HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May 12, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to a question of privilege. In the Halifax 'Herald' I find a report of an interview between an alleged prominent labour leader of the Railway Employees Organization and myself, which is entirely inaccurate. The interview is given as follows, under large headlines:—

It is a well-known fact that an interview was held recently between J. J. Hughes, Liberal member of parliament for Kings, Prince Edward Island, and a prominent labour leader of the railway employees' organization, when the former unhesitatingly expressed himself as utterly opposed to any sort of labour organizations and would not give his support to measures emanating from them if brought up in the House of Commons on their behalf.

PROBUS.

Tennyson says:

That a lie which is half a truth is ever the blackest of lies,
That a lie which is all a lie may be met and fought with outright.
But a lie which is part a truth is a harder matter to fight.

This is exactly the case in regard to this interview.

On my way from Ottawa to Prince Edward Island at Easter I met a man who claimed to be a labour leader and an organizer of railway employees. He told me that he belonged to the United States, and that he was going to Prince Edward Island to organize a union of the government railway employees to demand shorter hours of labour, and asked me whether I would support such legislation if it were introduced in parliament. I told him I would not promise in advance to support any legislation. I said that I doubted whether the hours of labour of railway employees were excessive, and one of my reasons for so doubting was that for every vacancy that occurred in the government railway service there were from one to a dozen applications; that I did not think so many young and middle-aged men would be so anxious to enter the service if the hours of labour were unduly long or the wages unduly low; that I did not think the hours of labour of the railway employees were any longer, if as long, as those of the farmer, the fisherman, the store-keeper, the clerk in stores, the mothers of families in poor and moderate circumstances, the editors and other workers on newspapers, the members of parliament, the ministers of the Crown and the thousands of people who had to work for a living and obtain it as best they could.

He then asked me if I were opposed to labour unions and brotherhoods, and I answered 'No,' providing they were formed for the purpose of improving the social, the physical, their material and the moral well-being of their members by every legitimate means; but that I was opposed to such unions and brotherhoods if their object was to force from parliament legislation unduly favouring themselves at the expense of the rest of the community; that the labour unions and the railway brotherhoods had exactly the same rights in this country that all other classes of persons had, but not one right more; that under our constitution and laws no class of men in Canada could suffer injury or wrong without receiving speedy and ample redress, and therefore we could settle all our troubles and difficulties without the assistance or advice of foreigners; that, in my judgment, our labour unions and railway brotherhoods were quite capable of managing their own affairs without the interference of professional agitators from the United States; that there was one kind of legislation I would promise to support in advance, and that would be legislation to prevent him and men like him from coming into this country to stir up trouble where none existed and to manufacture grievances.

He informed me that he would come in to Canada as often as he wished and comport himself as he wished; that the labour unions and brotherhoods of this country were strong enough to crush any member of parliament who opposed their views, and he would see that my words and attitude were reported in the proper quarter.

I presume, therefore that the report in the Halifax 'Herald,' which has been copied into the Charlottetown 'Examiner,' is the result of the threat of my Yankee friend.

The newspapers of Canada should be above misrepresenting the views of public men on important public matters.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must limit himself to a statement of fact.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. I am just finishing. Sir, for the sake, possibly, of a little passing political advantage, and they should be above encouraging Yankee agitators to come into this country to make trouble. It will be a sad day for us when we will not be able to manage our own affairs without employing and encouraging such men.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

'LA PRESSE' AND THE FRENCH LANGUAGE.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to call the attention of the House to an article which appeared in 'La Presse' on the 11th May instant, under the heading: 'That meeting at the Monument National.' The article is directed against me as a member of parliament and against the privileges of this House. It reads as follows:

It is now clear that this sudden cry for the French language in the administration of railways, is nothing but a nationalist manœuvre organized in view of the elections. At the Monument National neither Conservative nor Liberal leaders were present. And although, for the purpose of soothing public opinion, it had been everywhere proclaimed that the English element was favourably disposed in the matter, the audience refused to listen to the Hon. Mr. Dandurand, who came expressly for the purpose of making known these favourable dispositions. The conciliatory offers of the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific and the Northern Railways were such as would demolish the whole fabric of the nationalist conspiracy: hence the necessity of crying them down. Such indeed are the tactics which Mr. Lavergne himself has adopted. At the second reading of the Bill in question, the 18th March, 1908, Sir Wilfrid Laurier had made the following statement:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Bill as a whole appears to me to embody a sound and equitable principle, but I think that in some respects its application may be too broad. My hon. friend's object is to give the public increased facilities for the transaction of business, and it must be admitted that simple justice requires that those who do not speak English should be enabled to transact business in the language they understand. . . I have no objection to the second reading, subject to the amendments which may be suggested later on.

(The motion was carried and the Bill read a second time.)

Mr. J. J. HUGHES.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. When will it please the House to discuss the Bill in committee?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At the next meeting of the House.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Occasions for discussing this Bill in committee are becoming very rare, and if we do not take it up to-day we may not find an opportunity of doing so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The matter is of importance to the railway companies and my hon. friend will understand that it is fair that they should take communication of the Bill and see whether they desire to oppose it. There are certainly excellent things in the measure, but the government should not undertake to have it carried before the railway companies have been heard.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. They have made no opposition so far.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If they have no objection I certainly have none myself.

We are reluctant to attribute secret intentions to public men; but we have a right to point out the natural consequences of known facts. Sir Wilfrid Laurier's offer made things too easy for the member for Montmagny and his Bill would not have created the slightest sensation. The first thing that took place after this debate was the famous petition of Catholic young men published a few days later, without waiting to ascertain the fate of a measure so auspiciously introduced. There is nothing in 'Hansard' or in the Votes and Proceedings of the House to show that Mr. Lavergne made any effort to advance his Bill a stage. How is it that a member whose specialty it is to put questions to the government on every possible and impossible subject, should have neglected to call their attention and that of the House to the real or imaginary obstacles behind which he sheltered himself, without explaining their nature, at the meeting of Friday night last? If from any quarter there had been an effort to prevent the Prime Minister from carrying out the promise he made on the 18th March last, the loquacious member for Montmagny might have made use of his tongue to point it out. Nobody ever heard anything about it. It would be vain for him to allege that form of parliamentary procedure by which every day is devoted to government business; such restrictions did not exist in January, when on the 28th of that month the Bill was read for the first time. In fact, the government took precedence over public Bills on Wednesdays from the 25th March, and on Mondays, from the 2nd April. We cannot state from memory when they took up Thursdays, but it was probably later. He let more than two months elapse between the first and second readings. But the quiet adoption of the measure could not have accomplished its object better than those most reasonable letters read by Hon. Mr. Dandurand on behalf of the different companies. What was required was an organized provocation which might render its adoption impossible. Saviors and heroes had to be improvised; but they have killed the Bill in order to create a grievance.

The article then drifts into an appeal to Liberal principles. I need not insist upon that part. Nor would I seek for Liberal principles in 'La Presse,' a paper that has sold itself to every party and has been the bed-fellow of each regime in turn.

The first portion of the article is absolutely untrue. It is clear from the journals of the House that, at the time of the second reading, I was ready to proceed and that it was only at the request of the hon. the Prime Minister that I consented to delay the second reading. I was always present at my seat, whenever the Bill might have been called, and had an occasion offered, I would have requested to proceed. From the 28th January to the 2nd April, the dates mentioned by 'La Presse,' I was always at my seat ready to proceed on the second reading; and I appeal to the Prime Minister himself as to the truth of what I say.

As to the statement of 'La Presse' that at the meeting of Friday last at the Monument National there were no Liberal leaders, I will say that several Liberal members had been invited, amongst others the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Gervais) who is now in his seat and who had consented to address the meeting. There were also the hon. members for St. Johns and Iberville (Mr. Demers) and for St. Ann's (Mr. Walsh), also the member for l'Islet (Mr. Paquet), invited as a Conservative.

I might summon the editor of the paper to the bar of the House for false representations and falsehoods. I will not do so because I respect my colleagues too much to bring into their presence that aged prostitute, that old barrel of cognac.

Some MEMBERS. Order, order. Withdraw.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I am called to order, but I have absolutely nothing to withdraw.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—INVESTIGATION BY MR. JUSTICE CASSELS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). I desire to ask the government if there is any objection to having copies of the evidence taken before the commission presided over by Judge Cassels laid on the table of the House from day to day. That course was adopted with regard to some other commissions—I think the Insurance Commission was one. It would seem desirable that it should be followed in the present case.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am not aware that our attention has been called to that point. I do not know whether the order of the House called upon the commission to report from time to time or not. I think that if that was the order of the House, the commission would be willing to exercise its powers. I will look into the matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not intend so much to suggest any report from the Commissioner, but to have a copy of the evidence taken from day to day laid on the table of the House.

Sir. WILFRID LAURIER. That matter will be considered.

PROPOSED DIVISION OF THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask :

1. Whether the government is aware that a vigorous campaign is being conducted in the northern constituencies of Ontario in the present provincial election, for the separating of the northern portion of Ontario from the remainder of the province, and the creation of a new province from such northern districts of the province.

2. Is the government aware that this campaign is being supported and carried on upon representations made in the platform, that the Prime Minister of Canada has asserted that if seventy-five per cent of the people representing the territory desire to be separated from Ontario and desire that such territory be constituted a new province that effect will be given to such petition, and proceedings taken by the government for the formation of a new province out of that northern portion of Ontario, commonly called 'New Ontario' ?

3. Was any such representation, or similar representation made by the Prime Minister, or any of his colleagues or any one else having authority, to speak on behalf of the government?

4. What, if any, representations have been made to the Prime Minister, or to the government, as to the desire of forming a new province out of the northern portions of Ontario, commonly called 'New Ontario,' if so, by whom, and when were they made and what answer is being made by the government ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) asks me if the government is aware that a vigorous campaign is being carried on in the northern part of the province of Ontario for the separation of that part of the province from the rest. I have to say to my hon. friend that I am not aware that a vigorous campaign, or any campaign, is being carried on to that end. The matter is almost wholly new to me. I think I received a letter to that effect, but I have expressed no opinion upon it and certainly never stated anything of the kind attributed to me in the question of my hon. friend.

SIR CHARLES FITZPATRICK AS MEMBER OF THE HAGUE CONFERENCE.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Has the Prime Minister any information to give the House concerning a statement published in the press that Chief Justice Fitzpatrick has been appointed to represent Canada at the Hague Conference and that Newfoundland has consented to accept him as their representative at same conference?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say that I cannot give to-day the official information to which my hon. friend is entitled. A treaty has recently been signed between Great Britain for Canada and Newfoundland and the United States concerning questions which have been pending for some time between the United States and Newfoundland. I cannot say that Chief Justice Fitzpatrick has been appointed a member of the Hague Tribunal, but I believe it would be satisfactory to all Canadians if such were the case.

Mr. SPROULE. If there are papers in connection with this matter, would the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) be willing to lay them on the table?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At present we are in communication with the Colonial Office and the Foreign Office to have all the correspondence with regard to this treaty and to other treaties brought down, and I hope I shall be able to bring it down at an early day. I may say that if it were convenient to the House we could bring down two of these treaties soon.

ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES AT SOREL.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I desire to ask if Mr. Ernest Roy, formerly sub-superintendent of the Sorel shipyards, and whose conduct in regard to his position between himself and the Crown in the Department of Marine and Fisheries has been inquired into by Commissioner Gaudet, is still in the employ of the department, and, if so, whether the minister proposes that a further and more thorough inquiry should be made into the allegations made against Mr. Roy, and if it is to be carried on by Mr. Commissioner Cassels ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I do not think that Mr. Roy is permanently employed by the department. He was employed last year to superintend some work at Sorel, but I do not know whether his employment is permanent or not. I cannot tell, therefore, whether he is still working for the department. I will make further inquiry. As to the other question, I shall be glad when I give instructions to have the evidence copied and I will be very glad to lay it on the table.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the minister direct that a copy of the report in English be laid on the table ? The report laid on the table yesterday was in French.

Mr. SPROULE. I may explain that the practice with regard to these reports is to bring them down from the department in the language in which they are, and it is for the House of Commons to have them translated if it wishes to do so.

Mr. BERGERON. Might I suggest that the translation should be made at the same time as the copy. The report covers 895 pages. It would take to the end of the session to get it copied. If the translation goes on at the same time, we may have the report before us before the session ends.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is not for the department, but for the House to see that it is translated. I will call the attention of the clerk to the matter.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Aylesworth for the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act and the proposed amendment of Mr. W. J. Roche thereto.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) opposite, in the closing sentences of the address with which he opened the opposition's side of this debate, appealed to me personally against the provisions of the Bill now before the House which relate to the preparation of lists in the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia and the unorganized districts of Quebec and Ontario. He appealed to me, as I understood him, in the name of fairness, of natural justice, of broad equity against the Bill which he characterized as an intensely partisan measure.

Sir, to such an appeal it would be, I consider, my duty under all circumstances to give a respectful hearing, but I must say at once to my hon. friend that I hold myself entirely responsible for the Bill which is now before the House. We introduced it for what we considered to be good and sufficient reasons, and I rise at this moment to endeavour to show to the House and to my hon. friend what these reasons were ; perhaps before I conclude I may also appeal to my hon. friend, in the name of fairness, in the name of natural justice and broad equity, against certain intensely partisan laws. I do not pretend, Mr. Speaker, that I am better than my fellow men, but I do not believe that I am worse. I am a plain man and deal with a plain question in a plain way. I have no hesitation in saying that I am a partisan, but, in all fairness to myself, I do not believe that I would willingly and consciously strike below the belt in order to take an unfair advantage of an opponent; yet, I repeat, I am a partisan, and I have sufficient experience of political life in this country to know that very often the judgment of a partisan may be blinded and warped. I understand fully, I think, the motive of the opposition which has come to this Bill from gentlemen on the other side of the House, and especially from the members from the province of Manitoba. They dread the effect of the law of their own province if it is to be administered not by officers appointed by the government which would be the case if this Bill were to become law. Let me say to my hon. were to become law, let me say to my hon. friends on the other side of the House, yes, let me appeal at once to their sense of fairness, justice and equity, that there are men on this side of the House who dread the effect of that law if it is to continue to be administered, as it has been, by officers appointed by our opponents as will be the case if this Bill or some other Bill is not passed by this House. Those who oppose this Bill in this House at this moment, dread it in anticipation; those who support it dread the effect of the existing law of Manitoba not in anticipation, but from past experience, and if we are to approach this question without any equivocation, but in justice between man and man, it reduces itself to this that you gentlemen on the other side of the House do not want to go before the country on electoral lists prepared by your opponents and we on this side of the House do not care to go to the country on electoral lists prepared by our opponents. Sir, this seems to me to be the true question, to be the true position and the problem which is now before us. The principle which shall regulate and determine the franchise, whether it shall be controlled by Dominion authorities or by provincial authorities, is a question upon which there has always been a deep line of cleavage between the two parties in Canada. We on this side of the House, the Liberal party, have always maintained that unless there be strong reason to the contrary the lists should be prepared by the provincial authorities, whereas gentlemen on the other side of the House have held the unqualified opinion that under all circumstances the lists should be prepared by the parliament to which the members of this House have to be elected. The opinions held respectively by the two parties have been more than once set before this House by motions which speak for each party. In 1885, when the Franchise Bill was introduced, I was entrusted by my friends with the duty of moving the first amendment, setting forth the principle under which we thought the franchise ought to be regulated and administered. I moved this motion, which was a party motion, and which spoke our mind upon this subject:

> In the opinion of this House it is preferable to continue the plan which has been adopted ever since confederation of utilizing for the elections to this House the provincial franchise and voters' lists.

Many similar motions have been passed from time to time, but this one properly and very accurately, I think, describes the position we then took and have maintained ever since. When the repeal of the Franchise Bill came up for discussion in 1898, a gentleman then a member sitting on the opposite side, Mr. Powell, of Westmoreland, moved this amendment:

> That this House, while desirous of reducing the expense of the preparation of the lists, so far as may be practicable, considers that no system of franchise will be satisfactory which does not preserve federal control over both the basis of the suffrages and the voters' lists.

There, Sir, you see, in concrete form, the respective opinions held by the two parties on this important question. Throughout this debate the members of the opposition have piled quotation upon quotation in order to prove and maintain, at least to their satisfaction, that in introducing this Bill, which in certain provinces and under certain conditions provides that the franchise shall be regulated by this House, that we are in doing this inconsistent, that we are going back upon our record and departing from the policy we have always maintained. This criticism in view of the attitude which has been taken by those who make it at this moment, seems to me, if I may say so without offence, singularly inane. I could understand this criticism, if those who made it were to maintain the policy which they have always maintained. Their policy was and always has been that this House should keep the control over the franchise and over the lists, and when this Bill was presented, taking the control not over the franchise, but partially over certain lists, I cannot understand that these gentlemen can utter the reproach of inconsistency. If we are inconsistent, what are they themselves? If we are departing from our principles, what are they doing? They have always maintained that this House should keep control over the lists. If we were to say that we were going to adopt that principle, I could understand their criticism, but instead of that, their whole claim at this moment is that we are inconsistent. Sir, is it not a fact that in 1885 the Conservative party crammed down our throats a system whereby the lists were taken from independent officers and placed in the hands of officers appointed by themselves, and, therefore, according to the ethics that now prevail, partisans? Yet, Sir, in 1885, though we fought that measure as effectively, as vigorously as I think a measure ever was fought, we never thought of resorting to a refusal of Supply; we never thought of resorting to disorganization of the public service, and if in such questions there be a reason to refuse Supply, we had then ten times more reason than there is at this moment, because in that case the measure which was introduced was to take the preparation of the list from municipal officers and to place in the hands of men appointed by the government of the day.

Now Sir, passing to another view, not far, however, removed from this one, may I be permitted to say that personally I think my vanity is somewhat flattered by the course which the debate has taken. My vanity is somewhat flattered because the debate has shown that my poor utterances, delivered from time to time in this House, have been diligently scanned and scrutinized by hon. members on the other side of the House. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) have given evidence by their utterances that they have consumed some of the midnight oil in perusing what I may have said on this question from time to time in order to obtain an expression of opinion in favour of the view which they support at this moment. And in the accomplishment of this task, they have, I submit with all humility, but with sincerity, shown more ingenuity than ingenuousness. Everybody knows how misleading it is to take a sentence from a speech or from a writing of any kind without any reference to what precedes or follows, and how the man who is quoted may be thereby made to say the very reverse of what he meant. To give an example, a single example, upon this question, I will recall the speech of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in which he made this quotation from a speech of mine delivered in 1898. In 1898 I spoke as follows :

But I would not have hesitated to accept the franchise provided by a Conservative legislature in Quebec, because, though there were many things in that franchise, on the whole, to which I would have objected, still as it satisfied the province it would have satisfied me. It is in the same way as regards other provinces. It is possible that the control of the several provinces may pass into the hands of the Conservative party; still on a question of this kind I am quite disposed for my part, to accept the franchise prepared by the legislature, whether Liberal or Conservative.

There the quotation ended. The same quotation was made the same night by the hon. member for Prince Edward and there also the quotation ended. Now, Sir, if my hon. friend the leader of the opposition had read a little farther he would have found that that sentence was qualified and singularly qualified in view of the present debate. By this quotation the effect is attempted to be produced in the House and to be produced in the country, where thousands of copies of the speech of my hon. friend are sent broadcast, that I affirmed that under all circumstances, without any exception, the provincial lists ought to be adopted. But, if my hon. friend and if the hon. member for Prince Edward had read the sentence immediately following, the House would have heard this :

But, if the day comes when a fraud is committed against this parliament, when legislation of a hostile character is brought forward in the legislatures, then it will be always open for this parliament to resume its own powers, and to enact a franchise law of its own.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition and my hon. friend from Prince Edward also quoted extensively from the opinions delivered in that debate by the then Solicitor General, Mr. Fitzpatrick, but as far as I know and as far as I have been able to find in their speeches, I do not see this quotation, I do not see this expression of the Solicitor General.

The principle of the whole Act——

Said Mr. Fitzpatrick on that occasion.

—is that we intend to adopt the provincial franchises as the basis of the franchise for the Dominion. That is our intention. It is idle for my hon. friend to assume, or to suppose that we assume, that the provincial franchises existing to-day will continue for all time. I cannot follow the argument of hon. gentlemen on the other side who say that we dispossess ourselves of control over our franchise. We do not do anything of the sort; we simply adopt for the present the franchises of the provinces. But if at any time the provinces should do anything that we consider detrimental to the interests of the Dominion, we are entirely free, we do not tie our hands for all time, to make any change that we think proper. We do not dispossess ourselves of our control over the franchise.

Mr. FOSTER. What page is that ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is on page 3952 and the preceding quotation is at page 4015. And yet, it is difficult to believe that my hon. friend from Prince Edward and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition did not read these sentences, or did not see them. If they tell us that they did not see them it will be a sad comment upon their diligence, and if they tell us that they saw them it will be a sad comment upon their fairness. Neither did I see any quotation of an expression in the line which I have just stated and which was delivered upon the same occasion. An hon. member of the House, in that same debate, spoke as follows:

My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) will suggest to me, I suppose, that if the provincial legislatures alter their enactments from time to time we have the power to correct those enactments so far as they are applicable to elections to this parliament; and I concede that at once to be the case; but what does that amount to? It means simply that we have to keep a watch over the principal legislatures and check their enactments from time to time. That simply brings us back to the principle that we ought to deal with this matter ourselves. But even if we do adopt the provincial law I would suggest that we should not go beyond saying that the provincial enactments, as they exist at present, and the basis on which the voters' lists are now made up in the different provinces, shall be the basis on which we shall proceed in the future. I do not see why we should pledge ourselves now to the wisdom of what any provincial legislature may pass in the future.

Who was that member of the House ? He was then a member of the House, and is still a member of the House, who spoke in that way. That language was spoken by my hon. friend who was then the senior member for Halifax and who is now the leader of the opposition. I congratulate my hon. friend upon the soundness of the principle which he advocated then. I do not find any fault with him for having so spoken. His views were sound ; I wish I could say the same to-day. He recognized a principle which had been affirmed by Mr. Fitzpatrick and which had been affirmed by myself and accepted by this side of the House. We held to the opinion that the preparation of the lists should be left in the hands of the provincial authorities ; still, we had, in the language of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, to keep watch over the provinces and if we found that conditions arose which would not be fair to this House then it would be our duty to resume our powers and to have the lists prepared by ourselves. Now, having laid down what appears to be the principle held by the two parties which should guide us in any emergency which should occur, I have to say that at this moment, in my humble opinion, a condition of things has arisen in the province of Manitoba which calls, and imperatively calls, for legislation by this House.

I place myself in the judgment of the House, nay, I place myself in the judgment of those gentlemen on the other side who have spoken in this debate when I as-rt,—in view of the facts which it shall be my duty to place before the House,—that we would be recreant to the duty we owe to ourselves and to the people of this country if we did not face the situation and pass the legislation which the condition of things now existing in Manitoba imperatively demands. There are, if I mistake not, forty or forty-two local constituencies in the province of Manitoba and the lists are prepared, not as in the east for each municipality in the constituency, but for the whole constituency. There are, therefore, lists for forty or forty-two local constituencies and there are only ten Dominion constituencies, and consequently when an election takes place for this House it becomes imperative to condense these forty-two lists into ten. That is a serious work, it is work which involves a good deal of consideration but it is work that has to be done. The question is : who should do it ? It has been observed by some members on the other side that there are not only in the province of Manitoba but in other provinces local constituencies the boundaries of which overlap the constituencies for the House of Commons. That is true, but it has never presented a serious difficulty elsewhere because in Quebec and Ontario, and also I believe in some of the other provinces, the lists are prepared for each municipality and in many instances for each polling division and under such circumstances there is no difficulty in adjusting the local lists to the federal constituencies. But in the case of Manitoba, under the conditions which prevail there, when the boundaries of the federal and the provincial constituencies overlap, the task of separating the voters' lists becomes one of serious difficulty. We thought we had provided for this in the Act of 1904 when we provided that this duty should be cast upon the returning officers. Section 25, revised statutes of Canada, says :

> Where any provincial polling division, as constituted at the time of the receipt by the returning officer of the writ for an election, lies only partly within the electoral district for which such election is to be held, the part thereof within such electoral district shall, for the purpose of that election form a separate polling division, or it may be attached by the returning officer to an adjoining polling division; and the returning officer shall, as soon as possible after the receipt of the writ, prepare from the existing voters' list a separate voters' list containing the names of the persons entitled to have their names placed on the list for such part of such polling division.

The duty thus entrusted to returning officers proved to be of exceptional magnitude in Manitoba, and if I may use the expression, some of the returning officers shirked the duty and called upon extraneous aid to help and assist them in its performance. Some of them called upon Mr. Leach, who was Liberal organizer for that province. Now, I am free to say that it was certainly injudicious, most injudicious on the part of these returning officers to call for the services of the Liberal organizer of the province, because suspicion would arise at once that the work would be done unfairly. I say it was injudicious but I do not say it was at all criminal. There was nothing wrong in calling on the services of Mr. Leach if the work was properly, fairly, honestly and accurately done. If, on the other hand, the work was not fairly, accurately, or honestly done it mattered not who was called upon, the crime would exist. Now, some gentlemen on the other side of the House have taken the position, and they have ever maintained it in this debate, that the returning officers and Mr. Leach in thus adjusting the local lists to the boundaries of the federal constituencies acted in a dishonest manner and disfranchised hundreds, nay, thousands of electors. In fact, in order to characterize their indignation at this allegation of dishonest work on the part of the returning officers and Mr. Leach they have coined a new expression and described it as the thin red line. It is not altogether a new expression, but these gentlemen have given a new sense to the old expression 'the thin red line' which for the last two centuries has described the formation of the British army going into battle. So, in this later day we have two meanings for the expression: The thin red line. Before I proceed further let me say that with regard to this phase of the question my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) was very emphatic, very pronounced and very precise. The hon. gentleman made a very able speech in this debate for which I give him full credit, but able as it was it was even more ingenious than able. In this connection, however, the hon. gentleman made a statement which I think is not to his credit as I believe it is altogether unfounded. After having stated that the lists had been confided by the returning officer to Mr. Leach, the hon. gentleman said ('Hansard' 9299):

When these lists were returned to the returning officer it was found that scores and hundreds of names were scored out by means of the thin red line, not, as I say, confined to border constituencies, but two-thirds of them were polling divisions within the limits of the local constituencies. We are told that it was a necessity to do this. Every Liberal on that side of the House has tried to leave the impression upon this House and the country that the interference took place in connection with polling subdivisions in the interior of these local subdivisions. Their whole argument was to leave the impression that only because of overlapping was there any necessity for the thin red line, and that the thin red line was operated only in those particular instances. I challenge anybody to prove that it took place only in those border constituencies. In my own constituency there was very little overlapping, just a small portion of three municipalities, one of which is in the unorganized district. And still there was 1,900 names through which the red line operated. I am not going to say that those 1,900 names were absolutely disfranchised. It was impossible for me to tell. We did not have an investigation in the constituency of Marquette, and why? I knew the returning officer was an honourable man, he was a personal friend of my own, and he himself could not stoop to anything of this character. Where he erred was in transferring, by the direction of somebody, the voters' lists for the constituency to the Liberal organizer. The latter did the work, he did the disfranchising.

Now, I call the attention of my hon. friend to these words:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

'The latter did the work; he did the disfranchising.'

Here and now I take complete and absolute issue with the statement of my hon. friend. I deny altogether that he has any proof against Mr. Leach that Mr. Leach disfranchised anybody.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, Sir, here and now is the time for both sides to discuss this matter and discuss it we shall. I do not say that Mr. Leach may not have been guilty of some error. That is quite possible. But to say that Mr. Leach or the returning officers deliberately, wilfully disfranchised hundreds, nay thousands, of electors, there is no evidence of such a charge; and, Sir, the proof which I have to give of the assertion I now make is that whenever and wherever those who made this charge against Mr. Leach and against the returning officers were called upon to give their evidence, they failed absolutely in the task. There was a committee of this House appointed two years ago to inquire into these matters. On that occasion this House adopted this motion:

That a select committee be appointed to inquire into the operation of the Acts relating to the election of members of this House, and into the practice and procedure in connection with election petitions, and to consider what changes are desirable therein, with power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses under oath, and to report from time to time.

The members of this committee were: Mr. Aylesworth, Mr. Fitzpatrick, Mr. Greenway, Mr. Stockton, Mr. Ingram, Mr. Macdonald, of Pictou, and Mr. Barker. This committee had power to send for persons and papers. They sent for persons to investigate what? To investigate the alleged frauds which were said to have taken place in Manitoba. They sent for whom? They sent for Mr. Knott, the counsel who had been charged with the prosecution of Mr. Leach and the returning officers. They sent for papers—what papers? The papers in connection with the electoral lists in Manitoba. In this committee there were some friends of ours who sit on the other side of the House. There was Mr. Ingram, who is no more in this House, who was a very fair man, but a strong partisan and a good fighter. I say to his credit that no fairer man, in my estimation, ever sat in this House than Mr. Ingram. There was Dr. Stockton, a most honourable man, as everybody knows, and whose loss we certainly deplore. There was my hon. friend from Hamilton—if I may give his name, Mr. Barker, a very fair man and a good fighter, and I think not a man to neglect any advantage that might come to his party. The Conservative members of that committee went into that fight to unearth something ; and, judging by the eagerness that has been displayed by gentlemen on the other side of the House—I will not say to invent a scandal, but to find a scandal, I do not think, if there had been a scandal there to be unearthed they would have neglected such a splendid opportunity. I do ont think my hon. friend from Hamilton would have neglected to show how guilty these Grits could be, and what dishonest acts they could perform. But, Sir, there is more than this, much more—the government of Manitoba prosecuted these men. It indicted Mr. Leach ; it went into the business very eagerly. But time went on, and on, and on ; and as time went on, the courage of those who had been so eager to expose villainy seems to have gone down and down and down until at last it oozed out at the soles of their boots. The accuser had to press for a trial. It was not the accuser who pressed the indictment to a close ; it was the accused who at last peremptorily asked that they should be tried ; and when the time came for the trial, what took place ? This is what took place : the prosecutor, the Attorney General of Manitoba, declined further to prosecute. Now, what reason could there be why the Attorney General of Manitoba should decline to prosecute such a damnable action as the disfranchising of hundreds and thousands of men ? I will give the reason, as stated by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) ; and certainly, in my humble judgment, no one is more competent to give the reason, because my hon. friend has taken a deep interest in this matter. This is how he spoke, and his language will be found at page 8313 of 'Hansard' :

> Now, I am asked by the hon. member for Pictou, 'Why were these cases dropped?' What have we read in the Liberal press ever since this question arose in 1904? Persecution ! Persecution on the part of the provincial government of Manitoba against these poor officials who had done nothing wrong. So it has been stated, but I do not think they will state it again. We were told that these officials were being persecuted. They were taken from court to court until they were brought to the Court of Appeal. And there it was decided that they were wrong, that they had no right to make these new polling subdivisions, and no right to treat the lists as they did. What was the use of going on when there was a decision of that kind, in the face of which such actions cannot be repeated? Had we gone on, the charge of 'persecution' would have been hurled still more viciously against the Conservatives. But another reason why these cases were dropped was that the Dominion government had turned this into a political question by sending Mr. E. L. Howard to represent the party in these cases. Would it be possible to get a jury that would not be a political jury with the Dominion government defending the accused? I think this is a sufficient answer to the hon. member for Pictou. Had the cases gone on we should have heard much more from the Liberal representatives and the Liberal press the accusation that we were persecuting these returning officers.

This is all the excuse that was given for not going on with this prosecution. Let me call once more to the attention of the House this salient reason which was given by my hon. friend from Marquette for not prosecuting :

> They were taken from court to court until they were brought to the Court of Appeal. And there it was decided that they were wrong, that they had no right to make these new polling subdivisions, and no right to treat the lists as they did. What was the use of going on when there was a decision of that kind, in the face of which such actions cannot be repeated?

So, Sir, if these men were not prosecuted, it was simply because of the magnanimity of the Conservative party. These men were told not to sin again. What ?—the men who had been guilty of disfranchising thousands of electors ? But, Sir, that is not the charge against these men now. It is not pretended by my hon. friend from Marquette that these returning officers acted dishonestly ; but still, though they were simply innocent victims, they were brought to the bar of a criminal court, and had to defend themselves. But what about Leach? Is it also through magnanimity that Leach has not been prosecuted ? My hon. friend said there was no use of having a prosecution, you could not get a verdict before a jury. It would have been difficult, I admit, to have got a verdict before a jury if the charge had been reduced to the statement that the returning officers had acted not dishonestly but simply in an improper conception of the law. But are we to be told that there is a jury in the province of Manitoba who would acquit any man who was guilty of stealing the franchise from his fellow men ? I do not believe that. I am sure that the plea that it would have been useless to go before a jury because the Dominion government had retained the services of Mr. Howard to defend the accused, does not apply to Mr. Leach. Did the Dominion government secure the services of anybody to defend Mr. Leach ? Did the Dominion government secure the services of Mr. Howard to defend its own officers—the returning officers who, according to the expression of my hon. friend, had acted unwisely but not criminally ? But if no charge was made against Mr. Leach, I conclude it was because none could be made. If Mr. Leach had been guilty of having disfranchised thousands of electors, it would have been the duty of every citizen of Manitoba to bring a charge against him in order to punish him for such practices and prevent them in the future. It would have been the duty of the government of Manitoba and of the Conservative party, and, I may add, it would have been still more their pleasure. If therefore

Mr. Leach was not brought to trial, if the Attorney General of Manitoba filed against him a nolle prosequi, if the Attorney General said he would not proceed against him, the only conclusion we can draw is that Mr. Leach was absolutely innocent of the infamous accusation brought against him.

In the face of such a condition of things, it is at least unfair, and, if it were not for my hon. friend from Marquette, I would say unmanly to try to fasten such epithets on Mr. Leach as are heaped daily upon his head, when those who accuse him had not the courage to make good their accusations. But even though this is the case, Mr. Leach is daily assailed and even in this House every day his name is held up to obloquy. And when, some time ago, he was appointed by this government to superintend the distribution of seed grain, my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said that if he had known that Mr. Leach was to be appointed to such a duty, he would have hesitated before voting the money for the seed grain.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my right hon. friend approve of what Mr. Leach did ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. When I am shown that Mr. Leach did anything wrong, I shall not approve it ; but up to this time this has not been shown. Hon. gentlemen opposite cannot escape by this tangent. Assertions have been made against Mr. Leach ; but when Mr. Leach asked for the proof and when the opportunity was given to make the proof, neither my hon. friend nor any of his friends brought the proof against him.

May I say something personal to myself. When I heard the statement made by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) —who, I know, is a strong partisan just as I am, and perhaps a little more—I could not believe that he could make such a statement unless, in his own heart and conscience, he thought he had cause to make it. I acquitted him altogether of any intention of consciously doing that man any wrong. Nevertheless he was accusing him ; and when I heard so strong a statement from my hon. friend, I thought I would make some personal inquiry to ascertain what was the character of Mr. Leach. I took some pains to ascertain what was his character, and I must say that the opinion given me by everybody—at least by those with whom I communicated—was that he was a perfectly respectable man. But Mr. Leach has since been acting in the capacity to which he was appointed a few weeks ago in connection with the distribution of grain. There have been some complaints that the grain was not, every part of it, of good quality. I may say that it was not purchased by Mr. Leach but by Mr. Castle—a man, I understand, who is absolutely above reproach. I was given communication of a newspaper in connection with my inquiries, and in that newspaper I read the following :

After a few weeks, however, the farmers from various points in the province began to raise objections to the seed which was delivered to them, and for which they were compelled to sign a lien on their next year's crop before they could examine it. Mr. Leach in a prompt way, arranged for an exchange in several cases and consequently much publicity has been avoided. The fact remains, however, that Mr. Cassels has not been doing what is right by the farmers, and if they had been forced by Mr. Leach to accept the grain given them it would have been a very bad thing for the country.

What is this newspaper which thus speaks of the work done by Mr. Leach, whose nomination was assailed by my hon. friend? It is a Conservative newspaper published in the city of Regina.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the name of the paper ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. 'The West.' Passing now to another aspect of the question, I have to observe that this condition of things is a very serious one.

Mr. FOSTER. Which condition ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The condition which prevails in Manitoba with regard to the adjustment of the lists in the constituencies. We thought the work could be done by the returning officers but, as my hon. friend the Minister of Justice said the other day, no one will undertake to-day the duties of returning officer. The task is such that the returning officer would have to submit to the same risks which he took in 1904. Unless we have a change in the law, the returning officer will be in the same peril in which he was in 1904. Suppose we should have an election to-morrow, the lists go to the returning officers as they are, without having been adjusted to the federal constituencies, and the returning officer would have the work thrust upon him of doing this, and he would have the same peril.

Mr. FOSTER. Would my right hon. friend make it clear what his conception of the duties of a returning officer is ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall try to make it clear to my hon. friend. The constituencies are forty-two in number and there are forty-two lists. When a returning officer receives the lists, say of Lisgar or Selkirk, he will receive the lists, not of the constituency of Lisgar or Selkirk, but of all the parts of the local constituencies which are included in Lisgar and Selkirk for the Dominion elections. The boundaries of these constituencies——

Mr. FOSTER. Dominion constituencies ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, the boundaries of the Dominion constituencies will include part of local constituencies. One part of a local constituency will go into one Dominion constituency and another part into another. Therefore the lists must be adjusted. There must be a red or a black line passed through the names which are not in the constituency for Dominion purposes. Somebody must do that work of adjusting the local lists to the Dominion constituencies by erasing the names which are not in the Federal constituency and adding others which ought to be in the lists. This was the duty entrusted to the returning officers by the Act of 1904 and which they must perform again when we have another Dominion election.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, so far as I follow my right hon. friend, this rearrangement has to be done in the case of polling divisions which are divided by the boundaries of Dominion constituencies.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Exactly. We are agreed upon that. Who then shall do this duty? We did entrust it to the returing officer, but we would not do so now. On this point, for my part, after having conferred with my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and my colleagues, we are ready to accept the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) in his speech the other day. My hon. friend quoted the law passed by the legislature of Manitoba subsequently to the last election and then went on in this way:

I tell the Prime Minister that there would not have been the slightest objection to the manner in which the last elections in Manitoba were conducted had the law been observed. I tell the Prime Minister candidly that if he wants to prevent a recurrence of the carelessness of transferring names, and if he wants to prevent the disfranchisement of electors by means of transferring where there is overlapping, the only thing he has to do is to adopt the provision of the provincial Act and employ a county court judge to do that dividing. That will get over every complaint that has been made and it will obviate the necessity of the thin red line. Let the county court judge do the transferring where there is overlapping, let him appoint each one of these separated places as a separate polling division as the provincial Act enacts, let him do the dividing of the lists and there will not be a single complaint from Grit or Tory in the province of Manitoba.

The Act to which the hon. gentleman refers says:

In the event of territory comprised within or partly comprised within an electoral division being changed and included in another electoral division, or other electoral divisions, whether newly created or not, a judge of one of the county courts divisions of the province to be nominated and appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, shall subdivide the names appearing on the list of electors, as so finally revised, according to the altered boundaries or limits, and make a complete list of electors for the electoral divisions affected, as aforesaid, and appropriately divide the names of electors and allot the territory between suitable polling subdivisions as shall, in the opinion of such judge, be just and equitable.

I must say that the provision of this Act of the legislature of Manitoba seems to be fair. We are disposed to accept it. But we cannot do this except by legislation, and legislation of this parliament. And I say to my hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche) that, if this would be agreeable to Grit and Tory alike, for my part I am quite willing to take this means of giving satisfaction to Grit and Tory alike. But my hon. friend should have had some consistency in his speech. After making this offer. he has moved an amendment which practically defeats the object he has in mind.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. No.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes. Because if the amendment is carried, there can be no reference to judges to allocate the names.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Because the Bill will be defeated.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But, will the right hon. gentleman permit me a moment? I made the same suggestion in the first speech that was made on this Bill on this side of the House. I pointed out that the difficulty is not confined to Manitoba, and stated that we were willing to accept the provisions of the Manitoba law as general legislation applicable to all Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But I have this to say to my hon. friend—that this difficulty arises in Manitoba, and elsewhere it does not arise.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Because everywhere else the lists are prepared by the municipality.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But that cannot make any difference in the division of the lists.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Did the hon. gentleman ever hear of any difficulty elsewhere? For instance, there was at one time a case in Quebec—I think it has been rectified since. The parish of St. Guillaume, which was in Yamaska for the local, was in Drummond and Arthabaska in the federal, and yet there was no difficulty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There need be no difficulty where the law as it stands is honestly carried out.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Oh, that red line is too thin altogether. There was no difficulty in that case, because you have only to take the list of the parish as it stands, and transfer it from one polling division to the other. But, in Manitoba, where the lists are not made by municipalities or by polling divisions, but for the whole constituency, it is absolutely indispensable that there should be somebody, in case of overlapping, to allocate the names according to the divisions. However, as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said, to have that bisecting done. all you have to do is to have the names allocated to one division or the other. Now, we will not quarrel over that. I understand that the proposal is acceptable——

Mr. FOSTER. Let us be perfectly clear. The right hon. gentleman has nothing further to say with reference to the polling divisions which are not divided by the boundaries of the constituencies?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the polling divisions are not divided by the boundaries of the Dominion constituencies, I do not see any necessity for intervention; it is only where they are divided, so far as I can see, that the necessity for intervention arises.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Before the right hon. gentleman leaves that point, as he has admitted that he sees no reason for interference where the polling subdivisions are entirely within the Dominion constituency, what defence has he to offer for the interference in the last election?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My answer is that I am not aware that anything of that kind took place.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I simply say that it has not been brought to my attention and I do not know about it. I can only say that, if it were so, I am surprised that the prosecutions were not carried out to a final issue.

Now, Sir, so far, we agree that there is a measure of relief which would give satisfaction to both Grits and Tories alike. That is a point at which it is satisfactory to have arrived. The question, however, does not rest there. On this side of the House there is an intimate conviction that the lists in the province of Manitoba are very unfair to the political party to which I belong. The members from Manitoba who sit on this side have given what seem to me conclusive evidence on that point. I have looked into the Manitoba Act. In many respects, it is a commendable Act. But, in my humble judgment, the Manitoba Act has a radical defect in this. that it places the whole machinery of the revision of the lists in the hands of the Governor in Council.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It does not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Some exception is taken to my statement. I rather welcome this. Let us discuss the point. What I say is that, under the Act as it is at the present time, there is one thing that is permanent, settled for all time. The registration board, as constituted by the Act, is composed of the county judges of the province, which board appoints the revising officers. But who appoints the registration clerks ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Revision is what you were talking about, not registration.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We are talking about both, because both go together. Who appoints the registration clerks? The government of the province of Manitoba. Who fixes the registration districts? The government of the province of Manitoba. Who fixes the revision districts? The government of the province of Manitoba. On this point, I have only to call attention to section 22 of the Act, which is as follows :

22. Annually, on or before the first day of May, the Lieutenant Governor in Council, shall, by order in council, authorize the issuing of a proclamation (form 1 in the schedule to this Act) setting forth:

(1) That it has been determined to add to, correct and revise the list of electors;

(2) The names and post office addresses of the persons appointed by such order in council to act as registration clerks in the respective electoral divisions of the province, for such purposes;

(3) The date or dates on, the place or places at, and the hours between which applications for registration and the correction and striking off names of electors will be received and shall be concluded in each electoral division.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Will the right hon. gentleman excuse me? Perhaps he will read section 61 also.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will go further than my hon. friend (Mr. Schaffner) asks. I will read not only section 61, but section 42 and section 65 also.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Read the whole Act. We will stand by the whole Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very well. Here is section 61 :

In order to give full and due effect to the powers of the board, the said board may provide for any proceeding. matter or thing for which express provision has not been herein made, or for which only partial provision has been made; or, where it shall be found that the time allowed to do any act is insufficient and an alteration or extension of such time, and any alteration of dates consequent thereon, shall appear to be necessary, the board may declare that such alteration may be made, and thereupon the same shall be made and take effect accordingly.

This is the power of the board. As I understand it is to extend the time and to do anything else they think proper to carry on their work.

Section 42 contains this also :

In case, by reason of interruptions or other emergency a sitting of the registration clerk is not commenced on the proper day, or is interrupted after being commenced and before the closing thereof, the registration clerk shall resume the registration on the following day and so on from day to day within the hours hereinbefore limited, until the registration sittings have been opened and kept open without interruption, and with free access to persons desiring to be registered, for the full number of days provided in the proclamation to be issued under the provisions of this Act. The times limited for the registration of electors shall be directory only, and any mistake or miscarriage in respect thereto shall not invalidate the list of electors of any electoral division.

This seems to be perfectly fair. I have nothing to say against it. On the contrary I would altogether commend it. It provides that if the registration clerk, within the time allotted to him by the proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor, has not sufficient time to hear all the applications or to erase names or to do all the work he is commanded to do, he can extend the time.

I would call the attention of my hon. friend who has interrupted me to section 65, subsection 11 :

The revising officer shall also receive and deal with the applications of all persons to be registered as electors who shall be present at the time fixed for the closing of the court of revision, notwithstanding that the time so fixed shall have elapsed.

Section 42 relates to the duties of the registration clerks ; section 65 relates to the duties of the revising officer. There is a marked difference between the two. I do not know whether it is intentional or accidental, I suppose perhaps it is only accidental, but if it is accidental it has worked serious mischief to some people. Whereas the registration clerk can according to section 42 extend the time not only to receive applications, but to erase names and correct the list in every particular, section 65, subsection 11, gives power to the revising officer to extend the time for receiving applications, but not for the erasing of names. I do not say that this is not accidental, but at all events I understand that whereas the registration clerk could and did on more than one occasion extend the time to receive applications and to erase names, the revising officer would, under certain circumstances on certain occasions, extend the time to receive names, but refused to extend the time for erasing names. Upon this we have the testimony of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) who stated that to his knowledge, in his personal case, in order to have certain names erased which he could not get erased because the time had expired, he had to bargain with his opponents in order to get a certain number, although he could have doubled the number if the time had been given. But be this as it may, I point out to the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) and the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche), who are both conversant with this Act, that though I find in this Act power given to the revising officer, though I find power given to the registration clerk to extend the time, I see no power given in this Act to extend or change the locality where the registration is to take place. The Act, section 22, says distinctly, that :

The Governor in Council shall fix the date or dates on, the place or places at, and the hours between which, applications for registration and the correction and striking off names of electors will be received and shall be concluded in each electoral division.

I speak subject to correction, as I have not given to the study of this Act all the time I would wish, but in my hasty perusal of it I did not find anywhere that the registration clerk or the revising officers have the power to extend the locality in which the registration is to take place. The order in council says that the registration shall take place at this locality, it shall take place at Beausejour, but you cannot extend it to Lac du Bonnet. It must take place there, and there alone. Is that fair, is that right, is that according to justice? The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway) the other day gave an example of its unfairness. He stated to the House that in a certain place, which turned out to be Beausejour, the revising officer, finding that a certain number of men in another settlement in the same registration district, called Lac du Bonnet, could not come to register their names, took upon himself to go to Lac du Bonnet, to extend the place and there he registered the names of thirty qualified electors ; and he stated further that when this registration list was brought to the Attorney General's office the names were simply contemptuously torn from the list and these men were disfranchised. When the hon. member for Lisgar made that speech the other day the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) hastily rose to his feet with this interruption :

Would the hon. member for Lisgar be fair enough to state that Judge Walker, the chairman of the registration board, reported to the government that this officer had held a court of revision illegally, after his certificate had expired.

Yes, Judge Walker actually said that officer was acting illegally. It was contrary to the law of Manitoba—but it was in accordance with natural justice. It is unfortunate that the law of Manitoba and the law of natural justice are not on a par. It was against the law of Manitoba, but I ask, in all fairness of my hon. friend from Marquette, should this be against the law of Manitoba? Will it be said that such a law should be maintained and are we in this House powerless to remedy such an outrage against duly qualified electors? Shall it be said that although the law of Manitoba will not allow justice to be done under such circumstances we have to sit still and allow these men to be disfranchised? That is the position in which we are placed and that is one reason why we came to the conclusion that we had to take some action this year.

The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) stated the other day, and his statement was repeated by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner), that in 1904 an Act had been drafted to deal with the province of Manitoba, that the Act had been printed, not only drafted, but printed. I wondered at the time if my ears did not deceive me when such a statement was made. If such a Bill had been prepared I would have known something of it, and I have to say here that no Act was drafted in 1904 but the Act which was brought down by the Minister of Justice and which became law. No such Act as has been suggested by the hon. member for Souris and the hon. member for Marquette even was contemplated, although the suggestion may have been made.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Does the Prime Minister say that no Act was contemplated, no Bill was drafted?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No Act was contemplated by the government and no Bill was prepared, that I say most decisively.

Mr. STAPLES. Was such a Bill prepared in 1903?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. So far as my memory goes, I say with all candour to my hon. friend that no Act was prepared in 1903 or 1904 except the Act which was brought down in 1904. I may say, and why should I not say, that my friends from Manitoba represented to me at that time, as they did since, that the Act of Manitoba was very unfair towards them, especially in the manner in which it was administered. This year we have thought, however, that we should listen to the representations made to us upon this subject. I consulted the Minister of Justice, I consulted my colleagues, and we determined to bring down the Bill that we have to-day, not, Sir, that we are absolutely wedded to that Bill, not that we are not prepared to receive amendments from our friends, not that we are not ready to try to improve it and amend it so as to give satisfaction, in the very words of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche), to Grit and Tory alike. But, Sir, I ask my hon. friends if they will not admit that although the legislation which today exists in Manitoba and the manner in which it is administered may be satisfactory to the Tories, it is not satisfactory to the Grits—and that is the reason we have introduced this legislation.

Now, Sir, my hon. friends will tell me that they do not want this legislation. They are absolutely opposed to it because the legislation which we bring forward would place the preparation of the lists, in so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned, in the hands of officers appointed by this government. That is their objection. Let us be frank with one another upon this question. Let us meet on principles which we can all appeal to and which we can all accept. My hon. friend from Marquette and other hon. members on the other side of the House do not want this law to be passed, because, if it were to be passed, it would give the preparation of the lists, not to their own friends, but to our own friends. Now, Sir, will it surprise them very much, if they have no confidence in us, that we should not be burdened by much confidence in them? If they think it is unfair that the lists upon which they want to go to the election should be prepared by their opponents do they think it is fair that the lists upon which we would have to go to the election should be prepared by our opponents? Can we not agree therefore to devise a law which will remove the control of the elections both from the Grits and the Tories so as to give satifaction to both Grits and Tories? That is the proposition which I have to make to my hon. friend from Marquette and to all the other hon. gentlemen sitting on the other side of the House. The other day the hon. member for Marquette stated that the lists as prepared were perfectly honest and as evidence of his earnestness in the matter he quoted this article from the 'Telegram' of Winnipeg in which $25 is offered to every man who presents proof that, being a qualified elector, his name has not been put upon the list:

> The 'Telegram' will pay the sum of $25 to any elector in the province of Manitoba who is not already on the voters' lists who is refused registration if he applies in the regular manner and is legally qualified to vote under our law. Should any claim or claims be made under this offer each case to be referred to Hon. C. J. Mickle, leader of His Majesty's loyal opposition in the Manitoba legislature, from whose decision there shall be no appeal. Should any award be made, one half the amount is to be paid to the elector who has been refused registration and the other half to the Winnipeg General Hospital.

If my hon. friend is so confident of the honesty and accuracy of the lists prepared by this revision perhaps he will agree with me that it would be more in accordance with the fitness of things if the elector who has been deprived of his vote, whose name has not been placed upon the list, instead of receiving $25, should have an opportunity of having his name placed upon the list. My hon. friend, I suppose, will agree to that ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The 'Telegram' newspaper cannot very well place him upon the list.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The 'Telegram' cannot place his name on the list, but this parliament can amend the law so as to give him his vote. Will the hon. gentleman agree to that ? That is the proposition I have to make. The judge who is empowered to adjust the lists will be entrusted with the work of correcting all errors which may have been committed in the preparation of the lists in Manitoba.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The right hon. gentleman says that the lists are now prepared by partisan officials of the provincial government. Does he refer to the registration clerks or the revising barristers ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To the registration clerks.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Will the right hon. gentleman point out some of the abuses committed by the registration clerks ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. There is no use of making a declaration if you cannot prove it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My answer is simply this : If the lists upon which this House is to be elected are to be prepared by officers appointed by this government, would you call them partisan officials ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I would like to point out to the right hon. gentleman that the registration clerks do not prepare the lists ; they accept the affidavits of the elector who makes application for personal registration. The registration clerk cannot put the elector's name on the list without an affidavit.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is simply another way of looking at the question. I will put the question again. It is a play upon words and nothing else. If this Bill becomes law and if the registration clerk is appointed by this government will my hon. friend be satisfied ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I will if you apply the same law to every province in the Dominion. We are not going to be singled out.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will not apply the same law to the other provinces of the Dominion, because in the province of Ontario and the other provinces the lists are prepared by the municipal officers.

Mr. LANCASTER. The lists are not prepared, where there is registration, by the municipal clerks, but they are prepared by the registration clerks.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) is in error. I do not know the province of Ontario as well as he does, but in rural Ontario the lists are prepared by the municipal councils.

