claim to be an authority on Canadian shipping or commerce; but with all due respect to the Leader of the Opposition I would certainly put my opinion on at least a parity with his on these subjects. The Leader of the Opposition asked a series of rhetorical questions as to whether the blowing up of the Welland canal or the Sault Ste. Marie canal would constitute a greater offence than the blowing up of a ship in Hudson bay. I should say the first offence would inflict incalculably greater damage to Canada than the latter. He then asked would it not be a greater offence to blow up a ship travelling between Vancouver and Victoria, and he listed a number of other coastwise examples dealing with the trade in bauxite coming into lake St. John through the lower St. Lawrence river.

But surely the whole point of this matter is that we have in Canada, whether the Leader of the Opposition is aware of it or not, a great lakes canal system through which an enormous amount of shipping passes. I believe there is no greater canal traffic in the world, and if I am not mistaken the next two greatest canals in the world do not together carry a greater volume of traffic. The answer therefore to all these rhetorical questions posed by the Leader of the Opposition is "Yes, it certainly would constitute very much greater damage to the economic life of Canada to have sabotage committed on the great lakes canal system covered by this bill than to have it occur elsewhere in Canada". That is the whole point. I am glad my hon. friend asked that long series of rhetorical questions in order that that point may be cleared up.

Mr. Drew: How do you keep out the foreign ships?

Mr. Garson: With regard to the foreign ships, as I said before I do not pretend to be an expert on this matter, but I think perhaps upon reflection my hon. friend will agree that one of the purposes for constructing the seaway we have been discussing at such great length is to make it possible to get a larger number of foreign cargo ships up into the great lakes; for most of the seafaring ships that come up the St. Lawrence river are of too deep a draught to travel up the seaway from tidewater to the lower end of lake Ontario. I will grant that there are some foreign ships which come up, but when my hon. friend is discussing a matter of this kind he should attempt to discuss it in proportion, and I do not think there is a single instance my hon. friend gave in all his rhetorical questions where the damage from sabotage would be anywhere near comparable to that which could occur in the canals of the great lakes system.

The hon. member for Nanaimo said that this idea is fatuous. I must say in all candour that I do not pretend to be any greater an authority upon this particular subject than the Leader of the Opposition or even the hon. member for Nanaimo. Perhaps the latter is a better authority on sabotage than I am; I do not know; but I would submit that those people whose opinions carry some weight in this matter do not agree with the views of the hon. member for Nanaimo, and I will leave it at that.

But I think if we reflect upon this matter at all we must realize that if we had an aerial invasion of Canada—and I ask this question of the Leader of the Opposition—would not the Welland canal be one of the main objectives of that aerial invasion? There is no part of the economic traffic of Canada the dislocation of which would cause greater harm to our economic life than the putting out of operation of the great lakes system. That is the point of this piece of legislation.

What we have done is not to create a supplementary Criminal Code but merely to provide an administrative method of trying to prevent what is in our power to prevent. In this connection I never said anything about dangerous men in the way in which the Leader of the Opposition has attributed that phrase to me. All I said was that those who, upon reasonable grounds, are suspected of being potential saboteurs, and there are not very many of them, should be covered under the provisions of this bill.

Surely when we have passed an order in council, have tabled it in the house, where it has been ever since, and when we now propose to renew it under the terms of this present legislation, then no matter how prejudiced the hon. members of the opposition may be, they should at least take our word for it as to what we intend to do under the legislation which is now before the house.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has pointed out that there is nothing defined here and that he does not know what we are going to do under this general power but pass an order in council. That is quite true. But what we are saying to my hon. friend now is that the proposal is to renew the present order in council for the purpose which it has served in the past few years.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister permit a question on that point?

Mr. Garson: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Knowles: He has indicated what is the government's intention, but is it not true that the wording of clause 34 would permit the government to go further and bring in another set of regulations on this subject?

Mr. Garson: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Knowles: It might be a convenience later on.

Mr. Garson: Well, suppose we did that, how would parliament stand in relation to that action? My hon. friend will recall that we have on our law books now the provision that orders in council must be put on the table within a certain period of time, unless we pass a secret order in council and in that event we would have to pass a second order in council making the first order in council secret, and we must table that second order in council. Therefore, my friend would know about the existence of the order in council which was secret; and if there is any substantial variation all that the opposition have to do to protect the interests of their constituents is to be sufficiently diligent to pick up the order in council, peruse it, and then if they think there is anything wrong with it there is nothing in the rules of parliament to prevent them raising that question at the next available opportunity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And then what?

Mr. Garson: My hon. friends laugh about that, but they can raise this question and by so doing they can inform public opinion upon it. If they cannot get a resolution of condemnation through parliament that is not because of the fact that they have no opportunity of doing so. That is by reason of the fact that the people of Canada at the last general election did not have sufficient confidence in them to give them a majority in this house.

In view of these facts, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there is no justification for all this facade of argument about parliament being by-passed and the members being given no opportunity of examining the government's position or of criticizing it or for the contention that we are creating in secret a number of a great new series of terrible offences that cannot be tried before the courts. In this regard what is my friend the Leader of the Opposition talking about? How does he suppose a conviction can be obtained in the courts unless the crown prosecutes in the court? That is the only place in which a conviction under this order in council could be obtained. May I also say, Mr. Chairman, that I am happy to report that up until the present time there has never been any necessity for having any prosecution at all under this order in council.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the latter part of my hon. friend's discussion on the course that should be followed by parliament, namely that of bringing the question before the house and asking for an adverse vote of the house, was too much even for him because he himself answered it by saying that there would be no hope of getting any change by following that course.

I just rise for the purpose of securing a little bit of information. I should like to find out from the Minister of Labour what are the indicia that determine the propensity of these individuals who are to be considered capable of committing crimes as yet uncommitted? Upon what basis does the minister operate in determining the intended commission of crime or the potential commission of wrongdoing or the propensity to do so? I should like him to deal with that point. If he would clarify that matter, I think most of our difficulties would be removed.

In the second place I should like to ask him this question. There are some 30—I believe that is the number he mentioned—who have been found to possess that propensity. They have not committed any offence. However, it is in order to anticipate and to guard against the possibility of the commission of an offence that they have been denied certificates. Their fingerprints are taken. They are found—first by the investigators and then confirmed by the minister—to be dangerous people. Would such people be allowed to leave the great lakes and to secure employment on ships operating between, say, Newfoundland and Halifax or between Victoria and Vancouver? Or is it considered that the propensity to commit wrong is purely circumscribed territorially? I should like to have the Minister of Labour explain that situation because if he were able to do so, I think he would clarify the whole situation.

Mr. Gregg: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the second question, I should like to refer to what is evident here, namely, that on any point affecting the applicants' legal status afterwards or spheres of possible sabotage I am certainly not in a position to answer because on behalf of the government I have just been acting under these particular regulations.

As to the first question asked, namely, what were the factors which caused the Minister of Labour to refuse to issue a permanent seaman's card—I think that was the question—the factors which entered into that decision have been somewhat the same, or in the same category, as would be the factors involved if my hon. friend were choosing a law partner. It would be a matter of consideration of that applicant's background, his behaviour under other conditions and all that goes with it. However, in my case I would probably have available more skilled sources of information than usually come to one, namely, the resources of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and of the Department of Justice. So therefore in answer to his question as to the factors affecting the matter of the decision with respect to either refusing or agreeing to provide a card, these are to be found in the record of the applicant's background, as ascertained from the R.C.M.P. and from any other reliable source.

As to the other part of his question, in administering these regulations I have no jurisdiction over the matter after the applicant's refusal of a card for employment on the great lakes has been delivered to him.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, this is the most amazing discussion that I can remember in connection with a bill in the House of Commons. When the Minister of Labour spoke on second reading of the bill, he dealt with the matter of screening, the number of applications received and the number which were rejected. Then when the Minister of Justice spoke on second reading of the bill, he too made quite a point of the fact that the intention of the government was to prevent sabotage by screening. But in the bill before us there is not a word about screening. What we are asked to do in this bill before us is to approve penalties for infractions or crimes but we do not know what those crimes are going to be. The minister shakes his head. I am afraid there is a whole lot more in the section than there is in his head, Mr. Chairman. Let me read it to him. The section reads as follows:

> The governor is council may make such regulations as he considers necessary or desirable in the interests of the safety or security of Canada respecting the employment of seamen on board Canadian ships in the great lakes, and may prescribe the penalties to be imposed on summary conviction for violation of any regulation made under this section,—

The section says "any regulation made under this section"; the thing is wide open. It continues:

> —but such penalties shall not exceed a fine of five hundred dollars or imprisonment for a term of three months or both fine and imprisonment.

That is what the House of Commons is asked to pass. That is what the members of this committee are voting on. Regardless of what sophistry the Minister of Justice may use in explaining the bill, he cannot explain away that fact.

He says that their purpose is to prevent crime or to prevent sabotage. But does my hon. friend say that he prevents sabotage by the mere screening of the employee who may operate on board these ships? Is it not quite possible and quite feasible for a bomb to be put on a ship going through one of the locks in the Welland canal or in any other canal, and for it to be put there by someone other than an employee who has gone through government screening? I am quite in favour of making sure, as far as we possibly can do so, that the persons who operate these ships are persons on whose loyalty we can depend. But that is not what is provided in this bill. What is provided in this bill is the imposition of penalties for violations of regulations which we do not know anything about.

If the regulations are contained in order in council P.C. 2306 of May 2, 1952, why was that order in council not made a part of the explanatory notes? In any case, we should have been given a copy of it when considering this measure. Then we would know something about it. I am afraid that other regulations may be made. At this time we know what the government really wants to do by this bill, and if they want to do what they say they want to do they had better add another section because what they want to do is certainly not contained in the bill at the present time.

Mr. Garson: I am sending over a copy of the order in council to my hon. friend.

Mr. Fulton: The Minister of Justice has repeated again the statement he made before, and of course his repetition does not make it any more accurate the second time than the first. He has said that order in council P.C. 2306 does not create any new offences which would, as it were, be in the nature of enacting a new Criminal Code. I cannot understand why the minister fails to comprehend that that is exactly what it does.

Mr. Garson: On a question of privilege, my hon. friend did not understand me correctly. I said that it created no new offences other than some few summary conviction offences for the purpose of administering the order in council.

Mr. Fulton: I think I shall be able to establish that it does create a new offence, that it inflicts upon the person found guilty by the Minister of Labour of having committed that offence a most severe penalty, and that the offence is not provided for anywhere else under our law. I think I am stating it correctly when I say that the purpose has been described by both ministers as the refusal or withdrawal of a seaman's card on the grounds of anticipated sabotage. Is that a fair summary of what the ministers have said?

Mr. Garson: No, that is not an offence.

Mr. Fulton: I see the Minister of Labour is nodding his head signifying assent. Very well. The withholding or withdrawing of a seaman's card on the grounds of anticipated sabotage is done because it is suspected that the man, on account of his past associations or something they think about him, is likely to commit sabotage. That is why the card is withheld or withdrawn, and the withdrawing or withholding has the effect of depriving that man of the right to work at his calling, does it not?

Mr. Garson: I think it deprives him of the right to work at his calling in that particular area. I think it is not an offence any more than it would be an offence of my hon. friend from Kamloops if a club refused his application for admission.

Mr. Drew: He could go to another club.

Mr. Fulton: In either case the man has been a seaman on the great lakes, and he is not working for the government. It is not the steamship company which gives or withholds the card. Do not let the minister try to becloud the issue by pretending that it is the steamship company which refuses him employment. It is the government which refuses him employment, and he suffers that penalty because the Minister of Labour thinks that the man may commit sabotage. That is imposing a penalty. It cannot be described in any other words. Therefore it is creating a new offence and the offence is that of being a man about whom it is anticipated he may commit sabotage.

That offence is not covered under any other law of this country and certainly should not be covered, not in those terms at any rate. The point we have made throughout is that if the government is going to say that it is justified in imposing penalties on these men because of their actions, associations or whatever it may be then they should have the courage to come and ask parliament to enact such a law. I doubt whether parliament would do so in these terms.

It is for that reason that we object to giving the governor in council the right to do behind closed doors what we strongly suspect parliament would not do if it were asked to enact it in legislation. Therefore the government, under the regulations they have already made, have created a new offence, the offence of being suspected to be likely to commit sabotage, and they have imposed the penalty of loss of job by withholding the card. If the Minister of Labour, who administers it, can put any other construction on it, I would be glad to hear him attempt to do so.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we proceed to the consideration of clause 2, section 35?

Mr. Green: May I ask the Minister of Labour one or two questions about this measure? I was unable to be here this morning because of the meeting of the veterans affairs committee but I have read a transcript of the remarks that were made. I understood the Minister of Labour to say that these regulations were first enacted as a result of the fighting in Korea. Is that correct, that the reason the government saw fit to bring in these regulations was on account of the fighting in Korea?

Mr. Gregg: In general terms that is the case. I think I stated that as we would all remember, in 1950 we were in a period of emergency or threatened emergency. It was because of that emergency that discussions were entered into between the governments of Canada and the United States with regard to shipping on the great lakes. It was as a result of those discussions that the Canadian government decided to take the step of co-operating with the United States in this regard.

Mr. Green: The same reason was given to us for retaining the Emergency Powers Act, namely, the fighting in Korea. Yet this year the government, after a great deal of pressure had been brought to bear on it in the house and throughout the country, saw fit to allow the Emergency Powers Act to lapse. That was the act under which these regulations were passed. If the emergency has lessened to the extent that the Emergency Powers Act can safely be allowed to expire, how does the Minister of Labour justify retaining these regulations which were passed under the Emergency Powers Act?

Mr. Gregg: Mr. Chairman, the government did hope that it might be able to take the step suggested by my hon. friend, namely, that these regulations could follow the course of the Emergency Powers Act and disappear. But during the last several months the matter has been under careful consideration, and in view of all the factors, which affect other departments as well as my own, it was decided to take the step which is outlined here.

Mr. Green: Then we have now reached the position where these emergency powers are being put into effect for less reason than they were put into effect originally. The original reason was because of Korea. The Korean situation is obviously no longer such a threat as to require emergency measures. Yet now, as the Minister of Labour says, the country is to be subjected to these emergency measures. Am I correct in saying that that obviously can only be because the government is now seeking to use these emergency measures for less reason than it used them before?

Mr. Gregg: To the degree that the general emergency is less now than it was in 1950, what my hon. friend says is true. I do not think that any of us will say that the general emergency today is as tense as it was in the summer and fall of 1950.

Mr. Rowe: Is it worse than it was last year?

Mr. Gregg: But nevertheless it is the feeling of the government that it is of sufficient importance to ask parliament to continue this procedure which has been in effect since then.

Mr. Green: Is the real story not this, that the United States has insisted on Canada continuing these regulations, and that is why Canadian seamen are to be made subject to this measure for three years? Could I have an answer to that question?

Mr. Gregg: The Minister of Labour cannot answer that question. This has been developed as a matter of government policy. All the factors affecting the situation have been taken into consideration. Some of them have to do of course with external affairs, others with justice and labour, but the Minister of Labour is not in a position to answer that question.

Mr. Green: I understand the Minister of Justice has given the purpose as the protection of the canals and locks. Could we be told what protection the government supplies on these locks at the present time?

Mr. Garson: You mean other than by this present method? You mean by way of guards and that sort of thing?

Mr. Green: Yes.

Mr. Garson: I am afraid I would not have that information available in the Department of Justice. I could get it, no doubt.

Mr. Green: The parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport is here and these canals come under the Department of Transport. He should be able to tell us what protective measures are taken to guard these locks.

Mr. Garson: I have no doubt we could get the information.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): We have no special constable force guarding these locks in the canals. We have our normal force of employees looking after the operations of these locks, who are constantly on duty night and day. They are in a position to report to the nearest R.C.M.P. force or to any other law enforcement agency in the district if they fear there is any threat to these canals or locks.

Mr. Knowles: But they may be 25 miles away.

Mr. Green: The canal service is being carried on in the ordinary peacetime way, that is what I am to take from the answer by the parliamentary assistant?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): That is right.

Mr. Green: Then we are in this position, that no precautions whatever, other than what perhaps were taken in 1938, are being taken to guard these locks or the canals from sabotage. Yet the government is asking this emergency power to prevent Canadians serving on Canadian ships in the great lakes in order that the canals can be protected. Now, does that not show on the face of it the foolishness of asking for a drastic power of this kind to prevent seamen from earning their living? The Minister of Labour has admitted that out of about 30,000 who have been screened only 20 have been rejected. Subsequently one of those 20 was found to be all right, and three have not had their appeals heard yet. We get down to the fact that at the most 19 men out of 30,000 have been stopped from working on ships in the great lakes by the use of this police state power. At the same time not one step has been taken towards protecting the canals and locks which are stated to be the reason for requesting this drastic power. It simply does not add up. I should like the parliamentary assistant to tell me how many foreign vessels came into the great lakes last year?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): I am sorry, but I have not that information on hand presently. I could supply it to the hon. member later.

Mr. Green: I have a Department of Transport report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1953; that is over a year ago. At page 33 it shows that foreign vessels made 145 inbound trips into the great lakes, and that was up from about 100 trips the year before.

I presume it will have been much higher last year. Then when the St. Lawrence seaway is opened up there will be hundreds more foreign ships coming into the great lakes. Am I correct in my understanding that these restrictions do not apply to foreign ships? In other words, a Russian ship could come up into the great lakes loaded with atom bombs, and it would not be affected in any way by these regulations.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): If the hon. member would look at the definition of "Canadian ship" in section 33 he would see that it reads as follows:

"Canadian ship" means a ship registered in Canada, and includes a ship owned, or operated under charter or lease, by a person who resides in Canada.

A foreign ship that is either under charter or a lease by a Canadian will be covered by these regulations.

Mr. Green: Oh yes, but there are not very many foreign ships that are leased by Canadians. Most of these ships to which reference is made in the Department of Transport report are foreign registered vessels. Most of these foreign ships that come into the great lakes are owned abroad. Is it a fact that they are not covered by these regulations?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Some of them could be leased or under charter to Canadians, and then they would be affected by this bill.

Mr. Green: Is it a fact that these regulations will not apply to these foreign vessels unless they happen to be owned by Canadians or leased by Canadians?

Mr. Harris: If I may say a few words here, I think my hon. friend is making a distinction between cargo and personnel. Do I understand him to recommend that we establish a post at the outermost part of the St. Lawrence where every ship of foreign registration will be searched for the purpose of determining whether or not they have anything in the nature of materials for sabotage?

Mr. Green: Oh, no—

Mr. Harris: The hon. member was asking the ministry if there was any way of stopping that. My hon. friend knows quite well that there is not, but we are discussing personnel here and under my immigration regulations we deal with personnel on foreign ships.

Mr. Green: There is quite a difference between asking a question and advocating something. I was not advocating setting up such a control, I am merely trying to find out whether these regulations will apply to foreign vessels. I understand they do not.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): If the ship is under charter or lease to a Canadian, they do apply.

Mr. Green: Is the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration going to answer?

Mr. Harris: Yes, I will answer about personnel. I hope my hon. friend will not ask these rhetorical questions about materials for sabotage when, in fact, we are talking about personnel. Under the immigration regulations I deal with personnel on board foreign ships, and you may rest assured I will continue to do so.

Mr. Green: Does the minister screen the seamen on foreign ships before those ships can go into the great lakes?

Mr. Harris: I do not think my hon. friend would want me to outline the steps we take. I will be glad to disclose them to him if he desires, but I would just as soon we did not disclose the whole method here.

Mr. Green: Has the minister prevented any foreign vessels from going into the great lakes?

Mr. Harris: We do not prevent vessels going in, we prevent personnel; that is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I wonder whether the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport could tell us if all the passengers going through the Welland canal are screened?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): In answer to this question I would refer the hon. member to the definition of "seaman". For the purpose of these regulations a seaman means a person employed in any capacity on board a ship, and includes the master of a ship. Any person falling within that definition could be screened.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): But anyone else on the ship would not be screened. You have no means of controlling the movement of anyone else on the ship, if it is a passenger vessel?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Not under this bill.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Have you under any other law or any other regulation?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): I do not think so.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): In other words, as I said earlier, this is just a piece of nonsense.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): My last answer was qualified by what was said by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Knowles: Then it is qualified nonsense.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I gather that the only regulations referred to in section 34 are regulations governing the movement of these ships. That is to say, the only regulations contemplated in the government's mind are regulations governing the employment on those ships travelling on the great lakes; is that correct?

Mr. Garson: It would be better to say that they are regulations dealing with seamen who are employed on the ships. To my hon. friend that might appear to be a distinction without a difference; but I assure him there is a difference. It relates to seamen who are seeking employment on ships. Only a very small percentage of those seamen have had employment withheld from them in the past; less than two dozen out of 30,000.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): As the minister says, it is a distinction without a difference. I gather that the only way an individual can contravene the regulations referred to in section 34 is by obtaining employment without having been screened under the terms of that order in council; is that correct?

Mr. Garson: I do not think that is correct. I think that is one way, and perhaps the most common way, but it is not the only way.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Would the minister agree that the only other way an individual can contravene would be by employing a person who had not been screened?

Mr. Garson: No, there are others. If my hon. friend would go through the order in council he would find that there are other acts required, both of the employer and the employee. I realize he may not have a copy of the order in council before him. I would point out that it is the failure to perform the acts the order in council requires which constitutes the offence. For example, there is the offence of giving false information in relation to employment.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): That, again, relates to the question of getting a job as a seaman.

Mr. Garson: What my hon. friend seems to be driving at is that the most likely and the most common offence under the act would be that of seeking to obtain employment without having obtained a card under the act.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): With all due gratitude to the minister for describing the point I am making, may I say my point is this: I can see no reason why there cannot be stated clearly in the bill exactly what are the regulations covering employment on ships on the great lakes. Why should it not be possible to spell out clearly and plainly that which would be in contravention of this particular legislation, if a person seeking employment as a seaman on the great lakes fails to comply with the necessary regulations? They could be set out clearly as the regulations with which he must comply. As the Minister of Labour has pointed out, he must make application. On the other hand it places a similar responsibility upon employers, a responsibility not to hire anyone who cannot produce proof that he has complied with these regulations. It seems to me if that were spelled out clearly there would be no objection from this side of the house at all. But as was pointed out earlier by my hon. friend from Vancouver-Kingsway, the minister could take from now till doomsday, but he could not get around the fact that the section, as it is designated before us, leaves it wide open for the government to bring in any sort of regulation it likes governing this particular group of citizens.

Mr. Garson: I would be the first to admit that there is a good deal in what my hon. friend says; but I thought I had covered that point in my previous statement, to the effect that we have stated that the order in council, which was passed under the previous legislative authority, has been tabled in the house, and is quite accessible to my hon. friend himself, if he wishes to look at it.

It is the government's intention to renew that existing order in council under the legislative authority now being sought. Perhaps we should have had a greater number of copies of the order in council so that we might have distributed them. But let there be no misunderstanding about it, what we have in mind is simply to carry on with the existing order in council which, as my hon. friend can see from the figures supplied, seems to have worked satisfactorily; so much so, in fact, that it has not been necessary to lay a single charge under the order in council during the whole period of its administration. No one has been convicted under it; there have been no charges under it.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I do not know whether that is a recommendation for it, or not.

Mr. Garson: Well it certainly shows that there have been no difficulties in its administration. It is a purely administrative order in council designed for the purpose of making sure that those seamen who travel on the great lakes ships shall be properly screened for the protection of our waterways which are so vital to our commerce.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I asked the Minister of Labour a while ago for the basis upon which he acted. He is in the position of an appeal court judge, in respect of any order made by a committee set up by himself. He determines whether or not the application for review shall be heard. May I ask him this one simple question: Of the 29 persons who were denied these cards, how many were communists?

Mr. Gregg: I am quite unable to say, as my hon. friend knows. It was not the intention of the regulations that the Minister of Labour or anyone else should be able to say how many were communists. Then, I was not quite clear as to that part of my hon. friend's question in which he referred to an appeal court judge. If he would repeat it I would be happy to answer it. My hon. friend referred to a review, but I was not quite clear about his question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me put it this way: If a seaman is found to be a member of a communist organization, does that deny him the right to secure the necessary card under this legislation?

Mr. Gregg: What was the provision the hon. member mentioned?

Mr. Fulton: If a seaman is found to be a member of a communist organization.

Mr. Gregg: Well, the factors upon which the minister bases his decision are factors affecting the applicant, made to him mainly by the R.C.M.P. Out of that information—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What are those factors?

Mr. Gregg: My hon. friend knows that I cannot publish that.

Mr. Fulton: Why not?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is exactly the point. We are trying to prevent sabotage. Surely we do not have to sabotage parliament in order to do it; and that is what order-in-council government does. I asked the minister this question: Is it not a fact that anyone who has a card showing his membership in a communist organization automatically is denied a card, under this legislation?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Should he be?

Mr. Diefenbaker: You are the government; I am asking if that is so.

Mr. Gregg: The terms of reference of the Minister of Labour in this regard were clearly set out under the Emergency Powers Act, which states:

> Where, after the issue of a seaman's card to a person, the minister is satisfied that the presence of that person on board a Canadian ship in the great lakes might prejudice the security of Canada,—

In case the judgment of the Minister of Labour on that matter, after getting all the information that was available to him, might be improved by review, the regulations provide for the setting up of an advisory body, not to decide what to do but to advise the Minister of Labour whether his decision appeared to be right or wrong in view of all the facts laid before him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is so difficult to get a simple answer to this. I want to ask the minister a simple question to which he can answer yes or no. Is a communist, or a member of a communist organization, who is on board a Canadian ship on the great lakes, deemed to be such a person as would prejudice the security of Canada and therefore not be entitled to a card? There should be no difficulty about that?

Mr. Gregg: As my hon. friend knows, his question comes within the realm of the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice has to do with supervision of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the amount of secrecy under which they should operate. In attempting to administer these regulations I cannot try to set out before this committee all the detailed factors that may come into the reaching of the reluctant decisions that the Minister of Labour had to reach in sending out refusal letters to these very few applicants for jobs on the great lakes. I can assure my hon. friend that those letters of refusal were not sent out without ample proof that they should be sent out.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to return to the point raised by the Minister of Justice when replying a short time ago to the hon. member for Nanaimo. It seemed to me that we were getting close to the point where the main objection, at least in this corner of the house, to the proposal which the government is putting forward here was being discussed. If I might be permitted to put it this way, it appears to me that the government is allowing its expectation of immortality to obscure its judgment. I am quite prepared to accept at its face value the statement of the Minister of Justice and of the Minister of Labour that the intent of the government is to implement regulations in line with the previous order in council which they have told us about in some detail. I think that even they would be the first to admit that they are not necessarily the people who are going to be always the minister of justice and the minister of labour in this country.

Some of us feel that in this kind of legislation lies the thin edge of the wedge which we do not want to see expand. We, as was indicated by one of the other speakers, see in this matter some manifestations of the prejudice which we see in other countries, which we do not like. We do not want to see that attitude and that prejudice brought into Canada. I would even go so far as to say that listening to the Leader of the Opposition not so long ago I detected in some of the remarks he made about his suggestion of extending this sort of thing by one means or another an indication that there is a segment of opinion in this country in whose hands this legislation could prove very dangerous. That is the reason that some of us are concerned when legislation of this kind, which gives sweeping powers to the governor in council over the lives and the opportunities for employment of working people, is brought in.

It can be admitted there has been very little criticism in this debate of the actual manner in which the terms of the previous order in council have been carried out in so far as its administration is concerned. But nevertheless I still feel that on the one hand an important case can be made for the point that the amount of protection to be achieved does not warrant the infringement upon some of our basic concepts of freedom that it involves.

Suppose one were to admit that that is not altogether true in the present circumstances. I still feel that we have been right in saying that if we are going to have this sort of thing, it can be set forth in the more ordinary manner by legislation than as is being done at the present time.

I raised the question as to whether some minor amendments to some of the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act, which is on our statute books at the present time, could not be used quite effectively to serve the purpose which the government apparently has in mind here. None of the government speakers has made any mention of that point. I read some of the sections which certainly are related to this general subject, which indicated that under that act there was provision for checking on the character and so forth of seamen. It seems to me that if it is necessary to have this sort of protection it could have been incorporated in more ordinary forms of legislation than is proposed here by the government.

Mr. Leboe: There has been a lot of debate on this problem, and I was wondering whether it was not possible for the government to meet the objections of the opposition and still accomplish what the government has in mind. It could be done. I should like to hear from the minister whether it is possible or not.

Mr. Garson: I do not know how much farther we can go to meet them than by saying, as I have said two or three times already, that we have no plans for the use of this legislation other than to maintain the present order in council which is on record, and has been on record since 1951 for any hon. member to see. It spells out all of these things which need doing, and which is just as definite as any statute could be.

It is true, as some of the hon. members of the opposition have said, that we would have power to amend that order in council in some respect if amendments were necessary; but I think I am right in saying—my colleague, the Minister of Labour, will correct me if I am wrong—that the order in council has been in its present state since it was first passed. Is that not right?

Mr. Gregg: There was a consolidation; there was a minor amendment after it was first passed.

Mr. Garson: My colleague tells me that after the original order in council was passed there was a minor amendment, and it has remained in its present form since. It has proved to be very satisfactory and effective. We are saying to parliament that this is what we are going to enact in this legislation when it is granted.

Mr. Knowles: And nothing more?

Mr. Garson: Yes, and nothing more, because it has proved to be adequate. I suppose if our powers of prophecy are not as great as we think they are and we do need to have something more, we would be under obligation to acquaint parliament of this fact, but I must say at the present time we see no reason to do other than to continue in effect the order in council which has been serving us during the past number of years, and of course, under this present legislation, we will have power to do that only for a limited period.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask one other question? What is the status of this order in council at the present moment?

Mr. Garson: It has lapsed. We require this legislation to restore it.

Mr. Knowles: Then that order in council dated May 31 does not exist at the present time?

Mr. Garson: That is correct.

Mr. Knowles: R.I.P.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask one further question of the Minister of Labour with reference to the seamen's cards issued under the previous order in council. Are there any communists holding these cards?

Mr. Gregg: Mr. Chairman, I could not say but I am quite sure the answer is no. In accordance with the provision laid down in the regulations there is no attempt on the part of the Minister of Labour to identify the applicant as a communist or non-communist.

Mr. Knowles: In view of the fact that the order in council is now dead what is the status of the seamen's cards that were issued when the order in council was in effect?

Mr. Gregg: These cards are in the hands of the seamen and the employers association and the labour organizations have been made aware of the fact the Emergency Powers Act would lapse before new regulations would be authorized, but I am convinced the program is going forward in good faith during this period of hiatus as though the order in council had been in effect.

Mr. Knowles: Will these cards have to be reissued?

Mr. Gregg: No, the cards which are in the hands of the seamen will all be honoured when this comes into effect.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we proceed with consideration of section 35?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am not quite sure whether the minister has done so but I would be glad if he would tell us the names of those on his advisory committee.

Mr. Garson: Yes, but perhaps I had better read the section in the order in council which covers it. It reads on page 3 as follows:

12. A person whose application for a seaman's card has been refused or who has been required to deliver his seaman's card pursuant to section eleven may by application in writing to the minister request that the refusal or requirement be reviewed by an advisory committee.

13. (1) The minister shall appoint committees of not less than three members, herein referred to as "advisory committee", to advise him with respect to reviews requested under section twelve.

(2) An advisory committee shall inquire into and investigate whether the presence of the person who has requested the review on board a Canadian ship in the great lakes might prejudice the security of Canada, and shall report its views with respect thereto to the minister.

(3) An advisory committee shall, subject to the direction of the minister, furnish to the person who has requested the review such information made available to it as in the opinion of the committee it is possible to furnish to him without prejudice to the security of Canada and the public interest, and shall afford to that person an opportunity to make representations to it either personally or with the assistance of counsel or other representative.

(4) The chairman, or any member of an advisory committee, may administer oaths for the purposes of this section, and an advisory committee may receive and accept such evidence on oath or by affidavit or otherwise as in its discretion it considers fit and proper.

I can read the remaining subsections, but that will give my hon. friend some idea of the procedure.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there any further discussion on section 34?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I thought it was agreed we would consider them one by one and perhaps call section 34 first.

The Deputy Chairman: Yes, is there any further discussion on section 34?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, could you put the question on section 34?

The Deputy Chairman: I am of the opinion that I am not able to put the question on section 34 because the clause in the bill is clause 2 which contains three new sections which it is proposed to add to the act. I believe I must eventually put the question to this committee on clause 2 of the bill as a whole.

Mr. Fulton: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it matters except that we would have preferred to be able to vote against section 34 since section 34 contains the meat of the whole matter, and our attitude to this bill will be determined when that question is put.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there any discussion on section 35?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, for reasons I do not think it necessary to rehearse it is obvious it would be very much more preferable in our view if this new provision was continued in force for only one year. In fact, it would be preferable from our point of view if it did not come into effect at all. But I am anticipating that, as usual, we will win the debate and lose the vote, and I take it the clause will probably carry and come into effect.

But may I point out that the previous order in council was effective only as long as the Emergency Powers Act was effective and that act was in effect only from year to year and required positive action by parliament to renew it. But now, under section 35 which reads:

This part shall continue in force for a period of three years from the day on which it came into force, and no longer—

—this regulation would be given the force of law for three years and parliament would not be entitled to review the situation during that time. I therefore move:

That the proposed new section 35 be amended by deleting the words "three years" where they occur in lines 31 and 32 and substituted therefor the words "one year".

I hope the government will accept that amendment because they had only one year assured from time to time under the regulations as they existed. We have stated that we object to this principle being written into our law, and since the government is prepared to review the matter at the end of three years, and since we all hope that the circumstances which they feel justify the enactment in the first place may not continue forever, I would hope they would accept the amendment limiting its operation to one year.

Amendment (Mr. Fulton) negatived: Yeas, 37; nays, 51.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, would you put the motion on clause 2 because this is the clause which incorporates section 34?

Clause 2 agreed to on division.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported on division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Fulton: Tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Next sitting of this house.

TRADE

TABLING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND SPAIN

Mr. Roch Pinard (Parliamentary Assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, by leave of the house I would ask to revert to motions for a moment. I should like to table on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Has the hon. gentleman leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard: —three copies in French and in English of the trade agreement signed at Madrid on May 26, 1954, between Canada and Spain.

SUPPLY

Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

WHEAT—MARKETING OF SURPLUS

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I now propose to avail myself of this motion in order to raise a question which came before the house yesterday and which it is now possible to discuss in a manner that was not considered appropriate at that time under the rules. I refer to the situation with which we are confronted in connection with the marketing of the large surplus of wheat which we now have on hand. I do so with particular reference to the announcement made the night before last that the price of Canadian No. 1 hard wheat had been reduced 10⅛ cents. That is the largest reduction that has been made in many years in the price of Canadian wheat.

I do not propose to go into detail about the number of bushels on hand or the fact that we have the largest surplus ever stored on the farms of western Canada because those facts have all been discussed on various occasions. Every hon. member who has kept in touch with this situation in any way is fully aware of the fact that for various reasons our elevators are full, our general storage capacity is occupied and that grain is stored in unprecedented quantities on the farms in western Canada.

The announcement made the day before yesterday of this large reduction in the price of wheat, varying according to the various grades, is one that is of great importance, not only to the wheat farmers of western Canada and the wheat farmers in other parts of Canada but also to every Canadian. That announcement lopped off many millions of dollars in immediate value of accumulated wheat, a fact which means a direct loss to the farmers themselves. That loss, in turn, is something which has its impact upon the retailers, the wholesalers, the railways, the producers in eastern Canada and, generally, upon our whole economy.

Without going into many of the arguments that might be presented as to the reasons for the situation with which we are now confronted, may I say I think it must be realized that the most urgent thing required at this time is a clear declaration of policy by the government so that the farmers, those handling grain, the railways, the shippers generally and the ship owners who will be called upon to carry the grain to distant points may know what to expect during the coming weeks and months.

Although the situation had been generally known, it came as a surprise to many Canadians to learn a few months ago that at the beginning of this year none of the 1953 wheat crop had been sold and that there had been a carry-over of a large quantity of the 1952 crop. Today we are within less than two months of the opening of a new crop year.

Given a reasonably good crop this year we shall be confronted with a situation which will tax the confidence and the faith in the future of many people who have been engaged in this great part of our national activity, whether it be on the farm or in the various organizations which serve to carry the grain from the farm to the ultimate consumer.

The present situation is one over which the government has had complete supervision. In so far as it can be affected in any measure by government action, the present situation is the result of the decisions and the action of this government. Let there be no pretence that the wheat board acts without consultation with the government in reaching its decisions. At any rate, when things were going well we were told that it was the beneficent conduct of this government that had produced the good results; we were told that too often for the matter to be left in a position where any Canadian has any right to do anything else than to place fully upon this government the responsibility for meeting the situation which now exists.

One of the great problems confronting the farmers of western Canada and all farmers whose prices are affected by what happens to the price of western grain, as well as other Canadians who in one way or another are affected by this situation, is that we find ourselves between two diametrically opposed policies. The responsibility for resolving that situation is that of the government. Over and over again we have been told by this government that it does not believe there should be any intervention in trade and commerce. They have acted upon that principle in certain fields of activity. In others they do not uphold that principle. Which principle does guide the government in forming its policies? Surely it is time that the farmer, the shipper, the railways, the ship owners and all our people generally knew. Everyone in the house has supported the principle inherent in the farm prices support act. Everyone in the house recognizes the fact that, no matter what proportion of our production it may be in dollar value, agriculture is still the basic production in this country.

It must be a matter of concern to every Canadian to see our farmers in the uncertain and distressed position in which they find themselves at this time. The position is precarious. The position is one which must be faced in some way. It is a situation which can only be faced by the government. With that power of numbers which has been proclaimed on so many occasions, and once again by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) this afternoon, it is not within the power of any member of the opposition to change the course of events by the decisions we might make. All too rarely is there any evidence that it is within our power to guide the course of events by arguments, no matter how sound they may be.

This is a situation that calls for action. It is a situation that calls for action by those who have the power. It is a situation that calls for action by those who have assumed so completely up to this time the responsibility for handling this matter. One of the things which makes the situation so precarious and which makes it so necessary that there be a definition of policy is the enormous surplus of wheat and other foods in the United States. Large though our total may be, and very large though it may be in proportion to the rest of our production, it is still comparatively small side by side with that of the United States.

There is this difference also that must be borne in mind. Under the procedure they follow the farmer is guaranteed a payment for his wheat. At the present time he is guaranteed a payment of $2.21 a bushel. The government is the owner of this great surplus. The government is in a position to trade with it in foreign markets. Realizing that this is a commodity they have bought and that they own, with their enormous annual income they are in a position to do things which would have a very profound effect upon our economy. I do not question the good will, the good intentions and particularly the attitude of the government and the people of the United States. Nevertheless, over the objections of the government of Canada they made this reduction and we were bound to follow. There are some differences in our better types of wheat, but substantially we are dealing with the same commodity in the markets of the world.

We cannot disregard the effect of such decisions as they make with regard to the marketing of that commodity. Our position is very different. Our farmers own the wheat. Our farmers bear the direct impact of any reduction of this kind. Our farmers will suffer directly as the result of anything that may happen which carries still further the liquidating process now under way in the United States. Can there be any assurance that what was done a few days ago means the last step in liquidating this surplus? If there is not, then let us face with reality, frankness and candour the effect that this will have upon our farmers and upon our whole economy.

Let us remember that, while American farmers under their system are protected substantially against such reductions, our farmers have been unable to realize even their immediate requirements in some cases from the stored grain, and their credit has already been substantially reduced by these things that have occurred within the past few days. Therefore there is infinitely greater need for a clear declaration of policy here than there is in the United States. I submit that instead of having a clearer declaration of policy here there is a much clearer declaration of policy in the United States and that the farmers of that country know where they stand much better than our farmers do at this time.

I repeat that the situation is such that it is not for us to offer a solution for a situation that demands immediate attention. Over and over again the government has said: We will assume the responsibility; the people have entrusted us with that responsibility. It is the government, under these international arrangements and under the various devices that have been employed, which must act if anything is to be done.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit that in the interests of the farmers of western Canada, who must be so greatly disturbed at this time; in the interests of all farmers in Canada whose farm products will be affected in their value by what happens to wheat, as we have so often learned in the past; in the interests of the retail merchants in the communities which serve them; in the interests of our various organizations which serve our producers, I believe that there is no more urgent demand confronting the government now than that for a clear, understandable declaration of policy which will make it possible for our farmers and others to plan for the balance of this crop year and for the coming crop year which will be upon us in less than two months.

I would ask that this matter be dealt with not as a want of confidence motion. I ask that the statement of the opposition be taken as definite that we would prefer that it be dealt with as a free vote so that members of the house can express their opinion to the the government that there should be a declaration of policy at this time. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker):

That all the words after "That" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"this house is of the opinion that in view of the present grave situation in the matter of international wheat trading the government should make an immediate declaration as to its policy respecting the marketing of our Canadian wheat surplus."

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Drew.]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): The announcement made yesterday, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian price for wheat was to be reduced 10⅛ cents per bushel constitutes a very serious blow indeed to the economy of western Canada and also to the whole Canadian economy. The minister for commerce and agriculture in Australia, Mr. John McEwen, in a statement appearing in the press yesterday has pointed out the dangers that exist in the present wheat situation. He says that the present practices being followed may lead to a depression in wheat prices similar to that prevailing in the 1930's.

I see by a press dispatch this evening that the United States is now offering low grade wheat for as little as $1.30 a bushel or 24·5 cents a bushel under the price of Canadian feed wheat.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is out-of-condition wheat.

Mr. Argue: The dispatch did not say out-of-condition wheat, it said light-test wheat.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Out-of-condition wheat.

Mr. Argue: This is just another one of those optimistic comments that we have had month after month, and every time the minister makes a forecast it is just a matter of weeks until his forecast is proven wholly wrong.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): All I am asking is that my hon. friend quote the newspaper accurately.

Mr. Argue: The inference now that the United States is just selling something that is out of condition may or may not be borne out by the facts. The press statement I read did not say that the three million bushels of light-test wheat being offered in Minneapolis at $1.30 per bushel was out-of-condition wheat. The Argentine is now selling wheat at between $1.63 and $1.66 per bushel. Unless steps are taken to prevent a further deterioration in the price of Canadian wheat the results will be catastrophic to western Canada.

I listened before six o'clock to the speech delivered by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and I heard his amendment calling on the government for a declaration of policy. I am sure we on this side of the house support the proposition that it is time now for the government to declare its policy in relation to the marketing of wheat. But I was disappointed that the official opposition, in the statement made by its leader, apparently was unable to offer a single concrete suggestion to the government as to what should be done to meet this very grave situation. Before I conclude tonight I shall offer suggestions to the government which I believe, if adopted, would provide a solution.

We have asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and we have asked the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) what steps have been taken to co-operate with the United States in a sales policy. The United States has a large surplus of wheat. We have a large surplus. The question has been asked: What co-operation is there between Canada and the United States in deciding on a sales policy? The answer that has come back from the Minister of Trade and Commerce is that we are not co-operating because such co-operation would mean a combine on this continent in the sale of wheat.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friends might occasionally be accurate. I at no time said we are not co-operative. I said we are not adopting the common sales policy which would mean a cartel in respect of the sale of wheat, but we are co-operating to the extent of meeting and comparing our respective views preceding action. The action taken by the United States was preceded by a meeting called by the United States.

Mr. Argue: That is what I meant.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): If that is what you meant, then I do not know what you mean now.

Mr. Argue: All that happens is that the Canadian government or the United States government, one or the other, takes the lead in cutting prices and in a matter of hours the other one follows suit. Unless the Canadian and United States governments adopt a similar policy, and not an independent policy with each country cutting its price then there is going to be great difficulty ahead for the western wheat producer.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce stated in the house that he had no idea of co-operation because, and these are his words as they appear at page 5302 of Hansard for June 1, 1954:

> I hardly think the idea of forming a combine against the world would be popular in either country.

If he meant by that that the present policy is going to be continued, with one country cutting the price and then the other, there is little hope for the western wheat producers. It is rather easy to blame the United States for cutting the price of wheat. I want to point out that it was the Canadian government that started the price war. It was the Canadian government, not the United States government, that made the first slash in the price of wheat, and that was on February 16, at 1.30 central standard time, when the price of Canadian wheat was reduced by seven cents a bushel at Fort William-Port Arthur. One hour and forty-five minutes later the United States followed suit. The Canadians broke the price of wheat on February 16, and the price of wheat was broken at Port Arthur-Fort William because these ports cannot compete with the port of Vancouver at the same price.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce is from Port Arthur, and he knows—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): How small can a man get?

Mr. Argue: That is all right; it is not a matter of smallness, it is a matter of record. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is from Port Arthur, and he knows—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): And he therefore cut the price at Port Arthur!

Mr. Argue: The Minister of Trade and Commerce is from Port Arthur, and he realizes that the freight rates from Port Arthur down the great lakes to Montreal make that route relatively uneconomic in comparison with the Vancouver route. In order to give Port Arthur-Fort William an equal advantage the price of wheat was cut and the western wheat producer is being forced to subsidize, by seven cents a bushel at that time and by six cents a bushel now, a relatively uneconomic route.

I come back to the first statement I made that the Canadian government started the price war by slashing the price of wheat by seven cents a bushel on February 16. We cannot blame the United States now particularly if she follows suit, and this time cuts the price of wheat by ten cents a bushel. We on this side of the house do not believe that the present capitalistic system will function.

We have said that the only time agriculture is able to sell its products under this system is during a war, or shortly after; that with the present type of government, the present administration and the present policies being followed, sooner or later we would come to a period of surpluses, loss of markets and depression. And we warned the government about that after the war.

We supported the proposition that there should be an international arrangement for the sale of surplus food on the international markets. The food and agriculture organization of the United Nations advanced specific proposals for the setting up of an international commodity clearing house, a proposal whereby surplus food would be taken off the regular market and would, by an orderly method, be marketed in those countries that lacked purchasing power, and where that food was needed. And at the conference in 1949, to the everlasting shame of this government and to the everlasting shame of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), as the representative of the Canadian government, he opposed the setting up of an international commodity clearing house, opposed the establishing of a world food pool.

Mr. Gardiner: You are just dreaming.

Mr. Argue: No, I am not dreaming, at all. But the minister may have been dreaming when he made his speech to that conference.

Mr. Knight: Let us hear his speech.

Mr. Argue: On November 24, 1949 the Minister of Agriculture said:

> Any transactions developed under the short term trading functions will be subject to concurrence by the governments concerned, and the major details of such transactions will also be subject to agreement by governments. This being the case it hardly seems necessary to have an international agency actually buying and selling in commodity markets. It may even be questioned whether such activity in commodity markets by an international agency is desirable. It seems to us, therefore, that the question of the creation of a large capital fund for such a purpose is not necessarily an issue.

It is clear from that statement that the Minister of Agriculture was opposing such a question. Then he went on to say:

> As has been pointed out in other conferences, however, national governments can, and do, perform this function and we do not see that stocks held by an international agency will, in the short run, contribute to any improvement in the present situation. Canada, for example, has provided for the holding of stocks of wheat under government control.

That is just as plain as it could be.

Mr. Gardiner: On short term.

Mr. Argue: That is just as plain as it could be.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend will admit that that is for a short term; you are talking about a long term policy.

Mr. Argue: I am talking about the very clear fact that the Minister of Agriculture was opposed to the plan set forth by Sir John Boyd Orr in 1949.

Mr. Gardiner: I never did oppose Sir John Boyd Orr, at any time. I supported Sir John Boyd Orr every time he appeared before the conference.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Argue: And there is just as much accuracy in that statement as in a great many other statements made by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Gardiner: If I could not be more accurate than my hon. friend I would not speak at all.

Mr. Argue: Canada, with the help of the United States, opposed the international commodity clearing house. The record is clear, and the statement of the Minister of Agriculture is clear.

Mr. Gardiner: Canada did no such thing.

Mr. Argue: It was opposed in—

Mr. Gardiner: Canada did not do any such thing, and neither did I.

Mr. Argue: The Minister of Agriculture can "beller" all he likes, and he can make his forty minutes speech when the time comes, but he cannot change the record of his statement at that conference.

Mr. Gardiner: And he does not want to, either.

Mr. Knowles: He has tried often enough.

Mr. Argue: The government went on, in spite of the warning from this group—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: —and changed the marketing of agricultural products from Great Britain to the United States. We said that the United States was not a reliable market for Canadian agricultural products. We said that Canadian agricultural products in the main competed with similar agricultural products produced in the United States, that before long the Americans would have surpluses of their own and that they would be keeping out Canadian surpluses from here. And we have seen that very thing happen.

The Americans have kept out our wheat and our barley and our cheese and our powdered milk and our oats and our dairy products. The United States has kept out almost all of Canada's surplus agricultural products that we have attempted to market. And the government has lost the British market for Canadian bacon and cheese and eggs, and other important commodities.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I ask what action the United States has taken to keep out Canadian barley? I am not aware that Canadian barley was kept out.

Mr. Argue: That was a mistake, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: It is all a mistake.

Mr. Argue: My hon. friend behind me said "oats", and then I said barley. I stand corrected. But I will make this forecast, that just as soon as there is a tiny surplus of American barley, Canadian barley will be added to that list. So if I am not right tonight, it is probably just a matter of time, in the short run, when I will be right, and the Americans will be adding barley to the host of other Canadian agricultural products now prohibited.

Mr. Gardiner: Stay on the short run and you will be all right.

Mr. Argue: We have lost the British market for other products and the British market now is being lost for Canadian wheat. The loss of our overseas market for grain means very serious times ahead for the Canadian wheat producers. And so I say that this government is directly responsible for the economic position of western Canada today.

Mr. Byrne: That's a good one!

Mr. Argue: No attempt has been made to co-operate with the United States in obtaining a common sales policy. The Minister of Agriculture opposed in 1949 an international food pool to take care of our surpluses; and now, five years later, Canada faces the results of that opposition by the Minister of Agriculture in 1949.

And I tell the government this, that the wheat producers of western Canada hold this government responsible for the economic position they are in today. When this session began last fall we in this group asked the government to take steps to put money into the hands of the farmers. We asked the government to make advances to buy grain in store on the farms. And we were told that the economic position was good, that the farmers had never been in a stronger position. The Minister of Agriculture gave his usual line of optimism—that everything was fine, that the export market was running high, that everything was going to be all right in a matter of months.

Well, everything is not all right; everything is getting worse. Our export markets have fallen to the point where the export market for wheat in May of this year showed one of the lowest figures in our history, far below the average for the month of May in exports in the last ten years.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce said, "Oh well, one of the reasons our exports are down is that there was a strike at the port of Vancouver a year ago, and that resulted in large exports in the month of May, after the strike was over. Our exports in May of last year were 46 million bushels, and for May of this year—and these figures are not absolutely accurate; they are approximate, but the minister said the other day that they are nearly correct—were about 16 million bushels. Two years ago, in 1952, when there was no Vancouver strike, May exports amounted to 43·7 million bushels. If you do not want to take May of last year, take May of two years ago. The exports dropped from 43 million bushels down to 16 million bushels.

I have gone through the wheat board figures back as far as 1946, and I would have gone back even farther but the export figures for wheat were not listed for May in the annual reports before 1946. All of the figures, as you go back, are substantially higher than the export figure for May of this year. In the five-week period a year ago ending June 3, 1953 our exports of wheat were 44 million bushels. In the same five-week period this year our exports of wheat were only 18 million bushels. In the five-week period a year ago our exports of barley were 18 million bushels, and in the recent five-week period our exports of barley were 3 million bushels. Our wheat exports were reduced by 60 per cent; our barley exports were reduced by well over 80 per cent.

I never thought last fall that our May exports would be as low as they are. But I could see that there was difficulty ahead. At that time we asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce to give us a realistic analysis of the situation. Of course when the minister makes a statement he makes the headlines, and we do not complain. The remarks of the rest of us are tucked lower down in the statement or on the third or fourth page. The minister's statement gets the attention and the retailers, the small merchants of western Canada, believe his statement to be accurate. Since they believed that the minister's analysis of the grain situation was correct they gave substantial credit, and today by the dozens all over western Canada implement dealers, automobile dealers and merchants of all kinds are going into bankruptcy.

Mr. Byrne: How is the hardware business?

Mr. Argue: I am talking about the retail merchant in the small town which is in the heart of the wheat-growing area, and the small merchant in the ordinary town in western Canada is facing great difficulty. Part of the reason why he is facing the difficulty is to be found in the kind of advice and the kind of forecasts made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He has said in those forecasts to the retail merchants that everything was fine, the wheat picture was wonderful, exports were the first or the second greatest on record in our history. But now the facts are coming in, and they have proven the minister wrong. The real facts of the situation are forcing a great many merchants in western Canada to the wall. Now is the time for action from the government to save the agricultural economy, to save the small merchant and to save the whole Canadian economy from one end to the other.

I will make another comment as to what one of the results of this latest reduction in the price of wheat may be. The price of No. 1 northern is down to $1.72 basis Fort William-Port Arthur, and the wheat board has to have 10 cents or so a bushel to operate, to pay its storage costs and to pay other costs of operations.

An hon. Member: The amount is 4½ cents.

Mr. Argue: That is a different figure; it does not come into it at all. Therefore the wheat board, while it is operating on a gross margin of 32 cents on No. 1 northern wheat, has to pay out of that 32 cents a great many of its expenses. I should like to know from the Minister of Trade and Commerce—and I will sit down if he will give me the answer right now—will there be an interim payment of wheat for 1953? I ask the minister that question.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Certainly there will be an interim payment.

Some hon. Members: All right; sit down.

Mr. Argue: I would like to know then from the minister if we can expect the interim payment in the calendar year of 1954?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

Mr. Argue: I am glad; we are making progress.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Argue: If we can keep on this way I will never sit down. Now we are making some progress. Can the minister say how much it will be?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, we must have an understanding. What will my hon. friend do if I tell him that? He said he would sit down and he did not sit down.

Mr. Argue: Make it twenty cents and I will sit down.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the best way to have questions put and answers given is to get the Speaker out of the chair and to go into committee of supply on the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Harkness: Don't interrupt the auction sale.

Mr. Argue: As I have been saying, Mr. Speaker, one of the results of the reduction in the price of wheat is not only to make the economic position of the western farmer more difficult, but to bring about economic stress throughout the nation. Of one thing I am sure. There would never have been 6,000 men laid off in the automobile industry a few days ago if the western farmer had been able to sell a reasonable proportion of his 1953 crop. Every time the price of wheat goes down, every time the income of the western producer goes down, unemployment in Canada goes up. And the reduction in the price of Canadian wheat by 10⅛ cents a bushel, unless something is done about it, is going to result in increased unemployment. That statement is borne out by a press release today by the Canadian Congress of Labour in which it says that in the light of events, in the light of the reduction in the price of wheat, the statement by the government that there would be an upswing in employment in the second half of the year looks silly. The Canadian Congress of Labour, the trade unionists, know that as farm income goes down unemployment goes up. If the government wants to reduce unemployment it has to prevent a further drop in agricultural income. I would go further and say it needs to restore agricultural income.

The Americans have reduced the price of wheat by 10 cents a bushel, but the Americans, under a Republican government, with the support of a Republican congress, have a parity support price for the main agricultural commodities, and that parity support price is being continued through 1955. Therefore the United States farmer is guaranteed, even with a drop in wheat prices of 10 cents a bushel, a price of over $2.20 a bushel. The Minister of Agriculture can shake his head.

Mr. Gardiner: It is 90 per cent of parity.

Mr. Argue: That is exactly what I said, 90 per cent of parity, $2.20 a bushel. The United States farmer is in a good position. There is a Republican government in the United States, but their agricultural policy is much more progressive than that of a so-called Liberal government in the Dominion of Canada. In Canada, with the drop in the price of wheat by 10⅛ cents a bushel, the farmer is not protected. The Canadian farmer takes the loss and is being put through the wringer. The United States farmer has some protection. Over the years the Liberal party has opposed parity prices; it has opposed floor prices. It scarcely has a floor price worthy of mention.

Mr. Gardiner: It has floor prices.

Mr. Argue: The only floor price worth anything is the floor price on butter.

Mr. Gardiner: A while ago you said we didn't have any.

Mr. Argue: If the minister wants to stand up and tell the Canadian farmer he should cheer because there is a floor price on butter then he can go ahead, but I say the Canadian government has always opposed the principle of floor prices, and the principle of orderly marketing. Just a few days ago in this house members on the government side of the house voted against a motion moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) asking for a floor price on hogs and cattle equal to the average price prevailing from 1951 to 1953.

Mr. Gardiner: We have floor prices on hogs, eggs, and butter.

Mr. Argue: This is a new comment. The floor price on hogs is 23 cents per hundredweight. But what happens as soon as the price on hogs goes down near the floor—the minister rushes in and yanks out the floor.

The government will not set a floor price and has always been opposed to floor prices. If our western economy is to be saved I believe the government itself should pay to the wheat board the 10⅛ cents a bushel by which wheat has been reduced. The farmers of western Canada should receive a guarantee that for every bushel of No. 1 northern wheat sold there will go into the Canadian wheat board fund $1.82. Someone says that that would be a subsidy policy and would mean a levy on the taxpayers of Canada.

I listened to former president Truman on the radio the other night. I have always been an admirer of Harry S. Truman, and the economic policies he propounded. He said a democratic government in the western world should now follow a fiscal policy of tax and spend, and tax and spend. In the course of that address he said we were told by some that the duty of the government is to balance the budget. But he said the duty of a democratic government today is to follow a fiscal policy which makes sure that the family budgets of the people of that nation are balanced, and that that is far more important than any system of so-called sound finance.

This government has said it was in favour of a cyclical budget. But we have not seen any as yet. This government is apparently unable to adopt the farsighted economic measures necessary to prevent a further deterioration in the grain situation, and which are necessary to prevent a further deterioration in the unemployment situation.

I have never followed those who criticized labour for attempting to gain high wages. I believe history shows that the only time the farmer has received good prices for his products is during periods when labour is employed at high wages. I want to see full employment; I want to see high wages; and I believe that one of the best ways of bringing about full employment is to have adequate prices for agricultural products. Conversely, one of the ways of obtaining good prices for agricultural products is to have full employment. If this government wants to solve the agricultural situation and the unemployment situation it must increase agricultural prices, establish adequate floor prices, and embark on an adequate program of public works and public expenditures to make sure that our half a million unemployed are put back to work.

Because of unemployment in Canada today we are losing nearly a billion dollars in wealth production. That is the real burden on the economy of Canada. What we want from the Canadian government is an economic policy based on parity prices for the producer, and full employment at high wages for the industrial worker.

I believe the government should set aside a reserve of wheat and should purchase wheat in store on farms and pay the farmers for a substantial quantity of that wheat. It is impossible for farmers today to move wheat in any quantity, and farmers are unable to pay their outstanding obligations to merchants in the towns. They are unable to meet their current farming expenses, and unless a real improvement takes place soon the falling off in farm income is going to result in a further drastic lay-off in industry.

I would like to suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he go to Great Britain and endeavour to sign a Canadian-United Kingdom wheat agreement something along the lines of the U.K. wheat agreement signed after the war.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Is that consistent with your idea that we sign an agreement with the United States to sell in partnership with them? How many agreements can we have at one time?

Mr. Argue: I know the minister does not like agreements but I am quite prepared to say that I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce would be well advised to explore the possibility of signing an agreement with the United Kingdom which will guarantee to the Canadian wheat producers a reasonable share of that market. As my time is running out, Mr. Speaker, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr. Bryson):

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding thereafter the following words:
"and that the government should give consideration to including in such policy the provision of a floor price to the wheat producers of Canada at levels not less than the Canadian wheat board selling price, basis Fort William/Port Arthur, on Friday, June 4, 1954."

I believe, Mr. Speaker, the government should consider the acceptance of sterling and other soft currencies as part payment for wheat which can be shipped to those countries. The government should take every possible step toward removing tariff and trade barriers. The government should start a genuine program of economic assistance to underdeveloped countries. The present Colombo plan is very small and not in keeping with the generosity of the Canadian people, and we believe economic assistance should be greatly expanded.

The government should endeavour to cooperate with the United States to prevent continuation of the present price war and, as a final suggestion, I would urge upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce that no matter what happens he should not reduce the initial prices for wheat, oats, and barley for the next crop year which commences August 1, 1954.

I believe the industrial worker has a right to a job at a decent wage. The farmer already has a job and in that job he endeavours to produce food. The farmers of Canada have been successful in the production of food as never before, and I believe they are fully justified in calling on the government to take the responsibility for marketing that food and distributing it throughout the world wherever it is needed. The farmer has fulfilled his part of the bargain by producing the food. It is now up to the government to adopt measures which will distribute that food.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, this appears to me to be a time when members of this house and the government should be exercising the calmest judgment of which they are capable because the situation we face is a serious one. However, there is nothing to be gained by going into hysteria or trying to whip up hysteria. I believe that we have got to look at the facts calmly and deliberately, to try to feel our way through those facts and, against the background of those facts, to adopt a policy that will ensure that agriculture in the future will not be demoralized.

It is true that the reduction of 10⅛ cents in the wheat price that was announced yesterday will be a terrific jolt to Canadian farmers. I am not saying that all of them are going to see blue ruin in it but at any rate they are looking at it today in the light of the facts and are realizing that their crops now in store are going to bring them many millions of dollars less than they would have brought had the price not been cut. Coming on top of all of the other set-backs that the farmers have had during the past few years, I can well imagine that among our farmers there will now be a widespread feeling almost of demoralization.

I do not need to take much of the time of the house to describe the serious effects that followed the foot-and-mouth disease outbreak some years ago and the consequent closing of the United States market to our beef. I think a single sentence is enough. As a consequence of the closing of the United States market against western Canadian beef the livestock industry in western Canada was dealt a blow from which it will take many years to recover, if it ever does recover. That is just one of the tragedies that can result from following a marketing policy described as putting all or most of your eggs in one basket.

On top of the blow to the livestock industry came the unprecedented glut of grain storage facilities in western Canada as a consequence of which, as has already been described, a good many thousands of farmers have been unable to market enough of their grain to pay their bills. Many of them have suffered foreclosures on machine and automobile contracts and other things, and the retail merchants in the farming areas have found it necessary to cut off completely or almost completely extensions of credit to the farmers. There has been widespread difficulty among the farmers just to live and to keep their heads above water during this past winter. I am not for a moment suggesting that we belabour the government for all of that difficulty, but these are just facts that we have got to look in the face.

As if these things I have mentioned were not enough, the United States have put up embargoes against certain of our Canadian coarse grains or they have succeeded in inducing the Canadian authorities to impose export restrictions in the same field. In addition to all this, the costs of farm production have been steadily rising while over-all farm prices have been on the decline. It is therefore no wonder that the average farmer feels that agriculture in this country is and has been for months facing a crisis.

Anyone who took a careful look at the huge accumulations of foodstuffs in storage in the United States last year at this time saw potential trouble ahead. At that time some of us said that if the United States felt inclined to start cutting prices as a means of capturing the British wheat market or as a means of getting rid of some of the huge stocks in store and owned by the United States government, the result could be a price war which could force farmers' returns down to disastrous levels. We saw one factor, of course, that might prevent such a price war, namely, the fact that the United States government had guaranteed the American farmer a support price of $2.21 a bushel for his wheat until the end of 1954. Since then their guarantee has been extended until the end of 1955 at 90 per cent of parity. But it seems that that factor has not been effective in preventing the cutting of prices in order to capture world markets and to move grain.

The members of this group a year ago—yes, more than a year ago—expressed regret that Britain did not become a party to the international wheat agreement. Had Britain joined the scheme there would have been considerably more stability to world wheat prices. I am perfectly sure of that. Some of us—and I was amongst them, as were the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), and the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose (Mr. Fair)—thought it was a great mistake not to set the ceiling price under the agreement at $2 instead of $2.05. Perhaps that may—and I say "may" advisedly—have made quite a difference in the situation. It may have resulted in bringing Britain into the agreement. Had she come into the agreement I am sure that she would have stayed in it. Of course this thing can be argued both ways. I do not know for certain what would have been the situation, but I feel that Britain would have come in. However we stayed with the $2.05. We stayed with the United States in that regard and here we are.

However that may be, we are now facing a situation where the United States made a substantial cut in the export wheat price and the Canadian wheat board has felt compelled to bring our own price down by 10½ cents in order to compete successfully for markets. That is a fact we have to keep in our minds. I am not criticizing—and I want to make this point abundantly clear—the Canadian wheat board for taking this action. It seems to me that with them it was not a question of undercutting; rather with them it was a matter of competing for markets. If the United States particularly cuts wheat export prices, then we in Canada have to compete or simply not sell. So far as I can see, there are no other alternatives.

I do not think that the farmers themselves are going to be too much exercised over the present price, which I believe is something about $1.70 after the cut of yesterday. But, Mr. Speaker, what they will worry about is where we are headed in the days to come. I think that is the important thing. I think the time has come when it is incumbent upon the government and upon this parliament to give assurance to the farmers of Canada that effective action will be taken to prevent any price war that may develop, thereby forcing the returns to the farmers down below economic levels. I am quite certain that whatever action we may take we may not be able to prevent a price war. The pressures in the United States are very great. The possibilities of their starting a price war are still very genuine. But however that may be, I think it is necessary for us to give to the farmers of Canada the assurance that in any price war that takes place, their prices and the return to the farmers from the sale of their products must not be allowed to be forced down to uneconomic levels.

We think it is only fair and just that the government establish and maintain a floor price on wheat and on other farm products. While I am saying that I am going to say also that such a price—that is a fair and equitable floor price—for all primary products will have to come in the future. I do not see any way out of it. But I say that it is time that we adopted and gave evidence of maintaining an effective floor price for farmers that will guarantee them the cost of their production plus a reasonable margin of profit.

That is the level which we are convinced is right and just. We are convinced that a course of that kind is not only essential but is also completely justified. I could give a good many reasons and perhaps talk for quite a long time in doing so, but I am going to try to get right to the point and state the reasons why I believe that a course of that kind would be completely justified and do so in as short a time as I possibly can.

In the first place let us not overlook the fact that during the war when the world price was high Canadian farmers were prevented from enjoying those high prices by the policies of the government. They were promised price stabilization on a long-term basis in return for taking a lower price during the war. Their losses under the British wheat agreement and the domestic cheap bread policy ran into hundreds of millions of dollars. A grateful Canadian public therefore should not now desert the farmers and leave them to be victimized by any price war that might ensue.

It might be a different story if the world did not need the food that is piled up in this country and the United States, but I want to emphasize and repeat what has already been said by others. There are parts of the world that are desperately in need of food and the portents of the future indicate to me an even greater need. This is no time therefore to discourage production. The farmer's will to produce and his ability to produce must be preserved unimpaired or the world will suffer and we will suffer with it. That is an important thing to keep in our minds.

I come now to the second reason that justifies the establishment of an effective floor price for agricultural products. Our farmers are now and have for many years been compelled to buy the great bulk of all the things entering into their cost of production on a protected market, and our western farmers are penalized also by having to pay heavy freight rates both ways on the things they sell and on the things they buy, the highest freight rates in America.

I want to give a single example of this protection. Some years ago, I think it was in 1944, Mr. Ilsley, the then minister of finance, stated in the house that it was government policy to free from duties all implements, instruments and apparatus used by farmers producing farm products. Over the years since that time that policy has been carried out to a very large degree, but the government still maintains—and I only give this as an example—a 15 per cent duty against the importation from the United States, the only place where they are made, of wagons, sleds and trailers, all very essential to farm production. For three years that I know of, and perhaps many more than that, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has been asking the government to implement the federal policy outlined by Mr. Ilsley in 1944 and remove the duty on wagons, sleds and trailers imported from the United States.

I personally asked for the same thing twice this year, and the reply I got from the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance was that this year the submissions from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture came in rather late. I am asking: What about the submissions made two years ago by the federation of agriculture, and last year? Certainly it cannot be argued that those requests came in too late for consideration in this year's budget. But they were not considered.

I cite this particular example only to show how little consideration is given to matters affecting agricultural costs and how long injustices have to continue before the government finally is moved to remedial action. While it is true that most items of farm machinery are now allowed into Canada duty-free, most other things that farmers must buy are protected, and many of them quite unreasonably.

I give a third reason to justify the position that I have taken. Canadian wheat farmers must compete with those countries using depreciated currencies. For some years Canada pegged our dollar at a 10 per cent discount in terms of the American dollar. Our wheat sales on the international market are paid for in American funds. The government not so long ago abandoned the fixed rate of exchange and the dollar has risen to a premium position which penalizes our farmers to the extent of 18 to 20 cents a bushel on export wheat compared with their returns during the period in which the dollar was pegged at 90 per cent of parity. This 18 to 20 cents differential is a serious loss which places the Canadian wheat producer at a decided disadvantage compared with the farmers of the United States and those in countries whose currencies are depreciated. It is a very real thing that we have got to face.

I recall the situation that developed in the early thirties. We had lots of wheat for export at that time. Our markets were disrupted both internally and externally but Prime Minister Bennett declared that he would blast his way into the world markets. It sounded good at the time, but the fact is that Australia and New Zealand, both wheat sellers, devalued their currencies and pegged them, if I remember correctly, at 25 per cent below the British pound. Canada did not take similar action and consequently our farmers had to take ruinous prices for their wheat while Australia and New Zealand got rid of theirs and obtained a good price for it. I am wondering whether we are not approaching a similar situation today.

For the reasons I have mentioned, and others I could speak about if I took the time, I am convinced that we must establish effective floor prices for wheat and other farm products at a level that will return to the farmer his cost of production plus a fair profit. The farmer must be kept in business and agriculture must be maintained in a healthy condition. I see no other solution of the problem than the one I have mentioned. What the mechanics of establishing that floor price will be I am not going to presume to suggest now. That seems to me to be a matter for the government experts to work out. But I want to emphasize though that it might be necessary—I say "might be"—to devalue the dollar again. I am not sure.

However, it certainly will be necessary for the government to strengthen the Agricultural Prices Support Act and certainly to remove the escape clause that is now in the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act because, as was pointed out by my colleague, the hon. member for Acadia, when he spoke on May 17, as found at page 4805 of Hansard, subsection 3 of section 3 of the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act as it now stands completely nullifies the effective operation of the Agricultural Prices Support Act. As was quite well said by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), speaking a few minutes ago, that clause renders the Agricultural Prices Support Act almost useless because at any time the minister can, under subsection 3 of section 3 of the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act, withdraw any support that may have been extended under the other act. That is why I say that the escape clause must be removed.

Mr. Gardiner: If there is any such clause there it has never been used.

Mr. Low: It is there. The minister will have to admit that it is an escape, and it gives no guarantee whatsoever that even if we strengthened the Agricultural Prices Support Act we would be able to carry it through. I am not saying it has been used or it will be used, but certainly if we are going to give the farmers of the country any assurance whatsoever that we will maintain effective floor prices, we have got to strengthen both acts and certainly remove that escape clause.

Mr. Gardiner: Have you the section of the act there?

Mr. Low: Yes, I can get it in one minute.

Mr. Gardiner: While the hon. member is looking it up, I should like to say that the co-operative marketing act was passed five years before the other act so that it could not have been intended that it should make any difference in the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

Mr. Low: I point out to the hon. minister that it is there. Section 3, subsection 3 of the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act says:

> An agreement made under subsection 1 may include a provision that the minister may on such notice as he deems fair and reasonable require that the delivery of an agricultural product to a co-operative association, processor or selling agency shall be discontinued with the result that the minister shall not be liable in respect of any agricultural product delivered to the co-operative association, processor or selling agency after such requirement.

Mr. Gardiner: That has nothing to do with the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

Mr. Low: It could be used as an escape if any floor price arrangement were made.

Mr. Gardiner: It never would be by us.

Mr. Low: I am glad to hear the minister say that is so, but it remains there as a potential threat just the same.

Mr. Gardiner: It is not the same thing at all. Under the act from which you are quoting we sit down and make an agreement with a co-operative organization to do a certain thing; that has no relationship to the other general provision.

Mr. Quelch: That is the act under which we guarantee the initial price for marketing boards.

Mr. Gardiner: But it has nothing to do with the general floor price under the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

Mr. Quelch: No.

Mr. Gardiner: That is something that is set by law.

Mr. Low: I certainly did not intend to imply it had anything to do with the Agricultural Prices Support Act, but as I say if you are going to establish effective floor prices for agricultural products, then that clause must be removed or some other action taken to remove the threat.

Mr. Gardiner: It has no relation to it at all.

Mr. Low: I cannot at this moment debate whether it will or will not be used. The fact that the clause is there gives the government an escape from any obligation it may have, particularly in guaranteeing initial payments.

Now then to go on, I do believe it is essential also that the world, particularly those countries that do produce food materials in surplus, press forward as fast as possible toward the establishment of some international distribution agency such as an international commodity clearing house. I feel that that is going to be an essential in the future, and the sooner we get such an international body for distributing surplus food products, the better. I do not see any orderly way of taking care of the situation without some such international agency.

I think also that we have to change our thinking relative to the acceptance of some sterling currency in settlement of any balances owing Canada by Britain. So far as I am concerned there has never been a single valid reason why Canada should not have started accepting some sterling as far back as 1945 and 1946. I am convinced that if we had, instead of plunging into the Bretton Woods agreements, our trading position and that of Britain today would be far stronger than they are. I feel, too, that our markets for farm products would have been rendered far safer and much more stable if we had shown a willingness to accept from Britain the only thing she had at the time to offer us, her own currency, in part payment at least of the balance owing us.

I remind the hon. member for Assiniboia when he speaks about losing markets and that sort of thing, that he and his party voted with the government for plunging Canada into the Bretton Woods agreements in 1945, and they had plenty of chance to get their eyes open. I remind him, too, that he and his colleagues voted against a motion which we moved just last fall in this house calling upon the government to accept some sterling —I do not say all—in settlement of Britain's trade balances. I remind the house that in the early part of this session we moved an amendment calling for the acceptance of sterling in the way I have mentioned. In my judgment it was very foolishly turned down, with the exception of certain members of the Conservative party who supported it.

I remind the house also that since we moved that amendment last fall calling upon this government to proclaim its readiness to accept some sterling in payment for balances owing, as well as the currencies of other countries, the United States has adopted a policy of accepting not only sterling but the currencies of other countries as well in payment for surplus foods. We pointed out on many occasions that we in this group have a sound and scientific method of financing internally the export to other countries of those products for which we are prepared to accept the currencies of those countries in payment. The proper use of the Bank of Canada would make such financing possible without involving us in any inflationary trends or increases in the burden of interest, and we would not have to pay an inflated public debt.

At any rate the government will have to work out the mechanics of an effective and fair support price system for agriculture. I do not see any escape from that. I point out that the government of the United States has extended for another year the 90 per cent parity support she has had in effect for some years for agricultural products to protect her own farmers. I do not believe anybody in this house—certainly I would not—would advocate a rigid support policy like that in the United States; not for one moment. Ours should be a flexible support system designed to support—I underline "support"—rather than to provide an incentive for all out production of food materials, at least until world trade has been put on a satisfactory basis of exchange of goods between nations. It looks to me, Mr. Speaker, as though we have to act now. We have to let the farmers of this country know we are prepared to act, and act quickly if Canadian agriculture is to be kept in a healthy condition.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) moved the following amendment to the motion to go into supply:

> This house is of the opinion that in view of the present grave situation in the matter of international wheat trading the government should make an immediate declaration as to its policy respecting the marketing of our Canadian wheat surplus.

I find it surprising that the Leader of the Opposition or any other member in this house is not aware of the government's wheat policy. Within the last two weeks a committee on agriculture completed its work. In the course of its sittings it heard from each of the leaders of the three western pools; it heard from the president of the United Grain Growers; it heard from a representative of the private grain trade in Canada; it heard from members of the wheat board. I must say that in the course of the committee proceedings I heard no criticism whatever of Canada's wheat policy. I believe words of praise were sprinkled throughout the minutes of the hearing with a lavish hand. I was rather shocked at some of the remarks that were made there, and I was afraid the committee might turn the heads of some of the witnesses. I believe I protested on one or two occasions. Surely if there was any doubt about Canada's wheat policy, that was the place to explore that doubt. You will never find any more expert witnesses before any parliamentary committee than we had before that committee. You will never find a gathering of men with a better knowledge of the Canadian grain trade and Canada's marketing methods than the men who appeared before that committee. However, today we are told that Canada must declare its policy for marketing wheat. The reason given is the grave situation in the matter of international wheat trading.

Well, what is the "grave situation"? Canada has recently lowered its selling price for wheat by about 6 per cent. In other words it has brought down the price at Vancouver from $1.88 a bushel to $1.78. It has lowered the price at Fort William from $1.82½ to $1.72½. That—and I shall quote again—is the "grave situation in the matter of the international wheat trade". Well, that may or may not be a grave situation. But in any case, if it is not a grave situation, we will discuss it in those terms.

What is the policy of the Canadian government? That policy was laid down in 1943. All the wheat produced in the prairie provinces is delivered to a compulsory pool managed by a wheat board, which reports to its shareholders and is the property of the shareholders, who are the producers of the prairie provinces. It is the duty of that board to sell Canada's wheat crop to the best advantage for the account of the producer. And I gathered from the meeting of the committee that hon. members who attended that committee believed the board was doing just that.

The suggestion is made tonight—entirely without foundation—that Canada is losing its place in world marketing, and particularly losing its place in the British market. What are the facts? I have here a document showing the world trade in wheat, in millions of bushels, annually. In the period from 1934 to 1938 the average world trade was 534 million bushels. Canada's participation in that trade was 178 million bushels, or 33·3 per cent of the total. In 1945-46 the total trade was 876 million bushels; Canada's participation was 366 million bushels, or 41·8 per cent of the world trade. That was the year which included the end of the war. Then in 1946-47 total world trade was 746 million bushels, of which our share was 229 million, or 30·1 per cent. In 1947-48 total world trade was 946 million bushels, of which our share was 209 million, or 22·1 per cent.

Mr. Rowe: Getting less all the time.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, unfortunately, we had a short crop that year. In 1948-49 world trade was 992 million bushels, of which our share was 222 million, or 22·4 per cent. In 1949-50 world trade was 846 million bushels, of which our share was 236 million, or 27·9 per cent of the total. In 1950-51 total world trade was 933 million bushels, of which our share was 225 million or 24·2 per cent. In 1951-52 world trade that year went up to 1,065 million bushels, of which our share was 346 million, or 32·5 per cent of the total. In 1952-53 world trade was 958 million bushels, of which our share was 378 million, or 39·5 per cent of the total.

Mr. Gardiner: Going up all the time.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): And this is the interesting part for my hon. friends who have been declaiming tonight: In 1953-54, up to May 15, there were 496 million bushels that had entered into world trade; as of that date our share was 196 million bushels, or 39·5 per cent. In other words, so far as our share of world trade is concerned, we are riding at the peak.

Mr. Argue: Does the minister have the figures broken down for the period beginning at the first of this year?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Month by month, do you mean?

Mr. Argue: No, the percentage. The minister gave the over-all trade in wheat for this crop year to date. Has he the figures showing our percentage in the total world trade for a recent month?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, this is from July 1, 1953 to May 15, 1954; do you require any more recent than that?

Mr. Argue: Has the minister a four-month period? Has he the figure for the last four months, or for the last month or two?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I have said many times in this House of Commons that export figures for one month indicate very little. I have seen people use those figures in an election, and before the election was over they were sorry they had used them, because the next month was quite different.

Mr. Argue: Is it not true that the trend is down?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): "The trend is down"—what? We are riding at the highest proportion of world trade we have had in the last ten years.

Mr. Argue: Pretty small trade.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): "Pretty small trade", do you say? But this year every country had a good crop; we cannot control that situation.

Now, it is suggested that we are losing our position in the United Kingdom. Well, official statistics published by the United Kingdom show the following imports of Canadian wheat as compared with wheat from all other sources for the period August 1, 1953 to April 30, 1954. I shall go back, first, to 1951-52. For those nine months in that year Britain imported 2,949,155 long tons, of which Canada's share in that year was 1,820,273 long tons, or 61·7 per cent of all imports. In the same period in 1952-53 Britain imported 2,487,482 long tons of which Canada supplied 1,565,969, or 63 per cent. In 1953-54, up to April 30 Britain imported 2,521,680 long tons, of which Canada supplied 1,545,949 long tons. Thus we supplied for that period 61·3 per cent of the total imports, as against 38·7 per cent for the rest of the world.

I have shown, I think, that not only have we held our position in world trade, not only have we held our percentage at the highest level we have enjoyed in the last ten years, but we have also maintained very close to our highest percentage of participation in the British market, that is, 61·3 per cent of all the wheat imported into Britain.

Well, now, why did this cut in prices come about? I would think, from the speeches I listened to tonight, that there is some magic in this figure of $1.88½ for Vancouver and $1.82½ for Fort William. Why are these any more impressive than the figures we had eight or nine months ago? At that time wheat was selling around $2, then $1.98, $1.96, $1.95 and finally it got down to $1.88, and we held it there for some time. Why not hold it there forever? Well, unfortunately we are dealing in a very competitive world. The wheat trade of the world used to be in the hands of governments. That is not the situation to nearly the same extent today. I suppose over 50 per cent of the wheat that enters into the world trade is now bought by private buyers. Those private buyers buy their wheat as cheaply as they can, on the basis of quality. It was found by the United States and by ourselves that our prices were becoming out of line with those being quoted, particularly by southern hemisphere countries which have just harvested their crops, and are active competitors in the world market.

It became a question as to whether we would hold an umbrella over those countries and be content to stand by until they sold their crops. It is the feeling of both North American countries that neither of us can afford to do that in the present situation. The matter was discussed. The facts were agreed upon as to competition in world markets. Each country retired to make its own decision as to what it would do in regard to that competition. The United States moved first and decided that their situation warranted a cut of more or less 10 cents. It was not an even cut of 10 cents because the various delivery points were cut to varying degrees. Our board, in the light of the discussions in Washington and in the light of the action taken by the United States, decided that a cut in the top grades of 10⅛ cents a bushel was warranted at the time to make Canada competitive.

We have been told that that action was a tragedy to the farmers; that we should have held the price. Well, we could have held the price. The only trouble is we would not have sold very much wheat at that price. I think most sensible people know that you have got to balance your idea of price against your desire to get rid of the product. If you are satisfied to hold the product you do not need to lower the price. If you expect to sell in a competitive world, the price must be competitive with prices offered by other countries. That, I think, is the situation today.

It was felt that an abrupt drop was better than the kind of drop that falls away a cent a day or a cent or two cents a week, because once the abrupt drop is made the buyers have some confidence that the price is the price that will be maintained for a considerable period, and that the slowing down of purchasing that results from a steady lowering of prices will not result from the abrupt adjustment that has taken place within the last few days.

I could go on and speak of our policy, but I am sure it is unnecessary. But nevertheless I would point out that the policy on payments is that an initial price be fixed at the beginning of the season, and that deliveries of grain in the country be paid that initial price. That has been the policy. The present initial price has been $1.40 basis No. 1 northern for several years, and that is the initial price today. It has been said here that there is no floor under wheat. What more effective floor can there be than an outstanding offer to pay on the basis of $1.40 at terminal delivery point when wheat is delivered at the country elevator?

Mr. Argue: Can the minister say whether that same floor will be continued beyond August?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I was offered inducements to forecast the future a few moments ago, and my hon. friend did not produce his inducement. I think now I will do no more forecasting while I am speaking here tonight.

Mr. Argue: You would not dare make this one.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is the policy. It is contrasted with the policy of the United States, and some strange statements were made about the policy of the United States. We are told that there the farmer is given parity prices. Well, that is hardly the situation. We are told that the difference is that in Canada the wheat board does not own the wheat; whereas the United States government owns the wheat.

In the United States private grain can be delivered into an approved storage. The farmer can borrow against that grain 90 per cent of parity which, as I understand it, is $2.21 a bushel. In other words, he can borrow 90 per cent of parity and he can hold that loan as long as he likes. If wheat goes above the loan price he may withdraw his grain from loan and deliver it into the market. In other words, the United States government does not own that grain for a considerable period. However, there is a period when, if the grain is not reclaimed, it passes into the possession of the government.

Mr. Rowe: What do they do with it if the price goes down?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is not a recoverable loan, and if it is left on loan longer than the loan period it then passes into the hands of the government. The situation in Canada of course is just the opposite. The farmer delivers his grain to the country elevator, delivers it to the wheat board and into the ownership of the wheat board. The wheat delivered to the country elevator in Canada, for which an advance has been paid, is the property of the wheat board, and it can be disposed of as the wheat board may determine.

It has been suggested that there are other methods of dealing with surpluses. Well, I remember one method very well. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition had it in mind when he suggested that there were other methods of dealing with surpluses, because there was a big surplus in the early 1930's. How was that dealt with? Well, the government for the first time entered into the wheat picture to protect the producer, and Mr. McFarland was appointed the agent of the government to buy wheat in the open market in quantities that would support the prices that the farmers would receive by marketing under the open market system. The Conservative government of that day operated that policy for a while and he bought a good deal of wheat. I do not know whether the funds were cut off or what the reason was, but I remember the terrible day when the price of wheat fell to 38 cents a bushel in store Fort William. That was about the blackest day the farmer ever knew, and that was in 1932 under the support policy of the Conservative government of that day.

However, that was succeeded in 1935 by the wheat board, and the wheat board was the creation of the Conservative government of that day. The original legislation brought down provided for a compulsory wheat board, and I may say that the government of that day was about as strong numerically as the government of this day.

Mr. Rowe: No.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Pretty close to it. They had a huge majority.

An hon. Member: Were you here?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, but I was a very interested spectator because I was earning my living from building grain terminal elevators in those days. That bill was introduced in the house in 1934 but it seems that perhaps the government of the day were talked out of their position—

Mr. Fleming: By the Liberals?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, the Liberals had some very able men then, as we have on the Liberal side today. But I am sorry to say the government of that day was not very firm in its convictions and the bill was watered down with the introduction of a voluntary pool, and it was that voluntary pool, established under legislation passed in 1935, which this government inherited when it came into office in the latter part of that year. Well, after all, the only guide to the future is the past, and I think when the Conservative party talk about how to handle a surplus problem in wheat the only guide one has is how they handled the surplus problem they encountered during their last term of office in this Canadian parliament. I think the policy I have discussed today, which we all understand and which is known throughout the west, will compare very favourably with the policy which was adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite to handle their surplus problem which was far less difficult than the problem facing us today.

Mr. Harkness: What did you people do after coming in in 1935? You had a fire sale.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We cleaned up the pool and after we had cleaned house the prices paid to the producers rose steadily.

Mr. Rowe: They were at the lowest point in history.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The lowest point in history was in 1932 and I remember it well. The price was 38 cents a bushel.

Mr. Gardiner: And 26 cents on the farm.

Mr. Rowe: I do not want to interrupt the minister because his speech is very interesting and he is revealing a little bit more of the information on policy for which we have been asking. But a short time ago the minister mentioned during the course of his remarks that if we are going to sell wheat we must be competitive. Are we to take it from that it is government policy to sell wheat in competitive world markets regardless of the world price?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We intend to be competitive. We think we have some control over the competitive situation. The North American supplies are the largest in the world and I do not think we in North America need panic if one country in another part of the world decides to cut its price below ours. It is almost inevitable that we in North America will hold some kind of blanket over the smaller exporting countries.

Mr. Harkness: How do you intend to do it? Will you do as you did in 1935? Will you throw it on the market?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What market?

Mr. Harkness: The world market.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We did not do that.

Mr. Harkness: Your party did.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): But prices were very much better after we took over. I will give you the figures, if you like. I have all sorts of figures here.

Mr. Macdonnell: Do not screen the figures.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): When my hon. friend from eastern Canada starts dreaming about prices we get some funny results.

Mr. Rowe: The figures are not so important as the principle.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, I will give the figures. You asked for them.

Mr. Rowe: No, I asked for the principle.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend begins to take interest when? I suppose about the thirties. Does he?

Mr. Rowe: I was interested a long time before that.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We will start with 1927. That was a good year. These are farm prices: in 1927-28—and these are bureau of statistics figures—the price was 98 cents per bushel on the farm; 1928-29 it was 78 cents a bushel on the farm; in 1929-30 it was $1.03 on the farm; in 1930-31—I guess this must have been after the election—it was 47 cents a bushel on the farm; in 1931-32 it was 37 cents on the farm; in 1932-33 it was 34 cents on the farm—that was a great year and that figure was the average price on the farm for wheat; in 1933-34 it was 47 cents on the farm; in 1934-35 it was 60 cents on the farm; and then, what was the year we had the fire sale?—1935-36; the average price for 1935-36 was 60 cents; in 1936-37 it was 92 cents and in 1937-38 it was $1.03.

Mr. Argue: That is the year you sold it to the farmer when there was a crop failure. You sold it to them for seed.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, one would think that the prices must have got better when the government changed.

We have had several solutions offered for this problem. I think perhaps the most fantastic one is that by the hon. member for Assiniboia who deals in fantastic ideas. We are members of the international wheat agreement and we are partners with, I think, 48 other countries in that agreement, but in spite of that the hon. member suggests we have several other agreements. First, he would have an agreement with the United States to sell at the same price.

Mr. Argue: Co-operate.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Co-operation, yes, but it must be an agreement and no nonsense about it. Then next he suggests an agreement with the United Kingdom and that would be a special agreement under which we would supply wheat to the United Kingdom and, I suppose, as an inducement we could give them a lower price. Is that it? I think that after you had made these three agreements you would be a little confused as to who was agreeing with whom. But in any case it is a fantastic idea and I shall not pursue it.

Mr. Argue: You were pretty proud about the United Kingdom agreement when you had it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): But now we have other agreements.

Mr. Argue: As long as your government signed it you were proud of it, but when someone else suggests it then the idea is fantastic.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): All right, but one agreement at a time. Three at one time are too many. Then we have the old perennial that we should sell our wheat for sterling. That is a very good idea except that I do not know of anyone who wants to buy our wheat for sterling. The United States has been proposing the sale of wheat in local currency and I know only of two sales which have been put through on that basis. One was to Japan and the provision in that case was part gift and part sale. The part sale was conducted in yen which was to be used for the support of the United States army in that country. The other was a sale to Spain and part of that sale is to be paid for in pesetas and the pesetas are to be used in constructing aeroplane bases in that country.

Mr. Rowe: Is there one with West Germany?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, they sell for dollars to West Germany. Germany is practically a hard currency country today. Any country can apply to the United States for the purchase of wheat and for payment in the local currency, but they do not seem to do that. The reason is that a debt in local currency is just as difficult for most countries as a dollar debt and people prefer to trade in the currency of the country where the purchase is made.

Now, there is another fallacy, namely, that there are millions of starving people in this world who would be glad to get the wheat if someone gave it to them. I wish people who make that statement would just tell me where those people are and how we can get wheat to them. Pakistan had a bad time and the United States and Canada helped them. We gave a certain amount of wheat to Pakistan against Colombo plan funds. The United States I think gave a very big quantity of wheat. What happened? Pakistan was just not able to take all the wheat that the United States offered them and has not taken it to this day. Why? Because they could not put it into consumption.

Everybody suggests that India is a country that would be delighted to take gifts of wheat. India happened to have very good crops last year. The monsoons came at the right time. They have not been purchasers of wheat except to a very small extent and then mostly for milling and reshipment. They are not needing wheat as a gift from anybody and would not take it if it was offered.

Those are the areas most often spoken about as being the possible recipients for great quantities of wheat to feed starving people. I do not know of any. If my hon. friend knows of a place, I think we would consider very carefully helping out starving people wherever we find them; but I do not know where they are. I wish my hon. friend and other hon. members of this house who keep referring to the fact that there are starving peoples who would be glad to take large quantities of surplus wheat if we were willing to give it away would just remember these facts.

After all, the wheat trade of the world is one of the most ancient trades of all. Wheat has been moving between countries for, I suppose, a thousand years or more. Certain practices in the trade have developed, and those practices are just as good today as they were at any other time. Most countries prefer to deal in wheat as they have always dealt in it, namely, to buy it where they can buy it most cheaply on the basis of quality and to pay for it in the currency of the country that supplies the wheat. Until I hear of many more sales in local currencies or of many more countries asking for the gift of wheat, I shall continue to believe that the methods of disposing of wheat being followed by the Canadian wheat board are those that are acceptable to our customers in all parts of the world.

As will have been noted from the figures I quoted for world consumption, world consumption is substantially down this year. Why? Because almost every country in the world had a bumper crop of wheat. Countries that have never exported previously have become exporters of wheat this year. Sweden has been a substantial exporter of wheat, as was Turkey. France has been exporting considerable quantities of wheat. France has been exporting more wheat than usual, although France in some years is an exporter and in other years is an importer. It is a country that is almost in balance of production against consumption.

We have had an unusual year and, of course, we on this continent harvested our third greatest crop. It is a problem we have to deal with. It has been said that the producers in the west are having an extremely tough time because they cannot deliver their wheat. May I point out that they are delivering the normal quantity of wheat, or more than the average of the past ten years.

Mr. Castleden: Their production is almost twice as large.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I know their production is great; and if they could market it all they would have twice as much money as they have now. All I am pointing out is that they are marketing the normal quantity of wheat and they are receiving the normal income averaged over the last ten years.

Mr. Castleden: Is it not true that at the present time the figures are about 170 million bushels short of what they were last year?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I know. Last year was an extraordinary year. I have read the figures. It was the greatest marketing year that this country has ever seen. We never before sold nearly as much grain in a year as we sold last year. I wish the world consumption of wheat every year would permit us to sell that quantity of grain as our share of world markets. Unfortunately the number of bushels that make up our share of the world market depends on the over-all size of the world market. This year the total amount of wheat entering world markets is much smaller than it was last year.

As I say, we had representatives of western Canada in Ottawa at the agriculture committee. I took that opportunity to have a talk with each of them in order to find out whether, in his opinion, there was a need for supplementary income in western Canada. Some of them had taken a poll among their locals and were able to give me the result of the poll. The results of the polls that were taken showed that a small percentage—I think it was 1 per cent in the case of Saskatchewan—reported a need for supplementary financing.

Mr. Argue: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question at that point?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

Mr. Argue: Was not the discussion based upon a loan with an interest rate of 5 per cent or 6 per cent?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We were discussing a loan; yes.

Mr. Argue: The farmers already have more debt than they can handle; they do not want any more.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): A farmer who worries about interest rates is not short of necessities, at any rate. A man in dire need does not worry about interest rates.

Mr. Argue: He may not be starving when his granaries are full of wheat, but he is short of everything else.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): In any event, I have described what the situation is. The policy of the government and of the wheat board is going to be to drive ahead and to make sure that we hold our share of the market. I do not think we can increase it very much. I think that a share of about 40 per cent of the grain entering into the world wheat trade is about all that Canada can expect. It is the top share that it has been able to get in any year, and there have been years when our share has been only a little bit more than half of that proportion. However, we are going to fight to hold that proportion. If it is necessary to cut the price again in order to hold that proportion, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we are not going to lose markets for wheat because we make a fetish of $1.78½ for Vancouver and $1.72½ for Fort William and, by making a fetish, lose markets for substantial quantities of wheat.

Mr. Argue: And the farmer takes the rap.

An hon. Member: Make your own speech.

Mr. Argue: You helped me make mine so I am helping you make yours.

An hon. Member: You needed help.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Mr. Knowles: What is the difference between driving ahead and R. B. Bennett's blasting?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We do not blast; we just hold what we have. We try very hard to do that. We have customers among the countries of the world. We know about the proportion of Canadian wheat that those countries are accustomed to take. We watch them closely. If they are not buying from us when our turn comes, we make inquiries to find out why. If it is a matter of price, that is one factor which, added to other factors, may indicate to the wheat board that a cut in price is necessary.

Those are the facts of life. That is the policy that the wheat board will follow. It is the purpose of the board to be competitive. Anyone who has tried to hold wheat off the market for a period in this country has headed for disaster. If proof of that statement is needed, I might refer back to the period from 1930 to 1935, which started with the holding of wheat off the world market.

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister referred back to 1930 to 1935, I should like to refer back to a little bit more recent date when he insisted on $2.05 a bushel for wheat with regard to the United Kingdom market. From what the minister has just now said, surely we are to take it that this new policy is an abrupt change, a right-about-face, from the time when you held out for $2.05 with the United Kingdom. According to the statement you have just made tonight, you are going to sell wheat even if you have to cut the price further, and you are going to meet world competition and sell wheat wherever you can sell it, even though you have to reduce the price again.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad my hon. friend brought that up because I intended to touch on that—another fallacy. My hon. friend likes to bring up the fallacies and it gives me a chance to straighten out his ideas regarding the situation. When the delegates from the 42 importing countries and the 4 exporting countries met in Washington to revise the wheat agreement Canada was represented as an exporter. The purpose of the meeting, among other things, was to determine maximum and minimum prices for a new agreement. The United States took a very extreme view. I believe they started by asking for a maximum price of $2.50. The importing countries asked for a maximum price of $1.80.

Canada believed that both these were extreme and our efforts were largely devoted towards bringing the United States down to a more reasonable view of a maximum price as well as attempting to bring the importing countries up to a more realistic price. After a great deal of negotiation 41 of the 42 importing countries agreed to accept $2.05. It was not Canada's price. It was a compromise between all the exporters and all the importers with Canada lending her best offices to bring about a meeting of the minds. After that meeting of minds was arrived at the United Kingdom announced that it was not prepared to sign the agreement. That country said that it would not go beyond $2.00. All the other 41 importing countries agreed to the maximum price of $2.05. Consequently at that stage the only question was whether Britain would or would not sign the agreement setting a price of $2.05 and Britain decided not to sign.

However, I point out that that was the maximum price. There was also a minimum price fixed, the minimum price being $1.55. The assumption is that if we have maximum and minimum prices there is an area between the two which is a trading area, and that is where the price of wheat is today. It is below the maximum and above the minimum, about half way between the two at the present time, and under conditions of surplus supplies in the exporting countries it is my opinion that it is a reasonable area within which the present price should be established.

My hon. friends can talk about maximum prices as though that meant something more than the term implies. It is true that there was pressure from the importing companies which kept the price at the maximum for a number of years. That pressure does not exist today. The pressure, if any, is from the exporting countries which are seeking to reduce their surpluses. But the average price of Canadian wheat today is $1.75½. In other words, it is about half way between the maximum and minimum prices. The price at Fort William is $1.72½ and the price at Vancouver is $1.78½, and about half the grain is going to the west coast and half to the east coast. The price of $1.75 is not a bad split between $1.55 and $2.05. That is the price today. There is room for movement in either direction. A bad crop in one of the exporting countries, even in Canada, would probably move the price up, and another bumper crop would very likely move it down. But we have that area between $1.55 and $2.05 for trading before either the maximum or the minimum prices of the international wheat agreement become effective. I think that I have now explained government policy and exposed the fallacy of the ideas put forward by the opposition, and I will resume my seat.

Mr. Gardiner: If I may be permitted to do so I should like to make a correction resulting from a little exchange back and forth across the floor of the house when the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) was speaking. He made one correction and I want to make another. I interjected at that time that parity was $2.21. I just want to say that $2.21 was 90 per cent of parity.

Mr. Rowe: You are still wrong.

Mr. Gardiner: In January, 1954.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the speech just delivered by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) outside of its historical review, in parts inaccurate and in other parts incorrect, leaves little hope for the Canadian farmer in the position in which he is today. I cannot understand why the minister did not tell the house and the country something of what has taken place between Canada and the United States with reference to this matter. There have been several meetings apparently designed to prevent or at least to postpone a price war among the wheat-producing nations of the world. There was a meeting in March between the cabinet ministers of Canada and the United States. What took place there? With the exception of a slight amount of information that the government has deigned to give to the house, there remains a blackout as far as Canadians are concerned.

Only yesterday the Australian minister for commerce and agriculture forecast a situation that should have been dealt with this evening by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He said that the slashing of prices is apt to continue and he goes on to point out that there could easily be a repetition of the depression story when a similar price war forced wheat below two shillings. What Canadians would have liked from the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not the rather jovial speech he delivered this evening, not as replete as usual with optimistic prophecy but nonetheless made in a jovial way; they would have liked him to give them hope, but what he pointed out may well happen. Further reductions may take place in order to meet world competition.

That can lead only to a very serious position for agriculture. What Canada would have liked to hear from the minister tonight is something of what the Canadian government has done with respect to pointing out to the government of the United States the terrible danger to the nations today of any policy in the nature of price cutting at this time which inevitably will cause difficulty and stress and create a dangerous situation in agriculture within our country.

Wheat—Marketing of Surplus

Can we get any information? Yesterday I tried to ascertain what happened last week when there was a meeting in Washington between Canadian and United States representatives. The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) said he was not there and apparently did not know. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said that he was not there. If there ever was a conference where nobody was there and yet much apparently was decided it was that of ten days ago in Washington.

What Canadians are asking for today, what the western farmer is asking for today—

Mr. Abbott: Everybody should eat more wheat.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —is something in the nature of a declaration by Canada with respect to the efforts it is making in reference to the United States to prevent anything in the nature of price cutting competition in wheat sales. But all we receive from the minister is a historical review of the thirties. Let me say this about the thirties. The Conservative party inherited exactly the same condition as prevails today as the result of world conditions, and a condition that arose while the Liberal party was in power. It is no use reliving that.

Mr. Abbott: You will not inherit this one, John.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What Canadians want to know is what is the government going to do? What is its policy? What we received tonight was a historical review that gave no hope and little future to the western farmer who has asked parliament today to let him know what the situation is.

On motion of Mr. Diefenbaker the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince Albert moves that this debate do now adjourn. Before we adjourn I want to make a few observations at this time so that hon. members will consider them and perhaps give me their own views at a later stage. The amendment reads:

> This house is of the opinion that in view of the present grave situation in the matter of international wheat trading the government should make an immediate declaration as to its policy respecting the marketing of our Canadian wheat surplus.

Now is it an amendment to ask that the government make an immediate declaration of its policy? An amendment has a certain objective, and the objective is to alter the main question so as to help hon. members state their position on policies. Is it an amendment, even if the amendment to a motion to go into supply has not to be relevant, to ask that the government make an immediate statement of policy? Is it a parliamentary motion? That is the first question I should like to submit to hon. members.

The second question is this. I was away for a while looking over these amendments, and upon my return to the chair was informed that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) had made a speech. When he spoke a moment ago, what did he do? Even if that declaration of policy by the minister was not to the liking of hon. members, is it not a fact the minister has expressed the policy of the government because he is the spokesman with respect to these various matters, and according to the theory of cabinet solidarity he has spoken for the government. Has he not complied with the terms of this amendment? That is another point I should like to submit to hon. members for their serious consideration.

Of course when one considers that the amendment asks for a declaration of policy from the government, one could go a little further. After all the government, by the constitution, are the advisers of Her Majesty. They are the ones who are supposed to propose policy. Can we, by an amendment or by a decision of this house, force the government to declare their policy if they do not wish to do so? I have in my hand here a treatise on parliament by C. Ilbert who was a Clerk of the House of Commons in England and the author of several books. On page 111 of this particular book he says, under the title "administration":

> Parliament does not govern. Parliamentary government does not mean government by parliament. Once, and once only, in the course of English history has the House of Commons attempted to administer the affairs of the country through executive committees, and the precedent by the long parliament has not been followed.
>
> What is done by parliament, and especially by the House of Commons, is in the first place to secure that the King's ministers, who control and are responsible for the executive government of the country, shall represent and have the confidence of the party, or combination of parties, which commands a majority in the house, and in the next place to control the action of those ministers by means of questions and criticisms.

Now, is this a criticism? The amendment asks that the government declare a policy immediately. I submit these observations for the benefit of hon. members. Of course if the amendment is not in order, then the subamendment is not in order either.

Mr. Knowles: As a subamendment.

Mr. Speaker: Well, at the moment that is what we are considering. It is a subamendment. Considering that now the original question must be laid aside for the time being, the amendment so to speak becomes a distinctive motion. The amendment to the amendment spells out a policy. The amendment was to the effect that the government should state its policy immediately. I consider that the policy has already been stated. Then the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) in his subamendment spells out what the policy should be. He says:

> . . . that the government should give consideration to including in such policy the provision of a floor price to the wheat producers of Canada at levels not less than the Canadian wheat board selling price, basis Fort William-Port Arthur on Friday, June 4, 1954.

Aside from other considerations if this amendment were in order, and if it were carried by the house, would it not have the effect of giving a direct order to make a public expenditure? On this point I refer hon. members to previous rulings which I ask them to consider. There is the ruling of Mr. Speaker Black on May 24, 1932, page 515 of the Journals; another by Mr. Speaker Glen on March 29, 1943, page 213 of the Journals; another one by the same Speaker on March 30, 1943, page 221.

As I said a moment ago, I am not making a ruling at this moment but I am asking hon. members to seriously consider the observations I have made. When we resume the discussion of these amendments, we can hear the views of hon. members. If I am wrong in my contention, I can take into consideration the remarks that might be made by experienced hon. members of the house, and I would be very pleased to revise what I would otherwise consider to be perhaps a quite sound ruling.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: We shall take the third reading tomorrow; then the Department of Trade and Commerce, national revenue, secretary of state, fisheries, mines and technical surveys, and defence production.

It being ten minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

83276—364½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 10, 1954

The house met at eleven o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

AMENDMENTS TO MOTION FOR COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—SUGGESTED PROCEDURE FOR DISPOSAL

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think this may be the appropriate time to mention the matter because, in the ordinary course of events if Your Honour were giving a ruling, it would be at this time that you would give it. I want to point out that with regard to the question that was raised just before the house rose last night as to the possibility of the motion being in order, if that motion stands—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I inform the Leader of the Opposition that that matter cannot be taken up at this time. The order of the house to go into committee of supply and the debate on the amendment and the amendment to the amendment will be resumed when it is necessary for the Speaker again to put the motion to go into supply. That will be perhaps on Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday. Today, however, that debate will not be resumed. In any event, this would not be the time to discuss the observations I made last night in connection with the amendment. That discussion will have to take place when the order is read for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion to go into supply and on the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I was about to point out that under rulings that have been made the fact that this matter remains in a state of suspense conceivably could have some effect on the scope of the debate under the Department of Trade and Commerce which, we have been informed, is to be the first department called today. I was merely suggesting the possibility that if Your Honour had reached a decision, that decision conceivably could have some bearing on the breadth of the remarks that could be made on the first item of the Department of Trade and Commerce. If Your Honour feels that that matter should stand, then it would be necessary for those who speak to guide themselves accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: As I said a moment ago, it is not a matter of the Speaker feeling that it should stand; it is because I cannot deal with the matter otherwise. I cannot deal with observations made upon an amendment until the order for resuming the debate on that particular subject is called by the clerk assistant. As to the fears expressed by the Leader of the Opposition that perhaps discussion might be curtailed on the first item of the Department of Trade and Commerce in the committee to supply, may I say that I do not think he should entertain those fears. As I recall it, on the first item of a department in supply the discussion is always allowed to cover all the administration of that department.

Mr. Drew: Under those terms, Mr. Speaker, the situation is entirely satisfactory in any event.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: There is another point that I should like to take care of and that has to do with the remarks that were made at the beginning of our sittings today with respect to the amendment to the motion to go into supply which is on the order paper for Monday next. Upon reflection, I see now why the matter was brought up by the Leader of the Opposition. We are to go into committee of supply without question put, and the first department to be called is trade and commerce, the first item being administration. Under that first item of course comes perhaps the matter of wheat. Yesterday we had a debate initiated with respect to wheat on the motion to go into supply, which was adjourned last night, and which appears on the order paper for Monday next, item No. 3.

I do not want the house to be misled by what I said earlier. It is true that on the first item of any department in supply a general discussion of the department's activities is allowed. However, it would seem to me that the amendment moved to the motion to go into supply yesterday is blocking a discussion with respect to wheat today in the committee of supply on the first item of trade and commerce. Citation 246 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms says:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in standing order 41, it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking, must not:
>
> (d) anticipate discussion on a motion set down for future consideration.

Anyone dealing with wheat would certainly be anticipating discussion of the motion which is set down on the order paper for Monday next.

Furthermore, hon. members are limited by the terms of standing order 40(2), which is to the effect that one must not repeat arguments of his own or arguments used by others. I just want to point out that there is this difficulty at this stage of the proceedings in connection with the subject of wheat.

Mr. Drew: Before we pass from that, may I say that Your Honour has apprehended the very difficulty that I anticipated. I would point out that it is not the choice of the opposition that we broke from the motion that was before the house to discuss trade and commerce.

I would point out that by the device of halting a debate before it is concluded and then calling a department which embraces the subject matter of a motion of that kind we could find ourselves denied the opportunity to discuss it at all, that is further than the discussion which has already taken place, because, as I pointed out earlier, Your Honour did indicate some uncertainty as to what was in your mind. I am prepared to argue that point because I submit the point is in order. Nevertheless, Your Honour indicated quite clearly last night that you thought the motion might be out of order. In that event we might find ourselves foreclosed from the possibility of discussing an extremely important aspect of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and then find when we returned on Monday that Your Honour had come to the conclusion that he thought it was not in order and that the very motion which is now being discussed on this subject is in fact not a valid barrier at all.

I would repeat that the choice by which that debate was suspended and we now come into trade and commerce was not our choice. I am not suggesting for one moment that the course which has been followed is one that was designed for that purpose. I would point out, however, that the government, which has nothing to do with that, could by that very method interfere with the ordinary discussion of a subject before the house and I submit that while hon. members might well refrain from the detailed discussion of this subject which has already come forward, that if we talk on trade and commerce we can hardly take the time to deal with it in its all-embracing aspects without considering the impact of the present wheat situation upon trade and commerce in Canada.

I do submit, Mr. Speaker, that if your ruling were to be that the mere introduction of the subject of the wheat surplus were to be suspended or could not be proceeded with because of the adjournment of that motion, then some course should be followed which would open the door to discussion because we would be having a discussion on the first item on the Department of Trade and Commerce under very unsatisfactory conditions. It must of necessity be with the consent of the house, but because of the importance of this matter I would be prepared to withdraw the motion we were debating yesterday for the purpose of overcoming any difficulties of this kind.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, may I say just a word or two on this? On Tuesday on the opposition side of the house there was a general feeling that this was a matter of urgency and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and my colleague the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) both attempted to introduce a motion to that effect. We urged the government to vary the business but the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) could not see his way clear to do so. He said then, with respect to the urgency of discussing this matter, as reported at page 5624 of Hansard for that day:

> The most I would be prepared to suggest is that either when we move to go into supply at a time when that motion is to be debated or when we get into supply, the first department called be the Department of Trade and Commerce.

An hon. Member: Either.

Mr. Coldwell: Quite so. But he indicated that the matter of urgency was to be met when the first department was the Department of Trade and Commerce. We are in a bit of a muddle this morning regarding procedure, Mr. Speaker, but under the first item as a rule the discussion is very wide and I myself can see no objection to the house debating the wheat problem under the Department of Trade and Commerce and even concluding that debate, so that when we get back to a supply motion all that would have to be done would be to receive Your Honour's ruling on the amendment and the subamendment and if you so allow a vote can be taken at that time.

It seems to me, in the situation in which we are, that that would be the sensible thing for the house to do, but it is a matter for the house and yourself, Mr. Speaker, rather than for any individual in this house to decide as regards what is to be done. But I am making that suggestion to the house and to you, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that is a way out of the difficulty.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the C.C.F. party has explained the situation, as I understand it, quite clearly. In response to the desire of hon. members opposite that this matter might be debated at an early time the government did say it was going to call the Department of Trade and Commerce first on, I think, two successive days, giving them the opportunity when we got into supply. I presume hon. members are aware of the rule which provides that on Thursdays and Fridays we can discuss these matters without question put, and the opposition members have an option of taking whatever action they desire with that in mind. However, since all the hon. members who have spoken so far seem to be desirous of disposing of the matter the alternative presented by that hon. member would be acceptable to the government, that is if it is the desire of the house the amendment be now dropped so that it would not be called on Monday and we would agree to debate wheat or any other subject on this item. On the other hand, if the suggestion made by the leader of the C.C.F. party is adopted, that is that we debate the subject now by consent, and that there is to be no further debate on the amendments on Monday, then we are content.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the acting leader of the government that although we can go into supply on Thursdays and Fridays without question put, what he could do is to suspend the standing order so that we can then go into supply with question put today and move that item 3 be taken and then I will by my ruling dispose of the two amendments, the main motion will carry, and we will go into supply.

I do not know if my point is well taken. We go into supply Thursdays and Fridays without question put although, if it was the wish of hon. members to have a debate on the motion to go into supply by suspending the provisions of the standing order, a motion could be made and we could have a debate on the motion to go into supply. If it is unanimously agreed that this be done then immediately I make my ruling and the two amendments are disposed of—and I take it that is the wish of hon. members—the motion could then be carried and I would leave the chair and the house could go into committee of supply on the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Drew: But Mr. Speaker, might I point out that if Your Honour put the question and the consent of the house were obtained then the difficulty we are discussing would be disposed of if my motion were withdrawn, though, of course, that would also require the consent of the mover of the subamendment. In that case there would be no problem before us.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I have no way of judging what is in your mind but may I point out that if perchance your ruling was that the amendment and the subamendment were out of order then a further debate could continue on the motion to go into supply. I take it we do not wish that to occur. I think, as I have said before, that the other suggestions are agreeable to the government.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the Leader of the Opposition, by leave, withdraw his amendment? Does the hon. member for Assiniboia also wish to ask leave to withdraw his amendment to the amendment?

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on this? I understand the proposal is that the amendment and subamendment be withdrawn. But the purpose of moving the subamendment was to divide the house on that subamendment, though if there was an opportunity to move the amendment and subamendment again there would not be the same objective. However, if the withdrawal means that there is to be no vote regardless of what Your Honour's ruling may be, then I could not consent to the withdrawal of the amendment because our subamendment was moved deliberately so that we might divide the house on a question which we believe is both important and urgent.

Mr. Harris: Then on that point, Mr. Speaker, I hope and believe that on Monday we may have only four or five items of legislation at the most, and if these items are passed before Wednesday night it will, of necessity, be necessary to bring in another motion to go into supply and another opportunity will then occur.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose we shall leave the matter at that for the time being and I will leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply on the departments that were announced.

Mr. Harris: I think the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has had his point met. I took it that if that statement was made, he would then consent to the withdrawal by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) of his amendment and the withdrawal of the subamendment.

Mr. Coldwell: But, Mr. Speaker, even if we went into supply on two days next week there is no assurance that on the second day we would get precedence to move the amendment relating to wheat, particularly if already an amendment had been moved on the same topic by, we will say, the official opposition. I do not think that I could agree with that procedure, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It is very simple, as long as hon. members are agreeable to having only one debate on the question of wheat.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: You have it either in the committee of supply on the first item or you have it on the motion on which debate is announced to be resumed on Monday. Why not refrain from discussing wheat in the committee today and wait to continue the debate on Monday, a procedure which is the normal practice and which is fully in accordance with the rules?

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the easy way out of it is to have the debate now and to have some understanding among us that on Monday the vote will be taken and the debate will be continued on the minister's first item. That seems to me to be the sensible thing to do.

Mr. Speaker: For the sake of order and good business I believe that what must be done now is that the discussion on wheat or on whatever is covered by the amendment which is on the order paper, should not be anticipated at this time and that when we resume the discussion on Monday we carry on with the business as we should.

[Later:]

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER LEGISLATION TO BE BROUGHT DOWN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the fact that we are approaching the end of the session, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he can now inform the house if the bill to repeal the Yukon Quartz Mining Act and the Yukon Placer Mining Act, standing as No. 6 on the order paper, is to be proceeded with; also whether the Municipal Grants Act amendments are to be proceeded with. I should also like to know when we may anticipate knowing the nature of the proposed amendment to the Judges Act.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I understand that the first item mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition is not to be proceeded with at this session. Perhaps the Minister of Finance might answer the second question. What was the third question?

Mr. Drew: I would recall that the Prime Minister, in announcing legislation still to come forward about four or five weeks ago, mentioned an amendment to the Judges Act. I would simply point out that in the very nature of things amendments to that act call for certain inquiries from bar associations and other organizations interested in matters of that kind, and that if members are to give careful consideration to an amendment of that nature we should have the opportunity to see the bill between the time it comes into the house and is considered by the house on second reading.

Mr. St. Laurent: I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that we will have that in mind in connection with this measure.

[Later:]

Mr. Drew: I would point out that the Minister of Finance has not yet given the answer indicated by the Prime Minister in connection with the Municipal Grants Act.

Mr. Abbott: I would hope that the measure will be proceeded with. I know that the leader of the house is doing his best to facilitate completion of the matters which are on the order paper.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, June 10, 1954

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Thibaudeau Rinfret, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, Thursday, the 10th June, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute,
Secretary to the Governor General.
(Administrative)

TRADE

ITALY—ARRANGEMENT REGARDING CODFISH, CANNED SALMON AND SYNTHETIC RUBBER

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an important announcement to the house. Wednesday evening a joint statement was issued in Rome by the Hon. Mario Martinelli, minister of foreign trade of Italy, and the Hon. Robert Winters, Minister of Public Works of Canada. This statement announced an arrangement between Canada and Italy whereby Italy has agreed to make dollars available for the importation of codfish, canned salmon and synthetic rubber. This arrangement was negotiated by Hon. Robert Winters, following preliminary discussions carried on in Rome with Italian officials by Shirley G. MacDonald, commercial counsellor of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Under this arrangement the government of Italy has agreed to make dollars available for the purchase during the period July 1, 1954, to June 30, 1955, of Newfoundland and Labrador type codfish valued at $2,500,000, Gaspe type codfish valued at $600,000 and canned salmon valued at $2,000,000. Provision for the sale of canned salmon was made possible by the lower prices for this product now being quoted in markets abroad. In addition, an initial quota for the importation of $500,000 worth of synthetic rubber has been established. This quota is over and above the considerable quantity of synthetic rubber for which quotas have already been established.

Codfish, canned salmon and synthetic rubber are among the most important Canadian exports to Italy. This new arrangement will place sales of these products on a firm and stable basis in the Italian market.

PORTUGAL—TABLING OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Roch Pinard (Parliamentary Assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) I wish to table three copies in French and three copies in English of a trade agreement between Canada and Portugal, signed at Lisbon on May 28, 1954.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, before you proceed with questions may I suggest that the trade treaty with Portugal, which was just tabled by the parliamentary assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, might be printed as an appendix to our proceedings today so that it will be available to members.

Mr. Speaker: If it is the wish of hon. members it could be done. I am informed that the trade treaty with Spain was tabled yesterday and it was not printed in Votes and Proceedings. Is it the wish of hon. members that this one be printed in Votes and Proceedings? Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fleming: May I point out to the house that this was the course followed with the Japanese trade treaty a month ago. It was printed as an appendix to our proceedings. I suggest, if it meets with the approval of the house, that the same course might be followed with respect to the trade treaty that was tabled in the house yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: It is a rather long document. It seems to me that if it is the wish of hon. members to have these treaties printed in Votes and Proceedings we might as well print them all instead of only printing one every now and then. There was one with Spain and one with Japan. The one with Japan was printed in Votes and Proceedings and with respect to the one with Spain tabled yesterday no request was made then that it be printed in Votes and Proceedings. Now we have this one today, and according to the announcement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce there may be another one in the offing. I wonder whether it is the wish of hon. members to initiate the practice of having these trade treaties printed in Votes and Proceedings. If we do not want to do that, then why should we print one every now and then? That is my point. Why print one and not print them all? If there is no good reason to print them all, then what is the good reason to print one?

Mr. Thatcher: I do not think we should print any of them in the future. I think it is a waste of time and effort.

Mr. Speaker: It is to be further pointed out that at the present time the queen's printer, in order to provide the house with Hansard and Votes and Proceedings containing what must be included in Votes and Proceedings, has almost more work than he can take care of, and he performs almost a miracle by delivering Votes and Proceedings and Hansard every morning. I take it that there is not unanimous consent to have this document printed in Votes and Proceedings.

QUESTIONS

DISASTER PLANNING, HOSPITALS

Mr. Goode:

1. Has any planning been done to prepare hospitals in Canada to operate under disaster conditions?
2. If so, what form has this planning taken?

Mr. Speaker: I understand this question was allowed to stand yesterday and that later in the day the reply reached Hansard and now appears there. Therefore question 6 should be declared today as having been answered.

Mr. Martin: I think there was a misunderstanding. I did say "answered" yesterday but my voice obviously did not touch the chair.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He has a clear voice and I should have heard him.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION BOARDS OF INQUIRY

Mr. Gagnon:

1. How many cases have been considered by boards of inquiry of the immigration branch, since January 1, 1952?
2. How many were appealed?
3. How many persons were allowed to remain in Canada?
4. What are the usual reasons for deportation?

Mr. Harris:

1. 3,805.

2. 2,345.

3. 1,154.

4. The most common reasons for deportation are:

(a) criminal convictions;

(b) having become an inmate of an asylum or hospital for mental diseases, or having become a public charge in Canada;

(c) illegal entry;

(d) failure to comply with medical or other regulations governing admission to Canada.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CAMP IPPERWASH—INVESTIGATION INTO DISAPPEARANCE OF ARMY STORES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Could he give the house a report on the investigations that have been made into the alleged shortages at Camp Ipperwash? Have any arrests been made? If he cannot give a full report, can he tell us the amount of the shortages in dollars and cents?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Associate Minister of National Defence): I am not in a position to make an extended statement at the moment. The investigations are just being completed. I can only say that the reports in the press with respect to the losses involved are extremely exaggerated and even fantastic in the light of the facts so far ascertained.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Have any arrests been made in connection with the investigation at Camp Ipperwash?

Mr. Campney: I am not aware of any having been made.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GENEVA CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR FURTHER REPORT ON PROGRESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would he give a report to the house as to the present progress in the Geneva conference? Would he also say whether the events of the last two or three days have given a rather optimistic outline to what is taking place there?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have no reason to believe that the events of the last few days at the Geneva conference warrant any excessive optimism. There has been, as a matter of fact, very little progress made toward a settlement since I reported to the house. As to the reasons for that lack of progress, I should like to be very careful about what I say on a matter of this kind. Therefore, with the hon. gentleman's permission, I might make a very short statement on the question on the orders of the day tomorrow.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—GREAT LAKES SHIPYARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): In view of the fact that during the election campaign it was said, "Elect the Liberals and keep your shipyards busy in Canada", I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister and ask him if now is not the opportune time for him to produce that miracle and keep the shipyards of the great lakes busy because most of them are idle?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think we should attempt to renew the election campaign in the house at this time.

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

RECOVERY OF COST OF MARKING OR REMOVING WRECK—SEAMEN'S SECURITY REGULATIONS

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (for the Minister of Transport) moved the third reading of Bill No. 471, to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): I should like to take advantage of the opportunity to make a slight correction in yesterday's discussion when section 2 of this bill was being considered in committee of the whole. The Minister of Justice and I made the statement that when parliament approved the bill it was the intention of the government to re-enact the former great lakes seamen's security regulations, P.C. 2306 of May 2, 1952, in the same form as they existed up to May 31 of this year. As we stated yesterday it is the intention to do this.

I have since been informed by our legal advisers that it is necessary to provide a minor additional section in the new regulations providing for the continuation of the seamen's cards and of the forms prescribed by the Minister of Labour issued and used under the old regulations. Provision also is to be made for the revocation of the old regulations. It is proposed that this additional section shall read as follows:

24 (1) A provisional or regular seaman's card issued under the great lakes seamen's security regulations, established by order in council P.C. 2306 of May 2, 1952 (hereinafter called the old regulations) shall be deemed to have been issued under these regulations, and a form prescribed by the minister under the old regulations shall be deemed to have been prescribed by the minister under these regulations.

(2) The old regulations shall be deemed to have been revoked and these regulations shall be deemed to have been substituted therefor, and the Interpretation Act applies accordingly.

The house will note that this does not in any way change the substance of the old regulations in any detail. My only reason for rising is that we made a firm declaration yesterday that there would be no immediate change in the old regulations.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): It is not my intention on third reading to extend the debate which has fully placed on record the opinions of hon. members concerning the effect of clause 2. I can only reiterate what was said yesterday, that clause 2 does not properly deal with the question of communism, disloyalty, sabotage or anything of that kind. It introduces a loose, improper, and in our opinon, a method of control inconsistent with our traditions. The fact that there was an order in council to this effect under the Emergency Powers Act, which came into being during the war emergency, does not in our opinion support the suggestion that the house should now give to the government in statutory form the power to make regulations, to decide what the penalty will be and to decide how the freedom of the individual will be dealt with.

We have made it clear that we are strongly of the opinion that proper laws, clearly defined, should be available to deal with this situation where people are seeking to undermine our free system in Canada. We believe, however, the freedom of any individual should at no time be threatened by star chamber proceedings or by proceedings which are of an undefined and undisclosed nature. We have placed that on the record. We believe the principle inherent in this piece of legislation is vicious. What justification there may have been for the order in council under the Emergency Powers Act, and which was apparent during the war emergency, I submit that there can be no support for the enactment in clear statutory form of these loose powers so long described as the King Henry VIII clause. This is a reversion to a practice that disappeared 400 years ago. We should not revive it today in specific form.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker):

That the bill be not now read a third time, but that the same be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they delete clause 2 thereof.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Before the question is put, I just want to say that I shall have to support the amendment. I support the amendment for the reasons given by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and the reasons that I mentioned yesterday. Neither the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) nor the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) explained clause 2 of this bill. All the explanations they made in the house yesterday were in connection with screening and there is nothing about screening in this clause. What this clause provides for is penalties for the violation of any regulation made under this provision in the regulations that were in the order in council, a copy of which the Minister of Justice was good enough to pass over to me yesterday, P.C. 2306 of May 2, 1952.

The penalties are imposed for a breach of any regulations the governor in council may see fit to pass by order in council. I do not believe this house should accept a bill of that kind.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Drew) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

| | |
|---|---|
| Aitken, Miss | Fulton |
| Argue | Gillis |
| Balcer | Green |
| Barnett | Hahn |
| Bell | Hamilton |
| Blackmore | Hansell |
| Blair | Harkness |
| Brooks | Hees |
| Bryson | Herridge |
| Cameron (Nanaimo) | Holowach |
| Campbell | Howe (Wellington-Huron) |
| Cardiff | Johnson (Kindersley) |
| Casselman | Johnston (Bow River) |
| Castleden | Jones |
| Charlton | Knight |
| Churchill | Leboe |
| Coldwell | Lennard |
| Diefenbaker | Low |
| Dinsdale | Macdonnell |
| Drew | MacInnis |
| Dufresne | MacLean |
| Ellis | McBain |
| Fairclough, Mrs. | McCullough (Moose Mountain) |
| Ferguson | McGregor |
| Fleming | |
| Fraser (Peterborough) | |

McLeod
Michener
Mitchell (London)
Monteith
Montgomery
Murphy (Lambton West)
Nesbitt
Nicholson
Nickle
Noseworthy
Pallett
Patterson
Pearkes
Quelch
Rowe
Shaw
Small
Stanton
Starr
Stewart (Winnipeg North)
Thatcher
Thomas
Trainor
Tustin
White (Middlesex East)
Winch
Yuill
Zaplitny—78.

NAYS

Messrs:

Abbott
Anderson
Applewhaite
Arsenault
Ashbourne
Balcom
Batten
Benidickson
Bennett (Grey North)
Blanchette
Boisvert
Boivin
Bonnier
Boucher (Restigouche-Madawaska)
Breton
Brisson
Brown (Brantford)
Brown (Essex West)
Buchanan
Byrne
Cameron (High Park)
Campney
Cannon
Cardin
Carter
Cauchon
Cavers
Clark
Cloutier
Cote
Crestohl
Croll
Dechene
Decore
Demers
Deschatelets
Deslieres
Dickey
Dumas
Dupuis
Enfield
Eudes
Eyre
Fairey
Follwell
Fontaine
Forgie
Fraser (St. John's East)
Gagnon
Garland
Garson
Gauthier (Lake St. John)
Gauthier (Portneuf)
Gingras
Gingues
Gour (Russell)
Gourd (Chapleau)
Gregg
Habel
Hanna
Hardie
Harris
Harrison
Hellyer
Henderson
Hosking
Houck
Howe (Port Arthur)
Huffman
Hunter
James
Jutras
Kickham
Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough)
Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare)
Lafontaine
Langlois (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere)
Langlois (Gaspe)
Leduc (Gatineau)
Leduc (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle)
Leduc (Verdun)
Lefrancois
Legare
Lesage
Lusby
MacKenzie
MacNaught
Macnaughton
McCann
McCubbin
McCulloch (Pictou)
McDonald
McIvor
McMillan
McWilliam
Maltais
Mang
Martin
Masse
Matheson
Meunier
Michaud
Mitchell (Sudbury)
Monette
Nixon
Pearson
Philpott
Picard
Pickersgill
Pinard
Pommer
Pouliot
Power (St. John's West)
Prudham
Purdy
Ratelle
Reinke
Richard (Ottawa East)
Roberge
Robichaud
Robinson (Simcoe East)
St. Laurent
Schneider
Simmons
Sinclair
Smith
Stuart (Charlotte)
Tucker
Viau
Villeneuve
Weaver
Weir
Weselak
White (Waterloo South)
Wood—135.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

RESUMPTION OF PROCEEDINGS OF COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: Before the next order of business is called may I say the Clerk informs me that there were three standing committee meetings which were to be called at 11.30 and could not meet because of the vote that was just taken. The committee chairmen have informed me that the meetings of the banking and commerce committee, the external affairs committee and the veterans affairs committee will resume their business immediately.

Mr. Bennett: The veterans affairs committee is not meeting until three o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Croll: The banking and commerce committee concluded their work this morning.

Mr. Speaker: Then I suppose it must be restricted to the external affairs committee. I presume the chairman of that committee is satisfied that that is the position.

Mr. Picard: Yes.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

General administration—

424. Departmental administration, $625,101.

The Chairman: Hon. members will find the vote on page 57 and the details commencing on page 486. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Fleming: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Chairman, as in past years, I shall introduce the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce with a short review of recent trade developments as they affect Canada.

Last year I said that 1953 might well bring forth a number of far-reaching decisions and important developments in the field of international trade relations. I think that I can now safely say that this has indeed been the case. Because of the decisions taken and the policies adopted in a number of important trading countries we have good reason to believe that we are, in many instances, rapidly moving towards the kind of trading relations we have been striving for since the end of the war. There are still many substantial obstacles to be overcome. However, the unprecedented progress of the past year has brought the ultimate objective of relatively unhampered multilateral trade much closer.

For the first time in many years we have concrete evidence that many of the world's trading nations are increasingly prepared to remove their restrictions against imports from the dollar area. The countries of the commonwealth, which account for a substantial proportion of world trade, reaffirmed at the Sydney finance ministers conference their support for the objectives of a freer system of multilateral trade. Closely following this conference a number of significant relaxations were made in the import controls of important sterling countries. In addition, the signatories to the general agreement on tariffs and trade decided in October, 1953, to maintain intact the tariff concessions bound under the general agreement.

In the United States the Randall commission submitted its report to the President on United States foreign economic and trade policy. The commission's recommendations, while perhaps not going as far as we would wish, nevertheless are largely constructive and progressive. Although it now appears that congress may not take immediate action to implement these recommendations, no doubt responsible leaders in congress and elsewhere in the United States will wish to see the commission's findings brought into force as quickly as possible.

There is, of course, a great deal of interest in and concern about the increasing protectionist pressures in the United States. There is no need to dramatize these developments by assuming that a trade war is about to break out between Canada and the United States. We are the largest customer of the United States as they are ours. I do not expect a trade war, either cold or hot, as long as we continue on both sides of the border to remember the strong interest of both countries in trading on a neighbourly basis. Our trade agreements with the United States have been negotiated as business deals. Concessions have been received and concessions have been granted and the resulting balance has been of mutual benefit to both countries.

It would, of course, be a matter of regret if the United States government were to take the initiative in adopting measures which would have the result of impairing U.S. trade with Canada and other friendly countries. But I give the overwhelming majority of the people of the United States credit for not wanting this to happen any more than we do. It should therefore be our policy to conduct ourselves in such a way as to give help to those who share our views and to show those who would withdraw concessions negotiated in good faith that such action is not in the interests of the United States.

It is noteworthy that progress in trade matters in the non-dollar world coincided with a decline in business activity in the United States. Despite this fact, sales to the United States from soft currency countries have not shown any appreciable decline. In fact, the sterling area has not only maintained its level of business with the United States but the pound is now stronger than it has been for many years and dollar and gold reserves held in London have reached record post-war levels. This development is in sharp contrast to the past unfavourable influences of United States business fluctuations on trade. It reflects, I believe, the underlying strength of the movement towards the recovery of world trade on a multilateral basis.

As the committee is well aware, Canada has consistently expressed its view that the creation of exclusive regional arrangements, trading behind protective barriers, distorts the economies of the countries following such practices and leads to inefficiency and high costs. The economic security which seems to result from such arrangements is of short duration and illusory in a competitive world. These facts have brought an increasing number of non-dollar countries to recognize that these arrangements and restrictive trade policies create more problems than they solve. In their own interest many non-dollar countries are increasingly prepared to relax their trade and exchange restrictions, and to move forward with plans for the eventual convertibility of their currency.

The United Kingdom, Canada's second best customer, has made extensive progress in removing import restrictions from agricultural, mineral and wood products. As a result of these important steps, about 70 per cent of Canada's exports to the United Kingdom, based on 1953 trade statistics, enter that country freely and are not subject to governmental restriction. Although most of the products thus freed from control are of a primary nature, we hope that the United Kingdom will soon relax its restrictions on goods in semi-processed and other categories.

Other countries of the sterling area have also taken significant steps to remove import controls which have discriminated against dollar goods. At Geneva last fall South Africa announced the removal of all discriminatory import restrictions. Since January 1 of this year Canadians have therefore had an opportunity to sell in the South African market on an equal footing with exporters of other countries.

New Zealand, Australia and the British West Indies have also recently announced important measures relaxing their restrictions against dollar goods. In the case of New Zealand in particular, these relaxations have affected an extensive variety of Canadian products.

The trend to freer trade has not been limited to commonwealth countries. In Europe, The Netherlands and Germany have freed many dollar imports from restrictions. Other European countries are actively studying the possibility of reducing their discriminatory controls on trade. In Latin America a number of Canada's important customers have also relaxed their trade restrictions against dollar imports. Among these countries are Brazil, Argentina, Uruguay and Colombia.

These developments are indeed encouraging, particularly when it is considered that they have been accompanied by a striking improvement in the internal and external financial position of these countries. In their external relations, most countries enjoyed increased exports and a more favourable balance of payments with the dollar area. The sterling area alone has increased its reserves by $672 million during 1953.

I believe that there is a close relationship between these remarkable results and the adoption of sound trading and internal policies. The gradual reduction of import controls, imposed for protective reasons, and the widespread trend to eliminate restrictions which have discriminated against dollar goods has undoubtedly improved the competitive position of the countries which have adopted such policies. It is significant to note that in 1953 the United Kingdom was able to increase its sales to Canada by $94 million over the previous year. This is an increase of 21 per cent; it also increased the United Kingdom's share of Canada's purchases from external sources from 9 per cent in 1952 to 10 per cent in 1953.

The remarkable strengthening of the United Kingdom's trading and financial position during the past year has undoubtedly placed that country in a much better position to place its currency on a convertible basis. It is, of course, impossible to say when this may happen since this decision can be made only by the government of the United Kingdom when it feels that its position is sufficiently strong to take this major step.

The recently concluded agreement on commerce with Japan represents a further advance in our efforts to create abroad better conditions for our exporters. We have established a mutually satisfactory basis for our trade with that country on terms which will ensure favourable treatment for Canadian exporters while safeguarding the interests of our manufacturers. In 1953 Japan was our third largest customer, buying nearly $119 million of Canadian products. This agreement will no doubt provide a permanent basis for the maintenance of high levels of Canadian trade with Japan.

As I mentioned a few moments ago, Canada has been a consistent advocate of multilateral trade. One of the major means by which we have actively implemented this policy has been through our participation in the general agreement on tariffs and trade. Last fall I had the pleasure of leading the Canadian delegation to the eighth session of the contracting parties to GATT. I welcomed the decisions reached there to maintain intact the whole structure of tariff concessions that had been negotiated by more than thirty countries over the last several years.

At the eighth session tentative arrangements were made for a review of the provisions of GATT at some appropriate time in the future. The general provisions of the agreement were originally intended to be of a temporary nature. Many countries, including Canada, now feel that they should be reconsidered and revised in a manner more consistent and more appropriate to present-day circumstances.

Mr. Macdonnell: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Certainly.

Mr. Macdonnell: The minister referred to a future discussion with regard to the provisions of GATT. He did so in general terms. Was there no time limit indicated?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes. The concessions were extended for eighteen months from the date of expiry, which was the end of the year, but the plan is to start a review of GATT in the autumn of this year.

Mr. Fleming: October 15.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

Mr. Rowe: Eighteen months from when?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): From the end of 1953. The agreements are bound for that length of time.

The review of GATT, whenever it takes place, will be greatly influenced not only by the experience gained in recent years but also by the policy matters now being formulated by the major trading countries. In this regard the role of the United States is of primary importance. The success or failure of any new steps is almost certain to depend on whether that country is in a position to give constructive leadership. If a review session is successfully held it may be found possible and desirable to subsequently conduct further tariff negotiations on a mutually beneficial basis.

During the forthcoming year major decisions hang in the balance. To a large extent these will decide whether or not the gains of the past year will be maintained and expanded still further. One of the most important factors in this balance is the future of United States commercial policy. If the United States is in a position to actively sponsor the expansion of trade and to implement this policy with appropriate legislation, there can be little doubt that the way will be open to the further expansion of trade. On the other hand, if the measures currently before congress are not implemented, and if steps to restrict imports are adopted, it will be indeed difficult to look to the future with optimism.

Let me turn now to the facts of our trading position. First, however, let me say a word about the general business situation. It has been evident for some time that the Canadian economy has been affected by the downturn in the United States which has been under way since mid-1953. Production and employment in Canada have declined moderately from the peak levels reached last year, although the reduction has been less pronounced than in the United States. In Canada, as in the United States, the slowdown in business purchasing, resulting in inventory liquidation in some lines, has been an important factor. This type of adjustment is usually self-correcting in character unless it is accompanied by a more general weakening in consumer demand or in investment or export demand. Fortunately consumer spending and private capital outlays in Canada have remained reasonably firm. In fact, of the major demands on the Canadian economy only exports have shown signs of falling off. Accordingly, I intend to limit my remarks at this time to a brief review of matters affecting our foreign trade.

For more than a year Canada's exports have shown a slight downward trend. In 1953 the value of Canadian exports amounted to $4,117 million compared with $4,301 million in 1952, a decline of 4 per cent. In the first quarter of the present year exports have undergone a further moderate reduction of about 5 per cent. Since prices are a little lower, the decline in terms of physical volume is somewhat smaller.

Any decline is of course unwelcome, but it should be borne in mind that this slight falling off in exports followed several years of substantial increases. Total sales abroad in the past year are still 15 per cent above the 1949 level in volume terms. This is about the same as the percentage rise in the national output during the same period. It considerably exceeds the increase in the volume of world trade. In other words, since 1949 Canada has continued to increase her share of sales in the international markets.

The fact that other nations are relying to an increasing extent upon Canada as a source of supply, especially for basic materials, is an important factor in our present expansion. But there are other reasons for Canada's growth. While much of the new burst of expansion, which occurred after Korea, was for the production of goods to be sold abroad, a major portion of the new capacity created in recent years has had the effect of replacing imports. The spectacular expansion in oil, natural gas and steel will, in the course of a few years, involve hundreds of millions of dollars less expenditures for imported materials. This type of development could, over the course of time, permit a relative shift of resources toward production for the domestic market.

This development does not, of course significantly lessen the importance of foreign trade to Canada. The nature of our resources is such that we shall always find it profitable to specialize heavily in the production of certain products and sell abroad the excess over and above our own needs.

Nevertheless as the size and industrial structure of the economy changes, the role of foreign trade will also change to some extent. In some periods a stable or even slightly declining level of exports is not necessarily indicative of a basic weakening in the economy. The tendency to gauge our economic strength solely on the basis of the movement of exports is, I think, a dangerous oversimplification of the forces which shape our development. I cannot see that our basic economic strength is substantially different now from what it was two or three years ago when export levels were rising at a rapid rate. There are of course other more temporary influences which have had an important bearing on current trends in our export trade.

One such influence has been the extraordinary conditions which have affected wheat sales in recent years. In the two crop year periods ending July 31, 1953, the unusual combination of record crops in Canada and a strong world market boosted Canadian sales of wheat and flour to an annual average of 371 million bushels. This was 142 million bushels above average exports for the preceding 20-year period. The wheat situation was reviewed in detail by the agricultural committee, but I state these figures here simply to indicate the extent to which higher sales of wheat contributed to the sharp rise in exports during this period.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I understand, of course, that the minister is reading from a prepared statement, but it is going to be difficult, I believe, for the chairman of the day during this discussion to hold the line. I do not believe we want to be in a position of trying to make hard and fast rulings and dictate too much to the members of the committee what they are to discuss. I understand that it is the sense of this committee that the more or less tacit agreement arranged when Mr. Speaker was in the chair will be held. I am going to ask the minister if it would be possible for him to omit from his general statement as much as possible of the material dealing with the sale of wheat, because, in fairness to the committee as a whole, should he make a statement on that subject it is going to be difficult to rule members on the other side of the house out of order on the anticipation rule if they should wish to meet his statement.

I realize we find ourselves in a rather difficult position because of the rather technical nature of the anticipation rule and the fact there is an amendment on the order paper. I am, therefore, taking this, my first opportunity, to draw the situation in which we find ourselves to the attention of the committee. I would ask the minister, as he would expect other members, to endeavour to omit as much as possible of the references to the sale of wheat specifically. I understand, of course, that in dealing with the over-all picture one cannot omit the figures that wheat contribute to that picture. Rather than have at this or a later stage to make a ruling which will be unpopular on both sides, I am going to ask all members of the committee to do the best they can to keep within what I feel was the spirit of the more or less tacit arrangement made just before this committee sat.

Mr. Rowe: Pardon me for interrupting, but I do submit everyone will try to follow what you have suggested. I feel, however, it would be difficult to deal intelligently with the Department of Trade and Commerce without having some reference to wheat such as the minister has indicated. It is not for the purpose of a specific debate on wheat, but the subject is so interwoven with all the other avenues of trade and commerce it seems to me we have to touch upon it.

The Deputy Chairman: I agree entirely with the hon. member who has just spoken. Perhaps I can be frank enough to say that I thought it was not undesirable to bring up the point when the minister was speaking, and not wait until some other member was speaking to raise the matter.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): In view of your remarks, Mr. Chairman, I would ask your permission to have my references to wheat expunged from the record.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not believe that is the general desire of the committee. As I tried to make clear when I rose, I do not wish to undertake to dictate the course that this discussion shall take. I did wish to point out at the first opportunity that we expect the unofficial understanding to be followed as closely as possible by both sides. It is my feeling, and hon. members will correct me if I am wrong, that these remarks of the minister's are not of a provocative nature but merely help to complete the general picture of trade and commerce. I believe hon. members are agreeable that they should remain on the record.

Mr. Fleming: Perhaps I could offer a suggestion, because this matter could raise difficulties from time to time during the debate. I am quite sure that the wish of all members of the committee is that they should hear what the minister has to say on the sales of wheat because that question is so inextricably woven into our whole trade pattern that I am sure this committee would be glad to extend their consent to the minister to mention this question. It is so closely related to all our other trade problems that it will only stultify the discussion if we remove all discussion about wheat. I think if we confine the discussion of wheat to the effect it has on the general economy, rather than internal problems which could be really deferred until next week, we could proceed in that way.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is all I was doing. I am omitting any further reference to wheat.

The Deputy Chairman: It would be in order when we are discussing the over-all trade policy of Canada to include wheat, but I do not think we should go into exports because they were very thoroughly discussed earlier.

Mr. Nicholson: If the minister has anything further to say about wheat from an international point of view, it would be quite in order to proceed.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I think I can leave it at what has been said. Another factor which has had a depressing effect on exports during the last six to nine months has been the declining level of activity in the United States economy. The importance of this influence will be apparent when we realize that in 1953 sales to the United States accounted for 59 per cent of our total exports. Nevertheless, the prevalent view among those who follow the United States economic situation is that the current recession has about run its course after a decline of 10 per cent in industrial output and 3 per cent in gross national product from the peak levels reached in 1953. If this is to be the full extent of the present decline, the recession has, by historic standards, been a relatively mild one.

Moreover, the effect on Canadian exports has been less by reason of the fact that the pulp and paper market and activity in the United States construction industry have remained comparatively firm throughout the adjustment. Wood products as a group account for 45 per cent of total Canadian sales in the United States market. Some other export items have not fared so well. Durable goods industries in the United States have been hardest hit by the downturn and this tended to accentuate the softening already under way in the international base metal market. Consequently, exports of copper, lead and zinc have shown an appreciable decline. More recently, however, some firming in demand for these items has occurred.

Business conditions have, in general, remained prosperous in most of the overseas areas which provide markets for Canadian goods. In the United Kingdom, Germany and Japan, which outside the United States are Canada's most important customers, industrial activity has been increasing and this, in turn, has helped to support purchasing of raw materials and foodstuffs from Canada. While exports to the United Kingdom declined last year the latest trade figures available show a major improvement in sales to this market compared with a year ago.

Conditions have not been universally favourable in all non-dollar markets. Exchange difficulties have been acute in some Latin American countries. In addition, increasingly competitive conditions have been encountered in this market, especially in the manufactured goods field. As a result Canadian exports to Latin America have declined considerably from the peak level reached in 1952 but are still running above sales of any previous year.

Looking at exports by commodity groups, markets for the principal forest products are generally firm. Consumption of newsprint in the United States has continued to increase slightly, inventories are not excessive and it is expected that this market will absorb at least the same amount of Canadian newsprint this year as last. The United States market for wood pulp has strengthened appreciably and sales are now running well ahead of a year ago. In overseas countries purchases from Canada are increasing. Canadian lumber is meeting sharp competition in the United States and so far this year sales to that country have been down moderately. Nevertheless, building activity in the United States has continued to increase, and this will be an important influence supporting the demand for Canadian lumber. In addition, there are firm prospects for substantially increased sales of lumber this year to the United Kingdom and other overseas countries. While certain other wood products, particularly plywood, are in easy supply position, it seems likely that exports of forest products as a whole will show a moderate increase in 1954. Since sales have held about even in the first quarter this would involve some improvement during the remainder of the year.

In the metals field, firm markets exist for Canada's output of nickel and aluminum. World supplies of other base metals have for some time been more than adequate to meet current needs and production cutbacks have occurred in several major producing areas. It is possible that in the months ahead sales will show some improvement. Before the end of the year it is expected that iron ore from Quebec-Labrador will be moving into the great lakes market adding to the already increasing volume of shipments from Steep Rock and Algoma ore properties. With the construction of new pipe line outlets the volume of Canadian crude oil moving into the United States will be considerably increased by the end of the year.

There has been some broadening out of our foreign markets for fish products during the past year. For the first time in several years Brazil now permits imports of salt cod from Canada. We have negotiated new trade agreements with Spain and Portugal which enlarge our opportunities to sell salt cod in those markets. The United Kingdom again this year is making a large purchase of B.C. salmon while both Australia and New Zealand have made a dollar allocation for the purchase of this product from Canada.

The one commodity group, apart from grains, likely to encounter a significant decline in export values this year is highly manufactured commodities such as automobiles, farm machinery, textile and leather goods and industrial, commercial and electrical equipment. As for farm machinery, demand in the United States market, which accounts for most of Canada's exports, has declined in line with the downward trend of farm income and also as a result of the unusually large purchases in recent years which have left farmers well stocked with equipment. The decline in exports of highly manufactured products taken as a group should, I think, be considered in the light of certain changes in the pattern of world trade generally. For one thing, in commonwealth countries and in other such traditional markets for Canadian manufactured goods, further industrialization has meant that these products are now in many cases produced domestically. Another important point is that in the years since world war II and even during the Korean episode the shortage of manufactured goods available from traditional sources such as the United Kingdom, Germany and Japan meant that Canada was able temporarily to participate in markets in which we would not have been able to compete in more normal circumstances.

It is, I think, important to remember that countries which are highly industrialized but scarce in natural resources depend largely on foreign sales of manufactured products to enable them to buy the large quantities of raw materials and food which they must obtain from outside their borders. We must remember also that their costs are geared to this necessity. With more capacity becoming available in these highly industrialized countries, and with demand for manufactured products tending to level off, Canadian manufacturers have found it increasingly difficult to compete in world markets. Such a situation should provide no particular cause for alarm. Canada does not lack for export opportunities and it is not necessary or even desirable for Canadian producers to be able to compete in world markets in all lines of merchandise. In our principal staple export items, Canadian producers are highly competitive the world over. So long as this is the case there is little basically wrong with our foreign trade position.

Increasing world supplies of manufactured goods have brought more competitive conditions in the domestic market as well as abroad. While imports increased substantially last year, especially in the early months, so far this year purchases from abroad have declined more than exports. The 7 per cent drop in imports in the first quarter considerably exceeds the reduction in total production and employment for the same period. This means that, for the time being at least, there has been an increase of the share of the home market going to the domestic producer, which is in sharp contrast to the trend one year ago. However, even with this smaller volume of imports, there is little evidence of any significant easing in the pressure of competition from foreign producers.

Mr. Chairman, I have attempted to explain some of the principal influences underlying recent trade trends. In spite of some adverse influences I think one can conclude that Canada's present export position is, on the whole, firmly based. I continue to be optimistic about the future of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Rowe: I did not want to interrupt the minister when he was speaking. When he mentioned the exports to the United States he said that 59 per cent of our total exports went to the United States and 45 per cent of that was wood products. Was that 45 per cent of our total exports or was it 45 per cent of the 59 per cent?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Fifty-nine per cent of our exports went to the United States the year before last and of that quantity 45 per cent was wood products.

Mr. Rowe: Forty-five per cent of the 59 per cent, not of the total?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, that is right, of the 59 per cent.

Mr. Fleming: In approaching this present debate it is not perhaps amiss to remind ourselves that we are dealing with the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and that those estimates propose the expenditure on account of this department, along with the supplementary estimates, of the sum of $18,789,654 for the year 1953-54 as compared with a total of $17,316,971 last year. In other words, the estimates of this year on behalf of this department call for an increase in expenditure of approximately $1,470,000.

This department, from the point of view of expenditure, is a relatively stable one. Its expenditures do not vary greatly from year to year. While its expenditures are substantial, this department is not one of the big spending departments of government.

The stability of which I have made mention is also reflected in the size of the staff of the department. The report of the department for the calendar year 1953 indicates that the staff within the department, excluding the board of grain commissioners, the Canadian government elevators and the dominion bureau of statistics, is 1,197, which is one more that in the year 1952, and precisely the same figure as in the year 1951. The figures also on staff of the three organizations to which I have referred, the board of grain commissioners, the Canadian government elevators and the dominion bureau of statistics, are also relatively stable, bringing the total to 3,669 for the year 1953.

This present debate on trade will, I take it, not range over the entire field of our trading relations with the world. In the first place, we had an extensive debate on trade with Japan when the house debated the motion for ratification of the trade treaty with Japan on May 12, and there has been some discussion already in the house yesterday on the matter of wheat, which of course occupies a position of leading importance in all of Canada's export trade plans.

The subject of Canada's trade and commerce is one of first importance to every Canadian. Twenty-five per cent of Canada's national production goes to the export market. Our per capita share of the trade of the world is exceeded by only two countries, namely, New Zealand and Hong Kong. Last year Canada's total trade, both export and import, at $8,500 million means that with a population of 15 million, each Canadian had a share of approximately $560 in the total Canadian external trade. While I have not seen the final world trade figures for 1953 in relation to the position occupied by the various countries, I believe it is a fact that Canada did continue to occupy third place among the trading nations of the world, as she did in 1952, exceeded only by the United States and the United Kingdom.

Now, sir, we have had the minister's statement on this subject. The minister's statements are always interesting, but they do follow a very pronounced and typical pattern. Without being unfairly critical one might say that the minister's statement this morning was typical. It was a selective statement. No room was found in it for reference to the extensive unemployment that exists in Canada today. No mention was made in it, for instance, of the fact that last week several of the auto manufactories of this country were obliged to suspend their present operations. Indeed, the minister did succeed in glossing over, without spending too much time on them, those factors in the external trade situation that do give every thoughtful Canadian very serious concern at the present time. To the extent to which the minister permitted himself even to concede the existence of such factors, his remarks were intended to discount the extent and importance of them. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think it is not unfair to say that the minister's statement, as on so many occasions, finishing as it did, with the note of optimism, was characterized by the Nelson touch. The minister did succeed in putting his glass to the blind eye that the minister has been found to possess in matters relating to Canada's external trade that ought to be giving us concern. The minister simply does not see those.

Canada's external trade has not changed in relation to the problems it presents, has not changed since we debated the subject on the first item of the minister's estimates in this house a little over a year ago. Certainly, as I see the problem, rightly or wrongly, the problem is essentially the same as I attempted to describe it in speaking in that debate on April 22, 1953. The problem, however, has developed in the intervening 14 months, and the developments have followed lines that were visible at that time. It has followed the course of which I think those of us in this part of the house sought to warn the house and the government at that time.

I know that figures are not the most interesting subject to follow; nevertheless we cannot validly estimate the trends or the problems that face Canada in relation to her external trade without due reflection upon the figures of exports and imports. I have here a table which I prepared from government sources concerning Canada's exports and imports for the years 1952 and 1953, arranged in terms of the total figures and also in terms of percentage. I am not asking any consideration of the committee in this regard. If it would be more convenient to have this table on the records of the house instead of my reading it I would be quite pleased to deal with it on that basis. Perhaps it might save a little time.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the hon. member consent to have this table printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fleming: The table follows:

CANADA'S TRADE WITH THE WORLD
(In Millions of Dollars)

IMPORTS

| — | 1952 | % of total | 1953 | % of total |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| From U K | 360 | 9 | 453 | 10·3 |
| From Commonwealth | 184 | 4·5 | 171 | 4 |
| Total U.K. and Commonwealth | 544 | 13·5 | 624 | 14·3 |
| From U.S.A. | 2,977 | 74 | 3,221 | 74 |
| Elsewhere | 509 | 12 | 538 | 12 |
| Total outside Commonwealth | 3,486 | 86 | 3,759 | 86 |
| Grand Total | 4,030 | — | 4,383 | — |

EXPORTS

| — | 1952 | % of total | 1953 | % of total |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| To U.K. | 746 | 17·3 | 665 | 16·1 |
| To Commonwealth | 262 | 6 | 233 | 6 |
| Total U.K. and Commonwealth | 1,008 | 23·5 | 898 | 22 |
| To U.S.A. | 2,307 | 53·5 | 2,419 | 59 |
| Elsewhere | 987 | 23 | 801 | 19 |
| Total outside Commonwealth | 3,294 | 76·5 | 3,220 | 78 |
| Grand Total | 4,301 | — | 4,117 | — |

1952 — Export Surplus: 271
1953 — Import Surplus: 266

| Total Trade Percentage: | 1952 | 1953 |
|---|---|---|
| With U.S. | 63·4 | 67 |
| With U.K. | 13·3 | 13·1 |

What is evident from these figures as to Canada's export and import trade in 1952 and in 1953 can be summed up in the terms of these important trends. The minister referred to one or two in his remarks on the import side. I think we are principally concerned with our trade with the United Kingdom and with the United States, and the position they hold as a percentage of world trade. In 1952, Canada imported from the United Kingdom

[The Deputy Chairman.]

$360 million worth of goods, and that represented 9 per cent of our total imports. In 1953, as the minister mentioned, the figure increased to $453 million and the percentage to 10·3. That was an increase which I think we all welcomed. I go further, Mr. Chairman, and say that I think we would all welcome a much greater increase. From the commonwealth there was no very material change in either value or percentage of our imports as between 1952 and 1953.

However, from the United States in 1952 we imported goods to the value of $2,977 million, and in 1953 $3,221 million, and our percentage in the two cases remained uniform at 74 per cent of the total. In the grand total our imports for 1952 were $4,030 million and they increased to $4,383 million in 1953.

On the export side, we see that our exports to the United Kingdom showed a drop in 1953 as compared with 1952, from $746 million in 1952 to $665 million in 1953, and they also show that the percentage dropped from 17·3 per cent to 16·1 per cent. Our exports to the commonwealth remained stable in the two years both as to amount and percentage.

But to the United States our exports in 1952 were $2,307 million and in 1953 rose to $2,419 million. Similarly, because the total of Canadian exports last year was reduced from $4,301 million in 1952 to $4,117 million in 1953 the percentage of exports to the United States showed a substantial increase, rising from 53·5 per cent in 1952 to 59 per cent in 1953.

Before I leave this comparison in trade figures for these two years, Mr. Chairman, I think it is interesting to look at them in relation to two other subjects. The first is where we stand in regard to the over-all surplus. In 1952 Canada had an export surplus, or what used to be called a favourable balance of trade, of $271 million, but in 1953 that had changed and we no longer had an export surplus. We had what is now called an import surplus, or what we used to call an unfavourable balance of trade, of $266 million.