Mr. LANCASTER. There is no registration in rural Ontario.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no registration in rural Ontario. In certain cities there is registration, but it is a drop in the bucket. There are only a few cities in which there is registration. In rural Ontario the lists are prepared by municipal councils.

Mr. LANCASTER. Where there is registration in Ontario the registration clerks are appointed by the provincial government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Possibly. We do not touch them. My hon. friend does not find fault with that. But, I say this to my hon. friend from Marquette : He proposes that we shall apply the same principle everywhere, but I say that elsewhere the lists are prepared by the municipal authorities.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The right hon. gentleman has not answered my question. Will he point out abuses committed by the registration clerks and unfairness towards their opponents.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have only to refer my hon. friend to the speech of my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Jackson), to the speech of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) and to the speech of my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway). These are the evidences that I have. I have to say this to my hon. friend ; he will take my suggestion for what it is worth, he will accept it or not accept it, but I think we shall have a fair basis upon which to prepare the lists for the election, without any suspicion on the part of anybody, if the lists are prepared altogether under judicial authority.

Now, Sir, I have said enough with respect to the province of Manitoba. I come now to the other provisions of the Bill. The Bill was prepared with an object and upon a general principle and that principle was that wherever there is no municipal registration or municipal preparation of the lists we shall entrust the preparation of the lists to the authority provided for by this Bill. I listened the other day to the speech of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in so far as this provision related to Quebec. I must say that I listened to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier with a mingled feeling of curiosity and pain. My hon. friend was at once alarmed and bellicose. He was alarmed because he saw in the unorganized districts of Quebec visions of Syrians, Italians, and other foreigners being put on the lists along the line of the Transcontinental railway. I think my hon. friend need not be alarmed upon this question. It is said that beauty is in the eye of the gazer. It looks very much as if scandal was very much in the eye of the gazer. Scandal exists in the imagination of my hon. friend and he believes that we have a sinister motive in view. If this Bill were passed and if authority were given in the unorganized portions of Quebec to have the lists prepared how could the Grand Trunk Pacific come into play ?

Where would it be ? Would it be the county of Montcalm, or of Joliette or of any of these counties which extend to the Hudson bay, or would it be beyond the mountains? How could the registration officer or the revising officer go to the line of the Transcontinental Railway in order to make a list? I do not think that argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is very serious, but he made a plea to maintain our system and with that idea I am very much in accord, when the system is right. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) argued that in the province of Quebec there is no unorganized territory, because if a territory is unorganized it is placed under the jurisdiction of a county council. Let me explain to the hon. gentlemen from other parts of Canada that our municipal system in Quebec is the same as in Ontario; we have local councils in every municipality, our municipalities are townships, villages and parishes, and the mayors of all the local municipalities are the members of the county council. But there is a provision in our municipal code, peculiar to that code so far as I am aware. which says that if there is in any county a territory which is unorganized it is placed under the supervision of the county council. That is a very wise provision, but I do not think it can be construed to the length my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) would construe it. I understand that the county council has jurisdiction over all municipal matters which are to be found within the code—for instance, if the unorganized territory in any of these counties needs roads, the county council would deal with that, or if there is a by-law to be passed in favour of the prohibition of the liquor traffic the powers of the municipal council would apply to that. But I fail to see within the four corners of the municipal code any provision which gives to the secretary-treasurer of the municipal council the duty of making electoral lists in those territories, and in our province these lists are prepared by the secretary-treasurer under the supervision of the council. This power is not given to them under the municipal code but by the Election Act, which says :

The secretary-treasurer of each municipality shall, between the 1st and 15th day of the month of March, annually make in duplicate subdivided for each polling subdivision a list in alphabetical order of all persons who according to the valuation roll then in force in the municipality for municipal purposes appear to be electors by reason of the real estate possessed or occupied by them in any manner within the municipality or by reason of being otherwise qualified as set forth in article 9.

Does my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) believe that this article which places on the secretary-treasurer of local councils the duty of preparing these lists, can be applied to the secretary-treasurer of the county councils. I have very serious doubt as to that. I have not had an opportunity yet of conferring with the Minister of Justice on that question, but if my hon. friend's view is correct I will be more than pleased ; if his view is correct the province of Quebec would be beyond the jurisdiction of this Act and that should be satisfactory to him as it is to me.

With regard to the other provinces I do not think I should say much more.

Now, revising the whole question it is beyond doubt that we should have an election law; that we should improve the electoral Act, that we should give satisfaction to public opinion which has imperatively demanded a new election law. Viewing the debate as it has proceeded up to the present, I think I can say that no system of preparing the lists will be satisfactory to this side or to the other side if it is to be made for party purposes either by the Dominion government or by any provincial government.

Mr. BOYCE. In view of the very grave irregularities which have been pointed out and proven with regard to the making up of voters' lists in the unorganized territory of Ontario, would the right hon. gentleman suggest whether there is to be any improvement in the law ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As I stated a moment ago, if it be agreeable to my hon. friends on the other side I am disposed to leave the preparation of the lists in northern Ontario, not to any partisan officer, but to place it altogether under the control of the judges. That I am prepared to do.

Mr. BOYCE. What judges ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will come to that when we are in committee. I shall be only too glad to receive the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce). I am not entering into this with any preconceived opinion; I am disposed to receive the suggestion of my hon. friend and perhaps I will be glad to avail myself of his services. We are all interested in this question. In conclusion I have simply this to say—my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has appealed to me and I also appeal to him. I appeal to him in the name of fairness, of broad equity, of natural justice, to help us to frame an Act which will place the whole machinery of the preparation of the lists under judicial authority so as to give satisfaction to Grit and Tory and so that when an election takes place sooner or later the voice of the people absolutely untrammelled may be given expression to. That is the position which we take and that is the position which we place before the House and before the country.

Mr. FOSTER. My right hon. friend has not said anything about the ballot.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. On that question I must say that in my opinion very little justice has been done to my hon friend the Minister of Justice. There is no such intention as has been attributed to my hon. friend to try and tamper with the secrecy of the ballot. What we have in mind is to prevent if possible a recurrence of what has taken place when the voice of the people in certain elections has been baffled and set aside by the intervention of mere technicalities. I have to say that upon this point and upon every other point of this Bill we are prepared to receive suggestions, to amend the Bill if necessary so as to give effect to the policy contained in it, which is the secrecy of the ballot without stifling the voice of the people as pronounced by them. Should we say that it is impossible to prevent what has taken place in certain constituencies; should we say that we cannot frame an Act which will preserve the secrecy of the ballot and at the same time to prevent a recurrence of such a thing as that a man who has been honestly elected to this House by the people could not take his seat ?

Mr. ALCORN. Has the right hon. gentleman mapped out or has he in mind any modus operandi by which his new lists will be made altogether under judicial authority.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think so. I think we will be prepared to do so at the proper time when we are in committee.

Hon. G. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, the debate upon this Bill has been proceeding now well on into the second week, and up to the present time we on this side of the House have been noting particularly the evidence and testimony adduced which might be considered a sufficient basis upon which the very drastic legislation contemplated in this Bill has been founded. The evidence and testimony upon which to base legislation of this kind ought to be, I think, more than hearsay and more than mere assertion. Now, whether we are right or wrong, from the time the Minister of Justice took his feet to explain this Bill until the last gentleman on that side of the House finished his speech last evening, I am free to say for myself that the evidence and the testimony has been of the most unreliable, illusory and unsatisfactory nature. I am on my feet to declare that if you submit the speech of the Minister of Justice to a critical analysis, what with the actual misrepresentation of facts, what with the hearsay and allegation of what might have been or what might not have been, take those all out, and you have scarcely anything left, in that speech. I had thought to submit a little analysis of it, even at the risk of repeating what was so well done by my friend Dr. Schaffner, from Souris, last night; but it was done to a very thin House. Then we have the hon. gentleman from Lisgar (Mr. Greenway), who was an actor in the legislative and political history of Manitoba, from whom we ought to have had precept upon precept and line upon line and proof for every assertion. Boil down the speech of my hon. friend from Lisgar, and you reduce it in the main to a mere froth of assumption and of hearsay. Then I followed very closely that most remarkable exhibition, the speech of the member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole). I understand that that hon. gentleman does not propose to go back again to Winnipeg to ask for the suffrages of the people. If this last performances of his in this House can have any weight, ought to be taken into consideration, is it too much for me to say that I think the people of Winnipeg may well be congratulated? Then, I listened, and read after listening, the speech of the member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford), and I defy any one to take that speech and thoroughly analyse it, and find any large basis of fact in it. And to-day I have listened to the speech of my right hon. friend the leader of the government, and, Mr. Speaker, I ask you, just fresh from that speech, where is the body of proof given by my right hon. friend upon which to base a grievance sufficiently large and sufficiently grave to justify this House in adopting this drastic legislation which he has proposed. If there had been an investigation into alleged grievances in Manitoba, with reference to the work of the registration clerks or with reference to the work of the revising officers, and if out of that investigation, carried on fairly, reasonably, and according to terms of law, there had been presented to this House sufficient evidence that a fraud was being perpetrated, that a hostile attitude was being taken by the legislature of Manitoba towards this Dominion government with reference to one-half of its people allied to his party, then, Sir, he would have had good ground upon which to base drastic legislation, and then the proviso stated by my right hon. friend and alluded to by my hon. friend at my side (Mr. R. L. Borden), that such a state of circumstances might arise in a province, in its attitude and in its action towards a party in this House, which would justify some action on the part of this House. But, Sir, we have had no investigation, we have had no proof; we have had simply assertion of the most allusory and unsatisfactory kind. Against all that I put this one consideration, and it is a consideration which I put to the man on the street, to the man who is unpartisan, to the man who simply wants to be fair, and I put it to my right hon. friend. It is this: You have a party in the province of Manitoba, the Liberal party of that province; they are your supporters in this House; without their action you would not have a Liberal supporter from the province of Manitoba. That party has its home and its existence in that province of Manitoba. It is vitally interested in provincial politics as well as in Dominion politics—may we not say more interested in provincial politics than in Dominion politics? Your party of men in the province of Manitoba is to-day well officered, intelligent, has its organs of public opinion to express its position and to expose its grievances if it has any. In the House of Winnipeg to-day you have one of the best men of the Liberal party, I think, the Hon. Mr. Mickle, who represents that party in the province of Manitoba. He is an old politician; the history of politics in that country is contemporaneous with himself; he has worked through it, lived through it, knows of it as an active partaker in the political life of that province. If this condition of things exists in the province of Manitoba, it exists as a tyranny and oppression of the Liberals as far as they are concerned provincially just the same as it does as far as they are concerned federally. Is that not absolutely true? Are we to consider that, if those grievances, if those acts of oppression, tyranny and fraud, are absolutely true, the Liberals of the province of Manitoba sit down quietly under that state of things, and neither through their organs of public opinion—I would not say so much about that—nor through their representatives in the provincial legislature have they made any move of warfare, opposition or amendment with reference to that state of things?

Take a concrete example and it serves here splendidly. There was your representative from Winnipeg—doing what? A gentleman in the provincial legislature because cognizant, more than a year ago, of an alleged dirty and dastardly attempt to put 450 foreign voters on the naturalization lists and on the voters' lists for the province of Manitoba—in the city of Winnipeg, if I remember right. That is knowledge which comes to him. He knows it because he paid for it or gave his cheque to pay for it. He knows it because he procured those affidavits, because he read those affidavits, because he was alongside Rudneski and the other gentlemen who swore to the affidavits. He bought the live carcass more than a year ago, but up to the present day he has not presented the animal to the provincial legislature. But he hands over the dead carcass to the selected purveyor of that sort of thing the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr Bole), and that member brings into this House the carcass, ill smelling and decayed, on a silver salver and presents it to my right hon. friend, and he calls it sweet meat. What does my hon. friend think of that? With what applause was not the reading of those affidavits received—those affidavits which the hon. gentleman who procured them and paid for them, and had for more than a year in his possession, did not dare offer at home. But a thousand miles away was the theatre where they could be presented to the applause of the right hon. gentleman and all honourable Liberals who support him in this House. I am willing that this matter be judged by that simple proof. Show me a vote among the provincial Liberals in the province of Manitoba, show me a debate in the provincial legislature in Manitoba, show me a grievance ventilated in that legislature, show me a single amendment proposed in that legislature, show me one move made by honest thinking men there with regard to those grievances which press down so severely on the party opposite. There is a challenge to my right hon. friend. Let him point out one protest in the local legislature of that province. My right hon. friend cannot do it. But he is willing to take these old, decayed and dastardly affidavits, brought into this House, as the proof upon which he comes with this radical legislation and proposes to carry it through willy nilly. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr Bole) read affidavits from these men; and on the very face of them, they were men who were absolutely without conscience and without principle because they swore that they did everything that was illegal and wrong with reference to the naturalization and the putting of names on the lists, and they did that for pay. That is the herd with which the hon. member for Winnipeg runs. That is the herd with which my right hon. friend runs. For he himself applauded the reading of those affidavits. I saw him applauding. Affidavits of that kind brought down 1,000 miles from the scene of the transaction, where they were ashamed to deploy it, and those men's affidavits put up here to traduce throughout the whole Dominion of Canada, by being spread on the records of the Dominion, honourable men and honourable officials in the city of Winnipeg, in the Manitoba government and in Manitoba public life! That I leave with gentlemen who have such peculiar ideas of their position and rights in this House as the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole). And it is the saddest of things for me to know that that was applauded by my right hon. friend and by other gentlemen on that side of the House. Now how do you explain the absolute inaction under this tremendous pile of grievances and wrong—inaction absolute and positive of the Liberal party in local affairs in the city of Winnipeg and the province of Manitoba? Has my righ thon. friend any explanation to give? Is there any explanation of it? If there is an explanation, is it not this, that the men who are closest to it know that there is nothing in it, and the men that are furthest away, it is thought can be bamboozled by reckless statements? At Winnipeg where the people live, in Manitoba where they know this sort of talk the assertion would not go down. That is the reason it is not employed there. The distance is the reason it is employed here. More than that, will my right hon. friend deny that the Hon. Mr. Mickle has stated in the local legislature that the present Manitoba law is fairly good legislation and the best they have had in that province in his political experience? There is your local leader—will my right hon. friend give any credence at all to this local leader in the Manitoba legislature? Or will he rather take the Rudneski affidavits, brought by the hon. member for Winnipeg, as a proof, against the word of the leader of his party in the local legislature?

We have waited a long while for legislation with reference to an election law. It has been long promised and is much needed. It has been looked for widely. At last it comes down, and when it comes down, what is it? Take the speech of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth). For all that fell from him, this Bill consists absolutely of one clause and one only. That is the clause for taking over the franchises of Manitoba and British Columbia and the unorganized territories. In his speech the Minister of Justice gave more than three quarters of his time to section number 1 of this Bill and very cursory attention, if any, to the other sections.

What is this Bill when we come to look at it? It is remarkable for what it does not include. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) briefly enumerated what it does not include that it might have included. No provision is made for simultaneous polling, that is, that all the constituencies of the Dominion, with the possible exception of the Yukon, shall have polling on the same day. The present method is an abuse. There is no reason why the polling should not be simultaneous. But the Minister of Justice was too busy with section 1 of this Bill to think about the simultaneous polling. And what about the other flagrant abuse practically carried on by my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) of allowing a constituency to remain unrepresented indefinitely in this House because of partisan and political difficulties which remain to be cured? Is it not an outrage upon the rights of the people, upon all principles of good government, that an electoral unit should remain unrepresented in this House for a longer time than is actually and reasonably necessary to bring about an election? There is nothing in this Bill to make it necessary that by-elections shall be held within a reasonable time, or to provide that, if there be more than one vacancy, the elections shall take place simultaneously. There is nothing of improved machinery, either as regards methods or appointees, with the exception of one or two technical improvements, as, for instance, in the service of writs in election protests and so on. There is nothing to prevent that abuse, which has been growing under this government, of using government officials as active political partisans. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) made, I think, a very great slip the other night, a slip which shows that he at least, whatever may be true of the government as a whole, has not the least idea of the principle involved or of the gravity of this matter. What is the fact of the case? The fact is that the government use their officials, dressed in its authority—and every Dominion official has a certain authority by virtue of being a Dominion official—to help their party in their election contests, making of the officials, in many cases, almost permanent electioneering clerks. The Minister of the Interior tried to excuse one case by saying that, though he had one Dominion official with him in an election contest, the official was not a permanent employee, or was paid a very small salary. The salary has nothing at all to do with the matter, in my estimation. The gravamen of the charge is that the official is dressed in government authority and yet represents the party in power. It makes no difference whether he receives $300 a year or $3,000 a year; the bad principle is in allowing that kind of influence to be exerted. The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has been profuse in professions. With the assistance of his supporters he has helped to carry unanimously in this House a resolution that officials should not be allowed to take a partisan part in elections. Yet there is nothing in this Bill to carry that out—profession and profession only; when it comes to the practical fulfilment of the professions here in this Bill, simply nothing is done. How about that growing evil, that growing scandal in this country, of using public works and promises of expenditure of public money in special cases at by-elections or otherwise in order to influence the voters in favour of the government? Everywhere, in properly constituted countries, this is considered a wrong. It is a growing and grievous wrong in this country, yet there is nothing in this Bill to prevent it. The examples which we have had within the last two years of the use made by ministers and others of that kind of influence have been so gross, so unconcealed that the independent press of this country has launched its vigorous opposition against it, and thinking men all over the country are condemning it more and more. Yet where is the clause in this Bill that applies to that? Then, Sir, there are no adequate penalities for certain election crimes such as have been shown to exist through the action of the courts within the last year or two. And, more than that, there is no effective power to carry the election law into effect, so that these crimes declared to be crimes by the law shall be exposed and the evil-doers punished.

I have said that there are two or three satisfactory technical amendments. But one change that is made seems to allow a method of legal corruption. The Bill—whatever may be meant by it—authorizes incorporated companies for political purposes only to distribute alms without incurring the penalties of the law. There is a vista opening before us; there is a provision of wonderful possibilities. We have no explanation of it from any hon. gentleman who has spoken on the side of the government. We do not know what it means, but it seems to be a peculiar proposition and one that may lead to great abuses. Then we have in this Bill an attack upon the secrecy of the ballot. After seven days' debate, after the clause had been attacked right and left, the first light that we are given upon it is the statement made by the Prime Minister that his Minister of Justice did not mean what the clause says; That is what the right hon. gentleman's statement amounts to. And he says the Minister of Justice has been very unfairly criticised in the statement that this means a departure from the secrecy of the ballot. The section says :

> Provided, however, that no ballot paper shall be rejected on account of any writings, number or mark placed thereon by any deputy returning officer.

That is as wide as it can be made. It covers any kind of combination or series of combination. It opens the way for the purchase of votes, because it provides a method by which the vote can be identified. Any deputy returning officer of the calibre of hundreds of deputy returning officers of whom we have had experience in this country could, under that plenary power, make it possible for the party that he stands in with—and he is a partisan appointee—to make their negotiations upon the basis of absolute certainty and to have the ballots marked so that they can be absolutely identified and that payment can be arranged for with absolute certainty that it can be known whether the goods are or are not delivered. The very fact that this provision is in the Bill will raise fear in the mind of every dependent, of every poor man who would rather conceal the way in which he votes, the man who labours for a corporation or for a master who would try to influence his vote—that there is no use, that it is impossible for him to escape, that his ballot will be identified and the way in which he votes will become known. That is the first thing. But the second thing is what I have spoken of, that it opens an organized, trustworthy and certain method of clinching the wrongful negotiations that take place for the purchase and sale of votes.

My right hon. friend says that the minister has been unduly criticised. What criticism could there be ? The minister himself never opened his mouth upon it, he did not explain it, his explanation is in the clause and the clause, I have read. What we suppose is that the clause means what it says, and if it means what it says it certainly is open to criticism of the most stringent and vehement kind. The Bill does something else, it provides for a partisan division of electors in divided polling subdivisions. That remark is absolutely true as far as the Bill goes, as far as the arguments to support the Bill up to this date go, because every gentleman who has spoken on that side has gone upon the Bill and has approved of the Bill, the whole Bill and nothing but the Bill. To-day my right hon. friend says that he will delete partisanship entirely from the redistribution of voters and will have the redistribution conducted entirely by county court judges. That is not the Bill, but why did the right hon. gentleman, if that was the intention of the Bill or his intention, waste the time of this House for seven long days, keep back the business of the country at this late time of the session, imperil the wages of working men and civil servants all through this country and then, at this late day, announce that he has agreed to delete partisanship from that portion of it ? We agree absolutely in this, that if it is necessary, as it is, to have overlapping polling subdivisions distributed—I agree to that, we all agree to that—any reasonable legislation which is non-partisan and competent legislation will receive the support of this side of the House so far as that delimination is concerned. My hon. friend who leads the government said that on Tuesday last.

Mr. BERGERON. Who leads the opposition ?

Mr. FOSTER. The government soon to be—stated that in explicit language and yet for these whole eight days the debate has gone on and it is only at this late moment that the right hon. gentleman concedes the point. We agree to accept the concession. It was our principle laid down at the first and we congratulate the right hon. gentleman on acceding to the justice and reasonableness of the demand which has been made in that respect.

I put two questions to my right hon. friend in order that we may be clear upon this. This overlapping is to be interpreted as referring to the polling subdivisions which are cut by the boundary of the federal constituency and to no others ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. And this work contemplated in that first section is to apply to that kind of polling division and to no other ? There we are agreed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. The astounding thing about it, and what makes me discount my right hon. friend's proof, or what he thinks is proof and evidence sufficient to make this legislation necessary, is that my right hon. friend has sat in this House for eight days, has listened to the whole discussion and did not know until this afternoon, and may be does not know yet, for he says he does not, that the returning officers in 1904 went beyond the overlapping polling divisions and redistributed the polling divisions which were absolutely within the boundaries of the federal constituency and that two-thirds of the cases in which they interfered were polling divisions of that kind and not polling divisions which were intersected by the boundary of the Dominion or federal constituency. More news for my right hon. friend probably. No prosecution was launched against a returning officer in Mantoba for what he did in 1904 in so far as his action was concerned alone with an overlapping polling division. The returning officers were prosecuted because they went beyond the power given by the Dominion Act, and, after having distributed the overlapping polling divisions, went to work and redistributed large numbers of the polling divisions in Manitoba which were not overlapping and which they should not have touched. My right hon. friend will find that to be true. How could they institute a prosecution against your returning officer if he did simply and only what your Act authorizes him to do ? What your Act authorized him to do was to distribute the names in an overlapping intersected polling division. For that Manitoba brought no prosecution, the prosecutions were for interference with polling divisions inside a constituency which were not intersected at all.

Mr. CLARKE. Where did they distribute those inside ?

Mr. FOSTER. The Lord knows. They distributed them all through, they took off one and added to another all over the province and the hero Leach, to whose defence my right hon. friend came this afternoon, the hero, the moral reformer, Leach, who did this work largely as Liberal organizer for the returning offiers, swore in his testimony that he took good care, mighty good care that the Liberal-Conservatives did not know what they were doing and did not get on the track of the redistribution that was made. My right hon. friend will not question that ; it is in 'Hansard.'

I ask my right hon. friend to think for a moment of the situation of things in 1904 in connection with that business of the thin red line, as he calls it—I ask him to sense the position. He gave orders under the law to the returning officers to distribute the overlapping polling divisions, that was legal, they had a right to do it. Does he consider that it was right that when the returning officer received the King's Printer's list which was for him and his deputy returning officers alone, he should send it, or take it to the rooms of the Liberal organizer of the city of Winnipeg, give the list into his hands for days, tell him to do practically what he liked with them, and then when it was finally received from Mr. Leach's office, without looking through or certifying to himself in any respect that that list had not been wrongly tampered with, use it as the official list ? Does he consider that was proper ? That is the gravamen of the red line business. What would you think if within the province of Ontario you were to send out the King's Printer's list to the returning officers and that these returning officers around about the city of Toronto should bring those lists in to the Liberal organizer of the province of Ontario, Mr. Inwood, deliver them over into his hands, and if there was the same overlapping in the province of Ontario, have him do the redistributing secretly, stealing a march on his opponents and then simply use the lists that had been arranged in Mr. Inwood's office. How would he consider action of that kind? He would believe with me that it would raise a revolution in the province of Ontario. It was absolutely that and nothing else than that that Leach did. But Mr. Leach was not an officer of the Dominion government quoad the electoral lists. It was the returning officer who put these into the hands of Mr. Leach who was the criminal. Mr. Leach is a man of judgment and common sense. Does the right hon. Prime Minister think that it is the highest type of man who takes hold of lists, given to him by a returning officer, sworn to keep these lists and to certify to them himself, sworn to do what is necessary in the way of rearranging the voters' lists, does my right hon. friend think that it is indicative of a finely spirited and finely conscienced man, one to make a hero of, who, as organizer for the province of Manitoba, would take these lists and erase and add to them, do it through the whole province of Manitoba, and do it to the detriment of the party to which he is opposed, taking good care that they shall not know anything of what he is doing? I want to ask the right hon. gentleman if he thinks that is the right kind of a man and the right kind of a spirit or if that is a thing for a high spirited and honourable man to do. Surely politics is not one vast trickery. Surely an honourably minded man would have said to this deputy returning officer, Duggan: I cannot do anything with your lists; I have no right to; you are the man to make these rearrangements; go to work and rearrange your own lists. An honourable man would have said that. But, this gentleman leapt at the chance, took to himself the lists. made erasures and changes absolutely disfranchising voter after voter, and he was the means by which the present hon. member for the constituency sits in this House by his present majority of ten. My right hon. friend denied that Mr. Leach disfranchised a single man. Well, technically my right hon. friend may be right. Leach could not disfranchise a man, he had not the power, but, if, through the co-operation, the willing co-operation of Duggan, he manipulated the list so that man after man, Conservative after Conservative, was left off from his proper polling place and therefore could not and did not get his vote in, what does it amount to in the end ? It amounts to the disfranchisement of every man whose name was striken off that list. Technically you may say that Mr. Leach did not disfranchise him, technically you may say that the returning officer disfranchised him, but Leach was the representative of the returning officer and he possessed the knowledge which enabled him to do this work that Duggan himself could not have done. And yet, in that polling place and in that constituency Duggan had been fifteen years a resident and knew the people. Leach was not a resident and did not know the people except through his greater knowledge as ofganizer for the Liberal party and through the men he had at his beck and call all through the province. Now, Sir, I contend that no small tribute of mitigated praise from the 'West' of Regina with reference to Mr. Leach's making some fair turn in reference to the distribution of seed grain is anything to set against that kind of conduct. It stamps Leach as being of the same pattern as Rudneski. Is that too strong a phrase ? I stand by it. Rudneski did what he did wrongfully, knowing that it was wrong because he was paid for it. Leach did what he did wrongfully knowing that it was unfair and illegal and he did it receiving pay as organizer for that party and receiving the rewards of that party. What is the difference between Rudneski and Leach ? Only this, that Leach had probably a Biblical education and should have and did know better. But Rudneski did not have that advantage. The first part of his name may be an index of the character of his training.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES.

On the order for the House to go into Committee of the Whole on :

Bill (No 151) respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company—Mr. Crawford.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Stand.

Mr. LENNOX. I have no objection to the Bill standing but I will not be here on Friday when it may come up.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It can be taken on Monday.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes.

BELLEVILLE, PRINCE EDWARD BRIDGE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 20) respecting the Belleville Prince Edward Bridge Company—Mr. Porter.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill is not here; perhaps he wishes to speak on it. I move that progress be reported.

Progress reported.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 131) respecting the Occidental Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Ross (Yale-Cariboo).

Bill (No. 137) respecting the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company.—Mr Dyment.

Bill (No. 155) respecting the Pontiac Central Railway Company.—Mr. Bickerdike.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

The hour for private Bills having expired, the House resumed consideration of the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act and the proposed amendment of Mr. W. J. Roche thereto.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I come now to the remaining and vital proposal in the Bill, namely, the proposal to seize the British Columbia and Manitoba franchises and that of the unorganized territory in Ontario and Quebec, take them from the provincial authorities and jurisdiction, and hand them over to the partisan officers of the Dominion government; for we must take the Bill exactly as it is, and on the face of the Bill that is plainly written. We can also interpret the Bill by the past action of the government, and I propose to cite some instances of the past action of the government under a clause of this kind. What then was the principal proposal of the Bill? That which I have mentioned; but, Mr. Speaker, it was not an open proposal. It was a concealed proposal. It was a part of the Bill which was at first almost if not entirely ignored. When the Minister of Justice introduced his Bill he did not even mention, or if he mentioned it was very slightly indeed, this proposal in the Bill, and a person listening to his exposition of it as he introduced it would be absolutely ignorant that such a drastic and far-reaching and subversive proposal was concealed within the Bill. That was scarcely fair to the country or to the House. The country gets its idea of a Bill from its introduction by the responsible minister, and very many people, whilst they read the introductory remarks, probably form their opinion from these, and either do not have it shaken or do not see subsequent discussions which might shake it. That fact is patent; I do not think it can be denied. It was concealed as well as ignored, for when the second reading came to be moved, the same Minister of Justice devoted the largest part of his time to the grievance which was involved in the overlapping of the polling subdivisions, and it was a very small proportion of his time that he devoted to that portion of the Bill which gives this government through its partisan officers complete control of the lists of two provinces and of the unorganized territory in the two greater eastern provinces. That is patent; that cannot be denied. But the matter began to leak out when the supporters of the government came to discuss the Bill. Then very little was said about the overlapping clauses, but they pegged away at making a foundation if possible, to prove that the lists as they were prepared by the Manitoba authorities were unfair lists, unjust lists, incomplete lists, dead and decayed lists, and that no fair-play could be given to the party at present in power under these lists. And so, as man after man from the west arose, that point came to be prominent, until at last it overshadowed, as it should have overshadowed, every other provision in the Bill, in the estimation and desire of the government which introduced it. To-day, then, we are discussing, and have been for the last week almost entirely that one proposition, that vital proposition. Well, Sir, what is that proposition, as we read it in the Bill? Am I going too far in saying that it proposes to take the Manitoba and British Columbia lists, using them as a basis, whatever that may mean; and it proposes to go on, by its own revising officers and its own government and party machinery, to make a list; and it expressly states that the voters upon these lists, as finally prepared in that way, are the only persons who shall have a vote for Dominion elections in those provinces and territories.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Will the hon. gentleman excuse me? There must be some misunderstanding in connection with this thing. As I understand it, the Bill does not disturb in any way the revising barristers in those provinces, and under the provincial lists the revising barristers are county court judges.

Mr. FOSTER. Now if the hon. gentleman will take his seat and exercise his patience, I will deal with that in a little while—two things which it will not be difficult, I am sure, for my hon. friend to do.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am asking for information, that is all.

Mr. FOSTER. I know that my hon. friend wants information, and, more than that, if he only knew it, he needs it. That, then, is borne on the face of the Bill as it appears in section 1. What does that involve? You talk about the old Dominion Franchise Law of 1885; but the lists that were prepared under that law were not rush lists, or emergency lists. They were lists provided for times set in advance, leisurely undertaken, leisurely carried out, not in the heat and turmoil of an election contest. What does this precious Bill propose? It does not propose that the Dominion shall stretch out its greedy hands and seize the franchise of these two great provinces until after the writs are issued. What does this mean? It means that when a writ is issued, within probably twenty-eight days from that time the elections are held. It means that these lists, if they are to be prepared in any way by means of which reasonable revision shall be had, have a very small portion of time in which they can be brought to the point of revision. It means that as they must be printed and in the hands of the returning officers a reasonable time before polling day, the limit of twenty-eight days is considerably shortened. What have you? The writs are issued. Then this government has to communicate with their officers in every Dominion polling division in the unorganized territories of Quebec and Ontario, in Manitoba and in British Columbia. And these are distant places. What kind of communication can you have? Communication à la Mr. Richard Scott, by telegram and telegram only, without instructions of any kind? Is that the kind of communication which is to be had? It must be, if it is to be an effective, a full and explicit communication. .It takes time to communicate with your man whom you select in each constituency to do the enumerating or the registration. Then the duty is imposed on him, after he gets his instructions, of mastering the instructions and selecting sub-enumerators who are to work with him in that constituency. Is that a light duty? The Minister of Justice said that some of those constituencies were two hundred miles long by one hundred and fifty wide, and he sliced out a large portion of Ontario territory to show how big one of these constituencies in Manitoba was —the constituency of Selkirk. That means that the officer into whose hands you put this business, after he is communicated with, must select proper enumerators for a territory in that case two hundred miles long by one hundred and fifty miles wide. It means that he must make himself acquainted with the places where it is right there should be registration offices opened, and he must complete the whole complex system of getting enumerators through that territory and giving sufficient notice to the men who want to be put on the list. Can you do that in six, seven or ten days? Then you have to post your notices, if you are going to act with any semblance of fairness. You must not start a man off and tell nobody about it. When a Conservative asks where are you sending these men, you must not tell him that you are sending them away north without any definiteness. If you are going to act fairly at all, you are bound to give fair notice to the electorate —to every portion of it. That requires time. Then your enumerators have to fix a reasonable time within which to do the enumeration. Then they have to prepare their lists and send them to Ottawa and have them printed here and then these lists have to be sent back. That is a very large operation. My hon. friend proposes to do it within twenty-eight or twenty-six or twenty-four days. But there is another disadvantage. You are doing all that in the heat of a Dominion election, and you are saddling your candidates as well as your country with a large expense. You are saddling your country with large expense and your candidate with large expense and great exertions. Instead of devoting the twenty-eight days or less to the canvass of his constituency, he has to devote the best of that twenty-eight days to seeing that he is not ousted for want of proper enumeration. Is that fair to the candidate? It is most unfair to him; but it is mighty easy for the government and their officers to intimate to their own friends what is going to be done, as has been done over and over again, and give their own friends the mean, petty, miserable party advantage which such a course of conduct can give. But is it fair to the candidate? What was the great note that my right hon. friend and his colleagues struck in 1895 and from that down to 1898? It was the expense to the country. My right hon. friend was specially strong on that. Why have the country put to such large expense? There are the provincial lists, better than you can get yourselves, they are the common right of the province, and from a constitutional point of view the province should make the lists. There they are ready for you, you do not pay a cent for them, and the country is saved this large amount of money. And the amount of money spent by the Dominion in the preparation of the Dominion lists was paraded before the country as a strong argument against the Franchise Act of 1885. But that is what you have to do in this case. You have to send couriers to run at great expense and with great rapidity over every one of these constitutenciese in these two distant provinces, and the country has to pay the expense. There must be something pretty strong and pretty grave to make you do that. What else are you doing? You are making rush lists in an inopportune time for the people who wish to register. What is the most opportune time for the farmers and others to attend to registration in these western provinces? It is the months of May and June. That is the time when they are least occupied. But when will your elections come on? No one knows. They are apt to come on in October, and in that month it will be impossible to interest the farmers in the work of registration. In that month public interest will not be centred in that duty, and consequently the registration will be in the hands of partisans, and in their hands entirely. By having regular periods for preparing the lists you gain the still greater advantage of making that a settled thing. It gets to be a habit. To-day the greatest difficulty in political life in this country lies in the fact that a large proportion of the best people will not take sufficient interest in politics to have their names put on the lists. Do you remedy this by having rush lists? But your election may come on in January. A fine time you will have running over the constituencies in Manitoba in the month of January—running over a constituency two hundred miles long by one hundred and fifty miles wide and over the mountains of British Columbia in the months of January, February or March. What guarantee is there that your election will not come on in January or March? Under such circumstances a rush list put on in that way would be simply a farce. It will be an invitation to partisan discrimination and be the worst possible thing that could befall the electorate and the public life of this country. My right hon. friend asked is this not to be done in accordance with the law of the province. No, it is not. I say that it is absolutely impossible for it to be done in accordance with the law of the province. Will my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier deny it? Put your rush list on after the writs issue and show me how it can possibly be done in the unorganized districts of the province of Ontario according to the law of that province? Show me how it can possibly be done according to the laws of Manitoba in Manitoba ; show me how it can possibly be done according to the law of British Columbia in British Columbia.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) allow me a question ? How could we do it in sixteen days, as provided in the order issued in the 'Gazette' in Manitoba at the present time?

Mr. FOSTER. In Manitoba the proclamation is issued on the first of May and the revision is to be completed by the first of July—two months for the operation and in the best season of the year. And the time given for registration under present conditions is ample and the notice that is given for registration is from ten days up to thirty days.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the hon. gentleman will allow me——

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot afford——

Mr. CRAWFORD. The rest of us have to wait for you sometimes.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, very well.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the Beautiful Plains electoral division only sixteen days is allowed from the time the registration begins until the operation is finished.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. And how many days' notice prior to registration? At least ten days.

Mr. FOSTER. How much notice was given in Beautiful Plains?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am speaking of the time allowed in which to do the work.

Mr. FOSTER. How much notice was given. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) may answer——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have not the 'Gazette' before me.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman does not wish to answer. That is the kind of information my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is going upon—information given by a man, who, when he is asked a direct question, dare not answer it.

Mr. GALLIHER. Can you put on voters during the time of notice that is given ? You cannot.

Mr. FOSTER. You have to register within the sixteen days and then comes the revision and these are two different operations.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But the time for registration and revision has been fixed at sixteen days.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose I admit that in the case of Beautiful Plains. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Crawford) be honest—thoroughly honest—and say in how many cases that takes place out of the forty-one divisions ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In Gladstone, the adjoining constituency, it is seventeen days.

Mr. FOSTER. That is another one; go on. The hon. gentleman does not go on. We have an old saying that one swallow does not make a summer. If you were to take off the statute-book every law that worked a hardship in some special case, how much legislation would you have left? Why, it is simply absurd. The law is not to be condemned unless you can show a general tendency to limit unduly the time allowed.

Now, I come to my next point. And you can illustrate it in the light of the cases where this government has acted under the power given them in the Act of 1898. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) made the statement—made it once, made it twice, made it three times—that for remedying the overlapping of polling divisions in Manitoba there was no provision made in the Election Act. Had he read the Election Act he would have known that sections 24 and 25 give clear direction and absolute power with reference to remedying the overlapping of intersecting polling divisions. And my hon. friends opposite have been acting on that very section of the law in three cases that I will name: in the Brandon by-election of 1901, in the West Algoma and other elections in unorganized territory of 1904, and in the thin red line episode of Manitoba in 1904. Judge what they will do under this clause by what they have done under a clause which gave them even less power than this gives. Take the agent that you selected—I speak of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and the Secretary of State, men still in the cabinet and whose business it will be to carry out the provisions of this Bill—what did they do ? and what did their officer do, to whom three telegrams were sent embodying all the instructions he ever got ? That returning officer, on his oath, declared that he had not paid any attention to the law of Ontario at all. Why ? Because it would have been impossible for him to pay attention to that law and get his work done in the time given him to do it. Does my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) deny that? But take the election of 1901, a by-election in which Hon. Clifford Sifton was a candidate. In that year, let me tell my right hon. friend they had a registration board in the province of Manitoba, and it was a board of judges. Did he follow out the law of Manitoba? Did his Secretary of State and his Minister of Justice follow out the law? They actually passed by the registration board of Manitoba, a board of judges, and one Alexander Macleod, a partisan of the minister, was appointed sole revising board. And every registration clerk was a partisan of Mr. Sifton, and the whole registration and revision was done in defiance of the law of Manitoba, done by this government and by the various partisans of the minister who was running the election. If they do this under a less full legal authorization, what will they do when they get all they want in the shape of legislation?

Now, take the West Algoma case. An election was called in the unorganized districts. The writ was issued on the 25th of August. On the 27th of August your men had received telegram No. 1 from Hon. Richard W. Scott, Secretary of State, and on that day the enumerators started out to make up nine polls. And on the 2nd of September every one of those polls was made up and the enumerators were back and ready to have their lists printed. Did they follow out the law of Ontario? The law of Ontario was absolutely smashed into atoms by the mere telegram of the secretary of my right hon. friend's government. Does he deny it? Where was the notice that was given? Before the candidate of the Liberal Conservative party knew anything about the electors being registered what was shown him? Five hundred and forty-three names made out, absolutely settled with the exception of revision, shoved under his nose and this enumeration was done in less than six days. Did they tell him that there was going to be a registration at such and such and such a place? They absolutely concealed it, and concealed it from every Liberal-Conservative. The candidate of the government was the man who appointed the enumerators, was the man who appointed the revising judge and was the man who, as clerk of the peace, held the lists and had them in his possession after they were made. Are these fair methods? Is that honourable treatment? Does my right hon. friend wonder that the Liberal-Conservatives in this House, with those two examples before them of the work of my right hon. friend and his ministry, view with suspicion and with dread this legislation? Take the Manitoba case of 1904: The lists were made; they were printed; they were complete; they were sent out to the returning officers, the returning officer under the law was to look after and distribute the voters in the overlapping and intersected polling divisions. What took place, Sir? With every Liberal-Conservative that could possibly be kept in the dark, kept in the dark—for there is Mr. Leach's oath, and Mr. Leach is an eminently respectable and heroic figure, the right hon. gentleman declares it—I believe his oath, and on his oath he declared that he doctored nearly all the polling divisions in the province of Manitoba and that he took mighty good care that the other fellows did not know what was going on. I appeal to any man on that side whether that is playing the game fair? Now, is it? I have every hope that if the hon. member for British Columbia, who is smiling at me, were to get up and in his manly fashion say exactly what he thinks he would say that is not playing the game fairly. My right hon. friend was at a press dinner and by his side was the present Speaker. Mr. Speaker gave us a noble recitation and the refrain of every verse of that recitation was 'Play up, play up and play the game.' I would like to have Mr. Speaker's view, honestly and unreservedly given, as to whether this was playing the game. There was Duggan, your returning officer in Selkirk. Under the law the instruction to Duggan was to see that overlapping voters were properly parcelled out. He was not to see that any other polls were touched. What did Duggan do? He put the list into the hands of Leach, the Liberal organizer, had it doctored by him, got it back when it was ready, and dozens and scores of people had their names erased, yet the Minister of Justice euphonically named that transference of electors. When this was all done, Mr. Duggan took the risk and on his oath, which I believe, he declared he never gave it a glance and that there might have been on it a hundred men or five hundred disfranchised for all he knew. He took the revision made by the organizer of the Liberal party by which Conservatives were left off and disfranchised, and a member sits in this House to-night who would not sit here if it had not been for that. I ask my right hon. friend if that is playing the game fair?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I would like to know how the hon. member can prove anything of that kind. I am the hon. member who is sitting here.

Mr. FOSTER. You are?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, go ahead.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I would like to ask what foundation you have for that statement? Not a tittle.

Mr. FOSTER. The foundation I have—

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I characterize that as a false and misleading statement.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all very well, if my hon. friend will stop bobbing up I will give the foundation.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Give it then

Mr. FOSTER. The foundation I have for the statement I have just made is Duggan's own sworn statement.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Give the quotation from his evidence.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend may deny it till he is black in the face, but it will not change the record, for there is Duggan's sworn testimony.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. No such evidence is there.

Mr. FOSTER. His evidence has been read in this House by myself and others.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The hon. gentleman ought to be ashamed to make a statement like that in this House.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is not ashamed to quote from the records, the sworn testimony——

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Quote from the records.

Mr. FOSTER. —of even the men appointed by this government to carry out their behests.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Quote from the records or else take it back. I ask, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is not entitled to take that back when he makes a statement that is not true.

Mr. FOSTER. Shall I go a little further?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Cannot you explain that first?

Mr. FOSTER. I have explained everything that is necessary.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. You have not.

Mr. FOSTER. And if my hon. friend wants more explanation let him go and look for it in the records.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. That from an old parliamentarian——

Mr. FOSTER. That is an answer that is perfectly suited to my hon. friend.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. The Prime Minister this afternoon and up to this afternoon was absolutely unaware that Leach and the returning officers in Manitoba had carried on their operations of erasing and transferring from one polling list to another in a large number of the non-overlapping polling divisions in the province of Manitoba, and to-day he denied from his own knowledge, or lack of knowledge, that anything of that kind had been done at all. We go to the word and the testimony and it is plain, as I told him this afternoon, that that was done.

Mr. BURROWS. Is the hon. member aware that in the local election just previous to that, in 17 out of 40 counties, polling subdivisions were subdivided by the provincial authorities with no more shadow of law than there was in this case, just for the convenience of the public?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know that that contravenes my statement. These are the three examples that I give of the way the government has acted in cases where they have had this work of revision and registration to do under their own Act. Have we, or have we not, the right to believe that what they have done in the past they will do in the future if they get fuller legislation? The same ministers, the same men, greater power—have we any reason to believe that they wil not exercise it in the same way? The attempt has been made and will be made to put the Liberal-Conservative party in the wrong for opposing this legislation. It is an attempt which will fail because the people are honest and the people are intelligent. Is it the dictum of constitutional or parliamentary government that His Majesty's loyal opposition is bound to let pass in time every measure that the government may propose? It certainly is not. If the House of Commons holds the purse strings and can demand that grievances be remedied before it gives an appropriation we have the same right to consider a piece of ill conceived and tyrannical legislation, when proposed, as being a grievance and refuse supply until that grievance has been removed. There is no difference between the two. They are the exercise of the same generic power. The representatives on this side of the House are the representatives of a great party with a history, a party with a policy, a party with a future. I make there three assertions. We must do what is best for the party and we have sometimes to submit to a great deal of inconvenience and trouble which we would not personally submit to if it were not that the interests of the party and the cause we represent demand that sacrifice at our hands.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What about the country?

Mr. FOSTER. The country is served by one party or the other and it is a sample of the fine statesmanlike sense of my hon. friend that he separates one from the other. He can separate his own party interest from the good of the country if he pleases, but the fact is that with party government one party or the other is always in power and always administering theoretically and, generally, in the main, for the good of the country. Now, what happens? The Liberal-Conservative party was thrown out of office in 1896. It gathered itself up and commenced its march again to power. Is there any man in this House who denies that sooner or later the Liberal-Conservative party will get into power? It has a policy, it has a history, it has traditions, it has theories and these theories it proposes to put into practical working. It advertises these to the country, it makes an impression upon the country, it gathers strength and is gathering strength to-day. It has another duty to perform. It exposes the policy or lack of policy of the party in power. It uncovers their misdeeds, it shows their maladministration, it brings the people face to face with their corrupt acts and in these two ways the party out of power marches gradually up till it becomes the party in power. We have fought an open fight, we have fought a straight fight, we are gaining in the country and we are close upon the time when the country will place the Liberal-Conservative party in power. When we have gained by our work and our policy and when hon. gentlemen opposite have lost by their work and lack of policy and it is coming to be near the deciding time the Liberal-Conservative party refuses to prejudice the future of its party by allowing the government to seize the franchise and by that means to gain a support in the country which it would otherwise not have. That is the purpose of this clause as it has been placed in the Bill and as it has been advocated by hon. gentlemen behind the right hon. first minister. Therefore the country will see, all fair-minded men will see that there come times when the opposition is bound to be true to itself, to its party, to use its utmost endeavour and to make its greatest self-sacrifice in order to prevent an injustice being done. I say that a repetition of the acts perpetrated in 1901, of the West Algoma case and of the Manitoba case of 1904 would be simply the robbery of the Liberal-Conservative party as to its future if it allowed these acts to be again perpetrated or if it gave a chance for the perpetration of them in the broad constituencies of Manitoba and British Columbia. Therefore, we are bound to stand against it and we are bound to stand against that legislation until its provisions are ameliorated. It is our duty and we propose to do it.

The right hon. first minister said that in 1885 they did not stop supplies and use that as a weapon. They could not do it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Why ?

Mr. FOSTER. But I know a time when the right hon. gentleman did stop supplies and used it as a weapon.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. No ? In 1896 we brought Supply into this House, our period of existence legally terminated at a certain time and I can point to page after page of 'Hansard' of 1896, in the month of April, showing that they absolutely shut down on supplies for the payment of wages due, for the payment of contracts completed, for the payment of services which had been performed and for which the credit of the country had been pledged and for all services in the main which contemplated anything to be carried over during the succeeding year. I, myself, owing to the fact that the elections must be held and that it would be impossible for any government to get back and in harness before the first of July and that consequently the treasury would be absolutely bare, made the proposition that these gentlemen, who were then in opposition, grant two months' Supply in order that the country's interests might be conserved whichever party came into power and in order that the necessity for recourse to illegal and wrong methods by the issue of Governor General's warrants for unforeseen expenditures should not exist. I met with the absolute refusal of the right hon. gentleman. I met the same refusal of Sir Richard Cartwright and I heard man after man on this side of the House simply get up and say : This item shall not pass ; drop it—and it was dropped. Never used Supply as a weapon ? That was the one burnished weapon in the first session of 1896. It is fair to use it sometimes and there are periods when it is absolutely necessary to use it.

Now the right hon. gentleman made some statement in reference to this particular clause but I cannot understand what he meant. It was very hurriedly done as he himself will acknowledge. I have therefore treated the clause exactly as it stands here and as the Minister of Justice pleaded for it in the House. I would suppose that the Minister of Justice has the mind of the Prime Minister when he introduces and pleads for a Bill in this House. I have treated it as every member on that side of the House has argued and pleaded for it. I should imagine they did not commit themselves until they knew the mind of the government. I have argued it upon the language as it is in the Bill and on the arguments which have been presented by the other side of the House in favour of it, and I leave it at that.

I now come to another phase of the question. There has been something said with reference to the inconsistency of parties and as to the principles upon which each party worked for or against the Franchise Bill of 1898. These principles have not been fairly represented by the Minister of Justice and perhaps they were not quite fairly represented by the Prime Minister. It is true, as he says, that you cannot take any one sentence out of a speech on a subject and define from it absolutely the views of the speaker. That is often the case ; but sometimes it is not. But in view of the discussions upon the Franchise Act from 1885 to 1898, I venture to say that the Prime Minister had his opinions pretty well in hand in 1898 when he crystallized them time after time into expressed language. Am I not right in saying that my right hon. friend, in the position which he took from 1885 to 1898 and in the legislation which he introduced in 1898. based himself absolutely on two things: Provincial franchise and provincial lists. The very resolution the right hon. gentleman read to-day coupled the two, and in that resolution he tied himself to not only provincial franchise but provincial lists. Read his arguments in 1885 and in 1898, and over and over again he repeated that notwithstanding there may be grievances, notwithstanding there may be inequalities, notwithstanding there may be things that militate against us in the Dominion, yet taking it all in all his basic principle was the provincial franchise and the provincial lists as they are made by the provincial authorities. Does my right hon. friend object to that version of his views? I shall read some citations from his speeches on that point, not because they have not been read before, but because they are mightily pertinent to the very thing we are discussing at this moment. In 1898 my right hon. friend had a Bill introduced by Mr. Fitzpatrick, and Mr. Fitzpatrick stated the object of the Bill to be :

> The object of this Bill is to repeal the existing franchise and to substitute therefor the laws of the different provinces as to the qualification of voters, polling divisions and preparation of the lists.

That is the legal interpretation of the Bill given by the hon. gentleman who introduced it and who was fully able to state its meaning. There is no talk there about municipal systems, or municipal officers preparing the lists at the start. Now, every province had a different system at that time as it has now, but no matter about that, as Mr. Fitzpatrick said, the object of the Bill is to adopt the different provincial qualifications the provincial polling divisions and the provincial preparation of the lists. Sir Wilfrid Laurier put himself largely upon 'Hansard.' Sir John Thompson had introduced a franchise Act and Sir Wilfrid Laurier criticised it and said in 1898 :

> The blemish in the Act introduced by Sir John Thompson, and it is to me an absolute and irredeemable blemish, was, that while he adopted the provincial franchise, yet he retained the revising officer and the preparation of the list by the revising officer. I say this is the blemish of the Act. The wording of Sir John Thompson's Act was that the Governor in Council may from time to time appoint a proper officer to be called a revising officer, and so far as that is concerned that was a blemish.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier goes on to say :

> It was far more logical according to our view, having adopted the principle of provincial franchise, to also accept the voters' list so prepared under the authority of the provincial legislature. On this side of the House we have an absolute hostility to the revising officer and the lists prepared by the revising officer.

That is sufficiently plain. He goes on :

> I propose that we shall revert to that system. If we apply the principle of the provincial franchise why should we not take at the same time the means and methods by which the principle is applied.

Again he said :

> If hon. gentlemen opposite have a better way, let them offer it. But as between the Dominion and the provincial franchise as between a Dominion list and provincial lists there can be no hesitation because we have had for 19 years the provincial lists and the provincial franchise.

That is clear, is it not. Again he said:

> Local legislatures are likely to represent the people of the province.

That is exactly my argument this afternoon :

> They are elected to represent the same people we represent here and no other people. It is supposed, and it is not a very violent supposition to make, that they will exercise that power to the best interests of their constituents according to their judgment and light. It is supposed they will adopt the best franchise to suit the province.

And having done that the right hon. gentleman says that he adopts the provincial franchise. Again he said :

> It is possible that the control of the several provinces may pass into the hands of the Conservative party. Still, on a question of this kind, I am quite disposed, for my part, to accept the franchise prepared by the legislature, whether Liberal or Conservative. Would it not be far better as a matter simply of good government if the elections for this House should be conducted on the local lists and that the members of this parliament and the members of the legislature should represent the same body of people and should be elected by the same electors?

There cannot be anything more definite than that, but he goes further and he says:

> There can be no difference of opinion, at all events from this point, that even if we had the power to pass such an amendment, its adoption would create great confusion. You would have a set of lists prepared for the local elections and by this amendment you would introduce federal legislation to take effect at the same time which would take the lists away from the local jurisdiction and bring them under federal jurisdiction as to the method of their preparation.

That is as explicit as it is possible to make English words. The Nova Scotia and New Brunswick situation was brought up. My right hon. friend was ready for it then:

> I have no doubt that if the people of Nova Scotia find the present system not satisfactory, the system which has given satisfaction hitherto, if they thought that the sheriff being appointed by the executive authority did not give them the same security as in former times, when the sheriffs were appointed by the judicial authority, they will undoubtedly in the exercise of their rights as citizens of a free province introduce legislation in amendment to that legislation. But it may be said that their efforts would be unavailing, because the party suffering would not control the legislature. That may be so at the present time. But when any grievance exists in any legislature governed under British institutions, the minority is never slow to avail itself of any opportunity to offer amendments to remove it, although the minority may be sure that its efforts may not succeed, but be rejected. A minority will never fail to bring grievances to the attention of a legislature though they are satisfied their efforts will be frustrated, because the minority will do so simply for the purpose of affecting public opinion and affecting it in its own direction. I am forced, therefore, to the conclusion that as no efforts have been made either in the legislatures of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in the direction indicated by my hon. friend, the law has been found satisfactory to the people of these provinces.

Let me apply the same reasoning and say I am, therefore, forced to the conclusion that as no efforts have been made in the legislature of Manitoba or of British Columbia in the direction indicated by my right hon. friend, the law has been found satisfactory in the province of British Columbia and in the province of Manitoba. Will my right hon. friend take his own reasoning? It is absolute; it is conclusive. But he went still further through his Minister of Justice. What happened to that legislation? The Senate put on an amendment—but my hon. friend did not accept the amendment, and it was moved to be disagreed to, for the following reasons :

Because the amendments made by the hon. the Senate to the Bill excepting from its operation the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Manitoba, and providing for a special revision of the voters' list in those provinces for elections to this House, is inconsistent with and subversive of the general principle of this Bill.

I think I can leave the position of my right hon. friend and the two parties with this single remark. You say Liberal-Conservatives are inconsistent because they stand for a Dominion franchise and a Dominion list throughout the whole Dominion, when you propose to single out two special provinces, in which you have lost the majority you had, and apply to them the principle which you thundered and volleyed against from 1885 to 1898. I make this proposition to my right hon. friend : Let him bring in a Bill to establish a Dominion franchise, with lists made up by this government, and the boundaries of the constituencies marked out by this government, and put the whole thing into the hands of non-partisan and judicial authority, and you will find the party on this side at your back in support of it. But we are not chargeable with inconsistency when we stand for a uniform Dominion registration and voters' lists; we are not inconsistent when we oppose an effort to seize the thing that they hated in the general with reference to two provinces where they propose to get a party advantage by so doing. That is the position with reference to the two parties.

Now, I come to the last part of the subject that I propose to deal with to-night. My right hon. friend says that a position has arisen in Manitoba which imperatively demands interference. That is in justification of the position which he says he took, and incidentally he did, that something might happen at some time in some province which would make it necessary for the Dominion to assert its rights. No one denies that something might happen. And so he says: That condition has now arisen and I am not inconsistent when I come to this parliament and propose a remedy. It all depends on the basis of your demand, the reality of the grievance. I will take my right hon. friend's own definition—a condition has arisen in Manitoba which imperatively demands Dominion interference. He goes on to explain two elements. One is the overlapping of constituencies. We admitted that from the first; we admit it still ; it was a grave difficulty. The lawless and partisan manner in which it was attempted in 1904 to do the business was absolutely unauthorized by law and absolutely unauthorized by the fair rules of the game. But it was a difficulty which demanded the fullest and best legislation, and we hit upon the expedient, upon which both sides are agreed, and the overlapping difficulty therefore drops out of sight in this discussion. What is the other? The other is the vital point of the lists. The grievance was the overlapping, but in bringing about the remedy for that, the bright thought instilled itself into the mind of the Minister of Justice, and found its expression in section 1 of that Bill, that they would go a step further and actually seize the lists. They broke it to us gently and to the country gently. It was as though the Minister of Justice should go to a servant of his and say : 'Bob, I am going to give you a different kind of a hat ; it will be a good hat, and it will keep off the sun and the rain. I am going to change your style of coat, but I will give you a good, serviceable coat. The cut of your pants is a little out of date; I am going to give you new pants, and they will be good pants. The shoes you are now wearing are obsolete; I am going to give you a brand new pair of a new style.' And Bob says : 'I have no particular objection to that; I like my old clothes. but if you give me nice new clothes of an approved pattern I do not know that I can raise any objection.' A day or two after that the Minister of Justice comes along and says : 'Bob, there is just one little thing that I omitted ; I told you what I was going to do, but I forgot to tell you that I am also going to hang you and I have got the timber all ready for the gallows on which you are to be suspended.' So the Minister of Justice comes down to this House and says: We are going to give you new styles, new patterns, new clothes, and they will be good ones. He says nothing else when he introduces his Bill, but by and by he comes down and acknowledges that what he is really going to do is to hang the party, and that he is getting the timber ready to make the gallows.

Now, I take my right hon. friend's definition of what should constitute a crisis. I took down his own words: 'If fraud is committed or if hostile legislation is passed by the provincial legislatures, we must act; we would be recreant to our duty if we did not.' I propose to argue that out with my hon. friend. In the first place, if fraud is committed, against whom is it committed? Against the party in the province or against the party in the Dominion? Under the arrangement of the voters' list, as it is in Manitoba, it is impossible to commit a fraud against the one without committing it against the other. Well, is it possible that fraud has been committed against the Liberals of Manitoba and that up to this date, though that fraud has been going on for years, not one of their leaders or representatives has raised a voice against it in the provincial legislature? So that I think my right hon. friend has to prove something more than a fraud against the provincial electorate. He has to prove outside of that, he has to prove fraud against the Dominion electorate. That would be fraud against this House, which this House would have a perfect right to remedy. That would be hostile legislation which we would have a perfect right to resent. Well, I propose to look at this legislation and ascertain whether Manitoba, from the time the Conservatives came into power in 1899, has been guilty of putting legislation on the statute-book hostile to the party which supports my right hon. friend. And to do that well, you must contrast it with the legislation which Mr. Greenway had before Mr. Hugh John Macdonald came into power. You must trace the course of legislation. Now what was Mr. Greenway's franchise and list preparation? In his time and under his regime, they were Liberal partisans who were the registration clerks and not officers of municipalities. Does my right hon. friend agree with that? In Mr. Greenway's time the legislation on the statute-book provided that the revising barristers should be partisans and not judges, and they all were partisans, chiefly lawyers, mostly sent out from the city of Winnipeg. Am I right in that or not? Under Mr. Greenway, the registration clerks actually prepared the lists. That is they had wider powers by far than the registration clerks have under the present legislation. Is that denied? And after they had done their work, it went for revision to a partisan appointee of the Greenway government and not to a judge.

Mr. BURROWS. The difference between the registration clerk then and now is this. Under the Roblin Act, the registration clerk to-day takes the names of the applicants and writes them in the register. Unless there is an application to strike the names off, they remain there, and the judge has nothing to do with it. They are registered as voters once the clerk writes them on.

Mr. BERGERON. How was it before?

Mr. BURROWS. Just the same, only he put them on the list and the list was published and advertised a month so that any one could apply to have the name struck off. But now the lists are not published at all, and no one ever sees the names from the time of revision.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Not correct.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has tried to enlighten the House and instead has led us into an absolute fog of untruth. What he says is not correct.

Mr. BURROWS. In what way? It is absolutely correct.

Mr. FOSTER. I am coming to that. Mr. Greenway's legislation, which I have described, was acted on in the elections of 1892, 1896 and 1899. Then Mr. Hugh John Macdonald came into power, and he immediately made a change in the registration and the list preparation law. Was that change hostile to the Liberal party? What was it? It put the lists absolutely into the hands of a registration board from beginning to end. The registration board consisted of the judges of Manitoba and appointed its own revising officers and registration clerks as well. I ask my right hon. friend if that is correct or not? Comparing that With Mr. Greenway's law, was it hostile legislation?

Mr. BURROWS. That portion of the Act is repealed.

Mr. FOSTER. Let my hon. friend not be in such a hurry. I know that he was born in a hurry, and since these timber limits and timber leases are concerned, he is not disposed to wait. He will get all he wants if he is just patient as I go through with this question. What I ask now is was there any indication of hostile legislation in that of Mr. Hugh John Macdonald, passed in 1899 or 1900, comparing it with the legislation which Mr. Greenway had in force in that province before? You have an absolutely unpartisan board. You have your board of judges appointing your registration clerks. You have your board of judges appointing also the revising barristers. It appointed nineteen Conservatives and sixteen Liberals, and the other five constituencies went to the judges themselves. They themselves were the revising barristers. Could anything be more unpartisan or fairer than that board and that registration? Under such a board, the lists were absolutely made anew. No man got on the list under that board unless he came up and made his application anew. Am I not right in that? Consequently, on that revision, done in that unpartisan manner, you had an absolutely new and an absolutely clean list, so far as you can ensure it, by a non-partisan board of judges acting on their own responsibility throughout.

Mr. BURROWS. That law has been dead four years.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes. That is not an answer to my question. Does that, I ask, show hostile legislation as compared with the previous legislation?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. How long did it last?

Mr. FOSTER. There is another impatient man. There is a class that is always impatient. A strong man waits and bides his time and takes what the gods give him and when they give it to him. Why cannot my hon. friend wait? Now changes were made in that legislation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. One thing, however, was not changed. Under the succeeding legislation, under to-day's legislation, the judges are the revising board and they revise the lists themselves or the revising barristers that they themselves appoint. Is that true or is it not?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I would correct my hon. friend to this extent, that in practice, the last two years, the judges do not appoint any revising barristers. They do all the work themselves.

Mr. FOSTER. That is still better. I have waited for an answer and have got no denial. Changes were made in that legislation, but one thing remains to this day and that is that the revising board is made up of judges and that the judges do the whole of the revising, either by themselves or by the revising barristers they appoint, and for the last two years they have done the whole business absolutely themselves. Is that hostile legislation? Will my right hon. friend rise in his place and say that frauds under such revising and such a board of revisers were practised on the voters in Manitoba? He dare not do it; that would be to impugn the judges of his own appointment, the judges of the land. But there may be disabilities, there may be cases of hardship. Some men may not get on the list, some men may not get before the revising barrister—all this may be true. It is true in Ontario or any other province; it is true wherever you have an election law. There must be due diligence on the part of the elector, or he will be left off. But, says the Prime Minister, the men at Lac du Bonnet did not get in, and the revising officer, going there under the circumstances, put himself out of court. But was there any disability that prevented the electors of Lac du Bonnet from coming to that registration's clerks office in proper time and putting in their applications? If they did not exercise due diligence, that is their fault. The only possible grievance can be that the local government does not provide a sufficient number of registration booths to properly and reasonably provide for the necessities of the counties. One gentleman declares that a man has had to walk a hundred miles to get his name before the registration clerk. Are you going to condemn the law because that happens? In a county of great distances and small population, one, or two, or three, or a dozen, may be at some extreme point of the constituency, and it may be impossible to have a registration booth for them. But is that to govern the whole matter? Because an isolated case of this kind happens are you going to declare that fraud is committed and that there is hostile legislation? Let us come to the present legislation as it stands, what is it? There is a registrar for each polling subdivision or nearly so. The registration is not by registration districts to-day in Manitoba, but by polling divisions, and from six to twenty registration booths are open in every local constituency. And it is said, on fair authority I think, that the present distribution and number of registration polling booths are sufficient for the wants of these constituencies. But, even so, it may happen that some men may have to travel very many miles in order to get their names on the register. Is it hostile legislation that you have to register when you have a registrar for each polling subdivision, or nearly so, and that you have from six to twenty polling booths in each local division and that you have that distribution in every part of the province? You may say that, in some cases, it is inadequate. But that is not evidence of hostility or fraud. Now, the registration clerks are local men. Is my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in favour of that principle? Does he not think it better that local men should be the registration clerks than that strangers should hold those positions? We may have a difference of opinion on that point, but there is no hostility or fraud involved in a condition of that kind. These registration clerks sit for the time named in the proclamation. These times are sufficient in the main, and every one of these registration clerks is bound by the law under penalty to extend the time of the sitting provided there are applicants in the place to have their name put upon the registration list. Now, is that an evidence of hostility? The duties of these registration clerks are not judicial in any sense, they are absolutely and simply clerical duties. The clerk must receive every application which comes. The applicant comes and answers the interrogatories, signs a paper and swears to it before the clerk, and the clerk has to receive it and enter it ; he has no power to reject it. If a man be absent through illness or necessary cause, a friend may make application for him, and the application must be received by the registration clerk. Is that not a fair provision ? The applicant has to swear before the clerk himself to these full interrogatories. Moreover, both political parties are represented at that booth. Each party has its representative there. The candidates past and prospective are allowed, and twelve other people, the limitation, I suppose, being designed to keep these booths from being overcrowded. But all this means that the proceedings are as open as the day—all are conducted in the open light and before witnesses for both parties. Nothing could be fairer. The applications must be received. And the hours of sittings for this registration are from nine to ten a.m. and from one to six. In cities they open at eight o'clock for the labouring men and if at the end of the hours there be persons ready to make their applications, the registration clerk has to take their declarations. The lists are all posted up on the outside of the registration booth by the clerk. They are sent to the clerk of the executive, and from there they go to the revising barrister. There are heavy penalties upon the registration clerks for any non-performance or mal-performance of their duties. Could you have a fairer, more open, more reasonable method of carrying on the registration in order to get these people's names into the hands of the revising judges? I ask the right hon. Prime Minister if this is sufficient for a crisis. I ask him if he can say that this is hostile legislation so that we are called upon to act and that we should be recreant to our duty if we did not deal with the situation?

But my right hon. friend says, if fraud is committed. If fraud is committed against whom ? If fraud is committed intentionally as it must be, where is the right hon. gentleman's basis for an attack upon the system, for the imperatively demanded action of this House ? I assume because fraud is committed in the province of Manitoba. Is there any evidence of it? Is there sufficient evidence of it, is it general or is there now and then a single case ? If the fraud is committed it is committed on your provincial voter. Your provincial voter is within walking distance of Winnipeg, in Winnipeg the legislature sits and his representatives are there. Can we believe that if fraud is committed in Manitoba to any extent at all upon the provincial Liberal voters, his grievance has not yet been aired and that he has not made it known throughout the length and breadth of Manitoba and in the political and legislative home of that province ? I think that is conclusive ; it is conclusive in the reasoning of my right hon. friend as applied to 1898. Down in Nova Scotia the sheriff revises the list and I have heard reputable people say that appeals have been refused by the sheriff in Nova Scotia. I have heard and read allegations that hundreds have been refused revision by the sheriff and have consequently been deprived of their votes. Let the right hon. gentleman use his argument of the natural right there. It is a natural right that a man should have his ballot. It has been denied to him in Nova Scotia. Then this government has a right to interfere and see that the legislation in Nova Scotia is changed. Does my right hon. friend propose to do that ? Some one has told me that for every case of lack of proper action on the part of the revising authority that you can bring in Manitoba he can bring ten to meet it in Nova Scotia and reputable men make statements of that kind. Does my right hon. friend think that is sufficient ground for interference and seizing the franchise ? Why not advance the argument of natural right there ? My right hon. friend knows that we are governed by laws which in the main work out justly but under which injustice and wrong, as far as natural right is concerned, may happen to many individuals in the commonwealth under the action of those laws.

We now come to the question of revision. Does my right hon. friend find that fraud is committed in the revision ? The revision is by the judges. The last two years judges and judges alone have done it. Judges are dispensers of justice, and a man when he goes upon the bench and is engaged in looking after the interests of justice and of the people forgets, I think in ninty-nine cases out of one hundred, all partisanship and is animated by the desire to do right. Show me an instance where a charge has been brought of breach of faith or fraud committed by one of the revising judges in Manitoba. If fraud is necessary as a foundation for such action bring the evidence of it, bring the proof of it. Where is the evidence ? Where is the proof ? In the press of Manitoba, in the legislature of Manitoba, in the action of the Liberal party in Manitoba ? Not a reasonable basis . It is here, by indiscriminate statement in a way, but where is the evidence of fraud ? My right hon. friend has absolutely no answer. All appeals are disposed of. My right hon. friend hangs his case upon one single occurrence that is possible, namely, that the judge may be revising, the hour may be up and he has no right to extend the hour That is the only point on which my right hon. friend can hang his case with reference to the judges. Will he cite an instance where that has been done ? He brought forward one instance that has been explained but will he consider it fair to condemn the whole system, root out the whole legislation, replace it by something new, because in an individual instance an injustice has been committed, and committed unwittingly because no judge would commit it of malice aforethought. But, Sir, we contend that the judges as the revising board have the absolute authority to extend the time and they can do it under their powers. It is a fair contention and we ask for the proof that these judges have abused their authority as revising officers and have committed fraud upon electors.

I have made my plea with reference to Manitoba ; let me say a word with reference to British Columbia. We have heard very little from British Columbia. So little has been said about it that I imagine my hon. friends opposite have no case from British Columbia. The Minister of Justice said there was little grievance from British Columbia. The member who spoke yesterday from British Columbia (Mr. D. Ross) said they had a way of playing fair there, that they were not dishonest and that as a rule every one thought the game was played fairly and honestly. He told how the lists were made and surely there is publicity enough. Your registrar, who is generally a mining recorder, receives the applications. Every application must be by swearing to and signing of a blank form. The revisions are made twice a year which surely is often enough and two months are given between the time for the applications to come in and the revision. The revisions are made, in the first instance, by the registrars. A notice containing every name has to be posted on the outside of the registrar's office, on the court house, published in the 'Gazette' and in three conspicuous places in the electoral division, so that people may know when the revision goes on and then, after the revision takes place, there is an appeal to the county court judge and from the county court judge there is an appeal to the Supreme Court bench. Surely as a general scheme of registration and revision that is an open, honourable, reasonable scheme. But my hon. friend says the people take no interest in the registration. That is more the fault of the people surely than the fault of the system which is provided for registration.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I did not say that the people take no interest.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will read the speech he will see that he conveyed the impression—he conveyed it to me at least—that the people took little interest in the registration. However, if he says he did not, it is a matter which does not amount to much.

What are the circumstances of fraud or hostile legislation in the province of British Columbia which make it necessary for this House to take over the franchise of British Columbia and Manitoba in regard to voters for the Dominion elections ? In what have they become recreant to their duty ? Fraud ? Where is the evidence of it ? Hostile legislation as to the lists ? Where is the evidence of hostile legislation ? Where is the necessity of the action founded upon fraud and upon hostile legislation in the provincial legislature ? Can it be pointed out now in the province of British Columbia ? Not so much as it can be even in the province of Manitoba ; absolutely free from either of these so far as we have any evidence presented. And yet I doubt not that that there are many cases in that province of men not having a vote. They wake up on election day to find that they are not on the list. It happens everywhere. To-day, in the city of Toronto, there are 45,000 names of male adults that are not upon the regular lists and the process of registration is now under way which will end in as many of these as wish, if they have the qualification, being placed upon the voters' list.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Within what time ?

Mr. FOSTER. Commencing, I think, next Monday and going on until the Saturday following with two days intermission.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Five days?

Mr. FOSTER. Four days. The booths are not scattered everywhere, but they are fairly numerous, there are notices given in the newspapers and otherwise and the two parties are actively, I suppose, at work trying to get the voters registered. But the work of the municipal officers with reference to these people does not amount to anything. That vast number of people in the city of Toronto are to-day looking to the manhood registration, as it is called, in order that they may get upon the list and be able to vote. In every city in Ontario of over 9,000 people there will be an opportunity to register under these conditions during the next two weeks.

Mr. LENNOX. Four days are given.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, four days are given and there is a chance for an appeal to the court of revision. I have made these remarks directly to the subject in hand and the consequences may be a little more momentous and more important than the right hon. First Minister thinks of attempting to seize in this way the franchise for Dominion purposes and for the partisans of the government in two provinces and make an invidious distinction which the history and the work of these two provinces in the matter of the preparation of their lists give no warrant for at all. If I lived in Manitoba and were singled out for this invidious action on no better basis than that which has been given, I would feel like fighting against that invidious distinction I would feel like fighting for fair treatment, for being placed on the same basis as my brother from Nova Scotia and my brother from Prince Edward Island and my brother from Ontario. Why should you single out these two young provinces for this invidious legislation? It is demeaning, it is humiliating, it is insulting and I tell the right hon. First Minister, for he may not know it, that he has raised up a storm against himself and his party in these two provinces that it will take many many years to allay, and I mistake the temper of the people of these provinces if they do not make their dissatisfaction known when the proper time comes.

Mr. T. A. BURROWS (Dauphin). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of attention to the very able speech delivered by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). But I was not able to find out from him whether he was in favour of accepting the very fair offer made by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) or whether he was going to vote against his suggestion. He went on to discuss the Bill which is before the House, paying no attention whatever to the explanation made by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) in his speech, and, in so far as I could make out, he paid no attention whatever to the suggestion which my right hon. friend made this afternoon to the effect that if the opposition felt there was any intention on the part of the government to have a partisan voters' list in the province of Manitoba they were prepared to suggest that the whole matter be placed in the hands of the judges so as to prevent one side or the other from getting any particular advantage. To this suggestion I do not see how anybody could object.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the government do the same for the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. BURROWS. I am not speaking for the province of Nova Scotia. I come from the west.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But I am speaking about it.

Mr. BURROWS. My hon. friend ought to know more about Nova Scotia than I do.

Mr. TALBOT. I thought the hon. gentleman had forgotten about it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know something about it.

Mr. BURROWS. The Bill now before the House provides in its first clause for two things so far as the province of Manitoba is concerned, viz.: A complete and full revision of the Manitoba provincial lists and their proper application to Dominion constituencies, thus removing the difficulties the returning officers had to meet in 1904, when it was necessary for them to use the thin red line in readjusting polls where local constituencies overlapped Dominion constituency boundaries.

The opposition say we are singling out Manitoba for special treatment and treating that province differently from the others in regard to the voters' lists and that our action in this regard is exceptional and indefensible.

The explanation and justification are found in the character of the lists themselves. The Ontario lists are compiled by municipal councils and are, in point of fact, complete and impartial, while the Manitoba lists are incomplete, defective and partisan. The law governing the compiling of lists in Ontario is permanent, stable and well understood, while the Manitoba election law, which formerly placed in the judges' hands the power to make and revise voters' lists, was repealed in 1904, and full power was placed in the hands of the executive to appoint partisan registration clerks and control the date, time and place of making and revising the lists. It therefore can be called partisan. For instance, in 1903, when the law was administered by the judges, 430 registration clerks sat for six days each taking applications, or an average of eleven registration booths, held for six days each in every local constituency to put names on the list, while in 1905, under government direction, there was only one place in each local county allowed where a registration clerk sat for only one day to take applications, followed by a one day revision in each county.

There was only one registration clerk appointed for each constituency; that is, 40 registration clerks for the whole province of Manitoba, and they sat on one day in each constituency, or 40 days in 1905 to take the applications for the whole province of Manitoba as against 2,000 in 1903. The hon. member for Marquette stated that the chief aim of the Bill was to place the preparation of the lists in the hands of partisans. In justice to the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) I would call attention to the remarks he made at page 8102 of 'Hansard' where the Minister of Justice said in introducing the Bill that he did not intend to place the making of these lists in the hands of partisans.

We have lists that ought to be submitted to the work of a revising officer, a county judge or a barrister according to the Manitoba system, with time given him within which he can effectively do that work of revision, within which he can effectively purge the lists of dead men and of absentees.

Again the Minister of Justice said:

We prefer to adhere to the provincial lists, and accordingly, in the Bill I am submitting, the lists as established in the provinces, shall be taken in the preparation of the lists for Dominion purposes, and to them shall be added the names of any persons qualified to vote which are not on them and from them shall be struck the names of all those who are not qualified. The lists so prepared, subject to the revision of a county court judge, shall be allotted and distributed to the polling divisions, to be used in the Dominion elections. That is in brief the outline of this clause.

It will be seen that the Minister of Justice was careful to point out that the government intended to adopt the laws of Manitoba with regard to the making of the lists and that the lists were going to be revised by the county judge. I have noticed that all through the debate, hon. gentlemen opposite referred to clause 1 of the Bill as being designed to take the power of making the list out of the hands of the judges and to place it in the hands of partisans. That is an unfair presentation of the case, because we know that the Minister of Justice provided that exactly the same machinery that is adopted by the province of Manitoba will be adopted by the Dominion government in making the lists.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the hon. gentleman point to the clause of the Bill which provides for that.

Mr. BURROWS. Clause 1 which says :

In the preparation of such lists the provisions of the laws of the province regulating the preparation and manner of revising and bringing into force the provincial voters' lists in the like cases shall as far as possible be observed and followed and no person whose name is not included in the voters' lists so prepared and revised shall be entitled to vote.

Mr. FOSTER. Exactly ; 'as far as possible.'

Mr. BURROWS. The Minister of Justice stated in his speech explicitly what line would be followed in that regard and nobody could arrive at any other conclusion from the remarks of the hon. minister, but that he intended to follow absolutely—not as far as possible, but absolutely the law as it was in the province of Manitoba.

Mr. FOSTER. May be my hon. friend will explain to the House how it is possible in the time intervening between the issue of the writ and the polling, to carry out absolutely, as he says, the Manitoba law.

Mr. BURROWS. That might be answered by my stating that at present in Manitoba they do not take any more time to make their lists than the time which would ensue between the issuing of the writ and the election. However, so far as that is concerned, I would say that the time given is pretty short in some parts of Canada and I have no doubt that when this Bill is considered in committee that point will be gone into and that the government will meet any suggestion which will result in giving us a working basis which will be satisfactory to both sides.

Mr. FOSTER. All we can do is to take the Bill as we have it before us.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That would not satisfy you.

Mr. BURROWS. If it is clearly shown that the time given in the court of revision is too short I have no doubt that a remedy will be provided in the Bill. I know cases in Manitoba where the two opposing candidates agreed among themselves that in order not to subject their friends to the trouble and inconvenience of coming to court they would go to the revising officer and put in a certain number of names on each side. They did go to the revising officer but of course he expressed his regret that he could not agree to any such proposition. However, that goes to show that in a country of such distances it is necessary to resort to some means to get voters on the lists because of the great inconvenience that may be caused by those wishing to register travelling very many miles to the registration booth. Another great objection we have to the Manitoba law is the fact that it is unstable and unreliable. Its administration is erratic, unreliable, and defective. There has been no permanency and the conditions regarding the preparation of the lists have been changed from year to year to suit the whim of the Manitoba government. In 1905 there were seven Dominion election protests pending and the preparation of the lists that year was a farce. They only had one day in each county on which they received applications and only one day in each county when the court of revision sat. and if any of those gentlemen whose elections were protested had had to run a by-election the election would have taken place on these very imperfect lists. I have a clipping here from a prominent western newspaper which gives a brief sketch of the working out of the Manitoba election law. It says :

In 1905 there was only one registration clerk for each constituency, and the registration lasted for only one day at one place. In Mountain constituency an elector, not on the list, had to journey to Baldur to protect his franchise. In the city of Winnipeg, with thousands to register, there were only three booths open for the one day only.

In 1906, with an election pending, there was a registration clerk for each polling division; but the booths were kept open, not for six days, but for two only.

In Winnipeg, in February, 1907, when there was a special registration, prior to the elections, the booths were open for three days only.

In 1907 the government reverted to the device of the perambulating registration clerk, one for each constituency, who stopped here and there for an hour or so.

It will therefore be seen that there is nothing stable in the manner of making up the lists in the province of Manitoba. Some years you may have a good revision and some years a very imperfect revision. As a matter of fact since the present law has come into operation there has only been two years in which sufficient time was given for registration and revision and these were the years 1903 and 1906, immediately preceding a local election, when the local government found it necessary to make pretty good lists for themselves. But at any time between these local elections the revising of the lists is merely a matter of form. The Manitoba government held no annual revisions until the year 1904, when they decided to revise the lists annually in order that they might be able to control the preparation of the lists on which Dominion elections would be held, and that action on the part of the Manitoba government was a piece of political sharp practice. They do not require to incur the expense of revising the lists annually for provincial purposes, but they deemed it necessary to do so in order that they might have these lists used in Manitoba elections. In Manitoba the revision and preparation of the lists is not in the hands of judges as has been represented by our hon. friends opposite, for the government has power to decide from time to time what kind of a revision they will have and whether it will be a complete revision or a partial revision. I submit that the policy of placing in the hands of five men who form the executive of any provincial government the absolute power of saying from time to time what kind of voters' lists we are going to have for the election of members to this House of Commons is a policy which this Parliament should not submit to. But yet, if we retain the lists as they are in Manitoba that is just the policy we would be following. The hon. leader of the opposition and other gentlemen opposite have challenged us to show where any person was left off the list of electors by any official of the Manitoba government, or where any complaints had been made against the lists that had been prepared. My hon. friend from Selkirk gave last night a good many instances of this kind, but I might refer in addition to the incident at Balsam Bay where 28 voters applied to the registration clerk to put their names on the list, but they could not get the registration clerk to receive their applications and they were disfranchised. The registration clerk, in making the return, wrote to his friend, who was the candidate for the constituency, and said: 'Nobody had applied but a few Grits, and you bet I did not put them on.' There was a case where some electors were disfranchised. In the city of Winnipeg a large number of electors could not get on the list in 1904, in West Winnipeg, in North Winnipeg and in South Winnipeg, there were about a hundred who could not get on the list. Some 28 were in the registration booth at the time it was closed. I have here an affidavit, made by George John Lovell of the city of Winnipeg, which reads as follows:

Dominion of Canada—Province of Manitoba.

In the matter of the preparation and revision of voters' list for Winnipeg Centre, prior to the last provincial election in 1903.

I, George John Lovell, of the city of Winnipeg, province of Manitoba, agent, do solemnly declare:

1. That I was organizer for the Liberal party for Winnipeg Centre prior to and during the compilation and revision of the list for Winnipeg Centre in May and June, 1903, and as such took great interest in and closely followed all matters pertaining to the said compilation and revision.

2. That at several of the registration booths, owing to the large number of persons registering, several persons qualified to register as electors were unable to apply for registration during the week set apart for registration (viz.: May 25 to 30 inclusive) although several of the aforesaid persons presented themselves on various occasions at the registration booths for the purpose of so registering.

3. That in particular at the booth in registration division No. 6 in the neighbourhood of 100 persons were unable to apply to be registered as voters during the said week on account of the large number of persons in the booth waiting to apply at the time when the said 100 persons severally appeared.

4. That I was present at the court of revision for Winnipeg Centre held on the 15th day of June, 1903, and at some time during the day over 160 persons favourable to the Liberal party and fully qualified to be registered as voters in the electoral division of Winnipeg Centre appeared in the court of revision to be registered as voters but on account of the dilatory manner in which the court of revision was conducted by the revising officer, and on account of the unnecessary delay caused by the counsel appearing for the Conservative party, and permitted by the revising officer, only some 45, or at the most, 50 of the aforesaid 160 were registered when the court of revision was closed at 5 p.m.

5. That at the hour of 5 o'clock the revising officer closed the court of revision notwithstanding the fact that there were over 30 persons then present in the court room for the purpose of applying to be registered, 23 names of whom are as follows:

I will not read the names, as it would take too much time.

6. That, in accordance with what was apparently a well-prepared scheme on behalf of the Conservative party, over 87 appeals were made against voters of which not more than 20 at the very outside could be sustained, such being entered for the sole purpose of taking up the time of the court of revision so that Liberal electors appearing at the court of revision for the purpose of being registered would not have an opportunity to register. My reason for believing that this was premeditated is the fact that a large majority of the parties appealed against were old and well-known residents of the city of Winnipeg, well known to be Liberals and fully qualified to register to whom there could be no possible exception taken.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

GEORGE JOHN LOVELL.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the date of that ?

Mr. BURROWS. June 16, 1903.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Who was the revising barrister ?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Barnett.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Who appointed him ?

Mr. BURROWS. He was appointed by the registration board.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. By the judges ?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes, by the judges.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The hon. member would not say that such a thing could occur again., since the Act has been amended.

Mr. BURROWS. I think the same could occur again.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Oh, no ; the hours for registration have been increased.

Mr. BURROWS. The great fault we have to find with this election law is that there is not enough time given to register and not enough time for the court of revision. I read that declaration for the purpose of showing that in the city of Winnipeg, right in the shadow of the parliament buildings, with the knowledge of the government, people tried for a whole week to get on the list, and hundreds were turned away. At that time there was a good deal of agitation on this question, and Mr. Lovell, acting on behalf of some electors, applied to the court for a mandamus to compel the revising officer to receive the applications of those present when the court closed. The revising officer agreed to appear, and the case was set down for the following day. The case was tried. Able counsel appeared on both sides. Mr. John S. Ewart appeared for the appellant, and Mr. Andrews, I think, for the revising officer. The judge decided that the revising officer had power to take the names of those who were in the booth at the time. In the meantime, however, the revising officer played a trick, by which he returned his papers to the registration board, and as he was not an officer any longer, the judge could not issue the mandamus, and for that reason it was not issued. There is a case in point where a large number of electors in the city of Winnipeg were deprived of their franchise because of the very short time given for revision. That is the greatest complaint we have against this Franchise Act.

I might cite another case, because it seems to me that every hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who speaks on this subject tries to create the impression that we have no grievance or cause for complaint. We have no great complaint to makes so far as the Election Act is concerned. There are many people who believe that the principle that a man should have to apply personally for registration is a good one. I do not believe it myself, because it I think entails too great a hardship on many electors. But I am not discussing the question whether it is wise to have a personal registration or not. What I am trying to show is that the administration of the Act does not give satisfaction to the people of the west, but that the way in which the Act is carried out is entirely unsatisfactory. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) during the delivery of his speech, was very brave. He made this statement :

> I was surprised on a recent visit to my province to find no Liberals justifying the Bill, while every Conservative condemns it. The fair-minded Liberals will not stand for it.

Then, on page 8288 of 'Hansard' he said :

> I am afraid the Prime Minister is not being well informed by his supporters in this matter. Let him apply to the Hon. Chas. Mickle, leader of the opposition in the local House, who is on record as having stated that our present lists in Manitoba are the cleanest we ever had in the province.

I want to say that Mr. Mickle never made any such statement. I happened to have the honour of a seat in the Manitoba legislature at the time this Act was passed, and what Mr. Mickle said was this, that he had no objection to the principle of the Act so far as it worked out in his constituency. I wired Mr. Mickle on the evening that my hon. friend made that statement, and I got this reply from him :

> Birtle, Manitoba, May 8, 1908.
> T. A. Burrows, M.P., Ottawa.
> In 1904, when not leader of opposition, referring to 1903 election, stated preparation of list cumbersome, expensive and needlessly inconvenient, but result so far as I could judge from my own constituency was a good and complete list owing to being first election under new Act, close attention paid to preparation changes in Act since have produced objectionable features.
> C. J. MICKLE.

At the same time he telegraphed to another hon. member of this House the following :

> The Act better in 1903. New amendments have largely destroyed best features. Grievous complaints of unfair administration by government in many parts.

That is the latest expression of Mr. Mickle's opinion on that question. I have in my hand a clipping which shows what Mr. Mickle said in the House when that Bill was introduced. I think my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Jackson) read it last night. I do not intend to read it all again. It was in the main a criticism of the amendment to the Act of the year 1904. He said that the government were going back on their principles altogether in amending the Act. They had first appointed a registration board. By the amendment of 1904 they went back on that altogether, and took into their own hands the power to appoint registration clerks, to which he objected. The only thing he said with regard to that Act of 1903 is quoted here, and it is from this my hon. friend took his inspirations :

Another advantage claimed for the present Act of 1903 was that the making of the lists was taken out of the hands of partisan officials and put into the hands of judges. This provision also was wiped out by the proposed legislation. It was reasonable and fairly satisfactory in practice under the present Act——

That is the Act of 1903.

But now it was done away with. Hence forth the registration clerks are to be appointed by the government. True, there was still a board of registration but it was not for the receiving of names but for the appointment of revising officers. If the principle adopted under the present Act had the merits claimed, what reason was there for the changes now sought to be introduced?

You will see that at the very time when the government of Manitoba introduced the amendments which now form the Election Act of Manitoba, Mr. Mickle, as leader of the opposition in that province, objected and pointed out that they had gone back on the principles of the Act of 1903 and had taken the power to appoint partisan registration clerks.

Another case which has been cited before, a very glaring case,—a case which shows we had grievances under this Act—was the deliberate disfranchisement of thirty-eight electors at Lac du Bonnet. In this case the revising officer, Mr. Heap, in order to enable the people who were living at Lac du Bonnet to be placed on the list, and at the request of representatives from that district, adjourned his court and agreed to go to the lake and take the applications of the residents there. The train goes to Lac du Bonnet once a week, remains about two hours and returns. The clerk sent word that he would be there on a certain train, the residents met him, and he took all their applications. They were bona fide electors. Nobody raised the claim that they were not entitled to vote. But as soon as the government found out that he had adjourned his court, they notified him that his action was illegal ; and notwithstanding the fact that the registration board certified to the list, when the election took place the sheets containing these names were torn off and these men were disfranchised.

The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), at the beginning of his address, launched out in very vigorous terms against my hon. friend the member for Winnipeg (Mr Bole) as did other hon. gentlemen on that side, particularly the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche). Apparently, my hon. friend from Winnipeg displeased these gentlemen by reading in this House certain affidavits which went to prove that certain fraudulent transactions had taken place in Winnipeg, whereby 492 names of men who were not entitled to vote were put on the voters' list. Well, since that time other affidavits have been obtained in Winnipeg, and I propose to read an affidavit which appeared in the 'Free Press,' the original of which can be got if necessary :

To wit: I, John Hyzy, of 627 Lorette avenue, in the city of Winnipeg, do solemnly declare I am at the present time vice-president of the Polish Conservative Club. I have seen in the 'Free Press' of this morning certain affidavits from Theodore Rudneski and others as to the way in which naturalization papers were made out just previous to the last election, in March, 1907. I have also seen in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of this evening affidavits denying such charges, and, with a full knowledge of the facts and the seriousness of such charges, I do say and solemnly declare:

1. During the month of February, 1907, I went to the headquarters of the Conservative Club, in the Maw block, and met Mr. Rudneski and Mr. Sablewski, and asked them about the naturalization papers for Mr. Desput and Mr. Jaworski and others, and they told me that they were not ready, but Rudneski said it was easy to make them out.

2. Mr. Rudneski then sat down and filled in one of the papers and several others afterwards. I had to spell the name of Desput for him. He then went into an inner room on the right hand side of the large room where I was. I followed him to the door of the inner room, but he told me not to come in. There were other persons there whom I did not know.

3. I saw him go to the table, then the door was closed. He came out a few minutes later with the papers. Before he took them in I noticed they had no stamp on them, but I could not say whether the signature of the clerk of the court was on them or not. When he came back and gave me the papers they had the stamp or seal of the court on them down in the left hand corner.

4. He gave me the papers, I think only two at that time, and I took them away, but I was suspicious that they were not genuine, and so I took them to my former employer and asked him to look at them and see if they were all right. He looked at the stamp and the signature and said he thought they were. I afterwards gave them to the men for whom they were intended, but not before I had shown them to other persons, all of whom seemed to think they were genuine.

5. I am quite positive that the court seal was not on the blank papers before Mr. Rudneski filled them in and carried them into the inner room, but it was on the papers when he returned, and I could not understand how the seal could be there, and this was why I showed them to certain people before I gave them to the men.

6. I had a conversation about the matter with a friend this morning, and was afterwards asked to see a 'Free Press' reporter and repeat what I had said to my friend. I was then asked if I was willing to make this statements and to swear to it, and I consented to do so, as I know the facts to be true and as I have stated.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

(Sgd.) JOHN HYZY.

Solemnly declared before me at the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, this 7th day of May, A.D. 1908.

(Sgd.) J. B. HUGG,
A Commissioner in B. R.

Mr. STAPLES. Who secured that affidavit ?

Mr. BURROWS. I could not tell the hon. gentleman.

Mr. STAPLES. Was it the provincial Liberal organizer, Mr. Walton ?

Mr. BURROWS. I could not tell. I did not get it from Mr. Walton.

Mr. STAPLES. Can you give us information as to how much that affidavit cost ?

Mr. BURROWS. How much did Rogers pay for the cheque ? With regard to that cheque I might say that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) tried to create a false impression. I have a facsimile of it which shows that it was given for eight days work and for securing certain affidavits.

Mr. STAPLES. I have in my desk the original cheque and it does not state any such thing. It states that it was given for eight affidavits. I can show it to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS. You can see the facsimile in the Winnipeg 'Telegram.'

Mr. STAPLES. There is nothing like the original documents.

Mr. PATERSON. If it has not been cashed.

Mr. STAPLES. No, it has not, but it is marked and can be cashed at any time.

Mr. BURROWS. I might also point out, speaking of irregularities, a case that occurred in the election of Morris where the result was changed by the fact that three men were allowed to be put on the list illegally. I am not here to say whether these men were entitled to vote, but the same consideration should be given to one side as to the other. If the registration clerk is going to receive applications in an illegal manner from the government side, he should if he wants to be fair, receive them from the other side. I mention this case to point out that, in the administration of this Act, a good many irregularities have occurred, and it is to these irregularities that we object. I may add a word in explanation of what my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) said the other night The case was this : A certain gentleman wrote a private letter to the registration clerk asking that three names be placed on the list. The registration clerk put these names on the list, as there was no application in the legal form justified by the Act. No application was made to strike the names off the list, and according to the Manitoba Election Act the judge has no power to strike off a name unless the parties have been notified to appear. When the revision was held, the gentleman acting for the Liberal party asked to see the interrogatories and found that there were no interrogatories, but that the cases were irregular. He pointed this out to the judge, but the judge said that although the names were on irregularly he would not strike them off because proper notice had not been given to the parties. As a result these three names were left on the list, though they should not have been there. This is a case with which I am quite familar. Probably, I should not have mentioned it, had not the hon. member for Marquette mentioned it. In that election, the attorney general was elected by two votes, and these three men improperly put on the list were supposed to be the means of electing him. There was a recount resulting in a tie and the attorney general was declared elected by the casting vote of the returning officer. Another case may be cited which Mr. J. A. Campbell, the local member representing the county of Dauphin, brought it up in the legislature. He was accused of making a charge against the judge who was the revising officer. He said he made no charge. He made a motion for a return of the papers in the case, but the government refused the motion and it was voted down. The government said they had not the original papers and would not bring them down. The motion was voted down on a straight party vote of 18 to 12.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. The hon. member for North Toronto said there was no discussion in the local house.

Mr. BURROWS. The discussion lasted for two days. I know every one of the men whose names were put on. Mr. Campbell appealed against them. I know that they were not entitled to vote. There is no doubt that there was some jugglery practised in connection with these names.

Another complaint and one very commonly made by the people of the west who are trying to look after the voters' lists, is that there is great difficulty in securing electoral lists. I, myself, through a gentleman in Winnipeg, tried to secure voters' lists for my own division, and a letter received the other day said that they could not get the lists of 1906. Therefore, as far as I am concerned, I am not able to get the lists to give my co-workers so that we may be prepared to apply to the court of revision. In North Winnipeg during 1905, there were great complaints. I desire to read an extract from the 'Voice,' a paper published by a gentleman who used to be a member of this House and published in the interests of organized labour. It gives an account of the meeting of the Trade and Labour Council :

When the president announced 'good and welfare' a number of delegates proceeded to indignantly tell how they had been handled in their attempt to get into the registration offices during the day and evening for the purpose of having their names put on the voters' list. One delegate who had changed his residence from North to Centre Winnipeg wished to register for the latter constituency in the Market square. He had found the premises besieged outside and inside by a sweltering crowd. Exit was made through the windows. He had made two attempts but had failed to meet the clerks. Other applicants gave a stronger description of the uproar at the North Winnipeg office. Here the police had been called to clear the place. Scores of applicants had gone away in disgust. Of those at the council meeting, five told of their lack of success to get registered, and there was not a man in the room who got on the list at this year's court.

The resolution printed on this page was passed unanimously. Several were for some action to be taken to enforce the demand and proposed a public demonstration to wait on the government.

The resolution which the Trades and Labour Council passed unanimously and which the 'Voice' printed in large type on its front page, was as follows :

Whereas the facilities for registration of voters have proved altogether inadequate for the purpose, therefore be it resolved:

That this Trades Council demand of the government that registration be re-opened and kept open for at least five days.

Needless to say, the Roblin government did not reopen the registration proceedings.

I have here a copy of another affidavit with regard to the country districts which I desire to read to the House :

Dominion of Canada—Province of Manitoba.

In the matter of the registration of voters in the Emerson electoral division, registration district 8, held May 25-30, inclusive, 1903, to wit:

I, George Walton, of the city of Winnipeg, province of Manitoba, agent, do solemnly declare that:

1. I was present at No. 8 registration booth for the provincial electoral division of Emerson on Monday morning, May 25, 1903, and each subsequent day on which the booth was open.

2. That the registration clerk who opened the booth on Monday morning was Thomas Battan, of Stuartburn.

3. That during the forenoon of the first day of registration, five applications for registration had been accepted by the registration clerk, four of whom were Galicians who answered the interrogatories satisfactorily and took the reading test in the English language to the satisfaction of the registration clerk.

4. On account of the time occupied by the registration clerk in completing the interrogatories of applicants, it was suggested that the registration clerk should defer entering the names in the register until the noon hour. This was agreed to by myself as representing the Liberal interests at said registration booth. Mr. Battan admitted his incompetency to fill the important position of registration clerk, which he said had been pressed upon him by the Hon. D. H. McFadden.

5. That after the booth was closed for the noon hour, Monday, Mr. Battan, the registration clerk, stated in the presence of myself and others, that when asked by the Hon. D. H. McFadden to take the position, he had been deceived, that he never had any experience in such work, and being a poor penman he did not feel competent to do justice to the important position; that he had been told by the Hon. D. H. McFadden that there would probably not be more than 60 or 70 English speaking electors to be registered, and that, as no Galicians were entitled to be registered, he could easily handle the number applying for registration within the six days. That it was only on this assurance that he accepted the position, and that he said (addressing myself) you have succeeded in getting four Galicians on during the forenoon, and that there were a large number outside waiting to be registered, he decided not to open this booth again.

And at this juncture myself and others urged Mr. Battan to keep the booth open until a successor could be appointed, offering to send a messenger to Emerson to tender Mr. Battan's resignation through Mr. McFadden to the board of registration, and further offering to ask the Galicians to go home and not return until Wednesday by which time Mr. Battan's successor could be installed. That Mr. Battan would not consent to this arrangement, but announced the registration booth closed for good, never to be opened again so far as he was concerned. That at this time, at least 125 Galicians were present waiting an opportunity to register, many having travelled on foot from 10 to 20 miles.

6. That the registration booth was not again opened until nearly 4 o'clock in the afternoon of Wednesday the 27th (no notice having been given as to the time it would be re-opened) when Mr. John McColl, of Emerson, a pronounced Conservative partisan, appeared at the booth to continue the work of registration.

7. That I was present at the re-opening of the registration booth, and upon examination of the register, discovered that the names of the four Galicians who applied for registration Monday had not been entered upon the register, as promised by Mr. Battan, the then registration clerk. That upon this discovery I applied to Mr. McColl (Mr. Battan being present) to have the names entered on the register, and that he refused to enter such. I also requested Mr. Battan to make the entry and he refused to do so saying the books were out of his hands.

8. That notwithstanding the registration booth had been closed for more than two days the registration clerk closed the same at 10 o'clock Saturday evening, the 30th, refusing to extend the time for registration as provided by the Election Act for cases of interruption.

9. That only a few of the 125 Galicians present when the booth closed on Monday returned again to register, not having received notice that the booth would be re-opened.

10. That a number drove from 20 to 30 miles to the court of revision held at Emerson, successfully took the reading test before the revising officer and were put on the list by him.

11. That in my opinion from 50 to 100 more Galicians were eligible and would have been registered had the registration booth not been closed.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

Declared before me at the of in the province of Manitoba, this day of , in the year of our Lord, 190 .

Mr. STAPLES. What is the date of the affidavit ?

Mr. BURROWS. Registration was held on May 25, 1903.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE Would the hon. gentleman tell us who appointed the registration clerks at that time ?

Mr. BURROWS. I do not know, but I think Hon. D. H. McFadden.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It was the judges

Mr. BURROWS. But I can tell my hon. friend something which he knows but would rather I did not tell the House, that these Galicians were favourable to the Liberal candidate and if they had got a chance to have their names on the list the Hon. Dr. McFadden would have been defeated. He was defeated at the next general election by virtue of the fact that these people got the franchise and he is out of politics to-day.

Mr. W. J ROCHE. At that time the first law was in operation, the law which the hon. gentleman and his colleagues were lauding, under which the judges had the appointment of registration clerks.

Mr. BURROWS. That only adds strength to the argument we urged for if at the time when there were six days to register the electors could not get on the lists, what is to happen when there is only one day in which to register as at present ?

Mr. BURROWS.

I have here a clipping from the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of June 2, 1905, referring to the registration in Winnipeg. It reads :

So dense was the rush before the constables arrived that to depart by the door was impossible. Dozens left by jumping from the window to the ground at the rear, a drop of about seven feet. At a quarter to ten, men still kept arriving, and when the doors were shut at ten o'clock only about a dozen remained to complete their papers, out of the hundreds who had besieged the court during the evening. . .

The registration at St. Boniface was light, but in the evening there was quite a rush, and from fifty to seventy-five persons were shut out, according to estimate.

I have here an extract from the Winnipeg 'Free Press' of June 7, 1905, referring to the distances that people had to go to get on the list. It is as follows :

The 'Free Press' has already printed the facts as to the constituency of Emerson, but the case will well bear recapitulation. The voters at Sprague, Vassar and other points at the east of the riding must take train to Winnipeg, travel thence to Emerson in order to register, since owing to the great swamp completely crossing the constituency, and which nothing without wings can cross, it is impossible to go direct to the point of registration. The voter from the eastern end of Emerson must travel 160 miles by rail, spend $7 in railway fare, besides his hotel and meal expenses in Winnipeg en route, and take three days of his time in order to secure a right to vote.

It goes on :

In the constituencies around Lakes Winnipeg and Manitoba, the distances that must be travelled in order to register are enormous. Parts of Gimli are 210 miles from the registration booth. Parts of Kildonan and St. Andrews are 260. Some voters in Swan river, must go 145 miles to the place of registration. Some voters in Gladstone are 110 miles from the only place where they can procure the right to vote. It must be borne in mind, too, that great as these distances are they are really multiplied by the fact that there are no swift means of communication and in some cases no roads. In Swan river some voters must drive to Lake Manitoba, sail across it, and then drive 30 or 40 miles to the point of registration. In Kildonan, Gimli and Gladstone it will mean a voyage of 200 miles up and down the lake and more than a week of time, to say nothing of the expense, if the elector desires to preserve his right to the franchise.

I shall also read an extract from the 'Free Press' referring to the registration at North Winnipeg. It says :

The scenes enacted at the North Winnipeg booth were disgraceful. There was only one door by which to enter and leave the building, which was little bigger than a box. Up the steps leading thereto, swarmed a pushing crowd of would-be voters, at times more than a hundred in number. It was impossible for a voter who had registered to get out, so that some of them respectable citizens, men of advanced years, were pulled out by the collar over the heads of the crowd. Doors were burst and windows broken, shirts, coats and collars were torn in the attempt to secure entrance or exit. More than 80 qualified voters were left unregistered when Clerk McCutcheon refused to register further.

The hon. member for North Toronto this evening advanced a very ingenious and very able argument to try to point out the enormity of the Act of the Liberal party in 1904 in dividing up certain polling divisions throughout the province of Manitoba. My hon. friends on the other side of the House apparently did not inform the hon. gentleman that at the previous provincial election in 1903, on the same lists, in the same country and under the administration of the Conservative government who brought this election law into force, they found it necessary for the convenience of the electors to subdivide their polls. There was no power on the statute-book to enable a returning officer to do so, but yet they did subdivide their polls. I am making no charge against them for doing so, because they did so, in so far as I am aware, in the public interest. They stated that they did it for the convenience of the public. I will read the names of some of the counties: Arthur, Avondale, Emerson, Gladstone, Kildonan, Killarney, Lansdowne, Manitou, Morden, Rockwood, St. Boniface, Springfield and Virden. There are thirteen counties here and there are four others. There were twelve polls in Lansdowne and the returning officer divided them into twenty-two, and of course he had to use the thin red line to carve up the voters' lists to suit. In Emerson there were nine polls and he made thirteen, and in Gladstone there were fifteen and they made twenty. I have here a copy of the evidence which was taken in the case of the King vs. Duggan in which Mr. Harvey, the Conservative returning officer in the electoral district of Springfield, gave evidence. He was asked why he made eleven polling divisions when there were only nine provided by law. He gave the answer which has been given here before. He stated that he had done so in order to make it more convenient for the public. I will read a short extract from his evidence:

Mr. HOWELL. I want to see this, because, although it may seem startling, I have seen several proclamations that were changed after they were signed by the returning officer, and I am anxious to know if this is one.