I leave this subject with this one further observation, Mr. Chairman, that in looking at the percentage of our total trade, whether export or import, occupied by the United Kingdom on the one hand, and the United States on the other, it will be seen that in 1952 we did 63·4 per cent of our total external trade with the United States. In 1953 that percentage had risen to 67 per cent. In other words, in 1953 we were doing slightly more than two-thirds of our total external trade with one country, namely, the United States.

The figures for the United Kingdom on the other hand show that the percentage of our total trade that we did with the United Kingdom in 1952 was 13·3 per cent, and that that has fallen slightly in 1953 to 13·1 per cent of the total.

As to the first four months of 1954, for which the figures are available, our export trade has undergone a further decrease, and our import trade has likewise shown a decrease. The export figures for the first four months of the year have dropped from $1,219 million in 1953 to $1,164 million in 1954. Our imports are down from $1,390 million in 1953 to $1,282 million in the first four months of 1954. Our exports to the United States in this four-month period show a slight decrease of $48 million. Our exports to the United Kingdom show a slight increase of $5 million. Our imports from the United Kingdom show a decrease of $9 million, and our imports from the United States show a decrease of $104 million.

Now I hope I have not wearied the house with that review of what seem to me to be very important figures. They show unmistakably the existence of certain trends.

First, there is a continuing drop in Canada's over-all external trade. That drop has now been continuing for some 16 months up to the end of the period to which I referred, namely, April 30, 1954.

Second, the drop in exports began sooner and is still continuing, and in that over-all period of some 16 months the drop in exports has considerably exceeded the proportionate drop in imports.

Third, Canada has incurred in the period in question an adverse balance of trade, in other words, what is now called an import balance. That import balance continued throughout the whole period of 1953 and has continued in the first four months of 1954, because in this first four months of 1954 our imports exceeded our exports by $118 million.

Fourth, our trade with the United States simply dwarfs our trade with all other countries, whether taken individually or combined, to an extent which is daily becoming more serious and more perilous for Canada. Our trade eggs are being placed in one basket and that basket is by no means the most certain or satisfactory trade basket in the light of history.

Fifth, with that one country, namely the United States, we have today an adverse balance of trade which, in the period I have been discussing, has almost set records. An adverse balance of commodity trade on the part of Canada in relation to the United States is not new. It is an historic fact. But now the extent of it is so great as to call for the most serious examination on the part of all Canadians.

Sixth, on an examination of the nature of our trade, it will be seen, I think, that it is in relation to our agricultural products, that so vulnerable feature of Canada's economy, that the problems to which I have referred appear for Canada in their most serious aspect.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

---

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, following my review of the figures of external trade of the past two years and four months, I should like to turn now to examine more closely our trading relationships with certain countries. I pass over our trading relationships with Japan because of the extensive discussion we had on that subject on May 12.

Lately there have been tabled in the house copies of new trade agreements with Portugal and with Spain; and the minister this morning announced the signing yesterday in Rome of a trade agreement with Italy. May I say at once that so far as these trade treaties offer hope of increasing the shipments principally of Canadian dried salt codfish to these countries, these agreements will, of course, be welcomed. We shall be glad indeed to see any opportunities provided for extending Canadian exports, particularly in the commodities principally affected by these treaties.

I now turn to our trade with the United Kingdom. In the last year before the war we sent to the United Kingdom 35·5 per cent of our total exports. In 1953 we sent to the United Kingdom just 16·1 per cent of our total exports. I am aware of the fact that percentages do not always tell the whole story but nevertheless it seems to me that there is here reason for concern. Great Britain has been our best market; it has been our traditional market, particularly for our agricultural surplus. It is because of that fact that it is so important that we retain the British market. The fact of the matter is, however, that over a period of years we have been losing the British market for many of our principal food products. That market is virtually closed to our shipments of bacon, pork, beef and apples. Our shipments of fish to that market are much smaller than they used to be. Our shipments of cheese are only a fraction of what they used to be. Our shipments of wheat to that country are down substantially in volume and value.

But, Mr. Chairman, this loss of the British market does not seem yet to give the government any worry. In the face of this alarming loss of the British market for our agricultural surplus, if one could see on the part of the government some evidence of concern, some evidence that the situation worries them, and that they might for that reason want to exert heroic efforts to recover that market, then one would not be disposed to view the situation with the same alarm as one must when one sees on the part of the government, in the face of this loss of our best traditional market, what appears to be complete indifference and resignation. We in this part of the chamber do not view the loss of the British market, particularly for our agricultural surplus, with any degree of resignation. We conceive it to be the duty of the government to exert every effort within its power to seek to recover that lost market.

There are various ways in which that desirable end can be furthered. Mr. James S. Duncan, the chairman of the dollar-sterling trade council, in a statement which he issued on April 14, drew attention to the desirability of increasing our purchases from the United Kingdom. In that statement he said:

> "Based on last year's trade pattern, if we could transfer only 7 per cent of our imports from the United States to the United Kingdom, it would eliminate Britain's trade deficit with us and put her in a much better position to buy our products," said Mr. Duncan. The council's purpose is to assist in this 7 per cent transfer of imports.

Mr. Chairman, 7 per cent does not look like a large percentage; yet the striking fact is that if we brought about a transfer of 7 per cent of our purchases from the United States to the United Kingdom we would in that way close up Britain's trade deficit with us and put her in possession of dollars with which to buy here goods that she needs.

In his recent visit to this country Mr. Peter Thorneycroft, president of the British board of trade, drew attention to the fact that Britain desires to increase her purchases from Canada and also to increase her investments in Canada. But, as he strikingly put it, you cannot invest a deficit; you cannot invest a deficit either in terms of capital investment or in terms of consumer or capital goods. We should therefore like to see some evidence on the part of the government of a realistic appreciation of this fact and a realistic approach to it. We do not, however, find either.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mention was made this morning by the Minister of Trade and Commerce of the fact that the internal position of Britain within the sterling bloc has strengthened greatly, particularly during the past year. Britain's trading and financial position within the sterling area has certainly strengthened materially. In the face of that fact, we may hope that the day of the restoration of the convertibility of currency may be eventually coming within sight. Indeed, the recent agreement entered into by Mr. Butler with the government of the West German republic seems to indicate that Britain is now moving by steady stages in the direction of the removal of trade restrictions and also of some of the currency restrictions which hitherto have been applied. Be that as it may, Mr. Chairman, the fact is that unless we become more seriously alive to the dangers to our economy resulting from the loss of the British market we are courting a danger particularly for the basic industry of agriculture in this country.

Other nations are not standing idly by and ignoring the importance of the British market. In recent months we have seen evidence of the desire of Russia to expand her trade with Great Britain. Indeed some rather striking statements have been emanating from Russia about the desire to extend trade with Great Britain, and there have been placed in Britain by the Russian government important orders for machinery and other British industrial products. But, Mr. Chairman, what of the other side of this possible trade between Britain and Russia? This is something which is of direct concern to Canada. I call the attention of hon. members to a statement made on March 23 of this year in the House of Commons at Westminster by Mr. Derick Heathcoat-Amory, the British minister of overseas trade, when he said this:

> The British market is "wide open to Russian grain, timber, metals and manganese ore".
>
> Speaking in debate on east-west trade, he said it would be "very helpful if larger quantities of grain could be made available".

Canada has almost unlimited quantities of grain that she would very much like to sell. Why is the government not making spirited efforts to see to it that it is to Canadian grain that the British purchaser turns rather than to Russian grain? There are, of course, questions of policy involved on the part of Britain in extending trade with Russia. It is thought that it may help to contribute toward peace if east-west trade is restored somewhat. But, Mr. Chairman, knowing that the Russians are prepared to sell Britain grain, and particularly wheat, what is Canada doing with this huge accumulation of wheat?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We are selling grain to Russia.

Mr. Fleming: Oh, jolly little Canadian grain is going to Russia! You could almost put it in a hat.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, no. Two or three ships are required.

Mr. Fleming: Our trade with Russia has never been a serious factor in our external trade, but our trade with Great Britain has been a vital factor in our external trade. What we would like to see on the part of the government is a realistic appreciation of the necessity of claiming that British market, particularly for our grain products.

Now, sir, I turn to the subject of our trading relations with the United States. I drew attention this morning to the alarming extent to which our trading eggs have been placed in the American basket, to the fact that in 1953 a trifle over two-thirds of Canada's total external trade, both export and import, was done with this one country. We have some very serious problems facing us in reference to our trade with the United States. The mere size of that trade, the extent to which we seem to be putting our eggs in that one basket, is of itself cause for alarm, particularly when we have regard for the history of American trade in the past.

Last year we had an adverse balance of trade with the United States of around $800 million. That of itself, it seems to me, is also an alarming factor.

The next factor that should give us cause for deep concern is the fact that the United States, through government policies, has accumulated vast stores of agricultural products which are directly competitive with those of Canada. On March 17 of this year a statement emanated from Washington to the effect that before the United States embarked upon any policy of disposing of these surpluses in the external markets of the world there would be consultation with Canada. Well, sir, the fruits of the consultation are not very impressive indeed.

When we see what has happened within the past four or five days to the price of wheat I do not think anyone in the house can be impressed with the benefits of consultation. Consultation has not done very much in arriving at any policies that will be of benefit to the agricultural producers of Canada. The minister this morning in his review made reference to the Randall report. That report, which was submitted to the President of the United States on January 22 of this year, is a document which, so far as the majority on that commission was concerned, contained two principal recommendations to the president. The first was that there should be a cut in American tariff rates of 5 per cent per annum for the next three years and, second, that there should be a three-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. That was the majority report.

The reaction within congress to that report so far has not been very encouraging. Indeed the problems faced by the president in relation to that report and in the way of implementation of its recommendations seem to be best demonstrated by the fact that there is no indication whatever at Washington that there is going to be any measure to cut tariff rates in the manner indicated, and also by the president's compromise with regard to the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. The president has indicated to congress that he is prepared to accept a one-year extension of this act. Some papers have referred to this as a surrender on the part of the president. I do not know that that is an altogether fair judgment to pass, but in any event it is a compromise on the part of the president and it does serve to indicate the strength of the forces within the American congress who are going to seek to pursue policies that will create difficulties for the Canadian producer, particularly the producer of raw materials.

The next factor of serious concern for us in our trade relationship with the United States relates to the American attitude respecting the general agreement on tariffs and trade. Our experience in the past two and a half years as a signatory nation to GATT has been, so far as the United States is concerned, disquieting. We all regard the United States as a good neighbour, a sincere ally. We think that the cause to which the United States, Canada and the other nations of the free world are dedicating their efforts is a cause of good faith, good faith in dealings between men and good faith in dealings between nations. When the President of the United States, in pursuance of authority conferred upon him by the congress of the United States, enters into engagements with Canada and other nations signatories to GATT on behalf of the United States, it seems to Canadians that congress should be prepared to keep faith.

But, Mr. Chairman, the fact is that there have been on the part of the United States congress not one but several breaches of the provisions of GATT, breaches not simply of the spirit of GATT but breaches of the letter of GATT. We recall that in 1952, in breach of the provisions of GATT, the United States congress, through what is called the Andresen amendment, applied certain restrictions against the importation of Canadian dairy products. In 1953 those restrictions were extended. Not long ago the Canadian government, at the request of the United States government, applied restrictions upon exports of Canadian oats to the United States.

I am not going to repeat what I have said on previous occasions with regard to this step taken by the Canadian government. I think it will suffice to say that in my view the Canadian government had no business, not only to acquiesce in the breach of GATT but to make itself a willing accomplice. The minister may say we might have had a difficult situation to face with the United States in view of the pressure that was being exerted upon the executive government down there to apply some form of tariff restriction on the importation of Canadian oats, but, Mr. Chairman, I affirm that it was no part of the duty of the Canadian government to come to the rescue of the American government under those conditions and itself apply restrictions upon the export of Canadian oats to the United States.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I wonder whether my hon. friend will let me clear up a misconception in his mind. It is perfectly legitimate, under the provisions of GATT, to restrict the import of any commodity where the price is under price support, and oats are under price support. I agree that dairy products are not under price support and that was a violation of GATT, but when my hon. friend takes it into the field of oats, wheat, barley, flax and rye he is getting into a field where action taken by the United States is not a violation of GATT. I might say that we support the price of butter and we prohibit the importation of butter from the United States, which is legitimate under GATT, just as it is legitimate for the United States to take any action it likes in connection with oats.

Mr. Fleming: The manner in which the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr. Chairman, has commented on this matter I think is indicative of an attitude which should be condemned in this house. The fact is that the Canadian government has been anxious apparently to be the apologist for the actions of the United States in seeking restrictions on the export of Canadian oats to the United States. There is not one thing that the minister has said that justifies the imposition by the Canadian government upon Canadian producers of oats of a restriction on the export of their oats to the United States.

The fact remains that the Canadian government came to the rescue of the United States government in what would have been an embarrassing situation in relation to our trading relations with the United States, and relieved the United States government of that particular embarrassment by itself manacling the Canadian producers and exporters of oats.

The story does not end there, unhappily. We see in Washington today that the same kind of pressure is being exercised now in search of restrictions upon the export of Canadian lead and zinc to the United States. I have asked the minister in the house on several different occasions about this matter, and the minister has indicated there have been no communications passing on this subject between the two governments.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Surely, Mr. Chairman, I did not so indicate. If I did, it is entirely erroneous. Of course, we have made representations.

Mr. Fleming: I have not looked at the particular statement the minister made but the inference I drew from the statement he made with respect to the question was that there had been no formal communications on this subject in regard to the request that has been mentioned in the press statement from Washington, seeking on the part of the Canadian government some restrictions upon the export of Canadian lead and zinc to the United States.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I assure the hon. member that, in the first place, no such request has been received from the United States asking that we restrict exports of lead and zinc. The report of the tariff commission is before the president, and its contents are unknown. Certainly Canada has filed a formal protest against any action that will restrict shipments of Canadian lead and zinc into that market.

Mr. Fleming: I am sure we are glad to hear that because this matter is of very serious concern to the Canadian metal producers. I may say that the press has carried some disturbing reports in this field. For instance, on April 19 a Canadian Press report from Washington read as follows:

> The United States likely will ask Canada shortly to curb shipments of lead and zinc into the American market. The request may take the form of a suggestion that Canada volunteer to reduce exports, just as it agreed earlier this year to reduce shipments of oats, United States informants said yesterday.
>
> Canadian exports of lead and zinc to the United States totalled almost $100 million in 1952. The United States domestic industry, faced with declining market, has appealed for some form of tariff protection.

There is another form of restriction that seems to be proposed by Washington at the expense of Canadian producers, which I believe should give us concern. We have seen following these bumper crops of wheat in this country a vast accumulation of wheat in Canada. I have mentioned already the fact that the efforts on the part of the Canadian government to dispose of that huge surplus in the United Kingdom have not been adequate. Whatever may be said about the proportion or percentage of Canadian wheat out of the total that has been going into the United Kingdom market, the fact of the matter is that for the first 9½ months of the present crop year just 196 million bushels of Canadian wheat went into the United Kingdom market, whereas in the full crop year 1952-53 our exports to the United Kingdom amounted to 378 million bushels. It is evident, therefore, there is a drastic reduction in the volume of Canadian wheat exports to the United Kingdom. In the face of that, Mr. Chairman, listen to this. This is a report from Washington dated April 23, and reads:

Ezra Taft Benson says, in friendly spirit, that he would like to see Canada impose controls on her grain production.

It will be recognized that the gentleman in question is the United States secretary of agriculture, and in making the statement he did he is no doubt reflecting the policy of the United States administration. He added, and we are told he added with a smile:

It would please us if Canada imposed controls on her acreage.

I think this house would like to know whether the Canadian government is going to entertain proposals of that kind from the United States or whether the Canadian government is determined to follow policies that will assure for the Canadian producer markets for his production. What is the Canadian government doing about these matters? Have there been any protests against comments of this kind as to United States' governmental policy?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have time for only one brief comment on GATT as such. I have made my comments on what I think are disturbing aspects of the attitude of the United States congress towards its responsibilities under the general agreement on tariffs and trade. But what of GATT in the wider context? On October 15 next the nations who are signatories to GATT will be convening for the purpose of planning for the extension of GATT. Since the general agreement was extended at the last meeting, there have been certain developments that have not been commented upon by the minister.

In the first place, there were some changes made at that time in regard to the provisions of GATT. Recognition was given to the fact that the government of The Netherlands was quite justified in applying certain restrictions upon the importation of certain materials from the United States in retaliation for the imposition of restrictions upon the importation of Netherlands dairy products into that country. Since this matter became a lively subject of concern to us no one in this house so far as I am aware proposed that retaliatory measures be applied against the United States. But I believe we want to know, and we have not been told, whether the Canadian government has now acquiesced in and accepted the breaches of GATT on the part of the United States congress. It was just over a year ago that this house unanimously passed my motion calling upon the Prime Minister who was then about to leave for a conference in Washington to register with the United States government the strong protest of this house against the breaches by the American congress of the general agreement on tariffs and trade, which affected The Netherlands, which affected us and which affected other nations that export dairy products.

We have not heard anything from the government now for over a year as to any protest or any efforts that they are making to seek a removal of those measures taken by the United States congress which are directed against Canadian dairy products, and which are a direct violation of the provisions of GATT. What is the government's policy on this matter? What is the government's aim, and above all what are the government's efforts in this direction, if any?

I close with this question: What do we consider to be the function of government in this country in relation to trade? We are thinking, of course, particularly about external trade, having regard to the jurisdiction of parliament in relation to trade and commerce under the British North America Act.

So far as the Canadian government is directly involved in the sale of any particular commodity, as in the case of wheat, we of course expect of the government that it shall be an energetic and resourceful salesman, having due regard to the fact that the interests of the western wheat farmer particularly are at stake, and that those interests are basic to the health of the whole economy of Canada. But in those cases where the government is not directly involved in the bulk trade of commodities, what is the function of government? As I understand it, the function of government, that which has been assigned to the government by statements which have come from the Prime Minister and others in relation to the whole field of economic activity within the country, is to create a healthy climate within which free enterprise, the enterprise of individuals, may flourish.

What is the government doing in relation to its duty to create as healthy a climate as may be possible within which individual enterprise and individual salesmanship may flourish? I have drawn attention to certain matters to which the government it seems to me is simply directing a blind eye, and is not even admitting the existence of the problem. And when the government does not even admit the existence of the problem, there is small hope for its addressing its most resolute efforts to the solution of that problem. That is the first point.

Then, in the second place there is this question of Canada's competitive position in the markets of the world. Surely it disturbed, even if it did not surprise, hon. members when they heard the minister say today in his closing remarks—if I heard him correctly—that there was no cause for alarm because Canadian producers at the present time may not be able to compete in certain world markets. Mr. Chairman, surely it must be a matter of concern to each one of us here when the Canadian producer is not in a position to compete with the producers of other countries in the markets of the world. Is this a matter of no concern? Is this a matter of such indifference to us that the Minister of Trade and Commerce can say, "Oh, there is no cause for alarm here", and then sit down and feel perfectly satisfied?

Mr. Chairman, surely that is a poor substitute for facing problems, and facing them squarely. The fact of the matter is—and leading economists in this country have drawn attention to it—that Canada's position in the competitive markets of the world has been placed in jeopardy by a high-cost economy. What is one of the leading ingredients in that high-cost economy? I tell you, sir, it is high government costs and high taxation. It will be remembered—

Mr. Byrne: Time.

Mr. Fleming: Well, nobody pays much attention to what the hon. member for Kootenay East says, with his silly interruptions; and I shall pay no attention to him.

Speaking for the government the Minister of Trade and Commerce said on February 15 that the government had decided that this year would be a year of loosening the purse strings on government spending. Is it any wonder, then, that there is a high-cost economy here, and that that is hamstringing the efforts of Canadian producers to find markets abroad for their produce? It was in that connection that the Ottawa Citizen, a paper friendly to the government, said this:

> Rather than respond by giving Canadian manufacturers additional tariff protection, the Canadian government might well consider revising downward its own sales taxes. This would put Canadian business in a better position to compete with American goods, and incidentally with those from Japan and other outside sources. It is true that the lost revenues must be made up. Apart from resort to higher taxes in other fields, the government might find itself taking in more money from taxes at the reduced level, because of the stimulating effect on domestic business.

This government could make a substantial contribution to the improvement of the competitive position of the Canadian producer in the export markets of the world by reducing these impositions that it places upon the cost of Canadian production.

The one thing that would be unforgivable in this situation would be inaction on the part of the government. Inaction results from smug complacency, from satisfaction with the situation as it is, from closing one's eyes to the dangers of the situation, particularly the dangers confronting the Canadian agricultural producer. What we demand is recognition of these difficulties; no Pollyanna attitude, but rather a frank and realistic appreciation of the difficulties and then a determination to grapple with them and, as it is within the government's power, to clean house and in its own way contribute to improving the competitive position of the Canadian producer in the markets of the world.

Mr. Thatcher: Mr. Chairman, I shall not speak at great length. I have been particularly interested in the debate which has taken place thus far. While in the restaurant at the noon recess I noted that General Gruenther, commander of the NATO forces, is in Ottawa. I hope he will have a pleasant visit. I think, too, that he might find a concrete method of strengthening his NATO forces if he would listen to some of the debates taking place in the House of Commons today; I am convinced that the most obvious way to strengthen NATO is for the United States to enlarge the economic as well as the military foundations under the alliance.

Recently there has been a good deal of economic friction between the United States and Canada. I believe people on both sides of the border hope that friction will not continue. There are few Canadians who do not realize how dependent we are upon the United States market. The minister told us this morning that 59 per cent of all our exports go there. But that trade certainly is not one-sided. Last year, we bought $757 million more from the Americans than we sold to them. And so I suggest the Americans, too, should be interested in the maintenance of cordial trade relations between our two countries.

Many Canadians—and I am one of them—feel that recently in trade matters the Americans have not been treating us exactly as we think they should treat a friendly country. Washington originally inspired the Geneva agreement. I remember well that, quite willingly, this parliament turned its back a few years ago on imperial preferences and entered the Geneva agreement. We did so because we believed that it would lead to freer trade, and, to a certain extent, it has.

Yet while we have made major tariff concessions under the agreement, in the ensuing years the Americans have been most reluctant to proceed with a progressive lowering of tariffs. So far as Canada is concerned, most of the concessions the Americans have made thus far have been on raw materials and semi-processed goods. So far as manufactured goods are concerned, the tariff rates are still practically prohibitive. That fact has put most of our manufacturers in this country in a very difficult position.

Today the United States manufacturer has a home market of roughly 155 million people, and he is protected from outside competition by a very high tariff barrier. Our manufacturers in Canada have a potential market of only about 15 million people and because of the low tariff barriers they have to share that market with the American manufacturers.

I find it very difficult to understand the attitude of American businessmen. On the one hand, in a very generous way, they give away billions of dollars in military and foreign aid. Yet, on the other hand, they refuse to lower their tariff barriers to let the other NATO countries strengthen themselves. The paradox does not seem to make sense. I say that the United States trade policy is threatening the very foundations of the NATO agreement today. If the United States congress does not wake up to the fact soon they may find the alliance crumbling. I hope the Minister of Trade and Commerce will give General Gruenther such a message while he is in Ottawa today. If he really wants to strengthen the alliance, let his country take economic measures, as well as military ones.

I should like to know what United States' businessmen fear. These businessmen always preach the virtues of competition. They are always chiding their neighbours that they lack the great competitive spirit which has made the United States great. Yet, as I see it, these American businessmen are not practising what they preach. They maintain a very high tariff wall to protect themselves from outside competition. The minute the president or anyone else suggests that the tariff walls should be lowered a little, they scream in agony.

The Geneva agreement originally promised a progressive lowering of tariff barriers. I say that our American friends have not lived up to the spirit of that agreement. For more than six years it has been pretty obvious that the United States has failed to reciprocate to an appreciable extent the concessions which Canada has made under the treaty. What is even more serious, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Eglinton, on numerous occasions the United States have actually violated the agreement. The case of dairy products was mentioned. The trade minister says that as far as oats and rye are concerned they did not violate the agreement. Well, as I understand it, they certainly violated the spirit of the agreement. I feel the United States government literally blackmailed the Canadian government into accepting those quota restrictions, and they did so at a time when western Canada was bulging with full granaries of oats and rye. I do not think we should have been forced into such a position.

Obviously there are some congressmen and some senators in the United States who think that the Geneva agreement is just a scrap of paper which they can violate at any time for political reasons. According to newspaper reports, the United States is considering embargo restrictions on lead, zinc and fish products. I must say that I am not entirely satisfied with the assurances the minister gave us this afternoon that these restrictions likely will not take place. If the United States does proceed, once again it will be a violation of the Geneva agreement. Once again large segments of our economy are going to be seriously hurt. Once again the United States is going to use Canadians just as marginal suppliers—taking our materials when there is a scarcity, refusing to take them when they are plentiful. The time has come, Mr. Chairman, when this government must make its position clear as to exactly what it will do, if the United States does proceed with the restrictions that are being mentioned.

If the United States is going to continue to violate GATT Canada should re-examine her whole position under the Geneva agreement. Certainly a treaty is of little use to Canada when the main signatory ignores the major provisions. Therefore, I urge this government to make its position crystal clear in this debate, as to what it will do if the United States does proceed with an embargo on lead, zinc and fish products. As I see it, the Americans should be told that Canada would be forced to retaliate. Canada would have to take counter-measures. Perhaps those counter-measures should include embargoes or restrictions; perhaps they should include some counterbalancing tariff; perhaps they should even include an export tax on asbestos, nickel, or some other product which the United States must buy from us.

I suggested such a policy last December before the embargo was put on oats. It is not going to help either country to get into a price war. If we get into a price war with the United States I do not suppose there is any way in which we can be the winner. Yet sooner or later Canada is going to have to stop turning the other cheek. This government should point out to the United States, as I see it, that there is frustration in this country, disappointment and even bitterness, because of the United States trade policy. Canada wants to be a friend of the Americans; we have always been one in the past, and we want to be in the future. The United States is not helping that process when they indulge in economic nationalism, as they have done in the past few years.

I should also like to say a few words about trade with iron curtain countries. Personally I feel that the Department of Trade and Commerce has been lax in developing trade with such nations as Russia, China and others. Our trade with those countries is almost negligible. I have a Canadian Press report here of last April which says that exports to Russia in the month of March were $25 as compared with $57 a year ago. Britain, Germany, France and Japan are getting into those world markets, and I am afraid —maybe the minister can show that I am wrong—that Canada is missing the trade boat by not following suit.

Earlier this year the Russian ambassador announced that his country was anxious to buy certain Canadian products. Yet so far Canadian authorities have treated the efforts which the Russian ambassador made with apathy, with indifference, and even ridicule. Only a few weeks ago the Russian embassy gave Canadian exporters a long list of products which they would like to buy from Canada. That list included a number of manufactured products. It included foodstuffs, and particularly, as far as western Canada is concerned, it included wheat. I put a question on the order paper which was answered yesterday. The effect of the question was: What has the Department of Trade and Commerce or the government done to try to sell grain to Russia since the first of the year? In a nutshell the answer was that two representatives from the Russian embassy had called on the department and obtained price lists, delivery dates and so on. To date, it said, there have been no further developments.

Well, Mr. Chairman, what kind of salesmanship is that? Here we have some officials sitting in an office waiting for orders to come. There is no aggressiveness, no imagination, no particular desire to sell, and no follow-up. If I had salesmen like that in my business at home I would be bankrupt very quickly. Out in the west we have 700 million bushels of wheat sitting in granaries, in elevators, in fields and everywhere else. We have a country which says it is willing to buy some of that wheat, and yet our officials in the department do not even bother to get out of their chairs and go over to the embassy to see why no purchase has been made.

Why have the Russians not bought that wheat? Have our credit terms not been good enough? Is the price too high? Do they lack exchange? Do they want some kind of barter agreement? At least let us find out. I do not know what the answer is. Maybe their offer was a phony one. If it was, let the minister tell us why it was phony. But with the vast surplus of grain which we have in western Canada any suggestion of an offer to buy should be thoroughly examined. Trade with the eastern world would be good business. I also believe it would help to promote better relations between the power groups in the eastern world and the western world. I ask this government to leave no stone unturned in trying to develop trade with the east in the same manner as Great Britain is doing. Before this item passes I hope the minister will make some comment on those offers to purchase which have been made to Canada by eastern countries.

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up the time of the committee at any great length, but I do feel the Department of Trade and Commerce is a very important one and that upon that department rests probably a greater responsibility than on any other government department. Perhaps that is the reason why the most optimistic member of the cabinet is the head of that department.

I listened with keen interest and not without some concern to the minister's summary of conditions as he saw them and the rather delightful optimism he expressed in regard to the future, despite the fact that we have had certain signs that our economy is not too healthy, and despite the fact that there has been some decline in the export of our lumber, lead, zinc, copper, iron and other products into our greatest market.

He expressed the view that the future was not as dark as some might think. I hope his optimism will be fully justified as time goes on. No one who has any appreciation of the greatness of this country can be other than a long-term optimist and, in fact, I am always more optimistic when I hear a rather fresh change of viewpoint from western Canada, particularly when I hear the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, who has just concluded, give some indication that he believes certain changes should be made. The changes the hon. member has advocated are not those which his party has advocated in the past, and they were to the effect that we should take more cognizance of the dangerous situation facing our industrial enterprises at the present time.

The Department of Trade and Commerce handles responsibilities which are vital to our normal prosperity, and indeed vital to our security, because only by sound economic development can we become as strong as we require to be in this ever-changing and troubled world in which we live at this particular time. Whether it is in peace or war our industrial development, as the minister has so ably pointed out today, and the changing economic situation through which we are passing demand that the government adopt certain changes in policy.

I am glad the minister has indicated some change in attitude on the part of the government with regard to policy. I do not intend to make a specific issue of the wheat situation as Mr. Speaker has asked us not to do so, but, as has already been pointed out today, we have a tremendous wheat surplus in Canada and no farmer or businessman in Canada is unaware that we have more unsold wheat today and less likelihood of selling it than at any time since confederation.

There is no farmer in this country who is not aware that we are selling pork to other countries for less than we are selling it to our own consumers in order to get rid of it, and that we have a tremendous surplus of butter. Dairymen are being encouraged to milk more cows, but under the present system the more cows they milk the more they will have to milk the treasury, because the butter is being sold at less than cost and the taxpayer is having to pay both the high price for butter and the subsidy in addition to that.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, there are a great variety of problems facing us in this changing economic situation which demand of us a change in approach. This country has swiftly changed from an agricultural to an industrial country, and to the degree that we developed our industrial independence we strengthened our position during the recent terrible crisis of the second world war. No one knows that better than the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who played a very important role in the development of the industries of this country, and no one knows better than he the importance of maintaining what might be termed the industrial independence of this country.

Since that time we have watched the expansion of what might be termed a new industrialization such as has not been known before. It has often been said, Mr. Chairman, that we should buy if we want to sell, and how often have I heard that during the last quarter of a century in this house, especially from some of my friends to the left, and from the few free traders remaining on my right. They too have indicated that if you want to sell wheat you had better buy from the country to which you hope to sell.

In Canada that sounds plausible; it sounds popular to the voters; and it sounds pleasant to the ears of people overseas. But that is not always the rule. It is more popular and plausible than it is factual. The Minister of National Revenue appears to be somewhat in doubt. But he knows very well that even though this country bought $700 million worth more from the United States than we sold to her during last year, there is very little hope of the Minister of Trade and Commerce being able to sell much of the 700 million bushels of wheat to that country.

The fact that we have sold the United States many billions of dollars of goods since the latter part of the late century and over the present half of this century does not mean that now, when we are making a fire sale of pork and selling butter at less than cost, we will be able to sell wheat to the United States, or that the United States will take any of these products. You can buy billions of dollars worth more goods from the United States in future but that will not change the present situation.

On the other hand, the United Kingdom over this same period from the latter half of the past century to this half of the present century has given Canada a favourable trade balance every year, and the fact that we fell down in buying goods from Britain in any one year did not make any very great difference in the amount of wheat, bacon, pork, or other agricultural products she bought from us. We have bought consistently in the old land down through the years and I will even venture to say, Mr. Chairman, that for nearly 70 years we have sold Britain more goods than we have purchased from her, and if the amount were added up I think it would be found that the United Kingdom has poured between $4 and $5 billion more into the trade channels of this country than we have poured into the United Kingdom.

Yet, as the hon. member for Eglinton pointed out this afternoon, we consistently put our trade eggs in one basket, and God help Canada if the handle of that basket breaks while someone else is carrying it. We have never at any time in our history been more dependent upon the United States economy than we are at the present time.

Our industrial independence should increase with our national growth, if we are as great as we believe we are. We boast about our great resources and our technical ability in manufacturing and industrial production. We should therefore not allow ourselves to be at the commercial beck and call of the United States. We should not be fixing our rates in Washington; we should not be fixing our tariffs according to the views of the United States; and we should not be on bended knee.

A few moments ago the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre was somewhat critical of the United States. I do not think we need necessarily be critical. I think we should allow the United States to handle their own affairs and we should mind our own business. It is our business to look after Canada's trade, and it is the business of the Department of Trade and Commerce to look after that trade.

But, Mr. Chairman, when it was mentioned a few years ago by the leader of this party, and when it was proposed on different occasions that we should have a British commonwealth conference, that suggestion was scoffed at and cast aside. Despite the fact that others who sat here right at that time more or less scoffed at and ridiculed that suggestion when the leader of this party suggested that we should have convertibility of currency and should encourage it, today the Minister of Trade and Commerce told us that we are coming closer to convertibility. Today it was mentioned that the commonwealth offers the best chance for trade. Today it was mentioned by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the United Kingdom has lowered tariffs more than has any other country and that next were the other British commonwealth countries.

The country that we have been growing more dependent upon throughout the years, the country from which we have been taking more goods—by $700 million last year, as was said by the hon. member for Eglinton this afternoon—than they purchased from us, was the first more or less to break the GATT agreement. As the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre has just said, the GATT agreement more or less replaced, or was more or less taken as the alternative to the British commonwealth agreements. For that reason I know that document was looked upon with a certain amount of doubt by many, but everybody was almost afraid to mention it. It was looked upon and handled almost as carefully as if it had been some sacred document that nobody could even look into too far. It is bound to be good for somebody. It was a kind of gunshot prescription for world trade that nobody in the Department of Trade and Commerce ever could fully explain to us. Evidently nobody in the United States understood it at first; and when they did come to understand it, as soon as they understood it they partially repudiated it. It has done no good for Canada.

Yet hidden behind it some place there may be some good will, something that may do some good. It may have helped to sell a little bit of salmon to Spain. It may have helped to sell a few sardines some place else. But by and large it has been of very little use to us here. It seems to me that if we are going to develop as we should develop, more thought must be given to other lines of trade. In Canada there are many more things to sell than wheat, despite the fact that we have a tremendous surplus of wheat.

When the minister today mentioned the Randall report I could not help thinking of our historic dependence upon the United States of America. There are those who deliberately say there is no difference in party policy. Down through the years there has been a difference in party policy. Those who sat to your right, Mr. Chairman, have long since felt that because we live beside this great republic, this great and wealthy nation to the south of us, this most powerful industrial machine in the world, we must dance to their tune, rise with their prosperity and fall with their depression. That policy has been followed by my more or less senior colleagues across the floor who have been sitting here for many years. I know they say little except to themselves, but I know these gentlemen realize very well—or if they do not, their fathers do—what happened when their party proposed commercial union with the United States of America back in 1887. They have not changed a great deal since then because the year before last we were doing almost two-thirds of our total trade with the United States of America.

We are not following the example of that country which is coming back faster than is any other country in the world. I speak subject to correction with regard to the figure, but I think it is either 27 per cent or 31 per cent of their trade that is with any one country. They have spread their trade all over the world. They were too smart to put all their eggs in one basket.

Again I say this as to countries that buy our resources. They buy them because they need them. They buy our iron ore because their iron ore deposits are failing. They buy our pulp and paper products because their forests have been depleted to a great extent. They do not buy our pork, even when we have to have a fire sale of it. They do not buy our butter when we are up to our ears in butter. They do not buy our grain when we have more grain than we have ever had before in our lives. They produce products of the same type as those that are produced in Canada. Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that the hour is rapidly approaching when we shall be in difficulty if we are going to follow that old popular appeal that has been hurled at us so often, namely, that in order to sell you must buy. This has not been proven to be the case down through the years because from the country to which we have sold the most, we have bought the least; and with the country from which we have bought the most we have had the most unfavourable trade balances.

Today the Minister of Trade and Commerce told us that we have had a tremendous expansion. We all agree. He stated that the United Kingdom removed more tariff restrictions against us than did any other country. Yet we had a favourable trade balance with her. New Zealand and Australia were more or less next. Mr. Chairman, their relationship is another indication that the commonwealth was never more vital than it is today. As convertibility is now coming on the horizon, as the minister has said, I suggest that a British commonwealth conference would probably be more acceptable now when this government needs to do something. I suggest that it is perhaps not too late to try to restore our position in the British market. The strengthening of United Kingdom and the British commonwealth relationships with Canada is of most vital importance and it promises the greatest outlet for our future.

The minister described how he has turned toward multilateral trade and mentioned that the GATT agreement expires in 1955. I am not going to go into that matter to any extent except to say that if Canada is going to have a place for all her vast industrial expansion, in order to assist the minister and the Department of Trade and Commerce, the one thing this country needs more than another is a general overhauling, a general research campaign, a general remodelling, revamping and readjustment of our whole tariff structure and our taxation structure in this country.

When you look at the taxation that is raising the costs of our production, you can then see the reason why the textile industries are going out of business in this country. You can see why heavy machinery is coming in here from Japan, West Germany and other places. Mr. Chairman, if you are going to maintain the high standard of living we have in Canada and pay our men for their toil three times as much money as is paid to others, then you cannot buy the things of those who are producing at that much less cost.

I can at least personally be somewhat in agreement with what has been mentioned by some of the Liberal members who ran their election campaign as free traders but who now scream for some change in fiscal policy in order to keep their industries from closing up in North and South Waterloo and in other places throughout this country. Mr. Chairman, there is no chance of our building up our hopes on an economy that is so false as to do nothing but expand the plants themselves and then, when we open the doors for the production of those plants, to say "We will buy the goods where we can buy them most cheaply", because we are following a free trade policy that is afraid to move until the harm is done.

I do not claim that any form of high protection alone is the answer any more than the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre did this afternoon when he hinted that there is a change of heart in his group. I am not sure whether it is a change of heart or a change of hearts, but in any event it is a change of public thinking. It does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that with all our great resources we will have a sale for iron ore to those who need ore, we will have a sale for Canada's No. 1 hard wheat to those who cannot buy that type and quality of wheat at any lower price. What the minister said yesterday—and some may be critical of him in this regard—is not what he said some time ago. I am glad he is a smart enough businessman to change because it is not long ago that he and his colleagues said they would not take less than $2.50 a bushel. Now he says we will sell at whatever price we have to take.

Those who sit to your right, Mr. Chairman, would never doubt the Toronto Star, and I read in it this morning that the United States of America may establish a price of $1.55 because they want to test the international wheat agreement. If they drop to $1.55 and the signatories to the agreement refuse to take wheat at that price the agreement will collapse. Then what? Then it will take some smart businessman like the Minister of Trade and Commerce to catch up to the parade and sell, as he said the other day, where people will buy. He will sell at similar prices for similar grades. The old law of supply and demand has been cruel and hard down through the years.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think perhaps the hon. member will not object if I interrupt to say that I think he and others have adhered very well during today's debate to our tacit agreement to which it has been rather difficult to adhere, but I do not think he will mind me saying at this time that if on this item he should make critical remarks with respect to the sale of wheat others will perhaps feel that they should follow suit and others will feel that they should reply. I am sure the hon. member was merely using wheat as one example in his criticism of the Department of Trade and Commerce, but may I suggest that it would assist all of us in this rather difficult position if he would choose another example. I may tell the committee frankly that I have no desire, if I can help it, to be forced into making a ruling today because if I have to then of course we will have to enforce it, and I think we can get along better by consent than by a ruling.

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Chairman, I certainly bow to your ruling. I would not want to set any bad examples or dangerous precedents in the house, which follows the rules so diligently and strangely at times. But I do feel that in this ever-changing pattern, to which the Minister of Trade and Commerce referred this morning, there is one other item we should not forget. We should not forget the greatest market of all, one that is not very often mentioned in the house, the one that is the most stable, the one that is the soundest, the one that we can depend on most and the only one we control, the home market. If you can keep men employed so that they are able to buy the products of the soil and are able to live well and happily in their homes you will keep the home market going.

The minister has told us today that the outlook for the export of industrial products is not too bright. Our imports are not quite as large as they were last year but they were very heavy last year. Therefore while the outlook for the export of our manufactured products is not too bright, competition for imports is ever keener and stronger. Oh, how the government lectures industry on cutting costs and improving efficiency. They certainly should be good advisers because there is no institution in all of Canada that knows more about high costs than the government does.

We have spent money faster than at any other time on civilian affairs and, indeed, by all the signs we seem to have got less for what we have spent on military affairs than at any other time. We have spent more for military purposes in the last three years than we spent even during the war. But, Mr. Chairman, it has often been a pastime for those who think it is popular to tell industry how it should operate. I represent a riding that has very little industry. It is mostly agricultural. The industrial people of this country, the manufacturers, have been more or less whipping boys for the politicians since confederation.

I sometimes wonder if we ever pause to realize that today the industrial enterprises of this country are only handling half of their proceeds because with the very high rate of income tax today the government is a powerful silent partner that has taken more than 50 per cent of their total net proceeds every year until lately and is still taking about 50 per cent. Therefore it is not possible to pad any books as some suspicious politicians may have thought was done in years past. The income tax branch is on the watch. They watch the money coming in to a far greater extent than they watch the money going out. They have watched it very carefully. There is no camouflage in that regard whatsoever.

Yet at the same time the industrial companies of Canada are only making an average of 4 to 4½ per cent. I certainly do not want to be a pessimist. I am not preaching blue ruin. I am not trying to contrast what I think are the economic realities with the delightful optimism of the minister. But I do suggest that there are many signs to indicate that the government should revamp its whole tax structure and reorganize and readjust our tariff structure as well if we are going to make the vast industries that have been built in the last two or three years, and about which we have been bragging, sound operating plants that will give employment to the thousands and thousands of people who are today unemployed and the thousands more we should have in this country through immigration. If we had sound fiscal policies we could develop that greatest of all markets, the home market.

I do not mean for a moment that the home market will consume all of that product you will not let me talk about, Mr. Chairman, but it will consume a great deal. It will consume a great deal of the butter that the government does not know what to do with. It will consume a lot of the pork that we are selling at fire-sale prices and it will give employment to many more people than are employed at the present time. We have a great industrial structure built up and yet at the same time the products that it is intended to produce are entering this country at a greater rate than they have for many years.

I am not going to delay the item any further except to say once again that I believe it is unfortunate that this young country, at a time when we are boasting about our greatest growth and prosperity, is increasing its dependence on the United States of America instead of decreasing it. Again I want to emphasize that our objective should be as great a degree of industrial independence as any country of our population can have, for no similar number of people in the world enjoy such resources as we have. As the minister has so well said, we have iron ore, minerals of all kinds, oil in western Canada in an almost immeasurable amount. The richness of this country is a heritage of which every citizen is proud. Despite GATT, despite our international relationships, I believe it was never more important, in view of the dangerous signs we see on the horizon, for us to have that degree of industrial independence which will create economic safety and, indeed, eventually military safety. I believe that Canada must look after her own business. I know there are many things we can buy from these other countries and there are many of our products they must always buy from us, but I do believe—and it is not an old-fashioned idea but the most progressive and advanced idea that Canada has ever had—that our own resources must be developed by our own people.

Mr. Castleden: I do not know whether or not the minister is enjoying this little session this afternoon. Perhaps if he has his staff there he might answer one question I should like to ask concerning the department. It has to do with the reported sale of some nine million pounds of canned pork to Russia recently. So far as we can get the story from the answers of the department, this pork was purchased at the time the foot-and-mouth disease embargo was imposed. Some of this pork was stored for a while, and then later canned under orders of the government and paid for by the government at a cost of between 50 cents and 60 cents per pound. Later on the government called for tenders on this pork and it was sold at something less than 17 cents per pound. Almost immediately a market was found in Russia by the private enterprise firm, I believe in this case it was Canada Packers. What price they received is not known, and I do not suppose the departmental records would indicate that. I should like to know, and I believe the people of Canada would like to know, why it was that the agents of the department were unable to find that market for Canadian canned pork.

While the minister's staff is looking up the answer to that question perhaps I might make a few general remarks concerning the administration of the department. The people of Canada recognize that in peacetime the Department of Trade and Commerce is the most important department so far as their welfare and prosperity are concerned. We cannot hope to so live within our own borders that we are going to become prosperous by taking in our own washing. The extent to which Canada is able to exchange her surplus goods with other countries, and the extent to which we can economically use our goods within our own borders, will determine the extent to which we are able to keep our factories busy, keep the men employed in the mines, the forests and in agriculture. The policies of the Department of Trade and Commerce decide the prosperity of Canada.

The minister's report today was not one to give the Canadian people a great deal of hope that the prosperity of which we heard so much twelve months ago is going to be maintained. Our record with regard to the fishermen on both coasts, the coal workers in the maritimes, the textile workers, the farm machinery workers, the automobile workers and now the agriculturists on the prairies makes the outlook rather grim. The figures for unemployment are rising in an alarming manner. What is the hope for the people of Canada in this situation? What can we give to these people in the way of hope? They are looking to this superman from the Department of Trade and Commerce, a man whose ability is recognized all across Canada as well as in other countries, to solve their difficult problems.

Yesterday he told us that we must remember we are living in a competitive world. We must face the facts of life. When he gave us the figures upon which we are to base our hope for prosperity, our hope for trade, really the foundation was revealed to be rather flimsy. Why is it that we always get into this trouble in this competitive world in times of peace? Is it because there is no competition in time of war? Is it because in wartime we can let cost-plus contracts to those who can get them? There is no competition at all in cost-plus contracts. You can employ labour at whatever price you wish because it is paid for under the contract. As soon as we get out of a war episode, a period of war, we have Canada drifting back along with other countries into a period of recession, depression, unemployment, with factories closing and lower prices.

The agricultural workers in the United States have got their government to give them some form of protection against the trouble which may occur when they try to sell their surplus products. In so far as Canada is concerned the agricultural producers must bear the strain of whatever price the government is going to get for their commodities. If there is a price war, then down goes the price, and where it goes to is apparently no concern of the government. They have already stated their policy on more than one occasion in this house, and very emphatically, that they intend to do nothing about giving agricultural producers advances on their production.

The job of the farmer is to produce, and he is doing that job. With the help of nature, with good times and with some return for his work, he is able to solve the problem of production. But you cannot expect him to solve the problem of selling that commodity. He is entirely dependent upon the policies of the cabinet and the administration of this department. When world trade and when Canada's trade in the world is maintained at a high level, we can find markets for our products by sending our people out into the world. If we do that well, then the agriculturists will prosper. If we do not, then he is at the mercy of a price war or any other economic circumstance which may occur.

In the competitive world of today Canada finds herself in a rather difficult position. Our high-priced economy, brought about by high prices during the war and the prosperity we enjoyed during the war, has left us in a difficult position when we have to place our goods alongside the goods of other countries. If we cannot place our goods alongside the other goods at similar prices, then we have to accept lower prices or the goods will not be sold.

The minister's statement today was a surprising statement, and one which I believe marks a change in his attitude. No longer is there the optimism that everything is all right; we are just as well off as we were last year and we are up over the ten-year average. We did not hear the old statement that when the ice goes out of the lake everything will be all right. Now he says it is not the Department of Trade and Commerce or this parliament that will decide. We must depend on the constructive leadership in the United States. If the commercial policy is favourable, we can go forward with hope. If it is not, it will be difficult to look forward with any degree of optimism.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I point out, Mr. Chairman, that I was talking about GATT when I said that. The lack of optimism was about the future of GATT, it was not about the future of Canada. I hope my hon. friend is not trying to distort my words.

Mr. Castleden: No, I am glad to have that from the minister. It is our relationship to GATT upon which, to a large extent, depends Canada's ability to establish any degree of prosperity. The minister admits our economy is slowing down. He maintains that our slowing down is much less than the slowing down in the United States. I am not going to argue the matter with him, but I believe the figures of unemployment in Canada show that we have a greater degree of unemployment, relative to our population, than they have in the United States. Since when have we become so dependent upon the United States, that big giant neighbour which serves this continent with us? Is that the only constructive hope we have? Are the markets of the world to be closed to us; are those markets closed because of our high-priced economy, and because the goods Canada offers are priced pretty much along the same line and at about the same level as those of the United States?

If we are going to depend upon United States prices, then I say the future of the Canadian agricultural producer is very dim, indeed. I say that because we have exactly the same kind of agricultural surpluses they have. Even with GATT they are not looking out for the Canadian producer; they are looking out for themselves. And thus far, at home, they have looked after themselves very well.

If we are going to have to depend upon the consideration our neighbour to the south will give to our producers, then I say things look very dark indeed. The minister says Canada must recognize that she lives in a competitive world. In this competitive world we find ourselves caught; we are left out in the cold because of a price structure and a cost of living that has priced us completely outside the world's competitive markets. How are we going to get back into those markets? That is the problem facing the minister, and it is a difficult one.

The problem confronting the Canadian government at this time is that of proving that in a competitive world Canada can hold her place, that in a competitive world Canada can provide prosperity for her people in times of peace. And that is the only time we have competition. This objective has not yet been achieved, to any appreciable extent. We knew prosperity shortly after the first war, after 1918. We knew the depths of depression and unemployment prior to 1940. We knew prosperity throughout the second world war and during the episode in Korea. But just as soon as we got out of that we found ourselves faced with an economic crisis.

How long are the people of Canada going to look at the economic problems facing this country and say that we must continue to live in a world which will condemn us in times of peace to a state of depression and want? Surely the choice of the Canadian people must not be between that of having war and prosperity on the one hand or, on the other, peace with unemployment and depression.

The challenge which faces the government, and particularly the Minister of Trade and Commerce, is to prove that the economy under which we live is one which can provide the Canadian people with prosperity in time of peace, so that they may have proper returns for their labour, as well as the right to work and the right to build their homes under natural conditions such as prevail in a competitive economy of this kind.

If this challenge is met, Canada will be pleased, and the members of this group will be pleased. I am sure that in this group there are very few who think the minister can do it. If he can, then we will welcome it as a sign of great achievement. If he cannot, and if conditions continue on the downgrade in the next few years as they have in the last twelve months, those people who have been forced to swallow the medicine of this competitive world will be rising in their places throughout the country and demanding something better.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, I have been asked a question which might better have been asked of my colleague the Minister of Agriculture, because the actual plan for the disposal and handling of the pork throughout the period in question was carried out by the agricultural prices support board, which reports to the Minister of Agriculture. However, the facts of the pork situation are well known. We had in western Canada an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease, and because of the foot-and-mouth disease there was an automatic embargo on the part of the United States, on the part of several South American countries who normally offer a market for our canned meats, and on the part of certain European markets.

We were surplus producers of pork, and the government believed that the producers of pork should not be called upon to bear the brunt of the damage resulting from the outbreak of that disease. Therefore it undertook to buy the surplus pork at a floor price which, in my opinion, was very generous indeed. It was the full equivalent of the price at which pork was selling at the time of the outbreak of the disease. That pork was bought. Of course, it took only a short time to fill all the storage space we had; and then it became a question of what to do with the pork.

I am sure my hon. friend would not suggest that we bury it; he would not suggest that we build new cold storage plants in which to store it. We took what we thought to be the only practical way of preserving the food value of the pork, and that was by putting it in cans. I may say that no one was under any illusions that we were going to recover the full cost of that pork after it had been canned. Pork that is canned is not the choice cuts. They are the parts of the animal that are not readily saleable as fresh cuts. Therefore they bring a lower price than could be had when the entire animal was being put in cans.

We canned that pork, and I think my hon. friend was perfectly correct when he said that it cost about 65 cents a pound when canned. Then we had the problem of getting rid of it. We put it on the Canadian market—I believe it was put on at about 35 cents a pound, which seemed to be the price which would be attractive to the Canadian buyer. We sold all we could in that market over a period of about two years. We offered it in other countries at a price no lower than the price at which it was selling in Canada, and we were able to move the bulk of it.

But expert opinion was that it was not safe against spoilage for a period longer than two years. As a matter of fact on inspection it was found that the odd can was beginning to turn colour. At that stage it became a disposal problem, not a marketing problem. Tenders were called for the pork, and bids were received from a number of firms in Canada and outside Canada. The remaining pork was sold to the highest bidder, which happened to be Canada Packers. The sale was outright, with only one provision, that the pork should be sold off the North American continent, because we did not wish to become involved in any dumping problem with the United States, which has very strict laws against the dumping of agriculture products.

After a considerable interval Canada Packers were able to find a market for the pork in Russia. I think they had bids from other European countries, but the bid from Russia was the highest they received. They sold their pork to the Russians. Of course, the government had no interest in the latter phase of the transaction. It had disposed of its ownership of the pork by public auction to Canada Packers.

Mr. Castleden: Were the minister's agents asked to sell this pork, or was it done through the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We were looking for markets abroad throughout the period and we did arrange sales of pork outside Canada from time to time. But when the disposal problem became immediate, all the pork remaining was put up at auction with the concurrence of my officers. We believed that the possibilities of marketing as an edible product in small lots had come to an end, and therefore it was a disposal problem when the remaining pork was put up at auction.

Mr. Castleden: Has the minister the figures for the total amount that was canned?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, I do not know.

Mr. Bell: I am a little hesitant about getting into this discussion on the United Kingdom markets after the very fine speeches by the hon. members for Eglinton and Dufferin-Simcoe, but I feel I must say a few words and try to relate this loss to the maritime economy. Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, you can sit back and relax because there is very little danger of my mentioning the word "wheat" in my remarks. Somebody has said that 1953 and 1954 will be the most critical years in our foreign trade since the days of confederation. With that I agree entirely. As we move into our position as the third greatest trading nation in the world we are developing closer ties with the United States and looser ties with the United Kingdom. I do not know where the expression "to put all your eggs in one basket" came from. I imagine it has a Canadian origin; it goes back to at least last year when the minister mentioned it in the estimates. We have never caught on to that expression down in the maritimes. We simply refer to this change that has come into our trading world as the loss of our traditional United Kingdom markets.

I do not want this to be considered as a plea, Mr. Chairman, or even an attack on the department. I simply wish to point out that our position and our economy today in the maritimes are in very serious trouble because of the loss of the United Kingdom traditional markets. It has been very well dealt with by the hon. member for Eglinton. I would just give one quotation to cover the picture. I am quoting from the U.S. News and World Report of December 11, 1953. This is a special article on the trade of our nation with the United States and the United Kingdom. They point out that Canada's trade is shifting, and they say:

> Back in 1935-39, the U.S. and Britain used to buy about the same amount of goods from Canada. Today, the U.S. outbuys Britain nearly 4 to 1. As a result, Canada now looks to the U.S. for about 60 per cent of its export market and about three-fourths of its foreign supplies.

It goes on to say:

> So, on trade, Canada is running a deficit of about a billion a year in its dealings with its big southern neighbour. Close ties with the U.S. can be a problem, as well as a benefit.

There is no doubt that today in Canada we have an unfavourable balance of trade. While there are some serious worries over this condition in the future, I think that at the present time things are not too bad. Certainly central Canada is benefiting to a great degree from traffic across the border, from this north-south condition, but we in the maritimes do feel this loss that I have referred to. It is not a case of the sentiment that we might have for the traditional markets; it is simply that our economy has been completely distorted and wrecked owing to the fact that we have no outlet for our primary produce, and also to the fact that our ports of Saint John—and I think I can speak for Halifax —really miss this United Kingdom and to some extent European trade.

The national harbours board figures which were released a short time ago showed that in 1953 the ports of Halifax and Saint John were the only ports in Canada which showed decreases in tonnage figures. It is not difficult to follow along from there and show that most of the tonnage to go through our ports is traffic and trade with the United Kingdom and to a small degree with Europe. That is the situation, Mr. Chairman, and I am calling it to the attention of the minister to show him that our problems are very serious down east in that respect.

Various changes could be referred to in our relations with the United States. I will not spend too much time on them, but the United States has already flouted or perhaps misused or taken advantage of the escape clauses in the GATT agreement. Import restrictions have been placed on various commodities by the United States, and we shall probably hear of more in the future. There is the worry that a trade recession will hit the United States to a much greater degree than other countries, and of course we shall feel the loss first in that respect. We also have the problem of dumping here which of course is tied in with our trade with the United States.

I could refer generally to a recession that might affect the economy of the United States. Recently they have felt perhaps a slight recession, more so than we have. Unemployment was every bit as bad over there, if not worse, than in Canada this past year. Their textile industry is in the same dire straits as ours is, and generally speaking there has been a recession in the United States that is much more noticeable than here. We are tying ourselves to their economy in a very dangerous fashion when we count on them for so much of our export and import trade.

There is no reason why we should be tied to the United States. We can go back in history to 1911 and previous times and we shall find that it has been quite a political issue. I refer to this tie and relationship that we have with our friends across the border. Very few valid reasons could be given for being tied up in this way.

I simply suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we have our difficulties in the maritimes over the loss of our markets. It is really serious. I could not help thinking the other night when the minister referred to an Ontario member. He referred to him as my hon. friend down east. I do not think that is in keeping with our traditions, to refer to anybody in central Canada as an easterner. The minister has certain interests in the maritimes and always has had. When he is down on his well-deserved holiday at St. Andrews this summer he might take a day off and come up around Saint John and I am sure that inquiries will convince him that we are really feeling the pinch in our economy over the loss of our traditional United Kingdom markets.

I should like to close with this quotation from the Canadian Chartered Accountant of March, 1954, at page 146:

> Canada today is facing some crucial decisions with regard to her foreign trade pattern. Based on our recent experiences, it is apparent that new fundamental policies are in order. Our present pattern is one in which two-thirds of our foreign trade is transacted with one country whose reliability as a stable market is far from assured. The year 1954 promises to be a year for bold decision, requiring all of us to reorientate our thinking in accordance with the economic realities of the age.

Mr. Nicholson: Ever since I came to parliament in 1940 the minister has been doing a great job. During the war years he earned the title of the czar of his country. I just made a note of some of the responsibilities he had during the war: aircraft production, synthetic rubber, shipbuilding, steel, lumber, cement, T.C.A., radio, and housing. He had the good fortune to have a blank cheque and members in all sections of the country are agreed that the money was not squandered, and the department of munitions and supply played a very important role in the winning of the war. However, I have a feeling that the minister's role for the next few years is not going to be so easy. Just as his was the responsible portfolio during the war, the Minister of Trade and Commerce will have to take the major responsibility for the government in seeing that a high level of employment is maintained in Canada, and a maximum volume of trade and commerce.

I will mention merely a few of the industries which are now causing concern. We have had delegations in Ottawa during the life of the present session, from the textile industry, the farm machinery industry, the automobile industry, and from agriculture. These represent important sectors of our Canadian economy. The illness of one not only affects the health of the others, but that illness affects every Canadian, and the representations made by the spokesmen for these four groups I have mentioned would indicate that their problems require immediate attention.

I am more particularly concerned naturally with the problem of agriculture and I am afraid I cannot go along with the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe who suggested we had good times when his party was in office. The minister gave us some figures last night which went back for a number of years. But from his department this morning I also received some figures which indicate the amount of the national income which has gone to agriculture over a period of years.

I will go back to 1926 which is the best year the farmers ever had, when 14·8 per cent of the national income went to agriculture. Just under 20 per cent of the Canadian people come within the category of farmers so in the good old twenties 20 per cent of the people had 14·8 per cent of the national income. The farmers took their worst beating during the depression and in 1931 their share of the national income went down to 2·9 per cent. In 1932 it was a little better when they received 4·1 per cent, and in 1933 they received 3 per cent. During the war years the farmers got up to 12 per cent and it was 12·1 in 1944. It dropped after that but in 1948 it again went up to 12·1 per cent. In 1951 it rose to 12·3 per cent, and last year, 1953 it went down to 8·8 per cent.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I think that when just under 20 per cent of the people are getting about 8 per cent of the national income it is the responsibility of their friend and advocate, the minister who is in charge of trade and commerce, to do something to see about getting a better market for their products, or by some means see to it that those who have been regarded as the salt of the earth should have a fair share of our national income.

During the war the minister and the cabinet demonstrated that it was possible to plan our production and consumption with a high level of employment. During the depression years we balanced our production and consumption with a low level of production and lower standards of living every year. During the war the minister was in charge, as I said, of shipbuilding. As I recall it, there was one year when every week a ship was launched and loaded with Canadian goods and was sent to the bottom of the ocean before it reached the other side. In other words, we were just holding our own—the submarines were sinking our shipping at the same rate as we were building and loading our ships.

Yet it seems strange that during that period Canadians were able to use Canadian materials and workmen to build ships, fill them with lumber, wheat and metals and send them out on their way to join in the battle for freedom. Before these ships reached their destination they went to the bottom of the ocean, but in the process we were able to create prosperity for those in the shipbuilding industry and those engaged in the manufacture of the products that went into the ships.

Having been able to do that with a million of our youngest and strongest people in the services it would not seem unreasonable to expect the minister now and somehow to find a formula to solve our difficulties. It would seem that the same people who worked in the shipyards and in the forests should be able to find some constructive work.

Those of us who sit in this part of the house have some theories we think sound. The minister has never advocated these principles and has never been elected on a mandate to carry out the policies we would advocate. But he was elected to carry out a mandate to provide full employment and a high standard of living for the Canadian people.

The right hon. gentleman is one of those who demonstrated during the war years that what were hitherto considered to be impossible tasks were very easy tasks to perform, and now that we are facing a crisis, which is in many respects very serious, he has another opportunity to demonstrate his ability. The minister has not publicly admitted that the situation is serious, but it is not going to be very long before we have an increasing number of industries, besides those which I have mentioned, which will be coming to the cabinet to place their case before it.

I have letters here from a number of municipal secretaries in my constituency regarding the position of tax arrears at the end of 1953. I think it is very clear that everyone wishes to pay his taxes as soon as he can and if he can and that is true of every country. Taxes and death are certain in every country. In the Hazel Dell municipality arrears in December were $80,000 compared with $68,000 in 1952; in the Buchanan municipality the arrears were $44,000 in 1953 compared with $32,000 in 1952; in Livingston the arrears were $31,000 compared with $24,000; in Keys the arrears were $47,000 compared with $38,000; in Invermay they were $26,000 compared with $21,000; in Porcupine they were $80,000 compared with $78,000; in Kelvington they were $45,000 compared with $39,000; and in Moose Range they were $97,000 compared with $89,000. These municipalities are located in a part of Saskatchewan where we have never really had a crop failure or poor crops. It is a choice part of the country—

Mr. Gour (Russell): They have good crops and good prices but they do not pay their taxes.

Mr. Nicholson: It is not as my hon. friend suggests. The western farmers are not rolling in the lap of luxury. It is true a great many farmers have cars and their position is much better than it was at any time during the thirties; it is no use denying that and I would be the first to admit it. When farmers get 8 per cent of the national income they are in a much better position than when they get 3 per cent, but it is as plain as A B C that when 20 per cent of the people only get 8 per cent of the national income they are not getting as high a standard of living as they should have. That is one of the reasons why you have arrears in taxes.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think the problems of the farmers, the textile workers, the farm machinery workers, and the automobile workers—other hon. members can speak for the fishermen, lumbermen, and coal miners who have problems in a great many parts of Canada—should be dealt with now, and I would suggest that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is going to have to give some leadership in the cabinet which, apparently, is not facing up to these problems.

May I say just a word about trade with the United Kingdom. As I said previously, I had a short visit in the United Kingdom last fall. I had not previously been aware that the bomb damage done there by the war was as extensive as it was. I feel that we have made a mistake during the years in not accepting a fairer share of the total cost of the war. I think we asked the British, who were exposed to bomb damage and enemy action every night, to carry a share that was greater than their fair share.

I think we must realize that we are living in a very small world. If the British now find it necessary to go into other parts of the world to buy their wheat at a price lower than that which is being offered in Canada, the fact that during the war we sold wheat to Great Britain at a price that appeared to be lower than the world price does not mean that we can now ask that the British standard of living should be driven lower and lower when we are unwilling to accept from the British a larger volume of their goods.

I think the Canadian people must realize that unless we are going to make it possible for more British goods to come into our country, and unless we are going to accept the fact that part of the cost of repairing the war damage in Great Britain is a legitimate cost for the Canadian people to bear, we cannot expect to have as large a volume of Canadian goods going into the British market as we have had going there during past years.

What I have said of Canada is, of course, more applicable to the United States. During two wars our rich and powerful neighbours to the south sat on the sidelines for too long a time. Of course, when they finally came in, their help was an extremely important factor in turning the tide. Nevertheless, there is no doubt about it that at the end of both wars the United States found itself in a much stronger position than it was in at the beginning. For the sake of the free world, I think the United States should be carrying a larger share of the cost of repairing the war damage in Europe and of helping the people in the underprivileged countries of the world to get a standard of living that is more comparable with that in the United States.

I therefore suggest that the minister act on the proposal made by the hon. member for Assiniboia with respect to trying to negotiate with the United Kingdom with a view to having a larger volume of British goods come into Canada on a basis similar to that on which we bought our rubber or our silk during the war. The Minister of Trade and Commerce bought up large supplies of silk and rubber. Had it not been for his foresight and that of his department, the outcome might have been different. I think it would be quite legitimate now for the minister to set up a board, similar to the one he had then for the purchase of silk or rubber, to purchase these commodities in Great Britain and to supply them through the regular channels in Canada, so that more British goods could be consumed in this country and so that the best customer we have had for so many years should be able to continue to purchase and to use Canadian goods.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I just want to make one observation, Mr. Chairman, with regard to pork. The minister has more or less given the assurance that, under the tender, it was stipulated that the pork would be shipped outside of the North American continent. In the minds of some people there seems to be some doubt whether that stipulation was carried out. I have no very good reason for saying that, except more or less rumours. I wonder whether inquiries could be made in order to satisfy the committee that that agreement was carried out.

On March 30 the Secretary of State for External Affairs tabled a copy of the international sugar agreement for the regulation of the production and marketing of sugar. At that time he indicated that this matter could be discussed when the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce were being dealt with. I intend to be brief and I intend to deal only with the agreement as it affects Canada. This agreement apparently came into force on January 1 of this year. When he spoke on March 30 the minister said that his purpose in rising was merely to inform the house of the intention of the government to participate in the international sugar agreement.

There are only one or two aspects in connection with that agreement that concern me at the moment. I have here a copy of the international sugar agreement that is set out in the International Sugar Journal dated November, 1953. I am first going to quote article 14, paragraph 1, which reads as follows:

For each of the quota years during which this agreement is in force the exporting countries or areas named below shall have the following basic export tonnages for the free market:

| | Thousands of Tons |
|---|---|
| Belgium (inc. Belgian Congo) | 50 |
| Brazil | 175 |
| China (Taiwan) | 600 |
| Colombia | 5 |
| Cuba | 2,250 |
| Czechoslovakia | 275 |
| Denmark | 70 |
| Dominican Republic | 600 |
| France (and the countries France represents internationally) | 20 |
| Germany (Eastern) | 150 |
| Haiti | 45 |
| Hungary | 40 |
| Indonesia | 250 |
| Mexico | 75 |
| Netherlands (inc. Surinam) | 40 |
| Peru | 280 |
| Philippines | 25 |
| Poland | 220 |
| U.S.S.R. | 200 |
| Yugoslavia | 20 |

My information is that as of May of this year Colombia, Denmark, Germany, Indonesia, Peru and Yugoslavia have not ratified the agreement. The next portion I should like to read is to be found in paragraph 1 of article 16 which reads in part as follows:

The government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (on behalf of the British West Indies and British Guiana, Mauritius and Fiji), the government of the commonwealth of Australia, and the government of the Union of South Africa, undertake that net exports of sugar by the exporting countries covered by the commonwealth sugar agreement of 1951 (excluding local movements of sugar between adjoining commonwealth territories, or islands, in such quantities as can be authenticated by custom) shall not together exceed the following total quantities:—

I am not going to include the various quantities, but I am going to read the next part of the paragraph which is as follows:

Subject to contractual obligations assumed by the governments concerned under the commonwealth sugar agreement of 1951, the quantitative limits for the calendar years 1954, 1955 and 1956 specified above shall not be varied and the provisions of all other articles of this agreement shall be construed accordingly.

Then the next paragraph is the one which I think contains the essence of what I want to convey to the committee. It is paragraph 2 of article 16:

These limitations have the effect of leaving available to the free market a share in the sugar markets of commonwealth countries. The governments aforementioned would, however, regard themselves as released from their obligation thus to limit exports of commonwealth sugar if a government or governments of a participating exporting country or of participating countries having a basic export tonnage or tonnages under article 14(1) should enter into a special trading arrangement with an importing country of the commonwealth which would guarantee the exporting country a specified portion of the market of that commonwealth country.

No doubt Canada was represented at that conference by an official of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and I am wondering how this particular paragraph was made part and parcel of the sugar agreement. To put it in other words, Canada, a member of the British commonwealth of nations, did enter into an agreement with an exporting country, Cuba, for the purpose of increasing trade between the two countries and took a certain amount of sugar from that country. This particular paragraph of the agreement refers to only one country in the British commonwealth, and that country is Canada. It is true, as I understand the situation today, that the sugar refiners of this country are accepting raw sugar from Cuba and refining it here as required. However, to me the situation is a bit delicate so far as Canada is concerned. I have some questions I should like to ask on this matter and when the minister is replying to them I would ask him to refer to the representations made on behalf of Canada by our representative at the time this agreement was tentatively signed. My questions are:

1. Has our government already indicated it intends to ratify the international sugar agreement?

2. Canada is the only commonwealth importer of sugar of any consequence outside the United Kingdom. Since article 16 (2) in effect singles out Canada as a commonwealth importer of sugar, and makes it impossible for Canada to freely enter sugar trading arrangements with any non-empire exporter of sugar, does the minister recommend that the international sugar agreement be accepted in the form tabled in this house on March 30?

3. Has the government registered objection to article 16 (2)?

4. Is it the government's intention to officially object to this clause?

5. The United States has ratified the international sugar agreement with the condition that any change in the treaty terms must be approved by a two-thirds vote. Has the Canadian government considered provisionally approving the international sugar agreement with the exception of article 16 (2)?

6. Would the minister outline what benefits will accrue to Canada if we become active participants in this international sugar agreement?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Perhaps I could answer the questions about the sugar agreement. The sugar agreement really produces a cartel, if you like. The principal producing countries in the world have formed themselves into a group and signed an agreement. The agreement provides principally that sugar will not be sold below a minimum price of $3.25 per hundred pounds and that it will not be sold at a price above $4.35 per hundred pounds. Sugar is to be sold within that price range, and the agreement provides that acreage shall be reduced in case of surplus or increased in case of shortage.

You ask why Canada signed. I do not quite know why we signed except that our principal trading countries were very anxious that we should. The United Kingdom asked us to support the agreement. Cuba, with whom we had developed a good trade, made a similar request. Before we did so we got an agreement from Cuba in the most explicit terms that the favourable trading conditions that we enjoyed in Cuba as the result of our purchase of Cuban sugar for a three-year period would carry on without that purchase, provided Canada would sign the sugar agreement.

We do not like cartels. We do not like to be members of them. However, there seemed to be no penalty in it and therefore we decided to sign the sugar agreement. Canada is free to buy its sugar from any member of the agreement, which includes practically every sugar producing country that Canada has ever patronized. We can see some advantage in a stable price. The difficulty that our beet sugar producers had in the past resulted from an abnormally low price in the cane producing areas. The fact that there is a cartel among the producers is a protection to our sugar beet growers and the fact that there is a maximum price, which is quite reasonable, is a protection to the consumers of Canada.

Perhaps the effect of the agreement as far as Canada is concerned will be beneficial. There is a penalty with respect to special exclusive agreements being made between a member of the sugar cartel and an outside purchaser. Canada cannot be penalized because there is no way of penalizing Canada under the agreement; but if we made an exclusive arrangement with Cuba, as we did in the three years previous to the agreement, Cuba could be penalized under the terms of the agreement. However, no such agreement has been made.

Our three-year agreement terminated at the first of January of this year and the sugar agreement was signed subsequent to that date. We are a member of the agreement but we have no special arrangements with anyone. Our refiners buy their raw sugar where they please and make their own arrangements as to price. The government is out of the sugar business, I am happy to say, and I have heard no repercussions from any source on that account. I hope that answers the questions. If there is another question perhaps the hon. member will ask it again.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I should like to ask the minister if in his opinion coffee, as well as sugar, is perhaps handled today by a cartel.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am sure the price would not be any higher than it is. If you could stabilize the price of coffee within a reasonable range that might be helpful, but coffee is a more restricted crop. Sugar is grown in a good many countries and is susceptible to sharp increases in acreage and sharp decreases when the plants in an area are diseased. No one has ever suggested a coffee cartel that I know of, and I hope no one ever will, because I do not like cartels and I do not think the people of Canada like cartels or anything about them.

Mr. Blackmore: Can the minister tell us what these prices were based on? Were they based on raw sugar?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The prices are for raw sugar f.o.b. Cuba.

Mr. Mang: I should like to say a few words at this time and in doing so it is not because I feel myself competent or qualified to advise the Minister of Trade and Commerce or anyone else in the house. There are a few matters with which I wish to deal, but I can tell hon. members that I will not make a speech on wheat. Since those in this corner have started to call me Mr. Wheat I thought I would set hon. members' minds at rest at the outset by saying that I am not going to deal with that unmentionable subject at the moment. I just rise to try to keep the record straight on a few things that have been brought up during this discussion. We have listened to some of our friends from Saskatchewan who are not as timid as I am vocally, and yet I feel that in justice to Saskatchewan and a large number of people who live there engaged in this business of providing such a large proportion of our export market with this cereal, which is our only visible means of support, I should like to keep the record straight.

Before doing that, I want to register this comment. At the moment in trade and commerce we are in a period of readjustment throughout the whole world. For a number of years since the war there has been a great disparity between ourselves and those upon whose areas the battles were fought and a great deal of destruction took place. The standards of living of these people, who suffered most during the war, were brought to a very low level. Naturally, when the people of London and Berlin, as well as other areas, lived in rubble, with no visible means of support, the standard of living was very low. We on this continent, the great industrial machine of the world, were relatively untouched. Immediately after the war there was a period in which we began to supply the wants of those people in order to try to rehabilitate them. The United States gave grants to the work, and so did we.

As soon as the people in those areas began to find their feet, as it were, naturally they went into the business of production. They could produce at a lower figure per hour than we could because their standard of living was low. Even 25 cents or 50 cents an hour looked big to them, and Britain and the rest of these countries that suffered so much are coming back. In this process, we on the North American continent built up for ourselves a very high standard of living. The people engaged in the British electrical industry will work for 53 cents an hour, whereas our people ask $1.53 an hour. Sometimes we wonder why the Britisher gets the contract. I am not saying anything against a high standard of living; goodness knows, I am one of those who like a high standard. These are the simple facts of the modern world in which we live.

A few moments ago I mentioned that we were in a period of readjustment. I feel that an adjustment will have to be made in one form or another, no matter what we say or do. It is a natural process that is taking place. Those who would place all the responsibility upon this parliament are a little bit "off the beam." We in western Canada should remember that there are farmers in other parts of this country besides Saskatchewan. I sit here amid some who live among farmers. I hear them discuss the fact that they have four thousand barrels of potatoes, and one man says the price of potatoes is really low. When I hear that, I begin to think of the bushels in our granaries out west, 1,000, 2,000 or 3,000 bushels. Before I came down here I had no idea that there were commodities piled up in such quantities as 3,000 or 4,000 bushels of potatoes. The potato growers have their problems, just as we have ours. I am not attempting to speak for them; that is up to them. I may say that all down the line the same thing holds true.

[Mr. Mang.]

We say that we produce too much of this product that I must not mention this afternoon. However, we produce more textiles than we need; we produce more potatoes than we need; and we produce a lot more of a good many things than we need. As I mentioned in a radio broadcast the last time I was in Saskatchewan, we people in Saskatchewan seem to think that this product I must not mention this afternoon is the largest factor in our trade. If you look at the figures for pulpwood, for example, you will find that there is as much pulpwood that goes into internatonal trade as there is of this particular cereal.

Just to keep the record straight, and because we have had such adjectives as catastrophic used in connection with drawing a picture to illustrate that we, in the province where I was born and raised, are facing economic collapse, I should like to say a few things. In fairness to the other members of parliament here who will be asked from time to time to consider where we in the west fit into the Canadian economic picture, perhaps it would be well to keep the record straight. As you know, there is an international trade fair taking place in Toronto now. At this particular fair Saskatchewan, along with the other provinces, has a booth. In this booth, from which we are trying to establish relationships as a province with the businessmen in other parts of the world, we have a publication entitled "Saskatchewan Invites You". There is a picture on it of a very handsome gentleman whose voice was heard in this house years ago, Mr. T. C. Douglas, the premier of Saskatchewan. I am going to quote from this publication "Saskatchewan Invites You", with the picture of Mr. Douglas on it. The heading is, "Up-to-date Information about Saskatchewan". I am going to read this, but before doing so I may say that I have been digging up some figures just to satisfy myself that things are not perhaps quite as bad as I am being told they are at the moment. However, we are not just as flush as we might be. We have a little dollar shortage—perhaps it is a big one—that arises because we have not sold these two billion bushels we have grown in the last three years. But we are selling some.

Now this is information about Saskatchewan, and it reads as follows:

> The average per capita income in Saskatchewan in the past year has been estimated at $1,360 which is again about 12 per cent above the national average.
>
> For the third successive year, Saskatchewan led all provinces in the annual percentage gain of retail sales, increasing 7·2 per cent to an estimated $817 million.
>
> A 15 per cent increase in life insurance sales during the year indicates a parallel advance in personal savings in Saskatchewan. The value of work performed by the construction industry jumped from $181 million in 1952 to $217 million in 1953. The industry employed 24,000 persons.

Capital investment in plant and machinery advanced from $15·9 million in 1952 to $21 million in 1953.

Investment in exploration and development of oil and natural gas last year reached well over $50 million and this year will approach $70 million. In addition, refinery capacity in the province has more than doubled in recent years. Production of 2·8 million barrels of oil and 1·5 billion cubic feet of natural gas in 1953 may well be doubled in 1954.

Mineral output in the past year was valued at $48 million without including the value of extensive uranium production.

Employment in Saskatchewan has increased about 4 per cent since 1949, compared to a national increase of less than 2 per cent.

That is, for the rest of Canada.

The Saskatchewan wheat crop in 1953 totalled 375 million bushels. This is 13 per cent lower than the record production of 1952, but is 61 per cent higher than the average of the preceding ten years.

Mr. Nicholson: Good government out there.

Mr. Mang: A great Minister of Trade and Commerce here, who has spurred the activities; and we are progressing comfortably under the general advance that Canada is making. It continued:

Total grain production in the last crop year was 586 million bushels, compared to 697 million bushels the previous year.

And hon. members will find this interesting:

Although Canadian farm cash income declined in the past two years, Saskatchewan farm cash income increased from $636·6 million in 1951 to $701·5 million in 1952 and an estimated $711·4 million in 1953.

Not so catastrophic! And let me remind hon. members that this publication was put out by the Saskatchewan C.C.F. government at the international trade fair. I am putting it on the record because it is going to many countries throughout the entire world. I think the Canadian public should be advised about the province of Saskatchewan; and I am bringing this to the attention of the committee at this time merely to show that, while we deplore the present trend, we realize, as I indicated at the beginning, that we are in a period of readjustment.

And let me say this further, that for some time a great many people in Saskatchewan have felt that there would be a readjustment. What we are asking is this, that all sections of Canada, including industry, investment companies, insurance companies, and particularly trade unions, will also consider that perhaps the time has come for readjustment. We are not going to remain quiet if we do not get adjustments in the things we have to buy for our production. We are not going to pay $3.25 an hour to someone to weld a broken part on a combine; we cannot pay wage rates of that kind.

It so happens that we in western Canada are leading the way in this readjustment by having our prices come down. This has not come as a bolt from the blue. I found, when talking to western farmers when I was home at Easter, that some of them said, "It is true that we want high prices; but it is better to get our wheat into consumption than keep it and pay storage on it".

As I say, we have a dollar shortage out there; but we also have a great deal of a commodity we will be able to dispose of. When I flew down the other day from western Canada the clouds cleared when we reached Fort William. They cleared for me in more ways than one. I looked out the side window of the plane and thought I would count the number of ships loaded with grain going out of Port Arthur and Fort William. My attention was drawn to something else, and I had to stop counting. I realize that I missed some of them; but I do know there were more than a hundred, with one stream going one way and the other stream going the other way.

That indicates to me that every possible effort is being made in order to place us on a sounder economic footing out there. Our grain will be sold, as long as there are people in the world who have to eat. So long as that condition exists we are going to be able to sell the products we have grown.

In conclusion I wish to emphasize that I am not giving advice; but I am a keen believer in keeping the record straight. As a matter of fact, that was the slogan I used in my election campaign; and I hope in the next four years, no matter whether it is popular or unpopular, the stand I shall take will be one to keep the record straight. Because, by following false theories and operating under false premises, we will lead ourselves down a blind alley and reach nowhere.

Canada stands on the threshold of development today, in the forefront of all countries. Many years ago Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that he had a vision, and expressed it by saying that the twentieth century belongs to Canada. Now, in the middle of the twentieth century, it happens that a son of that same province, from which came the man who made that statement, is in Ottawa today. The same political party holds office today. It is our duty—and I can assure members of the opposition we will not be remiss in fulfilling it—to bring that vision into reality, and make of it an actual fact. And I think if we forget our sectional differences and work in the interests of Canada we will come to a realization of that vision of fifty years ago.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak, and I shall speak only briefly. In order to keep the record straight, as we have been told, there are one or two remarks I should like to make.

First of all, I have not heard any member from Saskatchewan, either in this party or elsewhere, plead poverty on behalf of the farmers of that province. It is true that for the last ten years Saskatchewan has developed tremendously under the leadership of the gentleman who was mentioned by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle, the Hon. T. C. Douglas. There is no question whatsoever about it, that the figures placed on record this afternoon are an eloquent tribute to what has been done in that province.

Again, I am not taking anything away from the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is in his seat this afternoon. I have very high respect for him, and I know he has done much to further the interests of this country. He has done much in an effort to further some of our trade policies. But I do wish to say this to my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle, that in the past we have had periods of prosperous years, and in the past those prosperous years have been followed by depressions. When we see farm prices falling, whether they are the prices of wheat, of oats, of milk or of potatoes, they are ominous signs for the economy of this country. We find usually that the first drop indicating anything in the nature of a recession is a drop in farm prices. Other prices then also come down gradually. What we are anxious to do is to see that under those farm commodities there is something of a floor, so that the people in the rural areas may continue to buy the products of the industrial areas. I believe that ultimately we are not going to put the kind of floors under those products that we have been putting under them in past years for a year or so. I believe that sooner or later in large part the policies that have been adopted in a number of other countries in the world, where there are forward prices, where a farmer knows before he puts the grain in the ground what he is really going to get this year and in a couple of years, will be adopted here. When a calf is born on his farm the farmer will know what he is going to get for the finished steer at a minimum price four years from now or three years from now, if it is a three-year-old steer. He will know what he is going to get for eggs and butter over a period of time. That is the policy worked out in a good many countries. That is the policy that has kept production high in agriculture, for example, in the United Kingdom, and that is all we have in mind. We are not denying that the policies of the federal and of the provincial governments have enabled our people in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba producing farm commodities, and in other provinces too, to enjoy a better standard of living than they had in the old cut-throat competition days, when there were no floors and everything went in the direction in which it cared to go.

Under this item we are discussing the policies of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and these things have to be taken into consideration. I merely rose to tell my hon. friend that at the moment there are ominous signs in our economy. It is well that hon. members from various farm constituencies in all parts of Canada should draw the attention of the government to those ominous signs and ask for some protection against them. Let us bear in mind that in the depression years some great corporations and companies in this country did not feel the depression a bit. They were protected. They are in a protected market. The farmers are in an unprotected market, or were before the war. What we want to see is equality. If there is to be a readjustment, as my hon. friend says, then it has to be a readjustment all round. If we have great industries that are enjoying protection and are able to keep up prices by turning labour out into the street in order that they may reduce production and keep prices up, then it is the duty of the government to exercise its power and interfere, and exercise some control.

I am saying to my hon. friend that we are not complaining that our farmers are poverty-stricken. It would not be true if we did. But what we are pointing out is that in the past we have seen periods of prosperity followed by periods of acute recession and depression when the bottom dropped right out of the market—and when the bottom drops out of the agricultural market it drops out of the industrial market.

If there is one lesson we learned during the war it was that in this respect the interests of the workingman in the city and the worker on the farm are identical. In my province, when eggs were selling at 3 cents a dozen a million people were on relief in this country. When wheat was 21 cents a bushel a million people were on relief in this country. In the industrial areas there was no work and no prices for farm products. What we are anxious to see is that steps are taken by the government and by this department to see to it that that kind of thing does not recur in the future. That is all we have in mind.

Mr. Macdonnell: I am sure we are all gratefully moved by the speech of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I am sure the minister in particular must have been delighted to know that he is a legendary figure not only when the price is going up but when it is coming down. We do not grow very much wheat in Greenwood, and that is all I am going to say about wheat, Mr. Chairman.

I want to make a few remarks, perhaps more in the nature of questions which the minister can answer later. But there was one point of interest that I wanted to put on the record. We all seem to agree that the minister is an optimist. I think he calls himself that, and we often call him that. I thought I would find out what an optimist is and so I looked in the dictionary. A little to my surprise I found—perhaps the minister will be surprised, too, to find what he really is when he describes himself as an optimist—that in the world of business he is associating himself with the philosophers, because I found that the definition of an optimist is a doctrine, a philosophic doctrine, that the actual world is the best of all possible worlds, or the view that good must ultimately prevail over evil in the universe. I am sure it is a great comfort to us all to know that that is the background of the minister's attitude in the things which he does and leaves undone. I bring that forward just as a key perhaps to the explanation of some of the things which we may not fully understand at the moment. We will try to believe that the explanation will come and that when it comes it will have this characterization of great wisdom.

There is of course a danger in optimism, as the hon. member for Eglinton pointed out. He referred to Nelson's telescope and one might refer also to rose-coloured glasses. As I listened to the minister this morning I had the feeling that some of the favourable features he talked about, however pleasant in themselves, would be more significant at the moment if they seemed to be producing better results.

The minister spoke about the improvement in Europe, and the United Kingdom freeing of trade channels; but actually when we look at what we exported to the United Kingdom last year we find that it is $80 million less, and therefore I feel that, however pleasant it is to know that in certain directions the British are freeing their channels of trade, it is mainly in the sterling area and in the non-sterling countries outside North America, and that at the moment the attitude toward us is not nearly so co-operative.

The minister also referred to South American countries such as Brazil. I made some inquiries about Brazilian exchange but did not go into it because it is a puzzle that is beyond me. It does seem a fantastic situation that they have there. So far as I can see, it is not going to facilitate us very much in carrying on trade there.

The minister also spoke about convertibility, and here I want to say one word. The Minister of Finance has spoken with optimism about it. When I asked him a question the other day he gave me a not very informative answer. The effect of it was to assure me that he was still regarding it in an optimistic frame of mind. However pleasant it may be for the minister, and the rest of us, it does not take us very far. My own feeling is that convertibility, true convertibility, is much more in the hands of the United States than it is in the hands of the United Kingdom. Actually, my understanding is that at the moment we have in a narrow sense convertibility with the United Kingdom in the sense that whatever they buy they can pay for in dollars; but the answer is that they restrict what they can buy by quotas and embargoes of various sorts, so that their purchases match their available dollars. In that sense you have convertibility of money, but you have a great restriction of trade, as shown by those figures I have just quoted. Therefore, when the minister speaks in rather optimistic terms about convertibility of sterling, I feel just a little uneasy for fear he is not being fully realistic.

The best information I can get from people who I think are well-informed in London is that they do not think the British people are putting convertibility as their top priority. They are able to deal pretty well in a good many other countries of the world, and convertibility of sterling with the dollar involves certain tightening of the belt; it involves certain stringent measures against any kind of inflation. And as I say, the best information I can get leads me to believe that they have not put it as a top priority. I come back again, therefore, to it and say it depends far more on the United States and on the attitude which they are going to take towards trade. Now, the minister was quite realistic about that this morning. I do not think he spoke too optimistically about the immediate situation in the United States. But actually when we turn back to the meeting in March last we find the account of that meeting not very reassuring, and what has happened since is even less reassuring. I have here the Montreal Star for March 17, and the article reads as follows:

Canada and the United States, in a top level inter-cabinet conference ending here today, agreed to consult together on steps to be taken in handling the most pressing issue between the two countries, disposal of excessive stocks of farm products.

Wheat was the principal commodity used as an example in discussing effect of the agreement.

One way to express the results from the Canadian viewpoint, it was suggested, would be to say that, while the United States may tread on our toes, she will give us warning first.

It is not a comforting statement. We have had a good deal of treading on toes, though I am not quite sure how much warning was first given. At any rate, coming back to what the hon. member for Eglinton said this morning, and what he said seemed to me sounded the bell, although the United States is actually very much bigger than we are we do not have to truckle to them, and we can talk to them as man to man, though one just wonders whether we perhaps have been a bit too complacent.

Now I come back to the Montreal Star, with regard to the meeting of March last:

While it provided ground for claiming a victory for Canada, a communique marking the end of the sessions was expected to emphasize that the greatest achievement lay in the fact that the four ranking cabinet members of each of the two countries could sit down together, define their common interests, and find that both countries want to help each other.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I have heard it is very pleasant for them to sit down together. I hope they did it in appropriate circumstances of comfort and refreshment. But it leaves one rather cold when we find out that the practical results are that they found out that both countries wanted to help each other. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is the evidence of that that we want. It is the result which flows from that that we want, and the hon. member for Eglinton this morning had a good deal to say to indicate that the results so far have not been what we would like.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the hon. member for looking up the meaning of the word "optimistic". It is a purely altruistic act, because my friend has not an ounce of it in his system, and it is very helpful to know just what it means. I looked up the word "pessimism" which is of particular concern to my hon. friend. The definition is:

Tendency to look at the worst aspect of things; doctrine that this world is the worst possible, or that all things tend to evil.

Mr. Macdonnell: I deny that.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): However, I will take off my rose-coloured glasses. I have this satisfaction, namely that I have gone against public opinion pretty consistently since 1944 and I have never had any tendency to take back any prediction I made during that period. I have heard my hon. friend discuss various subjects and I have never known him to be right during that entire period, so perhaps we can both be reasonably happy.

My hon. friend is pessimistic about convertibility. Well, I am not. I believe there are tendencies which indicate that it is not far away. It is a complicated subject and no one country can practise it successfully in the European scene without being joined by other countries. That preliminary work is going ahead. The monetary agreement with Germany is a step in that direction, and I think England is better satisfied than previously that their well-being is not so dependent on the prosperity of the United States as they had at first supposed.

I pointed out in the remarks I made that even though there has been some economic setback in the United States in the past few months, Britain's trade position with the United States has continued to improve during that period. However, that is by the way.

My hon. friend belongs to his school of thought and I belong to mine, and I wish I could win him over because his life would be very much happier. But there is no point in undertaking a hopeless task.

However, I would like to say a few words in reply to a number of hon. members who have pointed out that a great deal of our trade is directed toward the United States. I might point out that Canada is a free economy, perhaps the freest economy in the world. Any Canadian citizen is free to buy anywhere he likes in the world, and Canadian currency is convertible to any currency in the world.

In addition, any Canadian citizen is free to sell his goods in any market in the world and the Department of Trade and Commerce is equipped to help him to do so because we are organized in every market in the world.

We make a determined effort to help our people sell their goods in the United States, and we have a strong service there for that purpose. We have an equally strong service in the United Kingdom and anyone with a desire to sell his products in the United Kingdom receives all the assistance the department can give. The same is true of any country you care to name in Europe. We are represented in 50 countries throughout the world by trade commissioners who are capable, well trained, and thoroughly familiar with their market.

That is the function of the Department of Trade and Commerce. It is said: "Why not stop selling so much in the United States?" But it is not our job to stop selling so much in the United States. It may be asked: "Why do we sell in the United States?" It is the handiest market; goods can be delivered at the lowest freight rate compared with any other market in the world; there is no trouble about currency; and theirs is a free economy just as ours is a free economy. It is the most natural thing in the world for anyone who desires to export goods from Canada to examine the possibility of sale in the United States market.

It is because of these facts that a very considerable proportion of our exports are sold in the United States. We know that certain things will not sell in the United States. We cannot sell wheat. Why? Because the United States grows all the wheat that that country needs and has a surplus to export just as we have. There are certain other products we cannot sell in the United States, but we find markets for these products elsewhere.

It is a natural market place, but there should be no reason why things which cannot be sold in the United States should not be sold elsewhere.

It may be asked: "Why do people buy so much from the United States?" It is a voluntary act on their part and I presume the reason why they buy from the United States is that they find they can be better suited by the products sold in that country. Certainly I know of no other reason. There is no inducement put out by the government of Canada to people to buy goods in the United States other than in their own interests.

In the matter of tariffs, the tariffs against United States goods are the tariffs charged against goods from every favoured-nation country. As far as the United Kingdom and the commonwealth are concerned we have preferential tariffs. I have forgotten the proportion of goods which come in from the United Kingdom free of duty—but perhaps I have it here. The goods which came in in 1952 amounted to a total of $359,757,000, and of that amount $202,938,000 entered duty free. That was 56·4 per cent of our total imports from the United Kingdom.

We offer tariff preferences for those who wish to buy their goods in the United Kingdom, as an inducement for them to do so. I do not know how the government could go further, except by erecting prohibitions against purchases in the United States. Assuming for the moment that we agreed with the opposition —and I may say that I do not at all agree with them—that we have too much trade with the United States, the only way in which we can stop it is to put up artificial barriers in the way of prohibitions or to put on excessive duties against the United States, a procedure which is, of course, unthinkable.

I hope that those who weep and complain about the size of our trade with the United States perhaps will, before this debate finishes, tell us just what we should do to re-orient our trade. It is the feeling of the Department of Trade and Commerce that we need every market in the world and that we need to use that market in the best interests of Canada, Canadian business and the Canadian consumer. That is the natural direction of Canada's trade. In a free economy people buy where they like. There is only one way that I know of in which to increase imports from the United Kingdom and that is to have more Canadian citizens take an interest in buying in the United Kingdom, search out things that can be bought there to their better advantage than elsewhere, and direct their purchasing towards the United Kingdom. That is the only answer I can give. I am exceedingly tired of having opposition members, who have no responsibility in the matter, stand up, denounce the United States as an octopus and say that we should not have so much trade with the United States.

Mr. Stick: Mr. Chairman, I shall take only a few moments, but I do not think these opportunities should pass without someone from my province making some comment upon the trade treaties which have just been signed between Canada and Portugal, Spain and now Italy. For many years in Newfoundland our salt codfish industry was a continual worry to us. This market we were losing year by year. So much was that the case that many people felt that it was a hopeless position we were being placed in and that we could never get it back so that it would be nearly comparable in size with what it was many years ago.

It was a matter of grave concern to us because the codfish industry is our national industry. Some of us had been working and had felt that the marketing of our salt codfish had to be taken out of the organization which had been handling it, and that the marketing should be done through the Department of Trade and Commerce and through the highest levels of government. That step was taken a few months ago when, by agreement with our provincial government, authority was passed over to the Department of Trade and Commerce here to look into the marketing conditions of our salt codfish industry and to see what could be done. The measure of the stature of the Minister of Trade and Commerce is this. Within a week he set the wheels of his department in motion. Within three months we have already had three profitable trade agreements and possibly we may soon have a fourth. Those are facts, Mr. Chairman, that I do not think should go unnoticed in the House of Commons.

We now feel far better about our salt codfish market than we have felt for many years. We now feel that we have begun to market our salt codfish in the right manner. We feel that we are now getting this national industry of ours back on a sound footing. I do not think the opportunity should pass without someone from my province saying a word about what has happened. When I go back home—and I hope to very shortly—I believe a different feeling will exist amongst our fishermen. I believe they will now have a confidence that they have not had for many years that our marketing problems are in the way of being solved. I believe they will feel free to go fishing again. It is my opinion that when they finish up the fishing season this year, they will feel far happier than they have felt for many years. I throw no bouquets in this chamber but I merely say this. It was the energy, foresight and business experience of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that brought this situation about, and I think the committee should be told that fact.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, at this stage I will confine myself to clearing up several points that have arisen. In his remarks of a moment ago, the Minister of Trade and Commerce seemed to be extremely touchy on this subject of the extent to which Canada's trading eggs were being placed in the American basket and about the concern expressed by some of us on this side of the house over that fact and over the fact that the American market, surveyed over the long years, has not been too satisfactory. Conditions have arisen there when the Canadian producer received scant consideration. We have seen that situation in the past two years, when it suited the convenience of the American congress to enact legislation even in breach of the provisions of the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Let me say to the minister that the concern which we have expressed as to the dangers resulting from Canada's placing all her trading eggs in one basket is not shared alone by those on this side of the house. We hold the view that the minister expressed when he said that we wish to extend our trade in all parts of the world. Of course we wish to do that. But we in this part of the chamber are concerned—and rightly so—that the minister takes such an easy-going, nonchalant attitude about the way in which our export trade to our traditional market in Great Britain drops and the way in which we lose that market, as long as he has in the United States a place from which to buy or, to a lesser extent, a place to which to sell. When we have an unfavourable balance of trade with the United States of some $800 million, as we had last year, that fact apparently does not give the minister any cause for concern.

Mr. Chairman, I have said that we on this side of the chamber are not the only ones concerned about this matter of the eggs being put in one basket. Will you listen to this, sir? This is a statement reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail of September 12, 1952. I will read the statement and then I will give you the author of it. The statement reads as follows:

> Canada's economic position, at present strong, also has a weakness, . . .
>
> "That weakness is that Canada depends so much upon the United States . . . Canadians can never be freed from the fear of a slump in the U.S., for which we would not in any way be responsible and which we could do little to control."

Those are the words of the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): So what?

Mr. Fleming: I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce could profit by the comments of his colleague and take a word of warning instead of preserving this easy-going, nonchalant attitude that everything is rosy.

The next thing upon which I should like to comment is the interjection that came from the minister and from his parliamentary assistant during my remarks earlier today concerning what they said was the sale of Canadian wheat to Russia. Mr. Chairman, I could not believe my ears, and I suggested that Canadian sales of wheat to Russia would not amount to anything of any substance. On consulting the official records of the Department of Trade and Commerce for the year 1953 I find that our exports to Russia for the year 1953 amounted to $478. If you look up the details, you will find that the record does not show any sales of wheat to Russia.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What about the year 1954?

Mr. Fleming: If there are available some figures for the year 1954, it would be interesting indeed to see them.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You read the evening paper to keep up to date.

Mr. Fleming: I read the statistics of the minister's department. To the extent that they are not up to date I suppose we shall have to lack figures. But I tell the minister that it would be interesting to know how much wheat, if any, Canada sold to Russia in the first four months of this year.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, I can answer that question. I did not say "wheat"; I said "grain". The amount is about two or three cargoes; I am not just sure how much.

Mr. Fleming: Now it is "grain". This morning the discussion was on the subject of wheat.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I mentioned grain. I said we are selling grain to Russia. If you do not believe it, look at the green sheet.

Mr. Fleming: You will find that at the time I was discussing wheat, and we will weigh the minister's statement on that basis.

The other matter upon which I wish to make comment is this. I made reference to the question I had asked the minister in the house about communications passing between the government of Canada and the government of the United States concerning a possible attempt to limit the export of Canadian base metals to the United States. At page 4106 of Hansard of April 26, appears the question that I asked on the orders of the day. It reads as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if negotiations are proceeding in any form between the government of Canada and the United States with respect to the possible limitation of export by Canada of base metals to the United States; if so, what stage these negotiations have reached and what position the Canadian government is taking.

The answer of the Minister of Trade and Commerce was:

> Mr. Speaker, there are no such negotiations current at the present time.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, but I might point out that the hon. member was then talking in April and now he is talking in June, and much has happened since.

Mr. Fleming: This is interesting because what I was referring to this morning was the question I had asked the minister and he got up and made the pointblank assertion—the record will show it—that he had not made any such answer as I had referred to. My statement as to the effect of the minister's answer is entirely in keeping with his actual answer as I read it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My answer was correct at that time.

Mr. Fleming: The statement the minister now makes about something that has happened since was not the explanation the minister made when this matter came up earlier in the day. If the minister wished to say that although he had given this answer on an earlier occasion nevertheless subsequently there had been communications on the subject it might have been an accurate answer, but it seems to me for the minister simply to deny boldly the statement I attributed to him this morning is quite at variance with the record of the house.

Item agreed to.

426. Trade commissioner service, $2,720,244.

Mr. Michener: This item involves the expenditure of $2,720,244 for our trade commissioner service. I want to say a word about it and pose one or two general questions. I find in the report of the department for the year 1953 that we have 100 foreign service commissioners in fifty-one posts in most of the countries of the world. A rough break-down appears to show that twelve of these posts are in commonwealth countries and seven in the United States. I notice that one post in the United States at Los Angeles is being discontinued, which will leave six. The others are in various countries of the world except of course those behind the iron curtain.

The vote of course includes head office administration expenses, but if one takes the entire vote and distributes it among the posts one gets a cost of about $54,000 for the maintenance of each of the trade commissioner posts. It is a very important service. It can be and I am sure is of great assistance to Canadian business. Its functions are to assist in selling Canadian goods and to find markets, as well as to assist Canadians in their purchases abroad. In making these few comments I simply wish to raise two general questions. I should like to know first of all whether all means are taken to acquaint Canadian businessmen with the valuable services which are available to them so that we can get the best value for these special agents of the country whose duty it is to assist Canadian business. Obviously we are maintaining this service at considerable expense and it is important to derive the greatest benefit from it.

I know there are means by which these services are made available, and I am familiar with some of the publications of the department. I simply raise the point that it is important to make sure that we do get the best value from these special salesmen and purchasing assistants. The other point has to do with the fifty-one continuing offices. As the minister says, we are now entering a more competitive market, particularly for manufactured goods, and perhaps he would say something about the decision to continue with the same number of posts.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I appreciate the interest of my hon. friend in the trade commissioner service, and I am glad that he has had an opportunity to visit some of the offices of the service. The more people do that, the more they will appreciate the calibre of the men we have in the service. We do make every effort to bring home to Canadian businessmen the fact that this service is available to them. The department publishes a magazine called Foreign Trade which comes out every two weeks and has a very wide circulation. It contains up to the minute news from our trade commissioners abroad and often articles about special conditions in one of the countries where the service is represented.

We also bring the trade commissioners home to Canada every three years and send them on a tour across the country. That tour of duty lasts about six months, and they are supposed to contact every businessman who has any interest in their particular area, explain the conditions to him, find out the problems in which the Canadian businessman is interested and work out a plan for closer co-operation in the future. That tour is taken before the man gets his holiday leave. After a year in Canada he goes back to his post with fresh business contacts in this country.

As my hon. friend said, I believe we have fifty-one offices at the moment. New offices under consideration are at Hamburg in Germany, Salisbury in Rhodesia, Accra on the Gold Coast, and Istanbul in Turkey, and we are again considering reopening the office in Los Angeles. We try to keep the service up to the requirements of Canadian businessmen. As soon as we find a particular interest in an area that is not well served we correct that by either transferring an office from a less important position or opening a new office in the area with which we are concerned.

Examinations for the candidates for the service are held annually. We take university men and give them special training before sending them into the field. They have a year's training in Canada in a special course arranged by the department and are then sent out in junior positions in the field and are given the opportunity to become fully experienced under an experienced trade commissioner. After we are satisfied with their ability they are promoted to independent posts. I may say that I have been tremendously impressed with this service. I have been impressed with the way our officers work at a problem. After all, there are no rewards for them. The reward for the businessman is that he will probably make a substantial profit if the transaction is carried out. The only reward for a trade commissioner is the satisfaction of having helped the businessman carry out the transaction.

I have seen these men working days on end on one particular transaction, perhaps a transaction involving a few million dollars. They have had the satisfaction of seeing the transaction completed; they have put in their report, and that is that. They turn to the next transaction. I must say that I think it is a great credit to the service that that kind of enthusiasm can be maintained. I am glad indeed that my hon. friend had the opportunity of meeting commissioners in the field.

Item agreed to.

427. Information branch, $169,323.

Mr. Pallett: I would point out to the minister under this item that there is substantiation for the remarks of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, where he said that it was unnecessary to purchase large amounts from a country in order to sell to it. In the issue of Foreign Trade for May 29, there was great substantiation for what the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe said, the suggestion that we do not have to buy from a country in order to sell to it. In that publication the figures are given in connection with Italy's trade with Canada and it shows that Italy imported from Canada 30·4 billion lire whereas she sold to Canada only $5·8 billion.

With regard to the publication, I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that the department is certainly to be commended for it. I feel that it is doing a very valuable service to this country. There is one question I should like to direct to the minister. I noticed that it costs $40,000 a year to publish this magazine, and I would ask the minister if he would indicate to the house who does the printing, and if salaries are paid other than the departmental salaries?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The printing is done by the queen's printer at the expense of the department. Of course, we have officers concerned with compiling the magazine. My hon. friend will realize that it takes editing and special writing to bring out a magazine of this kind, even though we do get contributions from our trade commissioners in the field. I would think that for a magazine of that kind, profusely illustrated, $40,000 a year is not excessive.

Item agreed to.

Exhibitions—

430. Exhibitions generally, $325,962.

Mr. Nowlan: Would the minister give us an approximate break-down of this item of exhibitions generally? Just what is included in that phrase?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes. We are participating in the fairs in Berlin, Hanover, the French trade fair, a fur exhibit, in Kansas City, an agricultural products show in the United Kingdom, the Japanese trade fair in Osaka and there is an amount for unforeseen exhibits. This year the amount is $78,000 as against $67,000 last year. The increase is due to the Osaka fair, an increase in the Berlin fair of $2,500, the Hanover fair of $3,000 and unforeseen, $500.

Mr. Harris: Just before you leave the chair, Mr. Chairman, may I advise the committee that at eight o'clock, because the Minister of Trade and Commerce is required elsewhere on public business, we shall proceed with national revenue and then fisheries.

Mr. Fleming: And the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, I take it, is first.

Mr. Harris: Yes.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty' name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act for the relief of Rita Boucher Dufort.
An act for the relief of Lucy Halga Saunders Gibson.
An act for the relief of Antonie Lutz Jedrzejewski.
An act for the relief of Jessie Clarke Thompson.
An act for the relief of Dorothy Coughtry Paquette.
An act for the relief of Isabel Ruth Smith Newey.
An act for the relief of Eugene Clifford Carbonneau.
An act for the relief of Jean Antoine Francois Armand.
An act for the relief of Maria Clara Anita Cauchon Quirion.
An act for the relief of Elsie Elizabeth Belford Grant.
An act for the relief of Jean Monette.
An act for the relief of Pearl Mary Brown Pratt.
An act for the relief of Annie Holman James.
An act for the relief of Marie Paule Lemay Mondello.

The Royal Assent

An act for the relief of Marilyn Lesley Simpson Lavallee.
An act for the relief of Edith Lorraine McBurney Robinson.
An act for the relief of Aline Gosselin du Berger.
An act for the relief of Eileen Lucy Tollett Power-Williams.
An act for the relief of William Pappas.
An act for the relief of Claire Labelle Cousineau.
An act for the relief of Denise Marie Helene Laporte Woodhouse.
An act for the relief of Lois Helena Kearns Higham.
An act for the relief of Dorothy Rita Wade Moulden.
An act for the relief of Albert Thornton.
An act for the relief of Koidula Laigma Hagel.
An act for the relief of Yvette Lafontaine Tatos.
An act for the relief of Freda Becker Blumenthal.
An act for the relief of Monica Elizabeth Benoit Mullin.
An act for the relief of Felix Andre Landry.
An act for the relief of Marie-Claire Parisien Barbeau.
An act for the relief of Marie Muriel Gladys Lena Soubre Dubour.
An act for the relief of Joan Millicent Kemp Tessier.
An act for the relief of Mary Joy Thomson Asselin.
An act for the relief of Ronald Arthur Leslie.
An act for the relief of Lucienne Saint-Laurent Calve.
An act for the relief of Roberta Barbara Shvemar Feigelman.
An act for the relief of Pearl Marie Neil Lane.
An act for the relief of Marjorie May Price Amory.
An act for the relief of Marie Jeannette Laure Lafreniere Lucas.
An act for the relief of Frances Goldberg Glegg.
An act for the relief of Thelma Nellie McKeage Patrick.
An act for the relief of Madeleine Roy Julien.
An act for the relief of Louis Tothe.
An act for the relief of Nicolas Joseph Ladislas Barath.
An act for the relief of Ferencz Gyula Babinszki.
An act for the relief of Beatrice Alexandra Duff Sheppard.
An act for the relief of Remi Charbonneau.
An act for the relief of Kathleen Florence Pippy Hayward.
An act for the relief of Fred Skiffington.
An act to amend the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act.
An act to amend the International Rapids Power Development Act.
An act to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.
An act to amend the Research Council Act.
An act to amend the Vocational Training Coordination Act.
An act respecting inventions by public servants.
An act to amend certain acts respecting the superannuation of government employees transferred to crown corporations.
An act to amend the Post Office Act.
An act to amend the Excise Act.
An act to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act.
An act to amend the War Service Grants Act.
An act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.
An act to amend the Bank of Canada Act.
An act respecting savings banks in the province of Quebec.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

The Chairman: Order. I understand when the committee rose previously we were discussing item 534.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—

534. Loans to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation repayable with interest at a rate to be fixed by the governor in council on such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine and to be applied in payment of expenditures to cover capital costs of television installations and to support the development of the service. Such loans, with interest, shall be a charge on the revenues of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation next after the charge imposed under the provisions of section 17 of the Canadian Broadcasting Act, 1936, $3,000,000.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Fleming: A number of questions were asked of the minister on the last occasion. Perhaps he would prefer to make his statement in reply to them now.

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): In the discussion of the estimates of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on Friday last, the first item we were dealing with was the matter of a loan of $3 million to the corporation for television purposes. Under that item we had a general discussion with reference to matters relating to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. At that time a number of questions were asked and perhaps it would be better for the record if I undertook to answer some of them now.

A question was asked on June 3 with reference to C.B.C. commentators for the D-day anniversary. The hon. member for Three Rivers asked:

How many C.B.C. commentators are being sent to Europe to cover the tenth anniversary of D-day?

I am informed by the C.B.C. that it is sending one commentator to Europe to cover the D-day anniversary, Mr. Marcel Ouimet. Mr. Matthew Halton, who is regularly stationed in London, will also cover the event, assisted by Mr. Douglas Lachance, regularly stationed in Paris. Both Mr. Ouimet and Mr. Halton covered the D-day invasion ten years ago.

[Mr. Speaker.]

There was another question that had to do with the broadcasting of the play "The Investigator" on Sunday, May 30. The C.B.C. reports that a play entitled "The Investigator" was broadcast last Sunday evening. The script was submitted by an outside writer and was accepted on the basis of its interest and dramatic entertainment value.

The C.B.C. does not hold itself responsible regarding the personal or political connections of outside writers who might submit scripts. The corporation does of course take the responsibility for accepting and broadcasting any given script.

Mr. Lennard: Why repeat it? The minister gave that the other day.

Mr. McCann: To put it on the record all at once. I am sure the hon. member will not have any objections to reading it twice.

Mr. Lennard: No, but I just wondered. We want to get out of here, you know.

Mr. McCann: I am going to take the hon. gentleman at his word, and if he will assist me we shall get out of here on all these estimates between now and ten o'clock.

Mr. Lennard: You cannot accuse me of prolonging the discussion.

Mr. McCann: Not at all.

Another question was asked by the hon. member for Kamloops with reference to the particular area in which he lives. Service in the mountain area of course is very hard to give. However, we have instituted what are called boosters in the towns of Castlegar and Kaslo.

Mr. Fulton: If the minister would permit me, may I say this? I am interested in this subject and appreciate the tribute he is paying to me, but I did not ask the question. I was not here. I think he must mean the hon. member for Kootenay West. We have a booster station at the place about which I had been speaking previously.

Mr. McCann: I have no doubt you need it. With respect to the other two stations, there are going to be boosters placed there and they will give a service to the particular locality that was complained about by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

During the course of the discussion the hon. member for the city of Hull, the hon. member for Ottawa East and the hon. member for Russell brought up a very important matter with reference to bilingual service in television for the city of Ottawa and this vicinity. Last year when we were preparing the estimates for the C.B.C., the C.B.C.

recommended to the government that we have a second transmitter in Ottawa that would service this particular part of the country, similar to that which we give in Montreal. At that time the matter was delayed because of the fact that we thought it would require an additional appropriation of money in order to build a transmitter. A transmitter, along with the things that go with it, would cost in the neighbourhood of $500,000. The situation is that at the present time we have plans and have awarded a contract for the C.B.C. station in Ottawa that is linked by microwave with Buffalo, Montreal and Toronto.

Although the policy has been to allocate one C.B.C. station to a particular area, and not to give a licence for another station until the C.B.C. has accomplished its objective in that regard, we did make an exception in the city of Montreal, where we have both an English and a French transmitter. In the building in which we propose to house these transmitters and to have studios and in which the programs will originate, we feel that we can very easily have another extra transmitter for Ottawa, Hull and district.

The representations that were made by the hon. member for Hull, the hon. member for Ottawa East and the hon. member for Russell were in accordance with what was the policy of the corporation, although up to this time it had not been announced. I am very happy to announce now that the government is prepared to authorize the C.B.C. to put in a second transmitter and to allocate another channel to Ottawa, so that as soon as the building and the order for the transmitter can be fulfilled we will proceed with the institution of a second transmitter under the control of the C.B.C., which will serve Ottawa, Hull and district, and thus give bilingual television to this area.

I do not know that I can say anything more at this time. As I said on Friday night when we were discussing the matter—and I had only two or three minutes in which to reply to the discussion that had been going on most of the afternoon and evening—the C.B.C. and the government welcome the free discussion that we have had on radio and television policy. I might announce that, according to the suggestion several hon. members made in that debate, we are prepared to have a committee on radio broadcasting early in the next session. I am now of the opinion that, although these meetings have been held usually every two years, the importance of this corporation and of the work it is doing justifies the setting up of a radio committee every year. It has now become a big organization and hon. members will recall that when this policy was announced a few years ago I predicted at that time that it was a very expensive development. It now runs into a great deal of money.

Although we have been criticized by the opposition with reference to our method of financing, I cannot think of any other method that would be better than by appropriations for a number of years to the C.B.C. and by the allocation to the C.B.C. finances of the excise taxes which are collected on television receiving sets and television tubes. We have a sufficient amount of money coming into the treasury to enable the corporation to plan far ahead, and that would not be as easily accomplished if we were dependent upon an appropriation from year to year.

We hope that in a short time, with the completion of our stations in Halifax and Winnipeg, we will have a chain of stations covering Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, and Halifax. If we are able to do that by means of microwave, which might be a few years off, we will be able to connect up these stations for a trans-Canada television network, and that would be in line with the policy we have attempted to put into effect with reference to sound radio.

Let me give hon. members an example with reference to microwave connections. We can only connect these stations in two ways, either by coaxial cable or by microwave. The microwave in this district was built by the Bell Telephone Company for the purposes of carrying out their policy of having a better method of intercommunication between places for their long distance telephone service. This system has worked out to be very useful for intercommunication between these cities for television purposes, and we pay them a rental for this daily communication system between Buffalo, Montreal, Ottawa, and Toronto of something in the neighbourhood of $250,000 a year.

It is our policy to extend that microwave system from Toronto to Hamilton, Kitchener, London, and Windsor, and in the east from Montreal to Quebec city. We will have to undertake at some time or other an extension of the service east and west from Winnipeg and finally from Vancouver east, and the ultimate objective which we aim to accomplish is that all of our C.B.C. stations from the east coast to the west will be connected up by microwave, and having done that we can then establish a trans-Canada television system.

Now, there are just two or three other matters on which I might add a word, and that is with reference to the criticism we have had of the C.B.C., not only in controlling the C.B.C., if you wish to call it that, but the commercial situation and the alternative proposition submitted as to a separate commission. The question has been raised of the establishment of a separate commission to take over the regulatory powers of the C.B.C., and I wish to point out once again that at the request of the government this question was very carefully and exhaustively studied by the royal commission on national development in the arts, letters and sciences. The commission recommended strongly against any such proposal and came out in favour of the continuance of the present system.

The government accepted and still accepts the views of the commission which made such a thorough study of all the factors involved. The idea of a separate commission probably seems attractive to a number of people who have not looked carefully into the subject, and it seems to me that this point of view, often accepted without careful consideration, is in many cases helped along by interested propaganda.

I have noted, for instance, that very often statements in favour of a separate commission come from areas where all the newspapers also have private radio interests. I think it is apparent that, at the time, many of those who advocated a separate commission had not thought a great deal about the matter since the statements and arguments which are made are often conflicting. From what I have seen, the recent demands of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters were to set up a commission which would have none of the powers at present held by the C.B.C. Under their proposals these powers would simply vanish. In other words, there would be no one at all in a position to make regulations to limit abuses in the use of the public air channels, or of licences to carry on stations in the country in the interests of maintaining a national system. I think anyone supporting the idea of a separate commission should carefully consider what is involved.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that that pretty well covers the matters which required answers, and I will leave these matters there and deal with any further questions as they are raised. On the next item I have a statement to make with reference to international shortwave, its operation, and policy.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, there are many questions which have yet to be put to the minister. I thought perhaps he was going to review the finances of the corporation in view of the fact that we have no operating statement for the corporation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1954. However, I can ask detailed questions on that to bring out the information that is required.

Mr. McCann: Did the hon. gentleman see what I put on the record on Friday?

Mr. Fleming: Yes, and I will come back to that later.

I wish to make a comment on the point last dealt with by the minister, namely, the matter of the separate regulatory commission. I shall deal with two aspects of that matter. The minister laid great emphasis upon the report of the royal commission on the arts, letters and sciences, commonly known as the Massey report. But I would like to point out to the house that in that respect there was a majority report and a minority report.

It is quite true that the majority report recommended that there be no change in the dual function now exercised by the C.B.C., that is to say, the function of carrying on a nation-wide broadcasting system, and at the same time carrying out a regulatory function over all forms of broadcasting in Canada. But there was a minority report by a very eminent member of that royal commission, Dr. Arthur Surveyer, and I am prepared to say that if hon. members will address themselves with an open mind to the majority report and the minority report I think they will find the recommendations in the minority report overwhelmingly sound and convincing in their logic.

Now, sir, the minister has chosen to introduce another subject in this latter regard which cannot, if it is taken seriously, have any other effect than to confuse the issue. He has brought in the matter of a proposal which he ascribes to the Canadian Association of Broadcasters to the effect that the regulatory functions be dispensed with. That is not the recommendation I put forward when this matter was debated on June 4.

Whatever regulatory functions are required can be confided to the commission. That, in my submission, is the sound way to proceed. It is no part of the proposal for a separate regulatory commission that the commission be denuded of all regulatory power. Surely that would be a contradiction in terms. Let us therefore, Mr. Chairman, approach this question, when there is opportunity, on its merits without its being confused by the kind of issue that the minister has seen fit to introduce.

What is proposed is that there be a separation of these two functions that are now discharged by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. There would be no interference with its operation. It would carry on as an operating body, operating a nation-wide system of broadcasting; but those regulatory functions that it now exercises over the private stations that are, in many respects, its rivals and competitors, would be carried out by a separate regulatory body. The public interest would not be compromised in any way at all. There would be a separate regulatory commission of a public nature appointed by and responsible to public authority. Let us therefore have that question decided on its merits, Mr. Chairman, and not have it confused by insinuations that inherent in that proposal is any suggestion whatever of abandoning the regulatory functions that are now exercised in general.

I make this further comment and this one only. We have a direct parallel in the way in which regulation is exercised in this country over the railways. It is a regulation that applies equally to the publicly-owned Canadian National Railways and the privately-owned Canadian Pacific Railway as well as other privately-owned railways in Canada. We would not think of confiding to the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways the regulatory powers over its private competitors that are now exercised by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada. What we are recommending in this important field of communication is that there be in that field a separate regulatory board clothed with functions similar to those now exercised in the field of transport by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada. The C.B.C. would carry on its operating functions in the same way as the Canadian National Railway Company carries on its operating functions but under the general regulatory powers of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada.

Mr. Hansell: I should like to ask one or two questions here, if I may. Before asking them, may I say that I think we are pleased with the minister's announcement tonight that a second television station is to be erected and operated within the Ottawa-Hull area. Am I to understand that one of these stations will be entirely a French-language station and the other entirely an English-language station?

Mr. McCann: That is right.

Mr. Hansell: If that is right, perhaps my second question is not particularly significant. I was going to ask whether this is not a reversal of the government's television policy when they announced some time ago that the C.B.C. would occupy one channel in a given area and then other channels would be open for independent television stations. However, if one station is to be a French-language station and the other an English-language station, I can understand that perhaps the action is quite justified. However, may I ask this one question just the same. Have any applications for television stations been received from independent sources either in Ottawa or in Hull? Since the minister has announced that there will be two stations operated by the C.B.C., one a French-language station and one an English-language station, are we to understand that that decision "washes up" all other independent applications?

While I am on my feet—the minister can keep these questions in mind perhaps so that I shall not have to keep jumping up and down—I should like to ask another question. We know, of course—and we appreciate the minister's jogging our memories, if that can be said to be the situation—that eventually it is expected there will be a national network of television stations from coast to coast. I do not know that I want to hurry the matter along. From the physical angle, difficulties arise when we want to hurry things too fast. Then again, a good deal of money must be spent on this project if the ultimate objective is to be realized. Nevertheless, I should like to ask the minister if he would care to state how long he expects it will be before that objective is accomplished.

While the minister is musing a little bit over those answers—although he may have them on the tip of his tongue—I want to make one comment on his further announcement of government policy concerning the independent regulatory body. The minister put great emphasis upon the fact that the royal commission on the arts and sciences had recommended that the policy being pursued should be continued. He went on to put forward the negative angle, namely that they recommended that no other body be set up as a regulatory body. That is all right. We know what the royal commission recommended. But I do not believe that any royal commission is infallible. Even though they may have gone into the study very carefully and have arrived at a conclusion which they themselves, of course, think is a conscientious and proper conclusion, nevertheless royal commissions are not infallible. They may be wrong.

There is another point I wish to make here. The minister said at the same time—and he used the phrase no less than three times—that those who were recommending a separate regulatory body had not looked carefully enough into the subject. He mentioned that point twice and he concluded by saying that he hoped those who recommended such a regulatory body would consider carefully what is involved. Mention was made of that point three times. I am afraid the minister overemphasized it, at least. He is not fooling anyone here. The people who have recommended the separate regulatory body cannot be said to be men who do not go carefully into a study of the thing they are going to propose. He may be able to say that concerning us who sit here and who are interested in, but not vitally connected with, radio interests. However, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters have men who know their business. They are on a par with—I will not say they are above—any radio officials, radio engineers or men who think in terms of radio policy who sit on the government side of the house or who are connected with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. They are men who are just as capable in the radio field as anyone else. You cannot find better anywhere. They have gone into the matter carefully. They know all the angles with respect to a separate regulatory body. I still hope the time will come when we will see that. I think it will be better. I am not going to say that radio policy will be administered any better but certainly in a free country where we believe in freedom of competition such a thing is desirable. I have a few other questions along an entirely different line, but first I would ask the minister if he would care to answer these questions now.

Mr. McCann: The answer to the question of the hon. member for Macleod with reference to the situation in Ottawa is that there will be two channels. There will be one station, one building and one of the channels, which will involve the purchase and installation of a new transmitter, will give entirely French programs and the other channel will give entirely English programs. We have a precedent for that in what we did in the city of Montreal. His other question, as I remember it, was with reference to the linking up of the system. That will probably take two or three years.

Mr. Hansell: I think we will be doing very well if we get it in two or three years. The minister is very encouraging in that respect. My other questions are of a little different nature. I want to be fair, and if these matters do not come under the minister's department but rather under the Department of Transport I will be happy if he will inform me and I will leave them until the transport estimates are before us. I understand that government radio policy does not permit the building of transmitters with what is known as composite equipment. In other words, government radio policy today is that if a station wants to build a transmitter a licence will not be granted unless the equipment is manufactured by one of the standard equipment companies. If that is so, I should like to know why, because according to my information I understand that certain stations in the United States have been able to cut their costs almost in half by reason of their engineers being able to assemble parts from here and there, sometimes manufacture them themselves, and build a transmitter for around $80,000 instead of approximately $150,000 which it would have otherwise cost.

I wonder whether the minister would care to answer that question for me, and a similar question along almost the same line of thought. I also understand that radio policy does not permit radio stations to transmit by what is known as a sort of pick-up antenna but that they must of necessity have lines for which of course a very expensive fee is charged. I understand this is permitted in the United States, which cuts the cost considerably. I am told that an ordinary station can save in the neighbourhood of $40,000 a year. That figure may not apply in Canada, but in the United States about $40,000 can be saved by being able to broadcast by means of a pick-up system rather than by using lines.

Evidently these matters come within the minister's department, and I have a third question which I am sure does. It has to do with the customs duty charged on motion picture films for television. I understand the same customs duty charges are imposed on the importation of films for use on television as are imposed on films that are used in motion picture theatres. The reason I ask this question is that there is quite a difference between the two. In other words, a theatrical distributing agency imports films, pays the duty on them, and then they can be used in several hundred theatres throughout Canada. I understand that the duty on an ordinary moving picture film amounts to about $60.

If such films are to be shown on television and an independent station has to pay a duty of that amount to import a film that is to be used just once, and if they have to have different films for many different programs, then the charge becomes rather terrific. Of course it has to be carried into the cost of operating the station. The sponsors would have to pay, which would mean that the cost to the sponsor would be tremendously high. I wonder whether the minister would care to answer these three questions for me.

Mr. McCann: The answer to the first two questions is that they are matters involving technical requirements, and that of course is decided by the Department of Transport. With reference to the matter of the customs duty on films for television and films for the motion picture industry, I do not know that consideration has been given to the question of use. They are both films. They are classified under the customs tariff as films and the duty is the same in both cases as far as I know. The matter of the usage has not been given any consideration to date under the customs tariff.

Mr. Hansell: That is my point. Because there is no difference the television station has to pay a duty of approximately $60 for one film while the theatre interests can get the same films for $60 and use it thousands of times if they want to. There is one motion picture film in Ottawa today that is entering its third month of showing. If $60 had to be paid every time the film was shown, the cost would be terrific. Since that is so, would the minister not give some consideration to a reduction of duty on films for television purposes?

Mr. McCann: I will bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of Finance, who usually has to do with customs tariff rates.

Mr. Lennard: When a film is returned to the country of origin is the duty not refunded?

Mr. McCann: Part of it. There is a partial refund depending on the length of time that it has been in this country.

Mr. Philpott: I should like to ask the minister a very short question. Last Friday night he said that there must be sufficient national coverage before there could be more than two stations in certain areas. With reference to his statement tonight about the microwave system, does the minister's statement mean that the microwave system will have to be complete before there is alternate service?

Mr. McCann: The answer is, not necessarily.

Mr. Decore: I should like to ask a question with regard to television in Edmonton. I understand that a licence has been granted to some private enterprise there for the construction of transmitters to transmit television programs. My first question is, does the minister know when we may expect to get television programs in Edmonton? My second question is, within what radius from the transmitters will people in an area be expected to obtain these programs?

Mr. McCann: The matter is entirely up to the people who have the licence for the private station. They have to order the transmitter, and it depends entirely upon when the transmitter is delivered to them, and when they construct their building, as to when they can commence operations. This is a matter with which the C.B.C. has nothing to do. In the ordinary course of events it takes anywhere from six months to a year; some stations have come along quicker.

The area of transmission of television equipment is usually a radius of about sixty miles from the centre, and that again depends a good deal on the terrain. I might point this out for the benefit of hon. members, that when you broadcast radio waves they will jump an obstruction, for instance, a mountain that is not too high, and that wave is still continued to the point of reception. It is entirely different with television. You must have a direct line from the point of transmission to the point of reception in order to get good reception. It is for that reason that television waves are received much better over water than in hilly terrain. We believe that the technological development in the science of television transmission may overcome some of those difficulties in the years ahead.

Mr. Decore: May I ask a supplementary question? When this licence was granted to this private enterprise, was it not conditional that the transmitters would be completed within a certain period of time? In other words, could they carry on with this construction for the next five years?

Mr. McCann: No, that is a matter between the company that obtains a licence and the Department of Transport. In this particular case, or any other case, I do not know whether or not the Department of Transport has stipulated a time within which that television station shall be in operation.

Mr. Hosking: I should like to speak for just a moment or two about the C.B.C. and the television stations that we are building across the country. I should like to commend the minister upon the splendid programs we have received over the radio from the C.B.C. The majority of them are of first-class quality.

Just so that we would not ever have a repetition of a program that was broadcast on March 10 in the form of an appreciation of Eugene O'Neill, I should like to tell the house some of the things that were broadcast on that program. This was the filthiest program I have ever heard over any radio. The cursing that went on in it was absolutely disgusting. There were some 125 pages of script, and I believe in 22 places they took the Lord's name in vain. It was a very low type of program. Eugene O'Neill may have been a very great writer, but I do not believe it was fitting or becoming for our radio broadcasting system to pay tribute to the man in a manner that would be disgusting to most Christian homes in the dominion.

If the chairman will allow me, I should like to quote one of the phrases that came over the radio in the course of that program. A Mr. Burke, one of the characters in the play, was speaking to a girl by the name of Anna, and he said something like this:

God's curse on you, you slut; you would be sleeping with any man for a dollar or two.

I do not think that is the proper type of program to be broadcast on a system that gives the high-class service to radio that the C.B.C. programs do generally. Certainly the minister should call the attention of the censors to the fact they let that type of program get through.

I hesitate, because of one program that was absolutely vile, to castigate the service as a whole; it has been excellent. If I want to turn on my radio, hunting a good program at random I try a program from the C.B.C. because the likelihood of my finding an intelligent and interesting program is greater there than anywhere else, except for our local station which is exceptional. I do ask the minister if he would call to the attention of the officials that there are people in the dominion who object to that type of program. I feel that if a little common sense were used the man who would pick that type of program would not be allowed to pick many more programs for the C.B.C.

Having said that, I wish to say this is my only criticism of the C.B.C. I commend the minister most highly for his determination and courage, at this difficult time when expenditures are high, in achieving a series of broadcasting television stations in this dominion from east to west. It would have been very easy at this time for a man with less determination to have allowed our country to have television broadcasts from north to south. In other words, we would be flooded with programs brought in from the United States. The western states would influence our stations in western Canada, and the eastern provinces would be influenced by programs from the eastern states. That would have been a simple thing to do. It would have been a sort of natural evolution to allow that to happen.

He did not do that. He insisted that we have a trans-Canada system. If there was ever a time when we needed to keep our dominion united, it is now. This is one of the things that will do that very well. I commend him for the resistance he has put up to anyone and everyone—it comes not only from the official opposition but from members of his own party as well—to allowing our stations to be broken up so that we would have a north-south television system on the continent rather than an east-west television system for Canada.

If I were picking any particular program on which the minister should be commended, I would say to him that the broadcast of the Grey cup would likely be followed by more people across Canada than any other program. It was certainly very well done. I was not fortunate enough to be present at the game this year, but I honestly believe I saw it better over television than I would have if I had been sitting in a seat in the stands. It was certainly well done.

Mr. Gour (Russell): On behalf of the electors of my constituency, both English-speaking and French-speaking, it is a great pleasure for me to thank the Minister of National Revenue for his quick and gentlemanly decision to allow a French station in this area. As I said in my last speech on this subject, this is an illustration of the ability of this government to give good administration from one corner of the country to the other. I thank the minister again, and I wish that my electors would write and thank him and the cabinet for doing so splendidly.

Mr. Caron: May I be permitted, Mr. Chairman, in the name of my electors to thank the minister for the good news we have received this evening. I was not in the house, but was told by somebody else that our request for a second station has been granted. When I started to speak the other day, I said that I knew the minister and the government were sympathetic and would listen to my request. So, in the name of my electors, both French and English, I thank you, from the bottom of my heart.

Mr. McCann: May I answer the hon. member for Wellington South with respect to the Eugene O'Neill broadcast, if we may call it that. I am sorry if it hurt the sensibilities of some of his electors, in the constituency in which he lives. But there is always another side to it. We received many more letters of commendation for that broadcast than we received protests against it.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, I wish to revert to a question which has been discussed many times in the house, and which will continue to be discussed as long as the situation is not remedied. I go back to the question of the dual capacity of the C.B.C.—the triple capacity, I might say—as judge, litigant and policeman.

I have never been able to understand how anyone can argue seriously that this situation is substantially different from that in the railways, where no one would even dream of suggesting that the Canadian National Railways should perform a dual or triple function.

Tonight I notice that the minister, trying to justify a distinction which I never heard anyone successfully justify, referred to the Massey report. Well, I said to myself, perhaps the answer is in this report. Perhaps I have been wrong all along. Perhaps we will find the answer.

I have read what the Massey report says, and I do not find that it contains anything that even approaches a reason for continuing the situation. The majority report says this, at page 288, under the heading "Procedure of the Board of Governors and a Right of Appeal":

> In the interests of the national system and of the country as a whole, we recommend rejection of the demands by private broadcasters for a separate regulatory body and for the privilege of forming private networks.

I propose to read further; but I think I am correct in saying that that is the only sentence approaching an argument. I shall read more from this paragraph, and if anyone can discern an argument from what I shall read later, then let him do so. I shall repeat the first sentence—

> In the interests of the national system and of the country as a whole, we recommend—

I do not know whether the minister regards that as an argument. To my mind there is not even a featherweight of an argument in it. It is only expressing the view that they have. There is no attempt made to make a distinction from the railway situation, which I suggest it resembles in the closest manner.

Mr. McCann: But that is the recommendation after all these representations have been made.

Mr. Macdonnell: I accept the minister's suggestion, if he can find in this book any reasons—

Mr. McCann: The argument is not given there—only the conclusions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the hon. member read the broadcasting act?

Mr. Macdonnell: Does the Secretary of State wish to make a speech?

Mr. Pickersgill: I was asking a question.

Mr. Macdonnell: I wish to continue by reading further from this section. The Massey commission does recommend some alleviation of the position of private broadcasters, because it recommends that they should have the right to be heard, instead of its being purely a matter of privilege. I shall read what they say:

> At present, when the board of governors contemplates the recommendation of the suspension of a licence or a change in the regulations, the private stations receive notice of the matter and are given the opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel, and at a public session if they so desire. These concessions are granted as privileges. Considerations of justice suggest that they be recognized fully as rights.

Then they continue to discuss the question of the right of appeal. I need not read that part.

What I am still waiting for is someone to give a reason why it would be unfair to do what I submit would be the natural instinct of any reasonable man if a situation of this kind were presented to him. What has been done in connection with the railways would be regarded as the obviously right thing to do. I am still waiting for anyone to give a substantial reason differentiating the two cases.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I have one or two things to say. I do not propose to repeat the arguments advanced last Friday by the hon. member for Eglinton in connection with the monopoly enjoyed by the C.B.C., but I do propose asking the minister one or two questions with regard to the situation out west.

I appreciate the difficulty there is in conducting discussion of the estimates in this fashion, when we dealt with them in a limited degree last Friday and then they are suddenly placed before us this evening after the dinner recess. I noticed however in the minister's remarks on June 4—and I was here and heard them—that he dealt with the policy of the C.B.C. in connection with tele vision, and said, in effect, that in certain areas television stations would be set up under the C.B.C., and that in other areas where the population was in excess of 25,000 private stations might be able to enter the field: Perhaps I should quote what the minister said, so as to avoid any misunderstanding. These are his words as reported at page 5557 of Hansard:

> It may not be long before there is a sufficient degree of national coverage to justify the government and the C.B.C. giving consideration to permitting two and perhaps in some cases more than two stations in certain areas. It is anticipated that, in due course, private stations will be permitted in areas covered by C.B.C. stations, and the C.B.C. may establish stations in some areas originally covered by private stations.

The point I wish to make is this, that in Winnipeg the C.B.C. television station has just recently opened. I believe the opening date was May 31. I read in the press that it has survived the violent storm which shattered different parts of that city. It must not be overlooked however that the provision of television in Winnipeg has been delayed for a long time. It has been available to the people in the central provinces for two or three years, but only now has it become available in Winnipeg and Manitoba.

Now that we have an announcement from the minister to the effect that his program is being modified to a certain degree, and that a second outlet is to be provided in Ottawa, for good and sufficient reasons—to which I have no objection—I suggest to him that he might go further and modify the policy he has laid down. Certainly it should be clarified before the end of this evening. I will suggest one modification. He has said that in due course private stations will be permitted in some areas, and that in due course the C.B.C. may invade areas occupied by private stations.

Surely the policy-making of the department has gone far enough to determine whether it would be a year, two years or three years. Some announcement should be made as to when additional stations may be allowed in certain areas, so that those who propose entering the television field may make proper plans. I ask the minister this question. At what stage will a decision be reached to permit private stations to enter a field that at the moment is pre-empted by a government station? My suggestion is that the policy as announced by the minister last week and the policy that he pronounced a year ago be modified to this extent, that in those areas of Canada where there has been so much delay in providing television under government auspices there should not be the same delay in permitting private stations to enter the field now being served by the government television station.

What is going to happen is this. In the course of time, how many years I do not know, the minister will determine that, in the areas in the central provinces now served by government-owned television stations, private stations may enter the field, and then with a delay of two or three years, out in Winnipeg and elsewhere in other parts of Canada similar action may be taken. I suggest to him that he reverse this trend of events, and that, in view of the delay which has already been caused in giving government television sponsored programs out west, at an earlier stage he permit private stations to enter that particular field if they so desire. I for one cannot see why it might not be done almost immediately.

What is going to happen to determine that at some particular point, one year from now, six months from now, or five years from now, the government will decide that it is time for private television stations to enter the field already pre-empted by a government television station? Can the minister not modify this policy at this point, and in view of this delay that I have mentioned permit a private station, if it so desires, to set up operation, say in the city of Winnipeg? Let the minister bear this in mind as well. In the central provinces that lie so close to the United States border and to the large population areas of that country, there are ever so many more TV outlets available for those who have TV sets on this side of the line, which can tune in to ever so many stations. In the city of Winnipeg and elsewhere in other parts of Canada those extra TV sources will not be available, and consequently I would think that would be a consideration to permit private stations to operate in areas of that nature, so that the people of those areas would have more than one television station to which they might direct their aerial.

Naturally, in certain areas of Canada we will always face this problem. No longer in radio is it a problem, and it should not for any great length of time be a problem in television, but at the moment it is, and in certain areas of Canada for a number of years there will be certain restrictions on the number of programs that can be received. I suggest this is a method by which those areas may be more adequately served and may be brought into a comparable position with the more fortunate people located in the central provinces closer to the United States television stations.

I put these matters before the minister for his consideration and suggest that, in view of his policy announced tonight, he may now consider a further modification in favour of those areas which are less likely to be served adequately with television at the present time.

Mr. Nowlan: Before the minister replies to the various questions that were put to him with respect to television, I wish to raise one point in connection with our local area. When he replies to the numerous questions and complaints about the fact that they have not two television stations, I wish he would tell me what is the situation with respect to Halifax. We have had various statements in the press from time to time with respect to the station there to the effect that they are going to buy the land, they have bought the land, and that they are about to erect these stations. Quite recently I saw that one of the engineers made a statement that sometime in December the television station would be in operation. That is very encouraging, but when the minister replies tonight to the various questions that have been asked that are of interest to other parts of Canada, I wish he would reply to us. Our complaint is not that we have not a dual outlet at the moment. We have not any in the maritimes. The position is such that at least in the eastern part of our country we cannot get television from the United States stations and we are dependent upon the C.B.C. to inaugurate their service. When the minister replies I hope that he will be able to confirm the newspaper story which appeared the other day and which, as I said, was made by one of his responsible officials, and which has not been confirmed by him, that we could expect the station to be in operation in December. If the minister considers that the change in policy in other places applies to Halifax, perhaps we shall have competition at least so that we can have two stations there.

Mr. Ellis: Before the minister replies there are one or two comments that I should like to make at this time with respect to the C.B.C. I want to commend the C.B.C. and a great many of those programs which I as a teacher have been particularly interested in. As a teacher of literature I find that such programs as the productions of "Julius Caesar", "Macbeth" and "Hamlet" have been of great benefit to all teachers throughout Canada who have had the opportunity of listening to those broadcasts and having their students listen to them. The C.B.C. should be commended on the excellence of those productions.

We have had some criticism of the work of the C.B.C. Some of that criticism I find it very difficult to understand. When we were discussing the estimates the last day the C.B.C. was under discussion we had some criticism of the fact that the C.B.C. was trying to impose culture on the people of Canada. On the other hand, we had people criticizing the C.B.C. for producing programs that were not cultural. We had the Leader of the Opposition, I believe, referring to some of the wrestling programs broadcast on Saturday evenings from Chicago. Well, I suggest you cannot have it both ways. You cannot criticize the C.B.C. in one breath because it is trying to impose culture on the people of Canada, and then in the next breath criticize their broadcasting of wrestling matches on television on Saturday nights. I expect the reasons the C.B.C. carries the wrestling matches on Saturday night is that a great many Canadians enjoy watching wrestling matches over television. We should be fair in our estimate of the C.B.C. If we are going to listen to criticism of that organization on the score that it is trying to impose culture, and then at the next moment criticize it because it yields to public demand, I think great inconsistency is revealed there.

There is one matter that should be noted. I recall reading in the press a number of days ago an address given before the United Church conference meeting in Ontario in which one of the speakers pointed out that in the United States—and I am speaking from memory now—eleven corporations in that country controlled 80 per cent of the television broadcast programs. That fact in itself brings home to the people of Canada the necessity of providing television programs that will meet the needs of the Canadian people.

I realize that if we are going to leave radio and television to those who look upon that particular field as a means of commercial exploitation, of presenting programs, together with the advertising commercials that will yield revenue to those companies, we are taking a very shortsighted view of radio and television.

There is one particular aspect of this problem I would like to draw to the attention of the minister and that is, if my understanding is correct, that in my own province television licences have been granted. I believe there have been two applicants, one in my own constituency of Regina City and another one in the city of Saskatoon. I have received some correspondence from constituents who have expressed some alarm over the fact that the C.B.C. is ignoring the province of Saskatchewan, and that they are leaving television broadcasts entirely to private outlets.

I am not for one moment complaining of the granting of licences to private television stations in Regina or in the city of Saskatoon, but I am suggesting that, in keeping with the policy which now prevails in so far as C.B.C. radio broadcasting is concerned, the C.B.C. ought to revise its plans and see whether or not my province can be included in the television plans of the C.B.C. I think some arrangement could be reached whereby, for example, the cities of Regina and Moose Jaw could be reached or whereby the three major cities of Saskatchewan could be served by television under the auspices of the C.B.C.

At the present time we have the C.B.C. transmitter CBK at Watrous which serves a great need in the province of Saskatchewan, but there are a number of people in Saskatchewan who are concerned over the fact that the C.B.C. at the present time is apparently prepared to leave television broadcasting to private outlets in that province.

I should therefore like to ask the minister at this time to seriously consider the provision of television broadcasting by the C.B.C. in the province of Saskatchewan. I am not pretending to be an authority on television broadcasting, and I am not suggesting that some scheme might be worked out at the present time. But I am suggesting that the television authorities in the C.B.C. might find it possible to establish a C.B.C. station in the province of Saskatchewan at some central point which will serve the main population areas of that province in order that we might obtain in the field of TV the excellent service which I feel the people of the province have obtained in the field of radio from our prairie transmitter CBK.

Mr. McCann: Mr. Chairman, I want to answer briefly some of the questions which have been asked. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings raised the question of the development of the television station at Halifax. Let me say to him that the property has been acquired, the equipment has all been ordered, and it now depends very much upon the delivery of that equipment as to when we will complete the station in Halifax. We expect that if we get the delivery of the equipment we will be in operation in Halifax before the end of the year.

With reference to the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, I am not going to go into detail with reference to the answering of his question on policy because I feel I am being baited and tantalized in an effort to have me announce something new with reference to the policy of the C.B.C. There is nothing new to announce. We shall continue to carry out the policy which was laid down a year or so ago. When that policy is changed, and it becomes government and C.B.C. policy, announcements will be made to the house if it is in session, or to the public.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. McCann: Pardon me. May I answer the question asked by the hon. member for Regina City? We appear to have a rather anomalous situation here. This vote covers a loan of $3 million and what we are asking for is money to complete the program which was announced a year ago and which we told the house then would cost a certain amount of money. The hon. member for Regina City now comes along and wants more money for expenditure in Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan has one of the best sound radio systems in the world with a high powered station at Watrous.

Mr. Ellis: But how about TV?

Mr. McCann: We will come to that. On my own observation I would say they have better radio reception in Saskatchewan than in almost any other part of Canada. In Regina and Saskatoon licences have been granted for two private television stations which will pick up the service of the C.B.C. and obtain sustaining programs from them either by films or by kinescopic transmission. If the time comes when the C.B.C. fails in any respect to complete its link or give a better service to the people of Saskatchewan the matter will then be given further consideration.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, the minister has suggested that he was being baited and tantalized with reference to C.B.C. policy, but there was no such intention on my part. Indeed, the minister is being tantalizing in declining to answer the question I asked with regard to a clarification of the policy which was expressed in very general terms, and I do not see why he could not elucidate without doing harm to anyone. He has already declared this policy in the past and I quoted his words. I quote them again:

> —it may not be long before there is a sufficient degree of national coverage to justify the government and the C.B.C. giving consideration to permitting two and perhaps in some cases more than two stations in certain areas.

Well, at this stage, two years after the minister has declared his policy, could he not tell us what is meant by "a sufficient degree of national coverage"? That is what I was after, so that those people who want to enter the private television field may be able to make some plans.

Does "a sufficient degree of national coverage" mean the setting up of a government television station in each province? I think that is what the minister said somewhat later on. And in addition, how long does it have to be in operation before coverage is considered complete? The minister, having to his satisfaction dealt with part of my statement, did not make any comment with regard to my suggestion that he permit at an early date the establishment of a private TV station in the city of Winnipeg, and elsewhere in those parts of Canada where there are limited facilities at the moment because other TV stations are not in close proximity to these cities and areas in Canada. urely there is nothing wrong in making a suggestion of that nature, and I think the minister might have dealt with it.

Mr. Zaplitny: While the minister is considering that point I would like to ask a question which follows in part what the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre had to say. The city of Winnipeg will have a TV station which I understand will have an effective radius of about 80 miles. That, of course, leaves out a very important sector of Manitoba, and perhaps I might even say the most important sector.

I wonder if the C.B.C. has any plans for the balance of the province of Manitoba. For example, the cities of Brandon, Portage la Prairie, Neepawa, Dauphin, and others who are vitally interested in this, would like to know if any plans are now being made in that regard. I believe the minister will agree that that will have a very direct bearing on the volume of, shall we say, agitation for private licences. If the people in the rest of the province of Manitoba feel that there is a C.B.C. service coming in, they are not so likely to join in the hue and cry for smaller television stations under private licence. It is not that we have any objection to private television stations but we believe that it would be better to have a network which would serve at least the greater proportion of the province of Manitoba. I hope the minister will have something to say about the rest of the province outside of the greater Winnipeg area.

Mr. Ferguson: I come from a town or constituency that is just on the frontier. The people up around my part of the country are quite used to snow. But any day in the summer when the two television sets are turned on, we are reminded of the country and the abundance of snow we have. That is all we can see on those two television sets. I think this would be an opportune time for the minister to state now whether the government is working on a plan to extend the scope and the distance—

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that the snow belt?

Mr. Ferguson: That is just about the sort of remark one would expect from the hon. member. Let him either get in or get out. I have the floor. Let the hon. member behave himself. He could not convince my people of anything.

I should like to know what the situation is because private corporations are, as I understand it, at the present time endeavouring to obtain permits to establish television stations in that district. However, it might not be an advisable thing to establish those local television distributing stations if the government were extending the distance they had to cover in a short period of time. That is a matter that right now is of vital interest to the people where I reside. Can the minister give us some information with regard to the matter?

Mr. McCann: I think the information the hon. gentleman wants is that any of those communities or localities are quite free to make application to establish a private television station and that there is not in the near or foreseeable future the likelihood of these outer communities, as we might call them, having C.B.C. service unless technological improvements in the broadcasting of television are of such an extent that the area which we now have is extended, or the radius which will be covered by a high-powered station.

Mr. Ferguson: Then what that means is this, Mr. Chairman. We taxpayers are paying for the over-all government provision of television and we are now being called upon to get something local; they will probably not be nearly as fine broadcasts as the bigger centres are getting. Apparently, from what the minister has said, there does not seem to be any hope of the taxpayers who are on the outer fringe receiving any benefits for the taxes they are contributing towards the C.B.C. for its television. Is that right? We receive no benefits. We must establish our own local, small, inexpensive facilities in keeping with our pocketbooks and the results will be according to the expenditure made. That would mean that as far as television broadcasts are concerned, the service enjoyed by the larger centres would be far superior to that enjoyed by the communities on the outer fringe. Is that right?

Mr. McCann: The hon. gentleman has a misconception as to who pays for television. It is the recipient of television programs who has bought a receiving set and has paid the excise and sales tax on it. Those funds are earmarked. They go to the C.B.C. The individual who lives in a community like that of my hon. friend and who has not a television set and has not purchased one, does not pay anything towards the upkeep of the C.B.C. at all. Our finances are entirely obtained by the matter of allocating to the C.B.C. the excise tax and the sales tax on radio receiving sets and television sets and tubes; and loans in addition. I may say that they are loans which we expect some day to repay. That is what this one is. Let me say to my hon. friend that if private stations are established by private interests in the communities to which he refers they get, the same as any other station, a service free of charge from the C.B.C.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the minister on his announcement this evening that Ottawa is to have another C.B.C. station in French. I think I speak on behalf of all the population of this area, English-speaking as well as French-speaking. As I said the other evening, this action will do much to convince the people of the good intentions of the C.B.C. and of the fact that the principles by which it is governed are truly to serve all the population, wherever they may be. We in this area also are satisfied that in due time there will be some private stations which I think would serve us well. We hope that the new French programs will be received by our population in the near future.

Mr. McCann: I thank the hon. member for Ottawa East for what he has said. I just want to correct what appears to be a misconception in the statement. This is not a second station. Ottawa will have one station with two transmitters and two channels. If it goes out throughout the country that we are building another big building here, it will give a wrong impression. That is not so. Arrangements will be made that two transmitters will be within one building and another channel will be allocated to Ottawa so that you will get French programs over one channel and English programs over the other one. The position will be exactly the same as that which obtains in Montreal.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I thank the minister for raising this matter. That is exactly what I pleaded for the other evening. On those grounds I thought it was possible to have another outlet in Ottawa, because, as the minister has so well said, it would not involve the construction of a station but merely the use of another channel on a new transmitter.

Mr. Nicholson: I should like to make a few comments following the suggestions made by the hon. member for Regina City. Those of us who live in Saskatchewan appreciate the splendid service we receive from C.B.C. Watrous. The other day I said that we have not any radio stations in the constituency in which I live. Prior to the establishment of the Watrous station we were at the mercy of some of the powerful American stations and occasionally we were able to get some of the local stations. Having had the good fortune to have the service over the C.B.C. from Watrous for so many years, we should like the C.B.C. to come into the television field in Saskatchewan instead of turning the field over to private television stations. On Friday I referred to those wise words uttered by the late Lord Bennett when the first radio bill was before parliament; at that time he suggested that this was too valuable a resource for the people to give away for a song. I think that advice given in 1932 is good in 1954. I have always been happy that I have lived in Canada, but never happier than when I visit the United States and have to compare their radio with Canadian radio and their television with Canadian television, where you have to take so much obnoxious advertising with their musical or other programs. I hope the minister will, as soon as possible, come into Saskatchewan in the television field and see to it that the people on the frontiers have the advantages that are now taken for granted in the cities. While it is true that a new station is not being built in Ottawa, the minister has announced that an expenditure of $500,000 is going to be made to bring in the two languages. I am not complaining about that expenditure. But if the people in this area can have the choice of either French or English programs, I think the people on the frontiers should have the privilege of having the much improved television service that the C.B.C. will give.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): What progress has been made by the C.B.C. in developing colour television? It is a well known fact that the people of this country who have bought television sets have paid extremely high prices for them. I think it is fair to say that we in Canada have paid almost twice as much for television sets as the same machines would cost in the United States. The television industry in Canada has pretty well saturated the market with black and white television. What is going to be the position of the Canadian people when colour television arrives? I understand it is just about due to be introduced in the United States now. What is going to be the situation in Canada in the case of people who have already purchased television sets? The market has been saturated with black and white television sets, and if colour is to be introduced and people are going to be required to buy new sets, that is coming pretty close to the point of exploitation.

I think some consideration should be given to having sets that will be convertible from black and white to colour so that if it is desired to change a black and white machine to colour it can be done for a nominal fee instead of having to buy a completely new set. Has the minister given any consideration to that?

Mr. McCann: I have followed closely the development of colour television, and I may say to the hon. member that we have not spent any money on behalf of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation with respect to the development of colour television in Canada. The large companies in the United States have invited us to follow the progress that is being made there. At the present time colour television sets cost from $1,200 to $2,000. I would suggest to the hon. member that if he has in mind some sort of gadget that will change black and white into colour he has got a fortune right before him. They have been working on that for years and have spent millions of dollars but it has not been developed. We in Canada will continue to follow closely the developments with respect to colour television and when it becomes practical we will attempt to introduce it in Canada.

Mr. Zaplitny: Would the minister make a statement with respect to the question I asked having to do with C.B.C. television plans for the rest of Manitoba outside of the Winnipeg area?

Mr. McCann: Outside of the city of Winnipeg any individual or company is free to make an application for the establishment of a private television station. Once it is established we will provide it with programs as we do other stations. As I said before, the development of the microwave may bring about sooner than we anticipated the linking up of the main station with private stations in other parts of the province.

Mr. Zaplitny: What I had in mind was whether the C.B.C. had any intention of installing relay or booster stations at other points in the province in order to provide its own service to a wider area. Is that contemplated?

Mr. McCann: There is no such thing as a booster station in television.

Mr. MacLean: There are a couple of questions I should like to ask the minister but before doing so I should like to revert for a moment to his remarks regarding the control of broadcasting in the country by a separate regulatory body. I know the minister wants to be fair, but if I understood him aright I must say that either he was not understood as he intended to be or else he was something less than objective as far as the question is concerned. He left the impression with me that the idea of having our publicly owned broadcasting system and our privately owned broadcasting stations both controlled by a separate controlling body was an ill-considered theory advanced by persons who were not very well versed in the field. He left the impression with me that it was considered that it was something approaching a harebrained idea.

I should like to point out that Australia, which has a federal system of government very similar to ours, had a system of radio broadcasting very similar to ours for a number of years, a privately owned system of stations operating opposite a publicly owned system with the publicly owned system controlling broadcasting exactly as in Canada. A few years ago, as the result of a very detailed investigation of the situation, the government of Australia decided to divorce control from operation so far as the publicly owned system was concerned and set up what is known as the Australian broadcasting control board. That was brought into being by the Australian broadcasting control board act which was passed by the previous government to the one now in power in Australia. When that government was defeated at the polls and the opposition came into power they retained the system. I think it must be admitted that there is a very large segment of public opinion in some parts of the world at least which considers that the idea of controlling publicly owned and privately owned broadcasting by a separate board has considerable merit.

I do not want to labour that point, and I pass on to the three small items I want to bring to the minister's attention. The first one has to do with television. I think it can be taken for granted—at least, I hope it can —that if at some future date the C.B.C. decides to broadcast television in colour it will use a system which is compatible with receivers now in use, thus permitting the reception of colour programs in black and white. I have a couple of other points which I suppose are related to the question of control of broadcasting. One has to do with the advertising which is broadcast on both publicly and privately owned stations. It is quite obvious that in the case of other types of publishing, newspapers and so on, people are not forced to pay any attention to the advertising. If we do not like the advertising in the newspaper we skip it, but in the case of broadcasting the thing is in sequence so we have no choice but to listen to or watch the advertising that is thrown at us.

I should like to suggest that it might be advantageous to control the type of advertising more closely. I do not object to advertising as such or the time devoted to it. I think that is a necessary thing in a country such as ours in order to finance our broadcasting at all, but it is the content to which I object. I object to broadcasting advertising which is dramatized and which includes the squalling of sick babies and the moaning of otherwise healthy people who are suddenly stricken ill by lumbago or something of that sort. I think that considerable of that type of advertising is perhaps unnecessary.