Continuing, the witness described the territorial division of Springfield into the 9 registration districts in which there were 11 polling divisions.

His Lordship observed that the polling divisions should have corresponded with the registration districts and the witness had thus made 11 polls, where, according to the law, there should have been only 9.

Mr. AIKINS——

Acting for the Attorney General and a prominent Conservative.

—admitted that that was so, and said that it was necessary to lay all the facts connected with the matter before the court.

The witness, however, did not appear to be wholly responsible for the violation of the law, handing in a printed notice, signed by the Provincial Secretary, D. H. McFadden, naming the 11 polling places, the extra 2 being made by the subdivision of 2 registration districts.

I am mentioning this not to find any fault. I have no knowledge of the facts, but I believe that in making the eleven polls they did so in the interest of the electors to make it easy for them to vote. But they had to change the list. They only had nine lists and they had to take these lists, carve them up, use the thin red line, or the thick black line, to scratch out the names of voters. If that was a proper procedure and in the public interest in 1903 on the same voters' lists and in the same constituencies why should the Attorney General of Manitoba take action against returning officers who happened to be working for the Dominion government in the election which was conducted on the same lists and in the same country within a year? At the October, 1905, assizes an indictment was preferred to the grand jury charging the returning officer for Macdonald with having struck off 46 names from polling division No. 5 of the local constituency of Mountain. This particular polling subdivision is divided between the three Dominion constituencies—Macdonald, Lisgar and Souris. What the returning officer did was to strike out from the Macdonald list the names of the electors who lived in Souris and Lisgar. Not one of these 46 electors were disfranchised. Had their names not been struck out from the Macdonald list they would have had a vote in each constituency contrary to law.

In regard to the subdivision of the polls, polling subdivision No. 10 of the constituency of Emerson comprises no less than 12 townships, that is, 24 miles long by 18 miles wide, or 432 square miles. For the purposes of the elections to the local legislature there was only one poll and that poll was at the extreme west corner, which made it very inconvenient for the electors to vote. In that polling division there was a large Liberal majority and the Liberals were mostly situated in the eastern end of the division remote from where the poll was placed. When the elections took place for the Dominion House the returning officer divided that poll into two and the result was that there was a majority of 105 for the Liberal candidate. I have no doubt that some of the people resented the idea of being sent so far off and on this account voted against the Conservative party. Contrast this with poll No. 11, Emerson, comprising a single township, with an electoral population of 59. Yet it got a poll. It should also be contrasted with No. 8, Emerson, one township with only 40 names, these two latter gave large Conservative majorities. If the provincial polling division had been followed in the Dominion elections of 1904 the people of Lac du Bonnet, in Selkirk county, would have been obliged to go to Cromwell to vote. This would have involved a railway journey from Lac du Bonnet to Molson and another railway journey to Beausejour and a drive from Beausejour to Cromwell, in all a drive of 40 miles. It is very difficult, in fact, impossible, for the electors to go from one place to the other as there is only one train a week. If the train happened to go on election day it would be all right, but trains do not as a rule run on election day any more than on any other day if it does not suit their convenience. The Dominion returning officer put a poll at Cromwell and another at Lac du Bonnet and they had to divide the list to agree with the polls. That was one of the cases in which action was taken against the returning officer for using the thin red line as stated by the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say, in contradistinction to the statement made by the hon. member for Marquette, that the people of the west are in favour of the legislation which is now before the House. I think the suggestion made by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister will not bring this legislation into disfavour. Anybody who is fair-minded will realize if you are going to have registration and if you want non-partisan registration you can put the whole machinery in connection with the making of the lists in the hands of the county court judges the same as was done in 1903. My hon. friend from Marquette said that when he made a trip home during Easter holidays he did not find anybody who was in favour of this Bill. If he had looked at the Winnipeg 'Telegram' a short time ago he would have seen an article which was probably an inspiration to most of the gentlemen whom he saw. On April 19, 1908, Mr. W. H. Hastings, the organizer of the Conservative party, wrote a circular letter to the Conservative papers in Manitoba and the Northwest. I think it would do no harm for me to read this letter to the House.

Mr. STAPLES. It has been read before.

Mr. BURROWS. It will do no harm to read it again. Mr. Hastings is the organizer of the Conservative party and he is the gentleman who has been furnishing the campaign thunder for most of the people who are on that side of politics. This is his letter:

My Dear Sir,—You will notice the controversy between the 'Free Press' and the 'Telegram' in reference to the proposed amendment to the Dominion Election Act as provided by the Aylesworth Bill now before the Dominion parliament, has grown to be one of considerable interest.

So far as the Aylesworth Bill is concerned, I may state to you in confidence that the real fight on this Bill has not yet begun, but it will start when this Bill comes before the House for its second reading, and the opposition will keep the House in session until the snow flies next winter before they will allow it to pass in its present shape.

If the Aylesworth Bill, as it now stands, should become law, it means that the Liberals will have it in their power to make up voters' lists for Dominion elections along the same lines and following the same tactics as were adopted and used by the officials when voters' lists were made up during the time the Greenway government was in power in this province and exercising their ingenuity along that line. With the voters' list made up after the writs of the election have been issued (as provided by the Bill), it would be absolutely impossible for the Conservatives to conduct an aggressive campaign and at the same time endeavour to check the crooked work that would be at the same time perpetrated upon the people by the officials in the way of making the lists up, or in other words, it would simply mean that we might just as well concede the whole of this province to the Liberal party, and waste neither time, energy, or money, in the way of putting up a good legitimate fight.

Our party at Ottawa thoroughly understands this and will make the fight accordingly, but they need to be backed up by the public sentiment of Manitoba, and I therefore write you, upon behalf of the party, asking you, as a favour to the party, to devote as much space in the columns of your paper as you possibly can in showing up the iniquity of this proposed legislation, and in doing so you will not only confer a favour upon the party, but you will be doing a great act in the way of preserving the civil rights and liberties of the independent electors of this province.

I would be much pleased if you would send me marked copies of your issue which contains any reference to this matter, and I will be pleased to have the same reproduced in the Winnipeg 'Telegram,' and all Conservative newspapers in the east.

I feel that it is unnecessary for me to say anything further upon the subject as you understand as well as I the great importance that surrounds the question of the passing or rejection of the Aylesworth Bill.

Kindly drop me a line and let me know if you will be able to comply with the request of the party in this regard.

Yours, very truly,

W. H. HASTINGS.

I wonder if Mr. Hastings will write another letter now and state that the government advocates the lists being made by the judges, surely if he were fair he should change his mind in that regard. I may say that I noticed the week after this letter was written there appeared in the 'Telegram' a whole lot of articles headed 'Western Press comments on the Aylesworth Amendment,' but the 'Free Press' made so much criticism of these comments that the people got on to the combination that produced it, and the 'Telegram' ceased publishing these comments. This was manufactured indignation, manufactured under the guidance of the Conservative party organizer in Manitoba.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is Hastings ?

Mr. BURROWS. I think he is a provincial government employee so far as I understand.

Mr. STAPLES. Will the hon. gentleman say Mr. Hastings is a government employee and paid a salary ?

Mr. BURROWS. I do not know his salary.

Mr. STAPLES. You do not know anything about it ; play the game fair.

Mr. BURROWS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have taken up the time of the House citing quotations from the press, and I would not have done so were it not for the fact that we have been challenged from time to time to show reason why we object to the present legislation in Manitoba. It has been said by our friends opposite that there was no agitation in the west for an amendment of the law, and in consequence of that allegation I found it necessary to cite the public comment on the question. I think it is very important that this Bill should pass. It is a fair Bill, it is a Bill that nobody can take any exception to and I believe that our friends opposite when they come to reflect will decide that they will support the measure along the lines suggested by the right hon. the Prime Minister

On motion of Mr. Staples the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 13, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 164) for the relief of Edith May Gilmore.—Mr. J. D. Reid.

QUEBEC TERCENTENARY.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) a question. I notice in the press this morning a statement that the volunteers of Canada are not to take part in the tercentenary celebration in Quebec next July. I would ask if this is true ; and, if the volunteers are not to take part in the tercentenary, I desire to ask why this decision has been reached after their interest has been aroused in the matter, and, in many cases, they have gone to a great deal of trouble in preparing ? Is it owing to the inability of the department to transport them, or what is the cause ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am sorry that I cannot give my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) the information he asks for. This is purely a departmental matter, and I shall have to inquire concerning it of my colleague the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden).

GEORGIAN BAY CANAL.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to lay on the table certain plans relating to the Georgian Bay Ship Canal as follows :—

Plate 4—Map of river, mile 0 to 33.
Plate 5—Map of river, mile 33 to 66.
Plate 25—Daily discharge of the Ottawa river at Besserer's grove for 1846, 1876, 1881, 1887, 1890, 1904, 1905 and 1906.
Plate 26—Daily discharge of the Ottawa river at head of Montreal island, Besserer's grove, Gower point and Deux Rivières.
Plate 28—Daily discharge of Amable du Fond river and daily fluctuation of reserve lakes, summit supply.
Plate 29—Curves relating to summit water supply investigation.
Plate 36—Diagrams showing movements of boats through the Poe lock and approaches, St. Mary's Falls canal.

I trust, very soon, to have the remainder of these plans and the final report of the survey.

QUESTIONS.

WATER-POWER PRIVILEGES IN ALBERTA AND SASKATCHEWAN.

Mr. AMES—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. What sales or leases of water-power privileges have been made by the Department of the Interior in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan since 1900?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. February 15, 1905.—Baumbach and Meler were granted 17·69 second feet from Ross creek on the northwest ¼ of 24—10—3—4 to operate a mill at Irvine, Sask.

July 3, 1905.—Blindman River Electric Power Company were authorized to divert 250 second feet of Blindman river near its confluence with the Red Deer river, for power purposes.

November 8, 1907.—Blindman River Electric Power Company were authorized to raise the level of Gull lake 18 inches for storage purposes in connection with the power plant at the confluence of the Blindman and Red Deer rivers.

June 19, 1907.—Mich. Sostrop was authorized to use enough water from the Medicine river to operate a mill upon section 31—40—3—5.

July 20, 1900.—The Canadian Milling Company were granted 20 second feet from the St. Mary river on northeast ¼ of 14—3—25—4 for the operation of a mill.

April 23, 1908.—Mr. O. T. Johannson was authorized to use the waters of Fallen Timber creek for power purposes on the southwest ¾ of section 3—32—5—west of 5th meridian.

SNAGS IN RIVER ST. JOHN—PAYMENT OF MR. THOMAS LAFFERTY.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. Has one Thomas Lafferty, of Kings county, New Brunswick, received payment for services performed for the government in connection with the work of removing snags from the River St. John during last year?
2. If so, what is the amount received and the rate of pay per day?
3. Who is the owner of the tug boat which was employed in the work?
4. Was the said boat hired by the day? If so, what was the rate of pay, and how many days employed?
5. If the work was done by the day, why was it not put up to tender?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works)) :

1. Yes, as labourer.
2. (a) $14 ; (b) $1.75 per day.
3. George R. Vincent.
4. (a) Yes ; (b) 78 days at $15 per day.
5. It was thought that the work would be more satisfactorily performed by day's labour.

CANSO COLD STORAGE PLANT.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What is the total cost of construction of the cold storage plant at Canso?
2. What has been paid as subsidy or otherwise by the government on account of this plant?
3. What remains yet to be paid under the existing contract?
4. What has been the total cost to the government of carrying on the Scotch curing experiments for herring each year since its inception?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. $67,828.
2. One-half the cost of construction of plant up to maximum payment of $30,000.

MR. J. E. CLOUTIER.

Mr. AMES asked :

1. Between the 1st of May, 1906, and the 31st of March, 1907, what amounts were paid by the Department of Public Works each month to J. E. Cloutier, of the town of Chicoutimi, or elsewhere, in the county of Chicoutimi?
2. What amounts have been paid each month since April 1, 1907, to date to the same party?
3. What was the nature of the services for which these payments were made?
4. Where are they set forth in the Auditor General's Report for 1905-6 and 1906-7?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. $240, including one month which accrued previous to 1st May, 1906, but paid in this term.
2. $20 for each month up to 30th April, 1908.
3. Rent of office for resident engineer at Chicoutimi.

SAGUENAY DREDGING—PURCHASE OF COAL.

Mr. MORIN asked :

1. What quantity of coal was purchased last season for the use of the Public Works Department in connection with the Saguenay dredging?
2. From whom was this coal purchased, and at what price?
3. Where was delivery of this coal made?
4. If at Quebec, what did it cost to bring the coal to Chicoutimi?
5. Were any offers received to supply steam coal delivered at Chicoutimi on wharf or barge? If so, what was the price quoted?
6. What was the net cost of the coal actually purchased, including price at Quebec and haulage from Quebec to Chicoutimi?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. 1,700 tons.
2. (a) Canadian Import Company of Quebec ; (b) $4.50 per ton.
3. Delivery was made from time to time at Quebec when needed.
4. Coal was towed by government tug and barges at an estimated cost of about 50 cents per ton.

5. Yes, $4.85 per ton, but, in addition to this, it would, if this offer had been accepted, have been necessary to add cost of providing storage facilities at Chicoutimi. Further the coal offered was not of the quality required.

6. About $5.

SAGUENAY DREDGING—TUG 'STORM KING.'

Mr. MORIN asked :

1. Is the tug 'Storm King' in the employ of the Public Works Department in connection with the Saguenay dredging?

2. If so, what services were rendered by the said tug during the season 1907?

3. Is a memorandum of the earnings of the said tug required and furnished to the department?

4. What were the total earnings for the season of 1906-7, and what was the nature of the services for which charges were made?

5. Does the said tug at times tow coal from Quebec to the Saguenay? If so, what charge per ton is made for such tug service?

6. What amount was credited to the said tug for towing coal last season?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. Yes.

2. Was employed entirely under the supervision of resident engineer at Chicoutimi doing government work.

3. Resident engineer is required to furnish returns.

4, 5 and 6. From General Construction Company, $120 for services, towing one of the companys' vessels from 2nd to 4th October, 1907.

Tug frequently tows departmental coal from Quebec, tows dredges when necessary and is used on works of inspection or survey.

ONE CENT DROP LETTER.

Mr. SINCLAIR asked :

Has an estimate been made of the amount that the postal revenue will be lessened by the proposal to give a one cent rate to drop letters in cities? If so, how much?

HOMESTEADING SECTION 18.

Mr. AMES asked :

1. In respect to the northwest quarter of section 18, township 53, range 4, west of the 5th meridian, by whom and at what time was it homesteaded?

2. What extensions have been allowed in regard to the performances of homestead duties, and for what reasons?

3. What other applications have been made for this homestead?

4. Does the party in whose names the homestead now stands reside on the property? If not, where has he resided within the past three years?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. The following entries were granted for this land : E. A. Bellamy, 2nd June, 1905, cancelled on the 12th of February, 1907 ; Thomas H. Mason, 9th of March, 1907, cancelled on the 2nd of May, 1907 ; Daniel Brox, 8th of May, 1907.

2. On the 23rd of May, 1906, cancellation proceedings against the entry of E. A. Bellamy were held over until the 1st of July, 1906, as the homestead inspector reported improvements recently made, and the homesteader stated that he was earning money to go into residence.

On the 25th of March, 1908, cancellation proceedings against the entry of D. Brox were held over until the 15th of April, 1908, for the reason that the homesteader claimed that the residence condition only remained unfulfilled, and that he wanted time to make arrangements for his office.

3. The head office file shows the following applications for this land : 17th of January, 1907, Thomas H. Mason. 27th of January, 1908, William Craig. 1st of February, 1908, Joseph Burns.

4. The present homesteader, D. Brox, does not reside on the land. He is postmaster at Spruce Grove, where he has apparently lived for the past seven years.

WHARF AT GRAND RIVER.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Were tenders received for the building of a wharf on the south side of Grand river? If so, what are the names of the tenderers, and the amount of each tender ?

2. What amount of money has been expended on said wharf up to May, 1908?

3. At whose recommendation was said work undertaken?

4. Were any petitions received asking for the wharf to be built at this point? If so, how many names are on the petition?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. (a) Yes, at McPherson's Cove. (b) For construction of wharf, Thomas Campbell, $8,999 ; for extension, F. S. Macdonald, $4,289 ; W. W. Jenkins, $4,440 ; J. F. Morrison, $4,484 ; M. McDonald and J. L. McPherson, $4,923 ; W. L. Poole and G. A. Thompson, $5,497 ; Thomas Campbell, $5,990 ; D. W. B. Reid and Lewis Archibald, $6,440.

2. $10,996.56.

3. At the request of Mr. J. J. Hughes, M.P., a report as to the necessity for this accommodation was secured from the resident engineer.

4. There are no petitions on file in the department.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY EXTENSION.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

Was a petition asking for the extension of the Prince Edward Island railway to Dundas and Avondale received by the government in 1906? If so, what action does the government intend taking in this matter?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The department has no record of any petition being received asking for an extension of the Prince Edward Island Railway, to Dundas and Avondale.

STEAMSHIP SERVICE, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Why was the steamship service between Bridgetown, Annandale, Georgetown and Souris, Prince Edward Island, and Pictou and Sidney, Nova Scotia, discontinued?
2. Is it the intention of the government to re-establish this service? If not, why not?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The department has no record in recent years of a service touching at all the points mentioned. There is a service at present from Pictou touching at Georgetown and Souris ; there is another service from Pictou touching at Murray Harbour, Georgetown and Montague; there is another service from Sydney touching at Souris en route to Montreal.

SECTION 32.

Mr. PORTER—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

Has the report ordered in reference to the northeast section 32, township 36, range 16, west of the 2nd meridian, yet been made and received? If so, when will such report be laid on the table of the House?

Hon FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The report referred to, which is dated March 23, 1908, was received, and laid on the table of the House on the 21st of April, 1908, as supplementary to return No. 98 (Department of the Interior).

LIGHTKEEPER AT GANANOQUE.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. Who has charge of the lights and buoys immediately east and west of Gananoque in the St. Lawrence river, including Burnt island and Fiddler's Elbow?
2. When was he appointed and what salary does he receive?
3. Where does he reside at present, in Canada or the United States?
4. Has he attended to the work himself or does he farm it out to others?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Mrs. Manly Cross, widow of the late keeper.
2. Appointed by order in council 2nd of January, 1908, at $550 per annum.
3. The lightkeeper's post office address is Gananoque, Ontario.
4. Mrs. Cross reported on 22nd of January, 1908, that her son will do the work.

QUEBEC TERCENTENARY.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria). A short time ago I asked a question of the government with reference to the militia going to the tercentenary celebration at Quebec this summer, and I notice a statement in the papers to-day that they are not going. I desire to ask the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) what are the facts. If they are not going, why are they not going? Is it due to the inability of the department to handle the troops, or what is the cause of their not going ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). It is not correct to say that the troops are not going to the tercentenary. It is a fact, however, that the annual camps of instruction will be held as usual throughout the Dominion this year, instead of being held at one common point at or near the city of Quebec, as was proposed. The annual drill of the city regiments will also take place as usual this year. The reason of the change in the programme, which programme I announced briefly to the House three or four weeks ago, is chiefly due to the difficulty of transportation. It will be understood, I am sure, that one of the principal things had in mind in connection with this tercentenary celebration is to bring together the largest number possible of people to Quebec to witness the ceremonies. Some time ago the chairman of the commission called my attention to the fact that the transportation lines, the railways and steamboats, must be left free as far as possible to bring the people to Quebec and take them home again, and he thought it proper to ask the Militia Department to agree not to move any troops on a certain number of days before the celebration began and a certain number of days afterwards. It will be readily understood that such an arrangement would hamper the railway transportation lines very much. An earnest effort was made to see whether the difficulty could be overcome, but it was found it could only be partially overcome. It was therefore thought better that the camps should be held at the usual places of holding camps. As to the statement that has been made that the headquarters of the militia were unable to cope with the mobilization of 25,000 or 30,000 troops at a central point like Quebec, the story is absolutely without foundation, and is entirely absurd. The Militia Department is quite able to mobilize 40,000 troops at a central point like Quebec, within a few days, if not within a few hours, if the necessity arose. But at a time when tens and hundreds of thousands of people from all over the northern part of this continent will be looking towards Quebec, and have got to be taken there over the railways and steamboat lines, every one will agree that a serious problem is presented ; and owing to the fact that the companies cannot give the necessary accommodation such as we think the militia should have, this part of the programme has been given up. As to what will be done to bring troops to Quebec to take part in the celebration, I am not prepared at this moment to make any announcement. But the Militia Department will be prepared to co-operate with the commission in every way in its power.

Mr. FOSTER. That is finally final, is it?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. TALBOT. Might I be permitted to ask the Minister of Militia if it is the intention of the department to allow the rural corps to go into camp as usual ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, I intended to say that.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—MR. JUSTICE CASSELS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the government respecting the opportunities which Mr. Justice Cassels will have to pursue the inquiry that he commenced a short time ago ; having regard to the fact that he considers his judicial duties to be his first concern—and I quite approve of his attitude in that respect—having regard also to the near approach of the summer vacation, when is it expected that the inquiry can be resumed for any considerable period, and what opportunity will there be between the present date and the first day of January next for proceeding with the inquiry in an effective way ? The government should also take into consideration, in replying to the question, the fact that Mr. Justice Cassels has already announced, as I understand, that the investigation will be protracted because he proposes to go into the question somewhat exhaustively. I would like to know what the idea of the government is as to when the investigation will be effectively proceeded with and completed ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I could not give any information at this moment to my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden). Probably the department will have to communicate with counsel and with Mr. Justice Cassels himself as to what his intention is in this respect. My hon. friend says that he wants to know what opportunity there will be to resume the inquiry between this and the first of January. I would have hoped that the inquiry would have been completed long before the first of January.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thoroughly agree with that, but I understood from some quoted statement of Mr. Justice Cassels in the public press, that there was a considerable amount of work of a judicial character awaiting his attention to which he would properly give precedence.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will have the matter looked into.

QUEBEC TERCENTENARY.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have heard it remarked that the city corps are to be allowed their annual drill as usual in the fall and spring of the year and are to be paid therefor and that if permitted they are willing to go to Quebec provided their transport and allowances are made good. If that is true what is to be done with the rural corps? Are the rural corps not to be permitted to go to Quebec and, if any of the rural corps decide to take advantage of the same proposition, will they also have their transport and allowance given to them?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Nothing has been settled, but it is a fact that the city regiments, or some of them, or their commanding officers for them, have offered to give the time to go to Quebec, that is six days, or whatever it may be, and also do their full annual training as usual. That is twelve days. That is to say, assuming that it would take six days of their time to go to Quebec, they are willing to give eighteen days drill for twelve days pay. But nothing has been settled in regard to this matter.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I presume the same privilege will be extended to the rural corps?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have not extended it to any one yet.

INSURANCE BILL.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) if he has come to any conclusion in reference to the early introduction of the Insurance Bill.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes ; 'Introduction' is hardly the word that my hon. friend wishes to use because the Bill is before the Committee on Banking and Commerce. We are considering and preparing some amendments which we will be able to offer to the committee. It is our full intention to press the measure before the Banking and Commerce Committee at an early day.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Aylesworth for the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act and the proposed amendment of Mr. W. J. Roche thereto.

Mr. W. D. STAPLES (Macdonald). Mr. Speaker. when the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) rose in this House yesterday to make his speech upon this particular piece of legislation, known as Bill (No. 115), but better known as the Aylesworth Bill, I was in hopes that he would have had the courage of his convictions and that he would state to this House and the country that he was prepared to withdraw the contentious part of the Bill and allow the business of the House to go on. The right hon. gentleman spoke at some length. I listened to each sentence of his speech but he was prepared to withdraw not even one contentious word, not even one contentious clause of this Bill. I listened to him expecting him to refer to clause No. 1 which deals with the province of Manitoba, the unorganized districts of Ontario and Quebec and the province of British Columbia, but not one word did he utter as regards withdrawing this particular clause. I listened that I might hear him say that he was prepared to withdraw clause No. 17 which refers to the secret ballot, but he failed to mention clause No. 17. Now, Sir, the right hon. gentleman thought he had scored heavily upon the opposition when he said: I am prepared to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Marquette, and when he said that he was prepared, in so far as overlapping portions of the various constituencies in Manitoba were concerned, to refer the question to the judges of the province. I say that the right hon. gentleman did not concede anything there. He gave us nothing but what we enjoy at the present time in the province of Manitoba, fixed by law and on the statute-books of that province. Therefore, the right hon. gentleman has not conceded anything. He has not been so fair as he would try to lead hon. members of this House and the people of this country to believe and I cannot understand for a moment how it has gone broadcast throughout our country in the press that the right hon. gentleman has conceded all the wishes of Manitoba. He has not conceded a single thing. Why, I ask, why has the right hon. gentleman singled out the little province of Manitoba? Why is he so anxious to get a slap at the province of Manitoba? Why is he so anxious to insult the intelligence of the people of Manitoba? The right hon. gentleman has refused to allow the province of Manitoba one stick of timber, one acre of land, one ounce of mineral, one fish that floats in the waters of that province and now he comes forward and puts his grasping hands upon the franchise of the people and tries to take it from them. I say that we will not tolerate that for one moment. Where did the right hon. gentleman get his information? By whom has he been prompted? He has been prompted by the Liberal contingent from the province of Manitoba led by the ex-premier of that province. He consults them. He accepts everything they say, and there is not one word of truth in their statements. I am surprised that the right hon. gentleman should not have listened to the arguments that have been made on this side of the House, arguments which are backed up by facts and backed up by law; but he accepts the statements, and they are only statements, of hon. gentlemen in the Liberal contingent from the province of Manitoba.

Now, Sir, I intend, for a few moments to refer to these hon. gentlemen. I shall endeavour to take up their arguments one by one. I do not for a moment say I am going to attempt to answer them because they have been answered. They were answered in nearly every case before they were made and it is only a waste of time to undertake to answer these hon. gentlemen. But, first, I shall refer to the hon. gentleman who spoke in this House last night. I refer to the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows). Who is this member for Dauphin ? He is a gentleman who sits over there and he has a monopoly of the timber of the western country. He sits in his seat, not by the will of the people, but through the manipulation of his brother-in-law, the ex-Minister of the Interior, the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) who has, by his ingenuity, succeeded in setting back his election and allowing that hon. member for Dauphin to take his seat by acclamation.

Now, Sir, I say to the hon. gentleman : come out, fight fair, come out from behind the large spruce trees, come out I say and let the people of this country tell you whether you shall represent them any longer in this House. And if the hon. member does come out in the open I will venture to say he will not come back to this House if he has to fight as others have to fight in the coming election. The hon. gentleman was very careful to read from his Bible, the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' and that was about the whole of his speech ; that was all he had to say. He was very careful to read affidavits one after another and they were affidavits which did not do any credit to the hon. gentleman or his party behind him. Amongst others he read a letter which was written by Mr. Hastings, of Manitoba, and that letter is a fair letter, it is a loyal letter, it is a patriotic letter. But, the outside leader of the Liberal party in the province of Manitoba, Mr. Brown, wrote a letter which he had inserted in the different papers throughout the province and when I read that letter I want to ask the members of this House if those who voted for Mr. Brown in the last provincial election did their duty when they voted for any such man. He was writing with regard to the flag policy of Premier Roblin and he wrote this letter to the newspapers of Manitoba :

In regard to the flag can you not get interviews with school trustees in your district as to what they think of the teachers being compelled to hoist the flag and take it down with the thermometer at 25 and 40 below?

Is there anything patriotic or loyal about that? Then he wrote to the newspaper editors :

Comment yourself editorially on the subject and if you do you can send a special marked copy to the 'Free Press' at once so that we may copy your views.

Now in connection with this I will take the liberty to recite two or three verses which were written by a late member of the press gallery—methinks I see him here to-day—and there is nothing I can say to you that will represent the feeling and sentiment of the people of Manitoba better than the verses I am going to recite. That gentleman wrote the following beautiful words:

Give me the Grand Old Union Jack
Baptized in blood and tears;
The flag that o'er a nation free
Has waved a thousand years.
More modern flags; with stars and bars
As beautiful may be;
But the flag that's waved a thousand years
Is good enough for me.

Now, these are the words I want specially to commend to the Prime Minister.

Then may it wave o'er land and sea
Through time's eternal space;
Equality and liberty
There find abiding place.

That verse represents the sentiment of the people of Manitoba : Equality and liberty. That is all we ask, that is what we are fighting for, that is what we expect to get. But I have a doubt as to whether we shall be able to get it from the right hon. gentleman when we take into consideration his past record and dealings with the province of Manitoba. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the day is not far distant, the day will soon come, it will come at the next elections when the people have a chance to express their wishes at the polls and they will make the Prime Minister of Canada dance. He will dance as he never danced before, and the people of the country will waltz him from that side of the House and put him in the opposition benches where he always belonged. So much for the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows).

Mr. BENNETT. Take another one of them.

Mr. STAPLES. The next hon. gentleman I wish to call your attention to is the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway). He sat for twelve long years as Prime Minister of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is he to-day ?

Mr. STAPLES. I do not know just where he is to-day. A few days ago the hon. gentleman (Mr. Greenway) made a speech in this House and he made sweeping statements like all the rest of his speeches. He defied any one to take the lists of the province of Manitoba and compile a federal list out of them. Well, it is the simplest thing in the world to do that. The only trouble that arose was about the overlapping of the voters in the polling subdivisions and all that is necessary to do is to leave the assignment of the voters in their proper divisions to the judges of the land. Yesterday the Prime Minister told us he was willing to do that and we thank him heartily for it, and I say that any man who makes the bold statement that it is impossible to compile the federal lists from the provincial lists is stating what is not true. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Greenway) went on to say that the addresses of the different voters in Manitoba are not given on the lists. I am prepared to admit that originally when the lists were compiled by that judicial board which hon. gentlemen opposite think was so perfectly fair and just, in a great many cases the post office address was left out, but the section, township and range were given in almost every case and it was therefore quite easy to find the voters. The hon. member (Mr. Greenway) also said that qualified electors had to go hundreds of miles to get on the list and he said the member for Selkirk would endorse that statement. Well, my colleagues and myself have gone over the constituency of Selkirk and we have taken the last census map of the province of Manitoba, and we have taken every polling subdivision in that constituency where a registration clerk is required by law to sit in the near future, and we have failed to find where a man would have to go fifty miles, much less one hundred miles to get on the list. Therefore I say that the member for Lisgar was wide of the mark when he said voters would have to go one hundred miles to get on the list. There is not a word of truth in it. He also found fault with the shortness of the time that elapses between the conclusion of the registration sitting and the court of revision ; but the province of Manitoba is at the present time having new proclamations issued to extend the time so as to suit the fancy and meet the whims of hon. gentlemen opposite.

The hon. gentleman also said that the government of Manitoba had deliberately torn from the list of voters certain names. It has been said before, and I repeat it, that there was never such a thing done that was contrary to law. He also made the statement that the Tories of Manitoba had undertaken to make some voters. Well, Sir, I want to say again that there is not a word of truth in that statement. The names that were put on the list were put on at the request of the Liberals of that particular polling subdivision. Now, who is this member for Lisgar? Is he the man?—yes, he is the man that went up and down this country for twelve years shouting: 'Hands off the province of Manitoba; equal justice to all, special privileges to none.' These were his war cries. Where is he to-day? He is the man who said to the government of the day: 'Give us our swamp lands, give us our school lands, give us our national schools.' I wonder where he is on that question to-day. He is the man who in those days stumped not only the province of Manitoba, but also the province of Ontario, trying to raise religious prejudices? Yes, he is the man; but where did we find him when the autonomy legislation was on? I watched him in his seat the only time he was in the House while that debate was going on, and I rather pitied him; he twirled his thumbs, stroked his whiskers, dusted his coat, and looked very uncomfortable, because his conscience was pricking him. On another occasion he made some remarks with regard to some provincial matter, and what did we find? When the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) was replying to him, and making things very hot for him, we found the hon. gentleman stealing back to one seat after another until he got close to the back door, and there he tumbled out, notwithstanding the euphonious strains of the hon. member for Simcoe singing, 'Tommy, dear Tommy, don't go.' He is the man who in those days said: 'Give us the provincial lists for federal purposes.' Where is he to-day? Is he shouting, 'give us provincial lists for federal purposes?' No; he wants to insult the people of the province of Manitoba. And now, Sir, I appeal to the ex-Prime Minister of Manitoba, I appeal to the hon. members of this House, to give us the assistance we are deserving of at this present time. All we ask for the province of Manitoba is equal rights, equal justice. No special privileges are we asking. I say, as the hon. gentleman said on that occasion, hands off the province of Manitoba.

The next man I come to of this Liberal contingent from the province of Manitoba is the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford). It seems to be the delight of that hon. gentleman to question the veracity of the Hon. Robert Rogers and the veracity of the hon. the Prime Minister of Manitoba. It is his whole delight to get up in this House and talk of the maladministration of the government of Manitoba. I am surprised at the hon. gentleman; he is the last man who should rise in this House and question the veracity and the honesty of the Prime Minister of the province of Manitoba. It is nothing more than cowardice on his part.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is an unparliamentary expression, and should be withdrawn.

Mr. STAPLES. Well, I will say unfair, Mr. Speaker—lack of courage. I was saying that he is the last man who should reflect on the veracity or the honesty of the Prime Minister of Manitoba. I want to say to the hon. gentleman that if it were not for the mercy, the great grace, of the Prime Minister of the province of Manitoba, the hon. gentleman would by no means be sitting where he is to-day.

The next man I come to is the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Jackson), and I purpose passing him over with very brief mention. I must say that he is not in quite the same category as the other hon. gentlemen that I have mentioned or the ones I purpose to refer to. But, Sir, even this gentleman has a record. He was speaker of the local legislature. He filled that position very gracefully, with great ability and with great credit to himself; but he has another record. He is the man who, when the Autonomy Bills were before this House, gathered up his little bag and struck out for the province of Manitoba, and went to the constituency of Mountain, hung his map on the wall, and extended the boundaries of the province of Manitoba. Quite a man after all; a little in advance of even the Prime Minister of this country. We have not yet got our boundaries extended.

The next hon. gentleman I come to is the member for the city of Winnipeg, the man who has the great honour of representing that great western city, the metropolis of the west, the Chicago of Canada. I would naturally expect, Mr. Speaker, a man who holds that honourable position to be a big man, a broad man, a fair man, a man who would not stoop as he stooped to reading the affidavits which he read in this House. But, Sir, he read some of them only; he did not read them all. I want the hon. gentleman now to read the rest of them. He read only four. He read the affidavits of Rudneski, Szymanski and Cichoski; but, Sir, he neglected to read those of Gdoski, Dumenski or Mosquito—we will leave it there. He failed to tell the whole story on that occasion. He did not tell us that the affidavits which he held in his hand cost the Liberal organizer of the province of Manitoba $25—$25 for four? No, $25 for eight; and there, Mr. Speaker, is the original cheque. There is the original document.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read it.

Mr. STAPLES. I want, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, to read this cheque. It reads thus:

Winnipeg, Man., March 30, 1907.

The Merchants' Bank of Canada, pay Theo. Rudneski, or order, the sum of twenty-five dollars. Eight men's time, affidavits.

(Sgd.) GEORGE WALTON.

Who is Geo. Walton? He is the Liberal organizer of the province of Manitoba. He holds a seat in the local legislature of that province. The cheque is marked, but has not been paid. It is charged up to the debit of Geo. Walton, Liberal organizer of the province of Manitoba. Here is the original document— something that proves the case. It is all in the same handwriting, and I challenge the right hon. the First Minister or even the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) to repudiate it.

The next man I come to is the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), the ex-Minister of the Interior—a very interesting man. He will be still more interesting within the next few moments—the father of the legislation we have now before us; the man responsible for this proposed legislation; the man who in 1903 tried to foist upon the people of Manitoba similar legislation; the man who drafted a similar Bill in 1903. The right hon. gentleman has denied that there was such a Bill drafted. I ask him now if there was not a Bill of that kind drafted in 1903. He denied it yesterday and the day previous. I ask him now whether there was not such a Bill drafted and printed?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman is entitled to an answer from me. If such a Bill was drafted, it never was to my knowledge.

Mr. STAPLES. I accept the right hon. gentleman's denial, as it is my duty to do, but now it becomes my painful duty to show the right hon. gentleman that there was such a Bill printed and that it was printed down here in the Printing Bureau of this government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. STAPLES. Will the right hon. gentleman deny that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot deny or affirm it. I say that if anything of the kind was done, it was not to my knowledge.

An hon. MEMBER. You were not intended to know.

Mr. STAPLES. We have had some hard fights in this House to obtain possession of original documents. We have had to debate for hours and days and weeks to try and get into the different departments of the government and get hold of original documents. But I did not have such a fight in order to get this, and I have it. Had it been in one of the departments, I venture to say I would not have it, because the first man who would throw himself against the door, backed by a subservient majority in his refusal to let us see the original documents, would be the Prime Minister. Not so in this case. We have the document here. There it is, conceived in iniquity, born in sin and submitted, I am told, to the right hon. gentleman and the Minister of Justice of that day, killed by that Minister of Justice, buried by him, the Hon. Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, now Chief Justice of Canada. But resurrected, Sir, by a minister of injustice, incorporated in the Bill we have now before us, designed for the same purpose—the purpose of gagging the will of the people of Manitoba.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I rise to a point of order. Seeing that the hon. gentleman has produced an original document, a certain cheque, I ask that it be laid on the table of the House.

Mr. STAPLES. I shall deal with that later. I do not know that I shall either lay the Bill on the table or yet the cheque, but the right hon. gentleman told us yesterday that his memory was quite as good, quite as bright as ever. I am glad to know it. If that is the case, as I read this document, surely he will remember some of the words or the construction of some of the clauses or perhaps the entire Bill.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I ask for your ruling, Mr. Speaker. Has that document not to be laid on the table?

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule as to the production of documents is limited to the case of a minister quoting from or referring to a public document and does not apply in this case.

Mr. STAPLES. Now, Sir, as I read, I have no doubt the right hon. gentleman will remember some of the language.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In my turn, I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman says no doubt I will remember. I state that to my knowledge this document never was presented to me.

Mr. STAPLES. I am trying to refresh the memory of the right hon. gentleman. If after I have read the document he says he does not remember it, there will not be the least doubt in my mind that it was not presented to him, and I shall certainly accept his word. This is the Bill—Blank number, with 1903 at the top, and it reads thus:

An Act further to amend the Franchise Act, 1898, and the Dominion Election Act, 1900, as respects the province of Manitoba.

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. This Act may be cited as the Manitoba Supplementary Voters' Lists Act, 1903.

2. In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires—

(a) The expressions 'Dominion election,' 'election' and 'provincial election,' respectively, have the same meanings as they have in the Franchise Act, 1898;

(b) The expression 'province' and its derivatives respectively mean and refer to the province of Manitoba;

(c) The expression 'electoral district' means any place or territorial area in the province which is entitled to return a member to the House of Commons;

(d) The expression 'registration district' means a registration district constituted under the laws of the province for the purposes of the provincial registration upon which were based the voters' lists designated by the Franchise Act, 1898, and amendments thereto, for use at the election about to be held.

3. Section 13 of chapter 16 of the statutes of 1901 is repealed, and it is hereby enacted that section 9 of the Franchise Act, 1898, as amended, shall not apply to the province of Manitoba, and that as regards the said province the provisions of this Act shall be taken to be substituted therefor.

4. For the purposes of any Dominion election about to be held in the province, voters' lists shall be prepared and revised, in manner hereinafter provided supplementary to those so designated as aforesaid for use at such election.

5. The provisions of paragraph (e) of section 19 of chapter 52 of the Revised Statutes of Manitoba, 1902, and any provisions of the provincial law directly or indirectly imposing an educational qualification for registration as an elector, shall not apply to or be regarded in the preparation of such supplementary lists, nor shall any provision of the provincial law requiring an applicant for registration who claims to be a British subject by naturalization to produce his certificate of naturalization.

6. Every person who possesses the qualifications prescribed by the law of the province for registration as an elector, as the same are modified by the provisions of the next preceding section, and by the provisions of the Franchise Act, 1898, and amendments thereto, and whose name is not on the voters' lists designated as aforesaid for use at the election about to be held, shall be entitled to be registered as an elector for the purposes of such supplementary lists, whether or not such person possessed the said qualifications at the time when the said voters' lists were made or revised, and whether or not he then applied for registration.

7. Whenever it becomes necessary under this Act to prepare and revise supplementary voters' lists in one or more electoral districts, the Governor in Council may by proclamation appoint for each of such electoral districts a fit and proper person, who shall be a judge of a county court, or a barrister of not less than three years' standing, to be the revising officer for such electoral district, and he shall, by such proclamation, fix the date for the closing by the revising officer in each electoral district of the registration for such supplementary lists.

8. Immediately after receiving official notice of his appointment, the revising officer shall take an oath of office before a judge of the Court of King's Bench, or of a county court, or before a justice of the peace, in form A in the schedule to this Act, which oath he shall forthwith thereafter cause to be filed with the clerk of the Crown in chancery.

9. The revising officer shall thereupon open an office at some convenient place in the electoral district for which he is appointed, and shall, until the closing of the registration for such supplementary lists, keep such office open every day, Sundays excepted, between the hours of nine and twelve o'clock in the forenoon, and one and four o'clock in the afternoon, and shall during those hours by himself or a substitute be present at such office to receive applications for such registration and to transact other business pertaining to his office as revising officer.

10. The revising officer shall, immediately after taking the said oath, insert in a newspaper published in the city of Winnipeg, and also in one or more newspapers published in the electoral district, or if there is no newspaper published in the district then in some newspaper which circulates therein, a notice in form B in the schedule to this Act, and he shall continue the publication of such notice in every issue of each of such newspapers up to and including the day fixed for the closing of registration.

11. The revising officer shall at the same time send to every postmaster in the electoral district, by mail, registered, a similar notice, to be posted up for the information of the public.

12. The revising officer shall receive applications in form C or form D in the schedule to this Act, or to the like effect, up to midnight of the day fixed for closing the registration for such supplementary lists.

13. Each application shall contain the name of only one person applying, or on whose behalf application is made, to be placed on such lists.

14. Such applications shall be sworn to or affirmed either by the person for whom registration is sought, or by some other person on his behalf, such other person being an elector of the electoral district, before a mayor, reeve, justice of the peace, commissioner for taking affidavits, county court clerk, registrar or notary public, or before the revising officer.

15. The revising officer shall enter the name, residence, post office address, and occupation or profession of each person by or on behalf of whom an application conforming to the provisions of the three next preceding sections has been received by him, and whose name does not appear in the list so designated as aforesaid, on a preliminary list for the proper registration district according to the alleged qualifications of such person, the names being entered in alphabetical order.

16. Where part only of a registration district lies within the electoral district, a separate preliminary list shall be prepared for such part.

17. Every person before whom it is provided that an oath or affirmation under this Act may be taken, shall, upon request, administer such oath or affirmation gratuitously.

18. Any person who has attained the full age of twenty-one years and is a British subject by birth or naturalization on or before the day on which the preliminary lists are finally revised, shall be entitled to be registered as an elector, if otherwise qualified.

Revision of lists.

19. Forthwith after the closing of registration the revising officer shall fix a day and hour, and a place within the electoral district, for the revision of the preliminary lists, such day being not less than two weeks after such closing, and he shall give public notice of the time and place so fixed in the manner prescribed by sections 10 and 11 of this Act with respect to the notice therein mentioned.

20. Such notice may be in form E, in the schedule to this Act, and shall state that the preliminary lists may be inspected during office hours at the office of the revising officer.

21. The revising officer may if deemed advisable on account of distance or otherwise, fix separate times and places for different portions of the electoral district for the revision of the preliminary lists, in which case the notices published by him shall specify the registration districts and parts thereof, the lists for which shall be revised at such times and places respectively.

22. At the time and place specified in the notice the revising officer shall hold a court for the revision of the said preliminary lists, and for the purposes of such revision he shall have all the powers which were vested in the judge or other person presiding at a court for the revision of lists of electors under the Act, chapter 49 of the Revised Statutes of Manitoba, 1891, and the amendments thereto hereinafter mentioned.

23. It shall not be necessary to notify the revising officer that it is intended to apply to have names struck off the list, but it shall be sufficient if it be proved in court to the satisfaction of the revising officer that a summons or order in form F in the schedule to this Act has been served upon any person whose name is objected to, at least forty-eight hours before the time fixed for holding the court, and upon such proof the revising officer shall proceed to hear and dispose of the application whether or not the person whose name is objected to is present.

(2) Such summons or order may be served either personally or by leaving a copy thereof with some grown person at the residence as shown upon the preliminary list of the person objected to.

Division of registration districts.

24. The revising officer may divide any registration district which is found upon the completion of the supplementary list thereof to contain more than three hundred electors, or any registration district where, in his opinion, on account of sparseness of settlement or for any other reason, the convenience of the electors requires it, into two or more polling divisions, and in every such case he shall prepare a separate list for each of such polling divisions, dividing the list designated as aforesaid for use at the election about to be held, as well as the supplementary list for the registration district, according to the residences of the electors whose names appear thereon, as such residences are stated in such lists respectively, and shall certify the lists so prepared by him as correct and as having been prepared by him pursuant to this section; and for the purposes of the election about to be held, such polling divisions shall be regarded as duly constituted and the list so prepared and certified shall be regarded as duly prepared and in force.

25. The revising officer shall forthwith notify the returning officer of any action taken by him under the next preceding section, and the returning officer shall thereupon fix a polling station in and for each of the polling divisions constituted thereunder, and shall cause a public notice to be posted up in at least two of the most conspicuous places in each of such polling divisions setting forth the polling stations so fixed and the territorial limits to which they respectively apply.

Printing of lists.

26. If in his opinion there is not sufficient time to have the supplementary lists or any of them, or any lists prepared by him under section 28 of this Act, printed in the manner provided by the Franchise Act, 1898, the revising officer shall procure such lists to be printed in the province and shall supply the returning officer with as many printed copies thereof as are required for the purposes of the election about to be held.

General provisions.

27. Where they are not inconsistent with this Act, the provisions contained in sections 21 to 66, both inclusive, of the said Act, chapter 49 of the Revised Statutes of Manitoba, 1891, as the same were amended by chapter 12 of the Manitoba statutes of 1892, and chapter 9 of Manitoba statutes of 1894, together with the forms therein referred to shall, mutatis mutandis and so far as the same are capable of application, apply to the preparation, revision and bringing into force of the said supplementary lists, there being substituted in such provisions inter alia for the Lieutenant Governor in Council the Governor in Council, for the registration clerk, the revising officer, and for the clerk of the executive council of the province the clerk of the Crown in chancery.

28. The Governor in Council may make such other provisions not inconsistent with this Act as he deems necessary to the full and effectual carrying out of the intention and object thereof.

29. The Governor in Council may fix the times to be allowed for any proceeding under this Act and, if he thinks proper, may shorten the delays prescribed by the said chapter 49 and amendments thereto with respect to any such proceeding.

30. The Governor in Council may fix the fees and allowances to be paid to officers and persons engaged in carrying out the provisions of this Act, which fees and allowances may be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Right to vote to persons on supplementary lists.

31. Every person whose name appears as an elector on any such preliminary voters' list as finally revised shall be entitled to vote at the election for the purposes of which the same was prepared in the same manner as if his name appeared upon the voters' lists designated by the Franchise Act, 1898, and amendments thereto, for use at said election.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all the affidavits and forms of declaration in connection with this Bill, are here. There are a great many of them, but I do not think it is necessary for me to read them, as I am taking up more time of the House than I really should. But I want to say in conclusion, that we have reason to thank Heaven that when this Bill was drafted there was in this government a Minister of Justice who would not allow such an iniquitous, such a nefarious, cruel, fraudulent act to be placed upon the statute-book of Canada. And to-day, I am sorry to say, we have a minister of injustice, as I claim he has been properly termed——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. I think the hon. member will see that it is hardly proper to apply such a term to a member of the House.

Mr. STAPLES. The reason I use it is that it has been used before.

Mr. SPEAKER. It should not have been used before, and if I had noticed it at the time I should have insisted on its withdrawal. I think the hon. member should not repeat the term and should withdraw it now.

Mr. STAPLES. Certainly, I withdraw it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Since the hon. gentleman has refreshed my memory, let me say this to him. He is aware that all Bills which are introduced by the government are first brought before council and discussed. Some are approved and some are not approved. When they are not approved, they are not brought down ; if they are approved, they are brought down. I have this to say to my hon. friend, that I have no recollection that this Bill was submitted to council, or to myself. I will inquire from my colleagues. If it was brought before council, it was not adopted. But so far as I remember it never was brought before council, and I do not think it was submitted to myself, either.

Mr. STAPLES. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the explanation of the right hon. gentleman. But I may supplement my remarks in regard to the preparation of that Bill by saying that Liberal lawyers in the city of Winnipeg, according to my information, assisted the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) to prepare the draft of that Bill. My information is that it was submitted to the Minister of Justice of that day, and he refused to accept it, he refused to single out the province of Manitoba and make special legislation concerning it. Now the right hon. gentleman has denied it, and I accept his denial that he never saw that Bill and that to his knowledge it was never printed. But neither the chief justice of Canada the hon. member for Brandon, I think, will say that a Bill such as I have read, printed on the same paper, printed with the same type, has come from the Printing Bureau down here. Therefore I say that the Bill was designedly drawn up by the ex-Minister of the Interior, or those who assisted him, for the purpose of gagging the people of Manitoba, or in other words, trying to steal, if I may use the expression, the seats of the province of Manitoba.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to see the Bill ?

Mr. STAPLES. Yes, but I want you to return it to me.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Most certainly.

Mr. STAPLES. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have a lot more material that I might use. During the debate a few nights ago I interjected a remark across the floor of the House that I could give the names, and could prove that some 20 or 30 men actually——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The House is witness that I return the Bill to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. STAPLES. I thought the right hon. gentleman was going to say that he recognized the Bill when he got it in his hands. I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that I have further material, and that I am prepared to prove the statements I made regarding the thin red line, that fraud was committed by Mr. Leach, the late organizer for the province of Manitoba. But as I will have an opportunity of speaking on an amendment to this Bill which will undoubtedly come up, I will reserve those remarks and speak on the amendment. But in conclusion I want to say this, Mr. Speaker, that we, the citizens of the province of Manitoba, cannot understand how it is that the right hon. gentleman is so anxious to get a slap at that little province. Why, Sir, it seems to be his delight to refuse the province of Manitoba a foot of its land, a stick of its timber, and as I said before, a fish that floats in the waters of that province. Why he refuses to extend the boundaries of Manitoba we cannot understand. Therefore, I appeal to the right hon. gentleman. I appeal especially to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Greenway), the ex-Premier of Manitoba, and the contingent of Liberal members from that province which he leads in this House, to take the stand he took in by gone days and to say, hands off the province of Manitoba, equal rights, equal justice to all. I say that is what the citizens of Manitoba expect from the hon. member for Lisgar, that is what the province of Manitoba expects from every other member who sits on the government side of the House. True, numerically, on this side of the House the members from the province of Manitoba are weak, but physically they are strong and, for my part, I purpose to stay here and fight this Bill so long as I have an opportunity before I allow the right hon. gentleman to foist upon the people of the province of Manitoba any such iniquitous provisions as are laid down in certain clauses of Bill No. 115. We, on this side of the House, fall behind our leader in the remarks which he has uttered, we are prepared to stand by him, and, I know he is prepared to stand by us, therefore, all I ask for the little province of Manitoba is that she shall have justice, British fair play, that she shall not be discriminated against, that she shall be placed upon the same plane as her sister provinces, that she shall be given the same status in confederation as all the other provinces in this Dominion and if these things are granted we will be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that we have all enjoyed the very amusing speech made by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples) this afternoon, but I do not believe it is worth taking up very much of the time of the House to follow him in any detail. He has travelled from confederation down to the present time and has tried to present the real or imaginary wrongs which he thinks Manitoba has suffered at the hands, not of this government, but at the hands of his own party. When he talks about lands, when he talks about mines, when he talks about the area and boundaries of the province of Manitoba and when he talks about the fish that float in the waters this government had nothing to do with these things, but the things of which he complains were done when his own friends were in power. But there is one thing which the hon. gentleman has referred to which, in my mind, is very pertinent. He spent nearly half of his time, in fact, I think more than half, in trying to prove to this House and the country that an attempt was made by the government in 1903 to correct the wrongs, at least the alleged wrongs, which existed in the province of Manitoba at that time and which certain members on this side of the House contend exist at the present time. He has delved into the archives of some of the public departments at Ottawa and has produced an original document which he has placed upon the pages of 'Hansard' and which he says is a Bill which was prepared for the purpose of providing for a special revision of the voters' lists in Manitoba in 1903. He tried to fasten this upon the knowledge of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who has denied that he knows anything about it, and I do not think that there is any hon. member of this House, or any person in Canada, no matter what his politics may be, but who will agree that the Prime Minister is telling the truth when he says that he has no recollection of it. The important question is not whether the right hon. Prime Minister knew about this Bill, but the important fact is that in 1903 a condition of affairs existed that justified some person in attempting to pass legislation which would remedy that condition of affairs. To my mind that was the important question in 1903, and it is the important question in 1908. There has certainly been an agitation going on in the province of Manitoba for the last six years. That agitation has culminated in the introduction of the Bill which we are now discussing, and for a short time I wish to discuss the Bill as I view it, giving, to some extent, the reasons why I think it is necessary to introduce this Bill and the reasons why this Bill should become law. The arguments which have been addressed to this House by hon. members from the province of Manitoba, and I think nearly every hon. member from that province has taken part in this discussion, seem to show that there is existing to-day a state of affairs in regard to the voters' lists which does not exist in any other province in Canada, and which, if it did exist in the eastern portion of Canada, would lead almost to a riot. Imagine for a moment a man in the province of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or Ontario being compelled to travel 60 miles to have his name put on the voters' list. Some hon. gentlemen from the province of Manitoba have stated that men are compelled to travel 100 miles to get their names on the voters' list. What would be said in the eastern provinces if people were subjected to an indignity and an inconvenience of that kind ? As was stated by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) last evening, one of the great difficulties which people who take any interest in the preparation of the voters' lists have to contend with is the apathy of a great many voters in looking after the revision of the list and seeing that their names are placed upon it. If people in eastern Canada had to travel five miles to get their names put on the voters' list, in a good many cases there would be lots of names lacking from these lists. They would not go at all, as an hon. member says. But that is a matter that I will discuss a little later on. Before the present government came into power in the province of Manitoba there was an election law which our friends, then in opposition, now in control of the government, claimed to be unfair. I am not going to argue whether that law was fair or not. I am only mentioning it to show that there has been difficulty in the province of Manitoba for many years over the franchise. The cardinal features of that law, however, were that the government appointed registration clerks and that these registration clerks sat continuously at certain places in the province, or their offices were open continuously for four weeks. During that time they would receive applications to add to or strike names from the lists. Then an interval of six weeks must elapse between that and the revision courts, and during that time these preliminary lists were posted in public places in the constituency, in the post office, in the court house and in other public offices. Municipal officers, members of parliament and defeated candidates, both federal and provincial, received a copy of these lists and they had six weeks within which to file their protests and to have the lists cleaned up by revision. Our friends, then in opposition in the province of Manitoba, stated that when they came into power they would change that law and would pass a law which would work out more to the advantage of the people and which would be an improvement upon the law existing at that time. They came into power, I think, in 1899, and in the year 1902 they passed a franchise law which has been admitted by members on this side of the House to be fair, and which I must say appears to be fair. I am not going to give all the particulars of it, but the underlying principle of the law of 1902 was that a registration board, I think it was called, consisting of the county court judges, appointed the registration clerks and then they also assigned to themselves certain districts in which they sat as revising officers. But, Sir, here is where we commence to see the fine hand of the politician in Manitoba, because, while the board had the right to appoint the registration clerks, the government, by order in council, took upon themselves the right to say when, where, for how long and under what conditions these registration clerks should sit. I am bound to say that in the year 1903 there seemed to be a goodly number of places at which people could apply to have their names added to the list. I am not going to weary the House by reading extracts. I have a list prepared by my hon. friend the member for Dauphin which gives the number of days, the number of places and the registration clerks in each constituency in Manitoba from the year 1903 to 1908. Just here I want to point out a few inconsistencies and a few of the reasons why my hon. friends claim that the law was unfair. In the constituency of Arthur there were in 1903 nine places at which people could register their names before the clerks and in 1905 that number was reduced to one, and the registration clerk sat only on one day. The trouble, as I understand it, is not in the law of 1902, but in the administration of the law, and I think I might go as far as to say that there is not very much fault with the law of 1904. The fault is with the administration. Under the Manitoba franchise law of 1902, which is said to be fair, and which would look to me to be fair from reading it, acts were done and things happened which would not be tolerated for a moment in eastern Canada. Even under that Act of 1902, which appears to be fair, things happened and conditions existed in 1903 in Manitoba, by the manipulation of the politicians there, which made that election one of the most unfair that has ever taken place in the political history of Canada. Proof after proof has been given by hon. members on this side of the House that hundreds of people applied at these registration booths and were unable to get access when the supposed legal hour for closing expired and were deprived of their franchise. Again, by the Act of 1902 all foreigners who had not been in the country for seven years and who could not read the Manitoba Act in one of a number of languages were disfranchised, with the result that many Galicians were not put on the voters' list.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If the hon. gentleman means what he says: that unless a man could talk in one language he was disfranchised, that is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. CARVELL. If the hon. gentleman will listen to what I say he will not need to interrupt me. I did not say they had to speak in one language. I said a number of languages. I think it was five.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Then you are all the more wrong.

Mr. CARVELL. The hon. gentleman knows I am not wrong for he knows that by the legislation of 1902 unless a foreigner could speak in one of four or five languages he could not exercise the franchise.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You are getting right now, but that is not what you said first.

Mr. CARVELL. I wish only to state the facts. I will give a few more instances of how this beautiful law worked out in 1903 and I am basing my statements on evidence that has been furnished by members of this House, and if only one-half of that evidence is right it affords the best justification in this world for this parliament interfering. At Balsam Lake on the eastern shores of Lake Winnipeg in the county of Selkirk one of these registration clerks held his court—he was one of those supposedly fair registration clerks appointed by the county court judges—and he wrote back to his friends that nobody applied but some Grits, and you bet I did'nt put their names on the list. It is stated that twenty-eight men were refused registration in this way at Balsam Lake, and it is admitted by gentlemen opposite that seven who were qualified voters were refused admission to the voters' lists, and such was the scandal that at the next session of the legislature the Conservative government passed an Act to specially enfranchise these seven men. Think of the like of that happening in eastern Canada. Again, at a place called Lac du Bonnet, which was a small district some thirty or forty miles from the registration place, the people could not leave their homes to come to the court, and the revising officer stated that if these people could not come to him he would be fair and go to them, and he went to them but he arrived on a date after the date fixed in the proclamation. He accepted the application of these men and placed thirty-eight of them on the list, and no one denies that every man of them was entitled to be a duly qualified elector under the law of Manitoba. But when the election came in 1903 these thirty-eight men were denied the franchise simply because the revising officer had tried to carry out what ought to be the spirit of the law. There has been an attempt made by gentlemen opposite to show that the county court judge gave a different certificate for this registration from that which he gave in other cases, but that only shows the iniquity of the law which would prevent these men going on the list simply because the judge happened to make a different kind of certificate from the usual certificate. The fault is in the law; it is in the people who are adminstering the law in Manitoba, and the whole process by which names are kept off the list or put on the list in that province is in need of being remedied. It is such things as that we complain about, and that is the reason why this legislation is introduced. Another instance, right in the city of Winnipeg a revising officer named Bonner closed his court while hundreds of people were waiting to be registered, and so great was the outcry raised by the Liberals and by the press and by fair-minded men generally, that the matter was taken to the courts on a writ of mandamus to compel this officer to open his court and give the people a chance to register, and in the Supreme Court of Manitoba in Regina verses Bonner (Volume 14, page 467) it was held unanimously by that court that the revising officer should have continued his court open and that he had the same right as a county court judge had to adjourn the sitting from day to day until the sitting was finished. On that branch of the case the court of appeal held that this man was wrong.

Mr. LENNOX. And the law right.

Mr. CARVELL. Yes, and I will say just now that because the law was right, at the next session of the Manitoba legislature the government took precious good pains to fix the law so that it would not be right again. Such was the agitation in Manitoba about this affair that this Bonner even applied for an order of contempt of court in regard to what the newspapers were saying about him and the judges rightly held he was not entitled to any such protection. The case was dismissed without costs. In all these matters, while the court had to held that Bonner was wrong, they gave no costs to anybody. But the contemptible part of it, one of the things that makes it necessary for this parliament to intervene, was the fact that this man was allowed, with the connivance of the authorities of the government of Manitoba, between the time the application was made for the mandamus and the time fixed for the hearing, to return his papers, and thus give up all power to hold any revision; and consequently there was nothing to be gained by the court ordering the mandamus to issue. That is only a sample of the way the Conservative party manipulated things in Manitoba.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Will the hon. gentleman kindly say to the House who appointed Mr. Bonner revising officer?

Mr. CARVELL. As I understand, by the law of 1902 it was the county court judges. I am admitting that that law appears on its face to be fair; but by the orders in council which the Manitoba government passed, when it came to be worked out, it was most unfair. These are a few of the things that happened in 1903. The agitation in the province became so great that the legislature at the next session had to try to pass legislation to meet some of these cases. I am going to show what they did. They practically repealed the law providing for the registration of voters. All the sections, I think, from 22 to 99 were repealed, and new sections enacted in lieu thereof; and while I am not going to say that this is absolutely a new law, I am going to say that it is new in principle. Very many new principles were introduced into the Act which made it even worse than it was before. The cardinal change was in regard to the appointment of registration clerks. Prior to this amendment the registration clerks were appointed by the county court judges; but by the legislation of 1904 that power was taken away from the county court judges and was placed in the hands of the Governor in Council, so that the registration clerks in Manitoba to-day are the appointees, the loyal supporters, in many cases the active workers, of the Manitoba government. The government also took to themselves the right to say when and where registration clerks were to sit, how many there should be in a constituency, how long they should sit and the dates and times they should sit. And remember, these registration clerks were not in the position of county court judges, and therefore, when the government prescribed that they should sit at certain places till five o'clock, when five o'clock came their jurisdiction was gone. I want to be fair to the hon. member for Marquette, who first brought up this matter. When he was delivering his speech, and I must say that it was an able speech from his standpoint, he pointed with a good deal of pride to the fact that by a certain section of this law the registration clerks could sit after the clock struck the hour in certain cases; and I submit that the hon. gentleman tried to leave the impression on the House that notwithstanding that the time had been fixed by the order in council for the closing of the registration office, yet the registration clerk had the right to go on and finish up the business. If that was the intention of the hon. gentleman it was most unfair. That was the impression made on my mind, and I am satisfied that it was the impression made on the mind of the Prime Minister, because immediately afterwards he referred to it; but when you come to analyze the clause of the Act with regard to that, you find that it was only the persons present at the time the clock struck the hour for closing the registration office who had a right to have their grievances heard. The section with regard to that is section 26, subsection a, which I will read, so that there may be no misunderstanding about it:

The registration clerk shall receive all applications of electors for registration, the striking off names of electors from the list, and for the correction of names on the list, who are present for that purpose at the time fixed for the conclusion of the registration sittings, notwithstanding that such applications are, in point of fact, received by the registration clerk after the hour of closing the registration sittings aforesaid.

My hon. friend said: here is the evidence that no man is going to be shut out from having his name put on the list. But my hon. friend took good care, when quoting the law of the province of Manitoba, not to quote section 48, subsection d, and I am going to read it for the benefit of my hon. friend. It says:

The following persons shall be entitled to be present at sittings of the registration clerks for the purposes of this Act:,

(d) Any person desirous of being present as a spectator; provided that no more than twelve persons, other than the persons before mentioned and officers in attendance, shall be entitled to be present at the same time.

When the legislature of Manitoba found that injustice had been done and that public sentiment had been created to such an extent that they had to do something to amend this law, pretending to be fair they provided that the registration clerk should have jurisdiction to go on and take the applications of all present at the time of the closing of the court, but they put in that rider that there could be only twelve persons in the room at that time. I ask hon. gentlemen again, if they call this British fair play.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. They need not necessarily stop at five o'clock. Twelve could go on after five o'clock.

Mr. CARVELL. Twelve could go on, but suppose there were one hundred?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That has not occurred.

Mr. CARVELL. It occurred in Winnipeg, and it occurred all over the country. I will come down to 1905 and show what occurred. I am going to refer to the press reports that appeared in Manitoba at the time these things happened, and I presume that there must have been foundation for these reports or they would not have been published. Here is the heading of a Winnipeg paper, I presume the 'Free Press,' of June 2, 1905:

Hundreds of electors deprived of their votes. The one-day, one-place registration worked out as expected—citizens had to stand in line for hours to register. In South Winnipeg the law was ignored in interests of fair play. Hundreds unable to get access to booths—lively scenes—indignation at St. Boniface—registration elsewhere.

Then it goes on to give other particulars under these headlines. It was estimated that hundreds of people were prevented having their names put on the lists simply because the time limit fixed by that government was not sufficient for the work to be done. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite try to make the country believe that no one was deprived of the right of having his name registered on the list. A resolution was read here the other day, which I need not read again, from the labour council, in which the labour council claimed that hundreds of people were unfairly dealt with and were prevented having their names put on the list, and that council asked in strong terms for an amendment to the law. That was in 1905, and it shows how unjustly this law has worked out by order in council. In 1903-1904 there was a fairly good chance to put names on the lists, but in 1905 there was only one registration place in every county in Manitoba. Think of it—and that for only one day or a portion of one day.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Does the hon. gentleman say that there should have been just as many days for registration in 1905 as there was in 1903?

Mr. CARVELL. Most certainly. The very iniquity of the law is now being voiced by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I do not suppose I am allowed to explain why there should not be, but I ask the question whether there was the same need for as many days of registration in 1905 as there was in 1903. Everybody knows there was not.

Mr. CARVELL. I am surprised that my hon. friend has the nerve to ask that question. What is the difference between an election list in 1903 and one in 1904 or 1905? Does my hon. friend not know that there is liable to be a by-election any day, that a man is liable to die and the constituency he represents liable to become vacant? That interruption only shows the perverted minds of the Tories of Manitoba. I want to tell my hon. friend how we do these things in the east. We have there a revision every year—an honest, full and complete revision. I would like my hon. friend to come down there and say to the municipal authorities in any district: Oh, there is not going to be an election this year, and therefore there is no reason to revise the lists.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is not my reason at all.

Mr. CARVELL. That is the only inference any reasonable man can draw from my hon. friend's utterance. Because there was not an election in 1905, he says there was no necessity for a complete revision.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is not my reason. Give me one minute only and I will explain.

Mr. CARVELL. You may ask any question you have a mind to.

An hon. MEMBER. Never mind him.

Mr. CARVELL. It only shows what a perverted idea the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) has regarding the preparation of the voters' lists. His idea is that the voters' lists exist by and for the Tory party only, and should be prepared only when the Tory party wants to use them, and the ordinary elector or the ordinary man who happens to be a candidate has no right whatever. And it is because of this perverted idea that this parliament is asked to interfere and remedy this condition and so arrange that every man will have a fair show to be put on the lists. There is another reason which I may give and which my hon. friend need not accept, but it is the reason why this unfair advantage was taken, why there was only a chance given on one day at one place in a whole county for the putting on or striking names off the lists. And that reason was that the election of every Liberal except one was protested, and if those election trials went on, in all probability they would be settled in 1905, and by-elections would have to be held, and the Tory party did not want any chance given to have names put on the voters' list.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Were not also the elections of six Conservative members protested, and how therefore could there be any discrimination?

Mr. CARVELL. The whole object of the Manitoba Act was discrimination. Its whole object was to give the Conservatives an unfair advantage over the Liberals. This seems to be what my hon. friends opposite have at heart.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You have not been posted right.

Mr. CARVELL. I will take the responsibility of whatever I say, and you need not blame it on my friends in Manitoba.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. They had to stuff the lists if they wanted to keep in office.

Mr. CARVELL. There is another thing which my hon. friend from Souris dilated on yesterday, and he thought he had found a panacea which could be applied to any disease in the electoral body of Manitoba. When the right hon. the First Minister was speaking, my hon. friend could not contain himself and he asked the right hon. gentleman to read section 61. My right hon. friend did read section 61, and it would have been well for the hon. member for Souris if he had taken some advice from his legal friends before making that request. He had in his mind that this section 61 gives the county court judges power to enlarge the time in which to do any act regarding the preparation of the lists or the carrying on of elections in Manitoba. That evidently was his idea because that is the substance of what he said. Well, sections 22 to 51 inclusive deal with the registration clerks alone. Then from section 51 down to section 70, they deal with the revising officers, and let me point out that the revising officers are not necessarily county court judges. By a proclamation issued every year in the month of May, the government of Manitoba creates the county court judges a court of revision, but this court of revision has the power to appoint barristers of not less than three years standing to act in the place of the judges and carry on the business of registration, and they are called registration officers, and while they are sitting as such, they have the same powers as county court judges. But my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) will not claim that a man sitting as a revising officer is a member of the board of registration. I do not think the hon. member for Souris will claim that a revising barrister is a member of the board of registration, and it is only the board of registration which has the power to extend the time. Let us get down to a concrete example. The revising officer is holding his court, and according to the order in council that court ceases to exist at six o'clock. When six o'clock comes, has he the power, under section 61, to extend the time? Not by any means. Has he the power to extend anything? No. Let me tell you what section 61 means. It means that after the Governor in Council have provided that a court will sit, say in Souris, for one day, from one to six in the afternoon, if the Board of Revisers think that time is not sufficient, they will have, before the revision takes place, the right to extend the time. If they think that sufficient time is not given between the close of the registration clerks' court and its opening, then they have the right to extend the time for their sittings. And I assert again that they have no power whatever over the registration clerks, they have no power whatever sitting as independent judges or revising officers to extend the time.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I never said they had.

Mr. CARVELL. But my hon. friend (Mr. Schaffner) implied that. He read this——

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I said the revising officers.

Mr. CARVELL. I wish my hon. friend would possess his soul in patience until I am through, and then he will have his opportunity——

Mr. PUGSLEY. He admits that you are right.

Mr. CARVELL. Of course, he admits that I am right. And he knows that the only logical effect of his arguments and his quotations was that something else——

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I rise to a point of order. I never admitted that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) was right, and I never said that this applied to the registration clerks.

Mr. CARVELL. The point is not well taken, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. gentleman admits that this is the only logical conclusion of what he did say.

Now, I think I have pretty well exploded the hon. gentleman's theory concerning section 61. Let us see now some further effects of this law of 1904. When the hon. member for Marquette was speaking, to show that there was no injustice in this case, that the law had been devised to meet every emergncy and——

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) would allow me, before he leaves the point with which he was dealing, I would like to refer him to the speech of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) on this point wherein he speaks of section 42. First the right hon. gentleman quoted the section as follows:

In case, by reason of interruptions or other emergency a sitting of the registration clerk is not commenced on the proper day, or is interrupted after being commenced and before the closing thereof, the registration clerk shall resume the registration on the following day and so on from day to day within the hours hereinbefore limited, until the registration sittings have been opened and kept open without interruption, and with free access to persons desiring to be registered, for the full number of days provided in the proclamation to be issued under the provisions of this Act. The times limited for the registration of electors shall be directory only, and any mistake or miscarriage in respect thereto shall not invalidate the list of electors of any electoral division.

After quoting this. the right hon. gentleman proceeded :

This seems to be perfectly fair, I have nothing to say against it. On the contrary I would altogether commend it. It provides that if the registration clerk, within the time allotted to him by the proclamation of the lieutenant governor, has not sufficient time to hear all the applications or to erase names or to do all the work he is commanded to do, he can extend the time.

Mr. CARVELL. The quotation of my hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche) only shows the danger of laymen undertaking to interpret law. My hon. friend knows the English language well enough to know that that only provides that, in case something has happened by which the five hours, or whatever it may be, allotted by the Governor in Council has been interrupted, and the clerk has not been able to sit, he may sit the next day for the number of hours provided. The Prime Minister admitted that that was fair, and it is fair, as far as it goes. But my hon. friend knows—or, if he does not know, let him ask his leader (Mr. R. L. Borden) or any of the legal gentlemen on that side of the House—that I am right in my construction of the section and that it only means that if an interruption happens it is not to prevent the people having the five or six—or sometimes only two—hours granted by the munificence of this order in council, and that they may not be cheated of any portion of it. That is all it means. But the registration clerk cannot and will not extend the hour, and the hon. gentleman cannot find the section in the Manitoba law which says that the clerk can extend the time, or which allows him to do anything after the clock strikes except to take the applications of the twelve men who may be present at the booth to add their names to the list.

Now, I was going on, when my hon. friend from Marquette interrupted me, to refer to another provision which he referred to with great pride. He could not find the citation at first, though he said he knew that the provision was in the law; but his friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) looked it up and handed it to him. He quoted it in order to show the fairness of the law with regard to revising courts. The provision referred to will be found in section 65. subsection 11, and my hon. friend from Marquette read it with a great deal of pride and thought it settled the whole question. I think I can show him it does not settle as much as he thinks it does. It says :

The revising officer shall also receive and deal with the applications of all persons to be registered as electors who shall be present at the time fixed for the closing of the court of revision, notwithstanding that the hour so fixed shall have elapsed.

Now, Sir, that provision gives the revising officer the right to hear the applications of men who are present at the time the clock strikes. What for? To have their names added to the list, but not to strike names from the list. And, as if this were not explicit enough, in the same section, by subsection 9, this government of Manitoba has provided that :

No complaints or appeals shall be heard by a revising officer to strike names off the list of electors, unless applications therefor have been filed with the registration clerk as hereinbefore by this Act provided.

I stated a little while ago to an hon. gentleman on this side that I would show that the legislature of Manitoba, by their Act of 1904, not only did not extend the privileges granted under the previous law, but actually curtailed them, that if it corrected vices which existed in 1903, it actually made it harder for people to get a fair revision than it had been before. Now, the compaint from Manitoba members on this side of the House, as I understand it, is not so much of the impossibility of having names added to the list as of the impossibility of cleaning up the list; and my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner), I think, gave the best illustration that has been given in this House of the unfairness of this feature of the law. I have not the citation here. but I can come within a hundred of his figures, and that is near enough when you talk of taking names off the list by the thousand. The hon. gentleman, in attempting to show the unfairness of the Greenway law, said that in the revision early in 1889 or 1900, if I remember well, something like 2,500 names were struck off the list in the city of Winnipeg alone.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I rise to a question of privilege. The time to which I referred was before this government came into power at all.

Mr. CARVELL. I will take the hon. gentleman's word for that. But he said that they had succeeded in striking off 2,500 names, and this he cited as evidence of the injustice of the Greenway Act. Then came a remarkable admission. He went on to say that, in 1903, there were ten or fifteen names struck off; the next year ten or fifteen names struck off. And for this whole time up to the present he was only able to show that less than a hundred had been taken off the list. What greater condemnation do you want of this law and the manner of its administration than this statement of the hon. member for Souris? The whole burden of the cry of the representatives of Manitoba is that they cannot get names struck off the list. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) stated that in his division the only way they could get the list cleaned up was by agreement between the parties. So, let us see where we stand: You have a registration clerk, sitting we will say in the centre of a constituency which may be forty miles square—as distances run out there I think they would easily be as large as that. I am asking my hon. friends from the east to consider that situation of affairs. You have a man sitting there, we will say, in the centre of a district forty miles square. He says, I will sit here for two, or three, or four or five hours, if you will; come now with your applications. Consider that under those circumstances the whole county is being compelled to come to that one point. He says: Come on now with your applications to have the names struck off the list. You have a list of 400 or 500 names who do not belong there, and you have possibly two hours, in any case not more than five hours, to do all this work.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would it take more than five minutes at the most to file the applications.

Mr. CARVELL. But you have to take evidence, you have to see that these people have the right to come there. You have to take evidence in order to get the names on the list.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman misunderstands me. I understand his complaint to be that you could not get the names off. Why, it would not take more than a minute or two to file a hundred applications.

Mr. CARVELL. It is not the question of time, it is the fact that a man has to travel 30 or 40 miles in order to get there.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is there no party organization by which anybody on behalf of the party can put in a hundred names all at once ?

Mr. CARVELL. No, the merits of the case have got to be tried. I am speaking of adding on names, and every man going there himself, unless he is sick.

Mr. LANCASTER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, I thought he was speaking of the trouble of striking off names.

Mr. CARVELL. I am speaking of both. I am showing the unfairness of asking people to go 30 or 40 miles to get their names on, and I am also showing that unless they do go there and are present during those two hours, and unless they happen to be one of the 12 lucky men who are inside the registration booth at the time the clock strikes the hour, then they have no chance to file an application to remove names from the list. And if they do not get the chance, then I say that under this beautiful law which the hon. gentleman wants to perpetuate, the revising officer has no jurisdiction to receive applications afterwards in his court to strike a name off the list in Manitoba to-day, so I am informed. It has been stated here by hon. members, and is not denied by the opposition, that there are thousands of names on the lists which have no right to be there.

Now I will not dwell any longer upon this specific instance of unfairness in the law, excepting to show what has taken place at the revision which is going on at the present time. Now there was an investigation before a committee of this House, I think in 1906, where evidence was given by both parties as to the condition of affairs in Manitoba at that time. It was known by the Conservative party in Manitoba two months ago that this Bill was going to be introduced and brought up for discussion. Now they are wily politicians, and the moment they found that their acts were going to be brought under the limelight and criticised by the people of Canada, the moment they found that remedial legislation was going to be enacted, then they become virtuous, and then hon. gentlemen opposite from that province stand up and say, see how virtuous we are to-day, look what we are doing to-day, why, we are giving you 6, 10, 12, 14 registration districts in each constituency, we are giving you two days in most cases for revision courts when you had only one before; we are giving you everything you ought to have, and everything that a reasonable man could ask. Also their leading Tory paper comes out with a challenge that they will give $25 to any man who fails to get his name on the list and complies with all the provisions of the Manitoba law. Well, why did they not make that challenge five years ago? The trouble was that the poor fellow could get no chance to comply with provisions of the law.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. We have made the challenge retroactive.

Mr. CARVELL. Well, I have not seen that part of the challenge, I have seen the challenge which says they will give $25 to any man who fails in this revision to get his name on the list. Now I want to show what they have done in the division represented by my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford), in their management or mismanagement of this application. We find that it is an impossibility to appeal against names added or proposed to be struck off, in at least I think two districts in his constituency. We have shown that by the law there must be at least five days elapse between the close of the registration court and the opening of the revision court. I think there must be one or two days for handing in the lists to the revising officer, and the revising officer must give at least three days notice to a person against whose name there is an appeal. Their orders in council show that there are only three days between the last day for the sitting of the registration court and the revision court. Now I ask how is it possible to appeal against a name added, or to appeal against striking a name off the list, under those circumstances. Oh, they say, that is a mistake, and that is the reason why this law should be erased from the statute-book. Well, Sir, I say that if you have a law in Manitoba by which it is possible for a mistake like that to be made then you have abundant evidence that it is right and just for this parliament to intervene in order to cure the evil, so far as we are concerned, and to provide a law that will be fair, just and equitable to all parties concerned.

Now I want to discuss the thin red line matter, because if I do not they will say that we are afraid of that. There has been a good deal of discussion in the province of Manitoba and in the newspaper press of Canada over this thin red line. I think probably outside of Manitoba there has been more discussion over the red line than there has been over the unfairness and iniquity of the law itself. We find that when the returning officers received the lists in 1904 for the Dominion elections, in a number of cases there was an overlapping of constituencies, that is to say, a portion of a local constituency would be included in a federal constituency. In the constituency of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie, we are told there are parts of seven local constituencies included, and there is not any entire local constituency included in the federal constituency. That is true to some extent in all the constituencies in Manitoba. My hon. friends opposite now do not deny the right of the returning officer to arrange these lists so that the proper persons may vote in their proper places. They admit that now, because they are compelled to admit it. The other evening the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said that in the prosecutions which followed the elections of 1904, there was no fraud, and no protest against fraud. You will find his remarks on page 8585 of 'Hansard,' but I will not trouble the House with reading them. He stated that there were no informations against returning officers for correcting overlapping lists, but for internal redistribution, I think I am giving the substance of his statement.

Now, Sir, I am sorry that neither my hon. friend from North Toronto nor any other member of this House has placed upon 'Hansard' the exact informations which were laid against these people. I admit that we people who are not on the ground are all discussing this question somewhat in the dark as far as that question is concerned, but I simply want to ask this question and I shall be glad if some hon. gentleman will answer it: If the informations were laid solely on account of fraud in redistributing internal constituencies why were these informations dropped? If these returning officers committed a fraud upon the public I do not think there is enough magnanimity and brotherly love in the Conservative party in Manitoba to drop such a beautiful chance of wreaking vengeance upon their opponents. If there was anything in these charges, if the thing was not a farce, why did they not go on with the prosecutions ? They have the sheriffs in their control, they have the juries in their control, they have all the machinery of the province of Manitoba, why did they not go on with the informations ? The only reason that has been given so far is that which has been given by the hon. member for Marquette who says : Oh, well, politics will creep in and you cannot get convictions. Of all the flimsy excuses I ever heard for dropping charges as iniquitous as this and charges involving such serious consequences this is certainly the flimsiest. I never heard such a flimsy excuse in my life put forward by a great political party to explain the action that it took upon that occasion. Any man from the east is forced to the conclusion that it was done for political effect. He is forced to the conclusion that these officers were arrested on election day in order to influence the election on that particular occasion and that when these arrests did not influence the election and did not defeat the Liberal candidates, the object for which they were brought about was gone. No offence against the law had been committed and all these gentlemen could do was to drag the cases on for two years from court to court until finally they were brought up against a stone wall and when Mr. Leach demanded that there should be a prosecution the atorney general of the province of Manitoba took the only course open to him, went to court and publicly entered a nolle prosequi in all cases.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. And then they distributed a few thousand dollars among their legal friends in Winnipeg.

Mr. CARVELL. That was only an incident.

Mr. HENDERSON. That was all right, was it not ?

Mr. CARVELL. They have a right to do that and if ever hon. gentlemen opposite are in power they will distribute a few thousand dollars among their legal friends as well. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was eloquent last night over the omissions from this iniquitous Act. He said that it was an outrage upon the rights of the people to allow constituencies to remain vacant beyond a reasonable time after the vacancies occurred. I know that because they did wrong it is no justification for doing wrong now, and I do not think that there has been wrong done, but I simply want to point to the inconsistency of this hon. gentleman. If there is an hon. gentleman in this House who is capable of being absolutely inconsistent it is the hon. member for North Toronto and the more inconsistent he is the more I admire the nerve of that hon. gentleman. That hon. gentleman can stand up and put forth a proposition which would cause any other man to be laughed down, but because of his record of inconsistency and because we know what he will do, he is allowed to go on and make these statements without protest. Did he, when he was a member of the Conservative government, ever protest against allowing a constituency to remain vacant for more than a fortnight ?

An hon. MEMBER. Answer that.

Mr. CARVELL. Did he ever allow a government official to go around the country for the benefit of the Conservative party and take part in elections ? Does he remember that when he was running an election in the province of New Brunswick in 1896 that they would send for another thousand shingles, shingles meaning passes on the Intercolonial Railway, in order to bring Tory votes to the polls ? Does he remember that ?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. CARVELL. The hon. gentleman has a most convenient memory. I do admire his nerve every time he speaks. The first time I heard the hon. gentleman speak was when I was not more than ten years of age. I heard him addressing a temperance meeting and I thought it was the most magnificent speech that had ever been delivered up to that time.

Mr. FOSTER. Did it have any effect on you ?

Mr. CARVELL. It made me believe at that time there was only one great man in the world and that was George E. Foster. But I have been completely undeceived on many occasions since then. I have been deceived by this hon. gentleman's inconsistencies and when I hear this hon. gentleman standing up and finding fault with the Liberal party because they have allowed constituencies to remain open six months, when I hear him condemning them for allowing their officials to take part in elections and when I hear him charging this government with trying to bribe the constituencies with public works I am forced to exclaim : O, consistency, thou art a jewel. If you take the record of the hon. gentleman and the party which he practically leads and consider what they did for the eighteen years during which they were in power no man can do anything but admire the hon. gentleman when he can stand up and berate this government because they have not provided for certain things in this Bill. The hon. gentleman also waxed eloquent over the abolition of the secrecy of the ballot. There is no man in this House who will stand for the secrecy of the ballot more than I will and, in so far as the province which I represent and with which the hon. member for North Toronto is well acquainted is concerned, there has never been a protest from either Liberal or Conservative against the secrecy of the ballot. I think we can at least claim that in that respect matters have been straight and square on both sides. I would be the last person to vote for any measure that would in any way interfere with the secrecy of the ballot. But, the hon. gentleman knows, I have no doubt, that the object of this legislation is not to do what he says it will do. He knows that in the last general election in Wentworth the deputy returning officer at one of the polling subdivisions placed the numbers on the ballot instead of his initials, he knows that the result was to disfranchise the electors in that polling subdivision and he knows that the final result was that the election was voided and that a new election had to take place. He knows that there are irregularities in a great many constituencies throughout the Dominion of Canada. He knows that in one of the constituencies in the province of Ontario some years ago a returning officer placed certain marks on the ballots and the ballots were refused. He knows these things have happened in the past, he knows they are liable to happen again and he knows that the sole object of this clause is to provide that in cases of that kind, in the absence of fraud, the men who have gone to the polls shall not be disfranchised and the party for whom the votes are cast shall not be penalized unless there has been some fraud in the matter. My hon. friend must know that.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, I know that. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) out of courtesy, allow me to say one word ? I am just revising my speech and in the colloquoy which took place last night I had the wrong constituency in my mind. I was referring to Provencher in reference to the member who was sitting here and who, I said would not sit here except through the action of Mr. Leach and the returning officer. Not being thoroughly acquainted personally with the topography of the country I was misled in that way. I do not mean to say and I did not mean to say last night that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Jackson) sat here for that reason. It was the member for Provencher to whom I referred. What I should have said, to be perfectly correct, is that the hon. member for Selkirk sat here with a greater majority than he otherwise would have had had it not been for Duggan's action.

Mr. PATERSON. Is there anything else you want to correct ?

Mr. CARVELL.

Mr. FOSTER. When I come to it I will correct it.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I do not think there is anything on the record or in Duggan's evidence which will justify the statement the hon. member has made, that I am sitting here with a larger majority than I otherwise would have. I would like to tell the hon. gentleman that although the fourteen names were left off the list they voted and their ballots were put in an envelope, and the voters did not lose their vote. I acknowledge that they were left off for some reason or other which we have not been able to find out, but they voted and my majority was not any larger through any action of Mr. Duggan.

Mr. CARVELL. On two occasions in his speech last night the hon. member (Mr. Foster) chastised members on this side of the House because they had not made their complaints about the unfairness of the management of this election law, before the legislature of Manitoba. I am not familiar with all that has taken place in the legislature of Manitoba but statements have been made here pro and con as to what was said by Mr. Mickle when the Bill was introduced in the legislature and with that I will not deal now. I want to refer to one matter which was laid before the legislature of Manitoba within the last two months and I will show the kind of satisfaction that any Liberal member gets in that legislature when he tries to complain against the electoral law. At a revision held some time in 1906 or 1907, at a place called Macinac. application was made for the removal of six names from the list, and three were Liberals and there were Conservatives. Two Liberals had removed out of the country for a number of years and two Conservatives left the country after they did. Then there were two other men, McLaren and Thibeau who had been station agents in that locality and McLaren had left three years before the revision and was succeeded by Thibeau who left the country about three months prior to the holding of the court. McLaren was a Conservative and Thibeau was a Liberal. Under the law of Manitoba all six of these men should have had their names removed from the lists, and it was understood by Mr. Campbell a member of the legislature who was present that the names were to be removed. But when the list was sent to Winnipeg and issued from the office of the King's Printer we found that the three Liberals were removed from the list and the three Conservatives allowed to remain on. During the last session of the local legislature Mr. Campbell from his place in the House referred to the matter and the attorney general and the Prime Minister of Manitoba became very indignant and Mr. Campbell was asked to withdraw his statement. He stated that if the papers were brought down and if it was found that Judge Ryan had not removed these names from the list and that Judge Ryan had done what the printed lists showed, then he would withdraw his statement. The discussion was published in the Winnipeg papers the next day and on the second day after, Mr. Campbell rose in his place on a question of privilege to discuss what the newspapers had said about his withdrawing his statement. But the moment he rose the premier raised a point of order on the ground that he was referring to a previous debate. The Speaker of course ruled with the premier and the attorney general and Mr. Campbell was refused permission to speak on the question of privilege. He then moved the adjournment of the House and at the same time he moved that all original applications to add to and strike from the lists be brought down, and he said : If you will bring down these papers I will show you whether the statement made by me was correct or not. And, Sir, can you believe that the Conservative majority in the legislature absolutely refused to bring down the papers although under the Act they were legally, or ought to be legally within the custody and control of the deputy provincial secretary. They did not deny and they could not deny that the papers were there, but by brute force they refused to bring the papers down and give Mr. Campbell a chance to justify his statement. They took the flimsy excuse that Mr. Campbell's action amounted to a charge against Judge Ryan. It is wonderful what those gentlemen will do when they want to protect themselves over the heads of others. They were very anxious to protect the judicial reputation of Judge Ryan, but they were a great deal more anxious to protect the unlawful acts of their own officials in leaving the Conservatives on the list and taking off the Liberals Had it not been for that the Manitoba government would be only too glad to bring down the original papers and transfer the charges from themselves to Judge Ryan.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Does the hon. gentleman make that charge ?

Mr. CARVELL. I state the facts as I have them here and I say these are the facts.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). You do not state all the facts

Mr. CARVELL. I say it is another evidence of the impossibility of the Liberals in the Manitoba legislature getting justice from the Conservative majority. I say it is another evidence of the necessity of this legislation, and it is another evidence that in one hundred and one ways the will of the people of Manitoba is burked by the resort to every conceivable trick known to the trade. It shows the futility of the Liberals going to the legislature of Manitoba to have any grievance redressed.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. gentleman is ignorant of the fact that the attorney general produced the original list that was revised by Judge Ryan which showed that Mr. Campbell was entirely wrong and Mr. Campbell apologized.

Mr. CARVELL. I will not apologize. I will state that two nights before, the attorney general brought down a detached sheet and handed it round among the members but he did not produce the original document except that one sheet which he passed round among his friends, and my hon. friend (Mr. Roche) knows it.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong in saying that the Attorney General did not pass around the correct document and that I know it. I say quite the contrary, that I know that the Attorney General produced the original voters' list signed by Judge Ryan.

Mr. CARVELL. If the hon. gentleman is right, why do they not bring down the original, and let the Liberals see it. I notice that when I get on to some thing pretty vicious, my hon. friend always gets on his feet. Now, I have only this further to say, that I have no hesitation in voting for this Bill as it stands, though it does not go as far as I would like to see it go. I would like to see the principle of personal application entirely eliminated from every election law in the Dominion of Canada, except perhaps in cities and towns. I want to ask my hon. friends from the east what they would think of asking that a farmer's son who has just come of age should be compelled to travel even five miles to a registration court to get his name put on the list ? He would not do it. Compare this cumbersome system which the Conservative government of Manitoba have worked off on that province, with the simple system that prevails in any of the provinces of eastern Canada. For instance, in the province of New Brunswick, the two county councillors for a parish, which means the same thing as a township in other provinces, and one member appointed by the government meet on or before the 10th of September, and they take any means of information they have—the voters' list of the year before, the oath of any one who comes before them, or their own knowledge—and they make up a preliminary voters' list, and post that for something like six weeks in three of the most conspicuous places in the locality. Then they give notice that between the 20th and the 25th of October they will meet at a certain place to complete the list. They meet, and if anyone wants to have a name struck off or put on, he gives notice to that effect. But this is never done ; I do not believe there have been ten notices of this kind in ten years. They or other persons probably know every man in the parish, and if there is a name that should be on the list, they put it on, and if any man has moved away, they remove his name. Compare this simple, honest, inexpensive system with the system which the people of Manitoba are compelled to live under. I say again that I would like to see a commission of judges appointed to revise this list and eradicate from it as far as possible the principle of personal application. Surely in the rural portions of Manitoba the people themselves must know who are entitled to go on the list without compelling every labouring man or farmer's son to travel ten or fifteen or twenty miles to get his name put on the list. However, I am only offering this as a suggestion, and I hope the government will take it into consideration.

On the general principle of the Bill, the instances of unfairness which I have given are enough to convince me at least, they have convinced the government, and I believe they have convinced the opposition, of the necessity of a fair revision and some change in the present law. When the great Conservative party, which the hon. member for North Toronto told us last night was a party with a history, and that is true, and a party with a policy, and a party with a future, stand up in this House and say that by physical force they will stop the Supplies unless the government withdraw a Bill which is so fair that they offer to leave it to the county court judges to work it out, then I think this great party are carrying out their task with a vengeance. When they come to think the matter over, surely they do not want to be placed on record as refusing the fair and honourable offer made by the permier yesterday afternoon. If they take the responsibility of holding up Supplies and bringing upon this country all the consequences that that course will entail, that is for them to decide; but if they take that course, I do not think the Liberals of the Dominion of Canada will have very much cause to complain.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to follow the hon. gentleman into the many details which have occupied his attention while he has been endeavouring this afternoon to instruct the people of Manitoba as to the proper way in which to prepare their voters' lists. It is apparent that the hon. gentleman has come to the conclusion, very much to his own satisfaction at least, that the people of that province and their representatives in the legislature are not capable of framing laws under which the voters' lists shall be prepared for the provincial elections. The hon. gentleman seems to forget that under the policy deliberately adopted in 1885, by the party of which he is a member, and put into practice by that party in 1898, to the people of each province in Canada has been delegated the power to deal with the franchise, not only so far as provincial elections are concerned, but so far also as federal elections are concerned. He seems to forget also that not only by the terms of his leader's speeches in 1885 and 1898, but also by the exact terms of the resolution moved by his leader in 1885, to the provinces of Canada was to be confided the duty, and has been confided the duty, of preparing the voters' lists upon which members of this House are selected. Having regard to these facts, he sees fit this afternoon, in a speech full of sound and fury, if nothing else, to inform the people of Manitoba of the ignorance and ineptitude of their legislators, and to instruct them how the lists of that province should in his opinion be prepared. May I suggest to the members of this House that the speech which has just been delivered, shows the absolute absurdity of the government's proposal from the very first; because here we have 215 or 216 men, or as many of them as chose to be present for the purpose of hearing the hon. gentleman, listening to a long and somewhat rambling discussion which if proper at all, would have been proper in the legislature of Manitoba and not in the parliament of Canada. Is it to be pretended, under the principles which have been laid down by the Prime Minister of Canada, both since his advent to power and while in opposition, that the parliament of Canada is the proper tribunal to settle the franchise and to prepare the voters' list for the province of Manitoba? Why, every word, every motion, uttered or proposed by the right hon. gentleman, both in opposition and since his advent to power gives an absolute denial to the whole trend of the argument of the hon. member for Carleton.

The hon. gentleman dilated upon events that have occurred in Manitoba, by which, as he asserts, some persons who were entitled to be upon the list are not found there, and some persons whose names should be omitted from the list appear there. Let me point out to him and every hon. gentleman in this House that under any system, whether it is a system of registration or based upon municipal assessment, injustices of that kind are bound to occur. Let me point out that frauds are bound to occur under any possible system. Why, the hon. gentleman, in his discussion of the preparation of the voters' lists in the province of New Brunswick, did not see fit to mention—undoubtedly for reasons very satisfactory to himself—the stuffing of the Rothesay ballot lists to the extent of 400 names. I have a complete history of that most outrageous swindle under my hand. I shall not trouble the House with it today, but I venture to think that before the discussion is concluded we shall have occasion to refer to it more in detail. It is sufficient to say that a list which should have contained only ninety names, was found, when forwarded to the proper officers, to have had 400 names added to it; and from that day to this, although the matter was brought up in the legislature of New Brunswick and the government urged to take action by Mr. Hazen, the leader of the opposition and his supporters, no attempt whatever has been made to discover and prosecute the guilty parties and they have gone unpunished, to the infinite satisfaction no doubt of my hon. friend from Carleton.

Mr. CARVELL. Will the hon. gentleman not admit that the legislature took action the next session by striking those names from the list and providing by legislation against the possibility of such a thing happening again?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Yet the hon. gentleman complains against the Manitoba government for having done the same.

Mr. CARVELL. Because you did not remedy the wrong complained of.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman says it was remedied at the next session of the legislature. I understood that proceedings were taken, in the first place, in the courts, and that those proceedings had resulted in striking the names off the lists. I am under the impression that application was made to the Supreme Court of New Brunswick to have the 400 names struck off which had been added by fraud to those lists. I am under the impression that a motion was presented in the legislature of New Brunswick calling upon the Attorney General of that province, now a member of this government (Mr. Pugsley), to take action by way of investigation and have the guilty men punished, but nothing was done.

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friend is begging the question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to remind the leader of the opposition as well as my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) that the government of the day, of which the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) was then Attorney General, instructed counsel to appear on behalf of that local government in the case which was tried before the court, in order to uphold this stuffing of the lists.

Mr. CARVELL. The hon. gentleman is begging the question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought the hon. gentleman was sensitive about frauds. He is apparently sensitive about alleged frauds in Manitoba, but absolutely callous to frauds in his own province. Let me read to him, for his information, the language of the Chief Justice of the province of New Brunswick with regard to that particular incident. The Chief Justice said of the crime:

> For its enormity it is unparalleled in the history of this country and I should think that the law officers of the Crown, if there are any law officers of the Crown, ought to take some steps to bring the guilty parties to justice. These allegations are made, and it appears they are true, and I say then that some person has been guilty of forgery and perjury—some person has been guilty of an awful crime, the guilty persons are somewhere and ought to be punished. The proper list was given to Mr. Gilland and by some means it was altered and I think 400 names were added—it seems to me that it ought to be probed to the bottom and that the Crown officers ought to use what diligence is in their power to discover the offenders and if discovered they ought to be brought to justice.

Judge Landry said:—I think it is a very brazen attempt to commit a most serious violation of the law, and includes forgery, perjury and theft.

At the session of the legislature immediately following Mr. Hazen moved:

> That in the opinion of this House steps ought to be taken at once to discover, convict and punish the criminals.

Does my hon. friend from Carleton think that was a proper motion? Does he think it was one which should have commended itself to the government and legislature of New Brunswick?

Mr. CARVELL. Will my hon. friend be kind enough to answer me one question? Will he not admit that at the next session of the legislature, the non-residents voters' lists were absolutely abolished and consequently this non-resident list was abolished, and there are no such lists in New Brunswick to-day except at St. John?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not dispute what the hon. gentleman says if he asserts it. I was not dealing with that particular phase of the subject. I was dealing with the failure of himself and his political friends in New Brunswick to take any steps whatever to discover the perpetrators of this crime and bring them to punishment. I invite an expression of the opinion of the hon. gentleman upon the merits of Mr. Hazen's motion, but I am bound to say that, with unusual modesty, he does not see fit to vouchsafe an opinion to the House. Let me point out what action was taken by his political friends in New Brunswick. The motion of Mr. Hazen was amended by a majority vote and the amendment declared that the House 'expresses full confidence in the Attorney General and does not express any opinion as to what steps he should take.' Well, the Attorney General took no steps, and the men who perpetrated the fraud have gone unpunished from that day to this. I want to illustrate that particular instance for the benefit of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) and my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. Before the right hon. gentleman entered this House a moment ago, I declared and I declare again, that the speech just delivered by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) illustrates the absurdity of the position of the government in this matter. In that speech the hon. gentleman sought to convince 215 or 216 members of this House, gathered from all parts of Canada, that he knows best the proper method of making up the voters' lists for the province of Manitoba. We have the declaration of the right hon. gentleman himself, we have his motion in 1885 declaring that the people of the province of Manitoba are the proper judges of that, yet we have a long speech from the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) in which he seeks to instruct the people of Manitoba how they should make up their voters' lists. Apparently he knows far better than they how to meet these difficulties of time and place and method, and what steps are necessary, so far as the provincial voters' lists are concerned, to be taken by the provincial legislature. He wishes to convince this House that he knows more about these matters than the local legislature can possibly know. In saying that, I am not departing at all from the attitude we took in 1898, but I shall come to that a little later on. What I seek now to impress on the House is that when you once recognize and assert this principle, affirmed by the party now in power, that to the legislature of each province shall be confided the duty of preparing its own voters' lists as well as regulating its own franchise, it is utter folly for any man to go into the details of time and place and method and seek to convince the two hundred and sixteen members of this House that the forty or forty-five members from Manitoba are so absolutely ignorant of their local requirements that they should be instructed by us as to what is the best and most convenient method of dealing with this matter for that province.

Now, I will not follow my hon. friend into the details into which he wandered this afternoon. I want to come for a moment to some of the observations of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). That right hon. gentleman referred to the question of granting Supply. He laid stress upon the attitude of his party in 1885. But I did not observe that the incidents of 1896 were clearly present to his recollection. Perhaps, if he had been reminded of these, he would have been inclined to qualify a little the language which he used as to the attitude of the opposition in this regard. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was Finance Minister in 1896, and he has refreshed his memory by reference to the record. That hon. gentleman declares that in that year, the opposition in this country deliberately left Canada without one single dollar of provision for the public service after the 30th of June—there is no doubt about that. My hon. friend from North Toronto pleaded for two months' Supply in order that the public service might not suffer. And what was the answer? Men on the opposition side of the House, sitting behind the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) then leader of the opposition, shook their fists in his face and declared that he should not have one dollar to carry on the public service. So, if we are to go back to precedent, while it is well to refer to the precedent of 1885, we should not altogether forget that of 1896 as well.

Now, the right hon. gentleman seems to think that he has not been treated with absolute fairness in the quotations from his speeches of 1885 made by my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) and myself. I do not know of any word in the right hon. gentleman's speeches which qualifies the express declaration of his motion in 1885. That motion was as follows:

> In the opinion of this House it is preferable to continue the plan which has been adopted ever since confederation of utilizing for the elections to this House the provincial franchise and voters' lists.

That is absolutely plain, distinct and unqualified. The right hon. gentleman did lay especial stress upon certain words which were not quoted by my hon. friend from Prince Edward or by me, and they were not quoted because it did nt seem to us that in the circumstances brought to the attention of the House there was the slightest occasion for quoting them. But, as the right hon. gentleman has laid stress on these words, I will read them:

> But if the day comes when a fraud is committed against this parliament, when legislation of a hostile character is brought forward in the legislature, then it will be always open to this parliament to resume its own powers and to enact a franchise law of its own.

If these words are regarded by the Prime Minister as important, they merit a moment's attention. In the first place, the declaration is that this parliament may intervene when a fraud is committed against this parliament, when legislation of a hostile character is brought forward in the legislature. Where is the fraud in the legislation of Manitoba? Has any hon. gentleman on the other side—has the right hon. gentleman himself?—been able to point it out? of what fraud was he speaking? Was he speaking of a fraud against one political party or the other, or of fraud against the electorate as a whole? So far as any pretence of one or the other under the legislation of Manitoba is concerned, there is not the slightest foundation for saying that such a condition exists. If there is any inconvenience, if, as a necessary result of the legislation of the province of Manitoba, some names may be left off the lists which should be thereon, or some names may be included in the list which should not be included, I say that the legislation of Manitoba possesses that characteristic in common with the legislation of every other province in Canada touching the preparation of the voters' lists; and I will give my right hon. friend some illustrations from the province of Nova Scotia in that regard before I sit down. Then, the right hon. gentleman, in the concluding part of the sentence which has just been quoted, says that 'It will always be open for this parliament to resume its own powers and to enact a franchise law of its own.' I do not understand that the right hon. gentleman intended by that—though he may have a contrary impression—that the parliament of Canada was to have a franchise law of its own for one particular province or two provinces and was to confide to the legislatures of all the other provinces power to regulate their own franchise and prepare their own voters' lists.

Now, let us look a moment at the situation in the legislature of Manitoba. I have pointed out that, when the fraud to which I have alluded was committed in the province of New Brunswick, the leader of the opposition in the legislature, then Mr. Hazen, brought up the matter at once and asked that proper action should be taken by the government to bring to punishment the men who had been guilty of the crime. Does the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., (Mr. Carvell), does the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), suggest to the House that the Liberal members of the legislature of Mantioba are so absolutely devoid of intelligence, of courage, that they will not or dare not bring to the attention of the legislature of that province any defects which exist in the electoral law? Is that the meaning of the argument? Up to the present time, I have not heard any hon. gentleman state to the House any case in the legislature of Manitoba where any amendment has been brought forward and that amendment has been refused. Of what use is the party system in the province of Manitoba if the Liberal members of the legislature are not prepared to come forward and put upon record their opinions of this law so far as they regard it as defective and unjust and to ask that that injustice and those defects should be remedied? In the province of Nova Scotia, if my memory serves me correctly, we have, on more than one occasion, asked the government of the day, asked the legislature of the province, that the present appeal to the partisan sheriffs of the province should be done away with and that an appeal may be allowed to the county court judges in that province. And I say that the Conservatives of Nova Scotia today would acclaim, would hail with delight, any proposal to put in force in the province of Nova Scotia a measure so absolutely fair and reasonable as that which has been discussed so much in this House and which is to-day the law of the province of Manitoba. I have been surprised that so little fault could be found with this legislation of Manitoba. We know that the laws enacted by this parliament, even after most careful revision of two branches of the legislature, are over and over again found defective. We know that the government comes down every year with amendments. And this law, enacted by the legislature of Manitoba, under a Conservative administration has been subject to so little criticism that I say here that I believe there is not in the Dominion of Canada a single province which can show legislation more satisfactory, more fair and more effective than that which we have been discussing.