I was pleased to hear the minister say again that private television stations that are set up will have sustaining program service supplied to them by the C.B.C. I think that is an excellent thing, and I think it is only fair because the people who watch these network broadcasts pay the excise tax on their receivers the same as the people who have the privilege of watching C.B.C. broadcasts. The raising of funds by way of excise tax is a different system. I feel that the same principle should be applied to sound broadcasting, to some extent at least.

I say that for this reason. Private stations are not permitted to have networks: It is, therefore, in very rare instances that it is economically feasible to put on live programs. These stations have to resort to canned music or canned programs of some sort, and most of those canned programs come from the United States. I should like to see the C.B.C. engaged in the recording of programs for sound transmission in Canada to be used by private stations as much as possible.

Mr. Ellis: May I ask the minister a question based on an earlier statement he made that private television stations would be supplied with certain material from the C.B.C. Can the minister tell me what arrangement is being made between the C.B.C. and private television broadcasting stations with respect to this material? In other words, is there a definite percentage of the broadcasting time which private stations must make available for network programs, or what guarantee have we that the more important C.B.C. network programs will be carried by private stations?

Mr. McCann: May I answer the last question first, Mr. Chairman? Private stations are obliged to take a minimum amount of material, and presently we are offering more than they can take.

The hon. member for Queens, and other members, have raised again the question of a regulatory body. I am not going to go into a detailed explanation or reiteration of that argument. This matter has been brought up at successive meetings of the radio committee for a number of years. Detailed arguments were presented to the Massey commission on the subject, and what I am going by, as well as the C.B.C., is the majority report of the commission with reference to the regulatory body, which is the C.B.C. and which has been found to be satisfactory.

Mr. Leboe: From listening to the debate tonight, there is one thing that seems obvious and that is that members are seeking for an alternative to the C.B.C. or vice versa in the television field. Some of the members who have spoken here tonight want the C.B.C. to move in where private television stations are coming into being. On the other hand, we have people who want private television stations to be established where we have C.B.C. service. It would seem to me, therefore, that we, as a people, are looking for an alternative so that we are not confirmed to either one or the other. I think, essentially and basically, that is freedom. I think it is the seeking of freedom that causes the people across the land to want this alternative.

I was interested in what one hon. member had to say about the tax. I think it is interesting to know that the tax on television sets will provide the C.B.C. with funds, although the purchaser may be a viewer of a private station. I feel that is a factor which will benefit the programs the C.B.C. may supply to the private station in carrying out their service. I was interested, also, in what the hon. member for Wellington South had to say about a certain program. I am wondering whether the minister can provide the house with any figures in connection with that program, in view of the answer he gave. I should like also to know if there has been any poll taken of listeners who are able to receive both the C.B.C. and private stations in the same area, to determine the listening audience of the C.B.C. as compared with the private stations. I think that would be very interesting, if the minister has those figures, and I should be glad to hear from him.

Mr. McCann: Those figures are not available, but we can get answers to those questions and put them on Hansard or give them to the hon. member privately.

Mr. Fleming: I have several questions for the minister. In his statement to the house on June 4, he referred to the four private stations that are now in operation and the sixteen more that have been authorized. May I ask him if he would put on the record tonight the call letters and locations of each of those stations? I do not suggest he take the time to read that in full now, but he could put it on the record tonight.

The next question I have is as to the budget of the C.B.C. for this forthcoming year. At page 5556 of Hansard of June 4, the minister put on the record the essential items in the operating statement of C.B.C. for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1954. Can he give us the figures in the budget for the fiscal year which commenced April 1, 1954, the contemplated revenue and expenditures?

Mr. McCann: To what did the hon. member refer that was not given on June 4?

Mr. Fleming: The figures given by the minister on the page to which I have referred are the figures for the operations for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1954. What I am asking is, what are the figures for the budget for the new fiscal year which commenced April 1, 1954, the contemplated revenue and contemplated expenditures?

Mr. McCann: I am informed, Mr. Chairman, we have not the detailed figures on that. The revenue is pretty much as estimated in the estimates. For instance, the vote will be $6,250,000 to provide the requirements of sound broadcasting, and the other for the amount equal to taxes is $15 million. Our expenditures we contemplate, without giving details, will be about equal to the amount of money that is given here by statute.

Mr. Fleming: That is not a very satisfactory explanation. We are asked to provide a loan of $3 million in addition to the other revenue that has been made available to the C.B.C. There is $6,250,000 under the five-year system of handling grants, and then there is the revenue from excise taxes, which last year yielded considerably more than $15 million. Actually last year it yielded about $17 million from both TV and sound sets. The revenue this year has been calculated on the careful side at $15 million. But, Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out that we are dealing with a very substantial amount of money. Last year the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation did not need all the money it received by way of revenue. On the sound operations it finished up with a surplus of $1,091,000, after writing off $515,000 on account of depreciation and obsolescence. On the television side of its operations it finished up with a surplus of $5,331,000 after writing off $425,000 on account of depreciation and obsolescence.

This means that last year, in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1954, after writing off almost $1 million on account of depreciation and obsolescence the C.B.C. had a surplus of $6,500,000 for that year. That sum, we are told, is available now to be used in this program of capital expansion.

I am wondering what case is to be made out to support the necessity for a loan of $3 million in addition to the $6,250,000 from the grant and $15 million at the very least from the excise tax on receiving sets. Available in addition to those sums, let me remind you, are $6,500,000 of surplus from revenues in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1954. What is the case the government proposes to make out for asking for a loan of $3 million in addition to these sums?

Mr. McCann: Mr. Chairman, we announced last year that the program would be for stations at Halifax, Vancouver, and Winnipeg, and a second station at Montreal, and one in Ottawa. We got funds then to the extent of $4,700,000, and this $3 million is to complete the program which was announced a year ago. The other money will be for programming and operations.

Mr. Fleming: Are we to understand that this will complete the program? As I recall the figures, the program was going to involve an expenditure on capital account of $15 million to set up the system. It was approximately $15 million. The minister has referred to the figure of $4,700,000 laid out thus far, and $3 million by way of this loan. Are we to understand that with the assistance of this money, and $6,500,000 left over last year as surplus, that the $3 million will now secure the completion of that $15 million program of capital expansion to set up the television system across Canada?

Mr. McCann: What we contemplated two or three years ago.

Mr. Fleming: This will complete it?

Mr. McCann: I think so, yes.

Mr. Fleming: My final question is this: How much time was allotted to the communists, known as the Labour-Progressive party, during the course of the last general election, as a share allotted to it of the time made available to political parties during the campaign?

Mr. McCann: I am informed the answer to that was that it was two periods, and that was done by full agreement of the other political parties in the house.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, the minister talks about an agreement. I think he had better put his answer on the basis of a regulation. I wish to raise the question of the C.B.C. regulation which exists by reason of the fact that it has the sanction of the government, and permits communists in this country, calling themselves the Labour-Progressive party, to obtain free time on the air, simply because they nominate a designated number of candidates.

We know that the nomination of candidates is simply a fiction. It is only a fiction designed to enable them to bring about technical compliance with this regulation of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I ask the minister if he does not think it is about time that that regulation was revised. We know perfectly well in this country that communists will just put up enough candidates to comply with the number prescribed.

I think it shocks a lot of people in this country to think that free time is being made available to communists, whose loyalty is not to this country, and who are able to obtain that time under a regulation that exists, and in my opinion has existed far too long. It is only a technical compliance, a fictional compliance with the intent of the regulation and it should be changed.

Mr. McCann: It was not done by regulation. It was done by agreement of the political parties. And if you want to know who the representatives of your party were, they were Mr. Grattan O'Leary and Mr. "Dick" Bell.

Mr. Fleming: Let me tell the minister—and let there be no misunderstanding about it—that we are dealing with a regulation. And we are dealing with a regulation that has existed for some considerable time. And those to whom the minister has made reference I have no doubt had no alternative but to accept this situation, in view of the existence of the regulation. To say that they accepted the principle of giving communists free time on the air is just to talk nonsense.

I tell the minister that what was done was done by reason of the existence of a regulation. It is not a new regulation; it has been there for some time and I submit it is high time some thought was given to it—a regulation that permits communists to have free time on the air at public expense.

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman, I must say I am most surprised to see the hon. member for Eglinton taking exception to the understanding about radio time. Having been in the Ontario house for many years, I would say that it ill becomes the opposition to blame the C.B.C. for the time they have given the Labour-Progressive party. For I sat in the house in Ontario while the Leader of the Opposition in this house was the premier of Ontario. And he could have, in his own province, outlawed the communists and prevented them from sitting in the Ontario house, just as the premier of Quebec did, if he was sincere in his talking.

Mr. Fleming: On a question of privilege; the hon. member has cast doubt, as he has plainly said, upon the sincerity of an hon. member in this house, namely the Leader of the Opposition. That is in my opinion against the rules of the house, and I hope he will be made to withdraw.

Mr. Pickersgill: He was talking about the premier of Ontario.

Mr. Fleming: He was talking about an hon. member in this house, and he questioned the sincerity of that hon. member. I suggest that language like that cannot be used in this house.

Mr. Habel: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: I will hear the hon. member for Cochrane.

Mr. Habel: I withdraw this remark; but the hon. member will not prevent me from thinking that I am right.

Mr. MacInnis: Just a word before we close this part of the discussion. I think we should be more clear on one point. My understanding is that, provided they can meet certain requirements, the recognized political parties in this country are entitled to free time on the air, from the broadcasting corporation. And that applies not only in national radio but, in my province at least, to the private stations. Because they give a certain amount of free time, too.

The Labour-Progressive party, or the communist party, if you wish to call it that—and I quite agree that it is the proper term—get their share of the free time as well. It is not necessary for me to come to the defence of the government in this matter; but the circumstances are there. And unless and until that party is declared an illegal political party in Canada it is entitled to the same rights and privileges as every other party.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Small: I have a question to ask in regard to the question asked by the hon. member for Bow River about colour television. I am not quite satisfied with the explanation that was given. About three or four years ago an invention on colour television was announced. It was taken up by two different companies. One had to do with a scanning plate and the other a cylinder. It was said at that time that the cost of purchasing this gadget for making colour television was so small that anyone could procure it and it could be attached to any television set as you would an adapter. Immediately after that it was announced that the invention had been purchased by the television industry and that they were developing it. For two or three years nothing more was heard about it until a question came up in the United States senate or congress asking what had become of the invention and they set up a committee to see what was the delay in placing it on the market. The idea they advanced was that the public would be exploited in regard to the cost of the invention. I do not think the explanation given to the committee by the minister sufficiently covered the question raised by the hon. member for Bow River, that the public of Canada were not going to be exploited when colour television was perfected. Our own technical men, or a committee, should be set up to investigate and see that exploitation does not take place. Colour television sets are going to be in demand and the suggested cost is away out of line. Therefore this is an important matter. We should see that no exploitation of the Canadian public will take place.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Blackmore: I have a question to ask.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on resolution 534? Shall I report progress.

Mr. Harris: Before you do that, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I am sure hon. members will agree we have had quite a considerable debate on C.B.C. I have made clear to hon. members opposite some reasons why it would be desirable to complete at least this item of the minister's estimates. I wonder whether it would be possible to go on, since I gather that the hon. member for Lethbridge wishes to say something. I also gathered that no other hon. member rose. If it would be possible to sit beyond the regular closing hour it would be a convenience particularly to the C.B.C. to have its estimates disposed of at this time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blackmore: I am not quite sure how long it will take to deal with what I wish to ask about, because I asked the minister a series of questions the other night, and also asked him to have the answers when he came before the committee next. He apparently did not notice that I asked those questions.

Mr. McCann: Mr. Chairman, may I, with your permission, interrupt the hon. member? The questions that the hon. member asked had to do mostly with the C.B.C. international service, rather than with the loan for television. I have the reply, which I think will satisfy him, answering all those questions, and I shall give it when we get to that item. We are getting it all mixed up here. The items are 53 and 54. If we want to go ahead with them tonight, I shall attempt to give him the answer.

In addition to what the leader of the house has said, I just want to state that the next meeting of the C.B.C. is to be held in Newfoundland next week. My officials, who are officials of the corporation and who are here, will not be available, and if we want to run this into the hot weather in July to get the answers, that suits me.

Mr. Blackmore: I desire to be completely co-operative. If the minister will give us a commitment that when this item he refers to comes before the committee he will give me the same privilege of asking questions which I would enjoy at the present time on this item, I will gladly allow the item to pass.

The Deputy Chairman: The questions to which the hon. member refers will be answered immediately the next item is called. Shall item 534 carry?

Mr. Fleming: It is understood that the minister will put on the record the information I asked for with regard to private stations. That will go on the record tonight.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the minister unanimous consent to place on the record a list of the stations, call letters and location of the stations?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCann: The list follows:

LIST OF TELEVISION STATIONS IN CANADA

April—1954

| Call letters | Location | Address | Channel | Power | Commenced operating | Expected commencement |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| CJCB-TV | Sydney | J. M. Nathanson, Esq., Manager, Station CJCB-TV, Radio Building, 318 Charlotte Street, Sydney, Nova Scotia. | 4 | 99·5 Kw V59·7 Kw A | | August—September, 1954 |
| CHSJ-TV | Saint John | George Cromwell, Esq., General Manager, Station CHSJ-TV, 14 Church Street, Saint John, New Brunswick. | 4 | 27·8 Kw V13·9 Kw A | March 23, 1954 | |
| CFCM-TV | Quebec | Claude Garneau, Esq., Manager, Station CFCM-TV 145 Rue St. Jean Bosco, Ste. Foy, Quebec, P.Q. | 4 | 1·27 Kw V·635 Kw A | | July, 1954 |
| CJBR-TV | Rimouski | Jacques Brillant, Esq., President, Station CJBR-TV, 6 St. Jean Street, Rimouski, P.Q. | 3 | 34 Kw V19·4 Kw A | | Summer, 1954 |
| CHLT-TV | Sherbrooke | Alphe Gauthier, Esq., Manager, Station CHLT-TV 3 Marquette Street, Sherbrooke, P.Q. | 7 | 17·3 Kw V8·8 Kw A | | |
| CKWS-TV | Kingston | Roy Hofstetter, Esq., Manager, Station CKWS-TV, Whig-Standard Building, Kingston, Ontario | 11 | 99 Kw V54 Kw A | | October, 1954 |
| CHCH-TV | Hamilton | Ken Soble, Esq., General Manager, Station CHCH-TV, 163 Jackson Street, W., Hamilton, Ontario. | 11 | 16·9 Kw V10·05 Kw A | June 7, 1954 | |
| CKCO-TV | Kitchener | E. E. Fitzgibbons, Esq., General Manager, Station CKCO-TV, 864 King Street W, Kitchener, Ontario. | 13 | 16 Kw V8·5 Kw A | March 1, 1954 | |
| CFPL-TV | London | Murray Brown, Esq., Manager, Station CFPL-TV, P O. Box 488, London, Ontario. | 10 | 117 Kw V59·6 Kw A | November 28, 1953 | |

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| CKLW-TV | Windsor..... | J. E Campeau, Esq.,Manager, Station CKLW-TV,Canada Trust Building,Windsor, Ontario. | 9 | 18·711·2 | Kw VKw A | | August, 1954 |
| CKSO-TV | Sudbury..... | W. J. Woodill, Esq.,General Manager, Station CKSO-TV,Regent & Ash Streets,Sudbury, Ontario. | 5 | 1·74·87 | Kw VKw A | October 17, 1953 | |
| CFPA-TV | Port Arthur..... | Ralph Parker, Esq.,Manager, Station CFPA-TV,Public Utilities Building,Port Arthur, Ontario | 2 | 5·102·55 | Kw VKw A | | September, 1954 |
| CFQC-TV | Saskatoon..... | A. A. Murphy, Esq ,Station CFQC-TV,216 First Avenue N.,Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. | 8 | 35·817·9 | Kw VKw A | | Early Fall-1954 |
| CKCK-TV | Regina..... | H. A. Crittenden, Esq.,Manager, Station CKCK-TV,Leader Post Building,Regina, Saskatchewan. | 2 | 18·910·8 | Kw VKw A | | July, 1954 |
| CHCT-TV | Calgary..... | H. G. Love, Esq.,President, Station CHCT-TV,c/o Radio Station CFCN,12th Ave. & 6th St. E.,Calgary, Alberta. | 2 | 10·95·45 | Kw VKw A | | Early Fall-1954 |
| CFRN-TV | Edmonton..... | G. R. A. Rice, Esq.,Station CFRN-TV109 C.P.R. Building,Jasper Avenue,Edmonton Alberta. | 3 | 23·914·3 | Kw VKw A | | October, 1954 |

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I do not quite know what you mean by item 534. My book is open at page 8, "Canadian Broadcasting Corporation".

The Deputy Chairman: For the information of the hon. member, resolution 534 was called first because it is the only item in the estimates which refers to the domestic service, including television, of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. All the other items deal with the overseas international service.

Mr. Hansell: I am quite agreeable for this item to pass but I do not think that at this late hour we can go into the international service.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Blackmore: I am seeking clarification. Just exactly what item will I have the opportunity of asking these questions on?

Mr. McCann: Item 53.

The Deputy Chairman: Item 534 is agreed to. We shall now call item 53.

International shortwave broadcasting service—

53. Maintenance and operation including authority to credit to the appropriation revenue from the rental of facilities in Radio-Canada building to an amount of $160,000 and to re-expend it for the purposes of the international service, $2,199,150.

Mr. McCann: Mr. Chairman, on resolutions 53 and 54, having to do with the international shortwave broadcasting service, I wish to make a short statement in which I think will be incorporated the answers to the questions put by the hon. member for Lethbridge. I understand that the matter of the C.B.C. international service was discussed within the last day or two by the committee on external affairs, so that I assume that a great many of the points which might be brought out at this time have already been dealt with. However, may I say that the shortwave broadcasting service broadcasts regularly to Europe, Latin America and Australasia, as well as providing Canadian news and radio entertainment for the Canadian armed forces establishments in northern Canada and overseas in Korea and Europe. It is currently transmitting in 16 languages, for a total of some 115 hours a week, as well as having a regular relay service in Austria and Greece.

During July of 1953 a new service was inaugurated to eastern Europe, with the establishment of daily broadcasts in Polish. The international service is now therefore broadcasting regularly to three areas of eastern Europe in Czech and Slovak to Czechoslovakia, in Russian and Ukrainian to the U.S.S.R., and in Polish to Poland. In this way Canada is playing its part in the common western cause of seeking to bring the truth to the peoples behind the iron curtain. In this area, the shortwave service works quite closely with the B.B.C. and the "Voice of America" in arranging its program schedules and facilities for the maximum effectiveness in combating jamming, and reaching the audience.

Languages of transmissions are English, French, Dutch, Norwegian, Danish, Swedish, Finnish, Italian, German, Czech, Slovak, Russian, Ukrainian, Polish, Spanish, Portuguese.

The service broadcasts about seven hours a week to each of the countries behind the iron curtain. The general purposes of shortwave broadcasting from Canada are: 1. To secure general political and social good will and understanding for Canada in European, Latin American and commonwealth countries. 2. To project abroad Canada's aims and policies and the life and culture of our people. 3. To provide a reliable source of international and Canadian news for the peoples of eastern Europe; to counteract communist propaganda about the western world; through news, factual information and vigorous statement of our views on current topics to encourage the Soviet people to question their governmental policies and to oppose its aggressive tactics, and in the satellite countries to keep alive their contact with western democratic life and seek to frustrate the efforts of Soviet domination. 4. To provide an appropriate climate for diplomatic and trade relations with other countries and to promote the general activities of government departments in their work abroad.

As all members are aware, the implementation of these policies is carried on in close collaboration with the Department of External Affairs. That department has a special section whose function it is to provide political guidance on international issues and check on such scripts as are broadcast. This section has been in existence now for over a year and has proved its value as a day to day continuing link. Careful supervision is also exercised over all material before broadcast through a central policy control unit in the shortwave service. This unit checks on all news bulletins and political material and also prepares basic scripts for the use of various language services.

Regarding the audience behind the iron curtain, it is of course most difficult to assess how large a percentage of people are actually listening. We know that in Czechoslovakia until the time of the communist coup in February 1948 we had a large and steadily increasing audience. Reports from refugees and other sources would confirm us in believing that this large audience has continued to increase rather than decline. Similar sources confirm that western broadcasts to the Soviet union are heard, particularly outside the Moscow area where such broadcasts are heavily jammed. In broadcasts to this area, Canada of course works closely with the major broadcasting organizations, the B.B.C. and the "Voice of America", to make jamming of western transmissions as difficult as possible and to ensure that as much of western broadcasts as possible reaches the audience.

The Department of External Affairs is also responsible for advising the international service on the initiation and development of program service to individual countries.

In the estimates for the year 1954-55 the increase of some 8 per cent is almost entirely due to higher operating costs resulting from union agreements negotiated or in process of negotiation with the corporation. With the addition of the Polish service in July 1953, no expansion of service has been made or is contemplated.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, the minister gave an answer to three of my questions but he seems to have missed the point completely in my whole set of questions. The purposes which he has outlined are exactly adorable. What we are concerned about is to what extent the individual broadcasts actually implement what the words about these purposes would lead us to suppose. That was the main purpose of my question. My first question was: Who has the power to determine policy? Who decides policy in the C.B.C.? The next question was: What means of screening has the minister to make sure that C.B.C. personnel are all pro-Canadian? Now, I thought I made it quite clear the other night that I personally—

Mr. McCann: Both these questions were answered in that statement and if the hon. member reads it over he will get the answer.

Mr. Blackmore: There was nothing about screening.

Mr. McCann: Yes there was.

Mr. Blackmore: There was nothing to tell who decides policy.

Mr. McCann: Not the names of individuals.

Mr. Blackmore: Well, surely that is what we want to know. We want to know who determines policy with respect to the C.B.C. For example, I have a question—

Mr. McCann: Excuse me, but I will read this again:

> Careful supervision is . . . exercised over all material before broadcasting through a central policy control unit in the shortwave service.

Mr. Blackmore: But we want to know the names of the people who constitute that committee, what kind of people they are, what their background is, and who is in a position to exercise control over them. Tonight I wish to ask some other questions. Do I understand it is the intention to complete the discussion on the C.B.C. tonight?

Mr. McCann: Yes.

Mr. Blackmore: I do not think we have sufficient time to go into the things I wish to go into. I want to know, for example, who decides whether or not Charles Woodsworth is to be on the speaking team of the C.B.C. I want to know why that man was selected and put on the list. I want to know whether he is told what kind of broadcast to deliver. I want to know whether someone tells him the kind of message he is supposed to convey to the people every time he speaks.

These are vital matters. I want to know who decided that J. B. McGeachy was to be on the speaking team of the C.B.C. I have not listened to many of these broadcasts myself, but I have had people listen to them for a good long time and I must say that the broadcasts on which I have received a report do, to a surprising degree, convey the communist line. As I said the other night, they are indoctrinating the people of Canada with the communist view in speech after speech and I have mentioned only two of the gentlemen concerned.

An hon. Member: Not McGeachy.

Mr. Blackmore: Oh, yes, McGeachy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is this some more thought control?

Mr. Blackmore: The member of parliament for Lethbridge is not supposed to exercise any power over thought control, but McGeachy and Woodsworth are. That is a most astonishing state of affairs. From the general statement which the minister has made tonight there is not an hon. member in this house who is in a position to know who is determining the kind of men who are going to speak and what message they are going to deliver, and why they are going to deliver it.

I am going to refer to just one question. I have several questions which I wish to ask and I think it is very important that we probe into these matters. Now, with respect to this man Woodsworth I am going to refer to a specific broadcast this man delivered on January 17, 1954. Now, I am told the general nature of his speech was to tell the Canadian people the possibilities of trading with the communist countries. The question that people in Canada wish to have answered is why Mr. Woodsworth dealt with that subject.

What business in the world was it of his to be telling the Canadian people the importance of trade with the communists?

Mr. McCann: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. This discussion taking place now is on the domestic services and has nothing to do with the international shortwave services at all.

Mr. Blackmore: But the position now, Mr. Chairman, is this. The questions I asked the other night are all on Hansard and anyone who cares to read these questions will bear me out in my statement that the main body of my questions deal with the national broadcasts, and only about one-third of the questions refer to foreign broadcasts. I personally feel that the 60,000 people in the Lethbridge area have the right to have answers to these questions. If they would not even allow a communist to run in the election and if they would not even vote for a communist—and probably there are not more than 300 who would—I think they would certainly want to know why their children have got to listen to communism put over the air through their publicly owned broadcasting service. I think I have a right to find that out and no one tonight has given us any idea concerning that matter.

I now come back to Mr. Woodsworth. One can understand why the Minister of Trade and Commerce would give a talk to the people of Canada telling them why he thought it would be advisable to increase trade with communist countries. Why in the world should Charles Woodsworth be doing that? Was he attempting to influence the people of Canada against the policy of the government in power or had someone told him to talk about this subject in order to prepare for some future government policy?

Mr. Nicholson: Exactly what did he say in the broadcast?

Mr. Blackmore: I could give that information; I have a fairly careful record.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman himself not talking against the government in power? If not, why is he in the opposition?

Mr. Blackmore: The hon. gentleman is just endeavouring to discover the facts in a time when the gravest threat that ever has threatened the Anglo-Saxon people in all their history is right at their doors in the form of communism. There is not a heart in this chamber that is not sorely troubled as to what is going to happen in the next 15 years. In these circumstances, to have Canadians being softened up in respect of communism is just about as fantastic a thing as you could conceive of. All the hon. member is endeavouring to do is to find out why all this is taking place. I feel that I have a right to know who it was that chose Charles Woodsworth to be on the speaking team. At whose instance did he do that?

Mr. Ellis: Does the hon. member believe in free speech?

Mr. Blackmore: Surely I believe in free speech. But as I said the other night we do not get free speech. We do not get the other side at all. People listen time and again to the C.B.C. and they do not get the other side. Just as an example, all of the monitoring I have heard or the listening I have done or what I have had reported to me has not revealed one single speech in favour of the British commonwealth setting forth the wonders that we could achieve as an integral, active, co-operating unit in the great commonwealth which is the organization that built this nation and the organization that made this people great. It is true that we have broadcasts telling about the coronation of the Queen and other matters of that sort; but that is merely the reporting of news.

This other matter is a very serious one. I am sure that hon. members have given considerable thought to the origin of communism. I imagine practically everyone has read the works of Karl Marx. I imagine that practically everyone will remember that Karl Marx declared that before he could establish communism he would have to destroy the British empire and the Christian church. Consequently, to neglect to show the greatness of the possibilities of the British empire is to follow indirectly the communist line. The other night I raised the question of putting over the air the broadcasts that would tend to destroy people's faith. That is certainly working right in the direction of Karl Marx. How long does this thing have to go forward? That is the thing I want to find out from the minister. I wonder whether the minister had anything to do with the appointment of Charles Woodsworth or J. B. McGeachy? I do not believe he did. I wonder whether the chairman of the C.B.C. had anything to do with it? I wonder which one of all the people who are in his department had something to do with it?

I have a great deal more information on this matter than I deem it advisable to give publicly at the present time. This information is deeply troubling to me.

Mr. McCann: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry the hon. gentleman is so deeply troubled. Tonight he just reiterates a speech he made on June 4. He has put forth a number of questions, every one of which can be answered or are answered in the statement I made at page 5544 of Hansard. Such questions as these nobody can answer:

Seventh, during the year 1953 how many Canadian broadcasts were directed to Czechoslovakia, for example?

Eighth, how many of these could be classified as having political significance?

Ninth, how many have had pro-communist leanings?

Tenth, how many have had anti-communist leanings?

Eleventh, on what grounds would the minister justify the expenditure of Canadian taxpayers' money upon broadcasts into Europe that are neither pro-communist nor anti-communist?

With reference to the panel of speakers over the radio, the C.B.C. takes full responsibility. Any other questions which the hon. gentleman has asked tonight or a week ago can well be answered by the Department of External Affairs when their estimates are before the house.

Mr. Blackmore: Unfortunately the estimates of the Department of External Affairs are now all passed, so that we cannot get the information from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In response to the minister's remarks I will say this, and I say it with all kindness but with absolute firmness. The information he has given tonight does not begin to answer any one of those questions. He has not told us how many broadcasts went into Czechoslovakia. Surely that fact is known. He has not told us how many of those broadcasts were pro-communist. Surely he must know something about what pro-communist is.

Mr. McCann: The answer to the question is about 7 hours a week. There are 52 weeks in the year. The hon. member can figure out the answer for himself.

Mr. Blackmore: Seven hours a week can do enormous harm.

Mr. Nicholson: I wonder whether my hon. friend would allow me just a minute at this point and would himself take a little rest? The name of Charles Woodsworth has been mentioned quite frequently. His father was the founder of this party. In fairness to Mr. Charles Woodsworth, I do not think he should be branded as a communist. The Southam press would not place him as the editor of the Ottawa Citizen if there was any question about his loyalty. In my opinion his broadcasts could not, by any stretch of the imagination, be described as pro-communist. Mr. J. B. McGeachy is a distinguished graduate of my university. He did an outstanding job in Great Britain during the war. I cannot think of anyone who did a finer job in building up the cause of Britain and of the allies than did J. B. McGeachy in his broadcasts from London. I am sure that the owners of the Globe and Mail would not give him the responsible position that he has enjoyed for many years if there was any question whatever about his loyalty.

I know that my hon. friend is greatly concerned about the influence of communism. However, I think both he and I know that we have a way of life that stands on its own merits and that we need not worry about our way of life being attacked by the people who are speaking on the C.B.C. I think the job those two particular men are doing on the C.B.C. is one that has given people greater confidence in our democratic and free way of life.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, I have all respect for the hon. member's little speech. I did not call in question the loyalty of those men. I did not call in question whether or not they were communists.

Mr. Ellis: The usual McCarthy technique.

Mr. Blackmore: Yes; I am trying to find out the facts. Anything at all is disgusting that opposes communism, in the minds of some hon. members.

Mr. Ellis: That helps communism.

Mr. Blackmore: Yes; anything is disgusting that opposes communism, in their minds. That is the whole story.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask a question?

Mr. Blackmore: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I heard him aright, he said that he had never heard the British empire mentioned on the C.B.C. His own party gave many free broadcasts on the C.B.C.—

Mr. Blackmore: I did not say that.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I finish my question?

Mr. Blackmore: I didn't say "mentioned".

Mr. Pickersgill: May I finish my question?

Mr. Blackmore: I never said "mentioned". I said a speech that would build up the British commonwealth. Let the hon. member get that straight.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I finish my question? If I understood the hon. gentleman right, he said that he had not heard the British empire mentioned on the C.B.C.

Mr. Blackmore: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: His party has had a lot of free broadcast time on the C.B.C. Would he tell the committee how many times in those broadcasts they mentioned the British empire?

Mr. Blackmore: You see—

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the kind of statistics he is asking the minister to give.

Mr. Blackmore: The hon. member thinks he is so smart that he can fool me. He just cannot do it. That is all. I did not say "mention the British empire". I said "give a speech that built up the British empire."

An hon. Member: They do not need the radio to do that.

Mr. Blackmore: Give a speech that will build up the British empire the way Bill Boss' articles build up the Russian empire. That is all I am asking. I have not heard one like that. The Secretary of State will realize now that he probably unintentionally did not quite get the idea of what I said. That is the sort of thing into which I want to probe. Bear in mind what I said in my speech on the 4th of June. Near the end of my statement I said that the communists have planned to have the world completely under their control in twenty years, and at the rate they are going today they certainly will achieve that objective. When you reflect that there are only four or five parliaments left—

An hon. Member: Who is building them up now?

Mr. Ellis: You are the best friend the communists have.

Mr. Blackmore: That is just the kind of thing that communists do. That is exactly the way they talk. If my hon. friend says a few things more like that there will be reason to pause and think about him. Only four or five more parliaments can sit in that period of time. One year has passed in the present parliament. If we do not do something to change the course of events and do it soon there will be a number of us who will be turned out and a whole lot of new people will take our places who will not know anything about the things we have learned. That is the way democracy works. Then they will have to learn it all over again. That is just how serious it is, Mr. Chairman.

I certainly do not desire to hold up the passing of the estimates, but I should like to tell the minister and the C.B.C. that within the next year, I will expect a very definite reform in respect of these matters, a very definite reform—

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Blackmore: —and no nonsense about it—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Blackmore: —no pretty talk. We want results. We want Canadianism taught in the Dominion of Canada. We want the British commonwealth and the Anglo-Saxon race built up. We want democracy built up. Under the circumstances I will defer my activities in respect of the C.B.C. and leave unasked some of the questions I have. But I promise that next year, if all goes well, I will be right here.

Mr. Hansell: I was the one who suggested that this item be left over, but since it has not been I am not going to take a great deal of time. I had a little speech I was going to make but I will not make it. However, I will make a suggestion to the minister in all seriousness. I know that when the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation or the international service of the corporation or the external affairs department express a policy they mean what they say. I am taking it for granted that they do. What I want is to make certain in my own mind that what they say in respect of policy is translated into action. I have no particular criticism of the wording of their policies. I have a report here of the Department of External Affairs for 1953 with a foreword dated February 1, 1954, signed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in which he says, "In a period of cold war such as this", etc. I will not take the time to read it, but the fact is that he recognizes we are living in a period of cold war.

A cold war is nothing more or less than a war of ideas expressed in words. Is the policy of the international service one of communist containment or is it a policy of doing all we can through a cold war, the expression of ideas of our way of life, to aid those in the dictatorship countries to become free? If this is our policy and it is translated into action I will be satisfied because, believe me, the communists in this country in their infiltration are not satisfied with the containment of what they call the capitalist world. They are out to conquer.

I am making this suggestion to the minister and I should like to ask if it is acceptable to him. I am asking that the international service make available in the library of parliament every manuscript in English and French of broadcasts that go forth throughout the world through the international service so that we can go to the library at any time, thumb the pages and look up any broadcast we want. I would ask the minister if such a suggestion would not be acceptable to him. It might cost a little money and it might take a little more time. They are at least typed in some form or other to start with. I am not asking for hundreds or thousands of copies to be made but they should be available to us. After all, we have assumed a national responsibility respecting the destiny of this nation in a world that is split in two, and I think that is not beyond reason to expect.

Mr. McCann: The brief answer to that is that it is a matter which might well be considered by the committe on radio broadcasting next year. We will probably abide by the majority decision of the committee.

Mr. Hansell: That is a nice way of putting it off. You do not have to have a radio committee to make a decision of that kind. Here are the officials of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Here is the responsible minister of the crown. Surely they can say yes or no to that request. Surely the radio committee has bigger business to do than to decide something like that. This is only a reasonable thing.

Mr. Blackmore: While we are on this matter, may I also ask that copies of every speech delivered in Canada be made available in the same way with information as to who delivered them, and when. That will give us a chance to see exactly what is happening. I will grant it is going to cost money, but how much is it going to cost if we have this country go communist? How many members of the house want to see their children under a communist-dominated state? You would gladly pay a few millions to prevent that.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Hansell: The minister is not going to commit himself on what I have asked?

Mr. McCann: I might add that I will commit myself to the extent that the matter brought up by the hon. member and the hon. member for Lethbridge will be brought to the attention of the governors of the C.B.C. and of the government.

Mr. Blackmore: That simply is not enough.

Mr. Ellis: Do not take yourself so seriously.

Mr. Blackmore: It is time someone took himself seriously when the gentlemen who are here are here. We have to have more than merely "bringing the matter before people". This will not get results. I am not in favour of allowing this item to pass until the minister does give the commitment to me.

Mr. Hansell: There is an easy way to get the estimates through.

Mr. Zaplitny: I should like the minister to state whether it is not the case, as I have been given to understand, that copies of these international service broadcasts are now available to the members of this house upon request.

Mr. Hansell: That is an entirely different thing. The only way I have of knowing something about a broadcast is for somebody to tell me; that is the only way I have. I want to have the privilege of thumbing through the script of any broadcast that goes over our international service, and for which we are now voting appropriations of a considerable size. We are voting considerable sums of money, and I want to have that privilege, without somebody coming to me and—

Mr. Ellis: Did you ever try writing to the C.B.C. to ask for a copy?

Mr. Hansell: Yes, if I wrote to the C.B.C. for a copy they would willingly give it.

Mr. McCann: They are all available and on file at Montreal.

Mr. Hansell: Am I to write and ask for any copies—

Mr. Ellis: It does not cost you anything for postage.

Mr. Hansell: I thought my hon. friend was more intelligent than that. Of course, I could get copies. They have always been willing to give them to me whenever I have asked for them. The only way I have of knowing whether or not a thing is acceptable to me, at least, is for somebody to listen to it. Well, I do not listen to the international service at all, but I want to have the privilege of being able to read anything that goes over the air. I want to find out what is going on, and that is all I am asking.

Mr. Nicholson: I feel the hon. member's request is a reasonable one. I believe that for the sake of public relations it should be a very easy matter to have copies come to the parliamentary library. I do not believe there is anything of which the C.B.C. could not be proud. I believe that to avoid criticism of this sort copies might be made available to the parliamentary library and we would not hear anything more about it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nobody would ever look at them.

Mr. Hansell: The Secretary of State says nobody would look at them, and perhaps that is so. Here you have the simple fact that the minister does not want to say yes, and if anyone were to psychoanalyse that statement they would say there was something he wanted to hide.

Mr. McCann: It is not a question of wanting to say yes. The money is not available for it. It would require a lot of time and some staff. If the hon. member wants any particular script they are all on file in Montreal. All you have to do is make a request for it and you would have it in twenty-four hours.

Mr. Hansell: That is not good enough.

Mr. McCann: We won't read them for you.

Mr. Hansell: It is not going to take a big staff to do this. There is one copy that is ready every time it is read over the air. All that we want is to have it translated into English and French and filed here.

Mr. McCann: The next thing you will want is a record.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris moved the adjournment of the house.

He said: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we shall take the Department of Transport, secretary of state, fisheries, mines and technical surveys and national revenue.

Mr. Fleming: In that order?

Mr. Harris: In that order.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.47 p.m.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

General administration—

424. Departmental administration, $625,101.

425. Commodities services, including fees as detailed in the estimates, the expenditures for these not to exceed the amounts shown unless otherwise approved by treasury board, $657,666.

426. Trade commissioner service, $2,720,244.

427. Information branch, $169,323.

428. Economics branch, $174,878.

429. International trade relations branch, including a fee of $6,300 to the international customs tariffs bureau, $142,555.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—

International shortwave broadcasting service—

53. Maintenance and operation including authority to credit to the appropriation revenue from the rental of facilities in Radio-Canada building to an amount of $160,000 and to re-expend it for the purposes of the international service, $2,199,150.

54. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, including supervision, $195,300.

Loans, investments and advances—

534. Loans to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation repayable with interest at a rate to be fixed by the governor in council on such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine and to be applied in payment of expenditures to cover capital costs of television installations and to support the development of the service. Such loans, with interest, shall be a charge on the revenues of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation next after the charge imposed under the provisions of section 17 of the Canadian Broadcasting Act, 1936, $3,000,000.

International shortwave broadcasting service—

647. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, including supervision—further amount required, $70,394.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 11, 1954

The house met at eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR—GENERAL ALFRED M. GRUENTHER, SUPREME COMMANDER, NATO

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure hon. members in all parts of the house would wish me to call their attention to a very distinguished visitor in the diplomatic gallery and to extend to him a most hearty welcome to this chamber and to Canada. He is the supreme commander of the allied powers for Europe of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and as such the military leader of our partnership for peace, General Alfred M. Gruenther.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Tenth report of standing committee on banking and commerce.—Mr. Croll.

Seventh report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. McWilliam.

Fifth report of special committee on veterans affairs.—Mr. Tucker.

PATENT ACT

TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTING COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, for the information of hon. members I am tabling a copy of the order in council appointing the commission of inquiry into the Patent Act and related legislation.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST BY ONTARIO REEVES AND MAYORS FOR FEDERAL ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour of which I have sent notice. Does the government agree with the views expressed in the telegram sent to the minister yesterday by the 900 delegates representing the mayors and reeves association of Ontario outlining the need for direct action by the federal government to relieve the present serious unemployment situation?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): I think the wire to which my hon. friend refers is a wire that was sent yesterday to the Prime Minister from the president of that association. The Prime Minister has spoken to me about it, and a reply will go forward to the president of the association today from the Prime Minister.

TRADE

DECLINE IN EXPORTS OF TOBACCO TO HOLLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have not sent notice so possibly he might take the question as notice. In view of the marked decline in the export of the various varieties of Canadian tobacco to Holland over the past five years, will the minister indicate what steps, if any, are being taken by the government to improve this unfavourable situation, as it affects the tobacco growers of southwestern Ontario?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will be glad to take the question as notice. Frankly I am not informed regarding exports of tobacco to Holland.

ALLOCATION BY UNITED KINGDOM OF DOLLARS FOR PURCHASE OF APPLES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce? In view of the indications that the United Kingdom will be able to allocate dollars for the purchase of cheese, have we had any similar indication that they may be able to allocate dollars in the near future for the purchase of apples?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. So far as fruits are concerned, we have had an indication that the United Kingdom is allocating dollars to cover purchases of certain canned fruits, but negotiations regarding apples are still in progress. We have not had any definite indication as yet.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GENEVA CONFERENCE—REPORT ON PROGRESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be appropriate today, with General Gruenther here, for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to bring the house and the country up to date on the Geneva conference.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As I promised to do yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I am in a position to make a very brief report on the Geneva conference. The Korean talks at this conference, that is the Korean side of the conference, have made very little progress since my report to the house two weeks ago today, on May 28. It will be recalled at that time the conference had before it proposals put forward by the North Korean delegation in the earlier days of the conference, and a set of proposals submitted by the South Korean delegation on May 22. The distance between the two sides, as exemplified by these proposals, is still very great, and nothing in the nature of detailed negotiations has yet been possible.

On June 5, Mr. Molotov, the leader of the Soviet delegation, submitted to the conference a five point resolution on what he called the fundamental principles for a Korean settlement on which he sought the agreement of the conference. At first glance these proposals seemed to be plausible enough. In fact, some of them are merely a restatement of principles on which agreement had already been reached through the armistice arrangements and at the Berlin conference of foreign ministers last February. The Molotov proposals are, however, cast in such broad and general terms that they completely gloss over the differences between ourselves and the communists on this subject, and their acceptance would convey a completely false impression that real progress had been made and that something substantial had been agreed upon, which is not the case.

For instance, the Molotov resolution calls for an international commission to supervise the holding of elections, which on the face of it seems acceptable enough. But the same proposal on this particular subject would leave for later discussion the composition of this commission, and the composition of such a commission is, of course, a fundamental matter. In the light of the experience of the neutral nations supervisory commission in Korea, it would be folly to accept a commission which would include communist representatives who would be in a position to hamstring any effective supervision of the election. That, Mr. Speaker, is only one of the questions which must be answered before these latest and very general communist proposals for a settlement can be considered as even a basis for negotiation. There is no reason to believe that the answers will be satisfactory.

This Korean conference has been going on now for more than six weeks, and if we do not get some satisfactory answers soon from the communists on the matter of free elections, and all that that term implies, and if the communists are not prepared to agree to international supervision of an election by a workable commission acceptable to the United Nations and composed of genuine neutrals, the United Nations side may shortly have to consider whether it is worth while continuing this effort at Geneva to reach agreement for the peaceful unification of Korea. If the Geneva conference fails in this task we would anticipate that the United Nations will pursue the objective of the unification of Korea by peaceful means. The Canadian government, and I am sure this house, would continue to support those efforts.

I should emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that the failure of the Geneva conference should not mean, of course, in Korea a resumption of hostilities, nor would it impose on us any obligation, direct or indirect, to participate in any action to unify Korea by force. We should, I think, be clear on that latter point.

So far as the Indo-Chinese side of the conference is concerned, the delegations who are participating in this part of the conference have been dealing with three main problems: First, a cease-fire in Indo-China; second, a political settlement; and third, guarantees of supervisory arrangements for those first two. Discussions of the last fortnight have revealed many stumbling blocks concerning all three. The western powers at Geneva have agreed that a cease-fire and political settlement are necessary, but to be effective they must be accompanied by supervisory guarantees; and, provided the supervisory guarantees existed, the cease-fire need not await the political settlement which inevitably would take longer to achieve. Furthermore, as Laos and Cambodia are separate countries, where different political and military conditions prevail, they should, in the opinion of the western side, be dealt with separately.

Since I last reported to the house, the military representatives of the two opposing high commands have met, and indeed are now meeting in camera in Geneva, in order to discuss cease-fire arrangements; but the results of their deliberations are not known. Regarding neutral supervision the communists, as in the case of Korea, have insisted on a commission of four with two communist states plus Pakistan and India as members, a replica in form of the neutral nations supervisory commission in Korea. These proposals are considered unsatisfactory by the western powers concerned on the ground that Czechoslovakia and Poland are not really neutrals, and that a two-sided arrangement of this kind would merely result in a stalemate. We know that from experience.

The western side have proposed a genuinely neutral and Asian commission consisting of India, Pakistan, Burma, Ceylon and Indonesia. The communists, however, have not accepted this proposal and have rejected any form of United Nations supervision.

As hon. members will see, therefore, neither on the Korean nor on the Indo-Chinese issue is the outlook such as to give much hope of a will to achieve a reasonable settlement on the communist side. On the western side the feeling seems to be growing that no useful, and indeed some harmful, purpose would be served by prolonging and continuing the conference, once it has been made clear that the communists are using it not to bring about an end of the fighting but to pursue their own political and propaganda aims. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, any reasonable person could quarrel with that view.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I just say one word, Mr. Speaker, in reference to the latter part of my hon. friend's remarks? If negotiations can no longer be continued with any hope whatever of achieving anything other than continued propaganda in Geneva, I believe there will be general agreement amongst Canadians with that stand. I should like to ask the minister one supplementary question arising out of his earlier remarks regarding Korea. He said that, in the event that no settlement was arrived at and measures were taken by the United Nations for the unification of Korea, there would be no accepted responsibility on the part of Canada to participate. What then has the minister in mind, in so far as the Canadian troops who are in Korea are concerned? What would be their disposition in that event?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a question that is difficult for me to answer. If the situation in Korea is prolonged indefinitely, and if the United Nations has made another effort to bring about a peaceful unification of the country and has failed, and there seems to be no immediate possibility of progress in that field—I am putting this forward as a hypothetical situation—then, of course, the indefinite retention of United Nations forces, including Canadian forces, in Korea would have to be reconsidered.

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister a supplementary question? What is the position now with regard to the setting up of a defence pact in the Pacific?

Mr. Pearson: I can only answer that by saying that this matter is under consideration by the governments particularly concerned. I take it my hon. friend is not referring to a security pact in the Pacific generally, but to the southeast Asian security pact. There have been, as I understand it, no discussions among the countries particularly concerned with that particular issue—no formal discussions up to the present time. But I am sure that the matter is being considered by those governments.

WHEAT

REQUEST FOR DATE OF INTERIM PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the minister's statement that an interim payment would be made this year, and in view of the critical financial position of many western farmers, could he give us an indication of when the payment will be made, and the amount of it?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I regret I cannot do so on the orders of the day.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DREW—RADIO TIME ALLOTTED TO LABOUR-PROGRESSIVE PARTY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege I do wish to refer to a statement made last night in the House of Commons. I was absent, as were a number of members of the government, taking advantage of an opportunity to hear our guest in the House of Commons this morning. That was my reason for being absent.

I find, as recorded at page 5817 of Hansard in replying to a question about representatives of the Labour-Progressive party having time on the radio, that the minister responsible said that this was done by the full agreement of political parties in the house. May I say most emphatically that the reason the Labour-Progressive party have the opportunity to speak on the radio is entirely the responsibility of the government and of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Supply—Transport

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

444. St. Lawrence seaway surveys, investigations and design (including the former St. Lawrence ship canal surveys and investigations), $820,180.

Mr. Lefrançois: Mr. Chairman, I have been informed that the minister has had an interview this week with the premier of Quebec, if my information is correct. Has there been any discussion about power development near Montreal?

Hon Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have had discussions with the premier of Quebec. Those discussions were held on Wednesday of this week, and had to do with the development of power in the Lachine section. As a matter of fact, following the decision which was given recently by the supreme court of the United States, I thought it advisable that there should be discussions, or at least that an interview should be sought with the premier of Quebec.

This was done, and the interview was, I think, a satisfactory one. I am pleased to be able to say that the views of the premier of Quebec on the general subject of the St. Lawrence seaway are favourable. I think he feels that the arguments which heretofore had prevailed against it, in so far as the province of Quebec—or, perhaps, the city of Montreal—was concerned, no longer obtain. He, I believe, and his government as well, feel that the development of the St. Lawrence seaway is a good thing for Canada.

The object of my going there was to ascertain if it was possible to enter into more detailed negotiations with reference to a joint power and navigation development in the Lachine section. While I would not like to go any further than that at this time, I think it will be possible to do that. In fact, I hope that it will be possible to have technical discussions, or discussions on a technical level, between the officers of the Department of Transport and those of the Quebec Hydro Electric Power Commission, leading toward a consideration of a joint power and navigation development in the Lachine section of the St. Lawrence seaway.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Are any outside or private engineering firms engaged in making the engineering plans on the St. Lawrence?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Would the minister give us the names?

[Mr. Drew.]

Mr. Chevrier: I do not know that I can give the names. Perhaps I had better answer the question in this way, that we have engaged a number of consulting firms to assist in studies arising out of the development of the seaway, particularly the Lachine section. There are problems—pretty important ones—having to do with the bridges in the Montreal area, and it has been necessary to consult a number of firms. One of the consulting engineers is Mr. P. L. Pratley, an outstanding bridge engineer in the city of Montreal, whose services we sought on former occasions in connection with other public projects. And I believe we have also sought the consulting assistance of the firm of Surveyer, Nenniger and Chênevert. Those are the two which come to my mind.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Would it be possible for the minister to give us the other names later on?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): We would like to have the names of those who are engaged in that engineering and technical work.

Mr. Chevrier: Do I understand the hon. member wishes to have the names of the independent engineers?

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Yes, the independent engineers who were consulted and who are doing technical work as well as planning with respect to the St. Lawrence.

Mr. Chevrier: I shall be glad to get that, yes.

Mr. Bell: The minister may recall that I have referred to the general ice conditions in the winter, and as to what has been planned by way of keeping the St. Lawrence open. I have mentioned that down east we are quite concerned about this matter. I would like to hear from the minister if there has been any engineering investigation into the possibility of keeping the St. Lawrence open all winter long, when the seaway becomes a reality.

Mr. Chevrier: I can tell my hon. friend that I cannot see any possibility of keeping the St. Lawrence route open during twelve months of the year. Certainly there is nothing envisaged in the plans for the development of the seaway, either jointly or separately, in connection with power and navigation, which would have anything to do with that subject either directly or indirectly. I do not foresee that in the immediate future, unless it be by atomic power, with which I am not competent to deal, there is any possibility of a longer season of navigation on the St. Lawrence. The only reason why icebreakers are being used, as my hon. friend knows, is for protection in the Montreal area on both sides of the channel against flooding in the spring.

Mr. Bell: Have any engineering reports or any engineering statements ever been made in this regard in any of the various investigations in connection with the seaway? The reason I ask that, Mr. Chairman, is, as I explained, that we are worried about this business. I have read articles that when the St. Lawrence seaway becomes a reality—and an enormous investment is involved—it is possible that special ships with thick plates will be used on the great lakes to go up and down the St. Lawrence after the icebreakers have broken the ice. I know that at the present time you cannot take ships into the St. Lawrence through the fresh water ice that comes down the Saguenay and other rivers, but I do suggest that special ships with thick plates could go up and down the St. Lawrence. The only thing I want to know is whether the engineers have looked into this matter in any way.

Mr. Chevrier: There are certainly no reports from my engineers on that subject.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): When I receive the names of the engineering firms, may I also be given the ones who were engaged last year? I notice that $512,000 was allotted last year. What arrangements have been made with the United States government in regard to the seaway canal and in regard to payments and co-operation? What portion is Canada going to pay?

Mr. Chevrier: That is a pretty broad and difficult question to answer. I do not think I should attempt to answer it at this stage. As my hon. friend knows, it was only on Monday of this week that the last obstacle was removed by the judgment of the supreme court of the United States. From now on I take it that negotiations will be entered into between representatives of Canada and of the United States to deal with the matter. Until those negotiations begin I do not think I should make any statement, particularly if I am to be a member of the negotiating team. I would not want to tie my hands by anything that I would say here, and I do not think the committee would want me to do that either.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): You have already started to get together on it, have you?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes; we have received a note from the United States government, and a note in reply is being prepared now, and talks will take place very early.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Where will those talks take place?

Mr. Chevrier: Either in Washington or in Ottawa.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Why not nearer to the St. Lawrence canal?

An hon. Member: What difference does it make?

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): A lot of difference.

Mr. Chevrier: It is a long canal.

Mr. Ferguson: Owing to the unemployment situation which exists at the present time and on account of the extraordinary unemployment situation in the shipbuilding industry and the effect of that on the valuable shipyards of Canada, which may lose permanently skilled men who are capable of building as fine a ship as can be built anywhere, I should like to say a few words. It does not meet the situation to say that these men who are laid off are on unemployment insurance. Many of them have to go away from their homes to seek employment in other fields. Just think what a great loss it will be if this condition continues very long. These men are being taken out of the industry and we will not be able to get them back when needed, as they were in the first and second world wars. This country should have a law that no foreign boats could ply up and down the great lakes, as two boats did last year from Port Arthur to my home town of Collingwood. They were of foreign registry, had foreign skippers and foreign crews. They were operating under wages far less than the sailors' union of this country permit. The conditions under which those boats operated would not be tolerated by the sailors' union of this country. They did that for two years.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member is bringing up a very interesting subject, but in my opinion it is not one that should be discussed under item 444, which deals with St. Lawrence seaway surveys, investigations and design.

Mr. Ferguson: This is of vital importance to your town of Midland, Mr. Chairman, where there are seven watchmen on the yard.

The Chairman: In applying the rules of the house I am afraid I cannot take regard of any personal considerations, and I still must say that a discussion of this kind, in my opinion, is out of order on item 444.

Mr. Green: Does the fact that the item deals with work leading to the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway not justify the hon. member in raising this question?

The Chairman: The hon. member was proceeding to make remarks with regard to the use of the upper lakes by certain steamships, and I do not see how I can possibly find that it is in order under item 444.

Mr. Ferguson: I am sorry if I deviated when I should not have. I was trying to make a point. May I say to the minister, if there was a law in this country preventing any foreign ships from travelling up and down our coastal waters—

The Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member misunderstood me. I cannot find that that type of discussion is relevant under item 444.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Chairman, it is leading up to the St. Lawrence waterway. May I say this? Outside ships come up the St. Lawrence waterway—I say it in a kindly way—and take a great deal of shipping from the shipping companies of this country. Ship owners and Canadian sailors are going to suffer. These ships are going to come from foreign ports and go up to the head of the lakes, load cargoes and unload them in Toronto. Is this not an appropriate and opportune time, before the St. Lawrence is deepened, to pass a law to prohibit any coastal freighting back and forth in ships other than those that are built in shipyards in Canada? I know that this has been discussed time and time again. I know how the minister feels regarding the matter. I think this would be an opportune time for the minister to give relief, if relief can be given to the shipyards, through government action. I should like the minister to announce that now.

Mr. Chevrier: If my hon. friend is referring to coastal restrictions—and I presume he is—I agree with him fully that this is an opportune time to give careful study to this whole problem.

As I indicated when we were discussing the first item, I think in answer to the contribution made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, this is a most difficult and complex problem, and I said it was my intention, before the end of the session, to make a statement on the matter. Unfortunately, it has not been possible for me to do that yet because of a number of features, but I do hope that it still will be possible for me or the Prime Minister to make a complete statement on the whole subject of coastal restrictions generally, and having in mind the great lakes-St. Lawrence seaway development, which I am sure will meet with the approval of the house.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Ferguson: I wish to thank the minister for his reply.

Mr. Nicholson: May I remind you, Mr. Chairman, that we are discussing the following item:

St. Lawrence seaway surveys, investigations and design (including the former St. Lawrence ship canal surveys and investigations).

The construction of the St. Lawrence seaway is very vital to a great many provinces. If you are going to permit a wide open discussion I should like to bring in wheat; if you are going to allow a wide open discussion there are other matters I should like to bring in. I should like your ruling as to whether we are to have a wide open discussion again or are we going to confine ourselves to item 444.

The Chairman: As I indicated when I rose before, item 444 deals with expenditures in connection with the seaway, and if we are to make any progress I think I must do my best to see that the discussion is relevant to the item under consideration.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, is the minister in a position to give us any information as to the probable water level of the St. Lawrence river? This will have a direct bearing on the municipalities of St. Lambert, Montreal south, and Mackayville, particularly if there is any change in the water level of the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the question of the water level would depend on whether the Lachine section—and I presume that is the section in which my hon. friend is interested—is developed separately for navigation or jointly for navigation and power, and until that has been determined I think I would simply be confusing the question by attempting to deal with it. This matter, as I indicated earlier, is still under discussion.

Mr. Vincent: Could the minister tell me when this question will be settled?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, that is a rather difficult question to answer. I can say that if we proceeded jointly with the province of Quebec we should have to determine this fairly soon because it is urgent that we know whether we shall proceed alone on navigation, or jointly with the province of Quebec on navigation and power. I communicated with the premier of the province who agreed that the matter should be determined in the near future. I hope it will be soon.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I think it might facilitate the progress of the work of the committee if we considered the supplementary estimates together with the items on the main estimates which have to do with the same vote. For example, on this vote there is supplementary estimate No. 735 and I see no reason why we could not cover both in our discussion.

The Chairman: Is that agreeable to the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Green: In the details on these two votes we find that there is a very large sum included for professional and special services. In the vote in the main estimates the figure is $473,400 and in the supplementary estimates it is $255,000. In other words, about $750,000 is involved. The minister explained earlier in the discussion that engineers have been retained. I would ask him to explain whether all this money is to be spent for engineers, or in what manner it is to be expended. It seems a very large sum for professional and special services, and that amount, of course, is over and above any work done by the minister's own department.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, dealing with the present vote, that is the vote under consideration, there is an amount of $820,000 of which $473,000 is for professional and special services. That amount of $473,000 is broken down as follows: investigations to locate a suitable area for concrete aggregates in the St. Lawrence river basin, $120,000. In effect that is to cover core drilling. Along the international rapids section and the Lachine section we have a group of drillers who are attempting to find out what is beneath the crust surface and rock, and these drillers are also performing services in the La Prairie basin.

Mr. Green: What firms are doing this work?

Mr. Chevrier: This work is being done by employees of the department, both casual labourers and experienced men. Drillers have been employed from the northern parts of Ontario all of whom are skilled in operations of this kind, and additional casual help has been taken on.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Is this work being done with government tugs?

Mr. Chevrier: This work is being done on land, not in the water. The breakdown continues: field services in the St. Lawrence river basin, $125,000; special surface investigation in the St. Lawrence river basin, $50,000. Then a hydraulic model is being constructed by the national research council of the international section in order to ascertain just what effect the works will have when they are completed. That will be determined when this hydraulic model has been set up, and on big jobs this is a normal practice.

Mr. Green: How much will that cost?

Mr. Chevrier: Eighty thousand dollars.

Mr. Green: Is all this work being done by the government?

Mr. Chevrier: All the work I have detailed is being done by the government. The house will remember that the international joint commission, when it approved the application of Ontario and the state of New York, recommended an arrangement covering two boards. One was the St. Lawrence joint board of engineers, and there was the control board. The board of engineers was to supervise and control the power works and that board has been appointed. Then the control board has to do with the level of the waters. Now, there is $504,000 which has been set aside in the supplementary estimates for this purpose. Then there is $255,000 for professional services. These costs are additional to the costs I have already mentioned which were foreseen in the development and planning of the entire project, including field surveys in the St. Lawrence river; the hydraulic model construction through arrangement with the national research council; subsurface investigations in co-operation with the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys; consulting services; and aerial surveys.

Mr. Green: Is all that work being done by the government or is some of it being contracted out?

Mr. Chevrier: None of this is under contract. This is all being done by the special projects branch of the Department of Transport which has its head office in the city of Montreal.

Mr. Green: Then this vote for professional and special services really covers government salaries.

Mr. Chevrier: No.

Mr. Green: It seems to me the minister must be wrong. I can quite understand that the item in the supplementary estimates covering $504,032 could be for paying government employees, but this item of $255,000 in the supplementary estimates for professional and special services would, I imagine, be paid out to some outside firms for that work.

Mr. Chevrier: I was going to interrupt the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, and say that in answer to the hon. member for Peterborough I indicated that some consulting engineers had been employed. They are not government employees, of course. Let us take, for instance, the firm of Mr. Pratley. He is being engaged to give advice to the special projects branch of the Department of Transport in connection with the effect which the navigational features of the Lachine section would have on the Jacques Cartier bridge. Likewise, another firm are being engaged for the same purpose with reference to the Mercier bridge. The firm of Surveyer, Nenniger and Chênevert are also being engaged with reference to the Victoria bridge. I understand they will be paid under the supplementary vote. Those are studies which are likely to take some time. But over and above this work, I think I am safe in saying that all the work is being done by the special projects branch of the Department of Transport.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Green: I should like to ask a further question.

The Chairman: On the same matter?

Mr. Green: Yes.

Mr. Gillis: I am sorry to break up this conversation but there are a few more of us in the house. The point I am interested in, Mr. Chairman, is this. The supplementary estimate and the regular estimate indicate that the money now being voted is for surveys, investigations and design of the St. Lawrence seaway. The bill that authorized the government to go ahead with this project was entitled the "St. Lawrence Seaway Authority". When the estimates came in this time I assumed that there would be set up in the Department of Transport a separate section that would be known as the St. Lawrence seaway authority or that a separate organization apart from the Department of Transport would be set up to carry on this project. What I am going to inquire of the minister is this. Is this project to be carried on merely as another departmental function within the Department of Transport or is it the intention of the government to set up that seaway authority separate and apart from the Department of Transport?

In my judgment, this is not a routine government project; but if it is going to be carried on merely within the confines of the Department of Transport, and just as another section of it, in my judgment the government is going to run into the same kind of thing as the Ontario government has run into in connection with highways. This is something bigger than that matter. In my opinion, it is too big to be handled by just the routine people in the Department of Transport. If it is going to be done in that way, it sounds to me like Molotov's proposal to the Geneva conference: You accept the principle, and you go ahead and appoint those who are going to administer it later on.

I have my own opinion on this subject. I want to tell hon. members who are now quibbling about the details that they are just two years too late. I did the quibbling about details two years ago when the authority was set up. By the unanimous vote of the House of Commons, with one exception, the government now has the authority to go ahead with this project. Many of the members are going to be shocked before this project is completed. Will the minister now tell me whether it is the intention of the government to set up a special organization as designated by the bill that gave them authority to go ahead with the project? Will that project be taken out of routine circles as far as the Department of Transport is concerned? I think it should be taken out of routine circles. However, the estimates at this time do not indicate that procedure. The estimate at this time is merely the routine estimate of the Department of Transport to carry on surveys and investigations necessary for this St. Lawrence project.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend is quite right in his summing up and his explanation of this position. There is no intention of building the great lakes-St. Lawrence seaway other than in accordance with the terms of the St. Lawrence seaway authority. It has not been possible to establish the seaway authority—in fact it would have been inadvisable to establish it—and to proceed with the construction until such time as all the obstacles had been cleared away. In fact, from the statements made by the Prime Minister and others, it was clear that that was something which could not be done until Monday of this week, because the last obstacle was cleared away only on Monday of this week when the United States supreme court decided to refuse the appeal. Pending that clearing away of obstacles, what we did was to establish in the Department of Transport a special projects branch that had to do with this project. When the government decides to establish the seaway authority, I believe that the corporation will have that special projects branch as a nucleus to proceed.

It is the St. Lawrence seaway authority that will undertake this project. The seaway will not be built by a division of the Department of Transport, although the seaway authority will, I assume, be responsible to the Minister of Transport who, in turn, will be responsible to the House of Commons. However, my hon. friend is quite right. There is no intention of proceeding with a project of this tremendous nature by means of this vote. The machinery will ultimately take the form of the St. Lawrence seaway authority.

Mr. Trainor: Can the minister tell the committee whether United States participation in the seaway is contingent upon the construction of the canals in the international section on United States territory? If that is so, does it mean that use will be made of United States labour exclusively? Also, will control of that section be vested in a United States authority?

Mr. Chevrier: Those are questions which I cannot answer at this stage, nor would I attempt to do so. I do not know whether or not my hon. friend was in the chamber earlier when the hon. member for Peterborough asked the same question. I then indicated to him that negotiations would begin soon with the United States government and that I did not think I should attempt to tie the hands of the Canadian government by any statement on that matter. I am sorry that I cannot help my hon. friend, but I am sure that he will understand the situation at the moment.

Mr. Noseworthy: I have seen some public statements to the effect that now the last obstacle has been removed with regard to the participation of the United States, the Canadian government was willing to have the Americans participate provided there were not any further undue delays. I wonder whether the minister is able to give us any indication of just what is meant by those "undue delays" or how much longer we must wait before we can actually put some of our unemployed to work on the St. Lawrence seaway?

Mr. Chevrier: I think the statements having reference to undue delays which the Prime Minister made on more than one occasion in the house had to do with the act which was before congress and the appeal which was before the supreme court. Now that both of those obstacles have been removed I would think there may not be any further undue delays. By that I mean that the governments now should get together and decide upon what basis the works are going to proceed.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Mr. Chairman, I think this is probably the right item under which to ask this question, and I should like to have the minister answer it. In making the surveys with respect to the seaway I assume that in the over-all picture the question of lake levels has been studied intensively. I should like the minister to indicate whether in the over-all project there will be further control at different parts of the seaway in order that lake levels can be reduced and held at a particular level. Would the minister also say what attitude the government is going to take with respect to the diversion of water through the Chicago drainage scheme and to what extent that is going to affect lake levels? He might indicate how soon lake levels will be reduced, what lake levels are going to be reduced, to what extent, and at what level it is expected they will be held.

I would imagine that the government is also undertaking a survey in connection with harbour improvements as the result of the seaway project having arrived at a further stage. I have in mind areas such as Sarnia where considerable work has been done by way of harbour improvement. I am not referring specifically to the item in the estimates for improvements this year. I assume it is anticipated that further improvements will be made in view of the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway.

There also seems to be an opinion that at the moment there is a bottleneck in the project in the form of the Welland canal. At the present time I believe it is capable of handling some 10 million tons a year, and I believe there are statements on record indicating that the tonnage will increase to 30 million. How soon that will be I do not know. From the point of view of making use of the seaway project to the fullest extent, I wonder whether it is going to be necessary to have another Welland canal side by side with the present one, so to speak, in order to take care of the increased tonnage. I would also like the minister to tell us if there are other bottlenecks that must be taken care of about which he can give us some information.

Mr. Chevrier: The vote before us now has nothing to do with lake levels. The lake level matter was disposed of by the international joint commission when the application by Ontario and New York state came before it. It dealt at full length with that question and recommended a method to protect lake levels on both shores of lake Ontario. That is why I stated earlier that a control board has been established by the international joint commission for this purpose. I understand that the board is now dealing with the problem.

So far as the Chicago diversion is concerned, I made a statement in the house earlier on that matter. It is really one for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to deal with. It is an international matter arising out of the boundary waters treaty act and particularly out of a judgment of the supreme court of the United States. It is not covered in this vote, but I know it is a matter of keen concern to those of us who happen to live in the great lakes area. Canada has protested to the government of the United States against any further diversion, and where the matter is in congress I am unable to say.

Harbour improvements are not covered by this vote. Harbour improvements—

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I was referring to surveys.

Mr. Chevrier: Surveys are not being made to improve harbours. They are only being made in connection with the international section of the seaway. In any event, it would be the Department of Public Works that would look into the question of harbour facilities. So far as the Welland canal is concerned, it provides for 25-foot navigation. As the hon. member knows, the over-all picture is a 27-foot channel which takes into account a further deepening at Welland of two feet. That is already provided in the over-all expenditure of $300 million which was voted by the house in 1951.

Mr. Hamilton: Can the minister give us any fairly specific information as to what will happen to what is known as the Victoria bridge in Montreal with the advent of the seaway? Has any consideration been given to that matter, and what is likely to happen? Perhaps the final decision has not been made, but I should like that information before making any comment.

Mr. Chevrier: To answer that adequately would take some time, but let me do it as quickly as I can. In 1947 a board of engineers was established by the government to deal with the best method of developing the Lachine section, and in that study there is a reference to the bridges involved in the Lachine section. That report is a public report. It has been tabled in the house and can be seen. Unfortunately, however, it has been necessary to change some of the recommendations in the report because of the attitude of the Canadian National Railways and because of the greater cost of developing the Lachine section if the canal were on the north side rather than on the south side.

The plans have therefore been amended with a view, navigationwise only, of putting the canal in the Laprairie basin on the St. Lambert side. That will mean that studies will have to be undertaken of the bridges connecting the north and south shores. These studies are under way now, and it is with reference to these studies that consulting engineers have been engaged. The studies are not complete. All I can say is that I am hopeful from the preliminary reports I have received that there will be no undue delay in crossing these bridges because of the development.

Mr. Hamilton: It is very encouraging to hear the minister say that, because I think those of us in the city of Montreal who have thought about the matter at all are extremely perturbed. We know that this particular bottleneck, the Victoria bridge, is inadequate even at the present time to carry the traffic it is called upon to carry. We have heard rumours that a lift portion might be installed in the bridge in order to deal with canal traffic or that some other method might be adopted which would interrupt traffic on the bridge from time to time. Those of us who have crossed the bridge on Sunday night and have waited anywhere from fifteen minutes to an hour to make our way across because of the traffic jam realize that anything else that would interrupt traffic would be absolutely fatal. We are particularly perturbed because of the possibility of enemy action of some kind.

The bridge is practically a lifeline of the city, and we cannot think of evacuating the city on the one hand and on the other hand doing anything which would further obstruct traffic crossing the bridge. Therefore I am delighted to hear the minister say that every step will be taken to see that traffic over the bridge is not impeded. Perhaps in the course of these studies some way will be found to bring about a new bridge at that spot instead of the antique that is there at the present time. That would also be welcomed.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I should like to ask the minister how many labourers it is expected will be employed on this project in the year 1954. By that I do not mean engineers. There has been a great deal of talk about how much assistance is going to come to the unemployment problem by way of the St. Lawrence seaway project. How many workmen will be employed this year, 1954, and how many is it expected will be employed in 1955 and 1956?

Mr. Chevrier: That is really the $64 question. Let me answer it in this way. The surveys that were made by the economics branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce, which I used in 1951, indicated that when the work was at its peak some 15,000 workers would be employed.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): That is by both Canada and the United States.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. Recently I saw a statement by the Ontario hydro chairman that 10,000 workers would be employed when that work is at its peak. When my hon. friend asks how many will be employed in 1954, that will depend on how much progress can be made. In so far as the power end of it is concerned, there is nothing to stop commencement of the work immediately. I believe it will be possible next month to actually begin operations. As a matter of fact, the Ontario hydro now have a large number of workers in the international rapids section and so have we in the Department of Transport a number of workers in that section.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): But ours are mostly engineers, are they not?

Mr. Chevrier: No, we have at least 110 men in the Lachine area, the Cornwall area and the Iroquois area. Some of these are working in co-operation with the Ontario hydro. How many more we employ in 1954 will depend on how soon we can determine whether we proceed alone or jointly with the province of Quebec, alone or jointly with the United States, and how soon Ontario begins the power work in the international rapids section, because we will have to follow not very far behind Ontario because of the fact the navigational work depends a great deal on the power development. I could only guess, and I would not like to guess. From that answer my hon. friend can see that it is somewhat difficult to reply to his question.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I realize that. I know it is difficult to say just how quickly this project is going to progress, how long it is going to take to reach its maximum point. As the minister indicated, we now have about 110 workmen on the power project. That is quite a few, but when you consider our tremendous unemployment problem, that number hardly enters the picture at all. Perhaps without going too far beyond the realms of possibility, the minister might indicate that during 1954, taking all the considerations into his calculations, he may be able to give us an estimate that 500 or perhaps 1,000 might be employed. Perhaps I am away out, and it may be 10,000.

I believe the working people of Canada would like to know because so many people are already depending upon the work that is to be developed on this project. I understand that in Cornwall and Morrisburg the applications for employment have been growing and growing. In fact, people are going there in the expectation they are going to find employment because there has been so much talk about how much employment is going to be available when this St. Lawrence project gets under way. There is no better time that I know of than right now for the minister to make his statement which would be very enlightening to our unemployed.

Mr. Chevrier: I am afraid that it is difficult and I would not like to go too far out on a limb. I would not like to be held down by any figure. I have before me my deputy minister, who happened to be the superintendent when the Welland canal was constructed, and who has had quite a bit of experience, but he would hesitate to give any figure. He has indicated earlier that it will depend on the progress we can make. No one realizes more than I do the particularly difficult unemployment situation in the area from which I come. No one will be happier and more anxious to proceed as expeditiously as possible because of that situation. But whether there will be 2,000 employed in 1954, or more, I am unable to say. If it were possible to get the power works under way and a determination of the navigational features in the international section, I think it would be reasonable to expect that about 2,000 employees would be taken on.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): That is in 1954.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. Again I say this is a guess, and I am not competent to make a guess. I hope I will not be held too strictly to it.

Mr. Vincent: With regard to the traffic between Montreal and the south shore, has any consideration been given to the possibility of building a tunnel between Montreal and the south shore?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, it has, and the difficulties of a tunnel are such that we have decided against it.

Mr. Gillis: I believe the minister has been sensible in not making a guess as to what the labour content in the St. Lawrence seaway is going to be. It is going to be a lot smaller than many people think. When the Canso project was under consideration the estimate made at that time by engineers was that a labouring force of approximately 1,500 would be needed and it would take approximately three years to complete the job. The work will be finished a year ahead of time, and the labour content was 120. With the machinery that will be available in a few years' time, there will not be many pick and shovel men.

Press reports indicate that the areas around Cornwall and Prescott have been flooded with men looking for work; that is not necessary. I have been led to understand this work will go through the national employment offices, and if you are living in Vancouver or Sydney, Nova Scotia, you can determine the availability of work in any section through your own employment office without flooding one or two areas in Canada. I wish the minister would inform the house that the hiring for the project will be done through the national employment offices, and not by agents who have no responsibility to anyone.

Mr. Chevrier: I would certainly hope it would, otherwise there will be complete chaos. The national employment service office in an area is established for that specific purpose, and I presume the contractors and the hydroelectric commission as well as the seaway authorities, when they require men, will proceed to get them in that manner. That certainly would commend itself to me.

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister whether there is any money to be voted in this year's estimates, either in the main estimates or in the supplementaries, for construction work on the seaway? Can he tell us roughly how the amount of work will be divided up between Ontario and the dominion? I presume a good many men will be employed by the Ontario hydro and not by the dominion at all.

Finally, could the minister explain further the situation with regard to the province of Quebec? He said in opening this discussion this morning that he had been in conference with the premier of Quebec. I am not clear as to just how that province fits into the picture. He mentioned not only power but also the seaway. My understanding is that Ontario is involved in so far as power was concerned, but not with the seaway, actually. I did not know that Quebec was involved, at all. However, that may be because of my own ignorance in the matter. If Quebec is involved, why did the minister wait until this very late date to negotiate with that province? It seems to me there should have been negotiations under way a long time ago, just as there have been with Ontario. An agreement was reached with Ontario some years ago. I cannot understand why so recently the minister has gone down to talk this matter over with the premier of Quebec.

Mr. Chevrier: I shall be glad to answer these questions.

First, in conection with whether or not this vote contains anything for the actual construction of the St. Lawrence seaway. The answer is that it does not.

Mr. Green: Is there any other vote?

Mr. Chevrier: Neither this vote nor any vote in the supplementary estimates, nor any other vote. They do not contain any allocation of money for the actual construction of the works on the seaway. That is provided for under the seaway authority which, I take it, will be established in due course by the government.

Then, with reference to the division as between Ontario and Quebec,—

Mr. Green: Ontario and the dominion.

Mr. Chevrier: Ontario and the dominion, and also Quebec and the dominion. In the international rapids section there is a development of 2,200,000 horsepower. The agreement made with Ontario was that it would look after the power works and we would look after the navigation works. That has been cleared.

My hon. friend understands that, so far as the province of Quebec is concerned, there is at Lachine, just opposite the city of Montreal, 1,200,000 horsepower which could be developed, and to which the power engineers in 1947 addressed their recommendations. They found that it was possible for the federal government to build a channel 27 feet deep in the Lachine section to join with the other channel in the St. Francis, Soulanges, the international rapids and the Thousand Islands sections, up to the head of the lakes, as one alternative. They also found as another alternative the possibility of joint development of power and navigation; and that can be found in the report to which I referred earlier.

Then my hon. friend has asked: Why do you begin talking with the province of Quebec at this late date? Well, we have not started at this late date. Not very long after we entered into the agreement with Ontario, we started having talks with Quebec hydro. And it was with the assistance of Quebec hydro that it was possible to produce the report to which I referred earlier—a report which makes a recommendation for the joint development of power and navigation in the Lachine section, a report which was afterwards altered and the estimates changed because of rising costs, and the like.

Now, until quite recently the engineers of the Department of Transport and of the Quebec hydro were in consultation. They reached a point where they could not go any farther, and both agreed that talks should continue at a higher level. It was for that reason I proceeded to go down to Quebec city and to inquire from the premier of the province if the time had not arrived to give further consideration to these talks, and to refer the matter back again, with instructions from both governments, to see if it was not possible to arrive at some agreement. Whether it will be or not, I cannot say. And that really was the object of my visit.

Mr. Green: This has nothing to do with the Americans?

Mr. Chevrier: No, not at all.

Mr. Green: What sort of development does the dominion government favour? Does it want a joint seaway-power plan, or separate plans?

Mr. Chevrier: In the American section, do you mean?

Mr. Green: No, so far as the Lachine section is concerned.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not think it makes any difference, so far as we are concerned. We can proceed either way. The only thing is this, that I think it would be better for the economy of the country to have a joint plan, because it stands to reason that if you are going to do power and navigation separately at two different times, it will cost more money than it would to do it jointly. And for that reason we thought that for the general benefit of the country as a whole it would be much better to develop them jointly. Of course it would mean a far greater expenditure. The total expenditure will be $400 million.

Mr. Green: The total estimated cost?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, as opposed to about $122 million for navigation alone.

Now, whether it is possible to make an agreement with Quebec in the same manner as we have made one with Ontario, I do not know. All I can say is that, from Ontario, there was the fullest possible co-operation; and I can say the same so far as my interview with the premier of Quebec is concerned. There was from him the fullest possible co-operation, and I am hopeful that it will be possible to develop that area jointly.

Mr. Green: There was one question the minister did not answer, and that was the proportion of employment as between the Ontario hydro development and the seaway development.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the hon. member referring to the international section?

Mr. Green: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: That will depend upon where the navigational works are situated. If the navigational works are situated on the American side, the proportion of power development, vis à vis navigational development, will be greater in Ontario than in New York. But if, perchance, the navigational features are on the Canadian side, there would be a far greater number of men employed on the Canadian side than otherwise.

But I still think there will be more men employed powerwise than navigationwise—even although the features are on our side of the line. In any event, there will be dredging, the relocation of the Canadian National Railways line, the removal of villages, the building of highways and a number of other matters which will bring a considerable amount of employment and the expenditure of a substantial amount of money on the Canadian side—even though the navigational features are not built there.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Referring to the number of persons directly employed, it has been my opinion that a far greater number of people will be employed in those industries supplying goods of one kind or another to be used in connection with this great project. I should like to know what the proportion would be. If, for instance, a thousand were to be employed directly on the job, how many thousands would be employed in the industries supplying goods? What would be the ratio?

Mr. Chevrier: Well, that is a very difficult question to answer.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): There would be a good many more, would there not?

Mr. Chevrier: I would think so, yes. And I would think, too, that the industries which will build the generators, the electrical equipment, and the machinery arising from this tremendous development would employ a large number of people.

Mr. Brooks: Will the people employed in the manufacture of generators and the like be Canadians? Have we any guarantee of that? Or will these items be purchased by contract in the country where we can get them cheaper?

Mr. Chevrier: That would depend upon the contractors themselves. I do not know how the Ontario hydro will proceed, but I think the Prime Minister gave some indication of the intention of the government when replying to a question on the orders of the day on that subject. I have no doubt that the vast majority of men that will go into this huge project will be Canadians, and likewise equipment. But there may be many occasions when British firms should be given an opportunity to tender on a number of contracts and subcontracts, and I do not think it would be the intention to stop them from bidding.

Mr. Pallett: There is one question that I should like to ask the minister, arising out of his comment that the navigational channel may be on the United States side. Have any agreements been signed with respect to the tolls or charges being levied against ships passing through?

Mr. Chevrier: I hope I did not say any such thing. I certainly did not mean to, and if I did I had no intention of saying it, because I made it quite clear that the negotiations between Canada and the United States have not yet begun, and I would not like to say anything that might prejudice those negotiations. I do not know where the canal will be; all I know is what the bill of congress says, and what the Prime Minister has said following the decision in congress. I would prefer if my hon. friend would be good enough to bear with me to stay in that position, because I would not like to prejudice negotiations.

Mr. Hamilton: I have one simple question to ask the minister arising out of employment on the seaway. Has it yet been decided who will be employed to head up this entire project? If so, is it possible for us to know?

Mr. Chevrier: That has not been made known yet, but I take it, it will be announced in due course by the Prime Minister.

Item agreed to.

Canal services—

445. Administration, $141,980.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Will the minister say what has been spent on the Trent waterway this year on repairs and new works?

Mr. Chevrier: It is the next item, I think.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): This has to do with canal services.

Mr. Chevrier: This is canal administration.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): All right; I shall wait.

Item agreed to.

Canal services—

446. Operation and maintenance, $6,054,242.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I might inform the minister this is the longest stretch of controlled water in the world, 250 miles.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Chevrier: I am informed it is $256,000.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): That is for repairs and new works?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, repairs, upkeep, maintenance.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Will the minister say whether a new bridge is to be built at the Park Hill road, right at the lift lock?

Mr. Chevrier: There is an item for a new bridge here, but unfortunately it is not in Peterborough.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): There is a bottleneck there.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I understand that a survey has been made.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, I am familiar with it. Some delegations came down in connection with it, and I have had correspondence, and I think my hon. friend has also written about it. It is still under study; there is nothing in this item covering that project.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): The reason I mention it is that you really cannot cross that bridge at night or in the daytime without fear of an accident, because there is a slope up to it each way. It is extremely narrow and if a truck and a car meet on the bridge there is sure to be an accident.

Has any consideration been given to a bridge at Burleigh, which is also a bottleneck? The one at Young's Point is being fixed, and it will do away with the lock there. At Burleigh there is a real bottleneck on the one-way bridge, especially at the Perry's creek end of it.

Mr. Chevrier: There is no item covering the Burleigh bridge here. There is a bridge being constructed at Washago.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): That is away up in the suburban section.

Mr. Chevrier: That is included in this item.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): There is nothing on the Burleigh end of it at all?

Mr. Chevrier: No, there is not.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Does the minister know whether there have been any negotiations with the minister of highways of Ontario regarding that?

Mr. Chevrier: No, there have not.

Mr. Castleden: I notice that this item for canal maintenance amounts to something over $6 million. Can the minister give us a break-down of the main canals on which this $6 million is spent? Has he a break-down of those canals?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, of that $6 million, $5 million is for salaries and wages.

Mr. Castleden: Has the minister a break-down of the various costs? For instance, can he give us the cost of maintaining the fine Rideau canal system from Ottawa to Kingston?

Mr. Chevrier: The Rideau canal is $468,886.

Mr. Castleden: There must be some which are larger than that. Can the minister give me a break-down?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes; the Welland canal, for instance, is $1,816,000; the Trent canal, $543,000; the Murray canal is a small one, about $35,000.

Mr. Stanton: Has the department ever furnished ferry service across canals or in the lakes? Has it ever considered that it is its responsibility to provide small ferries that go across to certain islands in the Rideau system or in any other system?

Mr. Chevrier: The question of ferry service is one that does not fall within this item; it is one which is studied and authorized by the maritime commission. This vote has nothing to do with ferry service. Under this vote we do not pay any subsidy or give any assistance to the operation of ferries.

Mr. Stanton: On some occasions the department has provided small ferries for the accommodation of certain individuals who have to cross certain parts of the Rideau canal, and that has been given in past times.

Mr. Chevrier: My deputy minister informs me that he is not aware of any such service being performed.

Mr. Noseworthy: I understood the minister to say that the maintenance of the Rideau canal system costs something like $400,000. Just what national service is performed by that system to warrant the expenditure of $400,000 a year?

Mr. Chevrier: There is a system of secondary canals in Canada, such as the Trent, the Rideau and the Murray, and perhaps one or two others whose names escape me at the moment, that serve a tourist purpose, and they have been instrumental in assisting the economy of the country. Generally I think the Trent canal is one such canal. People would protest very vigorously if any attempt were made to withdraw it. We gave consideration to the facilities of the Rideau canal at an earlier date, and because of the position which we found at the time we decided to curtail substantially the expenditure by, I think, the imposition of two shifts instead of three, and that is the position which obtains at the moment.

Mr. Noseworthy: Mr. Chairman, has the minister any figures at all in regard to the extent to which the Rideau canal is used for tourists?

Mr. Chevrier: All I can say is that it is used substantially and there is some revenue, but it is not commensurate with the expenditure.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Chairman, the figures which the minister gave cover the Welland canal for about $480,000, and the Trent canal $500,000, and an amount for the Rideau canal, all of which only cover about half the estimates. Could the minister give a break-down of the remainder?

Mr. Chevrier: The Cornwall canal $577,000; the Williamsburg canal $288,000; the St. Peters canal $47,000. The Quebec canals are as follows: the Lachine canal $910,000; the Soulanges $490,000; the Chambly $199,000; the Carillon and Grenville $148,000; Ste. Anne $28,000; St. Ours $32,000; the Beauharnois $6,000; Sault Ste. Marie $198,000.

Mr. Castleden: Thank you.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, there is a large increase in this vote this year amounting to $623,500 in addition to the new supplementary estimate vote No. 736 which is for $100,000. I notice in the details that there has been an increase in the regular staff of 84. Now, why is it necessary to have an increase of this size on the regular work of operating and maintaining the canals?

Mr. Chevrier: First, there is an increase in this vote due to the expenditure of over $500,000 in increased salaries and wages.

Mr. Green: But why the increase in the number of employees?

Mr. Chevrier: I am about to deal with that now. The reason for the increase in the number of employees is the imposition of the 40-hour week. Because of that it has been necessary to take on more men.

Mr. Green: Then this supplementary vote for $100,000 is all for professional and special services. What are the details of that?

Mr. Chevrier: I am informed that this is in connection with the model for the Gut dam. The committee will recall—

Mr. Green: But the Gut dam has been removed.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, but I am informed it was necessary to build a model and this is in part payment of that, together with the services of engineers in connection with the removal of the dam.

Mr. Green: Was not that completed last year?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, but I am informed there are claims still outstanding in connection with the removal of the Gut dam.

Mr. Green: But is this for professional services, or is it to pay for the removal of the Gut dam?

Mr. Chevrier: I am informed that it is to construct a model, as I said earlier, by the national research council for this purpose, and also to pay some damage claim.

Mr. Green: How much of it is for damage claim?

Mr. Chevrier: I am told that it is all for the model and none of it is for damage claim. I am sorry if I misled the hon. member.

Mr. Green: This is quite important because there is a large vote, I believe, in external affairs for damage caused by the removal of the Gut dam. Some Americans were trying to get on the gravy train and I was wondering if Canadians were also making claims for damage because of the removal of this dam. Everyone seemed to be in favour of its removal a year or two ago. Are there any Canadians making claims?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, there are, and there will be Canadians and Americans making claims arising, not out of the removal of the dam, but for damages to their homes attributable, so they say, to the Gut dam.

Mr. Green: The Gut dam, or its removal?

Mr. Chevrier: No, the Gut dam. The information we have in the department and certainly the information which was obtained by the United States corps of engineers is clearly indicative of the fact that the Gut dam in no way affected the water level, but that the damages were caused by the rise in the water level of lake Ontario which was due purely to natural causes, and for that reason I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs was given instructions to defend any such action.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, can the minister say what the government policy is regarding the renting of space to private individuals along the docks and canals?

Mr. Chevrier: Well, it depends on what jurisdiction the space comes under. If it is under the national harbours board jurisdiction there is a tariff established by bylaw. If it is under a commission such as the Belleville harbour commissioners, then they would establish their own tariff. If it is under the Department of Transport, as is the case here, it is done by lease and there is a uniform charge which I could get for the hon. member. I do not know what it is.

Mr. Bell: On the docks and canals directly under the Department of Transport, a private individual could rent space on the tariff you mentioned and use it to hire out boats and things like that?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Canal services—

447. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, including payments to provinces or municipalities as contributions towards construction done by those bodies, $2,085,100.

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, I just wish to make a few remarks on this item. We realize that certain canals are important, particularly the Welland canal and others which are in use. The canals of this country were formerly very important, but there are many canals which, I believe, are becoming quite useless and, as has been indicated by the number of questions today, it seems to me we are spending a lot of money which may not be considered necessary.

With reference to the construction of canals, I think I would be rather remiss, coming from the maritimes, if I did not mention a canal for which we have asked consideration for quite a number of years and which today, I believe, is more important than it ever has been. I say that, Mr. Chairman, because of the proposed development of the St. Lawrence seaway. When that is developed I believe it will mean a great deal more coastal trade on the Atlantic coast with the United States and with South America. We are going to spend many millions of dollars for the development of the St. Lawrence seaway and that will be of great assistance to this country in trade with the United States as well as with overseas. The trade which is now being carried by trucks and railways from Canada to the United States and vice versa will, I believe, when the St. Lawrence seaway is constructed and on account of the cheapness of water transport, be all conveyed by our coastal steamers.

On the Atlantic coast, as we have pointed out time and time again, some 700 or 800 miles of route could be shortened by a canal across the Chignecto isthmus. We have asked little from this department or little from the government with reference to canals. I think the only canal we have in the maritime provinces is the St. Peters canal. From the estimates I noticed this morning that, of the cost which the minister mentioned in connection with these canals, $47,000 has been spent for the St. Peters canal.

I am not recommending this project simply because I feel we in the maritime provinces should have more recognition, but because I believe that the Chignecto canal will be a real asset and that it is complementary to the development of the St. Lawrence seaway. I believe there is going to be a tremendous increase in this coastal trade. The development of this canal will save some 700 or 800 miles for this trade. As hon. members know, ships that have to go around Cape Breton and Nova Scotia run into the dangers of Sable island which I have understood has been called the graveyard of the Atlantic; it is a rather dangerous route. If a canal were constructed through the isthmus of Chignecto, you would have a sheltered route through the bay of Fundy and down the New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and American coast.

I should like to ask the minister if, in connection with the St. Lawrence seaway, any study has been made of this proposition as providing a shorter and more desirable route for trade with the United States and with South America? If no study or consideration has been given to it, I should like to ask whether his department would consider giving some study or consideration to this matter which I consider to be an extremely important one.

Mr. Chevrier: As the committee knows, this subject is one of keen interest to the members from the maritime provinces. I must say that no study has been given to the construction of the Chignecto canal in conjunction with the St. Lawrence seaway. The studies that were made having to do with the seaway were for the joint power and navigation development with the United States. The last studies that were made were carried out some years ago and, as my hon. friend knows, a report was tabled in the house; I have referred to it from time to time. I think the only way in which to give consideration to the construction of the Chignecto canal would be by the establishment of another such body. Whether the time is opportune for that action, I do not know; perhaps it is. I think that the house could not take any action—and certainly not by anything I could say at this time—unless a complete engineering study were made. It may be possible to do this at some time. I certainly would have no authority to say that it could not be done.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask the minister this question? He can answer or not, just as he likes. Would he not consider it to be a more practical proposition today than it has ever been considered to be in the past?

Mr. Chevrier: To that question I think I would have to answer yes.

Mr. Brooks: I thank the minister.

Mr. Noseworthy: Before this item passes I want to comment on the general way in which estimates are presented to us. What I have to say applies to this particular item and in general to the presentation of estimates. Under "Canal services", we have six pages of estimates showing how many charwomen are employed in the system, how many messengers, how many typists, how many stenographers, how many gas engineers and electrical engineers and so forth. We have six pages devoted to giving us information as to the wage or salary paid to each one. The amount involved is something over $6 million. But when we get an item here of over $2 million, it is dismissed in two lines. All we have is "Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment". An item of over $2 million is dismissed in two lines in the estimates whereas six pages are taken to tell us how many typists, stenographers, charwomen and so forth are employed in the entire federal canal system.

I am simply suggesting that members of the committee would be much more interested in having more details about the acquisition and construction of the buildings, equipment and so forth than they are in knowing how many typists the system employs and what we pay those typists. That is a criticism that applies to the entire system of presenting estimates to the House of Commons.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not take it as a criticism, Mr. Chairman. I simply say to my hon. friend that the Department of Transport does not decide the manner in which estimates shall be tabled in the house. That is something that is done by the Department of Finance. That department determines the method. If the method is not a correct one, that is a matter for that department. I shall be glad to draw my hon. friend's remarks to the attention of the Minister of Finance. Perhaps when the estimates of the Department of Finance are before the committee, the hon. member as well might bring the matter to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Blackmore: I should like to say a word in support of the hon. member for Royal in his request concerning the Chignecto canal. I have not had the opportunity to make a thorough study of this canal but what I have learned greatly commends it to me. I believe that the governments have been negligent concerning this matter. The maritimes certainly have the right to consideration of that sort, namely the building of a canal which would accomplish the saving mentioned by the hon. member. I think it is time that the minister set the necessary wheels in motion in order to have something done about this canal.

Mr. Lusby: Mr. Chairman, I just came into the chamber a moment ago but I was greatly interested in hearing the remarks made by the minister with regard to the Chignecto canal and his statement that he thought the only proper way to consider the matter would be by the appointment of a royal commission. I had a good deal to do with the campaign a few years ago in connection with the Chignecto canal. I should like to say that I believe the people of the maritimes generally consider that that is exactly what should be done. We are not asking that the canal be built merely because it was a promise of confederation, although I think it undoubtedly was one. We believe that if a commission would inquire fully into the economic possibilities and benefits of that canal, it would bring in a favourable decision. What we should like to see is the appointment of a royal commission to make a comprehensive inquiry in the light of present-day conditions. Conditions have changed considerably, of course, since the days of the Surveyer commission, in 1931, I think it was. If a royal commission were appointed, I believe the people of the maritimes would be well satisfied to abide by its decision.

Item agreed to.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

---

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose at one o'clock I understand we were discussing item No. 448. Shall the item carry?

Item agreed to.

Marine service steamers—
449. Administration, operation and maintenance, $6,228,000.

Mr. Hamilton: I think this might be the place, if it is agreeable to the minister, to ask for a little information with respect to the fire boat in Montreal harbour. I notice that he has some 77 permanent firemen under this classification plus another 41 seasonal firemen, so I would think this is a good place to ask the question. I also notice that he has three gentlemen who seem to have wandered over from the Department of Finance. They are called trimmers. He also has somebody who has probably come from the Secretary of State's department. It might even be the Secretary of State himself. He is called a boatswain's mate and gasman.

Coming directly to the fire boat itself, earlier in his estimates the minister pointed out that his department had entered into an arrangement with Vancouver by which they each share in the upkeep of a fire boat, and that nothing of the sort was being done at the present time in Montreal. I should like him to tell us first whether the situation with regard to the two ports is not somewhat different. It is my understanding that in Vancouver there is a good deal of city-owned property connected with the port and also a number of private docks, such as the C.P.R. dock, which have to be protected, whereas in Montreal the entire harbour is the property of the national harbours board. Perhaps we could get that out of the way as the first question.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that we could discuss this under the national harbours board estimates which are a little further on and which deal with this particular matter. They do not deal precisely with the matter in question but we certainly could discuss it under those items. I have no objection to discussing it now but if I do so I invite discussion on other items which is not clearly relevant. I wonder whether my hon. friend would allow it to stand until we get to the national harbours board items when I will deal with that point.

Mr. Hamilton: I will be very glad to. Would the minister like to give us a little bit of information as to what type of transportation and boats he is operating under this item and the type of work they are doing?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Chairman. This vote provides for the operation of all the steamers in the Department of Transport such as the d'Iberville, the new ship which was put into operation last year, the C. D. Howe, the Saurel and the Lady Laurier on the east coast, the Mackenzie and Estevan on the west coast, and a number of other ships in the Parry Sound district, the Prescott district, the Cornwall district and in the Montreal district. There are 32 such vessels being operated by the department under this vote.

Mr. Hamilton: Actually that was one of the things that interested me. I notice that there is provision for 30 masters, 19 permanent and 11 seasonal.

Mr. Chevrier: I did not hear that.

Mr. Hamilton: I notice that the minister has provided for 30 masters and apparently there are 32 boats in operation according to the statement he has made. On what basis are the other two operating?

Mr. Chevrier: I presume they are operating on an assistant basis. The officer who is before me tells me it is the practice to have a number of spares.

Mr. Hamilton: But already we have more boats than masters. We have 32 boats and 30 captains or masters, as the minister calls them.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Hamilton: I am waiting for what is really an answer to a mathematical problem.

Mr. Chevrier: I will have to get the answer for my hon. friend. I do not have it available at the moment.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Hamilton: I have no desire to hold up the item indefinitely but I would not like to see it go through because of the possibility of other questions arising from the answer to this one.

Mr. Chevrier: Could I not give my hon. friend the information during the consideration of these estimates?

Mr. Hamilton: Could we not let the item stand and proceed with the next one?

Mr. Chevrier: It has not been the practice to stand items. If we do that, I am afraid it will be difficult to make progress. I should like to get on with the estimates. I am sure my hon. friend will understand that with the number of votes in this department there is information that it is not always easy to obtain at a moment's notice, but I can assure him I will get the information for him.

Mr. Hamilton: I object strenuously to this procedure. I am asking what seems to me at least to be a perfectly reasonable question. I am told we have 32 boats in operation. I look at the estimates and I see that we have 30 masters. I therefore ask for an answer to the question. I am interested in that. I am told that the minister cannot immediately produce the answer, and that is all right, but then an attempt is made to say that I should go off in a corner and forget about the whole thing and the information will be given me later. But if I want to pursue any point that may arise out of the answer to the question then this item of the estimates will already have been disposed of.

Mr. Chevrier: Could I put it this way? The matter will not be closed. I will allow my hon. friend to bring it up on another relevant item. If there is not a relevant item then, as has been done before, it could be discussed on the last item of these estimates or the last item of the supplementary estimates. The information I have before me now is that there are 32 vessels which will be actively engaged in this service. I am not able to give the answer to the question at the moment, but I hope to be able to obtain it during the course of the day.

Mr. Green: It is merely a matter of the minister getting the information from his officials.

Mr. Chevrier: That is right.

Mr. Green: If that is the situation, why not let the item stand and come back to it as soon as the information has been obtained? As the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace has said, other questions may arise as the result of the answer the minister gives.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Green: I suggest that the minister will make progress if he lets the item stand and does not try to put it through without having given the information.

Mr. Chevrier: I was hopeful that the suggestion I made would be accepted. However, if it is not, I have no objection to the item standing.

Item stands.

Marine service steamers—

450. Construction or acquisition of vessels and equipment, $3,418,000.

Mr. MacLean: In the details of this item I notice the heading "reconstruction and refit of stand-by vessel for Pacific ocean weather station 'P', $400,000." Would the minister tell us briefly what is the situation regarding Canada's contribution towards ocean weather stations? I realize that in some cases they are provided by the navy.

Mr. Chevrier: The position was this: By virtue of an agreement we are operating a weather station in the Atlantic, but that weather station has now been taken over by the United tates and we are operating a weather station in the Pacific. We have two ships which are used in the operation of that station. The expenditure, I am told, is to refit one as a stand-by.

Mr. Green: What is the position now with regard to weather ships in the Pacific? I believe the United States did withdraw some of their ships. Has that difficulty been straightened out?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. The United States gave notice, arising out of their representations to ICAO, that they intended to withdraw from the operation of weather stations, certainly those on the north Atlantic. There were objections from the member states of ICAO, and the result was it was decided to refer the whole matter to a conference in Paris at which the representatives of the various countries interested would be present. The conference took place, with the result that the position is somewhat altered, but in the main the principle is the same, namely that practically all the weather ships in the Atlantic and those in the Pacific remain, with the exception of one ship which will be taken over by other member states. It may be—I am not too sure about this—that one of the stations has disappeared. But in any event, this particular station remains as it was.

Mr. Green: Why did the United States take that stand? It never seemed to make sense to me that they would withdraw this weather ship.

Mr. Chevrier: I believe it was a question of cost. If my hon. friend recalls, there was a great deal of discussion in congress about the tremendous costs, not so much of weather ships, but of defence installations generally. I presume that one of the items that was looked at towards the reduction of that cost was weather ships. With new equipment and so forth, it becomes perhaps a little easier to fly across the Atlantic than it was in the earlier days. However, Canada feels that the weather ships are of great importance to the safety of aircraft, and feels they should not be removed. We have maintained that position. I believe one of the main reasons was one of cost.

Item agreed to.

Aids to navigation—

452. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $1,586,720.

Mr. Nowlan: This item covers the construction and acquisition of equipment for navigational aids. The minister may possibly recall that during the session of 1951 I raised with him the question of the extension of navigational aids in the bay of Fundy. The minister did not have the information available at that time but he promised me he would communicate with me afterwards. With the courtesy which I have usually experienced from him, we exchanged correspondence during the summer dealing with this matter. The result was that the minister said he felt that it was impossible at that time to provide additional navigational aids in the bay of Fundy because of the amount of money involved, but he would keep it under consideration and when funds were available he would hope to deal with this matter.

It may be, Mr. Chairman, that in this additional vote we have here today, the minister has provided for that. I have not had the opportunity of discussing this with him. As he knows, I have been out of the house for various reasons and have not had the opportunity of discussing the matter with him personally. As I pointed out to him at that time, from Digby at Point Prim to Spencer's island, a distance of roughly 100 miles, there are no aids to navigation whatever except the ones listed by the minister in the correspondence he sent me. If the minister has that list in front of him, he will find that in every case they are fixed lights and not whistling buoys or horns or anything of that description.

Although the minister did point out that I had raised specifically the matter of Halls Harbour, there were only a few boats operating out of that port. However, there are many other boats operating in the bay of Fundy. There are the gypsum boats and the pulp and paper boats, carrying cargo and people. While we have lighthouses, the minister told us about his experience of flying over the vast expanses of the Atlantic and seeing the conditions under which lighthouses operate. I suggest that if he were out on the bay of Fundy on a foggy day with a heavy surf running, he would find the fixed light would be of very little assistance. The requirement is for sound buoys of some kind, something on which you can get a bearing. Now, you go up the most dangerous waters in the world, with the highest tide and the heaviest currents, and you have a 90-mile expanse from Digby at Point Prim to Spencer's island without a single buoy or foghorn on which you can get a bearing. This is a serious situation.

The minister suggested it would cost perhaps $5,000 to put in a whistling buoy. Costs may have gone up since 1951, but I doubt if they have gone up very much. We have a vote here of $127 million for this department. I suggest the time has come when, if the minister has not decided to do something about it, he should do so now. He very modestly disclaimed any desire to have the Canso causeway named the Chevrier causeway. We have heard rumours that possibly the minister will retire from this department. I hope that is not true. I can assure him of this. If he will accept my request I will see that any buoy that is placed out in the bay of Fundy is called the Chevrier buoy, and the minister will have the everlasting gratitude of the fishermen.

Mr. Chevrier: Perhaps we could call it the Chevrier girl, after one of my daughters. On more than one occasion the hon. member has brought this matter to my attention, and as he says there has been some correspondence in connection with it. There are a number of works provided for in the bay of Fundy, but unfortunately we have not yet been able to provide for the particular project mentioned by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. One of my officers here nods his head, and whether that means that he is going to do it or not—

Mr. Nowlan: Can you get him to nod it more affirmatively?

Mr. Chevrier: —I know that at least it will be given consideration for the next fiscal year.

Mr. Barnett: I notice this item concerns aids to navigation and I am wondering whether I would be in order in raising a question that pertains to obstructions to navigation? While we are considering this item, will the minister make a statement as to the situation in respect to the removal of Ripple rock? What are the results of the experimental borings which were undertaken some time ago?

Mr. Chevrier: I can get the house this information, that this matter has now been referred to another department. Ripple rock is no longer a matter to be determined by the estimates of the Department of Transport. I do not think it ever was. It was always under the Department of Public Works. But a special committee has been given instructions, in conjunction with the national research council, to deal with this matter, and the responsibility for it has been assigned, I believe either to the Minister of Public Works or to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I am not sure which. But it no longer comes under this department.

Mr. MacLean: At page 525, in the explanatory notes, I notice an amount for the removal of obstructions in navigable waters. The estimate is increased from $32,000 to $100,000. Would the minister explain this large increase?

Mr. Chevrier: That is for lake Erie, and it is due to the removal of a number of wrecks lying adjacent to the lake channel.

Item agreed to.

Nautical services—

453. Administration, operation and maintenance, including grants and contributions for the purposes indicated in the details of the estimates; rewards for saving life from vessels in distress; subsidies to salvage companies, and the payment of expenses, including excepted expenses, incurred in respect of Canadian distressed seamen as defined in section 306 of the Canada Shipping Act, $474,764.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, there are two questions I should like to ask. This item, I see, deals with the operation and maintenance of nautical services. My first question has to do with the establishment of a coastguard service. The hon. member for Nanaimo dealt with this matter at some length on an earlier occasion when the estimates of this department were under consideration. I do not want to add anything to what he said, but I would like to ask the minister if he would take the lead in having another investigation made of this question.

For some years now we have had the search and rescue service and, while it has done good work, it is becoming increasingly clear that such service is not going to be sufficient for very long. I believe steps would now be taken by the government to have a further investigation made. About six weeks ago the tugboat men on the west coast formed their own rescue team, because they felt that the service available was not satisfactory.

I have here a dispatch from the Vancouver Sun of April 23 bearing the heading "Tugboaters Form Own Rescue Team". It continues with the subheading "Ottawa Refusal of Coastguard Angers Industry", and the first paragraph is as follows:

British Columbia towboat men, fed up with Ottawa's cool attitude to demands for formation of a coastguard, today completed plans for a tugboat rescue unit which will attempt to fill the gap.

There should not be an obligation on the men in the industries to take steps of that kind. Of necessity such arrangements will not be as thorough or as efficient as if there were a proper coastguard service. Time and again we have accidents on the west coast. United States coastguard vessels are there to render help. I know that sometimes the Canadian vessels help the Americans. There is very close co-operation between the ships of the two nations.

However, I suggest that the development of the west coast has now reached a stage where there should be established a proper coastguard service. We have now the big aluminum plant at Kitimat. A city is being established there which, eventually, will be of about 30,000 people. The whole of the coast is opening up, and there is far more traffic on those waters than there has been before. As the minister knows the waters are extremely dangerous.

I believe the situation is summed up very well in an editorial which appeared eight days ago in the Vancouver Sun. This editorial, dated June 3, is headed "Coastguard Still Needed". The editorial states—and I shall read only two paragraphs—

> Logic is not the Liberal government's strongest point.

The Sun, of course, is an ardent supporter of this government, and the leading newspaper supporter in the west.

Mr. Chevrier: And a very ardent admirer of mine, too, I notice.

Mr. Green: Yes, sometimes. The editorial continues:

> It has again turned down a request for a Canadian coastguard saying there's no need, because R.C.A.F. and marine agencies co-operate quite happily to rescue ships in distress.
>
> This is, obviously, proof that a regularly established, fully manned, highly trained Canadian coastguard with correctly designed ships—

Of course that is another very important feature.

> —would be even more successful than a semi-official and voluntary rescue service. But the government can't or won't see all the benefits from a separate coastguard service.
>
> On this Pacific coast air force and tug companies have allied to set up a rescue team. They've done good work. On this basis alone the worth of a proper service has been proved.

Would the minister comment on the suggestion that the government departments should have another look at this question as to whether or not the time has come to establish a proper coastguard service? I have another question under this item, but it does not refer to this service.

Mr. Chevrier: As my hon. friend knows, and as I indicated earlier, the matter of protection of coasts was referred to an interdepartmental committee some years ago. As I also indicated, the chairman of that committee was a distinguished jurist of the province of British Columbia who, at the time, was chairman of the maritime commission.

The result of the investigation was a recommendation to place under the air rescue division of the Department of National Defence the protection of our coasts in the manner set out in that report. It may be that the time has arrived to take another look; I am not prepared to say that it has not. But I am sure it is a matter that my hon. friend would realize would be very costly. If it was estimated to cost $9 million or $10 million then, it would probably cost far more than that today.

However, it may be that other means can be found. As my hon. friend knows, the matter is not under the Department of Transport any longer. It is handled by a division of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Green: Exclusively?

Mr. Chevrier: Oh yes—search and rescue. However, I shall be glad to bring it to the attention of my colleague the Minister of National Defence to see if, because of present conditions, it is not advisable to ask the interdepartmental committee which dealt with the matter in 1951 to take another look at the situation today, in view of changed circumstances.

Mr. Green: Was it the recommendation of that committee that this system of having the air force in charge of the air rescue service would be permanent; or was it merely a temporary arrangement?

Mr. Chevrier: I do not think it was either permanent or temporary. I think it was one of the recommendations that came out of this investigation, and we simply adopted it. There is nothing permanent about any of these arrangements; but if it works well I think perhaps it should be permanent. On the other hand, if it does not work well there is no reason why it should not be changed.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I wonder if the minister would clear up a point for me in this connection. I was not quite sure the other day, when he and I had an exchange in connection with this matter, whether the $9 million or $10 million to which he referred at that time, and to which he has referred again this afternoon, was to cover the cost of the coastguard on the Pacific coast, or the cost of the coastguard service on the Atlantic coast, the Pacific coast and the great lakes—the whole of them.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes; the total cost of the $9 million covers the east and west coasts and also the great lakes.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I think the minister said the estimated cost of operation was between $3 million and $3,500,000.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes; the capital cost was $9,033,000 and the operational and maintenance costs $3,284,000. This was in 1950. I was in error a moment ago; it was one year earlier.

Mr. Green: Was that estimate broken down into three areas, Pacific, Atlantic and the great lakes?

Mr. Chevrier: It was by the committee; the figures I have are general figures.

Mr. Green: Can the minister give us the figures of cost for the west coast?

Mr. Chevrier: As I say, I have not the figures; they were not given to me. I presume they were broken down for the committee, but I have never received any report as to a break-down. If they are available I will ask the present chairman of the maritime commission to give them to my hon. friend.

Mr. Barnett: In view of the fact that the minister has said that there is a possibility of some new inquiry being made into the situation with respect to coastal protection for British Columbia, I feel I should suggest to him that there should be included in it some analysis of the actual situation with respect to the existing lifeboat stations on the west coast of Vancouver island. Representations have been made to me which indicate that in point of fact, under conditions as they exist at the present time, the expenditure on these lifeboat stations is not one which is resulting in the best services that can be obtained for an expenditure of that kind of money. I am not attempting to make any dogmatic statement on this point, but it has been suggested to me that within the limitations that are imposed upon them by the type of equipment and so on that is provided, a good job is being done. But nevertheless many situations arise on the west coast of Vancouver island at the present time, owing to larger fishing boats going farther and farther to sea, that indicate that the set-up as we have it at the present time is not really the most effective one that we could have. I would suggest that if this matter is to be looked into that question should also be included in the terms of reference, or whatever one might call what is to be investigated.

Mr. Chevrier: I should think that if investigations were made—and I am not saying they will be—they should cover the whole field.

Mr. Green: I have one other question to raise on this item. It has to do with vocational training for merchant seamen. In the details which we find on page 527 is included an item of $3,000 for the training of merchant seamen. As the minister knows, a great many Canadian merchant seamen have been forced onto the beach in the last few months because of the transfer of Canadian ships to United Kingdom registry. The very least that this country could do would be to give these men every facility to train for another occupation. Some of them have been merchant seamen for quite a long time. Many of them served during the war, and have served for ten years or fifteen years. It is not very pleasant to be forced out of your occupation after that length of time and have to try to find new work.

I do not understand why the government is reducing this vote. Last year it was $9,000. This year it is only $3,000. We were told in the veterans affairs committee a few days ago that a recommendation had been submitted to the government for the setting up of an adequate vocational training plan for those merchant seamen. Apparently that had been considered by the Department of Transport, the Department of Labour and possibly the Department of Veterans Affairs. I am not sure whether that last department is involved but, in any event, from the departments of labour and transport there was a submission for the establishment of a proper vocational training scheme which would have helped those several hundred seamen who had been displaced because the government has allowed Canadian ships to be transferred to United Kingdom registry, with the result that the ships have to carry a United Kingdom crew. I wish the minister would explain why it was the government rejected that proposal, and I hope it is not yet too late for provision to be made to give those men adequate vocational training.

Mr. Chevrier: I must say that I am not aware of any scheme that was rejected by the government that provided for vocational training for merchant seamen. Certainly, none has come to my attention. Certainly, no representations have been made to my department. The only thing I have any knowledge of is vocational training under the federal-provincial agreements. By virtue of the agreement which the federal government, through the Department of Labour, makes with provincial governments, there is I understand some provision for training various groups of people for a calling. My understanding is that the attention of the Minister of Labour has been drawn to this matter and that he has taken it up with the provinces. He has been in communication with the provinces about it, but beyond that I can add nothing other than to say that no representations have been made to me as Minister of Transport.

Mr. Green: We had a pretty definite statement, I think it was from an official of the Department of Labour, and Captain Slocombe of the minister's department was there. I think he confirmed it, or he could have been the one who made the original statement; but in any event, it was made perfectly clear that plans had been made for setting up vocational training for those men who have been displaced because the Canadian vessels are now being operated under the British flag. Frankly, I do not see why such a training scheme should not be set up. It does seem very unfair to these men just to force them on the beach.

The minister has suggested that they could get the regular vocational training. We cross-examined on that point also in the committee on veterans affairs. It was pointed out that to put these men under the ordinary vocational training would mean this: in the first place that some of the provinces have not agreed to that; some of them are not parties to the training scheme. One of the provinces, my own province of British Columbia, does not pay any allowances, apparently, while the men are taking vocational training. If they had the benefits of the scheme which was worked out between the provinces and the departments of transport, veterans affairs and labour in 1948 or 1949, the men would be eligible for allowances and they would have much wider benefits than they could get simply as ordinary unemployed men. Will the minister look into that situation to see whether or not some provision can be made to give these men opportunities for taking training?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I may be mistaken but I have to repeat that I have no personal recollection of any scheme such as that which my hon. friend has in mind. I think what the hon. member is driving at is a scheme which the Department of Labour had in mind with reference to the training of these merchant seamen following the decision of the government to transfer certain ships to the United Kingdom, and I think that scheme was a purely provincial-federal one which is to be handled by the Minister of Labour. However, I will be glad to bring that to his attention because the part of the vote which deals with vocational training is not one which would cover a scheme such as my hon. friend has in mind, and I am quite sure he will readily realize that. In any event I will bring what he has said to the attention of the Minister of Labour to ascertain whether it is possible to give the assistance such as he has mentioned.

Item agreed to.

Pilotage service—

455. Administration, operation and maintenance, including authority for temporary recoverable advances not exceeding $20,000, $540,983.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I would like to give an example of real pilotage. A young couple from Fort William had their tickets for England and while going through the United States someone stole their grips, and their tickets were of course lost. I placed the matter before the minister and within ten minutes he assured them they would be on their way the next day, and they were on their way the next day to England. This may be out of order, Mr. Chairman, but it is a credit to the minister and shows he is efficient and has a heart.

Item agreed to.

457. Steamship inspection, including the carrying out of the provisions of the conventions for the safety of life at sea and load lines, and a contribution of $7,000 to the province of Nova Scotia, department of education, $646,853.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would comment on this item, for I notice there is an increase of $67,000. I doubt if this can be attributable to the introduction of the five-day week, because these are largely technical personnel. Is this an increase in the staff of the minister's department, or is there some other explanation?

Mr. Chevrier: It represents exclusively the increase in salary which came into effect in December of last year.

Mr. Nowlan: Could the minister also give an explanation for the $7,000 grant to the Nova Scotia department of education? I have discussed this matter with the minister before and he is aware of my views. I realize the statute will have to be carried out but I think, Mr. Chairman, there has been perhaps a great deal of misunderstanding. Certainly there has been considerable complaint on the part of those engaged in coastwise shipping along the Atlantic coast as regards the incidence of this inspection service. The steamships engaged in coastal shipping feel they are placed at a great disadvantage by having to comply with the stringent regulations which are enforced by this department, particularly when competitors are not required to do so. I hope that the increase in staff is not brought about by increased inspection of small fishing boats around the coast, because although the minister has been most helpful in alleviating instances of too stringent application of these regulations I think they are causing a great deal of trouble and, I would say quite frankly, incurring unnecessary expense. I hope and believe that as long as the minister is here he will see that this administration is kept to a minimum, and I hope it will be restricted still further. The increase is not excessive but I think it could be dispensed with altogether.

Mr. Chevrier: We cannot—

Mr. Nowlan: What about the $7,000?

Mr. Chevrier: That is a contribution to Halifax for the marine school to assist in the training of engineers and improving the facilities and standards of instruction in the province's marine engineering school in order to prepare candidates for the Department of Transport examination in marine engineering.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, this covers the steamship inspection service. About two months ago there was a deep sea tug called the Chelan lost on the west coast with 14 lives, and it appears that in the inquiry which was held it was found there had been some new steering gear installed in this vessel which had not been inspected by government inspectors. I took it from the report that the government inspectors complained that the ship's owner or master was responsible for not seeing that that inspection was carried out. Apparently the government inspectors had been shown plans of this new steering gear, but it was never inspected at sea and, as I said, the ship was lost with all hands. This sort of thing should not happen. I do not know whether there was any fault on the part of the government. There might have been. I would like to know what provisions are made for the inspection of a vessel under these conditions. These boats should not be allowed to go to sea when there have been changes made of that type without adequate inspection. It may be the regulations are not sufficient to cover a situation of that kind, but I would ask the minister to explain what happened in this particular case.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, of course I am not familiar with this particular case. Many casualties occur in Canada and it would be difficult to deal with them all, but I remember some publicity in the press in connection with the Chelan and I know generally what the steamship inspection regulations call for. There are steamship inspectors all across Canada. There are quite a number of them in Vancouver, some in Victoria, and some in Prince Rupert, and it is the responsibility of those inspectors to inspect vessels from time to time. I am informed that it is a yearly inspection, and I am told now that when the inspector comes around and finds something faulty he serves notice on the master and the master is required to take care of the faulty equipment.

I am informed that in the case of the Chelan the steering gear was known to be of a good type. With reference to the casualties I might say that casualties do take place on the coasts, on the St. Lawrence, and on the great lakes, not because of lack of inspection but because of weather conditions, and also because of faulty equipment of which we are not aware.

I think the steamship inspection department tries to advise and does advise its inspectors to make a regular inspection of these vessels. I might add that there are casualties not only at sea, but in the air and on the ground, which are not the fault of the Department of Transport officials. For instance, as regards the Chelan, I believe there was a terrific storm, and certainly under those conditions it becomes difficult for any vessel, no matter if properly equipped, to withstand the elements. It might have been because the captain did not know the storm was coming up; it might have been because the radio was not in operation; and it might well have been that in taking a chance he found himself in difficulties from which he could not extricate himself.

Mr. Green: Is there any obligation on the company to have new steering gear inspected before sending the vessel to sea? The minister has dealt with the annual inspection, but that is another matter. This disaster had nothing to do with the annual inspection. It presumably was caused by defective steering gear which had just been installed. One of the newspaper dispatches has this comment:

> James Moorcroft, a government steamship inspector, informed the deputy coroner, Dr. A. G. Grimson, that it was the duty of the company officials to inform his office when a ship was ready for sea after undergoing important repairs.
>
> He told the court that his department had not inspected the vessel between the time she had changes made to her steering apparatus and the time she went on her last and fatal cruise.

That is a report of the statement made by the minister's inspector. Mr. Moorcroft may be the chief inspector, although I am not sure. Another dispatch with regard to the same inquest states:

> New hydraulic steering gear installed in the Vancouver tug Chelan shortly before her last, fatal voyage had not been tested at sea by government steamship inspectors.
>
> This was revealed Friday in testimony at the inquest in Vancouver into the death of Frank Hykaway, one of the fourteen victims of the Chelan shipwreck in Alaskan waters April 15.
>
> Canadian government steamship inspector James Moorcroft said plans for installation of the new steering gear might have been submitted to his office without his knowledge.
>
> But, he said, after such a change in the vessel's equipment, a steamship inspector should have been taken along when the gear was tested.

It would look as though the owners had been extremely negligent in not having an inspection made. I am not blaming the government inspector because I do not think he was at fault. However, either the owners failed to comply with the regulations or there is no regulation which compels them to have the vessel inspected in a case such as this. Can the minister tell us which of those situations actually exists?

Mr. Chevrier: If I may say so, I do not think it is either. I am informed that the company installed new hydraulic steering gear without advising the inspector and without advising the department. After the preliminary investigation which was made by our people, it did not appear that the steering gear could have been the cause of the casualty.

Item agreed to.

River St. Lawrence ship channel service—
460. Contract dredging, $2,500,000.

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I am sure the minister and the committee will not mind coming inland to the great lakes for a short period and to get away from salt water for a while. I notice that the total estimates of the department amount to $127 million approximately and that this item for contract dredging is $2,500,000. I am just wondering whether that money is all well spent. What makes me a little bit curious about the matter is this. At Kincardine on lake Huron we have a harbour at the mouth of a river. Each year, as a rule, that harbour has to be dredged. I would suggest that if the department had a better liaison with the public works department, they would eventually come to the conclusion that they would save money by building a proper harbour in a location like that, thereby getting away from this foolish spending of money which has been going on for a great number of years in connection with the harbour at Kincardine.

In connection with the Kincardine harbour I may say that in the public works department there are plans that have been there for a number of years for the building of a proper harbour but the department never got around to doing it. I leave that suggestion with the minister, namely that he talk the matter over with the Department of Public Works and see whether they could not save money by doing away with unnecessary dredging in Kincardine harbour every year.

Mr. Michener: The minister may recall that earlier in the year I raised the question of dredging in the eastern gap or eastern channel, as it is called, in Toronto harbour, and that he was good enough to put the machinery in motion to have that dredging done. The point was that the channel silts up in the winter. We in Toronto were looking forward to the resumption of the operation of the steamship Cayuga, which has been put into service again by Toronto people. It has a fourteen-foot draft and we wanted to be sure that in June, when service was resumed, it would pass readily through the channel.

I am not sure what happened but I want to take this opportunity to inquire. I understood that the minister at the time put the matter in motion but that there was some delay in connection with tenders. Actually we find that tenders were recalled again later and I believe the dredging has not yet been done. I should like to know just what happened and what the situation is. At the same time perhaps the minister would indicate—if this is the item under which provision is made for dredging in the Toronto area; and I am not sure that it is—what amount is estimated to be spent this year for dredging in Toronto harbour and who are the contractors.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I find myself unable to answer my hon. friend's question for this reason. The administration of the Toronto harbour is under the jurisdiction of the Toronto harbour commission. While it is true that they report to me for amendments to their statute from time to time they are, by their statute, authorized to administer all matters in connection with the harbour. However, from time to time they seek to have dredging work done, but that dredging is done by the Department of Public Works. Hence I am unfortunately not able to answer my hon. friend's question.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Would it be agreeable to the committee if I now called the supplementary items in connection with marine services?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chevrier: May I go back for a moment to item 449?

The Chairman: Does the minister wish to revert to item 449?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace asked why there were 32 boats and only 30 masters. I am now informed that there are two small vessels additional to the 32, one at Parry Sound and one at Port Arthur, where masters are necessary and where the employees are not designated as masters but have appropriate certificates to operate these two small units. That is the information that has been given to me.

Mr. Hamilton: That is, there are two small vessels additional to the 32 the minister listed previously?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hamilton: That is what the minister said.

Mr. Chevrier: So I am told.

Mr. Hamilton: So we have 30 regular vessels with masters and two small ones that do not require master's certificates. Is that right?

Mr. Chevrier: So I am told.

Mr. Hamilton: Thank you.

Mr. Green: On item 449, may I point out that in the particulars at page 521 will be found an item of $25,000 for the charter of aircraft for aerial ice survey. Can the minister tell us whether or not that work is done by private firms?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. It is done by private contract which is awarded by the air transport board. It is the ice patrol work in the spring.

Mr. Green: That work is not done by the R.C.A.F?

Mr. Chevrier: No; it is not.

Mr. Green: Then immediately below the one I have just mentioned there is a further item of $120,000. It is a new item apparently. It is described as "Charter of vessels for northern transportation". What is meant by that? Does the government charter vessels in addition to having its own? What vessels are covered by that vote?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. In connection with the trips of the d'Iberville and the C. D. Howe to northern Canada, particularly the d'Iberville, as my hon. friend knows the latter ship will take in this year the supplies for all our weather stations in the Queen Elizabeth islands with the exception of the most northerly one, Alert Bay, and we hope to take in the supplies for Alert Bay in 1955. In order to supply these stations it is necessary over and above the d'Iberville to have one dry cargo and one tanker vessel. The three ships form a sort of convoy. The two additional ships are chartered, and this is the amount of money required for their services.

Mr. Green: Is this the first year that has been done?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Railway and steamship services—

462. Repairs and expenses in connection with the operation and maintenance of official railway cars under the jurisdiction of the department, $56,240.

Mr. Green: This is the first item of the railway services. I should like to ask the minister a question with regard to the Pacific Great Eastern Railway. Last week the premier of British Columbia made a statement to the effect that he had presented to Ottawa a request for assistance in the extension of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway to the Peace river district from Prince George and from Squamish to North Vancouver. The newspaper report reads as follows:

> Premier Bennett feels confident the federal government will share the $60 million estimated cost of building the southern and northern extensions of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway. "I expect the federal government will pay 50 per cent of the cost", Bennett said in Victoria Tuesday when he announced that tenders for a railway bridge across the Capilano river in West Vancouver will be called next week.

Will the minister explain whether or not the premier of British Columbia is correct in his statement and what the policy of the government is with respect to assistance for these extensions? I would remind the minister that only a few years ago he brought in a bill which provided a subsidy for the extension of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway from Quesnel to Prince George. I have Hansard here for the second session of 1949 containing the minister's remarks at that time. As found at page 1448, he had this to say:

> The construction of this extension will provide traffic for the railway and assist in developing the natural resources in the area consisting of large tracts of timber suitable for lumber, newsprint, pulpwood and plywood, mining possibilities, sections of agricultural and grazing lands, hydroelectric power potentialities, and sport and recreational attractions.

He went on to justify the granting of the subsidy, which was set at $15,000 a mile. It was not as heavy as the subsidy for which the present premier is asking. The present Minister of Fisheries also spoke in that debate and he made some very sound remarks which are still applicable today. Here is what he said, as found on page 1450:

> I want to warn hon. members, however, that when this subsidy of $15,000 a mile for this construction is passed I do not think it will be the last time this house will be asked to help in the extension of the P.G.E.

Of course the Minister of Fisheries has now proved to be right about that.

> Premier Johnson's—

He was the coalition premier, and not a Social Credit premier.

> —avowed purpose in connection with that railway is to do what was originally intended; that is, push it through the Rocky mountains into the Peace river block, where there is great traffic in wheat and in the finest anthracite coal in Canada, and where there are also potential oil fields.

Of course that was before the Minister of Fisheries was in the cabinet. He also had this to say:

I want to just mention this briefly, because when we are passing this appropriation I think we should be fully aware of all the implications, since we are committing ourselves to a policy of subsidizing the extension of this provincial railway.

The last paragraph of his speech reads as follows:

This investment which we are now making in the P.G.E. has long been needed. I believe it will be well worth while. Premier Johnson is to be congratulated on being the provincial premier who, at last, is doing something positive about the P.G.E.

Of course Premier Bennett is now proposing to do far more about the P.G.E. than Premier Johnson ever did.

I think this federal government is to be congratulated also on helping him in this effort to expand the P.G.E.

What I want to know from the minister is whether or not he is going to help in this planned extension. He has dealt with the Pacific Great Eastern Railway twice in the house within the last few weeks. When we were discussing the extension of the C.N.R. into the Chibougamau area the Minister of Transport had this to say, as found at page 4599 of Hansard of May 11:

Some subsidy on such a line may well be justified as it was in the case of the northward extension of the Pacific Great Eastern in 1949 . . .

Again, on May 19 the minister made another statement. I will read from the English translation. I could not follow him when he was speaking but I checked the translation afterwards and I find that this is what he had to say:

The government's policy is to encourage lines which can operate at a profit. These two lines were provincial. The first of these two railways belongs to the British Columbia government and this government wished to extend its trackage. To this end they requested a subsidy, which was granted them.

Here we are with this question on our doorstep. The premier of British Columbia submitted a brief last fall outlining in detail the merits of the extension of this railway. I do not need to go into that any further. What I should like to know is whether the dominion government is prepared to subsidize these extensions. If not, why has it changed its policy since 1949 when it was so strongly in favour of subsidizing the extension of this same railway?

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to disappoint my hon. friend, but I am sure he wants to be fair. We are now dealing with a particular item of the railway estimates, and he has introduced a subject which could certainly last for hours, because I see there are other hon. members who would like to discuss it. We had an opportunity when the Chibougamau railway extension—

Mr. Green: No.

Mr. Chevrier: Oh yes. There was an opportunity to discuss this matter and it was discussed then. Inasmuch as I do not want to be disrespectful to my hon. friend I will deal with the matter but I do hope that he and other hon. members who are interested in it will not take this opportunity to debate it at length because I do not think this is the place to do it. The hon. member refers to a statement made by the premier of British Columbia. I cannot comment on that statement except to say that the government has received an application from the premier of British Columbia for a subsidy on the P.G.E. from Squamish to Vancouver. In fact, the application is a pretty lengthy one and goes into the economics of the Pacific Great Eastern at some length. I think it is safe to say that legislation has already been passed in the British Columbia legislature providing for financial assistance towards the construction of certain railway lines.

I believe it is the intention of the British Columbia government to give consideration to two matters, first, the extension from Squamish to Vancouver, and second, the extension from Prince George to the Peace river block by way of Hudson Hope on to Hines Creek or Dawson Creek. I am not too sure which it is, but in any event it is in that general northeasterly direction, and the purpose is to provide a link with the Northern Alberta railway. The application which has come to the government deals specifically with the southern end of the line only, namely, the extension from Squamish to Vancouver. This application will have to be given careful consideration. Now, when my hon. friend asks what is the policy of the government, the stock answer is that it will be announced in due course. In this case it cannot be stated until consideration has been given to this application.

When the Canadian National Railways desire to build a line, we give it very careful consideration. First, the Canadian National gives it study, and then we consider it in order to satisfy ourselves that it is advisable. I do not know enough about the extension in question. All I know is that we did give a subsidy to extend the line from Quesnel to Prince George because we were convinced that was the right thing to do. Until a study has been made of this southern extension, and that is all I think that is before us at the moment, it would not be proper for me to give any further indication. I presume that in due course the matter will be given careful study, and following that an announcement will be made.

Mr. Green: On that point, the railway was up in the air at both ends until the connection was made from Quesnel to Prince George, where it connected with the Canadian National line. At the southern end there is this gap between Squamish and North Vancouver. The government admitted the justice of asking for a subsidy for the northern extension. Now, what justification could there be for refusing to give a subsidy to finish the line at the other end?

The Chairman: I am afraid it was my own unfamiliarity with the subject matter of item 462 that caused me to allow the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra to proceed as far with his remarks as he did. Having done so, I felt that I should allow the minister to reply. I feel I should point out now that this item has to do with the operation and maintenance of official railway cars. I do not see how, in the light of that, I could justify a discussion on the Pacific Great Eastern Railway.

Mr. Low: Since the question has been asked about policy, I assure the minister it is not my intention at this stage or perhaps any other stage at this session to debate the question of the extension of the railway into the northern Alberta area, but I would appreciate it if the minister could say whether his department has formulated any policy with respect to the assistance of such railways, other than the procedures that have been laid down in such extensions as the one from Quesnel to Prince George. If he could just clarify that matter at the moment, It would be a great help.

Mr. Chevrier: All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that it has been our general policy, when dealing with Canadian National extensions, to look at the profitability or non-profitability of the line. Unless the Canadian National Railways were able to convince us and we were able to convince ourselves that it was a profitable thing to construct the line, then we would not do it. In a number of cases, at least four if not five since I have been in the department, we have been convinced of the economics of such lines. We have brought bills before the house to build such lines.

There have been exceptions to that policy, and it was an exception when we granted the subsidy to the Pacific Great Eastern to build from Quesnel to Prince George. I believe that was an exception that was well justified because it was a provincial railway that began nowhere and ended nowhere, and I say that respectfully. We felt it should end at least on the main line of the Canadian National Railways at Prince George, so I feel that extension was a reasonable action. Now, whether or not it will be a reasonable thing to extend it southward or even northward into the Peace river district is a matter that requires study. I am sure the house would not want me to prejudge the application that has been made by the government of British Columbia at this stage, when no study has been given. I believe we will study it carefully, and I am sure as sympathetically as we have studied the other, because I know that that whole Pacific area requires an outlet. Whether the outlet should be as suggested in the application or in some other form, I am not able to say, but there should unquestionably be an outlet. I think perhaps it should be envisaged with that in view.

Mr. Low: I thank the minister.

Mr. Nicholson: My remarks perhaps should have been made on a previous item, but I will be in order by confining my remarks to this item. Representations have been made to me protesting against the proposal to make liquor available on railway trains. I understand that the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific have made representations with that in view, and I am sure the minister will be concerned that this should not be made available in the official cars. It has been represented to me that we really do not require any increase in the number or variety of outlets for liquor, and also if liquor is offered for sale on the trains which are common carriers it will present a problem to the minors of the country. There is a question as to whether municipalities through which these trains will be operating should not be permitted to vote on the question before any permission is given. I wonder if the minister could indicate what the cabinet policy is on this question?

Mr. Chevrier: I quite realize why my hon. friend would be interested in this particular problem. While I have an opinion on the problem, and I am sure each member of the cabinet has, it is one which does not concern us. The sale of liquor is governed by the laws of the province. As my hon. friend knows, there are some provinces that prohibit the sale of liquor, whereas there are others which do not, so I am informed, certainly in the manner which my hon. friend has in mind. In any event, I could not speak with any degree of authority for the Canadian Pacific Railway. They determine their own policy as to whether or not they will sell liquor on their trains, in accordance with the laws of the province through which the train proceeds. The same applies to the Canadian National Railways, save and except this, that I can bring to the attention of the management any representations that have been made in the house. Of course, I shall be glad to do that, but that again is a policy that is determined by the directors of the Canadian National.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I do not know upon what item I can discuss the sale of Canadian National property, for instance, to private individuals.

Mr. Chevrier: There are a number of items dealing with Canadian National Railways farther on. Perhaps, if my hon. friend allows me, I could find one and indicate it to him.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I have been looking through the estimates, but I do not see any item that would entitle me to discuss the sale of C.N.R. property.

Mr. Chevrier: There is no particular item dealing with the sale of property by the Canadian National Railways, because that is done by the railway itself. It might have been brought up under the discussion of Canadian National matters—perhaps the last of the railway items. Then there is an item dealing with Canadian National steamships subsidy, and if the house has no objection the hon. member could deal with it then. I do not want to interfere with my hon. friend.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): It is only about two sentences.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, go ahead.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): What I had reference to was the sale of two properties in Point Edward, which is adjoining Sarnia, on the St. Lawrence seaway project. I mention this because quite evidently something is wrong somewhere. I have a return here described as sessional paper 202 under date of May 4, 1953, which indicates that one property was sold for one dollar, and other considerations, and the name of the purchaser is mentioned in the return. The reason I mention that is that the property, I understand, was resold the other day for $50,000. What the other consideration was—I have an idea what it was, and no doubt the minister has an idea, too—

Mr. Chevrier: No, I have not the slightest idea what it was.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I think the house should know more about it—

Mr. Chevrier: Now just a minute—

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): —because that is ridiculous.

Mr. Chevrier: I mentioned to my hon. friend that this was not the place to discuss real estate concerning the Canadian National Railways. I thought he was going to ask a simple question. I am not familiar with any sale of land; that is a matter which the Canadian National Railways deal with under their own authority. But if my hon. friend wants me to take it up with them, I will be pleased to. However, I have no knowledge of it, and I cannot speak about it with any degree of authority. So if this matter is of some significance, I wish the hon. member would not bring it up now. If he would give me the return, I will do what I can.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): That is all right. I do not expect any minister in a department to be familiar with everything that takes place under his jurisdiction. When the minister is inquiring about that, I wonder if he would inquire about a sale for $10,500 mentioned in that same return. I will not mention the name of the person involved. I understand he was asking $60,000 for it.

Mr. Chevrier: I shall be glad to.

Item agreed to.

Hudson Bay railway—

463. To provide for the difference between the expenditures for operation and maintenance, and revenue accruing from operation during the year ending March 31, 1955, not exceeding $425,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This has to do with the deficit of the Canadian National Railways, payment for which is asked by parliament. I would direct the attention of the committee to the subject of the Hudson Bay railway, with particular reference to some suggestions that might be effected which would result in a greater income for that railway, which has been a matter of interest to me for many years. I visited the railway as far back as 1926, at Port Nelson, and then later, in 1931, I made the first trip to Fort Churchill.

I intend to speak particularly about storage capacity for wheat at Fort Churchill, and to express the appreciation which all of us in western Canada who are interested in this route—and that applies to everyone—feel for the fact that the storage capacity will be doubled during the current year to a point where it will accommodate 5 million bushels.

During the past year there has been a greater use of the Hudson bay route than ever before, the export of wheat from that point reaching 10,800,000 bushels. With the new facilities in prospect I believe it will not be long before the export of wheat from Fort Churchill will amount to 20 million or 25 million bushels.

In the last season 31 ships called at the port, almost all with empty holds in their trip from east to west. The total amount of imports, in actual tonnage, stood at 2,790 tons, which is less than one shipload. I feel everything possible should be done to encourage east-west traffic over the Hudson bay route. This should be done through advertising to a greater extent than ever before—through Canada House in London and other government facilities in various parts of Europe. An effort should be made in this way to point out the savings that can be effected by shipping through Hudson bay, so that to the greatest possible extent the Hudson Bay railway may be used, as it should be used.

For years there were many who contended that to use that route would be a dangerous expedient. The Hudson's Bay Company used it for over 260 years, and suffered little loss from the dangers that have been conjured up in recent years.

By way of personal reference, my own great-grandparents came through Churchill in 1812 with those groups of settlers who came to the Red river at that time. They found none of those difficulties of navigation that have been referred to in such fearsome terms within the last 25 or 30 years, when we in the western provinces have demanded the extension of the use of the facilities there.

It has been established in recent years that navigation is now comparatively safe —and when I say "comparatively safe" I mean when compared with navigation into the other great ports of our country. True, the port has a short season; but even in the face of that short season during the year 1953 the port was idle only 11 days when it could have been operated to the full.

I feel that while congratulations are due to those responsible for securing added use of these facilities in the last year, further efforts should be made. Referring to a railroad in British Columbia a moment ago, the minister said that it ended nowhere.

Mr. Chevrier: It used to; but no longer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I appreciate that; the situation was remedied. When he replies, I would ask the minister to say whether or not an application has been made by American interests not only to build a railway from the international boundary to Fairbanks, Alaska, but also to connect such a defence railway with Fort Churchill and Prince Rupert. The press states that this defence railway is backed by the United States government, and would be intended for military purposes. By linking up with Fort Churchill, feeders would be available to the projected railroad, which those who are alleged to have applied for the right to construct have in mind.

What is needed today, as I see it, is a greater use of the Hudson bay route. That greater use is impossible today, or its possibilities are greatly diminished, because there are railroads in Saskatchewan and through northern Saskatchewan that, while ultimately intended to join with the port of Churchill and the Hudson Bay railway, have not been built. There is a line northeast of Melfort in Saskatchewan. There are also those breaks in the Canadian National Railways in northeastern Saskatchewan and the Beaver river area where the railroad comes to an end. It is the end of the line, and thirty miles distant it starts again. These laps or breaks should be constructed to enable a greater use to be made of the facilities at Churchill and the Hudson Bay railway.

I suggest to the minister that he place before the committee information regarding the courses being taken by the government or by governmental agencies to encourage the use of this railway and thereby reduce the deficit. There is no reason at all why the traffic from the tremendous mining development that is taking place in northern Saskatchewan, as an example, should be excluded from Churchill and the Hudson Bay railway.

In the matter of base metals and uranium, the developments taking place in northern Saskatchewan and Manitoba are such that the mineral possibilities stagger the imagination. According to those qualified to speak, the uranium developments in northern Saskatchewan are such that within a matter of a few years Canada's uranium production will be greater than that of any other place in the world, including the Belgian Congo. Yet, these developments in northern Saskatchewan have no railway facilities available to them.

I ask the minister this question: What consideration has been given to the application made by United States interests? According to press reports, those interests were prepared to spend $446 million on building such a railway line to join up with the Hudson Bay line, thereby adding to the revenues of the Hudson Bay line and indirectly to the revenues of Canada. Second, what are the prospects of reducing the high haul insurance rates that today prevail on the Churchill route? Generally speaking, insurance rates have been reduced, but the haul insurance rates are still exorbitant, and in my opinion unjustifiable. That is the view of an organization which has done much to interest the people of Canada in this project. I refer of course to the Hudson Bay Route Association.

Third, in view of the fact that the wheat that goes over the Hudson Bay railway and into Churchill and thence to the markets of the world is exclusively restricted to that produced on Canadian National lines, I desire to ask this question. Has the Canadian Pacific Railway at any time endeavoured to secure running rights over the Hudson Bay railway so that wheat from those lines might be available to that port? Fourth, has consideration been given among the various departments of government to the wheat board lowering the 1½ cents per bushel diversion charge on wheat shipped through Churchill to the end that by reduction of that charge there will be further encouragement of the use of this railroad? Fifth, and this is a suggestion which I think deserves serious consideration—it was made by Mr. W. G. Coventry, the United Kingdom trade commissioner in Winnipeg. He suggested that imports from the United Kingdom to western Canada might be considerably increased if facilities such as Queen's warehouses could be established in the northeastern areas of Manitoba or in Saskatchewan. All of us in the western provinces appreciate the greater use that has been made of the Hudson bay route since my hon. friend has been Minister of Transport.

As I remember it, the first wheat that was shipped over that route was in 1931. By 1935, under the Bennett government, shipments had increased to some 5 million bushels. Then for years those facilities, which are extensive, were almost ignored. Today, however, with the advantages of cheaper marketing that are available, more and more the route is being used. I feel that with an advertising program and with some of the changes made to which I made reference, which by no means are complete, further use could be made of this railroad—and further use should be made of it than has at any time been made previously.

In making these representations to the minister I do not want to go into further detail. Indeed, there are many things that I could say on the subject that might possibly be of some interest, but I do not want to speak at length at this time in the session. I do, however, ask the minister to give the committee, and through the committee western Canada, the assurance that, extensive as has been the use of these facilities during the past couple of years, with the increase of storage facilities at Churchill that are projected for this summer, at the earliest possible date, and I trust within a year or a year and a half, at least 20 million bushels of wheat will be shipped from this port, which will not only accrue to the advantage of the people of Canada but will reduce or remove the deficits altogether and also increase the return that the western farmers will receive from the wheat shipped through that port.

Mr. Nicholson: Before the minister replies I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Prince Albert on the interesting and excellent speech he has delivered. Will the minister indicate whether or not a contract for the extension that is to take place in Churchill has been let? Can he give the committee some information as to the number of ships that might be expected in Churchill this summer? Has he information as to the number of cargoes that may be assured at this date?

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the hon. members for Prince Albert and Mackenzie for their interest in the Hudson Bay railway, and particularly the hon. member for Prince Albert, who is appreciative of what has been done with reference to the extension of the elevator at Churchill so as to provide for the greater movement of wheat out of that port.

There are a number of matters the hon. members raised some of which fall under this heading and others do not, but I will try to deal with them at this time. One inquiry was about an application which was reported in the press as having been made by some United States interests for the building of a railway from the United States border to Fairbanks, Alaska, and then perhaps join up with the other railways in northern Alberta and northern Saskatchewan. I can tell him immediately that I have no knowledge of any such application. I could not say, however, that I have no knowledge of the latter ever having come up before. This is not the first time it has been suggested that a railway be built from the United States border to Alaska, but I am not aware of any application, and certainly no application has ever been made to the Department of Transport, and I doubt very much if one has ever been made to the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I say to the minister that Mr. Appleby made a speech to the Hudson Bay association in Moose Jaw in March and I have sent him over the clipping in question which contains every detail to which I made reference.

Mr. Chevrier: Continuing with my answer, if there was any foundation to this then the project might be carried out in a number of ways. It might be done by way of an extension to the P.G.E. so long as it remained within the province of British Columbia. The application then would not be made here but to the legislature of the province of British Columbia. If the extension or the line itself went into more than one province the application, of course, would have to come here.

I am not saying I have never heard of it. I have heard of it repeatedly from many sources. But the inquiries I have made lead me to believe that this is not a serious matter. By that I mean there is no substantial foundation to the statement that such a railway will be built. Certainly no application has been made and until one has been made there is no question of giving it consideration.

Now, with reference to the insurance rates, as my hon. friend knows we do not determine these in the Department of Transport. They are, I understand, determined by a committee in the United Kingdom since the ships come from there, and we have repeatedly made representations to that committee in the United Kingdom recommending a decrease in such rates. We have been informed that if we could assist by further aids to navigation consideration would then be given to this. Now, we have done a great deal with reference to improving aids to navigation in Hudson bay, Hudson strait, James bay, at Churchill and all along the route of the eastern coast of northern Canada. We have installed a responder type of radio beacon at one end of Charles island, one at the entrance to Churchill harbour, and also a radar screen reflector. The R.C.A.F. maintains an air-ice reconnaissance patrol in the area which is of great assistance to ships navigating in the bay and strait and, as my hon. friend knows, our own ships such as the C. D. Howe, the N. B. McLean in the past, and now the d'Iberville assist ships from other countries into the straits when the season of navigation opens. We will continue to provide as many navigational facilities as possible and continue to make representations to the British committee in regard to a further reduction in the haul insurance rates.

I am not aware that the Canadian Pacific Railway has endeavoured to secure running rights on the Hudson Bay railway. The diversion charge and its reduction, to which my hon. friend referred, is not a matter which falls within the jurisdiction of this department. It is one that comes under the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

In answer to the hon. member for Mackenzie, a recommendation for the award of the contract for the extension of the elevator at Churchill to the Carter Construction Company, which was the lowest bidder, has been made. A report to council has gone forward recommending the acceptance of that bid.

It is expected that the flow of traffic in Churchill will be as good as last year and I hope better. Last year there were some 31 ships and we hope there will be as many if not more this year. They provided for the movement of 20 million bushels of wheat—

Mr. Nicholson: I think it was 10·8 million.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank my hon. friend for the correction. They provided for the movement of 10 million bushels of wheat, but with the extension it will be possible to handle 20 million bushels. I had intended to add that I see from a statement before me that there is a gradual increase in the traffic over the Hudson Bay railway. The Canadian National Railways tried to divert and direct traffic to the line and I think the position was certainly far better in the last fiscal year than ever before, and I hope it will continue growing.

Mr. Winch: Not away from Vancouver, I hope.

Mr. Chevrier: We aim to provide greater facilities at the port of Churchill and the national harbours board seeks to see to it that there are sufficient facilities to look after the traffic there.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask the minister what effect, if any, the development of the St. Lawrence seaway will have on the shipment of grain through port Churchill? I remember when I was up there two years ago the elevator they had there then had not been used and was empty. Now we are building another one.

Mr. Chevrier: All I can say is that the economic studies which were made indicated it would have no adverse effect on Churchill.

Mr. Quelch: When we were discussing the first item the minister stated he would be in a position to make a statement regarding the cost of hauling grain through the Crowsnest pass. Can the minister now make that statement?

Mr. Chevrier: I hoped to be able to make that statement but I am afraid I will have to ask the hon. member to accept my explanation at this time. I have here a long statement which has been prepared for me, a small portion of which deals with the compensatory part of the movement of grain through Crowsnest pass. Since the time this statement was prepared I have asked those who prepared it to look at it once again. This statement was prepared some time ago and they have now indicated to me that it would be unwise for me to place it on the record. I hope my hon. friend will accept my explanation. I would rather not put it on the record because it should receive further study. I can reiterate what I said earlier, that there is no question of amending the Crowsnest rates at this time. I hope my hon. friend will accept that statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask the minister what his reaction is to my suggestion that there be established Queen's warehouses similar to those that have been established in ports in other parts of the world to the end that thereby imports from the United Kingdom might be encouraged. One of our great difficulties is that of these 30 ships to which reference has been made and which came into the port of Churchill during the past season, practically all had empty holds.

During the course of my earlier remarks I asked the minister what was being done to advertise the advantages of this route to the end that on the east-west course of trade a larger percentage of trade would be the result. A moment ago I placed before him —and I know it was through inadvertence that he did not answer—the suggestion made by a highly experienced man, namely the United Kingdom trade commissioner. I should like to know what his reaction is to that suggestion and also to the suggestion that Canada House might be used to a greater extent as a means of promoting interest in this route among British shippers.

My friend the hon. member for Royal asked what the situation would be when the St. Lawrence waterway was established. I made some investigation in that regard, and the best information I could secure on the subject from those in a position to advise was that, even after the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway, as far as the farmers in Alberta and Saskatchewan are concerned the cost of the shipment of wheat by way of port Churchill would be at least 9½ cents less than by way of Port Arthur and through the new St. Lawrence waterway. Hence, no matter what is done in connection with the latter waterway, the Hudson bay route will always remain of advantage to the farm producer in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, provided that something is done to encourage the use of that route by importers into western Canada.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I regret that I did not deal with the suggestion made by my hon. friend with regard to foreign trade zones. In effect that is what he was suggesting by Queen's warehouses. I understand that they are the same thing. We gave the matter careful consideration at one time There are advantages and disadvantages to the establishment of zones of that character in the ports of Canada. At one time there was a strong agitation for such a zone in the port of Quebec, and from the port of Quebec it extended to the port of Halifax. However, we soon discovered that there was as violent opposition to it as there was sentiment in favour of it. We therefore decided to establish an interdepartmental committee—this would be back in 1948, I am told—and they spent some months in considering the problem. They went to Halifax, Saint John, Quebec and Montreal—I doubt if their study included Vancouver—and they gave the matter careful study. Those who were members of that committee were all persons with a great deal of experience in the shipping business.

Of course, I do not remember all of the details of the report, nor am I able to say that the report recommended against foreign trade zones. It was an extremely comprehensive report that set out the advantages and disadvantages. After having carefully studied it, the government did not decide to put these foreign trade zones into effect at any of the ports.

I do not know whether, with respect to a foreign trade zone, the port of Churchill could be considered in any different light from the others. It might be that the circumstances there are such that they could be considered in a different light. I do not know. That is all I would care to say at this time because my memory of the matter is rather vague. However, it is a question that is certainly worthy of consideration. Whether we could act on it or whether it would be advantageous to do so is another matter. However, I will ask our people to see whether they could not give it some study.

With reference to the advertising of that route, may I say that the national harbours board do not advertise one particular section of its system rather than another, nor does the Canadian National Railways. It is true that the railway does advertise summer resorts and so forth in a general way. The national harbours board has a pamphlet entitled "Ship via Canadian Ports", in which is an excellent description of the port of Churchill. It has just now been handed to me by the chairman of the national harbours board. He informs me that it goes to all the shipping agencies in the world. I think that is perhaps one of the proper methods by which to advertise the port. Perhaps I could send it over to my hon. friend.

Mr. Nicholson: In this connection I might mention that the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan have published an extremely interesting report on the Hudson bay route and Churchill. I understand that this volume has been sent to the offices of the trade commissioners in the different ports of the world. I think that what the minister says is quite right, namely that the department cannot very well play up Churchill without meeting criticism from members from Vancouver, Halifax and other ports. However, I think there is no objection to the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan telling of the wonders that this new port offers to exporters in different parts of the world. If any hon. members are interested in this booklet, I may say I have a number of copies upstairs that I should be glad to supply to them.

Item agreed to.

466. Strait of Canso—Transportation improvements and facilities, $9,670,000.

Mr. Nowlan: I think it should be said that those in the east are extremely happy indeed with the progress which is being made with the construction of the Canso causeway. I am wondering whether the minister is now in a position to state somewhat definitely when it is expected that the causeway can be opened. I should also like to ask him whether there is any truth in the newspaper story that, when the causeway is opened, it is proposed that the procession be led by the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the minister, both wearing kilts. If that information could be definitely pinpointed and ascertained, I can assure him that this spectacle would be the greatest tourist attraction that has ever been known in the province of Nova Scotia. We should like to have ample warning in order to make provision for the necessary advertising. I would also suggest that possibly that duo should be made a trio and that instead of having two with kilts, there might be included an Irishman with a green plaid in the centre in order to give it balance.

Mr. Chevrier: With reference to the last part of my hon. friend's suggestion, let me tell him this. Nothing would please me more than to lead the pipers across the strait in kilts. I would be perfectly at home in a kilt because I am an officer in the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Highlanders and they wear kilts. I have worn a kilt on many occasions. Hence if I receive an invitation, I will certainly join with my friend the hon. member for Cape Breton South and any other hon. members who are there. Coming as I do from Stormont and Glengarry, I think I can march to the tune of the bagpipes as smartly as can many of the members here. Progress has been excellent on the Canso project. We are delighted with the contractor and with our consulting engineer. We are delighted with the manner in which the work has proceeded. From the information now at hand it will be January 1, 1955 or thereabouts—

Mr. Nowlan: Awfully cold for kilts.

Mr. Chevrier: I agree with my hon. friend. He interrupted me. I was not going to say that it would be opened on January 1, 1955. All I was going to say was that it is expected that the progress of the work will be such that by that time we will be able to state when it will actually be opened. It will be early in 1955.

Mr. Robichaud: Would the minister tell us whether facilities will be provided for the passage of cargo ships through the causeway? Is there sufficient depth of water?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, provision is being made for the construction of a lock for the movement of ships.

Mr. Robichaud: I appreciate the fact that this will facilitate the passage of cargo ships carrying mineral ores from the new mines in the Bathurst area. In view of the importance of these mines which, according to reports now available, will produce over one million tons of mineral ore, and also in view of the fact that on the north shore of New Brunswick we have facilities for shipping twelve months of the year, I wish to mention at this time, in agreement with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Royal, that it is very important that at the earliest possible date consideration be given to having surveys made for the Chignecto canal. If the Chignecto canal were constructed it would cut the distance involved in the transportation of these minerals by at least 400 or 500 miles.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I wish to ask a question about item 465. You were going so fast, Mr. Chairman, that you did not notice me on my feet. The same question has to do with items 470 and 471, and concerns the construction or acquisition of car ferries and terminals. I notice that we are spending a good deal of money. Under item 465 the amount is $1,558,000, under item 470 it is $6,950,000 and under item 471, $900,000. I should like to ask the minister whether in the construction of these ferries that are to operate between the mainland and islands provision is being made for the accommodation of railway cars as well as automobiles.

Mr. Chevrier: There is in the one under discussion. The answer to that is yes.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Pardon?

Mr. Chevrier: With respect to the railway car ferry involved in item 465 provision is made for the transportation of railway cars.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am informed that in some instances where ferries are being constructed provision is being made for railway cars but the construction is so designed that truck trailers are not able to make use of these ferries. One instance of that was drawn to my attention. If that is so, I think it is a very bad policy. Now that it has been drawn to the minister's attention I would ask him to see to it that when ferries are being constructed to service these particular areas accommodation is provided not only for railway cars but also for trailer trucks. I would think that would be a very important means of transportation for the people in these areas.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend is right in his assumption that it is important to provide for the movement of trucks, but he is absolutely wrong in his assumption that provision is not being made. On the contrary, provision has been made in this car ferry for the movement of trucks. Another car ferry is being built by the government for service between Wood Islands and Caribou, and it is exclusively for the movement of goods on trucks. Provision is made for trucks on the Port aux Basques-North Sydney ferry and the Yarmouth-Bar Harbor ferry. These are not car ferries at all but provision is made for trucks. A substantial number of trucks can be carried on these vessels.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am very glad to hear the minister say that. I should like to tell him that I had information that in one instance no provision had been made and it was necessary to reconvert the vessel afterwards. Provision had been made for railway cars but the ferry was so constructed that trailer trucks could not make use of it. In that particular case it was reconstructed. I am very pleased to hear the minister say that from now on that is not going to be the case and that special recognition is given to trailer trucks on these ferries. I am sure the trade will also be pleased to hear that.