My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) refers to municipal lists, and he fixes his faith on municipal lists. Let me point out to him that there may be partisan officers who create lists under a municipal system. Let me point out to the right hon. gentleman that partisan officers appointed by a municipal council are not one whit more acceptable to the people than are partisan officers appointed by any provincial government. In the province of Manitoba registration clerks are appointed, as I understand by the government of the province. They discharge their duty when they examine the applications brought to them, and if they find that these applications are in accordance with the law, they then put the names upon the list. In the province of Manitoba the real fight must take place before the county judge, who is a judicial officer, whereas in the province of Nova Scotia it must take place before the sheriff, an officer appointed by the local government of the province. Let me read to the right hon. gentleman a criticism which I have in my hand, and which I asked for a few days ago from a Conservative in the province of Nova Scotia, a gentleman who has had a good deal to do with fighting voters' lists in that province. This by no means exhausts the information I have as to the injustice and errors that have taken place in the province of Nova Scotia, over and over again, under the municipal system for which the Prime Minister claims so much merit:

> By one of the provisions of the Nova Scotia Franchise Act, any male British subject of the full age of twenty-one years is entitled to have his name registered as a voter if assessed for $150 of real estate. A father can also qualify one son for each $150 that he may be assessed for, over and above the $150 required to qualify himself.

This provision carried into effect by Liberal officials has bedevilled the whole system of assessment in the province. Liberals are assessed for a qualifying amount whether owners or not and Conservatives where at all possible are assessed just below the qualifying amount.

Such cases as the following are very common. In Port George, Annapolis county, Willet Oliver bought a property and paid $17 for it. The next year it was assessed for $150.

The object, of course, a very obvious one, is to give a vote to this gentleman, who is I understand a good Liberal.

Last year a son of Oliver came of age without any qualifications as a voter unless his father could qualify him. Although Oliver's property had not changed at all in value, his assessment went up to $300. George Foster of the same place has for two or three years been assessed for $300. This qualified him and his son for registration. Last year another son became of age and the father's assessment was immediately raised to $450.

A father's property qualifications cannot qualify the son unless that son resides with him for at least eight months in the year. To overcome this the sons of Liberal fathers residing in the States are assessed as joint owners with their fathers. They can accordingly be registered although married and with families in the United States and without the slightest qualification here. Last election there were almost two hundred of such voters brought home to Annapolis county to vote for the Liberal candidate. They will not be back again until next election.

The Act places the revision of the lists in the hands of officers unacquainted with the construing of statutes and usually the most partisan men in the locality. Three revisers are appointed for each revisal section and are paid usually about $6 a piece. These men are supposed to administer a law which is full of ambiguities and is pre-eminently adapted to be interpreted in one way or another as party exigencies may demand, and there is nothing in the law to afford protection against the most glaring discrimination. In a section where there happen to be a Conservative assessors the assessment roll is not considered conclusive evidence of the qualification for registration, but revisers hold that they can go back of the Act and inquire into the value of the property assessed. Where the assessing happens to be done by Liberal assessors the assessed values are taken to be conclusive.

Each year on the 20th of January a preliminary voters' list is prepared and posted by the revisers. This is made up from last year's voters' list, the assessment roll and application to be registered. In preparing this the revisers are given a great deal of discretionary power as they are empowered to drop from the old list any name they think no longer qualified.

A most wide discretion is given to the assessors in that regard, and one of which full advantage is taken not unfrequently in Nova Scotia.

This means that the name of every Conservative for which there is the slightest excuse is dropped. If the Conservative whose name is thus dropped happens to notice the omission in time he may be able to prove himself on again at the revision court on the fifth of March, but as names are often dropped of the most eligible persons who are taken altogether off their guard, the omission often goes unnoticed, on the other hand names of Liberals when once registered are almost impossible to get removed.

I gave some illustrations the other day. In the city of Halifax, at the last general election there were dozens of men whose names had been dropped from the list. I cannot recall them all, but I remember two of them. Mr. John Y. Payzant, president of the Bank of Nova Scotia, a very large property owner in Halifax and Dartmouth, found his name absent from the list when the elections came on. George S. Campbell, one of the most prominent merchants in Halifax, also found that he had no vote in that election. Those are the only names I remember, but many others came to me and were intensely indignant to find that, although their names had been on the voters' lists for many years before that election, they were disfranchised, and there was absolutely no remedy.

From the decision of the partisan and biased revisers there is no appeal except to that of equally biased and partisan sheriffs. With one or two exceptions these men are appointed to their positions merely upon the ground of some party service and their former occupations was not such as to qualify them to interpret such an Act.

I do not desire to be understood as reflecting upon all the sheriffs of Nova Scotia. On the contrary, I may mention Mr. Donald Archibald, sheriff of the county of Halifax. Although a strong Liberal, and a Liberal candidate on many occasions, and a member of the legislature, he is as fair a man as there is in the Dominion of Canada. I have perfect confidence in his justice and in his integrity in every way. Unfortunately there are sheriffs in the province of Nova Scotia of whom that can by no means be said. There are sheriffs in the province of Nova Scotia who are regarded and I believe justly regarded, as absolutely part of the Liberal organization, of the Liberal machine, for the particular county in which they are appointed.

The most of them refuse to give their decision during the holding of their court for the reason that they would be then supposed to support their decision with argument. A notable case of this kind is sheriff Edwin Gates of Annapolis.

Arthur Carter of Deep Brook was last year assessed for over $500 but the revisers refused to register his name and an appeal was made to the sheriff. The assessment roll was produced to the sheriff who admitted that the name should be registered, but when the final list was filed with the county clerk the name was not on. Robert Craig applied to be registered at Midleton on income qualification. The revisers put him on although the law requires an income voter to register where he resides and Craig did not reside in this district. This was admitted before the sheriff and the name was decided to be dropped but it appeared on the final list.

I would like to mention in this connection that to such an extent has this evil gone in the county of Annapolis in particular, that men in that county, one man at least, brought an action a few years ago against the revising officer for intentionally omitting his name from the ist, and he got judgment for $200 and costs against the revising officer. Nevertheless he was disfranchised.

At Torbrook Mines in the same county fifteen miners made personal applications accompanied by affidavits showing qualification and were registered by the revisers. An appeal was made to the sheriff to have them struck off and in the absence of a tittle of proof the sheriff dropped these names.

At a trial of a reviser for failing to put into the sheriff original papers on an appeal, sheriff Gates admitted in September 1906, that he added the name of Millidge Best to the voters' list in polling district No. 1, notwithstanding that the name was ruled off by the advisers and no appeal was taken from the revisers' decision.

He gave as his excuse that he had received a letter from some one stating that Best was qualified.

That is the character of the judicial revision of the lists imposed upon the Conservatives of Nova Scotia. I would ask the right hon. gentleman in all fairness whether in view of all these illustrations he does not think that his attention should be centered to some extent upon Nova Scotia and that it should not be wholly devoted to the province of Manitoba where a Conservative governmet happens to be in power.

Very frequently names are found on the final lists which were never before the revisers court or the sheriff on appeal. It is impossible to tell who does this padding, whether it is the sheriff or the clerk in whose custody the lists are placed. In either event there is no punishment provided for the culprit who does it.

I have already said, under any system there will be injustice even without any intent to defraud, or at least that which you might call injustice. Men will not make their applications in time or some default of that kind will occur. My hon. friend from Carleton spoke of men whose names were not upon the lists in Manitoba, but he did not tell us what diligence these men had used to get their names upon the lists. It is impossible to make any statute which will provide against the negligence of voters or the inaction of the party to which they may happen to belong. So long as you find a statute which is clear and plain and ordinary reasonable upon its face, it does not seem to me there is any justification for interfering simply because a particular political party happens to be in power at the time being in any province.

My right hon. friend was pretty frank about his motive for interfering in this case, and I would direct the attention of the House to his argument at page 8572 unrevised 'Hansard' where he said :

But, Sir, I ask my hon. friends if they will not admit that although the legislation which to-day exists in Manitoba and the manner in which it is administered may be satisfactory to the Tories it is not satisfactory to the Grits, and that is the reason why we have introduced this legislation.

Well, that is a pretty plain and frank statement on the part of the Prime Minister, but after all what does it amount to? It amounts to this: The Liberal party moved a resolution in this House in 1885 that the principle of observance of the provincial voters' lists should be followed ; in 1898 they came into power and they put that principle into operation by placing the Dominion Franchise Act upon the statute-books, and then in 1908 they come to us not to make a new Franchise Act, not to revert to that policy which they condemned when in opposition and when in power as well, but to declare to this parliament that because under the legislation of Manitoba, under the administration of the government selected by the people of that province, the voters' lists are not satisfactory to the Liberal party, therefore this parliament of Canada shall legislate. To what result will that lead us in this country? When the Conservative party comes into power, assuming that the present system of provincial lists is adhered to, what would be expected of them? Are they to adopt the same principle ? With respect to the province of Quebec or the province of Nova Scotia if the government of these provinces should be Liberal, are the Conservatives in power at Ottawa to come to this parliament and say : We will leave British Columbia alone, we will leave Ontario alone, we will leave Manitoba alone because our friends are in power there but we will go into Quebec and Nova Scotia and make voters' lists of our own in those provinces. Is that the principle which my right hon. friend proposes in all seriousness as a principle which should be carried out by either political party in this country ? It does not seem to me it would make for good government. So long as you adopt this principle of provincial voters' lists, who are the best judges in respect of time and place and convenience and method in any province. Can the 215 members of this House judge better for the province of Manitoba, or of British Columbia, than can the people of these provinces by their representatives in the legislatures. If they can, why is it that the 215 members of this House cannot judge better for the province of Quebec and the province of Nova Scotia than can their legislatures.

I once more confess that I am utterly unable to discover any real considerations of public policy which could justify the government in proceeding with the first clause of this Bill. You must deal with the franchise either on one principle or the other. It was open to the rigtht hon. gentleman in 1898, and it is open to him still to adopt a Dominion non-partisan franchise and to give the preparation and final revision of the voters' lists all over Canada to the judges and to persons appointed by the judges in order that there might be no suspicion of partisan interference. That would be a perfectly intelligible principle for the hon. gentleman to proceed upon ; it is one which I could understand and I think appreciate, or it was open to him to adopt the principle which the right hon. gentleman did adopt in 1898 by giving to each province in Canada the full right to determine the franchise and prepare the voters' lists not only for the election of members to the provincial legislature, but for the election of members to this House as well. There are the two systems, and the latter system has been adopted by the government. Then comes the question which has been raised by the right hon. gentleman as to what shall be our duty when any complaint is made from any province that the voters' lists are not fair. Well, Mr. Speaker, assuming that you do not depart from the right hon. gentleman's words reiterated over and over again in 1898, no matter what takes place this is a question for the people of each province. And in any case if you depart from that system, you could only depart from it in a reasonable way and by means of a reasonable inquiry. Therefore I say it would be absolutely unheard of discrimination, invidious, impolitic, unjustifiable to attempt to do this without the fullest possible investigation and inquiry by this House into the systems of every province in Canada. Why should the system of Manitoba be inquired into and their voters' lists superseded simply because the Liberal party is in a minority in the legislature there; why should you refrain from inquiring into the evils that I have brought to the attention of the House in the province of Nova Scotia? I do not doubt that if you examine the systems prevailing in the province of Ontario, or of Quebec, or of New Brunswick for that matter, you would find that just as serious errors and as many injustices have taken place under their systems as are alleged to have taken place in the province of Manitoba. The principle is a vicious one which says that because the Liberal party is in power in certain other provinces but in a minority in Manitoba, therefore the power of this parliament shall be directed against Manitoba and not against Nova Scotia and Quebec.

There is no statesmanship in that, there is no good sense in that, there is nothing in it which will commend itself to the judgment of the people of this country. If the right hon. gentleman and his followers desired any investigation into the laws of the various provinces, or into the administration of those laws with respect to the preparation of voters' lists, why did they not bring down this Bill on the first day of this session, have that inquiry made and let us determine whether any unfairness or injustice prevails by reason of the laws of Manitoba, British Columbia, Quebec, Nova Scotia, Ontario or any other province which requires correction by the people of this country through their parliament ? Statements have been bandied about from the other side of the House and controverted on this side of the House, and you say that you shall lay hands on the province of British Columbia and the province of Manitoba simply because the Liberal representatives of these two provinces are complaining that they want different lists, that they want lists prepared by their own partisans. This Bill, when it was first brought down, was so absolutely absurd that I am astonished that the Prime Minister should have ever lent his name to its introduction. What was the proposition? The proposition was that because the voters' lists in Manitoba and British Columbia were prepared under the administration of persons appointed by the Conservative governments of those provinces, with recourse, in every case, to judges of the county court as the ultimate authority to decide upon the addition or subtraction of any name, therefore you put all that to one side as being partisan and unfair and you appoint your own partisans, without any express or effective reason that there should be the slightest appeal to any judicial authority. A proposition of that kind needs only to be stated to be laughed out of any House of Commons or out of any legislature in the country. If there is any good reason why these lists in Manitoba should be dealt with by this parliament, let us have an inquiry and an investigation and I am prepared to stay here to make it if the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are prepared to do so. It was the duty of the government to have had it made long ago. But let us not, in the language of the Prime Minister, seek to impose new lists upon the province of Manitoba simply for the reason that the right hon. gentleman's friends in Manitoba come to him and complain that these lists are not satisfactory. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but there is another observation that I would like to make, and it is one which deserves to be emphasized. You are proposing to do this in Manitoba and British Columbia without the slightest question as to the fairness of the lists having been raised in the legislature of either province. Are the Liberal members of the legislature of Manitoba, or the Liberal members of the legislature of British Columbia so absolutely devoid of intelligence, common sense and courage that they do not bring to the attention of the legislature and the people of those provinces these alleged defects which have been proclaimed before this House. What is the meaning of it? If this government concluded that there was in the complaint of its partisans in Manitoba—I have not heard any complaint by its partisans in the province of British Columbia—any ground for the amendment of the law, or for reform in the administration of the law, why did not this government, having once adopted the system of provincial voters' lists, make representations on that subject to the governments of British Columbia and Manitoba? Has there been one word, one syllable, directed to either government, to the government of British Columbia or to the government of Manitoba, pointing out these complaints, asking them for their reply before parliament should proceed to interfere with the voters' lists of these provinces? One would have thought that that would have been the reasonable and proper course for the hon. gentleman to take before he sought to introduce this Bill.

With regard to the right hon. gentleman's proposals made in this House last night, I frankly confess that I am not fully able to understand perfectly just exactly what the Prime Minister did intend to suggest. I have no doubt that he will make me acquainted with his intentions; in fact he has promised to do so. But, at the present time I understand that the Prime Minister proposes that the allocation of voters in a polling division cut in two by the boundary of a federal division shall be made, not as it is now by the returning officer within any riding, but by a county court judge. There has been no difficulty, outside of Manitoba, in doing that. There would be no difficulty in Manitoba in doing that provided the returning officers discharged their duties honestly and impartially and with a full sense of their responsibility. But, inasmuch as we have had some experience in Manitoba pointing to the conclusion that this is not always the case, we are quite prepared to accept the hon. gentleman's proposition which we regard as a desirable one from that standpoint, so that there may be no suspicion by one party or the other as to the manner in which these voters are allocated.

But, beyond that whether the right hon. gentleman intends to adhere absolutely to the terms of this Bill or not, I do not know. I think he said that he was not wedded to its terms, but that is a very general expression indeed and I confess that I have not been able so to seize myself of the hon. gentleman's intentions in regard to the Bill as to understand that he is willing to make any considerable departure from its terms. We think, on this side of the House, subject to what I have already said, that the first section of the Bill ought to be withdrawn altogether. We do not consider it fair that two provinces which have reasonable laws upon their statute-books for the preparation of the voters' lists, should be singled out merely for the reason that some persons within those provinces have made complaints to this government as to the alleged unfair operation of those laws. I do not think that you should propose to amend laws for such reasons or in that way.

We believe further, that you should certainly withdraw or completely modify the provisions of section 17. I am disposed to believe, from what the Prime Minister said in that regard, that it is not his desire or intention to interfere with the secrecy of the ballot. I firmly believe that he is impressed as much as I am with the necessity of preserving that as a vital principle of our election law. The right hon. gentleman has pointed out, and his Minister of Justice has also pointed out, that cases may occur where men are disfranchised through inadvertent marks or through marks made by design upon one ballot or upon a number of ballots. It has been pointed out that all the votes at a particular poll might be thrown out simply because a mark has been placed inadvertently upon the ballots. Even if there were no other remedy than that which the right hon. gentleman suggests, I would not be disposed to concur in the provisions of section 17, because I would regard it as infinitely preferable that we should have a new election now and then, wherever that did occur, than that we should place on the statute-book of this country an amendment which would have the effect of absolutely destroying the vital principle of our election law. I was rather surprised, on looking pretty carefully over the election Act some days ago for this purpose, to discover that among the sections providing for punishment there seems to be no particular section aimed at the returning officer who shall make any marks on the ballots before he places them in the box. There is a general provision under which I think he would be included, but there is no special and distinct provision relating to that offence by a returning officer. I would be inclined to suggest, instead of the proposed legislation, that the instructions to every deputy returning officer should be made so absolutely plain and distinct that he could not fail to understand their important meaning, and that a special provision should be placed upon the statute-book for the punishment of any deputy returning officer who should fail to comply with those instructions. I would not be inclined to limit the punishment to the man who did it intentionally; I would hold that the man who did it even by inadvertence and negligence should be subject to some measure of punishment, leaving it in every case to the discretion of the judge to dismiss him with a nominal fine or a reprimand. If you would put a provision of that kind on the statute-book, I think you would find it more in the interest of the country than that which is proposed by the government.

Lastly, I would invite the attention of the Prime Minister to the question of absolutely simultaneous elections in this country. We have this for the most part, but there are some cases of deferred elections in the province of British Columbia and in the province of Manitoba, and there may be one or two in the province of Quebec. I do not profess to speak for the province of Quebec on that point, but bow to the superior knowledge of my friends from that province. But I have made pretty careful inquiry with regard to all the provinces except the province of Quebec, and I am thoroughly satisfied that there is no need whatever of postponing any election except the election in the Yukon. I concede at once that that election would have to be postponed. In the province of British Columbia the provincial elections are held all on the same day. That was the case in the last provincial election, and I am assured from a great many sources in that province that there is absolutely no need whatever for postponement.

The Prime Minister has appealed to me in a portion of his speech for fair and reasonable consideration of this Bill. I may say to him in all sincerity that I have endeavoured to give it a fair and reasonable consideration, and I think that I have done so ; but I cannot bring myself to that condition of mind which would justify me in concurring in the imposition upon the province of Manitoba or upon the province of British Columbia of such an invidious and unjustifiable discrimination as that which I find to be contained in the first clause of this Bill.

Mr. GALLIHER moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to. and debate adjourned.

THE PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—MAINLAND CABLE.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Prince Edward Island). I wish to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister, as the ministers who have control of this service are not in their places, a paragraph in one of our papers which says that the Anglo-American cable from Prince Edward Island to the mainland was broken on Saturday. As the right hon. gentleman knows, this is a service which is under the control of the Dominion government. This is an old cable which has been in use for thirty years, and we have often called the attention of the government to the necessity of laying a second cable. The province is now without telegraphic communication, and I would like to know what the government propose to do in the matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that we have any jurisdiction over a matter of this kind. If my hon. friend has any suggestion to offer, we would be glad to help him if we have the power.

Mr. MARTIN. The suggestion I made some time ago was that we should have a second cable. When the cable was broken over a year ago, I called the attention of the government to this necessity. Now it is broken again, and the whole province has to depend only on the steamers for communication with the mainland. I am merely calling the attention of the government to the matter, and I hope they will act with despatch in regard to it.

At six o'clock the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, May 14, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUEBEC BRIDGE SUBSIDY—APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). A few weeks ago the House ordered the appointment of a committee to investigate certain conditions under which the government grant to the Quebec Bridge Company had been made. All the papers connected with the bridge having now been printed, the time has come when the committee may be appointed. I therefore move :

That the select committee ordered by this House for the purpose of investigating the conditions and guarantees under which this government paid moneys to the Quebec Bridge Company and endorsed or guaranteed the bonds of the said company, and what measures were adopted by the government to ensure the preparation of suitable plans of construction and the proper execution of the same, and what security the government at present possesses for the sums already received by and guarantees given to the company, be composed of Messrs. Maclean (Lunenburg), Talbot, Galliher, Chisholm (Antigonish), Monk, Barker and Walsh (Huntingdon).

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY—ISSUE OF BONDS.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

What amount of bonds have been guaranteed and issued to date in respect to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, how many of these have been sold or otherwise disposed of, and what amount has been netted by the company therefor?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Bonds to the amount of £3,200,000, par value, have been guaranteed by the government and issued to date in respect of the western division of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

These bonds have been delivered to purchasers.

The proceeds of these bonds, remitted to Canada, amounted to the sum of $14.559,673.68. This sum includes interim interest accretions on instalment payments up to date of remittance.

ICE-BREAKER 'MONTCALM.'

Mr. TAYLOR asked:

1. What was the purchase price or first cost of the government steamer or ice-breaker 'Montcalm'?
2. What amount has been expended on said steamer for repairs since purchased or built, up to first of May, 1908, year by year?
3. What amount has been expended for furnishings, viz.: furniture, carpeting, floor cloth, bedding, crockery, silverware, cutlery, &c.?
4. What has been the total expenditure in connection with said steamer including salaries of crew, clothing, provisions, &c.?
5. What revenue has been received for work done by said steamer since acquired?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Contract price of steamer, $265,233.32.

2.	1904-5	$ 12,693 94
	1905-6	47,545 18
	1906-7	38,355 61
	1907-8	20,782 49
		$119,377 22
3.	1904-5	$3,908 12
	1905-6	955 60
	1906-7	815 16
	1907-8	1,174 31
		$6,853 19
4.	1904-5	$336,423 86
	1905-6	135,638 19
	1906-7	93,741 56
	1907-8	91,921 80
		$657,725 41

5. This is not a revenue producing steamer. It is used for ice-breaking purposes and for carrying supplies for lighthouse maintenance and construction work.

REBATES OF DUTY TO MASSEY-HARRIS COMPANY.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE asked:

What amount has been paid in rebate of duty to the Massey-Harris Company during the last three fiscal years, specifying each year separately?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

On goods manufactured for export:—

1905-6	$ 83,153 59
1906-7 (9 months)	90,554 16
1907-8	142,410 56

On goods manufactured for home consumption:—

1905-6	Nil.
1906-7 (9 months)	Nil.
1907-8	$34,486 32

BAYONETS FROM ROSS RIFLE COMPANY.

Mr. WORTHINGTON—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. On what date was the contract entered into between the government and the Ross Rifle Company for the supply of bayonets?
2. When was the order in council passed respecting the same?
3. If tenders were called for, on what dates and in what manner was this done?
4. What are the terms of the contract regarding delivery and payments?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. May 4, 1908.
2. May 4, 1908.
3. Tenders were called for by letters, dated January 18, 1908, addressed to—
   The Ross Rifle Company, Quebec.
   The Ottawa Car Company, Ltd., Ottawa.
4. The contractor undertakes to deliver 52,000 bayonets and scabbards within three years after the delivery to the contractor of an approved standard pattern, specifications and drawings. Deliveries to be made in even monthly quantities, as nearly as may be, and to begin within one month of the completion by the contractor of the necessary machinery, fixtures and gauges; notice of such completion to be immediately given to the Minister of Militia and Defence.

Payments to be made upon delivery; provided that in any year during the continuance of the contract, if the contractor is not in default in respect of deliveries, he shall be entitled, in advance of delivery, to payment of moneys actually expended upon all bayonets and scabbards or parts thereof to be delivered in that year; such payments in no case to exceed 75 per cent of the price of such bayonets and scabbards. These advances to be made upon the contractor's certificate of the amount so spent, attested by the signature of government chartered accountant, who shall first satisfy himself of the fact of such expenditure.

ARREARS IN ALLOWANCES TO MILITIA.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked:

1. Is the government in arrears for allowances to any militia regiments? If so, to what regiments, to what amounts, and for what periods?

2. What is the reason some regiments have not received allowances?

3. Is the government aware that officers of some regiments, including one Ottawa regiment, have been obliged to borrow money to meet requirements that should have been met by such arrears in allowances?

4. If so, will the government repay such officers the interest paid by them on such loans?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Mr. Speaker, I would call your attention to the third part of this question which it seems to me is not in order, as it contains a matter of argument. If this question is put in proper form the answer is ready, but I would ask your ruling. The words to which I object are 'that should have been met by such arrears in allowances.'

Mr. SPEAKER. I would rule that that was not in order. The question will stand for amendment.

Question allowed to stand.

BEAUHARNOIS CANAL.

Mr. R. N. WALSH—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. Has the Beauharnois canal been transferred to the Robert Company, or is it still under the control of the Department of Railways and Canals?

2. Is Mr. Deschene, of Valleyfield, in the employ of the government? If so, what are his duties?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The Beauharnois canal is under lease to Messrs. William C. McIntyre and Edmund C. Robert, dated 10th of December, 1907.

2. No; Mr. Deschesne is not now in the employ of the government.

GOODS FOR ANGLO-FRENCH EXHIBITION.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. What amount of goods has been purchased by the government for the purpose of the Anglo-French exhibition in London?

2. What is the total sum due or paid for such goods to date?

3. What is the amount of goods purchased from Messrs. Bryson, Graham & Company of this city?

4. Are the goods so acquired to be exhibited, marked at their cost price?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (for Minister of Agriculture):

1. Total purchase of exhibits, $5,611.49.

2. Paid, $953.56.

3. $2,283.37.

4. No.

EXPENDITURE—ANGLO-FRENCH EXHIBITION.

Mr. MONK asked:

What is the total amount spent to date by the government in connection with the Anglo-French exhibition?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (for Minister of Agriculture). May 14, 1908, $91,525.46.

NEW GOVERNMENT STEAMER.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES asked:

1. Has a contract for the construction of the new ice-breaking steamer for the winter navigation of the Northumberland straits been let yet? If so, what shipbuilding firm has obtained the contract?

2. What will the ship cost, and when will she be ready for the service?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Yes. Messrs. Vickers, Sons & Maxim Limited, London, England.

2. £103,000. Ten months from signing of contract.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—NEWS CONTRACT.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked:

1. Were tenders called for the privilege of a news agency on the Prince Edward Island Railway for present contract? If so, what are the names of tenderers, and the amount of each tender?

2. Who holds the present contract, and at what figure per annum?

3. When were tenders last called for this service?

4. Did any party or parties, other than the present holder, put in tenders for this service since 1904? If so, what are the names of the tenderers, and the amount of each tender?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1 and 4. Tenders were called for by newspaper advertisement in June, 1906, for the privilege of selling newspapers, periodicals, &c., on the Prince Edward Island Railway, for a term of three years, to date from September, 1906. Three tenders were received from the following, viz: Herbert T. Prowse, Charlottetown, P.E.I., $501 per annum; R. B. Norton, Charlottetown, P.E.I., $540 per annum; Sidney Grey, Charlottetown, P.E.I., $400 per annum. Mr. Grey was afterwards offered the privilege of news agency, at $550, which was accepted, by him.

2. Sidney Grey, at $550 per annum.

3. 1906.

LENNOX ISLAND WHARF.

Mr. LEFURGEY asked:

1. Who has the contract for building the Lennox island ferry wharf, and what is the contract price?

2. What money has been paid on account of said work and is the work proceeding?

3. Has the specification been found unsuitable for the structure at this point, and is it the intention of the government to alter same by using stone and brush instead of piles?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Joseph F. Arsenault. The contract price for the landing wharfs is $625.

2. The sum of $150 has been paid on account of contract. The work is not being proceeded with.

3. Yes. The question of using some other durable structure instead of piles is now under consideration.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I beg leave to apply to the House under Rule 37, for leave to discuss a certain question.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member applies for leave to move the adjournment of the House in order to discuss the following matter of urgent importance :

The present condition of the Marine and Fisheries Department, especially under the slow operation of the commission last appointed to examine certain matters therein.

Shall the hon. member have leave ?

And leave being granted.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House for a short time, as requested in the notice, to the position of the Marine and Fisheries Department as it at present appears. In order to do that it will be necessary very briefly to sum up the preceding circumstances which led up to the appointment of the last commission. The first commission for a number of months pursued its inquiry, mostly with reference to the Civil Service situation, conditions and requirements, and devoted a portion of its time to the investigation of the practical working of one portion of the Marine and Fisheries Department, and then, as the House knows, laid its report before the government ; that report was brought down to this House about the middle of March. The report of that commission was somewhat startling to the House and to the country. In brief it showed a state of things in the department which, to say the least, did not contribute to efficiency or tend to establish public confidence in the department, and seemed to call for vigorous and instant action in order to have the faults which had been shown and the bad conditions which had been described in the report remedied as quickly as possible. It is not necessary to recall the express words of that report and the many pointed allusions which were made to certain specific matters. That commission did not busy itself in the same way with any other department of the government, and in fine it came to the conclusion that the Department of Marine and Fisheries seemed to be without direct guidance, was in fact without a head and lacked a conscience. When that report came before this House it at once received the attention of the House and the government, and it was seen to be so important that full and instant action was necessary. The matter could not be left as it was left by the report of the first commission. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries and I think the leader of the government and others were particularly struck with the idea that under the report of the first commission the officers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries were left more or less under a cloud of suspicion of wrongdoing, and it made itself apparent to the government that it was an improper thing that the officers of one of the great departments of this government should be left in that position. It was destructive of faith and confidence in the department, it hung over the officers of the department and militated against their freedom and efficiency of work ; it was, in fine, a statement of circumstances and inferences which made it absolutely imperative that such steps as were proper should be taken immediately to investigate those matters and to remedy where remedy was necessary, to condemn and reform where condemnation was necessary. The government did not accede to the view of hon. members on this side of the House that it was proper that the second commission should be allowed to complete in all the departments of the government what the first commission had only in part completed in a small portion of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

It therefore appointed a second commission with limited power and limited scope, and limited as well in the methods by which it should be conducted. Whilst the other was a public inquiry and in the public interest, this was to be a departmental inquiry simply into what were considered the charges or insinuations or inferences against the officers of the department. On this side of the House we contended for a broad commission against which the door of no department should be shut and which would have unlimited power to carry on the investigations which had been left uncompleted by the first commission. Judge Cassels was appointed as the second commission, and there were given him two lawyers to, I suppose, watch the interests of the government. These two lawyers were, as has been stated in the House, supporters and partisans of the government. They received their instructions from the Minister of Justice and are practically under the direction of the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Marine himself. It seems to be absolutely impossible, and I think it was not otherwise contended, that Judge Cassels should be put to the almost superhuman task of going through the whole records of the department in all its extensions, and therefore these lawyers were appointed into whose hands were entrusted the bringing of such matters before the commissioner as they might think proper and requisite for carrying out the purpose of the commission which was entrusted to him. It was known by the government from the first that Judge Cassels was a busy man, that he had charge of the Exchequer Court of Canada, which was not only full of work, but work of a very diversified nature and which necessitated the judge of the Exchequer Court holding court all over the Dominion from the Pacific to the Atlantic. It was known also to the government that work had accumulated during the unfortunate illness of the late judge of the Exchequer Court. I do not think any member of the government who gave attention to it could have been unaware that for a vigorous man with his whole time and all his intelligence there was more than sufficient work in the Exchequer Court to keep him busily and faithfully employed. Judge Cassels being conscientious in the matter refused to undertake this commission unless either the government made provision for the Exchequer Court work, which would be unattended to whilst he was attending to this commission, or unless the government should give him, as I understood, parliamentary authorization to go on with the commission which they entrusted to his care. If the government insisted then under those circumstances in appointing Judge Cassels as commissioner they did it with their eyes open to the immense and arduous duties which fall to the judge of the Exchequer Court and with a complete advertisement of the fact that he would make the court his first work and that what he would do in the commission would be in his odd hours in which he was not engaged in the Exchequer Court. Under all these circumstances the government appointed him. They professed to be extremely anxious that the department should be relieved from the suspicions and charges which overhung it. They were specially anxious that every officer in that department might immediately and just as quickly as possible have an opportunity to be clear of the charge which they declared hung equally over all. They said that the honour of the department and fair and even justice to the officers of the department all ran in the direction of a thorough and immediate inquiry. Under those circumstances Judge Cassels undertook his work. He was not able until, I think, the 3rd or 4th of May to commence the commission, thus allowing a good many days to elapse between the time of his appointment and the time when he commenced his investigation. Two days were then devoted to this important and urgent work, two days in which the solicitors for the Crown and the department broke their force in vain against the adamantine front of the two old commissioners without obtaining any very great amount of information. Then an adjournment took place to the 12th or 13th of the month because Judge Cassels had his Exchequer Court duties to attend to and after that he took up again the work of investigating this department. Two days passed in the second investigation and they were expended entirely upon two gentlemen; getting testimony from the chief engineer of the department and from an outside contractor who had very many and very profitable relations with the Department of Marine and Fisheries. What does Judge Cassels himself say with regard to the scope of the commission? He did not exactly deplore but he did state the fact that his commission was limited in scope; it was not within his power to enlarge the scope and on the other hand within the scope :

He felt it his duty to have a thorough investigation. The Civil Service Commissioner's report had contained a statement that evidently some of the officials of the department were serving two masters and succeeded with both, scripture to the contrary notwithstanding. The report did not accuse any individual, but it was charged that the officials had in some cases profited by the receipt of commissions on contracts into which the department had entered. Unfortunately, however, the report did not mention any names and it was considered advisable in the interest of the Department of Marine and Fisheries and of the country in general that immediate steps should be taken to determine what officials, if any,——

Mind you, 'that immediate steps be taken.'

—to detemine what offiicials, if any, deserve condemnation and to give all an opportunity of meeting the charges implied. The charge, said the commissioner, is of great and serious nature. Every official of the Marine and Fisheries Department is under a cloud of suspicion. As I understand it the object of the commission is to enable each official of the department an opportunity to free himself from the charge, if the facts justify it, or if the facts sustain the principle of the charges to the official then it should be found out and the guilty official reported.

He then goes on to mention the difficulty as to the time; he sets himself an arbitrary time of about three or four years with the saving remark that if when these years are investigated it shall be found that it is necessary to go backward or forward that the scope of time in that respect may be widened :

As to the scope of the inquiry, his Lordship said, it was obvious that the contracts entered into by the department during the years under investigation either for work to be performed on the property of the Dominion or for supplies purchased must be investigated, that the price paid must be ascertained, that the current market prices for wages or goods at the time of such contracts or purchases should be obtained; also the prices governing such purchases for large quantities and the discounts, if any, usually allowed, and if it should appear that a larger amount had been contracted to be paid in any particular case, or cases, then it would become necessary to inquire into the reasons for such over-payments, and the official making such over-payments should have the opportunity afforded him of exculpating himself if possible. The task imposed would be an onerous one, and must necessarily occupy a good deal of time.

I read that to show not only the seriousness of the matter, but also the wide extent of the matter, and the great amount of investigation that is involved. Officials, not only in the department at Ottawa, but in every branch of the department outside of Ottawa, are involved, and the investigation of contracts, expenditures and prices has reference not simply to prices and expenditures at Ottawa, but to prices and expenditures made by the department all the Dominion over. Taking that into account, one easily sees what a very large and serious piece of business has been imposed on the commissioner. Now, Mr. Justice Cassels was prompt to state then, as he had stated before, the fact that his first duty was to his own office as judge of the Exchequer Court :

Mr. Justice Cassels enumerated a long string of Exchequer Court engagements. He would sit on the 11th and 12th, but beyond that he could not fix a date, as he had to go east and some cases at Sydney will take him fully a month.

That was on the occasion of the first meeting on the 11th and 12th, as has been stated, Judge Cassels again sat for the purposes of the commission, and two gentlemen were passed under examination. Whether the examination of these two gentlemen has been finished or not is not shown on the papers that I have ; but on the evening of the 12th Judge Cassels adjourned the court, and he broached the question of the next sitting of the commission :

He reminded counsel that he had to go to New Brunswick a day, then to Nova Scotia, that he would be away at least six weeks, there was also a number of cases standing for judgment which would keep him busy on his return to Ottawa. The long vacation would intervene and in the middle of September he had to go to Manitoba and then to British Columbia He suggested that counsel await his return from Sydney, Cape Breton, before a date was settled. This was agreed to and the court adjourned sine die.

What does that open up ? The impossibility of any further investigation for the next six weeks that the judge is away. The impossibility of taking up the investigation when he comes back, for he has an indefinite number of cases which he must attend to then. The intervention of the long vacation, in which I believe it is considered necessary for the health of the judges that they shall have their proper amount of fresh air in the open fields or by the river side or sea side ; and I am not sure that it is not considered a little infra dig for judges to do work in the time of this sacred long vacation. Then he has to go across the continent to British Columbia, to look after important cases there ; and under that indefiniteness in one way and that remarkable definiteness in another way, as proof of the long delay involved before this matter can be taken up again and passed, Judge Cassels adjourns the court, and it is adjourned accordingly. Now, the point that has arisen is this. The government with its eyes wide open, advised of the fact, still insisted on appointing Judge Cassels, and in the operation of the court it has worked out exactly as Judge Cassels himself intimated that it would be likely to do. What becomes of the assertions of the government ? What becomes of the equities of the case, so to speak ? That with a department every one of whose officers is under suspicion there shall be no effective investigation to clear those officers during the six months that follow, but that it shall be taken up only now and then as occasion gives opportunity. This is in reality a job-lot commission. The special work of the commissioner is there and it takes nine-tenths of his time. He has odd moments of time that he may devote to this investigation, and in those odd moments he takes it up. During all that time honest men, honourable men, thoroughly approved men, sit at their work in the Department of Marine and Fisheries with the shadow of a very grave and serious accusation over them by day and by night. What has happened? Your department is disorganized. Disorganized before, what can be said of it now? Without a deputy head, for his usefulness is gone until the charges are disposed of; probably gone entirely, because he shrinks from more work in that department, has asked for his superannuation, and is now I believe on leave of absence. The accountant has been suspended, and there is no accountant. The Commissioner of Lights, one of the most important officers of the department, is on suspicion, and there is no longer an efficient head of the Lights Branch. Mr. Gregory in the province of Quebec is not in his office. None of these gentlemen can be dismissed until the charges which lie against them and overhang them are thoroughly investigated and the truth is brought out. During all this time you have a department through whose hands five or six millions of money goes, and which is coming to this House to ask for its yearly vote of many millions of money ; and over this department there is this shadow of suspicion. No man can place his hand on any single officer and say that at the end of the investigation by Judge Cassels this officer will be found innocent ; no man can place his hand on another officer and say that at the end of that investigation, whenever it comes, this man will be found guilty. I have myself knowledge of many men in that department, and, after all that is said about it, I have no doubt that there, as in other departments, the great majority of the men are honest public servants, doing their duty faithfully and well. But in what situation are they to do their duty now ? Anonymous writings and whisperings to the commissioner or to the lawyers, saying that papers are being destroyed, that such and such person is trying to do away with evidence ; one man brought up before these lawyers and questioned as to what suspicion he has of A. B., or J. C., or of some one else, men prompted and pressed, with all the force and ingenuity of these lawyers, to play the spy and the informer upon their companions in office.

There is the disorganization resulting from suspicion, no man feels like trusting his fellow, no one knows what is being carried on in order to save one and injure another, and all the time two partisan defenders of the government and the department are running through the records and the guilty persons in that department, if there are any, have opportunities for doing away with incriminating documents and evidence. And worse than all, during that whole time, this headless and conscienceless department, as it is characterized by the first commission, is spending the money of the country. What more has happened? An investigation has been made into the conduct of an officer down the St. Lawrence. What has been proved? That he has been guilty of padding pay sheets, and that there has been a conspiracy to defraud the government, and that the government have actually been defrauded. If in that single case fraud has been brought to the surface, in how many cases may it not be found that similar frauds have been committed, and so people will say until the commission has finished its report. For all we know, the whole of the river service—an immense and important service—is permeated and saturated by just such abuses and frauds. What is needed is a thorough and a speedy investigation, so that every honest man might have the chance to have the cloud lifted from him and every guilty man be punished. To-day the minister does not know but that there are in that department persons in positions of great trust who will be found guilty when this commission has finished its work. Yet these persons cannot be touched. They remain there. The point I make presses the more strongly the absolute necessity for an immediate investigation and the avoidance of the delays which are inevitable if the present commission continues the work. But delay is what the government seem to desire. Events quickly pass into oblivion and the reports of the first commission are being smothered by the lapse of time. Judge Cassels goes on his circuit and then takes his vacation, nobody is particularly at work, the old machine hums on in the best way it can, and the people become interested in the next thing that turns up and forget this. And all the time the solicitors, the partisan defenders of the government, have their wages going on, and I suppose are doing their investigation. And in the meanwhile the efficiency of the department is impaired and deteriorated and its officers are under a cloud.

We do not know all that has been brought out by the present commission so far, but some things have been brought out which do not tend to make public confidence greater. What has been brought out ? A carbide company is formed, it sells to the government, sells without competition, and in that carbide company you find a cabinet minister interested, we find that stock in it was given him by the promoter, and we find that same minister at the head of the Marine and Fisheries Department. That does not help us at all to have more confidence in that department than we had at the start.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman has said that we get our supply of carbide from a company without any competition. I may inform him that the carbide which is supplied to the department was obtained after public tender.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend mean that to explain the whole case? Let him go to Mr. Willson's evidence. What does Mr. Willson say? There are three carbide companies in this country. One is at St. Catharines and that is the company consisting of Mr. Willson and the late Mr. Sutherland, up to the time of his decease, and Mr. Little, who has succeeded to Mr. Sutherland's interest. Then there is the company in Ottawa. Who formed that company? Mr. Sutherland. Who sold the stock to the Bronsons? Mr. Sutherland. Who got 10,000 shares of the stock for that and other considerations, as Mr. Willson has sworn? Mr. Sutherland. Who has Mr. Sutherland's stock at present ? Mr. Sutherland's legatee. Then there is the company at Shawinigan, and there is nothing to show that that is an independent company. Then there is another company with a more liberal contract, the International Fog Signal Company, which makes little things that cost $300 and sells them to the department for $4,000, as shown by the testimony of the chief engineer. Does my hon. friend say there is any competition among these companies?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is very strong competition among them. In fact they are quarrelling. I know that of my own knowledge.

Mr. FOSTER. We can quite understand Mr. Willson quarrelling with Mr. Willson. We can quite understand Mr. Little quarrelling with Mr. Little. But we all know that the same men control these companies and have the same interest in them. And in any event, up to a very late period no tenders were called for and there was no competition. It is only within a very late period that tenders have been asked and there has been any semblance of competition. These things have come out, and they have not added to the confidence of the community in that department. It is too much the habit for this government, either through its members or its closest friends, to be interested in companies which are doing business with the government. I propose to exploit another company just as soon as I can get at it before this House, and I think I can show that a prominent member of the cabinet at present has taken a special business interest in it. There is, I have said, that state of things brought out so far which leads people to wonder what would a thorough investigation show. This is not a healthy condition of things, but it is a condition which has been brought on by the government itself. This new and wasteful policy of the acetylene gas buoys and fog signals, these contracts, this division of the department so as to get a favourable report for the purposes of the minister—all this was brought about by Mr. Préfontaine himself. He was the man who, against the report of the chief engineer—a man of worth and through honesty—undertook this wasteful system of expenditure, to say nothing more about it, and laughed at the scruples of his chief engineer. Who was it that appointed the commissioner of lights, a young man—I say nothing against his ability—without experience in the department to any extent, put into a most responsible position in which he carried on things pretty much as he pleased. Who appointed Mr. Fraser? He was appointed by Mr. Préfontaine himself and for the very purpose of instituting this acetylene fog signal and gas buoy expenditure which, while good in many particulars, as the first engineer says, was pressed beyond the needs of the country and the requisites of proper economy. The whole plea to-day is that in some way the government is bound, if it can, and it can, to press the matter to speedier conclusions than it is being pressed to-day. That is the whole point of my plea, in the interests of the department, in the interests of the country, and in common justice to the employees of the department, which is historical, and which has been manned in the past by efficient men, and which to-day has within its bounds as honest, painstaking and competent officials as there are in any of the departments of this government. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Right hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Before I proceed to discuss the motion which my hon. friend has made, and the point which he has taken under it, I think it is my duty to take at once some exception to the manner in which he has discussed the motion. For myself I do not object to it, because I think it involves a point which is worth while clearing up at once. But the objection I take is that my hon. friend was slightly out of order in discussing what takes place before the commission until the commission has reported. I think that the rule which applies to committees of this House should apply for the very same reason to commissions appointed under the authority of the government and of parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman quote the rule ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, I do not quote the rule, because I do not intend to discuss the question to-day, and I did not interrupt my hon. friend. But I think the hon. gentleman was wrong for this reason, that until the matter is ascertained and concluded, the hon. gentleman draws wrong conclusions. One of the reasons which show the force of the rule is this : My hon. friend discussed the composition of the carbide company, and he concluded that all these companies were in the hands of the same parties. What grounds had he to make such an assertion ?

Mr. FOSTER. Sworn evidence.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no sworn evidence to that effect, the hon. gentleman will not find any sworn evidence that the companies which are to-day organized in Canada to manufacture carbide are in the hands of the same men and under the same directorate. I say the evidence corroborates the statement made a moment ago by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that the company which operates at Shawenegan is altogether separate from the other company.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be, I did not particularly allude to that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But if that may be, why did he venture to make the insinuation ? Did he not a moment ago say that he had reason to believe that all the companies were in the hands of the same parties ? Now he says that he did not do so, that he did not make the assertion. But he did make an insinuation, which is worse than an assertion. The hon. gentleman will have ample opportunity of discussing that later on the point of order. I do not take it to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. I would ask the right hon. gentleman whether there are not some of the same men in the three companies, because I was told that there were.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Speaking subject to correction I have reason to believe that the Shawenegan company is altogether separate from the other companies.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Willson owns the patents.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Here is a commission that has not yet reported, and already assertions are made and conclusions are drawn. We will have an opportunity of taking up the subject later on. I do not go into it at this moment because, as I say, I am not prepared to discuss the point of order. But it seems to me that if there is any sense in the point of order that we are not allowed here to discuss an investigation by committees of this House, a parity of reasoning would apply to investigations by commissions. Now I come to the point of my hon. friend's motion. He says that because Judge Cassels owes his first duty, as he states himself, to his own court, this investigation has to be put off, and must be put off for some time. Sir, that is a point well taken; the investigation by Judge Cassels has to be put off because Judge Cassels very properly insists that his first duty is to his court. My answer is this, that if Judge Cassels has not been permitted to proceed with the investigation because his first duty is to his own court, the fault is not with this government, but the fault is with my hon. friend and those who sit around him. Perhaps my statement will cause some wonder among hon. gentlemen opposite, and I see that there are some doubting Thomases on the other side. Let me give the evidence. We have had some correspondence with Judge Cassels on this point, and he pointed out to us at the very outset that he could not undertake to carry on this investigation unless he was provided with assistance to carry on the work of his court. On the 6th of April Judge Cassels addressed to me the following letter:

Ottawa, April 6, 1908.

Dear Sir Wilfrid,—Your kind letter of April 3 instant was duly received. As mentioned to Mr. Aylesworth, the fact of my not having been consulted prior to my name being mentioned did not in the slightest degree cause me to think that I had been in any way slighted or treated discourteously. Possibly I should feel that some members of the press understood me better than I understand myself, but the fact, however, is as I have stated.

You ask me to give you my views of what provision should be made for the despatch of business in the Exchequer Court.

First. I think statutory provision should be conferred upon me to perform as judge the duties desired by parliament, and that provision should also be made for the disposal of the business before the court.

Second. As to the business of the court, my views are as follows: I would not make any suggestions had you not asked me to do so. During the last three weeks I have had occasion to acquire a fairly accurate notion of the work to be performed. The work of the Exchequer Court is increasing rapidly. At present no summons or order can be made unless signed by me, no cheque can be issued unless countersigned by me. The circuit engagements are necessarily numerous. I have this morning arranged a circuit commencing in May for the trial of actions in Toronto, Quebec, Charlottetown, St. John and Sydney. In September I must go to Winnipeg, and as far west as Victoria in order to try cases that may be ready for trial. It is obvious that while I am absent all procedure of an interlocutory nature must stand over, much to the annoyance and delay of suitors. I understand that the Minister of Justice proposes an amendment to the statute which will confer upon the registrar of the court authority to deal with chamber applications. This Act, if it becomes law, will help matters. A large number of cases to be tried are actions arising out of the expropriation of land by the government. The registrar of the court, Mr. Audette, has been registrar ever since the reorganization of the court in 1887. In the past few years he has, as referee, been performing judicial duties of a very important character, notably, in the matter of the winding up of the Quebec Southern Railway, and of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway; and it is only necessary to read his voluminous reports to appreciate his work. His work has, I think, been appreciated by the profession.

From his long experience in the court, Mr. Audette has acquired a very thorough knowledge of both law and practice. In cases of expropriation of land and numerous other forms of action against the Crown, especially in the province of Quebec, he is probably better qualified than I am, to sit in judgment. It would seem to me the best solution of the whole situation, having regard to the present business of the court and its increasing business, would be to appoint Mr. Audette deputy judge with all the powers I possess, If thought advisable, there could be an appeal in the usual way from his judgment to myself if the suitors so desired instead of going direct to the Supreme Court.

I would not make the suggestions contained in this letter had I not been asked to do so by yourself, but having given the subject a good deal of anxious consideration, and having a great desire to maintain the reputation of the court which under the presidency of the late judge it has obtained, I venture to put my views before you without, however, desiring to do more than make suggestions.

Believe me, dear Sir Wilfrid,
Yours faithfully,
WALTER CASSELS.

Now, Sir, in this letter, Judge Cassels, in answer to an inquiry from me as to the legislation we should enact in order to facilitate the business of the Court of Exchequer as well as the duties he is to discharge as commissioner investigating the Marine Department, made the suggestion that Mr. Audette should be given certain powers, and these powers given him, that is all he asked for. Now, if my hon. friend will look at the Order Paper, item 12, he will find that that order is Bill (No. 116), which proposes to give even wider powers than is asked for in this letter of Judge Cassels.

Mr. FOSTER. When was that Bill introduced?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It was introduced even before Judge Cassels sent me his letter.

Mr. FOSTER. And will the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) tell me also, when, since its introduction it has been pressed ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will come to that presently. But let me call the attention of my hon. friend, and of those behind him, and of the House and country, to what is in that Bill. Section 1 provides as follows :

In case of the illness of the judge of the court, or if the judge has leave of absence, the Governor in Council may specially appoint any person having the qualifications hereinbefore mentioned to discharge the duties of the judge during his illness or leave of absence, and the person so appointed shall, during the period aforesaid, have all the powers incident to the office of the judge of the court.

2. If the judge of the court—

(a) is interested in any cause or matter, or is disqualified by kinship to any party, or

(b) has been professionally engaged in any cause or matter as counsel or solicitor for any party previously to his appointment to the office of judge, and considers himself thereby incapacitated from sitting or adjudicating therein, the Governor in Council may, upon the written application of the judge, setting out such impediment, appoint any other person having the qualifications hereinbefore mentioned to act as a judge pro hac vice in relation to any such cause or matter.

3. Every such temporary judge, or judge pro hac vice, shall be sworn to the faithful performance of the duties of his office.

Now, in this clause there is provision made to appoint an assistant judge at the request of the judge in certain contingencies. I am not prepared to say that the contingency here provided for has arisen, but it is easy to make it applicable to the present contingency. Now, by section 2 of this Bill, the Exchequer Court Act is amended as follows :

2. Section 87 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:—

(f) for empowering the registrar to do any such thing and transact any such business as is specified in such rules or orders, and to exercise any such authority and jurisdiction in respect thereof as is now or may be hereafter done, transacted or exercised by the judge of the Exchequer Court sitting in chambers in virtue of any statute or custom or by the practice of the court.