Mr. Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough): Item 466 has to do with the causeway across the strait of Canso and the amount of the vote is $9,670,000. One end of the causeway will be in my constituency. I want to ask a question or two. When the causeway was first mooted no doubt the department had an assurance of the probable cost. Since then tenders were called for and contracts were let for the rock fill and the lock. I should like to ask the minister how the estimates compare with the contracts that have been let for the work that is being done.

While the minister and his officials are getting those figures, perhaps he might listen to my other question. What is going to be done with the scores of employees, married men who own their homes in the towns of Mulgrave, Point Tupper and Port Hawkesbury, who are employed at the present time on the ferries running between Mulgrave and Point Tupper which carry the trains across from the mainland to the island of Cape Breton? The moment the first train crosses the causeway these men will be out of a job on the ferry boats running between the points I have mentioned. There are some men employed on the railway in the running trades as conductors, brakemen, engineers, firemen and so on who will probably be well taken care of even if they have to deadbeat it back and forth from Sydney to Stellarton, Truro and other places, but the men who are employed on the ferry boats will be out of work the day the first train crosses the causeway.

It is not hard for any of us to imagine their worry now as to what is going to become of them when the causeway is completed and the first train crosses it. This is not the case of an act of God. It is not the case of a mine petering out. This is an act of man. It is an act of parliament, if you want to put it that way. I think some consideration should be given to these men, and probably it already has. However, I should like to know something, and they would also, about what is in store for them when the causeway is completed. They will be out of a job overnight. Where do they go from there? Those are the two questions I want to ask the minister.

Frankly, the third question I should have put earlier, and that is I understand the expenditure on this job was divided between the dominion government, the Nova Scotia government and perhaps the Canadian National Railways. Could the minister inform me as to that division?

Mr. Chevrier: Dealing with the first question, the matter of the rock fill on the causeway itself from the mainland to Balache Point, the estimates of the department were higher than the amount of the contract itself. I have not with me the exact amount, but I put it on Hansard when I introduced my estimates earlier.

Now with reference to the second question, that is a very difficult question that my hon. friend raises and one which I am sure will be of particular interest to him and his constituents. It is not an easy one for me to answer because it is not one that entirely concerns the Department of Transport although it interests our department. My hon. friend will perhaps recall that when the first work on the causeway was begun I, together with the late premier of Nova Scotia, saw a committee from the port of Mulgrave, Port Tupper, and I believe Port Hawkesbury.

Mr. Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough): I was with you at the time.

Mr. Chevrier: I was going on to say that they were introduced by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough. At that time it was thought that the whole matter should be given careful study by reference to some committee. It was thought that Nova Scotia might give consideration to the establishment of some industry in that area, and that we might communicate with Canadian National Railways and other interests to ascertain how many employees could be cared for when the causeway work was completed.

Now it is certain that the Canadian National Railways, after the discontinuance of the ferry between Port Tupper and Mulgrave, will be able to take care of a number of men; that has been ascertained. I think I have communicated that by letter to the late premier of Nova Scotia and perhaps to the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough; I am not sure. Then, there are a number of men whom we in the Department of Transport will be able to place on the locks. I am afraid, however, we will not be able to take on all of those who will be let out, but I can assure my hon. friend that those who are interested in the problem, the Canadian National Railways, the Department of Transport and any other government department, will give careful consideration to the finding of employment for those whose employment will disappear.

Now, the last question, the division of the cost of the railway diversion, the locks and the causeway, I shall have to get that information and put it on the record.

Item agreed to.

470. Construction or acquisition of auto-ferry vessels, as detailed in the estimates, $6,950,000.

Mr. MacLean: This item covers the construction of an auto-ferry vessel for service between Wood Islands, Prince Edward Island, and Caribou, Nova Scotia. Can the minister give the committee some information as to when it is expected this ferry will be completed and ready for service, what its capacity will be, and if any arrangements have yet been made as to who will operate it?

Mr. Chevrier: The decision to build this ferry, as my hon. friend knows, was due to a substantial increase in the traffic between Caribou and Wood Islands. It was decided that the vessel should be allocated, and I am informed that it was given to the Pictou shipyard. It will be ready for service about the last half of 1955. The second question my hon. friend has raised, namely, who will operate it, is still not decided. The matter is under consideration by the maritime commission, and I hope the maritime commission will have a recommendation to make to the minister in the not too distant future, which will be considered by the government.

Mr. Nowlan: This same item covers the construction of a ferry to operate between Yarmouth and Bar Harbor. I notice that the details on page 536 show that $1 million has been spent on the construction during the fiscal year 1953-54, and it is estimated that $4,100,000 will be spent during this fiscal year. I wonder whether the minister can give us a breakdown of that $1 million. It will be noticed that in the details it is shown so much has been actually expended up to December 31, and then the balance is estimated for the remaining three months of this fiscal year, but that breakdown includes the total vote for all three ferries. One does not get a picture of this $1 million, as to how much was actually spent up to December 31 and how much was estimated would be spent from December 31 to March 31.

The reason for asking this question, I think the minister should know and if not I can tell him quite frankly, is that there have been many disturbing rumours as to the exact course of construction of that ferry. In May of last year we had a provincial election during which we saw pictures of this boat sailing serenely around a full page advertisement. She was travelling at full speed, and had a bone in her teeth and was apparently making fifteen knots in quite rough water. Only $1 million was spent last year, and many people in the province would like to know where this matter stands, whether the ship will be finished this year or what time next year. I know if the minister makes a statement on it, people will accept it. I would appreciate it if he would give me a breakdown of that $1 million and also tell us when, in his opinion, she will be completed and in operation.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the hon. member for the confidence he has in any statement I would make; I certainly appreciate that. The item is for the construction or acquisition of auto-ferry vessels, as detailed in the estimates. There is a provision for $4,100,000 for the construction of an auto-ferry vessel to operate between Yarmouth, Nova Scotia and Bar Harbor, Maine, the total amount estimated being a little over $5 million. The contract for the construction of this ship has been awarded to the Davie Shipbuilding company, and it is hoped it will be ready for operation by October of this year.

The province of Nova Scotia has agreed to contribute 50 per cent of the cost but not to exceed a maximum of $1,500,000, so it looks as if Nova Scotia had acted rather carefully in its commitment. This estimate provides for the expenditure of $4,100,000.

Mr. Nowlan: How much of the $1 million was actually spent?

Mr. Chevrier: The auditor with me now tells me he has not the amount, because the figures for the audit of 1953-54 are not ready. But perhaps I can get something more definite for my hon. friend and give it to him later. I do not have the details with me now.

Mr. Nowlan: The total figure was given, and I thought the minister would have the breakdown.

Mr. Chevrier: I am afraid I shall have to get that information for the hon. member, if I may.

Mr. MacLean: With reference to the Wood Islands-Caribou ferry, I would like to know what the capacity of the new boat will be.

Mr. Chevrier: The vessel will have an overall length of 345 feet, a speed of 18½ knots; it is designated to make one round trip a day, and has a carrying capacity of 600 passengers; and with its two automobile decks it has a total capacity of 300 cars. It is arranged to handle trucks and buses on the lower deck.

Mr. Barnett: I notice this item has to do with the provision of auto-ferry vessels. Making a comparison of the details given in the estimates I notice that they cover the provision of auto-ferry vessels on the Atlantic coast. I felt I would like to rise and draw to the attention of the minister that at the present time we have another coast in Canada, and that we have developing there a serious situation in connection with the provision of auto-ferry transportation, particularly to some sections of Vancouver island. While I am not rising to suggest that the federal government should necessarily assume responsibilities to the extent that they have been assumed on the eastern coast, I do feel there are some aspects of this problem to which the minister and his department should give serious attention.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

When we were discussing the first item of the minister's estimates I did attempt to draw to his attention some of the problems existing at the present time in connection with providing terminal facilities for auto-ferries, and expressed the hope that at least to that extent his department would consider developing a policy that would overcome some of the difficulties now existing.

So as to complete the general picture as I see it, calculations I make would indicate that for the Atlantic coast of Canada provisions in the estimates by way of operating deficits and subventions seem to total $7,810,725, whereas, so far as I have been able to discover, for the Pacific coast of Canada at the present time we are being asked to provide the modest sum of $345,000.

I am not rising in my place to ask that the amount for the Pacific coast be increased to equal that for the Atlantic, or anything like that; but I do feel the situation is one concerning which the Department of Transport and the federal government could take effective action, if they would. If I were going to put my remarks in the form of a question to the minister I suppose I would ask him whether if Vancouver island were to revert to the status it once had, when it was a separate entity from British Columbia, the federal government would then be willing to consider accepting some of the responsibilities, which apparently they do accept in respect of another island described, so the easterners tell me, as "the island" on the Atlantic coast, just as we term Vancouver island "the island" on the Pacific coast.

The minister will understand I am not suggesting too seriously that Vancouver island should secede from the province of British Columbia merely to be eligible for benefits under confederation that do not exist at the present time. Nevertheless I do hope the minister will give some indication that he is prepared to consider the transportation problem of the British Columbia coastal area.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister is always prepared to give consideration to transportation facilities, no matter where they are. But I have to draw to the attention of the hon. member the fact that the position is somewhat different on the Atlantic, because of the terms of confederation. There is a clear indication that the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada stipulated that Canada would build this ferry service. There was also a clear indication, or certainly there is some indication—and there could be a debate on that—as between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and the transportation facilities offered there. There can be no doubt that we have assumed, under the constitution, and I think rightly so, that there was an obligation on the part of the federal government to provide at least a link between Prince Edward Island and the mainland; and that covers two, if not three of the car ferries mentioned in the estimates.

The matter my hon. friend has mentioned has reference, too, to a lack of facilities in certain areas. That would have to be determined by the maritime commission, which is charged with the subsidization of steamship services. They recommend to the government—and I hope I am not inviting debate on the matter. But I think there is a distinction to make between the two.

Mr. Gillis: You are on very safe ground.

Mr. Chevrier: I would not want my hon. friends from the west coast, or the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, to think that his area of the country is being overlooked. It is not. But the consideration has to be in one case by way of subsidy, and in the other by way of the fulfilment of a commitment. And I hope he will not take from that any suggestion that we are not anxious to give sympathetic consideration to any application made for additional transportation service on the west coast, or to and from Vancouver island.

Mr. Fulton: I have no desire to provoke a debate, but I could not allow the minister's remarks to go by without making the observation that the provision of transportation facilities was also a term of entering confederation at the time British Columbia entered. The minister will be aware that there has been a controversy, perhaps more of historical than of practical interest, over a great many years as to whether those terms were fulfilled with respect to the provision of transportation and communication with Vancouver island.

At one point there was the suggestion that the obligation was to build a railway across the strait of Georgia. If the minister could solve that problem of course he would be a wizard. I mention it because there is a certain similarity in the provision of communication with British Columbia and Vancouver island, which most certainly was one of the promises on which British Columbia came into confederation.

Mr. Nowlan: I have one more question. I understood the minister to say a few moments ago in answer to my question—I forget the term he used—that the ferry would be completed in October. Just what is meant by that? Does it mean that the ferry will be in commission then or launched then? Just what does he envisage by the term "completed"? When will the ferry be in operation?

Mr. Chevrier: My understanding is that it will be in operation in the fall of 1954.

Item agreed to.

471. Construction or acquisition of vessels for Newfoundland coastal services, $900,000.

Mr. Stick: I have a question to ask about the two vessels which are under construction for Newfoundland. What is the size, the gross tonnage of the vessels, and when will they be completed and put into service?

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend is speaking about Canadian National Railways ships. I think I have that. The gross tonnage is 1,200; length, 210 feet; breadth, 34 feet; speed, 12 knots. The ships are of steel construction. They are powered with diesel engines. Each vessel will have accommodation for 50 first-class passengers and 40 second-class passengers, with about 1,500 cubic feet of refrigerated cargo storage space. Delivery of the first vessel will be made in mid-1955, and the second one three months later.

Item agreed to.

472. To provide towards the cost of surveys of Newfoundland Railway properties entrusted to the Canadian National Railway Company, $17,500.

Mr. Green: This is an item to provide for the cost of surveys of the Newfoundland Railway properties. Can the minister explain to us just what is being done along that line, and also whether any investigation has been made concerning the cost of making the Newfoundland Railway standard gauge.

Mr. Chevrier: This vote represents the department's share for 1954-55 of the cost of a joint survey with the Canadian National Railways of Newfoundland Railway properties which were transferred for operation to the Canadian National Railways.

With reference to the second question, whether any study had been made of the cost of making a standard gauge railway of the present railway of Newfoundland, no detailed study has been made. I think all that the Canadian National did at one stage was to make a general survey and an estimate, which was a very high one, if my recollection serves me right.

Mr. Stick: From $80 million to $90 million.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend says from $80 million to $90 million, and he is probably correct. Beyond that I am afraid I could not go. Certainly, no detailed study has been made.

Mr. Green: The minister mentions railway property. Does he mean railway equipment, rolling stock and so on?

Mr. Chevrier: No, it is lands.

Mr. Stick: When our railway was built in the first instance certain grants of lands were given to the Reid Newfoundland Company which built the railway. It was eventually taken over by the Newfoundland government of the day, and now the Canadian National Railways are operating it. I have had some correspondence with the railway with respect to some of the property. It is essential that this survey should take place so that our railway will know what lands it has and what is the type. That is the purpose of this survey.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank my hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

473. Degaussing and strengthening for armament, sea-going merchant ships of Canadian registry of 1,000 gross tons and over, $300,000.

Mr. Thatcher: In view of the fact that a substantial number of Canadian ships have gone off Canadian registry in the past year, I wonder why this item has not been cut more than it has. In the details on page 537 we find that last year actually $335,000 was spent on degaussing ships. Is it still estimated by the minister that $300,000 will be needed for this purpose in the coming fiscal year?

Mr. Chevrier: This is the estimate for this year. It is expected that for the present fiscal year the following ships will be degaussed: Three of the Canadian National West Indies steamships, the Canadian Challenger, the Canadian Cruiser and the Canadian Constructor; six of the Canadian Pacific Railway ships; the Port aux Basques ferry, which is being built by the Department of Transport; the Yarmouth ferry which is being built by the Department of Transport; the C. D. Howe; the N. B. McLean; the east coasters, the Canadian National ships that were spoken about by the hon. member for Trinity-Conception; two tankers; the Nanaimo ferry, which is being built in the United Kingdom for the Canadian Pacific Railway. These are the ships which are expected to be degaussed during the course of the year.

Mr. Harkness: Can the minister tell us how much it does cost to degausse one of these ships; how much does it cost to strengthen them so that armament can be placed in them?

Mr. Chevrier: Degaussing differs with the ships themselves. For instance, take the Canadian National West Indies steamships. It will cost $40,000 for the three of them. The C. D. Howe, which is a big ship, will cost $20,000; the McLean, $20,000; the Port aux Basques ferry, $25,000. With respect to strengthening them for defence, that is rather difficult for me to answer. I can only answer it by reference to a study which was made some years ago about the cost of strengthening the former Park vessels, and that ran into substantial amounts per vessel; certainly it was more than the amounts I have given here. I would not like to risk a guess but certainly a matter in the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. Harkness: Is all this money then for degaussing, rather than for strengthening the ships in order to equip them with guns?

Mr. Chevrier: None of this is for strengthening these ships. It is all for degaussing.

Mr. Harkness: The item then is somewhat misleading. It states: "Strengthening for armament."

Mr. Chevrier: I have a breakdown here. The object of the vote is to initiate a program for strengthening the construction of new sea-going ships of over 1,000 gross tons, and degaussing and strengthening the ships of our own department and those ships which remain in the fleet. As my parliamentary assistant has just drawn to my attention, the purpose of degaussing is to demagnetize the ships.

Mr. Harkness: It is an anti-mine device.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Harkness: I quite understand that, but my point was that the item should be degaussing, rather than degaussing and strengthening for armament, because there is no strengthening for armament taking place. Another question I wanted to ask was in connection with those ships which have been degaussed. A considerable amount of money has been spent on them, upwards of $100,000 apiece if I understood the minister correctly.

Mr. Chevrier: I did not say that; my hon. friend misunderstood me. What I said in answer to his question was that my recollection was that that was the amount it would cost to strengthen them. I did not say we had spent that amount. As far as I can remember we have spent no money to strengthen the Park ships since I have been in the Department of Transport.

Mr. Harkness: I understood that money had been spent.

Mr. Chevrier: No.

Mr. Harkness: The question I was coming to then was this. In regard to the ships which have been given this degaussing or strengthening treatment, does the government make any provision for repayment of the work which has been done when they pass from the Canadian registry or is this work given as a free gift to the country which secures the registry of the ship?

Mr. Chevrier: The ships for which this money is being provided will all remain here. These ships belong to the Department of Transport, the Canadian National West Indies, and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. Harkness: But this work was carried out last year and the year before and no doubt some of these ships have now gone off the Canadian registry. My question was, does the government get any return for the work done on these ships after they are taken off the Canadian registry?

Mr. Chevrier: The answer to that is that while they pass from Canadian registry it should be remembered that they are transferred under an agreement with the United Kingdom by which they can be recalled to Canada, and by virtue of which all the profits of these vessels are paid into the Canadian treasury, so that there is great benefit, in that event, derived from the degaussing of these ships.

Mr. Harkness: May I ask another question with regard to the expenditure on Canadian Pacific Railway ships which have undergone this treatment? Should the Canadian Pacific Railway decide to sell these ships during the coming year will there be any rebate, or will the government have any claim for the work which has been done on these ships and which cost a considerable amount of money? In other words, will the government have any claim for rebate if these ships are sold to some other country?

Mr. Chevrier: I am informed that these are all coastal ships which are necessary for the operation of certain services on the west coast. It is not likely that they would be sold, but if they were sold I am afraid the answer to my hon. friend's question would be yes.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, just to keep the record straight and in regard to item 470, I asked the minister a question with reference to the capacity of the proposed ferry boat which is to be put into service between Wood Islands and Caribou. I am not sure but I think from the figures the minister gave he thought I was referring to the ferry to be operated between Bar Harbor and Yarmouth.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend is quite correct. It has been brought to my attention that I gave him the figures for the Bar Harbor-Yarmouth ferry and I presume that is why the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings was about to rise. The figures for the auto-ferry between Wood Islands and Caribou are as follows: over-all length 240 feet; breadth 45 feet; draught 10 feet. It has 1,000 horsepower and is capable of carrying 36 automobiles. I think that is the information my hon. friend wants.

Item agreed to.

475. Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited—to provide for the payment from time to time to the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited (hereinafter called "the company") of the amount of the deficit occurring during the year ending December 31, 1954, in the operations of the company and the vessels under the control of the company, as certified by the auditors of the company, and upon applications made by the company to the Minister of Finance and approved by the Minister of Transport, not exceeding, $581,000.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, this is the item which provides for a deficit in the operation of the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships and the estimate for this year covers an amount of $581,000. There was no preceding item. In other words, this is the first time this item has appeared in the estimates. I know there are others who wish to comment on this matter, and I simply wish to say that I hope the minister is in a position to make some general comment on the operation of this service. The deficit seems fairly substantial but, on the other hand, it is an initial service in so far as freighters are concerned. I can tell the minister it is one which is appreciated in the east, and I believe it is one which should be extended.

As I said during the discussion on the opening item the other day, I hope the minister will see his way clear to assist in encouraging the company to expand the operation of these steamships so that a better and more regular service than the one now in operation will be provided.

Other instances could be given, but the instance to which I referred the other day dealt with the possibility of shipping goods to Venezuela. Farm products from the maritime provinces could be shipped, and provided we had a refrigerator service on a regular basis there could be a tremendous expansion in the export of such goods. Venezuela alone will buy thousands of cases of eggs a week from the maritime provinces. Yesterday when the Minister of Trade and Commerce was speaking on the excellence of the trade commissioners service—and it is an excellent one—I recalled the fact that one of his trade commissioners was in the Annapolis valley, which is the valley, of course, of Canada—

Mr. Harris: Oh, no.

Mr. Nowlan: As I say, it is the valley of Canada. I hear some voices raised, and I presume it is in approbation. This trade commissioner was down in the Annapolis valley with assured markets, so he said, for over four thousand cases of eggs a week. Then when we checked into the matter we found that the transportation was not available because there was no regular refrigerated service.

I know that things have to come slowly. I realize that the minister must watch expenditures. I know that this is not a matter with regard to which one can urge that the whole trade be revolutionized overnight. However, I want to impress upon the minister the importance of this service. If he is going to cut down deficits, I think perhaps the further expansion and extension of capital expenditure in providing additional service will ultimately result in greater revenue and possibly the obliteration of deficits entirely.

Mr. Bell: Before the minister replies, I should like to reiterate the words of the hon. member who has just taken his seat with regard to the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited fleet. I appreciate the fact that the operations of it were thoroughly gone over in committee. However we in the maritimes notice that there seems to be a fairly pessimistic attitude about the future of the fleet. I do not think it is in keeping with any good sound business plan for any company that the government and their officials should take this attitude. Recently some sort of announcement crept into the newspapers that a year or two might see the discontinuance of operations entirely. I recall that the minister quickly denied this report in the house and we were appreciative of that fact. But as the hon. member who spoke previously has just said, if you are going to operate any company you must make plans for the future. You must have some new ships, and I suppose new refrigerator service and others, in order to keep this worth-while trade with the West Indies and Caribbean.

A short while ago I questioned the minister and he assured us that the eight ships—I think that is the number—that are still in service in the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited fleet are going to be continued in operation for at least another year. I sincerely hope that every effort will be made to keep them in operation. I also hope that the policy—whether it be right or wrong—that the government has with regard to the merchant fleet generally in Canada will not in any way creep into the policies and considerations with regard to the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited fleet itself. I hope that the fleet will be considered on its own merits as a necessary investment for the services that have been built up and which mean a great deal to us in the maritimes.

Mr. Lennard: Before the minister answers I might make one observation. I was not on the committee that went into this matter in detail, but my perusal of the annual report would indicate to me that it might be well to consider putting into service vessels similar to the "Lady" boats that were taken off last year. I am sure they were taken off principally because they were becoming a bit aged and because they were not economical to operate.

Mr. Chevrier: They were not patronized.

Mr. Lennard: From my perusal of the annual report it would seem to indicate that the deficit was caused by the cessation of operations of those two vessels. It is indicated in the report that the charter revenues decreased by over $600,000 because those two vessels were taken out of service. I was wondering whether or not they were operating at a profit instead of as the minister has indicated on several occasions. From the report, to a layman—and I include myself—it would appear that these boats were paying. The report says:

> Freight revenues amounted to $4,336,008, showing a decrease of 25·3 per cent. This result was mainly due to a decline in volume and a substantial drop in rates on northbound cargoes of raw sugar, and to the cancellation of six voyages . . .
>
> Passenger revenues were reduced from $869,400 to $132,823 mainly due to the withdrawal of the two remaining "Lady" vessels from service at the end of 1952.

The account given in this report clearly indicates that the reduction in revenue was because of the discontinuation of this service. Whether it was because they were refrigerated and carried additional freight which made up some of the profit, I would not know. Can the minister explain the situation?

Mr. Chevrier: As the committee knows, this vote was considered at more than usual length this session before the committee on railways and shipping, and the president of the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited dealt fully with this whole subject. First let me say that the company operates eight ships, three diesel-type refrigerated vessels and five non-refrigerated cargo vessels. Operating revenues from the operations during this financial year were $4,945,000 whereas operating expenses were $5,200,000, leaving a net operating loss of $280,000, and when you add interest on bonds and interest on government loans, it makes the estimated income deficit $581,000.

The "Lady" boats were withdrawn because they were not profitable. They were withdrawn also because they were becoming obsolete and, as the president explained, because people are now going to the Caribbean and to the West Indies by plane rather than by ship because of the great saving of time. They were withdrawn also because it was necessary to spend substantial sums of money on them. It was felt that in view of the revenue which was derived from the "Lady" boats as opposed to that derived from the freighters, the time had come to dispose of the others.

This picture, I realize, is not good, but I think it is exceptional. I do not think we shall have a repetition of this situation. I think the potential for trade with the West Indies is great; in fact, it is tremendous. It is unfortunate that the movement of cargo has not been greater between our maritime ports and the British West Indies. I think the sterling question has had a great deal to do with the matter. I again repeat that I believe this is an extreme situation which should not repeat itself this year. For that reason I made a statement in the house which I hoped would allay the fears of anyone that the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited were thinking of withdrawing their ships. There is certainly no present intention of doing that. I am hopeful that trade will increase. In fact, the Minister of Trade and Commerce indicated to me some time ago that there was a fairly clear indication that it would increase during the course of the year

I can sum up all the remarks I have to make by saying that the whole position will depend on the operations. If business increases there will be no need for even thinking of withdrawing this service. It is pointed out to me now that the result of operations at the end of April this year as compared with that at the end of April last year is better by about $100,000. I therefore think we can look with some degree of optimism to this trade. I know that the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited are not at all anxious to withdraw the service. They are most anxious to have it continue and they are hopeful that the trade will increase.

Mr. Lennard: I might say that I am not a bit critical. I only hope they do continue to operate even if they have to do so at a loss for two or three years because I think eventually they will win. When the sterling question is settled there should be increased trade with the West Indies. As was suggested by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, if several of the vessels that are not refrigerated were refrigerated they could take agricultural products from the maritimes to South American ports. I think that would possibly be one method of solving the difficulty. But I do hope that the service is continued and even expanded regardless of whether they have to operate for several years at a loss.

Item agreed to.

Pensions and other benefits—

478. Railway employees' provident fund—to supplement pension allowances under the provisions of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway employees' provident fund act so as to make the minimum payment during the period January 1, 1954, to March 31, 1955, the sum of $30 per month instead of $20 per month as fixed by the said act, $12,250.

Mr. MacLean: Would the minister give the committee some indication of how many former employees of the railway benefit under this provision? I should also like to know whether some means could not be found to increase the allowances of these retired railway employees. I have had several complaints from men in this group who are now trying to live on what is practically a pittance. They were employed a number of years ago. They made their contributions then when the cost of living was much lower and had reason to believe they would be fairly secure in their old age but now, because of the great increase in the cost of living over the years, they find themselves left with very little purchasing power with which to buy the necessities of life. I wonder whether consideration could be given to increasing the amount, especially since the number of men concerned must be quite small.

Mr. Chevrier: As my hon. friend knows, this item has been appearing in the estimates over a long period of time, and there has been an increase from $20 to $30. I have forgotten when the $20 was granted but I believe it was in 1921 that the amount was increased to $30. It is true that is a long time ago, and it may well be that the cost of living, with reference to the value of the dollar then and today, has undergone quite a change. Representations have been made to me by this group of former railway employees on at least three if not more occasions. I have met their delegations and I have met them individually, and they certainly are an excellent group of people. They are not exigent in their demands, but I have had to point out to them, as I have to others, that since their representations were originally made the universal old age pension has come into force which means a total payment of $70 in the case of those who are over the statutory age.

In some instances that is quite a help. I know they have admitted it is a substantial help, but they have stated that there are certain medical cases, people who are ill, where there is great hardship. I have agreed to have the railways study that particular additional representation, and thus far the railways have not made any recommendation to me. However, the position of these men is far better now than it was when the original representations were made.

Mr. MacLean: I realize that is the case with respect to those who are over 70, and I appreciate the minister's reply, but I do hope he will still entertain in a most sympathetic way any further representations that may be made.

Item agreed to.

Air services—
Airways and airports—radio aviation services—
480. Administration, operation and maintenance, $5,749,559.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to make a few general references having to do particularly with administration, operation and maintenance. They concern the need for the development, construction and maintenance of airports in the northern part of our country. I want to thank the department for what is being done in northern Saskatchewan, particularly with respect to the construction of an airport at Prince Albert in my own constituency. In saying that I feel that further development should take place in northern Saskatchewan and in general in the other northern areas of our country where mineral developments are taking place that are great in their extent and tremendous in their possibilities.

One of the main means of securing northern development and the utilization of our natural resources in that region where there is no railway, lake or railway transportation is through the medium of airways. I think it is proper to say that to develop the resources of the north requires air transport at reasonable prices. The air policy of our country was enunciated in 1937, and the conclusion to which the Edmonton Journal has come, after examining air transport in general in a series of articles, may be summed up in these words which I quote:

> Our standing relative to the rest of the free world has suffered a net loss between 1937 and 1953 and we are far behind the world's leaders.

That is the conclusion of the Edmonton Journal following a series of several articles dealing with this very important matter. I suggest to the minister that in order to assist northern development a policy greater than anything we have had in the past should be launched, with particular reference to the provision of facilities for the landing of aircraft, the shipment of supplies and the provision of passenger transport into the north. I believe that the present costs of travel and of transport deserve to be reconsidered in the light of present circumstances, and that the federal government can make a major contribution towards making air transport economical by expanding to the widest possible degree the building of airports in the north and by providing all the ancillary services which would necessarily be required in addition to that development.

I am not going to talk of other provinces in particular, but of the province of Saskatchewan. I feel that having regard to the developments that are taking place in northern Saskatchewan immediate consideration should be given to the improvement of airport facilities at Lac la Ronge, north of Churchill, and also at Uranium City so that a greater degree of air service will be provided there than has been the case heretofore.

I believe that northern development is being held back by the lack of the necessary air facilities as well as air services at reasonable rates. I am not going into the costs of travel on this occasion for that would take longer than the committee would desire to hear me at this time. But I do point out that something should be done to assure that our airport facilities are made as efficient as the needs of modern development require; that they should be expanded and their expansion would give the opportunity for extended mineral development in those portions of our country where rail and water transportation is not available. Such a policy would not only pay large dividends in increased development but it would also provide the basis or the nucleus for the preservation of our defences in northern Canada.

In so far as transportation rates are concerned I think that the air transport board should make a thorough review of the northern rate structure. The first thing the government should do, as I see it, is to provide the airport facilities in the north to a greater extent than heretofore. Something has been done, that is true. Much more remains to be done. Secondly, I feel that there should be, as I said a moment ago, a review of the freight rates structure. The Trans-Canada Air Lines and Canadian Pacific Air Lines make a great contribution to our country. The Canadian Pacific Air Lines are doing a tremendous job in facilitating the opening of the northern outposts of our country, and in particular those areas in which mineral developments are taking place and which will expand to a far greater extent in the years that lie ahead.

I believe that today passenger rates and air freight rates are too high. If it is a matter of facilities and airports that is contributing to that, then the federal government I suggest has a responsibility to render to the highest degree possible the efficiency of the airports.

Let me give you two or three examples, Mr. Chairman, so far as passenger rates are concerned. The rate from Edmonton to Yellowknife is $80, and for almost the same distance from Edmonton to Brandon it is $50. The rate from Edmonton to Beaverlodge is $64 compared with $30.50 to Regina, an equivalent distance. I am making all allowances for the differences in facilities on the airways that prevail in the southern portion of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. These rates would appear to be not encouraging to the development of the north. Furthermore, in regard to passenger rates it costs more to travel in Canada when one travels by T.C.A. than when one travels internationally. The rate from Calgary to Vancouver is 8·5 cents per mile, and from Montreal to New York it is 5·8 cents per mile. It costs $19 more to travel from Vancouver to Montreal than it does from Vancouver to New York. Those are but examples of a rate structure which I think deserves consideration, and that rate structure, in northern development, is a major element to be considered.

If the rates that are high into the north today are due in part to the lack of necessary facilities that the Department of Transport could provide, then I would think it would be an expenditure paying dividends beyond our present expectations in the encouragement it will give to the exploiting of those resources that are there. At the same time the provision of facilities would be useful for defence should defence be required at any time. I would ask the minister what consideration is being given to the expansion of airports in the northern portions of Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec, to provide the opportunities that only the state can provide so that private enterprise may be able to economically enter those areas to expand the development. Great as that development is today, I believe it could be greatly increased and facilitated by a worthwhile expenditure of that type.

I come back to where I started. I suggest that this is a very complex subject, and that it deserves the consideration of the transport board in so far as rates are concerned; that it concerns the Department of Transport, which has done a commendable amount of work in connection with the development of airports in recent years but which has not met, to the degree I feel it should have met, the tremendous possibilities inherent in the hidden resources of the northern part of our country. Everything that we can do should be done, and the state has a contribution to make with regard to providing opportunities for air transport.

Mr. Dinsdale: I should like to make a brief reference to a problem that is quite specific. It concerns the qualifications of pilots, both commercial and private, as radio operators. Radio facilities are of the utmost importance to pilots, whether they be carrying the responsibilities of commercial air line flying or whether they be flying merely for their own personal pleasure or personal business.

I understand that in order to be able to use any radio facilities it is necessary for pilots to be completely certified radio operators. With regard to the qualifications as between the holders of commercial pilot licences and private pilot licences, the requirements are scaled down considerably for the latter. That is, the private pilot does not have to have the broad background of technical knowledge, professional knowledge, meteorology, and the like, that is required by the more responsible position of pilot of a commercial air liner.

It seems to me the same formula might operate for radio operators. If a private pilot is going to use radio equipment to aid him in navigation, or to facilitate communication between air and ground, he usually has a simple set, or one that would be no more complex than the radio found in a home. Or if he uses radiotelephony, it would be as simple in its operation as an ordinary house telephone. It has been pointed out to me that it would facilitate considerably the use of the simpler radio aids available to a private pilot if the qualifications could be scaled down somewhat as they are for other qualifications in flying operations.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, between 1942 and 1952 the air traffic at Vancouver airport increased about 14 times. That is a tremendous increase, and is indicative of what is bound to come. I raise the question at this time because in the lower mainland of British Columbia we have so little space available for airport purposes that I think the Department of Transport should begin thinking seriously of taking every available opportunity to be sure that land is being kept for that purpose.

Approximately 10 per cent of traffic at the airport today is of the military type. We have two small civilian airports, one at Langley Prairie and the other at Haney. Let me say that the people at Langley Prairie would like me to bestow their best wishes and thanks upon the minister for including a small grant to that municipality to maintain the airport.

If in this country we follow the European plan of developing aircraft—and I think we are doing it to a degree—there is a possibility of using helicopters on a large scale. I spoke to the president of Trans-Canada Air Lines when he appeared before the committee. Discussing the matter privately with him he said that he thought that if we ever get helicopters that will accommodate 20 or 30 passengers we would soon find them being used between Vancouver, Nanaimo, Victoria and Seattle in the United States.

For that reason and many others, we can easily see that air traffic is definitely going to increase as the years go by. As I said earlier, in the vicinity of Vancouver we have very few sites available for airport purposes. There are certain physical factors needed in airport building with which the minister is quite familiar and which I need not outline here. These conditions leave us in a position where we just do not have many sites left.

One of the most important factors is land. While we have considerable land in the lower portion of the delta, it is not suitable because there is no bottom to it. It is not satisfactory for the purpose of building airports.

One of the most important points is that it is about a 35-minute jump from the city to the airport. That is true of the Sea Island airport, which is being used at the present time.

There is another factor which must be considered, and that is the separation of civilian aircraft from military aircraft, and from the operations of large passenger-carrier types. In this connection I would refer to an article that appeared on the editorial page of the Vancouver Province on May 28. It is headed "Before There's Another Moose Jaw Tragedy," and states:

> R.C.A.F. pilot training should be moved away from Vancouver's international airport—the busiest airport in Canada—before there is a duplication of the recent Moose Jaw tragedy.
>
> Airline and airport officials are unanimous that our flying field will become hazardous unless other places are found for training student pilots.
>
> We hope that R.C.A.F. authorities will take steps to remedy the situation before a ghastly accident vindicates the warnings made this week. R.C.A.F. training should be moved to another airport—moved just as fast as practically possible.
>
> There are fields at Abbotsford, Boundary Bay and Comox that would serve R.C.A.F. training needs just as well as Vancouver, whose airport is twice as busy as any other in Canada.
>
> This is not to discount the value of R.C.A.F. training or deprecate the ability of R.C.A.F. student pilots. The point is that it is not necessary to pick the country's most congested airport to train flyers when there are other fields, just as suitable, within a few minutes flying time.
>
> R.C.A.F. students are flying everything from Harvard trainers to jet fighters and the danger lies in the fact that the student, new to the machine, is so busy keeping it in the air that he can't always give enough attention to keeping an eye out for the big passenger transports.
>
> Before the Moose Jaw crash, Canadian Airline Pilots' Association had written to the R.C.A.F. protesting the placing of R.C.A.F. stations along civilian airways. This complaint is underlined when an R.C.A.F. training station is right at the busiest flying field in the country.
>
> One air expert sums up the situation this way: "The pilot of a heavy airliner, carrying anywhere up to 70 passengers, has a right to feel that he and his passengers can approach a field and concentrate on landing without having to cope with unnecessary hazards."
>
> Less urgent, but also important, is the need to find other places than the airport for private student pilots. In time it will be necessary to consider finding a secondary airport for students, according to the experts.
>
> But the urgent, immediate problem is to move the R.C.A.F. pilot training to a safer flying zone. There is no other place for the big airliners to go. But there are other fields for the R.C.A.F.

Those fields are established, and I would urge the minister to interview the officials in the R.C.A.F. and the defence department to see if the training schools could not be put in another area. I would urge, further, that he look over the situation carefully, because it is an important one. There were six or seven fields available a few years ago, but today there are only two on the lower mainland that would be acceptable as secondary airports.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Hahn: Before the dinner hour I had read an editorial from the Vancouver Province regarding the need for another place for the R.C.A.F. airbase and for civilian aircraft other than the Sea Island airport. In 1946, Harland Bartholomew and Associates examined the airport requirements in the metropolitan area of Vancouver. They made certain proposals, and I may say in this regard that their estimates of airport use has proven to be a very accurate one. They proposed that eventually there should be three major airports, one of which should be a military one, one secondary and three minor airports. We have today only the one major airport in the lower region of British Columbia, and that happens to be the one on Sea island. We have two minor ones and a military airport at Abbotsford.

In regard to the Sea Island airport, in the report on airports for the lower mainland we read this at page 18:

> At present the Sea Island airport is used by four distinct types of air traffic, namely, high speed military aircraft, scheduled aircraft, charter and training aircraft. As the field becomes more and more intensively used the hazards inherent in mixing these various types of traffic become more acute. The situation might be compared to an express highway which was expected to handle high speed automobiles, bicycles, pedestrians and tanks at the same time.

I am sure the minister is quite aware of the difficulty, and probably may have certain suggestions relative to it. However I should like to draw this to his attention, since I understand the department has purchased land for further airport development in the Sea Island area. The fact is that it becomes more apparent, particularly since the crash at Moose Jaw, that airports should be farther apart. I would say that the minimum should be five miles, and certainly that five miles separation is not apparent at the Sea Island airport.

Earlier in my statement I mentioned that there were several airports available in the area. These places that are suitable have greatly dwindled until just three are left, one in the region known as Coquitlam, which is in the Burnaby-Coquitlam riding, the second in Delta and the third in the White Rock region. The Delta area is of no use because it has an unsound bottom for aircraft purposes; but in regard to the other two, this same report has this to say:

> A site in Port Coquitlam which was recommended by the Bartholomew report in 1946, is still available. However, it is not considered completely suitable because of fog and drainage and foundation problems.
>
> Another potential airport site is located near White Rock, also about one hour's drive from downtown Vancouver. Physically, this is an excellent site. The ground is almost level; tree cover is not heavy; and the area is high, fog free and located in perhaps the clearest and sunniest area in the lower mainland. Runways of 6,000 feet will be possible, allowing it to become a secondary airport.

Now, sir, we have no secondary airport, and the report earlier indicated we should have one. This could be the secondary airport. The report continues:

> The only disadvantage, its distance from the Burrard peninsula, would be lessened considerably if a second major crossing of the Fraser and an express highway to the border were built west of the Pattullo bridge. This highway link would reduce materially the time required to reach the airport site.

That area, according to all reports, is the one area that must be kept in mind. I have had some discussion with the minister in regard to this problem, and as late as March 29 of this year he wrote me a letter in which he had this to say:

> According to the information I have received, the lower mainland regional planning board of British Columbia made a study of a site at White Rock some time last year and it considers the White Rock area ideal since the ground is high and level and fog free, as you report in your letter. The great disadvantage appears to be the distance it is located from the city. However, as stated in my letter of March 10, we have no requirement for property in the White Rock area for airport purposes.
>
> You mention the Vancouver international airport being located in an area that is frequently subjected to heavy fogs, but I am sure we must agree that, apart from this, it is quite a good location for the larger airlines and, with the improved aids to air navigation, we feel that we are making no mistake in establishing it as Vancouver's major airport.

In regard to fog, I well remember the situation in which I happened to be involved last year, when the Betty Hutton troupe happened to be in Victoria and I, along with the group, was trying to get a flight out of Victoria to Vancouver. The airport was fogbound and we could not get a plane in or out of the airport. Vancouver was fogbound as well, so the troupe never did get out in time to play that night. I am sure the minister knows of many such instances. Despite all the modern conveniences we have in the Vancouver airport, Sea Island airport is quite frequently fogbound, and of necessity we should have an airport that is less subject to fog. For that purpose we have Abbotsford airport which is used considerably in those instances, but for secondary purposes we have no such fog-free airport.

For that reason perhaps he should, and I trust he will, consider taking a second look at this White Rock region. The reason I mention this is that the whole region is building up rapidly. Representations have been made to me, and I am sure the minister must have had them before my time, asking that some definite statement be made as to whether or not his department has ever considered using that particular region for airport purposes. The increased population makes it necessary to prepare to zone a site such as that for airport purposes. It is necessary that a municipality should know these things so that they can stop the sale of land in a region such as that for residential purposes or other purposes; to prepare restrictions regarding the height of buildings; to prepare the gazetting of the various roads to go about such an area and not permit the roads to go through them which would be of no use later on. They should help in this way to facilitate local municipal projects so they will not hinder or impede what is being done in the municipality.

An indication by this department would help. It would help the municipality to establish sites for hospitals and schools and even secondary and arterial highways. The value of property is naturally affected for two or more miles around such an airport, and it would have a material effect I am sure on anyone who is buying property in the area. They should be made aware of the situation.

We are interested in preventing another crash such as we had at Moose Jaw. We are also interested, particularly in my own riding, in trying to establish once and for all whether the department will at any time consider the use of that site for airport purposes because the municipality has been urged to give it up by various aeronautical experts in that region, possibly some of them from the Department of Transport itself. However, as I said, we do not want any accidents similar to that which took place at Moose Jaw, and we do not want an airport located so close to the city as is the case at Elizabeth, New Jersey, where an airliner crashed in the city, or in Seattle where there was a similar air crash some years ago.

I would urge the minister to take another look at the report issued in 1946 which gave examples of many probable sites in that area. It is true that today there is only one site left, but I hope the minister will indicate to the house his views on the suggestion made by the municipality and by me that the Department of Transport ask the region be zoned for airport purposes so that it might be used at some time in the distant future.

Earlier in the discussion I drew the minister's attention to Mr. McGregor's views on the use of helicopters in carrying passengers to and from White Rock and Vancouver. If helicopters can be obtained which have a large enough passenger carrying capacity there is no doubt aircraft of that type could be utilized in large centres across Canada. I would urge that consideration be given to this suggestion because I understand that in Europe today they already have helicopter services in operation between certain points in Belgium, Holland, and Germany, and I believe some of them are capable of carrying up to 20 passengers.

If helicopters are going to be used in the very near future for trial purposes I would suggest that we might well set up a triangle run between Vancouver, Victoria and Seattle. It might surprise many hon. members to know that it takes less time to fly from Sea island to the airport on Vancouver island than it does to drive from downtown Vancouver to Sea island, even though the Marpole bridge is closed.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, mention has been made by the hon. member who has just taken his seat of the disastrous air crash which occurred at Moose Jaw, and I thought that at this stage the minister could perhaps give us a little more information than has been given to the house up to the present time. It is over two months since that tragedy occurred. In the interval certain questions have been asked here in the House of Commons concerning it. The Minister of Trade and Commerce gave a brief report to the house on May 5, and when we were dealing with the estimates of this department just last week on June 2 my colleague, the hon. member for Queens, asked the minister if he had anything to add to that earlier report of May 5. He indicated that he had nothing to add at that particular time. I would think that perhaps now, in view of the general interest the house has shown in this matter, the minister will give us some further information.

I approach this subject not in any spirit of captious criticism but merely with the desire to obtain information such as any person who travels by air would like to have. It may be that that accident at Moose Jaw was one of those million-to-one chances which might not occur again. On the other hand, there may be circumstances in connection with it which would give rise to a change in the regulations to make it less dangerous in the future. It may be that a greater measure of co-operation is desirable between the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence, both of which are concerned with aircraft traversing our airways. It is for this reason that I rise at this moment to suggest to the minister that he give us some further information.

With the increase in air traffic the public is as much interested in safety regulations for that method of travel as they are with regard to travel by rail or on the highways, and from time to time here we have discussed the necessity for better methods of preventing accidents at level crossings, and better methods of controlling highway traffic. Similarly, with regard to the air, it would be helpful if full information was supplied, so that the public, which is becoming airminded, may feel assured that all precautions are being taken to transport them from one airport to another in as safe a manner as possible.

I do not think there is any need for criticism of one service or another. I do not propose to indulge in that. We have great admiration for the effective operation of T.C.A., and equal admiration for the training program of the R.C.A.F. I am sure everyone appreciates the need for carrying on the programs of the two services at the highest efficiency. Nevertheless, when a tragedy occurs, such as that at Moose Jaw, it is only right that the subject of air safety be investigated, and that the public be taken into the confidence of the government with regard to the measures that may be undertaken to provide for greater safety in the future. If the simple explanation is that this is one of those unaccountable air accidents, then naturally we will have to be satisfied with that. There appear to be rather exhaustive regulations governing aircraft flying in this country. However, I have here the air regulations which go along with the Aeronautics Act and the copy I have is dated May 24, 1951. Perhaps it is not as up to date as it might be. Nevertheless, I notice, according to these air regulations, part VIII, section 4, that they do not apply to military aircraft. The section reads:

> These regulations do not apply,
> (a) to military aircraft of His Majesty when manoeuvring under the authority of the Minister of National Defence;

That raises the question as to whether there is some system of co-operation between the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence to ensure that their regulations are in accord one with the other, and that civilian pilots are familiar with the action that may be taken by military pilots and vice versa.

In the report which the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave to us on May 5 I notice that he mentioned that the T.C.A. aircraft was proceeding west on civil green airways No. 1. The minister might let us know what is meant by "civil green airways No. 1". Does that mark out some specified route which is normally available for T.C.A. aircraft and is that airways route, so called green, known to all other operators of aircraft? The minister might also let us know, based on the regulations, something about flight plans at an airport where both civilian and military aircraft are in operation. Are the flight plans of both types filed with the airport control or air traffic control?

Then what is meant in the regulations by, say, a control area which is called an air space of definite dimensions within which air traffic control is exercised? Then there is a control zone which is an air space of definite dimensions within which rules additional to those governing flights in control areas apply for the protection of air traffic. It would be interesting to know the extent of these areas and whether or not aircraft other than T.C.A. aircraft are permitted to fly in those control areas or control zones. If so, under what regulations do they make those flights? Those, Mr. Chairman, are some of the questions that arise in my mind with regard to this matter.

I grant that the minister is placed in a rather awkward position. On May 5, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce was asked as to who might give us a full report with regard to this matter, in view of the fact that three departments of the government were more or less concerned, he placed the burden on the shoulders of the Minister of Transport. I hope that fact will not prove embarrassing to him but I grant that it is a rather awkward situation when other ministers may be concerned. But whether or not the minister now has in his possession the final report he referred to on June 2, nevertheless after the lapse of over two months, one would surmise that the necessary investigation has taken place and that certain steps have been taken, if required, to improve on our regulations. On the other hand, perhaps the investigation so far has indicated that the regulations are sufficient and satisfactory. But in the general interests of the public and in connection with air safety, I would ask the minister to let the committee now have some information concerning this particular problem.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I think the suggestions of most hon. members who have spoken thus far are reasonable ones. The questions are becoming so numerous that I feel I should proceed to deal with them at once before they add up any higher in number. I should like to put on record the names of the consulting engineers on the St. Lawrence seaway, as asked for by the hon. member for Peterborough. They are as follows: Mr. R. A. C. Henry; Mr. M. V. Sauer; Mr. H. W. Lea; Professor J. E. Hurtubise; Lalonde and Valois; Surveyer, Nenniger and Chenevert, and Dr. Pratley.

Then I should like to deal with the question raised by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings when he inquired as to the breakdown of the $1 million in connection with the payment for the Yarmouth-Bar Harbor ferry. The breakdown is as follows: A payment on January 20, 1954 of $498,300; a payment on January 26 of the same year, $498,300; total payments for the fiscal year 1953-54, $996,600, which is roughly $1 million. There is a payment on April 24, 1954 in the amount of $498,300 which is in accordance with the terms of the contract. I should like to amend the information I gave to him then. This contract went to the Davie Shipbuilding company. The contract was signed on November 7, 1952. The keel was laid on July 30, 1953. Launching will take place on November 8, 1954. The delivery date is expected to be May of 1955.

My friend the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra asked for a breakdown of certain information in connection with costs relative to coastguard service. I indicated to him that this was the subject of an investigation made in 1950 and I gave him the figures which I had in my file. I told him that I would inquire about getting a breakdown. As my hon. friend knows, the chairman of that committee is no longer the chairman of the Canadian maritime commission. Another chairman has succeeded him. During the recess he made an attempt to find those costs but was unable to obtain a breakdown. He does not know whether or not they exist. However, if they exist, I will see that my hon. friend is given them by letter.

The hon. member for Prince Albert made what I thought were some valuable contributions to the debate with reference to airport developments generally, and more particularly having to do with the Northwest Territories and the northern part of Canada. I want first to thank him for his remarks in so far as the department is concerned. I can assure him that they are highly appreciated. I was struck by his statement when he said that we must provide airport facilities in the north to a greater extent. No one agrees with him more fully than I do. I wish we could provide, in the way of facilities in the north, far more than we are providing. In a moment I will put on the record just what we are doing.

The point is that when the estimates for airport development—which includes radio, meteorological and aviation services—come up for consideration, there is always a question as to how much can be allotted to one department as opposed to another. That general amount is determined by the treasury board under the supervision or the directorship of the Minister of Finance. While we, as a rule, ask for far more than we receive, it is important to note that it is not because we are not anxious to provide additional facilities that we do not get all the money necessary for their provision. I would remind my hon. friend that here is a program which is by no means a small one. It has to do with the development, as provided for in these estimates, of airports in the north country.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

At Terrace, British Columbia, we are providing a radio range at a cost of half a million dollars. At Yellowknife, as I announced on the introduction of my estimates, we are providing a new runway at a cost of three-quarters of a million dollars. At Fort McMurray we are providing a new runway at a cost of half a million dollars. At Beaverlodge, which was referred to by my hon. friend as Uranium City, there are a beacon and lighting service facilities at a cost of a quarter of a million dollars. My hon. friend knows that the airport runway at Prince Albert will cost about half a million dollars.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When is that expected to be finished?

Mr. Chevrier: This fall. The facilities at Fort Smith include power facilities and new buildings. At Grande Prairie we are installing and building a new runway at a cost of three-quarters of a million dollars; at Prince George a new taxi strip and at Sandspit buildings and power services. If you total these it comes to over $4 million, and that is a very large proportion of the amount in these aviation estimates for airport, meteorological and radio facilities. I am informed that does not include northern Ontario and northern Quebec. There is an indication there that we are not neglecting the north country.

I realize, following several visits I have made there with officials of the department, one to the Northwest Territories, how important it is for the development of natural resources and the development of the whole country to have air services because there are no other services available except the Mackenzie river and its tributaries. We have that matter very much in mind, and I can assure my hon. friend that the Northwest Territories will not be neglected in any sense of the word.

He referred to a revision of the rate structure by the air transport board. That is an important problem. Rates in the air are equally as important as freight or passenger rates on land. I presume my hon. friend had in mind both passenger rates and air cargo rates when he raised that point. The air transport board has now established a working committee with the two major air lines to study the principles underlying freight rates and to ascertain whether, in the light of the recommendations that may come from that committee, it will not be possible to revise the structure.

The hon. member for Brandon-Souris raised the question of the radio qualifications of pilots. There is a certificate of proficiency which must be obtained by both commercial air line pilots and private pilots before they can operate their craft. In the case of the commercial pilot the certificate is much more stringent, and in the light of what has been said this evening, particularly what has been said by the hon. members for New Westminster and Winnipeg South Centre, I do not think it would be advisable to revise the certificate of proficiency so as to make it easier for a pilot to obtain such a certificate. It seems to me that the regulations of the department, which have been enacted after careful consideration by top technical men, should be maintained.

The hon. member for New Westminster brought up a number of problems which I know he will not expect me to deal with in the short time at my disposal. We consider Vancouver airport as an international airport and as one of the most important airports in Canada.

Mr. Green: The most important.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend across the way says it is the most important airport. I will not enter into a discussion with him on that. I know other hon. members will have different views, but it is an international airport of great importance. For that reason we consider it as such and we are going to treat it as such. However, many of the problems with which my hon. friend has dealt cannot be discussed by me until such time as we are the proprietors of the airport. We are still discussing the terms of an agreement with the city of Vancouver. We have decided upon the price. The agreement has been revised and approved by our officers and has been sent to the city officials for their approval. I understand from the city that even the principle of the agreement must once again be submitted to the ratepayers by way of a plebiscite. Until there has been a determination by the ratepayers of that city, I do not think any comment by me would be helpful.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was kind enough to understand my position with respect to the Moose Jaw disaster. When the Minister of Trade and Commerce was asked by the hon. member for Macleod when there would be an opportunity to discuss the Moose Jaw disaster he said: Oh well, when the estimates of the Minister of Transport are up for consideration. I have no objection to discussing that unfortunate tragedy in so far as it concerns the Department of Transport. It is only in that respect that I could discuss it because there were, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated, reports from the Royal Canadian Air Force branch of the Department of National Defence and also from Trans-Canada Air Lines.

We received a report, which was an interim report, and that was the report to which my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, referred. I have to say this, that since the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce nothing further has come to light but there is some information I can give to the house which I hope will be of some help.

I know that the house feels very keenly about this accident. Many Canadians travel by the two main transcontinental lines, T.C.A. and C.P.A., and by other lines throughout Canada. It is important that we know that every precaution is being taken to provide for the safety of passengers. I think it can safely be said that this was an unfortunate accident in every sense of the word. The air service people of the department doubt very much if the pilots of either craft saw each other. There is one thing that is certain, namely, that the angle at which the two craft were converging might well indicate that the pilot of the T.C.A. plane did not or could not see the pilot of the Harvard trainer, and vice versa the position of the Harvard trainer at the time of the collision was such that he could not or might not have seen the T.C.A. aircraft. In any event, there is nothing from the wreckage which would indicate that either pilot saw the other.

It is a fact that both pilots were very experienced men. The pilot of the T.C.A. plane had travelled over a million miles without accident. He was one of their older and more experienced pilots. I understand that the young man who was piloting the Harvard trainer was a military pilot of great experience. There is, however, a rule which obtains in the air as it does on the road, namely, that the craft on the right of the other has the right of way. However, that is subject to the exception that if the pilot having the right of way sees that there is an aircraft converging towards him it is nonetheless his duty to move off as quickly as he can. But again I repeat what I said earlier, that I believe from the report that has come to my attention that neither pilot saw the other.

Now then, in order to be helpful to the house, I should like to say that the report which was referred to by the Minister of Trade and Commerce was an interim report. He stated that the final report was yet to come, and he also stated that a special committee was giving consideration to the reports from defence, T.C.A. and ourselves. To that statement, I can add that the work of the special committee, while it has not yet been completed and I have not before me a final report, indicates nonetheless that the following points of action are being developed:

1. The Royal Canadian Air Force accepts, in principle, and is examining the feasibility of having defined training areas off the airways for use by training establishments located on or immediately adjacent to airways. In addition, it accepts in principle and is exploring the feasibility of requiring training planes to fly below 2,000 feet within airways when travelling from or to the base on the airway.

2. Hitherto visual flight rule conditions have placed primary responsibility for altitude, course, and the like on the pilot. The civil authorities have recommended and the R.C.A.F. are considering the desirability of parallel civil and military flight regulations which would provide for separation by having flights made at defined altitudes for aircraft crossing airways under visual flight rules conditions.

3. The committee has expressed its support for the existing Department of Transport program of adding approach control procedures at airport control towers now applying landing and take off controls. This primarily is a matter of obtaining and training additional staff.

4. Further improvement in reporting and liaison procedures between civil and military channels are to be developed in connection with the reporting of incidents.

5. On a longer term basis further study is to be given to procedures to be applied in matters of jet aircraft. This is not a new approach, but merely affirms something which had already been recognized and undertaken.

Much of this is technical and again is interim and is under study. I give it to the house, as it was given to me by the member on the committee from the Department of Transport. I do not think it will be possible to deal fully and finally with this matter until such time as the final report is complete. I thought I should put this on the record so the house will know that careful consideration is being given to the matter.

Mr. Hansell: Since the matter of the Moose Jaw air crash has been brought to the attention of the house I have been waiting over the weeks to have something to say about it. What I have to say perhaps is along slightly different lines from what has been discussed before. I am wondering whether the Department of Transport has public relations officers stationed here and there who could more or less represent the department in giving out appropriate information to the press. The Moose Jaw air crash was something that really shocked this nation. It shocked the members of this house, not only because it was an accident that happened between an army plane and T.C.A., both under the jurisdiction of the government, but also because one of our colleagues, together with his wife, went down in that crash.

I happened to be away for a day or two at that particular time and I read the news in a number of papers. It is for that reason I am asking if the government has any public relations officers. In the reporting of that air crash, I think some of the newspapers went beyond the boundaries of propriety. Such a crash as took place at Moose Jaw, shocking as it was, was a very sensitive thing to publish throughout Canada. I must say that I deplore some of the reporting of that crash. I hold in my hand a clipping and I am not going to say from which newspaper it came, even though I could. I could even give the name of the correspondent, because his name is on the byline. He is reporting what some man said about it, and this is the way the article starts:

> Moose Jaw, April 9: It rained human bodies all over. The spinning plane shook them out like a lawn sprinkler. My heart sank and I saw the trapped people were helpless. It was like a horrible nightmare. Men and women fell to earth and rolled up like balls of rags.

Then it quotes who it was who made that statement, an eyewitness. Now that may be so, and it may be the very thing that the eyewitness said. Just imagine the effect on relatives and friends of those who were the victims reading an article like that? How much would it have added to their grief and burden? Here is another report with some pictures and under great big headlines clean across the top of the page:

> Bodies drop to earth "rolled up like balls of rags".

Now, here is another clipping that I have where the headline reads:

> Identification grim task as sequel to air crash.

Here are a few lines from it; it is in a two column space:

> Men shone flashlights into the black charred heap looking for signs of arms and legs. "We have given up looking for whole bodies," one policeman said.

Farther down in the article we find this:

> "I ran to the front door. On our lawn there were three dead men and one had no head at all. More bodies were flying through the air.

Mr. Michener: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the details we are having now are not related to the item with which we are dealing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: I think perhaps the hon. member might indicate how he relates these remarks to item 480 which is before us.

Mr. Hansell: I do not know, Mr. Chairman, what particular reason my hon. friend had for raising that point. I know we do not like to read these things. I am doing this for a purpose.

An hon. Member: What is the purpose?

Mr. Hansell: My purpose in doing it is this: I do not want any control of the press. I do not want any censorship of the press. As a matter of fact I would say that on the whole, throughout the country, the accident was reported in fairly well modified and decent terms. But the articles I have just read came from a very prominent daily paper in Canada. I say that I had rather expected that perhaps some highly placed official would have spoken out publicly and deplored that kind of report. That sort of reporting to my mind is very serious, when the nation is shocked, and when the people at home have to bear the burden, and are sensitive to such things. The press have a responsibility, and that responsibility should be met in a dignified manner, and with all reasonableness, having due regard to the sensitivities of a given situation.

As I have said, I thought that perhaps some higher official would do something on that particular point, because they must have seen this, too. As I say, I do not want censorship; but perhaps the purpose will have been served in what I have done. I am not going to ask the minister even to comment upon it. Perhaps, as I say, the purpose will have been served by having brought the matter up in what we sometimes call the highest court in the land. I do appeal to those who are in responsible positions in giving out the news to give out that news, of course, but in such cases as this to give it with the greatest possible care.

Mr. Fulton: I can well understand the hon. gentleman would not, in this particular case, desire to have censorship of the press, because it would have deprived him of the opportunity of relating to the House of Commons the grisly details in the manner in which he has just done it, and in a manner which makes it difficult for those of us who wish to discuss in the light of realistic sanity the possibility of preventing such accidents as this in the future. I think the hon. gentleman, who objects to giving publicity of the kind he has indicated to this kind of accident, has shown more than deplorable taste in rehashing it and giving it additional publicity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: I can see no useful purpose to be served in adopting the approach the hon. gentleman has chosen to follow. I had wanted to follow up the matter with the Minister of Transport, with respect to the possibility of devising some regulations which might minimize the chances of this sort of thing occurring again. It probably was the sort of thing that never would occur again, certainly not in those circumstances. But I think we have to look at the situation and try to find out if there are sensible rules which can be devised to minimize the chances.

When to some extent one is dealing in the field of rumour and speculation I appreciate the difficulty the minister is in when he is asked to make a positive statement, particularly in lieu of the fact that he has only interim reports. However, we have heard that at the moment the regulations do not prescribe that the flight plans of civilian aircraft on regular routine operations should be communicated by the Department of Transport at the civilian air stations to the stations of the R.C.A.F., and by them communicated, in turn, to the pilots of R.C.A.F. aircraft. If the information I have received is incorrect, then of course what I shall say in my following remarks would not be applicable. However that is one of the rather disturbing reports we have received.

I am concerned to find out the reason for the absence of the communication of that information, why it is that the flight plans of, for instance, the regular operations of T.C.A. aircraft on regular routes should not be communicated to the R.C.A.F. stations, and by those stations communicated to the pilots or, if you like, just placed on the notice board. Certainly they should be published so that they would be brought to the attention of R.C.A.F. pilots who might be taking off from military fields in the vicinity of the regular air-line routes. And if there is a change in the regular schedule, why should not that fact be communicated to the R.C.A.F. station which, in turn, immediately would draw the information to the attention of the pilots who may be taking off on operational or training flights.

It seems to me that the regular T.C.A. flight schedules might well be posted up on the bulletin board, and instructions issued that no aircraft may take off or return to the field within a reasonable time margin on either side of the anticipated passage of a civilian airliner. And, particularly, if there is a change in a flight plan of a T.C.A. aircraft, or a delay in its flight plan, it would seem to me essential that such information should be communicated immediately by the Department of Transport authorities from the airport at which that new flight plan is filed. It should be sent to the R.C.A.F. station, and by that station communicated to the pilots of the aircraft which may be taking off at that time.

Mr. Chevrier: I would remind my hon. friend that this accident occurred under perfect weather conditions, under conditions which, therefore, would bring into operation what are known as visual flight rules. Under such rules and regulations it is not necessary to file a flight plan. It is only in connection with instrument flying that plans are necessary. These plans are filed both by civil aircraft and by military aircraft as well. They are required under the rules and regulations, and the information is exchanged between the centres concerned.

For instance, if a plane is moving from Winnipeg to Regina under instrument flight rules the plan will be filed in Winnipeg. And if there is an aircraft converging on the one moving toward the west, in other words an aircraft moving east, the aircraft moving from Winnipeg will be kept away from the one coming toward him. And, over and above that, he will be in contact with the traffic centre because he is flying on what the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre referred to as the green airway. They are designated by colours and numbers. In this case it is a transcontinental airway, one of the most important and having top priority. The aircraft would be in continual touch, first with the radio range on the airway and then when within a contact radius from the airport, would be in communication with the tower. I think that is the best answer I can give.

Mr. Fulton: Did I understand the minister to say that the filing of flight plans takes place only under conditions where instrument flying is necessary?

Mr. Chevrier: That is right.

Mr. Fulton: Surely, even under conditions of good visibility a civilian aircraft is required to file a flight plan, is it not?

Mr. Chevrier: He may file a flight plan, if he wishes. Under the regulations he is not required to if he is flying visual.

Mr. Fulton: It seems to me that it should be considered as an additional safety precaution. I had understood that it was already called for. My concern was to find out whether those flight plans were automatically communicated by the Department of Transport, when they are filed, to the R.C.A.F. station in the vicinity of the civil airways along which this aircraft might be flying.

Mr. Chevrier: They are, when filed under I.F.R.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Fulton: Therefore my question is: would there be any insuperable obstacles in the way of requiring them to be filed, whether there was good visibility or bad visibility, and having them communicated by wireless to the R.C.A.F. stations in the vicinity of the route?

Mr. Chevrier: No, there certainly would not be. But I presume that is one of the things to which this committee will give consideration. That is why, until the final report is in, I am not able to give any additional information.

Mr. Fulton: The other thing I ask about is whether it is now the practice for the regular T.C.A. schedules to be posted up. Perhaps the minister cannot answer this. That is why I put it in the form of a general observation. It seems to me it would be only prudent—I am told it is not the practice—for the regular T.C.A. schedules to be posted up in R.C.A.F. stations in the vicinity of the routes, and that their pilots should be instructed not to take off at least in such a way as to cross the routes at a time, or within a reasonable margin of the time, when a T.C.A. plane might be expected to be in that vicinity; and, particularly if there is a change in the schedule of the T.C.A. aircraft it should be immediately communicated to the R.C.A.F. station.

I want to make it clear that what I am saying to some extent is in the realm of speculation, because we have not complete information. I am not trying to be wise after the event and to suggest criticism which perhaps none of us would have thought of beforehand, but merely to give expression to observations and thoughts which have occurred to others besides myself, which have quite general currency at the present time, as suggestions which might help to minimize the possibility of such things occurring in the future.

Mr. Green: Is any move under way to have the R.C.A.F. training taken away from these larger airports in the country? The hon. member for New Westminster read an extract from a report about the Vancouver airport and the dangers there from R.C.A.F. training. By the way that danger is more from the reserve air force than from the permanent air force. Statements were made by two very prominent men in the air field. Grant McConachie, the president of Canadian Pacific Air Lines was reported as saying:

The situation is becoming a hazard.

Then, Don MacLaren, who is assistant to the president of Trans-Canada Air Lines—incidentally he was one of Canada's four leading fliers in the first war and has been in the flying field ever since the first war—had this to say:

> The first and urgent need is to try and find some other airport for R.C.A.F. pilot training, then tackle the possibility of a secondary airport for private pilot training.

Has the government in mind any plan which will bring about the transfer of training of R.C.A.F. pilots from these large civilian fields?

Mr. Chevrier: I neglected to answer that query which was raised by the hon. member for New Westminster, and I am glad the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra brought it up again. Yes, there is a very definite realization of the danger of military aircraft in the vicinity of civilian airports. There are a number of examples—fortunately there are not too many of them. I can think of Vancouver as one and Edmonton as another. In the case of Edmonton, representations have been made over the last few years to move as much of the military traffic away from that airport to Namao as possible, and the R.C.A.F. has assented to that recommendation of our officials. If they have not moved it, they will do so in the not too distant future.

The position at Vancouver is somewhat different. We have asked the R.C.A.F. to try to transfer a portion of the training from there to elsewhere, and we shall continue to do that. I presume our position will be much stronger when we have possession of the airport.

Mr. Green: There is one other question on this item. What is the position now with regard to flying over the pole? We have had reports in the last few months of a Swedish line which wanted to fly from Europe over the pole and land in Canada and so on. Then, about two months ago there were reports in the press that Canada had refused to make an agreement with the United Kingdom for certain landing rights here en route to Australia. The minister will also remember some questions were asked in the house in March about the agreement between Canada and Australia. There was some difficulty about Canadian Pacific Air Lines being allowed to fly, I think it was a weekly service, to Australia. They were then on a temporary permit, which was to expire today, I notice by a press dispatch. Will the minister tell the committee what has happened in that situation, as well as dealing with the other two I have mentioned?

Mr. Chevrier: With reference to the flight across the pole, no application has been made to the air transport board by the Scandinavian airlines to fly a route across the pole. They would have to make an application to the air transport board because I understand it was their intention to come down at Edmonton. The application has not been made, although I understand it will be forthcoming some time because they have to clear with the United States. I understand the application covers places such as San Francisco, and/or Seattle, Edmonton, Greenland or Thule and perhaps the United Kingdom and then on to Copenhagen. I presume before they make their application they want to have their licence or an intimation from the United States that they will get the licence. So far no formal application has been made to the air transport board.

With reference to Australia, it is true that Canadian Pacific Air Lines is flying to Australia on a temporary permit only, and the same can be said of the Australian airline, formerly British Commonwealth Pacific Airways now owned and operated by Quantas Airways, into Vancouver. Both are on the same footing and that is where the matter rests. My hon. friend asked another question?

Mr. Green: Yes, about the failure to reach an agreement with Britain.

Mr. Chevrier: The question of the British agreement was dependent, of course, on whether the position of the C.P.A. would be affected. The British were seeking a continuation of their route from London to Canada on to Vancouver and the Orient via Montreal and Vancouver, with a stopover at both these places. In other words, fifth freedom rights. The government gave consideration to that application, but it had also to give consideration to the views of C.P.A. and T.C.A. because both airlines would be affected; T.C.A. because of fifth freedom rights at Montreal, and C.P.A. because of fifth freedom rights at Vancouver, and it has not been possible to arrive at any decision by way of favourable consideration of that route thus far. What could be considered would be the route from Tokyo to Vancouver with no rights beyond Vancouver for B.O.A.C., but I understand they are not interested in that. In any event I would not like to go further than what I have said now because the talks are not yet completed. When the British minister of transport left here it was on the understanding that I would communicate with him once again as to the views of the government, once we had given consideration to C.P.A.'s point of view. When we were able to do that the government replied to the British minister of transport and since then we have received no statement from him.

Mr. Green: Why was it not possible to reach an agreement with Australia? What is the difficulty there?

Mr. Chevrier: That is a rather difficult question to answer. I suppose when a country cannot get air rights in another country it is because that country is reluctant to give them. For instance, if we were asked for certain rights in Canada by a foreign air line and we opposed them straight away because it would have seriously affected both T.C.A. and C.P.A., that country might well say it is unable to reach an agreement with us, but that is because it has nothing to give us, or at least nothing in which we are interested. But that country desires traffic rights here which might affect our air lines. I can only answer the question with reference to Australia in that manner. It may be that Australia feels that its lines will be affected by competition from C.P.A.

Mr. Green: But there is a temporary permit given in each case. Why cannot some permanent arrangement be worked out? Why do they have to carry on on a temporary basis?

Mr. Chevrier: It is certainly not because we did not try. Our officials spent several weeks in Australia discussing this with the Australians and were unable to convince them that they should grant a weekly service to C.P.A. However, we are still in discussion with them on that.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, I listened with considerable interest to the statement the minister made regarding the report of the accident at Moose Jaw, and the changes tentatively contemplated in regard to flying regulations. I asked the minister for a statement on that matter when his estimates were last considered on June 2, and I am very pleased with what he has had to say tonight.

Among the things he suggested should be considered was the possibility of making regulations which would require pilots flying across airways to fly at a certain definite height even when flying under conditions of clear visibility. I think such regulations apply now to instrument flying conditions, and I think it would be a reasonable regulation to put into force. The same result could be gained, of course, by requiring aircraft crossing airways to do so only under 2,000 feet, as the minister has himself suggested.

One factor which I hope will be kept in mind is that for regulations to be satisfactory they must be as simple as possible so that on the one hand they will reduce to a minimum the possibility of such accidents recurring, but that on the other hand they will be sufficiently simple that they will be strictly followed and will cause a minimum of inconvenience to both civil aircraft and the training operations of the air force. With that in mind I think a method can be worked out whereby the possibilities of such accidents recurring can be reduced to a minimum so that they will be unlikely to occur in future.

It has been suggested that the training establishments of the R.C.A.F. should be moved from civil airways. I think that where this is possible it would prove to be an excellent idea, but I think also that if suitable regulations are made and carefully followed it is possible for both operations to be carried on at the same place.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, with reference to the matter which I raised just before the adjournment, namely, the need of providing necessary runways and airports in northern Canada, both as a contribution to the opening up of the country to development, and also for defence in future, the minister has pointed out the difficulty he has encountered due to the fact that the estimates which are presented by the various departments are necessarily pared down. I can understand that under normal circumstances, but I believe too small a percentage of the total amount being expended in this country for all purposes is being expended on behalf of the development of our resources both by direct and indirect means.

I have no statistics before me at the moment, but last year I ascertained that for every one hundred dollars expended in Canada for all purposes by the government not more than 60 cents is devoted to expenditure whose contribution would be designed directly or indirectly toward aiding the development of our resources.

The minister mentioned that some $4 million was being expended this year in connection with airport development and runways in various parts of northern Canada, and he mentioned particularly what is taking place in British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan. He also stated that further amounts were being expended in northern Ontario and Quebec, the figures for which he did not give the committee.

I would ask him whether in the general plan, which must be a plan to be extended over a number of years of development, there is in existence today a plan in his own department, or in co-ordination with other departments, whereby certain areas in northern Canada have been designated as those in which future development in connection with airways and the like may be expected.

He mentioned the fact that in northern Saskatchewan runways are being proceeded with at Uranium City or Beaverlodge. I ask him as well whether he would tell the committee what are the future plans. After all this cannot be a plan to be completed in one year. It must be one that extends over the years and permits of that development in northern Canada which I believe is being denied today because of the failure to expand airports and in particular runways sufficiently for the needs and requirements of the moment in those areas where railway and water transportation do not exist. I feel that this is a matter of tremendous importance.

In the old days—and we can all look back to what were the old days of the thirties—the bush pilot used to go into the northern parts of the country without instruments—flying by the seat of his pants, as it was said at the time—and open up that country. Today, however, airports are necessary. In the western provinces—and I speak particularly of them—we have potential mineral developments as a result of which we may well expect, as I said this afternoon, within the next five or six years to have available to us uranium in quantity greater than that to be found anywhere else in the world. In addition, the other basic metals are being found in ever-expanding measure. The geiger counter is everywhere. However, one of the difficulties that is being experienced is with transport into that country, not only of individuals but also of the necessary machinery and equipment. That is why I pressed upon the minister this afternoon the necessity for a general plan being evolved to permit of a development which otherwise will be indefinitely postponed.

My friend the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is in the chamber at the moment. I am sure that this is a matter that would be of interest to him. I should like to hear from him for, as he is speaking to the Minister of Transport, apparently he has something in mind. What are his plans? What is going to be done to achieve that development which will otherwise be denied? However great may be our mineral resources, so long as they are in the soil, so long as they are concealed, so long as they are potentially there but undeveloped they will not go far to assist in arming the various nations within NATO or in the preservation of our freedom.

I want to thank the minister for the explanation he has given up to this moment but I should like him to go further and give a picture of what his department, in co-operation with other departments, intends to do over a period of years. What is its target? What is the general concept of the development that is necessary and what is to be done to assure that the north country, with all its vast resources, will be made accessible so that those who wish to risk their capital and those who wish to explore and to prospect will have an opportunity to do so under auspices provided by the state, giving to the individual the opportunity of developing the country while providing those instruments such as airports and the like, without which the development cannot be achieved?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, let me say first of all to my hon. friend that I do not think he is quite fair in his statement that the north country has not been treated adequately in comparison with the rest of the country, in view of the statement which I made earlier and which certainly indicates that the Northwest Territories have received a fair proportion of the expenditures in these estimates. Certainly they have received far more than I have ever been able to bring down since I have been in charge of the air service here.

My hon. friend asks for a plan. In reply I would tell him this. To indicate now or at any time what is in the mind of the department is a difficult thing to do. It is as difficult to do that for the northwest as it is for the rest of Canada. It is as difficult to do that for the northwest as it is for Gander or Vancouver or for the main transcontinental airports of Canada. The reason for that difficulty is that air facilities are moving and changing at such a pace that any plan made today might not be suitable tomorrow. Because of the development of the jet and the turbo-prop I think it is quite clear that if we had proceeded to make a plan for any part of Canada having to do with piston engines, we would have had to change it. We had certain definite plans for the transcontinental airports of Canada but they had to be changed considerably, not only with reference to the new developments in aircraft but also in the radio and meteorological fields. For instance let me tell my hon. friend this with reference to the instrument landing systems. They were to be in practically every airport of significance in Canada. I think there are some 24 or 25 such systems. Before long they may all be obsolescent—and they cost a considerable amount of money—because of the coming into effect now of the ground control approach. That is only one indication of what happens in the radio field.

In the field of runways, the situation is this. Where years ago you could land a plane on a strip of gravel you now cannot land the heavier craft on that kind of strip. Runways must be built of asphalt. They must be strengthened, widened and lengthened. That is why it becomes increasingly difficult to make any plan. I know that it will be the aim of the Department of Transport officials to provide in the various parts of Canada all of the facilities they can provide having regard to the money at their disposal. It may be that in certain isolated parts of Canada we cannot get there as quickly as we should like. But the moment that natural resources are developed and assistance is sought by the province, by the company wishing to develop the resources or by air companies using the area, we seek to give them the necessary facilities—with the approval, of course, of treasury board—as quickly as we can. I think that what I have placed on the record now with regard to the northwest is certainly no indication that we have neglected or intend to neglect that part of Canada.

Item agreed to.

Airways and airports—radio aviation services—

481. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $2,279,517.

Mr. Hansell: I have a question or two I should like to ask the minister on this item. These questions were asked yesterday of the Minister of National Revenue when we were discussing the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and the minister answered that they rightly came under the Department of Transport because they were affected by the licensing authority. There are two questions I wish to ask.

I understand that when radio or television interests desire to construct a transmitter they are not permitted to use what is known as composite equipment. I understand that in Canada no transmitter will be licensed unless it is manufactured by one of the standard equipment companies. In the brief I have in my hand an illustration is given of television equipment that was erected in the United States. Ordinarily it would have cost around $150,000 if purchased from a standard equipment company. The engineers of this particular station erected their own equipment. They assembled it and perhaps manufactured certain parts. They did the job for approximately $80,000. I do not know that those figures would be altogether comparable in Canada, but it means that as long as those who are erecting transmitters for radio or television stations are compelled to go to standard equipment companies and are not allowed to use their own engineers to assemble and make their own equipment they will have to pay a whole lot more money than otherwise.

I should like to know from the minister why that regulation exists. I can quite understand that we have to have some sort of inspection service. We have got to be able to inspect the equipment of radio and television stations in order to make sure that it complies with the Radio Act and also to prevent it from interfering with other stations, and so on. But if I may say so it does seem rather harsh to me that radio engineers who are competent to build equipment should be forced to go to the standard equipment companies for their requirements. Their equipment is good and I like to see them do business, but I do not see why the licensing authority should insist that the equipment be purchased from standard equipment companies.

While I am on my feet I might as well ask the further question which I asked last night. Radio and television stations in Canada are not permitted to operate or build what are termed pick-up stations that make use of a pick-up antenna at high level. If they were allowed to do that they would not have to pay for the expensive telephone line services that are required in Canada today. It is a good thing to use the telephone services that are available, but from this same brief I understand that in the United States—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order. Is it not possible to have short questions on these estimates instead of a long speech on every item, and sometimes four or five long speeches?

Mr. Hansell: The Secretary of State seems to be aggravated when anyone in this group rises to speak. I will answer the question. It is possible to have shorter questions, but I am not going to have him attempt to take away my privileges in the house.

An hon. Member: It is an abuse of privilege.

Mr. Hansell: It is not an abuse of privilege at all. I am explaining my question. We are just taking that much more time.

An hon. Member: Oh, the small boy!

Mr. Dickey: Pick up your marbles and go home.

Mr. Hansell: I understand that radio stations in the United States can save approximately $40,000 a year by using what is known as the pick-up system which does away with the use of the lines of the telephone and telegraph companies all the time. I have asked these two questions. They are important because they involve the radio and television industry in Canada.

The Deputy Chairman: Before the minister replies, I did not interrupt the hon. member for Macleod but the remarks he has been making all pertain to item 482 which deals with the Radio Act and regulations. Item 481 has to do with airports. May I take it that item 481 is carried?

Item agreed to.

Radio act and regulations (including the former suppression of radio interferences)—

482. Administration, operation and maintenance, including contributions as Canada's share of the administrative costs of various international radio, telegraph and telephone conferences, as detailed in the estimates, $1,617,445.

Mr. Hansell: I thought I was on the right item.

Mr. Dickey: You would not know.

Mr. Chevrier: May I deal with the answer to my hon. friend's question about the construction of transmitters and the difficulty of using composite equipment unless it is manufactured by certain standard companies. I do not know that that is exactly the position. In any event the equipment which must be used with reference to these channels must of necessity be of the highest possible standard. There are 3,000 stations and some 105 or more channels which makes it essential that equipment be of a high technical standard and of the best quality. The departmental officials recognize that technical equipment of a certain brand and type is that which is required, and that is why we have adhered to those standards.

With respect to the other question having to do with the pick-up system, if we were to adopt that system it would require far more channels than we have at the present time. As my hon. friend knows, the channels are allocated by international convention. We are short of channels for Canada so that if we were to adopt that suggestion we would have to seek to obtain more channels.

Mr. Herridge: I shall be as brief as I can, but I want to produce certain evidence in support of my argument. I rise particularly to bring a matter to the attention of the house which I have been asked to raise by a number of organizations in my constituency and a considerable number of individuals. I am referring to the fact that during recent years the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company has built a power line from their plants on the Kootenay river along the shore of Kootenay lake over to Kimberley.

Everyone in the district recognizes the advantages of the power line to the district by increasing industrial production and by bringing power and light to communities that did not have power and light before. However, since this power line has been built there are hundreds of residents in my constituency, particularly along Kootenay lake between Nelson and Creston, who have suffered from excessive radio interference. I have been present when people were trying to get programs and there has been apparently a zone of interference on both sides of the wires. These old settlers, many of them have been there for 40 or 45 years, are now denied their rights as citizens of Canada to listen to the radio without interference.

This has annoyed these people to such an extent that various organizations have held meetings, discussed the matter, passed resolutions and forwarded those resolutions to me. I have received letters and resolutions from the Crawford Bay women's institute, Boswell and district farmers' institute, Boswell and district women's club, Gray Creek women's club, and a number of individuals who are old settlers in that district. These people are very annoyed at this situation, and I am conveying their annoyance to the minister. Now, with respect to this I did what I usually do, I wrote to the official most directly concerned, and in that case it was Mr. E. Turner, radio inspector at Kelowna, British Columbia, mentioning that I had this complaint and there seemed to be sound justification for it. I asked him if he would have the matter investigated. They had the matter investigated, and I quote Mr. R. A. Coles' reply:

Dear sir,

1. I wish to report the results of our investigation made at your request to our Mr. E. Turner, radio inspector, Kelowna, B.C., into the radio interference encountered by your constituents in the Gray Creek area from the Cominco power line to Kimberley.

2. In this respect, arrangements were made for our chief interference inspector to accompany Mr. Turner on this investigation due to complications liable to be encountered. The investigation was carried out between April 7th and April 9th, with the co-operation of Mr. Lee, general manager, West Kootenay Power and Light Company, Trail.

3. It was discovered that the cause of the interference originated in the transmission line which conveys power at 171 kilovolts from South Slocan to Kimberley. Rather severe interference is caused to the majority of the residents at Crawford Bay, Port Crawford and Gray Creek.

4. Signal strength readings were taken by our inspectors of stations CKLN, Nelson, CJAT, Trail, KHQ, KGA and KNEW at Spokane and were found to be below the average receivable signal strength.

5. On this account and due to the fact that we know of no economic cure for the interference from this transmission line, we feel that too much blame cannot be placed on the power company. We do feel, however, and would recommend, that the residents of these areas could overcome this difficulty appreciably in taking their own action by installing a more efficient type of aerial for their receivers and they should obtain advice in this regard from their equipment suppliers.

6. We regret to have to report to you that no improvement in this situation has been possible from our investigation and that we must place the onus for any action to be taken on the members of your constituency.

Then, after receiving that letter, I wrote to Mr. W. A. Caton, chief inspector, regulations section, telecommunications division. The letter reads as follows:

Dear sir,

I would appreciate receiving a copy of any regulations that cover the question of radio interference occasioned by industrial operations, machinery, household appliances, etc., etc. I would also like any information you can give me concerning the duties of radio inspectors, particularly with reference to radio interference, and what action is taken by your division to enforce the regulations with respect to radio interference caused by any company or individual.

Well, I did not hear from Mr. Caton. Apparently, Mr. Caton is a rather cagey individual and realized that this was something that had to be dealt with at a high level. On May 20, I received the following letter from the minister:

Dear Mr. Herridge:

I have your letter of May 8th, addressed to Mr. W. A. Caton, chief radio inspector, concerning the regulations for controlling radio interference. These regulations were issued in 1941 under authority of section 23 of the Canadian Broadcasting Act, and a copy is enclosed, as requested.

The duties of radio inspectors while engaged in interference work are as follows: The tracing and locating of sources of interference, the development and application of remedial measures and enforcement of the applicable regulations; routine office duties and maintenance in conjunction with the above.

Usually it has been found that the tracing of interference to its source by a radio inspector has resulted in the owner or user taking immediate action to eliminate the condition causing the interference.

Furthermore, in that respect I want to quote briefly from the Department of Transport report, 1952-53, at page 152. There is the heading "Suppression of inductive interference", and I presume that is the same thing about which these people were complaining. It reads:

Fifty-four cars are equipped for the investigation of interference and operate from the permanent inspections offices located in 25 cities throughout Canada. The inspector in charge of each car, with his assistant, investigates reported cases of interference throughout his district, and also monitors receiving conditions during routine patrols. The complainants are interviewed by the investigators, who trace the interference to its actual source. The inspector then advises the owner of the offending equipment how to suppress the interference and, where necessary, conducts appropriate tests.

Then, farther down, the report states:

The co-operation of industry with our radio inspectors has been so satisfactory that up to the present it has been unnecessary to resort to legal action in any cases.

[Mr. Herridge.]

My point is this, Mr. Chairman. I might say the minister sent me a copy of the regulations which I appreciated. In those regulations I see there is provision for a fine if a person does not comply with the regulations and the instructions of the radio inspector. I am not blaming the inspectors. They are doing their duty, but in going through our district I have had it brought to my attention that the radio inspector went into a blacksmith shop in a small village near where I live. The blacksmith had a motor that was causing some interference. He was advised that if he did not correct this situation he would be liable to a fine. There was a man who operated a little carpenter shop and some of his motors were causing interference. He was advised that if he did not correct the situation, he would be liable for a fine. Then, there was Mrs. Muggins with a washing machine or something of that kind that did not work well and she was told she would be liable to a fine if it were not corrected.

My point is this. Why this distinction between a company or large corporation and a small company or private individual? I do not agree with that, Mr. Chairman. My constituents take very strong exception to it, and I should like the minister to explain why a company has to be dealt with at ministerial level, according to regulations, but a small person can be badgered by an inspector. I do not believe that conforms to our conception of justice, and I am always one of those who get their dander up when they see the little person being tramped upon. According to these regulations, it depends on whose ox is gored. I do ask the minister to explain this to us.

I suggest that the people I am representing are most reasonable, but you can understand that if you have lived in a particular area for a number of years and then find your evenings being upset because of these wires you would get upset. I am presenting their upset to the minister. I do ask the minister to look into the matter and see if, as a result of co-operation between the department and the company and the residents concerned, some way may be found to overcome this situation. I do not know enough about the technical aspects of the question, but surely the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company is wealthy enough to provide the small gadgets necessary to overcome this interference. However I ask the minister to have this looked into, to see if there cannot be a co-operative arrangement between the company and the department which would make it possible for these people to receive normal radio reception.

Mr. Chevrier: I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, when you switched the hon. member for Macleod from item 481 to 482 I think probably I got sidetracked in the remarks I was going to make about item 481. If I can go back that far, I should like to proceed.

We have a condition in Bruce county which is giving grief to a lot of the citizens. Our two radio stations have to change their directional beams at a certain hour in the evening. I had a few questions answered on the order paper some time ago. They were technical questions, but they did answer those questions very well, I think. What I would like to know is this: Is there a chance of permitting those and similar stations to use more of the power for which they are licensed or, if that is not possible, is it possible by international agreement to have some of the American stations cut down their power in the evenings, when it is beamed in our direction.

I can say that I know people who live within twenty-five miles of Owen Sound who cannot get the news broadcast at ten o'clock. In fact, one very reliable gentleman told me that the only night news he can get is from American stations. I am wondering if there are many stations in that position throughout the country and, if so, if there is any solution for the difficulty.

Mr. Chevrier: There are not many such stations. The question of power is regulated by the C.B.C. It is the C.B.C. that determines the power a station is to have; and when a recommendation comes to us we can license it only for that amount of power, and for no more. It is possible for a station to make application for additional power, but that must be made to the C.B.C., and it may well be that in the Department of Transport we would object to it because of the international agreement.

That perhaps is the case in the circumstances my hon. friend has described. There are a number of stations which, because of the international agreement, must be given a certain amount of power, and no more. That applies not only in Canada but also in the United States, Mexico and the whole of the North American band. All the stations are bound by a regulating authority which, in our case, is the C.B.C.

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): Is there any possibility that the power United States stations direct toward the north at night is stepped up to a point higher than our local stations are allowed to direct toward the south? Is there any possibility of that? I am led to believe that the Americans are given more leeway in their night broadcasts than we are in Canada.

Mr. Chevrier: I understand there is no such possibility, because they operate in accordance with an international understanding, and international rules and regulations laid down at the conference known as NARBA—North American regional broadcasting agreement. It is possible, as it meets from time to time, to consider this question. When they do meet in these international conventions our people are always anxious to see if stations, such as those the hon. member has mentioned, are not able to increase their power. It is under constant study.

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): If the stations to which the minister has referred did apply to the department in Ottawa for an increase in power would there be any possibility that the department might give that district closer inspection, and try to relieve the condition.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, there is.

Mr. Bryson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word or two about the subject introduced by the hon. member for Kootenay West, that of radio interference. This is one of the very few subjects in which I have had some experience. Perhaps society would consider me as one of those people who constitute a real menace—and I do not mean because I am a C.C.F.'er, either. I am a radio amateur operator. As such I have had some experience with radio inspectors and power lines people, so far as this problem of interference is concerned. I believe we cannot cope with what I consider an insurmountable problem of radio interference. A radio inspector can go out on the road and find the cause of some condition that is affecting someone's radio and in a matter of minutes something else interferes. There are motors, X-ray machines and many other electrical gadgets causing this interference.

I believe we are using the wrong approach, and that we will never solve the problem in this way. I do believe however that there is one thing could be done which would go a long way towards solving it. In my view we have to go back to the manufacturers of radio receivers; I believe that is the only solution. That is where we should start, because it will not be solved any other way. So long as radio manufacturers are going to build cheap AC-DC receivers we are not going to have anything but trouble.

But it could all be fixed. There could be many things done to these receivers to overcome the interference. For instance, filters could be installed. I have done it myself on many occasions, where I have succeeded in filtering out noise. But the manufacturer, of course, is not prepared to spend the extra 35 or 40 cents to do this. I maintain that until these manufacturers are prepared to co-operate with the Department of Transport there can be no solution of the problem.

So far as I am concerned, from my experience in the last 20 years it is just a waste of the taxpayers' money to go around trying to find out these pieces of electrical equipment that are causing the trouble. I would like the minister to inquire as to whether there could not be some co-operation by these radio receiver manufacturers. If these companies are going to build the junk they are turning out in the form of AC-DC receivers there can be nothing but trouble. I would like to see some co-operation between the manufacturers and the Department of Transport.

Mr. Chevrier: I shall bring the matter to the attention of the department.

Item agreed to.

Radio Act and regulations (including the former suppression of radio interferences)—

483. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $286,085.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member for Kootenay West referring to item 482?

Mr. Herridge: I was going to ask the minister if he intended to reply to my request.

Mr. Chevrier: I understand my hon. friend asked if I would look into the matter again, and ask the officials to communicate with the owners of the power line. I said I would do that. I did not know there was any other answer I could make.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that this is Friday night and that we have had a long and a rather heavy week. But, as I think hon. members know, the Minister of Transport has a good deal in the way of estimates left, and there is legislation for Monday. I was wondering if we could continue a while on the estimates with a view to disposing of as many as possible of them.

An hon. Member: How long a while?

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, if I might say a word—

An hon. Member: Two words.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

An hon. Member: Oh, pipe down.

The Chairman: Order; the hon. member for Macleod may proceed.

[Mr. Bryson.]

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, one would like to co-operate with the house leader in this respect. Not so long ago the Secretary of State rose and took me to task. I had not been speaking more than a minute before arriving at my question, and he rose and asked why I could not ask my question without making a speech. The hon. member for Kootenay West and others have spoken.

An hon. Member: That is their privilege.

Mr. Hansell: That is their privilege and I am glad to hear it. I resented that very much.

Mr. Macdonnell: Quite right.

Mr. Hansell: The Secretary of State now comes along and wants us to give consent to sitting after ten o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to apologize to the hon. member. I did not mean what I said to apply to what he was saying at all, but it did seem to me there had been a lot of long speeches. This is about the third or fourth day that this department's estimates have been before the committee. If I said anything to hurt the hon. member, I withdraw it at once and I apologize for it.

Mr. Hansell: I appreciate that very much indeed. I do not want to hold up the work of the committee at all, but I did resent that sort of thing. A lot of interruptions came from over here. I will leave it to my leader to say whether he wants to consent to continuing.

Mr. Low: As far as we are concerned, we are prepared to go along and help to get through the work of the house.

Mr. MacInnis: How long are we going to sit?

Mr. Fulton: How long is a while?

Mr. MacInnis: Last night we were asked to sit for a few minutes to let the hon. member for Lethbridge say something. I knew it would not be a few minutes. We have several items left. I imagine there will be a debate on most of them. The Secretary of State may object to members on the opposition side of the house making speeches, but what is it we are supposed to be sent here for? We were sent here to oppose the government, and we cannot oppose the government without making speeches. Probably I am not carrying out my function as a member of the opposition, but we have had a busy week and we are all becoming frayed. Probably we would make more progress by adjourning now and going home.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I purposely stayed out of the debate in order to meet the wishes of hon. members opposite about how long we would sit, because they are accommodating us in going beyond ten o'clock. I do not want to put any restrictions on them. I do think, however, because we have had quite a long general debate on the first item, and since we have covered a good many of the items in other ways as we have gone through the items, there will be less time spent on the succeeding items. I think the minister has been most accommodating in making his answers. We might go on to such time as meets the wishes of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and perhaps we could get some items through in the meantime.

Mr. Fulton: The minister should not be in too great a hurry to get into the St. Lawrence seaway. We would like to have him around here for a while.

Mr. Nicholson: We have had a number of the officials from the department here for some time now. We have not worked too long a week; it has only been 37½ hours, and I do not think another half hour would hurt us.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee that we continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item agreed to.

Radio aids to marine navigation—

484. Administration, operation and maintenance, $2,456,995.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I do not know whether a member has to apologize now even for making a comment. What I am going to discuss does not involve millions or hundreds of thousands, but it does involve something quite serious. A farmer in my riding in the town of Camlachie agreed to sell some 50 acres of land to the department for the purpose of post radio stations. There has been some delay. That goes without saying, since this is June, 1954. It is true that there was never entire agreement on the terms, inasmuch as there seemed to be some misunderstanding between the owner of the farm and the people with whom he was dealing. In the ordinary course of events of closing a small deal these differences could have been overcome in a short time.

The Deputy Chairman: I realize the committee is sitting by consent. Might I submit it would be of great assistance to the member who is speaking and the minister who is listening if we could hear the member who is speaking.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): The small differences that existed between the purchaser and the vendor could have been taken care of in the usual course of settling a transfer of this size. Anyone who has had any experience in business would appreciate that it could have been done inside of a couple of months. There was some question of drainage and the leasing of the property, and that sort of thing. Apart from all these difficulties, there was nothing that could not be surmounted in due course. I do not mean that it could have been done in an hour and a half but I personally am amazed at this glacial speed in closing a deal involving such a small amount, especially since the department has taken possession of the property and has erected the required buildings on the property, and has had them there for some months.

There were two oil leases on the property that had been on for several years. One was with the Imperial Oil. The release or discharge of that lease could have been obtained in a matter of days. The other one was with someone whose address was unknown. Any lawyer practising in Ontario appreciates that the release or discharge of that oil lease could have been obtained by a court order in a matter of a few days. To me this is a disgraceful revelation of procedure, and there is no excuse for it. There is no excuse for the delay on the part of the department.

As I said, there was some disagreement and the department threatened to take expropriation proceedings. I also appreciate that they agreed he would have the property, and all that sort of thing, for one year. But all these things could have been determined within at least a couple of months. In case there is any doubt in the mind of the minister I want to draw to his attention a letter which I have here from a well-known and capable lawyer in Sarnia, Mr. Knox, who has an excellent reputation and I am sure expedites any matters of this sort that he has in hand. This letter is dated January 15, 1954 and is addressed to the owner of the property, Mr. Howard R. Jackson, and reads:

Dear Mr. Jackson:

I have now received a reply to my letter which was written to the department some months ago.

I do not intend to quote any further. This letter distinctly says that he had received a reply to a letter which was written to the department some months ago. I do not think there is any excuse for that type of business being done by a department of the government and I make no apology for bringing this up. I expect the minister was not acquainted with this.

As I said this afternoon, I do not expect any minister of the government could possibly be familiar with every bit of business that goes through his department. That is physically and mentally impossible. Nevertheless, he is responsible for his own department and I am sure the minister, as a lawyer, would regret that there has been such a delay. I think that had it reached his attention months ago the difficulties might have been solved.

I wrote to his parliamentary assistant some six months ago in the hope of having this matter expedited, but now, some 17 months after the deal was initiated, proceedings are commenced to obtain the discharge of these leases. I do not think there is any excuse for that. I am satisfied that if the department carried on all its business in that fashion there would be many regrets, not only in the government but among those in the opposition.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that there are no other cases such as this in Canada. If this is the way in which the department conducts its affairs in purchasing property from individuals, then I think it is about time it turned over a new leaf and conducted its business in the way it should be conducted, and as is expected by those who deal with the government.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, unfortunately there are cases of delay such as this which crop up in the departmental expropriation procedure from time to time. I am not aware of the difficulties which my hon. friend has raised, but my parliamentary assistant is and he has brought them to my attention. The matter which has caused the delay is a cloud on the title. The title, I understand, has to do with certain oil rights of Imperial Oil Limited, and it was not possible, so I understand, for the department to obtain title to the land. I understand, however, that recently the Imperial Oil surrendered their rights. If that is the case then that would involve quite a legal problem which is not very easy to determine, and I would ask my hon. friend to recall that it is not the departmental officials of the Department of Transport who determine the legal position, but the Department of Justice. We seek the advice of the Department of Justice because, of course, they are our legal advisers. I am informed that the matter has practically reached the point where it could be liquidated and I feel, from the information I have at hand, that it should not be delayed any longer.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): So there will be no misunderstanding, Mr. Chairman, I might say, with all due respect to the minister, that I do not think any effort was made by the department in Ottawa which was responsible for obtaining this legal advice and having the work completed. They did not make contact with the people who had the leases until some 15 or 16 months after the initial agreement to purchase the property. However, I am glad to hear the minister say that the matter will be finalized very soon.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone service—

486. Administration, operation and maintenance, $591,603.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I want to raise again a matter which the minister and I have had under discussion before. This matter concerns a number of members from British Columbia from this side of the house as well as, I think, hon. members on the other side. It relates to the terms of sale of the government telegraph and telephone service in British Columbia to the Canadian National Telegraphs and the British Columbia Telephone Company respectively. There were two matters here of concern to all of us who come from areas which were served by that system. One was the question of the continuation of service to the subscribers to the government service, and the other was the provision for the continuation in employment of the employees of the system.

We had two quite lengthy statements from the minister outlining the arrangements made in both these fields on Wednesday, March 24, and Thursday, March 25, during this session, and I think it fair to say without prejudice —and perhaps I should put in that cautionary word—that with respect to the terms regarding the continuation of service there seems to have been adequate arrangements made to protect the interests of the subscribers to the government system.

We had hoped that the situation with regard to the continuation of employment for the employees of this service would prove to be equally satisfactory. But I regret to say that from information I have received direct from those concerned there seems to have been some bitter disappointment experienced by the men who have tried to make satisfactory deals with the private companies which have taken over the service.

When the minister made his statement on March 24 he informed us that the British Columbia Telephone Company had made arrangements which were quite satisfactory with regard to the employees of the telephone branch of the system. I refer to his statement as reported at page 3310 of Hansard for that date. But perhaps first of all I should point out that he described to us the terms under which they would be taking them over with respect to seniority in the B.C. Telephone Company employment, and he then dealt with the question of superannuation pension rights. It will be appreciated, Mr. Chairman, that to men of this type who have put in up to 30 years faithful service in the government service, and have now reached the age when superannuation and retirement is quite imminent, the matter of superannuation rights is one of very great importance.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the hon. member a question? I wish to follow quite clearly what he is saying. Is he dealing now with the sale from the government to the British Columbia Telephone Company and not with the Canadian National Telegraphs?

Mr. Fulton: I was not dealing with the Canadian National Telegraphs at the moment. I was dealing first with the British Columbia Telephone Company.

Mr. Chevrier: Then am I right in assuming, because I was certainly under this impression, that the hon. member was perfectly satisfied on a previous occasion, for I believe he intimated that he was satisfied with the arrangements made by the government with respect to the sale made to the British Columbia Telephone Company? Is that not a fact?

Mr. Fulton: That is correct, Mr. Chairman. I indicated to the minister that I felt the outline he had given us of the sale to the British Columbia Telephone Company and the terms on which that company indicated they were going to take over government employees was quite satisfactory. But my point is that recent correspondence I have received indicates that the understanding I had formed, and I think possibly the understanding the minister had formed, of the arrangements to be made either was not correct or the undertakings are not being carried out.

Mr. Chevrier: I have never received any information to that effect with reference to either part of the deal.

Mr. Fulton: I confess this came to my attention and I assumed it would be taken up with the minister by the telephone branch employees in the same way as a certain situation with regard to the telegraph branch employees had been.

Mr. Chevrier: It certainly comes to me as a surprise but I will be glad to look into it.

Mr. Fulton: I am glad to hear that and I will outline the case very briefly. As regards the minister's statement at page 3310 of Hansard with reference to the arrangements for superannuation rights made with the B.C. Telephone Company, I have received this letter from one of the employees which indicates that the wages are slightly better. It indicates also that those employees who are over 45 years of age—and the figures are given as follows: two in Ashcroft, one in Alexis Creek, one in Bella Coola and all three in the Williams Lake district at the 150-Mile House; that makes a total of seven —have been asked to sign waivers of pension rights and other benefits given by the B.C. Telephone Company to their regular employees, and this is protested as being discrimination. They go on to point out that they were given no information before this deal as to what the status would be on being taken over by the B.C. Telephone Company or whether they had any choice of remaining with the civil service except that their names could, if they elected, be put on the preferred list until a vacancy occurred in the civil service.

The main point is that these employees will have lost seniority plus 18 days accumulated sick pay per year and the security of a pension when unable to work. They point out that if they sign this waiver requested by the B.C. Telephone Company they can be discarded at any time their health fails them. They also say that as far as they can learn, these conditions, that is to say the conditions that the telephone company is now asking them to accept, are included in the agreement for the sale of the government telephone and telegraph system to the new owner. They ask if some system could not have been worked out where they could contribute the same amount towards pension as they did with the government and give them an equivalent form of protection when they reach retirement age. Some of these men now over 45 years old have worked for the government system for over 20 years and now have no security for their old age; they have no choice in the matter because if they refuse to transfer to the new owner they would be unemployed while awaiting a new job in the civil service list.

I am sorry if the minister has had no previous notice of this complaint because I am sure that he and I both shared the impression that the employment arrangements with the telephone side of the system were satisfactory. I will not go into further detail at this stage but I will send further particulars over to the minister.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to get the details because I certainly would like to look into the matter.

Mr. Fulton: It sounds to me as though either I had formed a misunderstanding of the nature of the agreement or possibly the agreement itself is not being fully discharged.

However, I have in addition some complaints with respect to employees on the telegraph side who have been taken over by the Canadian National Telegraphs. Here I know the minister has had these matters drawn to his attention because I have received copies of letters which have been sent to him by the employees concerned. I have drawn to his attention the cases of some of the employees and others, as I understand it, have been drawn to the attention of the minister by the amalgamated civil servants of Canada, Vancouver branch. For instance, I have here a copy of a letter to the minister dated April 12 from that branch of the amalgamated civil servants of Canada. I see that it is getting near to 10.30, Mr. Chairman, and I therefore do not wish to delay the committee by going into an excessive amount of detail. However, the position in summary is this.

The conditions accorded by the telegraph company to the employees of the government system were early discovered to be unacceptable by quite a substantial number of those employees. They made the request—and I made the suggestion on their behalf in addition—that if the conditions of service with the new owners were found to be unsatisfactory, some assurance should be given to these men that they might transfer into other parts of the government's communication system or into other branches of the civil service, because this is not a case where some extraneous act beyond the control of the government or anybody else has taken place which deprived men of their livelihood, in which case you might say that they have to take the rough with the smooth.

This is a case where the government, as a matter of policy, has decided to dispose of its system, knowing full well—it must have known it—that there were a number of long-service employees with that system who on account of their age and the fact that they had been exclusively engaged in that type of occupation would have nowhere else to go or no other field to look to for alternative employment. I cannot use any other words than these to describe the situation. I think it is unfair and callous to put these men in the position where you are saying to them: If you do not like the terms of service offered to you by your new employers, you can shift for yourselves.

I have referred the matter, as I say, to the minister. I must say that from him I had an indication that he would give it very sympathetic consideration. I referred it to the chairman of the civil service commission and from him I understood that strenuous efforts would be made to find alternative employment for them in the civil service. So far, however, nothing has happened. I have had no word from either source since my letters of April 10; and so far as I am able to make out from complaints I have received from both Vancouver and Ashcroft, this situation has not been adjusted with respect to many of these employees. I want to make it quite clear that with respect to one individual whose case I took up, it was satisfactorily adjusted; but with respect to the others, both at Ashcroft and Vancouver, no satisfaction has been obtained.

I can only say this for these men who have never complained and who have been the finest type of government employees in small communities. In some cases they have entered fully into the community life and have been an integral part of that community. They are now pretty much disillusioned as to what it means to be turned out into the world at their age by this deal. I am going to read one paragraph from a letter of a man who served for many years. He is fairly well resigned, but he sums up the situation as follows:

> Now that the dust has more or less settled, I think the important thing, over and above the importance to the employees concerned and their naturally worried state concerning their futures, has been the government's steadfast refusal to answer questions put to it by duly elected members of parliament not only in this matter, but from a perusal of Hansard in other matters too. This is truly I do think, contempt of parliament and the people of this country and is frightening in its import. What causes individual cabinet ministers to act in such a fashion, I don't know, but I for one, don't like it.

I think that paragraph summarizes the views of these men. While it might give us some satisfaction to raise hell, as it were, about the matter here I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that my concern with it goes a great deal further than that. I would not be raising the matter here if it were not for the fact that although I have written to the minister and to the chairman of the civil service commission and have asked them to do what they can to get these men alternative employment in the civil service, I have had no satisfaction from correspondence. I therefore feel bound to take this course here so that even if eventually we get no other satisfaction for these men, they will know that they have had their case laid before the authorities and that the treatment they have received is not to go unnoticed. I hope that we shall be able to get concrete results for them, but I feel bound to raise the matter here in any event and to make the strongest possible protest against the treatment they have had. Whether the responsibility lies with the department or with the Canadian National Telegraphs, I do not know but I want to say that I feel that these men have not had a fair deal.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, may I say—

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I have a little bit to add on exactly the same thing before the minister answers. Perhaps it would save time. I have also had complaints from former employees of the government telegraph service on Vancouver island who are now employees of Canadian National Telegraphs and B.C. Telephone. Their complaint consists largely in this, that many of the offices that existed under the old government telegraph scheme have now been closed. While I suppose the purchasing companies are carrying out the letter of the agreement what is actually happening in many cases is that employees with a long record in the government service, with their homes established, some in the city of Nanaimo and in other cities on Vancouver island, are being told, shall I say, that the only chance for them to continue in employment with the new employing company is to take a job at some very remote place on the island such as Alert Bay or Port Hardy, places where there is no living accommodation for them or their families.

This correspondent points out that some of these employees have had thirty years service, some even forty-three years, in the government employ and goes on to say:

> Due to the superannuation act not applying to this branch until 1939 these employees have not got full pensionable credits, as this involved the paying back of a large sum of money, and the wages being low the majority of employees could not afford to do so, although some have as much as forty-two years service with the government. If the employees take their immediate pension those nearing the 60 year old mark will lose 16 per cent of their pension, which means a large drop in their pension at the present cost of living.
>
> Would appreciate some concrete information on the salaries those employees transferring to the Canadian National Telegraphs will receive. Will they receive their former salary which they received from the government or go on the Canadian National Telegraphs rating which I understand is lower than paid by the government?

This correspondent told me when I saw him that there are quite a number who are affected in this way. They are placed in the position of having to accept employment at really impossible places for married men with families on the penalty of losing their positions entirely. I wonder whether the minister did have any undertaking with the company that these men would be given some sort of comparable employment if the offices in which they were employed were going to be closed.

Mr. Chevrier: I would not want hon. members of the house to think that the Department of Transport is not as much concerned about these employees as the hon. members who have spoken. There are many other hon. members who have taken up the matter either by correspondence or by verbal representations to me, and I do not want to name one rather than another because there are many. Let me deal with this matter in two ways.

In so far as the B.C. Telephone Company is concerned, I had been under the impression all along that the deal was a good one, and I am surprised that the matter raised by the hon. member for Kamloops does exist. I take it that he has received information which is accurate, and I am surprised because I never had any intimation that all the employees taken on by the B.C. Telephone Company were not satisfied with their work. However, as I said and as I undertook, I will look into the matter at the first opportunity.

Dealing with the other phase, I would remind the house that Canadian National Telegraphs is not a division of the Department of Transport but rather a division of the Canadian National Railways, and Canadian National Railways must of course take the responsibility for this matter. That does not mean that we here are not interested in the employees getting a fair deal. We are, and it was a condition of the purchase that, all things being equal, these men would be given a reasonable chance at employment under reasonable conditions. I am not using the right language. I put the terms of the agreement on the record before when I had it here, but I do not have it now.

But let me say that we are going to do our best to find employment for these people comparable to that which they had before. I have had more correspondence about these employees than any other group of employees who have, because of purchase or assignment, been put out of work. I can think of the 260-odd radio employees of the Department of Transport who were displaced when we cancelled radio licences. We found employment for every one of them with the exception of seven, and among those there was present the question of age.

Here there are about 185 employees concerned. I think it is safe to say that in so far as the B.C. Telephone Company is concerned all of them have found work at better wages. As to the question of superannuation, I must look into it. I say that the conditions there are good with that exception, and I knew nothing about it. In so far as the Canadian National Telegraphs is concerned, I know there are a number of serious difficulties, but I believe that so far there are only eight or nine men who have been assigned to positions with which they are not satisfied and where they are being offered positions at a lower rate than they originally received.

What the total is I am not able to say, but we in the Department of Transport, together with the civil service commission, are going to do everything we can to find employment for these people. We are doing that now and because of the representations that have been made, both from this side of the house and the other side, I hope, although it may not be possible to deal with all of them because there are certain age requirements which will make it difficult to consider them all, that we will be able to do as well with the Canadian National Telegraphs operations as we did in the case of the employees of the radio branch of the department.

Mr. Fulton: I know the minister is extremely busy with this and other matters. I know that the taking over has not been easy and that he has devoted a lot of attention to it. May I ask him whether he could not instruct his officials to keep all those members who are concerned—and I want to give credit to the many other members who are equally concerned—informed? As I have pointed out, I have had this lengthy letter of April 6 summarizing the situation and I have a copy of the letter sent to the minister on April 10. I telephoned and wrote to various people, the chairman of the civil service commission and the minister, but I have had nothing since, and on the basis of that and subsequent correspondence the dissatisfaction, so far as I am aware, continues unabated.

I am glad to hear, if I understood the minister correctly, that efforts are being made to clear up quite a number of these cases and that success has been achieved with some. I would appreciate it, and I know other members would also, if we might from time to time receive reports as to the progress.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Chevrier: I will be glad to keep the hon. member informed as to the cases he has brought to my attention. Other cases have been brought to my attention by other members, but I do not imagine he wants to be kept informed about those.

Mr. Fulton: Not individual cases, but I have this representation made on behalf of these men by the amalgamated civil servants of Canada and it refers to what appears to be certain inequities in the employment positions offered by the Canadian National Telegraphs. It contains such phrases as this:

> No such unreasonable split-trick hours exist in the C.N.T. on scheduled positions.

The reason that these men are being prejudiced is that they are offered non-scheduled positions. Then there is this phrase:

> When accomplished—

The reference is to certain transfers.

> —as it surely would be, the positions of former government telegraph employees taken over would be wiped out. And because they are classed as non-schedule with no seniority rights—

That certainly was a feature which I understood was not present. I understood they would be given their corresponding seniority rights. It says:

> And because they are classed as non-schedule with no seniority rights, they could not bid on any vacancies in the C.N.T. system proper. They would be out of employment.

When these other positions were wiped out, they would be out of employment.

Mr. Chevrier: I shall bring my hon. friend up to date on that.

Mr. Fulton: It is now 10.30.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. Fulton: It is now 10.30.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member for Comox-Alberni rising to speak to an item?

Mr. Barnett: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have one or two questions about item 486. I should like to discuss with the minister one or two aspects of this sale of the government telephone and telegraph which have not been discussed by previous speakers. My questions relate more to the telegraph service. I do know that there have been some views expressed particularly in connection with what is happening to the telegraphs. I have had suggestions made to me that since the sale of these facilities the Canadian National Telegraphs appear to be following a deliberate policy of withdrawal from the Vancouver island area. I feel that it would be helpful if the minister would give us a statement as to just what former offices of the government telephone and telegraph service have been continued in operation by the Canadian National, and what former offices have been closed.

In this connection I would suggest that if, as has been suggested to me, there is a withdrawal on the part of the Canadian National from certain areas, the minister inform the committee whether this has been done in consultation with the Canadian Pacific or whether there has been any consideration of the maintenance of service through these channels in cases where the Canadian National is not continuing the service formerly provided by the government service.

There is one other matter upon which I feel it would be helpful if the minister gave us some information, and that is as to the particular channel through which inspection is to be continued by the government? Is that duty a function of the government's telephone and telegraph service as it presently exists or is some other agency of government going to be responsible for the inspection the minister suggested was provided for in the agreement. I would appreciate an answer to those two questions.

Mr. Chevrier: The answer to the hon. member's last question is that so far as inspection services are concerned, we are out of the field with reference to the facilities we have sold. We will not be providing inspectors for any of the facilities sold either to the British Columbia Telephone or Canadian National Telegraphs.

Mr. Barnett: I believe the minister misunderstood my question. If I understood him correctly, when he made his statement in regard to policy he stated that the government was reserving the right to ensure that the terms of the agreement were going to be carried out by the respective companies taking over those facilities.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry, I misunderstood.

Mr. Barnett: What agency of the federal government is to be responsible?

Mr. Chevrier: I misunderstood the hon. member. I think perhaps the microphone is placed in such a way it is difficult to catch what is being said. In answer to the hon. member's question, I would say yes. I had understood him to ask about inspection, but apparently that is not what he was interested in. He was interested in whether we still retain the right, under the agreement, to consider the terms of it, and the answer to that is yes.

With reference to the first question, I am informed that the Canadian National Telegraphs are giving service in the areas referred to by the hon. member comparable to similar localities in Canada, and that is in agreement with the conditions of sale.

Item agreed to.

Meteorological division—

489. Administration, operation and maintenance, $6,963,110.

Mr. Green: I think perhaps we had better call it a day.

Mr. Harris: I am grateful for the indulgence of hon. members opposite. I think we have had a good half hour and I appreciate it very much.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris moved the adjournment of the house:

He said: On Monday we shall take up the Public Service Superannuation Act; the amendment to the Pipe Lines Act, and we would like to take that through as many stages as possible on Monday; then the Motor Vehicle Transport Act; the National Physical Fitness Act; and if hon. members have had an opportunity of examining the amendment of the other place to the Criminal Code, we would take that at that point. Then, we would move to go into supply, take trade and commerce and transport in that order.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.46 p.m.

---

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

A—Department—

444. St. Lawrence seaway surveys, investigations and design (including the former St. Lawrence ship canal surveys and investigations), $820,180.

Canal services—

445. Administration, $141,980.

446. Operation and maintenance, $6,054,242.

447. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, including payments to provinces or municipalities as contributions towards construction done by those bodies, $2,085,100.

Marine services—

448. Marine services administration, including agencies, $659,259.

Marine service steamers—

449. Administration, operation and maintenance, $6,228,000.

450. Construction or acquisition of vessels and equipment, $3,418,000.

Aids to navigation—

451. Administration, operation and maintenance, $5,111,800.

452. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $1,586,720.

Nautical services—

453. Administration, operation and maintenance, including grants and contributions for the purposes indicated in the details of the estimates; rewards for saving life from vessels in distress; subsidies to salvage companies, and the payment of expenses, including excepted expenses, incurred in respect of Canadian distressed seamen as defined in section 306 of the Canada Shipping Act, $474,764.

454. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $69,900.

Pilotage service—

455. Administration, operation and maintenance, including authority for temporary recoverable advances not exceeding $20,000, $540,983.

456. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $55,000.

457. Steamship inspection, including the carrying out of the provisions of the conventions for the safety of life at sea and load lines, and a contribution of $7,000 to the province of Nova Scotia, department of education, $646,853.

458. Marine reporting service, $159,760.

River St. Lawrence ship channel service—

459. Administration, operation and maintenance, $819,371.

460. Contract dredging, $2,500,000.

461. Surveys and investigations, $20,000.

Railways and steamship services—

462. Repairs and expenses in connection with the operation and maintenance of official railway cars under the jurisdiction of the department, $56,240.

Hudson Bay railway—

463. To provide for the difference between the expenditures for operation and maintenance, and revenue accruing from operation during the year ending March 31, 1955, not exceeding, $425,000.

464. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $138,800.

465. Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals —To provide for the payment during the fiscal year 1954-55 to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport made from time to time by the national company to the Minister of Finance and to be applied by the national company in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) in the operation of the Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals arising in the calendar year 1954, $1,558,000.

466. Strait of Canso—Transportation improvements and facilities, $9,670,000.

467. Enlargment of dock and terminal facilities at North Sydney, Nova Scotia, $956,600.

468. Construction of new dock and terminal facilities at Port-aux-Basques, Newfoundland, $2,253,600.

469. To provide for the payment during the fiscal year 1954-55 to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport made from time to time by the national company to the Minister of Finance and to be applied by the national company in the payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) in the operation of the North Sydney, Nova Scotia — Port-aux-Basques, Newfoundland, ferry and terminals arising in the calendar year 1954, $2,600,000.

470. Construction or acquisition of auto-ferry vessels, as detailed in the estimates, $6,950,000.

A—Department—

Railway and steamship services—

471. Construction or acquisition of vessels for Newfoundland coastal services, $900,000.

472. To provide towards the cost of surveys of Newfoundland railway properties entrusted to the Canadian National Railway Company, $17,500.

473. Degaussing and strengthening for armament, sea-going merchant ships of Canadian registry of 1,000 gross tons and over, $300,000.

474. Maritime Freight Rates Act—for the payment to the railway companies operating in the select territory designated by the act, during the fiscal year 1954-55, of the difference occurring on account of the application of the act, between the tariff tolls and normal tolls under approved tariffs (estimated and certified to the Minister of Transport by the Canadian National Railway Company and approved by auditors of the said company respecting the eastern lines of the Canadian National Railways, and in the case of the other railways by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada) on all traffic moved during the calendar year 1954 (Chap. 174, R.S.), $10,948,000.

475. Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited—to provide for the payment from time to time to the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited (hereinafter called "the company") of the amount of the deficit occurring during the year ending December 31, 1954, in the operations of the company and the vessels under the control of the company, as certified by the auditors of the company, and upon applications made by the company to the Minister of Finance and approved by the Minister of Transport, not exceeding, $581,000.

476. Ogden Point piers, Victoria, British Columbia —construction or acquisition of buildings, works and land, $14,000.

Pensions and other benefits—

477. Amount required to pay pensions at the rate of $300 per annum to former pilots: Arthur Baquet; Adelard Delisle; Raoul Lachance; Jules Lamarre; Wilhelm Langlois; George Larochelle; Auguste Santerre, $2,100.

478. Railway employees' provident fund—To supplement pension allowances under the provisions of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island railway employees' provident fund act so as to make the minimum payment during the period January 1, 1954, to March 31, 1955, the sum of $30 per month instead of $20 per month as fixed by the said act, $12,250.

479. Supplemental pension allowances to former employees of Newfoundland railways, steamships and telecommunication services transferred to Canadian National Railways, $17,000.

Air services—

Telecommunications division—

Airways and airports—radio aviation services—

480. Administration, operation and maintenance, $5,749,559.

481. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $2,279,517.

Radio Act and regulations (including the former suppression of radio interferences)—

482. Administration, operation and maintenance, including contributions as Canada's share of the administrative costs of various international radio, telegraph and telephone conferences, as detailed in the estimates, $1,617,445.

483. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $286,085.

Radio aids to marine navigation —

484. Administration, operation and maintenance, $2,456,995.

485. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $481,400.

Telegraph and telephone service—

486. Administration, operation and maintenance, $591,603.

487. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, including capital assistance to local telephone systems in sparsely settled areas, $325,700.

488. Northwest communication system—construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, $375,700.

A—Department—

735. St. Lawrence seaway surveys, investigations and design—further amount required, $846,432.

Canal services—

736. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $100,000.

737. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, including payments to provinces or municipalities as contributions towards construction done by those bodies—further amount required, $367,660.

Marine services—

Marine service steamers—

738. Administration, operation and maintenance —further amount required, $350,000.

739. Construction or acquisition of vessels and equipment—further amount required, $490,000.

Nautical services—

740. Administration, operation and maintenance, including grants and contributions for the purposes indicated in the details of the estimates; rewards for saving life from vessels in distress; subsidies to salvage companies, and the payment of expenses, including excepted expenses, incurred in respect of Canadian distressed seamen as defined in section 306 of the Canada Shipping Act—further amount required, $5,000.

741. Steamship inspection, including the carrying out of the provisions of the conventions for the safety of life at sea and load lines, and a contribution of $115,600 to the province of Newfoundland, department of education—further amount required, $115,600.

River St. Lawrence ship channel service—

742. Surveys and investigations—further amount required, $10,000.

A—Department—

Railway and steamship services—

743. Construction or acquisition of auto-ferry vessels, as detailed in the estimates—further amount required, $750,000.

Air services—

Telecommunications division—

Airways and airports—radio aviation services—

744. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment—further amount required, $395,000.

Radio aids to marine navigation—

745. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment—further amount required, $77,000.

Telegraph and telephone service—

746. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, including capital assistance to local telephone systems in sparsely settled areas—further amount required, $111,060.

747. Northwest communication system—construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment—further amount required, $121,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 14, 1954

The house met at eleven o'clock.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

FURTHER NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN RAILWAYS AND NON-OPERATING UNIONS

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): In view of the general interest in the matter, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a brief statement concerning the railway dispute. On behalf of my colleagues in the government I have asked the parties to the dispute affecting non-operating railway employees to resume negotiations with a view to reaching agreement on the issues involved by the process of collective bargaining.

The management of the railways and the representatives of the unions have agreed with the request and it is expected that the first meeting can be held in Montreal before the end of this week.

[Later:]

POSSIBLE BEARING ON STRIKE VOTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour, arising out of his welcome announcement this morning. Does the fact that negotiations will be reopened between the two parties to the railway dispute have any bearing on the taking of a strike vote, arrangements for which have already been made, by the unions, under the provisions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act?

Mr. Gregg: I cannot answer that question officially. I can state, in reply to the hon. member, that it is hoped that if a meeting can be arranged before the end of this week, it may have some advantageous bearing on the matter.

PIPE LINES ACT

AMENDMENT AUTHORIZING OPERATION BY TRUSTEE

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 477, to amend the Pipe Lines Act.

Mr. Knowles: Explain.

Mr. Chevrier: The Pipe Lines Act authorized a person having authority under a special act to construct or operate a pipe line. Some doubt has arisen as to whether the word "person" also includes the trustee of the bondholders, and the object of this act is to remove that doubt by an amendment to the act so that the trustee for the bondholders would be a person authorized to construct or operate a pipe line.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE

LIMITATION ON OPERATION OF PARIMUTUEL BETTING

Hon. W. E. Harris (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved the first reading of Bill No. 476 (from the Senate), to amend the Criminal Code (race meetings).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

NATIONAL DEFENCE BUILDINGS—HEATING

Mr. Harkness:

1. What percentage of national defence buildings, on a space basis, are heated by fuel oil and by coal, respectively?
2. How many tons of coal and how many gallons of oil were purchased for heating purposes in the last yearly period for which figures are available?
3. How much oil is used per 1,000 feet of floor space where oil heating is employed, and how much coal is used per 1,000 feet of floor space where coal heating is employed?
4. What has been the cost per gallon for fuel oil for the yearly period given in question No. 2, and what has been the cost per ton of coal for the yearly period given in question No. 2?

Mr. Campney: I am answering parts 2 and 4 of this question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the undue amount of time and work required to get the answers to parts 1 and 3, I have discussed the matter with the hon. member who asked the question and he has agreed to drop those parts.

Mr. Speaker: The Associate Minister of National Defence says that the hon. member who has put these questions on the order paper has agreed to have parts 1 and 3 dropped, but that he is prepared to answer parts 2 and 4. Therefore, I take it that the answers to parts 2 and 4 are filed, and that parts 1 and 3 are dropped?

Questions

Mr. Campney: Yes. The answers are as follows:

2. 481,863 tons of coal and 36,450,810 gallons of oil were purchased for heating purposes during the fiscal year 1952-53.

4. The average cost per gallon of fuel oil was 17·71 cents and the average cost per ton of coal was $11·77.

NATIONAL REVENUE—DECISIONS OF DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. Knowles:

1. Since January 1, 1953, how many decisions made by the deputy minister of national revenue (customs and excise) have been appealed to the tariff board?

2. Since January 1, 1953, have there been any instances when the deputy minister of national revenue (customs and excise), having been asked for his decision so as to enable an appeal to be made to the tariff board, has directed a change in his departmental officers' tariff classifications or valuations? If so, how many of such instances have there been?

3. Has the deputy minister of national revenue (customs and excise) any applications for his decisions regarding his departmental officers' tariff classifications or valuations before him at the present time? If so, how many?

Mr. McCann:

1. 36.

2. 4.

3. 35. The majority of these decisions cannot be made until such time as the department receives final rulings from the tariff board or the exchequer court.

PROVINCIAL TAX COLLECTIONS

Mr. Dufresne:

From 1945 to 1953 inclusive, what amount was collected in each of the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, on account of (a) individual income taxes; (b) corporation income taxes; (c) succession duties?

Mr. McCann:

The amounts of tax collected by the Department of National Revenue, taxation division, in the provinces specified in this question for the fiscal years 1944-45 to 1952-53, inclusive, were as follows:

| Province | (a) Individual Income Tax | (b) Corporation Income Tax | (c) Succession Duties |
|---|---|---|---|
| Nova Scotia | $ 160,248,970 | $ 96,082,273 | $ 7,171,162 |
| New Brunswick | 115,953,669 | 74,590,803 | 7,122,956 |
| Prince Edward Island | 12,477,382 | 8,827,657 | 564,725 |
| Ontario | 3,312,998,903 | 2,428,678,845 | 130,583,803 |
| Manitoba | 344,128,215 | 221,608,271 | 11,488,331 |
| Saskatchewan | 228,543,819 | 41,938,441 | 4,987,695 |
| Alberta | 380,090,384 | 161,347,867 | 10,574,285 |
| British Columbia | 719,231,091 | 564,767,222 | 26,813,085 |

TAX COLLECTIONS, NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Dufresne:

What amount was collected in the province of Newfoundland, from the entry of that province into confederation to 1953 inclusive, on account of (a) individual income taxes; (b) corporation income taxes; (c) succession duties?

Mr. McCann:

The amounts of tax collected by the Department of National Revenue, taxation division, in the province of Newfoundland from the entry of that province into confederation to the end of the fiscal year 1952-53, were as follows: (a) individual income taxes, $23,910,626; (b) corporation income tax, $32,818,424; (c) succession duties, $884,852.

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE, SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Shaw:

1. How many residents of Saskatchewan received (a) old age security payments; (b) old age assistance payments, during April, 1954?

[Mr. Speaker.]

2. What was the total amount paid to Saskatchewan residents during April, 1954 as: (a) old age security payments; (b) old age assistance payments?

Mr. Martin:

1. (a) 42,923; (b) 4,636.

2. (a) Gross payments, $1,748,680; (b) amount paid by the province including 50 per cent federal share, $175,348.

SEDITIOUS WORDS—CHARGES UNDER CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Knowles:

1. How many (a) charges; (b) convictions; (c) acquittals; (d) charges not proceeded with, have there been in Canada between January 1, 1919 and January 1, 1954, under section 134 of the Criminal Code, chapter 36 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, or its predecessor if the section number has been altered during that period?

2. How many of the charges, convictions, acquittals and charges not proceeded with, as noted above, arose from (a) speaking seditious words; (b) publishing seditious libels; (c) being a party to a seditious conspiracy?

3. What was the "style of cause" in each conviction noted in question 1 above?

4. Have any charges been laid under the above-noted section of the Criminal Code since January 1, 1954? If so, how many?

Mr. Dickey:

1 (a), (b), (c) and (d). Information not available. While certain sections of the Criminal Code are, for statistical purposes, coded separately, in most cases the practice is to group certain sections of the code together under a number of general headings. Offences under section 134 of the Criminal Code are included in the general heading "Various other offences".

Questions

2. Information not available. See answer to No. 1.

3. Information not available. See answer to No. 1.

4. Information not available. See answer to No. 1.

TOBACCO EXPORTS TO HOLLAND

Mr. Nesbitt:

What were Canadian exports to Holland of (a) burley tobacco; (b) flue-cured tobacco; (c) cigar leaf tobacco; (d) dark air cured tobacco; (e) all other Canadian tobacco, in quantities and in value, for each of the years 1945-1953 inclusive?

Mr. Dickey:

STATEMENT SHOWING CANADIAN EXPORTS TO HOLLAND OF TOBACCO DURING THE YEARS 1945 TO 1953

| Year | Burley tobacco | | Flue-cured tobacco | | Cigar leaf tobacco | | Dark air cured tobacco | | All other tobacco | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Lb. | Value | Lb. | Value | Lb. | Value | Lb. | Value | Lb. | Value |
| | | $ | | $ | | $ | | $ | | $ |
| 1945 | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... |
| 1946 | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... |
| 1947 | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... |
| 1948 | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... |
| 1949 | ... | ... | 17,277 | 2,677 | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... |
| 1950 | ... | ... | 865,796 | 165,754 | 136,555 | 12,288 | ... | ... | 8,248 | 824 |
| 1951 | 166,472 | 38,288 | 519,551 | 95,957 | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... |
| 1952 | ... | ... | 294,459 | 102,907 | 3,895 | 304 | ... | ... | ... | ... |
| 1953 | ... | ... | 252,479 | 66,205 | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... | ... |

DIPLOMATIC SERVICE—PROPERTY AND PERSONNEL

Mr. Hodgson:

1. In how many countries does Canada own buildings and property to house the diplomatic corps?

2. What was the cost of each property and buildings?

3. What was the cost of upkeep and salaries for such service in each country for the fiscal year 1953?

4. Has the government purchased properties in any other countries since January 1, 1954?

5. If so, in what countries and at what cost?

6. In what other countries does the government contemplate inaugurating diplomatic service?

Mr. Pearson:

1. As at December 31, 1953—16.

2. Australia—residence for high commissioner, $42,189.52.

China—compound containing chancery and residence accommodation for staff, including cost of constructing buildings, $200,635.

Cuba—embassy residence, $84,750.

Denmark—legation residence, $136,728.73.

France—embassy residence, $239,499.32.

Property on which to erect an office building, $298,078.39.

Office building for Canadian delegation, and staff, to North Atlantic council, $115,466.40.

India—compound containing office buildings, official residence of the high commissioner and quarters for domestic help, $155,289.95.

Ireland—embassy residence, $32,292.

Italy—a building site, purchased with blocked funds, which may be sold later, or on which embassy buildings may be constructed, $186,391.65.

Japan—compound containing embassy office buildings and official residence, $200,000.

Questions

Additional property on which to erect staff residences and other buildings, $71,819.50.

Residence for an officer of the mission, $27,463.52.

The Netherlands—embassy residence and property on which staff residences could be constructed, $194,128.80.

Building site for a Canadian government office building, $41,751.75.

New Zealand—building site, $9,140.

Pakistan—a staff beach hut for hot weather use, $1,604.

South Africa—residence for high commissioner, $70,613.07.

United Kingdom—Canada House, $1,539,073.11.

Residence for high commissioner, $92,695.41.

United States—New York—residence for the consul general, $27,500.

Washington—office building, $477,754.35.

Embassy residence, $305,278.87.

3. Australia—upkeep, $341.57; salaries, $944.08.

China—upkeep, $123.96; salaries, $2,577.62.

Cuba—upkeep, $3,988.09; salaries, $1,478.05.

Denmark—upkeep, $241.96; salaries, $987.62.

France—residence upkeep, $1,495.23; salaries, $2,776.53.

North Atlantic council, upkeep, $245.42; salaries, nil.

India—upkeep, $2,909.87; salaries, $506.97.

Ireland—upkeep, $301.69; salaries, $2,286.65.

Japan—upkeep, $390.49; salaries, $2,618.05.

The Netherlands—upkeep, $3,180.70; salaries, $902.30.

South Africa—upkeep, $1,232; salaries, $501.76.

United Kingdom—office upkeep, obtainable from Department of Public Works; salaries, $5,548.98; residence upkeep, $1,808.93; salaries, nil.

United States—New York—upkeep, $74.58; salaries, nil; Washington—office upkeep, $5,970.68; salaries, $9,152.86; residence upkeep, $2,367.91; salaries, nil.

4. Yes.

5. In Indonesia—an embassy residence, $53,439.74.

A residence for a foreign service officer, $32,383.50.

In New Zealand—a residence for the high commissioner, $56,000.

In Karachi—a duplex to serve as a staff residence, $84,615.64.

[Mr. Pearson.]

(N.B.—These figures are subject to slight revision when details are received.)

6. I would refer the hon. member to my statement on Friday, May 28, when, as he will recall, I said that I was not yet in a position to give full details concerning the opening of new diplomatic missions. The proposed extension of the jurisdiction of Canadian ambassadors already serving in the region to allow them to represent Canada in the Dominican Republic and the Republic of Haiti has already been announced. Negotiations are still continuing with certain other countries. The hon. member will understand that we are under obligation to the authorities of these latter countries to keep matters confidential until such times as may be mutually agreeable to the governments concerned.

GENERAL A. G. L. MCNAUGHTON

Mr. Diefenbaker:

How much has been paid to General A. G. L. McNaughton, year by year, from 1949 to 1953 inclusive, for (a) salaries; (b) living allowances and expenses?

Mr. Pinard:

| (a) | Salary |
|---|---|
| 1948-49 | $10,000 |
| 1949-50 | 7,500* |
| 1950-51 | 15,000 |
| 1951-52 | 15,000 |
| 1952-53 | 15,000 |
| 1953-54 | 15,000 |

*Supplemented by military pension.

| (b) | Allowances | Expenses |
|---|---|---|
| 1948-49 | $14,392 | $1,813.70 |
| 1949-50 | — | 2,338.94 |
| 1950-51 | — | 2,651.35 |
| 1951-52 | — | 2,363.64 |
| 1952-53 | — | 2,182.59 |
| 1953-54 | — | 2,195.90 |

EXPORTS TO RUSSIA

Mr. Castleden:

1. What is the total quantity of articles exported from Canada to the U.S.S.R. in each of the export classification items, during the period February 1, 1954 to May 31, 1954 inclusive?

2. What was the total value of the articles exported from Canada to the U.S.S.R. in each of those classification items in terms of Canadian dollars exclusive of freight, insurance, handling and other charges, for the same period?

Mr. Dickey:

1 and 2. The Canadian exports to U.S.S.R. during the period February 1 to April 30, 1954 (latest figures available) were gifts valued at $25.

NAVAL FUEL OIL, ESQUIMALT

Mr. Pearkes:

1. To what company or companies has the contract been let for the supply of naval bunker and diesel fuel oil for the naval fuel depot at Esquimalt, British Columbia, for the year 1954-55?

2. Did the specifications for the tenders call for prices at a refinery, as well as for those delivered to H.M.C. dockyard, Esquimalt?

3. Did the specifications require that the oil supplied should be Canadian oil obtained from Canadian firms?

4. Is the fuel being delivered, produced from Canadian or foreign crude oils?

5. Do the companies, or company, to whom the contract was awarded, operate permanent installations, or was the contract awarded to an oil brokerage firm?

6. Is the fuel for the 1954-55 contract to be delivered at H.M.C. dockyard, Esquimalt, or is delivery to be taken at a refinery and conveyed to the naval fuel depot by Canadian naval tanker?

Mr. Bourget:

1. Naval fuel oil (bunker)—White Petroleums, 900 Pacific St., Vancouver, B.C. Naval diesel fuel oil—British American Oil Company Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

2. No.

3. No.

4. Foreign crude oils.

5. White Petroleums—no permanent installations—B.C. distributor for Union Oil Company of California. British American Oil Company Ltd. operates permanent installations.

6. Naval fuel oil (bunker) to be delivered by contractor's tanker to H.M.C. dockyard, Esquimalt. Naval diesel fuel oil to be delivered by contractor by pipe line at Vancouver and Esquimalt, and by contractor's tanker and/or tank wagon or in 45 gal. drums to H.M.C. dockyard, Esquimalt. Neither of these requirements will be delivered by Canadian naval tanker.

TREASON, ETC.—CHARGES UNDER CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Knowles:

1. How many (a) charges; (b) convictions; (c) acquittals; (d) charges not proceeded with, have there been in Canada under the Criminal Code from its adoption in 1892 up to January 1, 1954, under sections 74(2), 76, 78 and 79 of the Criminal Code, chapter 36 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, or their predecessors if the section numbers in question have been altered during that period?

2. What was the "style of cause" in each conviction noted above?

3. Have any charges been laid under the above-noted sections of the Criminal Code since January 1, 1954? If so, how many?

Mr. Dickey:

1. (a), (b), (c) and (d).

1 (a), (b), (c) and (d). Information not available. While certain sections of the Criminal Code are, for statistical purposes, coded separately, in most cases the practice is to group certain sections of the code together under a number of general headings. Offences under the sections stated above are included in the general heading "Various other offences" which includes, as well, offences under several other sections of the Criminal Code.

2. Information not available. See answer to No. 1.

3. Information not available. See answer to No. 1.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY REPORT

Mr. Bell:

For a copy of the report of an economic study of the proposed St. Lawrence waterway, made in 1951 by the Department of Trade and Commerce, as referred to by the Minister of Transport at page 1666 of Hansard of December 6, 1951.

He said: I ask leave to withdraw this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Motion dropped.

LAKE WINNIPEGOSIS—DREDGE

Mr. Zaplitny:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other communications, from August 1, 1953 to date, exchanged between any department of the government and any person or persons with respect to the question of an additional dredge to be used on lake Winnipegosis in Manitoba.

ARMED FORCES—LAYCOCK REPORT

Mr. Dinsdale:

For a copy of the Laycock report on the subject of recreation and related services for Canada's armed forces.

Mr. Campney: I ask that the hon. member allow this motion to stand for today.

Mr. Speaker: Motion stands.

WHEAT

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT LONDON CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent). What arrangements have been made for the Canadian representation at the meeting of forty nations taking place this week in London to discuss the world wheat situation? Also I would ask the Prime Minister to give the house all the information he can as to the instructions the Canadian representatives have received.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Perhaps I may answer for the Prime Minister. Canada is to be represented at that meeting, as usual, by a member of the Canadian wheat board. The member of the board is instructed to make such representations as are in the interests of Canadian producers. No special instructions have been given by the government. It is a matter for the wheat marketing authorities of the exporting countries, and the marketing in Canada is the responsibility of the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Drew: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the situation which exists has not the government discussed this matter with the representatives of the wheat board and indicated to them some course they would suggest as being advisable, in view of the special situation in respect of the wheat surplus at this time?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I know of no special situation. Canada has a wheat surplus, as has every other producing country. Parliament, in its wisdom—and I think wisely —made the marketing of wheat as the responsibility of the Canadian wheat board; and the government assumes that the board is capable of carrying out that responsibility, without special instructions from the government.

POST OFFICE

GOVERNMENT MAIL WITH INSUFFICIENT POSTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Postmaster General (Mr. Cote). Perhaps in his absence it could be answered by the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Campney). Twice within a month, and to the same person, mail was sent short of postage by the Department of National Defence. In my view a government department should be the last in the world to send out mail short of postage. If the minister wishes, I could give the name of the person who received it.

Mr. T. A. M. Kirk (Parliamentary Assistant to the Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the question is deserving of serious consideration. Departmental officials will look into the matter and report at the first opportunity.

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE PAYMENT OF DEATH BENEFITS UP TO MAXIMUM OF $5,000

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 463, to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act.

[Mr. Drew.]

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 1—Part I.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to make an extended statement about this bill because, as hon. members are aware, it was considered by the committee on banking and commerce. I was not present at the hearings of that committee but I understand the main subject matter discussed there was whether or not the bill should be dealt with at this time, or should be postponed. It is on that point I wish to say a word.

As I said in my speech on second reading, this is a bill which, in the view of the government, rounds out the superannuation act, an act which in my opinion is one of the best, if not the best, superannuation plans offered by any employer in Canada. Those of us who have had some legal experience—and that covers a good many of us—know that unfortunately a good many people do not make adequate provision for the liabilities they leave at death. We see a good many hard cases where provision of some additional liquid resources would prove greatly advantageous either to the dependents of the deceased or to those who are responsible for discharging the obligations.

This measure was given very careful consideration by the government before it was decided to introduce it. It is, of course, a compulsory plan. Any plan of this sort must be compulsory in order that the benefits of the low rate may be available. My understanding is that the superintendent of insurance gave evidence to that effect before the committee.

I think it is unlikely that there could be any substantial variation in the plan as presented. In other words, I think the plan must be taken as a whole. It is true that you could, for instance, exclude women from its operation. But I am one who does not believe that women should be discriminated against in matters of this kind. I can see no reason why they should be excluded. They would have to be excluded as a whole; you could not exclude unmarried women and include married women, and so on.

In the case of similar plans, I may say that they are compulsory and are made applicable to everybody. For instance, the plan in the Bank of Canada applies from the lowliest stenographer to the most senior executive. The same applies to the plan in force in Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It has been suggested that we ought to put this over for further consideration. Well, I am not one who believes that a plan of this kind, which has been carefully considered by the actuaries and by the technical people who studied its soundness, would be benefited by a postponement. I think the committee should bear in mind that, as I am told, something over 400 civil servants die each year, and that if this plan is postponed for a year—as I understand has been suggested—it becomes quite clear that the dependents would lose the benefit of the provisions of this measure.

For the price of four or five packages of cigarettes a month a civil servant can provide a liquid amount of up to $5,000 to discharge the obligations he leaves behind him upon his death. So far as I am concerned, I think it is an excellent plan. As I have said elsewhere, I only wish I were eligible to participate in it.

For reasons, some of which I have indicated, the government can see no good reason for postponing this plan.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, the minister has really stated very clearly the chief differences between us. Speaking of the desire on the part of the civil servants for further consultation he says: "I am not one of those who believes that a plan which has been carefully considered by the government", and so on—I did not get the exact words—but in effect they were "needs further consideration."

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. member usually says something worth hearing, but if he does not speak into the microphones we can hardly hear him down here. Will he speak a little louder and into the microphones?

Mr. Macdonnell: I am grateful for the implied compliment. One often wonders whether one is worth hearing. I was assured the other day that I very seldom am because I am always wrong. However, a man who is wrong can be useful in strengthening other people's views.

The minister has put his finger at once on one of the main points I want to emphasize. We have a situation here where more than 200,000 of our fellow civil servants, without anything approaching what may be called consultation, are being dragooned into a scheme which it is perfectly clear from the evidence already available, fragmentary as it is by reason of the short time, many of them are against. As a matter of fact, if on May 26, when this bill was introduced, anyone had predicted to me that the situation we find this morning could have arisen I could hardly have believed it.

What is the situation as we sit here this morning? On May 26 the bill was introduced. On May 27 the banking and commerce committee met, and the energetic and expeditious chairman told us that the various civil service organizations would be coming before us, and he gave us their names. He said that they were not prepared to make representations that morning. That was not a very surprising statement considering that they represent large groups—one represents something like 60,000 civil servants—from end to end of Canada, and they all have wide dispersion of their membership. But the chairman said, perhaps with a little unconscious humour—no, not unconscious, the chairman always has his sense of humour with him—"in order that they should be given ample opportunity we will call our next meeting on Wednesday afternoon." That was, I think, six days later. Ample opportunity to discuss with tens of thousands of members across Canada a complicated measure running into 30 or 40 clauses!

It is true the bill had been discussed after a fashion with what is called the national joint council. The minister seemed to think that the national joint council consultation had carried the matter a considerable distance; but from the evidence before us it would appear that there is very little to that point, and I shall come to it in a moment or two.

There are two points that I wish to emphasize. First of all there has been no proper discussion with those concerned. Second, there is an element of compulsion which was unanimously objected to by the representatives that came before us. We of the opposition discussed this in the committee at some length and moved that the bill be not reported on the ground that all civil servants' representatives asked for further opportunity to discuss it, and that it was a reasonable request. That motion was dealt with in less time than it takes to tell it. No answer was given to the arguments, such as they were. The chairman merely put it to a vote, and you will not be surprised, Mr. Chairman, to know what the result of the vote was.

This bill purports to benefit civil servants, and if we in the opposition thought it was calculated to do this with a maximum of justice or with even a minimum of injustice we would be wholeheartedly for it.

Mr. Abbott: It certainly does not benefit the government.

Mr. Macdonnell: I do not know; it is very likely that it will not benefit the government. I am glad the minister is beginning to feel that way, and of course—

Mr. Abbott: This is a bill purely for civil servants.

Mr. Macdonnell: If the minister will allow me to make my remarks I shall be happy. The bill was really prepared, one might fairly say, behind the backs of the civil servants. I will explain that. They were given no chance to consider it. It was discussed with the national joint council, and the minister referred to what he called the endorsation of the national joint council, but I shall be at some pains to point out that apparently the actual civil service organizations do not consider that the national joint council has any right to speak for them. Nor can I discover from the evidence that it purports to do so. It was a mere conduit pipe which received information. If it had been able to pass on the information it received then it would have been discharging a useful function; but it was bound over to secrecy, and since then there has been, as I shall point out later from briefs presented to the committee, widespread complaint which I shall go into more in detail.

The government is forcing the matter through, though they know there is widespread disapproval. They cannot know how widespread it is because there has been no time. For example, one of the organizations that came before us had 80 branches. Immediately the information was available to them they had communicated with the 80 branches, but they had had time to hear from only 5. Seventy-five have not yet been heard from. Incidentally, evidence was given to us that in one case a week was required; in other cases a good deal longer. In any event, of course they could have got the full report if there had been time. I shall quote later from the briefs to point out the extent of the disapproval.

Actually, when I saw those briefs I said: "Well, the party is over; the government will never go ahead immediately in the face of this; they will at least consult with these people." I could hardly believe my ears when this thing was rammed through the committee. As I say, they did not deign even to answer the arguments that were made. That was not flattering, but I think we knew the reason. The reason was that there was to be no opportunity for discussion. The word was that it was to be forced through; it had to go back by such and such a day. I think the chairman of the committee had precious little discretion in the matter.

I want to quote a little later on at some length from the briefs. I am not going to go into the details of the many recommendations made. I am going to dwell wholly on the two chief points, the points which I think should have moved the government to delay. The first of them is the universal feeling that there should have been further consultation. The second was the universal feeling that the objections to compulsion were already strong, and evidence to indicate it was likely to be just as strong when the full reports were in.

In introducing the bill the minister said, as reported at page 5103 of Hansard:

> —I can inform the house that the national joint council has endorsed the broad outlines of the plan as a whole.

Well, I have not found that impressive. It might have been impressive if in fact this national joint council had had any authority and still more if this national joint council had been able to pass on the information that it got, which indeed it got months ago. But in fact this national joint council, as I shall point out, has no authority and did not pretend to have. Mr. Johnston representing the civil service association of Ottawa says:

> The national joint council . . . was not in a position to make any endorsation of the plan, as most of the staff side representatives were only able to express their views as individuals.

And again he says:

> This proposal was presented to the council in a very unusual way, which involved the strictest secrecy on the part of all members of the council. The staff side were unable to deal with this subject in their normal way, by taking it back to their associations for guidance.

One would not only regard that as the normal way; one would regard it as a very reasonable way. Indeed it is the only way in which sensible people should deal with each other.

There were two courses open to the government. One was the natural, effective, normal, almost inevitable course for reasonable men, and that was to carry through effective consultation in the ordinary way, which they have often done before, with these civil service organizations which are serious representatives of the civil servants. Among them they represent, I should think, well over 62,000 out of the more than 100,000 civil servant involved.

Now, at the other extreme, there was another course no reasonable man would recommend but which might have been logical, namely, to have no consultation of any kind but just to ram it through and care nothing for what anyone said. As I said, that would have been to me wholly unreasonable. I suppose you can be logical and at the same time utterly unreasonable. But at any rate neither course was followed. A middle course, which had the worst of both elements in it, which was neither one thing nor the other, was followed. The government made a show of consultation by talking to the national joint council but it made this procedure wholly useless by imposing secrecy on them. In other words, there was just a pretence or a show of consultation which meant not a thing in the world.

As I shall show later, when the bill became public most of the civil service organizations reported widespread disapproval of the vital details. Every organization wanted more time for consultation and every organization raised complaints about the compulsory feature of the bill. Now, we in the opposition are I suppose rather old-fashioned people, but we have the idea that consultation would be natural, particularly if you are placing burdens on people. After all, it is not as if the government was coming along with a Christmas present.

Even one week of consultation showed so much opposition that it seems to me it is utterly preposterous for the government to force this measure through. The only motto I can think of which motivates the government is, "treat them rough and tell them nothing". That, I believe, was a recipe once given for dealing with a man's wife but I do not think it should be extended to more human relationships.

Indeed, we argued these points and we asked for delay. We moved that the committee do not report the bill, but we were voted down. We are used to that, of course, but it would have been nice to have some reasons. Mr. Chairman, we would have felt that perhaps we were discharging our duty better if the government had felt it worth while even to give us some reason. As I say, they are placing burdens on these people and there is no reason why they should just shove it through. But the government pays no attention to the request of tens of thousands of civil servants who ask for a chance to be heard.

Well, Mr. Chairman, one wonders whether ordinary decent human relationships should not prevail in relation to civil servants. No one can deny that this bill works hardship on them. The minister will not deny that and his answer is that in order to be effective the bill has got to be compulsory.

Mr. Abbott: Does my hon. friend really think there is any hardship involved?

Mr. Macdonnell: I will try to establish that.

Mr. Abbott: I would like my hon. friend to elaborate on that if he will.

Mr. Macdonnell: I will deal with that point to the best of my ability. No one denies it will work hardship on many people. For example, I would like to know whether the minister knows what percentage of civil servants die after 70 and therefore can obtain no benefit. I saw the figure the other day and it surprised me because it was so large and I do not like to quote it.

Mr. Abbott: But in ordinary group insurance one must die before 65.

Mr. Macdonnell: A very large number die after reaching 70 and will obtain no benefit at all. There is widespread evidence and nothing to discount the evidence that the unmarried woman, and indeed other women, are very much opposed to this. Are they not entitled to be heard? As I say, one can only assume that the government is prepared to ram the bill through regardless of any injustice involved.

Now I come to the armed forces. There was an attempt made to consult the armed forces but some of us have been in the armed forces and we regard consultation within the armed forces much as would a man from Missouri. When we learned that consultation had been held and a few area commanders were able to report back that the majority of the soldiers were in favour of the scheme I argued quite strongly in committee that I just could not conceive that any man of 17 or 18 years of age, who enlisted for three years, would be in favour of this. He would probably know of his own knowledge that the average enlistment is about five years—out of the 25,000 annual enlistment there is an average wastage of 16,000. I argued that it was impossible to believe that if that young man had it made clear to him, first of all, that when he left the service, unless he elected to continue as a member of the plan and pay his subscription for the rest of his life, perhaps for 40 years, he would lose money, he would lose all benefit. It is impossible for me to conceive that such a man would be in favour of this thing. The answer was made, "Well, of course, he likes it because of the combat feature." But there is a Pension Act and I think that if that young man, as regards the combat feature, had been reminded of the rights of his dependents or relatives under the Pension Act it is just not conceivable that he would have been in favour of it. Yet, we are asked to believe that many were in favour.

Now, coming back to the question of consultation with the civil servants I want to read a word again from Mr. Johnston who spoke on behalf of the association:

> The procedure followed by the government . . . was, in my opinion, an indication that the government lacked confidence in its employees and their associations to handle a subject of this nature.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, got lost. It should never have come here at all. It should have been used merely as a basis for discussion with those whom it was contemplated to benefit.

How does good legislation arise? Does it arise in this shotgun manner? Or does it arise by a much better and more judicious procedure? I will quote the minister against himself, and on this point I refer to the Bank Act. Was that brought before us in this shotgun manner? No! The minister took pains to give a hearing to those who would validly be asked to express their views. The minister attended some meetings, took the time to answer questions, and showed the greatest interest in the matter. After weeks, and indeed months, of careful discussion the committee report was brought down. Again when there was a complete revision of income tax some years ago I very well remember the trouble the minister took to communicate with all sorts of organizations.

Now, is this measure so unimportant? It involves 200,000 people. Was there no reason that this should have been discussed? Why should the civil servants and members of the armed forces be treated in this fashion? The only answer I can give when I look at the minister's action here and compare it in the other cases is that when a good man goes wrong he is most dangerous because he remembers the times when he was right and he becomes just as stubborn in the wrong as he previously was in the right. At any rate, though the minister had this consultation with the national joint council it really was utterly meaningless because he bound them over to secrecy, and there was no proper and adequate consultation with the representatives of those involved.

This bill puts a burden on civil servants in many cases while giving them no opportunity to be heard. Many will pay for years and receive no money back. If a private employer did things in this fashion there would be an outcry. Would it not have been fairer to assemble certain facts—for example to find out how many are carrying as much insurance as they think they can under the present Civil Service Insurance Act and otherwise; to find out how many women regard this procedure as a star chamber imposition, not for their benefit but for the benefit of others whom the government has selected as the objects of their benevolence. Would it not have been better to find out in a real way the attitude of the men in the forces? Let us take one small suggestion that came out. I do not propose to refer to it at length, but it struck me as common sense having regard to what the minister said when introducing the bill. He described it, in a manner of speaking, as a kind of burial measure. I notice that one of the representatives suggested that if it was a burial measure, perhaps $1,000 would be enough with which to get buried.

As I listen to my own words, inadequate as they are—200,000 people being dragooned in this fashion; it sounds almost incredible to me that it should be so—I ask myself, am I unfair? To answer that question I shall quote from these briefs at some little length. I shall be as brief as I can, but I think it is essential that these things should be on the record.

First of all, as to the matter of consultation, I read from the brief of the Civil Service Federation of Canada:

> The various staff associations affiliated with the Civil Service Federation of Canada protest strongly the fact that they were not given an opportunity to study the plan before the bill was introduced.

That is plain enough. Then I come to the Amalgamated Civil Servants of Canada. They say as follows:

> However, in the matter of death benefits, and not to labour the point, no organization on the national joint council had authority to either consult national executives or membership until Wednesday, May 26th. On which day the second reading of the bill was given in the House of Commons. From that date to this being far too short a time to afford proper consultation.

I will say that it was too short a time. They continue:

> Therefore, in consulting the national joint council some twenty individual views were obtained by the government. It being clearly understood that no staff-side representative could be considered as speaking for his or her organization.

I now come to the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada which says this:

> The professional institute regrets that the public service was not asked beforehand for an expression of the opinion of a good cross section of all units on the radical departures involved in this plan as the armed forces were.

They were optimistic in thinking that the armed forces were asked. The brief continues:

> In effect the preliminary negotiations for this scheme took the form of consultation with members of the national joint council and one of its subcommittees as individuals only, not as representatives of their organizations. Consequently, the view of the institute is that the public service was not given an opportunity to consider the proposed plan before Tuesday, 25 May 1954.