—the very thing that is asked for by Judge Cassels in the letter I have read.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I may be allowed it seems to me to deal only with matters in chambers.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I say this is the very matter asked by Judge Cassels, though, possibly, the request of the judge may have gone beyond this. But in this respect the Bill can easily be amended as soon as we take it up. Now, my hon. friend asks me: When has this Bill been taken up in the House? I ask my hon. friend: What business has been done in the House since then ? The very first thing we have to do in this House is to provide the appropriations in order to carry on the business of the country—to pay the civil service, to pay for the carrying of the mails, to pay the Mounted Police, to provide for the most elementary matters of civil government. We have been trying to get these appropriations through the House. We have moved the House into committee day after day. And day after day we have been met with deliberate obstruction, not avowed at first, but repeated and maintained. We did not know what was the matter, until some of the more candid amongst hon. gentlemen on the other side told us : You will get no estimates until you bring down your legislation ; bring down your Election Bill and we will give you Supply. We brought down the Election Bill, and then we are told : You shall not have any Supplies ; we will stop them altogether. If hon. gentlemen on the other side will give us facilities to do business, the very first thing we will do will be to take up and pass this Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.). Whenever the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has not a very good answer, he affects to fly into a passion. He is not in nearly so much of a rage to-day as he would have us believe, and he thoroughly understands that he has not a leg to stand upon in his argument with my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). In the first place, he relies upon a measure introduced into this House by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) on the 9th of March, four weeks exactly before this letter was written by Mr. Justice Cassels, to persuade the House and the country that the reason why he has not complied with Judge Cassels' request is that the opposition has not brought on and passed that Bill. I am bound to say the right hon. gentleman is establishing an extraordinary reversal of the functions of government. I have been in parliament twelve or thirteen sessions, and this is the first time I have learned that the opposition has the right to call government orders and to decide in what precedence government measures shall be taken up. If the right hon. gentleman will confide that duty to us, we will bring on the Exchequer Court Bill the first thing after this debate closes. If he had consulted us, or had made us aware that we possessed this authority, we might have brought on this Bill long ago. But it would have been of no use to do so, for this Bill does not, as it stands, make provision for that which Judge Cassels requires, and the right hon. gentleman knows it and conceded it in his speech. The Bill makes provision for the appointment of a deputy judge in case of the illness of the judge of the Exchequer Court or in case he has leave of absence, and the right hon. gentleman admits that is the purpose for which it was intended. Why, then, does he talk about the Bill, why does he put forward a Bill which does not provide for the difficulty that has arisen? Or, if he intended to utilize this Bill, why has not he, since the letter of Mr. Justice Cassels was written, submitted to the House the amendments necessary to make it provide for the difficulties referred to by Judge Cassels, and then ask the House, as a matter of urgency, to pass the Bill at once ? That is all he needed to do. When he desired a Bill put through with regard to immigration and stated that it was an urgent matter, it was put throught the same day and sent to the Senate. If he had called up this Bill and asked that amendments be made—and, by the way, I would ask if the amendments have yet been drafted ?—I venture to say it would have gone through in half an hour. Have the amendments been drafted, and if so, when were they drafted ? The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) does not reply. Well, if the amendments have not yet been drafted, is it not delicious to hear the right hon gentleman suggesting that the opposihon. gentleman suggesting that the opposigress? In the first place, the argument of the right hon. gentleman is that the opposition are responsible for not bringing on this Bill, and then, in the next place, that they are responsible for not passing through the House amendments which the government have not yet drafted. In that way and in that way only is the opposition responsible for the difficulty which has been created.

So far as the second clause of the Bill is concerned, a very hasty reading of it indicates to me that the jurisdiction proposed by this Bill to be conferred on the registrar of the Exchequer Court is jurisdiction to transact certain business in chambers and is not that jurisdiction which Mr. Justice Cassels proposed in his letter of the 6th of April.

Apart from all this delightful attempt by the right hon. gentleman to put forward an excuse which he at least knows does not exist, let us look at the situation. The situation may be summarized in three or four sentences. The government themselves have realized the necessity of this investigation by Mr. Justice Cassels or some one else, because on the very day on which the report of the Civil Service Commission was laid on the table of this House, the Minister of Marine arose and made the announcement of the proposed action of the government. Mr. Justice Cassels was consulted and placed his position frankly before the government, declaring that he regarded his judicial duties as his first concern, that he must give his attention, in the first place, to them. He went further, he suggested the amendments (which have not yet been drafted) which would enable the government to deal with the situation as it has not yet been dealt with. So that, apart from the appointment of Mr. Justice Cassels to fulfil duties which the time at his command does not enable him to adequately to discharge, the government have done nothing and the situation is as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has described it. An investigation is proposed to clear the Department of Marine and Fisheries of certain charges made against it, and to make such an investigation as may be necessary to discover any officers of that department who are worthy of punishment. That investigation is being delayed by reason of the very circumstances pointed out by Mr. Justice Cassels six weeks ago; those circumstances exist to-day and they exist by reason of the inaction of the government. The obvious injury to the public service, the neglect of public interests, cannot be too strongly emphasized and I sincerely trust that steps will be taken by the government immediately to enable that investigation to be carried on promptly and effectually in order that right may be done, those who are innocent may be cleared and those who are guilty, if there be any guilty, may be properly punished.

Motion (Mr. Foster) to adjourn, negatived.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. CYR.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I would like at the request of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Cyr), who is sick and unable to be present, to raise a question of privilege on his behalf arising out of remarks made in this House yesterday by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and affecting Mr. Cyr's standing in this House. I have here a letter received by me this afternoon from Mr. Cyr which, with the consent of the House, I would like to read.

Mr. SPEAKER. It must be a question of privilege affecting the hon. member ; if Mr. Cyr is claiming the right it is must affect him.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The letter is as follows :

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order. In what position am I ? The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. S. J. Jackson) does not make the allegation that I stated something which I knew to be untrue, but he reads a letter from a gentleman——

Mr. PATERSON. A member of this House.

Mr. FOSTER. — a member of this House, but he is not present, and he declares in that letter that I stated what I knew was untrue. Who is to make the renunciation, the member for Selkirk or the absent member? I state myself that I made no statement which I knew to be untrue, that is incorrect, and the member, being a member, who has read the letter and the member, being a member, who has written the letter have both of them to take it back and I shall have to ask the member for Selkirk to take it back twice, once for himself and once for Mr. Cyr.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. As to the point of order raised by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) I might say that if there is anything in the letter which is contrary to the rules of the House I do, on behalf of Mr. Cyr, take it back.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you a power of attorney from Mr. Cyr?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I think so.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to see it.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I shall read the balance of the letter.

Mr. SPEAKER. As far as the letter contains a statement which the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says is untrue, that portion of the letter should be eliminated.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. It is a little harder later on.

Ottawa, May 14, 1908.

S. J. Jackson, Esq., M.P., Ottawa.

My Dear Mr. Jackson,—I noticed in the Ottawa 'Morning Citizen' of to-day that the Hon. Mr. Foster did yesterday make a statement in the House to the effect that I was elected in Provencher at the last general election through fraudulent means employed by one Duggan, who acted there as returning officer for the constituency of Selkirk. The hon. gentleman could not show in a plainer way his ignorance of the facts. I am sorry that on account of ill-health I am unable to be in the House and give the hon. gentleman the castigation which he so well deserves. At last the hordes of Tories who have been hounding my returning officer, Mr. Ayotte, for three years have not yet been able to find a single evidence against him of corruption in any way, and in face of the fact that the election petition against my return was dismissed by the court, Mr. Foster has the effrontery to make in the House a statement which he knows to be untrue——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. (reading):

—and which brands him as a falsifier——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. That statement must be withdrawn.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. On behalf of the hon. gentleman who has written the letter, I would make the same statement as before.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

—and one who has no respect for truth.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I am not taking it back.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The statement must be unreservedly withdrawn.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. As far as I have power I withdraw it.

And for the reputation of his colleagues in the House I would ask you as a favour, if you feel justified in doing it, to rise in the House on a question of privilege——

Mr. SPROULE. I wish your ruling as to whether an hon. member of this House can bring a letter from another who is outside the House making a charge against another member of the House, but which does not affect himself. If I understand correctly an hon. member, as a question of privilege, can only bring up something that affects himself, not that affects some other person who is not here. I wish your ruling.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I asked the permission of the House to read the letter and was given it; that matter is settled, and I was just beginning——

Mr. FOSTER. The House did not know what the letter was.

Mr. SPEAKER. A question of privilege, of course, is something affecting the standing of a member as a member of the House, and I am not at all clear that one member may not take up a question of privilege dealing with another member. Just at the moment, my own idea would be that that could be done, but in so far as the letter goes beyond what a member would himself be allowed to state in this House, it will be checked by me as it proceeds.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wish to raise another point of order. It is not proper for a member of this House to bring a letter from another person, whether a member or not, which contains expressions that he knows to be absolutely against the order and decorum of this House and proceed to read them, and as he is called to order in respect to one expression withdraw it and say there is worse coming later on and proceed, time after time, to insult the order and decorum of this House by improper and injurious expressions respecting another member. I have a great deal of doubt whether a question of privilege can be delegated from one member to another, but putting that aside for the moment, it seems to me the other point is plain if decorum is to be observed in this House.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I would say regarding Mr. Speaker's decision that the hon. member for North Toronto should qualify the expression that he made use of yesterday——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Jackson) speaks to the point of order he is within his right, but he cannot discuss some other matter until that is disposed of.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, as a favour——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am inclined to think that if the statement of the hon. member be correct, that this letter later on contains stronger expressions than those he has already read to the House, it would be hardly appropriate or proper for him to proceed with the reading of it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. To my mind there is nothing stronger than I have already read.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has stated to the House that this letter contains stronger expressions than those he has read. The whole question seems to me to be open to some doubt as to whether an hon. member can delegate a question of privilege to another member, and that being the case it would be preferable that the hon. gentleman should not proceed.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. In the balance of the letter I will not read anything that is improper.

Mr. SPEAKER. Under all the circumstances I think the whole letter had better be ruled out.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course all this illegal and improper stuff will not appear on 'Hansard'

Mr. A. JOHNSTON. Certainly it will.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I may say that Mr. Cyr denies in toto the statement made by the hon. member for North Toronto yesterday in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. He only goes on to show the ignorance of the hon. member for North Toronto——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Take it back.

Mr. FOSTER. I demand a retraction of that. No member has a right to say anything derogatory of any member of the House, and I want an implicit retraction of that.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. If that is the rule of the House and it is carried out it would keep the hon. member for North Toronto from speaking——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Take it back.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. It is quite impossible to deal with a question of order if there is constant interruption while the point is being discussed. At all events, when questions of privilege are being discussed, hon. members on both sides should see that they are treated with great seriousness, because on them depends the decorum of the House. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Jackson) should withdraw the statement that has been objected to by the hon. member for North Toronto.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The word ignorant is not unparliamentary.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is now sliding out of the question by a very unworthy method, it seems to me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Would the hon. member for North Toronto repeat the statement which he takes exception to?

Mr. FOSTER. I will. I will repeat it as far as my recollection goes. What he did say in reality was to accuse me of ignorance with reference to a matter——

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Ignorance of the facts.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, well. That is disrespectful to me as a member of this House, and I think the hon. member ought to make an absolute retraction and do it in a manly way, that is as manly as he can.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I have nothing to retract as far as the ignorance of the hon. gentleman is concerned.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Take it back.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would ask hon. gentlemen to keep order. If some hon. members consider this as a matter of levity the chair considers it to be quite the reverse.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER. Any matter affecting the privilege of the House or decorum in debate is a serious matter and it is not one which should be treated with levity.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER. The chair is of opinion that any direct accusation made by one member against another of being ignorant is one of those insulting expressions which should not be used. On the other hand, if the expression only goes to the extent of saying that an hon. member is ignorant of the facts concerning a certain matter, that might be a parliamentary expression.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LORENZO ROBITAILLE (Quebec County). Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to rise to a question of privilege. As this question of privilege is a special thing I wish to appeal to your good judgment, Mr. Speaker, to say that it is really a question of privilege. The question of privilege is brought forth by insulting remarks made by Mr. Hunter, who is deputy Minister of Public Works against the French Canadians in his department, and as one belonging to that nationality I am personally insulted.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member will see that is not a question of privilege. A question of privilege against which affects only hon. members of the House in something connected with their membership of the House.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. He insults me as a member of this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is quite impossible to say that the matter to which the hon. gentleman refers, not being personal to himself or affecting his position as a member of this House, is a question of privilege.

BRITISH COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEAL.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :—

Resolved, That it is expedient to make provision for payment of annual salaries to judges to be appointed to the Court of Appeal in the province of British Columbia, as follows:—

The Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal, $8,000.

Three Justices of Appeal, each, $7,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why does the Prime Minister not go on with the Exchequer Court Bill ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We shall.

Mr. FOSTER. Are we to have no explanation of this resolution ?

Mr AYLESWORTH. The object of this resolution is simply to found on it a Bill for the provision of salaries in furtherance of the legislation of the provincial legislature passed at the session which concluded about a year ago. An Act was then passed by the British Columbia legislature to establish a court of appeal for the province ; the court to consist of a chief justice with three justices of appeal. The Act contains provision that it is not to come into force until proclamation be issued by the lieutenant-governor in council, and so far as I am aware no such proclamation has as yet been issued. But there have been official communications between the Attorney General of the province and the Department of Justice on the subject, and with the object of providing the salaries in order that the court may be properly constituted when it pleases the lieutenant governor of the province to bring the provincial legislation into force, the legislation which I propose, if this resolution is adopted, has been prepared.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not hear the hon. gentleman very distinctly. I understand there has been provincial legislation establishing a court of appeal which has to be brought into force by proclamation by the lieutenant governor in council of British Columbia.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And that they intend passing the necessary order in council some time in the early future, and therefore it is necessary to make provision for the salary of these judges.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The Act passed by the legislature of British Columbia establishing a court of appeal for the province, contains a clause that the legislation is not to come into effect until it shall be proclaimed. Of course no court can be actually constituted until there is provision for the salaries of its judges, and that is the legislation which we will propose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is all right.

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. AYLESWORTH moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 165) respecting the Court of Appeal of British Columbia. He said : Perhaps I may explain the purpose of the Bill. It contains not only a clause providing for the salaries at the figures just adopted, but also two or three sections amending the Criminal Code, the Winding-Up Act and the Disfranchising Act, to confer upon the court when constituted the appellate powers which the Supreme Court of the province setting en banc now exercises.

Mr. MONK. In this connection I would ask the government if there has been legislation on similar lines providing for the appointment of three new judges for the district of Montreal ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. No such legislation has yet been introduced into this House. Legislation of similar character, I understand, has been passed by the legislature of Quebec, and the question of passing in this House legislation for the province of Quebec of similar character to that which I am now proposing for British Columbia is under consideration.

Mr. MONK. It was in that connection that I put the question, because there is a congestion of judicial business in the district of Montreal, and the provincial legislation has provided for the nomination of new judges. I suppose that during the present session the salaries of those additional judges will be provided for ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is under consideration.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

EXCHANGE OF SCHOOL LANDS.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER moved second reading of Bill (No. 163) to authorize the exchange of certain school lands for other Dominion lands. He said : Sections 11 and 29 in every surveyed township in the three prairie provinces are dedicated to school purposes for the use and benefit of the province, and are administered as a trust by this government. The procedure of utilizing these lands for the benefit of the province is laid down in the statute as being by auction sale only. There is, however, a provision that where the lands are settled upon before survey, an exchange may be made by order of the Governor in Council ; but where they have not been settled upon before survey, they must be disposed of by auction sale. Therefore when and where an occasion arises to make it necessary to deal with any of these lands otherwise than by auction sale, a special Act of parliament is required. In regard to the lands with which this Bill is concerned, I will take the liberty of reading to the House the explanation that has been furnished by the officers of the Interior Department :

Ottawa, February 21, 1908.

Memorandum.

With reference to the Bill which it is proposed to submit to parliament to authorize the sale of section 11-20-2-5, west fifth meridian, to Mr. Joseph Fisher, of Millarville, Alberta, and to set apart another section of equal value in lieu thereof as school lands, I beg to submit the following explanation:

On July 17, 1901, Messrs. Joseph Fisher, Henry H. Barnes, George Stagg, E. Stagg, W. G. Hanna and J. S. Hanna applied for permission to divert water from the south fork of Sheep creek for the irrigation of certain lands in township 20, ranges 1 and 2, west of the fifth meridian. These gentlemen had entered into an agreement for the joint construction by them of the necessary works for the irrigation of lands in that vicinity which they individually held under homestead entry or had applied to purchase under the terms of the Irrigation Act, each of them to bear the expense of constructing parts of the said works in proportion to the acreage of land held by him which could be served by the works. Authorization for the construction of the works was issued on November 18, 1901.

As the works were not completed within the allotted time, investigations were made by the department from which it appears that:

1st. Messrs. J. S. Hanna, W. G. Hanna and Edwin Stagg held under homestead entry the north half and southwest quarter of section 10-20-2-5. The Messrs. Hanna practically repudiated the agreement and did no work on the ditch. Mr. Edwin Stagg left his homestead without making any improvements and did no work on the ditch.

2nd. Mr. George Stagg purchased the southeast quarter of section 10 of the same township, did work to the value of $10, which amount Mr. Fisher paid him, and assigned his interest in his homestead to Mr. Fisher, having paid $160 thereon.

3rd. Messrs. Fisher and Barnes proceeded with the construction of the ditch, but the latter has not appeared to be very actively interested in the work and has left it largely to Mr. Fisher to construct and to finance. Mr. Fisher's lands lie nearest the point of intake for the ditch and his portion of the work has been the most costly and the most difficult to construct. A recent inspection shows that the cost of the works constructed has been paid as follows by Messrs Fisher and Barnes:

Paid by Mr. Barnes..	$1,107 70
	$7,490 52

whereas, if the cost had been borne by them in proportion to the lands held by each, in accordance with the original agreement, the account should stand:

Expended by Mr. Barnes..	$2,931 07
Expended by Mr. Fisher..	4,559 45

thus leaving Barnes indebted to Fisher in the sum of $1,823.37, plus such interest as may be subsequently agreed upon, or judicially determined.

Mr. Barnes was permitted to purchase under the terms of the Irrigation Act the east half of section 18-20-1-5 and the south half of section 24-20-2-5, but the sale of the northeast quarter-section 18 was subsequently cancelled. He has paid $480 thereon. Mr. Fisher was permitted, by order in council dated January 10, 1902, to purchase the south half-section 14, north half-section 2 and the southeast quarter-section 12-20-2-5. Mr. Fisher was under the impression that the southwest quarter of section 12 had been sold to him and he later applied to have the error rectified, but, although the southwest quarter of section 12, has been reserved for sale to him, it does not appear that authority for the sale has been obtained. He has paid $600 on account of these lands. The abandoned homestead of Mr. Edwin Stagg on southwest quarter-section 10-20-2-5 is also now reserved for sale to Mr. Fisher.

From the nature of the tract which it is proposed to irrigate it appears that section 11-20-2-5 is the central and most essential portion of the scheme. Mr. Fisher desired to purchase it but, owing to its being a school section, he could not be permitted to do so. He was, however, permitted to lease it for grazing purposes and still holds it on such lease. He was informed repeatedly that no sale of this section could be made to him, but he does not appear to have clearly understood the situation and has expended a large sum of money in the construction of irrigation works, which would involve a considerable loss to him if the section were disposed of to any other person.

The fact that authorization was granted for the construction of works to irrigate lands which included this school section has, to some extent at least, committed the department to the sale of the land, if the necessary authority can be obtained, and in consideration of this and of the difficulties which Mr. Fisher has encountered in completing this irrigation scheme, the minister has decided to submit a Bill to parliament for authority to sell section 11-20-2-5 to Mr. Fisher, under the terms of the Irrigation Act, and to set apart another section of equal value in lieu thereof for school purposes. The commissioner of irrigation recommends this sale.

That is with regard to section one of the Act. With regard to section 2, the memorandum of the department is as follows :

The application for homestead entry is based on the grounds that by the Acts 56 Victoria, chapter 18, and 58-59 Victoria, chapter 34, the granting of homestead entry is authorized to the persons mentioned in the said Acts on their proving that they were in bona fide residence on, and occupation of the school land applied for prior to January 1, 1880, and that they had continued to reside upon and cultivate the land in accordance with the homestead provisions of the Dominion Lands Act.

The first application on behalf of Martin Aitken was for the southwest quarter of this section and was filed in the department in March, 1895, with his declaration and that of George Spencer, to the effect that Spencer had settled on the southwest quarter of section 29, in township 10, range 6, east, in 1878, and had cultivated it at intervals until 1880 when he sold it to Aitken, who began to reside on it in 1881, and has continued to do so from that time.

It was, however, impossible to grant Aitken's application as the land had already been sold at public auction, and the patent issued.

In any case, however, the application would not have been granted at that time, as the meaning of the Acts 56 Victoria, chapter 18, and 58-59 Victoria, chapter 34, was so interpreted that only actual residence in person by the applicant prior to January 1, 1880, was recognized, while in this case Aitken was not in residence prior to that date, but claimed through the purchase from Spencer, who had settled prior to January 1, 1880. His name is therefore not included in the Act 58-59 Victoria, chapter 34, nor in 56 Victoria, chapter 18, which was passed prior to his application.

It will be observed that the application at that time was for the southwest quarter.

In September, 1900, however, the application of Martin Aitken was again filed here, but this time for the northwest quarter, but as his name was not included in either of the Acts before-mentioned, and as the said Acts were still interpreted so as to exclude any claim through the purchase from one who had settled on the land prior to January 1, 1880, his application was refused.

Since that date, however, this interpretation has been reversed, and in the cases of William and Jackson Holmes their claim through their purchase from one Huggard, who settled on the east half of section 29, in township 10, range 6, east, prior to January 1, 1880, was recognized, and homestead entry was granted them for the southwest and northeast quarters respectively of section 29, in township 10, range 6, east.

In view of the ruling in these cases, application was again made on behalf of Martin Aitken, and it was pointed out that the original application for the southwest quarter was clearly a clerical error on his part, as he was perfectly aware at the time that that quarter-section had already been sold and patented, and that it was his intention to have applied for the northwest quarter, for which land application has since been made.

It is claimed that in view of the action taken in the cases of William and Jackson Holmes that Martin Aitken is entitled on the same grounds to homestead entry for the northwest quarter of section 29, which is part of the same section on which homestead entry has been granted to the Messrs. Holmes, it being pointed out that in his case, as well as in that of the Messrs. Holmes the claim through purchase from the person who settled on the land prior to January 1, 1880, should be recognized, and as Aitken's name was not included in either of the Acts before mentioned that the authority of parliament should be sought to place him in the same position as those who have already obtained entry on the same grounds.

It is urged that had his aplication been originally made as intended for the northwest quarter of this section and had the present ruling as to the right of homestead entry of those persons who purchased the claim of one who settled prior to January 1, 1880, been then in force, his name would have been included in the Act, 58-59 Vic., chap. 34, and that under all the circumstances he is equitably entitled to homestead entry for the northwest quarter of section 29, in township 10, range 6 east, and that entry for that land should now be authorized by legislation.

Mr. HERRON. Were all the parties interested notified ?

Mr. OLIVER. The only parties concerned are Barnes and Fisher, and the statement I have already given sets out the agreement between them and the carrying out of that agreement by them. It shows that Mr. Fisher is entitled to land in proportion to the amount of money he has paid towards the irrigation of the total area irrigated. He would not get his proper share of the total area which the joint money of Fisher and Barnes irrigated unless this land is sold to him.

Mr. SPROULE. How does the hon. gentleman determine that the land he has set apart for school purposes in lieu of this land, is of equal value ? The land will be enhanced in value by this irrigation ditch, if we are to credit the prospectuses sent out by irrigation companies. According to these prospectuses, the irrigated land is worth $25 an acre whereas formerly it was worth only $3 to $5 an acre. That irrigation would enhance the value of the school land, and if some other lands, which are at a remote distance from the irrigation ditch, be taken in exchange, the school fund would lose to the extent of the difference.

Mr. OLIVER. I have pointed out that the irrigation involved in this scheme has cost the two parties $7,490.

Mr. SPROULE. But are not the school lands more valuable than the lands to be given in exchange ?

Mr. OLIVER. I say the school section that is involved is part of the area that is irrigated as a result of the expenditure of this amount of money. Unless the parties who have expended this money, receive the benefit of this particular school section they will lose the return on a large proportion of the money they have expended.

Mr. SPROULE. That may be, but it appears to be one of the accidents of life. Is there any provision in the land law which allows the levying of a rate on school lands for irrigation purposes where other parties irrigate the section?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly not. And there is no question of levying a rate in this case. Two private individuals undertake an irrigation scheme——

Mr. FOSTER. In a certain section?

Mr. OLIVER. In a certain locality. And this scheme involves certain sections of land. The parties go on and expend their money and bring their scheme to completion. Now, the expenditure of their money gives, unquestionably, a largely enhanced value to the land on which they have spent their money—otherwise, they would not spend it. Part of the land affected by the expenditure of the money is this particular school question, which was included in their original application, and which they believed they would be able to acquire. But, as the fact is, they cannot acquire it under the law except by auction sale; which would, of course, put the man who had spent his money in making the section valuable at the mercy of any buyer who chose to pay for the land up to the amount that Mr. Fisher had spent in order to irrigate it, and who would, in that case, still be better off than Mr. Fisher if he got it for nothing. It would seem to me eminently unfair to put Mr. Fisher in that position. Of course, it is because there is no law to cover the case that I ask parliament to sanction the sale of this section to Mr. Fisher and the authority to take a section of equal value elsewhere—that is, of value equal to that of this land before Mr. Fisher's money was spent upon irrigation to make it valuable, not of value equal to it after Mr. Fisher's money had been spent upon it.

Mr. SPROULE. That is where I think the whole thing is wrong. It was contemplated that the land would increase in value by virtue of settlement and other things and that the school fund would have the increased value. This irrigation is one means by which the school land is enhanced in value, and, if you give other land in lieu of it which is not enhanced in value, the school fund must lose the amount of money to which it is entitled. Therefore, this seems an injustice to the school fund.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose John Smith held these sections of land, how could he be dealt with under the irrigation scheme? He would have an absolute right to his sections, and he would gain by the expenditure of other people's money without having to make compensation to them. Was there any guarantee to these gentlemen that they would have all the lands within that area?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, why should not the government have its chance of increased value owing to the labours of these irrigationists as well as private individuals?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, that is the question that is before parliament at the moment. If parliament should see fit to hold that view, it is within the right of parliament to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the minister think it fair?

Mr. OLIVER. No, my view is that it is desirable to facilitate the bringing under irrigation of land that requires irrigation and is susceptible of it; and that it is not well for the government, having the general interests of the country in view, because it owns a certain piece of land, to use its ownership of that piece of land as a means of preventing the completion of a scheme of irrigation that would be to the general benefit of the country at large and to the special benefit of that particular locality. But let me emphasize the point brought out in this report, that this particular section is the central point of the tract irrigated and that without the benefit of that particular section the rest of the scheme would not be undertaken—that is to say there would not be sufficient other land irrigable to warrant the expenditure of the $7,000 or $8,000 necessary to make the scheme complete.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that absolutely so?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, that is the fact, and that is set out in the report.

Mr. LAKE. May I ask the minster what effect this will have upon large irrigation schemes like that of the Canadian Pacific Railway ? What has been the practice with regard to school sections contained in the tracts covered by such schemes? Will this cause claims to be put in by these companies for the purchase at cheap rates of school sections within their irrigation districts?

Mr. OLIVER. Each case stands upon its own merits, as, of course, must be the case when we come to parliament for authority.

Mr. LAKE. But you are creating a precedent in this case.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, but it is only a precedent for the consideration of parliament, which is no precedent, for the right of parliament to give or withhold is absolute. In regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway irrigation scheme, the lands which they have been authorized to take as an irrigation proposition are in the country lying east of Calgary. In that case they were allowed the school sections, and school sections are to be taken elsewhere.

Mr. FOSTER. Done by act of this House?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to answer off hand how it was done, but that is how it is. The Canadian Pacific Railway, when they were allowed to take the odd-numbered sections which they were entitled to select in other parts of the country and to select for them even-numbered sections within the tract, in order to get as solid a block as possible, to facilitate and advantage the irrigation scheme, at the same time, were given the privilege of taking school sections, and school sections in lieu of these have been selected and set aside elsewhere. I think the same thing was done in regard to the Alberta Railway and Coal Company's tract—that is, the part of their irrigation tract that they acquired as a railway land grant, which stands on all fours with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am not able to answer as to the additional tracts that they acquired by purchase under irrigation conditions, but I am under the impression that there the same conditions prevailed. In regard to the tract acquired by the Roblins Irrigation Company the school sections are not disposed of, they remain the property of the school fund within that tract, without any claim from the company.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister think that we can properly take away land that was set apart by Act of parliament in trust for the benefit of the provincial school fund, and exchange it at any time? We have exchanged land before, but by what authority? From the arguments I have heard in this House many years ago I think it was held that we could not do it. Would it not be a great injustice to the province and to the school fund if, by settlement, or by the making of an irrigation ditch, school lands that were set apart in trust for the benefit of the educational fund of the province were enhanced in value, and that then we disposed of these lands and took other lands in lieu thereof where there was no development, lands which were comparatively in a primeval state? If these lands are worth $12 to-day, and are exchanged for lands in some remote parts worth only $3 or $5, the province has a just right to claim the difference in value, in the interests of their school fund.

Mr. FOSTER. In what province is this land?

Mr. OLIVER. In Alberta.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) has made a strong appeal. This land does not belong to this government, this government holds it in trust for the school fund of the province of Alberta. Is it right for one party, while the other party for whom it is held in trust is living, to dispose of that land and thereby diminish its value to the party for whom it is held in trust, without the consent of the latter? This land has appreciated in value until it is worth $12 an acre. The Alberta government says that this increase in value belongs to their school fund. You take land in some other place, it may be of equal fertility, but which is worth only $3 or $5; and there is no certainty that it ever will come up to $12, but if it does, it will be many years.

Mr. HERRON. It is hard to get any other land of equal value to this land owing to its being peculiarly fit for irrigation. For that reason there is scarcely any other land that is as valuable. I have no particular objection to this Bill, I have no instructions from any party concerning it. It may be all right to make the exchange. But I suppose the minister has a report from some of his own officers which justifies him in making the exchange. I have known cases where people have bought half and quarter-sections under the irrigation law in that country, bought at a low rate, about $3 an acre, with a rebate when they had constructed a ditch. I know some cases where the value put upon the construction of the ditch was five times more than its actual value; in fact I think in one case the patent was put through and the sale was completed without there having been any water on the land, and I do not think any water was ever put on the land, nevertheless they got the patent and the rebate.

Mr. SPROULE. At what figure does the department propose to sell this land?

Mr. OLIVER. The regulations under which the land is disposed of for irrigation purposes are as stated by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) that is to say, we sell the land at $3 an acre subject to a reduction for work done on the ditch to the amount of $2 per acre, so the land may stand the purchaser only $1 an acre. This policy is adopted with the view of encouraging enterprises to bring the land under irrigation. It is a policy which has been in force for a number of years, and I think has proved generally acceptable. Where any part of the country requires irrigation, where the land is capable of being irrigated, and where there is water that can be used for the purpose, it is considered desirable in the interest of everybody that the water should be brought to the land. In order to encourage the employment of capital for that purpose the system of sale which has been alluded to was adopted. It has been generally acceptable, and fairly successful in bringing into operation a considerable number of irrigation propositions, and very useful ones. My hon. friend from Alberta has suggested that in the past there have been cases where work done on the ditch was credited at too high a figure, and where sales were made although actual irrigation had not taken place. Possibly that has been the case in the past. When the irrigation law was administered by the deputy Minister of Public Works for the territories and when he was also Commissioner of Irrigation, he had a great deal more to do than he could attend to. At that time there may have been cases such as the hon. gentleman has mentioned. But when the provinces were divided and it was impossible to continue the previous system, a Commissioner of Irrigation was appointed with residence at Calgary; and I think I am safe in saying that since then there has been no case such as the hon. gentleman has alluded to. We have been very particular as to the merits of any scheme that is proposed. When an irrigation scheme is proposed to us, we have the locality surveyed by our own officers to see whether the scheme is practicable before we accede to it. After the work is completed, we have it inspected and reported upon before any transfer of the land is made. I think if the hon. gentleman will inquire he will find that any recent transactions which have taken place since the appointment of a Commissioner of Irrigation with residence at Calgary, have not been of the class he has mentioned.

Mr. HERRON. The case I have reference to was over four years ago.

Mr. LAKE. There is an important principle involved in this question of the exchange of school lands. The proceeds of the sale of school lands are to be put aside and invested in a fund for the purpose of advancing education in the northwestern provinces. A Bill was introduced a couple of sessions ago in regard to the exchange of certain school lands; one of the pieces of land which had to be exchanged was very valuable, close to the town of Indian Head, and was being used as a nursery for trees by the government. I pointed out at that time that it was a valuable piece of land and it would probably be difficult to find an equally valuable plot to place at the disposal of the school funds. Can the minister state the actual facts in connection with that exchange?

With regard to the question immediately at issue here I would not like to see discrimination against any particular individuals. Whatever the general plan which we decide upon is it appears from the statements of the Minister that in the case of some of the larger companies the acquisition of school lands has been permitted, other lands of supposedly equal value being given to the school fund. I would suggest that it might be better if some arrangement could be made by which when application is made for purchases of land for irrigation purposes, if it was found that school lands would be involved in the irrigation scheme, these lands should be disposed of in advance by public auction and their full value in their natural state obtained.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the minister had any communication with the province, which is of course deeply interested in this and what position do they take on it?

Mr. OLIVER. We have had no communication with the province on this matter. As my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) has said, the precedent has been established and no objection has been taken to that position, because I am satisfied that the authorities of the province feel practically quite as much interested in the development of irrigation in that country as the authorities here because by the development of an irrigation scheme the taxable value of the land of course increases very greatly. Therefore, from a provincial point of view, there is no objection to the exchange which is suggested here for such a purpose as this. The very fact that there is no general provision for the exchange of the lands which have once been surveyed shows how carefully the trust is guarded. In each particular case we have to lay the facts before parliament and it is within the judgment of parliament whether the permission is granted or not. Irrigation propositions such as this one, it will be agreed in fact by every one who understands the question, are on a very different footing from any other cases. My friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) hardly appreciates the position in this case. This is not the case of the mere enhancement of value of the land by reason of conditions surrounding it or near it.

Mr. SPROULE. That is one important element.

Mr. OLIVER. No, not in this case. That was the case in the instance alluded to by the hon. member from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) but this case is entirely different. In this case the completion of the scheme depends upon the acquisition of this very land by the projectors of the scheme. Suppose that parliament should not permit this exchange to be made ; if the projectors had known that such permission would not be granted at the beginning they never would have undertaken the scheme.

Mr. SPROULE. Were they ignorant of the land law ?

Mr. OLIVER. They assume, I presume, that the same consideration that had been granted to others would be granted to them. The scheme would not have been undertaken if this section could not have been made part of it: then none of the land involved in the scheme would have had the advantage of irrigation and none of it would have been increased in value by the expenditure of this large amount of money upon it. It is not an ordinary case of land which has increased in value by reason of surrounding conditions.

As to the question raised by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) I am not able to give any information directly on that point. The land was required for the purposes of the forestry farm at Indian Head and it did not seem to be advisable or in the public interest or necessary or fair, as it seemed to us, that the government in order to apply that land to a different purpose, which was essential for the benefit of the province in which it was situated as well as in the other provinces, should be required to pay a price for that land because of the surrounding conditions having increased in value, when it was possible to set aside elsewhere land which had an equal intrinsic value. However, that question is a fair subject for consideration and it has been before me for consideration. I have done what I think my friend will admit was fair. Where we find that land has been held under reservation for some particular reason for a considerable length of time, and during that time has come into value, instead of opening that to homestead entry, we have, in certain cases, set aside these quarter-sections of the school lands so that the school fund would have the same advantage in these cases of increased value by reason of surrounding conditions as occurred in the case of the Indian Head farm, and as may occur in numerous cases in which it would be desirable to secure an exchange of school lands.

Mr. LAKE. To what kind of reserves does the minister refer?

Mr. OLIVER. I can hardly give any general statement of the classes and I would not say that it was done in cases where there is no special value to consider. But where there was special value in the land, for instance, where there is a preemption taken 15 or 20 years ago which has been held possibly in the centre of a well settled piece of country, and which has been cancelled, instead of opening that up for homestead entry we may set aside that for the school fund so that the school fund will get the increased value of that land by reason of the surrounding settlement. Another instance is this: In the opening of the Doukhobor reserves, right adjoining the town of Langham was a quarter-section of land which was entered for as a Doukhobor by a man who was afterwards proven not to be a Doukhobor, and therefore had not the right of prior entry on this land. It was necessary to cancel his entry. This land was immediately adjoining the town of Langham and of course if it were opened up for ordinary homestead entry it would have been a snap for whoever got it. Instead of opening it for homestead entry or selling it by auction for the benefit of the treasury at large, we thought it right to take that quarter-section in exchange for some of the school lands that we have secured exchange for. My hon. friend may consider if he pleases that we exchanged a quarter-section at the Indian Head farm for a quarter-section adjoining the town of Langham. At any rate we have adopted this principle and I think have thus evened up with the provinces for such cases as he mentions.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 1,

Mr. SPROULE. If I understand it correctly, parliament formerly reached the conclusion that we cannot divest ourselves of a trust once it is created nor can we divert these school lands for any other purpose than that provided for in the law creating the trust. In view of that, I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior if he has secured the advice of the Department of Justice as to the authority of this House to deal with these school lands in such a way as is proposed?

Mr. OLIVER. I imagine this Bill has been referred to the Department of Justice, but I cannot answer for it specifically. I may say, however, that the trust of which my hon. friend speaks is a trust existing by Act of Parliament, and inasmuch as any Act of Parliament can be amended so that Act can be amended as it is being amended by this Bill. This Bill is only one of several that have been passed to meet such cases as these now before the House. The Acts hitherto passed have not been questioned as to their legality, and the only question for consideration is as to their wisdom in dealing with the circumstances of each case.

Mr. SPROULE. At one time Manitoba wanted her school lands given up and it was strongly contended by eminent lawyers in this House that we could not divest ourselves of the trust. Have we any better authority for divesting ourselves of this trust? On that point the opinion of the Department of Justice should have been secured.

Mr. OLIVER. We are not divesting ourselves of the trust in this case. We are making a certain exchange of lands in accordance with precedents established during all the years since the trust was created. In the general operation of settlement in the country it has been found necessary from time to time to make such exchanges as are contemplated in this Bill. I think there can be no doubt that the precedent has been established for cause, that it has the sanction of law, and that there can, therefore, be no objection to this Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. It is of no importance to me personally, and I do not want to object to the Bill, but I would point out that many bad precedents are established and we should not follow them. The impression left on my mind from the discussion in this House was that we could only dispossess ourselves of such land in accordance with the terms of the trust.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not recall the debate to which my hon. friend refers and while no doubt some expressed the view he has presented, others possibly took the contrary view.

Mr. SPROULE. I believe it was generally conceded that we could not do it with respect to the Manitoba school lands, and I would like to know what authority we have for doing it in this case.

Mr. OLIVER. I still think there must be a very radical difference between handing over the ownership of lands to some organization or person and merely exchanging one piece of land for another, which is rendered necessary in the administration of the lands by the settlement of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. When the progress of settlement enhances the value of certain land to $10 or $20 an acre, and you exchange that for some other land worth only $2 an acre, surely the school fund must lose the difference. Could not the province demand from us an accounting for that difference, and claim, equitably if not legally, that we should pay to the province the $18 an acre that was lost as a result of the exchange?

Mr. OLIVER. It is quite possible that in a close scrutiny of the case that might be done. But, on the other hand, there have been instances in which an exchange has been made of lands less valuable for lands more valuable; for instance, the two sections in the Canadian Pacific Railway irrigation tract, which undoubtedly were of less value, aside from the question of irrigation, then the land for which they were exchanged, which was in a part of the country where irrigation was not necessary. In that case the school fund benefited by the exchange; so that, while it is perhaps a matter for discussion, it does not at all follow that by this proposed exchange the school fund will ultimately suffer.

Section agreed to.

On the preamble,

Mr. SPROULE. It would have been interesting to see the correspondence in connection with this exchange. I do not assume that there is anything wrong in it, but there are so many crooked kinks in these land transactions that one becomes a little suspicious about them.

Mr. OLIVER. It was not contemplated to bring the papers down; but if the hon. gentleman wishes them, I will see that they are brought down.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not wish to go into the matter.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

LAND TITLES ACT ASSURANCE FUND.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER Minister of the Interior) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, That the Minister of Finance may, under the authority of the Governor in Council, pay the proper authorities of each of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, out of the Assurance Fund formed under the Territories Real Property Act, chapter 26, of the statutes of 1886, and continued under The Land Titles Act, 1894, chapter 28, of the statutes of the year, so much thereof as has arisen from transactions relating to lands now within such province.

He said: This resolution is practically to complete the Autonomy Bills. It is to provide for handing over to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta certain moneys which have accumulated in the Assurance Fund in the hands of this government under the operation of the Land Titles Act. Under the provisions of that Act, which gives absolute title to lands, and takes the responsibility of mistakes made in the administration of the Act, a certain tax is levied on each transaction, which tax goes to form an assurance fund out of which to pay claims arising as the result of these mistakes. When the two new provinces were organized, they were given control of the registration of titles, and the administration of the Land Titles Act passed to them. They have been operating the Act in those provinces since, but the assurance fund, which had accumulated to the Dominion treasury during the period when the Dominion operated the Act, has not yet been handed over to the new provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the money go into the consolidated revenue?

Mr. OLIVER. No, it was a separate fund created for the sole purpose of meeting claims that might be made upon it, arising out of mistakes which might occur in the operation of the Land Titles Act. But the transactions against which that fund stands as an assurance are now in the jurisdiction of the provinces, and as the provinces have assumed the responsibility of administering the Act and consequently any liability for mistakes that may occur, it is only reasonable that this fund should be transferred to them.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the amount of the fund now?

Mr. HAGGART. How does the government divest itself of the responsibility?

Mr. OLIVER. By the provisions of the Autonomy Acts. The fund amounts at present to $118,912.62.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the assent of the Governor General been given? That was not announced when the hon. minister gave notice of the resolution.

Mr. OLIVER. I neglected to give that announcement but the requisite authority has been received.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the resolution.

Mr. LAKE. Could the hon. minister state the amount for each province?

Mr. OLIVER. No, the Bill is for the purpose of handing over the money and providing for its division between the two provinces in proportion to the transactions within each province.

Mr. HAGGART. How does the Dominion government divest itself of liability to the parties assured?

Mr. OLIVER. The government cannot divest itself absolutely of liability, but the two provinces have given an undertaking that they will assume that liability.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time and agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 168) to authorize payment to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta of a part of the Assurance Fund under the Land Titles Act of 1894.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

YUKON PLACER MINING ACT—AMENDMENT.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 150) to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act. He said: Until last session the placer mining in the Yukon was regulated by order in council. That system was necessary under the circumstances prevailing in the Yukon for so many years. But, as time went on, and the conditions in regard to mining there became better known, not only did that condition of the law become less necessary, but it became less and less to the liking of the people who were affected by it. The very facility which the administration of the mining law by regulation gave to meet changed conditions, or conditions which had been misunderstood, grew objectionable under conditions which had become to a great extent fixed and when people wished to know, from time to time and from year to year, just what their rights were without any question of alteration. In accepting the view that the time had come for regulation to be succeeded by enactment, the Yukon Placer Mining Bill was introduced and accepted by the House. We were aware that, at this distance from the Yukon, and even with the advantages we have of being in touch with conditions in that country, there were difficulties in placing on the statute-book a law that would be in actual accord with those conditions unless there was close consultation with the people of the Yukon. The Yukon has a partially representative council or local government, and the representations of a committee of this council were accepted by the government and by the House last year in the terms of the Act which was passed. As I said, the intention of that Act, its very purpose, the desire which it was intended to meet, was that there should be stability in the placer mining law of the Yukon. Therefore, when we come forward at this, the next succeeding session, with a series of amendments, it may seem that either the people who were interested in the passage of the law last year did not know their own minds at the time or that they had changed their minds. The fact is, however, that there are serious difficulties in meeting the conditions, as they are found to exist And, as all legislation is necessarily imperfect and has to be amended from time to time —otherwise there would be no necessity for parliament—so in the case of the Yukon Placer Mining Act, which might be said to have been an experiment in legislation of that character for this parliament, it has been found in operation during the past year that there are faults and failings in it which require to be remedied, instances or conditions that were not foreseen that require to be met, or expressions used that were not sufficiently definite. There is no change in the principle of the Yukon Placer Mining Act in the amendments now before the House. These amendments are simply to give fuller effect to the principles contained in the Act of last session. These amendments, as the Act itself was, were prepared by a committee of the Yukon council in the light of such experience as they have had under the Act and presented to the government here, endorsed by the Commissioner of the Yukon, who is an officer of this government, as being in the interest of mining in that country. The Bill, then is offered to the House under these circumstances.

In the preparation of the Bill for presentation to the House, there has been some little departure from the ordinary form. We have given the amendment in the ordinary wording; beneath that we have printed the section as it is and the section as it is proposed to be amended, with the amendments in italics and with an explanation following. It is hoped that by this arrangement a full understanding of the wording and the meaning of the various changes will be given. However, I may say that since the Bill was put in type there have been certain representations made as to the protection of certain interests in the Yukon which may be said to be an embodiment of a new principle. These I will place before the House as we reach them in the progress of the Bill, and will give the necessary explanations. But the Bill as it stands in print contains and continues only the principles contained in the original Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

1. Paragraph (c) of section 2 of The Yukon Placer Mining Act is amended by adding the following words thereto:—but does not include streams which may be considered rivers under the provisions of the Dredging regulations, that is, streams having an average width of one hundred and fifty feet.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you mean by the average width? I presume most streams are wider in some places than in others.

Mr. OLIVER. It is because they are wider in some places and narrower in others that we use the word average. There has to be some way of defining a stream to which dredging regulations may apply, as distinguished from a stream to which placer mining regulations may apply. We have to make some division, and the wording is the best we can make. We give a definition as to the measurement, and in the last resort the decision as to the average width is left to the gold commissioner.

On section 3,

Mr. SPROULE. I thought you only had one gold commissioner, but this seems to contemplate the appointment of several.

Mr. OLIVER. It may be that more than one would be necessary, and this permits the appointment of more than one. But at present there is only one gold commissioner in the Yukon.

Mr. LAKE. Do you mean mining commissioner or commissioner of the Yukon?

Mr. OLIVER. The gold commissioner, an officer whose business it is to administer the law in regard to mining, and to hear appeals from the decisions of the mining recorder.

Mr. DANIEL. What is meant by 'Governor in Council'? I did not know there was a Governor so-called in the Yukon.

Mr. OLIVER. The Governor in Council is the Governor of the Dominion Council. This is a law of the Dominion parliament, and the Governor in Council appoints a gold commissioner. This law is not administered by the local council of the Yukon; that council merely administers the ordinary business of the territory, and has nothing to do with the administration of gold mining.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the salary of those gold commissioners, and what are their duties? Is it necessary to have more than one?

Mr. OLIVER. There is only one gold commissioner at present, and there never has been more than one. There is no intent of appointing more unless occasion should arise. The use of the plural is simply to follow the wording of the Act of last year:

The Governor in Council may appoint gold commissioners, mining recorders and mining inspectors and deputies thereto, for carrying on the provisions of this Act|

I cannot say what is the salary of the gold commissioner, but I am under the impression it is $5,000.

On section 4,

Mr. SPROULE. Is it contemplated where you have mining districts that there shall be one gold commissioner for each district?

Mr. OLIVER. The section provides for the division of the territory into mining districts, in each of which there shall be a head office for recording mineral claims. That division is made by the commissioner in council at the present time. Now the commissioner in council at the present time means the commissioner of the Yukon territory sitting in council. As the council only sits once a year it follows that this division could only be made at a time when the council was in session. In case there is a stampede to any particular part of the country it may become desirable to constitute that part of the country a mining district with a mining recorder, and it should not be necessary to wait until the council sat in order to make that division. It is thought proper that the commissioner should have power to declare any part of the country a mining district. Mr. Alexander Henderson is the Yukon commissioner now, he was formerly Judge Henderson, at Vancouver.

Mr. LAKE. In section 4 the word 'commissioner' means the commissioner of the Yukon; in section 3, in the 18th line, the word 'commissioner,' according to the minister's explanation, means the gold commissioner. There is likely to be confusion.

Mr. OLIVER. In section 3 the word used is gold commissioner. According to the Bill the Governor in Council may appoint gold commissioners and assistant gold commissioners for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act. But mining recorders, mining inspectors and deputies thereto, shall be appointed by the commissioner subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and in this case the commissioner means the commissioner of the Yukon.

On section 12—Extension of boundaries of claim.

Mr. OLIVER moved to amend the section by adding the words:

Or which may be subject to the terms of any agreement with the Crown.

He said: This is to provide for a certain condition which was overlooked in the original Bill. There are cases in which there are certain rights which are not the rights of ownership but which are rights under agreement with the Crown. These rights will be ignored by the provisions of the Bill as it is printed, but, with the addition of the words which I have moved, will be protected.

Mr. SPROULE. I should think the more responsible officer would be the gold commissioner, and yet you include the mining recorder with him in this section.

Mr. OLIVER. The mining recorder is the officer most nearly acquainted with the actual circumstances and as the distances are great and the means of communication limited it is thought well that in such a case as this where it is really a question of fact, it might fairly be left to the mining recorder with an appeal always to the gold commissioner.

On section 13,

Mr. OLIVER. The purpose of this amendment is to allow a period to intervene between the abandonment and relocation so that the world will have notice that the claim is available for relocation and so that the person who abandons will not have priority of right in relocating as he would were he allowed to abandon to-day and relocate to-morrow.

Mr. SPROULE. Is any official document filed establishing the abandonment?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. A man must abandon one claim before he can take another and under this amendment he cannot abandon for the purpose of relocating and thereby avoid paying his renewal fee or doing his assessment work.

On section 16,

Mr. OLIVER. I move that after the word 'following' in the second line, the words be inserted:

Subject to any right granted by the terms of any existing agreement with the Crown.

This is in order to protect certain rights which are not rights of ownership and yet are rights under agreement with the Crown and therefore entitled to be respected.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. What is the effect of that amendment?

Mr. OLIVER. There are certain rights to what are called reverted claims, which rights are held under an agreement with the Crown at the present time and this amendment will preserve these rights.

Mr. A. MACDONELL. Is that reserving to the Crown the right overlapping claims?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. Are not these claims in many instances already granted to other parties in the event that they should lapse into the hands of the government. How would the amendment affect a position of that kind?

Mr. OLIVER. This condition exists; there are certain lease holders who have a lease of a large area of territory within which area there are situated individual claims. It is a condition of the lease that whenever any of these individual claims situated within the leasehold revert to the Crown or when the conditions upon them are not fulfilled, instead of reverting to the Crown they fall into the lease. It is to preserve that right of reversion of the claims within a lease to the leasehold that these words are inserted.

Mr. DANIEL. I notice in one of these sections, and perhaps it is the case in some others, that the word 'Commissioner' where it refers to the Commissioner of the Yukon is printed with a capital C, while in other sections it is not printed with a capital C. If the word 'Commissioner,' where it refers to the Commissioner of the Yukon, were printed with a capital C all through this Act it would be better in every way.

Mr. OLIVER. A very good idea.

On section 21—Performance of work by owners of adjoining claims.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that this is a means of enabling a few parties to get control of the whole district.

Mr. OLIVER. It is a means whereby a number of men may group their interests in order to a more economical working of the properties. This is a principle which was admitted in the Act of last year as well as under the previous regulations. It is, of course, a principle which is subject to abuse—something that must be carefully guarded against. The difference between the provision in the amendment and the provision in the Act of last year is that the number of claims was not defined in the provision of last year, and it was believed that abuses might readily arise under it; any number of claims might be grouped. The new provision is that ten claims may be grouped freely, but the grouping of a greater number shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioner of the Yukon on the report of the mining engineer. It is believed that no great harm can be done by the grouping of ten claims or less, while the grouping of more than ten might be subject to great abuse. At the same time, there may be occasions when it would be desirable that a larger number of claims should be grouped.

On section 22,

Section 52 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following subsection :

2. In granting the privilege allowed under this section the mining recorder shall charge the applicant two dollars and fifty cents for every three months or portion thereof for each claim during that portion of the year it is necessary to renew it to make all the claims renewable on the same day; and the representation work required for the fractional portion of the year for which each claim is renewed shall be allowed at the rate of fifty dollars for each three months or fraction thereof, and the said representation work shall be performed and recorded on or before the date from which all the claims are first made renewable.

Mr. SPROULE. At present a man must pay a full fee if he renews a claim for a portion of a year. Under this amendment he need only pay for a fraction of the year.

Mr. OLIVER. It is necessary perhaps to read the section as it stands in the present Act to catch the full meaning of the amendment :

Grants of claims in respect of which such permission has been granted, and grants of any claims within a mining district, owned by one person, may be made renewable by the mining recorder on the same day.

This provision is to permit broken periods to be brought together without requiring the miner to pay a full year's fee.

On section 23,

Section 54 of the said Act is amended by striking out the word 'ground' in the ninth line and inserting the word 'property' in lieu thereof.

Mr. SPROULE

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) sets a remarkably good example in the fullness of the printed explanations which he brings down to the House when he makes these amendments. It is a course I have advocated in respect of all Bills for several years. I am bound to say that any minister who does this will always succeed in getting his legislation through in one quarter of the time and with about one-tenth of the trouble it would otherwise involve. I congratulate the minister most heartily.

Mr. OLIVER. I desire to add a proviso as follows :

Provided that before entering upon or constructing or repairing works upon the mining property of another person, such applicant shall give adequate security by bond or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the mining recorder, to secure payment to the owner of such mining property of all damage caused by such entry.

Mr. DANIEL. Who is to be the judge of that damage?

Mr. OLIVER. We necessarily give the right to one person to go upon the property of another, but the person who receives this right may not be a man of any substance, and should he, in the carrying out of his work, damage the property upon which he has been permitted to enter, the owner, though he may have legal recourse, may have no valuable recourse against him. This provision requires that before any one enteres on the property of another, he shall satisfy the mining recorder as to his being good for the damage. The owner will then have security should he require to take legal action.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the general effect of this section ?—not the portion of it which is amended but the portion which remains as it was before. I will read the section omitting the immaterial words :

A mining recorder may . . .grant . . the right to divert or take and use or sell the water from any stream or lake . . . and the right of way through, and entry upon any mining property, for the purpose of constructing and repairing ditches and flumes to convey such water.