Then I come to the Civil Service Association of Ottawa which says this. They refer to what Mr. Taylor had said on Thursday last and state:

> It is my understanding that the national joint council, as an employer-employee council, was not in a position to make any endorsation of the plan, as most of the staff side representatives were only able to express their views as individuals. This proposal was presented to the council in a very unusual way, which involved the strictest secrecy on the part of all members of the council. The staff side were unable to deal with this subject in their normal way, by taking it back to their associations for guidance. The staff side cannot function as part of the council unless the association representatives can speak on behalf of their associations. And unless the staff side is allowed to proceed in this way, the council itself cannot function as an employer-employee body.

The procedure followed by the government in only allowing the members of the council to make personal suggestions on the plan presented to them was, in my opinion, an indication that the government lacked confidence in its employees and their associations to handle a subject of this nature.

Last I come to the comment of the Department of Veterans Affairs organization which says this:

We feel strongly that any bill concerning the entire body of civil servants should be brought to the attention of that body before such legislation is introduced in the House of Commons.

They feel that strongly, and any sensible person should feel it strongly. I come now to the compulsion side and I read from the brief of the Civil Service Federation:

It is recommended that civil servants be given the option as to whether they contribute in accordance with the amount of their salary or up to $3,000, say, to a grade 4 level; and on the amount of their salary or $5,000 above that level.

And again at page 2:

It is recommended that the compulsory feature of the act in regard to employees having reached age 60 be changed to give them the right to elect for participation;—

Then I read from the brief of the Amalgamated Civil Servants of Canada:

I am in no position today to support the bill in all its aspects. From a sampling of opinion received to date, however, it appears that the principle of the bill is widely acceptable. On the other hand, opposition is developing to the compulsory feature. In evidence of this I would cite a telegram received from our Vancouver local council, a council with a membership of close to one thousand.

"Vancouver local council agree in principle to life insurance (death benefits) scheme but protest compulsory clauses—"

Again at page 2 of the brief of the Amalgamated Civil Servants of Canada:

I would, therefore, on behalf of my organization very strongly and heartily support the principle of the bill, and in this also express to the government our appreciation. On the other hand, I must just as strongly oppose the compulsory features of the bill, and request the same be amended so as to provide that the plan become elective.

Then the professional institute at page 3 of their brief say:

The compulsory nature of the proposed scheme is objected to by a number of individual public servants. It is felt that they have certain rights as individuals, irrespective of what the majority view might be. The large number of public servants who will benefit from the scheme are not entitled to enjoy unusually low premium rates if these rates are based on compulsion applied to individuals who would prefer not to be insured.

It is, therefore, felt that those already in the civil service should be given an opportunity to remain out of the scheme, thus staying under the Civil Service Act, section 56.

The Ottawa association at page 8 of their brief say this:

—and that further consideration be given to the universal, compulsory feature of the present bill.

In the light of these quotations, Mr. Chairman, is it any wonder that strong objection is taken to the compulsory nature of the bill by the veterans affairs organization? They comment on the compulsory feature as follows:

The majority of us are very gravely concerned with the arbitrariness of the legislation . . . Such disregard of the will of the people seems to bear the taint of authoritarian paternalism . . .

Yet the government goes on from one arbitrariness to another. I have already referred to the fact only a fraction of the civil service could be communicated with in the time available. I have pointed out the extraordinary unanimity and forcefulness of their objections on the two counts that I have stressed. Yet the government goes on. When there was some apparent delay last week I had hoped that it might be possible that the arguments put forward in the committee had had some weight. But if indeed there ever was any thought of adopting a reasonable course, it has evidently been put aside. I can only urge the government that even yet they adopt a course which, I submit, would be reasonable and natural and, indeed, with a good employer, inevitable.

I urge them to deal with their employees as responsible men and women. As I said earlier, why should the civil servants be singled out for this kind of treatment? Are they not responsible people? Are they not people whom we all respect? I said in the committee when I opposed the reporting of the bill that if it were reported in its then form it would be reported utterly regardless of the weight of evidence before the committee, and I can only hope that this committee will consider the weight of evidence and will not follow the course taken by the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, we had a good deal to say about this measure when it was before the house at its previous stages, so my remarks on this occasion will be very brief. We indicated then that we supported the legislation and that is still our position. We think there is something to be said by way of criticizing the government for having failed to consult those concerned in advance. I need not go into that because that criticism has been made both in the banking and commerce committee and just now by the hon. member for Greenwood. That criticism has also been expressed by some of those speaking on behalf of certain civil service organizations. As I say, I think the government has that criticism coming to it.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, we feel that the offer made to civil servants in this legislation is a beneficial and advantageous one. One of the reasons that I wish there might have been consultation in advance is so that our civil servants might have been sold more fully than has been the case on the advantages of the plan being introduced by this bill. There is a question I should like to put to the minister which perhaps puts the point across. I should like to ask him, on behalf of non-civil servants who have indicated to me they would like to take advantage of this plan, whether it will be extended to include those outside the civil service.

Mr. Abbott: Whether what?

Mr. Knowles: Whether it will be extended to make it available to people outside the civil service. The minister shakes his head, but my question makes the point, namely, that there are people who will not have the advantage of this plan who see it as a very good one. As I say, I wish there had been an attempt made before the legislation was brought in to sell the good points of the plan to the civil servants.

A good deal is being said about its compulsory feature. I notice that if you are opposed to the plan you call it a compulsory plan and if you are for it you call it a universal plan. The two words mean the same thing, in the end. But the minister this morning, and others who have spoken on the legislation previously, have pointed out that the only possibility of any scheme of insurance being provided at low rates arises when you have what we call universal coverage. Something more on that basic principle will be heard from us before the week is out, certainly before the session ends, with regard to the desirability of a national health insurance program.

I think too that an educational job might have been done and may well yet have to be done with regard to the nature of the protection that is afforded by the plan. People are confused about insurance. I do not think that insurance agents are to blame for all that confusion but they certainly help to create it by trying to sell people these policies under which they are supposed to win either way. People do not realize that in any kind of insurance that affords protection there is a certain part of the cost which is the cost of the protection, and if you do not die within the period in which you are protected that element which covered the cost of protection is, to use a colloquial term, "down the drain". What people do not realize is that if you outlive the period for which the protection was provided and thereby do not get your money back, you have not lost, you have won. You have won in the sense that you are still alive.

As I say, I think a more useful job might have been done by way of educating civil servants as to the nature of the protection that is being afforded by this plan and as to the exceptionally low rates that the civil servants are getting. As I say, we wish there could have been consultation in advance, and we hope that even yet a greater job of educating civil servants as to the nature of the plan will be done. But even so that does not detract from the fact that this is a very beneficial and advantageous offer that is being made by the government to our civil servants.

A number of things came out in the committee that interested me. I think it is splendid the way in which the $5,000 ceiling applies even in the case of persons who might now get as much as $2,500 by way of the two months' death benefit if they are in a high bracket, whereas those a little lower down will get a greater advantage if they die while in service. I think too that the right afforded to a civil servant who has been in the service for five years to take the insurance with him and carry it for the rest of the allotted time, if he wishes to do so, is a good idea. In view of that, I do not think it is so terribly farfetched for me to ask my question whether a plan like this might be made available to the people of Canada generally. In closing I can sum up the way we feel about this measure by saying that I have run across a good many people who will not be able to qualify for this protection because they are not civil servants who wish that this plan could be made available to them.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps I might say one word here. Hindsight is always very informative, and I am more than prepared to agree with the hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the explanation and public relations aspect of this measure and its presentation could have been improved on. Frankly, to me it seemed so beneficial, so desirable, that I was quite astonished at the opposition which developed in some quarters. I fully realized of course that in a universal plan of this kind you cannot please everybody, but I did feel that it would and should receive wide acceptance.

The ministry of finance is certainly not a portfolio in which one is trained in idealism, but I did feel that the great body of civil servants would be ready to contribute to a plan from which a good many would never derive any direct monetary benefit in order to benefit those who would need it very badly. The difficulty of prior consultation can be appreciated by the committee. Once a plan of this sort is discussed generally the older civil servants particularly would say: My goodness, I hope that can be made applicable pretty quickly because it would be of great value to me if anything happened to me. Therefore the government felt, having studied it as carefully as it could, having consulted the national joint council which is representative of most, if not all, of the great civil service organizations, that it was justified in bringing in the measure, and I am convinced we were.

So far as the lack of prior explanation and public relations are concerned, I must take the greatest measure of responsibility for having failed to do that, but I am convinced it is a good measure and I am convinced it is a measure which should be adopted at this session.

Mr. Low: Mr. Chairman, I think that the minister could well have delayed his remarks until he had heard the views of all the different groups in the house.

Mr. Abbott: I only wanted to deal with the public relations part of it.

Mr. Low: I am going to have something to say about the public relations part of it too. I think there is too much inclination to disregard certain points of view in this house, and I protest against it. At the same time, I must be very critical of the way this whole matter has been handled by the government. No matter how much the minister may protest that the government gave adequate consideration to this bill, the fact remains that the civil servants were not given an opportunity to give the bill that careful consideration they so much desired, and which should have been given. The government stands condemned today because of the fact they are attempting to ram something down the throats of people who do not want it. It may be said that there will eventually prove to be a vast majority of civil servants who are in favour of it; that may be. But we do not know it now. They have not been given the chance to register their views. Only a comparatively few were given an opportunity to register an opinion, and among those who did there was a very strong protest against the way this whole thing had been handled.

I am not arguing for one moment the good purpose of the bill. I think the purpose is good. Certainly anyone who has taken the trouble to look at it can see the purpose is good, and the principle involved is sound. I am amazed at how lightly my hon. friends to the right are prepared to take this matter of the serious abridgement of the right of people to choose whether they shall come into a thing of this kind or stay out.

Mr. Fleming: Hear, hear.

Mr. Low: I am amazed at it. It is so easy to argue that because a thing looks good to a certain number of people, it must be good for all the people. I am amazed at how easy it is for my hon. friends to say that the cheapest thing is the best thing. If you carried that argument to its logical conclusion, the only conclusion to which you could come would be that it would be wise for some central agency of this country to buy up all the food that is necessary for the people, sit them down to the same kind of table and the same kind of food all over the country because you can get it cheaper that way. It is ridiculous to argue that sort of thing. I maintain that the important principle at this time is the principle of compelling people to give up their right of choice.

Mr. Knowles: Would you want education changed from a public to a private basis?

Mr. Low: Are you going to carry that argument to its logical conclusion, and take away all the rights of the people? I know the hon. member would because that is the principle by which he lives.

Mr. Knowles: Nonsense.

Mr. Low: That is the principle of socialism; that is the thing to which we object, and object strongly. As I said, I believe the government did a very poor job of selling this business to the civil servants. Certainly the government gave the measure consideration, but they did not give the civil servants an opportunity to learn, to study and to come in voluntarily.

Now, this is the position that we take. We do not object for one moment to surrendering some of our freedoms in the way that we want to surrender them, but we do object to people coming along and taking them away from us when we do not want to surrender those freedoms. The hon. member for Greenwood hinted at something that I have said on numerous occasions, when a man marries a wife or takes a job with an employer, he does give up some of his freedom to his wife or to his employer as the case may be. He does it in a way that he wants to, and that makes a difference.

Mr. Abbott: Would my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. Low: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: Does he believe that contributions to a superannuation fund for pensions and so on should be on an optional basis?

Mr. Low: I believe as a matter of fact that in many cases—the minister knows this as well as I—if you give people a chance to study the matter and come to a conclusion of their own, they may elect to come into the scheme. However, they are certainly going to set their feet against being forced into it without consultation. I shall say this, too. No majority, I do not care how big it is, has a right to expect benefits at the expense of the minority without the minority giving their consent; that is what we call government by consent. It is the very basis of democracy, and the rights of the minority have to be respected.

Mr. Abbott: It could be called government by veto, too.

Mr. Low: We have government by veto, too, but there are ways by which the government can overcome any opposition to this measure. They could have gone into it with a view to informing those who are going to be considered, giving them all the information which they needed, so that they could make up their own minds. Of course, that is a selling job.

I just ask the minister how far he would get in a move like this amongst a group of farmers in western Canada, or any other part of Canada, who may be thinking in terms of some sort of compulsory marketing legislation. I wonder whether he would get the view of their counsel, talk to them for a while and get their consent and then try to go ahead on the basis of compulsory marketing being forced on all the farmers in the country? He would find himself in a hornets' nest right away.

Mr. Nicholson: That is being done now with wheat.

Mr. Low: Yes, but that came after consultation; the people in the field gave their consent, the farmers organizations and the farmers themselves. People, as I say, do not mind surrendering some of their right of choice, provided they have an opportunity of giving their consent. I say that in this case they were not consulted and they were not given a chance to give their consent; that is the important thing against which I am speaking today. As a matter of fact, I go along with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I think it might have been possible, had the government been prepared to take a little more time, to bring in the majority of the civil servants into the scheme. I am not convinced, even then, that it would not have been possible to provide a form of cheap insurance for all who wanted to take part in the scheme, even if there were small groups who wanted to contract out. I have not been convinced of that because I do not believe the investigations were carried far enough along that line.

Even if it costs the vast majority of civil servants a little more it would have been justified by the fact you would have given certain groups who are now strongly opposed to being forced in a chance to contract out; that is an important principle. People should be given an opportunity of contracting out of something in which they do not want to participate, particularly if the difference is not too great. I do not argue for one minute that we do not have to surrender some of our right of choice in the common good; the extent of it is the important thing about which I am arguing. I do not want this principle to be carried too far forward or we will some day find ourselves without any freedoms. I value those freedoms, and I am prepared to fight for them.

Mr. McIlraith: Because of a rather long association with legislation pertaining to the superannuation of the public service of Canada I was particularly interested in this bill now before the committee. Since the legislation was dealt with by the house a great many protests have been heard about what is stated to be the compulsory feature of this bill. Quite frankly, because of those protests I was very much concerned. They were obviously put forward by people who were quite sincere.

Being concerned with the representations made I took the opportunity of trying to find out if there was any way of meeting the wishes of those persons or meeting the difficulty about which they spoke. I came to the conclusion that there was no way of meeting their wishes. I came to the conclusion also that some of them misunderstood the bill, and after a few weeks of discussion it became apparent, as I found out more about the whole measure and about possible alternatives, that there was some real lack of appreciation of the actual content of the bill. I became very much concerned also with the possibility of delaying this measure until the next session of parliament.

I must, I think, tell you quite frankly that I came to the conclusion that I for one could not take the responsibility of asking for delay of this measure until the next session of parliament, because the measure was too beneficial and involved serious consequences to too many people for me to take the responsibility of taking such a position. For that reason, here today in committee of the whole and well aware of the opposition to the bill, I am hoping that it will proceed through all stages in the ordinary way.

There are one or two other matters which have arisen in discussion that concern me. The hon. member for Greenwood referring to the national joint council, and the evidence before the committee on banking and commerce, stated that some witnesses representing the council—and I do not have the names before me—took the position that persons who are members of the national joint council considered this measure but that they considered it only as individuals. He went on to say that they had had no opportunity to consult with civil service bodies at large, or with civil servants generally.

I would point out to the hon. member that the persons on the national joint council, the two sides of it, were chosen either by the employee organizations or the government presumably because of their representative capacity and their knowledge of all matters affecting the particular group of civil servants whom they were supposed to represent. So that it is scarcely a complete answer for any of them to say that they could consider the matter only as individuals. It seems to me that is overstating their position. And if they seek to continue to represent that body—and by the way it does excellent work, and is a splendid body—they must take a position that involves them in accepting wider responsibility, when they have no opportunity of pre-consultation.

That brings me to another point in the discussion today that is quite alarming, and that is that members of parliament do not assume the responsibility for the legislation but rather they ask that the persons affected by the legislation have a right to pre-consultation. Well the whole kick some years ago was that public legislation was announced out of the house, that it was not announced in the House of Commons.

This legislation was introduced where it should properly be introduced, namely, in the House of Commons. I was quite concerned to hear the so-called question of principle being debated back and forth. I hope the hon. member for Peace River will not misunderstand me, but I took from his argument a virtual request for a referendum. That is the very principle of parliamentary government we have not adopted in this country. It is directly and fundamentally opposed to our system of government. I believe that, however difficult it may be for us, no matter how unpleasant it may be, we have to assume the responsibility as members of parliament for the legislation. And I do not think we can go back and say, "Well, this group of employees, this association representing the public service, did not have a chance to consult its body of civil servants before giving an opinion."

Mr. Low: On a question of privilege, I should like to straighten out my hon. friend on one point. I did not suggest a general referendum, at all. I did suggest consultation with those who are concerned in this whole matter, because it is not a general principle that can be applicable to the whole of Canada.

Mr. McIlraith: I am glad to have my hon. friend's explanation; but I hope that explanation makes it very clear that it is consultation after it is introduced in the House of Commons, not before it is brought to this parliament.

Mr. Low: I was referring to consultation before the bill was brought in; and that is where it should have been.

Mr. McIlraith: I must make it clear that I cannot accede to any proposition that involves consultation as to the contents of a bill of this sort before the measure is brought to parliament. I quite agree it is unfortunate that in this case we were not able to have as much consultation after it was brought in as might have been desirable. But I cannot accede to any proposition that—

Mr. Lennard: The Legion does it in connection with veterans affairs.

Mr. McIlraith: I still take the position that I cannot accede to that proposition.

Mr. Knowles: There was also advance consultation with respect to the members of parliament pension plan and also on the old age security and old age assistance plans.

Mr. McIlraith: That was a different thing. The old age assistance plan was worked out by a committee of parliament, and the proposed legislation was not submitted first to the group benefiting immediately from it. In any event, if my remarks do imply criticism of any legislation—and I cannot think of any at the moment—they will have to stand as they are.

It seems to me that when the benefits of this legislation are fully understood they are of a nature that will make the legislation wholly agreeable to the majority of those now opposing it. In dealing with them I found in case after case, when they came down to a discussion of the personal situation of a civil servant who was opposed, in discussing estate matters with him, or matters affecting dependents or potential dependents, in a surprising number of cases it turned out that the very person protesting against the legislation came to appreciate it, and did appreciate it, when it was understood.

Mr. Low: Would it not have been better to have that appreciation before the bill is rammed through parliament?

Mr. Abbott: There are 200,000 of them.

Mr. McIlraith: It would be better to have that consultation first. But the bill is not being rammed through parliament at all. And if anyone wishes to get into that discussion, I will discuss it.

Mr. Macdonnell: Can you give that assurance in writing?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, I am putting it on the record in Hansard right now.

Mr. Macdonnell: That is, that it will not be rammed through.

Mr. McIlraith: It is not being rammed through; that is a misuse of the English language.

Mr. Macdonnell: Then I will change it to "jammed".

Mr. McIlraith: No, it is not being jammed through either. Under our system of parliament we give members of the opposition the opportunity—and properly so—to debate matters on a motion to go into supply and to debate the throne speech—

Mr. Knowles: How kind of you!

Mr. McIlraith: And that does involve government measures being delayed until private bills, and other matters, are disposed of. A great deal of the time of parliament is taken up with such measures. Mind you, I support that system, but I do not think we should try to confuse the public as to what the consequence of that system is. The consequence is that public measures like this are held back until just about the end of the session, because parliament did not give an opportunity for them to go forward.

Mr. Lennard: Why did you not bring it in earlier?

Mr. McIlraith: I admit the difficulties in the situation. I think our present parliamentary procedure is a very good one; but let no one misunderstand what holds back government legislation from appearing on the order paper earlier in the session.

Mr. Lennard: Because you do not have it ready, that is the reason.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps I am out of order in discussing this; but I know something about that, too. I have sat here many weeks with pieces of legislation ready to go forward, which could not go forward because private members' legislation, and other matters which are properly discussed by parliament, were under discussion.

In any event, reverting to the measure before us, I wish to make it perfectly clear—

Mr. Cardiff: You were not in favour of it.

Mr. McIlraith: I recognize the existence of the opposition to the bill, but I did come to the conclusion that I at least was unable to find any workable solution that would meet that opposition and satisfy the ones opposed to the measure. I had also come to the conclusion that it would be indefensible—at least I would not take the responsibility of seeking to have this measure put over until the next session.

Mr. Fleming: This measure before us is an exceedingly important bill. Since I sat on the banking and commerce committee and there heard the evidence tendered to that committee by representatives of five of the recognized associations of civil servants I say to this committee that the overwhelming weight of that evidence is against pressing this bill under the present circumstances as a compulsory measure without consultation. There is the weakest case, among all the cases put before the house at this session, for proceeding with this measure now without consultation, and I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that the only reason why this bill is being pressed on the house as a compulsory measure at this moment is that the government's petulant, stiff-necked attitude, of which we see a great deal in this house, will not admit of any delay or brook any such thing as loss of political face.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, there was a purpose in referring this measure to the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member is never short of adjectives.

Mr. Fleming: That is a committee of fifty members of this house. That committee heard the evidence. The evidence of that committee, Mr. Chairman, became available in printed form to this house just one hour ago. How many members of this house have read the evidence taken before the standing committee on banking and commerce, that very important evidence that the house sought in referring the measure to that committee? Has the Prime Minister read the evidence? Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs read the evidence? Has the Minister of Transport read the evidence? Surely we can assume that the Minister of Finance has read the evidence over in the flimsy form, but I wonder how many of his colleagues have read the evidence taken before the banking and commerce committee, including as it did not only the briefs that were submitted by four of the five associations, the fifth putting its views forward in oral form, but also the questions put to and answers given by every one of those representatives. Let us know how many members of the government opposite have read the evidence.

An hon. Member: Has the hon. member read the evidence?

Mr. Fleming: Who said that? Stand up. Yes, I have read the evidence. I was present at the sittings of the committee and heard all the evidence. I have read the evidence twice since, and I hope that the hon. member who has just now contributed an interruption as the sum total of the value of his contribution in debate will take the trouble before the vote is taken on this measure to read the evidence, and read it all—and I tell him right now there are over one hundred pages of it.

I say this, no member of the government opposite has any right to ask this house in these closing stages of the session to be parties to ramming this measure through, a compulsory measure, without at least having done those who appeared before the committee the simple justice of reading their representations, reading their evidence in detail and then addressing their minds to the issues presented by that evidence.

Now, sir, it was interesting to hear the contribution from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in this debate. He was not a member of the committee. I would have been interested to hear the views of the C.C.F. members who were members of the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. Nicholson: Give them a chance.

Mr. Fleming: Well I am looking forward to hearing them, because it would surpass my comprehension that they could urge this measure being jammed through after hearing the evidence they did from responsible representatives of the various civil servants' organizations; but it does not surprise me to hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre urging the use of compulsion as in this measure. It is part and parcel of the regimentation that is inherent in the socialistic ideas of the C.C.F. A measure that is compulsory and that involves regimentation is quite acceptable to them in principle.

Let us examine the scheme. What does it involve, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a question?

Mr. Fleming: With pleasure.

Mr. Knowles: Does the hon. member support universal education and universal taxation to pay for it?

Mr. Fleming: Yes, I do, and I wish the hon. member had a little more of it; he would then be a wiser man.

Mr. Knowles: Such regimentation; I am surprised!

Mr. Fleming: There are several outstanding features of the scheme set out in this bill. The first outstanding feature of the scheme, what one witness described as a fundamental feature of this present scheme, is that it is compulsory. Willy-nilly, every member of the civil service, every member of the armed forces, whether he wants it or not, is to be subjected to these deductions from his pay or salary.

Mr. Abbott: Just like his superannuation.

Mr. Fleming: Oh yes, but the superannuation is quite a different situation, because everyone going into the civil service today, and for years past, yes for a generation, has known that there was superannuation—

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Mr. Fleming: —and that there were deductions. A man who is in the civil service today has not any option in this matter of insurance at all. There is no suggestion in this bill, there has been no suggestion from the Minister of Finance of meeting the point raised in several of the briefs that if you are going to have a compulsory feature, at least you have no right to apply it to those in the civil service today; at the very least you should limit the compulsory feature to those who enter the civil service after today, so that persons entering that service have a knowledge that they are to be subjected to these deductions, and will know that that is the position in the service which they are entering. There has been no—

Mr. McIlraith: Will the hon. member permit a question just on that point? Applying that principle, then, all the superannuation legislation from 1944 on could not have been made applicable to the civil servants, because in each case it was made applicable on a compulsory basis to civil servants already employed.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, that is no reason whatever for applying the insurance scheme on a compulsory basis. If the hon. member is so wedded to the idea of compulsion, then I am quite sure the bill will find approval in his mind. I do not believe in applying it on a compulsory basis.

Mr. McIlraith: The point that I was seeking to make was that the principle, right or wrong, was the same in the superannuation legislation. It might be a wrong principle. The point I was seeking to make was that there was no differentiation.

Mr. Fleming: If the hon. member is agreed that it is a wrong principle—

Mr. McIlraith: No, I am not agreeing to that.

Mr. Fleming: I was speaking of the features of the bill. I said the first one was the compulsory feature. In the second place we are asked to apply it to all personnel of the service and all personnel of the forces.

The third feature is that the benefits are of a very limited nature. That is something that I think has escaped adequate appreciation in the way the government has put this before us or has discussed it at another time.

These are extremely limited benefits. There is nothing provided except a death benefit. It is the barest kind of insurance, the barest you can imagine. There is no secret about that, and we well know that when the civil servant passes the age of sixty and enters his declining years the benefits begin to undergo reduction as well, and by the time he has reached the age of seventy there is no insurance left, none whatever.

Let us recognize at once, Mr. Chairman, that this is not the ordinary kind of group term insurance with which many hon. members are familiar. Let us look a little further at the attempts that have been made to compare this scheme with existing schemes of group insurance. The fact of the matter is that there is no fair basis of comparison of this scheme with any existing scheme.

Now, we had some curious assertions on the part of Liberal members in that committee. The hon. member for Vancouver South unburdened himself of the authoritative assertion that this was the kind of insurance which if written through some private organization would cost 80 cents per thousand per month, or double the figure named in the bill. Well, I hope the hon. member has learned the error of his ways because the facts were put before the committee by Mr. MacGregor, superintendent of insurance. Mr. MacGregor disposed completely of nonsense of that kind. He drew attention in the first place to the fact that the largest group covered by any system of group insurance in Canada written hitherto is 15,000. The group proposed by this measure numbers 230,000, more than 15 times the size of any existing group covered by a group insurance scheme in Canada and, as Mr. MacGregor pointed out, this is of a different order entirely. I would refer members to what he said at page 1736 of the evidence when, comparing this scheme with any other existing scheme, he said it was extremely difficult to make any valid comparison and, comparing this scheme with any other group insurance scheme in existence, he said it was of a different order entirely.

Mr. MacGregor pointed out as well that the cost of a scheme would be governed, broadly speaking, in inverse relationship to the size of the group. Here you have a group 15 times the size of the maximum group under any existing group insurance scheme in Canada today. If the cost moved down with the upward extension of the group involved it would appear, Mr. Chairman, that the proposed cost should be very low and we therefore ought not to accept the views of those who try to promote the idea that this is cheap insurance.

The hon. member for Vancouver South also heard Mr. MacGregor say in the course of his very impressive evidence that schemes of group insurance in Canada today run down in cost to 50 cents, 45 cents, and 42 cents per thousand per month. There are schemes of group insurance in existence in Canada today that are cheaper than this scheme. The cost of this scheme is not just 40 cents per thousand per month. The government is contributing the equivalent of eight cents per thousand per month. Mr. MacGregor stated that you could reckon the cost of this scheme at 48 cents per thousand per month, and there are in existence in Canada today group insurance schemes with smaller numbers involved than the 230,000 involved here on which the cost is less than 48 cents per thousand per month, as is provided in this bill.

Mr. MacGregor's evidence has torn to shreds and tatters this airy talk from the government about this being such a cheap scheme of group insurance. Has anyone else been asked to submit figures on cost so that we might at least test whether this is the lowest cost available? The answer, Mr. Chairman, is no. The life insurance companies offered their services but they were not asked even to quote any rates or make any studies. It was the government's decision that no one should be consulted as to any other rates, and consequently we have one rate put before us and no basis of comparison on the part of anyone else who might have been willing to quote it. We know, according to the evidence, that this scheme carries a higher rate than is in existence in certain other schemes of group insurance in Canada today.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us recognize also that group insurance of the kind in existence in Canada today in many group schemes is quite unlike this scheme in that this one offers no benefit except the death benefit. There are many advantages which the normal system of group insurance has which are not offered by this scheme. Surely, Mr. Chairman, that ought to be taken into account in weighing whether this is a cheap, reasonable, or expensive scheme. If hon. members look at page 1738 of the evidence they will find that Mr. MacGregor gives a catalogue of the various benefits normally written into policies of group insurance and he indicates some of them which are very valuable.

He refers to the fact that there is often an opportunity given for increasing the total amount of death benefit, and that there is provision for converting to other types of life insurance when the individual ceases to be a member of the group for any reason. He points out, in addition, that these policies of group insurance very often include disability benefits and also—and this is very important—that in these insurance schemes involving a group of employees the employer normally pays a much larger relative proportion of the total cost than the one-sixth which the government is proposing to pay under this scheme.

The government, Mr. Chairman, has of course the advantage here with respect to this type of insurance because, as we were told by Mr. Taylor and Mr. MacGregor, the government has all the superannuation records available today, and adding the insurance to the superannuation figures on the card or record of any employee means that there does not have to be the same duplication of work as would be required if the insurance were placed elsewhere. That may be the advantage that weighs with the government and it ought to show itself in a very cheap scheme.

Mr. Philpott: It is a cheap scheme.

Mr. Fleming: Cheap in terms of the benefits offered, but what justifies this great authority, the Secretary of State, with all his lack of experience, saying this is a cheap insurance scheme? I would like to tell him that if he knew a little more about the evidence given by those who are competent to give evidence on this matter then he would not talk so glibly about cheap insurance because the evidence indicates that this insurance is not as cheap as it ought to be.

Mr. Pickersgill: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chevrier: Why do you not resume your seat when there is a point of order being raised?

Mr. Fleming: I thought the hon. member wished to ask a question.

The Chairman: Order. Is the Secretary of State rising on a point of order?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member has mentioned the office I hold and attributed something to me. But I have not uttered one word today on this matter. However, since I am on my feet I might just say I wish this scheme had gone into force on June 1 last year.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, may I give a word of explanation and tender an apology to the Secretary of State. I heard an interjection from that direction and it so happens that from where I sit the Secretary of State's seat is in direct line with that of the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member for Vancouver South has become a ventriloquist as well as a columnist.

Mr. Fleming: I heard the interjection coming from that direction and because most of the interjections, particularly the empty ones, in the House of Commons come from the Secretary of State I naturally assumed that this particular interjection came from the Secretary of State. However, I am told that is not so, and I extend an apology to the hon. gentleman and I direct my remarks to the hon. member from whom the interjection came. I am told that was the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Pickersgill: I accept the hon. member's apology and if I may make another empty observation I might point out to the hon. member that a few moments ago he split an infinitive.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, if I split an infinitive I can assure the hon. gentleman it was inadvertent because I abhor the practice, but perhaps there may be something less serious about splitting infinitives than splitting hairs about what constitutes cheap insurance, and I might inform the hon. member that all he has had to say so far has been splitting hairs, and that is borne out by the evidence which was placed before the banking and commerce committee.

I might also ask the hon. gentleman the same question I asked the Prime Minister, and those members of the government who were in the house at the time, whether he has read the evidence—the approximately 100 pages of it—taken before the banking and commerce committee. If he has not done so I say he has not the right to come before the House of Commons and to support this bill. In the face of the evidence that was given there on the part of representatives of responsible associations of civil servants, what right has he to disregard the views of the civil servants? What right has he to disregard the evidence given in the banking and commerce committee? It makes a farce out of parliamentary procedure. It makes a hollow, shrieking farce out of the reference of these matters to standing committees of the house for study.

Mr. Pickersgill: "Mockery" is the word.

Mr. Fleming: It makes a farce of it, as I said; and there is not anybody who contributes more to making a farce out of things than does the hon. member who has just interrupted me.

I now have a word to say on the compulsory features of this bill. The government has made light of the compulsory features of this bill. We had a most revealing statement from the Minister of Finance this morning.

Mr. Abbott: As usual.

Mr. Fleming: In his jocund, offhand manner—

Mr. Abbott: Thank you.

Mr. Fleming: —he said, "I think it is an excellent bill and therefore the government thinks no good purpose would be served by delay". There you have it, Mr. Chairman. The minister thinks this is an excellent bill. It does not matter what other people think.

Mr. Abbott: I did not say that.

Mr. Fleming: It does not matter what was the overwhelming weight of evidence given before the committee. It is enough that the minister who introduced this bill thinks that it is an excellent bill. Therefore no good purpose would be served by further deliberation, further study or further consultation on the part of those upon whom exactions are to be imposed under this bill.

No, Mr. Chairman, in the government's thinking there is no place for consultation. The minister thinks this is an excellent bill and that is enough; and apparently, as far as the House of Commons is concerned, that is to be enough for the majority in the house that normally supports the government, because this bill is to be jammed through today without those hon. members being given an opportunity even to read the evidence that was taken before the banking and commerce committee.

There are 104 pages of that evidence. Every word of it ought to be read, weighed, carefully considered and digested by every member of this house before he commits himself on a bill involving serious compulsory features. Nobody in the House of Commons or outside of it knows where the preponderant feeling of those to be affected by this bill lies with respect to it. There is not any member of this house who has any right to say that he thinks it is desired by a majority of those to be affected, either in the civil service or in the armed forces, because nobody has that kind of information. On the contrary such limited information as is available with respect to the feeling within the civil service indicates that there is a strong feeling against it and that they want time to consider it.

Mr. Chairman, if this were an optional measure, there would then be a perfect reason for the government to say, "We are not forcing this on anybody; nobody who does not desire it is required to take it". There would then be a perfectly good reason for going ahead, if it were the best scheme available, after due consideration of the possibility of improving it without its being a compulsory scheme. But when you are making it a compulsory scheme surely the minimum obligation is to know the feeling on the part of those to be affected by it.

That leads me, Mr. Chairman, to make some observations on this matter of consultation. There was a curious confusion of principle on the part of the hon. member for Ottawa West in what he had to say on the subject of consultation. I know this was not intended on his part, but I think I must make the matter quite clear. What was proposed in this matter of consultation was not that the bill be submitted to some group outside of parliament for veto. It is rather that the scheme involved in the bill should be the matter of consultation between the government on the one hand and those who are to be directly affected by the scheme on the other. It was a scheme, not a bill, that was discussed by the government, principally through the deputy minister of finance with the national joint council. But let it be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that every member on that national joint council had his lips sealed by the government.

This matter was first mooted last November. Consultations with the national joint council were held, but the members of that national joint council were told at every stage that they were not to discuss this matter with anyone outside the national joint council. Not one of them was permitted to discuss this scheme even with the executive of his own organization. There was on the part of the government an attempt to place on a group, a score of individuals, the responsibility of attempting to speak for civil servants numbering over 110,000 persons. If you look at the evidence you will see that those who sat on that national joint council, whose lips were sealed by the government, and who were denied any opportunity of consultation with those they represented, whether at the executive level or at any other level, said that they were not prepared to take that responsibility. They rebelled at the idea of having imposed upon them by the government the responsibility for speaking on this matter for over 110,000 civil servants.

I ask hon. members of this committee to weigh that fact carefully. As the hon. member for Ottawa West has said, it is true that these members sat on that national joint council as representatives of important groups of civil servants. But let us consider their position. They sat as individuals with sealed lips. Then the chairman of the banking and commerce committee—and this was a curious development—produced some newspaper reports, one I think in February and one in April, indicating that there had apparently been a leak and that the details of the scheme had leaked out. The chairman of the committee asked these five representatives of important associations of civil servants if, in the light of the fact that the cat had escaped out of the bag through these newspaper reports, they did not think there had been a satisfactory substitute for consultation. The answer given by those representatives was clear and convincing. They said that the fact that in one newspaper report details of surprising accuracy leaked out sealed their lips more tightly than ever. How could they make any comment upon a newspaper report under those circumstances? How could it be a matter of discussion by them with those they represented? They made it abundantly clear that both before and after those two newspaper reports leaked out their lips were sealed and there was no consultation.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, all of those associations of civil servants, speaking through their representatives, appeared before the committee and said that to the extent to which they had had, in one week, and one week only, since the bill was introduced in the house, limited and scant opportunity to consult executives or to send wires to local branches with only the most meagre details of the scheme, they asked for delay; the request was unanimous. Every one of them said that this matter ought to have further study. Every one of them said that they had not had the opportunity they ought to have had to discuss the matter with their executive and their branches. They also uniformly said that to the extent to which the opinion of their members in various places in Canada has been expressed to them in the short few days that had been available to them—just one week—strong opposition had been registered to the compulsory feature of the bill.

I think it is fair to say, Mr. Chairman, that the idea of optional insurance appealed to them. They liked the idea in general, but not on the compulsory basis. Therefore they made a plea—and it was an urgent plea in every case; an extremely strong plea—that this matter should not be hustled through now but that they should be given the opportunity of consultation.

There is no derogation from the sovereign rights of parliament, Mr. Chairman, in a matter of this kind when those who are principally affected by the measure, those whose salaries and pay cheques are hereafter to suffer deductions willy-nilly whether or not they want the insurance, come before a parliamentary committee and, with reference to a measure that has been introduced in the House of Commons and sent to that parliamentary committee for study, ask that the measure be delayed and that they be given the opportunity that I conceive to be the right of any employee of any employer to sit down with his employer and talk to his employer before that employer begins to make deductions from his pay envelope. There is the simple gist of the situation. There is no derogation from the rights of parliament involved or suggested in the kind of consultation that is sought.

Surely the federal government of this country ought, in so far as it is an employer, to try to be an exemplary employer.

Mr. Abbott: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming: Surely, Mr. Chairman, with the acquiescence in that position of the Minister of Finance, when a scheme is brought forward that does involve a compulsory imposition on every employee the employees, through their responsible organizations, have a right to be heard by the employer, to put their case before the employer and to have that case carefully considered, not brushed off in a way that is denying today to 80 per cent of the members of this house any opportunity of so much as reading this evidence, let alone weighing it and giving to it that consideration that these employees of the federal government have the right to expect. If this measure has all the merits that the government claims for it, then why should the government doubt that these merits will become apparent to the civil service when the civil service has an opportunity to study the measure? Why should the government deny to the civil service the opportunity of studying the measure and making their views upon it known?

Then there is the matter of the armed forces. That was an afterthought after the original scheme began to take shape. There was some limited consultation there, very limited indeed, but at any rate it was a form of consultation that was denied in any respect and in any degree to the civilian employees of the government. A directive was sent out by the Department of National Defence concerning the measure and a yes or no answer was sought, an expression on the part of what was thought to be "a good cross-section". We know the extent of the consultation in the case of two of the military commands. Twenty per cent was the total of the forces under the western command whose opinion was sought. The only other command concerning which we know the percentage of those consulted was the Quebec command where we were told it was about 50 per cent. That is what we know about consultation with the army. The only question put to them was: Yes or no, are you or are you not in favour of this scheme?

They were given no opportunity to express themselves on the compulsory feature. Here is what Mr. Armstrong, the assistant deputy minister of national defence, had to say on that matter as found at page 1732 of the evidence:

Q. And the directive called for a sample of opinion?

A. The directive called for a good cross-section of opinion.

Q. It was left to the area commander in each case to determine what is a good cross-section?

A. Yes.

Q. You did not stipulate?

A. No, we did not stipulate how much.

Q. I think we can appreciate the limitations of a "yes" or "no" answer. You would not expect anyone to draw an inference, Mr. Armstrong, as to what could be drawn, by way of inference, from these results as to the feeling of those consulted, if they had been given the opportunity of choosing between a compulsory plan and a plan that was not compulsory.

A. It would be quite a different question.

Q. Quite.

A. We did not ask them that.

Q. And I think you will agree no one could draw any inference as to the feeling of the men as between two such schemes as to what was done here?

A. No, I would agree that you cannot draw that inference.

That is not consultation, Mr. Chairman. We do not know how the matter was put to the limited number of men in these commands before whom it was put. We have some information about percentages in certain cases from commands in the air force and some in the navy. The lowest percentage of those in favour was in the navy in the ranks below chief petty officer. But, Mr. Chairman, we do not know how this was put before the armed forces even to the limited extent to which they were consulted. Was it done orally on parade? Was anything put before them that would enable the men being asked for a yes or no answer in a case like that really to weigh the details of a scheme of this kind?

Now, sir, in conclusion I ask this question with reference to delay. All that is asked for by those who represent these valued civil servants of Canada is delay, an opportunity to consult with those whom they represent, an opportunity to study the measure and an opportunity then to put their views before the government. The existing insurance scheme is still in effect. Under it 13,000 policies are in effect and, as Mr. MacGregor says, the scheme is working quite satisfactorily. This is a measure of very high importance. It has been talked about for a long time. There is no desperate urgency about it. As long as the existing insurance scheme stands those who appeared before us indicated that they did want to have the opportunity of consultation, that they did not want to see this measure rushed through now.

We realize that if this had been brought in at an earlier stage of the session by the government, as a measure of this kind ought to have been, there could have been an opportunity for consultation. But here we are within a matter of a few days apparently before the end of the session and we are asked to deny to these representatives of the civil servants the opportunity they ask for consultation. Mr. Chairman, if this matter stands for that adequate opportunity the measure is not killed. It is not killed unless the government decides to kill it because the government can introduce this measure or, I would hope, a measure without the compulsory feature in it, at the next session after there has been an adequate opportunity for consultation. That is what we are asking.

Indeed, sir, the civil servants, those who are to be affected by it, are not even being given the opportunity to "take it or leave it".

The government does not even say to them as individuals: "Take it or leave it". The government is rather holding a club over their heads today and saying: Well, you had better take this holus-bolus, the whole thing, or we will withdraw the measure and we will not introduce it again. What an attitude for the government to take! What irresponsibility! Delay does not involve the death of a measure of this kind unless the government itself chooses to impose the death sentence on the measure.

I plead again with the government not to press this measure, not to deny the opportunity for consultation to those who are going to be affected by it. I plead with the government to put aside just for once the attitude that they show so often, this attitude that I can best sum up in these words: "We will show you who is boss around here." We have seen that in this house. Let the government not take that attitude toward the civil servants. We in the opposition grow accustomed to it, but on this occasion when the civil service is involved can the government not relax just a little bit? Cannot the government give a little time? Cannot the government be reasonable about this measure, and sit down and discuss it in an amicable way as between employer and employee, both representing responsibilities that they have to carry and yet both realizing that they have an important responsibility to each other and that this measure should, so far as is humanly possible, be the best measure that the combined wisdom of the government on the one hand and those who are going to be affected by it on the other hand can devise?

Even in the limited time available, these representative civils servants' associations have brought forward a large number of changes that they desire. Perhaps some of them could be incorporated with time, and some of them perhaps cannot. I do not know. But I do know that they are all entitled to serious consideration because they are put forward by people carrying some responsibility in this matter. They are simply asking for delay. What right have we to shut the door in their faces, and deny them that delay for the purpose of consultation?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

---

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Chairman, as a member of the banking and commerce committee I, too, was somewhat disturbed to find that there was a considerable measure of opposition to this bill coming from the civil service. As a matter of fact I was undecided in my own mind as to just what was the right line to take with regard to this legislation, in view of that particular opposition. I took the advice of the hon. member for Eglinton before he gave it, and read the evidence given before the committee. I propose to read some of that evidence before I have finished this afternoon. I do this because there were some things that were not read this morning which strike me as being quite relevant to the matter.

I do think the government is due for quite severe criticism for the method in which this legislation was introduced. I am quite prepared to go along with the hon. member for Eglinton and others who have protested against the government's failure to consult the civil service, and also against the late date at which the measure was introduced in the house. I also think the minister himself perhaps is due for some criticism for the rather disingenuous way in which he introduced the legislation—that is to say, his determined effort to present it, not as a group insurance measure but as some other kind of measure. I can understand why he tried to do that; I can understand his reasons for doing it. Nevertheless I think it helped to add confusion to the picture.

The hon. member for Eglinton and the hon. member for Peace River have based most of their objections to the legislation on its compulsory nature. I suppose from one point of view one might say that we have no right to force things down people's throats, no matter how good for them, if they do not want them. On the other hand, today we are demanding of our government a degree of responsibility for public servants that is perhaps quite new in our history. I think most of us will agree that we expect the government to treat public servants with justice, and perhaps with a fair measure of generosity. I suspect that the families of many civil servants have been treated with considerable generosity on an ad hoc basis. For that reason I think we are justified in suggesting that if we are going to accept the principle that as a community we are responsible for those who serve us, then we have the right to demand that they comply with the most efficient and economical method of discharging that responsibility toward them. So I think we can discount that particular aspect of the opposition to the bill.

It has been said—indeed it was so indicated by civil servants who spoke before the banking and commerce committee—that there are a number of civil servants who object to this measure. At first glance I can readily see that there would be quite a number who would have objection to it. Those who have no dependents, and do not expect to see their lives take such a turn that they will have dependents during their service in the public service, would naturally view this legislation with a certain amount of misgiving. I refer of course to that large body of female civil servants many of whom, I presume—the younger ones—approach this matter as they do in so many other occupations, with the idea in mind that before long they are going to enter holy bonds and will no longer require the sort of coverage this legislation proffers to them. I think that is an understandable point of view on their part.

On the other hand we can counter that, I believe, by pointing out that very likely these young ladies will marry young men who are themselves in the public service, and the contributions they make to the scheme before marriage will have a direct bearing upon their own future, at some future date, should their husbands die. In fact, I think that if we examine most cases we will find that most people, no matter what their circumstances may be, have some relatives or semi-dependents who will be adversely affected both financially and otherwise by the death of that person. They might not always be conscious of it. Perhaps many young people do not realize that when a human being dies it is somebody's business to dispose of that human being. That in itself is quite a responsibility that falls on somebody else's shoulders.

We may not always be conscious of the fact—certainly a single person might not—that at some point such a person would present a problem to somebody else. This is a method of dealing with that problem. It has been suggested that one of the objectionable features in the legislation is that the contributors may contribute all their lives, right up to the time of retirement, and not receive a penny in return. That is quite true. But I believe that objection results from drawing a false analogy between this type of insurance and ordinary endowment life insurance. I believe a much more accurate analogy can be drawn between this sort of legislation and fire or accident insurance. And I am sure no one would suggest it is outrageous for us to have to pay fire insurance premiums on our houses and never have any fires. Because that, after all, is the basis of the objection to this legislation. The purpose of the measure is to protect relatives from the disastrous results of untimely death in the public service. And for that reason I do not think we can expect to have any features other than the very limited benefit to which the hon. member for Eglinton has objected.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo).]

This morning the hon. member quoted from the proceedings of the committee on banking and commerce, and suggested there was evidence to show that the scheme was much more expensive than need be, or than could be provided by private insurance companies. I do not read the evidence in that way, at all. In fact, I find quite different evidence given here. While it is true that Mr. MacGregor did mention a number of group insurance schemes on which the premium was much lower than indicated here, at a later point in his evidence he pointed out that in those instances there were always some features in those group insurance schemes which rendered it possible to have very low premiums. As a rule, of course, it was a group in a particularly low age group, such as one finds in department stores, places where there is a quick turnover of labour and where the middle-aged are very quickly weeded out.

Mr. Macdonnell: May we have the reference?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Yes, I have the reference here. It is to be found at page 1740. In answer to a question Mr. MacGregor had this to say:

> Q. You mentioned before the supper hour, some companies, such as the aircraft companies, and chain store companies, had a low net premium which would compare with this 40 cents. Might not that be for younger employees?
>
> A. In every case, doctor, there is an explanation. I could cite groups where the cost is relatively high as well as the ones which I have cited where costs are relatively low. In the last instance the explanation is usually that the average age is very low or that the maximum amount is very low for the higher ages.

On page 1747 Mr. MacGregor gave further evidence which I thought was very interesting. This was with regard to the necessity for keeping the premium low in this scheme, because young single men, according to Mr. MacGregor, could go to a company and get an individual one-year term policy for probably $7.50 or $7.20 a thousand per annum, which works out of course to sixty cents or a little over sixty cents per thousand. Therefore it was said in those schemes to which he was referring we had to keep it low down otherwise these young people would not participate in it. The point that occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, is that these young people eventually will become middle-aged people and finally they will become old people and will not be able to derive benefits from those schemes.

The principal objection as I see it, the factor that the hon. member for Eglinton finally got around to agreeing to this morning, was that the scheme was probably a fairly good one but that it was being forced down the throats of civil servants against their wills. He might be right in that. It is quite possible that there are a number of civil servants—in fact I know there are; I have had some of them speak to me—who make very strenuous objections to this legislation; but, on the other hand on balance we have to support it because in this day and age we do assume, as I say, a tremendous amount of responsibility for our public servants, and because we assume that responsibility we have the right to say on what terms we shall discharge that responsibility, and we demand co-operation of public servants who, after all, also demand that responsibility from us. We have the right that they should co-operate with us.

It has been suggested of course that the great shortcoming is the fact that people pay in and when they are old they draw nothing out of it. Well, I think we have to face this fact, Mr. Chairman, this very harsh and bitter fact. As an equity in a building gets lower and lower as that building gets older and older, so we have to accept the fact that when we get fairly well along we have very little but sentimental value for our relatives and that we should not expect to have a cash value at that time. This thing is designed to cover those who have a cash value for their relatives during that period when they have a cash value. When they get past that stage then those relatives presumably have reached the age where they can assume responsibility for them. Therefore while, as I say, I was disturbed by this objection on the part of the civil servants, in answering that, as I see the course I should follow, I have, after reading over the evidence and thinking over the matter very carefully, come to the conclusion we should support this measure, particularly as Mr. MacGregor in his evidence to the banking and commerce committee suggested that it will be necessary to review the rates from time to time to see that they carry out the purpose of this legislation.

Mr. Pearkes: In addition to the civil servants who are affected by this bill there are over 112,000 servicemen, men in the armed forces. If the civil servants had an opportunity of expressing their views on this proposed legislation, the same facilities for the expression of views did not exist in respect of the men in the armed services. Word was sent out in a coded message to the commanders in the various areas and it was marked "confidential". One can easily imagine what would be the action taken by an ordinary commanding officer who received a confidential message in code. He would express his opinion as to the effect of this legislation on the men under his command. But it would appear that some security was broken because early in April I received a wire from British Columbia, the essence of which was: We understand that the men of the armed services are being told that they are not to take out any more life insurance with private companies because there is going to be a compulsory life insurance scheme introduced by the government. They did not believe that they had any choice whatever in this matter. They believed that they were taking out a life insurance scheme in which they would be able to make payments which would accumulate over the years of their service and, eventually, when they died, there would be benefits coming to their estate. But when you come to read the provisions of this bill and the purpose for which it is brought in you sense that they are not going to get any life insurance in the usual understanding of that term which would be handed down to their estate, but that they are going to pay a yearly premium against the possibility that they will die during that year.

The purpose of the bill, as it was given to the committee, is that it is to cover the cost of the last illness and death and those expenses which are consequential upon it. I should like you to consider for a minute how it is going to apply to the servicemen. I say that it will apply only during the year in which they are making their contribution. They are in fact gambling that they will die this year. There are not many young men at the ages of 18 to 21 who want to bet that they are going to die in the next twelve months. Actually the government is betting on an odds-on favourite, and they protect themselves by saying that when the serviceman reaches approximately the age that he may expect to die, namely, seventy, he will not be able to get any of the benefits at all, and all the money that he has paid in during his service and afterwards, if he desires to go on contributing, will be lost. I say there are few young men of service age who would want to enter into a bet of that kind.

The average man who joins the service is between the ages of 18 and 25, and the normal term of enlistment is for from three years to five years. During that time, when he comes up for his enlistment first and his enrolment, or when he takes on again, he has to be subjected to a very thorough medical examination. He knows that he is fit. The very duties that he has to perform keep him fit. His chances of dying at an early age fortunately are very remote. But this is to provide for his last illness and burial expenses. One of the conditions upon which he enters the service is that he will receive free medical attention and, in addition, if he dies during his service the burial expenses will be paid on his behalf. Therefore, as far as the main purpose of this bill is concerned, the young soldier, sailor, or airman is not going to get anything in so far as the major benefits are concerned.

If upon the completion of his service he decides that he is going back into civilian life he may continue the payments plus an additional contribution. If he retires, as most of these young men do, before he is 30 years of age he has got to keep on making contributions for 30 or 40 years until he finally reaches the age of 70 when he will not be called upon to make any more contributions because he will not receive any benefits after that.

I would like the committee to consider what this is going to mean in so far as the cost of administration on the part of the government is concerned. Figures given in "Canada's Defence Program", the so-called white paper for 1954-55, give us some idea of the turnover in the armed services. The wastage in the navy, army and air force during the year 1951-52 amounted to 11,903; during the year 1952-53 the wastage was 16,658; and during the year 1953-54 it was 16,297. I think these figures demonstrate how these accounts are going to pyramid. Is the Department of National Defence going to send out monthly notices to the various men who have retired to the effect that their 40 cents is due and they are in arrears for the preceding month?

Mr. Abbott: It will be the entire responsibility of the ex-soldier.

Mr. Pearkes: I know it will be the responsibility of the man involved but they will still have to send him an account.

Mr. Abbott: If he does not make his payments the insurance lapses.

Mr. Pearkes: Yes, he loses it, but that man may be up in the north country and he may be away for one year and unable to pay the amount he has to contribute. This man cannot renew because once he is in arrears he has lost all the money he has paid into the scheme.

Some reference has been made to the war risk or combat clause, and I understand that if there is a war the men serving in the theatre of operations will be covered by the contributions they make, and they will be contributing towards their last illness and their burial expenses while the war is going on. But this last illness and the war burial expenses are already provided for in peace as in war and, furthermore, if they are killed in action their widows receive a pension.

It may be that the Minister of Finance and Minister of Veterans Affairs got together and discussed this, and it may be they have decided that the pensions now being paid to the 19,700 widows of war veterans in Canada are not adequate, and that some form for increasing their pensions should be adopted. If that is the case then the simplest thing to do would be to bring in an increased scale of pension for the war widows. I do not believe there would be very much objection in this house if that were done. But this is a very roundabout way of making provision for an increased pension for the widows of the future.

Then, again, the man who is on active service has an opportunity of taking advantage of the veterans insurance scheme. I am not going to extend my remarks beyond that otherwise than to allow my memory to wander back some time to that period when I first joined the services close to 50 years ago. At that time the recruit, more or less as a matter of course, bought the beer for his corporal. Under this scheme it would seem that the private soldier is expected to contribute towards his colonel's coffin, and I do not think that will appeal very much to the average private soldier.

However, the main feature about this matter is that I am convinced that the public relations regarding this bill have been extremely bad, and that the men in the armed services have not understood the provisions of this scheme. I therefore think the minister would really be extremely well advised, in so far as the armed services are concerned, to allow them to have a second look at the bill and have the opinions of the majority of the men who are going to make a contribution towards this scheme thoroughly canvassed.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, there is just one word I would like to say in regard to this if the hon. member will allow me. This proposal was not extended to the armed services on the initiative of myself as Minister of Finance or on the initiative of the government. It was sought by the armed services themselves, and perhaps it would be well for me to say that I was rather apprehensive of extending it to the armed services.

I asked my officials to make a very careful study of it because, as the hon. member has stated, the great majority of our armed forces are young in years and from the very nature of their duties they may be called upon to lose their lives a bit earlier than some of us who stay at home. This measure, of course, would have to be made applicable to young men killed in action or in any other way. It is quite true, as my hon. friend suggested, that under the Pension Act their dependents would receive a pension and there are other provisions made for burial expenses, illness, and so on. But there is no relation between this provision in the Pension Act and the present scheme. It has not been my experience that the dependents of soldiers are reluctant to receive a lump sum payment, whether under the ordinary life insurance or any other, on the death of the breadwinner, and since those responsible today for the direction of the armed services indicated to me that it was desired to have this measure extended to the armed services that is what has been done.

Again, with some reluctance, I agreed that they should consult the various commands throughout the country, and that was done. After the consultation had taken place, and as my hon. friend indicated, pretty much the full details of the proposed plan appeared in the newspapers, and that, perhaps, may be a reflection on the security provisions in so far as this kind of thing is concerned. However, I would make it clear that I am making no serious criticism in that regard. I want the committee to appreciate that the provisions of this measure were extended to the armed forces at the request of those who have the responsibility for those services.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, during this debate I could not but help feel somewhat surprised at the different attitudes adopted by those hon. members who spoke on this subject. I heard expressions which seemed to me to be very excited words on a subject which, after all, calls for investigation—as some have said, a little bit more investigation—rather than to call for intolerant and fancy language. I heard such expressions as "willy-nilly", "shotgun", "ramming", "jamming", "regimenting", "dragooning", "treat them rough", "tell them nothing" and finally "let the cat out of the bag". This is all very well, Mr. Chairman, but it would add little to the debate were it not for the fact that these same people who have said these things have apparently studied the problem and have given us the benefit of their knowledge.

I might say that it must strike every one of us that this act is not being put through without the knowledge and without the study required on the part of those who had an opportunity to look at the bill in committee and in other places. The fact that so many arguments are being presented at this time for or against this bill shows that there is not much more that could be learned by speaking to many other people. As a matter of fact, I am not so sure that the civil servants are not aware of the contents of this bill and of its benefits. As one who lives in a civil service city I am willing to say that the civil servants know what this bill is about, know the principle of it and are generally satisfied that it is a good step forward.

After all, Mr. Chairman, this is not an insurance bill. It is a bill to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act. It is to add more benefits to those already available under that act. Since parliament must vote the moneys with respect to the superannuation act to cover the cost of these benefits, of course parliament is interested as well as are those who are benefiting. Since the superannuation act is universal in its application, so necessarily must be the provisions that are included under the benefits extended by this proposed bill.

As I said before, Mr. Chairman, I consider this bill to be a good one. By that I do not mean to say that in a few years it may not be a much better one. I am sure that as time goes on some other provisions may be added. The main objections that I received from civil servants were not to the effect that this was a costly scheme. Objection was not taken that they were not getting much larger benefits than they could ever obtain under any private scheme. Rather the objection was that they would like to have more, even if it should cost more. I sympathize and agree with anyone who would like to have more protection or more coverage of this type at the same rate. I do not agree with those who have been saying that someone might pay for 30 years $5 a year, and would have nothing for it. Thirty years at $5 a year works out at $150.

Mr. Macdonnell: Five dollars a year?

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): For $1,000. My hon. friend knows much more about these things than I do, but I may tell him this. I took my first $1,000 insurance when I was 21, as I was graduating in law in Toronto, and the cost to me was $23 a year. At age 65 I will be paying some more. I will get nothing until I die. The death rate is no better in the civil service than it is anywhere else. I am sure that the civil servants, especially those who are in the lower classes, will appreciate the opportunity of having this estate for their children, their wives or their relatives, so that there may be no undue burden and also so that there may be some benefit for their estate.

As I stated before, Mr. Chairman, I am sure that—just as in the case of the superannuation act—some other features may be added to this bill. However, this is the basis. This is the principle which we are about to enact. I feel that the committee should agree that, as soon as possible, this measure should be passed. I would not take the responsibility—as was so well said by the hon. member for Ottawa West—of delaying the passage of any legislation which affords such benefits to our civil servants.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is a great deal that one need add to what has already been said, except that, in addition to the reasons that have been given for opposing it, there is another one that occurs to me. It appears to me that this is what might be called paternalism run rampant. From what I have heard of it and from the summaries I have had of what took place in the banking and commerce committee it appears to me that the government has said: We think it would be desirable if everybody had an insurance policy on his life; therefore we are going to see to it that, because we think it is a good thing, everybody we can force to have one will be forced to have it whether he wants it or not. It might be a good thing if everyone in the country had an insurance policy on his life, but I am surprised to find the government which, on occasion, asserts its belief in leaving to the individual, so far as it can be done, control over his own destiny, adopting the position that we are now going to tell the people what is best for them in a matter in which previously no government has ever arrogated to itself the power to compel them to accept a benevolent ruling and is going to put the legislation through whether or not the people concerned consent to it or want it. It is truly the worst form of paternalism run rampant.

Benevolent paternalism is all very well or good intentions are all very well in their place; but when good intentions, the benefit of which is not the subject of agreement by those affected, is going to have the sanction of legislation and of dictate behind it, I think it then becomes the duty of those who believe in the individual being given the maximum control of his destiny consistent with the position that his own actions shall not impinge upon or interfere with the exercise of his neighbour's freedom, to say: No; you shall not, whether out of any benevolent motives or not, exercise this form of dictatorship.

On the basis of that approach to the matter it seems to me that we have not much alternative but to oppose the present bill. I think it would have put us all in a great deal better position had there been given to the civil servants affected the time and opportunity for a greater study of the matter so that we would know whether or not, in fact, a majority of them approved it. If they want it and if it were to be clearly indicated that they want it, then I suppose it would be stepping beyond the bounds of our duty to say: No, you shall not have it.

However, as I understand the position, there has not been any clear-cut request of that sort for it. The government has simply come along and decided that this would be a good thing for the civil servants themselves. In the absence of their being able to bring to us clear proof that the people concerned actually want it, it is my opinion that, as we have the situation now, in the presence of a considerable volume of evidence from them that they do not want it, we have to say to the government: No; you shall not impose your idea of what is good on the people who themselves do not agree with your ideas.

I think also that when the government takes to itself the right to dictate to the armed forces, in addition to the civil service, on matters of this kind then, for the reasons so cogently put forward by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, we should say to them: Here, you have got to confine your activities within reasonable bounds; you can lay down conditions of service in so far as hours of work and times of work are concerned but you certainly cannot say to people that if they are going to work in the civil service or join the armed forces they have to join this compulsory insurance scheme. To me, that is carrying benevolence to the point of absurdity. As I have said, Mr. Chairman, there are other reasons which might be advanced against the measure but I think they have been more than adequately put forward by my colleagues who have already spoken against the bill. I am happy to associate myself with them and to indicate that I too will not support this proposal.

Mr. Croll: I have only a few words to say. I am one of those who believes that this bill is heavy with benefits and light with obligations. After the hearing on June 3 when representations were made by the various associations I was somewhat concerned with the views presented. Over the week end I took the opportunity to get in touch with some of the civil servants in the city of Toronto to find out what their attitude was towards the bill. The first one said "excellent"; the next one said "wonderful", and the third one said, "how soon will it come into effect, how soon does the government intend to proclaim it?" There was no doubt in my mind. I am as enthusiastic about the bill as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If it is possible to be more enthusiastic I would be.

Mr. Fulton: What did the fourth say?

Mr. Croll: I felt certain at that time that the bill had mass support. Something has been said about the lack of consultation with the civil servants. I think it is interesting to look at the record. I should like to refer to page 1660 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the banking and commerce committee. The hon. member for York South was questioning Mr. K. W. Taylor, the deputy minister of finance, and I find there the following:

Q. Have these suggestions been discussed with the civil service association employees?

The reference is to the bill.

A. Yes, sir. A general outline of the plan was presented in the form of a confidential memorandum to the national joint council of the public service of Canada. The national joint council appointed a subcommittee to go into it in more detail. I met with that subcommittee. Some of my officials met with them. A number of meetings were held and the national joint council sent a report or a memorandum back to the government which in general heartily endorsed and approved the scheme. They made a number of suggestions for betterment of certain aspects of the scheme as originally outlined. Most of those have been accepted and incorporated in the bill.

That seems to throw a little different light on the amount of consultation. Let me go on a bit further. There is a very interesting question at the bottom of page 1661 which reads as follows:

Q. Is there any objection to the compulsory feature of this scheme on the part of any particular group of civil servants?

This is the answer:

A. The views of the national joint council were that it ought to be compulsory and universal. Now, that does not mean that individuals representing particular groups on that committee may not have raised the question of the compulsory feature. I have seen in the press that certain groups of civil servants have objected. Individuals in my own department have come to me and expressed a very dim view on this. They are usually younger girls in the service who have at present no intention of making the public service a career. They do not find this particularly attractive or particularly interesting. There are others who have said, "Well, I am carrying my full quota of insurance now and I do not need any extra." Others have said to me, "This is fine; it is a very modest cost and we can always do with $5,000 more or $3,000 more in the estate."

I think it is also very interesting for members of the house who were not privileged to sit on the committee to find out what was the reaction of the armed forces. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich perhaps knows more about this phase of it than anyone else. To the armed forces this was a very attractive proposal in addition to their other benefits. Four dollars a month, a couple of packages of cigarettes, perhaps not even half a bottle of what my friend, the hon. member for—

Mr. Chevrier: Mackenzie.

Mr. Croll: —Fort William would object to, will more than pay for this, and they are fully covered in times of action. Actually, in addition to all the other benefits they get while in action, they get the benefit of establishing an estate in the amount of $3,000 or $5,000, whatever it may be. It certainly cannot be said that the army attempted to speak for the personnel in the army because they took every precaution to the point where they did not even heed the request of the Minister of Finance to treat the matter confidentially. They got in touch with the troops in Korea and Germany and the air division in France. Mr. Armstrong of the Department of National Defence had this to say, as found at page 1724 of the proceedings:

Each of the commanders consulted the units in his command and we received from them an expression of opinion that the majority of the members of the forces were prepared to accept this plan on a compulsory basis. The nature of the replies varied. Some commands reported on a percentage basis. They varied in the air force from 75 per cent to 90 per cent in favour. In the navy, roughly 75 per cent in favour, of C.P.O.'s and above, and some 65 to 60 per cent below that rank. In the army most of the replies was on the basis that the majority were in favour. On that basis the Department of National Defence, through the minister, recommended that the members of the forces be included under this plan.

Now, it is true they did not consult all the members of the forces. They took a sampling of about 20 per cent in most commands and 50 per cent in the Quebec command. All in all it would seem that an attempt was made to reach the civil servants and the armed forces. It is interesting to note, and I do not think enough emphasis has been placed on it, that consultations began last November —and the hon. member for York South said in the committee that he knew about it at that time which was some time before I knew about it. On February 4 an article appeared in the Citizen containing all the details of the bill with the exception of the minister's name and the fact that he was going to introduce it.

Surely that could not have been lost upon the civil service in Ottawa where everyone, I presume, reads the Citizen. On April 4 the army knew all about it. If that was a secret that was kept by the army from the civilians it was the first time the army ever kept a secret of something that appeared in orders. The plan was generally understood. Everybody knew about it. When I got in touch with the people in Toronto nobody asked me what was in the bill. They proceeded to tell me what was in the bill. They knew as much, if not more, about it than I did.

I do not quite understand the opposition to the bill. I believe that people generally would like to have the same benefits made applicable to them as are being made applicable to the civil servants. The Minister of Finance has said that he would like to be covered by such a scheme. The Secretary of State said that he wished it had been made retroactive and applicable to him. Speaking for myself, I would more than welcome it if it should be introduced as one of the benefits for members of parliament.

Mr. Henderson: Representing Kingston as I do, where there are offices of every branch of government as well as many thousands in the armed forces, I feel that I should say a few words about this bill. I was also a member of the committee that considered the bill. I received no complaints from anyone in the Kingston area objecting to the bill. I felt like the hon. member for Spadina, that since objections had been raised in certain quarters I should talk to some of the civil servants in my own area. I have had the opportunity of doing so, and received nothing but compliments on the measure. As a matter of fact, the feeling could be summed up in these words: It is a good thing, what is holding it up? Do you think you will get it through this session? I feel that we should not hold up this measure which is a benefit to so many in the civil service and so many in the armed forces. I feel like the member for Ottawa East that this is a basis for benefits to a great many people.

Mr. Macdonnell: I want to make one or two comments.

Mr. Croll: I cannot hear you.

Mr. Macdonnell: I shall try to do better in the matter of speaking up because I want the hon. member for Spadina to hear me. I listened with interest to what he had to say. I am sorry he ran out of adjectives so soon; it is not like him to do that. He used several adjectives such as "excellent", "wonderful", and "how soon". Those are all right as far as they go, but I suggest they should not be matched against the considered report of organizations that have made inquiries throughout the whole of the country and who then give a report on the basis of the representations made to them through their ordinary widespread channels.

It is quite true they did not get a full report, but they got a good cross-section of the people whose words they passed on to us. So far as the national joint council is concerned, not a word should be said against them. The point is that they were not able to pass on to other people; their mouths were shut. In so far as the armed forces were concerned the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Spadina, undertook to convey a different impression from that which had been conveyed by the hon. member for Eglinton and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich. I submit that the member for Eglinton quoted adequately from the evidence to support everything he said, whereas the member for Spadina just referred to it in most general terms. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich has, I know, been close to this problem for considerable time, and his reports also were based on a wide variety of facts.

Clause agreed to on division.

On clause 2—References to act.

Mr. Macdonnell: I have an amendment to clause 2. I shall say very little about it because the point has been fully covered. The amendment that I propose to move has to do with the question of the compulsory feature and that has been fully covered. I only wish to add that there is abundant evidence as to the widespread objections from civil servants concerning the compulsory feature. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Tustin):

That section 39 (1) (e) be amended by inserting after the word "means" the following:

"one who has elected to make the contributions and accept the benefits under sections 42 and 43 respectively, and who is".

Mr. Abbott: Like my hon. friend, I shall not take much time in discussing this amendment. I have already indicated that after studying this type of benefit the government came to the conclusion that it could only be introduced on a universal or compulsory basis; that was the only basis upon which the government would be prepared to recommend it to the house. I indicated that was the basis upon which analogous plans operate in such institutions as the Bank of Canada and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It is the basis upon which analogous group insurance plans operate in other large private concerns. Everyone must be a participant. Therefore the only basis upon which the government is prepared to recommend legislation of this kind is upon a universal or compulsory basis.

Amendment (Mr. Macdonnell) negatived: Yeas, 20; nays, 67.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3—Coming into force.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister if he would indicate when it is intended to have this act come into force?

Mr. Abbott: As soon as possible; I cannot give a more precise indication than that.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Abbott moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Tustin):

That the said bill be not now read a third time but that it be read this day six months hence.

I shall be very brief in my comments. I wish to remind the house that we are voting on this bill when the great majority of members have had no chance of reading the evidence, and I am quite sure have not read the evidence which was only available this morning. What we sought here was that the reasonable request of the civil servants that they should be given a chance to discuss the matter further should be granted. I was puzzled by the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Cameron) who referred in glowing terms to the civil servants. He said we valued them very highly, and then so far as I could understand suggested that that implied on their part a readiness merely to accept our judgment in the matter without the opportunity for further consultation. I would have thought that his argument would have led him to the opposite conclusion. I was also interested in all the evidence about the decreasing cash value of those whom he described as long in the tooth. I thought he got very near to describing them as carrion. He got near that point.

And I would like to point out that in one of the representations we had there was a rather convincing argument, I thought, pointing out that the needs of people in respect of burial did not grow any less as they grew older, but remained just about the same. I thought his argument was unconvincing.

I will not deal with the fact that probably tens of thousands who go into this will get no benefit out of it, that they are being forced against their will, that there was unanimous evidence from the representatives who came before the committee that further consultation was desirable. The possibility of delay was fully and frankly faced by them. Incidentally, they suggested that if the Civil Service Insurance Act were extended they were prepared to face delay, in the hope of having a chance to consult. Every consideration of good relations between employer and employee would dictate, in connection with this bill, that consultation should be had. Furthermore, I should like to put on record again the fact that there has been an entirely exaggerated idea put forward among civil servants that they are getting a very good thing, and getting it very cheap. The truth of the matter is that they are getting a cheap article, one which is limited in various ways, and may not turn out to have the benefits they expect.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Tustin):

That the said bill be not now read a third time but that it be read this day six months hence.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the motion that has been made is one which seeks to place on record the opinion of members of this house that this bill is not being dealt with properly, and that those who are directly affected by its provisions are not being given the ordinary opportunity to consider the matter and to make such representations as should be accorded in the case of any legislation of this kind.

The arguments presented by the minister who sponsors the bill, and by other members on the government side of the house, are not challenged in so far as they relate to the desirability of providing insurance for members of the civil service or of the armed forces. In so far as the general principle of insurance is concerned, I doubt very much if there is any substantial division of opinion within this house. But what has been asserted—and asserted with the use of some descriptive adjectives, which I believe are appropriate—is that a measure inadequately considered and without the ordinary opportunity for examination and consultation is now presented to us with a demand, in effect, that we support it because there is a desire to provide insurance for civil servants and members of the armed forces. Apart from the position I hold as Leader of the Opposition, I represent the constituency which has within its boundaries a very large number of civil servants.

Mr. Gingras: They would not vote for you.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my hearing may be better than that of the recorder of Hansard, and I therefore shall not repeat the very inappropriate remark that I heard from the other side of the house. I would simply point out, Mr. Speaker, that, apart from having that association with many of those men—I would point this out for the benefit of the interrupter whose remarks perhaps are not on Hansard—I have had some responsibility in dealing with the problems of civil servants in other jurisdictions. I believe in the right of the civil servant to be consulted; I believe in the right of the civil servant to express his opinion; I believe in the right of the civil servant to present to a committee of the house views that would guide members in forming their opinions on legislation of this kind.

We have had placed on Hansard quotations from the statements of representatives of the various civil service organizations expressing their own desire that this be further examined, their own hope that there be further consultation, and their own feeling about what have been described as the compulsory provisions of this measure.

We have had the statement of the minister that he is not prepared to consider an amendment which would make the inclusion of any members of the civil service voluntary. He has stated that if this is to come into effect it must embrace everyone. We have no statistical information before us to support his contention that this must be done if a measure of this kind is to be introduced. In fact, we have a minimum of information of any kind, other than the broad assertion that legislation of this kind is desirable. As opposed to that we have the contention of those whom the measure is intended to benefit that they, themselves, want a further opportunity to consider its effect. And it is in support of that very contention, made by representatives of the various civil service organizations, that this amendment is placed before the house. For these reasons I shall support the amendment.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on this measure. In the first place, I would like to say that this bill, as could be said of all legislation, is not the final say in the matter. Legislation such as this is subject to review from time to time, and will come back to the house in the future for further examination. After some experience wih it, there may be possibilities of amendment, if that is considered desirable.

But I would like to say this, in regard to the argument advanced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), members of his group and members of the group to my left, that the whole objection, so far as they are concerned, is lack of consultation. The civil servants were not given the opportunity to present their case properly. I would like to remind the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) that there is only one way for the civil servants of this country to get proper and unrestricted representation, and that is by becoming part of the legitimate trade union movement of this country and by carrying on their negotiations in the way that they are carried on as between employer and employee. If the hon. member for Peace River and the Leader of the Opposition and the members of his group are prepared to go along with that kind of proposition, I am sure the members of this group will be glad to join with them.

Mr. Drew: May I ask a question? In dealing with that particular subject, do I understand that the hon. member means that if there were agreement on the point he makes he would insist that they be consulted, but if that is not conceded then he thinks the measure should go through without consultation.

Mr. Gillis: That is not the point I made at all. There are too many ifs, ands and buts in the Leader of the Opposition's question. I merely stated a fact. The fact was that if there are restrictions on the way the civil servants make their representations to the employer, and if their lips are sealed, they are sealed because they are members of an association that places a restriction upon them. There is no other way for them to get proper consultation for the 230-odd thousand people they represent except in the way I have suggested, when they are free from any government restrictions in regard to civil servants, and when they can sit down with the government as an employer and make demands on the government and then compromise somewhere in between. In the meantime while these negotiations are going on and after they are finalized, they can consult the members of their association by referendum as is done by the legitimate trade union movement across the country. Therefore there is nothing in the argument that proper consultation had not taken place under present circumstances and with the kind of organization the civil servants have, because it cannot be done and there is no use our arguing it out in connection with this particular measure.

I should like to say that the same argument could be used in the matter of the old age security pension. The argument that the taxpayers of Canada across this country were not consulted as to whether they were favourable to old age security pensions or otherwise could also be used. The same argument could be advanced in the matter of unemployment insurance. Unemployment insurance is in exactly the same category. When it was established first opposition was advanced right across the country by different sections of the public on the grounds that they would have to contribute to it and it would not mean very much to them. The fact of the matter is that unemployment insurance is not yet universal for the very same reason. Sections of employees across the country who, in my judgment, should be protected are still outside the confines of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

In my opinion this legislation is before the house as a government measure. Since I know the government and the way they work, I would say that this did not come about without a lot of consultation with the insurance companies. I am reasonably sure it is because of the fact that a very large percentage of civil servants were not carrying protective insurance that is sold by the old line companies that this legislation has been brought in. I cannot visualize the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) and other members on that side of the house at any time bringing in a measure that would be in direct competition with the old line insurance companies unless they had received the green light from those people that they were not carrying that kind of insurance anyway, so somebody had better provide it.

Mr. Abbott: I do not like to interrupt my hon. friend, but I know he does not want to misrepresent. I am sure he would not do that in regard to any position I might take. I can assure him and assure members of the house there was no consultation whatsoever with the life insurance companies either before or after this measure was introduced.

Mr. Gillis: I have to accept the word of the Minister of Finance as far as he personally is concerned. But he has a lot of advisers behind the scenes who perhaps do not tell him the whole story. That is my opinion. In my opinion, a measure of this magnitude in the field of protective insurance would not have been introduced unless the field had been carefully canvassed.

The argument that we should wait and see, and so on, is an old one. Many of us who are getting older in this house have heard it advanced in everything that was ever attempted. If that argument had been listened to back a few hundred years ago we would still be weaving cloth by hand. With respect to every advance in every field there has been a small fringe who has opposed it on the grounds that they did not like it, and mainly because they did not understand it.

In my opinion this legislation has only one thing wrong with it that I can see at the present time. After the experience of a year or so, when we see what the possibilities are, we may find a lot of flaws in it. I hope this house will be flexible enough at that time to make the necessary adjustments. The only thing I see wrong with it at the present time is that when a civil servant reaches the retirement age of 65 he can carry on this insurance if he so desires. Then he has to make his own contribution and the government's contribution as well. After the date of retirement the amount of insurance payable decreases 10 per cent each year and by the time he reaches the age of 70 the policy has liquidated itself; no benefit is left. There should be some equity accrue to the person who elected to continue after retirement. There should be at least enough left to offset the funeral expenses. Instead of a policy running out completely there should be a residue of at least $1,000 for the person who has carried it on for the five years after retirement. That is all I have to say on the matter. I consider it good legislation. Knowing the industry in the community from which I come and several others I wish that this type of protective insurance could be established for the same price for every industrial worker across this country.

This legislation arises out of the high cost of dying. Anyone who has had any experience recently with funeral expenses must know it is quite a burden. We also know that human nature being what it is the average person in his health and strength takes the attitude: Well, I am not going to die for a long time, and even after I die, someone has to bury me anyway. They cannot just put me in cold storage, so why should I waste money? That is the general expression of opinion that you get from a lot of people. Well, someone has to pay the shot in the end. This is a very reasonable and a very inexpensive way of protecting those who are faced from time to time with the burden of funeral expenses and so forth. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am for it.

I hope that in the not far distant future the Leader of the Opposition will join with us here in establishing the type of organization for these civil servants that will free them from government control; that will enable them to take their places with the legitimate trade union movement of this country so that they can sit down year after year and present their legitimate demands to the government, argue them out, and then by the process of a democratic vote get an expression of opinion from their membership, because that is the only way it can be had.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Macdonnell) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

| | |
|---|---|
| Bell | Lennard |
| Blackmore | Low |
| Brooks | Macdonnell |
| Cardiff | MacLean |
| Diefenbaker | Monteith |
| Dinsdale | Murphy (Lambton West) |
| Drew | Nowlan |
| Fairclough, Mrs. | Patterson |
| Fleming | Pearkes |
| Fraser (Peterborough) | Poulin |
| Fulton | Quelch |
| Girard | Shaw |
| Hahn | Small |
| Hansell | Thomas |
| Harkness | Tustin |
| Holowach | Yuill—32. |

NAYS

Messrs:

| | |
|---|---|
| Abbott | Hanna |
| Anderson | Hardie |
| Applewhaite | Harris |
| Ashbourne | Harrison |
| Balcom | Henderson |
| Barnett | Henry |
| Batten | Herridge |
| Bennett (Grey North) | Hosking |
| Blanchette | Houck |
| Boisvert | Howe (Port Arthur) |
| Boucher (Restigouche-Madawaska) | Huffman |
| Bourget | Hunter |
| Brisson | James |
| Buchanan | Jones |
| Byrne | Jutras |
| Cameron (Nanaimo) | Kickham |
| Campbell | Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough) |
| Campney | Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare) |
| Caron | Knowles |
| Carter | Lafontaine |
| Castleden | Leduc (Verdun) |
| Cavers | Legare |
| Chevrier | Lesage |
| Cloutier | Lusby |
| Cote | MacDougall |
| Croll | MacInnis |
| Decore | MacNaught |
| Deslieres | McCann |
| Dickey | McCulloch (Pictou) |
| Dumas | McCullough (Moose Mountain) |
| Ellis | McIlraith |
| Fairey | McIvor |
| Fraser (St. John's East) | McWilliam |
| Garland | Mang |
| Garson | Masse |
| Gauthier (Lake St. John) | Matheson |
| Gauthier (Portneuf) | Michaud |
| Gillis | Nicholson |
| Gingras | Pearson |
| Gingues | Philpott |
| Gour (Russell) | Picard |
| Gourd (Chapleau) | Pickersgill |
| Gregg | Pinard |
| Pommer | Stick |
| Pouliot | Stuart (Charlotte) |
| Power (St. John's West) | Thatcher |
| Proudfoot | Tucker |
| Prudham | Valois |
| Purdy | Viau |
| Regier | Villeneuve |
| Richard (Ottawa East) | Weaver |
| Robichaud | Weir |
| Robinson (Simcoe East) | Weselak |
| St. Laurent | Winch |
| Schneider | Wood |
| Shipley, Mrs. | Zaplitny—114. |

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Is the main motion agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, would you be good enough to call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those who are opposed to the main motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Abbott) which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

| | |
|---|---|
| Abbott | Dickey |
| Anderson | Dumas |
| Applewhaite | Ellis |
| Ashbourne | Fairey |
| Balcom | Fraser (St. John's East) |
| Barnett | Garland |
| Batten | Garson |
| Bennett (Grey North) | Gauthier (Lake St. John) |
| Blanchette | Gauthier (Portneuf) |
| Boisvert | Gillis |
| Boucher (Restigouche-Madawaska) | Gingras |
| Bourget | Gingues |
| Brisson | Gour (Russell) |
| Buchanan | Gourd (Chapleau) |
| Byrne | Gregg |
| Cameron (Nanaimo) | Hanna |
| Campbell | Hardie |
| Campney | Harris |
| Caron | Harrison |
| Carter | Henderson |
| Castleden | Henry |
| Cavers | Herridge |
| Chevrier | Hosking |
| Cloutier | Houck |
| Cote | Howe (Port Arthur) |
| Croll | Huffman |
| Decore | Hunter |
| Deslieres | |

James
Jones
Jutras
Kickham
Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough)
Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare)
Knowles
Lafontaine
Leduc (Verdun)
Legare
Lesage
Lusby
MacDougall
MacInnis
MacNaught
McCann
McCulloch (Pictou)
McCullough (Moose Mountain)
McIlraith
McIvor
McWilliam
Mang
Masse
Matheson
Michaud
Nicholson
Pearson
Philpott
Picard
Pickersgill
Pinard
Pommer
Pouliot
Power (St. John's West)
Proudfoot
Prudham
Purdy
Regier
Richard (Ottawa East)
Robichaud
Robinson (Simcoe East)
St. Laurent
Schneider
Shipley, Mrs.
Sinclair
Stewart (Winnipeg North)
Stick
Stuart (Charlotte)
Thatcher
Tucker
Valois
Viau
Villeneuve
Weaver
Weir
Weselak
Winch
Wood
Zaplitny—114.

NAYS

Messrs:

Bell
Blackmore
Brooks
Cardiff
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Drew
Fairclough, Mrs.
Fleming
Fraser (Peterborough)
Fulton
Girard
Hahn
Hansell
Harkness
Holowach
Lennard
Low
Macdonnell
MacLean
Monteith
Murphy (Lambton West)
Nowlan
Patterson
Pearkes
Poulin
Quelch
Shaw
Small
Thomas
Tustin
Yuill—32.

Bill read the third time and passed.

PIPE LINES ACT

AMENDMENT AUTHORIZING OPERATION BY TRUSTEE

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 477, to amend the Pipe Lines Act.

Mr. Green: Will the minister explain?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that in the early part of the present session the Pipe Lines Act was amended by Bill No. 10 which added a new section 10A reading as follows:

No person, other than a person having authority under a special act to construct or operate pipe lines for the transportation of oil or gas, shall construct or operate an extra-provincial pipe line, but nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit or prevent any person from operating a pipe line constructed before the first day of October, 1953.

The purpose of this new section was to require all pipe line companies to be authorized by special act of parliament before constructing or operating any new extra-provincial pipe line. All pipe line companies are now required to come under the Pipe Lines Act and to obtain the approval of the board of transport commissioners before constructing or operating a pipe line connecting two or more provinces or extending beyond the limits of a province. Since this amendment was made, a technical difficulty has arisen. The solicitors for Trans-Canada Pipe Lines have submitted that the new section 10A would prevent a trustee for the bondholders, a receiver or a manager appointed by the court from operating an extra-provincial pipe line constructed by a company which had defaulted on its bonds after being in operation.

The solicitors for this company consider that an amendment to section 10A is necessary if the company is not to be jeopardized in marketing its bonds to finance the construction of the trans-Canada pipe line. As there appears to be some doubt in the matter which would make it difficult for pipe line companies to finance construction, it has been considered advisable to amend the act in order to remove any difficulty that might exist about the right of a trustee for bondholders or a liquidator, receiver or manager of the property of a company to operate an extra-provincial pipe line for the benefit of creditors.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be no objection to this provision. There are one or two questions I should like to raise when the bill goes into committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

On clause 1—Position of liquidator, trustee, etc.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, there have been some dispatches in the press which sought to give the impression that this bill was being brought in as the forerunner for a government subsidy for Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. I can read no such meaning into the bill. I think these dispatches originated in some wishful thinking, but perhaps either the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Trade and Commerce could make a statement on that particular question.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not aware of any intention on the part of the government to the effect mentioned by my hon. friend. I have not seen the press dispatches about which he speaks. Certainly there is no such intention in this bill. I cannot speak for what may happen at a future time, but certainly there is no intention of granting any subsidy.

Mr. Green: There has been no hitch in the plans to go ahead with this pipe line?

Mr. Chevrier: I know of none.

Mr. Green: Paragraph (a) of the new subsection 4 reads as follows:

(a) A liquidator, receiver or manager of the property of a company, appointed to carry on the business of the company.

Should that not be, "a liquidator or receiver and manager"? It seems to me that taking the word "manager" alone it carries no implication of bankruptcy or liquidation and would give an authorization much wider than is intended or was indicated in the minister's explanation.

Mr. Chevrier: I would put the answer to that this way. In the first place representations were made by the solicitors for Trans-Canada Pipe Lines to the effect that a liquidator, a receiver, a manager or a trustee should be covered by the word "person". Whether or not it is covered satisfactorily in the bill is, I think, a matter for the justice department to determine. I do not pretend to be competent in that respect. Their draftsmen have drafted the bill in this manner, and I think it meets the suggestions that were put forward by the solicitors for the bondholders.

Mr. Green: There is no limitation to a liquidator, receiver or manager appointed by the court. The clause simply reads, "A liquidator, receiver or manager of the property of a company, appointed to carry on the business of the company." Surely the intention was only to cover a person appointed by the court, not anyone who might be appointed by the company itself.

Mr. Chevrier: I think the intention is twofold. The intention is first to cover the position of a trustee—

Mr. Green: That is covered in the next paragraph.

Mr. Chevrier: —who normally is appointed by the court.

Mr. Macdonnell: No.

Mr. Fleming: No.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Chevrier: No, it is the other way around. I think the position was to cover, first, the trustee who is normally appointed by the bond instrument, and, next, the receiver or liquidator either of which may be appointed by the court.

Mr. Green: Should there not be that qualification written into the act because this new clause gives that person extremely wide powers. It reads in part:

—shall be deemed to be a person having authority under a special act to construct or operate pipe lines for the transportation of oil or gas.

The result of that provision will be that you will have an individual with extremely wide powers. He can build or operate a pipe line. It does seem to me that power should be restricted to either the trustee for the bondholders or to someone appointed by the court. There is no restriction written into the clause, and I think the words "appointed by the court" should appear in paragraph (a), or in some other way it should be restricted to a court appointment.

An individual should not have the right to exercise these wide powers except under a court order. If that is not done, then the way this section reads Trans-Canada Pipe Lines could appoint John Jones as their manager, and then John Jones could construct or operate the pipe line. It was never the intention of parliament that such would be the case. I have no objection to the provision for a liquidator or receiver, duly appointed by the court; that is an entirely different matter. I can see that situation should be covered, but the way this clause reads it covers a very much wider field.

Mr. Fleming: I should like to say a word in support of the point made by my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra.

It seems to me that for clarification, after the word "appointed" we should have these words inserted, "by a court of competent jurisdiction". Then the wording would be quite clear. The Minister of Transport has indicated what is contemplated by the word "appointed", and that is an appointment made by the courts. The reference in paragraph (b) is to a trustee who owes his quality as such to the trust deed. He is not a court appointment, but those persons referred to in paragraph (a) are obviously persons intended to be appointed by a court. For the sake of clarity, if for no other reason, in line with the suggestion by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, I believe that after the word "appointed" we should insert the words, "by a court of competent jurisdiction."

While I am on my feet, I should like to point out that the amendment makes no reference at all to the case of the trustee in bankruptcy. I gather it is not intended to bring the trustee in bankruptcy within the scope of the amendment?

Mr. Chevrier: The answer to the last part of your question is no.

Mr. Fleming: Is there any objection to the suggested amendment for clarification of paragraph (a)?

Mr. St. Laurent: I cannot see any objection. I do not know that it is necessary because if he were not appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction he would merely be an agent of the company. He would not require to have any statutory power if he were acting merely as agent of the company. I think it was clearly intended that there should be no suggestion that one who was merely an agent of the company should have a statutory franchise. It could only be required for someone regularly appointed by an authority having the right to do it. If he were merely appointed by the company, he would be acting as agent. I do not think it restricts the clause in any way to have the suggestion of the hon. member contained therein, because I do not see how anyone could be otherwise validly appointed. It must be something done by a court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. Green: You see, Mr. Chairman, the right to operate or build a pipeline is restricted to a company incorporated by a special act of this parliament. For that reason it is a little different from the ordinary case, and I do suggest that these words "by a court of competent jurisdiction" be added after the word "appointed" in line 8 of the bill. I would so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this bill, by leave, be read a third time now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chevrier moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Motor Vehicle Transport

MOTOR VEHICLE TRANSPORT

PROVISION FOR REGULATION OF INTERPROVINCIAL AND INTERNATIONAL HIGHWAY TRANSPORT

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport) moved second reading of Bill No. 474, respecting extra-provincial motor vehicle transport.

He said: The house will recall that on February 23 last, following the decision of the privy council in the Winner case, I made a statement in this house with respect to interprovincial and international highway transport. I stated at that time that in our view it would not be in the public interest to have a divided jurisdiction with provincial boards controlling the traffic within the provinces and a federal board controlling the traffic moving between the provinces or between a province and the United States, and that for this amongst other reasons the government was reluctant to enter this field and thereby bring about divided jurisdiction.

I also stated that I proposed to call a conference of provincial ministers having jurisdiction over highways to discuss the problems arising herein and to endeavour to find a common ground on the best way to regulate and control highway transport, whether intraprovincial, interprovincial or international. A federal-provincial conference on the control and regulation of interprovincial and international highway transport was duly called and convened at Ottawa on April 26. The federal government and the governments of all the provinces except Newfoundland were represented at this conference. Newfoundland was not represented as the government of that province was not interested in this particular problem.

At the outset of the conference the representatives of the federal government indicated to the representatives of the provinces that the conference had been called to ascertain the views of the provinces in regard to assuming jurisdiction over interprovincial and international highway transport, and whether there was a disposition on the part of the provinces to assume such responsibility. The provincial delegates at the conference agreed on the broad proposition that it would be desirable for the provinces to assume jurisdiction over interprovincial and international highway transport, and various means of reaching this objective were discussed. Two principal methods were considered. First it was proposed by certain of the provinces that appropriate amendments be made to the British North America Act to ensure that jurisdiction over highway traffic and control is vested in the provinces. This proposal was not considered to be practicable at this time and was not acceptable to the federal government.

The second proposal placed before the conference was that legislation be enacted by the federal parliament to provide for the control and regulation of the transportation of passengers and goods by motor vehicle between a province and a point outside the province with the control to be exercised by a provincial authority in like manner as control is exercised under provincial law. Such a system of provincial control over extra-provincial transport would leave the situation in much the same condition as before the decision of the courts in the Winner case. A draft bill was submitted to the conference and certain revisions were made.

The bill which is now before the house is the result of the work of the conference and has been approved in principle by all of the provinces that were represented except the province of Quebec. The bill provides that each province will have control over that portion of the transport undertaking that is carried on in that province. The bill accordingly requires an extra-provincial transport undertaking operating into or through a province to hold an operating licence if provincial law requires an operating licence for a local undertaking. The provincial board is authorized to grant this licence, which is in the nature of a franchise, and in so doing the provincial board follows the rules applicable to local undertakings. In other words, the provincial board is authorized to license extra-provincial transport undertakings in the same manner as it licenses local undertakings. This method of conferring power on provincial boards to license extra-provincial undertakings is considered by the law officers of the crown to be within the competence of parliament.

The bill also makes provision for regulation of tariffs and tolls charged by federal carriers for the transport of goods and passengers. The same pattern is followed as in the case of the operating licence. If tariffs and tolls for local traffic are regulated by provincial law, then the tariffs and tolls for extra-provincial traffic are to be determined and regulated by the provincial board in the same way as tariffs and tolls are determined and regulated for local traffic.

In order to deal with unforeseen circumstances which may possibly arise in the future in connection with highway transport movements for national defence and also in respect of international agreements and other extraordinary cases, it has been considered advisable to provide for exemption by the governor in council of the whole or any part of an extra-provincial undertaking from all or any of the provisions of the act. This is in the nature of a safety provision which will not be used unless there are cases of real difficulty in the operation of the act.

As this bill is one which concerns the provinces individually as well as collectively, and as it is not desired to transfer the responsibility for the regulation of extra-provincial transport to any province that is unwilling to accept this charge, the bill provides that the act shall come into force in any province only upon the issue of a proclamation of the governor in council.

Penalties are provided to ensure compliance with the act.

The bill is a short one and is readily understood. It is the government's answer to the difficult problem of how the provinces can be enabled to control and regulate highway transport crossing their boundaries and using their highways. The control of road traffic using provincial highways is essentially a matter for the provincial boards which are established and well qualified for this purpose. The solution proposed by this bill appears to be a satisfactory one within the framework of our constitution and I trust will commend itself to the house.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the bill now before us is one that comes to the house at a stage in the session when there might be some suggestion that there would be difficulty in obtaining the information that ordinarily would be obtained without any question in connection with legislation of this kind. I am sure that if the legislation came before the house early in the session, immediately there would be a statement by the government that it was going to be referred to an appropriate committee which would hear evidence and, through the hearing of evidence, hon. members would be informed as to the effect of legislation of this kind in dealing with the extremely involved and difficult problem presented.

The statement made by the minister is a brief one and deals with what has taken place recently. The subject matter, however, is one that has been before the House of Commons, the parliament of Canada and the people of this country generally for some considerable time. As hon. members of the house are well aware, this problem is one which was the subject matter of consideration by a royal commission appointed by the government. Members of the House of Commons are also aware of the fact that this matter was dealt with earlier by the Supreme Court of Canada, at the instance of the government of Canada. There was, in fact, a judgment of the supreme court rendered on October 22, 1951. That judgment, given almost three years ago, had the effect of declaring, with only minor limitations, that this was a subject which came fully under the authority of the federal government, through the provisions of section 92 (10) of the British North America Act. The applicable part of that section is as follows:

Local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes:—

(a) Lines of steam or other ships, railways, canals, telegraphs, and other works and undertakings connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of the province;

In the interpretation of that section it has been found that this means of transportation, as an extra-provincial means of transportation, came substantially under the authority of the government of Canada. Not satisfied with such limitations as were contained in the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, the provinces carried the appeal to the privy council. By judgment of February 22, 1954, as has been mentioned by the minister, it was declared that authority over extra-provincial or interprovincial transportation of this kind came under the jurisdiction of the government of Canada.

I would point out that substantially the position in which the matter is now before us was declared in October of 1951, and that this is not something that has suddenly come upon the government. It is something that has been under consideration for a considerable time. It is something that could have been discussed in conference with the provinces on earlier occasions. It is something that could have been discussed immediately after the judgment of the privy council.

We now have this bill before us on the 14th day of June, for second reading. It deals with highway transportation, which today is an extremely important part of the general system of transportation in Canada. Surely, when this subject is to be dealt with it would be appropriate that it be referred to a committee where representatives of those organizations engaging in transportation activities of this and other types would have an opportunity to present their arguments and hon. members thereby benefit from the information which would be placed before them.

The minister said that the conference sought to find common ground. Actually there is little evidence of common ground other than the fact that responsibility over extra-provincial and interprovincial highway transportation, as well as transportation within the provinces, is to be under the authority of boards set up in the provinces themselves. There certainly is no evidence of common ground as to procedure. There certainly is no evidence of common ground as to a method of supervising interprovincial or extra-provincial transportation; there certainly is no evidence of common ground as to rates or otherwise. We have before us a bill which produces an interesting result.

The government of Canada has been engaged now for several years in seeking to establish the position that it has full responsibility over extra-provincial and interprovincial transportation. Now that has been declared to be the law by the privy council. As soon as that is declared law, the government of Canada proposes to hand over to the provinces the responsibility for which the provinces have been fighting in the course of several years. It certainly seems a strange thing that large sums of public money would be spent to establish this position, and then once the position is established the authority for licensing and generally supervising this type of transportation should be placed right in the hands of boards appointed by the provinces under the provincial governments. That may be the best solution. That may be the solution which will work out most satisfactorily. I submit, Mr. Speaker, nothing has been placed before us to indicate why this is being done after all the legal activity which has been devoted to this subject for so many years, and after the inquiry which was conducted under the authority of this government when a royal commission investigated this extremely important subject.

The trucking services are giving very valuable services to our enterprises of so many kinds. Our railways are giving invaluable service; so are other means of transportation. Surely, in attempting to deal with this problem, we should have information before us such as we have obtained in similar cases, and the procedure should be followed which has been found to be satisfactory in those cases.

I recognize, as I am sure every hon. member does, that there are special problems in connection with highway transportation. There is first of all the fact that every province has responsibility for the construction of the highways within the province, and that the provincial authorities must of necessity gauge the relationship of that transportation to the capacity of those highways to carry services of those kinds. There is also the fact that we must recognize the vital part that this transportation plays now in the whole economy of Canada. What is done should recognize its place in our economy. That demands inquiry; that demands information. It demands an appropriate opportunity to question those who are experts in this field and to form judgments based on information of that kind.

I would point out there is another aspect to this problem. We are dealing not only with highway transportation made available by vehicles owned by Canadian companies and individuals; we are also considering transportation provided by vehicles owned by companies and individuals in the United States. It is of interest to find that as recently as June 7 this dispatch was carried from Washington by the United Press:

> In a move admittedly aimed at Canadian truckers, the House of Representatives voted today to subject operators of foreign trucks using American highways to interstate commerce commission safety regulations.

The report then went on to deal with this question and to indicate that certain provisions were to apply to the truckers using the highways of the United States which had come there from Canada. Surely, this suggests to us the desirability of information from those with direct knowledge of this type of activity which will inform us as to what should be done here to deal with a similar situation within our own country.

I would point out further that there is one clause of this bill which produces a very striking result, namely clause 5, which reads as follows:

> The governor in council may exempt any person or the whole or any part of an extra-provincial undertaking or any extra-provincial transport from all or any of the provisions of this act.

I understood from what the minister said that the bill was so designed that the government would be able to take appropriate steps to assure certain things being done. As I read this clause it is simply one which authorizes the governor in council, or in other words the government, to exempt any person or the whole or any part of an extra-provincial undertaking or any extra-provincial transport from any or all of the provisions of this legislation.

That, Mr. Speaker, is hardly something that provides for positive action. It is something which merely provides for negative action which would remove whatever advantages the government now submits can be obtained from the operation of this legislation. I think we should have a clearer explanation of the full import of clause 5, before we are called upon to deal with this bill. The truth is that under clause 5 the whole of this bill can be swept aside by order in council at any time. If it is important that this bill be now put into effect, it is equally important that this legislation remain in effect until parliament has been consulted in regard to the matter, unless there are some reasons which have not been placed before us for the extremely wide power which would be conferred upon the government by the adopting of the measure as it stands.

This is an important subject, Mr. Speaker. This is a subject which is of interest to Canadians generally. In this tremendous country of ours, with its expanding development, transportation by rail, by highway, air or water is all part and parcel of that dramatic development which is now taking place.

Surely it is appropriate that we should assure the most effective type of legislation we can have when we are called upon to deal with any aspect of this great problem of transportation. If it was sufficiently important to appoint a royal commission to inquire into this subject, if it was sufficiently important to carry this argument through to the privy council, then it is sufficiently important that the subject matter of this bill be now referred to a standing committee of the house.

It is my intention to move that this bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter be referred to a standing committee of the house. The committee to which I propose it should be referred is the committee on banking and commerce, because this is essentially a question of commerce within Canada and between Canada and the United States. I therefore believe it is appropriate that the committee on banking and commerce should deal with this as quickly as possible.

There is plenty of time to refer this immediately and call before that committee those who can speak with knowledge and experience in regard to the various aspects of this subject, and give us the information we should have before we pass a bill of this kind. In making this proposal I am certainly not reflecting on the judgment of those who represented the provinces in the conference which took place here. It would indeed be a very surprising thing if the representatives of the provinces did not welcome a bill which gave to them the full powers which they asserted before the courts should be theirs in any event. It would, in fact, be most unnatural if they should carry a legal battle into the courts and assert that they have this right of licensing and then, when the act is placed before them which confers that right by legislation passed by the parliament of Canada, that they should suggest they would not welcome it.

That is all that has happened in the bill now before us, except for the very sweeping and, in fact, complete reservation of power contained in clause 5 for reasons which have not yet been fully explained to us.

Having said that, may I also say I recognize that because of the delay in dealing with this subject a situation now exists which calls for attention. The fact is that because of the judgment of the privy council it is perfectly apparent that there is need of some kind of legislation which will make it possible to deal with some of the very irregular things that are happening at this time.

Whatever may be said of this legislation, the government must accept full responsibility for the legislation placed before us. If it is unsatisfactory, if it is limited in its effect, if it fails to carry out some of the purposes which the government on other occasions has stated it had in mind, then the responsibility for that must rest entirely with the government.

The government must also accept full responsibility for the delay. We could have had this simple measure before us weeks ago; we could have had this simple measure before us perhaps years ago if, after the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, consultations had taken place with the provinces such as have recently taken place. If, in fact, it was intended only to carry out a procedure of this kind which gives to the provinces the very kind of supervision for which they were fighting in the courts, then that could have been done at any time within the past few years.

Mr. Fleming: Hear, hear.

Mr. Drew: Therefore, if there is any suggestion of haste at this particular moment, let it be recognized that all responsibility for delay is the responsibility of the government itself. Let us also recognize—

Mr. Chevrier: Pretty weak.

Mr. Drew: Yes, perhaps the comment interjected by the hon. member is almost as weak as the position of the government itself on this occasion.

Mr. Chevrier: I was referring to the interjection made by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming). His "hear, hear" was very weak.

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member exhausted his voice this morning.

Mr. Fleming: Then I will express my feelings in a louder voice: hear, hear.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, since the minister has indicated that his remark was attributed to an hon. member who spoke earlier in the house today, I might just say that this is the first time I have heard any suggestion that that particular hon. member's voice is weak at any time he makes a remark in this house.

Mr. Chevrier: His "hear, hear" was pretty weak.

Mr. Knowles: So are some of his arguments.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I am placing before the house in all earnestness the proposition that what has been done already by this government in carrying forward the legal proceedings which it has supported for some time, and the earlier action of this government in inquiring into this matter, fully justifies and in fact demands that this measure now go before a committee of the house. In fact, I can recall no single occasion in the time I have been here, and I recognize that period is comparatively short compared with the time many hon. members have been here, when a measure of this kind was not almost automatically referred to a committee of the house to obtain the kind of information which can properly be obtained by a committee of that nature whose expert knowledge is invaluable in reaching a considered judgment on an occasion of this kind.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell):

> That Bill No. 474 be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in this legislation the government is feeling its way. I think perhaps the provinces are feeling their way. So we in the House of Commons are doing the same; we are feeling our way. When I first looked over the bill I was struck with the fact that it seems to contain a fair amount of confusion. After listening to the speeches that have been made thus far, I find that that confusion has been worse confounded.

I have always understood that it was not proper for the dominion and the provinces to delegate their powers to each other; but one of my learned counsel nearby informs me that there is a recent court decision that reverses that understanding. That seems to me to be involved in this bill, namely the delegation of powers. Up to a certain point it was understood that these matters were under provincial control. A court decision has been given which suggests that the matters covered by this bill are really under federal control. We now have a bill the purpose of which is to restore the status quo ante or to put that jurisdiction, for all practical purposes, back into the hands of the provinces.

The puzzling question that arises is whether or not this is a case of delegating federal authority to the provinces; and if it is, will it be covered by precedents that allow such delegation or will it be covered by precedents that disallow such delegation.

I daresay some hon. members are saying that if the picture was confused before I started, it is now even more confused.

Mr. Abbott: Oh, surely not.

Mr. Knowles: I thank the Minister of Finance for agreeing with that suggestion.

Mr. Abbott: I said "surely not".

Mr. Knowles: Then I shall have to withdraw my words of appreciation. I think that what I have said indicates the nature of this legislation, Mr. Speaker. It is a problem that has been presented both to the federal government and to the provincial governments as a result of the recent court decision with regard to extra-provincial transport, and a rather uncertain attempt to meet it is being made in this bill.

I share the view of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) that more light might well be shed on this matter. It seems to me that the proposition ought in some way to go to a committee of this house so that it might be examined and so that witnesses might be called. I am not sure that it is a good idea to oppose the second reading of the bill and then to send only the subject matter of the bill to the committee. If the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition is not accepted by the government, I would hope that the government might consider referring the bill, after second reading, to some appropriate committee so that some of these angles might be ironed out.

The reason I am reluctant to support the proposal that the bill be not now read a second time but that only the subject matter thereof be referred to a committee is this. Difficult though the problem is, at least we know that nine of the provincial governments and the one federal government that we have,—

Mr. Fulton: Such as it is.

Mr. Knowles: —such as it is, seem satisfied that this is the best solution to the problem for the moment. I am glad that an attempt was not made to correct this problem by seeking an amendment to the British North America Act. There is a certain finality and irrevocability about amendments to that act which, as I say, make it desirable that that course should not be followed, and it was not followed in connection with this matter. Rather a bill is being put forward. If, after a year or two, it is found that this is not the best solution to the problem, it is much easier to change it than it would be had we gone through the red tape required to have an amendment made to the British North America Act.

I hope that the federal government and the provincial governments will take that attitude toward the matter, namely that this is in effect a trial, an attempt to find a way in which to deal with this difficult problem. So it is that I hope the government will consider the suggestion I make as an alternative to the one proposed by the Leader of the Opposition, namely that after second reading the bill might be sent to a committee so that it could be gone into more thoroughly and so that we might get untangled some of these problems that it creates.

While I am on my feet dealing with the question of extra-provincial motor vehicle transport, I should like to say just a word with regard to a matter that is related thereto and about which we had some discussion earlier this session. I realize that the purpose and the effect of this bill is not to establish any uniformity as among the provinces with respect to travel on the highways; and that fact indeed adds to the confusion. Here we have a matter that has been declared by the courts to be one under federal jurisdiction. Yet we are delegating it back to the provinces and by this bill are according them a continuing autonomy in this field. Nevertheless this bill seems to provide what I shall call a meeting point among the provinces, with the federal government involved in that meeting, with regard to the question of travel on our highways. The fact that this common meeting point has been established—or has been forced on us, if you will, as a result of the court decision—I would hope might result in our various highway departments getting a little bit closer together on the matter of highway safety.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, we went into that matter at some length when we were debating the Criminal Code earlier this session, and I have no intention of reviving that debate. However, during the course of that debate it was brought out that some of the provinces have made some headway in curtailing accidents on the highway, with the loss of life and property that result therefrom. I think the provinces that have made headway have learned some lessons, and that they might well pass on to some of the other provinces what they have learned. I am particularly proud of the work that has been done in my own province of Manitoba in connection with this matter. I refer again to the excellent work done by Mr. R. B. Baillie of Winnipeg. My hope is that the fact of the establishment of this meeting point among the provinces, with the federal government sitting in with them, might result in that question being discussed as well so that we might do something effective to cut down the mounting number of accidents that take place on the highways of this country from one end to the other.

After what I said at the beginning, Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend to have cleared up a great deal so far as this bill is concerned. After all, it is handed to us as a hodgepodge of confusion. It is a makeshift that has been devised to meet a situation that arose out of a court decision. Since nine of the provincial governments and the federal government think that this is the way to try to solve the problem, I feel that we have no alternative but to accept it on a trial basis. As I say, I am glad it is being done in this way rather than by an amendment to the British North America Act. But having accepted it on a trial basis I also feel—and I press this on the government—that consideration should be given to sending the bill, after second reading, to some appropriate committee.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this bill. I think the government has done a very wise thing in making the decision they did with respect to this matter. In days gone by I have opposed the government when I thought they were about to take over control of the truck transport industry and put it under federal jurisdiction. I never did think that would work out satisfactorily. Now that the decision has been made that this matter comes under the federal government they must accept that responsibility. I think the provinces have come to the conclusion that it is a federal responsibility, but they have also come to the conclusion that it will be an exceedingly difficult problem for the federal government to lay down rules and regulations regarding truck transport which will be satisfactory to the provinces.

In my judgment this is an entirely different problem from the railway problem. Truck transport has been under the control of the provinces for many years. Trucking is not a new industry in western or central Canada. It is something that the provinces have been dealing with for the last twenty-five or thirty years. Therefore it is not quite right to say that we are now throwing something into the laps of the provinces which they are not in any way prepared to handle. I think the provinces are going to be able to work out the problem in a very satisfactory manner. It is an important problem too because in western Canada particularly trucking is about the only effective competition that the railways have. In central Canada water transportation is of course a most effective form of competition. Air transportation also has its place.

Now that the deepening of the St. Lawrence waterway is about to take place, competition in central Canada will be even more keen. But we in western Canada do not have such effective competition. Therefore I think that the matter of truck transportation is something that the federal government must deal with as quickly as possible. I cannot see that anything will be gained by sending the bill to a committee. The matter was considered for months and months before the royal commission. I do not see how a committee of the house could begin to examine the problem as effectively as the royal commission did.

It should also be pointed out that this matter is not something entirely new to a committee of the house. It will be recalled that it was referred to a committee when the question of transcontinental rates was discussed and received a very thorough going over there. I doubt very much whether a committee of the house could deal as effectively with the subject matter of the bill as the provinces in conference could deal with it. A conference has already been held in Ottawa, and while it was in progress I kept in very close touch with the representatives of the province of Alberta. It is true that the bill does not go as far as they would like. They would have preferred to have an amendment of the British North America Act so that the matter would definitely be put under the control of the provinces. Personally that would have satisfied me too, but the government did not see fit to do so. Therefore the provinces have agreed that this is the next best way.

I have not heard any great disappointment expressed by the provinces with respect to the results achieved at the last conference in Ottawa a few weeks ago. I have kept in rather close contact with members of the transport organizations of Canada. They have no great objection to this measure. I am convinced that they would also prefer to have an amendment to the British North America Act so that the matter would be clearly defined as coming under the jurisdiction of the provinces, but again may I say that those to whom I have spoken have agreed that this is the next best way.

None of them has indicated to me that this is going to be a very complex problem. At the time I spoke to them the bill of course was not before the house, but I think it was fairly well understood from the discussions with the provinces what would be in the bill. I cannot imagine that the Minister of Transport would have allowed the representatives of the provinces to go home without giving them some idea of what was going to be in the bill when it came before the house. Certainly since the bill has been introduced I have not had any protests from the trucking organizations across Canada or any of the provinces, including Alberta. They seem to be quite agreeable to accepting this measure.

It is true that it will be a new type of legislation in that it is going to have some effect interprovincially and internationally, but the provinces have already had some dealing with the United States with respect to transportation problems between different states and provinces in the Dominion of Canada. In fact it has already been agreed in some instances that trucks from certain states in the United States should be allowed to use the roads in certain provinces without any extra charge provided our trucks are given the same consideration. The information I have from the minister of highways of the province of Alberta is that what dealings they have had with the governments of different states of the United States have been extremely satisfactory. Everything has been going along very well.

I cannot agree that we should delay this measure any longer by sending it to a committee of the house. If we were to do that I do not think we could deal with it at this session. If I thought for a moment that any good would come out of such a procedure or that we would learn anything that we have not already learned from other committees and the royal commission that have dealt with this subject in the past, I would go along with those who suggest that we should send the bill to a standing committee of the house. But I cannot see any good to be gained from such action. I think it would cause unnecessary delay. We would have to call before us witnesses who have already appeared before the royal commission. We would only get a repetition of their evidence and we would probably come to the same conclusion.

Therefore I know that this party will have to vote against the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and we shall give full support to the bill with one exception. I know it is not proper for us to discuss the sections of the bill at this time, but I am a little concerned about exactly what section 5 means. However, may I say again that I have received no protests from the provinces or the trucking organizations, and I imagine this section has been discussed with them by the minister. We are confident that when we come to the section the minister will give a full explanation of it. If he does not do so at that time, then of course we will take appropriate action; but as matters stand now I think we have to agree with the government in getting the measure through as quickly as possible.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill. I have been reading it with a great deal of interest. I have listened to all the speeches and followed very closely the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew). I cannot agree with the remarks of the previous speaker that it is not necessary to send the bill to a committee of the house. I find myself, Mr. Speaker, very confused about this bill, because my understanding is that this bill, as the result of a decision of the supreme court, is to outline the authority in the hands of the provinces and in the hands of the federal government.

In the interpretation section of the bill we find such definitions as "extra-provincial transport"; "extra-provincial undertaking"; "federal carrier"; "law of the province"; "local carrier"; "local transport"; "local undertaking"; and "provincial transport board". All those definitions are under the interpretation section of the bill. The powers start in clause 3 of the bill, and are contained in clauses 3, 4, 5 and 6. I cannot see where there is any line of demarcation or anything different from what transpired in the past. There is no actual power over interprovincial transport, as I read this bill, and I hope the minister will correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the hon. member to ask him not to anticipate the committee stage. If his argument on second reading with respect to principle revolves around one section and he refers to it, at this stage of the session one may be lenient; but he has already read one section and now he wants to read another. I know he will not mind my intervention at this point in order to ask him not to anticipate the committee stage. If he is making an analysis of each section on second reading, he will not have the pleasure of discussing them in committee of the whole because, I am sure, he would not wish to repeat his arguments.

Mr. Winch: The point I am trying to make is this. In analysis of the principle of this bill I can find no line of demarcation of power concerning interprovincial transport. It outlines in principle the powers of a province and does give provincial jurisdiction, but does not outline any power or authorization on a logical basis to cover arrangements for interprovincial transport by motor vehicles. Perhaps I am wrong on that, but so far I just cannot see how this bill makes any arrangement to cover interprovincial transport.

In principle a bill does make an arrangement for the authority exercised by a province in connection with tolls and licences, but as to the relationship between the federal government and the provinces covering extra-provincial traffic, I cannot see that this bill covers the point. Personally, having some knowledge of this problem, I should like to see this subject referred to a committee. I do not know whether or not it should be the committee referred to in the amendment introduced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) or some other committee, but there are so many problems that need examination that the bill should be studied by a committee before it is passed by this house.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I should only like to address my remarks at this time to the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew). The amendment reads as follows:

> That Bill No. 474 be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

The house knows that the result of the adoption of such an amendment would mean the killing of the bill. There is no doubt that if this amendment were to carry, and the subject matter were referred to a standing committee such as referred to in the amendment, it would be studied there and it would be only the subject matter that could be reported upon. Therefore, practically a new bill would have to be drafted.

I raise that point because it is of the essence of the agreement or at least the understanding reached between the provinces and the federal government at the conference that this bill now before the house would become law during this session of parliament. There is another reason also why this amendment by the Leader of the Opposition should not be accepted. Because of the judgment of the privy council there is no legislation existing with reference to extra-provincial jurisdiction. There is, therefore, no legislation covering extra-provincial undertakings, undertakings that move from one province to another or from one province into the United States. It is of the utmost importance that this position be not allowed to remain for any length of time, because if it did there would be, as there is to some extent now, a chaotic condition in the field of highway transport.

I believe one of the main reasons which brought the provinces and the federal government together at the time was the uncertainty in that field of legislation, and the desirability of not allowing that uncertainty to remain for any lengthy period of time. I do not want to deal with the arguments of the Leader of the Opposition now, because I think this is not the time.

Mr. Winch: Where does this act change the situation?

Mr. Chevrier: Would my hon. friend allow me to deal with that position at a later stage in the debate? I am now dealing with the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition, and in effect say that if that amendment were carried it would simply kill the bill. There would be no legislation this session.

Mr. Drew: I do not want to interrupt the minister because he is approaching this subject on a mild and conciliatory basis, but I do point out that I recognize there is a vacuum that must be filled. I pointed that out in presenting this amendment and said I was following the only device by which it is open to the opposition to propose that the subject go before a committee. I said I did that with the idea that the bill be not killed, but that the committee be convened while we are sitting, and their study and recommendation could be made available to us.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the hon. member for clarifying what he said, but in what he has just said there is no doubt the bill would be killed. My understanding of a motion of this nature is that it has the effect of killing the bill, and that it is impossible to bring the bill back in time to enact legislation.

Mr. Drew: It is only killed if the government kills it.

Mr. Chevrier: Let my hon. friend realize this. There is more to this subject than he seems to realize. If this bill were to go to that committee, and the same reasons apply to any committee, even railways, canals and telegraph lines, for instance, the very principle that was established at the conference, namely the intention of the government to turn this field over to the control of the provinces, would be challenged by many groups who are opposed to the federal government doing what they are doing now, and who think the federal government should enact a federal motor carriers act. And if that were the case, does my hon. friend realize what length of time it would take? If he has any doubt about it, all he has to do is read the legislation that was brought down in this house in 1937 and 1939 and see what happened when the federal government attempted to take over the field at that time.

There is no doubt in my mind that if this amendment is adopted it will prejudice very strongly the position which was approved by the provinces and the federal government at the conference.

Mr. Winch: What are you afraid of, then?

Mr. Macdonnell: Does the minister think the time will come when the representations from various people, to which he referred a moment ago, should be heard? If so, when, and in what circumstances?

Mr. Chevrier: I would like to deal with that question on the main motion. I hope the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) will bear with me, because I do not think at this stage I should deal with matters which he and other hon. members have brought forward. I would like to reserve those remarks for the discussion on the main motion.

At the moment all I am saying, on behalf of the government, is that I feel I must oppose the amendment offered by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew). I feel that is necessary in the light of the undertaking reached at the federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister permit a question? Would he comment on the suggestion I made? Obviously the reason I ask him to do it now is that the attitude of some members toward the amendment might be affected by the view the minister would take on the proposal that the bill be sent to a committee after second reading. Procedurally there is quite a difference.

Mr. Winch: On a question of privilege, I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am in favour of the principle that has been outlined by the minister. But, in my opinion, the bill does not carry out that principle. That is the reason I asked him the question.

Mr. Chevrier: There are two matters to consider, and I shall not confuse them. First, there is the motion that the subject matter of this bill be referred to a committee. That, alone, is the subject with which I am dealing now. And I am saying, on behalf of the government, that we oppose it.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asks for the reasons for not referring it to a committee. My reply to that is this: we have not reached that stage and, if my hon. friend would allow me, I would rather deal with it when we have disposed of the amendment.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Knowles: The attitude of hon. members toward the amendment might be affected by the minister's reply.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? The question is on the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition. All those in favour of the amendment will say aye.

Some hon. Members: Aye.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Drew: On division.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I can repay the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) the same compliment he paid me a moment ago, by saying that he approached this very complex and difficult problem in a conciliatory manner. I commend him for it, because this problem has been discussed in the house on more than one occasion and not always in this manner.

I think the argument of the hon. member can be summarized in this way, that he feels there is not enough information before the house at the moment, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) seems to hold the same view. For that reason the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out that some committee ought to give consideration to hearing evidence in the matter.

He also referred to delay and, as he expressed it—"Why could we not have had this bill weeks ago? Why could we not have had this bill years ago?" Well, I am glad to say that my hon. friend did not insist too much upon that argument, because I know he was on weak ground when he made it.

We could not have had this bill weeks ago, neither could we have had it years ago, and for a number of excellent reasons. May I give some of those reasons? In the first place, while it is true that the Supreme Court of Canada handed down its decision in the Winner case in 1951, there was an appeal from that decision to the privy council. If the federal government had attempted to obtain the views of the provinces while the judgment was under appeal, I do not think the provinces would have welcomed a conference. I do not think they would have listened to the federal government; and, in any event, most certainly it would have been in bad taste for the federal government to have sought the views of the provinces when the matter was still under litigation.

And what confirms that last opinion is this, that the judgment of the privy council in fact varied that of the Supreme Court of Canada. So a fortiori the position of the federal government would have been questionable had it attempted to obtain the views of the provinces while the matter was still pendente lite.

Then my hon. friend says that there were weeks of delay in bringing the matter before the house. Let us see what happened. I think it was the day after the judgment of the privy council was handed down that I made a statement in the house indicating what the government intended to do, and pointing out its reluctance to enter the extra-provincial field of transportation, and its desire to call a conference as quickly as possible.

That conference was called at the end of April. During the time of the conference, which lasted some three days, I believe a satisfactory conclusion was reached. However, the provincial representatives had to go back to their own governments to obtain the consent of those governments to the proposal found in the bill now before the house. All that took some time.

I say to hon. members that the bill was brought here just as fast as it could possibly be brought, having regard to the circumstances. Hence no time was lost. And when one thinks—

Mr. Winch: But it does not do what you want to do.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, I will deal with that later on.

Then my hon. friend said that this matter should be referred to a committee, and he feels there should be an opportunity to discuss a matter of such grave importance before a committee. The reasons I gave earlier—and I shall add others—obtain now against referring the matter to a committee. I do not think it would be wise to refer the bill to the committee on banking and commerce, to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, or to any other committee. I may be mistaken, but I do not think it should be referred, and I will tell you why: Because there are groups and associations in this country who feel that this jurisdiction should be taken over by the federal government, and that the federal government should enact a federal motor carriers act.

Well, now, we have determined against that after very careful consideration, and we have invited the provinces, who are the ones responsible for this kind of traffic, to come here and discuss this matter, and we have asked them whether or not they felt like taking this over. They said, or at least one did, "Well, we would prefer to do it by amendment to the constitution". We said, "Well, we have no authority to deal with that, and in any event that is not practicable at the present time". They said, "Well, if it is not, then we shall go along with you in this kind of legislation". We sat down and we drafted, after quite a considerable length of time, a bill the principle of which is contained in this bill. In fact it is practically the same bill with a very small change.

What would be the effect of referring this to a committee?

Mr. Macdonnell: What is the principle?

Mr. Chevrier: The effect of referring this to a committee would be to hear representations from those who are opposed to the manner in which we are doing this. If anyone has looked at the history of extra-provincial transport in this house since 1935 we will find that we will be here not for one week, two weeks or three weeks, we will be here for months discussing this very matter and hearing representations about the manner in which and the means whereby this should be done.

Why did we proceed to act in the way in which we have? For several reasons. We felt that we did not have the necessary experience nor the necessary staff or personnel to deal with this kind of traffic. After all, the provinces have been dealing with this traffic for years; it is their business; and all they will be doing by means of this enabling legislation will be to extend the powers which they possess under provincial legislation to cover extra-provincial undertakings. Then, we have not the staff; we have not a board. And what board would we establish, the board of transport commissioners? That is the logical board. Do you know what would happen if we were ever to do that? There would be a series of representations by the truckers, by the shippers, against the board. They would say: "That is a railway board; it is not a trucking board. Give us a trucking board. You are not fair to us". Anyone in this house knows that this is a very complex matter, and therefore, if we wanted to be fair to the trucking industry, which is a big industry, taking on more and more importance in Canada because of the development of highways, we would probably be doing them an injustice if we were not setting up a separate board independent of the board of transport commissioners. What does that mean? Extra costs, extra personnel, extra staff not only in Ottawa, but in every province in this country. Was it not a logical thing to do as we did, to invite the provinces here and to say to them: In view of all these things, in view particularly of the fact that when we did attempt to control it back in 1935 and 1937 you protested bitterly against it and you said, that is not the way to do it, is it not logical for you to take it over? The provinces on the whole felt that this was the thing to do. When I say "the provinces" I should make one exception. I meant that all the provinces with this one exception felt that this legislation would meet their position.

They did raise some question about clause 5, but that can be dealt with when we come to it in the committee of the whole. I say that those are two of the important reasons why it would not be proper, why it would unduly delay the matter if it were referred to a committee of the house.

A third reason is that we have an undertaking with those provinces. We told those provinces that if that draft was acceptable to them and to their governments we would submit it to the house at the earliest possible moment during this session. If the bill is sent to a committee and I am right in my assumption that many groups and associations will come here and challenge the principle of this bill—

Mr. Winch: Why should they not have the right?

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend is quite right; certainly they should have the right. What I am pointing out is this. If they come here and challenge it, as they would have a perfect right to do, why should not the provinces come down and give the reasons why this bill should be adopted in principle? I repeat what I said earlier. I have some experience and I say what the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) said. We know what happened in connection with the Railway Act and the amendments having to do with the railway freight structure. We were here for weeks and weeks and then we were not able to bring about a measure which was entirely satisfactory. The point I am making to the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) is that, of course, if it goes to a committee, then it should be thrown wide open, principle and all. If it is thrown wide open to the railways of Canada, because they will want to be heard, to the trucking associations, to the Canadian Manufacturers Association, to the industrial traffic league, and of course to the provinces, you cannot do that in less than months of study. That certainly is the experience that some of the officers who were here long before I was have had in this very difficult problem. Therefore we came to the conclusion—

Mr. Macdonnell: Will the minister permit a question? Really it is one I have asked before. I am still not clear as to whether the minister thinks there is a problem which must one day be faced. If so, why and under what circumstances? He is painting the difficulties. His description of the difficulties is very clear, but it still leaves the question in my mind. If there is a problem that has to be dealt with, when are the difficulties going to become less?

Mr. Chevrier: The problem that has to be faced must be faced now, and we are facing it with this bill. It is the decision of the government to deal with these problems by authorizing, through this enabling legislation, the provinces to control extra-provincial highway transport; extra-provincial undertakings.

Mr. Winch: May I have an answer to the question I asked? In view of the statement of the minister, I asked him wherein, on the principle of this bill, with all its clauses, is the power for the provinces to deal with extra-provincial traffic.

Mr. Chevrier: Again we are getting out of order. Let me put it this way.

Mr. Winch: On the principle.

Mr. Chevrier: On the principle I will answer him. There are two clauses dealing with the very point. Those are the three reasons which I give to the committee for the objection to referring the matter to the railways, canals and telegraph lines committee.

Mr. Macdonnell: Will the minister permit another question?

Mr. Winch: May I have an answer to my question?

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. members are so anxious to ask questions we ought to let the Minister of Transport complete his remarks and then go into committee of the whole on the bill.

Mr. Macdonnell: This is not a question on detail. What I want to ask the minister is this. From certain expressions that he used I have thought that this was in the nature of stopgap legislation. But a moment or two ago he used what seemed to me entirely different language and I thought he referred to it in effect as a final solution. Which is it?

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend has been coming back to that question on three occasions. This is not a stopgap solution. This legislation is brought about by the judgment of the privy council in the Winner case. It is urgent because of the reasons I gave earlier, and this is the manner in which the government proposes to deal with the problem before us at this time. If my hon. friend will look at clauses 3 and 4 of the bill he will, I think, find the answers to his questions.

There are a number of other matters which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) dealt with, and he made particular reference to the royal commission. But he did not say to which royal commission he was referring, whether it was the Rowell-Sirois royal commission or the Turgeon royal commission. If it is the latter, then there was certainly in the terms of reference no direct reference to this subject matter. There was a general reference which allowed the commissioner to bring in a recommendation on any matter affecting the railway structure, or railway or transportation problems, and the commissioner did bring in the recommendation which covered this point.

But there were other studies made by committees of this house and others who brought in recommendations which were exactly to the contrary. In any event, Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that the legislation which is before the house is one which has been approved by the provinces and which has their concurrence, with the exception of the province of Quebec. As I said earlier in my remarks, the position of that province is being covered as well as that of any other province by the last clause of the bill. It also has the concurrence, I understand, of all the trucking associations, and it is important that the operation should not be delayed. For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the legislation should not be referred to a committee of this house.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member cannot speak at this time because the minister has closed the debate.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): But, Mr. Speaker, the minister was up and down so often that I could not be quite sure whether we were on formal second reading.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member was not quite sure because questions were being asked and answers given, then perhaps he will now be anxious to reach the committee stage. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Fleming: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time on division, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, perhaps this is the time to ask the minister to indicate what proposals, if any, he has for the submission of this admittedly difficult problem for further study. I think he will agree with me when I say I think it is a fair summary of the implication of his remarks that the government is not certain that this is a final and complete answer, that something more is necessary, and that this is the best thing that could be devised in the meantime. I would therefore ask the minister what proposals, if any, he has for submitting this bill for further study.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I did not state that this was a temporary measure. I think I answered the hon. member for Greenwood by saying that this was not stopgap legislation, but on the contrary it was the government's answer to the problem as we saw it today.

That does not mean to say that we are not going to be careful about the operation of this legislation. It may be that the provinces may have some difficulties in putting it into effect. It may be that we will have some difficulties, and the bill may have to be amended. If it has to be amended, then parliament sits every year, and I do not think there will be any more difficulty in having a conference of the provinces with the federal government on this subject than there was on other subjects. This year, in less than a month, we got together and within three days we had determined what we would do and clearly understood each other. I think also that it was clearly understood that we would give them the control and allow their provincial boards to deal with extra-provincial traffic, so far as licences and tariffs were concerned, in the same manner in which they are now dealing with provincial traffic. If difficulties arise I am quite sure they will be brought to our attention and we shall deal with them within the existing circumstances.

Mr. Fulton: That being the case, Mr. Chairman, are we to take it that the government feels this is the proper course to follow? I would ask why it was that the Attorney General of Canada intervened in the case before the Supreme Court of Canada and on the appeal before the privy council against the decision of the New Brunswick court, which confirmed that the dominion had the right? Why did the Attorney General of Canada intervene and argue before these two courts that the dominion had the right?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may be allowed to answer the hon. member's question. I am sure he must be familiar with the principle that where a constitutional case comes before the courts and in which the ambit of the jurisdiction of the federal authorities is challenged, as a matter of routine, in order that there will be an accurate judicial disposition of these questions, we take part in the case and recognize a responsibility for so doing in order to work towards a wise judgment of the court as to the division of jurisdiction between the federal government and the provincial governments. The fact that we have done so in the present case is no foundation at all, if I may say so, for the suggestion that once federal jurisdiction has been clearly established as in the Winner case, we should use that federal jurisdiction in one way or another as a matter of policy. Now that this question of jurisdiction has been cleared up by the decision of the privy council in the Winner case, the policy that the federal government proposes to follow in relationship to the exercise of that jurisdiction is to be found in the bill now before the house.

Mr. Winch: There is just one point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct to the attention of the Minister of Justice. There was a decision of the supreme court to the effect that jurisdiction as far as interprovincial vehicles were concerned was a federal matter, and as a result of that there was a conference between the federal government and the provinces and they came to an agreement—

Mr. Garson: If I may interrupt the hon. member, the conference to which he refers did not follow the decision of the supreme court. That decision was appealed to the privy council and it was not until the privy council had rendered the judgment in question that the conference between the federal government and the provinces took place for the reasons which have been very lucidly given by the Minister of Transport.

[Mr. Fulton.]

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Winch: Only as a result—

The Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The Chairman: Bill No. 474, clause 1; shall the clause carry?

Mr. Winch: At the time of the adjournment at six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, I was discussing the principle of the bill which is contained in clause 1. In view of the discussions in the previous hours and the statements made by the minister and the Minister of Justice, I have taken the opportunity to make a further study of this bill. In view of that study I should like to continue my remarks on the principle of it and perhaps, in my statements, to ask certain questions which I think are of importance.

I can say that in principle I agree with the intent of the minister on the introduction of this bill, namely to give to the provinces of Canada the power of control over extra-provincial motor vehicles. However, on reading the bill I have in my mind certain doubts which I should like to have clarified at this time, and I think perhaps there are doubts in the minds of others. As I understand the situation, the courts of the land have declared that the constitutional and jurisdictional control of extra-provincial motor vehicle transport is within the federal powers. In view of that decision—and I think it is accepted by all—the government has introduced an act authorizing the provinces to exercise a power of jurisdiction which under the constitution is declared to be strictly a federal power. My first question therefore is this: Will the Minister of Justice clarify the situation with regard to the jurisdictional power, when the highest courts have declared that the constitutional jurisdictional power is federal?

As I understand constitutional law, there are three ways in which the difficulty can be overcome. One is by an amendment to the British North America Act. The second is by the passage of an act requiring ancillary legislation by a province. The third is by the passage of an act which is of a permissive nature. In view of the fact that the constitutional jurisdiction in this matter has been declared by the courts to be strictly federal, I am going to presume that this legislation is of a permissive nature because of a section of the act which says that it will come into force in a province only upon the issue of a proclamation of the governor in council declaring it to be in force in that province. I presume that it is by proclamation of an act of a permissive nature that the government is introducing an act giving power to the provinces, although the courts have declared that it is strictly a federal responsibility. I think that is the first question that should be clarified at this time.

Going on from that point, because I am certain that the Minister of Justice has taken note of it, I follow on to the general principle of the bill. As I have said before, I think the government has reached a right conclusion in believing that this should be a matter of provincial jurisdiction. But in principle, I cannot find where the government, under this act, is giving to the provinces extra-provincial powers with respect to motor vehicle transport. I have read carefully all the sections of the bill and I cannot find in any of them any power which is not now exercised by the provinces of Canada. In view of the recent court decision, perhaps they may have been operating illegally. Perhaps that is so. I do not know. But in the various sections of Bill No. 474 I cannot see where, in the matter of interprovincial responsibility, they are being given one more power than they have exercised for years with regard to licensing, tariffs and tolls.

This is supposed to be an extra-provincial motor vehicle transport bill. There too I cannot find a section of this bill whereby there is any authority or set-up between the provinces by means of which we can get around all the problems of the past in connection with extra-provincial transportation. Under this act the powers of the provinces are clear with respect to licensing, tolls and so forth. But when the trucker hits the border between British Columbia and Alberta, as I read the bill he then comes under the complete control or authority of Alberta; and the same situation prevails with respect to Alberta and Saskatchewan and with respect to Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Where is this new set-up—which to put the matter quite bluntly, I have been hoping for—of co-operation, collaboration, understanding and agreement between the provinces? I cannot find it in this bill. Perhaps I have missed it. If so, I know the minister will set me right. I know that I am not alone in missing it; a great many of us in this chamber have missed that set-up.

There is something else in the principle of this bill which I think is of the utmost importance. I understand that at the recent conference the provinces did not all agree on this matter. If I am incorrect in my statement, I hope the minister will straighten me out immediately. I understand that the province on the Pacific coast and the provinces on the Atlantic coast agreed. One other province did not.

What is the position with respect to extra-provincial transport if you cannot get from a province in the middle of Canada to those on the east or west or vice versa because one province has not agreed to Bill No. 474? Does that mean that the province that has not entered into the agreement, or perhaps a province that might withdraw later, can cause a Balkan blockade of truck transport east and west from the Pacific to the Atlantic? I ask that question because of the principle involved. I cannot see anything in the bill whereby the federal government, in handing over this jurisdiction to the provinces, takes any authority itself with respect to licensing in order to protect the provinces that come into the agreement and provide for free access across Canada even if one province does not enter the agreement.

In other words, any one province can block the intent of the government and the minister to establish a free system of extra-provincial motor transport across Canada. I cannot see anything in the bill which gives the federal government any power whatsoever if any one province wants to block the other provinces of Canada so far as motor vehicle transport is concerned. That is a very important matter to me and I hope the minister will discuss it. As I said, first of all where does the power arise under this bill, which is of a permissive nature? In the second place, where is the extra-provincial arrangement? For, as I read the legislation, every province has always exercised every power contained in the bill? Where is the set-up to bring about correlation and co-operation so far as the arrangements are concerned? You are granting to the provinces what has been declared by law to be a federal power. I agree with that, but where does the legislation contain any power whereby the federal government will be able to see to it that no one province can interfere with the application, implementation and meaning of the legislation, the purpose of which is to ensure freer access across Canada and to avoid any stalemates so far as vehicular transport is concerned?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I should like to deal with the questions which my hon. friend has raised, and if in the course of my remarks I do not cover all the points or there are still some legal difficulties I will ask my colleague, the Minister of Justice, to deal more fully with the legal points that are raised. My hon. friend seeks to inquire how, if by virtue of the judgment of the courts the power to deal with this matter lies with the federal government, as it does, it is possible to give the provinces control such as we seek to do in this bill. He suggested that after studying the matter there were three methods by which it could be done. Perhaps I might say to him that there are two methods by which one could proceed.

First there is the method of enacting federal legislation and taking advantage of the powers that were determined to belong to the federal government under the British North America Act. We have decided against that. There is more than one method by which we might authorize the provinces to exercise this jurisdiction. It could be done by legislation by reference. That, I understand, is of doubtful legal validity. It could be done by delegation, and it could be done in this manner. The courts have held that this is a perfectly legal way in which to do it, namely, to give to provincial boards, not to provincial legislatures but to provincial boards, the same authority to deal with extra-provincial traffic as they have to deal with provincial traffic. Parliament has already conferred such authority on provincial boards as in the case of the Prince Edward Island potato marketing board and a number of others with which I need not deal.

That is a legal matter which was gone into carefully at the conference. Most of the attorneys general were present and all of us agreed that if it were to be done this was the best method by which to do it. Therefore I am accepting their view on it, and I do not think there is any doubt about the legality of this procedure.

The hon. member also stated that he could not find any place in this legislation where the government is giving the provinces any jurisdiction over extra-provincial transportation. That is contained in sections 3 and 4. I do not know whether I will be out of order in dealing with them at this time, but the powers the federal government has to control extra-provincial undertakings it gives to these provincial boards in the same way as these provincial boards control provincial undertakings. Again, it certainly was the view of the attorneys general who were present at the conference that this was the most practical way in which to do it.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Winch: May I ask a question? Can the minister tell me how what is provided for in section 3, to which he has referred, is any different from what goes on now?

Mr. Chevrier: I am not suggesting it is any different from what goes on now. Coupled with what I said in my earlier remarks on second reading of the bill, the effect of the statement I make now is that we want the provinces to continue to regulate and control extra-provincial transport undertakings in the same way as they are controlling provincial transportation at this time.

Mr. Winch: Can we agree on that?

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend then says: What will happen when traffic moving out of British Columbia arrives at the border of Alberta? What will happen when traffic moving out of another province arrives at the border of the province which has not agreed to this arrangement? The answer is quite clear. The law will be exactly the same as it is now. As I stated earlier, there is one province that did not see fit to give its concurrence to this legislation. The province of Quebec in its wisdom submitted at the conference that it would prefer a constitutional amendment. I doubt if the constitutional amendment requested by that province was the same amendment in substance as that requested by the other provinces. Be that as it may, it did indicate that it was not satisfied with this act as it stood. If that province does not put this act into effect, as it has a right to do, there will be no law in that province in so far as extra-provincial undertakings are concerned, and that goes for any other province that does not want to take advantage of this enabling legislation.

But I cannot see that any harm will befall anyone. Supposing for instance, there is a trucking company that wants to move from Victoria to the Atlantic provinces, say from Vancouver to Halifax, Nova Scotia, and one province says it will not put this act into effect; the truck can still go through; it will not be operating illegally. It was agreed by all the provinces it would be a good thing to have clause 5 or a clause that would be in the nature of clause 5.

I must say that subject to one reservation, because I am sure the hon. member for Bow River will probably want to correct me. There were some misgivings on the part of Alberta, but they did come along and state they would be satisfied to accept that clause. They preferred another method, but rather than see the position of extra-provincial undertakings in the way it is now, they would much rather have this bill.

Well, I believe I have answered the four questions asked by the hon. member for Vancouver East, as I had them noted.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister a question arising out of the statement he just made? He gave the example of a truck moving from Vancouver, British Columbia, to Halifax, Nova Scotia, and referred to the fact that it would be going through one province, namely, Quebec, in which this act would not be in effect. He said there would be no difference. The truck would go through that province, just as it would go through any other province. What is the advantage of a law of that kind, where it does not seem to make any difference whether or not it is in effect?

Mr. Garson: In order to convince my hon. friends of the C.C.F. party, Mr. Chairman, perhaps it would be a good plan for me to quote my legal principles from a source they will not likely impeach. Therefore, I should like to establish some of these fundamental principles from the very excellent brief presented on behalf of the government of Saskatchewan. I want to make it clear that I do not agree with everything that was said in that brief, but I do agree with everything I shall now quote.

Mr. Knowles: What is unique about that?

Mr. Garson: The hon. member for Vancouver East said he was puzzled by the fact that under this bill it was proposed to clothe the provinces with powers from federal sources to do the very same thing that they had been doing up to date provincially.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry, I did not put it that way at all. I said I was only puzzled as to why this act gave them power, but not extensive powers on extra-provincial traffic.

Mr. Garson: Yes, I understood my hon. friend to say that this is the same thing they had been doing all along.

Mr. Winch: Yes.

Mr. Garson: I now quote briefly this statement from the Saskatchewan brief:

> Until the S.M.T., (Eastern) Limited litigation—

That is the Winner case.

> —began it seems to have been generally assumed that a motor vehicle, carrying freight or passengers was under the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of that province in which the vehicle happened to be situated at any given moment. In other words, no legal concept was considered to be involved other than property and civil rights in the province.

As my hon. friend knows, that comes within provincial jurisdiction. Then, the brief says:

> It followed, therefore, that the legislative jurisdiction of a province over highways within the boundaries of the province was complete in the matter of use thereof by interprovincial or international motor carriers.

Therefore the province, as this correctly states, up until that time had been dealing with intra-provincial transport, which was and still is wholly within that provincial jurisdiction, and had also been dealing with interprovincial transport between provinces, and also with the international transport, such as that involved in the Winner case which came from a location in Maine and went up through two Canadian provinces.

Mr. Winch: Until the privy council said it was illegal.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend is quite right —until the privy council said it was illegal. And perhaps if I read one or two short extracts from the privy council judgment, we might illuminate another point that has been giving my hon. friend difficulty. Their Lordships said this:

> The province has indeed authority over its own roads but that authority is a limited one and does not entitle it to interfere with connecting undertakings—

A connecting undertaking such as the Winner movement.

> It must be remembered that it is the undertaking, not the roads which comes within the jurisdiction of the dominion, but legislation which denies the use of provincial roads to such an undertaking or sterilizes the undertaking itself is an interference with the prerogative of the dominion.
>
> Whatever provisions or regulations a province may prescribe with regard to its roads it must not prevent or restrict interprovincial traffic.

As Their Lordships have indicated, this does not in any way prevent what is, in essence, traffic regulations, but the provisions contained in the local statutes and regulations must be confined to such matters as traffic regulations.

Then, Their Lordships go on to say that whether the legislation in question in any case is, in pith and substance, traffic regulation or whether it is an interference with interprovincial traffic, must be decided on the facts of the case before the court. In the Winner case, they held it was an interference with or sterilization of interprovincial traffic.

Now, that being so, upon the privy council rendering its decision in the Winner case, the problem which arose was as to what was to be done with regard to that regulation of interprovincial traffic which up until that time had been provided by the province. They had the organization, the staff and everything else that the dominion did not have. The bill that is now before the house enunciates and provides for the bringing into effect of the principle that the officials in the provincial transport boards shall, in effect, continue to provide, under federal jurisdiction and authority, that control over interprovincial and international traffic, which up until the present time they had exercised, as it would appear from the Winner judgment perhaps wrongfully, under provincial authority. And that is the reason why this Bill 474 authorizes the provincial boards to carry along that control over interprovincial traffic which the hon. member for Vancouver East says is just the same as it is at the present time.

Now, so far as a province in which this act has not been proclaimed is concerned, any interprovincial traffic which flows through that province cannot be interfered with or sterilized; for the only way in which a province, after the Winner case was decided, can control, regulate or license interprovincial traffic, is under the federal authority given by this present bill, particularly sections 3 and 4.

If my hon. friend will examine the section before him he will see it says, simply, that a provincial motor transport board shall under its terms regulate, and shall have power to grant licences to interprovincial traffic. And the provincial boards will have that power by virtue of the action of this parliament exercising federal jurisdiction to clothe the provincial motor transport board's personnel with such powers.

My hon. friend asks how that can be done. Again I would refer him to this excellent Saskatchewan brief which says, as is obvious——that the only way in which this problem can be dealt with, whether as in this bill or even if the dominion government assumed control itself over interprovincial and international traffic, would be to correlate its efforts in this field with the efforts which the provinces at the same time would be putting forth to control intraprovincial traffic.

So no matter what legal alternative is adopted by this parliament, we still have to have the co-operative approach. And you cannot get a better example of the co-operative approach than the bill now before the house. The Saskatchewan brief puts it in this way:

The co-operative approach proposed depends upon the method of overcoming the constitutional division of legislative competence. It seems clear on constitutional grounds that the outright delegation of authority from the federal government to provincial governments or vice versa is out of the question.

That is to say, parliament cannot clothe a provincial legislature with the power to pass an act which the provincial legislature itself has not the power to pass, under the British North America Act. Then the brief goes on in these terms:

It seems equally clear however that—

As the Minister of Transport explained a moment ago, in line with this decision in the Prince Edward Island marketing board case—

—a provincial board may receive the authority of the parliament of Canada to carry out certain functions within the jurisdiction of that parliament. This power is not impaired by the fact that it has also received the authority of a provincial legislature to carry out certain functions within the jurisdiction of that legislature.

In other words, when a provincial legislature has clothed the persons in a provincial board with power to deal with intra-provincial motor traffic, it is then quite within the power of this parliament to come along and pass this bill, and say to the members of that board, "You shall also have federal authority under this bill to control interprovincial traffic."

Mr. Fleming: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Fleming: I believe what he is saying, and what was said earlier by his colleague the Minister of Transport, is that a provincial board in those circumstances has jurisdiction to accept a grant of jurisdiction from parliament, if provincial legislation has been passed also clothing it with the same power to accept that grant of jurisdiction from parliament. May I ask the minister how many provinces have already passed the necessary legislation to clothe their provincial transport boards with authority to accept the grant of jurisdiction from parliament with respect to international and interprovincial highway traffic?

Mr. Garson: To begin with, that was not what I said. What I said was that this bill purported to clothe the provincial boards, which are now exercising jurisdiction under provincial statutes, with power to administer Bill No. 474, which we are now discussing. And the right of the provincial boards to receive power and exercise power under a federal statute is not impaired by the fact that the personnel of those boards is at the same time receiving and exercising power under provincial legislation.

From now on—and I think this is in answer to the hon. member for Vancouver East as well as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—these provincial boards, which heretofore had been exercising intra-provincial powers and also, although mistakenly, interprovincial powers—will from now on continue to exercise intra-provincial powers, and under the authority of this legislation will validly exercise interprovincial powers.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask a further question?

Mr. Fulton: Should not this discussion take place under clause 3?

The Chairman: I understand the hon member for Eglinton wishes to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Fleming: Yes. The minister did not answer my question. Would he explain his view on this point—and I may have misapprehended the point of his argument as well as that of the Minister of Transport earlier. Does he say that any provincial legislation is required to enable the provincial transport boards to accept from parliament the gift of jurisdiction over international and interprovincial highway traffic? We know that under provincial legislation the provincial boards are clothed with authority to deal with intra-provincial traffic. I would like to know the minister's view as to whether any provincial legislation is required to enable a provincial transport board to accept this proposed gift of jurisdiction over international and interprovincial highway traffic.

Mr. Garson: I do not think that that matter is really a practical or relevant one, because at the conference, upon the proceedings of which this legislation is based, all of the provinces not only expressed approval of this co-operative method of dealing with the problem, but they expressed approval of the terms of the bill. That being so, the point my hon. friend from Eglinton now raises, as to there being a necessity for the provincial board in any given province, by reason of the manner in which it has been set up for provincial purposes, requiring to have a clause in the bill creating it or a later provincial bill authorizing it to receive authority from the federal, is without significance; for I am sure that that authority would be forthcoming without question from the province.

Mr. Fleming: But that is not the point. I had hoped we might have from the Minister of Justice an expression of opinion on this point, because it is important and relevant. If such provincial legislation is necessary to vest authority in the provincial transport board, then I wish to know how many provinces have passed such enabling legislation, because if that is the case, this bill will not fill the present gap. It will still be necessary for the provincial legislatures in every case to meet and pass such enabling legislation. That may have the effect of extending the present jurisdictional gap until next February or March in many cases. Therefore the point is very important, and I think we should have an expression of opinion. I gathered from the statements of both the ministers that they were saying that enabling provincial legislation is necessary in such cases.

Mr. Garson: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Fleming: If I misapprehended the minister's argument I would wish that it be cleared up for the record now, because the point is important.

Mr. Garson: In my last statement a few moments ago I thought I made the position as clear as I could make it, and that is, that the federal parliament can clothe any group of people that it chooses with powers to exercise authority under this legislation. It may be that with some eight or nine provinces coming under this arrangement and with the provincial legislation doubtless varying to some extent, from one province to another, by reason of the nature of the type of board created under a certain provincial statute, clarifying provincial legislation might be needed to make it clear that that precise board could accept authority granted to it by federal legislation. Apart from some difficulty of that sort that may occur in legislation that I have not even seen, I do not think there is any difficulty presented at all by this parliament clothing certain persons with authority which they may exercise under this bill.

Mr. Fleming: One further question: I understood the minister to say that this bill had been submitted to the dominion-provincial conference.

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. Fleming: That is a form of consultation concerning a bill that would have been interesting if we had known about it this morning in a debate on another matter.

Mr. Abbott: You made a good speech.

Mr. Winch: I have listened very carefully to the statements in the past few minutes which were made by the Minister of Justice, and to some of them I can say—what is the expression—"love that man", because, as I understood the statement of the minister, actually in view of the decision of the privy council, for many years the provinces have been acting illegally in their control of intra-provincial traffic, and that is one reason why I said—

Mr. Garson: May I correct my hon. friend. I know he did not mean it, but he said "intra". They have always had authority over intra-provincial traffic.

Mr. Winch: Extra-provincial traffic; all right. As I understand clauses 3 and 4, this legislation will completely legalize all their operations. Am I right there?

Mr. Garson: No. Clauses 3 and 4 will authorize them from this point on, that is the officials of these provincial boards from this time on, to carry on with their regulation of interprovincial traffic under federal authority.

Mr. Winch: That, Mr. Chairman, is exactly the way I understood it, except that I do not see where the interprovincial board comes in in those provinces. The minister has not made that clear. It is still within the borders of the province, because all the relations are confined strictly within the confines of a province. You can come in from Alberta to British Columbia or from British Columbia to Alberta, but where do you get the extra-provincial basis of organization which I think basically you will have, a co-ordinated system across Canada? Where in the legislation is that, or is it there at all?

Mr. Garson: I think it is very simple. An interprovincial undertaking crosses provincial boundaries from time to time. When it crosses the interprovincial boundary between British Columbia and Alberta going west it comes into the province of British Columbia and its activities as an interprovincial undertaking in British Columbia will by virtue of this bill be under the control of the members of the provincial board acting under federal authority.

Mr. Winch: Where is that in the bill?

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend will look at clause 3 he will see it says:

> (1) Where in any province a licence is by the law of the province required for the operation of a local undertaking, no person shall operate an extra-provincial undertaking in that province unless he holds a licence issued under the authority of this act.
>
> (2) The provincial transport board in each province may in its discretion issue a licence to a person to operate an extra-provincial undertaking into or through the province upon the like terms and conditions and in the like manner as if the extra-provincial undertaking operated in the province were a local undertaking.

I think it is very clear. As long as they are in that province their activities are under the control of that board acting under federal authority.

What I understand my hon. friend from Vancouver East is now driving at is this. In view of the fact that a provincial undertaking may extend through seven or eight provinces, how can a number of separate boards, each having authority to deal only within its own area, control this operation; that is, their operations through seven or eight provinces. Well, Mr. Chairman, the answer to that is found in arrangements which have now been in existence in Canada for some considerable period of time under which, by reciprocal arrangements between those various provincial authorities, licensing is provided for the undertaking through all of those provinces for fees that will be perhaps 100 per cent in the home province of the undertaking and for less than 100 per cent in the other provinces and in some cases American states, in consideration of those provinces and states extending the same kind of an arrangement in respect of such interprovincial undertakings as are located in those other provinces as their home provinces. These reciprocal arrangements exist by virtue of the same kind of interprovincial co-operation as we are now trying to perpetuate by dominion-provincial co-operation. This is the way and the only way in a federal state in which it is possible to secure that over-all regulation of interprovincial motor traffic in all of the provinces concerned.

Mr. Knowles: May I go back to my question of half an hour ago. We have had quite a long answer, but part of my question is still unanswered. In the case of the truck that started out from Vancouver, British Columbia, half an hour ago, on the way to Halifax, Nova Scotia, under whose jurisdiction, so far as this undertaking is concerned, is that truck when it is travelling through a province in which the federal government has no board which it has clothed with these powers?

Mr. Garson: I thought I had answered that question when I quoted rather extensively from the judgment of the privy council in the Winner case. It seems to me that the position there is this: Once the Winner case is decided in the way in which it was decided, no provincial board can regulate an interprovincial undertaking except under federal authority. Therefore, if this act be not proclaimed in a certain province there will not be in that province any board that can do anything more than provide traffic regulations, weights, and so on with respect to interprovincial undertakings and, as I understand it, there will be no board in that province which will have the power to prevent an interprovincial undertaking from going through that province.

Mr. Knowles: In other words, during the time in which that truck is going through that province it is not under any jurisdiction?

Mr. Garson: It is under possible federal jurisdiction which is not in esse by reason of the fact that the relevant federal statute has not been proclaimed to be in effect in that province.

Mr. Winch: Let us stop there. I do not quite understand. Let us speak in English.

Mr. Garson: "In esse" means "in being".

Mr. Winch: I do not know what that term means.

Mr. Garson: It means "in being".

Mr. Winch: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has put us on the track. If there is one province or more which does not come under this act when passed by the house and a truck passes through that province, then I take it that, in accordance with the decision of the privy council, it will then be the responsibility of the federal government and that they will convey that truck through on their regulations. Is that correct?

Mr. Garson: I presume my hon. friend's question is asked as being relevant to the bill which is now before us. Under the circumstances he names I do not think I can add anything to the answer I gave a moment ago to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If this bill becomes law and it is not proclaimed in a province, then an inter-provincial undertaking can take its trucks through that province, and providing it complies with the rules of the road, traffic regulations, weights, and so on, it cannot be denied ingress or egress or passage through the province.

Mr. Knowles: In other words, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill was to fill a vacuum which now exists, and even after the bill is passed if there are provinces which do not wish to have this bill proclaimed with respect to their area there will still be a vacuum to that extent.

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend calls that a vacuum—

Mr. Winch: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, and I do not want to hold up the passage of this clause, but I wish to be quite clear about this. I do not think there is a vacuum. I understood the minister to say that if a province does not come in on this agreement after the act is passed then, regardless of this vacuum, if a truck complies with the rules of the road then that truck cannot be denied ingress or egress or passage through that province. Is that correct?

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if the same thing applies to buses. For example, in the past buses coming from Alberta through Saskatchewan, particularly in the case of the Greyhound line buses from Calgary to Saskatoon, had to discharge their passengers as soon as they reached the Saskatchewan border, and the passengers had to board a different bus. Does that still apply?

Mr. Chevrier: Clause 2 (a) covers that point.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): What is the answer?

Mr. Chevrier: I thought I answered that this is covered by clause 2 (a), which covers both passengers and goods.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Operating licence.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I have been waiting for some time to deal with some of the points I wish to make, though I might add that some have been anticipated in the earlier discussion which, I thought, should have taken place under this clause. I would like to follow up in some detail the question of whether this scheme will in fact succeed, whether it is sound judicially, and whether if it is to succeed it does not require concurring provincial legislation.

As I understand it, the legal basis on which the department has proceeded in drafting this legislation is the Prince Edward Island potato marketing case in which it was held that while parliament has no authority to clothe a provincial legislature with any of its jurisdiction, it has nevertheless the authority to delegate to a board which may have been set up under provincial legislation the administrative power which the federal government would have had the right to confer on its own board, had it created such a board.

But I suggest that that case cannot be taken as deciding anything beyond what it decided on the basis of the facts on which it so decided. I suggest there is a fundamental difference between the facts in that case with respect to the marketing of potatoes, and the facts which would be present in a case of a highway or public utilities board seeking to exercise control over the operation of a truck outside its borders or, alternatively, one which had come into its borders from outside under a licence granted by an authority outside its borders.

In the Prince Edward Island potato case the marketing board itself which was given authority to exercise the federal parliament's administrative jurisdiction was not using the roads of another province. The only persons who would be using the roads of another province would be using them as individuals and therefore that province would naturally have complete and exclusive jurisdiction over them, whereas what the government is purporting to do under clause 3 is to allow one province to say how a person shall be allowed and who shall be allowed to use the road from another province. I submit there is a fundamental difference in the factual basis of the two situations so that the Prince Edward Island potato case can be of no application to this situation where you are trying to give one province the authority to exercise, with respect to the use of the road from another province, the authority which is vested only in the federal government.

I would like to hear from either minister as to how they feel the case of P.E.I. Marketing Board v. H. B. Willis Inc. is applicable as general authority for the present legislation.

Mr. Garson: In reply to my hon. friend's question, I would point out that if he will examine the bill he will see that clause 3 of the draft bill requires an operating certificate, if the provincial laws require an operating certificate for a local undertaking. Under subclause 2 the provincial board is authorized to issue such a certificate and in doing so the provincial board is required to follow provincial rules applicable to the issuing of a provincial certificate. Provincial legislation of this character applied to local undertakings would be constitutional.

Now, the reply to my hon. friend's question, I think, is this, that parliament can confer authority on provincial boards, as was decided in the case I quoted, namely the Prince Edward Island potato marketing case, and parliament can adopt provincial rules by reference. In the various statutes there are several examples of this, as my hon. friend knows. They are not confined to the Prince Edward Island case by any means. As I would point out, this practice differs from delegation. Parliament is not attempting to confer upon the legislature of any province jurisdiction to enact laws that the provinces themselves would not have the power to enact under the British North America Act. I see my hon. friend nodding his head in assent. That was the position that I took earlier. Parliament here is simply saying that the rules that a provincial legislature has validly enacted within the ambit of its powers in relation to a subject matter over which it has jurisdiction shall be rules applicable in relation to a subject matter over which parliament has jurisdiction. Recognizing the point or the purported point of the remarks which my hon. friend made a moment ago, I am endeavouring to state the precise reason why this proposed bill is intra vires of parliament.

Mr. Fulton: I agree with the proposition the minister has put forward as to the scheme of this bill. But the point that I made—and which the minister has not dealt with—is that the judicial basis upon which the government says that this bill will stand up is the Prince Edward Island potato marketing case.

Mr. Garson: Not exclusively.

Mr. Fulton: On what other basis, then? What other authority is there for it? That is the case which established clearly and beyond any doubt that the federal government had the authority to delegate to a board set up by a provincial authority the administrative authority which the federal government might otherwise have conferred upon its own board. That is my point. I am not questioning the decision. That case is obviously the final declaration of the law.

What I am pointing out is that that case cannot be taken as authority for any proposition which goes beyond the facts upon which that case was decided. What was done there was to give the Prince Edward Island potato marketing board authority to regulate the marketing of Prince Edward Island potatoes in areas where otherwise the Prince Edward Island board would not have had any authority. It was with respect to produce originating within that province and over which therefore, initially at any rate, that province had jurisdiction; the jurisdiction of that province over produce originating within it was extended outside the province by the delegation.

What you are doing here, however, is the exact reverse. The facts are completely inverted as between the two cases. Here this legislation seeks to delegate to a provincial board authority to make regulations with respect to an undertaking which originates outside the province and is seeking to go into the province. In other words, this bill seeks to give, say, to the Alberta board power to make regulations governing the passenger or freight-carrying activities of a British Columbia corporation.

Mr. Dickey: Within the province of Alberta.

Mr. Fulton: Within the borders of Alberta.

Mr. Dickey: Why not?

Mr. Fulton: This is the exact inverse of what was done in the Prince Edward Island potato marketing case where the authority of the Prince Edward Island board was in respect of potatoes originating in Prince Edward Island, and where they were allowed, as it were, to follow them outside of their borders. They were not given authority to take something coming from outside, under the order in council that was passed, and to make with respect to it provincial regulations which they would not otherwise have had authority to make. Therefore the facts of the two situations are completely different.

Mr. Garson: With great respect may I say that I think my hon. friend, in the remarks he has just made, has overlooked the fact that all that this bill purports to do is to clothe the provincial board with federal powers in respect of those matters which are taking place within the province in which the board acts. That is all it purports to do. Because an undertaking is interprovincial and because it passes through British Columbia and Saskatchewan and Manitoba does not give the Alberta board power over it in respect of those things that take place in connection with it outside of Alberta. But, in relation to those things which took place in Alberta, this bill is simply saying that the rules that a provincial legislature has validly enacted in relation to a subject matter over which it has jurisdiction shall be the rules applicable in respect of a subject matter over which parliament has jurisdiction. The board is dealing in the one case with intraprovincial motor transport operations and in the other case with interprovincial operations.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps the minister and I just will not be able to come to a mutual understanding of the point I am trying to make, so I leave that one for the time being and come to another one.

The question has been raised already as to the necessity for the provincial legislatures' enacting concurrent legislation to authorize their boards to accept jurisdiction. So far I do not think we have had a clear answer on that point. But again, going back to the statement of principle which I do not think the minister could controvert—and I do not think he would want to do so—namely that the basis of this legislation is the Prince Edward Island potato marketing board case, again I say that that case cannot be taken as authority for a proposition with respect to facts which are entirely different. It is only authority for a proposition where the facts are similar. In that case the Prince Edward Island legislature had passed legislation authorizing their marketing board to accept jurisdiction and administrative authority which might be conferred upon it by the dominion government under its concurrent legislation. Chief Justice Rinfret, in his judgment, referred specifically to that feature of the case, as will be found at page 398 of the Supreme Court Reports of 1952. His judgment with respect to that portion of it, which held that the Prince Edward Island board was properly authorized to make regulations under the dominion statute, was in part most clearly based upon the fact that that board had been authorized by its own legislature to accept that jurisdiction. Any other proposition, of course, would lead to an absurd result which I am quite sure the government, if it gives it any consideration, would not seriously put forward, namely that a board set up by a province for one purpose and with no thought that it should step in for another purpose, might suddenly be told by the dominion government: We want you to act for us in this particular respect and capacity. That proposition, of course, would be perfectly absurd. I am sure that the government would not seriously put it forward for a moment.

I should therefore like to hear further from the minister as to what provinces have agreed to enact concurrent legislation and what happens if they do not enact it; and in the meantime, I should like to hear what answer he gives to the proposition already put forward by the hon. member for Eglinton, in the absence of that concurrent legislation. In many provinces it cannot possibly take place now until the session of the legislature next spring. What happens to the gap in the meantime to which reference has already been made?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I have answered this same question three times already, I think, and I really despair—

Mr. Fleming: The minister has talked all around it; he has not answered it.

Mr. Fulton: The minister has not come to grips with the points that have already been made.

Mr. Garson: Oh, yes.

Mr. Fulton: Does the minister agree that the Prince Edward Island case was decided on the basis that there was passed in that province legislation authorizing their board to accept jurisdiction conferred under the dominion statute?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, this is just playing with shadows. Does my hon. friend entertain such a low opinion of the provincial governments of Canada that he thinks they would send their representatives—in many cases their premiers and their attorneys general—down here for a two-day conference and then would be unwilling to take any steps that might be necessary to make effective this bill which they approved? Does he think that? And if he does not think that, what is the sense of these points which he has been raising?

Mr. Fulton: I am not going to be put off by any ridiculous approach. I asked the minister a question which I assumed, perhaps wrongly, it was within his competence as Minister of Justice to answer. Will the minister answer the question?

Mr. Sinclair: He has half a dozen times.

Mr. Fulton: He has not answered it yet.

Mrs. Shipley: He has.

Mr. Fulton: Does the minister know? Has he read the Prince Edward Island potato marketing board case recently? Does he know? Has he got any information whether it was based on the fact that there existed enabling legislation within that province?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman, not until the Minister of Justice shows the usual courtesy which is customarily expected from ministers, and answers a serious question in a serious manner.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I will leave it to members of the house whether I have exhibited the usual courtesy.

Mr. Sinclair: Too much.

Mr. Fulton: Has the Minister of Justice got any opinion on the matter?

Mr. Garson: I have expressed it four or five times.

Mr. Fulton: The minister has not dealt with that question at all.

Mr. Garson: Now, Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, if I may say so, that remark of my hon. friend is completely inaccurate. I have answered this specific question two or three times already, and I think there is a limit to the number of times that one should have to answer the same question.

Mr. Fulton: I challenge the minister to examine the record at any stage and find where he answered the question which I asked him, namely, whether he does not agree that the decision in the Prince Edward Island potato marketing case, on which this legislation is based—

[Mr. Garson.]

An hon. Member: Partially.

Mr. Fulton: —was based in large part on the ground that enabling legislation already existed in that province. I challenge the minister to show where he has answered that question at any time.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend has not been very attentive to the discussion this evening.

Mr. Fulton: Wait a moment. I have the floor at the moment.

Mr. Chevrier: You asked for an answer and he is giving it to you.

An hon. Member: Read it in Hansard.

Mr. Garson: Let him go on and talk as much as he likes.

Mr. Fulton: The minister has, it is true, sought on a number of occasions to evade dealing directly with the question whether or not it will be necessary for the provinces to pass enabling legislation, but he has not answered the question as to the basis on which this case was decided and whether or not, therefore, it will be necessary for similar legislation to be enacted elsewhere.

Mr. Garson: As I recall it, in my previous remarks at quite an early stage I referred to the Prince Edward Island potato marketing case as being authority for a rather elementary principle in constitutional law which I am sure the hon. member for Kamloops will not challenge, namely, that the federal parliament can confer federal authority and powers upon a board which is also exercising provincial powers. That is the only purpose for which I cited that case, and that is a sound statement of law for which that case is authority. I did not go into any of these details and technicalities my hon. friend is now bringing up. It may very well be that upon the facts involved in the potato marketing board case in Prince Edward Island it was necessary there, and that the provincial authorities did enact that that board should receive from the provincial legislature the authority to receive federal powers.

But I said in reply to the hon. member for Eglinton that, without having seen the relevant provincial legislation of any of the eight provinces involved with regard to motor transport, I could not commit myself offhand to an opinion, in respect of legislation that I have never seen, as to whether it would be necessary, in the light of that provincial legislation, for these provincial legislatures now to pass further provincial legislation authorizing the boards set up under their existing legislation to receive federal powers. My hon. friend himself is a lawyer. How much further could I spell out the answer to a question of that sort? How does he expect me to give an opinion with regard to eight or nine provincial transport laws that, unfortunately, I have not seen? Would he do it?

Mr. Sinclair: Oh, gladly.

Mr. Garson: And what would he charge his client for an opinion of that sort?

Mr. Fulton: The minister has of course gone a great deal further in what he has said now than he did previously in answer to my question with respect to the effect of the Prince Edward Island potato marketing case. He has stated an opinion for which I personally would not pay anything because he has attributed to the case an authority which it does not contain in citing its finding, as he says, that the dominion government can empower any provincial board to exercise authority which would be otherwise reserved to the dominion parliament. I submit to him that case is no authority whatsoever for that proposition. It is on this point that I have been endeavouring to draw him into an intelligent discussion.

Mr. Garson: On a question of privilege, my hon. friend is again attributing to me remarks that I did not make, but I have no objection to that because Hansard will record what I said and it will record what he said that I said, which is a very different thing.

Mr. Fulton: I am trying to get to a basis of sensible understanding with the minister and I am not trying to say that he said things he did not say. I understood him to say, in explanation of the proposition he now puts forward, that the Prince Edward Island case established what he himself called an elemental constitutional proposition, namely, that the dominion parliament might clothe a provincial board with authority to exercise administrative functions within the purview of the dominion parliament. Is that not a fair summary of what the minister said? Does he now wish to challenge it?

Mr. Garson: No, so stated it is quite correct.

Mr. Fulton: That is, as I recall it, what I said the minister said.

Mr. Garson: Oh no, it is not.

Mr. Fulton: All right, we will proceed on the basis of what we have now got before us. I say that the minister in making that statement—

An hon. Member: You are getting slower every day.

Mr. Dickey: Get down to some facts.

Mr. Fulton: —has incorrectly interpreted this case because the Prince Edward Island case was decided on the basis of a set of facts which was that the Prince Edward Island legislature had previously conferred upon this board authority to accept delegated dominion administration. It is authority for no other proposition and it cannot, I submit, be cited as authority for the vague general proposition that the dominion government can run around the country giving provincial boards set up for one purpose authority to do things for which they were never set up. No court would of course agree with the interpretation of this decision which the Minister of Justice has just made, I submit, for the very reason that it obviously was not intended to lay down the proposition that boards set up for one purpose by the provinces could be clothed with authority for an entirely different purpose by the dominion unless the provinces themselves authorized the boards to accept that authority.

Mr. Chevrier: Eight attorneys general have already agreed on this point.

Mr. Fulton: We have been trying to find that out, and the minister has sought to answer that question by indirection. He has said: Do you suppose that the attorneys general would come down here and agree to this proposed legislation if they did not intend to see to it that their boards had the authority to carry it out? No, I give the attorneys general credit for rather more intelligence than the Minister of Justice—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: —does. What we are asking him, and I think we are entitled to an answer, is in how many provinces does there exist that enabling legislation? If the ministers do not know why do they not say so and save all this discussion?

Mr. Chevrier: May I try to clear up one point. I did not, during the course of the conference, discuss this subject matter with all of the attorneys general. It would not be accurate nor true were I to say that. But I discussed it with a number of them, and all agreed that this was the way in which to pass the legislation. I refer particularly to one attorney general whom I met out in the western provinces. He asked me how we were going to do this, weeks before the conférence took place. I indicated to him how we proposed to do it. He said, that is the only way in which it can be done. He said he had given this very careful consideration and had come to the conclusion the only way in which the dominion could clothe the provinces with control was by virtue of a statute which would enable the provincial boards to do interprovincially what they were doing intra-provincially.

The draft bill which was circulated, and which was studied, is the result not of the Minister of Justice or of the Minister of Transport, but is the result of the conference of premiers in some cases and attorneys general in other cases, with their legal advisers who were there. They all came to the conclusion that this was the way in which to deal with it. Well, are we going to deal with this problem or are we not? If we are not going to deal with it—

Mr. Fulton: I wish you would just answer the question, that is all.

Mr. Chevrier: I know, but if we are going to deal with it, this is the method by which to do it.

My hon. friend has asked several questions in an attempt to differentiate between the Prince Edward Island potato case and this case. It may be so that the Prince Edward Island potato case is not entirely on all fours with this case, but that does not derogate from the fact that this, in the opinion of all those perhaps some 20 lawyers who were there, is good law.

Mr. Fulton: I agree that if it is going to be done by delegating authority to the provincial boards this is the only way to do it. I thought I had made it clear that the basis of this decision, and the subject of my inquiry, was that it appears that concurrent provincial legislation is also necessary. The very simple point I am asking is: Are the ministers in a position to tell us how many provinces have the necessary concurrent legislation; and, in the case of those that have not, what is to happen in the meantime about this apparent gap which will occur?

Mr. Chevrier: How many provinces have concurrent legislation? Perhaps I could reply in this way. At the conference the provincial ministers of highways were there, the attorneys general were there, and they must know whether or not they have concurrent legislation in the province. I would think, from what I know of the position, that the vast majority of the provinces have concurrent legislation. I know they have it in Ontario and Quebec. I think they have it in most of the maritime provinces. I believe they have it in Manitoba, but I have not got the statutes before me; I do not know.

I could say that had this particular problem been of the magnitude my hon. friend feels it is, rightly or wrongly, it would have been raised then because surely those provinces who consented to the principle of this draft bill must have known whether or not they had concurrent legislation. Notwithstanding that, the attorneys general felt they could go along with this bill.

Mr. Fulton: We in the federal parliament are concerned with the matter of interprovincial highway traffic control. I would have thought that the minister would feel he should be in a position to satisfy the federal parliament on the question: When this bill is passed, how many provinces will be in a position to apply it? That is what we want to know. Is this measure going to produce the desired results? I agree that this is the only approach if the solution is to give authority to the provinces, but what we want to know here, and I think are entitled to know, is when the measure is enacted how many provinces will be in a position to bring it into effect and have that control.

Mr. Chevrier: I think that is a fair question. How many provinces will be able to apply this provision? I believe all the provinces will be able to apply it. I feel that the provinces will put it into effect, save and except one. I speak now of the nine provinces. There was one province, Newfoundland, that was not represented at the conference, for obvious reasons, and that province will not need to put it into effect. From the conversations I have had with representatives of the provinces, from the correspondence that has come from each and every one of the provinces, save one, I feel this act will be put into effect as soon as it is passed.

Mr. Fulton: It would have been a lot simpler if the minister had answered first, instead of having his colleague confuse the situation.

Mr. Fleming: May I turn to another point raised by section 3? Section 3 provides:

> . . . no person shall operate an extra-provincial undertaking in that province unless he holds a licence issued under the authority of this act.

It further provides that:

> The provincial transport board in each province may in its discretion issue a licence to a person to operate an extra-provincial undertaking—

We have not spelled out here anywhere in the act any detailed provisions about the licence. This is the sum total of the provisions of the statute in regard to the issuance of a licence. I am sure the minister is aware that in the provinces which have entered into the field of controlling intra-provincial highway transport traffic, there are many types of licences. There are licences pertaining to common carriers; there are licences pertaining to contract carriers, and there are various types of each of those depending upon the type of route over which the licensee is to operate.

This section speaks only of a licence. The form of the licence is not prescribed. There is nothing here to indicate whether there is to be only one type of licence applicable to all types of highway transport. We have the whole question raised as to whether the operators of buses are to receive the same licences as operators of trucks. What about class A operators on the highways? What about class B operators on the country roads? What about class C contract carriers?

Mr. Chevrier: There are hundreds in Ontario, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. Fleming: I believe the classes now run up to H.

Mr. Chevrier: There are many types in Ontario.

Mr. Fleming: There are many types for public commercial vehicles, and then we have passenger vehicles as well. It struck me as being very strange that this bill lacked provision to cover this point. It simply speaks about a licence. The form is not prescribed nor—and this is an equally important point—Mr. Chairman, does this section lay down the terms upon which a licence is to be granted. If you look at its provisions it simply says that the provincial transport board may, in its discretion, issue a licence. What is to be the meaning of that expression? What rules are to guide the provincial transport boards in the issuance of licences under the authority that is purported to be conferred upon them by this act?

The minister is aware that these provincial transport boards operate for the purpose of controlling the operations of public commercial vehicles and public passenger vehicles. They do so under the provisions of statutes which, in practically every case, direct that the licence be issued on proof of public convenience and necessity. There have been some interesting decisions, both in this country and the United States, upon what constitutes public convenience and necessity. There certainly has not been, on the part of provincial boards, any uniform interpretation of the meaning of those words, but at least they have some value in giving direction to the provincial transport board as to the grounds upon which they should proceed in dealing with applications. In the legislation now before us there is not one circumstance or rule to guide the provincial transport boards in dealing with applications for extra-provincial licences. This seems to me to be an extraordinary situation. It is left entirely to the discretion of the provincial transport board—an unfettered discretion. It seems to me that the house ought to give very careful consideration to language as broad in scope as this, conferring jurisdiction upon a provincial board without making the slightest attempt to lay down rules to guide that provincial board in dealing with such applications.

These are the questions which occur to me. What kind of licence is to be issued? What is to be the form of the licence? Who is to lay it down? Upon what rules are provincial transport boards to proceed in entertaining applications for licences for interprovincial operations?

Mr. Chevrier: I think the language set out in clauses 3 and 4 is meant to leave with the provincial boards the discretion, in so far as all the questions my hon. friend from Eglinton has raised, if I understand him correctly.

Let us take the province of Ontario as an example. My hon. friend is perhaps more familiar with that province, as I am. He knows that there are perhaps hundreds—I might be mistaken in that—but there are certainly—

Mr. Fleming: They run from A to H, inclusive.

Mr. Chevrier: Oh, far more than that. The attorney general in the province as well as the minister of highways said that there were countless numbers of licences granted by the Ontario railway municipal board to these various groups.

Mr. Fleming: But there are not that many classes. The classes are set out in the regulations under the act. If my memory serves me correctly they run from A to H.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, there are several classes, and several classifications, too, in respect of any licence granted by the board under the general rule of public convenience and necessity.

The provincial boards have had a great deal of experience in dealing with these applications for franchises, licences, permits, or whatever you call them—because different provinces call them by different names. They have had a lot of experience. We felt we should not tie provincial boards down to any particular kind of licence, or class or classification, but that they should be authorized to deal with extra-provincial applications in the same way, in the same method and under the same rules and conditions as they were dealing with intra-provincial applications.

That is the way the provinces wanted it. I remember very well the discussion having to do with Ontario, and that is certainly the way the attorney general and the minister of highways in Ontario wanted it. They did not want it any other way, either. If this were to be amended the attorney general in Ontario would be the first to protest, and to protest vigorously. Clauses 3 and 4 covered the situation and suited Ontario best. There was some doubt about it at first; but after a full discussion we came to the conclusion that this was the method by which to authorize these provincial boards to deal with extra-provincial licences.

Mr. Fleming: Do I understand the minister to say that the words "upon the like terms and conditions and in the like manner as if the extra-provincial undertaking operated in the province were a local undertaking" import the rules as to the jurisdiction in these cases that would apply under provincial legislation? In other words, are we to understand that these words have the effect of importing the rule that the applicant must make out a case of public convenience and necessity before he establishes the right to a licence under this act?

Mr. Chevrier: If that is the position in the province, I would think that that will be the position hereafter. Certainly, if I understand correctly the rules in Ontario, a carrier must prove public convenience and necessity before he can obtain a franchise. And if this bill goes through he would still have to prove it.

Mr. Fleming: I am not at all satisfied that that is the result of this clause. I can understand the desire of the attorney general in Ontario to have applications of this kind dealt with in the same way as applications now coming before the Ontario municipal board for licences to operate intra-provincial highway transport. But I am not at all sure that that follows from the language used here. The words used are, "upon the like terms and conditions and in the like manner". It does not say, "subject to the same conditions or upon the same grounds".

This is an important question, because there is only one rule under the legislation of Ontario to guide the municipal board as to whether it should reject or allow an application. An application must prove public convenience and necessity. It is open to grave doubt whether any of these sections import that ground of jurisdiction or that condition of jurisdiction of the municipal board. I think it is open to grave doubt, because the words "like terms and conditions" apply, I should think, to the terms of the licences; and the words "in like manner" apply to the procedure before the board.

The minister knows that an application today is made to the department of highways.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

The department of highways refers the application to the municipal board, and there are certain forms that are completed, and certain proofs filed. Then the municipal board directs that the application be put on the list for public hearing.

It seems to me that the incorporation of that proceeding exhausts the significance of the expression "in the like manner". Therefore I come back to the original point which, it seems to me, is one of substance, that even if this clause is passed, we have not said that the municipal board, as in the case of an application for an intra-provincial licence, must confine itself to a case where an applicant has established proof of public convenience and necessity.

Mr. Chevrier: I feel, and I still think, that these words mean exactly what they say. The words "upon the like terms and conditions and in the like manner as if the extra-provincial undertaking operated in the province were a local undertaking" mean exactly what they say, and would authorize the extra-provincial movement in the same manner as the board authorizes intra-provincial movement. It was difficult to use other language.

My hon. friend has said: Why not tie the language down to meet a particular position? Well, it is a fact that certain provinces do not require proof of public convenience and necessity. Other provinces deal with the carriers in a way different from Ontario. And it is because of those various reasons that this broad and general language was used.

All I can do is accept the language of the draftsmen. The draftsmen have been some time doing this—draftsmen from the eight or nine provinces who were present. And it was drafted on the advice of the Department of Justice. So I have to accept it as meaning exactly what it says.

Mr. Fulton: I take it this will give to the provincial authorities power to do that which was the whole basis of the Winner case, in that a provincial board here would have the authority to refuse the operator of a bus or truck line the right to pick up and set down passengers within a province, even although the main operation of the truck or bus operator was across the province and between two other provinces. I take it from the wording of this clause that it is sufficiently wide open to permit a provincial board to make such a prohibition, if it desired to do so.

Mr. Chevrier: Let me answer my hon. friend's question in this way. The provincial board can license an extra-provincial carrier or refuse to license an extra-provincial carrier in the same manner as the provincial board is now licensing or refusing to license an interprovincial carrier.

Mr. Fulton: Then that establishes it quite clearly. I agree with the minister in that interpretation, but I should like to have it clear that in the same way that the province of New Brunswick had the power to prevent a carrier in that case from picking up and putting down passengers within the province—that is, from picking up and putting down the same passenger within the province of New Brunswick on its way through—any board now would have the power to prohibit that from being done. I think that raises the question as to what steps are going to be taken by the federal authority to bring the provinces together to seek to bring about uniformity in matters of that kind to prevent the province that would have a natural inclination to do so from favouring their own commercial carriers, and thus to seek, by the refusal of licences to carriers from outside the province, to put traffic in the way of their own commercial undertakings that might lead to great difficulties in the development of trans-Canada trucking systems and bus systems. Admittedly this is a possibility I am speaking of, but I think it is a possibility that we in the federal parliament would have in mind. I should like to hear from the minister whether, after this act has been in operation for some time, any steps are in contemplation for working up a uniformity in truckers' regulations in respect to licensing.

Mr. Chevrier: As to the extra-provincial undertaking that exists now and that is operating from one end of the country to the other, if the provincial boards choose to give them a franchise and authorize them to go into each province, then those extra-provincial carriers can certainly pick up and set down—

Mr. Fulton: If they get a licence.

Mr. Chevrier: As to those that are now already operating, then, I suppose it would be within the discretion of the province to say no. If the province of Ontario, for instance, feels that there are far too many, or that there are a sufficient number of extra-provincial carriers, it can turn the application down; and if it does, well, the extra-provincial carrier is just out of luck.

My hon. friend raises a good point when he asks, well, what procedure is in mind? If this legislation goes through we shall soon find out how it operates. The understanding at the conference was that if this did not operate satisfactorily there was no difficulty about amending the act or perhaps finding a better solution than this. This was certainly the best solution that could be found at the time. If it is not satisfactory, parliament sits for eight months of the year—parliament will sit I do not know when, but certainly within the next few months—and I think we shall have an opportunity of looking at this again. But the act should be given a chance to operate to see if it will not be successful. We think it will, and believe the provinces do also.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—Tariffs and tolls.

Mr. Fleming: I have a point on clause 4. The minister is no doubt aware that while some provinces have legislation clothing the lieutenant governor in council in some cases, or provincial boards in others, with the power to require the publication of tariffs and tolls and to enforce them, nevertheless in many cases that power has not been exercised, and there is no effective legislation in force on the point.

As long as that situation continues I presume there will be no room for the application of clause 4. But let us assume now that the situation changes and the provinces, or a sufficient number of them for the purpose of the discussion, do decide to require the publication of tariffs and tolls and adherence to them. Let us take the case of the trucker who starts off from, we shall say, Alberta, and passes through Saskatchewan and Manitoba and then swings down into the United States, enters Ontario, goes through Ontario and Quebec, crosses over into United States territory, goes through New Brunswick and ends up in Nova Scotia. Now, I presume that in those cases—we are dealing with through freight—any carrier is going to be quoting a toll on the through shipment from Alberta to Nova Scotia. Will the minister indicate how a clause like this is going to work out in a case of that kind where you have a toll established on a through movement that may go through, let us say, eight provinces and cross the international border four times. How are we going to deal with that? Are we going to have every one of the provincial boards in every one of those eight provinces passing on a through toll that has nothing to do with local shipments? This is a matter of toll on a through shipment from Alberta to Nova Scotia which is quoted as a single toll by the carrier to the shipper.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not anticipate any great difficulty there because the truckers are operating now from one end of the country to the other and they are operating by virtue of what are known as reciprocal agreements.

Mr. Fleming: The minister has not followed my point. That may be all very well now when the provinces are not applying it because either in some cases they have not the legislation or in other cases they have not proclaimed the legislation that gives them the right to require the publication of and the adherence to the tariffs. But the case I am pointing out to the minister is where the provinces have exercised that power and the publication of tolls is required and the adherence thereto is enforced.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, the publication of the toll is required in certain provinces. It is required in the province of Ontario, and is adhered to. My understanding is that it is. If I am wrong—

Mr. Fleming: There is authority in the act, but the power given under the act has not been used.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, I have been under the impression that it was. Certainly that was the impression that we got at the conference.

Mr. Fleming: It has been in the act for some years.

Mr. Chevrier: Again I repeat, I do not anticipate any difficulty there. It is being done now. Truckers are today quoting rates from one end of Canada to the other for movement of goods and all this does is to enable the provincial board to fix the rate. So far as the publication of the tariff and the toll is concerned, will that not be a matter for the provinces? And if the position is as I said earlier, that there are a number of interprovincial agreements or reciprocal agreements as to tariffs and as to tolls, then I cannot anticipate any difficulty. The provinces certainly did not anticipate any difficulty when they discussed it here at the conference.

Mr. Fleming: I may not have made my point as clear to the minister as I should have. It may be natural for him to wish to simplify a situation of this kind, but I am putting to him a case which is rather different from the situation that exists today. I am wondering how a series of provincial boards, in the case I am putting, the provincial boards of eight provinces, are going to deal with the question of passing on a through toll on a through shipment from Alberta to Nova Scotia, going through eight provinces and crossing the international boundary four times. You are going to have eight provincial boards required to pass upon one toll on a through shipment that has to move from Alberta to Nova Scotia. It seems to me an extraordinary requirement. You are going to have a toll of that kind approved by eight provincial boards when the toll is a through one and it cannot be broken down to divide it into a portion of movement that is performed in a particular province.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—Exemption.

Mr. Drew: I had assumed that we would hear some explanation of the real purpose of clause 5. Nothing more has been said that would explain what amounts to a complete withdrawal of this power at any time the government should choose to exercise that authority.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I should perhaps have dealt with that when I spoke earlier. The Leader of the Opposition seemed to be of the opinion that this was taking terrific powers and, in fact, the expression he used was that we were taking "extremely wide powers" under clause 5 of this bill. I will explain as best I can why these powers are necessary.

They are necessary in order to protect the position of certain provinces. They are necessary, for instance, if the province of New Brunswick sought at one time or another to prohibit the through traffic of interprovincial transportation into Nova Scotia say, from the province of Quebec or Ontario. The province of Nova Scotia insisted that a clause such as this would be necessary in order to protect them. The province of Ontario at first took the view that that was not so. But after the Minister of Justice had explained the meaning of the clause the province of Ontario then felt not only that such a clause was necessary, but that without it the act would not be operative.

Then we are, as my hon. friend knows, committed by international undertaking to the movement of trucking across certain highways such goods as were agreed under GATT. I have not before me the agreement which was reached, but under GATT there is a very definite agreement with reference to the transportation of goods along Canadian highways, and it was thought necessary to bring that to the attention of the conference. When it was brought to the attention of the conference it was agreed that such a clause should be inserted therein, with the exception to which I referred earlier.

Then there is the question of defence movements. It was assumed that at some time or other it would be necessary to move defence trucks across the provinces into the Northwest Territories and so forth, and it was felt necessary that this clause should be inserted.

After an explanation had been given by the federal authorities the provinces felt that this clause was a reasonable one to insert in the bill.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, it is still not at all clear how this would be exercised. The power given here is the power to exempt any person or the whole or any part of any extra-provincial undertaking, or any extra-provincial transport, from all or any of the provisions of this act.

The effect of that, no matter what the intention may be, is to make it possible for government by order in council to exclude from all the provincial regulations any highway transport throughout the whole of Canada. The fact that the government may not intend that, in no way limits that possibility. I am simply pointing out that powers are given and the government retains the power to take the whole of it away.

Now, when the Minister of Transport says that conceivably the province of New Brunswick might introduce some licensing regulations that would interfere with the movement across that province, I realize that he is merely using that by way of illustration. But when he uses this illustration he says in so many words that the provinces can have these powers as long as they are good boys, but that at any point when they are not good boys, in the opinion of the government here, the application of these provincial regulations will be withdrawn in that area in relation to any transport that may be designated by the government here.

Surely that is a wide power. Surely it is an undesignated power. And surely it is a power that negatives the rule of authority apparently conferred by this bill. I submit this is not the kind of power that should be contained in a bill of this kind, and I also submit that it is an extraordinary clause.

The very illustration given by the minister of the example of New Brunswick indicates just how unsatisfactory a situation could result from legislation of this kind. Now, I would ask the minister to go a little further so we can understand the position, and, again using New Brunswick as an illustration, give us an exact illustration of the kind of specific situation where he thinks the government might be called upon to act, and the kind of order in council he has in mind which might be passed under this particular clause.

Mr. Chevrier: I would answer the last part of my hon. friend's comment by saying that I hope it will not be necessary for the federal government to use the powers conferred under clause 5, and I hope it will not be necessary to pass any orders in council under clause 5. I do not think it is a question of the provinces being good boys. I think it is a question of protecting a certain position that they have taken. Take, for instance, the question of GATT, to which my hon. friend did not refer at all. We are committed by international agreement to allowing the transportation of certain goods extra-provincially under certain circumstances. If we were to give that power away and dispense with clause 5 where would we be? We would certainly be in an untenable position with reference to that international agreement. We would be in the same kind of position with reference to our defence forces. We have simply put this in with the object of using it if the occasion arises, but I think the provinces realize that we have no intention of making any unnecessary or undue use of this clause, and in any event it would cover extra-provincial traffic and would in no way affect the internal movement within the provinces.

Mr. Drew: Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to labour this because I feel that, having regard to the responsibilities the government is assuming for introducing some legislation to fill a vacuum which has been created, and no matter how unsatisfactory it may be, it is just as well to deal with the legislation before us. I asked the minister to give us a specific illustration in relation to the province he mentioned, New Brunswick, and the answer he gave was that the government did not expect to use this power. That would be like the Minister of Justice saying, when asked under what circumstances capital punishment should be applied, that he could best answer that question by saying that the government hoped it would not be necessary to apply it. I do not think the Minister of Justice would do that, although he does give some rather circuitous answers on occasion.

The minister said that New Brunswick is an example of a situation where the government might have to act; but let us have a simple explanation of the kind of situation he means and what kind of order in council the government might have to pass.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of answering the last part of my hon. friend's question. I have already given him three reasons—

Mr. Drew: Yes, GATT. the movement of transports to the Pacific, and extra-provincial traffic; but none of these have anything to do with the simple question of getting things across New Brunswick from Nova Scotia.

Mr. Chevrier: I dealt with that originally. That was the first example I used, namely the example of New Brunswick; but apparently I did not make myself clear because my hon. friend comes back and asks me to deal with it again. The province of Nova Scotia took the position that if New Brunswick wished to prohibit traffic moving from Ontario or Quebec into the maritime provinces it could do so. The province of Nova Scotia felt that that would not be a fair position for it to be placed in, and it said, "All right, we will go along with this bill but on condition that someone has the right to protect our position in case another province in between tries to stop the movement of such traffic." Clause 5 was devised as being that kind of method whereby that province or even the province of New Brunswick might be protected against another province. I used that only as an example. The brief which was filed by the province of Nova Scotia at the time indicated that that was its main interest. Recently, not later than after the bill was introduced into the house, I received a communication from the attorney general of the province of Nova Scotia approving of this clause as now placed in the bill. Those are the three reasons I can think of and I have expanded on reason No. 1. I do not know that I can go any further.

Mr. Drew: Then may I ask the minister if this would be a correct interpretation of what he has just said. If the province of New Brunswick introduced regulations which, in the opinion of the government of Canada, had the effect of restricting the movement of highway transport from Nova Scotia across New Brunswick, the government would then, under section 5, pass an order in council exempting from the application of the provincial regulations in New Brunswick highway transport moving from Nova Scotia through the province of New Brunswick?

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Chairman; I said no such thing.

Mr. Drew: Unless the minister means exactly that, his statement means nothing. We have no information of any kind as to what the real purpose of this section is.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, there is another aspect of this matter—

Mr. MacInnis: Ten o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Eglinton wishes to make some remarks?

Mr. Fleming: I think we are quite prepared to carry on.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

An hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Fleming: The minister was asked to indicate the kind of order in council which would be passed under this section if occasion arose. May I point out to him that the effect of the section is to permit the governor in council to exempt any person from any provincial provision in that case. That leaves that person in this area of vacuum in the law. There is in this legislation nothing that permits the order in council to name the conditions under which he may operate. If he is exempted from the provisions of this act, he is operating in a vacuum and there are no rules, federal or provincial, that restrict his operations in any respect whatsoever. It seems to me that that is an extraordinary situation. Is there no provision to which resort is to be had under the bill if exemption is given by order in council under this section with respect to all types of provincial regulation and control? It seems to be an extraordinary omission in a bill of this kind.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Mr. Knowles: Does this clause not underline the fact that in reality the federal government is not giving these powers to the provinces but rather that the federal government is, of necessity, retaining powers which the courts have ruled are federal in character but is appointing these provincial boards as its agents to administer this authority in the various provinces? Having done that, by clause 5 of the bill the federal government is retaining this overriding authority in case any of these boards which are acting as its agents step out of line. Is that not the case?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Mr. Drew: No, Mr. Chairman. It is perfectly obvious that we are not going to get a satisfactory explanation. As has been pointed out before, the government has permitted a vacuum to exist. That vacuum must be filled. The government now accept full responsibility for this measure. I would point out that section 5 simply permits the government to create a situation in which highway transport can run wild, and it will not even indicate to us how it proposes to deal with this matter, by what method or through what agency. There is nothing more that can be done but to let the government fulfil the undertaking that it has given to try to make this legislation work.

Mr. Chevrier: That is not the case, Mr. Chairman. I have now before me the brief presented at the conference by the province of Nova Scotia. It reads in part as follows:

> There should be assurance that no one province can so affect extra-provincial highway transportation as to deprive any other province of extra-provincial highway transportation service and rights.
>
> With respect to this second proposition, the situation under the privy council decision in the Winner case, we believe to be that the federal government has jurisdiction with respect to and responsibility for legislation relating to extra-provincial highway transportation. Some measure of retention of this jurisdiction and this responsibility by the federal government is in our view necessary.

That is why we put that in. I repeat what I said earlier, namely that the province of Ontario objected to this clause 5. But after the Minister of Justice and the attorney general for Nova Scotia had explained their position, the attorney general for Ontario said that of course the federal government should have this clause. Both he—that is the attorney general—and the minister of public highways for the province of Ontario subscribed fully to this clause in the bill.

Mr. Fleming: I realize that it permits the governor in council to exempt from the provisions of the act so as to place in that area which we have called a vacuum today persons engaged in interprovincial and international highway operations.

Mr. Drew: This section might have been described as the section to perpetuate the vacuum so far as and whenever this government desires.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 6—Penalties.

Mr. Fleming: I have a question to ask on clause 6, Mr. Chairman. Who will be responsible for the enforcement of the provisions of the act and of licences issued under it?

An hon. Member: It is ten minutes after ten.

Mr. Garson: Seeing that the authority of the provincial boards will be exercised under this act and will also be exercised under the authority of the provincial statutes with regard to intra-provincial operations, I think it necessarily follows that they would see to any prosecutions that would be necessary.

Mr. Fleming: It is more than a question of prosecutions; it is a question of enforcement in a broad sense. From the answer given by the Minister of Justice, are we to take it that once this legislation is passed the federal government assumes no responsibility whatever for the enforcement of its provisions and of licences that might be issued in pursuance of its terms?

Mr. Garson: I think perhaps, if my hon. friend would permit me to do so, it might be better to put it this way. There are in existence—and there have been for some years past—provincial boards which have been up to the present time and are now exercising jurisdiction over both intra-provincial and interprovincial motor transport. The federal authority, following the Winner case, has no such administrative body. The purpose of this bill is to leave both intra-provincial motor transport and interprovincial motor transport to be licensed, authorized, controlled and administered by the provincial boards. The only exception to that procedure, of course, is section 5 which, as the minister himself says, we hope we shall never have to invoke.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, the minister has used a great many words—

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Fleming: —which have no relation whatever to the question I put to him. I think there is a fundamental misconception here.

The provincial boards are not enforcement bodies. They are semi-judicial bodies which hear applications and determine when certificates of public convenience and necessity should issue. Then the possessor of such a certificate makes application to the department of highways and, if other requirements are satisfied, he obtains his licence. When it comes to the matter of enforcement, those provincial transport boards do not accept responsibility, that is to say with regard to whether there is compliance on the highway with the terms of the licence. Very often these licences are issued with limitations and conditions attached to them. If the Minister of Transport is correct in his interpretation of section 3, then presumably some of these licences issued with respect to international and interprovincial highway transports will contain similar conditions. Who is going to see to it that these conditions are fulfilled? Who is going to be responsible for them? Is the federal authority going to accept any responsibility for enforcement in situations of that kind?

Mr. Garson: I think my hon. friend knows perfectly well that under the existing arrangements in all of the provinces the existing administrative authority looks after the licensing. The checking on the road is done by the provincial police forces, where they have provincial police forces. In those provinces that have a police agreement with the federal government under which the Royal Canadian Mounted Police discharge provincial police functions, the mounted police enforce the regulations in the same way as the provincial police, and the attorneys general of the provinces carry on any prosecutions that may be necessary. That arrangement will simply continue. Certainly there would not be much sense in continuing all the existing provincial enforcement bodies which have to be paid for by the taxpayers and have the federal government set up in addition an elaborate duplicate enforcement authority for which the taxpayers would also have to pay. I think my hon. friend's question answers itself.

Mr. Fleming: If the question admits of a simple answer, I would be obliged if the minister would say so, that the federal government is not going to assume any responsibility in connection with enforcement but is proposing to leave that to the provincial authorities. If that is the case it would be the simplest thing in the world for the minister to say so.

Mr. Garson: I said that just a few moments ago. I said that would be the case unless it were necessary to invoke section 5 in which event we might be involved in a somewhat limited way.

Mr. Fleming: But not otherwise? The minister nods his head.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 7—Proclamation in a province.

Mr. Fulton: Is the minister in a position to say with respect to which provinces at the present time it is intended to proclaim this act?

Mr. Chevrier: It is not intended to proclaim this act unless the provinces indicate they want it passed, and as far as I know all of the provinces want this legislation with the exception of two.

Mr. Fulton: It will not be proclaimed unless the province itself actually invites proclamation? Is that the situation?

Mr. Chevrier: From the correspondence I have in my hands now I think it would be possible to proclaim it in eight of the ten provinces.

Mr. Fulton: But it will not actually be proclaimed until a definite request is made from the provinces? Is that the situation?

Mr. Chevrier: I think it can be taken that the request has already been made, not only at the conference but since, and I would take it that request is sufficient. However, if it is thought that another request should be made that could be made.

Mr. Fulton: I am simply seeking to establish the basis on which it is to be done. Perhaps I can take it from the minister's answer that the federal government will be in a position to proclaim it with respect to all the provinces except two unless the minister receives a further communication from any one or more that they do not want it.

Mr. Chevrier: That would certainly be my recommendation to the government.

Mr. Knowles: Before the last clause of the bill is carried I should like to say a brief word. In its excellent chapter entitled "National Transportation Policy" the Turgeon commission said a good many important things back in 1951, but they are summed up in this one sentence:

> It is of course permitted to hope that the provinces will some day agree to co-operate with the federal authority in the carrying out of a common policy of co-ordination.

I express the hope, Mr. Chairman, in line with the view I expressed earlier that this bill be regarded as on a trial and error basis, that this legislation will not stand in the way of the eventual realization of that hope.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I would draw to your attention that it is now ten o'clock and I ask you to call it ten o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

Mr. Winch: Ten o'clock.

Clause agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Mr. Winch: I ask you to call it ten o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to complete the bill before us?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: By leave, shall this bill be read the third time now?

Mr. Knowles: Next sitting.

Mr. Winch: Next sitting.

Mr. Speaker: Next sitting.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Tomorrow we shall take the third reading of the bill we have just finished discussing.

Mr. Knowles: We might get some light on it in the meantime.

Mr. Harris: Then the bill to repeal the National Physical Fitness Act, then consideration of the amendments made to the Criminal Code by the Senate, then the bill to which first reading was given this morning, namely, an act to amend the Criminal Code (race meetings). Then we will move to go into supply and take the departments of trade and commerce, transport, secretary of state and veterans affairs.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, could I ask now when we may expect to have some information about the Municipal Grants Act and the Judges Act?

Mr. Knowles: And the War Veterans Allowance Act?

Mr. St. Laurent: I understand that notice of a resolution for the introduction of the amendment to the Judges Act will be in Votes and Proceedings of today and will be called as soon as it gets on the order paper. I was discussing the Municipal Grants Act with the Minister of Finance this afternoon and he will be making a statement on it at a very early time.

It being eighteen minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 15, 1954

The house met at eleven o'clock.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED VISIT TO OTTAWA BY SIR WINSTON CHURCHILL AND MR. EDEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. May I ask whether, in view of the announcement which has just been made that Sir Winston Churchill and Mr. Eden are going to fly to Washington on June 25, the Prime Minister will consider inviting them to come to Ottawa for a discussion of Asian problems, and also for a possible conference of commonwealth ministers to consider problems affecting nations of the commonwealth in common at this time.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The matter will receive consideration, Mr. Speaker.

MOTOR VEHICLE TRANSPORT

PROVISION FOR REGULATIONS OF INTERPROVINCIAL AND INTERNATIONAL HIGHWAY TRANSPORT

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (for the Minister of Transport) moved the third reading of Bill No. 474, respecting extra-provincial motor vehicle transport.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fleming: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL PHYSICAL FITNESS ACT

REPEAL OF EXISTING LEGISLATION

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the second reading of Bill No. 475, to repeal the National Physical Fitness Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Martin moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE

REVISION AND AMENDMENT OF EXISTING STATUTE —CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 7, respecting the criminal law.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say just a few words—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: Maybe I will change my mind about that. I wish to say just a few words in support of the motion that we concur in the amendments to the Criminal Code which have been made by Their Honours in the other place.

According to Votes and Proceedings for Thursday, June 10, as recorded at pages 732 to 734 Their Honours have proposed a total of 10 amendments. Some of them are purely a matter of renumbering in consequence of other changes made. But I wish to say that, so far as we can ascertain, and so far as they go, all of the changes proposed by the Senate are acceptable to us. Indeed, there are two of the changes we are very pleased Their Honours saw fit to make. And I am glad to note the smile on the face of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson). I take it that smile means he is pleased that the Senate made those changes—

Mr. Fleming: It does not mean a thing.

Mr. Knowles:—despite the fact that he opposed us when we tried to achieve the same results when the bill was in the House of Commons.

I would refer first to the change with respect to applications for writs of habeas corpus. As the Minister of Justice is aware, this is a matter that was discussed at considerable length in our own committee on which the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacInnis) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Noseworthy) were our representatives a year ago. It was their contention, as it was the contention of members from other parties on the committee, that the rule respecting habeas corpus should remain the way it was. The minister succeeded in persuading the majority to go along with the change he proposed, and that change was included in Bill No. 7 when it went from this house to the other place.

By virtue of the ninth of the proposed amendments now before us, the Senate has now put the law respecting habeas corpus back in the position in which it was prior to the introduction of this bill. We think that is a good idea, and we are glad the Senate has made that change. I might also say that the proposal that the question of habeas corpus be reconsidered was the subject of a subamendment moved by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) when we reached third reading of the bill in this house. Therefore I am sure he as well as others will likewise be pleased that this change has been made.

Another change included in these amendments has to do with the reading of the riot act. The third of the ten amendments proposed by the Senate calls for the insertion of certain words after line 42 on page 24 of Bill No. 7. The proposal is that the words "if he is satisfied that a riot is in progress" shall be inserted in clause 68. The effect of that change would make clause 68 read as follows:

> A justice, mayor or sheriff or the lawful deputy of a mayor or sheriff who receives notice that, at any place within his jurisdiction, twelve or more persons are unlawfully and riotously assembled together, shall go to that place and, after approaching as near as safely he may do, if he is satisfied that a riot is in progress, shall command silence and thereupon make or cause to be made in a loud voice a proclamation in the following words or to the like effect.

Then follows the formula that has to be read out on such an occasion. As I say, we are glad that that addition is being made, namely, the inserting of the words "if he is satisfied that a riot is in progress".

As we indicated when we were in committee on the bill—I recall particularly the remarks made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis)—we are still not satisfied with the law respecting the riot act in all of its details. We are concerned in particular as to the various persons down the line who can read the riot act; but at any rate this is a slight improvement, and we welcome it as such.

Most of the other changes proposed by the Senate amendments are technical in character, and we see no objection to any of them. Indeed, there are several others that we welcome.

[Mr. Knowles.]

There is another word I wish to say, Mr. Speaker. It is this: I am sorry that Their Honours did not pay the same attention to the amendment we moved to third reading in this house as they appear to have paid to the subamendment that was moved at that time. As I indicated a moment ago, there was a subamendment asking for reconsideration of the clauses having to do with habeas corpus. Their Honours have paid attention to that request. But there was also our amendment in this house asking that reconsideration be given to clauses 365 and 372, having to do with criminal breach of contract and with mischief. I regret that Their Honours did not see fit, as a result of their consideration, to recommend changes in those two clauses along the lines that we advocated when the bill was in the house, in order that the rights of labour might be fully protected.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, and I am reminded of it by the look in your eye, that we cannot at this stage discuss matters beyond the scope of the amendments proposed by Their Honours, and the look in your eye is getting to the point where I realize I must not transgress any further. I merely express my regret that these sections have not been altered as we suggested, but we are pleased to welcome such improvements as Their Honours have made in this bill.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to the one amendment, or the one change, that has been made in the contempt of court proceedings. I do so because there is still an opportunity for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) to deal in committee with a problem that is not solved merely by providing the right of appeal. This subject has been discussed earlier. The right of appeal in itself provides some measure of protection in a field where protection did not exist in the earlier provisions of the code; but I submit that there is still reason to give consideration to the introduction of something that would offer a guide to the courts in determining what shall be contempt in the face of the court or from outside the court, and also some gauge as to what the penalty should be.

Perhaps it is only when we come to discuss a subject of this kind that we find to our surprise that there are still mediaeval survivals of law that we have inherited. The British system of law that was adopted in this country from the long-established practice, and incorporated in the Criminal Code for the whole of Canada, has carried forward not only the provisions of the code itself, but certain other long-established practices. It is necessary to go back a very long way to find the root of this extremely important question of contempt of court. One might say that before 1066 it was the law of the jungle in many respects. After that date, kings began to appoint lawyers to represent and to adjudicate the issues arising between individuals among the people and also between the crown and the people. Later it was found that grievances against the crown itself needed to be dealt with. This led to the appointment of a lawyer to consider these grievances, and that was the genesis of the chancellery division of the court in the United Kingdom which has given so much to our law. However, those judges in the early days, answerable only to the king and in no sense to parliament, were of necessity compelled to protect the authority of the courts. Since they acted in large measure simply upon their appointment by the crown and not under laws passed by parliament, it was natural that they themselves should be given authority to enforce respect for the courts over which they presided.

In those days it became necessary to devise very stern measures against those who in any way indicated a lack of respect for the authority of the courts. We have inherited that common law practice. Bit by bit some attempt has been made to define different types of contempt of court. As was pointed out on earlier occasions, there have been amendments to the Criminal Code dealing with specific forms of contempt. There is, however, that broad question of contempt of court by the press, by writers, either in the court or outside the court, which is yet undefined by statute and in respect of which we are still carrying on with the inherited common law practices which were adopted in this country and which leave to the judge the responsibility for deciding what the law is, the responsibility for deciding what the penalty will be, as well as deciding whether the person charged is guilty of the offence and subject to punishment for that offence. The right of appeal from such a decision, which will now be accorded if the proposed amendment is adopted in regard to appeal from punishment for contempt of court, will undoubtedly be a substantial improvement. It will undoubtedly offer some opportunity for a second consideration of the circumstances under which the statements were made, and the appropriate penalty which should be imposed.

Nevertheless, I would point out that this is still not consistent with our fundamental principles inherent in the rule of law that every person shall know what the law is, and that before they can be haled into court and punished there must be some provision which defines the offence and measures the punishment that should be meted out in the event that the person is found guilty.

We still will have no such definition of the law. We still will have no such measure of the penalty. What happens in the case of an appeal is simply that we multiply the number of judges whose discretion will be exercised in determining what the law is and what the penalty should be.

In saying this I am not, nor is any other member of this house, in any way reflecting upon the judgment exercised by the judges of this country, nor is any hon. member of this house questioning the necessity for some procedure by which respect for the authority of our courts can be maintained.

It is obvious that when criminal proceedings are taking place there should be some procedure by which the judge responsible for the fair trial of the individual or individuals being tried for any offence shall be able to assure the fair, impartial, and unprejudiced trial of the individual or individuals affected. I am sure there is not a single hon. member of this house who would not feel it is essential that some such authority exist.

Having said that, can we be satisfied in the face of the evidence before us that we are observing the fundamental principles of the rule of law when we still leave undefined what contempt of court may be in the case either of the press or of individuals in commenting upon some case before the court?

May I emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that it is not only the press, but it may be an individual as well, whose comments might be challenged. I spoke of the press particularly when this subject was before us on an earlier occasion, because there have been a number of cases where contempt of court by the press has been a subject of widespread discussion throughout the country; and particularly, having regard to the fact that the offence is undefined, we are called upon to discuss this subject from a new point of view because of a warning issued by the chief justice of Newfoundland to the effect that there should be no discussion and no publication of the pleadings in civil proceedings.

I pointed out on that occasion that this is a new concept of contempt of court in this country. Ordinarily it is in fact part of the assurance of justice itself that civil proceedings may be published and that the discussion of the civil trial and of everything related to that trial may be carried in the press. This has been regarded as part of the open, public, and free trial which assures Canadians that kind of open-handed justice of which we have been so proud.

In the case of the press, which serves to protect the freedom of the individual by reporting trials of this kind, there is a very real necessity for some understanding as to what will or will not constitute contempt of court.

May I say most emphatically that I am not questioning for one moment that in the case of some of those statements published in recent years, which have led to contempt of court proceedings, which were widely discussed throughout Canada, there was some need for restraint on discussions such as then took place.

However, the recent warning issued by the chief justice of Newfoundland—with particular reference to one of the newspapers there and in fact, I believe, to both newspapers in the city of St. John's—leaves the newspapers as well as individuals uncertain as to what may or may not be discussed in regard to civil proceedings, as well as criminal proceedings, which are now before the courts in that province at this time. I am in no way referring to the merits of the issues before the courts. I am referring only to the effect of such a general warning in regard to what should be regarded as the law relating to contempt of court.

If in any one province, under our criminal law and under our inherited law, it is possible to prevent discussion of civil proceedings, then that might very well be followed in other provinces, and the long established practice of fair comment about trials in our courts might be limited to an extent where the security of the individual might conceivably be substantially lessened through the blanket of silence that could now be thrown around trials that have taken place in the past so openly in this country.

We do not want to have the right of any individual before the courts impaired in any way. We do not want the trial of any individual prejudiced. Most certainly in the case of a person charged with some serious criminal offence it is of the most vital importance that nothing shall be said by the press or by anyone else that could conceivably prejudice the jury or lessen the possibilities of a completely fair trial.

Having said that, it is equally part of our long-established judicial proceedings in this country that there shall be an open trial which shall be known to the public so that if in any individual case injustice may be done in the opinion of the public, then reform may be proposed to parliament itself, which is the final authority in this case. It is the parliament of Canada which must decide, and I am still earnestly suggesting that at this time the Minister of Justice consider the advisability of defining in some way what contempt of court will be, and place some guide before the judges as to the nature of the penalty that may be imposed.

I repeat that in providing an appeal we shall have provided the opportunity for a second consideration. The appellate court in each province will be able to decide whether, in the collective judgment of the judges of that court, the penalty which was declared and the penalty imposed were fair and just under the circumstances. But now that this subject is before us, in these days when the difference between the rule of law and the rule of complete state authority is perhaps the thing that defines two systems of life as much as anything else, I believe that we should take this occasion to establish the rule of law not only for the advantage of individuals in this country but for the advantage of the judges themselves who are called upon to maintain the dignity and responsibility of the courts.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that before we were asked to adopt these amendments we might perhaps have from the Minister of Justice a word as to whether the government itself concurs in every amendment proposed by the Senate to this bill.

Mr. Garson: In view of the point which my hon. friend has raised, Mr. Speaker, I may say that the government concurs in every amendment proposed by the Senate.

Mr. Fulton: I thank the minister for that information. Of course we are in a position where it is desirable to bring this matter to some final conclusion. The bill has now been in the process of consideration for going on, I suppose, six years altogether. We are now, one would hope, getting towards the end of this session and it would seem perhaps rather pointless to get into a conflict with the Senate over the details of amendments which, as has been suggested, are not in themselves extensive. To make any amendments to these proposed amendments would, of course, involve the possibility of long conferences and might just delay the passage of the bill at this session. I do not think that would be a desirable result. It is therefore not our intention to move any amendments at this stage, although I must say that I would otherwise have been somewhat tempted to do so.

The amendments that, in my opinion, the Senate should be asked to reconsider are their first and second proposed amendments. But that is something that can be done at a later date, in another year, by a positive motion to amend the Criminal Code. Such a motion would not create the difficulties which otherwise might be created if one were to move these amendments now. I will therefore just indicate the thoughts we have on the matter so that they may perhaps be taken under consideration by the government.

In dealing with the first amendment which covers the subject of contempt of court so admirably summarized by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) a moment ago, may I say that I realize that the Senate has to some extent gone further than this house went when it adopted Bill No. 7. Since this problem of contempt of court is becoming a rather vexed one, and since some judges, I think it is fair to say, have of late shown a high degree of sensitivity as to what constitutes a contempt of court, I would think that we should provide an appeal not only against the punishment but against the conviction, even in the case of a conviction for contempt in the face of the court. The Senate has made this change. As Bill No. 7 went to them, it was necessary to obtain the leave of a judge of the court of appeal to appeal in any event. They have removed that necessity. As we had left it, if that leave to appeal were granted, the convicted person could appeal either the conviction or the sentence, even in the case of contempt in the face of the court. I think it would be desirable—and I think consideration should be given to it for another year—to provide an appeal from the conviction even for contempt in the face of the court. I am prepared to admit that there would not be many cases where such an appeal would be taken or where it would succeed. I suppose, generally speaking, we all know what constitutes a contempt in the face of the court. But in view of what I have called, and after some reflection consider to be, a tendency towards undue sensitivity on the part of some judges with respect to what is actually contempt of court and what is not, I make that observation or suggestion.

Then with respect to the second amendment made by Their Honours, as found at page 733 of our Votes and Proceedings for June 10, I must say—and I say this with due respect, and particularly with respect for the highly qualified lawyers who sat on this matter over there—that their proposed subsection 4 of clause 25 strikes me as being unnecessary and redundant. I am going to read to the committee the wording of their proposed subsection 4 which is as follows:

> A peace officer who is proceeding lawfully to arrest, with or without warrant, any person for an offence for which that person may be arrested without warrant, and every one lawfully assisting the peace officer, is justified, if the person to be arrested takes flight to avoid arrest, in using as much force as is necessary to prevent the escape by flight, unless the escape can be prevented by reasonable means in a less violent manner.

I would ask anyone who is interested in the matter what this means. I would be glad of any assistance in establishing just what is meant by those last three lines:

> . . . is justified . . . in using as much force as is necessary to prevent the escape by flight, unless the escape can be prevented by reasonable means in a less violent manner.

That provision seems to me to be a contradiction. In the first place, you state he is justified in using as much force as is necessary to prevent the flight. Therefore he is only justified in using force if it is necessary.

Mr. Garson: I wonder whether my hon. friend would permit me to interject something very briefly?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Garson: May I say that this clause which he is criticizing has been part of the Canadian criminal law for a great many years; I believe it has been so ever since 1892. It is the section which is provided in the existing code, namely section 41, for the protection of peace officers and persons assisting peace officers in preventing escape. The reason this section was, as a Senate amendment, introduced in the Senate is that the royal commission, the Department of Justice, the Senate and the House of Commons all had previously overlooked it. There is not any question at all as to the need for it. I am rather surprised that my hon. friend is criticizing it in any respect.

Mr. Fulton: The minister may be surprised but that does not lessen the validity of the criticism. Section 25 is a consolidation of sections 23 to 27, 29, 30 to 37, 39 and 41 to 45.

Mr. Garson: This provision was left out by an oversight.

Mr. Fulton: An attempt to consolidate that many sections must obviously involve change in the wording.

Mr. Garson: No; there is not any change in this wording. If my hon. friend will examine the existing code, I think he will see that this amendment is a verbatim copy of present Criminal Code section 41.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fulton: You cannot consolidate about 18 sections into one section without changing the wording.

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend will look at this section he is criticizing and compare it carefully with section 41 of the existing code, he will see that the sections are identically the same.

Mr. Fulton: That may be so. This proposed subclause may be identical with the wording of one of the former clauses of the Criminal Code. However, the point is that in the consolidation produced and presented to us in section 25, the matter of using force and of the force that may be necessary to effect arrest has been fairly carefully worked out and worded. The three subsections of clause 25 as passed by the house seem to me to cover pretty adequately the circumstances under which the use of force may be necessary. The fact is that we have in clause 25 now an outline of the amount of force that may be used in the concluding words of subsection 1 which reads as follows:

> . . . is, if he acts on reasonable and probable grounds, justified in doing what he is required or authorized to do and in using as much force as is necessary for that purpose.

Then, we have in addition the safeguard of subsection 3 which makes it clear that a person is not justified "in using force that is intended or is likely to cause death or grievous bodily harm unless he believes on reasonable and probable grounds that it is necessary for the purpose of preserving himself or any one under his protection from death or grievous bodily harm". Therefore it would appear that the amount of force which may be used is quite adequately set out in the present three subsections. We now have this one added, and I am not at all dismayed by the fact that it may have existed in exactly the same wording in one of the old sections of the code.

What I am suggesting, in view of the consolidation represented by the first three subsections of the new section, is that this one is not really necessary and that added as it is now it creates confusion because it is already set out that a person is justified in using force if necessary and therefore if it is not necessary to use force he is not justified in using it. Nothing could follow more clearly than that from the words of the present section 25. After all, the infliction of death or grievous bodily harm is already a crime. Therefore, even under section 25 you would only be justified in doing that which inflicted bodily harm if it were necessary to do it. I can see no reason for restating that simple and obvious proposition under the proposed subsection 4 added by the Senate, particularly when there seems to be a contradiction contained in the last three lines where it says in effect that he is justified in using as much force as is necessary—again that limitation—unless the escape can be prevented by reasonable means in a less violent manner.

If he does not have to use force to prevent the escape then he is not justified in using force at all, and that would be the situation without the addition of the last words there, "unless the escape can be prevented by reasonable means in a less violent manner". In view of the consolidation represented by the first three subsections, I think there is an unnecessary and confusing addition involved in this subsection 4. If it is felt necessary to add anything at all, I think it would be more consistent with the wording of the first three subsections if the words used were something to this effect: "is justified only in using as much force as is necessary to prevent the escape by flight" or "is justified in using only so much force as may be necessary to prevent the escape by flight".

That, it seems to me, would reflect the meaning more clearly than what is set out here because, as I say, it seems to me that there is a contradiction. First you say that he is justified in using force if necessary. Then you say he is not justified in using force if it is not necessary. It does not seem to me to be necessary to add the second qualification. Therefore I think it is not the best draftsmanship which could have been devised for the purpose of this consolidation.

These are the only two observations I wish to make with respect to the proposed amendment. As I say, we would have moved an amendment ourselves, particularly with respect to the contempt matter, had it not been for the fact that at this stage of the session it might have involved us in a protracted discussion with the other place and therefore delayed the session, and also because we can give more consideration to the matter and can bring it forward as a substantive motion at another session if it should then still be considered necessary.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to debate this matter. I rise to say that I regret that it has been considered necessary to debate it at all because nothing seems more futile to me at this stage than to debate amendments made by the other place if the government, as I understand is the case, is willing to accept them. As the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) said before he sat down, these questions are far-reaching, and if changes are to be made I think of necessity they must be made at the next or some future session of parliament when we will have plenty of time to debate them.

I have been closely associated with the study of the Criminal Code. Because of that I studied the amendments made by the other place very carefully and on the whole I think they have resulted in a slight improvement. I must admit that I could not see the reason why some amendments were made but then I am not learned in the mysteries of the law. However, I felt that they did not take away materially from what had been done by the house. There is nothing we can do now unless we wish to have a conference with the other place, and I do not think there is anything of sufficient importance for that. Therefore why should we not let this measure go through?

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

CRIMINAL CODE

LIMITATION ON OPERATION OF PARIMUTUEL BETTING

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 476, to amend the Criminal Code (race meetings).

Mr. Charlton: Is the minister going to explain the bill?

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, the amendments made by the Senate to the Criminal Code which we have just discussed contain a reference to this particular matter. However, the Criminal Code does not come into effect until January and it is thought to be advisable that in the interval between now and that time the same provisions of the Criminal Code should apply. This bill has been considered in the Senate and comes here now, and its purpose is to make that possible.

The purpose of the amendment is to ensure that a racing association that has been incorporated in one province shall not be entitled to conduct race meetings with parimutuel betting on racetracks that it acquires in another province. It simply prevents a racing association which has a charter in the province of Manitoba, let us say, from transferring that charter to the province of Ontario or Quebec or some other province and conducting races with parimutuel betting with inspection by our department. The natural way for them to get a charter to conduct racing in the other province is to go to the province itself and obtain the right to conduct racing there rather than to simply transfer a charter from one province to another and conduct races as the result of having done so.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to deal with the contents of the bill except to point out to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) that the very fact we have this bill before us indicates how easy it would be for him to provide an amendment in a separate measure defining the subject I have already discussed.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 1—Operation of parimutuel system.

Mr. Charlton: I think probably we realize the objects of this measure, but I think some little explanation is needed as to the wording. As the amendment is worded here it says:

> (2a) Subsection (2) does not apply in respect of a race meeting . . .

And that is to be inserted immediately after subsection 2 of section 235 of the Criminal Code, chapter 36 of the Revised Statutes of 1927. It is true that there is a section 2 where this amendment could come in, but later in this amendment there is a reference to subparagraph (i) of paragraph (c). Well, there is no subparagraph (i) of paragraph (c) in chapter 36 of the Revised Statutes of 1927, so I should like the minister to explain that.

Mr. Gardiner: It is paragraph 1.

Mr. Charlton: But it has a dot over the "i"; subparagraph (i) is under paragraph (d) in the first subsection of section 235. There is a slip-up some place.

Mr. Gardiner: Paragraph (c) relates to bets made or records of bets made through the agency of the parimutuel system only as hereinafter provided upon the race course of any association. Then, there is subparagraph one, which is an "i" with a dot over it, and if you are continuing the same kind of numbering you put two "i's" with a dot over them. These are just different ways of marking the subsections of an act. Then, in this case they continue with sections A, B, and then there is subsection two, which has two "i's" and then it goes on with subsection three and four which is in Roman numerals IV. It is the Roman numeral method of marking the section.

Then, at the end of the whole numbering you will notice it is not Roman numerals that are used but the Arabic and you have 3, 4, 5 and 6. It is then that this particular section will come, at the end of all that that has to do with 2, and we will put (2a).

Mr. Charlton: That is not the way it is in the Revised Statutes of 1927.

Mr. Garson: There have been amendments.

Mr. Charlton: Why is it different, when it refers back to the revised statutes?

Mr. Gardiner: We have amended it two or three times.

Mr. Michener: Has the minister any particular place in mind? Could he give us an example of what he has in mind?

Mr. Gardiner: That has been going on for some time, since some amendments were made before. It has been the practice to move from one race meet to another within a province, and it has also been the practice to move from one race course in a province to one in another province. There was no justification for having this movement. It was thought there would be a tendency probably to go back and get a racing charter that has started away back at the beginning of this century, start to have races under it, and then move it out of that province to another. It was thought it would be more reasonable for anyone who wanted to race in a particular province to go to the authorities in that province and get the right to race, rather than simply transfer the racing charter from one province into another.

Mr. Michener: I was wondering whether there was a specific instance to which the minister could refer.

Mr. Gardiner: I could give a number of instances.

Mr. Michener: No, but one specific instance.

Mr. Gardiner: There may be a few that might be left. There may be some in British Columbia or in my province, Saskatchewan. I think probably there are one or two in Saskatchewan and some elsewhere. I believe this section should not provide a way of getting any further racing charters in a province where, perhaps, the races can be run to better advantage than in the province where the charter is now. They should not be able to simply transfer that charter into another province where there is more likelihood they will be able to make more money by having the races there. It is thought they should go to the government of that province and get the right to run the races there.

Mr. Pearkes: Would this provision affect any programs that have been already arranged by an association for a meeting this year?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. Gardiner: No, they will have complied with the law as it is. It will not be made retroactive.

Mr. Pearkes: It will not be retroactive to any association that has made provisions to hold a meeting in another province this year?

Mr. Gardiner: No.

Mr. Knowles: I have one or two questions to ask. My first question is as to draftsmanship. Should section one of this bill not have in it the words, "as amended"? Is it the usual practice to say section 235 of the Criminal Code, chapter 36 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, is amended? Should it not be "as amended," or perhaps "as amended by chapter 25 of the statutes of 1951", is further amended by such and such?

Mr. Garson: No, I do not think so. What I might point out here is that this is just the counterpart of a similar provision that is contained in the Senate amendments to Bill No. 7.

Mr. Knowles: But that does not answer the point we are raising now.

Mr. Garson: No, I know, but this amendment will carry the law through from the date upon which this bill is assented to until the time when Bill No. 7 comes into effect.

On this other point my hon. friend raises, I do not think that is necessary. The important point is that this amendment does amend that section 235 of the present Criminal Code.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps that point could be looked into because it looks to me like sloppy draftsmanship to have a wording that suggests that the statute of 1927 is amended, when actually we are amending the statute of 1927 as it has been amended in the meantime.

Mr. Garson: No, the wording does not necessarily suggest that the statute of 1927 is being amended. We are amending actually a section of the statutes of 1927 which has been amended in the interval.

Mr. Fulton: The point is that it has been amended, as the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand pointed out. If you go back to the 1927 revised statutes, this subsection one is not subsection one of paragraph (c), it is subsection one of paragraph (d), and therefore obviously the section has been amended since 1927.

Mr. Garson: My point is that if effect is given to this particular bill and this proposed (2a) is added to that section, no confusion arises.

Mr. Knowles: There is confusion here right now, Mr. Chairman. I suppose we could spend all morning arguing this point. In any case, I submit that to attempt to add something to section 235 which does not make sense when it is added is not the best kind of draftsmanship.

My other question is this: Clause 752 of Bill 7 reads:

This act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by the governor in council.

Was the Minister of Agriculture making an announcement on behalf of the Minister of Justice a moment ago when he said that Bill No. 7 would be proclaimed on January 1, 1955? If not, when is it intended to proclaim Bill No. 7?

Mr. Garson: Yes, I think that is what he was doing; and I have no objection at all to that announcement being made, because it is our intention that Bill 7 when enacted will come into effect on January 1, 1955.

My hon. friend will recall that at various times during the discussion on Bill 7, both in committee and elsewhere, it was pointed out that when there was such a thoroughgoing consolidation and overhaul of the code, which has not been touched for sixty years, there should be an interval of several months between the royal assent and the date on which it came into effect in order to permit provincial law enforcement officers and others to accommodate themselves to the new provisions of the new code. The thought was that the new consolidated code should not come into effect until the beginning of next year.

Mr. Knowles: I take it, though, that it is the government's present intention that that will be the date of proclamation?

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: One other question; I realize that this relates to Bill No. 7 but, after all, we are dealing with a measure that ties in with that bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: A breach of the rules.

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friend the Secretary of State ought to know. Is it the intention to reprint Bill No. 7 incorporating in it the amendments that were agreed to this morning, so that those who are interested might have copies of it even before it appears in the statutes?

Mr. Garson: Being a Scotsman, I would not think it was necessary to do that—to reprint the whole bill for that purpose. Any who are interested can get a copy of the Senate amendments, clip them out and paste them on his copy of Bill 7 at the proper points. I do not think we should be expected to run off a copy of the new bill for the convenience of those who are too indolent to do a little clipping. Surely we should not have to do that, at the expense of the taxpayers.

Mr. Knowles: Is your Criminal Code not worth it?

Mr. Garson: Yes, the Criminal Code is worth it; but the Criminal Code will be printed as a statute.

Mr. Knowles: Surely it is not just a scissors and paste document.

Mr. Garson: In due course it will be printed. In the brief interval between that time and the present, surely to goodness those who are sufficiently interested could get this sheet of paper of Senate amendments.

Mr. Knowles: Is that the right sheet?

Mr. Garson: No, this sheet I hold here is the wrong one. But they could get the right one, put it into Bill 7, and that is all that would be required.

Mr. MacInnis: It is my understanding that statutes, other than those printed in bound volumes, are printed as they are passed by the house. I shall give the minister my reason for saying that. Some time ago a correspondent asked me to get him a copy of the Canada Shipping Act. I made inquiries from the printing bureau and was surprised to learn that it was out of print. They told me however that there would be a new printing, and only a few days ago I got my copy of the Canada Shipping Act.

I imagine therefore that if the Canada Shipping Act could be printed in a paper-bound volume, there is every reason in the world why the Criminal Code should be printed in a similar volume and made available in that way. The price of the Canada Shipping Act was, I believe, $3.75; and the price of the Criminal Code might be as much as $5. However, it would be made available to those who would want it, without having to get the bound volume.

Mr. Garson: It is a very simple matter in connection with consolidations of ordinary statutes to have certain bound volumes and certain paper-covered volumes. But that was not what I understood the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to suggest. He was suggesting that Bill 7 be reprinted with the Senate amendments in it.

Mr. Knowles: It amounts to the same thing; they use the same type.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, may I discuss a small point in the matter of the wording of the introductory passage to clause 1 of the bill. It is perfectly clear that section 235

(2) was amended substantially in 1951 by chapter 25 of the statutes of that year. This may be a small point, because in another six months the new code will come into effect. I am asking the minister whether for the sake of clarity, and in case some question of enforcement arises during the next six months, it should not be:

Section 235 of the Criminal Code, chapter 36 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, as amended by chapter 25 of the statutes of 1951 is further amended by adding thereto—

And so on. I make that point because section 235, as enacted in 1927—

Mr. Garson: I accept my hon. friend's amendment. There is no use labouring the discussion of it.

Mr. Fulton: Then, I so move.

Mr. Garson: The Minister of Agriculture points out to me that there are two or three other amendments which have been made. I think the better course would be to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Fulton: "As amended"?

Mr. Garson: Yes, "as amended".

Mr. Knowles: I so move.

Mr. Michener: This bill appears somewhat inconsequential, but I suggest hon. members have not had sufficient explanation of the need for it. I would ask that we be advised as to who are affected by the bill. My understanding is that it is to bring into force an amendment to the Criminal Code before January 1, when the whole code comes into effect. There are a great many amendments to the Criminal Code, of great importance, but we are not being asked to bring those amendments into effect before January 1. However, in respect of this one isolated change in the criminal law it would seem that it is considered of sufficient importance that it must be brought into effect soon, with the racing season half over, because some harm will be done if it is not made effective until January 1 of next year. I suggest we should have a proper explanation as to why the bill should be passed at this time.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Knowles: Has the amendment been put and carried?

The Chairman: I have not received an amendment.

Mr. Knowles: I have been writing it out. I move:

That Bill 476 be amended by deleting the words "is amended" from line 5 and substituting therefor the words "as amended is further amended".

[Mr. Fulton.]

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Charlton: I would ask the minister if there has been a conviction in any province, where parimutuel betting has been carried on without an inspector of the Department of Agriculture being in attendance?

Mr. Gardiner: I would not like to say whether there is or there is not. There is a possibility that there has been, and if there have been any of course the prosecutions would be started in the provinces, if the prosecutions were desired.

Some changes have been made by those who intended to conduct it at certain times. In some cases they have been stopped. I do not know whether they have been stopped in every case.

Mr. Charlton: I understand that some parimutuel betting is going on without the inspectors being there. This would put a stop to that. I am asking the minister whether there have been any convictions.

Mr. Gardiner: Really this particular bill has nothing to do with that. That is where a charter has been transferred from one race track to another within a province. That can still go on under this bill. The only thing that this bill stops is the buying up of a charter in one province and taking that charter over into another province and operating under it without consulting the authorities in that province at all. That is the general position at the present time, and this stops that, and that is the only thing it does.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, by leave, and passed.

SUPPLY

WHEAT—MARKETING OF SURPLUS

The house resumed, from Wednesday, June 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Prudham for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Argue.

Mr. Speaker: It might be advisable at this moment to discuss a point of order with respect to the amendment. On June 9, 1954, I raised several questions and deferred the final ruling with the hope that upon resumption of the debate on this amendment some hon. members may wish to make representations. If that is not the case, I would submit that I have given further thought to the remarks that I made on June 9, and find after careful consideration that the amendment cannot be accepted. Standing order 54 says:

> Whenever the Speaker is of opinion that a motion offered to the house is contrary to the rules and privileges of parliament, he shall apprise the house thereof immediately, before putting the question thereon, and quote the rule or authority applicable to the case.

In the "Introduction to the Procedure of the House of Commons" by Campion this position of an unparliamentary motion is further clarified, and at page 149 it will be found:

> Amendments are out of order
> (1) If they are irrelevant to the question to which they are moved, or would, if carried, produce a defective, meaningless, or ungrammatical form of words.

I should like to point out to hon. members that the two words here "defective" and "meaningless" are the ones which I am concerned with at the moment.

The amendment reads:

> This house is of the opinion that in view of the present grave situation in the matter of international wheat trading the government should make an immediate declaration as to its policy respecting the marketing of our Canadian wheat surplus.

The amendment asked the government to make an immediate declaration as to its policy. Policy is within the realm of executive action. Even if the amendment were to carry, if it is the policy of the government not to say anything, well, what would be the position in this house? The house would have declared that it is its opinion the government should make a declaration of policy, and there would be no such declaration of policy, because there is nothing that we can do about it. It is for the government to decide in this particular field just what is their policy, and they may decide to say nothing about it at this time. Hon. members know that when questions are asked on the orders of the day a cabinet minister often replies that this is a matter of government policy which will be announced in due course, and there is nothing that any member in this house can do about that.

Mr. Drew: That is right.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out that since the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) has made a declaration of policy, a fortiori this amendment becomes much more meaningless than it was in the first place. Therefore, for these reasons, I declare the amendment out of order, and if the amendment is out of order it follows that the amendment to the amendment of course must fall.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to challenge the ruling because the matter can be discussed. Simply because this is a ruling of record I would point out that in the opinion of many hon. members the statement which has been put forward as a policy was meaningless and therefore we do not yet understand what it means.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, though this particular amendment and subamendment which were before the house have been ruled out of order I propose to go on with the discussion on wheat which the amendment initiated.

I regret there has been the interruption in the discussion which takes continuity away from it and makes it more difficult to carry on the debate in an orderly manner, and particularly the fact that, under the rules of our house, when this particular motion was before the house it was not as a result possible to discuss the problem of wheat and grain marketing, for instance, when the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce were discussed the other day.

First of all, I should like to make a few comments on some of the statements the Minister of Trade and Commerce made in connection with wheat marketing. When this matter was up previously the minister of course was optimistic as usual, not as optimistic as he has frequently been in the past, but still reasonably optimistic. He stated he did not think we had such a great deal to worry about; everything would work out satisfactorily, and so on. It seems to me the Minister of Trade and Commerce pursues what might be called an ostrich policy in regard to this wheat question. In other words, he buries his head as far as possible and shuts his eyes and attempts to get the rest of the people in the country to shut their eyes to what is the actual situation. In other words, he just does not like to have the real gravity of this situation realized by the people in this house or throughout the country. He not only persuades himself that it is not as bad as it is, but tries to persuade the rest of the people. It is a form of self-hypnosis.

Speaking the other day, the minister made quite a point of the fact that, as he said, the figures as to our percentage of the world trade in wheat were very good. In fact he said that we are riding at the highest point in percentage in our history. A little later on he went on to say that we are not blasting our way into the wheat markets of the world but that we are, however, holding what we have. Well, what he meant was we were holding not what we had or have had as a general thing for many years past. We are holding only a percentage of a very small amount of wheat going into general world trade. It is quite true that as far as wheat going into the world trade is concerned, and in the last few months particularly, we are holding our percentage; we are all right percentagewise but the fact is that when you have a percentage of a very small amount it does not help a man who has wheat to sell. It does not help our farmers who have a very large proportion of last year's crop still on hand, and it does not help the country as a whole. It certainly will not assist the country, and terminal elevators crammed with wheat at the present time, to get rid of that wheat. In other words, compared with other countries percentagewise our sales are still quite good, but the actual amount of sales is very small and of no great help, and in fact, they do not in my opinion, present a true picture of the situation.

The minister said there was no reason for any complaint in regard to the way wheat sales have been handled, and during the meetings of the agriculture committee, which took place a few weeks ago, quite a number of compliments were handed out on the wheat marketing that had taken place, and very few questioned what had been done. The minister attended some of these meetings but by no means all, and I would like to ask him to read the reports of these committee meetings and he will see that I for one questioned this policy at some length, and there can be no doubt that the inference to be drawn from the large number of questions asked was that quite a number of people were dissatisfied with the situation.

Of course, if the minister is directing his statement towards the handling of wheat marketing in past years, then that is a different matter altogether, and I would also point out that in the agriculture committee we were limited to a consideration of the 1952 crop. We were not able to discuss the 1953 crop. Therefore, as far as the recent developments are concerned, the committee was unable to deal with them at all. It was dealing with something which happened a year or two ago.

Now, the minister in his statement said that the initial price for wheat is $1.40 a bushel. That is quite correct, but what about the demand that there should be a floor under wheat? As far as the present crop year is concerned there is a floor price of $1.40, but quite a number of people are beginning to wonder if that is all they are going to get for their wheat and whether there will be any further payment. But as far as next year's crop is concerned, the one which has now been planted and which will be harvested in August or September of this year, there is no floor whatsoever, and what the farmers of this country particularly want to know at the present time is what the initial price for that wheat is going to be. In other words, what will the floor price be for the coming year?

I think before this debate is over the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) should make an announcement in that regard. The announcements in this regard have always been made before this date in previous years, and in fact some considerable time before this. The announcement is due and certainly I think there should be no further delay.

Contrary to what the minister attempted to indicate in his speech, there is no floor price whatsoever for the crop which is now in the ground and which will be harvested this fall.

There is one thing the minister said with which I thoroughly agree and that is that if you expect to sell in a competitive market your prices must be competitive. I think it is complete nonsense to talk, as some people do, about maintaining an artificial price higher than the price at which other people are prepared to sell their wheat, because, if you do that, while the price may be all right you will not sell any wheat. The minister is quite correct in his statement that we have to meet competitive prices from other countries. I will come back to that particular matter later on but I would say in passing—and I want to make this quite clear—that we should not enter into any price war because I think that would be quite fatal. Certainly if a country such as the United States reduces the price of its wheat by 10 cents per bushel on world markets, as it did a short time ago, we must meet that price if we wish to sell any wheat.

There have been quite a lot of figures put on record in regard to this wheat situation, but I do not think the figures used are quite up to date and I do not believe they put the picture in its true light, and they certainly do not represent the true picture as far as the western farmers of Canada, and in fact the entire economy of Canada, are concerned. I have a few figures which I should like to add to those which already have been put on the record in regard to this matter.

First of all, the price for No. 1 northern wheat is $1.72½ per bushel, and the price in August, 1953, under the international wheat agreement and as indicated in the wheat board report, was $2.01¼. For class II wheat it was $2.02½. In other words, since August of last year the price has dropped by approximately 30 cents a bushel. The wheat we had on hand at August 1 from the previous crop year and the crop then being harvested amounts in all to probably well over 800 million bushels, and the exact figure is probably nearer to 900 million bushels.

The value of the wheat at that time was based on $2.01 and $2.02 a bushel. What that means is that the value of this wheat has now dropped by at least $250 million. In other words, the farmers of western Canada, at present prices, are going to receive $250 million less than they had anticipated when they took in the crop last August. Of course, there has been a substantial drop since that time in the amount of wheat which has been sold, but nevertheless this means that the economy of Canada will be short of $250 million. That money would have been circulated among the retailers, wholesalers, and manufacturers of Canada, for when money like this is in the hands of the western wheat farmers it keeps circulating, and when it is cut off you have a situation much like that of a house of dominoes which falls over when one is moved.

The fact that there will be about $250 million less for the western farmers to spend than they imagined there would be when they took in their crop last August is going to have a very serious effect on the economy of the western farmers and, as a result of that, on the entire economy of Canada.

I would like to say something about the amount of wheat on hand. According to the dominion bureau of statistics the wheat in a commercial position as at May 26 of this year amounted to 341,564,000 bushels and the wheat on farms at March 31—the last date for which figures are available since they are only put out every three months—amounted to 382,666,000 or a total supply at May 26 of 724,230,000. That is an enormous amount of wheat.

Now, I have seen a considerable number of figures quoted in the newspapers recently to the effect that the amount of wheat on hand in Canada amounted to 600 odd million bushels. That figure keeps cropping up in the press from day to day, though where they get it and what its origin is I do not know. However, the figures I have given are those issued by the dominion bureau of statistics and I think that is the closest estimate there is. The amount on the farms is, of course, an estimate, but I think the figure of approximately 724 million bushels of wheat is probably fairly accurate. On April 1, following on from that—that is two months before this—the total supply at that time again, according to these figures from the dominion bureau of statistics, was approximately 741 million bushels. I will leave out the thousands. What that means as to sales is this. That was on April 1, two months ago; on April 1, or the end of March, the total sales or disappearance, whatever you like, during April and May were, as I make it, only 16,700,000 bushels approximately.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, may I point out the obvious error that my hon. friend has made? He has taken the figures of stocks on farms as of March 31 as constant. Of course the stocks on the farms have been moving into the country elevators ever since then. Therefore he has made an error and I think he knows it. The figures he has given are erroneous.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I am not making any error from that point of view. The figure for the stocks on farms—the last figure which the dominion bureau of statistics has—is for March 31.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

Mr. Harkness: I am taking that figure as being approximately 383 million bushels.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

Mr. Harkness: That is the last figure there is. In other words it was the same on April 1 as it is now. There has been a certain amount that has moved in. That is quite correct. The only figures we get on it are those I have mentioned. This amount on the farms is an estimate anyway. The figures that you must take and must use are the figures presented by the dominion bureau of statistics. They are the figures the minister used.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): If I may interject again, Mr. Speaker, may I say that it is all right to use the figures on March 31 as being correct as of March 31, but if you use the figures of March 31 as being correct as of June 1, you are introducing a very serious error, as my hon. friend must appreciate.

Mr. Harkness: I appreciate the fact that grain has gone in and so on.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The hon. member sticks to his fallacy.

Mr. Harkness: The minister must appreciate the fact that that is the only figure available and it is the figure on which all these various computations and so forth are made. I admit quite freely that some of the grain that was on the farms at that time has gone into the elevators, but not a great deal of it has gone in.

In connection with this matter I should like to refer to something that happened in the committee with regard to sales of wheat. I asked a considerable number of questions in regard to this matter and I had considerable difficulty in getting answers as to what the actual sales of wheat had been during recent months, or, in fact, the only months we were allowed to look at. Eventually we got it established that the total sales—domestic, export and everything else—for the six-months period from August 1, 1953, to January 31, 1954, were only 122 million bushels. In the previous year they had been 223 million bushels; the year before that, 228 million bushels; the year before that 181 million bushels; the year before that, 138 million bushels. It was not until we got to one year, August 1, 1948, to January 31, 1949, that we got down to approximately the same amount, namely 120,500,000 bushels. The year before that the figure was 137 million; the year before that it was 268 million. In other words, our sales had slipped and slipped extremely badly during this six-months period. In other words this thing has been coming on for a long time and the minister knew it was coming on for a long time in spite of all his optimistic utterances in the past. The sales had slipped to just a little more than half of what they had been the year before from August 1 to January 31 of last year. I asked quite a number of questions as to whether this—

An hon. Member: This year.

Mr. Harkness: Yes; this year; August 1, 1953 to January 31, 1954. I asked quite a number of questions as to whether this was not the most disturbing fact we had put before us or that we were discussing in the agriculture committee but the officials there tried to pooh-pooh it and laugh at it, in the same way as the minister has done and to say that sales did not mean anything, that you did not need to worry about sales. In my opinion sales are the most important thing. They are the thing that counts as far as the farmer is concerned. Unless the wheat is sold, he cannot get paid for it; and that is what he is interested in. But as I say, they attempted to tell me that sales were not important, that there was no need to worry about them. In actual fact sales have continued to shrink and shrink. In other words, the situation kept getting worse and worse as time went on instead of getting better, and sales during the past few months have been frightening. When I say "frightening" I mean frightening because they were so small.

I should like to approach this matter from a different point of view. Perhaps the minister will attempt to refute these figures also. The exports during the period—this information is also from the dominion bureau of statistics and I believe the figures were used here before—of August 1, 1953, to April 30, 1954, which was the last period for which I could get them, were 186,200,000 bushels. But in the wheat board report we also find that the exports for the period from August 1, 1953, to January 31, 1954, were 138,300,000 bushels. In other words, our total exports for February, March and April—for three months—were 47,900,000 bushels. That is all that we exported. That is to say that the average exports for those three months were just a little less than 16 million bushels a month. The exports for the first four weeks in May—as was established by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) in the house a short time ago—were 14·6 million bushels; and he said that that was a terrifying figure. May I say that it is not nearly as terrifying as the fact that it is the same figure as that which has prevailed for the preceding three months.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Has my hon. friend the figures for exports for the same three months a year ago, two years ago or three years ago?

Mr. Harkness: I think I could produce them for the year before, if I had a few minutes to go through this wheat board report. However, they were very greatly over this figure, as the minister knows.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No; they were not.

Mr. Harkness: Yes; they certainly were.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): For February, March and April?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, the figures for February, March and April were very much in excess of that. I will find the figures here in a minute. Here are the exports for the crop year 1952-53. The exports for these four months were respectively—and that was after things had got bad—17 million, 16·4 million, 25 million and 46·5 million.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The hon. member is now getting into May. He spoke of February, March and April. The periods are not the same.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, the minister apparently was not paying attention. I started talking about the four months. I said that in these three months the exports were approximately 16 million bushels each, and in May it was exactly the same thing. Exports in the first four weeks were 14·6 million bushels, which would mean an average for the month of about 16 million. In other words, the exports during that whole four-month period have been an average of about 16 million bushels and that is all.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The figure was a little less the year before.

Mr. Harkness: It was a great deal more the year before. I just put the figures on the record. My goodness, Mr. Speaker, this situation seems very difficult for me to understand. I am reading from the report of the minister's own board and I have just read the figures as to what the exports were for May of last year as being 46·5 million bushels; then he says they were less the year before.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Not February, March and April.

Mr. Harkness: When one cites figures of that sort and then hears statements made which are so contrary to the reports put out by the minister's own department it makes it very difficult to carry on a reasonable debate on the matter. Apparently the minister is just not willing to see any reason. Not only does his optimism blind him as to what the real situation is but he will not even admit the figures that his own people put out. As the hon. member for Eglinton has said to me, the minister takes an extremely selective approach to all these problems. He selects only what is pleasing to himself and what he thinks will be pleasing to the people.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You did the selecting. You picked the months.

Mr. Harkness: The only reason I picked these months, as the minister knows, is that they are the last four months, and I am trying to bring the picture up to date. I am much more disturbed about the whole situation than the minister appears to be. The situation is bad and he should know it is bad. He is the one who can do something about it but unfortunately he will not even admit that the situation is bad and that our exports have fallen to this extremely small amount.

As a matter of fact, although our exports during that period only amounted to just over 60 million bushels for four months, the picture is even worse than that because, as we learned in the committee, there were forward sales as of January 31, the beginning of this period, amounting to 21 million bushels. In other words, all the sales that have been made during this period only amount to some 41 million or 42 million bushels. The sales picture seems to be much worse than the export picture and our anticipation of future deliveries is getting worse all the time instead of better. That of course is one of the reasons why the sales picture is important. It is on that basis that we make our exports.

The sale of wheat is a government responsibility. The government has a monopoly in the sale of wheat through the Canadian wheat board. As it has that monopoly, with the result that the farmers cannot sell their wheat to anybody else, the government must assume the responsibility for selling this grain. They have not been selling the grain. Sales have been going down. The situation is getting worse all the time. The farmers still have large amounts on their hands which they are not able to deliver and there is another crop in the ground which will be ready to harvest in two or three months. From one point of view particularly it is a great misfortune that the government has come to be looked upon as the only source, so far as the grain business is concerned, for information, assistance of any kind or anything else along that line.

As the result of the government monopoly in the sale of wheat the people of eastern Canada do not understand the situation. I run into people all the time, even members of the House of Commons, who, whenever an interim or final payment on wheat is made, will say to me: Oh, the government is giving you fellows another handout. Because the government has this monopoly in the handling of wheat many people in this part of the country do not understand the fact that the interim and final payments which the minister announces in the house are not government money. A whole lot of people think that it is government money which is being given to the prairie farmers when it is their own money which is being paid to them on the basis of wheat sold and so forth. As I say, government control of grain has produced an unfortunate result in the minds of many people in eastern Canada. Every time an announcement is made of a payment with respect to grain they think that the government is giving a handout to the west, which is complete nonsense.

With respect to the present situation, I thought that the minister's statement that we must meet competitive prices was sound sense. We must do that. I do not think there is any question about it. In that regard there is an article in this morning's Gazette from which I should like to quote briefly. It is by Sydney Gampell and is datelined "London, June 14". The article reads in part as follows:

> After, as before the 10 cent price cut, and at either the minimum or the maximum price of the international wheat agreement, the wheat market is still artificial. In what amounts to a busted corner, there is no real market and no real price.

Unfortunately I think that is all too true, and under these circumstances, as I indicated earlier, it seems to me that there is no value in the idea a lot of people in the east particularly have, people with whom I have had private conversations, that if we cut the price another 10 or 20 cents a bushel we will sell a lot more wheat. I do not think we would sell any more and we might not sell as much. To cut prices and enter into a serious price war would be the very worst thing that could happen to the economy of this country and the wheat market generally. I am glad to see that an observer in London corroborates that view. The article continues:

> If the oversupply and the overproduction in the exporting countries were thrown on the market for what it would fetch, it might be lucky to fetch so much as a dollar a bushel. Some of it might go begging as a gift. If the United States could find places inside or outside the iron curtain to make gifts of wheat with any political advantage or even without positive political disadvantage, it would probably be glad to give the surplus wheat away. It has already made some not insignificant attempts.
>
> How the exporting countries got into this mess is irrelevant. The important question is what do they do now. What they almost certainly will not do is to slash the price in a free-for-all competition for any regular commercial markets. If they allow a sharply falling market they will sell less wheat, not more.

I would hope that attention will be paid to what was pointed out previously by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) among others, and that the government will maintain the closest possible consultation with the other big holder of wheat available for export, the United States, and will put forth every possible effort to ensure that there is nothing in the nature of a price war, in other words, that another drop on their part or another drop on our part does not take place. It seems to me that the only hope in the present circumstances, until a different cycle of weather rights the situation, is to try to maintain the price as close to the present level as it can be maintained, and that can only be done by co-operation and consultation with the United States. It would seem to me that must be the government's chief effort at the present time not only so far as the western wheat farmer is concerned but also from the point of view of protecting the whole economy of the country.

[Mr. Harkness.]

From all I have heard, it does not seem to me that the government has met its responsibility in that regard in recent months. I think one great lesson that we have learned, or that I hope we have learned, from the present situation is that the wheat agreements which were sold to us particularly by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) as the cure for all the uncertainty of agriculture in western Canada have not succeeded in doing that. They have proved to be a complete disappointment. I think the history of the years since the war has demonstrated the fact that there is no security for agriculture in international or intergovernmental wheat agreements because the importing countries enter into these agreements when it is advantageous for them to do so, and when the price is falling and it is not advantageous they do not enter into them or if they have they do not fulfil the agreement as was the case with one or two nations which signed the international wheat agreement.

Wheat has had an unfortunate history in the post-war period. The western farmers lost several hundred million dollars through having to sell their wheat at less than the market price and now they have no security so far as wheat delivery, price, quantity or anything else is concerned. I would hope that as the result of this experience we have at least learned one lesson, that these things do not provide security and there is no use counting on them to do so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I said, the government is responsible and has been responsible all the way through for the selling of Canadian wheat. They have not met that responsibility. We have all this wheat on hand that has not been sold. We find the farmers in an increasingly difficult situation, and particularly is that going to be the case if this next crop proves bountiful. Therefore I would move as an amendment to the motion, seconded by the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand (Mr. Charlton):

> That all the words after "That" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
>
> "this house regrets that the government has failed to deal effectively with the problem of marketing Canada's wheat surplus."

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I rise, Mr. Speaker, to take part in this very important debate. The announcement by the government on June 7 of the lowering of the price of the three top grades of wheat by 10⅛ cents a bushel was a blow below the belt to the western farmers. The ramifications of that policy, which I maintain is the forerunner of a fire sale policy, cannot be overemphasized. We have already heard one or two members in this house representing the western part of Canada, who have indicated their concern.

I can agree in only one respect with the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness), who has just spoken. He stated that the responsibility rests with the government. There can be no denial of that statement. I cannot, however, go along with him when he indicates that he is more or less in agreement with the government's policy.

Mr. Harkness: I do not believe I could have indicated the reverse more strongly.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Then, the hon. member will have to explain it, because after all he did not lay down any policy. He took it upon himself to more or less explain the wheat stock situation, and then he did say, I believe he will agree, that the price of wheat must be competitive.

In this group we have in the past supported the idea of the international wheat agreement and orderly marketing of grain. We have supported the principle which has been followed by the Canadian wheat board, and the principle of marketing wheat under that board. Here, I believe we have a diversion from that program that has been pursued in the past. In spite of the fact that we in this group have, during this session, asked the government to indicate its wheat policy and also to give some indication of what the farmer should do in respect to seeding of the crop this year, we have not to date received any information from them as to what the government's policy is to be in the future.

Indeed the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) has castigated members of this group who tried to get some statement from him as to the initial price for wheat this year. Then, after the western crop has been seeded again, here we have the government announcing a policy on June 7 which, as I say, can only make the devils laugh and the angels weep. Surely we could have a policy in this country by which our agricultural producers could have stability and security. I say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), both of whom I am happy to see are in their seats, that if they allow the decline in prosperity in western Canada, it is going to affect every last home in Canada. We in this group are not coming here to suggest blue ruin in the west. We recognize that Saskatchewan, our own province, is in a prosperous state.

Many of the farmers are in the happy position of having paid off some of their pre-war debts; they are in the happy position of having grain in their bins; they are in the happy position of having been able to purchase farm machinery, even at the high prices, in order to farm more efficiently. But I do want to say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture that we are not going to sit in this house and wait until the agricultural situation deteriorates to the point of depression. I am happy to see that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Mang) is in his seat. He represents a riding that is just north of mine. I do not believe he performed any useful service to western agriculture or to himself when he took it upon himself the other night to indicate that there was not a very serious situation in western Canada.

Mr. Blackmore: You are right there.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Later on in my remarks I shall deal with what he said. It is sufficient at this time to say that there are, however, people who appreciate the situation. If anyone in the house thinks the farm members from western Canada are asking for something unreasonable, let him look at the full-page advertisements that the great firm, the T. Eaton Company, have published lately in the Toronto Globe and Mail. Province by province, these advertisements have indicated the economic situation.

On June 12 last the full-page advertisement concerned Saskatchewan. We are mighty proud of the success we have had in Saskatchewan, and of our ten-year record with a C.C.F. government. All those resources were there prior to 1944, Mr. Speaker, and we feel very fortunate that the resources we have in that province are being developed for the people by the C.C.F. government. The C.C.F. government did not put the resources there; that was the work of Divine Providence. We are happy to note that we have 40 per cent of the oil reserves in Saskatchewan alone. This advertisement illustrates that in Saskatchewan 70 per cent of the population is rural and 60 per cent of the provincial revenue is derived from the land. One can readily see from that that we are dependent upon the returns we get from agriculture.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

---

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, at one o'clock I had been discussing the serious situation which has arisen owing to the announcement on June 7 when the government indicated that the price of wheat for the three top grades would be dropped by 10⅛ cents per bushel. The failure of the government to announce early in the year the policy it might have in regard to wheat has left agriculture seriously concerned as to what the future holds. While the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) has indicated to the house—and has been reported in the press to the same effect—that he does not foresee any price war in the sale of wheat, it does not in any way quiet our fears that the government is now launching upon a program which may spell disaster for agriculture in Canada.

Not only have there been various press comments in this connection, but I should like to quote a press report appearing in the Ottawa Journal of Saturday, June 12, which states:

> Jake Schulz, president of the Manitoba farmers union, Friday protested trade minister C. D. Howe's statement that Canada will cut the price of wheat again if necessary to protect this country's share of the world market.
>
> Mr. Schulz said in a statement the minister's comment will "be a shock to many western farmers".

Mr. Schulz, as president of the Manitoba farmers union, represents a large organization of farmers in that province. In addition to that, a press dispatch appearing in the Manitoba Co-operator of June 10 indicates that the federation of agriculture has sent a telegram to the minister requesting that the government should not engage in any fire sale of Canadian wheat. I would quote from the press report as follows—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon members should not quote opinions of associations or newspapers published outside the house reflecting or commenting upon proceedings in the house. When the hon. member was making his first quotation I was about to rise. Now that he has embarked upon a second one I think it is my duty to remind him that citation 265 in Beauchesne's third edition states this:

> It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I was trying to indicate that the western agricultural conference has also asked that the federal government should not enter into any fire sale of wheat. Certainly there can be no assurance to agriculture that the government is not undertaking to place upon the world market wheat at competitive prices which would lead to a fire sale of our Canadian stocks of wheat.

[Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain).]

I should like to point out the situation in regard to wheat stocks at the present time, because this is a matter of concern to all of us. Under the international wheat agreement some forty-odd exporting nations were to have a total combined quantity for export, and the importing countries agreed to allow importations of such stocks of wheat to the extent of 421 million bushels. As of June 1 this year there still remained 210 million bushels unsold in respect of those commitments. Of the commitment set aside for Canada, as of June 1 only 83 million bushels out of 163 million had been sold under that agreement.

So it is a matter of concern to those of us who represent agricultural constituencies that the government has not been able to sell a greater share of the commitment under the international wheat agreement. We do not think of course that agriculture is the only industry in Canada that should be protected. But when one understands that the total sales of wheat and flour represent more in the Canadian economy than any other single industry, the importance of wheat cannot be underestimated.

I think the government has been remiss in its duty when it has failed to state its policy in regard to the initial price for wheat this year. As I said before the recess, we have been trying to get the government to state prior to seeding what the initial price this year would be. Now the crop has been seeded, and the farmers are at the mercy of government policy. However, we have indications, according to a forecast from the United States, that the new United States crop will be about 990 million bushels. And this, added to the great wheat stocks in the United States, will bring the total up to 1,700 million bushels.

Taking into consideration wheat stocks in the United States, and adding to that figure the wheat which is in Canada, amounting to around 700 million bushels, we recognize that this is a tremendous amount of wheat to have on hand. However, I do not go along with the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) who, as I gathered, indicated that he was prepared to go along with the government in its policy of selling our wheat at competitive prices.

In other words we have the situation where, the other day, when the United States said they were going to lower the price of wheat ten cents a bushel, the Canadian government lowered our price for the top three grades to the extent of 10⅛ cents. Where is this going to stop? According to a press dispatch of June 12 appearing in the Ottawa Citizen, it is now rumoured that the delegates to the international wheat conference meeting in London tomorrow have been instructed by the United States administration to sell wheat and to offer stocks on hand in the United States at a minimum price of $1.55, under the international wheat agreement. If that is so I would ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) this question: Is that going to be the Canadian policy?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I am happy the minister shakes his head, because all along we have been asking the minister to indicate the policy of the Canadian government. If we are to have a policy of orderly marketing and exporting of wheat, it cannot be one whereby, as soon as we have stocks of wheat on hand, we are going to throw it on the open market, regardless of price. I know very well that time and again the Minister of Trade and Commerce has repeated his statement that it would be useless to cut the price of wheat to increase sales because the demand is not there.

So I do not think the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) added clarity to the situation when he spoke in Regina. His speech is reported in the Ottawa Journal of June 14. The Minister of Agriculture said that the piling up of wheat in the finest storage facilities in the world is playing right into the hands of the market. I do not know what the Minister of Agriculture meant by that statement. If he means that by having some stocks of grain on hand we must embark on a fire sale policy, then it is like hunting for a jet-black cat in a dark room where there is no cat. It is just as clear that you cannot get any solution from that sort of thing. What we in the C.C.F. advocate is the principle of the ever-normal granary. In view of that, the Canadian stocks of wheat should be recognized as a safeguard for short crop years.

After all, Mr. Speaker, we are fighting an ideological war throughout the world. We are trying to indicate to those countries of the world that the kind of society in which we live is the best society for man. We are fighting to win over men's minds to our way of life. When the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) rises in his place and asks: Where are those hungry people? I have only to refer him to the publication put out by the government entitled: "Current Review of Agricultural Conditions in Canada." I do not intend to read it. Perhaps I would not be permitted to read it to the house. This is a government publication which gives a favourable impression of the foodstuffs existing throughout the world. It goes on to indicate the hunger and the need for the uplifting of nutritional standards in various parts of the world.

I submit to the house that if we are fighting a war to win men's minds and to do away with hunger, then of course we have to play our part, and play it in a full way, in order to see that these countries that are undernourished and underfed and hungry are sufficiently fed. Not so many years ago Sir John Boyd Orr, then president of the food and agriculture organization, indicated that about two-thirds of the people went to bed hungry every night. If that is the condition that exists, surely in Canada we are not going to have a policy which is not going to allow our agricultural producers who have cooperated with the government to produce sufficiently huge stocks of wheat for a world which needs food.

At page 5749 of Hansard the minister seemed to indicate that in interviewing the members of the agricultural conference meeting here in Ottawa he was led to believe that farmers from western Canada were not in a bad financial position. He indicated that, according to his interview with those representatives, only about one per cent of the farmers needed financial assistance in the way of loans. I want to point out to the house that it may be quite true that a lot of the western farmers are still in a financially liquid position. But on the other hand, there are straws in the wind that indicate that the situation existing in western Canada is not as rosy as the minister suggested.

According to the dominion bureau of statistics figures, in 1946 the prairie indebtedness stood at $367 million. In 1952 it had increased to $486 million. Then again the loans from chartered banks increased from $283 million in 1952 to $318 million in 1953. Under the farm improvement loan plan, in 1951 the farmers of the prairies borrowed $85 million; in 1953 they borrowed $98 million, an increase of 33 per cent in the number of applications.

Let me take the agricultural picture over the country. In 1951 the figure stood at $2,811 million. In 1953 it had dropped to $2,674 million, or a decrease of $137 million. The situation is serious; and, as I indicated before lunch, we from western Canada are not concerned entirely with the prairie provinces. We recognize that if the agricultural situation is affected adversely it will in fact bring the whole economy down to that level. That is exactly what happened in the 1930's when agriculture was not receiving its fair share of the national income and prices were at a deplorable level. People were out of jobs and our whole economy suffered. Already we have had delegations coming to Ottawa from the agricultural implement industry and the textile industries indicating an increase in unemployment in Canada. Indeed, it has reached an all-time high. Therefore we are asking the government to hold the price line and to use its policies and its power to sell our wheat at prices which will guarantee the producer a decent standard of living.

In Saskatchewan we have made tremendous gains in the last ten years. We do not come here from that province asking for a handout. The thing we are asking for here is nothing short of a just, fair and equitable policy for western agriculture. At one time our province of Saskatchewan was called nothing but a hard luck province. In the last ten years we have been successful in raising the standard of living. We have been successful all along the economic line in order to give our people more security.

I hold in my hand a booklet published by the government of Saskatchewan, showing ten years of progress under that government. I commend it to all hon. members, because it shows in an unmistakable way the progress made in that province. We are not content, sir, to sit idly by and to see our people go back to the conditions that existed prior to 1944. I remember full well that during the election—and I believe it was the type of advertising used by Liberal candidates all over the country—Liberal candidates said: "Vote Liberal and keep Canada prosperous." I think the people supported the government and returned them to office on that basis. As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said the other day, we should try to keep the record straight. He emphasized that point of view in his speech many times. I say now, let us keep the record straight. This government told the people of western Canada that if they voted Liberal they would have continued prosperity. Well, in the years from 1951 to 1953 agriculture has been put in an adverse position, when you compare the returns to agriculture with the cost of production. According to the dominion bureau of statistics figures there has been a decrease of about 16 per cent. That could very well end up in a tailspin, where our people once again would be losing their farms and where the general picture for agriculture would be disastrous.

What I am saying to the government today is that we in this group support the principle of orderly marketing. The government should assume the responsibility of taking over surplus stocks of wheat in Canada.

When you look over the submissions made to the cabinet by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture over the years you will see that they have advocated to the government that surplus stocks of wheat in Canada should be stored and that the agricultural producers should not suffer from having those surplus stocks. It would be good policy, Mr. Speaker, for the government to undertake a policy of storing a thousand million bushels of wheat in Canada as a reserve either for war or for scarcity.

I do not agree with the Minister of Agriculture that having surplus wheat in this country should mean disaster, because that is the only interpretation I can take from his remarks as published in the Ottawa Journal of June 14. If the government undertook that policy, it would not mean of course a lot of money being spent on storage, but it would mean that the agricultural producer would have money in his pocket to buy the farm machinery. The farm machinery workers would be able to return to work, and so would many people who are today unemployed. Of course, anything may happen; but the Minister of Trade and Commerce has indicated on many occasions over the past three years that the crops we have had were likely to continue. What better type of husbandlike direction could we have from the federal government than the government taking over these stocks and storing them until people require them throughout the world?

I am sure he will agree with me when I say that the time will come when we can market these stocks of grain at a very decent price, a price which will meet with the support of the farmers, and one which will not cost the Canadian people one single red cent.

Today we have enough money to meet essential commitments in our defence program. There can be no question about that. And if we need more money for planes or guns the government can find it. This year we are spending about $2 billion for defence purposes. That may well be necessary, but I would point out that today we are not necessarily fighting a war involving guns and planes. We have to make people believe in the free way of life we have in the western world, and if that means anything at all it means security to the people of Canada, and livelihood, job and home security to the farmers throughout the length and breadth of the land.

We are not going to be able to put across any of the principles we cling to in regard to a better way of life to the peoples of the Far East and Asia unless we can have such a program here. It must be rather difficult for the people in the underprivileged countries to accept these views when they hear that in Canada, although we have produced more cars, machinery, and more of everything else, we are starting into another economic tailspin.

I would therefore urge the Minister of Trade and Commerce to tell the farmers today, even though it is rather late in the day, what the initial price for wheat this fall is going to be. The government should buy, store, and pay the farmers for wheat, which could be stored against future commitments. For in my opinion the only way in which we are going to get the importing countries to adhere to any agreement is to assure them that they can obtain their requirements of wheat at an agreed price and on the date when it will be required in future.

If the government will undertake to do that I am quite sure that that will be the means of giving stability to agriculture; it will assure the farmers that they are going to be adequately protected; and, moreover, it will assure stability to our entire economy.

Just in passing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to some statements made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, and I am very happy to see that he is in his seat, because I was most concerned when he said that he viewed the economic position of western agriculture from an airplane in coming to Ottawa and he felt quite satisfied that everything was all right because he saw some ships on the great lakes. It seems to me he took a rather superficial point of view in attempting to determine whether agriculture in Canada was in a healthy condition, and I would urge him to take a much closer look at the situation.

I have already indicated that farmers today are worried, I have mentioned the farm debt, and I have pointed to the prosperity we enjoy in Saskatchewan. But I would also add that we recognize that unless we have in Ottawa a government that is prepared to arrange an economic state of affairs throughout this country, which will lend healthy support to agriculture, then the progress we have made in Saskatchewan will seriously deteriorate. We must have an over-all economic policy to support our present policy.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope this government will not continue to sit idly by when large segments of our economy are in this present rather serious situation. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden):

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma and by adding thereafter the following words:
"and this house further regrets that the government has failed to make provision for a floor price to the wheat producers of Canada at levels not less than the Canadian wheat board selling price, basis Fort William/Port Arthur, on Friday, June 4, 1954."

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, the drop of 10⅛ cents in the price of wheat, plus the statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) that it is possible that additional cuts might have to be made in future has, in my opinion, caused a great deal of concern in western Canada.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I hope my hon. friend is not going to put words in my mouth. I did not say it was "probable" and I did not intimate what he implied. I said that the price could not be regarded as a firm price for all time and if it was necessary to keep our grain competitive the price would be cut again.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Speaker, I immediately corrected the word "probable" and said the minister had said it was possible. I corrected myself when I made that statement and there is no reason for the minister to rise again.

In my opinion, the concern today is not so much over the actual price of wheat, that is $1.72, but rather in regard to the uncertainty about the policy of the government in the future. That is what concerns farmers at the present time. There is no definite support price under wheat today, although we had a support price for four years under the international wheat agreement of $1.55 per bushel. But owing to the fact that so many nations have withdrawn from the international wheat agreement, that floor can no longer be regarded as an effective support.

I noticed in the Ottawa Journal the other day that the president of the farmers union of Alberta, Mr. Henry Young, has urged the government to announce that they will not allow the price of wheat to fall below the support price under the international wheat agreement. That should be the very minimum the government should be prepared to do.

Mr. Young pointed out that if the government made that announcement it would at least help to remove the fear that the price of wheat might absolutely collapse. I am not saying they would be satisfied with that; but they are suggesting that that is the very least the government could do at the present time, namely announce its support price equivalent to the support price under the international wheat agreement.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, may I make a comment? I cannot think of a more bearish statement any government could make at this time.

Mr. Quelch: It might be bare but at the same time the people of Canada are a little bit fearful of what might happen. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has stated that we have a floor price of $1.40, but what we have is an initial payment. Let me point out to the minister that there is a fundamental difference in principle between an initial payment and a floor price. An initial payment is usually set sufficiently low so as to ensure that the average price received during the year will be higher than the initial payment. On the other hand a floor price or a support price is usually set sufficiently high so as to ensure that the price of agricultural products will not be allowed to fall sufficiently low to reach an uneconomical level.

As an example, let us take the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act. Under that act provision is made whereby the government can guarantee an initial price up to 80 per cent of the average price of the past three years but, as a matter of practice, the government has usually guaranteed that initial payment up to only 60 per cent in order to be certain that they will not suffer a loss. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) himself pointed out that there is a big difference between that act and the Agricultural Prices Support Act, because under the Agricultural Prices Support Act provision is made not for an initial payment but for a support price and that support price is tied to the price of other commodities, under section 9. I therefore say that the farmers would feel a great deal happier today if they knew that a support price was going to be maintained under wheat.

The minister has also stated in the past that he does not think the Canadian consumer should be taxed in order to subsidize the price of wheat. On the other hand, I never heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) object when the Canadian farmer was taxed in order that the people of Canada might receive wheat at a lower price. When the price of wheat to the producers was kept below the world market price, actually what was happening was that the producer was being taxed in order that the consumer could receive wheat at a lower price. There is no difference between the two. In the one case you are taxing the people to subsidize the price of wheat at a fair level. In the other case you are taxing the farmer in order to keep the price of wheat down to what the government considered to be a fair level at that time.

If the government, as a matter of policy, fails to stabilize the price of wheat at a level that returns to the farmer a fair price they will, in my opinion, be committing a definite breach of faith with the farmer. In 1941-42 when the price ceiling was put on, the prime minister of the day, in a broadcast, announced to the farmers that he appreciated the fact that they were expanding their production in spite of the fact that a price ceiling had been put on; and he guaranteed that in compensation the prices after the war would be stabilized at a fair level. That was a definite promise made by the prime minister of this country in 1943.

In 1945 the then minister of trade and commerce announced a post-war policy on the marketing of wheat. He said that policy would be not to try to obtain the full world market price for wheat sold to our allies but that it was the intention to sell wheat for less than the world market price because he considered that we had a moral obligation not to charge our allies the maximum price we could get, having in mind the great contribution they had made in that war. When I replied to the speech made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I pointed out that we were prepared to support that policy, that we realized that we in Canada had a moral obligation to help our allies by not charging them the maximum price but that we must recognize that it was a moral obligation of the people of Canada as a whole and not merely that of the farmers. I pointed out that any losses suffered as the result of that policy should therefore be borne by the Canadian people as a whole and not by the farmers alone; in other words, to whatever extent losses were suffered, the farmers should be compensated for that loss.

We all know what happened. I am not going to place a lot of figures on the record—they have been placed on the record so many times already—to show what those losses were. We all know that there was a substantial loss as the result of selling wheat under the British wheat agreement and selling wheat to the consumer in Canada at the same price instead of obtaining the price for class II wheat, which loss has been estimated anywhere from $300 million to $500 million. All the farmers received against that loss so far was a payment of $65 million.

As I say the prime minister referred to the fact that the farmers had made a sacrifice and that they could rest assured that they would be compensated for it by a stabilizing program after the war. The Minister of Agriculture also referred to the same thing in the past. If the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce represents government policy in this country, and if they are opposed to the people of this country being taxed in order to subsidize agricultural prices in order to maintain them at a fair level, then it can mean only one thing. It means that the price to the farmer is to be governed by the so-called law of supply and demand. If that is to be the policy, then the farmers of this country would be justified in reducing their production in order to try to keep the price higher.

Would the Minister of Trade and Commerce agree that the farmers would be justified today in reducing their production in order to keep prices higher? If prices are to be made subject to the law of supply and demand, that is the only protection the farmers have unless the government is prepared to step in and to place a support price under farm products. I should be interested in knowing whether that was government policy. I think a declaration of that kind should be made. I think it is only fair to the farmers that they should be told by the government whether their policy is this: We want you to reduce production; we are not going to guarantee a higher price but you can look after the situation yourself by doing as other industries do, namely reduce production, and that reduced production will force prices up. Personally, we in this group do not favour such a policy because if we had two or three years of drought we would have a situation in the world where there would be widespread famine.

In his speech the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated that it was a fallacy to suggest there were starving people or starving nations in the world today. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce reads what is put out by the food and agriculture organization, I think he would be impressed by the fact that consistently over the past five years they have been stressing the fact that unless the nations that have the ability to expand the production of food do so, there will be widespread starvation in the world. In their recent publications they have referred to that point on a number of occasions. When the food and agriculture organization met in conference in Rome last fall one of the first statements issued there—and I quote from the Western Producer—was as follows:

> The United Nations group said in Rome, Italy, on the eve of a three-week conference that opened November 23, that its latest surveys showed a trend back "to the dilemma of the '30s with excess food co-existing with hunger."

Then I was struck by a statement in the FAO publication entitled Memo dated June, 1954. This is with regard to a report of the situation they expected to exist in 1956-57. They have this to say:

> The report notes that "if, because of the fear of surpluses (in the more developed countries), present production plans were scaled down, the result might be a continuation of past shortages and inadequate levels of nutrition, for there can be little doubt that a high rate of population growth will continue at least for some years to come. The margin between the expected expansion of production and population is narrow, and one or two bad harvests could wipe out much of the expected improvement in food supplies" . . .
>
> "The essential problem is to raise the purchasing power of the poorer consumers," the report continues. "The possibility that supplies may at times exceed effective demand should not obscure the fact that most of the world's population still lack enough food. It would be tragic and socially dangerous if we found ourselves back in the dilemma of the 'thirties with excess stocks co-existing with hunger."

If this situation described in the FAO report refers to food other than wheat, then I think the government of Canada would be justified in perhaps following a policy similar to that of the United States. Apparently there may be some reason to feel that there is a different situation with regard to wheat and other farm commodities because I notice that the international federation of agricultural producers do make a recommendation that we reduce the production of wheat and increase the production of other commodities in its place. In the Manitoba Co-operator of June 3, 1954, I find this statement:

> I.F.A.P. recommended that production of such crops as cotton, grain and potatoes be reduced and that production be increased for such commodities as animal proteins not in surplus supply at present.

If the government feels it would be advisable to cut down the production of wheat and increase the production of other commodities it could encourage action of that kind by a policy similar to that carried out in the United States where the farmers were given the option of maintaining their production of wheat at the present level and taking a cut of around 40 or 50 per cent in the price of wheat or cutting their production of wheat by 25 per cent and continuing to receive the support price of $2.21 a bushel, that is 90 per cent of parity. A policy of that kind no doubt would bring a substantial reduction in the production of wheat and would bring about an increase in the production of other farm commodities that may be needed at the present time. As I say, that is a matter that needs to be looked into, and if the government came to the conclusion that that was desirable they could very easily bring it about by action similar to that taken in the United States.

Since the war the food and agriculture organization has done a great deal of research work with respect to the matter of food surpluses and ways and means by which these food surpluses can be got to nations that need them. First of all we had the suggestion of Sir John Boyd Orr regarding a world food board, which was supported by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). Later we had another proposal known as the international commodity clearing house. That idea originated with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture which passed it on to the international federation of agricultural producers which passed it on to the FAO council. The FAO council set up a body of six experts who drafted the proposal known as the international commodity clearing house. That was not supported by the Minister of Agriculture. I want to make it clear that I am not saying that he did not support the proposal of Sir John Boyd Orr, but the Minister of Agriculture did not support the international commodity clearing house and voted against it.

Mr. Gardiner: That is not exactly correct either but I will deal with it in due course.

Mr. Quelch: I am so used to the minister saying one thing one time and another thing another time that this time I have brought with me what he did say. In April, 1953, in a speech I made in the house I was saying exactly what I have been saying today. At that time I said, as found at page 4588 of Hansard of April 30, 1953:

> . . . but I am interested in the action that was taken by Canada in reference to the specific proposal for setting up an international commodity clearing house. That was the proposal before the conference and Canada voted against it. The minister can give his own reasons . . .

Then the minister followed me, gave his reasons and concluded with this sentence:

> If we went into a scheme of that kind with a group of nations that would not accept the principles that were laid down by Lord Orr, then of course we would be looking for trouble; so we voted against it.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend has not yet read all that is there.

Mr. Quelch: Pardon?

Mr. Gardiner: If he will permit me to state what the position was I will state it now.

Mr. Quelch: I think the minister had better do that in his speech later.

Mr. Gardiner: It might suit your purposes better if I did.

Mr. Quelch: All I wanted to point out was that the minister voted against the international commodity clearing house—

Mr. Gardiner: No, I did not. I voted against the conditions that existed at the meeting at that time which were that the United States and Britain both refused to have anything to do with that proposal, and I said Canada could not take it on alone.

[Mr. Quelch.]

Mr. Quelch: And as a consequence voted against the international commodity clearing house. The minister may have good reasons for it, but the point is that when the proposal was voted on Canada voted against it along with the United States and Britain.

Mr. Gardiner: Canada did not vote until the United States and Britain had expressed their opposition.

Mr. Quelch: I did not say you did. I say you voted against it.

Mr. Gardiner: You are leaving the wrong impression entirely.

Mr. Quelch: I merely said when the vote was taken you voted against it, and the record stands there. I am not criticizing the minister. He may have considered he had good reasons, but we seem to get into so much confusion. One time he says he voted for it—

Mr. Gardiner: I have never at any time said anything different from what I am saying now, and my hon. friend cannot find that I did.

Mr. Quelch: When the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) was speaking the minister denied having voted against the international commodity clearing house. But now we have the record straight. The minister, after making a great deal of explanation, finally voted against the international commodity clearing house.

Mr. Gardiner: The record is not straight according to what you are saying.

Mr. Quelch: Nobody could straighten out what you are saying. That is more than any man could do. It is interesting to note that the working party of eight nations has put forward additional proposals for dealing with farm surpluses, and this program is outlined in the FAO publication, Memo, of March 1954. Five suggestions are made for dealing with the situation and they are as follows:

> 1. Sales on concessional terms, or grants, in aid of development . . .
> 2. Sales against importers' currencies, to be used for special purposes . . .
> 3. Sales on concessional terms, or grants for special welfare distribution programs . . .
> 4. Sales on concessional terms, or grants, for emergency relief . . .
> 5. Holdings, or segregation, of stocks . . .

Ever since the discussion on the Bretton Woods agreement members of this group have advocated that it would be in the interests of Canada to accept sterling in payment for a certain proportion of our exports to these countries in order to make it possible for them to buy our products. It is interesting to note that today more and more bodies of people are appreciating the soundness of that suggestion. In the May news letter of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce the acceptance of sterling is advocated. The food and agriculture organization, in the proposal known as the international commodity clearing house, advocated the acceptance of sterling. The proposal put forward by the eight nations working party also advocated the acceptance of sterling or the currency of the importing nation. In 1951 the United States, under the mutual security act 1951 program, put into effect a policy whereby they accepted the currency of foreign nations for certain specific purposes.

On the other hand, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) spoke he called it a fallacy to suggest that the acceptance of foreign currency would help to sell commodities. He stated that there are only two nations with respect to which the United States has agreed to accept payment in the currency of those countries. One case was Japan. The minister says that there are only two nations, but the other day I read a report which indicated that there were a number of nations. I believe it was five, but in any event more than two. I forget the names of the nations. However, the March, 1954, issue of Memo makes it clear that far more than two nations are involved in the transaction because this is what it has to say:

> Sales against importers' currencies, to be used for special purposes. The outstanding examples of this type of special measure are transactions under the United States mutual security act of 1951, as amended. Under this act, the supplies are used to build up stocks, ease derationing, meet abnormal import requirements of countries having poor harvests, etc.

Here is the important point.

> Under most of the transactions concluded so far, the local currency proceeds are to be used for providing military assistance.

Note that it says "under most of the transactions". That means there must have been more than two. At the very minimum you would have to have three in order to have the word "most" involved. It does not say how many but I understand there have been at least five transactions to date. Even five is not very many transactions, but I think there is a reason for that. Under this plan the use of foreign currency was limited to investment for defence projects. However, the United States administration now is greatly widening that program, and if that program is put into force I feel we will see far more goods sold under it.

Wheat—Marketing of Surplus

I have here a copy of U. S. News and World Report for June 11, 1954, dealing with the new proposal that the administration has put forward, and I quote:

> A disposal plan for farm surpluses now has administration approval.
>
> Basic idea is to sell surplus commodities abroad for foreign currencies. That eliminates the problem of getting American dollars in payment.
>
> Hope is that if India, for example, can buy American wheat for rupees instead of dollars, purchases of wheat will increase.
>
> Result aimed at in the plan is to increase the total volume of exports of farm products. If accepted, the plan will be operated so as to take precautions against replacing normal sales with shipments abroad of government held stocks. Purchasing countries also would be pledged not to trans-ship the products.
>
> Foreign currencies received by the United States could be used in part to buy strategic materials for the government stock pile.
>
> A swap is proposed, actually, of surplus United States farm products for strategic materials, such as manganese or uranium, held by foreign countries.

Now, here is the important point.

> In addition, the president would be authorized to use the foreign money for local improvements in the buying country, to pay U.S. obligations there, to buy military equipment, to help develop new markets for U.S. farm products, or for loans to promote world trade.
>
> The plan has been submitted to congress as an addition to the program for the foreign operations administration that now is being considered. A limit of $1·3 billion is put upon this kind of transaction. That is as far as congress is asked to go in reimbursing the government for the surpluses shipped.

If that program is adopted, I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) would agree that would be one more difficulty we would have to face.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That program was adopted some months ago. So far as I know, India has not taken any wheat for rupees and very few other countries have taken wheat for local currencies.

Mr. Quelch: This article is dated June 11, and it says this is merely an administration program. The program to which the minister is referring is the mutual security program, and under that foreign currency can only be utilized for defence purposes. This is a new proposal to greatly widen the purposes for which foreign currency can be used. It is merely part of the administration's program and has not been placed before congress yet.

I am suggesting that if the program the minister is talking about under the security act is extended as wide as this program, then we will face a lot of additional competition. If a nation can just pay for the wheat it needs or the farm products it needs with its own currency, it will be far easier for it than having to find the dollars, especially when that currency will be invested in their own country, and not used merely for defence projects but for such things as irrigation works, as is done under the Colombo plan. Then, we will be facing very severe competition. We will have a situation where we are not merely competing against the United States treasury, because that is what the farmers of this country are having to do today. When we drop the price of wheat ten cents a bushel our farmers have to take that loss, but when the United States drops the price ten cents a bushel the farmers do not take the loss because they are guaranteed $2.20 a bushel. Actually, therefore, the farmers of this country today are having to compete with the United States treasury.

Then, we would have the further handicap of competing with nations whose currency is depreciated far below the Canadian dollar; that is the second severe handicap. The third handicap would be that we would be losing markets to the United States because they would be willing to accept foreign currency.

By way of summary, I would say that we insist that a support price for wheat comparable to the prices of other commodities is fully justified at this time. This is true, first of all, because a stabilized price was promised as the post-war policy of the government; secondly, because world peace requires adequate reserves of food, and those reserves must not be allowed to force prices down below an economic level. When the minister spoke he said there had not been any criticism of the wheat board officials or other officials dealing with wheat. I would point out that the wheat board only markets our wheat. It was not the wheat board that set the policy for subsidizing the Canadian consumer or the foreign consumer. It is not the wheat board that has the power to set a support price. It was the government that set the policy of subsidizing the consumers of this country and in foreign nations. We feel it should be the government of the day that initiates a support price that would guarantee the farmers a fair price for their products.

Mr. W. A. Tucker (Rosthern): We have before us a motion to go into supply, to which an amendment has been moved by a representative of the official opposition, as follows:

> This house regrets that the government has failed to deal effectively with the problem of marketing Canada's wheat surplus.

A subamendment has been moved on behalf of the C.C.F. as follows:

> and this house further regrets that the government has failed to make provision for a floor price to the wheat producers of Canada at levels not less than the Canadian wheat board's selling price, basis Fort William/Port Arthur, on Friday, June 4, 1954.

[Mr. Quelch.]

I would say first of all in regard to this motion to go into supply, and particularly with reference to the subamendment on behalf of the C.C.F., that we in Saskatchewan are accustomed to the use that is made of these amendments. Obviously, a motion to go into supply is a motion that must be carried in order to conduct the business of the country. If that motion were defeated by an amendment, it would mean the resignation of the government. The people who move such a motion realize that those who believe in the government's policy, and those who wish to keep the government in office, will have to vote against that amendment. They know that just as well as anybody else, and they have been doing that sort of thing in this house now, particularly the representatives of the C.C.F. party, for several years.

When it comes time to putting out propaganda, they do not point out that when people vote against these amendments to supply motions they are, in effect, voting to keep the government in office in which they believe, and the whole governmental program that is involved therein, but they publicize the fact that members vote against an amendment rather than in favour of the government's program as a whole. They point out that members voted against this particular item, and that particular item, and they spread that around the country. It is then said that members who have been elected here to represent western Canada voted against many of the things that the people of western Canada would like to see brought into effect. Then, it is suggested that the members who did so have betrayed the people who elected them.

Well, that sort of thing is designed to whip up hatred and establish as much misunderstanding as possible, as hon. members opposite, some of whom are laughing, know. They know what I say is quite true.

Mr. Castleden: We know it is ridiculous.

Mr. Tucker: It has paid off politically. Almost all members of the C.C.F. avail themselves of these tactics because as we know they are great supporters of socialism. They are great supporters of the ideas of Karl Marx, and Karl Marx taught that the way to line up people to support certain things was to preach hatred and establish hatred, and if you could establish enough hatred amongst enough of the people then you could bring about the revolution you desire.

Mr. Knowles: Is that what you were doing when you voted for one of our amendments in 1946?

Mr. Tucker: That is the sort of thing the C.C.F. have indulged in for some time. I think it is probably the reason why they have not had more success in Canada as a whole than they have had.

Mr. Knowles: More than you have had, anyway.

Mr. Tucker: I remember very well during the war, a period when C.C.F. members who were sitting here from 1940 to 1945 had very high hopes of ultimately—and in the not too distant future—becoming the official opposition in this House of Commons, and then becoming the government.

Mr. Nicholson: The hopes you had in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Tucker: When they formed the government in Saskatchewan in 1944 they figured that that was just a step in this direction. Well, I think the people of this country as a whole—and I am suggesting this to the C.C.F. party—just looked at what went on in Saskatchewan. They have seen these attempts at character assassination—smear. And the people of Canada have decided they do not want to have that sort of thing put into power in the Dominion of Canada as a whole.

One of the things about which I have been very much impressed is that the C.C.F. party takes the lead—and I do not include in this certain people in that party, because I know some of them do not engage in this sort of thing, and do not like it—but there are members of the C.C.F. party in prominent positions who seem to have control when it comes to elections. During the last election there was a long list of things put out by the C.C.F. that Liberal members from western Canada were supposed to have voted against. They were on the basis of these tactics I have just mentioned. In my opinion that is nothing but deceit; it is nothing but an attempt to mislead the people.

Mr. Castleden: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Gardiner: Are you guilty?

Mr. Harrison: You will get more of it, too.

Mr. Castleden: I have no objection to the hon. member making remarks of that kind, but I just want to know that when we are allowed to reply we will be given similar latitude to answer the slurs that have been given out by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker).

Mr. Tucker: I have been stating facts; and the very fact that the hon. member immediately gets uneasy is very significant, indeed.

Mr. Castleden: We are not uneasy.

Mr. Tucker: In any event, I was going to say that I think they have not attained the success that they thought they would.

Mr. Castleden: A very valuable opinion!

Mr. Tucker: Our people in Saskatchewan believe that the way to make progress in this country is to have a certain amount of respect for one another, not to teach hate; they believe we should teach mutual respect, not try to build ourselves up by smearing other people, but that we should take the attitude that the other fellow is probably just as good as we are; and, while he might not see your viewpoint at once, if you take a reasonable attitude then ultimately you can rely upon your fellow Canadian to give you a fair deal.

I am satisfied that the approach the C.C.F. party, in making smear attacks on prominent public men accusing them of having betrayed the people who elected them—claiming they have been guilty of treachery—that sort of thing is building up hatred. I am satisfied that those tactics do not help the cause of Saskatchewan in the eyes of the rest of Canada, in any respect.

Now, in regard to the subamendment, the C.C.F. party know quite well in the first place that, even if members on this side of the house might consider it was desirable, we, believing as we do in the efficacy of the present government, believing as we do in the program of the present government, would unhesitatingly vote against that subamendment to keep the present government in office so as to complete its whole program. When they put the subamendment before us they knew we would do that, and they are laying the foundation to repeat in the future what they have done in the past.

Now, what do they actually suggest? They are actually suggesting that the floor prices of wheat be put upon a basis about ten cents higher than the present selling price. In effect, that is what they are suggesting. That sort of thing—the setting up of a floor price at a point much higher than the prevailing market price—has been tried for many years in the United States. It has resulted in the building up of such a large surplus of food supplies that farmers in that country are coming to the view that it is not a wise policy. It has built up such a surplus that the other taxpayers are beginning to find fault with the policy. The farmers themselves are beginning to realize they have to pay part of the taxes to produce a whole lot of goods that are being stored up and are spoiling.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Tucker: Well, that is the case. And we find in the United States that more and more people are coming to the view that a price support policy must be one that will guarantee a living to the people engaged in that line of work—but not one that will act as an incentive to produce a vast oversupply. This is what was stated by the leader of the Social Credit party the other night.

The C.C.F. know this just as well as anybody else, but they move this subamendment, knowing full well that it is not possible in any way to carry it out, and knowing that if they were in the government they would not and could not carry it out. They know very well that it will be a good thing to use to whip up hatred when the time comes, in Saskatchewan. I shall deal with that again for a moment or so later on.

The Liberal policy is very clearly set out in an act which was passed under a Liberal government and which is still on the statute books, dealing with the support of agricultural prices. In that connection I should like to read section 9(2) of that act which, I think, is a sound approach to the matter. It is based upon what I believe the Liberal party believes in—a fair deal to all regions, a fair deal to all parts of Canada, a fair deal to all races. That is what the Liberal party believes in, and it is on that basis that we can appeal to our fellow Canadians in other parts of Canada to give us a fair deal.

This is the section to which I have referred:

> In prescribing prices under paragraphs (a) and (c) of subsection (1), the board shall endeavour to ensure adequate and stable returns for agriculture by promoting orderly adjustment from war to peace conditions and shall endeavour to secure a fair relationship between the returns from agriculture and those from other occupations.

I have been reading, Mr. Speaker, from the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

This applies to all agricultural products, with the exception of wheat. However, it was stated when the act was enacted that wheat would be dealt with on the same principle, but that it was not necessary to include it in this act because it was under the control of the wheat board.

This, as I see it, is sound, just and fair —that agriculture should be assured of supported prices in difficult times, that it will get fair returns as compared with those engaged in other occupations. That policy, I think, is sound; it is the law of the country today, and it is a policy that I am satisfied the Liberal government, who put the law on the statute books, will carry out.

And I want to say this to hon. members opposite that, speaking for the great agricultural constituency of Rosthern, which I have the honour to represent in this House of Commons, I am satisfied that that will be satisfactory to the fair-minded people not only of Rosthern but of the whole of Saskatchewan. This attempt on the part of the C.C.F. to play to the gallery has been seen through pretty well by all of Canada, and I think it is going to be seen through in Saskatchewan, and that the handwriting is already on the wall for the C.C.F. in that province.

Mr. Castleden: You didn't do much writing.

Mr. Tucker: What is basically wrong, what is basically unjust, and what is basically unfair to your fellowman will not ultimately succeed. I have that much faith in my fellow Canadians, and in my fellow citizens from Saskatchewan.

Now, in regard to the amendment of the Progressive Conservatives, it reads:

> This house regrets that the government has failed to deal effectively with the problem of marketing Canada's wheat surplus.

That amendment, Mr. Speaker, is really an attack not only upon the government, which has appointed the wheat board and which carries on this work through the wheat board as its instrument, but it is an attack upon the wheat board itself, because if there has been a failure to deal effectively with the marketing of our wheat, then of course the people who have failed to do that are the wheat board. It may be said that it is the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). I do not think that anyone suggests for a moment that he is engaged in the marketing of wheat. True he is consulted in regard to the matter, but the one who takes the responsibility for doing the marketing of wheat is the wheat board. There have been attacks upon the wheat board in the past. I have deplored them because I think our wheat board system has saved our producers in western Canada literally hundreds of millions of dollars over the last ten years. I regret this continual attack, on every possible pretext, upon the wheat board and the wheat board system of marketing grain.

That is the sort of thing that everybody from western Canada, of all parties, if they think that the wheat board is a good thing, should deplore. I have a great deal of respect for the gentleman who moved this amendment and I am sorry that, coming from western Canada as he does, he saw fit to move this particular amendment. I am sure that in doing this he was not speaking on behalf of the vast majority of farmers in western Canada.

The farmers in western Canada are apprehensive, Mr. Speaker, over these constant attacks upon the wheat board and our present system of handling grain. One of the proofs of that is to be found in an advertisement which I have in front of me. It is in a paper dated April 10, 1954, just two months ago. It was inserted by the Saskatchewan wheat pool. I submit, to you, Mr. Speaker, that they would not pay money to put such an advertisement in the paper if they were not apprehensive about the constant attacks being made upon our present grain handling system. Here is what this advertisement says: It is headed: "Some grain facts." The subheading reads: "Canadian exports, wheat and flour." It continues:

> This year, August 1 to January 31, 138,700,000 bushels. Ten-year average, August 1, to January 31 from 1943 to 1953, 137,700,000 bushels.

During that period the ten-year average was 1 million bushels less than we exported last year during the same period. The wheat pool wants to draw this to public attention. They put in black letters that the record during the present year is better than the average by 1 million bushels. I continue: The next subheading reads:

> Deliveries to elevators western Canada, all grains: This year, August 1 to February 28, 400 million bushels; ten-year average, August 1 to February 28, 1943 to 1953, 373 million bushels.

The farm deliveries during the seven-month period of this crop year covered by this advertisement are better than the ten-year average, as pointed out in this advertisement, by 27 million bushels. The advertisement goes on to say:

> Orderly marketing keeps grain moving. These are the facts. Don't be misled. Saskatchewan wheat pool, head office, Regina.

There is the attitude of the farmers of western Canada. They believe that we have a good grain handling system and they are apprehensive about attacks on it. They believe that the rest of Canada will be led to believe that we in the west are not satisfied with it; that it has failed; and that there will be the feeling that it should be changed. They want everybody to know that they the farmers in western Canada are satisfied with the present system of handling our grain, and the people who are real friends of that system will not seize upon a time of difficulty to attack it, Mr. Speaker, as is being done here today. Surely the time when the wheat board and the present system of handling grain needs support is now, when there are great difficulties.

Mr. Harkness: Don't burst a blood vessel, over nothing.

Mr. Tucker: They do not need support when things are going well. The time when that system needs support is when there are difficulties such as there are at present, and the real friends of the present system of marketing can be found when people seize the first chance to attack it, Mr. Speaker. The people of western Canada are observing what is happening today in regard to this problem.

Mr. Harkness: You are just setting up a straw man and knocking him down.

Mr. Tucker: I am just dealing with the facts. There is no doubt about where the farmers of western Canada stand on this matter. Here are some things that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, representing the farmers of Canada, submitted to the government on February 19 of this year:

> We wish once again to put on record our support of international agreements as a means of developing and stabilizing markets for Canadian wheat.

Here is what was said in regard to what this amendment seeks to condemn:

> Finally, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture reaffirms its appreciation of, and confidence in, the work done by the Canadian wheat board in the discharge of its difficult and responsible tasks.

This is as complete and wholehearted an endorsation as you would get of any human institution, and yet this house is by this amendment asked to deplore, to condemn indirectly, something that our farmers in western Canada have fought to get for the last twenty years, at least, and are glad to have; and they are not going to abandon it because we have entered into a period of some difficulty.

This view is shared by members of all parties when they are speaking more or less as they should speak on behalf of the farmers. I hold in my hand the report of the agriculture committee, and I was very interested to see the attitude taken there. Some suggestion is made sometimes that we have been losing markets for our grain. Well, I find at page 32 of the proceeding of the committee on agriculture a definite question is asked of a member of the wheat board. Mr. Riddel in answer said:

> Yes, I think our markets in the Orient have been expanding during the past number of years, particularly in Japan, the Philippines and Hong Kong.

We heard the members of the board going over the work that they were doing in pressing the sale of our grain in all the countries of the world. Anybody who heard the evidence must have been impressed with the splendid case they made out and with the good work they are doing in selling our grain. The person who asked the question knew that this charge was being put out to the country that Canada was losing our grain markets, and so he asked this definite question of the wheat board:

> We are not losing any markets?
> Mr. Riddel: No.

That is a definite, bald assertion by a member of the wheat board and yet when the Minister of Trade and Commerce rises in his place in the house and points out that we are holding on to our markets, that we are keeping our share of the markets, he is attacked because he defended the work being done by the wheat board. I say that in defending the wheat board, as he has done stoutly, and ably against attacks in time of trouble, the Minister of Trade and Commerce has the wholehearted support of 95 per cent of the farmers in western Canada.

Mr. Pouliot: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tucker: I am surprised to hear laughter coming—

Mr. Harkness: Keep up the show. It is quite amusing.

Mr. Tucker: —from the other side of the house. I am quite sure it is not related to the statement I made.

Mr. Low: We are laughing with you, not at you.

Mr. Tucker: I cannot imagine anyone who is concerned about the wheat board being upheld in a time of trial not being glad when the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) made such an able defence of it as he did the other day. I sat here, Mr. Speaker, and I was grateful that we had a man of such great business ability looking after this matter and representing this government in regard to its dealings with the wheat board. The minister certainly effectively upheld the wheat board on the floor of this house, and we should all be glad that we have a man of his established ability and well known devotion to the welfare of the people of Canada in the position he is in.

Mr. Macdonnell: The minister made the best of a bad job.

Mr. Tucker: I do not think it was a case of making the best of a bad job.

Mr. Knowles: Don't you?

Mr. Tucker: I think the record of the wheat board during the last ten years is one of which most Canadians are proud and rightly proud. I do not think that a representative from western Canada would dare to make such a statement when the minister was defending them, namely that he was defending a bad job. I can understand it being said by an opposition representative from the city of Toronto.

Here is what was stated in regard to the job done by the wheat board, and this very interesting comment can be found at page 34 of the evidence given before the agriculture committee. I will read part of what Mr. Riddel said in his evidence. He said that sales would definitely be down from last year and he gave as the reason for that the fact that there were big crops in other countries. In view of that, sales would obviously be down. He added: ". . . . the crop production is up, away up". He then went on:

> I think that it can be said that the reason for the accumulated surpluses in Canada after the last crop year are definitely not the lack of sales, but the substantial production in the two previous crop years.

I hope you will note, Mr. Speaker, that he states that the reason for the mounting surplus is not lack of sales but the tremendous increase in production. It might be surprising to hon. members if I pointed out who agreed with him. The hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden) said: "I think we can all agree to that." Now, the hon. member who moved the amendment on behalf of the Progressive Conservative party was, I believe, present when the hon. member for Yorkton expressed his agreement and I do not find anything in the record to indicate that the Progressive Conservative member disagreed with that observation. Despite that, we are now told by both the Progressive Conservative party and the C.C.F. party that we are losing our markets.

One of the things with which everyone agrees is that we should not have a fire sale if we are to retain a fair price and hold our share of the markets of the world, because other people will want to do the same. If we try to get more than our share of a dwindling market in any way, shape or form, then the others are going to try to defend their position, and I think all hon. members agree that would be undesirable. Just what do hon. members want to do?

An hon. Member: Put a floor price under wheat.

Mr. Tucker: We can put a floor price under wheat but that is not going to get rid of our grain. The floor price might get you a few votes, but what I am dealing with is the problem which confronts us in western Canada of getting rid of our grain.

An hon. Member: At an adequate price.

Mr. Tucker: A high floor price is not going to get rid of the grain. It is suggested, for example, that we accept sterling in payment for our grain. Yet, we are told that Great Britain has had enough of having her currency taken in payment for various things she could not pay for during the war. She built up a debt with Egypt and India of about $12 billion and when she tried to repay that debt during the period following the war she was faced with millions of dollars of so-called unrequited exports.

An hon. Member: So what?

Mr. Tucker: My hon. friend says "So what?" That meant that when Great Britain came out of the war, struggling valiantly to regain her position, she had to meet that demand in exports for which she was getting nothing in return. She had this millstone hanging around her neck and as she struggled to the position where she could stand on her own feet and again become one of the leading nations again in regard to trade, commerce, banking, and monetary matters, she had to cope with this colossal handicap. The leaders of British opinion have taken the attitude that they want no more of this business of buying things for which they cannot pay and giving sterling which they know they will have to repay ultimately, for they believe in keeping their word.

It is therefore suggested here that we take sterling in payment and then expect Britain to pay it back later. But the British say, "No, thank you".

Mr. Quelch: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would the hon. member not agree that it would be quite different if that sterling were invested in the sterling area?

Mr. Tucker: To the extent the British government is willing to permit sterling to be given in exchange for wheat I take it that there would be nothing wrong with that proposition, but the British government have no desire to put the sterling area in a position of indebtedness to the rest of the world.

Mr. Quelch: Unless it is invested in the sterling area.

Mr. Tucker: Their attitude is that they do not want that sort of thing. My hon. friend is no doubt aware of the fact that Mr. Towers, governor of the Bank of Canada, stated that the financial authorities who were looking after financial matters in the United Kingdom were not favourable to any such plan. If they are not favourable to it what is the use of constantly talking about it on the floor of this house?

Some hon. members are constantly suggesting we should take sterling, but once we take sterling and become willing to carry out deals of that sort then the other competing countries would say, "You are taking sterling and therefore we will take sterling." They would bid against one another and in effect what you would have is a fire sale, because if we agree to accept payments in a depreciated currency then it is just the same as if we had reduced prices.

One of the things we have got to guard against at this particular time is that we do not engage in cutthroat competition with other exporting countries to try and steal from them what they might regard as their share of a diminishing market. If we can keep our share of that market, even though it is diminishing, we should be quite satisfied with that.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Would the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) agree with the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he says that the wheat price must be made competitive?

Mr. Tucker: The Minister of Trade and Commerce took this attitude as I listened to him. He said that if we did not keep our wheat price competitive to a certain extent we would sell no grain.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): He did not say "to a certain extent".

Mr. Tucker: I beg the hon. member's pardon. He said we recognize that we always have to hold a bit of an umbrella over some of the smaller exporting countries. That is what he said. In other words, the attitude was, as I understood it, that there would be consultations with the great exporting countries and, so far as they are willing to cooperate, there have been consultations with the United States. As I understand his statement, the United States had taken the attitude that South American countries were pressing their sales and cutting prices and that if we did not do something to meet that situation they would sell their grain at good prices while we held the umbrella over their heads and kept our grain unsold. He said he recognized that to some extent the larger exporting countries would have to put up with something of that nature. In other words, the attitude of the Minister of Trade and Commerce was one that every single member of the House of Commons would agree with if he would lay aside politics for a moment. It is the policy that the great grain handling pools agree with. It is the policy that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture agrees with. It is the policy that we handle our grain through the wheat board, that we do not press it on the market unduly and that we try to keep a fair price level for that grain. But it is also a policy that recognizes the fact that if you keep your price out of line with that of other exporting countries, they will sell their grain and you will not sell yours.

We had an experience of that situation back in the days of the thirties. When we refused to sell, our wheat piled up and other taxpayers in Canada began to get uneasy, as was to be expected. The result was that our wheat ultimately had to be sold at low prices because we could not keep it indefinitely. But our farmers realize that what is needed is a policy of moderation in this matter, one of working as much as possible with our great neighbour to the south. I believe that country recognizes its obligations under NATO but also is in the position that she is under pressure from competition from South American countries. She is beset by those two considerations. But I am satisfied that she is prepared to consult with us and to try to maintain a fair deal in prices for herself and for us also.

I am satisfied that in the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the wheat board we have people who will examine that situation and who will get as good a proposition for Canada as that which will be obtained by the representatives of any other country in the world. When we have a situation like that, with a capable wheat board that everybody upholds and a Minister of Trade and Commerce who is regarded as one of the outstanding businessmen in the western nations today—when we have the privilege of having him do this work, acting as a liaison between the western grain growers, the wheat board and the government of this country; when we have a man of that great ability, acknowledged over the whole world, who played such a great part before the war, during the war and after the war—I say that I am satisfied that I can go to 95 per cent of the farmers whom I have the honour to represent and that they will say to me: While we sometimes do not like the bluntness of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and we sometimes do not like the things he says in answer to our requests, we know that he is honest, that he is capable and that he is doing the very best he can for us; we are glad that he is there.

Mr. Harkness: See them smiling.

Mr. Knowles: The pause is so that the minister can stand up and bow.

Mr. Tucker: Not at all. That remark reminds me of "The Merchant of Venice"; we judge others by the way we think ourselves.

[Mr. Tucker.]

Mr. Castleden: Is that the beginning or the conclusion?

Mr. Tucker: I have often wondered how it was that the C.C.F. got certain ideas about other people, and that is the only conclusion I can come to as to how they got them. I will tell the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that I paused because I wanted to find a statement made by a member of his own party before the committee on agriculture. I thought he would be interested in it. It will be found at page 176 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the standing committee on agriculture and colonization. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), a member of the C.C.F., in regard to the wheat board stated as follows:

> Mr. Argue: As one member of the committee and I am sure that I can speak on behalf of my associates here, the other members of the committee, in saying that we have had a very pleasant experience throughout with the board's appearing before the agriculture committee. This has been our experience before the agriculture committee. This has been our experience every time the board has appeared before the committee. I am sure we all appreciate the very co-operative way in which the members of the board have answered questions, the very full and valuable information they have given us, and I am sure that we and the producers of western Canada which they represent wish them continuing success in their operations this coming year.

Mr. Castleden: What a terrible attack!

Mr. Tucker: It is not an attack.

Mr. Castleden: The hon. member said we attacked the board.

Mr. Tucker: It is an endorsation—

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Tucker: — on the floor of the agriculture committee, to the effect that the wheat board had had success and they wished them continuing success.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Tucker: I ask the hon. member if they agree with that. Why did they not move to strike out the amendment moved on behalf of the Progressive Conservatives rather than endorse it and add something onto it?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): On a question of privilege—

Mr. Tucker: There is just one thing—

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): On a question of privilege—

Mr. Tucker: The hon. member can ask his question afterwards.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I want to point out—

An hon. Member: What is the question of privilege?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): — that the amendment which we moved to the amendment—

An hon. Member: We have all read it.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain):—is not in any way—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member please come immediately to his question of privilege?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): We in this group at no time have done anything other than support the Canadian wheat board. We have never attacked the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The remarks of the hon. member do not constitute a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Tucker: I think the amendment and the subamendment moved will speak for themselves. Our people in western Canada are intelligent and they understand what you have done.

There is one thing I wish to deal with before concluding, I understand my time has almost elapsed. I want to bring one matter to the attention of the government. The submission of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to the government stated this:

> The problem of providing federal guarantees on bank loans secured by farm-stored grain has been before your government in the fairly recent past. While we do not believe that the lack of such guarantee has worked very much hardship on western farmers as yet, during this crop year, we believe that as the season advances a definite need for such interim financing may arise. Under such circumstances lack of federal action could cause unnecessary hardship to substantial numbers of individuals. We would therefore ask that you keep this problem under constant review, prepared to act when necessary.

What I wish to suggest to the government is this. With present circumstances as they are, it may be that it will not be possible to take delivery of a very great amount of the crop of 1954. If the crop is as good as it appears that it may be, and as we hope it will be, it will cost quite a bit to take it off. Many farmers will be needing help to finance their harvesting operations, and when the situation is not in any way of their own making I do suggest that the government should examine the matter very closely and, if they cannot take delivery of enough of the crop to cover the financing of harvesting it, make the necessary financing as cheap and as available as possible. Now that the Emergency Powers Act has expired I believe there is no provision in the statutes whereby the government can make provision for farmers to borrow enough to cover harvesting expenses under some partial guarantee as in the case of the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

I would ask the government most sincerely to give consideration to the situation with which we may be confronted in a matter of a couple of months from now or less than that and to make sure that if the situation turns out to be such that the government is satisfied that the farmers need help to harvest their crop provision will be made for them to borrow the necessary money under some partial government guarantee scheme as in the case of the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Mr. Nicholson: I thought everything was O.K. over there.

Mr. Tucker: I think the people are satisfied that the government is doing everything possible. My hon. friend's colleague the member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden) says that the situation is due to big crops. The government takes no credit for good crops and, after all, it should not be blamed for them either. I do suggest that consideration should be given to the possibility that action may be necessary if we have another good crop and that the government should provide itself with the necessary powers to initiate such action if necessary. In that regard I disagree most profoundly with the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). Our farmers are in such a financial condition, as pointed out by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Mang) the other day, that I think if they can get credit—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am extremely sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I am obliged to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Tucker: May I finish my sentence.

Mr. Knowles: Let him finish.

Mr. Harkness: Let him go ahead.

Mr. Tucker: —that if they can get credit they will be glad to pay for it at the rate of 5 per cent, the same rate as under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The farmers of western Canada are only too glad to be able to stand upon their own feet—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Tucker: —and I am satisfied that they will be ready and willing to pay a reasonable rate of interest. All I ask is that the government make sure that they have the power to extend that financial help if it is needed.

Mr. Nicholson: They do not want to get into debt.

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) has run out of time but I still have a little left and I should like to continue along the line he was following. I too have listened to some of the debate, particularly some of the speeches from the C.C.F. benches. I listened particularly to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) the other night and I found some of his philosophy not at all surprising. It is the philosophy that you would expect him, as a socialist, to have. There was some difference of opinion between the hon. member for Assiniboia and the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) as to who was responsible for the economic situation in Saskatchewan and the good thereof. I think I understood the hon. member for Moose Mountain to say that all of Saskatchewan's present prosperity is attributable to the government at Regina. I think there should be a caucus among that group to decide who is who because the hon. member for Assiniboia expressed a very different opinion. If you will look at page 5737 of Hansard of June 9 you will find that he said:

> And so I say that this government—

He is talking about the federal government.

> —is directly responsible for the economic position of western Canada today.

I suggest that is diametrically opposed to what was stated by the hon. member for Moose Mountain when he attributed all the economic weal of Saskatchewan to the government of Mr. Douglas.

Mr. Knowles: Weal to Douglas, woe to Gardiner.

Mr. Harrison: Then there are some other things on which I think we should dwell such as how much stock we can take in the pronouncements of our friends on the other side, particularly in the C.C.F. group.

An hon. Member: Very little.

Mr. Harrison: My colleague says "very little", and I am inclined to agree with him.

Mr. Thatcher: He is biased.

Mr. Harrison: The hon. member for Assiniboia questioned the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and made a gentleman's agreement with him in the course of the debate that if the minister would give him certain information he would sit down. He operated like a true C.C.F.'er. The hon. member obtained the undertaking of the minister to fulfil his requirement to the letter but when he was called upon to fulfil his part of the bargain he operated like a true socialist and would not come through. There is nothing new in that. That is the cause of all our international troubles today. When we sit across the table from these people who are causing trouble in the world we cannot take their word for what they say. That is the reason we have these problems, because we are always sitting across the table from socialists. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) has these problems every day. When he talks business with any of these people who are causing trouble he is always talking with socialists. That is the basic trouble. You cannot take their word for anything. There is no such thing as integrity in these people. When they say they are going to sit down they stand up.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member describe Mr. Attlee—

Mr. Harrison: Would you just sit down. You will have forty minutes later.

Mr. Nicholson: Would he put Mr. Attlee in that category?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Harrison: When they say in Saskatchewan that they are going to take off the education tax it means that they are not going to take it off but are going to increase it, which they did by 50 per cent. If they say they are going to take the civil service out of politics it means they are going to put them into politics. They put through legislation to bring the civil service into politics. What do you find? You find C.C.F. candidates with campaign managers supplied by the department of public health, and so on.

Mr. Nicholson: Name one. You cannot do it. Name one.

Mr. Harrison: When a C.C.F.'er says that he is going to go north you go south if you want to catch him and you will catch him. I am glad—

Mr. Thatcher: On a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Thatcher: The hon. member in effect is calling me a liar and I resent it.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Thatcher: No. On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I understand that the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre is raising a point of order.

Mr. Thatcher: The hon. member in effect has called me a liar, along with my other colleagues. I demand that he withdraw and I think his remarks should be expunged from the record.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I was listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Meadow Lake. They were of a general nature and I did not hear any particular reference to the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre to which he could take exception.

Mr. Thatcher: Very respectfully, Mr. Speaker, may I just remind you of one. He said that when a C.C.F.'er says he is going north if you go south you will find him. On three or four occasions the hon. member said that the word of C.C.F.'ers could not be taken. I resent that, and I think in all fairness the hon. member should withdraw even if you will not make him.

Mr. Harrison: I think I can satisfy the hon. member personally when I say that I think he has demonstrated that he is no C.C.F.'er.

Mr. Thatcher: Mr. Speaker, I certainly am a C.C.F.'er.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Prove it.

Mr. Thatcher: I still say that the hon. member has accused me of being a liar and I should like him to withdraw. I think if he is fair he will withdraw.

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Speaker, if it will do the hon. gentleman any good I will withdraw as far as he personally is concerned, but as far as socialists generally are concerned I certainly will not do so.

Mr. Nicholson: On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps we could terminate this discussion without too much trouble. I understand that the remarks to which objection has been taken is something about going north, and then you would find them going south.

Mr. Thatcher: That is one of them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I really cannot find that a remark of that kind is unparliamentary. Objection may be taken by hon. members opposite the speaker, but they will have the opportunity of reply.

Mr. Nicholson: On a point of order: the hon. member has withdrawn so far as the member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre is concerned, but it places the rest of us in this particular group in the position where it is claimed that our word cannot be accepted. I believe that if the hon. member wishes to observe the rules of this house he should withdraw his remarks without any further delay.

Mr. Harrison: I believe I can satisfy—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Harrison) made any implication he would not accept the word of hon. members, I am sure he would be quite willing to withdraw.

Mr. Harrison: What I was going on to say, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nicholson: On a point of order: the hon. member has refused to withdraw the objectionable remarks in regard to the members of this group.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps if the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) would give the hon. member for Meadow Lake time, he would make the withdrawal.

Mr. Harrison: I think when the hon. member for Mackenzie sees where I am going he will find that he has no objection that he can rightly make. My explanation to him would be as follows: he will find the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia at page 5738 of Hansard for June 9, 1954. During those remarks he agreed with the Minister of Trade and Commerce that if the minister gave him certain information at that time, he would sit down. He did not do that.

Mr. Thatcher: He sat down, and then he got up again.

Mr. Harrison: The hon. member went back on his half of the agreement. The hon. member for Assiniboia is spokesman for that group in agricultural matters.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Harrison: Just let me finish this thing. The house had a demonstration of just how good their word is, and what an agreement means to this kind of people. We have had plenty of experience along that line in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Nicholson: —the hon. member is trying to prove, by what he has just said—

Mr. Harrison: There is proof right on these pages, and everybody saw it.

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. member for Assiniboia will defend himself, but I insist that the hon. member for Meadow Lake withdraw his claim that the word of members of this group cannot be accepted. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the member will not withdraw voluntarily you should require him to make the necessary withdrawal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As I said before, although I followed the discussion with some care I did not get the impression that the hon. member for Meadow Lake had made any imputation. Nevertheless if the hon. member for Meadow Lake imputed that the word of hon. members opposite him could not be believed, he will, of course, withdraw. I am sure he would be glad to withdraw.

Mr. Harrison: If that were the case, I would do so, but I am talking of a particular case in this house and every member saw it. There is nothing to withdraw because I take it that if the hon. member sitting there, and who has risen so many times on questions of privilege and points of order, had not agreed with the exhibition put on at that time he would have gotten up and taken exception to it. It was at that time he should have risen on points of order and questions of privilege, when the member for Assiniboia put on that exhibition. If the hon. member did not agree, that was the time to say so.

What I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, is that that is the situation with socialists generally; that is the trouble we have internationally, because you cannot make agreements with these people. They do not keep their half of the agreement. Possibly if we got rid of that type of thinking in the world we would not be faced with this debate now.

Mr. Nicholson: You could not trust Mr. Attlee?

Mr. Harrison: To give these gentlemen credit, this type of thinking was not originated by them. It was first invoked in Grecian times when Philip of Greece used this kind of—

Mr. Thatcher: Let us get back to wheat.

Mr. Harrison: We are into this subject now, and we might as well go through with it. When Philip of Greece wanted to take over a neighbouring country, he immediately said he was good friends with them. They knew then they were going to have their throat cut next morning. This system of attack has been taken over by the socialists and is still used. When the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics want to take over some country, they immediately sign a friendship pact with those people. They move in and cut their throats next morning, then take their goods and chattels.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Well, it was along this line that Demosthenes made his first Philippic or his first speech against Philip of Greece.

Mr. Thatcher: Let us get back to wheat.

Mr. Harrison: I should like to just quote a remark made by Demosthenes on this type of thinking. It is a remark from the first speech by Demosthenes against Philip.

Mr. Thatcher: Mr. Speaker, when do we get to wheat, which is the main point in this discussion?

Mr. Harrison: I think the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) will enjoy this, and very likely it will help him in the future to sell hardware. The quotation is as follows:

> And who is it that deceives the state? Surely, it is the man who speaks not what he thinks.

Mr. Thatcher: Is that what you are doing?

Mr. Harrison: The quotation continues:

> What greater crime can an orator be charged with than that his opinions and his language are not the same.

Mr. Thatcher: I charge you.

Mr. Harrison: How often do we find the opinions of these gentlemen and their language not the same? They get up and make speeches inside this house, then you talk to them outside of it and find they have different opinions altogether.

When we get back to the subject of wheat we find that we have had a lot of discussion about wheat and the plight of the farmers in the west. When we first came to Ottawa for this session last fall we had a new crop of C.C.F.'ers fresh from the hustings in Saskatchewan, who had been expounding a theory out there. They had been saying: if you send us down there we will be a voice for you in the parliament of Canada. What a voice they have been! If we read the speeches in Hansard of last fall referring to agricultural matters, what do we find? The hon. members opposite preached blue ruin to such an extent that the leader of that party got up the other day and said that was not the situation they wanted to convey. The hon. member for Moose Mountain did a little more work along that line today.

Anyone who is engaged in trade, either personal, national or international, knows that if you want to sell something you advertise it. The type of business you get in return depends upon the kind of advertising you put out. Of course if you advertise that you have so much wheat you do not know what you are going to do with it, the farmers are broke and have to sell and do not know what they are going to do with this wheat, as has been done by some gentlemen here who are the voice of the farmers in the west, naturally you are going to get results from that advertising. I believe that one of the reasons we are having this debate, and having all the trouble in selling this wheat, is that kind of advertising from those members here.

Mr. Nicholson: Why do you not tell that to the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Harrison: If these members had genuinely wanted to help the western farmers, they would not have put out that kind of advertising.

The system of advertising in ancient days was for peddlers to shout their wares. When one went to London then one did not find these street peddlers selling their wares by saying they were poor quality, or they had such a stock that they despaired of selling it. Everybody knows that a fish peddler does not sell his fish by shouting, "rotten fish!" He will say that the supply is very limited, and that the fish are the very best.

But these gentlemen opposite come down here and shout "rotten fish!" They have done that for several days on several occasions, and now the pigeons have come home to roost. And they are surprised. Well, it is indicated that they think there is some soft-pedalling should be done, with respect to this blue ruin talk, by the remarks the other day by the leader of the C.C.F. party, and those of the hon. member for Moose Mountain.

I was interested in some of the other theories offered by the hon. member for Assiniboia the other night. He said that the government south of the line has a much more progressive policy in handling grain than we have. Of course he was speaking about their subsidy policy. My hon. friend from Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) touched upon that. Then, the hon. member for Assiniboia said that this federal government, the one we have here and the one I have the honour to be a member of—

Mr. Nicholson: Since when?

Mr. Harrison: —has never done anything about floor prices. Well, I suggest to the house that no other government in this country, except this government, ever did anything about floor prices. And if the farmers in the west are up against the decision of either taking the word of this government that it will stand behind them, or taking the word as set out in the amendment moved by members of the opposition—especially after the demonstration that was given to them as to what their word is worth, and in this very debate, by the hon. member for Assiniboia—well, I think there is not much doubt about where the farmers will stand, and in whom they will have faith.

Certainly we are up against a difficult situation in view of the surpluses in the United States. That very policy that they have in the United States is the cause of our trouble, and I do not think anyone will disagree with that. When that policy was put into effect it was an incentive proposition to persuade the farmers to grow grain, because the supply was short and our allies had to be supplied. At that time it was considered to be a short-term policy. But having caught the tiger by the tail, the administration over there have not been too prone to let it go, because they are getting scratched a little bit while hanging on. And they will get clawed and bitten besides if they let go of it.

I think they have grown over a billion bushels of grain in that country for several years in a row. They have three quarters of a billion on hand now, and they are going to grow another billion this year. Yet they are going to provide an incentive policy down there to have them grow more. Well, I suggest to hon. members opposite, or to anyone else, that if that policy had not been followed across the line we would not be engaged in this debate. This top-heavy surplus was caused by the incentive—and under the conditions when the policy was originated, the incentive was required because the grain was required. But once that grain is available, and they have satisfied their requirements, there is not much use keeping on with that incentive.

Certainly the government over there owes its farmers a living, just as this one does. But I think when it comes down to brass tacks this government will stand behind the western farmer so far as seeing that he gets a fair return for his produce is concerned.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Does not the hon. member realize that under the present program in the United States the farmer in that country will not lose by that policy?

Mr. Harrison: The farmer will not lose by it, no—that is, immediately. But how long will it be before he will lose? The farmer in this country is the one I am interested in, and he is losing by the continuation of that policy over there.

Mr. Knowles: Our subamendment seeks to rectify that.

Mr. Harrison: I do not want hon. members to get away with the idea that I would not agree to some form of subsidy for our farmers. I would tell them definitely that that is not my idea, and that is not the idea of this government, either. When floors are required they will be forthcoming from this government, but not under the conditions we have now, not with the surpluses of grain they have in the United States where they have put on an incentive. That will not cure the situation.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Do you believe in parity prices for farmers?

Mr. Harrison: That is the trouble with the situation; the parity price they have over there is unrealistic in the light of the world market. That price might be all right if the world market were at a higher level, but not at the present time. What you want to get rid of is the incentive idea with surpluses of that kind on your hands.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): You are sure getting rid of it.

Mr. Harrison: It may not be the kind of thing my hon. friends would go into, because they want to have votes. That is all they are interested in. They are not interested in discussing or facing the facts.

Mr. Thatcher: Nonsense.

Mr. Harrison: They want votes.

Another one of the dissertations of the hon. member was the proposition that we should tax and spend, tax and spend, and should go in for deficit financing. Well, I wonder if the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre goes in for that in his business? I do not think so.

An hon. Member: He does not look like it.

Mr. Campbell: On a point of order. The hon. member for Assiniboia was quoting Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Truman, with which he thoroughly agreed, yes. He said he thoroughly agreed with it; and that is just the point. I am glad the hon. member raised the point of order. In other words the hon. member for Assiniboia wants deficit financing in times of prosperity. What are you going to have when times are bad?

Mr. Castleden: A Liberal government.

Mr. Harrison: It is quite natural to hear that remark from a socialist, that we should have a policy of tax and spend, tax and spend, and that we should go in for deficit financing. Because the whole basis of the socialist theory is to get something from somebody else for nothing—you do not care whether it is from your children or your grandchildren. But so long as it is deficit financing you are not going to pay for it. Your children may pay it after a while; and if they don't, then it will be your grandchildren or your great-grandchildren. Somebody else will be paying it, and you do not have to. That is socialist thinking. I can see where that comes in. And I was not surprised to hear that from the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles: Your government has failed to reduce the national debt.

Mr. Harrison: This government, since it has been in office, has reduced the national debt right along.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis: That's a bright one.

Mr. Harrison: With the exception of the war years.

Mr. Castleden: Oh yes!

Mr. Harrison: And that is a horse of a different colour, of course. And nobody else has done any better in any other country. We used to hear a good deal about Australia from our socialist friends, but now we hear more about Great Britain. Well, in Great Britain, when they had their Labour government, they did not do any better nor as well at debt reduction. I hear my hon. friends laugh; they think that is funny.

The fact of the matter is that this government has made some approach toward reducing our debt, and no government that made the stand it did during the war, paid as much as it went along as this one did—and we were engaged in the same war. No other government that was engaged in that war has as good a record as this one has, in the matter of its financing, not even the United States government across the border. And certainly our record since the war is a lot better than the record south of the border. They have been engaged in deficit financing, and I do not think it has got them anywhere, certainly no farther ahead than we have got.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I think those were the main points I wished to make.

Mr. Thatcher: What were they, Jack?

Mr. Harrison: I am glad the hon. member asked that. He wants to know what they were. One of the main points I wish to make is the reliability and integrity that people can expect from members of that group—and I still except the hon. member who has interrupted; but when he makes interruptions he must expect the answers he receives. That is the main point I wanted to make. That kind of thinking from socialists in all parts of the world is the thing that anybody will agree is causing our troubles internationally and bringing about our dilemma and our not being able to settle differences, because you have nobody on which you can rely to settle them with.

Mr. Knowles: What a tremendous contribution this has been!

Mr. Harrison: Thank you, sir; it may not have been as lengthy as some of your own.

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. member is for lower prices for wheat.

Mr. Harrison: I hear a voice from the wilderness talking about lower prices for wheat. I do not think that I would be advocating lower prices for wheat. I am not defending holding it in the bag, and certainly when it comes to the farmer deciding whether our present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) will handle our wheat to good advantage, or whether he can rely on the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson), with his blue ruin talks, to get him a better price he will certainly give the nod by a slight margin to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, before we grant supply in this house it is a member's right to draw the attention of the government to the difficulties and problems of people in his part of the country. We are availing ourselves of that right at this time by moving that before we go into supply the government, because of the condition of world markets today, should deal with the problem of placing a floor under the price of farmers' wheat.

It is rather to be regretted that government members take this opportunity to drag in a lot of provincial politics. The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) is singing his usual song of remorse over his own failure—

Mr. Tucker: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Castleden: He went out like a knight in shining armour some years ago to conquer the province of Saskatchewan, and probably that is the cause of his remorse now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that the hon. member for Rosthern is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Tucker: Yes. I sat down at least a half a dozen times for hon. members opposite. I would point out that I rose on a question of privilege to ask a question. Apparently the hon. member does not even want to let me correct him. He suggested that I dragged in provincial politics. I said nothing whatsoever about provincial politics. I challenge the hon. member to point to one thing I said. He said I wailed over my failure in Saskatchewan. I challenge him to show one thing I said in regard to that matter.

Mr. Castleden: I was referring to your wailing voice, sorrow, regret and remorse hurled across the house, and the same goes for the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Harrison).

Some hon. Members: Pretty weak.

Mr. Castleden: Such knowledge and such insight, such an understanding of the people of Saskatchewan came from him. It was rather surprising that he did not do better while he was out there. He tried to build up a case for himself, and when he shouts his loudest you always know he has the weakest case. When he tries to say that the members of this party, the C.C.F., are in any way attacking or not supporting the Canadian wheat board, then he knows in his own heart that what he is trying to say is not right.

Mr. Tucker: On a question of privilege.

Mr. Castleden: Not only have we supported the wheat board, we have—

Mr. Tucker: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Tucker: The hon. member has no right to say that I said something I did not believe. I believe that when they say what they have about the failure to market our wheat properly, they are attacking the wheat board. I believe it.

Mr. Castleden: This party has always supported the wheat board.

Mr. Tucker: Hon. members opposite are very anxious to have the hon. member for Meadow Lake withdraw something that is not as bad by far as what was just said by the hon. member. He said that I said something that in my own heart I did not believe. I ask that he be asked to withdraw that in an unqualified way.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Speaker, what I said was this. When the hon. member tries to say that this party not only did not support the wheat board but attacked it, it is wrong. He knows we have never attacked the wheat board. We have always—

Mr. Tucker: That is not what the hon. member said. He cannot twist and squirm out of it. He said that I said something that in my own heart I did not believe. I ask that he be directed to withdraw that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member made the remark which the hon. member for Rosthern has said he did, of course he must withdraw it.

Mr. Castleden: The remark which I used, Mr. Speaker, was—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw like a man.

Mr. Castleden: He knows the record of the C.C.F. party has always been in support of the wheat board. We support it; we always have supported it and we never attacked it.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Castleden: He tried to imply we did. We did not.

Mr. Tucker: The hon. gentleman is twisting and squirming. I am not surprised in view of the past attitude, but I do ask that you make him withdraw that statement. I suffered enough smears from people opposite and I am not going to stand for it in this house.

Mr. Knowles: Smear away.

Mr. Castleden: The record stands.

Mr. Tucker: I ask the hon. member to withdraw.

Mr. Castleden: The record stands exactly as I said it.

Mr. Tucker: I had enough smears from the people opposite. Again I say I do not accept it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member implied that the hon. member for Rosthern said something which he did not believe, then the hon. member for Yorkton realizes that he must withdraw, and I ask him to do so immediately.

Mr. Castleden: Of course I would, Mr. Speaker. The record stands and what I said can easily be read in the record. It will be seen that our record stands just as clear as what I have said.

Mr. Pouliot: Withdraw and don't repeat it.

Mr. Castleden: Another statement which the hon. member for Rosthern did not quote quite correctly was the statement that the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave to us with regard to the position of Canada's wheat. Here are the actual words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce as recorded on page 5746 of Hansard:

> If you expect to sell in a competitive world, the price must be competitive with prices offered by other countries.
>
> [Mr. Tucker.]

He said nothing there about protecting others. He goes on:

> That, I think, is the situation today.

That is taken directly from the record. That statement of the situation causes apprehension among the grain growers in the prairie provinces. There is the statement without reservation that prices can go to the very bottom, and still there is nothing in the way of floor prices to protect those grain growers.

Since this house opened last November we have been telling the minister and the cabinet that a very serious economic situation was developing in the west.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): And the minister of finance in Saskatchewan has been telling the world the opposite.

Mr. Castleden: Does the minister mean to say that there is no serious economic problem in the west?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am just giving the two stories, yours and that of the minister of finance in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Castleden: Then there is no serious economic situation developing?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I will let you choose.

Mr. Castleden: I say that a serious economic situation is developing, and it has been developing for some time. It is the same across the whole of Canada. It is not true of Saskatchewan alone. It is true of Manitoba and Alberta and the figures already prove it. The next few months will prove it even worse.

Some hon. Members: More blue ruin.

Mr. Tucker: You have been predicting that for ten years.

Mr. Pouliot: Tune your violin.

Mr. Castleden: You were out there for five of them; you know all about that. Under a Liberal set-up today the western grain growers, as compared with last year, have not only been curtailed in their deliveries, they have delivered 170 million bushels of grain less than last year. The reason for the apprehension in the west is that in the face of a drop in prices the farmer sees no possibility of reducing his cost of production along with that, and he is being caught short. We are merely asking that the government do something to protect those farmers from going into a complete collapse, and to stop prices from hitting the bottom.

Ever since last November we have been told that the situation was all right; that we will do as well as we did last year; that we are above the 20-year average or the 10-year average. That situation has developed until the point is reached where the people here, who are trying to say that everything is all right, really believe it themselves. The minister's attitude can best be likened to that of a chap who sees someone falling out of a 30-storey window and when he had just passed the 20th storey window the watcher says: "What is he hollering about? He is all right so far."

Mr. Gour (Russell): That is a baby story.

Mr. Castleden: We are asking the minister and the government to place a floor under the price of wheat so as to prevent western agriculture from hitting the bottom with the resulting collapse not only of the economy in the west but of the entire economy of Canada.

The wheat producers have done their job. We believe the Canadian wheat board has done its job. It is the policies within the government which make it impossible for the wheat board to carry out the task of maintaining prices. The producers must depend upon the policies of the federal Department of Trade and Commerce, and they have to try to maintain markets in other countries and sell their goods at a proper price regardless of the fact that Canada is a high priced economy. I know that that is difficult in view of the high prices of goods produced in Canada today. It is not this 10-cent drop in the price of wheat which bothers us, it is the situation behind that and what it implies.

The producers are entitled to some form of security and this amendment asks for that. If a price war starts the producers will be facing a very serious situation indeed. They are perturbed about how far the price is going to be cut. The minister says, "Well, we live in a competitive world and we have to meet that competitive price." But our neighbour to the south does not require the producers there to face that danger. The farmers there are guaranteed a pretty high floor under a government subsidy. We think the Canadian producer is entitled to something. We do not ask for $2.21 a bushel, but we do ask for enough to be paid so that the producer will be kept in business and so that he can continue his operations. That is the reason for our amendment.

The minister is well aware that there is a very critical situation with regard to delivery and ready cash in the west. That problem does not face the farmer in the U.S.A. The prairie farmer today is facing not only a situation of abundant crops, and lower prices, he is also facing the fact that within 90 days he may be harvesting another crop. If there is no floor price and no assurance today that in another 90 days when he begins to harvest his crop it will pay him to do so, then he is obviously in a serious predicament. Can there not be some floor price under these commodities? The purpose of this amendment is quite clear. We want a floor price so that the farmer can have some assurance that it will be worth his while to continue his production and so that he can plan his production in regard to that price.

The situation in the west is severe. There is not only the matter of production, but there is also the matter of distribution and the matter of storing the crop he has already sown. The farmers in the west deserve to have a guarantee of some form of security.

The other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce said something which caused some concern among hon. members here, namely, as to what could be done with regard to the disposition of the wheat. He said, as reported at page 5749 of Hansard:

> Now, there is another fallacy, namely, that there are millions of starving people in this world who would be glad to get the wheat if someone gave it to them. I wish people who make that statement would just tell me where those people are and how we can get the wheat to them.

Later, he added:

> I wish my hon. friend and other hon. members of this house who keep referring to the fact that there are starving peoples who would be glad to take large quantities of surplus wheat if we were willing to give it away would just remember these facts.

I do not know the minister's source of information but, according to the food and agriculture organization, a branch of the United Nations, which has at its disposal some of the finest experts in the world who have made a study of this problem, there are more than a billion people in the world today who require food and do not have enough. Surely the minister is aware that there is need for food in the world today and that that food should be delivered to those who need it.

In western Canada during the past eight years we have enjoyed a period of general expansion and prosperity. The farmer's income has been high and we recognize that. But along with his expanding income the cost of production has been expanding at an even greater rate. The cost of everything which goes into production has increased in price until today the farmers' margin is much less than it was a few years ago.

The tragedy of the situation today is not so much the drop in price but the fact that if a serious drop in price occurs today the farmers' losses can be terrific because of the terrifically high cost of production. That is the reason for the very urgent demand on the part of the grain growers that a floor price be placed under the farmers' commodities so that they can be guaranteed something and the loss will not wipe them out.

If there is no floor price under these commodities then the farmers of western Canada will be placed in the same position as that of many of the fishermen in the maritimes when there was no market for their fish. They will be in the same position as the Cape Breton coal miners who now find the coal mines closing down and oil being substituted. They will find themselves in exactly the same position as the workers in the farm implement plants who are now laid off, and in exactly the same position as the automobile workers who are facing a substantial reduction in plant staff, which has increased Canada's unemployed ranks to a very critical point. The farmer has no unemployment insurance.

The Canadian producer requires some basic security and if he can get it he will continue his purchases with regard to farm machinery and the plants will continue to operate. They ask this government to consider a floor price and to maintain that price on the basis of the price maintained by the wheat board as of June 4. If that is done it will restore some faith to the producer of wheat, and guarantee some security to the entire Canadian economy. More important it will bolster up the purchasing power of all Canadians and greatly improve the situation. If that is not done then in this peacetime competitive world about which the minister speaks, thousands of producers will be wiped out in western Canada and that will reduce the western economy to niggardly existence, lower the standard of living will result, and the purchasing power of the entire nation will be affected. The economic effect of this will cause distress and trouble in every part of Canada.

The choice rests with the cabinet. On behalf of those people in the west who are undertaking the production of food and to save them from what can be economic disaster I would ask the government to make this choice immediately and assist those who face this very serious and critical situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to a consideration of private and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

On the order:

House in committee on Bill No. 472 (Letter N-15 of the Senate), intituled: "An act to incorporate Canadian Slovak League". (Without amendment).—Mr. Reinke.

[Mr. Castleden.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the order paper there is this bill and a number of divorce bills. Is it agreeable to the house that these bills be considered in one motion?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to the house going into committee on these bills on the one motion, provided it is understood that when we get into committee we shall deal with the bills separately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on these bills?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN SLOVAK LEAGUE

The house in committee on Bill No. 472, to incorporate Canadian Slovak League—Mr. Reinke—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder whether the sponsor of the bill would not like to have this opportunity of saying a few words about it? He did not have that opportunity on second reading.

Mr. Reinke: Mr. Chairman, in order to bring hon. members up to date and to give an explanation of what this bill is about possibly I might briefly explain the background of the Canadian Slovak League. It was founded in Winnipeg in 1932 and received its letters patent from the Secretary of State of Canada in April, 1934 and acquired the usual corporate powers that an organization of that type would acquire. The Canadian Slovak League was set up as a social and a cultural organization. I could possibly read some of the aims as outlined in the letters patent but I shall not unless hon. members would like me to do so. There are some 57 adult branches spread across Canada from one coast to the other. In all there are probably in the neighbourhood of 3,800 adults and possibly 700 junior members of the society.

This bill corresponds with similar bills which the House of Commons has already passed. The head office will be at Fort William, Ontario. It is to be a fraternal benefit society so incorporated as to have the power to create an insurance fund and a department for the aid of its members and dependents and to undertake with its members a contract or contracts of life, disability and sickness insurance as well as to provide for the investment of the funds of the said society and to define the rights of members of such society, all of which is to be for the benefit and protection of its members.

It is because it proposes to exercise these special powers that it is necessary to come to parliament and to ask for the corporate rights under this bill. The proposals which the bill contains as to membership, management, directors and bylaws have satisfied the superintendent of insurance but until the actual bylaws are approved the superintendent, of course, will not allow the society to engage in business. I understand the superintendent of insurance also has approved the provisions of the bill with reference to the maintenance of a general fund, and such matters as premiums, assessments, disposition of surplus assets and so on. I am further informed that the superintendent of insurance has been supplied with an actuarial report on the financial position of the society and that the report is satisfactory.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Objects of the society.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I was not at the banking and commerce committee meeting at which, I understand, this bill was considered. Paragraph (c) of subsection 2 of clause 4 reads as follows:

(c) A juvenile insurance fund for providing death or endowment benefits in respect of any child, or any child under the guardianship, of any member.

I have noticed within the last several years that the regular life insurance companies are not particularly happy about writing death insurance policies for young children. I am just a little bit worried whether it is wise to have this authority granted to any benevolent society. Some recognition is being granted by most insurance companies to the proposition that some measure of death benefit, even for a child, may serve a useful purpose because even for a child there are unexpected last expenses such as funeral expenses and so on. However, I think the practice now is that insurance companies have a maximum which they have voluntarily set for themselves and that they will not accept death payment policies on behalf of minors over and beyond a certain limit. Here no limit is set or stipulated. I hope that the management of the society will bear that tendency in mind and that they will, in their regulations, definitely follow the practice that is now being followed by the life insurance companies.

Mr. Reinke: I might inform the hon. member that when this bill was discussed in the committee in the presence of the superintendent of insurance the particular matter referred to by the hon. member came up for discussion. The superintendent was quite satisfied that under the provisions of the bylaws this matter would be taken care of and that it would be administered in the same manner as it is administered by insurance companies. As the matter is handled by insurance companies, I believe the maximum for a child of one year or under is $100 and that it ranges from there on up to the age of ten years, at which time they are able to procure $1,000. As I said, I believe the superintendent was quite satisfied that this provision would be handled in the same manner.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—Members.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I must apologize first of all, Mr. Chairman, for not having been at the meeting of the banking and commerce committee which discussed this bill. Had I been there I would have raised the point that I am now going to raise with regard to section 5. In this section I notice that there is a definition of the persons who are eligible to join this particular association. Surely it must be unique in Canadian legislation that we should provide for the formation of a body, the members of which are to be loyal to the Christian and democratic traditions of another nation. I do not quite know what that means. For instance, I do not know what are the Christian and democratic traditions of the Slovak nation, and I doubt whether many members of this committee know what they are. Most of the members are, I imagine, in the position that I am in. We know of the Czechoslovakian nation which disappeared, first of all, under the impact of nazism and which was later reconstituted to disappear later under the impact of communism. We know of a previous development in the Slovakian part of Czechoslovakia under a rather notorious individual known as Tizo, if I remember rightly, heading a pro-fascist organization.

What I am afraid of is that, in the first place, this parliament of Canada is giving official recognition to a divided loyalty on the part of residents in Canada. In the second place, we may be doing something else. I have an uneasy suspicion that here we have provision being made for what, shall I say, is the other side of the coin of totalitarian communism and that we are providing a battleground within Canada for an ideological and a nationalistic struggle between two groups of people who should, in all common sense and in all decency, be far more concerned with becoming effective members of the Canadian community.

It has been said of course, and said quite rightly, that our philosophy in Canada in regard to the absorption of other peoples has been that of unity in diversity, that we have attempted to provide every opportunity for the various ethnic groups who make up our population to maintain their own cultural characteristics and to make their contribution to the Canadian community on the basis of their cultural diversity. But I think that the implication might be taken from this that it goes beyond that, that we are giving our blessing to a sort of conditional loyalty to the Canadian community and the Canadian idea.

I realize of course that it is much easier for a member of the English or French speaking groups in Canada to adopt the attitude I am now adopting. I realize that for those who belong to ethnic minorities there must be a very great temptation to constitute a little enclave of their own language and ethnical group in Canada, but I do not think the parliament of Canada should condone that sort of development in our community. In fact I think it is not too much to say that we have in the past condoned far too much of that in Canada and that many of our social troubles within the Dominion of Canada have resulted from far too lackadaisical an outlook on this question of people coming to Canada and not fully absorbing the Canadian point of view and the Canadian approach.

I would specifically register my very strong objection to this Canadian parliament endorsing words in a piece of Canadian legislation by which we are to recognize that persons who are residents at least, if not citizens of Canada, are to have the right to be loyal to the traditions of another nation which is specifically set out in the legislation. Certainly the only purposes in this legislation that we can condone are quite well fulfilled in the first words of that particular section, "only persons deemed by the society to be loyal to the free institutions of Canada". That will, I think, quite effectively rule out those people who they may fear might try to join their organization, people who might be prepared to act as the agents of communist organizations abroad. I think if they insist that they be loyal to the free institutions of Canada that is all that this parliament should be prepared to assist them to do. It is no business of this parliament to promote loyalty to any other institutions, to any other democratic traditions, to any other nationalistic traditions. Our duty is confined to ensuring loyalty to Canadian traditions and to Canadian institutions.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo).]

Mr. Reinke: Section 5 reads as follows:

> Only persons deemed by the society to be loyal to the free institutions of Canada and to the Christian and democratic traditions of the Slovak nation—

Actually the purpose of this wording is to give the association the right to choose its membership. There have been various approaches to the same type of authority to choose membership. In some cases the marginal notes, while they mean the same, are actually different. For instance, I have a bill before me where the marginal note is "powers of association". Another one is "qualification for membership". Another uses the word "members" and another "control of society". It is my understanding that in several of these bills the language generally has been to this effect, and I am now reading from a bill to incorporate the Sons of Scotland Benevolent Association as passed by the Senate in March, 1937. The section there reads in this way:

> Only persons deemed by the association to be of Scottish origin . . . shall be admitted as members of the association . . .

That is an excerpt from a bill passed by the Senate in 1937 and it refers to persons "only of Scottish origin".

Mr. Knowles: That is pretty broad.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): That is a different matter. That is the matter of origin.

Mr. Reinke: Actually the clause in the present bill has reference to origin as well as Christian and democratic traditions and loyalty to Canada. That is the full meaning of that clause. I might point out to hon. members that I have some other examples here. For instance, I have here an act to incorporate the St. Nicholas Mutual Benefit Association. Under "control of society" it is stated that only persons considered by the society to be of Ukrainian origin and who are of the Greek Catholic faith in communion with the Holy See of Rome shall be admitted as members of the society.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): That is quite different.

Mr. Reinke: I cannot agree with my hon. friend on that score. I suppose no fault can be found with the reference in the bill before us to persons deemed to be loyal to the Christian and democratic traditions and, as I have pointed out, the reference to the Slovak nation merely refers to the fact that only those persons who are deemed to be of Slovak origin will be admitted.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I would submit that is what it should say. My fears have not been allayed by what the hon. member has said just now, and I am very much afraid that the yardstick that is going to be used by this society is not the yardstick of devotion to the democratic ideals of Canada, which is the only thing this house should be concerned with, but the yardstick of the devotion of these people to some organization or group in Europe holding we do not know what concepts of democracy, holding perhaps some rather dubious concepts from our point of view. I suggest there is no justification for putting that in here at all and that the only purpose of it can be to separate, from the point of view of this society, the sheep from the goats. The only way in which we as the parliament of Canada can justify the separation of the sheep from the goats in this way is by deciding that it should be confined to people who are loyal to the free institutions of Canada, and I think we should confine ourselves to that. I should like to see the sponsor of the bill agree to the deletion of the reference to the traditions of the Slovak nation.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, the sponsor of the bill quoted from a bill passed by the Senate some years ago incorporating a Scottish society, but what he quoted is altogether different from what is contained in this bill. He referred also to another bill, but what he quoted from both bills in support of what is in this bill has no relation to what is in this bill at all. I do not believe there would be any objection to having this read something like this: "Only persons deemed by the society to be loyal to the free institutions of Canada and of Slovak origin." That is what is in the other bill. It refers to people of Scottish origin. It does not say they have to be loyal to Scotland before they can become a member of that society.

Mr. Knowles: Does one have to eat haggis?

Mr. MacInnis: That is a test on which my friend would be rejected right away, but it is not provided for in the bill. I think the hon. member would be well advised to make it read "of Slovak origin" and leave all the rest out.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, it is not often that I disagree with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway but I think I should on this occasion, and with everything that has been said about the words in this clause. I have had a good deal to do with ethnic groups in the past four and a half years, and as members of the committee know there are ethnic groups and ethnic groups. Some of them are in the hands of the communists. Thank goodness, practically all of them are not. If there is one thing in common that they have, it is that they are grateful to this country for the right of living here. They want to have a democracy here such as we have here and they are inclined to hope that the best traditions of their homeland can be transplanted here by their own actions.

Indeed they incline to the belief, perhaps we may say without too much foundation, that conditions in their homeland for their relatives are as democratic as they are here. If they cannot believe that, they at least hope that some day that will be so. When an ethnic group such as the Slovak league wishes to incorporate in its letters patent the best in their homeland, the Christian and democratic principles, whatever they may have been according to our standards, I would urge hon. members to agree to let them have that hope and to maintain those aspirations rather than to discard what to them may be valuable and may be a link with the homeland. Those words to the Slovak union mean those things that were best at home and as comparable as possible to our own. I find no offence whatever in those words.

I do not admit, as the hon. member for Nanaimo seems to believe, that there is a divided loyalty here.

There are, in fact, two loyalties but they are not divided. The loyalty, as I understand it, in the opening words is a loyalty to the free institutions of Canada. In other words, a person who belongs to this organization must begin by having that loyalty, and must also have a loyalty to the best that was in the Slovak nation, according to the interpretation that can be placed upon it by the directors of this organization, I presume. Now, that is not excluding anything in Canada. It is taking the best in Canada and trying to add to it the best of their traditions and free institutions. I hope hon. members will look upon it in that light rather than in the other way that has been mentioned.

Mr. Croll: I believe the matters raised by the hon. member for Nanaimo are interesting but not unique. There is no question of dual loyalty or partial loyalty. It is quite decidedly an undivided loyalty. I think we have to read section 4 (1) (b) of the bill which says:

> The society may,
> (b) promote, on the basis of Christian and democratic principles, good citizenship and loyalty to the free institutions of Canada, by educating and instructing the members of the society in the history, constitution and government of Canada;

Surely, there can be no question about dual loyalty under section 4 (1) (b). There was an act to incorporate the Ukrainian Fraternal Society in Canada, which was assented to on July 24, 1943 and is chapter 39 of 7 George VI. It was a similar sort of society, and section 5 reads:

> Only persons deemed by the society to be of Ukrainian origin . . . shall be admitted as members of the society:

There was a proviso in that bill which makes an impact upon this bill. One of the powers was set out in section 4 as follows:

> (c) To cultivate among the members of the society fond recollections of the Ukraine, and to promote their instruction and education in its history, literature, music, arts, traditions, customs and amusements;

These people may very well have used the word "traditions" as the term was used in the act I have just quoted. Surely when people consider the words "Christian" and "democracy" as synonymous terms, and use them in that sense, this House of Commons will understand their feeling and will meet their request to carry out their intention.

Mr. McIvor: Hon. members will notice under clause 2 of the bill the headquarters of the Canadian Slovak League is in Fort William; that means something. I know the Canadian Slovak League in Fort William, and they are conspicuous for their outstanding help to any members of their organization who are out of work, sick or in distress. In my opinion, they practise the Christian program, and because the headquarters of the organization is in Fort William Canada should know there is no more loyal spot in Canada than Fort William. Any society that is not loyal will have a hot time.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I would point out to the hon. member for Spadina what I am sure he does not need pointed out to him, that his argument was not a very cogent argument. It is quite absurd to quote a provision for selection on the basis of ethnic origin and compare it with selection on the basis of political opinions, which is what this clause calls for—

Mr. Harris: No, no.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): It certainly does. When you speak of democratic institutions, you are making a selection on a political basis, which is entirely different from the question of origin. I would have no objection at all if this section called for the selection on the basis, not only of ethnic origin but on the basis of red-headed Slovaks or cross-eyed Slovaks or any other type of Slovak, because that would be purely a matter for the decision of this society. But when you make a selection on a political basis, and that is what this is, they are only going to select people who have a particular political point of view. There is only one political point of view that we can condone here and that is that of Canadian institutions—

Mr. Reinke: Free institutions.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): No, not free institutions as they are described in other parts of the world. If you look at the constitution of the Soviet union, you will find it full of references to freedom. In fact every one of these totalitarian nations make great boasts of their free societies, their free peoples' democracies. There is only one definition of freedom and free institutions that we as the parliament of Canada can accept and that is the free Canadian institution.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that if this were put in there in any other way except inadvertently, then it is important we should look into it very seriously. I really believe it was put in inadvertently, and they should admit it. I do not like to see the Canadian parliament condoning in express terms a loyalty to other definitions of freedom than that comprised in the Canadian outlook, and that is what this does. I do not know, and neither does the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, what is the concept of freedom of Slovaks in Europe? What is their concept of free institutions?

Mr. Reinke: It does not say Europe; it says the free institutions of Canada.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): It does not.

Mr. Reinke: Well, read it.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): It says:

> Only persons deemed by the society to be loyal to the free institutions of Canada and to the Christian and democratic traditions of the Slovak nation,—

I suggest that the hon. member and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration have no idea at all, nor can they tell this House of Commons, what are the democratic traditions of the Slovak nation. They cannot define them for us, because they do not know them.

Mr. Reinke: Can you define "Christian"?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): No, but I have a good idea of the traditions of a Canadian with regard to freedom, and that is all I am concerned with as a member of the Canadian parliament. I challenge the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to tell us what are the free traditions of the Slovak nation. What are they?

Mr. Harris: I gather that my hon. friend from Nanaimo is trying to read into this bill a good deal that is not there. For example, he spoke first of a political decision here as to membership. Surely if he thinks about it for a moment he will realize that this organization cannot be accused of using democracy as a word in the same sense as they do in the Soviet constitution.

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Harris: I can assure you that the league is not of that kind, and that if it were it would not be sponsored here.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): We are not speaking about the league, we are speaking about the Slovak nation.

Mr. Harris: I will come to that. You have here a group of people seeking to be incorporated, and they are using words in their Canadian sense. They are not using words in their Russian sense, at least so far as "democracy" is concerned. If these words have any political connotation at all—and I do not agree that they have—they would be the best means of refusing membership to a communist that I can think of. And unless the hon. member for Nanaimo were to put an express ban against communists as such, or Labour-Progressive party members as such, I do not think he could find better words to bar them than those in this clause.

However I do not agree that that is the purpose behind these particular words. These words "Christian and democratic traditions" are the ordinary words used by all ethnic groups in Canada to mean one thing, and that is the Canadian way of life, with the best traditions of their homeland. That is the sense in which the words are used.

Mr. Cavers: Mr. Chairman, I take part in the debate only because of my close association with the branch of the Canadian Slovak League established in St. Catharines. Reference has been made here today to the fact that they might not be loyal to Canadian institutions. In my experience I have found that statement is not correct. I think it is proper that these ethnic groups which come from Europe should bring with them the various crafts, sciences and abilities that they have acquired at home. They have many high qualifications for citizenship which they bring with them. I expect them to have a high degree of loyalty to all Canadian institutions—and they have shown this sense of responsibility. For that reason I believe that many fine citizens who have come to this country and have had good success in business should have the right to incorporate their own Canadian Slovak League to carry on the type of insurance business proposed in the bill.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, first of all I think it should be made perfectly clear that no one who has taken part in this debate has expressed any reflection upon the loyalty to Canada or the loyalty to the free institutions of Canada entertained by these people. Too many of us in the House of Commons have connections with them to have any doubts on that score. I think too, Mr. Chairman, it should be said that we all appreciate and agree with the interpretation placed upon these words by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. We recognize that what these people want is to make clear their loyalty to Canada, and to associate with that loyalty the desire to carry forward the best in their own traditions and in their own history.

But it has been made clear time and again that what counts in law is not the interpretation this or that member in the House of Commons may place upon legislation; it is not what is said on the floor of the house that counts, but rather the actual words enacted by parliament. In this instance we are being asked to enact a section which suggests that membership should be open only to those who have (a) loyalty to the free institutions of Canada and (b) loyalty to the Christian and democratic traditions of the Slovak nation.

As other hon. members have said, definitions of "Christian traditions" and definitions of "democratic institutions" vary from one person to another and from one group to another. In this case both those traditions are tied to these words, "the Slovak nation". Well, I do not just know where the Slovak nation is at the present time; it does not exist as a separate nation. If one thinks of part of Czechoslovakia as being the geographical area referred to and as being the historical homeland of these people, then one must face the fact that at the present time that area is under a communist government.

Communist governments talk about their traditions of democratic freedom. There is no doubt that the people named in clause 1 of the bill, the people who have been carrying on this society for many years and who now seek this charter, think of democratic traditions in a quite different vein than is the case with the so-called democratic traditions of that part of Europe at the present time. But if this language is carried forward, then surely one can envisage the possibility of the day coming when people in charge of this society might have a different approach, and might be able to use these very words to exclude certain people or to admit certain others. I submit that we are not splitting hairs here, but are asking for something that we have a right to ask when we suggest that this clause should not carry a reference to loyalty to certain traditions attaching to a particular nation outside of Canada.

I was pleased to hear the references made by the hon. member for Spadina and the hon. member for Hamilton South when they read from certain other acts. I thought it interesting to listen to those references, and I think they should consider recommending the same language back to those who have requested the passing of this bill. Indeed, I suggest—

Mr. Croll: I will amend it now, if you sit down.

Mr. Knowles: Good; I shall sit down.

Mr. MacNaught: The hon. member sponsoring the bill has asked me to propose the following amendment:

That clause 5 of the bill be amended by striking out the first three lines thereof down to and including the words "Slovak nation" and substituting therefor:

"Only persons deemed by the society to be of Slovak origin and loyal to the free institutions of Canada and Christian and democratic traditions."

Mr. Philpott: Mr. Chairman, just before the amendment carries I wish to say a few words with reference to the statement made by the hon. member for Nanaimo regarding the great allied statesman, President Tito of Yugoslavia. I have no remarks to make on this particular bill. It seems to me that this amendment strengthens the bill which was introduced in the beginning, but I do think it would be a crying shame if the belittling remark made about the leader of a great friendly nation, whose friendship is being so cultivated by the British commonwealth, President Tito—did I misunderstand my hon. friend?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I think the hon. member for Vancouver South misunderstood my reference. It was not to Tito of Yugoslavia; it was to another person, Father Tizo, you recall, who arose in Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Philpott: Thank you very much; as I heard it over on this side it was "Tito". I was astonished with my hearing, and I am delighted that there is no reflection on President Tito.

Mr. Weselak: I have only a brief remark to make here. I do not think there is any divided loyalty here. The reference to "Christian and democratic traditions of the Slovak nation" refers only to the traditions and not to loyalty to the Slovak nation as such. I should like to say that I do not think there is any doubt in the Slovak mind as to what is meant by reference to Christian and democratic traditions. Before the Slovak nations were overrun by the communists they did have Christian and democratic governments, and I do not think there is any question in the Slovak mind as to which of the Slovak people have Christian and democratic traditions. I do not think that that particular paragraph will raise any problem of interpretation among the Slovak people. These are the only remarks I wanted to make.

Mr. Regier: I am very pleased to see that the sponsor of this bill has introduced this amendment. I should like to point out that these organizations come to individual members of parliament and ask them to act as sponsors. I hope that this amendment is in line with what is wanted by the executive officers of the society. I noticed that the previous wording would enable the society to grant membership to people who were not of Slovak origin. The amendment now makes it perfectly clear that the society may grant membership only to people who are of Slovak origin. If that is the wish of the directors I am perfectly happy. However, as the wording was originally—and it may have been deliberately worded that way—it was in order for the society from time to time to give membership to some particular individual who had rendered valuable service to this society or to others.

Mr. Nicholson: An important point was raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. Will the sponsor comment on it?

Mr. Reinke: I have consulted with the members of the Slovak league on this matter and I told them that possibly I may have to amend this bill. They told me that they concurred in the amendment as I had outlined it to them which I had my hon. friend present to the house. Therefore I believe they are quite satisfied with the amendment as it is. Actually, there is no change in so far as the intent or the meaning of this clause is concerned other than in the explanation. I am quite willing to go along with it, and they are too, and that is to strike out the word "nation". That is the one word which seems to be on everyone's mind. Actually the clause as it originally stood said:

only persons deemed by the society to be loyal to the free institutions of Canada.

And so on. The amendment is:

only persons deemed by the society to be of Slovak origin.

It is the same thing, and that wording is quite satisfactory, I am sure, to the sponsors of this bill.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to.

On clause 7—Management.

Mr. Regier: I notice that the affairs of this society are to be managed in this way:

The affairs of the society shall be managed by a board of directors which shall be known as the central assembly and which shall consist of the president, the vice-president, the secretary, the treasurer, the recording secretary, the elder junior branch and five auditors or overseers.

It seems to me a bit odd to have five auditors as members of a board being responsible for management. In most constitutions or bylaws of this sort that I have seen the matter of auditors is attended to by means of a separate sentence saying that the five auditors shall be elected at the annual meeting, or something to that effect. It is very odd to have five members of the board of directors auditing their own financial statements.

Mr. Reinke: I think the intent of that clause really is in the words "and five auditors or overseers". The fact is that they are more or less a board of directors rather than auditors. In a true sense of the word they are auditors, but not in the sense that they are chartered accountants or something of that sort. They are actually overseers rather than auditors. Aside from that fact, I am assured that the superintendent of insurance is quite satisfied with the provisions of the clauses contained in this bill.

Mr. Regier: I wish I could be a little happier about the statement just made that the superintendent of insurance is perfectly happy about this because it says very definitely that the affairs shall be managed by a board of directors, and it lists them, and then it adds to the board of directors five auditors. I again submit with all due respect that I doubt very much whether this will pass the scrutiny of the superintendent of insurance.

Mr. MacInnis: I do not want to disagree with my colleague from Burnaby-Coquitlam, but do not the words "or overseers" give a different meaning to the word "auditors". It is not the same meaning as we give to people who audit the accounts. It is something associated with management rather than with auditing.

Mr. Reinke: That is right.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 8 to 12 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 13—Ownership, control and non-disposition of property.

Mr. Regier: Subclause 2 says:

No property of the society shall, under any circumstances, pass into the private ownership of any member or members of the society as an individual or individuals, but all such property shall be and always remain—

And so on. I assume that that is for the protection of the society as a whole to prevent any misuse of funds or otherwise that people may hold in the society, and thereby any member who has any influence with the board being able to take undue advantage of the membership as a whole by obtaining title to some of the real estate. I am wondering whether that is possible. The subclause goes on:

—but all such property shall be and always remain the property and estate of the society as a whole.

This clause seems to me to be one that would likely severely handicap any management with respect to real estate that they may hold from time to time. It says that it shall always remain the property and the estate of the society as a whole. Does that indicate that the society will never be able to sell any real estate or any lot it may happen to own?

Mr. Reinke: No, it does not say that. It merely says that all such property shall be and always remain the property of the society. The intent here is clearly defined; that the property belongs to the society so long as the property is in existence, you might say. In other words, it does not preclude or does not exclude the fact that the society can sell the property. It does not mention anything about the property. As long as it is owned by the society then the society owns it.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 14 to 16 inclusive agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

FRANCIS WALSH

The house in committee on Bill No. 449, for the relief of Francis Walsh—Mr. Hunter—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, before clause 1 of this bill carries there are a few words I should like to say. Like a great many of these divorce bills that come before this house this is one which involves a rather tragic story, and a number of elements which I shall refrain from relating on the floor of this house.

I do think, however, that we should take a moment to realize the kind of job we in this parliament are being asked to do. We are here as members of this House of Commons, with members of the other place, to pass laws for the general well-being of the people of Canada as a whole, but now we are called upon to use all of our parliamentary machinery for the relief of one individual. That is not to deny the importance of any individual who may be faced with a problem such as this, but I would point out that it was recognized many years ago in the United Kingdom that that was not the function of parliament and it was out of that recognition that divorce courts were first established in the United Kingdom. Parliament's job is to pass laws of general application. Individual problems are best dealt with in courts.

In this case, Mr. Chairman, we have the story of a very young man who was working in the merchant marine. While still under 20 years of age he met a young lady in Glasgow. Apparently they were acquainted with each other for three or four days when they got married. They lived together for about two weeks; then the husband went to sea again. Apparently when he returned to Scotland he discovered that his wife was not living the highest type of life. As a matter of fact, if anyone wishes to read the evidence he will find that the lady in question was guilty of just about everything in the book. At the hearing which was held in the other place the only witness who appeared was the petitioner himself. The respondent, the young woman in question, is still in Scotland and she did not appear.

As I said, there was only one witness, but amongst the exhibits were four sworn affidavits and all these affidavits were received here in Canada from Scotland. Two of them were signed by women who were friends of the wife, one was signed by the wife herself, and the other was signed by a detective. The terms of these affidavits are included in the evidence of this case and they do not make choice reading.

I think hon. members should be made aware that this divorce was granted by Their Honours in the other place on the basis of these affidavits. The petitioner himself was not able to give any direct evidence and he appeared merely to seek a divorce and to answer such questions as were put to him. As I said, the evidence on the basis of which the divorce was granted was based solely on these four signed affidavits. I would point out that the wife in question is perhaps the most damaging witness against herself and her own carryings on for a number of years. In addition to swearing that she is guilty, as I stated, of just about everything in the book, she declares in her affidavit that she is contemplating re-marriage.

Now, no questions were raised, according to the evidence, as to whether there was any collusion, but it seems pretty clear from that sworn affidavit by the wife that she is quite prepared to give her husband the divorce he wants, and she is prepared to give him this sworn affidavit providing the evidence that is necessary to satisfy Their Honours that a divorce should be granted. She admits in the sworn affidavit that she is contemplating re-marriage which makes it pretty clear that that is perhaps the reason why she is so willing to give that evidence.

So far as the young man himself is concerned, one reads the story as set out in this evidence with a sad heart. One hopes that his future may be better once this situation is in the past so far as he is concerned, and one can even hope that the young woman in question in the married life she contemplates pursuing will have a better future, and that her life will be a better one than it has been in the past.

It might seem to some, Mr. Chairman, that we have no alternative but to agree to a case of this kind, but I have taken these few minutes to spell out the sad details of this case just to impress upon hon. members the obvious fact that this is not the business—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. gentleman. I think if his remarks are very brief the committee might consent to permitting him a minute or two to complete them, but if his remarks are extensive then I shall have to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: Six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Clause stands.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I remind hon. members that at eight o'clock the house will resume the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

WHEAT—MARKETING OF SURPLUS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Prudham for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Harkness, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain).

Mr. Rene N. Jutras (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, when we left off the discussion at five o'clock we were dealing with the amendment and the subamendment which are now before the house. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker), the amendment moved by the official opposition is definitely a motion of non-confidence in the government. As a matter of fact, in wording their amendment I think they took care to make sure that it would be a motion of non-confidence in the government. To that amendment there has been moved by the C.C.F. party in the house an amendment which, by the same token, is also a motion of non-confidence in the government. However, I do not propose to deal with the subamendment on that basis. Rather, I propose to deal with it on its own merits.

I want to say without any hesitation whatever—and I think this will be apparent to all hon. members in this house—that the subamendment moved by the C.C.F. is not realistic, is not sound for the economy of this country and is not in the best interests of the primary producers of this country. As a matter of fact, those in the socialist group who spoke on this subamendment apparently did not have in mind quite clearly what was meant by the mover of the subamendment because there appeared to be some confusion in their minds as to what is meant by floor price and what is meant by parity price.

The hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden), who was the last one to speak, referred to the subamendment merely in the terms of floor price generally. I must admit that I could not figure out why the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) took the price of $1.82. If the idea was to hold the line, as he put it, it seems to me that it would have been more logical to stick to the $2.05 which had prevailed up until a fairly recent time. On the other hand, I do not think that he could argue that this would constitute a floor, because if it constituted a floor, by the same token, being a higher price than the prevailing market price, it would definitely act as a ceiling as well. It must therefore be viewed in the light of a parity price more than in the light of a floor price.

Naturally, even if we have before us at the moment a motion of non-confidence in the government, I think that members of the opposition also realize that the government at the moment are not trembling in their boots. We know fairly well what the fate of the amendment and the subamendment will be and that it will not change the picture greatly. But since the discussion is, to a large degree, academic, let us suppose that the subamendment were carried by parliament and let us suppose for a moment that parliament instructed the government not to sell any wheat below $1.82. In effect, that is the result of the subamendment. The hon. member who moved the subamendment says that the government is not to sell any wheat below $1.82 or that it is not to pay the producer less than $1.82.

Mr. Nicholson: Those are different things.

Mr. Jutras: I will concede the difference. Let us say the amendment is to pay the producer $1.82. As a wheat producer myself, I naturally would have no objection to getting $1.82 instead of $1.72½; and I am quite sure that there is no producer in western Canada who would object to getting $1.82 instead of $1.72½ or less.

Mr. Nicholson: How much would you be getting if you were south of the border?

An hon. Member: Be patient.

Mr. Jutras: I will come to that particular point.

As so much has been said about the matter I think it is about time that we cleared up this point once and for all. For the moment, as I say, if the government were placed in the position of having to pay the producer $1.82 and no less, it would have to take one of two courses. The first one might be to instruct the wheat board to sell as little wheat as possible since it would have to be sold at a great loss to the taxpayers of the country; and they would take the policy of holding the line, of selling as little as possible, hoping that the price would go up later and they would be able to dispose of the crop. This policy has been tried in the past. It was tried during the thirties. This is exactly the policy that was adopted by the McFarland commission or the McFarland agency in the thirties. We all know what the results of that policy were. Reference was made previously to that point. No one in this house has pronounced himself as being in favour of going back to that policy.

The other course would be to decide to go ahead and to sell wheat at a price higher than the market price and to subsidize the producer. Then naturally it is only common sense that the people of the country would expect the producers to restrict their production. That is an inevitable result.

My hon. friend has just referred to the situation across the border. The situation there is quite different from the one we have here in Canada. As a matter of fact, their position is entirely the reverse of the Canadian position. They consume a large percentage of their production and export a small percentage of it. In Canada we consume a small percentage of our production and export an extremely large percentage of it. Consequently the position in Canada is the reverse of the position in the United States. But in spite of that fact, Mr. Speaker, as you know, last spring the government in the United States had to give an alternative to the producers in the United States. The producers there were given a choice of either accepting a reduction in price or reducing their production. After consultation and conference the farmers, or the representatives of the farmers, agreed to reduce their production, to cut their acreage in wheat rather than to take a cut in price.

In passing may I say this. Let us be clear on what the United States government was attempting to do at the time this parity price system was passed. This system was passed during the war. The purpose of it was definitely to increase the production of wheat in the United States. War conditions existed at that time. They could see that there would be many war-devastated nations in Europe and that there would be a great demand for food products. At that time they did not know how long the war would last. With all these demands they felt that it was in the national interest of the United States and was better policy on the whole to encourage the production of wheat in that nation. Hence they passed what we commonly refer to as the parity price system and agreed to fix the price to the farmer. That price is now $2.21.

This procedure had the desired effect of producing more wheat. Up until the last war the average exports by the United States were roughly in the neighbourhood of 130 million bushels a year. Now their exports are well over 300 million bushels. Hence it will be seen that the desired effect of their policy was attained. I have no quarrel with that procedure. If that is what the American people want to do, it is their business and not ours. However, there is one observation that we make in this country—and we think this is unfortunate—when the rest of the industries of the United States and those in the rest of the world were demobilized, they did not demobilize the wheat industry in their country. The result has been that they have been piling up huge surpluses. As long as they do not dump those surpluses on the markets of the world and do not affect others too drastically, we can have no objection.

Certainly so far they have exercised every care and have shown consideration for their neighbours to the north. We hope that they will continue to consider any move they make in that direction because it would have a very drastic effect on our economy, particularly our agricultural economy. On the other hand, there you are; there is the situation that must be faced. The suggestion contained in the subamendment of the socialists is precisely to adopt a policy with respect to the price of this agricultural commodity that has proved to be a detrimental one in the United States. If it has been so proved in the United States, where their exports are just a small percentage of their total sales, then it is that much more serious and that much more undesirable for a country like Canada where the greater bulk of the product has to be sold outside of this country.

On the face of it the subamendment merely means the freezing of the price of wheat, but we know that it entails a lot more than just the price of wheat. In our western economy wheat is the basic commodity. So it is in the United States. There would be many ramifications. As a matter of fact there is nothing new in the subamendment. This very thing was tried out by the socialists in the United Kingdom when they came into power a few years ago. They initiated a policy of forward fixed prices with the result that they had to exercise control over production, which is inevitable, and after four years the scheme had to be abandoned. I know that the members of the socialist party in particular in this house are well aware of everything that transpired under the socialist government in the United Kingdom. I am sure they are well aware of the very extensive controls and restrictions that the primary producers of the United Kingdom had to put up with. As a matter of fact they were very much opposed to the plan, are still opposed to it and certainly would be opposed to returning to such a system. The national farmers union of the United Kingdom, the largest farm producers organization in that country, has lately come out quite openly and categorically against going back to any such system. They are now directing their efforts towards producer-controlled marketing agencies the same as we have in this country. They have made the experiment in the United Kingdom and it has not proved to be a very successful one.

Here again, let us not forget that in the United Kingdom they do not export any grain. It is entirely a matter of domestic consumption, and consequently the fixing of prices is relatively simple. As a matter of fact it is very simple. It is the same situation that we have in this country when we control the price of milk in a city. If a province decides to fix the price of milk within the province all it has to do is to pass an order to that effect, and that is being done in many cities across Canada. When the problem is purely domestic you can exercise control over it if you wish, but when a very large part of the product has to be sold in the markets of the world then you have no control whatsoever. You cannot exercise any control over these markets, and that is where the difficulty arises. This is the situation that the United States has to face at the moment.

I know that members of the socialist party have quoted certain farm organizations with the idea of trying to convey the impression that the farmers and primary producers of this country were not aware of these difficulties. Let me refer to the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. In his annual message every year for the last few years he has been warning the producers of the country against any scheme of forward fixed prices, and even against a "parity" system. In his message last year he referred to the United States parity system, and here is what he said:

> For twenty years our farmer neighbours to the south of us have had their parity program which did aim to establish profitable prices on the same level as prices and services in the rest of the economy, and then hold them there. Undoubtedly they were partly successful and benefited greatly by it over the period, but today in view of the wide difference of opinion in their own farm ranks, I think it is fair to say that they do not regard it as a complete or adequate answer to maintaining equality and stability for agriculture. And like us, they are looking for a better program. Two of their major organizations are recommending flexible price supports, that is, when production of a particular commodity goes up the floor price will automatically go down and vice versa.

I think it will be apparent that any scheme of fixed prices must of necessity be related in some degree at least to the production because we fall into the other difficulties that I have mentioned. Again in the month of January this year the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture had this to say in his annual message:

> That a support program based on a high percentage of "parity" is not the best answer is indicated by experience in the United States and by changes which are being insisted upon there by both the producers and the government. When a program of forward fixed prices with practically all phases of the farm economy controlled is now being abandoned in the United Kingdom, it may indicate at least that that is not likely to be the one that we would want to try in Canada. Incidentally, in their efforts to replace that program the national farmers' union are placing most emphasis on orderly regulated marketing under producer boards.

I think that even my hon. friends of the C.C.F. party will agree that all in all this represents pretty well the thinking of the primary producers of this country. The emphasis today is placed upon primary producers' marketing boards or agencies rather than freezing prices at any level, particularly any unrealistic level.

When the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) spoke he made some very drastic and farfetched statements. I do not propose to deal with every one of them because my time will not allow. However, there is one that he made repeatedly and which was repeated by some of his colleagues several times, not to mention the hon. member for Yorkton who preceded me. I should like to quote this one sentence which illustrates pretty well the thought running through the minds of the socialist group in this discussion. He made the flat statement that "the Canadian government has always opposed the principle of floor prices and the principle of orderly marketing". This was repeated by him and repeated by other members of his group.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as you and every hon. member of the house knows, the present government is probably the government of Canada that has done the most in the history of the nation to encourage orderly marketing for the primary producers. I think every primary producer and every farmer in western Canada knows that. Exercising some measure of control over marketing is not new. As a matter of fact it goes back to pre-confederation days. But the present government that is now in office, and probably to some degree because it has been so long in office, has certainly done more than any other government in the history of the nation for primary producers of this country. When that statement by the hon. member is made particularly in relation to the marketing of wheat, then it is so far away from the truth you wonder if the hon. member was not carried away by the enthusiasm of the moment. However, we cannot say that because he repeated it two or three times during his speech.

I am not going to enter a debate as to who should get the most credit for establishing the Canadian wheat board. I concede quite readily, and I am quite happy to be able to do so, that it came into existence three months before the government of the Hon. R. B. Bennett was dissolved. I believe every fair-minded member will agree that it was under the present administration that the Canadian wheat board was made the strong marketing agency it is today. It was not done because the government was opposed, it was done because the government did everything to encourage it and make it possible for the board to be what it is today. Nobody can deny that fact. All hon. members in this house, without exception, agree that it is the best marketing agency we could possibly have in this country. I have never met anyone in this house that dared challenge this statement.

As was pointed out before, and apparently will have to be pointed out again, it was only a few weeks ago that the annual report of the Canadian wheat board came before the standing committee on agriculture and colonization. The three commissioners of the Canadian wheat board were before the committee and everyone was at liberty to question them as much as they liked. As a matter of fact the committee went through the whole operation of the board and everyone asked the questions they wished. The commissioners were quite willing to answer all the questions. I thought the whole matter had been gone into thoroughly. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) made the statement that no one objected, and I defy anyone to go through the records of the committee and find anyone who dissented from what the board was doing. Everyone agreed that this was the best possible way of doing it.

The socialist members even went so far as to put a direct question to the chairman of the Canadian wheat board, asking him if he thought this was the best way of doing it. Naturally, being the chairman of the board, it could not be expected that he would say anything else, but for the purpose of the record he did say that naturally he thought this was the best way of doing it. The hon. member for Assiniboia was quite as enthusiastic in agreeing with the chairman, and is on the record as saying, "Very good; very good". When a suggestion was made about the other method of marketing and they asked the chairman if he thought this was not a better method, naturally the answer was that the present one was a better method.

This afternoon the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) tried to indicate that he at least, if nobody else, had offered some criticism of the board. I must say that if he had criticism in mind he did not make it quite clear because I am sure he was the only one who thought he made any serious criticism of the marketing system.

Mr. Harkness: I believe, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should make a correction here. I was making my criticism in the agriculture committee and in this house to a large extent of the policy of the government. I was not criticizing the board, because they have to do what they are told.

Mr. Jutras: I should like to point out to the hon. member for Calgary North that for the moment I am not referring to the policy of the government. I am referring to the operations of the board, and for the moment I am restricting my remarks to the actual operation. I shall come to the policy level later. So far as the board is concerned, and so far as their sales of wheat are concerned, there has been no serious criticism. This afternoon the hon. member referred to actual sales of the last three or four months. This question was also put in the committee, as he knows—

Mr. Harkness: No, no.

Mr. Jutras: I will give the hon. member the page reference after I am through.

Mr. Harkness: Not after January 31 of this year.

Mr. Jutras: No, but up until January. The hon. member tried to make the same point in the committee, and the clear statement of the chairman of the board is on the record to the effect that it is useless to take one week, two weeks or one month in the marketing year as giving any possible indication of the year's operations. We can see from last year's report that there was a period in which there was no marketing. Members of the committee asked why that was so, and were told that at that time there happened to be a strike. There was no grain moving. There might be almost any situation occurring at a particular moment. There are many factors affecting marketing such as weather, transportation and many others. Picking out any one week or one month or two months cannot possibly give any indication of the year's operation.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) also made a statement, and prefaced his remarks by saying that none of the last crop was sold. That is quite true; I mean it is in a way of speaking. Last year there was as much wheat left over as the entire crop, so we could say that none of the wheat was sold during that year. Standing alone that is a misleading statement because in the same year we exported more wheat than we ever exported in the entire history of the nation. We established an all time high record for selling wheat outside of this nation.

Mr. Harkness: That is the previous year you are talking about.

Mr. Jutras: No, the same crop year, 1952-53.

Mr. Harkness: That is the previous year.

Mr. Jutras: Yes, and that all comes back to the fact that we have had three very large crops in western Canada during the last three years.

Some hon. members have tried to create the impression that we have lost our markets. The chairman of the wheat board was asked that question and he made the categorical statement that we had not lost any of our markets. It was just that the percentage went down. This was attributed to the fact that the United Kingdom is not buying but is using up her stockpile. There are many nations in Europe which were buying wheat before who have had such good crops they are now selling wheat. The United States has boosted its production, and we have had large crops. Naturally, therefore, there is a large amount of wheat on the market at the moment.

I see my time is running out, and I should like to deal with another important statement. I must say I regret the fact the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) is not in his seat. No doubt he has been detained by important business. I am not saying anything to reflect on him in that regard, but since I want to deal with remarks he made it makes it a little difficult when he is not in the house. However, a few days ago when he moved a motion to adjourn the house he gave a statement to the press which I felt was very unfortunate and should be dealt with now. I am quoting from an article in the Ottawa Citizen of Tuesday, June 8, which says:

Mr. Diefenbaker, who told reporters the price drop is a blow to the western farmer, blamed it largely on Canada's stubborn refusal to agree to Britain's request for a ceiling of $2 a bushel instead of $2.05 under the international wheat agreement.

The hon. member for Prince Albert should definitely know the situation in this regard, and should know that this is not accurate.

Well, you see how these things snowball. Two days later a very reputable newspaper, the Montreal Gazette, carried an editorial commenting on this situation and taking that as a matter of fact in writing the editorial. Then again, a few days ago, some private citizens in Ottawa wrote a letter to the editor along the same lines which appeared on the editorial page.

To begin with, the hon. member for Prince Albert says that he blames it on the stubborn refusal to agree to Great Britain's request for a ceiling of $2. I have not time to place all the information on the record, but the first inference there is that he has always taken the position that we should have agreed to a price lower than $2.05. All we have to do is to read the pages of Hansard, at the time we ratified the agreement, to find that the hon. member for Prince Albert was the one who inferred, I believe on four occasions, that the price was not high enough. But he went further than that. Here is what the hon. member said on this matter of the price range:

With increasing farm costs, a price level such as that suggested in today's Canadian Press article—

Referring to the suggestion that it might be $2.

—will, I think, be most detrimental to the wheat producer of this country on the basis of the suggested maximum and minimum prices set forth in that article.

And in the course of these remarks he went on further and suggested that——the Minister of Trade and Commerce would give consideration to asking the purchasing countries to accept some escalator clause whereby, in the event of increasing farm costs, there would be increases in the minimum price.

Not only was he against the $2 price, but he wanted to tie an escalator clause to it. The idea was to force purchasing nations to be tied to the escalator clause on top of that. And yet today he turns around and says that he blames it all largely on Canada's stubborn refusal to agree to $2. That is the first inference.

Then, the second inference is that it was Canada who held out definitely for $2.05. Well, we all know the facts of the situation. That was over a year ago. When the negotiating team got down to the last stages the United Kingdom suggested price was $1.95. The Americans had started at $2.50, and it was made clear by the United States delegates that they could not possibly recommend anything below $2, that it would not have a chance of carrying in congress, and that consequently they could not consider anything below $2. They said that $2.05, which looked a little more than $2, was the best they could do; and they had to negotiate on that basis.

I would not put the blame on the United States more than on any other country. But at that time both the producers in the United States and in this country felt very strongly that $2.05 was the limit in North America, and we agreed to that. I am willing to take my responsibility for that, the same as anybody else. I am not trying to say that we should have agreed; but we have the statement of the chairman of the Canadian wheat board before the committee. When he was asked if he thought we could sell more wheat by taking less for it, or if he felt we could have sold more at a lower price, he made the very definite statement, without any hesitation at all, that it would not have made any difference. It was not a question of price; it was just a question that they did not want to buy. He pointed out that 5 cents, 10 cents or 15 cents would not have made any difference. And he was quite categorical on the point that price at that time and up until now has not been a feature in the lower sales in the international market.

So that this argument that the present reduced price is the outcome of the negotiations at the time of the international wheat agreement is not valid. And I want to place on record again that I hope members of the official opposition will not try to repeat what they tried to do after the British wheat agreement. They never would concede, but they had agreed to the British wheat agreement. Then a few years later they tried to deny they had ever supported the British wheat agreement. All parties in the house, without exception, supported the international wheat agreement and supported the terms of it to the same extent. Some of them would have preferred, the same as we would have, some other provisions; but the fact remains that we all agreed to support this agreement because those were the best terms we could get.

The situation developing now is a situation of overproduction, and it is not one that has anything to do with whatever price was arrived at, at the international level. And I might add personally I feel very strongly that during the years it has been in operation it has served a very useful purpose, and it is still serving a very useful purpose. Because we have been able to agree to some degree.

I agree fully with the Minister of Trade and Commerce that it is far better policy to take a package drop, rather than to allow the price to drop a half cent, a cent or two cents at a time. It might well develop into a price war at the international level. And at least this is a fact, that a package drop at one time has the effect of holding it there. And I for one—and I am sure this is shared by the Minister of Trade and Commerce—hope that it will not develop into something more.

I want to say in conclusion that while the opposition has been complaining so much that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is an optimist, I am very gratified and pleased that he is an optimist. We are very fortunate in that, because it is much preferable to have an optimist in that position. Of all people, I cannot understand primary producers complaining about the fact that they have an optimist in that position. After all, for one thing, in a few weeks' time he will have to set the initial price. I hope he will be very optimistic in the future outlook when he sets the initial price, and will set it as an optimist, rather than as a pessimist.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the reasons for supporting the amendment introduced this morning by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) were fully set out by him in his excellent speech. It becomes necessary, however, to make a brief statement concerning our position in regard to the C.C.F. subamendment.

Let me say at the outset that the matter of the marketing of Canadian wheat is a subject of importance to every Canadian. Its importance is not confined to the western provinces, nor to those who represent the western provinces. The finding of good markets for Canadian wheat, our principal food export, is something basic to the whole Canadian economy; and it is with an appreciation of that fact that I approach the problem now.

The government has monopolistic powers over the disposal of wheat in Canada. Therefore it must accept full responsibility for whatever may be lacking in the disposal of Canadian wheat. I sought in my remarks last week to indicate the reasons why the Canadian people and members of the House of Commons expect that the government, in the discharge of its responsibilities as the salesman of Canadian wheat, must be an energetic and resourceful salesman. As indicated in our amendment we think the government has failed. It has not measured up to its responsibilities as the salesman of Canadian wheat.

I am not going to weary the house with figures. I will give the house only the more recent evidence. It is true that our wheat marketings in the crop year 1952-53 were something of a record, totalling approximately 378 million bushels. Up to May 15 of the present crop year 1953-54 our total exports were only 196 million bushels. In other words, in the first 9½ months of the present crop year we have marketed barely one-half of the marketings in the previous crop year, and it will take a mighty spurt in the remaining 2½ months of the crop year after May 15 to make any impression at all in reducing this huge disparity between the marketings of the year 1952-53 and the greatly reduced marketings of the year 1953-54.

The United Kingdom is our best customer for wheat. What then have been our marketings in the United Kingdom in those two crop years? In the crop year 1952-53 we marketed 123·4 million bushels of wheat in wheat and wheat flour in the United Kingdom. Up to the end of April, 1954, in other words, in nine months of the present crop year, Canada had marketed in the United Kingdom only 59 million bushels of wheat in wheat and wheat flour. In other words, in the first nine months of this crop year we did not market as much as half of our marketings in the United Kingdom in the full crop year 1952-53, and that is a fact that must fill us all with very grave concern.

Canada has on hand now approximately 675 million bushels of wheat. World stocks at May 1 aggregated 1,800 million bushels in the four major exporting countries, the United States, Canada, Australia and Argentina. Of that huge total, one-half was located in the United States. Measure that stock of wheat, Mr. Speaker, at May 1, this year, 1,800 million bushels, with the situation exactly one year earlier, when the total world stock in those four great exporting countries was just 1,338 million bushels.

The alarming feature of the way in which the government demonstrates its attitude towards this problem is that so far as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), as the spokesman of the government, is concerned, he apparently does not see a problem in it. He seems to be quite content with what we are doing. He does not recognize the existence of a problem. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the minimum essential, the first requirement of the solution of any problem is that we should recognize the existence of the problem, and there is scant hope of effective solution of this problem, which is a problem for all Canadians, as long as the government through the Minister of Trade and Commerce is content to deny even the existence of a problem.

After all the government's promises, and after all its bragging, and after all the kidding that it has practised at the expense of the western wheat farmer, we see a situation here today which ought to be giving great concern to hon. members, and it is for that reason that the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) moved this amendment in which we invite the house to express its concern over this problem in these words:

> This house regrets that the government has failed to deal effectively with the problem of marketing Canada's wheat surplus.

I now turn to the C.C.F. subamendment which reads as follows:

> That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma and by adding thereafter the following words:
>
> "and this house further regrets that the government has failed to make provision for a floor price to the wheat producers of Canada at levels not less than the Canadian wheat board selling price, basis Fort William/Port Arthur, on Friday. June 4, 1954."

Sir, as has been indicated, that price was $1.82½ per bushel. Since the date referred to in the subamendment the government has reduced the price of wheat by 10 cents a bushel, and if one is to follow the statement made by the minister in the course of this debate more reductions are threatened.

May I recall what the minister said in the course of this debate on June 9 at page 5750 of Hansard?

> If it is necessary to cut the price again in order to hold that proportion, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we are not going to lose markets for wheat because we make a fetish of $1.78½ for Vancouver and $1.72½ for Fort William and, by making a fetish, lose markets for substantial quantities of wheat.

And again, speaking of our customers among the countries of the world, he said on the same page:

> If they are not buying from us when our turn comes, we make inquiries to find out why. If it is a matter of price, that is one factor which, added to other factors, may indicate to the wheat board that a cut in price is necessary.
>
> Those are the facts of life. That is the policy that the wheat board will follow. It is the purpose of the board to be competitive.

There is only one interpretation that these words bear, and that is an intimation from the minister that the Canadian wheat farmer may expect further reductions in the price of his products.

Now I turn to this subamendment and I ask where would the adoption of the kind of policy outlined in the C.C.F. subamendment lead us as a nation? What might it cost to implement this policy? It is quite true that this subamendment, calling for the expenditure of money, cannot commit parliament to the expenditure itself, but nevertheless we are called upon in the forthcoming division on this subamendment to express ourselves in relation to that policy. I ask in the first place: What would the policy cost? I measure it against the background in which the present government has not been very successful in selling wheat. I point out that the subamendment is not confined to wheat of the 1953-54 crop year. Apparently it is intended to be the continuing policy, assuring a floor of $1.82½ per bushel on all wheat grown or marketed hereafter, or after June 4.

We have on hand, as I indicated earlier, approximately 675 million bushels of wheat just six weeks now from the commencement of the next crop year. Add the crop year 1954-55 to our stock on hand today of approximately 675 million bushels and it will be seen that the policy indicated in the C.C.F. subamendment is going to have an application to a great deal of wheat in the next year or two. Let us take it both ways. Let us assume on the one hand that we may have a much reduced crop in the next crop year. Let us say, for instance, that the crop in the crop year 1954-55 is just 325 million bushels. Let us assume on the other hand, for purposes of calculation, that Canada has for the fourth year in succession a bumper crop of 625 million bushels. Add these respective quantities of 325 million bushels on the one hand and 625 million bushels on the other to our existing stock of approximately 675 million bushels and it will be seen that if we have a poor crop in the crop year 1954-55 this policy will apply to approximately one billion bushels of wheat. On the other hand, if we have another big crop year in Canada in the crop year 1954-55 this policy will apply between now and the end of the crop year 1954-55 to some 1,300 million bushels of wheat.

In measuring the cost let us regard also the rather chilling warning given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the passage which I have just quoted as to the expectation of further reductions in the price of wheat. Here is the way in which these figures of cost work out. If the present price of $1.72 per bushel continues this policy would cost the Canadian taxpayer 10 cents per bushel. If we have one billion bushels of wheat to market in terms of the present quantity and next year's crop, this will cost the Canadian taxpayer $100 million. On the other hand, if we have the large crop I mentioned and we have to dispose of 1,300 million bushels of wheat then it would cost the Canadian taxpayer $130 million to implement this policy.

Now suppose this chilling news given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce issues in a further reduction and we assume the next reduction is to $1.62½ per bushel. The Canadian taxpayer must then subsidize every bushel of wheat to the extent of 20 cents and in that event to dispose of one billion bushels of wheat the cost to the Canadian taxpayer would be $200 million. On the other hand, if we have the big crop to dispose of amounting to 1,300 million bushels the cost to the Canadian taxpayer would be $260 million.

If the Minister of Trade and Commerce pursues further the policy of which he gave us that chilling warning last week and let us say the price at which the government proposes to sell the wheat drops another 10 cents per bushel to $1.52½ per bushel, this time it will mean that the Canadian taxpayer will be required to subsidize every bushel of wheat to the extent of 30 cents, and if we have one billion bushels of wheat to dispose of the bill to the Canadian taxpayer will be $300 million. If we have to dispose of 1,300 million bushels of wheat the bill to the Canadian taxpayer will be $390 million.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What would happen if it dropped another 10 cents?

Mr. Fleming: There is the Minister of Trade and Commerce apparently seriously suggesting that there is the possibility of some further drop. I say to the minister that if this is the best consideration he can offer he had better get off the job and make way for somebody who will do a better job of selling Canadian wheat at proper prices.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We were just testing your arithmetic.

Mr. Fleming: I am prepared to have my arithmetic tested but I wish the Minister of Trade and Commerce could do better when we test his salesmanship.

Mr. Abbott: Try eating a little more wheat.

Mr. Fleming: The fact of the matter is that to implement this policy no one here can tell where it would lead. It is laid down as a policy of continuous application. The quantities of which I have spoken include only the stock on hand today plus the crop for the crop year 1954-55. It is quite evident that no one in this house knows what the continuing cost of this policy would be. It is, however, not to be wondered at that hon. members introduce an amendment of this kind, particularly when we see the fruits of the government's failure in the way in which it has misled the western farmer by all the airy talk it has offered to the wheat farmers of the west for years past, but in the face of the facts I have put before the house, and the fact that no one knows where a plunge of this kind would take us, we in this part of the house cannot give support to the C.C.F. subamendment.

I do not wish to close my remarks this evening without laying all the emphasis at my command on one thing. I conceive it to be the duty of the government in fairness to western wheat farmers immediately to do something that the government has been asked repeatedly to do, particularly today in the speech made by my esteemed colleague the hon. member for Calgary North. It is the duty of this government immediately to announce the initial payment on the 1954-55 crop. Never in all the years since the conclusion of the five-year wheat pool has the government been so late and so tardy in announcing the initial payment on the new crop. We are now at June 15. I suggest we take a look at the dates on which the initial payment was announced during the previous four years. For the crop year 1950-51 the government announced the initial payment on April 5, 1950. This is just 71 days earlier than the day on which we are meeting here now. For the crop year 1951-52 the government announced the initial payment on May 4, 1951, 42 days in advance of June 15. For the crop year 1952-53 the government announced the initial payment on April 8, 1952, just 68 days ahead of June 15. For the crop year 1953-54 the government announced the initial payment on April 27, 1953, just 49 days ahead of June 15.

Never throughout this entire period, has the government been anything like so late as this year. Now, sir, this is a matter of the liveliest concern to the western wheat growers. It is a matter of lively concern to others as well. It is a matter of concern to "the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker" in western Canada and elsewhere. It is a matter of concern to the railways and indeed to the entire country.

Why has the government been so coy about announcing the initial price? Why this tardiness? There was a statement from the minister in his speech on this matter in this house on June 9 which, if not explained by the minister, can only be described as misleading. The minister said, as reported at page 5746 of Hansard for June 9:

> The present—

Note these words, Mr. Speaker.

> —initial price has been $1.40 basis No. 1 northern for several years, and that is the initial price today. It has been said here that there is no floor under wheat. What more effective floor can there be than an outstanding offer to pay on the basis of $1.40 at terminal delivery point when wheat is delivered at the country elevator?

At the risk of repetition, Mr. Speaker, I would again draw your attention to the words the minister used in reference to "the present initial price of $1.40". He says that that is the initial price today. But the fact of the matter is that that was the initial price for the crop year 1953-54, and that price was announced on April 27, 1953, nearly 14 months ago.

No announcement has been made, and none has been attempted on the part of the government as to the initial payment for the crop year 1954-55, which is the crop year that is giving the farmer immediate concern as to what the initial payment will be. Of course, he knows what initial payment was received for the crop year 1953-54; he has known that for the last 14 months.

It is surely not necessary for the minister to make statements of that kind which, without explanation on his part, it seems to me can only mislead those who read them.

We are now only six weeks away from the beginning of a new crop year. No one knows what to expect. Government policy is an enigma. If the government has not a policy, then it is time they found one and found it soon, in simple justice to the Canadian wheat farmer and to all those Canadians who depend upon the Canadian wheat farmer for the success and the economic health of their efforts. I say that it would be the gravest injustice if the government defers for one moment longer announcing an initial price for the crop year 1954-55.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the debate which has been going on with regard to the marketing of wheat during two complete days now is one which always creates a certain amount of interest in the house. This debate is no exception. There is, however, one matter which I do not think has much bearing upon the question which is before the house. Nevertheless it has been referred to in the speeches of two different members, namely the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) and the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch). I may say that this is not the first occasion upon which it has been referred to.

Since there has been considerable argument about it, I am sure that you will permit me to deal with it for a few moments. It has been suggested by both hon. members that on some occasion I voted against an international commodity clearing house as proposed by the farm federation. On previous occasions I had not taken the trouble to look up the record to see whether or not I had voted against it. I knew exactly what I had said on the occasion when the question was under discussion. I did not recall ever having voted at all upon it one way or the other. This afternoon, when the question was raised on the other side of the house, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) stated that the real question is this: Did you vote against it? I hope I can answer that question to his satisfaction tonight.

I have read through the debate which was referred to this afternoon by the hon. member for Acadia. He referred back to a debate which we had in this house on April 30, 1953, upon the same question. Practically everything that has been said both inside and outside of the house with regard to this matter is based upon what the hon. member for Acadia said and on what he induced me to say. I am not going to hold him any more responsible for what was said than I am going to hold myself. The suggestion was made time after time that I had voted against the international policy as suggested by Sir John Boyd Orr. I made it quite plain that I had not done so. As a matter of fact, my speeches at all the international conferences on food and agriculture will bear me out when I say that I was always one of the chief supporters of the policy whenever it was brought up for discussion at any of the FAO conferences. That is all I am going to say about that matter.

My hon. friend from Acadia was good enough to point out in the speech of April 30, 1953 that he quite agreed that I supported Sir John Boyd Orr's international proposals. The hon. member for Assiniboia the other day did not accept that point of view at all, and he was quoting from the speech of the hon. member for Acadia. He was saying that I did not support that position. I want to thank the hon. member for Acadia for putting him right this afternoon—at least he will be put right when he reads Hansard because he was not here at the time and is not here now—by saying again that he acknowledged the fact that I had always supported that policy. But he said that I or the Canadian delegation of which I was the head had voted against this international commodity clearing house that was proposed.

I must say that where I was led a little bit astray was that after I took a column or two of Hansard on that occasion to explain just exactly what I did say down there, I said this; and this is the only sentence out of the whole discussion that the hon. member for Acadia saw fit to read this afternoon—

Mr. Quelch: That is all that is necessary.

Mr. Gardiner: We will find out in a few moments whether or not it is all that is necessary. I had not expected that from the hon. member for Acadia. I endorse everything that the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) said this afternoon wtih regard to the members of the other group who continuously take positions of that kind, not because they are in accordance with the facts but simply because they serve the purpose for the time being.

My hon. friend, out of all this speech—and in this I explain exactly why the Canadian delegation took certain positions with regard to the matter—read this one sentence:

> If we went into a scheme of that kind with a group of nations that would not accept the principles that were laid down by Lord Orr, then of course we would be looking for trouble;—

And here is where I made my mistake. I continued:

> —so we voted against it.

I say I must take part of the responsibility for my friend's thinking that we did.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. Quelch: That is a good thing.

Mr. Gardiner: Nevertheless I had never looked up the records until this afternoon. I looked them up and I have them here. As a matter of fact, no vote at all was taken on the question. The only reasons there were for the Canadian delegation taking the position it took are explained in the speech which I made. In that speech nothing at all is said about a vote and it does not touch upon a vote, for the simple reason that results were obtained in another way. I am going to read only the last two sentences of the speech which I delivered on that occasion. They will make it plain why I examined the records in order to find out whether or not there had ever been a vote.

> Unless the proposed international agency, with the co-operation of the governments concerned, could direct the disposal of any substantial surpluses which may arise in a way that would avoid this kind of development, then the effort of other exporting countries to maintain production levels in keeping with natural demand would be jeopardized and far-reaching effects might result throughout the entire food and agriculture economy of the world.

Then the last sentences:

> In conclusion, we in Canada agree with the United States and the United Kingdom that suggestions should be considered by a working committee. The Canadian delegation will co-operate in every possible way on such a committee. We hope that out of this conference will come a suggestion that we can all agree on.

Following that a working committee was set up and the conference had sufficient confidence in the Canadian delegation to place the deputy minister of agriculture of that day from this country—I refer to Dr. Barton—at the head of the committee. That commodity committee of the FAO organization sat throughout the years in order to arrive at some suitable method of handling this question of surpluses of farm products throughout the world.

Well now, I wish to repeat again that according to the statements of the officials who were there, and I checked with some of them this afternoon, there was no vote taken on this question at all. The question that was before the conference was fully discussed. Our opinion with regard to it was clearly expressed and following that, not only because of the position we took but because of the position others at that conference took, a committee was set up to go to work on the matter of international surpluses in order to determine the best possible way of dealing with them from year to year. That committee sat and carried out its activities throughout the years.

I wanted to say that on this occasion because I know why my hon. friends keep repeating these things. They do so for the very reason expressed by both of the hon. members, although one of them is in the C.C.F. group and the other in the Social Credit group. They say: Well, we cannot rely on your statements anyway. Of course, every time they can put anything on the record which makes it appear that my statement is not exactly correct they feel that helps them in some way in creating just the kind of impression that the hon. member for Rosthern said this afternoon they were bent upon creating with regard to anyone in this house who differs with their opinion.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I do not think the minister has any right to suggest that I made that statement purely to infer that the minister was making an incorrect statement. I did so for the simple reason that I wanted to find out what the attitude of the government was, and I referred the minister to the statement he made last year in which he said that he had voted against the proposal. I have seen reports of that conference which state that the conference turned down the proposal. In view of the fact that the government of which the minister is a member is opposed to the acceptance of sterling, and in view of the fact that the international commodity clearing house is based upon the acceptance of sterling, I do not see how the minister could possibly have done anything else than oppose the proposal.

Mr. Gardiner: That is all right. I do not think my hon. friend needs to make another speech. He raised the question whether or not I was inferring something that I should not infer. I have corrected him on three previous occasions and each time he has got up on the floor of the house and repeated the statement all over again and said he was right.

Mr. Quelch: Because the minister kept changing his statement.

Mr. Gardiner: I took it for granted when the hon. member kept repeating the same thing time after time that there must have been a vote on the matter but there was no vote on it at all, and therefore I did not vote. The whole position of the Canadian government is contained in a speech which I delivered on that occasion, and it was considered by the government before I went to the conference.

Mr. Quelch: How can a conference turn down a proposal without some form of vote on it?

Mr. Gardiner: They turned it down because a proposal was made which was satisfactory. That proposal was for a working committee instead of setting up the clearing house spoken of in the resolution, and the work was proceeded with under that committee. In view of the fact that this matter has been dealt with on a number of occasions I thought it necessary for me to make a statement once again and to put the position clearly on record.

Coming back to the question which we have before us at the moment, which is an important one. It has been said by hon. members that we should follow the American practice at the present time in connection with the handling of wheat. I have the American plan here in my hand, and having it in my hand I think I should place it on the record. These are the acreage allotments and marketing quotas on United States wheat.

1. Authority for acreage allotments and marketing quotas is provided in the agricultural adjustment act of 1938 as amended. This legislation provides that not later than July 15 of each marketing year for wheat the secretary shall ascertain and proclaim the total supply and the normal supply of wheat for such marketing year and the national acreage allotment for the next crop of wheat. It provides further that when the secretary determines that the supply of wheat will exceed a certain quantity, as set out in section 335(a), he shall, not later than July 1, proclaim the fact and that during the marketing year beginning July 1 of the next succeeding calendar year a marketing quota shall be in effect. Between the date of issuance of such proclamation and July 25—mid-August in the amended legislation—a referendum is to be held to determine whether the farmers approve the quota. If more than one-third of the farmers oppose it the secretary shall by proclamation suspend the operation of the quota.

That is the first provision in connection with the establishment of support for wheat prices in the United States.

Then I come to the next one.

2. The agricultural act of 1949 provides price support for wheat at 90 per cent of parity for co-operators, defined as those whose acreage does not exceed the farm acreage allotment—

In other words, just as the chairman of the agricultural committee said a few moments ago in discussing this question, when you impose price controls and establish anything in the nature of what they have in the United States you must have along with it acreage control as well. The two things are tied together.

The agricultural act of 1949 provides price support for wheat at 90 per cent of parity for co-operators—defined as those whose acreage does not exceed the farm acreage allotment—if the marketing quotas have not been disapproved. The rate is to be 50 per cent of parity for co-operators if the marketing quotas have been disapproved by producers.

That is quite a different proposition from the proposition that has been discussed here.

It has been suggested that the farmer in the United States goes ahead and produces whatever wheat he feels inclined to produce; that that wheat is produced at 90 per cent of parity; that a loan is made upon it to the extent of 90 per cent of parity, and then he can do so and so and so and so. That is not correct at all.

An hon. Member: Who made that statement?

Mr. Gardiner: The fact of the matter is that if 90 per cent of parity is established by the vote that takes place once a year the individual is bound by that acreage once it is established. If he has any more than that amount of acreage seeded then the amount he is allowed, if he is allowed anything at all, is considerably less that 90 per cent on all the wheat he grew.

Then I come to the third point.

3. The national acreage allotment under the existing legislation is to be such that with normal yields and taking into account estimated carry-over and imports it will make available an amount equal to a normal year's domestic consumption and exports, plus 30 per cent thereof. The minimum for any year was to be not less than 55 million acres.

In other words, the acreage in the United States, which at the end of the war was 83 million acres, could be reduced to 55 million acres. As everyone knows, when the vote was taken last August the acreage in the United States was reduced by 16 million acres. That 16 million acres taken off the 78 million made an acreage of 62 million. The fact is that if American farmers seed more than their quota of the 62 million acres then those who exceed their quota in acres will, under this particular proposal, suffer thereby in so far as any support for prices they get is concerned.

Mr. Nicholson: How much a bushel for his wheat, though?

Mr. Gardiner: I might say to the hon. member for Mackenzie that I once heard a very prominent member in this house make the remark that no one ever listens himself into trouble.

4. The prospective supply for the 1954 crop year was such that this minimum would have been in effect. Amending legislation signed by the President on July 14, 1953 set the 1954 allotment at 62 million acres—

—the figure which I gave a moment ago.

The 1953 wheat acreage was 78 million acres.

5. The referendum on the wheat marketing quota for 1954 was held on August 14, 1953. The quota was approved, over 87 per cent of the farmers voting in favour of it.

As the hon. chairman of the agricultural committee said a few moments ago, you cannot tie down the price of wheat and make that work successfully unless at the same time you have acreage control. If there is one thing that the western farmers have voted against, talked against and worked against ever since I have been in Saskatchewan, and that is ever since the province was formed, it has been any kind of acreage control. Of course the reason for that is obvious. We are a new province. Farmers are settling here and there throughout the length and breadth of it. They have objected at all times to acreage control, and because they have objected to acreage control many of the things that are being suggested from the other side of the house are an impossibility.

A few moments ago something was said by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) about the supplies of wheat that have been sold at different times. Prior to the war Britain was very anxious that she should not be put into the position where she was consuming more than 90 million bushels of our wheat in a year. This did not mean that she would not buy any more than 90 million bushels of our wheat. There was a time when Britain bought wheat for the most of Europe. She bought it from us and other people and distributed it to the countries in Europe. Since the war she has not felt in a position to do that kind of thing, so she has been buying wheat for herself and allowing others to make arrangements for the supplies they required.

I have here a table of the imports of wheat into the United Kingdom from the different countries during 1951, 1952 and 1953. I shall just use the round figures, because it is only to get comparisons. Australia exported to the United Kingdom in 1951, 21 million bushels; in 1952, 16 million bushels; in 1953, 14 million bushels. Canada exported in 1951 just four times what Australia placed in the United Kingdom, 84 million bushels; in 1952, 103 million bushels; in 1953, for nine months —this statement just carries me down to the end of September—83 million bushels. These are calendar years, not crop years. Then from the United States the United Kingdom imported in 1951, 39 million bushels; then 16 million and 16 million, for the next two years. The figures for France are as follows: 1,200,000; 797,000; 12,500. The figures for other countries are 5,293,000; 681,000;

1,618,000. The Soviet union supplied wheat only in one year out of that group, the year 1952, 7,338,000 bushels.

Now, let me call attention again to the sales Canada made. They were, in 1951, 84 million bushels; in 1952, 103 million bushels, and in the first nine months of 1953, 83 million bushels. I have the figures for flour here, and when you take in flour and wheat the figure is raised to the figures mentioned a few moments ago by the hon. member for Eglinton for 1952 of 123 million bushels. When you take wheat and flour both, the other figures are comparable.

What I wanted to point out was this. Britain has been taking about the usual amounts of wheat and flour from this country. When you take the first year, for example, the figures are 84 million bushels of wheat and 9 million bushels in the form of flour. For the next year, there is a similar position and in the last year it is 83 million bushels of wheat for nine months and 6 million bushels in the form of flour. The figures work out to be quite comparable but are much higher than any other country sold to Britain.

When my hon. friends opposite are discussing this question, I should like to point out that one cannot be too sure what these figures mean. Britain is a very careful trader. Britain is concerned about seeing her population is fed, in a country where they cannot produce more than about 50 per cent of their own food, and so she does her own storing in her own way. When there is a situation that may threaten war, she has her own methods of storing up and retaining certain amounts until she is sure there is not going to be any trouble, or comparatively sure that there is not. She then consumes the wheat in storage and buys less.

There is not any way in which anyone in this house can take these matters and consider them reasonably in any other manner than by taking a long period of time. To say that Britain only bought so much wheat in some months or some particular year is on the face of it ridiculous if you want to make comparisons. Even saying that Britain only took so much wheat in a particular year, particularly if you can show an unusually high amount in the preceding year, does not mean that one is at all sure whether she is supplying the nation in that year or whether she is supplying storages to take care of any difficulties which may happen in the next year.

What we in this country, and those in every other country that is selling wheat in the markets over there, must do is to do our own reasoning. We must come to our own conclusion and go ahead from whatever point of view we reach. We must do the best we possibly can in support of our own people who are producing the product, and that is exactly what the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been doing, in so far as he directs the wheat board at all. I know from long experience in dealing with the wheat board that no one here directs the wheat board. The wheat board comes here from time to time and asks for advice on certain things they may wonder whether or not they should do. As for the minister directing them as to what they should do, that board was set up at the request of the producers in western Canada and at the request of no one else. It took the producers years to establish the idea here. First they tried it with the preceding government, and I believe there is only one member in this house now who was in that government then. The farmers attempted to have the preceding government establish a compulsory wheat board. They put forth every effort to have that done.

I must say, to the credit of the Bennett government of that day, that they brought down a bill which provided not only for compulsory marketing of wheat but compulsory marketing of all grain. My friend shakes his head, but I say to him to go and read the legislation.

Mr. Macdonnell: I was just shaking my head because it is a red letter day when a fair remark is made from across the gangway about the Bennett government.

Mr. Gardiner: I beg my hon. friend's pardon for having thought anything else. In so far as the statement is concerned, I have said it so often without getting credit for it that I am sure I appreciate the credit I get tonight. The government of Mr. Bennett brought down a bill to provide for the compulsory marketing of western grain through a wheat board. There was a discussion about it on the floor of the house, and finally that bill was withdrawn. A committee of five was appointed and Mr. Bennett made himself chairman of the committee. This committee brought in another bill. I am not going to discuss the bill because it is not for that purpose I bring up the question at the moment. I bring it up in order to say that because of the experience we had gone through in western Canada, hon. members on the other side of the house should be warned, particularly those in the C.C.F. group, that the kind of suggestions they have been making here this afternoon are not the suggestions that are going to settle the wheat question in western Canada.

Wheat—Marketing of Surplus

I am speaking from memory when I say this, and I may be a little out on my figures—if my friends look them up and find I am a little out, I hope they will not say I was attempting to misrepresent the facts here or say something I knew to be incorrect—my memory is that back in 1929, after we had a strong wheat pool in existence for a little better than four years, the initial payment on wheat had been built up to a fairly high level. Just as gentlemen across the floor of the house are saying now: "You should make this initial payment as high as you can, you should make it ten cents higher than the price is now"—according to one of the resolutions—"and start off from there", well, that is exactly the same kind of argument that was used with the wheat pools back in 1929. And when the wheat pool did that—and I am talking about the Saskatchewan wheat pool—when they thought that a dollar was high enough, they were compelled by the delegates to put it at $1.25.

Now, we went through that year. We had enormous losses, because the price of wheat went down. I say "we", because I was a member of it and I am still a member of it, and had something to do with starting it up in the first place. And so we took the losses that year because we set the initial payment too high, and because we were not permitted to lower it until sufficient wheat went on the market for the pools to have very considerable losses.

Now, the next year Mr. Bennett agreed to become more or less responsible for the losses they had incurred by guaranteeing the pools at the banks, guaranteeing their accounts, and allowing them to go on for a time on the condition that they allowed him to appoint a chairman, a one-man board, who would go ahead and handle wheat. Mr. McFarland was put in charge of wheat. And then, during the year that followed, the provinces were appealed to to put up money or rather to put up security against money that had been lost by the wheat pools. And the three provinces did that.

The outcome of that was that the Saskatchewan government, a province where more than half the wheat is grown, became responsible for something well over $20 million. The legislation was put through the house while I was a member of it; as a matter of fact, while I was leading the opposition. And I opposed some of it. Nevertheless the legislation went through. But it tied up the wheat pool in Saskatchewan over a twenty-year period. And, do you know, it is only three or four years ago that the pool was celebrating having made the last payment on that loss that was taken at that time.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Why was it taken? It was taken because the delegates who met at pool meetings in 1929 insisted upon a high initial payment, putting the pool into a position where they had to get the guarantee of governments in order to be able to carry on at all. And so the government stated how the policy was going to be conducted, and they put Mr. McFarland in charge of handling the wheat.

I do not know whether Mr. McFarland was told what to do. I only know that what he did do was to build up a greater and greater surplus during the time he was there. And when we came into office, or shortly after we came in, he had 298 million bushels of wheat in store, in 1935. Well, we asked him to sell it. My hon. friends the other night were calling this a fire sale. We asked him to sell the wheat. Why did we ask him to sell it? We asked him to sell it because we were of the opinion that to pile up wheat in this country and to hold it off the market with the idea you are going to improve the price was a wrong policy to follow; and that, as a matter of fact, the only way in which you could improve the price was to have the wheat eaten up at some price people were prepared to pay.

So we said, "Sell it". He said he would not sell it; so we got a new board. The new board sold the wheat with the result that in 1936 wheat averaged $1.22 a bushel, whereas it had been in the 80's at the time the order to sell was issued. And then the next year it was $1.31 a bushel. And so the farmer made the difference between about 84 or 86 cents a bushel as it was when the action was taken and $1.22 as the average in one year and $1.31 in the other.

All I am suggesting tonight is, that in so far as the farmers of western Canada are concerned—and that does not include very many fellows in the C.C.F. group—they are not going to have a board that is operating for them take the same kind of position again. They know what the results are. They know that a minister who comes here to this house and indicates that he has a clear line of policy for selling this wheat and getting it on the market is right. I made a statement the other day similar to what I am making now. I was speaking out in Saskatchewan; and of course when you are talking in the open air at a meeting, where they have loud speakers, covering about 40 acres, you cannot judge the attitude of listeners very well. But three or four men came to me after the speech was over and they said, "There was only one remark we heard while you were making that speech". I might say that they were not all speaking to me at the one time. Each one said, "The only remark we heard them making was this, 'He is dead right' ".

If my hon. friends are doing as the hon. member for Rosthern suggested they were doing—that is, if they are just trying to get votes—then I suggest they had better change their tune a little bit. Because after all the farmers in western Canada, particularly in Saskatchewan where more than half the wheat is grown, know this question just as well as any member in this house. They know what is in their interests, and they know what is not in their interests. And because they know I believe they are in support of what the government is doing at the present time.

My hon. friends in the C.C.F. have been very anxious during the last two or three days to say that the farmer in Saskatchewan is prosperous. It is not a month since they were panning me in every newspaper and on every platform in western Canada because I had said that the farmers were getting along better at the present time than they had at any other time in my experience. And now they come here and try to compete with one another in telling us that the farmer in Saskatchewan is well off.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Mang).

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friends apparently are getting concerned about the hon. member for Qu'Appelle quoting their leader in the province of Saskatchewan, who happens to be the premier of Saskatchewan. Well, all the hon. member for Qu'Appelle did was to take the pamphlets that are being mailed through the mail every morning. I know that because I get one every morning. And the pamphlet quoted here the other night by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was a pamphlet which I got a few days earlier telling me about the wonderful prosperity we have among farmers in Saskatchewan. As a matter of fact they said that while other provinces may be going down in the matter of returns and while other provinces may not be coming down in the matter of the cost of putting their products out, they went on to prove that Saskatchewan was in a better position than any of the other provinces.

Well, if they are I am very glad to hear it, because that is where I farm myself; and I know something about what farmers' returns are in Saskatchewan. I know something about what the condition of the farmer is today, as compared with the condition of the farmer in any other year since the beginning of the first war. And, knowing that, I am in agreement with some of the things which the Saskatchewan government said. But I am sure my hon. friends who represent the C.C.F. party in this house did not get very much out of what he said to back up anything they have been saying lately. They have been suggesting that the farmer is going down and down. And when they are making that statement, knowing that probably there is not much to back it up, then they change it by saying, "If he is not going down and down, all right, he will be some day."

Well, we have been hearing that ever since the war ended. These gentlemen must pray every night that we will get a depression in Canada. When they get up to express themselves in this house and outside of it that is what they continuously say, and most people who do pray talk about the things they pray about. So these gentlemen over there no doubt hold forth on that ground. Is it the pamphlet published by the government of Saskatchewan which changed their tune?

Well, the farmer can stand more for his wheat. As a matter of fact, quite a lot of people thought he might get $2 or more for it. I recall one of them who was expressing these views very freely a while ago. A newspaperman came to me while I was out west there last week and asked me what I thought about it. I said: "Well, I have learned long ago not to be too free with prophecies with regard to the price of wheat".

Mr. Rowe: That is only recently.

Mr. Gardiner: He said: "You are just as bad to get a statement out of as my friend who was talking about it a short time ago and saying that we as farmers out here should not think of anything else but getting the high price which the governments were asking for their wheat at the time the international wheat agreement was under discussion". Well, I said to him at the time, and I am going to say it here, that fortunately or unfortunately, whichever it might be, depending on what you are thinking, we must depend on selling a greater part of the wheat, or at least more wheat to Britain than we sell to any other country in the world if we are going to market our wheat, and Britain no doubt will have something to say about what she pays for it.

We are not doing something any different from what we have always done in that regard. We do discuss these things with the British; we do discuss them with our United States friends to the south; and the only time, you know, that Canada did not discuss it with our United States friends to the south was back in 1932, and everybody knows that this government was not in power then. And what happened to wheat? When it was not discussed with the United States, when they did not know what we were going to do and we did not know what they were going to do, then the price of wheat was, as the minister said the other day, as low as 46 cents a bushel. As a matter of fact, I remember selling wheat that year for 26 cents a bushel.

Mr. Rowe: Because you did not discuss it with the United States?

Mr. Gardiner: Partly, because you did not when you were in the government.

Mr. Rowe: Because you did not discuss it with the United States?

Mr. Gardiner: That question was not discussed with the United States.

Mr. Rowe: That was not the reason.

Mr. Gardiner: But, as the minister has been telling you from time to time—

Mr. Rowe: That was not the reason.

Mr. Gardiner: —we do keep in close touch with our United States friends to the south. We keep in touch with them with regard to the marketing of products in their country and with regard to feeding people in different parts of the world who require to be fed, and we try to co-operate in such a way as to get not only their farmers but our own farmers the best possible return for the products they are selling, and more particularly for their wheat.

Something has been said about the costs going up. I have been told during the last two or three weeks by people who sell the most expensive commodities that the farmer buys in western Canada that they are not making many sales out there at present. Now that is true. My friend says it is right. Of course it is right. But there is more than one reason why it is right. The chief reason is that during the war farmers could not buy new machinery at all. They were refused the right to buy, with the result that when the war was over the equipment on every farm in western Canada was run down to such a state that farmers had to get new equipment, and unfortunately perhaps for us we had to compete with the Korean war in getting it and the prices were high. But nevertheless the returns were sufficiently high that farmers could go and buy, in spite of that fact. As hon. members from Saskatchewan know, we have I think the most advanced implement legislation there is in any province in Canada out in Saskatchewan. It has been there for a long time. I have no doubt that by the time this gets out in print the present government out there will be taking credit for it, but it happened away back in 1915, so that there is not much credit coming to them. It has been amended from time to time, and as the law now stands it is almost impossible for a man out in that province to get an implement unless he is able to pay about 50 per cent in cash. And that is not a bad thing for him either.

But he has been buying implements under that legislation and he has been getting himself equipped until today—I think every hon. member who comes from that section of the country will agree—he is as well equipped or a little better equipped than he ever was before, and equipped with expensive machinery. The only worry that some of us have had about it is whether he will get the machinery entirely paid for before he runs into difficulties in connection with the marketing of his wheat and the returns which he obtains for it when he does market it. If he is able to pay off anything that he owes on the machinery and go on operating from there he will be doing very well.

What the implement companies tell me is that during the last year, and more so during this year, their sales have been going down very materially. But they know that that is not only because there have been some reductions in the prices of commodities in 1953 as compared with 1951. They make their comparisons between 1953, and 1948 and 1949. They know that one of the reasons is that the farmers are equipped with good implements, and therefore at the present time they are not buying more. They are able to get along, and my hope is—I am sure it is the hope of every hon. member who comes from western Canada—that our farmers will go along with the kind of equipment which they require in order to do the job that they are doing efficiently, and that they will not be led into investing too much in farm implements and other equipment, particularly if they can get along well without getting that new equipment. The implement people think that that is what they are doing. They think the farmers still remember the days when they incurred considerable indebtedness in order to get the things that they required.

Hon. members on the other side of the house, and particularly the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough), said this afternoon: Yes, of course it is true that the indebtedness of the farmers has gone down. The mortgages are not as high as they were; they are paying them off and conditions are better today than they were at some other time, and what I am praying for—and I am sure my friends will pray along with me—is that we shall get along with the marketing of this wheat.

Why, we have had the three biggest crops that we have ever grown in western Canada.

Well, you can come here and quote statistics that the farmer has more wheat than he ever had before. The fact is that he grew so much wheat in the last three years—he grew more than he ever grew before—that he could not possibly have been in any other position than to have more wheat than he ever had before. I am still agreeing with the Minister of Trade and Commerce that it is not a bad thing for the farmers in western Canada after those three years experience to have some wheat on their farms and to be in the position that they are today where they can sell a whole year's wheat over the year that is ahead or over the months that are ahead, even if they have a poor crop. When they do, if they do get the return which is offered now, and if they do not get any more than that, the fact that they have produced on an average about twice as much, from 75 per cent to 100 per cent more than they did before in other three-year periods, they will have more in cash for the labour that they put forth in order to produce that wheat than they have ever had on any other occasion.

After all the labour he puts forth and the costs he puts into his implements and other requirements are the real costs of producing so much wheat. If he gets 50 per cent more than he expected to get or 75 per cent more than he expected to get, then it is not a case of his costs having gone up as compared with what he sells, it is a case of his sales going up as compared with what he had to pay in costs. And those farmers tell me that so long as we have a Minister of Trade and Commerce who is optimistic, who does think that he can sell the wheat—because he thinks he can sell it, he probably will—then they are in the best position that they can possibly be in.

Even my hon. friend who runs a hardware store in Moose Jaw will agree that if his business is run on that principle he will be all right for quite a long time.

Mr. Speaker: I am in a very difficult position because, like myself, hon. members have seen the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) rise on three previous occasions, and perhaps at this time one of them might yield because I think that would be the best thing to do. I appreciate the co-operation of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe).

Mr. W. Ross Thatcher (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I will take only about five minutes, Mr. Speaker. I think there is one fact which has emerged in this debate so far. Whether hon. members come from the east or the west, whether they are Liberal, Conservative, C.C.F. or Social Credit, after listening to this debate I think they must realize that the western farmer today is having marketing difficulties.

We are in real trouble with our wheat. This is not a matter of levity in western Canada. Our granaries are jammed to capacity, our elevators are filled, and we have wheat lying out in the fields. It appears moreover, that we will have another bumper crop this year.

In view of these facts our farmers naturally are concerned. Thus it seems to me that the main purpose of this debate today should be to discuss what can be done about our huge wheat surplus; what can be done about this 700 million bushels of wheat which is presently on hand.

I listened to the spokesman of the Conservative party today. I heard their amendment to the effect that this house regrets the government has failed to deal effectively with the problem. I am inclined to agree with them, but what alternative have the Conservatives to offer? I listened to government spokesmen also, including the minister tonight, and I did not hear them propose any solution over and above what they have given us so far.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have two or three concrete suggestions I would like to place before the house if I can do it within the five minutes at my disposal. I do not think there is any easy or obvious solution to our wheat surplus. I do not feel there is any magic formula. I am convinced there is no simple answer. But I do believe there are a few steps which could be taken. I feel that no one in parliament should treat this wheat problem with indifference, and I do not think we should meet the problem with inaction. On the other hand, I do not think hon. members should panic.

Speaking personally I cannot get too worried about having had bumper crops in western Canada. I cannot get too worried about having too much wheat. It is a lovely problem to have. But despite the fact that we should not treat our surplus as a liability, there are some steps we have to consider taking without delay. I agree with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) that following the United States procedure of cutting acreage is not the answer, and I do not think a price war is any satisfactory solution.

What can we do? First of all I think the Department of Agriculture should go out to our farmers in western Canada and urge them to feed as much grain as possible to livestock, hogs, turkeys, chickens, and sheep. I have always believed that in western Canada it would be a sensible thing to have a more diversified agricultural economy. It is good insurance in case we hit low prices for grain, and it is good insurance in case we hit a drought.

Today with so much grain on hand, surely it is more sensible than ever for every single farmer in the west to get into diversified farming. I know some hon. members will probably say, "Well, if they go into cattle and hogs we will then have a surplus of meat." To a degree that may be quite correct. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not think our farmers today are taking full advantage of the Geneva agreement provisions, which permit us to sell these products to the United States.

For example, where cattle are concerned, there is today a cent and a half per pound tariff on the first 200,000 calves and the first 400,000 cattle of 700 pounds or more which we sell annually. Last year we sold to the United States only 2,000 calves and 45,000 head of cattle.

As far as hogs are concerned, under the Geneva agreement we are entitled to sell all the hogs that we can produce if we want to pay a tariff of one cent per pound. Yet last year we only sent 20,232 swine to the United States. As far as sheep and lambs are concerned, we can send unlimited quantities down there at a tariff of $3 per head. But last year we sent only 153 sheep to our southern neighbour.

As far as poultry is concerned there is a tariff of two cents per pound and there is no quota. But last year we sent only 227 turkeys and 45,000 poultry of other kinds. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I say again that if we can be sure that the United States will not renege on their commitments under the Geneva agreement, I think there is a very real market for our farmers in which to sell livestock and poultry in the United States. I suggest this is the first practical method which we should follow to get rid of our huge grain surplus. Let the government help the farmers to help themselves. I think that literally dozens of millions of bushels of wheat could be marketed in such a manner.

In the second place, Mr. Speaker, I am not convinced that the government is doing a good selling job as far as the iron curtain countries are concerned. The other day I mentioned that I did not think the Department of Trade and Commerce has done such a good job of selling. Only a month ago the Russian ambassador said that his country was willing to buy wheat. Two officials from the Russian embassy called at the Department of Trade and Commerce, but all our officials did was to give them a few prices. They did not follow up the sale in any way at all. I do not think aggressiveness was shown nor selling capacity. I do not feel that advantage is being taken of that potential market.

We know that Russia, China, and other countries behind the iron curtain are very badly in need of foodstuffs. When we have 700 million bushels of wheat in western Canada I simply cannot see why we cannot get together. I think something should be done by the government to increase sales to eastern nations.

In the third place, and I am rushing, I think our government should do a little more than it is doing as far as our immigration program is concerned. I think it is sensible for our government to bring people into Canada to consume our grain and foodstuffs. I fully realize that there is considerable agitation throughout the country at the present time for curtailing immigration. The trade unions are a little bit afraid of it. But as far as our farmers are concerned, Mr. Speaker, I think there is nothing more realistic than to have a larger domestic market right here at home. I hope the government will not yield to some of the pressure which has been put upon them recently to reduce the immigration quota. I think we are always likely to have a farm marketing problem as long as our population remains as low as 15 million.

I shall close in a minute but before I do so I want to say that I think the Minister of of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) should be interested in barter deals.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Huh!

Mr. Thatcher: The minister says "huh" but there may be some countries interested in buying our wheat which would like to indulge in barter. I admit it is not ordinarily a good way to do business, but if it is the only way in which we can sell wheat to Russia or some other country, then let us have barter. Even in my own business I sometimes have customers who cannot pay cash immediately and if that is the case I extend long term credit. Might I then suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that perhaps some potential purchasers of wheat need long term credit, and if that is so let us extend it to them. I believe too, Mr. Speaker, that it might be sensible for Canada to consider giving very modest gifts of wheat to some of the needy nations of the world. I certainly would not recommend going overboard—there are sensible limits to such a program. However, such a program should be considered.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to stay within my five minutes. Before sitting down, may I repeat that there are several things this government could do. If they do not act the western farmer is going to be in trouble; and as soon as the western farmer is in trouble, the difficulty will be like a snowball, it will react right through our economy as a whole.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Rowe: May I move the adjournment of the debate?

Mr. Abbott: Go ahead.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I think the house will realize that we sat beyond ten minutes past ten last night. Perhaps we could go further tonight without prejudice to a decision on any succeeding night. I think it is probably the desire of the house that we complete this debate so that there might be a recorded vote rather than having it go over until another day, although I realize that we shall have to make another motion to go into supply tomorrow. However, I think hon. members would like to dispose of this debate tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not think so.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that we carry on with this discussion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Fairclough: No.

Mr. Rowe: Mr. Speaker, it is not my desire to break the rules of the house, even to please the government. It is now ten o'clock and I know there are many who feel—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The hon. member has not much to say, anyway.

Mr. Fleming: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Rowe: If I were sitting where the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) is sitting, I would not have much to say having regard to the spectacle that is presented to the Canadian people today so far as the sale of wheat is concerned.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Carry on.

Mr. Rowe: I thank the minister for the privilege. I had it anyway. I have the privilege of carrying on in this house without its coming from the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Tonight, as I listened to the glibness of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) about the marketing situation of Canadian farm products and his reference to what had happened back some twenty years ago, several thoughts went through my mind. I know that every colleague of the Minister of Agriculture joins with me in saying that we are delighted to see him so much improved in health and back to his old-time vigour. I always had great admiration for the minister. I am delighted to see his physique improved to its old form, even though his mentality has not changed.

But even when the minister is not as physically fit as he is now, he is probably the most mentally agile and glib member in the house. When I hear him saying that the reason we took a low price for wheat in the 1930's was that we did not discuss the matter with the United States of America, I am reminded that he is harking back to and re-echoing the old-time policy of the party to which he belongs. As early as 1887 they proposed commercial union with the United States. Down through the years of reciprocity and all the rest of the years they have been looking north and south instead of east and west.

During the course of the very speech he made tonight, the minister re-emphasized on two or three occasions that the best market in the world we had for our wheat was the United Kingdom. Yet at the same time he said that the reason we did not sell the unsold wheat that was left by his party when this party came into power in 1930 was that we did not discuss the matter with the United States of America. Imagine his saying that, Mr. Speaker! If he had not said it so loudly no one in the house would have believed it; but, Mr. Speaker, when he said it so loudly, even the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) applauded. Can anyone fathom such ridiculousness?

Mr. Knowles: Louder!

Mr. Rowe: Even if you did not hear me, you believe me.

Mr. Knowles: Even if we do not believe you, we enjoy it.

Mr. Rowe: I am not much concerned, Mr. Speaker, whether he believes me or whether he enjoys me. I know that no one in Canada will believe it. Certainly those intelligent farmers that he speaks of in western Canada will not do so. They are just as intelligent as are the farmers in eastern Canada. Why in the barber shops, in the pool shops and in the garages in Canada they would laugh at such a statement. They would actually laugh at such a statement.

Mr. Gardiner: We handed you only 76 million; you left us 298 million.

Mr. Rowe: You might as well talk about millions as far as the other producers in Canada are concerned. What about the iron ore and the mineral producers in the thirties? What about the pulp and paper producers in the thirties? What about the producers of any other articles you like? Let me say this to you people who are always talking about getting farm implements cheap for the farmers of Canada. I bought implements in 1930 and I bought them for $110 whereas I am now paying $800.

Mr. McIlraith: You now have the money with which to pay for them.

Mr. Rowe: Probably we did not have the money then; but Mr. Speaker, that is not the issue. If it had not been for the sharp interjection or interruption, Mr. Speaker, you would probably have called me to order for even answering something that is so irrelevant to the issue that is before us.

The Minister of Agriculture speaks about the way in which we sold wheat. Every hon. member within sound of my voice knows that every elevator in Canada was bulging and overloaded with unsold wheat when the Conservative party came into power in 1930, and that every lumber yard that had not been burned for insurance was overloaded with lumber that had not been sold. Nobody knows that better than does the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Gardiner: I did not burn any.

Mr. Rowe: There was not a sale for anything in Canada when his party went out of power and one of the reasons was that which the minister has mentioned tonight. From 1921 to 1930 their eyes were cast north and south again. In 1921 we sold to the United Kingdom more beef, more bacon and more wheat than we have sold in practically any other year until this late war came on. Whenever we mention an imperial conference they scoff at the suggestion. They think we are thinking of nothing but the old empire, the British commonwealth and the union jack.

On the hustings the Minister of Agriculture and his cohorts will say that this party talk about trade but keep themselves wrapped up in the union jack. But down through the years, for the last 50 years—yes, for the last 75 years—we have had a favourable trade balance with the United Kingdom. As the Minister of Agriculture has so well said tonight—and no one knows it better than he—the best market in the world available to the Canadian people for wheat and for mixed farming products is the United Kingdom market. The only other market that is better than that one for agricultural products is the market right here at home; and that market is not improved by listening to Washington. To say that the price of wheat in Canada went down as low as it did in 1930 because we did not discuss it with Washington when the United States of America were selling their wheat in Buffalo at exactly the same price is just nonsense. Why, Mr. Speaker, such nonsense in this issue is not even politically attractive. It is only a political nuisance.

An hon. Member: It surely is.

Mr. Rowe: I hear "carried" outside the curtains, the echoes made by those who keep speaking inside the curtains. I know that remarks like that are more popular out there than they are in here. But if you look at the spectacle of what has happened, here is what we find. The Minister of Agriculture will remember it very well. I cannot recall the exact statistics because I did not intend to speak and I have not any notes. However, I will do as the Minister of Agriculture has done so well in the past and say this: If my statement is not exactly correct, it is not an error of intention. In fact, I have heard him modify his remarks in that way on many occasions previously. It is a neat way of being reckless and yet having people believe that you are honest.

Mr. Dickey: Go ahead. Be reckless.

Mr. Rowe: No, I am not as reckless as the hon. member even though he does not speak as much in the house as some others. I am not even reckless in my thinking. I suggested a few years ago that we should sell our wheat more or less according to the law of supply and demand and that we should not try to be so generous as to accept less than the world would give us for our wheat. In those years the farmers of western Canada, those intelligent friends of the minister, were losing $300 million to $400 million a year by having to take much less than the world price. I can well recall that at that time the minister said to me: You have not as much confidence in the British traders as I have. I remember saying to him that very shortly he would find that the British traders would buy wheat where they could buy it the cheapest. I wonder whether he does not recall that. He nods his head in approval. Thanks for the sporting gesture of indicating that I was right once.

Mr. Gardiner: Oh no, I just recall it.

Mr. Rowe: But now he suggests that we must sell where we can sell. I say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and others have said the same thing at election time, that this Howe-Gardiner salesmanship corporation has brought about the greatest fiasco of a gamble with somebody else's money that has ever been seen in any corporation in Canada. The Minister of Agriculture has got more butter than he knows what to do with. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is selling pork to Russia for one-quarter of what it cost. They have more wheat now that they cannot sell than has ever been stored in Canada with the exception of 1929 before the Liberals went out of power. The two high record years have been while they were in power. They were in power from 1921 to 1930, and remember, Mr. Speaker, that during those years we practically lost our whole British market. Here in this house in 1926 and 1927 they said that the great hope for the farmers of Canada was to sell their farm products to the United States. We have never believed that.

We do not believe that we can hope for a permanent agricultural market in those southern areas, in that great climate, in that rich agricultural country that produces surpluses of wheat and surpluses of almost everything else. We sold 255 million pounds of bacon to Britain in 1921. We sold $80 million worth of beef at a much lower price than the price of beef today. We sold all sorts of butter, eggs and bacon products, but by 1930 we were importing Danish bacon to feed our own people. It was being sold right in the minister's own province of Saskatchewan. They were taking your barley from Saskatchewan to fatten their hogs in Denmark and selling the bacon back to you so you free traders could eat Danish bacon in western Canada.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, they tell you what they have done to establish these markets. Now we have the spectacle again. We have more unsold wheat than anyone ever anticipated since confederation, and these are the gentlemen who now tell you about the sales that were made back in the thirties. We now have the spectacle of a group of men who refuse to negotiate with Britain, so much so that Britain refused to remain in the international wheat agreement deal and proceeded to buy wheat where she likes. Instead of getting a price of $2.05 they are now intimating tonight that we may even have to take $1.42.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Who intimated that?

Mr. Rowe: I do not think it is a fair statement to suggest that the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that. I think he said it facetiously when somebody said we might have to take $1.42. He said we might have to take another 10 cent drop, and I should not say that he suggested $1.42 because neither he nor anyone else would hope that we will have to take that. But it shows the trend of the times. It shows the change of policy. It shows the change of attitude that these gentlemen who refused $2.50 are now suggesting, even facetiously, that they will take the price that anyone else will give them. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said the other night that we will sell wheat where people will buy it. That is about the most sensible thing I have heard him say in the house in a long time—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rowe: —because the old law of supply and demand must control. I hear some hon. member saying "hear, hear". Of course, Mr. Speaker, you can get "hear, hear" from that side of the house on any kind of issue. If I suggested the highest kind of protection policy I bet that the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Schneider) would say "hear, hear". If I made the wildest free trade suggestion that has ever been proposed in the house I bet the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) would say "hear, hear". If I suggested a socialist program that would put my friends to the left to shame I bet there are three or four hon. gentlemen over here who would say "hear, hear" if they thought their leaders were not watching them. So, Mr. Speaker, it is a great party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rowe: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the only thing they are in agreement about, when you suggest they are a great party, because they involve every stripe, every brand, every political temperament, every fickle idea in politics that there is in Canada and out on the hustings. Nobody knows what they all stand for; God only knows what they each stand for.

Mr. Abbott: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rowe: The result is that today we have no sound marketing policy. The Minister of Agriculture did not tell us what the policy is. The Minister of Trade and Commerce came here and said that we will sell as cheaply as anybody else in the world. We have no fiscal policy. God alone knows what the fiscal policy of the Liberal party is today. We have all sorts of textile products coming in here from other countries, heavy machinery, and men unemployed. Some of them on that side of the house want free trade, others want protection and the leaders are afraid to say. The right hon. gentleman who is always glib would be afraid to rise tonight and say that he believes in free trade so far as these industries are concerned.

Mr. Gardiner: You might be surprised.

Mr. Rowe: The Minister of Trade and Commerce would not rise tonight and say: We will sell wheat as cheaply as anybody else and we will buy for the western farmers textiles and heavy machinery wherever we can buy the cheapest. It would not be fair to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) now because he is going to be judge over all pretty soon. But I know that in his heart of hearts he knows that he has been associated with the greatest conglomeration of mixed policies that the party has had since confederation. They have been all things to all industries; all things to all men, and all types of protection for all phases of policy. The only one who can laugh through it all is the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) because he has been on both sides so often.

The Minister of Agriculture prompted me to rise tonight when he suggested that I was among those responsible for the fiasco between 1930 and 1935.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rowe: Yes, they all say "hear, hear". Some of you younger members who are saying "hear, hear" were not even here. But, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance so well said the other night, because he has moments of sincerity, no particular party was responsible for the fiasco of 1930.

Mr. Abbott: Who said that?

Mr. Rowe: He should explain that to these young hecklers.

Mr. Abbott: You must have been dreaming.

Mr. Rowe: And they know it as well or they would not be worthy of being here. They know that there were 35 million people unemployed throughout the world, that there were 15 million people unemployed in the United States and two and a half million unemployed before this party came into power. Every elevator was filled with unsold wheat and every lumberyard was filled with unsold lumber. Every elevator today is filled with unsold wheat. If it had not been for pre-war, wartime and post-war policies that bailed the government out of a situation for which they had no policy this country would have noticed their weakness in fiscal policy long ago.

I am not going to delay the house. I do not believe in holding the house after ten o'clock. The group that sits to your right, Mr. Speaker, no doubt like to rush things through when the session is drawing to a close. In fact, in the quarter of a century that I have been here I have noticed there is a cunning device used to try to get contentious measures through, either late on Friday night or some time after ten o'clock.

Mr. Sinclair: You were never here late on Friday night.

Mr. Rowe: I am glad my hon. friend misses me because if he were not here the fact probably would not be noticed at all. I do feel that this is not a rule we should follow. I would have preferred an adjournment tonight and continue the debate tomorrow. I wish to say that the wheat problem in this country is a serious one. I know that everyone hopes we can sell all the unsold wheat possible.

I am not one of those to whom the Minister of Agriculture referred who is hoping for a depression in this country. We have a serious situation. Personally, I do not believe the government has handled it well. I believe they thought that No. 1 hard wheat could be sold for whatever they wished to ask for it. They refused to take a reasonable price. Fortunately, they have now changed their minds and are ready to deal on a sensible basis. Whether or not wheat prices go lower, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, the thing is, and I say this as a farmer myself—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Rowe: My hon. friend laughs, but I have always lived on a farm and have been responsible for growing quite a lot of wheat. While we do not grow as much as some of my friends in western Canada, and the Minister of Agriculture gibes me a bit, I think perhaps I have farmed more than he has. In the last two years his government has been chiefly farming the farmers, so far as selling their products is concerned.

I say that there is no farmer within the sound of my voice who wants to be pap fed by the state by means of subsidies. I believe we have to get down to a common sense business basis. On this point I do find myself somewhat in agreement with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, even though it is a new idea of his, that we must sell where we can sell. If the price is not as good as we had expected, it is an honest price. As a farmer, I do not expect other people to pay for my lower prices on wheat.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): I realize hon. members are anxious to conclude the debate, but since I understand there are some other speakers I should like to move the adjournment of the debate at this stage.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nicholson: There have been two very provocative 40-minute speeches delivered from the other side since eight o'clock, and I think hon. members should not be asked to allow those provocative speeches to go unanswered at this time of night.

On motion of Mr. Nicholson the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris moved the adjournment of the house:

He said: We shall continue this debate tomorrow and if we get into supply we will call trade and commerce until one o'clock, then transport, secretary of state and agriculture.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 16, 1954

The house met at eleven o'clock.

CRIMINAL LAW

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West) presented the third report of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on capital and corporal punishment, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MUNICIPAL GRANTS ACT—STATEMENT ON INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last, in reply to a question from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), the Prime Minister (Mr. St-Laurent) indicated that I would make a statement as to whether it was intended to proceed at this session with the amendments to the Municipal Grants Act. As I stated, I think last week, the government had hoped to be able to proceed with that measure this session, but the legislative program has been heavy, and in view of the fact that the amendments would not be operative until the calendar year 1955, the usual municipal year, no prejudice would be suffered by the measure standing over until the next session.

It would be the government's intention to introduce the measure at the earliest possible moment at that session. There is an item in my estimates of some $3 million for the grants for the calendar year, and when that item is called we shall have an opportunity to discuss the matter and I can indicate, in a general way, the nature of the amendments which the government has in mind.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I thought possibly, from the remarks that had been made earlier, there was some anticipation of this. But, on a question of order, I would point out the unsatisfactory result that flows from keeping on the order paper notices that are not carried through. Your Honour has had occasion to rule that, in view of these notices, certain debates which we wished to have in regard to relief for municipalities in connection with excise and sales taxes could not be dealt with because of this. I am not suggesting for one moment that the purpose of having this on the order paper was to produce that result. I would point out, however, that this result does follow from having on the order paper items of this kind that are not then proceeded with. It has been on the order paper since March 22, so that we were blocked from what we do regard as a very important provision for relief of the municipalities.

Mr. Macdonnell: May I ask whether the government believes that municipalities have no urgent needs or whether they are to be allowed to stew in their own juice.

Mr. Abbott: My hon. friend's language is always somewhat colourful, only exceeded by that of the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming). I do not know that I have any special comment to make on that at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

QUESTIONS

FEDERAL SUBSIDIES TO SALT FISH INDUSTRY

Mr. Balcom:

1. Was any financial assistance given to the marketing of salt fish in Newfoundland since confederation but prior to the 1953 production, in the form of subsidies to producers, purchasers of surplus production, or currency conversion?
2. If so, what were the total amounts involved?
3. Did Nova Scotia and the other mainland provinces share in such subsidies, purchases of surplus or currency provisions?
4. If so, to what extent and in what form?
5. What assistance was given to the salt fish industry in 1953 and how was the division made in regard to provinces?
6. Were any subsidies paid on 1953 fish to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island?
7. What federal subsidies were paid on 1953 fish, and to what regions?

Mr. MacNaught:

1. Yes.

2. (a) Purchase 1949 production, $82,564.52; (b) deficiency payments on Labrador 1950 production, $446,120.15; (c) deficiency payments shore 1950 production, $810,105.11.

3. No.

4. Answered by No. 3.

5. The government purchased in 1953 approximately $950,000 worth of salted codfish for relief purposes in Greece and Korea.

The amounts were: Newfoundland, $500,000; Nova Scotia, $190,000; New Brunswick, $10,000; Quebec, $250,000.

The amounts were based on the carryover of 1952 fish in each province. Deficiency payments were also authorized in Quebec and Newfoundland. The Quebec payments amounted to $37,420. The Newfoundland payments have not yet been made but will approximate $600,000.

6. None.

7. Answered by No. 5.

ARMED FORCES—HENDRY REPORT

Mr. Dinsdale:

1. What was the cost of the Hendry report on welfare services for the Canadian armed forces?
2. Where was it carried out and completed?
3. Who defrayed the expenses involved in the preparation of this report?
4. Who has had access to this report?

Mr. Blanchette:

1. The sum of $24,220.62 was paid as the cost of a report made for the personnel members committee of the three services by Professor Hendry of the University of Toronto in contract with the defence research board.

2. 1950-51.

3. Defence research board.

4. The staff of the contractor who prepared it and the appropriate officials of the Department of National Defence.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING CO-ORDINATION ACT

Mr. Boisvert:

1. Did all the provinces enter into an agreement with the federal government in virtue of the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, 1942?
2. If so, in what year was an agreement signed with each province?
3. How many disabled persons, in each province and for each year since 1942 to 1954, were provided assistance for rehabilitation training?

Mr. Gregg:

1. Yes.

2. (a) Youth training agreement. Nine provinces signed in 1942. Agreement expired 1948.

(b) War emergency training agreement. Eight provinces signed in 1942. Agreement expired 1946. Prince Edward Island signed 1944.

(c) Re-establishment agreement. Nine provinces signed in 1945. Agreement expired 1948.

(d) Vocational schools' assistance agreement. Nine provinces signed in 1945. Newfoundland 1950; Northwest Territories 1953.

(e) Vocational training agreement. Nine provinces signed 1948. Newfoundland 1950, Northwest Territories 1953.

(f) Apprenticeship training agreement. Seven provinces signed 1944. Newfoundland 1953; Northwest Territories 1953. Quebec and Prince Edward Island have not signed this agreement.

(g) Vocational correspondence courses agreement. Eight provinces signed 1950. Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and Northwest Territories have not signed this agreement.

3. There is no record of the number of disabled persons trained under the provisions of the act prior to 1953. During the fiscal year ended March 31, 1954, 511 disabled trainees were reported by the province as follows:— Nova Scotia 28; New Brunswick 92; Quebec 46; Ontario 223; Manitoba 45; Saskatchewan 20; Alberta 38; British Columbia 19.

HALIFAX—TONNAGE, FREIGHT, ETC.

Mr. Balcom:

1. What was the total tonnage of ships entering the port of Halifax during the months of January (a) 1953; (b) 1954?
2. What was the total tonnage of freight handled in and out of the port of Halifax in the same period?
3. What were the total wages paid to waterfront workers in Halifax for the period (a) January 1953; (b) January 1954; (i) stevedores; (ii) checkers?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe):

The national harbours board advise as follows:

1. (a) 600,096 net registered tons; (b) 627,765 net registered tons.

2. 1953—560,013 tons; 1954—443,537 tons.

3. The information requested is not on record in the national harbours board as it is a matter affecting stevedoring companies and transportation companies and contracts for stevedoring services between these respective types of companies.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

NEW WESTMINSTER HARBOUR BOARD

Mr. Hahn:

1. Who have been chairmen of the New Westminster harbour board since its inception?
2. How long did each serve?
3. What were their respective salaries?
4. Who have been the other commissioners on the harbour board?
5. How long did each serve?
6. What were their respective salaries?
7. What is the total revenue received by the harbour board each year?
8. What are the details of said revenue?
9. How much revenue does the harbour board receive through any source whatsoever from the following municipalities and districts: (a) Delta; (b) Richmond; (c) Burnaby; (d) Surrey; (e) Langley; (f) Maple Ridge; (g) Pitt Meadows; (h) Coquitlam; (i) Port Coquitlam?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Mrs. Fairclough:

1. What were the revenues and expenditures of the Post Office Department for each of the years 1940 to 1953 inclusive?
2. What are the classifications of postmasters, postmistresses, supervisors and postal employees according to salary category?
3. What is the rate of remuneration per annum paid in the case of each of these classifications?
4. What, if any, expense allowance is provided for any such official or employee supplying office space, heat, light, etc.?

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE SALARIES FOR ADDITIONAL JUDGES

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for an additional judge of the court of appeal for British Columbia and an additional judge for the trial division of the supreme court of Alberta.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the house.

Motion agreed to.

WHEAT

REQUEST FOR FLOOR PRICE FOR EASTERN GROWN WINTER WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture of which I have not sent him notice. In view of the low opening quotation of $1.25 for new crop Ontario winter wheat, is the government prepared to announce a policy, if any, on floor prices for eastern grown winter wheat?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing done under the wheat board in connection with that price. The price in that regard is set otherwise.

TRADE

DECLINE IN EXPORTS OF TOBACCO TO HOLLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Dickey (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) a question in connection with the decline of exports of Canadian tobacco to Holland. His question may be found at page 5829 of Hansard for Friday, June 11. Inquiries have been made in this respect and I can now inform the house that the decline in Canadian exports of tobacco to The Netherlands can be attributed to the fact that our sales in that market in recent years have been made up of lower grades of tobacco. As a result of favourable growing and marketing conditions in Canada we have not had as much of these grades of tobacco for export during the last two or three years.

SUPPLY

WHEAT—MARKETING OF SURPLUS

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Prudham for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Harkness, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain).

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had a speech prepared that could in no sense be described as a controversial speech, but in view of some of the statements made during the debate yesterday perhaps I will not be able to conclude my remarks without making some critical references to some of the statements made.

The hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) spent some time dealing with what this proposal is likely to cost the treasury of Canada. He estimated, first of all, that it might cost the taxpayers $100 million, or perhaps $130 million, or, if the price really went down, it might cost $260 million.

The conclusion one would draw from his remarks would be that the Canadian farmer should be left holding the bag. We are in a critical position. Our whole argument is that all of Canada should stand behind the wheat producers at this critical time and I hope, before I conclude, that I will be able to demonstrate that this is not an unreasonable request.

Let me remind the hon. member for Eglinton that a year ago, on May 6 to be exact, he and members of his party who were here were prepared to support a price for wheat 25 cents higher than the price proposed by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). Of course, it could happen that the election last year might have been a factor in this regard, but the hon. member for Eglinton and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) and all the other Conservative members who were here were quite prepared to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Assiniboia at that time. That amendment appears on page 4856 of Hansard for May 6, 1953, and reads as follows:

this house is of the opinion that consideration should be given to an increase of 25 cents in the initial payment for No. 1 Northern wheat basis in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver for the crop year beginning August 1, 1953, so that the said initial payment will be $1.65 per bushel.

If that was a good proposal a year ago I submit that the proposal which is before us now is also a good one. I think it is not unreasonable to expect the government of Canada to take some responsibility for supporting the price of wheat.

I might mention to hon. members opposite that apparently only two of the Liberal members from Saskatchewan who voted against this proposal a year ago came back to parliament after the election. They were the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Harrison), and the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Studer). Apparently it was not too easy for other hon. members to justify their stand in the province of Saskatchewan.

I wish to make it very clear that the members of this group in supporting this subamendment are not criticizing in any way the wheat board or orderly marketing. We have made it quite clear that we would be most unhappy if the opposition should be called upon to look after the marketing of farm products.

I should mention that the share of national income that went to agriculture during the years when the Conservatives were last in power amounted to 7·6 per cent in 1930, 2·9 per cent in 1931, 4·1 per cent in 1932, 3 per cent in 1933, and 6 per cent in 1934. Now, I am not satisfied with the 8·8 per cent of the national income which went to agriculture in 1953, but I must admit very frankly that having 8·8 per cent of the national income is a great deal better than having 2·9 per cent, and the fact that the people of Saskatchewan have been unwilling to elect Conservative members to the legislature since 1929 would indicate that they are very unhappy when they think of the terrible years during the thirties. Therefore, I would like to make it very clear again that we support the wheat board and orderly marketing.

Now, the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) should perhaps be reminded that this is not a motion of want of confidence in the government. If this motion should carry, the procedure would be exactly as it was in August, 1946, when we had a similar motion before the house and when the hon. member for Rosthern and I voted on the same side on this important issue. Let me remind the house of the nature of the amendment which I had the honour to move on August 27, 1946. This appears on page 5425 of August 27, 1946, and reads as follows:

This house desires to record its opinion that consideration should be given to the continuance of the milk subsidy so as to ensure adequate return to milk producers and make possible the consumption of milk for the nutrition of the Canadian people without any further increase in the price thereof to the consumers.

When the vote was called the hon. member for Rosthern and I were on the same side, and the vote was 69 for and 41 against, and the government at that time was not defeated. The present Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) then moved that the house go into committee of supply and the business of the house was then continued.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if it was in order for the hon. member for Rosthern to vote for a principle he thought then was sound it would be quite in order for him to vote now in support of the subamendment which is before the house.

However, I take it that he is opposed to the content of the subamendment and he does not think the taxpayers of Canada should be called upon to place any floor under the price of wheat. He thinks that the farmers should engage in a price war with our powerful neighbours to the south who have all the resources of their treasury to subsidize wheat for export.

Mr. Tucker: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member knows that he is not correctly representing what I said. I said I believed the Liberal party believes in the principle of floor prices and that they believe in giving a square deal to the farmer in order to see that he gets his fair share of the national income. That policy I support. But I do not support a motion which upholds the idea that the whole marketing system has failed.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, that statement sounds as though it confirms what I previously stated, namely that the hon. member for Rosthern is not prepared to support any legislation that will give the farmers an assurance that the price of wheat is not going to go down into the cellar again.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Speaker, I am supporting a government which has said that it will make an initial payment which will constitute a fair floor. That is exactly what I am supporting. The hon. member is misrepresenting the situation.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member made a speech yesterday. I see no reason why he should make two or three speeches today. The other members on his side of the house will have a chance to carry on the debate.

The news which the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) broke last week was received all over the world with a great deal of interest. I notice in the air edition of the London Times of June 11 there is a story which mentions "hint of a further cut in the price, Canadian carry-over August 1,557 million, four times Britain's annual imports". It points out that during the first nine months of the crop year Canadian exports were down 25 per cent, United States exports down 44 per cent and Australian exports down 36 per cent. That day the Baltic exchange quoted Canadian wheat via the St. Lawrence £28.10s.2d.; via Vancouver £27.14s.6d. The price for Australian wheat for June and July indicates that already there is a little war on: £25.12s.6d.; Argentine wheat £24.10s.0d. I notice that Russia was offering wheat on sample June at £25.0s.0d. The Liverpool price for July 21s.10d.; for October 19s.7d.; December 19s.2d.

From Melbourne there is a dispatch to this effect:

Sir John Teasdale, chairman of the Australian wheat board, issued a statement on the situation caused by the Canadian cut. He would not know the new export price of Australian wheat till the London market had steadied in about a week.

He said that at the meeting next week of the international wheat council, the three main exporting countries would seek an explanation as to why some importing countries had bought such a small percentage of their agreed quotas for the year ending July 31. By May 2, Australia had sold half her quota, Canada 48 per cent, United States 47 per cent.

And a dispatch from Adelaide on June 9:

T. C. Stott, M.P., general secretary of the Australian wheat growers federation, said the Canadian decision to cut the price of wheat was the first step in a price war which would mean the end of the international wheat agreement, and a disastrous slump in prices. There were one billion bushels of wheat stored in Canada and United States which nobody wanted to buy because the regular importers had large stocks. However, there was no reason why the wheat should not be stored indefinitely until such a time as it could be sold at a reasonable price.

I notice in the Montreal Gazette of yesterday the following heading, "Wheat Sale Price War Said Looming", and from London this story:

At the same time, there is a strong undercurrent of sympathy for Australian and Canadian wheat growers, who are regarded as members of the family who have struck a bad patch.

While the American farmer will suffer no loss of income since the U.S. administration supports prices, the Australian and Canadian grower has no such cushion.

Then in today's Montreal Gazette there is an article headed "Readjustment of Wheat Prices to Provide Headache for IWC". It mentions that some of the things discussed were as follows:

1. Additional export price reductions.
2. Reduction to the IWA minimum price of $1.55 a bushel, thereby asking importing countries to honour their quotas in full.

A third alternative, considered highly improbable because nobody in or out of the IWA wants it, is a cut-throat price war which should shatter the IWA and rebound severely on world trade as a whole.

And still one more story in last night's Toronto Telegram.

The Telegram's Washington correspondent James Minifie, reports that the Eisenhower administration has brought in Clarence Francis, head of the giant General Foods Corporation, to mastermind the sale, or the disposition, of U.S. food surpluses on foreign markets. He will take what they will bring, cash or barter, from either side of the iron curtain. That cut of a dime a bushel in the price of wheat for overseas buyers obviously was only Washington getting started.

Then I notice that our western papers are naturally greatly interested in this crisis which is developing. I would suggest that the editorial writer in the Regina Leader-Post should read the dispatches from their able correspondents in the gallery. To anyone from Saskatchewan it would appear that the writer of this editorial was living in a different country. It goes out to criticize the C.C.F. and Social Credit members for asking that the taxpayers of Canada absorb the loss involved in this 10⅛-cent cut. They point out that this will be an annual handout of $50 million. Apparently the editorial writer for the Leader-Post and the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) were unable to get together on their figures. However, both of them are complaining in derogatory terms about the rest of Canada giving a handout to these wheat farmers who come hat in hand. But the editorial writer for the Star-Phoenix approaches the problem from a different angle. He points out that there were four main proposals that should receive careful consideration. First of all, he says that the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce indicates that there are further cuts coming; the second point he makes is that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Assiniboia that all the taxpayers should take up any loss should be considered. He also comments on the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) that these cuts are going to have far-reaching effects which will not be confined to western Canada. The fourth interesting commentary is on the fact that dispatches from London indicate that the British newspapers do not view this as an unmixed blessing. They are concerned about the effect that this is going to have on world trade.

From the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has come their June dispatch which complains about the diminishing share of the national income going to the farmer, taking into consideration the farm cost of living. The real net farm income in 1953 was 10 per cent lower than in 1952 and 25 per cent lower than in the peak year of 1951. Using the five years 1925-29 as the base period, the parity ratio reached a peak of 111 for 1948, fell to 106 in 1949, rose to 110 in 1951 and fell for two years to the low level of 87·4. At the present time the cost of goods and services purchased by farmers averaged 3 per cent higher in 1951 whereas the wholesale price of farm products averaged 18 per cent lower. Just this morning I received a letter from the Manitoba farmers union, a letter addressed to all western members of the House of Commons, and it suggests with respect to the very bad news announced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) last week that it is hard for western farmers to believe that the government expects them to compete with the United States treasury. They remind us of the statement made by the late prime minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, in his radio broadcast of December 4, 1943, when he said:

> If to help win the war the farmers are asked to accept ceiling prices, we believe they are entitled to a floor under prices to assure them against agricultural depression after the war.

I must take some responsibility for the fact that those of us from western Canada have not done the best public relations job in presenting the problem to our people. I came here in 1940 from an area that had very rough times all during the thirties. I considered that it was one of my duties to try to see that the people whom I represented had their fair share of the national income. I probably could be open to the criticism that the conditions I described possibly did not represent the facts for everybody in the area, but that was the area to which those people came who had lost everything in the drought areas of the province in order that they could start over again on heavy bush land. I admit very frankly that during the last ten years the people of my constituency have handled a good deal more money than they did in the previous ten years, but we are not going to be satisfied until we have our fair share of the national income.

I think all farm organizations and farm members from the western provinces have somehow or other given the impression to other hon. members of the house that we are crying blue ruin and are always asking for something which is unreasonable. I resent that suggestion very much. In the present crisis we do not want something that the rest of the people of Canada cannot and should not give. I am sorry that I was not a member of the house but was on the farm at the time the debate took place regarding the $65 million that was spent by the people of this country to reimburse the western farmers, but I have heard at least a dozen times since returning to the house that we gouged the treasury for $65 million.

I am sure the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) will not object to my reminding him that he defended the cause of the western farmers on the ground that during the war years the price of their product was fixed at a figure that did not give them the cost of production. The minister, speaking on July 29, 1944, said as reported at page 5624 of Hansard:

> I was careful to see that there was nothing in the bill which said that we were going to base any decision on the cost of production. The cost of production may be only a part of the consideration. I think it is possible the board might determine that the farmer should have considerably more than his cost of production because of some other experience he has had in order to get through the transitional period in a proper position.

The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair) who, I am very sorry to see, is unable to be with us, made a very good speech during that debate. It is to be found at page 1081 of Hansard of March 9, 1951. He placed on the record some figures that have been played around with in connection with the loss suffered by the wheat farmers because of the British wheat agreement. I am not going to take any time in arguing that if there had not been an international wheat agreement we would have been able to sell all our wheat during those years at the maximum class II price. However, the hon. member for Battle River gave a total figure of $431,676,000 as the alleged amount that the wheat farmers lost because of the wheat agreement, and I think that somewhere between that amount and the $65 million a figure could be set which would be fair.

But I think there can be no argument about the other figures that the hon. member for Battle River placed on the record. They have to do with the losses suffered by the farmers as the result of subsidizing Canadian consumers during the period from 1946 to 1949 inclusive. He gives totals of $34 million, $21 million, $65 million, $9 million and $6 million for the various years, or a grand total of $136 million. I do not think there is any doubt about it that all the people of Canada enjoyed the benefit of having cheap bread all through that period at the expense of the farmers, who were obliged to buy their farm machinery at prices that were going up every day and every week. All the farmers of western Canada, regardless of their political views, feel that the $65 million voted by the government of the day was no handout but was a very niggardly settlement in payment of an obligation of all the taxpayers of Canada to a group that had produced wheat at low prices during the war and after the war.

After saying that, I admit very frankly that the situation at this time does present a most serious problem. I am not going to minimize it, and it is not likely that members of this group will be over on the government side in the immediate future and have the opportunity to solve it. But I want to outline some fundamental principles. I want to suggest that it should not be a serious problem for the Canadian people to do in peacetime what they did in wartime. The minister of finance of that time outlined the fiscal policy when he said that whatever is physically possible will be made financially possible. Since that was a good policy in wartime it is likewise a good policy in peacetime.

We really should not be concerned about having produced so much foodstuffs in the country that we do not know what to do about it. I want to emphasize again that those who live in industrial cities, those who are lawyers and storekeepers, are going to feel the impact of this trend very shortly. As a matter of fact the situation did not develop in the past week. It has been on our doorstep. It so happened that the government delayed action until near the end of the session. As an indication that these problems affect all of us, may I say that I note in the last weekly bulletin of the dominion bureau of statistics that 78 per cent more commercial failures were recorded under the bankruptcy and winding-up acts in the first quarter of this year than in the first quarter of last year. The last issue of the Labour Gazette points out, as does the federation of agriculture, that farm income dropped 13 per cent in 1953 and was down 23 per cent in 1952. They draw our attention to the problem in the United States and point out that one union there reported 400,000 unemployed, that there are over 300,000 coal miners unemployed and 250,000 steelworkers. In the United States there are 950,000 listed as unemployed in three industries alone. In Canada that trend is going to develop. As the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr Howe) will agree, the farm implement industry workers, the automobile workers and the textile workers have all been to Ottawa since we came here last November to place their problems before us and ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce to take action.

Naturally, I am concerned about the problem of wheat and what we are going to do. I am indebted to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) for some words of wisdom he used when he spoke to the last annual meeting of the federation of agriculture. He said:

> —any government—these days is in trouble with some of the people all of the time, most of the people some of the time, but not, I hope, with all of the people all of the time.

It seems to me that the people I have the honour of representing have been in trouble with the government all the time. The minister quoted from the poet Willa Cather, who said:

> Life is hard for most people, and when it is easy, it is hardest of all.

After making that quotation, I guess the minister decided it probably was not very appropriate for the group to whom he was speaking, so he quickly added:

> There are times, however, I must confess, when I find it difficult to accept that philosophy that a life of ease is really a life of hardship and vice versa.

The problem that is going to confront the wheat producers is a matter with which I feel the government of this country is going to have to deal. I happen to be in the position where all my worldly possessions, such as they are, are tied up in farmland and equipment. I do not want sympathy from this house or from anyone. If it is a decision that Canadian overseas markets will not absorb large quantities of wheat in the years to come, let us make that decision, but do not freeze the farmers out at this time of year. As the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) pointed out, last year on April 27 the Minister of Trade and Commerce announced that the initial price in 1953 for wheat would be not less than $1.40. He has been involved in some discussion during this debate, but he has not yet said what the price for wheat will be for the 1954-55 crop. He did say there would be an interim payment, but he did not say that all the wheat that is now on the western farms will be accepted at the present initial price and that there will be an interim payment on all the grain that has been grown in the year 1953.

Until the minister is prepared to make a further commitment on these two points, the fact that all the wheat grown last year will be accepted at the prevailing initial price and that there will be a further payment on all the wheat grown last year, western farmers are going to be in a period of uncertainty. If the government decides that we are not going to be able to sell a large volume of grain, there is no point in western wheat producers trying to compete with the United States. But I suggest that is a decision the government could make, and that the government must make. Again I want to remind the house that twice during my lifetime a Conservative government and then a Liberal government came into the field to take over the marketing of the farmers' wheat during wartime. During the first world war the government stepped in and prevented wheat from going up to a probable $5 per bushel. During the second war when it appeared as though wheat were going up again, the government came into the picture and prevented the farmers from having all that the traffic would bear. Now that there is a large surplus of this product, I feel that the government cannot bail out without making some adjustment for the sins of commission in the past.

The Minister of Agriculture was good enough to refer to the position prevailing in the United States. I want to say again that I am happy I am living in Canada rather than in the United States. But I see no reason why our Department of Agriculture should not be willing to go as far in meeting the needs of the Canadian farmer as does the United States government. The United States government has this large surplus on hand, but they are in a different position. They can give all their surplus food away without having any serious repercussions on their own economy. This action would have a serious effect on our market, but we are not in that position. We export such a large percentage of our production that we cannot give away much without there being quite a drain on our economy.

We must face the facts. At the moment we have about four years' wheat supply for domestic consumption. At the end of the present crop year we will have about four years' supply of the total imports that the British would require. Well, with that situation I feel the Canadian government must look at the problem and must decide who are to take the consequences. I want to say to those who live in Ontario and Quebec that for 50 years it has been part of the policy of Canada to develop the great plains of the west on the theory that we would have overseas markets for unlimited quantities of grain. If that situation is changed, if European countries have now decided that as insurance against war they must increase their own production, subsidize their own production and cut down their imports from abroad, that creates a problem that vitally affects every Canadian.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada, rather than the prairie wheat producers, should deal with this problem and should face the facts. In the United States they try to deal fairly with the farmer. One farmer has defined the parity price this way:

> If you can sell a truckload of wheat and buy with the money as much food, clothing, building materials, farm machinery, fertilizer, and the like as you could in the five years, 1910-1914, your wheat is selling at the parity price.

That is all the farmers want. They want to be able to sell a truckload of wheat and buy the other commodities produced in Canada.

The Minister of Agriculture had a good deal to say about cutting down acreage. He may remember that during the war he asked the Canadian farmers to help win the war by growing less wheat, by cutting down their production.

Mr. Gardiner: And paid them for it.

Mr. Nicholson: Yes, and paid them for it. There is no reason why the Minister of Agriculture should not go to the farmers again and say, "We are sorry; we cannot use or sell all the wheat you have been growing. You have made your contribution to the Canadian economy, and we want to play fair with you." I submit that if Canadian farmers were able to get prices like the United States farmers of $2.18 a bushel, there is not a farmer of whom I know who would not be willing to drastically reduce his wheat acreage to get that sort of price. The weekly Searle grain report gives us the comparative prices for wheat, and shows that at Portal, North Dakota, the price was $2.13, whereas at North Portal, Saskatchewan, it was $1.43. I believe everybody will agree that the farmers south of the line buy their machinery at lower prices, as well as their gasoline and other commodities. Their operating costs are lower than in Canada.

May I say a word about the international situation? I feel we must face the fact that $2,000 million per year is a very large amount for Canada to be putting into our defence expenditures. I do not feel we can treat our farmers as has been proposed. It is inevitable that we have some soft spots in our economy if we are going to put such a large amount into national defence. The $2,000 million that we are putting into national defence is not, I think, giving us the best results in this race in which we are engaged, in an effort to prevent the spread of communism.

Lord Boyd Orr said this:

> The most urgent material need of the world today is food. Prolonged hunger causes social and political unrest, and hinders co-operation, not only between nations, but even within nations. Already the fear of another war casts its shadow on mankind. Statesmen are finding difficulties in laying the foundations of permanent world peace . . . But man and his governments have their eyes on the wrong goal. Hunger is at the heart of the world's troubles. Unless people are fed, the best treaties and agreements can come to nothing. Hungry people cannot be satisfied by anything but food.

I notice that recently in the American congress representative Wiley, chairman of the committee on foreign relations, said this about surpluses:

> I do not view the C.C.C. stocks as an embarrassment to be disposed of as quietly and quickly as possible. I view them rather as assets . . . which we are lucky to have. They are also a challenge. Surely a people who can produce the hydrogen bomb has the ingenuity not to let butter spoil in government warehouses while some are hungry? It would be downright immoral to allow such a thing to happen. The conscience of the American people would not allow it.
>
> They should devote more effort to utilizing this bounty, and less to penalizing its producers . . . Any other country in the world that was blessed with $350 million worth of dairy products would give thanks—not rap anybody's knuckles.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) suggested the other night that there are no longer any hungry people in the world, that nobody wants our wheat. But that is not the way we hear it from the food and agriculture organization. That organization tells us that a large group of mankind, more than a billion human beings, never get enough food for health, growth and full physical development. Those people are poor. Their food consists mainly of grain, starchy roots and tubers. These peoples are found in some parts of Africa, Europe and Central America. They may also be found in parts of the most prosperous countries, including our own.

So I think we can agree that, internationally, we should do everything within our power to see that surplus foods are made available to all who are hungry, and that in Canada no one should run short of food. It is pointed out in a newspaper report that an American sergeant gets as much pay as a French colonel. Maybe that does not create any problem for the American sergeant, but I do submit that it creates a problem for the French army. And it creates a problem for us at the present time, when we have such a high standard of living in this country, and yet seem to be unwilling as a people to share the excess.

So I submit that in offering this amendment we are merely asking that all the people of Canada stand behind the wheat producers in this particular crisis.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

In the earlier part of his remarks the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) made a statement which conveyed the impression that on May 6, 1953, my colleagues and I —and he referred to me particularly—had voted in this house in favour of a C.C.F. amendment in terms similar to that now under debate.

I could not believe my ears, and sent for Hansard. I find that Hansard for May 6, 1953, at page 4857, gives the following as the text of the C.C.F. amendment then under debate on a motion to resolve the house into committee of supply:

> That all the words after the word "That" to the end of the question be struck out and the following words be substituted therefor:
>
> "this house is of the opinion that consideration should be given to an increase of 25 cents in the initial payment for No. 1 Northern wheat basis in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver for the crop year beginning August 1, 1953, so that the said initial payment will be $1.65 per bushel."

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that I voted for that amendment, and it is also a fact that my Conservative colleagues voted for it. But it is not a fact, as the hon. member's words convey, that that amendment was of the same nature, for the same purpose or to the same effect as the amendment now under debate. On the contrary, it was of a very different nature. It related purely and simply to the amount of the initial payment for the crop year 1953-54. That is a far cry from a motion under which the C.C.F. now invite the house to subscribe to a policy of establishing a floor price of $1.82½ per bushel indefinitely. The two things are quite different.

I wish to make it perfectly clear that there is nothing inconsistent in the position we took on May 6, 1953, in supporting a proposal for an increase in the initial price for the crop year 1953-54, and the position we now take against the present C.C.F. amendment. The two matters are quite different.

I wish to say emphatically that the impression that would have been created by the remarks of the hon. member in this respect is entirely misleading.

Mr. H. P. Mang (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I realize the house is ready to get on with other business—and rightly so—and I do not want to increase its restiveness to any degree at all. But since reference was made to me by my good neighbour to the south, the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) I think I would be lacking in courtesy if I did not say something at this time.

I appreciate very much his deep concern at my not having done credit to myself the other day, when I offered a few remarks. I wish to thank him for his concern and express the hope that as time goes on his estimation of me may improve.

In his speech the hon. member tried to indicate that my knowledge of the western farm situation was superficial, to say the least. He made special reference to what I had said about seeing the ships moving these millions of bushels of grain before my very eyes from Fort William, and suggested that my reference to that was indicative of the fact that I have only a superficial knowledge and appreciation of the difficulties we may be having in the west.

Unfortunately this is but another illustration of the methods so often employed by my friends in the C.C.F. out in our fair province of Saskatchewan. They will take one small illustration out of one's statement, as he has done with what I said the other day, and from it judge one's attitude on a situation. The hon. member did not refer to the fact that I had indicated that in Canada we are in a period of readjustment. He did not refer to the fact that we want as high a price as possible in western Canada for our grain. He did not refer to the fact that I said that if we had to take the lead in this economic adjustment taking place throughout the world in this post-war period, when we are entering into a competitive world market, we would expect an adjustment in the prices of the machinery which enters into the cost of production.

All these salient facts I tried to point out in humble, perhaps not as parliamentary language as he can use, but nevertheless I expressed them at that time. He merely used that one expression of mine with respect to keeping these millions of bushels of grain moving. That sort of thing is not new to us out in Saskatchewan. We know that if there is any group of people who shy away from facts it is that group that is represented on the other side of the house; although I should inform the house that gradually reasonableness is beginning to assert itself, and more and more we find the members opposite from Saskatchewan drifting away from the actual feeling of the people who elected them. That was illustrated the other day when I quoted this pamphlet entitled "Saskatchewan Invites you", which is broadcast throughout the world by the Saskatchewan government at the international fair at Toronto.

[Mr. Mang.]

As the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Harrison) said yesterday, we can expect these people to go north, and you can look for them in the south. Well, it so happens that the two divergent pictures presented by the party in Saskatchewan are both north and south. What we hear in the house is entirely different from the picture that is presented to Canada and the rest of the world by the officials of the Saskatchewan government.

For the information of the house, and for the information of the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough), I have had some connection with the growing of wheat, and also have been in touch with marketing agencies. As a matter of fact, when the wheat pool was first organized I, in my own little corner, did what I could in the organization in that area, and you will find a good many wheat pool contracts that I signed up some thirty years ago. I was with the wheat pool organization at that very critical time that was dealt with by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) yesterday. From 1929 to 1931 I was with the field service department of that organization, and it was my duty at that time to travel throughout the province from Lloydminster to the Manitoba boundary, and in a great many points throughout the province, explaining the difficulties that the wheat pool got into at that time with regard to the so-called overpayment when the price was raised beyond what conditions warranted.

I intended to deal with that period, but the Minister of Agriculture did it yesterday in a very much more able manner than I could. I mention that to show that it is not just a question of observing ships on lake Superior that indicates my general knowledge of and attitude toward conditions in the west. Then, too, I have known personally every one of the members of the present wheat board, because it so happens that all of them, with the exception of the last one, Mr. Robertson, who was added from the grain trade of western Canada recently, went through this experience of the period of the wheat pool together. Mr. McIvor, Mr. McNamara, Mr. Riddel and Mr. Davidson; I knew all these people in 1929. They have had the experience of the ups and downs in marketing grain in the international markets of the world, and I do not think you will find anywhere in the world a more capable board to handle grain and to sell our grain than the wheat board as constituted at the present time.

Then, too, I have grown grain, or tried to grow it, in the hungry 1930's. No one needs to tell me just what the difficulties were. I sold rye for 11 cents a bushel. A few years ago I sold rye for $3.85 a bushel. I did not hit the high of $4.11. It just goes to show that I have had some experience with the vagaries of the markets of the world with respect to making a living on a farm. So much for that.

I have tried to keep in touch with all of the municipalities in my riding, and this brings me to the point of the picture that is being given us by hon. members, which is at variance with the picture that is given us by the government of Saskatchewan in the publication I quoted the other day. I have kept in touch with all the municipalities in my constituency of Qu'Appelle even before I came down here. I wrote to them throughout the winter, asking them to bring any difficulties that they may have in which I could be of service. Well, I was able to be of some service in the distribution of box cars and so on, not that everything desired was done, but by simply pressing along for action. I do not say that I was any more successful than anyone else, but I have been in close touch with them.

The economic picture that is being presented, the picture of catastrophe and imminent collapse in western Canada alongside the picture that is being painted to us and to the rest of the world of this huge surplus that we have out there does not agree. What do hon. members think will be the effect upon our buyers and the rest of the world? On the one hand we are just on the brink of economic collapse, and on the other we have tremendous wheat surpluses. Will the buyers of wheat not be inclined to say that those fellows are just about at the end of their tether? These people are in the position where they are not able to carry on, and we shall be able to get that wheat cheaper. I would say that by the talk of the members opposite and by their actions they are helping to drive down the price of wheat in the world markets. I do not say that is the only factor. I do not give them credit for that much international influence, but I do insist that more harm has been done by this eternal talk of ruin, collapse and distress and about going back to the 1930's, than perhaps by any other factor in the markets of the world.

Those traders know how much wheat we have, but they do not always know the details of our local particular economic situation. But thanks to our friends opposite they are being enlightened to a very great degree. I think that is what is in the mind of the Saskatchewan government when it is trying to nullify, when it is trying to minimize, what we are being told by opposition members of the house.

Wheat—Marketing of Surplus

For some two months now a great deal has been said about the distressing conditions in the west, how we shall not be able to put in our crop for lack of funds, and the difficulty that we shall have in regard to operating our farms, and so on. When the Minister of Agriculture was premier of Saskatchewan, in the most distressing period that Saskatchewan ever went through, it was my privilege to serve under him. We had on the statute books legislation which provided government guarantees to municipalities to assist in putting in crops and helping with summer fallow, and so on. Last spring, when this talk was going on in the House of Commons by hon. members opposite, the Saskatchewan government, under the department of municipal affairs, at the head of which is my friend Mr. McIntosh, made a survey by means of a questionnaire in which it was attempted to summarize conditions and to focus the need for assistance to individuals in the municipalities of the province. I have a copy of the questionnaire here, which I obtained at Easter, and which went into it in some detail. Each councillor was asked to make a survey of conditions and this was to be used as a basis for action. Now, what happened? How widespread and acute was this distress? The other day I said there was a dollar shortage in the west. But that dollar shortage is due to the very same reasons which have resulted in a dollar shortage in eastern Canada. As soon as people are out of their jobs for three or four months and swell the ranks of the unemployed, then they have little cash to fall back upon for the very simple reason that they have spent most of the money they had earned.

We have had more money during the last three years than ever before and that is proven not by me but by the statistics which make it quite clear that while the farm cash income in the rest of Canada declined over the past two years, the whole of Saskatchewan farm cash income increased in 1953 from what it was in 1952 and prior to that; and indeed, the actual figure is $711·4 million for 1953.

The reason for the dollar shortage is obviously due to the fact that we have spent that money in paying our debts, buying machinery, and making other improvements, and while we may not have the money we have at least the value therefor. In the very same fashion, many a good business finds itself in difficulties because it has not got the ready cash, though it has good assets. Many of our people in both the west and the east are in much the same position. They have spent their money in buying automobiles, television, radios, homes and other things, and once they are out of a job for two or three months they are in a difficult position. This is followed by requests that the government through the taxpayer of Canada should at once begin to employ 500,000 people. Now we are being asked to give the people in Saskatchewan some consideration, and I am all for it, provided the need is there.

Ever since 1935 this government has never left western Canada in the lurch. Under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act many dams have been constructed to alleviate the distress which occurred in previous years; also the $65 million, which was referred to a short time ago, was provided by this parliament. I might add that it was not easy for hon. members of this parliament, particularly on this side of the house, to vote for this grant, because there was some doubt on the part of eastern and B. C. members at that time that we were fully entitled to this $65 million. But there was never a word of thanks from the other side of the house in this regard. On behalf of the people in the west I want to thank members of this house for taking the view that such a payment was necessary, and supporting the proposal so ably put forward by the Minister of Agriculture at that time. It was at some political sacrifice that some of the hon. members from eastern Canada voted for this measure because they found themselves in a very precarious position when they sought re-election, and some hon. members sacrificed their political lives to give us that $65 million. I wish to again thank the government and the Prime Minister for taking such a fair attitude toward the prairie farmer.

In regard to the present situation I might add that I am not the least bit concerned about the government coming to our aid when there is a real need. When we have to cry "wolf" I am quite sure the government will come to our rescue and give whatever assistance is possible. But this cry of "wolf, wolf" before the wolf has actually arrived is liable to bring about the same distress as that which was brought about in that old fable we all know so well.

I might point out that we in Saskatchewan have legislation fully capable of dealing with distress conditions such as have been pictured here by the opposition, but which have not yet arrived. The legislation to which I refer is the good Liberal legislation which is on the statute books of Saskatchewan at the present time. In this regard I would like to point out that Premier Douglas, speaking at the annual convention of the rural municipal association of Saskatchewan, dealt with this situation. I would like to quote his remarks as reported in the News, of Wolseley, Saskatchewan, on Wednesday, June 2, 1954. The report reads as follows:

> The Saskatchewan government will this year extend the provisions of the municipal seed grain and seed supply act to cover assistance to farmers on summerfallowing operations, Premier T. C. Douglas said in Regina Friday.
>
> Speaking at the annual convention of the rural municipal secretary-treasurers' association of Saskatchewan, Mr. Douglas said municipal secretaries would soon be notified of the change.
>
> The act provides for provincial guarantee of bank loans to municipalities, the money to be used to assist farmers to meet seeding costs.
>
> "The government has made it clear that this assistance is again available this year and has decided to notify municipalities that it is prepared to have the legislation apply to summerfallow as well as seeding," the premier said.
>
> He said that, in the main, municipalities have not felt it was necessary to apply for aid under the act this year but the legislation is there for any municipality wishing to take advantage of it.
>
> Reason for extending the act to cover summerfallow expenses was the difficulty of marketing the 1953 crop, he said.

I would like to draw hon. members' attention to what follows:

> Sales of wheat were beginning to pick up and the situation is more hopeful, he said, but it is not expected that the quota on deliveries will be raised above seven bushels an acre in this crop year which ends July 31.

In effect, Mr. Douglas is saying that the situation is more hopeful and that the grain is moving. Now, how can we reconcile that with the statements we have heard in this house? Premier Douglas was addressing one of the most responsible elected bodies we have in Saskatchewan, a body which is noted for its reasonableness in its approach to local as well as general problems affecting the west. It is sometimes called the unofficial parliament of Saskatchewan, and the reasonable people who comprise that body can be counted upon to give a true interpretation of what conditions really are.

Now, I do not wish to put facts and figures on the record with respect to the production or marketing of wheat because it has been my observation that facts and figures, particularly facts, can be marshalled and will not convince those they are intended to convince. You can build a granite pyramid of facts and it would have absolutely no effect on some people in this house. They are in much the same position, I am afraid, as that of the old gentleman who visited the zoo for the first time. I do not know what his political persuasion was, but he arrived at the cage in which the giraffe was installed. He had never seen a giraffe before. He looked at it; took off his glasses; rubbed his glasses, put them on again; looked at it again; folded his glasses up, put them in his pocket, and said: "I just do not believe it."

Some people in this house have the same attitude towards facts. I do not apply this to the people who elected some of our friends opposite in Saskatchewan because many of them are finding that reasonableness is catching up with them, and I might add that I have not a single personal enemy in that whole group. As a matter of fact, some of them voted for me. Indeed, if I may let a secret out, some of the Conservatives voted for me. They thought that I was a reasonable kind of guy. That is the general attitude there, namely one of reasonableness.

I want to draw attention to one or two attitudes relative to wheat marketing that perhaps have not been emphasized. The opposition is in a peculiar situation. They go to great pains to say that the record of the wheat board is all right. The Conservative group speaks a little bit gingerly about that system. In fact I noticed that here and there the gentlemen I admire very much, namely the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness), touched upon the matter of the present system of wheat marketing a bit gingerly. But there are some people immediately opposite me who proclaim their adherence to the wheat board and yet at the same time try to condemn the government. They praise the wheat board for selling the wheat and condemn the government for not selling it. They praise the wheat board—and here I will work in a figure or two—for selling wheat to 67 different countries of the world the year before last, for selling wheat to nearly 80 countries of the world last year, and for selling, in the year 1952-53, into the export markets of the world more wheat that did the United States during the same period. Of course those are facts. But some of my friends directly opposite—and I refer particularly to the members sitting in the house and not to the general membership of that party out in the country—when they have facts approach them, think they have something undesirable to deal with, and they will take hold of that fact and twist and contort it until that fact shrieks and screams for help. On the other hand, if there is a beautiful theory that approaches them—a theory all dressed up in "buttons and bows", they immediately lock arms and walk down the street with it. They love theories and they deplore facts. The more bold the fact is, the more is that fact to be challenged and demolished if possible. That situation comes about, of course, owing to the suspicious nature of some people. What I mean is this. Some things look so good—and that is the situation in connection with the marketing of grain up to the present time—that it is hard to believe them; they say there must be something wrong; it cannot be that good, just as they say that about this wheat board report: sales cannot be that good. It took them by surprise. I think there are going to be some heart to heart talks among the C.C.F. I think perhaps the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) is out in Saskatchewan right now trying to clear the matter up out in the west.

But I must not transgress any longer, Mr. Speaker. I have tried to remind the house that, as far as wheat is concerned, the wheat board is selling wheat. As far as the government is concerned, it is the policy of this government—as it was the policy of the pool when I was associated with it, with the exception of one unfortunate experience—to sell wheat wherever there is a possible market for it. How much plainer than that can you make a policy? It is the policy of this government to sell wheat. I say to my hon. friends: Read your wheat board report. If you do not believe it, I am sorry for you. I cannot help you, much as I should like to do so.

If we have to make a readjustment, well and good. I think most people are realizing that we may have to make a readjustment and that it will be good business to do so. A country of 15 million people—men, women and children—cannot possibly buy a billion bushels of wheat. I want to remind the house that the hon. member for Assiniboia said not a million, but he said: Canada should store up a billion bushels of wheat to have for sale. By the time the taxpayer buys a billion bushels of wheat and by the time he catches up with his defence program and by the time the taxpayer employs 500,000 unemployed from one end of this country to the other, we shall perhaps be arriving at the ultimate objective of a certain political group operating in this country and which says that, if we want a really modern society, we should have state ownership and state control of the means of production, distribution and exchange and that therein lies the solution of all the economic difficulties of the world. If these policies are pursued, taxation will be so great that we shall eventually as individuals have to hand over to the state—for the buying of wheat, for the hiring of people and for all these different things that have been mentioned—so much of all that we earn that we shall have arrived at that idealistic state where we will live a system of state ownership and control of the means of production, distribution and exchange. I do not think the Canadian people want that.

Of course my friends of the Social Credit party in the extreme corner of the chamber to your left, Mr. Speaker, are very amiable gentlemen. But I do not see how they can hold some of the views they hold, considering what fine people they are. But whether we are dealing with wheat or whether we are dealing with any other problem, the solution inevitably brought forward by these people I look upon as unique. In many respects they agree with the rest of the people of Canada with respect to private enterprise as a main source of national wealth and so on, but they have one cure-all. That cure-all is illustrated in a story of many years ago, namely that of Aladdin and his lamp. As you will remember, Mr. Speaker, Aladdin was a young lad who found a lamp and by rubbing this lamp a genie would appear; he then could ask for anything that his heart desired and that would be added unto him. There is one thing that I have noticed and it is this. No matter what topic comes up for discussion, I almost know the last few paragraphs of every speech that comes from that corner of the house because they will proclaim this, which I call the Aladdin's lamp of finance. This Social Credit financial Aladdin's lamp theory is handed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), and then all he has to do is to rub that lamp and purchasing power—a phrase so glibly used—is at once abundant to all, whether in this country or any other country, and in that way we solve our difficulties. I wish the solution were that easy. I think the emblem that our friends should have or the badge that they should wear is a very simple one, namely this Aladdin's lamp which they could wear in their buttonholes, thus identifying themselves with this Utopian approach to all the difficulties of the world.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that I have taken so long at this time—

An hon. Member: And so are we.

Mr. Mang: —but I felt that I wanted to put forward a few explanations in view of the fact that I have been referred to upon several occasions. I apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the other members who are anxious to get on with the business for taking so long.

Mr. Blackmore: That is the most sensible thing the hon. member has said.

Mr. Mang: However, I wanted to put these few observations on the record.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is with some hesitancy that I rise because it seems that the motion which was introduced yesterday has come to be regarded by the hon. members on both sides of the house at the south end as a declaration of private war between the members for Saskatchewan on both sides of this house. It is perfectly true that occasionally, just so that it might not be regarded as too exclusive a war, there has been a very limited reference to the Conservative party in connection with this matter. That, however, was only a gesture of respect rather than any indication that the war was ceasing to be a private war. I do wish to get back to the basic discussion that we have before us, and I have no doubt that this private war will continue outside with the same vigour and refreshing references to ancient history that have characterized it both yesterday and today. Aladdin now joins Demosthenes in dealing with the problem of western wheat. Nevertheless, I would prefer that we come back to the immediate problem presented by the somewhat impressive reality that we are now just six weeks away from the beginning of a new crop year.

We are also confronted with the inescapable fact that we have an unprecedented surplus of wheat. We are confronted with the fact that we have an unprecedented accumulation of wheat on the farms. We are confronted with the fact that on the basis of present sales the accumulation now on the farms is going to be nothing compared with the accumulation there will be in the coming crop year unless something is done which has in no way been indicated to the hon. members of this house.

This is a particularly appropriate time to discuss this subject even though our simple resolution which declared the desire that there be a statement of policy has led to this private war from which I am now seeking to bring the house back at least for a time. I would point out that there is a special reason why this subject is of great and urgent importance in addition to the reality of the threat with which the farmers of western Canada are confronted. That is the fact that the 47-nation international wheat council, which has been described in dispatches as the parliament of the international wheat agreement, assembled this morning in London. This international parliament, which determines various problems under the international wheat agreement, is now at this very moment discussing in London matters of immense importance to the wheat producers of Canada.

When I directed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce a few days ago with regard to the representation that Canada would have at that 47-nation meeting in London and the instructions which would be given, we were told that of course the wheat board is an independent body. I must confess, whatever the criticism I may direct to the minister at any time, that he has not shown himself unaware of the details of the operation of the wheat board on ordinary occasions. I also have not found a reluctance on the part of the government to indicate some measure of satisfaction as to the part it has played in the operation of the wheat board, when that was convenient. It can of course be very convenient to cloak it with an atmosphere of independence that not one of us really believes it has. In fact it is only necessary to go back to the figures of forced sales just prior to the election last year to realize how unreal that cloak of independence really is. Nevertheless we can dispense with that.

We are confronted with the reality of this immense surplus. We are confronted with the fact that we are within six weeks of the new crop year. We are confronted with the fact that the farmers of western Canada have no statement from the government to guide them in planning for that new crop year. That applies not only to the farmers but also to the merchants, to those who will be handling the grain, to the railway companies and the shippers of the grain to distant points.

I am not suggesting that the difficulties confronting the government and wheat producers generally are not immense. We all know that there is a world problem emerging. Nevertheless this very government has boasted over and over again of the extent to which it has been willing to intervene with respect to various aspects of production. In fact it has on the statute books now wide open powers which permit it to intervene. It has claimed credit where that intervention was for good. Let it not deny its responsibility to intervene when we are confronted with a situation which in fairness we must concede is now on a world-wide scale. That is the subject that is being discussed in London at this moment by the 47-nation conference meeting there. Not only the house but the farmers of Canada should be informed what instructions the Canadian representatives at that meeting have been given.

Does the minister suggest for one moment that what has been described as the parliament of the international wheat agreement has Canadian representatives attending that parliament with not a hint of instructions from the government of Canada? There is not a member of the house who will believe for a moment that such is the situation. Most certainly some advice, some instructions, some indications, have been given, and it would be helpful to us to know what they are. Let us not have the answer that these are discussions which should not be rigid in advance. Of course they should not be rigid in advance. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) nevertheless did not hesitate to state to us certain aspects of Canadian policy at the time the Geneva conference was meeting. In fact he stated certain aspects of our policy on an earlier occasion before the conference even met. Here we have a very practical conference to deal with the problem of the world marketing of wheat under the international wheat agreement and there is more reason for giving us information because this is a business problem without some of those secret connotations of international discussions such as are taking place at Geneva.

It would be helpful to us and appropriate to know what the view of the government is with regard to these discussions and at least what they hope to attain at the conference even though their hopes may not be fulfilled. I also want to point out with reference to the remarks that have just been made that we are not touching this subject gingerly in any way. You know, I must admit there are some members of the Liberal party for whose opinion I have an increasing regard, but nevertheless they have absorbed the folklore of Liberalism without any of the corrective influences that would be presented by an opportunity to discuss some of the realities of history with them. In fact there are Liberals opposite who even seem to think that the wheat board is the product of the unlimited genius of the men opposite who have been extolled in such warm terms in the remarks we heard a short time ago.

Need it be recalled, just to deal with some aspects of his folklore of Liberalism, that it was the Bennett government that created the wheat board. In fact, while we do not always agree with the statements of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), it may be wise, in dispelling some of the visionary aspects of that folklore, to recall the simple, direct statement made by the Minister of Agriculture as recently as June 15, 1954, only yesterday, when he said, as found at page 6035 of Hansard:

> The government of Mr. Bennett brought down a bill to provide for the compulsory marketing of western grain through a wheat board.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): But they did not pass the legislation.

Mr. Drew: The legislation, Mr. Speaker, was introduced, and the legislation was the legislation which was carried forward by this government. It is one of the few cases in which this government showed wisdom which we can commend.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It was brought down on a voluntary basis.

Mr. Drew: I admit this government did withdraw some of the rather good features of it. Nevertheless, the basic features were retained. This government brought it under government control and did not give that measure of representation to the farmers themselves that was in the original concept of that board as presented by the Bennett government.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): History may be very untrue; read on from there.

Mr. Drew: May I suggest that if we are going to have another private war at this end between the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), they carry it on between themselves. I accept the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture that the government of Mr. Bennett brought down a bill to provide for the compulsory marketing of western grain through the wheat board.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Read on.

Mr. Drew: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I said I was referring to a small statement made by the minister, and I am not going to read it all because everybody knows the Minister of Agriculture does not make short statements. I am not going to read the whole of this rambling statement. I have referred to this statement about the wheat board, and it is clear. Let me read this, however, from page 6035 of Hansard for June 15, 1954:

> I must say, to the credit of the Bennett government of that day, that they brought down a bill which provided not only for compulsory marketing of wheat but compulsory marketing of all grain.

Mr. Gardiner: But they did not pass it; go on and read it.

Mr. Drew: We have heard the Minister of Agriculture on this subject many times, and undoubtedly he will be on it many times again. He has an opportunity to say what he likes, but surely he will not be critical if for once we take his words and accept them in their exact meaning. Incidentally, on this occasion they are clear and understandable.

May I just recall to the Minister of Agriculture that touching picture he once gave us of the three who sit together, and his words that Canada never needs to worry as long as these three hon. gentlemen are still here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Drew: The applause from the other side, Mr. Speaker, will indicate that the other members commend that situation in which the members abdicate their responsibility and leave with these three hon. gentlemen the supreme authority over the affairs of their party. Nevertheless, I would recall that on that occasion the thing that prompted these very modest remarks by the Minister of Agriculture, in which he said that as long as he and the other two were there everything would be all right, was the fact that there had been a definite difference of opinion expressed by the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. This difference was resolved by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent). It was the resolving of this difference that prompted the Minister of Agriculture to tell us all that, whatever difference might develop within that triumvirate, as long as the difference could be resolved by the Prime Minister all would be well in this difficult world.

The fact remains that we have something of the same kind today. I leave it there. If this private war is going to take place between the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and the Minister of Agriculture, then, let it take place. I simply want to point out, referring back to the folklore of Liberalism which I have mentioned, that we have the words of the Minister of Agriculture which indicate the extent to which there has been agreement in regard to the place of the wheat board. There has been agreement in regard to methods; there has been agreement in regard to the services that it has performed. So far as I am aware, that agreement extends into every part of this house.

One of the features in regard to the operation of that wheat board has been that, instead of a fixed floor price of the nature contemplated by the subamendment now proposed by the—

Mr. Knowles: C.C.F. party.

Mr. Drew:—C.C.F. party—I must admit that the names become transposed at times, and I do not know whether to call it the Liberal-Socialist or the Socialist-Liberal party, but we will call it the C.C.F. party. In regard to the C.C.F. party subamendment, may I point out that it refers to a fixed price which, under the situation that now exists, is unrealistic. This house, including the members of the C.C.F., have accepted a method of operation under the wheat board by which an initial price would be announced. It is true that that substantially had the effect of establishing a floor price. What we have pointed out is that for some years past that initial price has been announced prior to the seeding in the spring. It has been announced at a time which made it possible for the farmers to know where they were. It has been announced at a time that helped, in some measure, the planning of operations on the farm during that year.

It has been pointed out, and I think bears repeating, that in 1950, for the 1950-51 crop year, the initial price was announced on April 5. In 1951, for the 1951-52 crop year, it was announced on May 4. In 1952, for the 1952-53 crop year, it was announced on April 8. In 1953, for the 1953-54 crop year, it was announced on April 27. This is June 16, and that initial price has not yet been announced. It is in relation to that fact, Mr. Speaker, and to the general absence of any statement which indicates that the government is dealing with that problem, that we have brought forward our amendment. We believe it states something that the house can support and should support, and that is the need for some action by this government to deal with this situation.

We believe that one of the essential steps is to follow out this earlier practice, even at this late date. We believe that, without another day's delay, the initial price should be set. Please let us hope we are not going to have a statement by the government that the independent body, the wheat board, still has not notified them. We know of the compelling arguments that are presented to the wheat board by the government in regard to matters of that kind. We have the evidence of it. We know quite well the government is in a position to announce, as the minister has announced over and over again in the past, this initial price. It should be done, and without further delay.

An added reason why it should be done is that we are confronted with a situation very similar to that facing farmers of the United States, but very unlike their situation in other ways. One thing that undoubtedly causes difficulty in the minds of the western farmers is the extent to which the land that is so similar, north of the border, grows similar crops under very dissimilar arrangements. In the United States the price paid is $2.21 per bushel under the arrangement which they have. There is something more, however, which we should not ignore. There is a limitation of crop production which our farmers have shown no willingness and no desire to accept. These are realities. I am simply making a statement of the situation that indicates why it is so essential that we have a clear statement of Canadian policy and that we should not be just hanging on to the coat-tails of Uncle Sam at this time. Our position is different; the position of our farmers is different. The farmers of the United States do not feel the direct impact of these reductions in prices in the way it is felt by Canadian farmers. If there are to be further reductions, such as were at least contemplated in the statement made the other day by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), then let us remember that it will be the Canadian farmer who will feel the direct impact of those reductions.

These are all reasons why there should be some action now which will give to our farmers and to those who are associated with them—to the servicing organizations and the transportation organizations both by rail and water and otherwise—some knowledge of what they may expect, and particularly in this new crop year which begins just six weeks from now.

Before closing my remarks may I refer to words that were spoken a few moments ago by the hon. member who preceded me in the debate. He reiterated a suggestion that has come from the other side of the house, including the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that this discussion should not take place because it is actually, in itself, harming our agricultural producers.

I do not question the hon. member's sincerity. Of course he was simply following members of the government in what he said—that "by their very action members on the other side are helping to drive down the price of wheat in the world market." I will admit that the remark was directed particularly to those who have been taking part in the private war. Nevertheless that remark had general application—"by their very action they are helping to drive down the price of wheat in the world market."

Then he did go on to make an observation which is very obvious. He said, "These traders know how much wheat we have". Of course they do. They are experts. They know how much wheat the department has, because that is their business. And then he said—and this is the remark upon which I place the greatest emphasis—"but they do not have the details of our economic position".

The hon. member has gone too far; he was carried away by his imagination. After all, why are the trade departments of all the embassies of the different countries established here in Canada, except to give those countries economic information about Canadian affairs? Do you not suppose they read every day the financial pages of our newspapers? Do you not think they read the trade reports issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce? Do you not think they read the excellent financial and economic comments produced regularly by the banks? Of course they do.

The fact is that those governments, and the traders operating under them, are fully informed in regard to the details of our economic position. And do not let anyone suggest for a moment that our friends beyond the iron curtain are not equally well informed on this subject, in case their position might be affected in any way by this matter.

No, Mr. Speaker, the facts are before the traders of the world, whether they be government traders or private traders. The facts are before the people of Canada to the extent that our people take advantage of the information available. But one thing that is not before us is what this government is going to do to deal with that situation. Admittedly they cannot adopt an inflexible or utterly unreasoning rigidity in the face of the world situation with which we are confronted, and which does present them with grave problems and difficulties.

May I say this—and in saying it I am sure others on both sides of the house join with me—that, whatever our political differences may be, we want our government to tackle this problem in a way that will be best for the farmers of Canada and best for Canadians generally. And we wish them well in the great task they have before them in dealing with this immensely important problem.

Mr. Speaker, the realities cannot be escaped. We have an unprecedented surplus. Our farmers are confronted with uncertainties. And they are confronted with strained credit problems, until there is a clear statement. The first urgent step is the declaration of an initial price. Beyond that is at least a statement as to the things that this government hopes to achieve through this parliament, under the international wheat board now meeting in London, and by their own action in the markets of the world.

To such extent as they are prepared to take us into their confidence we will certainly co-operate with them in every way we can. To such extent as they can assist and guide our farmers and our producers and our servicing organizations, I am sure they will receive their co-operation.

This is a problem affecting the whole of Canada. It must be dealt with in the interests of all Canadians. That is the purpose of our amendment, and that is the reason we have placed it before the house. For the reasons we have given we cannot support the subamendment. It is not dealing with the principle of floor prices. This marketing by the wheat board is something that has been accepted by all members of the house. The initial price is part of the accepted practice. You have had that initial price. We need no such subamendment as this, following the practice that has been adopted. And that is why we place before you a motion calling for action by the government at a time when action is so greatly needed.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

---

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, the debate in which we are engaged is on the C.C.F. subamendment calling for the establishment of a floor price under wheat. I want to say that to some extent I agree with what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) said in his address that so far the impression may have been received that this is purely a Saskatchewan matter. I want to assure the house, however, that the farmers in the province of Manitoba, although they are not as great producers in volume of wheat as their neighbouring provinces, are nevertheless keenly interested in this question and have some opinions to express. It is with that thought in mind that I place on the record some of the opinions expressed on this question by the organized farmers in that province, and a few of the figures which, in my opinion, are germane to the discussion.

First, I should like to refer to some of the statements that were made earlier in the debate and to point out that, in my opinion, the chief issue is not the question of whether farmers in a certain section of the nation are prosperous or not at the moment, because that can be a pretty academic debate. It would depend on what farmers you were speaking about, or how it affects any one particular province or the three prairie provinces. I believe this is a question which has to be approached from the point of view of the national interest, and I hope that is the way in which this house will approach the question in the final analysis when the vote is taken on this subamendment. I believe it is correct to say that agriculture is the basic industry of Canada, and that the production of grain is the major part of the production of agriculture at this time. Therefore, when we make a decision in this house as to whether or not there should be a floor price we are making a decision on something which is going to affect every industry across Canada to a greater or lesser degree.

I was interested in trying to assess what is the policy of the government on this particular question. After listening to the statements made by both the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) I think it is fair to say we can draw this conclusion. The present policy of the government is to compete in the matter of wheat prices. Again and again we were told that we must be in a competitive position. That was repeated several times. I should like to refer to the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in that respect. On page 5746 of Hansard we find these words:

> If you expect to sell in a competitive world, the price must be competitive with prices offered by other countries. That, I think, is the situation today.

I believe that is about as clear and categorical as any statement can be. The government is now recommending that we adopt the competitive position. The question that arises immediately is: With whom are we competing and on what basis are we to compete with those with whom we are to compete? It has been pointed out by one or two hon. members already that it is not a question of competing on the world markets in the matter of price. The essential position today is that we are being called upon by this government to adopt the policy of competition, particularly in relation to the United States, because that is where the whole issue began when the United States government decided to place its wheat on the market at a lower price, at a reduction of 10 cents.

Perhaps it would be a simpler matter if it were merely competition in a free world market between nations; but the Canadian farmer is being asked to compete with the treasury of the United States. That is the situation. There, wheat is subsidized by the treasury. There is a floor price of 90 per cent of parity set. Here in Canada we have only an initial price, and that has not yet been determined for the next crop year. Therefore, the farmers of Canada are being asked to compete with something against which they have no chance whatever. Apparently the United States is quite prepared to carry on with their program of subsidization and to cut the price of wheat, if necessary, in order to put them in a competitive position. I submit, under these circumstances, it is utterly impossible for the farmers of Canada to compete.

I should also like to refer to another issue that has arisen, namely, whether or not the Canadian wheat board is the instrument of the present government. Last night the Minister of Agriculture went to some pains to argue that the Canadian wheat board is an independent body and is not directed by this government or by any minister of this government. But when we refer to the record we find that almost the very opposite was said by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his speech of June 9. I quote again from page 5750 of Hansard where I find these words:

> The policy of the government and of the wheat board is going to be to drive ahead and to make sure that we hold our share of the market. I do not think we can increase it very much.

There he quite plainly couples the policy of the wheat board and of the government and makes the statement that we are going to drive ahead. That certainly is a clear indication that it is the Minister of Trade and Commerce who is setting out the policy to be followed by the wheat board.

Further down we find another statement in which he says:

> If it is necessary to cut the price again in order to hold that proportion, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we are not going to lose markets for wheat because we make a fetish of $1.78½ for Vancouver and $1.72½ for Fort William and, by making a fetish, lose markets for substantial quantities of wheat.

Certainly the Minister of Trade and Commerce cannot now claim that the wheat board is the one that sets the selling policy, because he has stated in two separate statements what the policy of the government is and what the wheat board is going to do. He is not telling us what the board has informed the government they are going to do, or recommend being done; he has stated what this government is going to do so far as selling wheat is concerned. Therefore it is clear that the government has, for good or for bad, accepted the responsibility, or assumed the responsibility, for the marketing of Canadian wheat. That being the case, the issues before the house are clear. We have moved a subamendment suggesting a floor price as of a certain date. Hon. members on the other side of the house apparently do not agree with that subamendment. Hon. members of the Progressive Conservative party to my right apparently also do not agree. What is the basis of this disagreement? Let me refer to some of the statements of some hon. members opposite in this debate. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Mang), who has spoken twice on this issue in the last few days, has stated his philosophy. I do not agree with his approach. I do not say that in any spirit of bitterness but simply because his philosophy, which apparently has the approval of the other members of that party and perhaps of the government, is that there is now a necessity for a period of readjustment in the matter of prices, and that the farmers of western Canada should be prepared to lead the way in making that readjustment.

I want to quote his exact words because the hon. member complained this morning that what he had said had been misinterpreted. Here is what he said as reported at page 5793 of Hansard for June 10, 1954:

> It so happens that we in western Canada are leading the way in this readjustment by having our prices come down.

Well, that is a very strange approach from a member who represents a wheat-growing area. But coupled with that, the whole tenor of his speech was that we cannot expect to hold the price at the level which our amendment suggests.

Now, in what position does that place the farmer? The fact is that over the years this government has asked the wheat growers of Canada to accept a lower price than the actual world market price at that time, and for the purpose of stabilization, as they called it during the war years. They said it was a matter of patriotic duty to produce and provide food for our allies. The farmers were told that their contribution, their sacrifice, if you will, was part of the national war effort and that the government would see to it that they were not left in the lurch, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said, after the war years. In order that that statement may not be challenged, let me give the exact words of the then prime minister of Canada. Speaking over the radio on December 4, 1943, the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King said:

> If to help win the war the farmers are asked to accept ceiling prices, we believe they are entitled to a floor under prices to assure them against an agricultural depression after the war.

Now, those are the words of the then prime minister of Canada in 1943, and they can be interpreted as nothing other than a direct promise that in compensation, or shall we say in appreciation of the sacrifices and the contribution the farmers were being called upon to make in order to assist the war effort in 1933, and subsequently, this government—or any other government, because I believe any prime minister who speaks on behalf of the nation speaks not only for the government of which he happens to be the head but for any other government which may subsequently follow—in return for that contribution in the interests of stabilization the farmers were to receive the floor price after the war years.

[Mr. Zaplitny.]

Now, it may be argued that they have a floor price in the sense that we have an initial price which is to be announced in the future, though we do not know when. But the question which comes up is whether the farmers are going to receive an adequate floor price which will compensate them or which will at least help them maintain their position in relation to the general price level in Canada. That is why I was so concerned when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said that we were leading the way in the price readjustment. Unfortunately it seems to me that no one is following that lead in Canada though it appears the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is quite satisfied that the wheat farmers shall be the ones to cut the prices of their products, perhaps as an example of what can be done in order to bring about an over-all downward price readjustment.

But who is following the lead? Let me refer to some other figures, and this is still within the purview of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). I have some figures here which I have taken from the dominion bureau of statistics which show some of the prices of the manufacturing industries in Canada. Let us see whether they are taking part in this downward readjustment in which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is suggesting the farmers take the lead.

For example, taking the 26 major manufacturing industries in Canada—I could place all the categories on the record, but to save time I will not—it will be shown that for the year 1951 their net earnings were $1,548,300,000 compared with $1,005,200,000 in the average period 1946-50. This is an increase of over $500 million. Now, their profit, based on sales, averaged out in 1951 to 10·1 per cent, while during the period 1946-50 their average was only 9·7 per cent. The readjustment seems to be going forward, the prices are still rising and the trend is upward. Despite that, here we are being offered the recommendation that the wheat growers should lead the way in the readjustment downward. Where does that leave the farmer?

Let us take the profit on the basis of net worth, which I think is a better method of determining how they are doing. On the basis of their net worth, these 26 major manufacturing industries in 1951 made an average profit of 24·6 per cent. I give that figure because in a moment I am going to give some comparable figures in relation to the agricultural industry.

Perhaps it might be said that lumping all these industries together will not give a fair sample, but in order that hon. members may not think so I am going to deal with some of the industries of which I have been talking, and I can give them all if necessary.

For example, starting with one which is supposed to be in a depressed position at the present time, namely, cotton textiles, their net earnings in 1951 amounted to $30·1 million, which represents a profit on sales of 9·8 per cent on their net worth or investment of 22·4 per cent. For the farm machinery companies there was a net earning of $38·1 million and a sales profit of 11 per cent on a net worth of 28·4 per cent. The petroleum refining industry had net earnings of $72,500,000, sales profit of 8 per cent, and on net worth of 14·3 per cent. The iron and steel industry had net earnings of $76·8 million, sales profit of 11·8 per cent, and on net worth of 25·1 per cent. The electrical equipment industry, which has been complaining for the last couple of years about lack of business, had net earnings of $72·5 million, sales profit of 9 per cent on a net worth of 27·8 per cent.

Now I come to pulp and paper, and might I just interject here that if the philosophy of the Minister of Trade and Commerce were followed by the pulp and paper industry they might not have been so well. The minister objected to discussion between Canada and the United States on a price being set under wheat, and he characterized that as the setting up of a combine. But recent events as related in the newspapers show that the pulp and paper business was not averse to setting up a combine with the result that in 1951 it did rather well with a net earning of $317 million which on sales amounted to 23·4 per cent and on their net worth amounted to 34·2 per cent.

Then, coming to the automobile and parts industry, the net earnings here amounted to $87·9 million on sales of 9·6 per cent on a net worth of 47·1 per cent, so that they have done rather well and their readjustment has been upward from the period 1946-50. While I have not figures for 1953, because they are not yet available, I have no doubt that they are still doing very well.

I have given these profits as based on their net worth in order that we may make a comparison with the agricultural industry. I have here in my hand a publication which I believe will be accepted as authoritative. It is published by the department of political economy of the University of Manitoba, and it contains a study which was made in the Birtle-Shoal Lake area of Manitoba. The Minister of Agriculture will be familiar with that area and I think he will agree that it is fairly representative of that province. The farm lands in that area are not the best in the province and they certainly are not the worst in the province. They may be accepted as being the average type of land in the province. Perhaps for that very reason they were taken by this department for the purpose of making a study. It included 78 farms which ranged in size from a half-section to in some cases five quarters or more in one unit. A study was made covering production expenses, income and so forth. Let me just give a summary to show what the finding of this department was on that question. Incidentally this was published in November of 1953, so it is quite recent. It was found that on these 78 farms the average capital investment—that is including land, farm machinery, et cetera—was $15,896; the average cash income was $4,756 and the average current expense for each year was $2,007. That leaves an average net income of $2,749 per farmer. If we allow the very reasonable figure of $2,000 as wages to the farmer—because there is nothing here included so far which would pay wages to the man who operates the farm—we find a net return of $749 on the capital investment of $15,896. If we do that percentagewise, we find that it is a percentage of net worth of 4·7 per cent. Let me come back to some of these other figures and compare them—

Mr. Byrne: Go back to Tommy Douglas's figures. They are more important.

Mr. Zaplitny: I would appreciate hearing what the hon. member has to say.

Mr. Byrne: I say: Go back to Tommy Douglas's figures.

Mr. Zaplitny: I am afraid that the hon. gentleman was not listening because I have already said that these figures were prepared and published by the department of political economy of the University of Manitoba. They were published in November, 1953.

Mr. Castleden: He does not understand.

Mr. Zaplitny: I think it is a quite authentic and independent source and that there are no political implications here.

Mr. Byrne: That is fine.

Mr. Zaplitny: As I say, that is a return on a net worth for these 78 farms representing I think the average in Manitoba of 4·7 per cent as compared with the automobile industry with 47·1 per cent, as compared with the pulp and paper industry with 32·2 per cent or as compared with the petroleum industry with 14·3 per cent or the farm machinery industry with 28·4 per cent, and so forth. I think that sets out quite clearly the fact that the farmers so far have not been receiving their fair share of the national income. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) has already stated that, in spite of the fact that the farmers represent approximately 20 per cent of the population in Canada, their share of the national income has been running, as most recent figures indicate, just slightly over 8 per cent. Taking all that into consideration, I do not believe it is at all unreasonable for this party or any party in this house to move that an adequate floor price be set under our basic commodity, namely wheat.

The Minister of Agriculture has given us in his usual delightful fashion a description of a meeting to which he spoke recently. I did not quite clearly catch where this meeting was, but anyway he said that the loudspeakers covered an area of 40 acres, that there must have been a large mass of people to occupy that area, and that after he had finished speaking and stated government policy on wheat he was told that he was dead right. Let me give the other side of the coin, shall we say. I have here a letter which I believe was received by every member of this house, dated June 15, from the Manitoba farmers union, who represent a large proportion of the farmers in Manitoba. No doubt their opinions will be the same as those of the Saskatchewan farmers union or of the farmers union in Alberta. Here is what they have to say. I wonder whether this will ring as if he was "dead right" according to the minister's statement. I quote from the letter:

> The statement made recently by the Right Hon. C. D. Howe that the government is prepared to cut our wheat price again if necessary, was a shock to many western farmers, especially when it appears that the government is not prepared to take any responsibility in the matter. It will be hard for western farmers to believe that the government expects them to compete with the U.S. treasury.
>
> During the past two years, farm income dropped 23 per cent and this, coupled with the fact that while 20 per cent of the total Canadian population are engaged in agriculture they only receive 8·7 per cent of the national income, makes the outlook very serious for farm families. Recently farmers were forced to take another blow when the government slashed the price of wheat (by 17 cents per bushel in the past four months)—

That is apparently taking the 7 cent drop together with the 10⅛ drop more recently. The letter continues:

> —and is apparently prepared to go still further.
>
> We are beginning to wonder how long it will take our government to realize that this will ruin western agriculture? During the war years we were told that our prices would be stabilized for the future—

[Mr. Zaplitny.]

And then follows the quotation from the prime minister of that day which I have already placed on the record. Then they follow that up by saying this:

> What has happened to this promise? We still have the same government in power today, and the farmers feel that when a promise is made it should be maintained.

That is the opinion of a large body of farmers in my province.

Mr. Gardiner: If the hon. member will permit me to do so, I should like to make an interjection.

Mr. Zaplitny: Yes.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not want to enter into the argument as to whether the floor that is on wheat is high enough or not, but I want to say to the hon. member that the quotation he has made has no bearing whatsoever upon that question. The quotation he has made does not apply because wheat is about the only farm product upon which there was not a ceiling during the war time.

Mr. Zaplitny: That is an example of the type of interjection the Minister of Agriculture likes to make. But will he not agree with me to this extent? Will he not agree that it was the expressed policy of the government in 1943 that they were going to work towards the stabilization of the prices of farm products? The minister nods his head. I understand that nod means yes.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend has not yet got the point. That statement which he has read—and which he is quoting and which he says the farmers union quoted—says that because there was a ceiling price put on certain products, there should therefore be a stabilization by putting on a floor price afterwards. Wheat is one product which that does not apply to. There was no ceiling on wheat during the period of the war.

Mr. Zaplitny: Oh, yes, Mr. Speaker; it is true that that did not apply in 1943. But the minister certainly will not make the statement that that was true in 1946, 1947 or 1948.

Mr. Gardiner: The hon. member has not yet got the point. There was no ceiling on the wheat price until 1945 when the war was ended.

Mr. Zaplitny: I thank the minister. That is not what I am drawing to the minister's attention. What he has said may be said to apply as of December 4, 1943, when the former Prime Minister made his statement, but it cannot be said to apply from 1945 on because a price ceiling was imposed.

Mr. Gardiner: You have not yet got the point. The statement you have read was to the effect that if we kept the price down during the war we ought to hold the price level after the war. This is one product on which this was not done during the war.

Mr. Zaplitny: Nonetheless the government in 1943 sold the farmers on the idea that if they would be satisfied to accept a lower price for their farm products during that period in the interests of stabilization the government would see to it that they would not lose in the post-war years because of having accepted such prices.

Mr. Gardiner: I am quite prepared to follow your argument and to agree somewhat with it. I am only pointing out to you that you are quoting something which does not apply to wheat.

Mr. Zaplitny: I agree, so far as the ceiling on wheat is concerned, that it did not apply until 1945, but it did apply in subsequent years. I think we can agree on that.

Mr. Gardiner; The statement read "could not apply after 1945". The war ended in 1945 and there was no ceiling on wheat.

Mr. Zaplitny: No; but under the British wheat agreement a ceiling was placed on wheat after the war ended. I think the minister will agree with that. I was about to point out that I believe it is a reasonable proposition for this party to ask at this time that an adequate floor price be placed under wheat. I want to be perfectly fair about the matter. There may be some difference of opinion as to what that price should be, and I was anxious to see at least one member from the Liberal ranks or a minister of the government rise in his place and say: The price you are suggesting is too high; we would suggest that a lower price, such and such a price, would be suitable. But that is not the basis on which they oppose the subamendment. They attack the subamendment on the basis that this parliament has no right to set a floor price under wheat, that it might mean subsidization. The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) made the statement that the farmers did not want their product to be subsidized.

Mr. Tucker: Mr. Speaker, I said no such thing. I think what I said was exactly the opposite, that we believe that the principle of the Agricultural Prices Support Act should be applied to wheat and that it should be applied in such a way that the farmers will be assured of getting their fair share of the national income, even if it does mean subsidization. I made it as plain as two and two make four. My hon. friend has no right to misrepresent my argument in the house.

Mr. Knowles: You could make it plainer by voting for the subamendment.

Mr. Noseworthy: Vote for the subamendment.

Mr. Zaplitny: If I did not state correctly what the hon. member said I am quite prepared to accept his correction. I do so quite gladly because now we know that at least the hon. member for Rosthern agrees that, if necessary, the farmers' products should be subsidized by the nation. I think we agree on that point. I agree with him completely, and that is an excellent reason why he should vote for the subamendment.

Mr. Tucker: I have more faith in this government than I would have in that outfit over there.

Mr. Zaplitny: I do not wish to interfere in any way with the faith of my hon. friend. I am quite happy to leave it to him. But the point I am getting at is that if the hon. member for Rosthern and some of his colleagues from Saskatchewan, Manitoba or elsewhere agree with us that, if necessary, wheat should be subsidized by the nation, that is a clear reason why they should support the subamendment. Some hon. members express a certain fear on the question of subsidization. I have heard that fear expressed in the house on more than one occasion. They say that the government will never agree to having the taxpayers subsidize the production of wheat. Members of the Progressive Conservative party have stated that they do not believe in the subsidizing of farm products, particularly wheat. If they wish to use that argument then they will have to go a little further and say that they also disagree with the subsidizing of gold production, which is a pretty costly proposition these days. Comparing the usefulness of gold and wheat, I see a much poorer case for the subsidizing of gold. I have always taken the position that if we continue to subsidize gold instead of food we will wind up with a mouthful of gold teeth and nothing to chew on.

These hon. members would also have to oppose the subsidizing of the coal industry, which runs into substantial figures. They would have to oppose the subsidizing of the steel industry, which in the past has run into substantial figures. They would have to oppose the whole tariff structure of Canada, which is one great complicated form of subsidization—that is all it is. All the manufacturing industries that enjoy such high protection are in effect being subsidized by the consumers of Canada. As I pointed out a few moments ago, the automobile industry enjoyed a profit of $87·9 million in 1951 which represents 47·1 per cent on their net worth. A good part of that large profit is in the form of a subsidy paid by the Canadian consumer as the result of the tariff protection enjoyed by this industry. The tariff structure constitutes one of the biggest forms of subsidy in the country.

Therefore in order to be logical and to follow their beliefs through to a logical conclusion, all those who oppose the idea of the subsidizing of farm products would have to be equally opposed to every form of subsidization existing in the case of other industries and would have to favour the complete abolition of our whole tariff structure. Are they prepared to do that? I do not think there are many members of the house who would be prepared to go that far. They would say: No, we must maintain these forms of protection and subsidy in order to make sure that these industries have a fair chance to exist.

If that is the argument they wish to use, then I will go along with them and say: Let us extend that to cover agriculture and see to it that the production of basic commodities, the production of food, grain, livestock and other things, is put on a sound basis through a system of floor prices in order that stabilization of farm income may be assured. That is not asking too much. But when we propose that, what happens? I rather hesitate to get into what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) called the private war. Yet I feel that I must protest against certain statements made by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Harrison) yesterday which I resented very much. I did not wish to add to the confusion at that time by rising to my feet and asking him to withdraw. As reported at page 6008 of Hansard of yesterday, he said:

> What I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, is that that is the situation with socialists generally; that is the trouble we have internationally, because you cannot make agreements with these people. They do not keep their half of the agreement. Possibly, if we got rid of that type of thinking in the world we would not be faced with this debate now.

That is a most astounding statement to be made by a supposedly responsible member of the house. We have been told that some of the things said on both sides of the house may have the effect of making the selling of our grain more difficult. I can imagine nothing that could make things more difficult for this nation to trade with the other nations of the world than a statement of that kind. The hon. member says that internationally agreements cannot be made with socialist countries because they do not keep their word. Does the hon. member realize the implications of a statement of that kind? Not many years ago there was a socialist government in Great Britain which did a great deal more business with this country than their present government is doing. I am not saying that in criticism of the present government but it is a fact that they did a great deal of business with Canada for which both Canada and Great Britain were thankful.

You have the socialist governments of the Scandinavian countries. There were socialist governments in Australia and New Zealand. All of them have done business with Canada, and for a member of the Liberal party to stand up and say that we cannot deal with socialists because they do not keep their agreements will, in my opinion, do more harm in the international sphere, so far as Canadian trade is concerned, than anything which has been said in the house. I deplore that very much. If the hon. member is opposed to the amendment which we are proposing, and if he thinks it is unnecessary to place a floor price under wheat; if he is opposed to subsidization, if necessary, of food products, then I am quite prepared to hear his arguments. But when he attacks this party and attacks socialist governments generally all over the world—it may not be long before we may have a lot more socialist governments than now exist with whom we have to trade—then he is doing this country a great disservice. He is prejudicing our approach to these nations on the basis of good faith. I hope we shall not hear any more remarks of this type in this debate.

I may point out that the hon. member for Meadow Lake, who was so critical about the alleged inaccuracy of members in this house, made a statement in that same speech that the present government has reduced the national debt. Of course, he immediately amended that by saying that was in the non-war years. I would refer him to page 1059 of the Canada Year Book for 1953. There he will find the national debt for 1945 listed at $15,700 million; for 1952 it was $17,252 million, which covers those seven non-war years. The increase shown is about $2 billion. Now, when a member can be $2 billion out in his statements, he certainly should not be critical of the alleged inaccuracy of other members.

In conclusion, I want to say this. We are proposing this amendment in good faith. We hope the members of this house on both sides will accept the principle of a floor price under wheat as a matter of national interest, not because we are pleading any special favours for the farmers, not because we are pleading poverty of the farmers, but because we believe that, in the interests of stabilization of the greatest and basic industry in Canada, the house should adopt this motion.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. McCullough, Moose Mountain) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Barnett
Blackmore
Cameron (Nanaimo)
Campbell
Castleden
Gillis
Hansell
Herridge
Holowach
Jones
Knowles
Low
MacInnis
McCullough (Moose Mountain)
Nicholson
Noseworthy
Patterson
Quelch
Regier
Shaw
Stewart (Winnipeg North)
Thatcher
Thomas
Winch
Yuill
Zaplitny—26.

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson
Applewhaite
Arsenault
Ashbourne
Balcer
Balcom
Batten
Bell
Benidickson
Bennett (Grey North)
Bennett, Miss (Halton)
Blair
Blanchette
Boisvert
Bonnier
Boucher (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Boucher (Restigouche-Madawaska)
Bourget
Bourque
Breton
Brisson
Brooks
Brown (Brantford)
Brown (Essex West)
Bruneau
Buchanan
Byrne
Campney
Cardiff
Cardin
Carter
Casselman
Cauchon
Cavers
Charlton
Chevrier
Claxton
Cloutier
Cote
Crestohl
Croll
Dechene
Denis
Deschatelets
Dickey
Drew
Dumas
Dupuis
Enfield
Eudes
Fairclough, Mrs.
Fairey
Fleming
Follwell
Forgie
Fraser (Peterborough)
Fraser (St. John's East)
Fulton
Gardiner
Garland
Garson
Gauthier (Lake St. John)
Gauthier (Nickel Belt)
Gauthier (Portneuf)
Gingras
Gingues
Girard
Gour (Russell)
Gourd (Chapleau)
Green
Gregg
Hanna
Hardie
Harkness
Harris
Harrison
Healy
Hellyer
Henderson
Henry
Hollingworth
Hosking
Houck
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Huffman
Hunter
James
Jutras
Kickham
Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough)
LaCroix
Lafontaine
Langlois (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere)
Langlois (Gaspe)
Lapointe
Leduc (Gatineau)
Leduc (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle)
Lefrançois
Legare
Lennard
Lesage
Lusby
Macdonnell
MacDougall
MacEachen
MacKenzie
MacLean
MacNaught
Macnaughton
McBain
McCann
McCubbin
McCulloch (Pictou)
McDonald
McIlraith
McIvor
McMillan
McWilliam
Mang
Martin
Masse
Matheson
Meunier
Michaud
Michener
Mitchell (London)
Mitchell (Sudbury)
Monette
Monteith
Nesbitt
Nixon
Nowlan
Pallett
Pearson
Perron
Philpott
Picard
Pickersgill
Pinard
Pommer
Poulin
Pouliot
Power (St. John's West)
Prudham
Purdy
Ratelle
Richard (Ottawa East)
Roberge
Robichaud
Robinson (Bruce)
Rowe
Roy
St. Laurent
Schneider
Shipley, Mrs.
Sinclair
Smith
Starr
Stick
Stuart (Charlotte)
Tucker
Tustin
Viau
Villeneuve
Weaver
Weselak
White (Waterloo South)
Wood—168.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Harkness) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Balcer
Barnett
Bell
Bennett, Miss (Halton)
Blackmore
Blair
Brooks
Cameron (Nanaimo)
Campbell
Cardiff
Casselman
Castleden
Charlton
Drew
Fairclough, Mrs.
Ferguson
Fleming
Fraser (Peterborough)
Fulton
Gillis
Green
Hansell
Harkness
Herridge
Holowach
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Jones
Knowles
Lennard
Low
Macdonnell
MacInnis
MacLean
McBain
McCullough (Moose Mountain)
Michener
Mitchell (London)
Monteith
Nesbitt
Nicholson
Noseworthy
Nowlan
Pallett
Patterson
Perron
Quelch
Regier
Robinson (Bruce)
Rowe
Shaw
Starr
Stewart (Winnipeg North)
Thatcher
Thomas
Tustin
Winch
Yuill
Zaplitny—58.

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson
Applewhaite
Arsenault
Ashbourne
Balcom
Batten
Benidickson
Bennett (Grey North)
Blanchette
Boisvert
Bonnier
Boucher (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Boucher (Restigouche-Madawaska)
Bourget
Bourque
Breton
Brisson
Brown (Brantford)
Brown (Essex West)
Bruneau
Buchanan
Byrne
Campney
Cardin
Carter
Cauchon
Cavers
Chevrier
Claxton
Cloutier
Cote
Crestohl
Croll
Dechene
Denis
Deschatelets
Dickey
Dumas
Dupuis
Enfield
Eudes
Fairey
Follwell
Forgie
Fraser (St. John's East)
Gardiner
Garland
Garson
Gauthier (Lake St. John)
Gauthier (Nickel Belt)
Gauthier (Portneuf)
Gingras
Gingues
Girard
Gour (Russell)
Gourd (Chapleau)
Gregg
Hanna
Hardie
Harris
Harrison
Healy
Hellyer
Henderson
Henry
Hollingworth
Hosking
Houck
Huffman
Hunter
James
Jutras
Kickham
Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough)
LaCroix
Lafontaine
Langlois (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere)
Langlois (Gaspe)
Lapointe
Leduc (Gatineau)
Leduc (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle)
Lefrancois
Legare
Lesage
Lusby
MacDougall
MacEachen
MacKenzie
MacNaught
Macnaughton
McCann
McCubbin
McCulloch (Pictou)
McDonald
McIlraith
McIvor
McMillan
McWilliam
Mang
Martin
Masse
Matheson
Meunier
Michaud
Mitchell (Sudbury)
Monette
Nixon
Pearson
Philpott
Picard
Pickersgill
Pinard
Pommer
Poulin
Pouliot
Power (St. John's West)
Prudham
Purdy
Ratelle
Richard (Ottawa East)
Roberge
Robichaud
Roy
St. Laurent
Schneider
Shipley, Mrs.
Sinclair
Smith
Stick
Stuart (Charlotte)
Tucker
Viau
Villeneuve
Weaver
Weselak
White (Waterloo South)
Wood—137.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the main motion?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Meteorological division—

489. Administration, operation and maintenance, $6,963,110.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, this item is for the administration, operation and maintenance of the meteorological division and the total vote amounts to about $7 million for the present fiscal year. This is an increase of nearly $500,000 over last year's vote. I notice in the details at page 549 there are increases in such items as freight, express and cartage of about $40,000; in facsimile communications, an increase of $125,000; teletype an increase of $30,000; publication of "monthly record of meteorological observations" and other papers, an increase of about $20,000; and for office stationery, supplies and equipment quite a large increase of $85,000 for this year over last.

Will the minister explain why it is necessary to have this very large increase in this item for the present year? Will he also give us some idea of the present situation with regard to weather mapping in Canada which, I presume, comes under this vote? I believe we have a very efficient system. Perhaps the minister could give the committee a short summary of the present situation.

Mr. Chevrier: This is, in fact, a large vote and there is, as my hon. friend says, an increase for which I think I can give a satisfactory explanation. In the first place, there is an increase of almost $500,000 in salaries which in itself accounts for a large portion of the increase to which my hon. friend refers. There is an increase of $125,000 with reference to facsimile communication, as he has pointed out, and that is for the new system of facsimile weather mapping introduced last year based at Dorval. It is a rather technical thing and I doubt if I can explain it fully, but the object of it is to centralize in one area our entire map analysis. In other words, the reports which come from the northernmost station of Canada down into the main operational airports are centralized in this one area through this facsimile system and it is possible in a matter of seconds to obtain the weather conditions from one end of the country to another. For example, when I assisted at the inauguration of this facsimile system at Dorval, together with the chief of air staff, I think it was possible in less than a second to obtain reports from Winnipeg and Gander on the condition of the weather over this facsimile instrument. Of course, the cost of that is somewhat high, as my hon. friend will appreciate.

There is an increase in office stationery, supplies and equipment of $84,000 and that is attributable as well in part to the facsimile system because it is necessary to have a special kind of paper not only in the Dorval area but at all of these airports in Canada.

Repairs and upkeep of buildings and works show an increase of $21,000 but that, I think, can be explained by the increase in other votes in similar subdivisions due to the increase in the cost of material and the like.

Item agreed to.

Construction services—

495. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, including construction work on municipal airports, $10,737,291.

Mr. Mitchell (London): Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct the minister's attention to the airport at Crumlin, Ontario, which serves London and the great majority of the western Ontario counties. In November, in the course of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, I raised the question in this house and pointed out that this airport at Crumlin was the only airport which could be considered to be a major one between Toronto and Windsor. I also pointed out that it served one of our largest commercial and producing areas, concentrated in a comparatively small area in Canada. Perhaps at this stage I might ask the minister to correct me if I am wrong because the details are exclusively in the knowledge of the government, and of many of them I have no knowledge. However, at that time it was my understanding that an appropriation was to be made for the extension of the runways at the airport at Crumlin on the basis—

Mr. Chevrier: Perhaps my hon. friend will excuse me, but I do not quite understand him. Is he now referring to the London airport?

Mr. Mitchell (London): Yes, Mr. Chairman, but we call it the Crumlin airport because it is actually located at Crumlin. At that time it was my understanding the government were giving consideration to the spending of certain sums of money for the development of this airport into one which could take the largest and fastest types of aircraft now being used.

When the estimates appeared I was therefore somewhat surprised to find that no provision had been made for the extension of the runways to permit either military aircraft or the larger and faster types of civilian aircraft to use this field, and it is a matter of very great concern within the city of London, not only so far as the municipal council is concerned, but particularly as regards the chamber of commerce.

The problem has recently been accentuated by the rumours which have appeared to the effect that consideration is being given to equipping No. 420 squadron of the Royal Canadian Air Force with a jet-type aircraft. If such is the case, and once again I would ask the minister to correct me if I am wrong, it would appear that jet-type aircraft cannot land or use the present facilities at the city of London airport. I might point out that No. 420 squadron of the air force is a most active squadron, training large numbers of personnel from London and district. In addition to that fact, there is located at this airfield or immediately adjacent to it one of the basic training centres operated by the air force for the training of NATO air personnel.

Once again I delve into the realm of conjecture. I am led to believe that certain overtures were made either by the department to the municipal authorities or the other way around, with respect to the future operation of this airfield. I am rising purely for the purpose of asking the minister to explain to us what has occurred, why there has been a diminution of interest, if such is the case, in the development of the city of London airport, and what the plans for the future are in so far as either military or civilian use of the airport is concerned.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank my hon. friend for his constructive intervention with reference to the London airport. Let me tell him that there is not the slightest indication on the part of officials of the department of lack of interest in that establishment. London has a very good airport—I have been there on at least two occasions—and it has many potentialities. Unfortunately, however, it is not one of the main major airports in Canada, and I do not say this in a derogatory sense at all. There are so many major airports in Canada that consideration has to be given to those first and foremost. It is a fact that in our first draft of estimates there was an item for the construction of a runway at London. But after consideration by treasury board, because of the demands that came from major airports and because of the over-all picture, it was decided not to pursue the matter and not to include it in the present estimates.

Then there was another feature which my hon. friend has raised, namely that having to do with the R.C.A.F. It may very well be that the R.C.A.F. will require additional facilities at London. I am not competent to say whether that is so or not. But if additional facilities are required—and that was another matter that influenced treasury board in its decision—then national defence will ask us to build a runway. They will provide the funds and we will do it. That is generally the method by which we proceed. The decision is as I have stated it. It may be true that from a civilian standpoint it will be possible to include at a future date a sufficient sum of money to build a runway. However, I am frank with my hon. friend. I tell him what the decision is and I am afraid I cannot go any further.

Mr. Mitchell (London): Mr. Chairman, may I pursue this matter just one step further and ask the minister what was the outline of the negotiations, if any, which took place between the department and the city with respect to the taking over of the airport by the city? If there were any such negotiations, did that fact have any bearing on the subsequent disappearance from the estimates of any item for the extension of airport runways?

Mr. Chevrier: The only information I have is that to the authorities of the city we sent an officer who had some talks, but we have not had any information arising out of the visit of the Department of Transport official to the municipality.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Surveys have been made around Peterborough by the minister's department. Can the minister say what has been done with regard to the airport there? At present we have one which can take small planes. I just wondered whether the department was going to do something more for us.

Mr. Chevrier: Not at the moment, I am sorry to say. I am familiar with the situation because I have had several representations by both civic and other groups from Peterborough. In fairness to my hon. friend I may say that I believe he has also brought the matter to my attention. The point is that there are sites which might be adaptable for airport development. The decision of the department has been that in the case of a municipality, the municipality should make some contribution. At one time there was a question of assistance by way of groups other than municipal groups. While I have had representations to the effect that such contributions would be forthcoming, no firm offer has been made. To sum up the matter I would say this. There is the possibility of development of airport sites in the Peterborough area. There would have to be representations either by the municipalities or by other groups. There have been some. However, there would have to be more firm representation before we would be in a position to say to what extent we could contribute to that project.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I thank the minister.

Mr. MacLean: I should like to ask the minister the position in connection with the Charlottetown airport. A year or two ago, I believe, there were negotiations between the minister's department and the city of Charlottetown with respect to extending the runways there and improving the airport generally. The minister is familiar with the amount of traffic that is borne from that airport and also with its inadequacy, especially from the point of view of the length of runways.

Then I had a more general question. Perhaps the minister could take it at the same time. I would appreciate it if he would bring us up to date on the position with regard to the Charlottetown airport and also if he would be kind enough to give the committee some information on the general revenue which is derived from some of the larger airports in Canada, from rentals or any other income from air lines and other users of the large airports. I should like to have an idea of what return there is on the investment, so to speak.

Mr. Chevrier: I shall be glad to review the position of the Charlottetown airport. My hon. friend will remember that when I was down to Charlottetown last year and met the mayor of the city together with one of the ministers of the Prince Edward Island government and some of the members of the legislature, my hon. friend was good enough to meet me at the hotel later on. The discussion centred around the policy of the government having to do with municipal assistance to airports. We viewed the location and agreed that it would be in the interests of aviation to extend the runway. There were two alternatives, but there was one alternative that our officers favoured; and I think on consideration the mayor and those interested on the island felt that it was the better of the two sites.

I outlined the policy. I indicated to the municipal authorities that the land would have to be expropriated by the municipalities and that we would provide the facilities. There has been some correspondence between the mayor and me—I now have to draw on my memory—the last of which outlined our policy which is similar with reference to all municipalities. There has been no definite answer saying that the municipality would expropriate the land in question.

Although it has not come to me formally, there has been some suggestion that because this airport is on a trans-Canada route we should undertake to handle the whole expenditure which, in this case, would be quite considerable. That suggestion has not come to me formally and until it does I am not in a position to make any comment.

With reference to the second question my hon. friend asked, possibly I can pick out a number of the main airports. For instance, at Gander the revenue is $2,787,000, but I am sorry to say the expenditure is much higher than that. At Winnipeg the revenue is $137,000 and the expenditure is $74,000. At Toronto the revenue is $335,000 and the expenditure is $277,000. I think I should say in fairness to Gander that the position there is not comparable at the moment with the other airports, but I think in time the expenditure will be much lower than the revenue. At Dorval they break about even, with revenue being $765,000 compared with an expenditure of $800,000.

Mr. Knowles: The figures the minister is now giving are for maintenance, are they not?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, operation and maintenance.

Mr. Knowles: I believe at the moment we are on item 495 which provides $10,737,291—

Mr. Chevrier: If I may interrupt, the question asked was what were the revenues for other major airports in Canada. I am giving the revenues, and perhaps I should not have added the expenditures.

Mr. Knowles: I was not critical of what the minister was giving. I simply wanted to be sure that that was what it was so that I could then ask him if he would indicate what portion of the $10,737,291 is being spent on the improvements now being made at the Winnipeg airport.

Mr. Chevrier: There is a considerable amount. There is a new runway which will cost over a million dollars, and in the estimates we provide for the first stage of it. The contract has been awarded to a prominent contracting firm in Winnipeg and I think the work will start in the near future. There is a fairly lengthy list of other developments. There is the installation of high intensity runway lights which will cost over $50,000, and high intensity approach lights, $65,000. There is the establishment of emergency power facilities, $40,000. There are a number of other smaller items, but the main item in this figure of $10 million odd is for a million dollar runway, a portion of which only is provided for in these estimates.

Mr. Knowles: Is that a case of lengthening a runway or rebuilding one?

Mr. Chevrier: It is a completely new runway.

Mr. Cardiff: With respect to extending runways, I should like to ask the minister into what category the airport at Centralia falls compared with other airports in Canada. We had five airports in the county of Huron during the war and now there are two in full operation. We think they are quite important airports and I wondered what category they were in.

Mr. Chevrier: I also think they are of tremendous importance, but from a military standpoint only. They are not provided for in these estimates. We have no civil facilities at Centralia at all.

Mr. Mitchell (London): May I direct one or two further questions to the minister to clarify the position with respect to the London airport. First, what is the annual operating loss of the airport? Second, may I point out to him and ask for his comment on the fact that the city of London industrially is growing east. It must grow in that direction. As the minister undoubtedly knows, within the past four to five years a large heavily industrialized area has grown up immediately to the west of the airport. Unless steps are taken within the very near future to establish the London airport as a major airport, it is going to be encroached on by industry to such an extent that it may well be deemed advisable in the future that it not be accepted as a major airport.

There is a third problem concerning which I have no personal knowledge, but I understand there are certain topographical difficulties in connection with the development of the airport. Would the minister comment on his information in that respect?

Mr. Chevrier: With reference to the first question, the answer is that the annual operating loss was $60,000. As to the second question, I am sure my hon. friend would not expect me to be able to deal with the details of airport development. There are some 200 airports in Canada, and while I indicated earlier I had been at London on two occasions it is some time ago. I know that it is a fast growing industrial centre, and because of what I have seen at both Toronto and Montreal with respect to the rapidity of industrial development in the last few years in the vicinity of Malton and Dorval I would not attempt to prognosticate anything so far as development at London is concerned. All I can say is that we have London very much in mind. However, I hope my hon. friend will realize that we have got to give attention to the major transcontinental airports. I know that T.C.A. is particularly interested in London. I know that T.C.A. would like to have a cross-country run between Montreal and Windsor with stops at Cornwall, Kingston, Belleville, Oshawa, Toronto and London.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Why not include Peterborough?

Mr. Chevrier: I do not think Peterborough is in that line of operation. Perhaps we should reserve that for C.P.A. However, in any event I think these are matters which will have to wait their turn. I have no doubt that London stands right in the centre of an area which will benefit, but I cannot say how soon we can get to a runway or other additional facilities for London at this time.

Mr. Tucker: Would the minister tell the committee what has happened with respect to the administration building at the airport at Saskatoon which, as he knows, is in the constituency of Rosthern.

Mr. Chevrier: When I was there recently pretty fair progress had been made. As the hon. member for Rosthern knows, the contract was awarded to an excellent contractor and it is expected that the terminal building will be ready for operation this fall.

Mr. Barnett: I wonder whether the minister can make a statement as to what progress is being made towards the establishment of more adequate civilian facilities at the Comox airport? Is he in a position to make a statement at this time?

Mr. Chevrier: I am informed that is a military station. That matter is now under discussion with the air force which has it in hand, but just what it is proposed to do I do not know. It is not a civilian airport. My officer informs me that facilities will be installed some time this year by the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Nixon: Do I understand that when an airport is built on a main line of T.C.A. the entire expenditure is paid by the department?

Mr. Chevrier: I could not answer affirmatively in a broad way. It depends on the circumstances in each case. Some airports right on the transcontinental route are owned by the municipalities. The municipalities make a substantial contribution toward them, but most of the expenditures are made by the Department of Transport for runways, lighting facilities, meteorological service and the like. The contribution of the municipality, as a rule, is their retention of the land and then the operation of the airport itself. What is done from time to time is a contribution to a municipality in an isolated area. I would not take it that my hon. friend's constituency is in that category, but it is, I know, in one of the important parts of Ontario.

As my hon friend knows, we have in the past used the United States field on the T.C.A. run. There is no assurance that will always be the case.

Item agreed to.

497. Contributions to municipalities or public bodies for construction and improvements of airports on land acquired by such organizations, $93,300.

Mr. Herridge: The Castlegar airport committee wish me to express their appreciation of the consideration the minister has given, and the government, to the needs of a first-class airport in the Kootenays. The construction of this airport, they feel, is an example of the ideal type of co-operation between all levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal. They have asked me also to express their great satisfaction at the work and co-operation of the minister's officials, and their great satisfaction with the work done by the contractors.

This piece of work has been carried out to the satisfaction of all concerned. I might say to the minister that the airport was opened, as he knows on May 30. There were 15,000 and 16,000 people who attended the opening. There were 5,320 cars driven on the grounds. This is a great asset to the Kootenay district, which we all appreciate.

Item agreed to.

498. Contributions towards airport development and other airport projects on cost-sharing basis, in the amounts detailed in the estimates, $240,000.

Mr. Patterson: On a number of occasions during this session representations have been made to the government concerning the various needs of the Fraser Valley constituency. I regret that those representations have not, in every case, been considered favourably, for I assure you that they have been very commendable. However, there have been some occasions when we have received favourable consideration. I should like to express my appreciation, and the appreciation of my constituency, on this occasion. In the list of items on page 561, under vote No. 498, there is an amount of $130,000 for assistance to the city of Chilliwack, and the township of Chilliwack, British Columbia, for airport development. This airport has become increasingly necessary and valuable in the field of civil aviation. On behalf of my constituents, I should like to thank the minister for the favourable consideration given and for the inclusion of this item in the estimates.

Item agreed to.

Air transport board—

501. Salaries and other expenses, including the Canadian delegation to the international civil aviation organization, $274,089.

Mr. Green: I take it that one of the main objectives of the air transport board is to promote civil aviation in Canada. It would seem that the main function of this governmental body is to carry on work of that kind. Would the minister explain why there is not a more determined effort to give government flying work to the flying companies. Apparently quite a lot of government flying is done by the R.C.A.F. It does seem to me that some of this could be turned over to the civilian companies.

For example, I got a return earlier in the session which showed that the R.C.A.F. had carried for the Iron Ore Company of Canada, which as the minister knows is the company developing the northern Quebec and Labrador iron ore deposits, 989,432 pounds of cargo and 121 passengers, and had done 181·15 hours of flying, for which they were paid. My information is that there were civilian companies in a position to do that flying. Apparently the Iron Ore Company came to the government with a story that there was great need for fast action. They may have felt that the civilian companies would charge a little more than the R.C.A.F., but it does seem to me there should be an explanation as to why private work of that kind is taken away from a private flying company.

Surely, we are not financing the air force to do work of that kind. This seems to me to be one way of fostering the development of civil aviation in Canada, which after all is the basis of the whole industry. I was not in the east at the time, but I understand there were press reports to the effect that one member of the air transport board had objected, and had taken the position that this work should have been done by a private company rather than by the R.C.A.F. It would appear that he was correct.

There is other work being done, such as flying into these meteorological stations which come under the Minister of Transport. I understand that is being done by the R.C.A.F. Why should it not be possible for flying of that type to be done by the private companies? Then, again, there are the ice patrols on the Atlantic coast, and that work is done by the R.C.A.F. I see no reason why it could not be done by the private companies. The United States has a different policy. There they give every encouragement to the private firms, and I believe in the continental United States they even have a lot of defence force flying done by the civilian companies.

The minister's department is the one that should be looking after the promotion of civilian flying. The defence department can look after the air force. I do not understand why more aggressive steps are not taken by the Department of Transport to see that flying of the type I have mentioned is done by private Canadian companies.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend is quite right in his assumption that the civil aviation division of the Department of Transport should give every encouragement to civilian flying. I can assure him that we do. I wish my hon. friend knew what co-operation and co-ordination there is between the air transport board and officers of the Department of Transport and groups of civilian flying organizations, flying clubs, IATA, ICAO, and the many other groups. It is the object of the officials in the department to make sure that civilian flying is given every opportunity.

We do see to it that government work is given to civilian companies. In fact we have a directive that goes to every department of government indicating to all those departments using flying services that they must ask civilians for service. That directive has had the approval of my colleagues in the government. Further than that, officials in the other departments see to it that that directive is put into effect.

Now, that is not the case in connection with the R.C.A.F. or defence work. It is not possible for this department to control the activities of the Department of National Defence.

My hon. friend has asked about flying in connection with the meteorological stations in the north. Those stations that are concerned with the Department of National Defence are handled by that department; and I do not think my hon. friend would expect it to be otherwise. After all, these are joint operational weather stations under the plan between Canada and the United States, and they are pretty close to being on the secret list. It is felt that they should be serviced by the R.C.A.F.; and they have been. I think there is a valid reason for it.

I believe my hon. friend's information with respect to ice patrol is incorrect, because ice patrol on the St. Lawrence to my recollection has always been given to a civilian company. In fact this year it was Maritime Central that had it; and I believe Northern Wings may have had it on a previous occasion.

Mr. Green: What about the Atlantic coast as distinguished from the St. Lawrence?

Mr. Chevrier: On the Atlantic coast we have given a number of contracts for ice patrol to Maritime Central.

Mr. Green: And Hudson bay?

Mr. Chevrier: I am not able to answer with respect to Hudson bay at the moment. But I do know that on the Atlantic coast it has gone to Maritime Central.

Mr. Green: Will the minister look into the situation on Hudson bay?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes; I believe I can get the information almost at once. Then, turning to the Hollinger contract, let me say the position was that Hollinger-Ungava advised us that they could not obtain the services of civilian air lines, and for that reason the company saw fit to ask the Department of National Defence to do it. That department had to make some charge, and that charge was higher than that for which civilians would have done it.

Mr. Green: I think not. The rate the R.C.A.F. charged was 42 cents per ton-mile. I understand that is below the ordinary civilian rate for that work. And I am told, further, that private planes were available. I asked the Minister of National Defence about it when his estimates were being considered. His reply was that the manager had phoned him, pointing out that he was in a great hurry and that this was work of strategic importance. Therefore the R.C.A.F. took it over. The Minister of National Defence had nothing to say about there being no civilian planes available.

I believe a ruling was made on the point by the air transport board. The Minister of National Defence told me that before he allowed the R.C.A.F. to do the work he got clearance from the air transport board.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, he would get clearance through the air transport board only if it was clear that there were no civilian air lines able to do it. The information the chairman of the air transport board gives me—and he is now sitting before me—is that on that occasion Hollinger-Ungava had advised they could not obtain the services of civilian air line companies.

Then, added to that, my hon. friend reminds me, is the statement given to him by the Minister of National Defence that a portion of the work—perhaps a great portion of it—was strategic. That may have prompted the decision that was taken in this instance.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Green: But did the air transport board make any investigation with the civilian companies to find out whether planes were available?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Green: For example, did they inquire of Maritime Central Airways as to whether planes were available for that work?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, they did. They inquired not only of Maritime Central Airways but they also inquired of two or three other companies on the north shore that might have been able to take on that work.

Mr. Green: I hope the department will be on the alert in the future to prevent this sort of thing happening. I do not believe there was anything in the argument that this was emergency work. I cannot see how there would be anything about it that could be considered in the nature of an emergency. It is a civilian undertaking consisting of the opening up of iron ore deposits and the building of a railway. If they have the right to go to the Department of National Defence and get air force planes to do their flying, then there are dozens of other firms in Canada which have just as much right to use the service offered by the R.C.A.F. I hope the minister's department will be very careful about giving permits of this kind in the future.

Item agreed to.

Air transport board—

754. Subventions for air carriers, as detailed in the estimates, $20,000.

Mr. Green: I should like to have an explanation of this item.

Mr. Chevrier: This is the last payment of a subsidy of $100,000 to Queen Charlotte Airlines Limited. My hon. friend will recall that during the course of the winter, operations of Queen Charlotte became difficult. They had been in a difficult position the year before. It was brought to the attention of the air transport board that they could not carry on unless they had some assistance. The air transport board investigated the matter and reported to the government that it felt it was desirable that under the terms of the Aeronautics Act assistance should be given to Queen Charlotte Airlines for another year because of the isolated and northern areas on the Pacific coast as well as on Vancouver island that they had to service. This is the last of five payments of $20,000.

Mr. Green: Has there not been some quarrel on the west coast between this and another firm about service to Kitimat?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Green: What is the situation?

Mr. Chevrier: The situation has been ironed out, and I understand everything is satisfactory. The procedure that was taken under the Criminal Code and the lawsuit in the civil court has now been withdrawn; and my understanding is that the Department of Transport officers and the Pacific Western Airlines are now on the best of terms.

Mr. Green: They are not shooting at each other any more?

Mr. Chevrier: That is right.

Item agreed to.

Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada—

502. Administration, operation and maintenance, $952,030.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words in support of representations that have already been made at this session with respect to the need for a greater number of grade crossing separations in this country. Other hon. members have given statistics and examples as to the loss of life that takes place because of accidents between trains and automobiles. It does seem to me that it may be necessary to revise the formula or to change the policy so that a large number of grade crossings at which accidents are taking place might be eliminated as level crossings.

I buttress what I am trying to say in connection with this matter by drawing attention to one particular level crossing to which I have referred in the house on a number of occasions. I refer to the point where the heavily travelled thoroughfare between the city of Winnipeg and the town of Transcona crosses the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That crossing is actually within the city limits of Winnipeg but, as I pointed out, it is a main thoroughfare between those two communities. On one previous occasion, after I had raised this question a number of times, the minister pointed out to me that the crossing in question is protected by gates that come down halfway across the thoroughfare, and also by a signal system which operates as well as such a system can operate. It is my contention that that is really not good enough. I hold in my hand a clipping from the Winnipeg Free Press of August 15, 1953, which reports a tragic accident which took place on August 14, at that crossing. I say it was a tragedy. A gentleman who lived in Transcona died as a result of the accident. What I wish to point out is that this accident shows up the inadequacy of those halfway gates, signals, bells, lights and what-have-you.

According to the report in the Winnipeg Free Press, this man was driving from Transcona to Winnipeg and stopped at the crossing because there was a train travelling east. He waited of course until the train went by, but just as the train went over the crossing he started his truck to move west on into Winnipeg. The noise of the train travelling east made it impossible for him to hear another train that was coming west at the same time. He thought the road was clear, but what happened was that he drove right into the path of this oncoming westbound train. The newspaper report indicates that the man lost his life and that the truck was demolished.

I simply cite that instance, along with others that other hon. members have been speaking about during the discussion of the minister's estimates, to point out the inadequacy of signal lights, bells and even gates. What is needed at crossings such as this, where there is heavy traffic, is a grade separation. I point out that it is a very busy spot, where the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway east and west crosses the heavily travelled thoroughfare between Winnipeg and Transcona.

I know that one of the other answers the minister has given on previous occasions is that this case and others like it should go before the board of transport commissioners, and that whether or not a separation could be made depends upon whether the municipalities and the railway concerned are prepared to put up the necessary money. That being the case, it seems to me that some revising of that formula, some revising of government policy in connection with this matter, is indicated. What happened here happens far too often across the country. Because of our responsibility for protecting life and limb in this country, I hope that something will be done to revise that policy so that more of these grade crossings can be eliminated.

Mr. Chevrier: May I say I think the hon. member and the committee will get a great deal of satisfaction from the report on the grade crossing investigation which I shall table before the end of the session. It is a lengthy report, and it makes a number of recommendations, all of which I think are to the good, recommendations regarding an amendment to the Railway Act. It would be well if the committee and the government as well had an opportunity of studying the document before the next session, because it has come down too late in this session to take any action on it. I hope, now that I have given that assurance, the committee will not enter into a discussion on individual grade crossings, because quite a number of them have been discussed earlier.

Mr. Knowles: Did I understand the minister to say that he is going to table a copy of that report at this session?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, and it will contain some very vital recommendations, many of which —I will go further and say I hope most of which—we shall be able to implement by way of legislation; but I cannot at this stage be prognosticating government policy. Since I have said that, I would hope that hon. members would be reasonable in their discussion of this because, if my recollection serves me right, there are 33,000 level crossings in Canada, and I know there are many in each constituency, and we could go on at some length discussing them. I would not say this if I were not going to table the report, which I assure the committee is an excellent document.

Mr. MacLean: What precautions will be taken when new railway lines are built, such as those proposed to be built in the near future, to prevent the building of level crossings that at a later date will have to be eliminated at a great expense?

Mr. Chevrier: Most of the railways that are being built and have been built in the last several years are built in the wilderness, so that the question does not arise and will not arise until the population in those areas increases far more than it is now.

Mr. MacLean: What I mean to say is that provision should be made so that that does not occur. Perhaps liaison with the provincial departments of highways and municipalities could be brought about so that proper provision might be made for at least some of the railway crossings that cross main highways.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am afraid the minister is forever going to associate me with the Creditville crossing. I have mentioned this level crossing on various occasions in the house and I have had some correspondence with the minister on it, which he has always received sympathetically. An hon. member to my left thanked the minister earlier this afternoon for airports and assistance to some other ports in the country. I hope that this time next year I shall be in a position to do the same with respect to this Creditville crossing which is located seven miles east of Woodstock.

In view of the remarks the minister has just made, I do not intend to make any extensive remarks, but I know that there are many level crossings in Canada. I think this is probably one of the worst, and from an economic point of view would be one of the most easily eliminated. Since I have sent the minister a copy of this, for the purpose of the record I would like to read briefly from the London Free Press of Friday, June 11, at page 10:

> The C.N.R. crossing on No. 2 highway near Creditville, commonly called, "suicide crossing" has been the scene of 24 accidents resulting in one fatality, 10 injured and damage estimated at $8,425 in a little over a year.

The article goes on to cite some further information. I might say that these statistics are not quite up to date, because since June 8 there have been two additional deaths and several injured at this crossing. That damage figure of $8,425 does not include the damages awarded in extensive and expensive litigation. I have already mentioned it several times, and I hope the minister will consider it with some sympathy.

In the neighbouring city of Stratford someone wrote a book called "Renown at Stratford". I hope someone will write a book about this crossing and call it "Carnage at Creditville".

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I hope in the recommendations which have been made there is a suggestion that the freight cars be painted along the bottom of the side so that there will not be so many of these crossing accidents in which the automobiles crash into a stationary train, especially on a rainy night. That is how a great number of these accidents take place.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not wish to anticipate what is in the report.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I thought you knew what was in it.

Mr. Chevrier: I know what the recommendations are but I think perhaps they should be made public when the report is tabled.

Mr. Fulton: Would the minister comment on the possibility of providing in the case of individual railway construction that where the main line of a railway meets a highway there shall be from there on either an underpass or an overpass. Would it not be possible to provide for that in the bill covering railway construction?

Mr. Chevrier: There is a discussion of that very point in the report which will be tabled although I am not quite sure whether there is a recommendation. However, since there has been a discussion on the point I hope my hon. friend will be prepared to allow the matter to stand meantime.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps the minister, before he leaves for the St. Lawrence seaway development project, might leave this indelible mark on the transport legislation of Canada. In fact, it might well be his valedictory to introduce legislation to that effect. That would seem to be most appropriate because otherwise we are going to go on having these jurisdictional conflicts between the province and the dominion as to whose responsibility it is to provide for crossings or underpasses. Surely it could be clearly provided—the minister should not get annoyed because we wish him well in his new appointment.

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend is getting annoyed. I am not getting annoyed.

Mr. Fulton: Well, the minister looks cross.

Mr. Chevrier: How could I look cross at my hon. friend?

Mr. Fulton: I am glad to hear the minister say that. I would like to see him do something about this because this is the last opportunity we will have to discuss this proposition with the minister, who has held his present position for ten years or so and is thoroughly familiar with the problem, more so than anyone else will be for a number of years. He is well aware of the difficulties which surround this question of final responsibility, and whether it is the responsibility of the province to put a road under the railway or the responsibility of the railway to put a road over the highway. Surely it is about time some legislation were enacted which would lay this down clearly with respect to future railway construction. It seems to me to be reasonable that in the case of a main line it should be clearly designated that such a line will be the joint responsibility of the railway and the province with respect to providing a grade crossing over that line.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I am sure no one knows better than my hon. friend the great difficulties surrounding this problem and the government was made fully aware of them after it received certain representations from the board of transport commissioners. That is why we asked the board to study the whole railway-highway crossing problem and matters relating thereto. The board have studied this question and my answer to my hon. friend is to let us see what the board recommends in the report which will be tabled before the end of the session. I have obtained permission from my colleagues in the government to give the house the assurance that it will be tabled. But it must be printed in English and in French and there are quite a number of copies to be made. It is not yet ready but I hope it will be on, shall I say, Friday, and if not then early next week. If perchance the house were to adjourn or prorogue before the report is tabled I will see to it that each member of the house gets a copy of the report.

Mr. Fulton: I hope the minister will insist on its being tabled in time so that he may introduce some recommendations with respect thereto, because I can think of no more lasting memorial—

Mr. Pickersgill: Is this the time for obituaries?

Mr. Fulton: —than legislation dealing with this difficult and vexing question which is of interest not only to his own province but to every province of Canada and to those of us who have to travel the highway and cross railway tracks. Without making any commitment I might say that I would be glad to receive the minister's report and his recommendations; for in view of his long experience I think his recommendations would be quite sound.

Item agreed to.

Canadian maritime commission—

503. Administration, $160,520.

Mr. Green: When will the annual report of the Canadian maritime commission be available? That report covers the year to March 31 and under the act the government has only three months in which to table it. Will we be able to get it before the house prorogues?

Mr. Chevrier: I am informed it will be ready for tabling before the end of the session.

Mr. Green: Can the minister tell the committee whether all of the Canadian deep-sea cargo vessels for which approval for transfer to the United Kingdom registry was sought have now been transferred?

Mr. Chevrier: All the applications that have been made to the maritime commission have been approved by the commission for furtherance to the British ministry of transport, and all except two have been approved by the British ministry of transport.

Mr. Green: When all those ships have been transferred to the United Kingdom registry what will be the number of deep-sea cargo vessels on the Canadian registry? I dealt with this on May 13 as reported at page 4706 of Hansard and my information at that time was that by the time all these transfers had gone through there would only remain 21 dry cargo deep-sea vessels in Canada's merchant fleet. I would like to have the minister verify these figures. I will give him the list. Once these transfers have gone through the total number of deep-sea dry cargo vessels, which, of course, would not include the tankers, would be 21, and of that number 7 would be engaged in coastal trade and not in deep-sea service. Another 8 would comprise the Canadian National Steamships fleet, and I understand there would be only two of the wartime 10,000-tonners left in deep-sea service, one 4,000-tonner built in wartime, and 3 other vessels, none of which would be modern ships. Can the minister tell me whether or not those figures are accurate? If not, can he give me accurate figures in those categories.

Mr. Chevrier: As far as I can ascertain, the hon. gentleman's figure is as accurate as we can have it at this moment, namely, that there are 21 dry-cargo vessels but all of them are deep-sea and none of them are coastal.

Mr. Green: I said "are engaged in the coastal trade". I am informed that seven out of the 21 are not engaged in the deep-sea trade but are engaged in the coastal trade. That would leave only 14 Canadian vessels in the deep-sea trade.

Mr. Chevrier: The information I have is that four are engaged in the coastal trade and that the others are engaged in ocean trade.

Mr. Green: How many of the 10,000-tonners built during the war are engaged in the deep-sea trade? The figure I gave the minister was two.

Mr. Chevrier: It is difficult to give a firm answer because of the position of the transfers and the applications that have been made.

Mr. Green: I mean where the transfers have gone through.

Mr. Chevrier: Assuming that they have gone through, there will be about three or four 10,000-tonners engaged in the deep-sea trade and three in the coastal trade.

Mr. Green: How many of the 4,000-tonners?

Mr. Chevrier: One in the coastal trade and eight in the deep sea trade.

Mr. Green: Will those eight all be Canadian National Steamships vessels?

Mr. Chevrier: I think they will be.

Mr. Green: Is it a fact that the Canadian deep-sea fleet will be the smallest that it has been in 35 years?

Mr. Chevrier: I am not able to say. I would have to go back to the figures I had on the original debate. In the post-war periods I think it has been at a low level compared with war periods. But having regard to other countries, the comparison is good. When one considers that we will be able to call on the ships that have been transferred—some 91 ships or more to the United Kingdom—under the NATO plan whereby ships are to be pooled, and having regard to the circumstances in this peacetime situation in which we find ourselves, I cannot say that the position is detrimental.

Mr. Green: That is a statement which hardly reflects the actual condition, I am afraid. However, have any of these ships which have been transferred to the United Kingdom registry been modernized or is there any arrangement or plan under way for changing those vessels to modern cargo vessels?

Mr. Chevrier: I am informed that there is a new cargo vessel now building in the United Kingdom for a Canadian owner and that two others are in contemplation. These will add three ships to the merchant fleet.

Mr. Green: Will they be under United Kingdom registry?

Mr. Chevrier: They will be under the Canadian flag.

Mr. Green: Are they replacing ships which have been transferred to United Kingdom registry or are they new ships for Canada?

Mr. Chevrier: They are new ships.

Mr. Green: No attempt whatsoever is being made to convert the ships which have gone to United Kingdom registry into modern cargo vessels?

Mr. Chevrier: There have been some applications. There is one application that I can think of that is under consideration but it has not been dealt with definitely yet.

Mr. Green: Has the government made any change whatever in its policy with regard to the merchant marine since the statement of the minister on November 12 last year? At that time he set out the policy. Under that policy as announced there has been no improvement in the situation of which I am aware. From the minister's answers today it is perfectly obvious that the Canadian deep-sea cargo fleet has been liquidated. As he says, we have three or perhaps four old, 10,000-ton wartime freighters. So far the result of this policy has been nil having regard to Canada's procuring a modern deep-sea fleet. I think that is one of the greatest tragedies in the post-war period. The minister tries to compare our position with that of other nations. But the fact is that Switzerland is going to have a much greater merchant navy than Canada. That fact just shows how ridiculous the situation is. Is the government making any change in the plan, or is the same old situation to exist?

Mr. Chevrier: I would rather put it this way: There has been no change since the later of the two statements.

Mr. Green: What was that?

Mr. Chevrier: Since the later of the two statements I made in the House of Commons. My hon. friend asks if there has been any change since my statement in November. I made another statement. My hon. friend has made several speeches to which I have had to reply, the latest of which was on the first item of these estimates. I can say this. There has been no change since that time, and the position remains as it was when I made that intervention. I think it would be some three weeks ago; it might be a little bit less or it might be a little bit more. I then gave the reasons for the decision. I hope my hon. friend will not invite me to go into the whole policy again. It has been put on record twice. I have given him frank answers to the questions he put. There is no change in the policy. That is all I can say other than this, as I emphasized the last time I spoke: The matter is still under review. I cannot repeat now why it has been impossible to subsidize ships either from a capital standpoint or from an operational standpoint. However the position today is substantially what it was about three weeks ago.

Mr. Green: I have one other question. How would the minister propose to man any of these ships that were brought back from United Kingdom registry, now that the Canadian seamen have been dispersed to other jobs all over the country?

Mr. Chevrier: We have a million tons of other shipping—coastal and inland lakes shipping—that gives us the nucleus from which to get men.

Mr. Green: I do not want to prolong the discussion any further, Mr. Chairman. The minister knows exactly where we stand on this question. I hope the cabinet will give further consideration to this problem once the house has prorogued. By the time we come back next fall or after the new year I hope there will have been adopted or worked out a policy which will bring about the objective placed before the government by its own maritime commission several years ago, namely, that Canada would have a deep-sea merchant fleet containing a nucleus of modern, fast, cargo vessels. I am afraid it is too late. I am afraid that the die has been cast and the situation cannot be remedied. Perhaps the minister is right that consideration even at this late date would prevent this tragedy occurring, and I do hope he will give the whole question further consideration.

Mr. Pearkes: Have we any oil tankers sailing under the Canadian flag other than those of the Royal Canadian Navy?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, we have eleven.

Mr. Herridge: I think this is the appropriate item for me to ask this question. As the minister knows, since the C.P.R. discontinued the steamer service on the Arrow lakes—

Mr. Chevrier: That comes under the next item, the subvention item.

Mr. Herridge: Oh, I am very hopeful.

Item agreed to.

504. Steamship subventions for coastal services, as detailed in the estimates, $4,147,725.

Mr. Herridge: As the minister knows, since the Canadian Pacific Railway Company discontinued the steamer service on the Arrow lakes the residents of the upper Arrow lakes have been without any form of commercial water transport and have suffered great inconvenience. However the flame of hope has been kept alive in their breasts owing to periodic announcements by the minister of public works of British Columbia and certain press statements that negotiations are proceeding with the minister's department or the maritime commission with respect to a subsidy or a joint subsidy. Can the minister inform the house what has happened in connection with that application?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. I have been in communication with the minister of public works of the province of British Columbia who is arranging for an application for a subsidy on the Arrow lakes. The matter is now before the maritime commission for study.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you.

Mr. Fulton: I regret to say that owing to the decision of the house with respect to the last redistribution bill the area about which the hon. member for Kootenay West speaks is no longer in my constituency, but I should like to say a word. There is, I think, no more romantic or scenic area in the whole Dominion of Canada than the Arrow lakes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Come down to Bonavista.

Mrs. Fairclough: Bring your sou'wester.

Mr. Nowlan: So speaks the old salt.

Mr. Fulton: Of course I am sure that the area represented by the minister who has just spoken is scenic, but unfortunately it is fogbound for one half of the year and icebound for the other half, which seems to me to have dictated the state of mind of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Macdonnell: There is more than one kind of fog.

Mr. Fulton: I was speaking of an area of Canada which is neither fogbound nor icebound. I am not going to keep the committee for long, but I want to say that in the first place I cannot understand the apparent lack of interest taken in this area by the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is one of the pioneer districts in the province of British Columbia, particularly in the interior, and I cannot help but think that if the Canadian Pacific Railway had been a little more aggressive in their requests to the federal government we might have had a subsidy for the continuation of the steamer service on the Arrow lakes. Whatever the decision may be on the merits of the application, it is one of the most scenic tourist areas of the whole province and of the whole dominion. It is not only one of the most scenic areas, it is one of the oldest routes of communication between the prairie provinces and the Pacific coast.

Mr. Herridge: Since 1811.

Mr. Fulton: As the hon. member for Kootenay West points out, since 1811. Whether it is because of lack of interest on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway or lack of understanding on the part of the federal Department of Transport I do not know. I do not care to assess the responsibility, but it seems to me that it is the greatest pity—

Mr. Chevrier: In view of what my hon. friend said a moment ago, surely it cannot be lack of interest in the Department of Transport.

Mr. Fulton: Then what the minister is indicating is that the Canadian Pacific Railway has not pursued actively enough its request for a subsidy.

Mr. Chevrier: I was not indicating that at all.

Mr. Fulton: Then I wish the minister would indicate exactly what he does mean. As I say, I am not prepared to assess the responsibility. I speak only from the point of view of one from the interior of the province of British Columbia. Shortly there is to be a conducted tour, if I may call it that, of members of parliament and their wives to the province of British Columbia, and I regret exceedingly that they are not going to go down from Revelstoke through the Arrow lakes to the constituency of the hon. member for Kootenay West and from there back up through the Okanagan to Kamloops and on down to Vancouver.

I simply want to support the request made by the hon. member for Kootenay West for consideration by the federal Department of Transport of an adequate subsidy to enable the company to continue its service on the Arrow lakes which has been one of the pioneer routes through British Columbia and has been in continuous operation since 1898. From the point of view of both tourist and commercial activities, it would be a great pity if the service were to be permanently discontinued.

Mr. MacLean: Can the minister tell the committee what success has been achieved in the discussions respecting the reducing of congestion on the subsidized route between Wood Island, Prince Edward Island, and Caribou, Nova Scotia. I realize that a new boat is being built, but I am thinking of the immediate problem for this summer and next summer until the new boat is put into service.

Mr. Chevrier: There have been a number of discussions between officials of the company, Northumberland Ferries, the government of Prince Edward Island and the maritime commission. A number of suggestions have been made to meet the increased traffic during the course of the present season. One of the first suggestions made was a very excellent one which the commission was prepared to accept but on proceeding further it was found that some of the conditions could not be met by the applicant. I hesitate to go into the details because they concern a private financial undertaking on the part of Northumberland Ferries. However, I believe the matter is being given additional study by the commission now.

Mr. MacLean: Can the minister state what company receives the subvention and provides the service between Pictou, Charlottetown and the Magdalen islands which is listed in the details, and what is the frequency of the service?

Mr. Chevrier: The Magdalen Islands Transportation Company.

Mr. Pearkes: It is with fear and trembling that I ask what is the reason for the reduction of $100,000 under western local services. Surely that would have nothing to do with the service on the west coast of Vancouver island, would it?

Mr. Chevrier: The reduction concerns the Canadian Pacific Steamships subsidy and was brought about because the ship was withdrawn.

Mr. Pearkes: Yes, but if a subsidy were provided might they not be able to find another ship? The situation on the west coast of Vancouver island is serious. There are many places you cannot reach by road. These people have been there for nearly a century now and they have had to depend entirely on the steamship service. For instance, I have in my constituency quite a flourishing fishing and logging village, Port Renfrew. The people there are dependent upon their mail and all their freight coming in by the steamship service. Unless they are able to use the facilities of the private logging companies they are dependent upon the steamship service going up the west coast.

This is a very serious situation for these people who have been in here for many, many years. There is an area which, potentially, could be of tremendous economic value. Not only are there the logging camps, the fishing camps, but there is also a considerable amount of mining farther up the west coast of Vancouver island.

Is it not possible to provide some form of assistance which would make it possible for some other company to operate the service if the Canadian Pacific has not a vessel now? I know the vessel they had was worn out and was not considered safe for the exposed passage, because you get the full sweep of the Pacific ocean up against those shores. You cannot put on any little lake steamer. There are these thriving communities all up the coast of Vancouver island, and I wonder what these people are going to do.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not know whether my hon. friend understood me or if I did not make my position clear. This $100,000 subsidy was not turned down. I hope there is no misunderstanding as to that. If some other company will make an application for service, I am sure the maritime commission will be glad to give it consideration. Since the withdrawal of the particular ship and the contract which operated between the maritime commission and the Canadian Pacific there has been no further application. I can suggest this to my hon. friend. If the Canadian Pacific will make application for another ship or some other company interested in the area would make application, I am sure the commission would be glad to consider it.

Mr. Pearkes: Thank you very much; the door is not closed to another company?

Mr. Chevrier: Certainly not.

Mr. Matheson: I want to ask a question concerning the Wood Island-Caribou service. Following the breakdown of negotiations between the company and the maritime commission, I understand that the commission was looking into the possibility of buying the Lady Alexandra on the west coast, so that additional service could be put into operation this year. I am wondering if that has been abandoned or whether that is still a possibility?

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry that I cannot add to what I have already indicated, namely, that we have been in communication and negotiation with both the Northumberland Ferries Limited and the members of the Prince Edward Island government in connection with additional facilities and in connection with the operation of the new ship. Those negotiations are still continuing.

Mr. Matheson: I take it that that would mean there is still some possibility of extra service being provided before the new boat is completed?

Mr. Chevrier: I hope so, but I am not in a position to say so now because I do not know where the negotiations stand.

Item agreed to.

National harbours board—

505. Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures applicable to the calendar year 1954 on any or all of the following accounts:

Reconstruction and capital expenditures—Halifax, $989,500; Saint John, $1,815,000; Quebec, $1,365,000; Churchill, $900,000; generally unforeseen and miscellaneous, $200,000; total, $5,269,500.

Less—Amount to be expended from replacement funds, $387,000; $4,882,500.

Mr. Green: This is the first item for the national harbours board, and I wish the minister would explain to the committee what course is followed by this board when it gives consideration to the necessity for new buildings in the harbours. For example, this spring we have had the position stated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that because Vancouver harbour is unable to handle any more wheat the price of wheat at Fort William had to be cut lower than the price at Vancouver. Of course, this is a sore point on the west coast, and we will deal with it under the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the national harbours board given any consideration to the need for further elevator accommodation at the port of Vancouver? Surely it is their responsibility to see that the facilities in these ports are adequate to meet conditions from time to time. However, we have a statement from one of the ministers, and a senior minister, with regard to the capacity of Vancouver harbour to handle wheat.

It appears to me that there should be steps taken to increase the capacity at the port. We do not want to get into a position where wheat that should go through the west coast is being diverted through Fort William and Port Arthur, simply because Vancouver does not have adequate accommodation. I should like to have the minister's comment on that situation. Then there is another point I want to raise in connection with Vancouver harbour.

Mr. Chevrier: With respect to the general policy of the board, the board has been giving consideration to the acute situation in the elevators under its jurisdiction for the past two years, and I would say quite actively during the last year. It has, because of the position it found in Montreal, Halifax, and Churchill, been able to recommend extensions there.

In Vancouver my hon. friend will remember the national harbours board were in a very embarrassing position at one time, and that not so long ago, when there were two leased elevators on which the leases expired and which the lessee did not see fit to renew. The national harbours board had to advertise, and it was some time before they could get someone to renew this lease. The position was so bad that they even had to advertise in the United States, with the result they succeeded in getting United States interests to take over both the elevators in question. I am informed by the board that there has been delivered and moved out of Vancouver more wheat this year than ever before. In fact I think the record will indicate there has been twice as much.

Mr. Green: No, the minister had better check that. The last word I had was that it did not even equal last year.

Mr. Chevrier: I am informed that compared with the corresponding period last year there has been twice as much wheat moved through the elevators at Vancouver; that is the information I have.

Now, with regard to the additional facilities, they are under constant review. If the national harbours board, which is a government agency and not a departmental agency, wants to make recommendations for additional facilities and extensions, they will be considered in the same manner as extensions at other places.

Mr. Green: In the vote there is $989,500 for capital expenditures at Halifax, and an additional $550,000 in the supplementaries; $1,815,000 for Saint John and an additional $350,000 in the supplementary estimates; $1,365,000 for Quebec and $900,000 for Churchill as well as $200,000 for unforeseen expenditures. This situation is serious. The government itself said that the port is operating practically to capacity, so far as the shipment of wheat is concerned. I cannot understand why the national harbours board has not taken some steps to meet that situation. We are the port farthest removed from Ottawa and, incidentally, the port through which pass by far the greatest number of ships. There is no reason why the national harbours board should not be right up to the minute on this situation. It is not good enough to say that because two or three years ago they had to lease an elevator to an American company there is no need today for further elevator space.

I do not begrudge expenditures appearing in the estimates in connection with other ports. However I would ask the government whether it has under consideration the possibility of extending the facilities at the port of Vancouver for the handling of wheat.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, before the minister replies may I say that this is an important point, provided that there is in Vancouver a demand for additional facilities. If those who administer the port at Vancouver have made a request for additional facilities I would like to know why there is no item in the estimates to provide them with those facilities. If they have not made a request then I take it they must feel that the facilities at the port of Vancouver which, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has said, is the busiest all-year-round port in Canada, are sufficient to provide for the traffic there.

I would not care to associate myself with a demand for further or greater expenditures of money at the port of Vancouver by the harbour commissioners there just because a considerable amount of money has been spent in other harbours across Canada. But if the harbour commissioners at Vancouver have indicated to the minister that there is a need for further facilities at that port to take care of the traffic, then I would insist that Vancouver receive equal consideration with those other ports.

Mr. Chevrier: May I say in answer to the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway that I should like to confirm what I said earlier about the movement of wheat through Vancouver. Up to the end of May of this year it was 49,442,017 bushels as compared with 26,113,000 up to the end of May of last year.

Mr. Green: But the record for a year is over 100,000,000 bushels.

Mr. Chevrier: So that is about twice as much, up to now. Then dealing with facilities: I am sure my hon. friend would not want to have additional facilities there if they were not required. I thought the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway put it pretty clearly. The national harbours board think there are sufficient facilities for grain handling at Vancouver. As a matter of fact there are facilities to move 18,716,000 bushels of grain.

Mr. Green: Where?

Mr. Chevrier: At Vancouver.

Mr. Green: In what period?

Mr. Chevrier: That is the capacity of the elevators, as compared with the 15 million bushels at Montreal. So the board feel that with the facilities now owned by private enterprise there is sufficient to meet the demand. If the time arrives when the facilities are not adequate we will build extensions to the present elevators.

Mr. Green: Then I understand the board is making no recommendation whatever for any increase in grain handling facilities at Vancouver; is that right?

Mr. Chevrier: There has been no recommendation made to me for that purpose.

Mr. Green: Has any consideration been given by the government to the setting up of advisory councils in any of these national harbours, for instance at Vancouver? I think there was a recommendation of that kind contained in the report of Sir Alexander Gibb back in the early thirties, when he investigated the situation in all the national ports in Canada. Here is a good example where there would be benefit from having some local council advising the national harbours board.

The present situation is that you have three commissioners sitting here in Ottawa, 2,500 miles away; and I do not believe there is any representative from the west coast on that board. It would be far more beneficial to the port if there were some local committee able to advise. As I have said, Sir Alexander Gibb did make a recommendation along that line. I believe his suggestion was that there should be representatives of the city government, the shipping interests, labour unions and the like. Has any consideration been given by the government to a council of that kind at Vancouver?

Mr. Chevrier: The answer is no, because that is one of the recommendations of Sir Alexander Gibb that the government did not accept. There were many it did accept, but that is one it did not see fit to implement. There are many reasons, which I have put on the record from time to time, as to why the government did not feel it was advisable.

I can say that in the port of Halifax they felt rather strongly about that recommendation at one time. They have abandoned their plea for it, and have adopted a port club known as the port of Halifax club. I am told that it is properly known as the port of Halifax commission. That commission is composed of a group of local people who are interested in the port and who communicate with the national harbours board from time to time. As the hon. member knows, the national harbours board is a body which visits each of the harbours from time to time and meets these commissions. It meets a similar group in the city of Quebec. If other groups in Vancouver feel they would like to do the same thing, I am sure the national harbours board would meet them. But it was found inadvisable to accept the recommendation of the Gibb report.

Mr. Green: I have one further question. Within the last few days a large quantity of crude oil has been pumped into Vancouver harbour through a mistake made by an employee of the Imperial Oil Limited, as a result of which 18 miles of the waterfront have been affected. A newspaper dispatch of June 11 states that—

> —4,000 barrels of heavy oil spilled into the inlet from Ioco refinery May 28.

Now Imperial Oil is busy having it cleaned up. The dispatch continues:

> Vancouver's biggest, most expensive spring cleaning job—removal of oil from Burrard inlet beaches —will cost thousands of dollars and will take weeks or months to complete.

What is the position of the national harbours board in a case of this kind? Have they had any report about this condition? This is the case of a company contaminating these beaches. Here is a case of a company contaminating those beaches and causing thousands of dollars worth of damage in addition to all kinds of inconvenience. The national harbours board has ample power to deal with a situation of this kind. In fact the board members were not satisfied with the power they had before. They got a lot more this session, when they had the harbours board bill amended, as hon. members know. What steps, if any, is the national harbours board taking with regard to this action of the Imperial Oil?

Mr. Chevrier: The chairman of the national harbours board informs me that as soon as he had been advised of the pollution of the waters in Vancouver harbour by this oil he asked for a complete report. He has received only an interim report and is awaiting a final report. Since then, I am informed—I cannot verify this statement—the Imperial Oil has succeeded in doing away with a substantial portion of the oil.

Mr. Green: They have now turned off the tap that was turned on before.

Mr. Chevrier: However, the national harbours board are pretty seriously concerned about it because it affects their interests in the harbour, and until there is a complete report I am afraid it would be difficult for me to add anything.

Mr. Green: In a case of this kind do they instigate prosecutions, or what steps do they take to see that this sort of thing does not happen again? Similar cases have happened before, but I do not remember anything quite as bad as this. There is no reason at all why actions like these should occur. The harbours board should have sufficient supervision of the harbour to see that it is prevented. Are they going to prosecute the company or is it just going to be a case of, oh, let the Imperial Oil clean up the beaches as best they can and the thousands of people affected can make the best of a bad job?

Mr. Chevrier: They have complete control, and there is provision under the act for action to be taken by the national harbours board, but I am sure the hon. member would not expect the board to move by way of action until they have the complete details.

Mr. Green: I do not expect them to move very fast, I admit that.

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. member for Kamloops has reminded us that before the estimates are up next year the minister might have another assignment. If this should happen he will have the best wishes of all his colleagues in this house. Before this item carries I should like to express my personal appreciation to the minister for the sympathetic consideration he has given to the port of Churchill and the needs of this northern route. Can he at this stage indicate when navigation is likely to open in Churchill, and whether any cargoes have been booked at this date for the shipment of grain through Churchill?

Mr. Chevrier: I am informed that the navigation season will open on July 26 and extend to about October 10. It is expected there will be as many, if not more, ships this year than last year.

Mr. Fulton: Does the minister control the ice?

Mr. Nowlan: Can the minister give us a break-down of the vote for the port of Halifax which is in the supplementary estimates, although we have not them before us? Can we have them both at the same time?

Mr. Chevrier: The main estimates are for the reconstruction of the lower apron of the ocean wall, berths 20, 21 and 22, $65,000; enlargement of the cold storage warehouse, $200,000; replacement of wooden gallery, in steel, $200,000; grain elevator extension, $450,000.

Mr. Nowlan: I realize that the minister said the other day that at some time he or the Prime Minister hoped to be in a position to make a statement dealing with various things affecting his department, and I take it that one of the matters that prompted that statement might be the St. Lawrence seaway and the development which would flow from that. Without anticipating that statement, I should like to ask the minister whether he can comment on what would be the position of harbours which now come under municipal or local boards but which later on will be within the ambit of the St. Lawrence seaway development. There are those who assume that those harbours will be of as great importance as, for instance, Halifax or Vancouver, which now come under the national harbours board. Take as an instance the city of Toronto, which has a municipal board. There are other harbours along that seaway which have various types of boards. The minister has given a great deal of consideration to this whole matter. I wonder what the government policy is with respect to the administration of those various harbours when that takes place.

Mr. Chevrier: It is impossible to answer the question because the St. Lawrence seaway has not been started, and it will be some years before it is completed. All I can say is that there are three heads under which harbours are divided, namely, those under the national harbours board, those under municipal operation, municipal commissions and smaller harbours that are operated by the Department of Transport. It is impossible to foresee what will happen in the future. Take for instance the city of Toronto. If it got to the stage where they wanted to become a national harbour, they would have to apply for inclusion under the act; but that is a harbour which is exceptionally well operated, and would have every advantage in remaining under the jurisdiction that it now is. That could go for a number of other harbours on the St. Lawrence, but I would hesitate to make a statement. It is a difficult question that my hon. friend asks me to expound. I do not think I can go any farther at this stage.

Mr. Bell: Can the minister take a minute to tell us what is due for Saint John under their item? I should like also to hear whether the $1 million reduction from last year is in capital expenditure. I might take this opportunity also to say that while these were very fine pleas for the port of Vancouver and increased facilities for business, Saint John, and Halifax to a lesser degree, were the only two Canadian ports that had reductions in tonnage figures. While we have been given fair treatment by the harbours board, we must have every consideration in the matter of business and facilities.

Mr. Chevrier: The items for Saint John are the Pugsley terminal wharf extension, and sheds, $700,000; extension to berths 2 and 3, a little over $1 million. The items my hon. friend referred to have been reinstated in the supplementaries.

Item agreed to.

Air services—

Loans, investments and advances—

543. To provide for the acquisition of land required to control properties in the vicinity of main terminal airports in order to prevent the erection of hazards to flying, and for future development of those airports, $1,000,000.

Mr. Green: This vote appears for the first time. Will the minister explain how the money is to be spent, and why money for the development of airports is included in this vote rather than in some of the earlier votes for civil aviation?

Mr. Chevrier: This is a new vote, as the hon. member has said. The object of this vote is to provide for future expansion of the major airports, but more particularly for the airports of Malton, Dorval and Vancouver. In the last several years we have found in the vicinity of the major airports the necessity of taking more land than is really required because of the zoning requirement in those areas and because of the expansion required. The defence estimates were such in the last several years that it was impossible to get this vote, which we sought from time to time. Now, $1 million is just a beginning in that direction and it will take a great deal more to meet the needs of expansion around the major airports of Canada. However, we hope that in the next estimates there will be a greater amount than that.

Mr. Green: On what airports is this amount to be spent? What is the break-down?

Mr. Chevrier: There is no break-down. This is just a general amount for use when the time comes to expand but there has been no planned method in which the $1 million will be spent.

Mr. Green: Has the minister no idea of how much will be spent at, say, Dorval, how much at Malton, and how much at Vancouver airport?

Mr. Chevrier: The answer to that is no, because it has not yet been possible to zone all these airports, and neither has it been possible to plan for future airport expansion. Take, for example, Vancouver. Until we have possession of that airport, despite the fact that we have been pressed on a number of occasions as to our future plans, it is not possible to do anything. But when we have possession we will proceed. At Dorval the same thing can be said so far as zoning regulations are concerned. We have zoned one airport but we have not got around to zoning the others.

Item agreed to.

National harbours board—

Loans, investments and advances—

544. Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures applicable to the calendar year 1954 on any or all of the following accounts: reconstruction and capital expenditures—Three Rivers, $380,000; Montreal, $3,558,200; Vancouver, $376,000, total, $4,314,200.

Less—Amount to be expended from replacement funds, $175,580; $4,138,620.

Mr. Green: Can the minister explain this item?

Mr. Chevrier: At Three Rivers there is an expenditure of $380,000. For the transit sheds at Montreal there is an amount in the item covering sections 40, 41 and 42 of the wharf, amounting to $1,500,000, and the others are small items except for two car dumpers amounting to $820,000, while at Vancouver there is a rock well bulkhead, and dust control at No. 3 elevator at Granville amounting to $250,000.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: We will go on to supplementary estimates item No. 764.

Railway and steamship services—
Loans, investments and advances—

764. Loan to the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, on such terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve, for the redemption of Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, 25-year, 5 per cent, government guaranteed gold bonds, issued March 1, 1930, and maturing March 1, 1955, $3,600,000.

Mr. Knowles: Just one simple little question, Mr. Chairman. I notice there is reference here to government guaranteed gold bonds. What are gold bonds?

Mr. Chevrier: I think that is just a name. The Department of Finance is responsible for the manner in which this estimate is set up and I think it is just an attractive name given in order to encourage sales.

Mr. Knowles: The minister is not trying to put us back on the gold standard, is he?

Mr. Chevrier: No.

Item agreed to.

Air services—
Loans, investments and advances—

766. Loan to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation in accordance with the provisions of section 14 of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Act for additions and betterments to facilities, $683,561.

Mr. Green: Will the minister explain why it is necessary for the government to grant this large sum to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation?

Mr. Chevrier: Well, the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Act provides for advances to the crown company from time to time for additions and betterments, and the sum of money provided here is for the expansion of the beam station in the Montreal area and the amount is $232,000. There are extensions at Vancouver stations, amounting to $269,000; at St. John's, Newfoundland, a new cable station amounting to $176,000; the Halifax station removal amounting to $29,860, and additions and betterments at a number of stations extending from Drummondville to Bamfield, B.C., which make up the entire vote. These are items provided for in the capital budget of the C.O.T.C. which was tabled in the house.

Item agreed to.

National harbours board—
Loans, investments and advances—

767. Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures applicable to the calendar year 1954 on the following account: reconstruction and capital expenditures—Montreal—further amount required, $600,000.

Mr. Green: This item covers an additional $600,000 for the port of Montreal which makes a total of $4,158,200 for that port. Now, what is this additional $600,000 for?

Mr. Chevrier: This covers the construction of a shed at section 35 of one of the wharves to be used for coastal shipping. The Canadian shipping federation and the Montreal board of trade and chamber of commerce have made representations to the board over a period of years and it was felt that the time had arrived for the construction of these additional facilities and this is covered in this vote amounting to $600,000.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I believe that this is the last item of the minister's estimates and I would like to join with other hon. members who have expressed their good wishes to the minister just in case he is not back with us next session. In case he might be back I had better not say too much about him or he might quote it back at us, but whatever happens we all wish him well.

Mr. Green: I would like to join with other hon. members in extending my best wishes to the minister, but if he does come back here next session we will try to give him as much trouble as we can.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Public printing and stationery—

353. Departmental administration, $557,882.

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. members will find this item at page 50 and the details at page 426. Shall the item carry?

Mr. Fulton: Could the Secretary of State say when they expect to get into the new printing bureau?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not the Minister of Public Works but I have a certain amount of curiosity and I asked the minister about this. He told me he thinks we should start moving in some time in October. Personally I am keeping my fingers crossed.

Item agreed to.

355. Printing and binding the annual statutes, $40,000.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if there is any provision made here for the printing and binding of the Criminal Code of Canada which, we are told, is to go into force on January 1, 1955. What arrangements are being made for the circulation of this statute to magistrates, and particularly to the courts generally in Canada prior to the coming into force of the act?

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand in anticipation of the passing of this statute, which has not yet been given royal assent—I assume that it will be given in due course—the Department of Justice has been in touch with the queen's printer and he is very hopeful that, since the type is all set, except for certain small amendments which were made recently, it should not take very many weeks to have copies available for distribution.

Mr. Fulton: I have a suggestion to make with regard to this particular item and I hope it will not result in increasing the estimate. I suggest that when the statute is printed and bound there be some reference in the marginal notes to the sections of the previous Criminal Code of which the new statutes are a consolidation. I just want to make that point because it seems to me it will be the major statute of this session and the one which will be of most interest to the people of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be glad to bring that suggestion to the attention of the queen's printer and the Department of Justice.

Mr. Knowles: Under this item having to do with the printing of statutes there is one very small point—in fact, it is just the omission of one letter—that I want to call to the attention of the Secretary of State. In doing this, perhaps I should say that one of the things of which I am extremely proud is the excellent job of printing that is done by my fellow workers over at the printing bureau. In no case is the work better or more accurately done than it is in connection with the printing of the statutes. In this connection the degree of accuracy is really something to commend. I wanted to say that so that the one small error which I have come across will not be taken as a mark of criticism.

It so happened that when the Revised Statutes of 1952 came into our possession, I took the trouble to look up certain of the statutes in which I was particularly interested. For example, there are a few places in the statutes where amendments which I have introduced in the house have been accepted in some form in due course. I wanted to make sure that the commissioners who revised the statutes had not omitted any of those important amendments. One of the statutes in connection with which I had the privilege of playing some part by way of amendment was the amendment to the British North America Act—the second one—in the year 1949. I refer to the amendment which we asked for in this parliament and to which Westminster agreed, on the basis of which we now have the right to amend the British North America Act here in Canada in respect of matters exclusively federal. As some hon. members will recall, the resolution seeking that amendment was moved by the Prime Minister. I had the privilege of moving an amendment to the Prime Minister's motion. The Minister of Justice moved a subamendment. In due course they all carried. However, on looking up the version of that amendment which appears at page 297 of volume VI of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, I find that a very small error has been made. When you get down quite a way in section 1 you find that it reads as follows:

—or as regards the requirements that there shall be a session of the parliament of Canada at least one each year, and—

That word "one" should be "once". I checked our own Hansard. I checked our own Votes and Proceedings. In those cases it is shown correctly. Also, just to make sure of the matter, I checked chapter 81 of the statutes of the United Kingdom for the year 1949 and I find that they have it correctly. It is correct in every other place except at page 297 of volume VI of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952. Whenever there is a reprinting, I trust that small error will be corrected.

Mr. Pickersgill: These things do sometimes happen. I remember that in 1938 my attention was drawn to the reprinting of the British North America Act itself by the then king's printer. The section about the executive government being vested in the Queen's privy council had the word "council" left out of it, thus leaving a rather interesting result.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: That completes the items under public printing and stationery. While I am entirely in the hands of the committee, I perhaps will take the liberty of pointing out at this stage that the next item is item No. 1, departmental administration, Department of the Secretary of State. If the minister has an opening statement, I suggest that we might perhaps now call it six o'clock as he could speak for only about two minutes and then would be interrupted.

Mr. Fulton: I see that the item is No. 417. I therefore agree with you, Mr. Chairman, that we should call it six o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Yes; it is item 417.

417. Departmental administration, $262,619.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may, I should like to say just a word. I do not really think I have any opening statement to make. The Department of the Secretary of State is not a policy department. I thought I was simply here to answer questions about the department. I do not propose to take up the time of the committee with a statement.

Mr. Fulton: We have a certain number of questions to ask the Secretary of State who, we are quite certain, is enjoying his new experience. We should like to hear from him about his new experience. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, perhaps you will call it six o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hate to waste a minute.

Mr. MacInnis: I have a few remarks I should like to make on this item.

Mr. Fulton: So have I.

Mr. MacInnis: I shall not be long but I could not finish before six o'clock. I would therefore ask you, Mr. Chairman, to call it six o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee that I call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: On division.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

---

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the hon. member for Kamloops, who ordinarily would speak first on these estimates, I should like to speak for a moment or two because unfortunately I have an appointment elsewhere which will take me out of the chamber in a very few moments. As this is the general item dealing with the administration of the Department of the Secretary of State, there is one matter that does not come directly within the estimates on which I should like to comment for a few moments. I refer to what in my opinion is the unfortunate situation now existing in so far as awards of recognition to Canadian civilian personnel are concerned. We have a situation in this country where those who have served the state—and I use "state" as a very general term—for many years, and whom one might think were entitled to some recognition, find that there is nothing in the gift of the government of Canada which can be given them by way of such recognition.

Some may remember that I raised this matter some time ago and gave the illustration of a lady who had worked on the piers in Halifax for a matter of some twenty or thirty years going back to the first war. She had served the soldiers going through the piers at that time with coffee, and continued on with immigrants during the twenties and thirties and into the forties. When she reached certainly a rather advanced age the department suggested that she was too old to do this. She never received a cent of salary and they employed someone else to do the work. It was suggested that possibly some little award of recognition might be given her and I was told that no such thing was permitted. I do not think that is right.

We talk a great deal today, and properly so, of the development of the Canadian status. We take pride in the development of a Canadian nationalism. We hear talk about a Canadian flag and all these other things which go towards the national development of Canada. Yet we find that on a national basis we have no way by which we can give recognition to those who have served the state, using the word in a very general way. If one has achieved prominence in the academic world, the industrial world or the world of politics, universities will give recognition. We have sitting in this chamber those who have achieved awards of doctor's degrees, and they have been earned. Even in the churches there are titles which are conferred. I understand there is an order of knighthood in one of the great churches of this country.

There was a time when we did give awards, and I want to make it very plain that I am not now suggesting for a moment anything of a hereditary nature. We are not talking about peerages or anything of that kind. Any awards given will have to be won by the individual himself, must be worn by the individual and must die with the individual. I am not suggesting even an order of knighthood although personally—

Mr. Fulton: Or even a crystal ball.

Mr. Nowlan: Or even a crystal ball, as my hon. friend says. I would not be averse to seeing the knighthood title "Sir" bestowed in certain cases. I remember that a former chief justice of Nova Scotia who died not long ago carried that title with dignity and respect and won the approbation not only of the bar but of the province as a whole. But I want to make it plain that I am not discussing anything of a hereditary nature or even the restoration of such orders, but I do say that I think the time has come when we should restore some of the orders that have been within the gift of the government before and which I find have now apparently been done away with.

I am quite sure the Secretary of State will say: Far be it from me to be vested with the responsibility of making recommendations in such a matter. I know it would not be easy to decide. Undoubtedly there would be newspapers which would say that these were political awards, that it was a terrible thing and that it should not be left to politicians to make such recommendations. That may be a fair criticism but I would say that after all the antennae of politicians are fairly well tuned to the public current and public opinion, and I am quite sure that no recommendations would be made to the Secretary of State, whoever he might be, which did not meet with the approval of the people within the constituency concerned.

Personally, having played a little bit of politics for more years than I like to remember, the only thing I have ever got out of a federal government, Liberal or Conservative, is the satisfaction I got in the thirties of recommending a man who had given over forty years to the Boy Scout movement and who certainly made an impression on my life as he did on all the boys within that community. I suggested to a certain person that his name might be considered for the O.B.E. That recommendation was considered and ultimately he received the award. I know that it was one which certainly met with the approval not only of the people of the community but of the whole province.

It is something like that that I have in mind. As far as I know the great race to the south of us has no civilian awards whatsoever. I suppose that is part of their traditions. When they broke with the crown at the time of the American revolutionary war they resented any suggestion of preferment and apparently the tradition was established that no such awards would be given. But, without speaking at all critically, when one sees the number of Kentucky colonels, shall we say, created in that country from year to year and realizes that anyone who is elected to office, even that of justice of the peace, bears the title "honourable" for the rest of his life, I think he can say that even there there is a desire to have some recognition of some kind.

I have checked the situation in the commonwealth countries. We know of course that in Great Britain a multitude of titles and preferments can be created. I am not speaking now of the peerage or knighthood. There are some very select ones such as Companion of Honour, Order of Merit and others that are given to the individual, and there are also the orders of the British Empire, the C.B.E., O.B.E. and M.B.E. The same applies in Australia and New Zealand. In those countries they have a civilian list and a military list. In Canada we had a civilian list and a military list, and up until some time after 1935 civilian awards were made. Then they were discontinued.

During the last war many civilian awards of the British Empire were made on the rather farfetched assumption, I think, that the people concerned were making some contribution to the war effort. I know some friends of mine received awards. They certainly deserved them, but if you are going to apply the yardstick of the war effort I would suggest that everyone who was not in jail or a saboteur was probably contributing something to the war effort. If you made awards on that basis you would have a fairly liberal list from which to choose.

This practice was discontinued shortly after the war, and when I took up the matter of this lady whom I mentioned earlier with the Secretary of State I found rather to my surprise that orders of the British Empire of the various ranks were reserved entirely for the military. I have no objection whatsoever to these awards being given to those in the armed services. I think it is perfectly fitting they should receive them.

But I do suggest this. If it is found desirable, and apparently it has been, to confer upon those in the employ of the state these various awards from time to time, then there is all the more reason why they should be conferred upon those who are not in the employ of the state. Certainly in Great Britain, and I believe in Australia and New Zealand, there is a civilian list. I am not sure of the seniority of the titles, but there is the O.B.E., the M.B.E. and C.B.E. I should like, sir, to see that civilian list restored in Canada, so that certain recognition could be given.

I am not overlooking the fact that we have the George Medal which is, I understand, an award given to civilians rendering acts of valour. For instance, if a farmer pulls someone out of a burning aeroplane or somebody rescues a person from drowning, then the George Medal is a fit and proper award and one which we recognize should be given. But it is given only for valour. I am not overlooking the fact that I have heard —I am sure the Secretary of State has much greater knowledge of this than I have—that there is such an order as the Canada Medal. I must say that is a rather forbidding and awesome sounding title, a rather metallic sound. It is reminiscent of the prize a farmer gets for exhibiting a bull at a fair. I believe we could have chosen a better title.

Nevertheless, I understand that at one time, and the Secretary of State is probably conversant with this in another role, we did establish something called the Canada Medal. I have heard from someone who was supposed to be well informed that there was a time when the government of Canada was confronted with a list of those to whom the Canada Medal might have been awarded. The ones responsible for the government of Canada said, "enough". The list was never considered and no promulgations were ever made. Even if the lists for the Canada Medal were promulgated, I believe it would serve the purpose I have in mind.

I do not intend to take the time of the committee in making further mention of this matter. I speak of it because we have a new Secretary of State and one whom I know, because of his background, is conversant with the problem of this government in connection with the matters to which I am referring. I believe he, too, might feel that something of this nature could be done. I am urging that the time has come when action should be taken. We had it, then dropped it for various reasons and I am not going into those. There might have been a personal predeliction on one person's part, but I do say the time has come when we should re-establish those things.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps in view of the fact the hon. member will have to leave us for another engagement I might say just a word, not about the principle of what he said because it is not for me to discuss that at all.

Mr. Fulton: Why?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not the adviser of the crown in matters of this kind.

Mr. Fulton: You are the gentleman in charge.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister has heard the hon. gentleman's remarks, and no doubt has taken note of them. There are a couple of things the hon. member said in the course of his remarks to which I thought I should refer so there will not be any misunderstanding.

The hon. gentleman, I know, did not have the slightest intention of misrepresenting the actual situation, but the actual situation is that these awards in the orders of chivalry—not those that carry a title, but those that do not—are not made to the armed forces generally but are made only to people who have served in an actual theatre of hostilities. There have been no such awards made since the period right after the end of the war for service in an actual war theatre, except for service in Korea. I believe the house and the country ought to understand that because I do not believe that it would be defensible at all to suggest that soldiers or airmen or sailors who served in Canada only should receive this distinction when civilians do not. Whatever may be thought about the wisdom of that distinction, that is the distinction that is made and not the one the hon. member suggested.

In so far as the Canada Medal is concerned, I understand, in fact I recollect rather distinctly that the approval of the sovereign was given to the institution of a Canada medal. I presume it may be said to exist en principe but in fact none of them has ever been awarded. It has never been my responsibility to consider this matter. It is not the responsibility of the Secretary of State to consider it.

Mr. MacInnis: I am going to say a few words about an altogether different matter, but perhaps I should say in passing that I hope we will not go any farther in the giving of titles or awards than we have gone already. Personally, I do not believe that they add to the distinction of the individual who receives them. Very few people know that you have the title, anyway, and that takes away some of the value of receiving it. I have no doubt that it would sound well, for instance if the Prime Minister were called Sir Louis St. Laurent. I think, however, the title he has now is one he would like much better and is probably one that becomes him even better, and that is "Uncle Louis".

Mr. Fulton: The Queen did not confer that one.

Mr. MacInnis: The people conferred it, and with all due regard to the Queen it is possibly a higher distinction.

Mr. Fulton: By some people, but not all.

Mr. MacInnis: Well, the rest did not demur, and I want to be included amongst the rest who did not.

What I am going to speak about, Mr. Chairman, is what I consider a great miscarriage of justice. I refer to the properties which were confiscated—I use that term but perhaps it is not the correct one—from persons of Japanese origin who were removed from the Pacific coast. I discuss it now for several reasons. I wrote several letters to the predecessor of the present Secretary of State without receiving much satisfaction in the matter. Earlier this session, with one of the property owners concerned and his legal representative, I had a talk about the matter with the minister. The proposals for a review of the case were turned down by the Secretary of State. He informed me to that effect, and I told him I did not agree. He was good enough to say that I could speak about it when the estimates of his department were before the house; that is one reason why I am taking this opportunity.

I am speaking about it for another reason. I am not a university man, but I was at a special convocation of the University of British Columbia about two years ago, and amongst those present was the Prime Minister who received an honorary degree. The gentleman who made the address at that convocation was Sir John Morris. I think he is a judge of the appeal court in the United Kingdom. There were two sentences in his address which I noted at the time, and which have stuck with me since. He said:

> Surely there are few more satisfying experiences than to help set right an injustice. Injustice should be righted wherever, whenever and however it appears.

There are few people in Canada who would deny that there was an injustice done to these people. Not only was there the injustice of uprooting them from their homes and sending them all over the dominion but there was the injustice of a studied attempt to despoil them of their property.

As I said, no matter how long it is since that happened, I agree with Sir John Morris that injustice should be righted wherever, whenever and however it appears. And there is still another reason why I refer to this. When the event of the removal of these people from the Pacific coast took place we were at war with Japan. There is no denying that Japan was a treacherous and ruthless enemy, and that our people who were unfortunate enough to be taken prisoner or to be caught by the Japanese suffered keenly.

However we have made our peace with Japan. We have signed a peace treaty with her. We have made a soft peace with Japan. And I think that having made a soft peace with Japan we should be big enough and generous enough to make a soft peace with those of Japanese origin in this country, who committed no crime, who committed no treachery, and whose only fault was that they happened at a particular time to be in a particular place, and were of a particular racial origin.

That is my reason for taking up the time of the committee in referring to this matter tonight. The case I am going to refer to was probably the largest property involved in the evacuation. I am not taking up this case because it was the largest; there were hundreds of small properties where the lifework of whole families was lost. That is true of the individual about whom I now speak. He was a naturalized Canadian citizen, naturalized as long ago as 1909. The properties concerned were, among other things, two fairly extensive timber limits on Vancouver island. Like the other evacuees, he was given 48 hours notice to leave his property, to get ready and to be transported to some other place in Canada, in this instance the city of Toronto, where he finally landed.

He was not allowed to go back, of course, to look after his property. Yet he was held responsible for everything in connection with it. He was fined because he had not burned the slash, that is the debris left after felling of timber. He had to pay taxes on the property while it was going to ruin, with nobody looking after it. And in that case he was no different from the others.

Mr. Fulton: Where was this?

Mr. MacInnis: On Vancouver island. The firm was known as the Deep Bay Logging Company, and the chief shareholder and manager of the property was a person named Ekichi Kagetsu. One piece of property was known as block 195 in the Cowichan lake district on Vancouver island, which he claimed had a market value of $247,500. May I say that Mr. Justice Bird was appointed commissioner to set a value on these properties, and to adjudicate upon their value in 1948, six years after the people were removed. This man was then allowed to go back and prepare the records for his property, but he was given only a very short time to do this and most of the records had been lost. While the value he placed upon it was $247,500 it was sold by the custodian for the sum of $93,000.

The other property was another piece of timberland including 11 blocks of land with a certain amount of felled and cold decked timber, and a stand of immature timber, with some mature timber as well. Mr. Kagetsu put a value upon it of $292,039, and the custodian sold it for $40,000.

I mention this because I am going to show later on the value that was put on some other assets, and it will give hon. members an idea whether a proper price was received by the owners for this property in the sale. It was sold by tender in 1943, I believe, and the attempt at final price settlement was not made until 1948.

Mr. Justice Bird in setting the value took into consideration the amount of timber that was supposed to be on the land; but it is interesting to note that 70 per cent more timber has been cut on the Cowichan lake property, block 195, than the commissioner said was there in the first place. And they were still cutting a couple of years ago.

In the other case 100 per cent more timber was taken off the property than the commissioner said was on it, and they were still cutting on that property in 1951. And then again there was the immature timber which, if left in this man's possession, would have increased in value as the years went by. There were buildings on the property used as bunkhouses for the men working in the lumber camp. The buildings consisted of 20 family residences, 10 bunkhouses, a community hall, a new office and eight other buildings. These were camps. They were insured for $10,000. The commissioner put a value of $1,000 on these buildings. He said the reason that he put that value on them was that the buildings—bunkhouses for the lumber workers to sleep in, and the Kagetsu employees were persons of Japanese origin. The commissioner said that they would not be of any value to an occidental buying the property because the bunks would not be long enough for occidental loggers. It seems to me that that is an amazing way of putting a value on property that you are expropriating or that you are confiscating. Perhaps "confiscating" is not the correct word. It should be the value of the property to the owner, not what it would bring at a forced sale; it should be the value to the man who owned it and controlled it.

Then again there were some railways on the timber limit. There were 8½ miles of logging railway, if I remember correctly. Anyone who knows anything about building railways in British Columbia, through the terrain there, knows that it costs money. Not all of this line had rails laid on it, but what did not have rails laid on it had been graded so that a truck could drive over it. For this railway the commissioner allowed the sum of $1,000. If I remember correctly, the reason he gave for that was that the person who was buying the railway would not be using it. That again is an unusual way to put a value on something you are taking from someone and selling at a forced sale. Surely the criterion is the value to the man who owned it, the value it was really to him if he were allowed to use it in his own way for making a living.

No allowance was made for the forcible removal from the property. If that was done to any member of this house what would he think? What would you think of that as justice? You may say it was all done legally; that orders in council were passed and so on. Surely, meeting legal requirements is not meeting the ends of justice. I have before me a statement made by a very well known gentleman in this country who spoke to the Quebec bar association on January 5, 1953. He said this:

> Thus when you are studying present administration of justice or new methods of procedure you are helping your country to preserve, not only justice, but all the fundamental liberties that we have fought for, won and defend as essential to our way of life.

I suppose every hon. member would agree with that. Who said it? No less a person than the Prime Minister of Canada. It is said that the Minister of Justice was at the same meeting and also the solicitor general of the province of Quebec. I agree with the words of the Prime Minister. If what he said is true, then it is high time we reviewed the action we took in providing compensation for the property of people who were forcibly removed from the province of British Columbia and, let me say again, people who had committed no crime and who were never accused of any crime. I agree that it is a long time ago, but if we are going to take the words of Sir John Morris that I read before:

> Surely there are few more satisfying experiences than to help set right an injustice. Injustice should be righted wherever, whenever and however it appears—

—here is an injustice that, in my opinion, should be righted. In one of the letters I had from the former secretary of state he said that this property, the Kagetsu property, had not been profitable in the years prior to the evacuation; that is, in 1939, 1940, 1941 and 1942. That was true of a great many properties at that time. But lumbering was a very lucrative business in British Columbia from 1942 at least until quite recently. But again I say that that should not be considered in making a just award for this property. I have before me the report of an arbitration award in the matter of the Beauharnois shareholders in respect of property taken over by the government of the province of Quebec. This statement appeared in the Montreal Gazette of March 21, 1953. The arbitrators had this to say:

> We think it is pertinent also to refer to the fact that the Beauharnois undertaking was in 1944 emerging from its lean year—

Let us say that the Kagetsu business in 1942 was emerging from the lean years. I continue:

> —a process experienced by nearly every industrial undertaking. It takes time to build up a well-trained operating staff, to iron out operational problems and difficulties.

It is only after such things are done that the profits begin to come in and, as I said before, the same principle would apply in regard to the Kagetsu property. I would urge the Secretary of State, in taking over his new office, to think of the high regard in which the matter of dispensing justice is held in this country. I hope that we do not only give lip service to justice when making speeches before bar associations or at university convocations, but that it is something we believe in every day of the week.

The minister is a new man, new in his office and new in the government, but there are people in Canada and I am sure people in the present government who I am quite satisfied agree that perhaps next to the expulsion of the Acadians this is the darkest stain on the escutcheon of Canada. I say this committee should give its approval to having someone review this entire matter. The review which was made by the commissioner who made the award in the first place is an altogether amazing way to appeal a case. I would like very much to have this case referred to the exchequer court, where such cases should be referred, and have this matter reviewed by the present president of that court. I would be most interested in what he would have to say.

Mr. Philpott: Is the hon. member suggesting that the procedure in this one particular case where the amount covered is $93,000 should be subjected to review, or does he mean all cases?

Mr. MacInnis: I would suggest that in all these cases where there has been an injustice there should be a review. I mention this case because I was consulted in connection with it, and first approached by a solicitor in Vancouver, then by Mr. Kagetsu, and I said—

Mr. Philpott: Did this man appeal his case to the court of appeal or a royal commission?

Mr. MacInnis: There was only one appeal in this case as far as I understand, though the Secretary of State may correct me if I am wrong. It was reviewed by the commissioner who set the value on the property in the first place, Mr. Justice Bird of the appeal court of British Columbia, and an appeal was later made to him for revision. He heard the case and made a small adjustment amounting to some $2,000 odd. But in my opinion the appeal should have been sent to some justice outside the province of British Columbia, and the proper court to which appeals should be referred is, in my opinion, the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want wholeheartedly to support the plea addressed to the Secretary of State by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I thought he dealt very well with the principles involved and supported them with facts. I had quite a lot to do with these Japanese-Canadians because during the war possibly a majority of them were in various villages and camps in my own constituency. As a matter of fact, on one occasion Mr. Austin Taylor, chairman of the commission, asked me to visit various mining camps with an assistant commissioner of the R.C.M.P. to see in what way they could utilize old hotels, disused houses and so on. In this regard I shall never forget a trick that gentleman taught me when it comes to stopping at hotels in mining communities. He said to me: "From my lifelong experience as a member of the R.C.M.P., I would advise you, Herridge, always to sleep in your underwear to avoid catching cold when you stop at a hotel in a small mining community."

These people lived in my constituency during the war in quite large numbers and I had an opportunity of meeting many of them. The longer they stayed in the district the more their good qualities were recognized and many of these people told me of their losses on account of evacuation in the way of homes, furniture, farms, equipment, boats and so on.

I am quite confident that a considerable number of people have been treated unjustly according to Canadian standards and some of the cases are almost tragic and heartbreaking. Many of these people spent the whole of their lives building up small estates which they had to leave and which were disposed of at fire sale prices. I am going to quote briefly from a brief I have here composed by the evacuation losses compensation committee in order to support the argument of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. This brief has this to say:

> For example, one claimant who owned timber limits can at this date prove that twice the volume of timber existed than was allowed by the commissioner. Unshakable B.C. government scale records of timber actually removed from his limits from the date of sale to the present, is weighty new evidence, not available in 1948 to the commissioner. The logging of these limits still continues. The under secretary of state has rejected this new evidence on the patently irrelevant grounds that the claimant's management was inefficient, which contention conflicts with the commissioner's findings. Factors such as closer utilization fail entirely to reconcile the wide disparity. But a review has been denied. $1.50 an acre for vast lands, $1,000 for 41 housing units are further examples of erroneous valuation by the commissioner.

I strongly support the plea made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway that this whole question be reviewed by a competent court with a view to giving these Canadian citizens the justice to which they are entitled.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, first of all I wish to express my appreciation to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, who is an old friend of mine, for his courtesy in letting me know well in advance that he was going to bring up this matter. It is true that I received Mr. Kagetsu when the hon. member was present and I think I should tell the committee as nearly as I can recollect it what happened at that time.

The position I took was that I was not appointed to my present office to act as a court of appeal from decisions made by my predecessors or by Mr. Justice Bird, and that I would not attempt myself to assess the merits of a case which, I am only too ready to recognize, I am not competent to assess. I said, moreover, that I was not willing to go to my colleagues and ask them if they would permit a review of this one individual case, for I said I would not be a party to such an injustice; merely because Mr. Kagetsu was one of the largest claimants, and merely because he had greater facilities for bringing his claims repeatedly to the attention of the government, I said I would certainly not ask for a review of his case in isolation; all I would do was to go to my colleagues and ask them if they were prepared to have all the cases reviewed, because it seemed to me that the smallest claim had just as much right to justice as the largest one.

I told Mr. Kagetsu, in the hon. member's presence, and I am sure he will confirm this, that I did not think my colleagues would agree to such a review, but I said I would ask for it though I told them quite frankly why I did not think it would be granted. I said that the most competent person the government of the day felt it could select had been selected from the bench of the province of British Columbia to make a review of all these cases. That person had made an adjudication which I was sure was as objective and as dispassionate as any judge could make.

Whether he made mistakes or whether he did not make mistakes, I do not know. Of course all of us are human and all of us occasionally make mistakes. I do not yield to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway in my passion for justice. But the only way in which justice can be rendered is by human beings who are liable to err. Judge Bird may have made some mistakes but he made as judicial and as dispassionate a consideration of these claims as I think anyone would be apt to make. I am not at all convinced—and neither were my colleagues—that to have them reviewed by another judge or by two or three judges would eliminate any, if there were any, or all, if there were a number, of the errors that Judge Bird may or may not have made. It seemed to me that it was just a question of whether the government had reasonable confidence that Judge Bird had done as good a job as could reasonably be expected to be done in all the circumstances. My colleagues had come to the conclusion, before I became a member of the government, that that was so and they were not prepared to change that view. I must say that in the light of all the circumstances I concur in that view.

Mr. MacInnis: May I ask the Secretary of State one question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. MacInnis: Why did the government not apply to these cases the same methods that were applied, for instance, in expropriating one of the Booth properties in Ottawa or the Edwards property or the Perley property? Why did they not apply the same principle, put a value on the property and then if the person concerned was not satisfied with the value he could appeal to the exchequer court? Why was this sort of policy adopted: Here it has to go before the commissioner; you take it or you leave it.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a question I would not attempt to answer.

Mr. MacInnis: There is no answer to it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am no more capable of interpreting the minds of other people than is my hon. friend. I was not a member of the government when this decision was made. It was made by a government of which I was not a member and it is impossible for me to say why the government did one thing rather than another. It did a thing which I know was intended to be fair, which I believe was substantially fair, and which the government is not prepared now, at this late date, to change.

Mr. Fulton: The discussion of the estimates of the Secretary of State has got off on this subject of the awards made to the Japanese who were dispossessed of their property by order in council passed during the war, under which a judge of the appeal court of British Columbia was appointed to adjudicate as a commissioner. I think probably no more interesting and no more appropriate subject could have been chosen for the institution of the discussion of the estimates of the new Secretary of State of Canada.

At the outset I want to say that I feel that the action taken by the government of Canada with respect to the suspected disloyal activities of the Japanese on the Pacific coast was, by and large, a proper and a fair action to take. As I understand it—I was not here at the time—it had the support of the majority of the citizens on the coast at that time. Therefore in so far as the Japanese being removed from their properties on the coast and sent to other areas of the country where they could not do any damage to the war effort is concerned, I have no criticism to offer of the government of the day.

But having said that I think it is essential that we should realize that now that the war is finished, now that we are in conflict with another ideology, namely that of communist Russia, we should be, so far as it is possible, above and beyond reproach. That is a difficult thing, but in so far as we can do it I think we should say to ourselves that where these men were dispossessed of valuable property to which they were at that time lawfully entitled we as a Christian and democratic state will restore them to the position in which they would have been had this unfortunate measure not been necessary. I doubt very much if there are many in this house or in the country who would disagree with me in that general statement of objectives. It therefore becomes necessary to review the measures taken to deal with this whole problem.

Tied up with this thing I think is the question of the claims of our own people for maltreatment suffered in the course of the war in the Far East. As it happens, this is also a matter under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State. Here I find that Canadian citizens were subjected to the most unsatisfactory conditions of delay and hardship in respect of the recognition of their claims for war damage on that account. Our complaint against this government is twofold. First, our complaint is that the Japanese who are now Canadian citizens have not been given proper recognition of their just claims for their dispossession. In the second place—and I am even more concerned on this account—Canadian citizens who suffered damage and hardship, loss of physical health—in many cases men or women have claims on account of the death of their husbands or wives, on account of the death of the other party—as the result of Japanese internment in the Far East have not had their claims treated in accordance with their just deserts. On both these counts the Department of the Secretary of State stands indicted.

I have had some considerable lengthy correspondence with the predecessor of the Secretary of State and with the war claims commission operating under the aegis of his department and I have this to say. So far as I am aware, not one single case that I have taken up with the war claims commission has yet been settled. Although the war against the Japanese has been over now for nine years, not one single case of a claim for internment, death, loss of property or whatever may be the ground, has yet been settled. Although I fully support the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway in his contention that the Japanese who were dispossessed have not had full justice done to them with respect to the value of their property—I say that in all solemnity; I fully support him in what he has said—I think it is even more reprehensible that Canadians or the wives and widows of Canadians have not had full justice done to them under our war claims commission on the claims that they have with respect to death or internment or loss of property as a result of the war in the Far East.

Having said that, may I say that I hope the Secretary of State will not only take the matter under consideration—I hope he will do that—but will insist on some action. I know he is an energetic, young and vigorous man. Perhaps in that respect he is a little bit different from his predecessor who found it rather hard to stay awake in the House of Commons here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sinclair: Your talking would make anybody go to sleep.

Mr. Pickersgill: It sometimes is rather difficult to stay awake—

Mr. Fulton: Has the Minister of Fisheries some comment to make?

Mr. Sinclair: Yes, I have.

Mr. Fulton: Then will the minister get to his feet and make it?