Then follows the proviso which has been read by the minister as to security. Thus it will be seen that power is given to grant the right to divert water——

Mr. OLIVER. That is not the material point that is being amended.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know that; but the whole section is before us and we should consider what it means. The reason I mention it now is to understand exactly the effect of the amendment. You provide for the right of way through and entry upon mining property for the purpose of constructing or repairing ditches or flumes, and then you provide that the person who exercises this right should give adequate security.

Mr. OLIVER. To the owner of the claim through which he is permitted to carry the water.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, security for payment to the owner of such mining property of all damages caused by such entry. Well, is that enough—'damage caused by such entry'. You do not say anything about the damage which may be occasioned by the construction and repair of ditches and flumes.

Mr. OLIVER. The security demanded is at the discretion of the mining recorder.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No. If it were that, I would not raise any objection. But you are to give security for 'damage caused by such entry,' thus the 'entry' is distinguished from 'the construction and repair of ditches and flumes.' You speak of 'entry' as one thing, of 'construction, and repair of ditches and flumes' as another thing, and of the diversion of water as still another thing, but you provide damages only for the entry.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no connection between the diversion of the water and the subsequent part of the section.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps not.

Mr. OLIVER. There is, of course, a direct connection between the construction or repair of works and the entry. Of course, my belief was that when you gave a person permission to enter upon the property you thereby took chances on what he was going to do when he got there, and you exacted beforehand security adequate to cover what he was likely to do after he got entry. If that is not clear, I would like it to be made clear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the minister had better ask his legal adviser about that. If I were asked to draft a section to cover what the minister obviously intends, I would make it a little wider than this. As I have mentioned the point, the minister can deal with it as he sees fit. When you give power to divert and take or use and sell water, does that mean power to go on any man's property and divert the water from it?

Mr. OLIVER. No, the water cannot be diverted except by the order of the mining recorder.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. All the water that runs in that country is subject to the order of the mining recorder?

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely.

Mr. GALLIHER. In mining in British Columbia, we sometimes meet that difficulty. I think that the case in mind is this: You grant a man permission to divert water from a certain stream. If it is not necessary for him to take that water across another man's property in order to make it available for his own use, the latter part of this section does not apply. But, if he must bring the water across another man's property, he must receive permission to cross that man's property, but you protect the owner of that property under the latter part of the clause. You give the right of entry and right of way upon the property for a certain purpose, that of constructing and repairing ditches and flumes, and all this is taken into consideration in fixing the security. That is, the entry is directly connected with the construction and repair of ditches and flumes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEI. I do not agree that that view is right. But the minister will look into the matter.

Mr. GALLIHER. I mention it, not merely as a lawyer, but because we encounter the same thing in our own province and have had cases of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I dare say. But where you specify the entry and also specify something besides the entry, and when your damages are allowed for the entry alone, it seems to me it would be well to make the matter clear.

Mr. GALLIHER. But the entry is for a certain purpose and you provide for damages in respect of such entry for such purposes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand. But where you specify several things in one place, it seems to me they should be covered in the other place also.

Mr. OLIVER. I desire to have the provision clear and adequate, and so I would like to make a suggestion. If it does not seem sufficient, I will reserve the section for further consideration of the law clerk of the department. Suppose the section were made to provide that 'before entering for the purpose of constructing or repairing works upon the mining property of any other person' security shall be given for 'all damage caused by such entry for such purpose.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it would be better to repeat the words at the commencement of the clause and provide that before entry the applicant shall give security to secure payment to the owner of such mining property 'for all damage caused by such entry, or construction, or repairing.' We want it to be placed beyond doubt.

Mr. OLIVER. We will sacrifice elegance for certainty; and I move in amendment that these words be introduced:

By such entry, or construction, or repairing.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 25,—amending section 1 of the old Act.

Mr. MACDONELL. The change proposed here is rather important, and the minister might explain the reason for it.

Mr. OLIVER. The amendment consists in inserting the word 'first' in two places. The case which it is intended to meet arises where there has been a diversion of water from any stream for the purpose of working claims which are either not on the stream or are at some considerable distance down the stream from where the water is taken out, and where there are claims discovered upon the creek below the ditch-head and above the return of the water to the creek. These claims are not workable, and this clause is intended to restore to those claims the inherent right which they are in mining custom supposed to have, to some reasonable measure of the natural flow of the water of that creek.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The water is diverted from the creek into a ditch?

Mr. OLIVER. This is intended to meet such a case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then there is a claim situated above the place where the water returns to the creek from the ditch; cannot that person be served by the ditch in the ordinary course ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You intend to provide that a certain portion of the water must come down the creek to that man's claim, and that only the balance of it shall go into the ditch for the purpose of serving the parties for whose use the ditch was created ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. The insertion of the word 'first' is rendered necessary by an interpretation that it seems has been placed upon the section as it now stands in the Act, that the right of the miner upon the creek to a share of the water only accrued after the owner of the ditch had satisfied his own requirements. Of course that in most cases would mean no relief at all, would mean that the conditions intended to be met would not be met. Therefore it is proposed to meet the conditions which the Bill as passed last year were intended to meet, by inserting the word 'first,' so that the first 40 inches or 20 inches of water, as the case might be, will be available on these streams to which that water naturally belongs.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not understand how it came to pass that the authorities deprived the person of forty inches under the law as at present.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. OLIVER. Because he was not there when the first grant of water was given.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The statute is only intended to apply to persons who were there at the time the ditch was constructed ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, the statute is intended to apply to people who were not there when the ditch was constructed. If they were there when the ditch was constructed, then the water could not be diverted. They were not there when the right to the ditch was granted, and this is to maintain the natural right of the gold-bearing gravel along the stream to some reasonable portion of the water of that stream for the purpose of production.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. There may be a case or cases that require some remedy. It seems to me that the language of this amendment goes beyond any case of that kind. The minister's explanation is this, that under the Act as it now stands a person who acquired property on a creek below the ditch-head is entitled to 20 per cent of the water diverted. Under the amendment the claim owner is entitled to the first forty or sixty inches of water, as the case may be, whether the owner of the ditch obtains his quantity or not. Now you are making a general amendment to the law which means this : At the present time the owner of the ditch can only be called upon to give up twenty per cent of his water; according to the amendment he can be called upon to give up the first 40 or 60 inches, as the case may be, and whether he gets any water or not. The case I have in mind is this, the case of companies that have acquired rights there now, who are operating on those creeks, and who have vested rights to the extent of whatever those rights may be. Those people can now be called upon to give up 20 per cent of the water. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, provided they are workable claims to which that water would be applied, and not otherwise, bona fide claims, subject always to the decision of the mining recorder or gold commissioner that they are entitled to the water by reason of having workable claims.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. That is assumed. But assuming that, and assuming that these claims are bona fide, these newcomers are down below the ditch-head, and at the present time they can only call upon a man to give up 20 per cent. of his water, whether that be great or small, whether the season be dry or wet; he can only be asked to give up 20 per cent of his supply, whatever it is. Now, by the amendment, an old established company who have rights there might be called upon in a dry season to give up to the newcomer the entire flow of water that goes through the ditch. That certainly seems to me to be going a little too far. You are interfering with the rights which have been acquired and in a dry season the company above might be compelled to give up their entire supply of water. Surely it was not intended to pass legislation as far-reaching as that. The water might be shared proportionately if the flow is small or great, but do not provide that the newcomer or any one may be entitled to take the whole flow.

Mr. OLIVER. The proposed provision is exactly the same as the previous provision except that the new provision contemplates that the claim holder on the original stream shall have the first 40 or 60 inches, as the case may be, even if that is all. There was no provision for a division of water in the first instance and there is no such provision intended now ; unless there is enough water to work a claim there is no use in any water being taken, and it is considered that less than 40 inches is not sufficient to do any good. Suppose there were just 40 inches of water in the stream, the percentage basis which my hon. friend suggests of giving 20 per cent to the holder of the claim on the original stream and 80 per cent to the holder on the ditch would not give enough to either to be of any use. It is better, therefore, that one man or the other should have enough if there was only sufficient water for one.

My hon. friend argues on the principle that there is an inherent right to the water resting in the capital employed to divert that water. That is not the principle which obtains in the distribution of water in a placer mining country any more than in an irrigation country. There is an inherent public right in the water in its natural flow and it is in maintenance of that inherent public right that this provision was made and that this amendment is being introduced. The public interest demands that if there is gold and if there is water by which that gold may be produced, the water shall be applied to produce the gold, and it is not in accordance with sound public policy that the water which is in its natural course available to produce the gold lying along that course should be diverted from that use or purpose to some other use or purpose, even although there should be an expenditure of capital. The water will flow for ever, the gold will ultimately be exhausted. There is in the long last enough water to produce gold and if there is water by which that is that, for the time being and for the immediate purpose, the water shall be first available to that gold which is most ready of access to it. It is in strict accordance with this principle that this legislation was introduced last year and is being amended this year. There is no change in principle between this year's amendment and last year's legislation, the amendment of this year is merely to make as definite as possible the intent of the legislation of last year.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not quite understand the wording of the section. The intention of the section, I understand, is that the person who establishes works below the ditch shall be entitled to the first 40 inches of water. The section says he shall be entitled to that if 200 inches are diverted. I do not understand this diversion very well but it looks as if he does not get the first 40 inches unless 200 inches are diverted.

Mr. OLIVER. That might be the meaning that is taken out of the section. The English languige is peculiar and it is difficult to so frame it that two meanings cannot be taken. When the committee of the Yukon council drafted the section which appeared last year they fully believed that they had met the case, but under the criticism of legal gentlemen they found they had not met the case. They have made another attempt, perhaps they have failed again. I understand this is the way they have presented the Bill.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. What was the law prior to last session ? Last year the Act was amended so that the man who had the ditch was obliged to give up 20 per cent of it in a certain event, scarcity of water. You have given the man who builds this ditch certain rights; I presume you have, because they have proceeded and constructed this ditch and watercourse and, after having done that and invested their money and capital you curtail their powers. Last session apparently these rights were curtailed so as to oblige them to give up a certain percentage of that water. You come again this session and say you want that further amended by obliging them to give up what might be the whole flow of water, thereby rendering their works entirely useless, unless there be water sufficient to supply the owners of claims on the creek below the ditch-head. Am I correct in that ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. So it practically means confiscation of the works and property of the people who invested their money under the laws that existed which permitted this to be done, and under which they acquired these rights. It is a very important matter. The minister seems to have satisfied himself as to the desirability of a change in the law but it certainly looks as if the result would be to inflict hardship. For instance, there is a creek and there is a ditch-head and water is diverted from that creek. The law is known to be that a man who has a ditch has the right to divert the water of the stream for his own use and possibly for the use of those below him. Under that condition rights have been acquired and under that condition rights have been abandoned. Rights have been acquired on the ditch and with the knowledge of the law rights have been abandoned on the creek, because those who took up claims on the creek below the ditch-head knew they were doing so subject to the prior right of the man who owned the ditch, if they located below the ditch-head. There would be no hardship in asking the gentlemen to abide by the law as it stood, because whatever rights they have acquired on the creek below the ditch-head were acquired with the full knowledge that the owner of the ditch had the right to divert the stream. If you are going to give one man what may be in certain seasons all of the water and the other man none, it would seem to me that it would be in the interests of justice and according to the faith of the contract entered into with the government that the man who has the ditch and who has previously acquired the right to the flow of water from it by legislation of this parliament, should be preserved in his rights, or if there is not sufficient water for both there should be a division or partition of whatever water is available. They may both have to abate their works to a certain extent, but do not give it all to one man and let the other man's works go dry. It does seem to me that if there be a partition of this water it should be on a percentage basis so as to give them both an opportunity to continue their works. If there is not enough water for both they must both abate their operation, and if there is abundance of water they have both full rights. It seems to me the matter is well worthy the consideration of the government and that the parties interested should be heard. This is a public Bill discussed in Committee of the House and the parties have no right to appear here and make known their claims as they would if it were a private Bill considered in a special committee. There should be an opportunity given to the parties to be heard. I hope the minister has informed himself well and wisely as to the effect of this legislation and as to its desirability. I am informed that there are companies who have invested large sums of money in these ditches and in the undertakings and works and they should be reasonably accorded a hearing or some means of informing the minister of their position. Let me ask the minister if he has had any representations made to him along these lines, and if so, how he is considering them ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have had representations such as my hon. friend has made and they have been carefully considered. In fact the Commissioner of the Yukon came here specially for the purpose of considering, amongst other things, this particular question. He has considered it, I have consulted with him on it, and he is of opinion that the legislation proposed is in the public interest and is necessary. I am of the same opinion for the reasons which I have already given to the House. I might add further—I have already said that the gold is there in limited quantities, and that by continuous working the gold will eventually be exhausted in the one claim or in the other, but the water will continue to flow from year to year for all eternity. The application of the water to the claims containing the gold is an absolute necessity to the production of the gold. Therefore, the man who has acquired the right to the water, to all intents and purposes practically owns all the gold, that is subject to the application of that water in order to secure its production. Therefore unless some provision such as this is inserted, the man who has been fortunate in the early days to acquire the right to the water of a small stream and has for reasons of his own diverted that water and carried it we will say down the stream a mile or two or three miles ; unless there is some intervention of this kind, that man to all intents and purposes has locked up in his strong box and owns against all the world all the gold along the banks of that stream between the ditch-head and where his water is returned to the creek. That is a condition which, of course, cannot be maintained as being in the public interest. This provision is inserted for the purpose of meeting that condition. Of course the right under this section can only be exercised bona fide on the approval of the mining recorder or the gold commissioner or on appeal to the territorial court of the Yukon. But the point is that it is necessary that the inherent right of the people at large to the use of that water shall be asserted and shall be maintained and established by legislation. We cannot afford to have the gold of the Yukon locked up by the locking up of the water.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I have not even suggested any such thing. The minister has spoken about those who acquire rights to the water. Now, the man who has acquired the right to the water is the man to whom this government has given the right to divert the stream. No one is suggesting that this man who has acquired this right should be allowed to divert the whole flow of the water or that either party should, but that there should be a partition of the water. The minister speaks about the gold being taken out in a certain time and he says that the water flows on for ever. That is quite true, but that is no reason why a man should be postponed in his right to take out his gold, to the advantage of another man who is to have the use of the water immediately. Surely the minister would be facilitating the getting out of the gold of that country by extending the area over which the water rights shall be acquired rather than by confining these water rights either to a particular channel or to a ditch. It surely is more in the interests of the production of gold in that country that the water should be spread over as large an area as possible. Give the ditch owner what water will serve him, if there is water to serve him, and give the owner of the creek claim the same right. If there is a dearth of water, then do the best you can with what there is: give each man a portion. It seems to me that in that way you would be best serving the gold-mining industry of that country. Parliament has, wisely or unwisely, given the owners of these ditches certain vested rights in the waters of these creeks and streams, and it seems to me to be a great hardship to deprive them of those rights. Curtail those rights if they have too much water; but it seems to me to be a pretty high-handed proceeding to take them away altogether, so that in a dry season they will get no water.

Mr. OLIVER. I must repeat that the Act as it now stands is identical with the Act as it is proposed, except that the first right shall be to the claim-holder on the original creek. That was the intention in the original Act, and to my mind it is so expressed, but it seems that it is not so held by some authorities. The proposal before the House is the proposal of practical men best acquainted with the conditions and anxious to conserve the water for the production of gold, and I think the House is warranted in accepting their judgment.

Mr GALLIHER. My hon. friend from Toronto overlooks the principle underlying the distribution of water in placer mining districts; that is, that the owners of gold-bearing ground along the natural course of any stream are entitled to the waters of that stream to work their claims. Any one whose property is not along the natural course of the stream, and who in order to work his property has to apply to divert a portion of that water from its natural channel, has to return that water into its natural channel within a certain distance. The cases which my hon. friend has mentioned would only be such as would apply between the head of the ditch, where the water is diverted from the stream, and the tail, where the water re-enters it, and they would not be very serious. When a diversion is to be made for a supply of water not in the natural course and flow of the stream, that diversion must be taken with the rights preserved to those who are first and always entitled to the water for operating properties along the banks of the stream.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. My hon. friend is speaking just as if this were a virgin country and as if no rights had been granted. I quite understand all that he has said, but he is overlooking the fact that rights have been granted on these streams to certain persons to divert these waters, and they have made their investments on the faith of those rights. Conditions have changed because of the intervening rights that have been thus acquired. I think the effect of this amendment would simply be to encourage people working claims or pretending to work claims to exact from people who are affected by this legislation certain payments in order that they may be protected in their mining rights. That is not new in mining countries, and I think that you will find history repeating itself here.

Mr. GALLIHER. That diversion does not do away with the basic principle that the people having gold-bearing grounds on a stream, even after the water is diverted, are entitled to the flow of that water.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to inquire how much water any bona fide worker would be entitled to if there were 150 inches diverted, and how much if there were 250 inches diverted?

Mr. OLIVER. He would be entitled to 40 inches if 250 inches were diverted, or to 60 inches if 300 inches or over were diverted. What my hon. friend from Toronto says is correct, that if there were only 40 inches in the stream and the owner of the ditch had a right to divert 40 inches, and a claim were established below the ditch-head, and the mining recorder gave permission, the owner of the claim would be entitled to that 40 inches as against the owner of the ditch. Forty inches is the amount of water which is considered sufficient for the efficient working of a placer claim; less than that is not considered to be sufficient.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would it not be better to say that he shall be entitled to the first forty inches of water if not more than 200 are diverted?

Mr. GALLIHER. I think that would be a good amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. He will be entitled to forty inches if not more than three hundred are diverted and to sixty inches if more than three hundred are diverted. How would that do?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That would be plainer to the ordinary layman.

Mr. OLIVER. I would then move in amendment that he shall be entitled to the first forty inches of water, if not more than three hundred are diverted, and to the first sixty inches if more than three hundred are diverted.

Mr. GALLIHER. Then he would be entitled to forty inches if two hundred and ninety-nine inches were diverted, but as soon as three hundred inches are diverted the sixty inches would start and that is all he can get.

Mr. OLIVER. Unless he pays for more.

Mr. GALLIHER. They will ask for two hundred and ninety-nine and then he will get only forty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Suppose two hundred inches are diverted, do you mean that there shall be two hundred and forty inches altogether in the original channel of which forty shall be retained by the person working below, or does it mean that there are two hundred altogether in the channel and one hundred and sixty to go into the ditch?

Mr. OLIVER One hundred and sixty in the ditch and forty in the channel.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think it says that.

Mr. OLIVER. I am under the impression that the Act, as it stood last year, really conveyed the idea desired.

Mr. GALLIHER. The trouble about the Act last year was that it did not give a prior right to the man to have the forty or the sixty inches.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it did. They did not allow it that way, but I think it did.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The difficulty arises in the use of the word 'diverted.' You speak of the forty inches as part of that diverted.

Mr. GALLIHER. It does not say the water was diverted, but the stream :

If after a grant has been made, any one locates bona fide works on any claim below the ditch-head on any stream so diverted, he shall be entitled to the first forty inches of water if not more than 200 inches are diverted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN Perhaps under the new form of expression the difficutly does not arise so much. I do not think it does.

Mr. GALLIHER. It means absolutely not the water in the river, but the water in the ditch.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think the difficulty would arise very much under the form of expression now selected.

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not know about that, because the man does not get his forty inches out of the water diverted into that ditch, as I understand it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister has used the expression, 'if not more than three hundred inches are diverted.' So, if nothing were diverted, the man would be entitled to his forty inches.

Mr. GALLIHER. But that would have to be of the water left in the stream to go in its natural course. He does not get anything of the water diverted, for later on, it speaks of that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The second branch of the expression—yes, it might leave it open to that difficulty.

Mr. GALLIHER. The idea is to leave at least forty inches in the stream undiverted for three hundred diverted, or sixty inches if over three hundred are diverted. Let us suppose that there are 1,000 inches in a stream——

Mr. CLARKE. What does 'inches' mean in this case?

Mr. GALLIHER. It means miner's inches. That is all defined. They can measure exactly how much goes through a certain head in a ditch or flume. Suppose there are 1,000 inches in a creek. Now, if 900 inches were diverted, there would still be one hundred inches left in the stream for the man below. But the water he would get would be that in the natural course of the stream—I take it that, necessarily, he could not get the water in the ditch, for he is not on the line of the ditch.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is another difficulty. Suppose there were a dozen persons located below, each person would be entitled to forty inches, would he not?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. But the same forty inches would supply each one.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The water is not used up, then?

Mr. OLIVER. No, it passes from claim to claim. The trouble, as I see it, arises from the insertion of the word 'first.' As I read the original clause, it states exactly what is intended, but, by inserting the word 'first' you alter the meaning and produce the confusion we are discussing. To meet the difficulty pointed out by the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) I would suggest that we make it read, 'He shall be entitled to the first forty inches of water if not more than three hundred inches may be diverted, and the first sixty inches of water if more than three hundred inches may be diverted.' 'May be diverted'—that is, if the license permits the diversion.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am not sure that that will remove the difficulty.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Johnson). Carried.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think it would be better, Mr. Chairman. to come back to this section, even though we leave it in the meantime.

Mr. OLIVER. In view of the discussion we have had on this section, perhaps it would be as well to let the section stand and the Bill can be considered again in committee with a view to the amendment of this section. Let section 25 stand.

Progress reported.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 116) to amend the Exchequer Court Act.—Mr. Aylesworth—was read the second time, House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. AYLESWORTH It will be observed that this clause is substituted for the present sections 8 and 9 of the statute. The two clauses 8 and 9 are recast, are repeated in a slightly different form, and are made wider in application. At present, section 8 deals with the appointment of a substitute or temporary judge in case of the illness of the judge of the court or his absence from Canada. It will be observed that the section now under consideration widens that slightly, making it apply to the case, not only of illness or absence from Canada, but to leave of absence. Then section 9 as it now stands provides for cases in which an ad hoc judge may be appointed for some particular cause or matter. Those cases, according to the present clause 9, are covered simply by the phrase 'any case in which the judge is interested.' The clause as drafted in the printed Bill applies to the case, first, of the judge being interested in any cause or matter, and then is added 'or disqualified by kinship to any of the parties.' That ground of disqualification is not expressly mentioned in the statute as it now stands; it is practically covered by the general expression of the present Act that the judge should not adjudicate upon any case in which he is interested. But it was thought better that it should be expressly mentioned, and also a similar provision as to the judge having been professionally engaged in any cause or matter as counsel or solicitor before his appointment to the bench. In the present Act that reason of disqualification is not expressly mentioned, but is simply covered by the general expression referring to the judge's possible interest. Then the present statute says that the judge ad hoc for a particular cause may be appointed upon the application of the judge of the court, and the word 'written' is now inserted, so that there will be a record preserved of the application for the appointment of a judge for some particular cause. The provision as to taking the oath of office in each of these cases is at present in the law as it stands, and is not changed.

Then as regards the present fourth subsection, that is a provision the necessity for which appeared in the events which happened a few days before this Bill was drafted. The death of Mr. Justice Burbidge necessarily worked an immediate cessation of the jurisdiction of his substitute, Sir Thomas Taylor. There were some cases standing for judgment, and in a few of them judgment was in fact delivered on the very morning of the death of Mr. Justice Burbidge. Sir Thomas Taylor was not aware at the time he was sitting in the court and delivering these judgments of what had taken place a few hours earlier in the day, a circumstance which had ended his jurisdiction under the statute. A question has been raised as to the validity of the judgments so pronounced, and whether those cases will have to be tried again or argued again before the judge who has now been appointed to the court. The view has been taken by some of the counsel interested that those judgments would not be affected by the circumstance of the death of Mr. Justice Burbidge earlier in the day on which they were delivered, in the view that the law takes no account of fractions of a day, that the delivery of the judgments being a step in legal proceedings, must have reference to the earliest hour of the day, and that at the earliest hour of the day had begun Mr. Justice Burbidge was still alive. But it was thought that such a thing ought not to be left to any possible uncertainty. This clause was on that account drafted, and that there might be no possible question about it, I have drafted an amendment which I move to add to this subsection 4 in the shape of a fifth subsection, in these words :

This section shall be deemed to have come into force on the 1st day of January, 1908.

That amendment has application, it will be seen, in terms, to the whole of section 1. But to the first and second and third subsections of the section as here printed there can never be any practical application of it, because the time having gone by since the 1st of January until the present time without there having been in fact any action under these subparagraphs of the clause, it would have application simply to the giving of the judgments under subsection 4, and would prevent any doubt as to the validity of these judgments.

Then reference was made this afternoon to the judicial duties of the judge of the court which might interfere with his transacting the pending business of the court with such expedition as was desirable. I propose to meet that case by the insertion of subparagraph (c) in the second subsection, which is the subsection providing for the appointment of a judge ad hoc in a particular case or matter with regard to which there is such necessity. I propose to insert this subclause (c) in the following words:

Or if the other judicial duties of the judge make it impossible for him to hear without undue delay any cause or matter.

Then will follow the concluding words of the section :

The Governor in Council may in that event, upon the written application of the judge, appoint any other person having the qualifications mentioned in the statute, to act as judge for that particular cause.

Mr. A A. McLEAN. There is another matter that I think ought to be provided for in this Bill. At the present time there are, I think, only six members of the Supreme Court of Canada, and if at any time two of these gentlemen were unable to act, there would be no quorum. It has been suggested to me that this Bill should contain a clause providing that the judge of the Exchequer Court should in a case of that kind be a judge ad hoc of the Supreme Court of Canada. I think this Bill would be the proper statute in which to insert such a clause. In case of the illness or inability at the same time of two judges, a great loss might happen to litigants, and there is no provision in the law for the appointment of another judge. The Exchequer Court judge would in my opinion be a gentleman well qualified for that position.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The subject the hon. gentleman has mentioned is one to which a good deal of consideration has been given, because it certainly is an impediment to the transaction of the business of the Supreme Court if at any time there should be the misfortune of lack of the necessary quorum. But it will be seen, of course, that the present measure is one for the relief of the judge of the Exchequer Court who feels, at the present time at all events, that his judicial duties are much more burdensome than the time at his disposal will permit his attending to. It would be rather an anomaly to increase those duties by imposing upon him the necessity, it may be, of sitting in the Supreme Court as well. But the suggestion which the hon. gentleman has made is one certainly worthy of very serious consideration and one with regard to which an attempt is being made to think out some means of preventing there being any such difficulty as is mentioned in the Supreme Court.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As far as the proposed amendment to section 1 by the addition of subsection 5 is concerned, there could, I think, be no reasonable objection provided the persons interested in the litigation in question have been consulted, and have expressed their consent to have the judgments, already pronounced, confirmed by this amendment. It would, I presume, be a matter of course that they would be consulted and be given an opportunity for being heard before the legislation shall be passed. I presume that they have been consulted by the Justice Department.

It is perfectly apparent that this Bill had no relation whatever, when introduced, to the additional duties which have been imposed upon Mr. Justice Cassels. It was framed by reason of certain questions arising during the illness of Mr. Justice Burbidge, and the Minister of Justice very properly prepared the Bill and brought it to the House in order that the inconveniences of which he has spoken might not be experienced again. It had no relation whatever to anything that has occurred in connection with the appointment of Mr. Justice Cassels to be commissioner for the purpose of investigating certain matters in connection with the Department of Marine and Fisheries ; and, indeed, the remarkably fresh appearance of the amendments which have been submitted by the Minister of Justice indicate that those amendments have been prepared not many hours ago.

So far as the proposed subsection (c) is concerned, I entirely agree in the necessity for some such amendment. I do not know that I would have selected exactly the phrasing which has commended itself to the Minister of Justice. His amendment reads :

> If the other judicial duties make it impossible for him to hear without undue delay any cause or matter.

I am unable to appreciate the use of the word 'other,' in that connection. What is intended to be distinguished by the use of the word 'other'? I would also invite the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice to the expression 'judicial duties.' I am not prepared to say at the moment that the expression 'judicial duties' would not include duties imposed by the chapter of the revised statutes which enables the government to appoint Mr. Justice Cassels; but it is fairly open to question whether some broader and more comprehensive expression ought not to be used. It is not precisely a judicial proceeding in the ordinary sense of the word ; you do not have two parties before that commissioner, the one attacking and the other resisting some particular judgment or decree which that learned judge will be invited to pronounce as such commissioner. Whether you can properly apply the term 'judicial' would, I think, be open to a great deal of doubt. It should be made absolutely and perfectly plain. I concur entirely in the object aimed at by this section, but without any present consideration of the exact words of the statute providing for the investigation, I am not perfectly clear that the best form of words has been selected.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The history of this Bill is simply that the clause which is here given as No. 2 was suggested by the late Mr. Justice Burbidge in December last as a measure of relief to his work in empowering the registrar of the court to do routine work in chambers and other work of that character. The learned judge wrote me very fully on the subject at that time, making a suggestion with regard to clause 9 of the Act, the appointing of a judge for a particular cause. What is now the second section of this Bill was then drafted. The first section was not then thought of because it was not then apprehended that any such difficulty would arise as afterwards did take place. After the appointment of Sir Thomas Taylor as substitute judge, and at or about the time of the death of Mr. Justice Burbidge, that which is now the first clause of this Bill was drawn and the Bill was introduced in the House on March 9. I do not remember at the moment whether Mr. Justice Cassels had yet been appointed at that date, but certainly there was no thought at that time of the new judicial duty wkich since then has been put on the learned judge with reference to the investigation he is now engaged in. The report of the Civil Service Commission had not then been made and there was in nobody's mind any thought of what has since taken place.

The amendment which I first read, that is the amendment to cover the case of the two judgments which were in effect delivered after Mr. Justice Burbidge had actually passed away, was prepared some weeks ago. The possibility of difficulty was imminent and whether the question should arise or not, legislation would be necessary to place beyond question the validity of the decisions which had so been pronounced. I am not in a position to say whether the unsuccessful litigants, the parties against whom the judgments have been pronounced, have been consulted or not. The successful litigant, the party in whose favour the judgments have been given, will of course be interested in having these judgments validated if they need any validation, and it does not seem necessary to consult that party with reference to this clause. I fully concede the great impropriety, ordinarily speaking, and except in the most extraordinary circumstances, of any legislation which is to be of ex post facto operation. This is legislation of that character and I would never propose it to this House if it did not seem plainly in the interests of justice that it should in this particular instance be enacted, and if it did not seem that no possible harm could ensue from it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not maintaining that the legislation should not be passed even when an unsuccessful litigant should object, but I do think it is only right that notice of the proposed legislation should be given to the unsuccessful litigant in order that he might place, either before a committee of the House or before the government, his contention, if he has any, against its enactment. Before any legislation of an ex post facto character is passed, the person who is to be affected thereby ought surely to have the right to be heard. Whether we concur in the view he may put forward is another consideration. I am contending merely that he has the right to be heard.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have no objection whatever to the party being notified. I think in one instance the Crown is the party. There is no objection to that. With regard to the second amendment I may state with absolute candour that the surmise of my hon. friend is entirely correct that the amendment was not prepared many hours ago. The reason for that is very simple. I had no expectation until a few hours ago that this Bill would come up for consideration to-day. Having knowledge of the correspondence which passed between Mr. Justice Cassels and members of the government in relation to his duties, and having had personal conference with the learned judge on the subject, I had it always in mind that when the proper time arrived the insertion of a very brief amendment in this Bill would meet the difficulties which the learned judge had pointed out. But I had not done the actual work of draftsmanship until as I sat here this afternoon I was told by a friend that the suggestion was made in the House that the clause had not yet been drafted. That occurred to me as more or less amusing and the original draft I penned then and there in a couple of lines upon the margin of the copy of the Bill which now lies before me. I do not know that it is any better or any worse for that. Now as to the wording of it—the phrase 'judicial duties' is a statutory one and is the phrase in the section of the statute to which the learned judge referred in his communication which has been read in the House. Section 33 of the Judges' Act, chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes, is the section which provides that a judge is not to engage 'in any occupation or business other than his judicial duties.' A question was put in the House some time ago by some hon. gentleman asking for an interpretation of these words. In answering that question I disclaimed any right to pronounce ex cathedra the interpretation of any statute, but I stated that I had no objection, whatever my opinion was worth, to say what I thought the phrase 'judicial duties' meant, and in response to the question I proceeded to say that in my opinion any duty of judicial character which a judge undertook, thereby became a part of his judicial duties. This investigation is certainly work of a judicial character, and being of that nature —though it may perfectly well be thought it does not fall within the scope of the judge's ordinary duties—it is work of a judicial nature which he has been willing to assume the responsibility of, and once he has so assumed that responsibility it becomes part of his duty to carry it out; and part of his judicial duty, and the full scope and meaning of the phrase it would appear to me in either section 33 of the Judges' Act or in this amendment I am proposing would simply be that if the other judicial work of the judge makes it impossible for him within a reasonable time to overtake the work of hearing and disposing of any particular cause, then he is empowered to make application to the government to appoint some substitute for that cause that he is unable so to try. It meets the exact objection which the learned judge has put before the government in the present instance, and leaves the appointment of a substitute judge for a particular cause to be made on his application if the circumstances seem to call for it. I am of course not wedded to the particular words I have adopted. I have merely tried in as brief way as I could to express the meaning, that if by reason of other work the judge was not able to hear some particular cause within a reasonable time, he might have authority to apply for some one to hear that cause for him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. With all deference to the Minister of Justice I do not see that section 33 of chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes has any bearing at all upon the question which we are now discussing. The question which is before the committee is as to the meaning of the term 'judicial duties.' Section 33 to which the hon. gentleman alluded does not define judicial duties; it simply provides that every judge must attend exclusively to his judicial duties, or, to take the exact words:

> No judge of the Supreme Court of Canada or of the Exchequer Court of Canada or of any superior or county court in Canada shall either directly, or indirectly as director or manager of any corporation, company or firm, or in any other manner whatever, for himself or others, engage in any occupation or business other than his judicial duties; but every such judge shall devote himself exclusively to such judicial duties.

The assumption that this is a judicial duty would control the point I raised, if it were a correct assumption; but this inquiry by Mr. Justice Cassels is no more judicial than it would be if some person other than a judge had been selected to perform that duty, which is of an inquisitorial rather than of a judicial character. There are not two parties represented before him as I understand the situation, nor is it contemplated there shall be. It does not seem more a work of a judicial character than if the minister himself undertook the investigation or appointed some person other than a judge. It can only be followed by report; it cannot be followed by any action on the part of the judge which would directly result in affecting the status of any person in the department. There are no persons before the judge as litigants. It is perfectly true that he is making an inquiry, but so was the judge who was appointed to investigate matters connected with the operation of the insurance law in this country. He does not seem to be acting in a judicial character more than were Judge McTavish and the two gentlemen who were associated with him in the work of that commission. For that reason it seemed to me that the expression 'judicial duties' was not the best expression to select for the purpose intended. I do not know whether or not the gentlemen who were the predecessors of Mr. Justice Cassels—Messrs. Courtney, Fyshe and Bazin—were to be regarded as performing judicial duties; but they were performing judicial duties to as great an extent as he is called upon to perform them under the commission issued to him. The other point of criticism, which is a very minor one, perhaps merely a verbal one, had reference to the use of the word 'other.' It seems to contrast judicial duty with a cause or matter with which judicial duty may be concerned, but which itself is not a judicial duty.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. My reference to section 33 of the Judges' Act was because that section was referred to by Mr. Justice Cassels in his letter to the First Minister, which has already been read to the House. He felt some hesitation in undertaking this work because of the presence on the statute-book of the section in question, confining him to the discharge of his judicial duties. Upon further consideration of the meaning of this very phrase he came to the conclusion that the duties of this commission, if he undertook them, would be of a judicial character and would fall within the distinct exception in this section of the Judges' Act. That was my reason for referring to the phrase found in that section. With reference to the larger question, whether or not these duties can be properly described as judicial, I would with all respect suggest to my hon friend that he is confusing the meaning of the word 'judicial' with the meaning of the word 'court.' I do not for a moment argue that Mr. Justice Cassels when sitting in this investigation is sitting as a court. A court is a tribunal having the power to impose an obligation on some person. That essential feature of a court is absent from the functions which Mr. Justice Cassels is discharging in this inquiry; nevertheless his duties in that inquiry are, it seems to me, of a judicial character. A judge has many duties outside of a court, which duties are of a judicial character, although the judge is in no sense a court while he is discharging them. I think, therefore, that the circumstances that there may not be two parties before the judge in this inquiry does not in any degree prevent it being a judicial one, and the duties devolving upon the commissioner under his appointment being duties of a judicial nature. I likened his duties some time ago to the duties of a coroner. The work of a coroner is of a judicial character, although his tribunal may not be a court; I express no opinion on that question. Work of that inquisitorial nature may be, and in this instance I think clearly is, of a judicial nature. Then with regard to the word 'other' in the amendment, it is used in contradistinction to the judicial work of trying a cause, which the presence of these other judicial duties makes it impossible for the judge to do within a reasonable time. He has two pieces of judicial work upon his hands, and the clause I have drafted is intended to provide that where he is not able to do other judicial work of the Exchequer Court proper within a reasonable time he may ask in any particular case for the appointment of a substitute.

Mr R. L. BORDEN. I have already said that my criticism with regard to the word 'other' was of a verbal character, and while I cannot say that I am convinced by the explanation of the Minister of Justice, I do not think it worth pressing to any extent. As far as the use of the word 'judicial' is concerned, I may also say that I am not convinced. If any duties are imposed upon a judge, for the reason that he is a judge, you may perhaps properly describe those duties as of a judicial character, because it is as a judge that he performs them. But you must remember that it is not necessary to appoint a judge to do work of this kind. Any person in the country might be appointed for the purpose, and, therefore, it seems to me that you are bound in making the inquiry as to whether those duties are judicial or not, to consider the character of the work which the judge has to perform. He is to inquire and to report; he is not to hear and determine. If he were to hear and determine in the sense of hearing and determining between two litigants, or two parties in the relation of litigants, he would be performing work of a judicial character. Where he simply inquires and reports, he is not acting so much as a judge, but as an inquisitor. He is doing exactly the same kind of work, on a somewhat restricted scale, as that which Messrs. Courtney, Fyshe and Bazin were doing when they undertook the investigation of some of these departments. However, the responsiblity is with the government in respect to the language employed. Having expressed my views with regard to it, I am quite content to leave it there and not urge the matter further.

On section 2—Rules and orders.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The suggestion of Mr. Justice Cassels, as I recollect it, was that the registrar of the court should receive some wider powers than those which are conferred by this section. Have the government taken that into consideration?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The learned judge suggests who in his judgment would be a proper person to be appointed to the position which is provided for by this legislation. That appointment will, of course, in any given instance be a matter for which the government is responsible, and the suggestion of the learned judge will be very carefully considered. I might draw attention to the circumstance that, under the law as it stands, the judge of the court has power to appoint the registrar a referee who would have practically the same power as would be given a substitute judge under this section.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I perfectly understand that. What was suggested by Mr. Justice Cassels in respect of the wider powers to be conferred upon the registrar will be covered by section 1, and therefore no amendment will be required to section 2. Would the Minister undertake, before the Bill finally passes, that those gentlemen will be consulted and given an opportunity of being heard.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That will be done certainly.

Bill as amended reported, read the third time and passed.

MEAFORD HARBOUR.

Bill (No. 158) respecting Meaford harbour—Mr. Brodeur—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see any list of dues set out in the Act.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). In the statute of 1866 the tolls are given concerning the township of St. Vincent. This harbour was formerly under the control of the township of St. Vincent.

Mr. SPROULE. Now you propose to put it under the control of the town, but you have no schedule.

Mr. BRODEUR. They will have to pass by-laws which will have to be approved by the Governor in Council.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SIGNAL DUES AT HALIFAX.

Bill (No. 152) respecting signal dues at Halifax—Mr. Brodeur—was read the second time, considered in committee, reported without amendment and read the third time and passed.

BOARD OF RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS.

On the order,

Consideration of Bill (No. 112), to amend the Railway Act as respects the constitution of the Board of Railway Commissioners, as amended in Committee of the Whole.—Mr. Graham.

Mr. SPEAKER. I take it that this should read 'Consideration of amendments.'

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals. I will explain the situation, Mr. Speaker, as there seems to be some confusion in the Order Paper as to this Bill. As a matter of fact, if the Order Paper does not mean this, then this is what it ought to mean : This Bill is still in Committee of the Whole at the request of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). We went through it in committee, but did not take it out for the third reading.

Mr. SPEAKER. It seems to have been reported from the committee, but instead of the amendments being read, that was suspended.

Mr. GRAHAM. Then, I move, that this order be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole for further consideration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It appears from 'Hansard' of March 13, that the Bill was reported, but nothing was said about it after it was reported.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. minister (Mr. Graham) did not so understand it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. minister says that I asked it to stand. Does he remember what was the reason given at that time ?

Mr. GRAHAM. We got through the Bill after discussing it in committee for quite a while. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) suggested that we should leave it in committee and I agreed.

Mr. FIELDING. Does the minister (Mr. Graham) wish to have it go back to committee for his own purposes ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, I want it referred back to committee for further consideration.

Motion agreed to, and House went again into committee on the Bill.

Mr. GRAHAM. It may be remembered that the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) made a suggestion of an amendment that he thought should be made, to provide that the board may rehear a case. I have an amendment prepared which I propose as follows :

That section 29 be repealed and the following substituted therefor:

29. The board may re-hear any application before deciding, or may review, rescind, change, alter, or vary any order or decision made by it.

The only new words in that section are to provide that an application may be reheard.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. Since the appointment of the new chairman of the board I referred this Bill to him, and he makes a suggestion which, I think, was discussed in committee. The provision he proposes is in force in at least one of the United States boards. The object is to provide that a single member of the board of commissioners may be sent with power to hear evidence and investigate a matter and report to the board.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought you had that in the existing Act.

Mr. GRAHAM. No, but it is recommended by the chief commissioner. There are little cases arising where one member could be sent out to take evidence, and the case may be so clear that his recommendation may be made the order of the board. I have read up some of the cases in the New York Board, and they seem to do a lot of business in this way. The effect is to greatly expedite the work. I propose the amendment as follows :

Section 13 of the said Act is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor:

13. Two commissioners shall form a quorum, and not less than two commissioners shall attend at the hearing of every case, provided

(a) In any case where there is no opposing party and no notice to be given to any interested party, any one commissioner may act alone for the board.

(b) The board, or the chief commissioner, may authorize any one of the commissioners to report to the board upon any question or matter arising in connection with the business of the board, and when so authorized, such commissioner shall have all the powers of two commissioners sitting together for the purpose of taking evidence or acquiring the necessary information for the purpose of such report, and upon such report being made to the board, the same may be adopted as the order of the board, or otherwise dealt with as to the board may seem proper.

2. The chief commissioner, when present, shall preside, and the assistant chief commissioner, when present, in the absence of the chief commissioner, shall preside, and the opinion of either of them upon any question arising when he is presiding, which, in the opinion of the commissioners, is a question of law, shall prevail.

3. No vacancy in the board shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The board will consist of six members as constituted under this Act, of whom two may constitute a quorum. It is possible then for the board to sit in three divisions. There is provision made for a chief commissioner and his assistant, and there was provision made for a deputy.

Mr. GRAHAM. Under the old Act there was a deputy. There will be three heads in case they want to sit in three divisions, a chief, an assistant and a deputy.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there provision as to a ruling upon questions of law by other than the commissioner and his assistants ?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is in the old Act, section 12.

Mr. MONK. Before this Bill is reported I would like to make a representation to the Minister of Railways and Canals. Many people in the province of Quebec have represented to me that the commission ought to have a French secretary. The board does a very large amount of business in the province of Quebec; its jurisdiction extends over many matters, in many localities where the English language is not as well understood as it is for instance in the cities of Montreal and Quebec. I believe it was always contemplated that the board should have a French secretary. At the time the board was organized a young lawyer was named who now occupies, I understand, the position of accountant in the organization of the board. But for purposes of correspondence it is a very important matter in the province of Quebec. There is really only one secretary. I have had a number of representations made to me by members of the bar, from country parts particularly in the province of Quebec, and by other people, to the effect that such an important tribunal as this ought to have a clerk who thoroughly understands the French language. I know that at the time this young lawyer was named it was supposed that he would act as French secretary of the board; as a matter of fact he occupies the position of accountant. I believe the absence of a French secretary has been felt as an inconvenience on several occasions. I make that representation to my hon. friend, and hope that the government will be able to remedy the grievance.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have stenographers and translators who are able to answer letters in French that are written to the board in French. The secretary himself of course is appointed by the government, but the other officials are appointed by the commission itself. The matter suggested by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) is worthy of consideration, and I will suggest it to the commission, and they will no doubt take it into consideration. Perhaps with a French translator we would not need another secretary who could speak the French language. But the commission ought certainly to be provided with some person who can handle the correspondence in French. I think that is quite reasonable, and I will confer with the chairman of the commission on that point.

Mr. MONK. I am glad to hear what my hon. friend says. There is a great deal of correspondence which is conducted in French, and I believe that the lawyer who acts as accountant or some other person, performs the necessary translation. But I think as a matter of right, if I may use that expression, a French secretary should be appointed to the board, as this is a tribunal which has a great deal to do throughout the whole province of Quebec. It seems to me that if the clerk is not qualified in both languages there ought to be a French clerk as well. I invite my hon. friend to consider that point because I know it has often been matter of comment in my province.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is very difficult to understand, without having the original statute before me, whether or not the matter which I mentioned a moment ago is put in proper shape by this Bill. I hope that whoever is charged with the duty of seeing that the library is provided with a sufficient number of copies of the revised statutes of Canada, 1906, will give some attention to the matter. I have been trying for the last two hours to get the volume of the statutes which contains the section with regard to the appointing of commissions for public purposes, and also the volume which contains the Railway Act, but up to the present time my efforts have been absolutely unsuccessful. For that reason I cannot come to an understanding as to whether or not the legislation now submitted to the House covers the point which I mentioned a moment ago. If it is the intention that one commissioner in certain cases shall make an investigation and report to the board, and if it is also the intention that the board may sit officially in three divisions, each composed of two members, then it is important to provide that each one of these three divisions shall be properly constituted and that the person who presides shall have some power of pronouncing on questions of law. There is provision that the divisions which are presided over by the chief commissioner and the assistant commissioner respectively shall be so constituted ; whether or not there is any similar provision in respect of the third division I do not know. If that provision has not been made, it seems to me it ought to be made. However, having brought the matter to the attention of the Minister of Railways and in view of my inability to obtain a copy of the statute in order to satisfy myself, I think that for the present I have sufficiently discharged my duty by bringing it to his attention.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it proposed to go into Supply to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In what department ?

Mr. FIELDING. At the point at which we left off, in the estimates of the Minister of Public Works. Possibly if he gets through we may take up the estimates of the Minister of Railways.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, May 15, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—MAJOR HODGINS' CHARGES.

Mr. GEOFFRION presented the first report of the special committee appointed to investigate Major Hodgins' charges re Transcontinental Railway, as follows :

The special committee appointed to investigate Major Hodgins' charges re Transcontinental Railway, beg to request that leave be granted to them to sit while the House is in session.

He said : Mr. Speaker, I beg to move :

That the first report of the special committee appointed to investigate Major Hodgins' charges re Transcontinental Railway be now concurred in.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the chairman of that committee if any provision has been made for taking a stenographic report of the committee's work and having it furnished from day to day ?

Mr. GEOFFRION. Not yet.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman not think it would be wise that provision should be made for a stenographic report ?

Mr. GEOFFRION. I will submit the question to the committee.

Motion agreed to.

THE PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND MAINLAND CABLE.

On the orders of the day being called :

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask what steps have been taken towards establishing telegraphic communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The day before yesterday I received a communication from the solicitor of the Commercial Cable Company asking if I would interview my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) in regard to the breaking of the cable and also to obtain if possible, permission for the use of the steamer 'Stanley' in the work of effecting repairs. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries very kindly, at once, consented to the use of the steamer and telegraphed to the agent of the Department of Marine and Fisheries at Charlottetown to that effect. I take it for granted that the seamer is now in use or that the necessary steps are being taken to employ her at once toward making the necessary repairs.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES. If it is found that the cable cannot be repaired within a reasonable time, will the government take steps to establish telegraphic communication by the Marconi system ? I presume that would be the next best thing to do.

Mr. BRODEUR. If it is impossible to make repairs we will find means by which the Marconi system may be used.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) if he can give me any idea when the returns I asked for on April 6 will be brought down ?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM. I think they are practically ready now.

ANGLO-AMERICAN TREATIES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) any information as to when the treaties between Great Britain and the United States will be laid on the table ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The treaties, Mr. Speaker, can be laid on the table of the House on Monday. The correspondence will not be ready.

CIVIL SERVICE BILL.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) at what probable date we may expect the Civil Service Bill ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING. I am not able to give any answer to my hon. friend's question.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—INVESTIGATION BY MR. JUSTICE CASSELS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the right hon. Prime Minister considered the practicability of laying upon the table of the House the evidence taken before Mr. Justice Cassels' commission ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I see no objection to that.

Mr. FIELDING. I presume that what my hon. friend means is that a file might be placed on the table as was done in the case of the Insurance Commission ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, precisely.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not see why it should not be done.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Public Works—chargeable to income—Brandon drill hall, $20,000.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I may say that we have allowed military buildings in Ontario to stand over. I think probably there will be no reason for allowing the Brandon drill hall item to stand over because the building is under construction. This is a revote which I am asking of $20,000 to make provision for the erection of the Brandon drill hall. The site is a lot situated on the corner of Eleventh and Victoria streets, being 215 by 120 feet. The building consists of a drill hall 120 by 75 feet and an armoury having a frontage of 90 feet and a depth of 120. The total cost of building, including drill hall, armoury, electric wiring, fittings, furniture, &c., is $70,881.92.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who is the contractor ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Messrs. Dumais and Lachance, Hull, Quebec.

Mr. J. D. REID. What was the difference in the amount of the tenders ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Four tenders were received, the lowest was $52,754 and the highest $56,500. The lowest tender was accepted.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much has been spent already ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total expenditure to December 31, 1907, was $12,445.92.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the tender of $52,000 was accepted, that would mean that that was what the building was to cost. In this case the minister states that $70,000 is what it will cost.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman must remember that that is the tender for the construction of the building. In addition to that there is the cost of the site, $3,100 ; survey of site, legal and travelling expenses and other items, $835.92; heating and ventilation $2,500 ; electric wiring and fixtures, $1,000 ; fittings and furniture $1,500; sidewalk and fencing $500 ; contingencies and superintendence, $4,837. There is also to be paid to the contractor for additional work for the erection of a shooting gallery, $3,855.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has there been any extra work other than the shooting gallery? Has the contractor been instructed to make any changes, or will he have any claim for extras ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not so far as we know.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who is the architect ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Thomas Sinclair is supervising architect and clerk of works. He receives 2 per cent commission. The plans were made in the department.

Mr. WARD. Can the minister furnish any particulars as to the number of troops to be served by that drill hall ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have a memorandum that Brandon is the headquarters of the 12th Manitoba Dragoons and 'D' squadron.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What was the original estimated cost ? I understand it is going to cost a great deal more than it was estimated it would.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no information as to that.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I think the citizens of Brandon do not expect that the votes taken last year and this year will finish the hall ; in fact they are counting on many more thousands being spent and depending on their representative having sufficient pull with the Public Works Department to increase the cost to a great deal more than the total amount estimated in the first place.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think my hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That is the general talk among some of the citizens of Brandon.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I suppose that is because such an exceedingly fine building is being erected ; the contractor is doing his work well.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. This is another case of what I complained of the other evening, the expenditure of such large amounts in one town to the exclusion of other towns of almost as much importance both generally and from a military standpoint. Brandon is of no more importance in this respect than Minnedosa or Souris. In Minnedosa, for instance, they have not a decent place to store the arms which are deteriorating, and I am informed that some of the militiamen there are so enthusiastic and at the same time so discouraged at the results of their appeals to the Militia Department for some kind of small drill hall that they have subscribed privately to put up a small building simply for the protection of the arms belonging to the government. It is not very much encouragement to the company there, in which there are a great many farmers' sons, who have to come long distances to attend drill and who have attended the annual camp and have acquitted themselves so creditably as to have carried off for two years in succession the main prize, to see so much done for Brandon and nothing done for the rural corps. I do not object to Brandon having a good drill hall; but I do object to such excessive expenditures for buildings in Brandon and Virden simply because they are represented by an ex-minister who seems to have a pull with the government, and at the expense of the rural militia.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that we should have the Minister of Militia here to give information on this matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection to letting this item stand until he is here.

Dauphin public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This consists of a revote of $2,500 and a new vote of $12,500. It is to complete payments in connection with the purchase of a site and the erection of a building for post office purposes, &c. The lot is 75 feet by 132 feet.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Whom was the lot purchased from ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Thomas W. Iredale.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you mean by '&c' ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The building will have the land office as well.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the total cost of this building when completed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The estimated cost, including everything is $36,000. That does not include the site.

Mr. BENNETT. What has the site cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $6,000.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is the population of Dauphin ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1901 it was 1,135, but I think it has grown considerably since then.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Does the minister know whether any buildings were on this land before, or is it vacant ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to say whether or not there were any buildings upon it. I may say that an inspector from the department who has a very good knowledge of the value of real property was sent to inspect this land at Dauphin, and to compare its price with the price asked for other lots in the immediate vicinity, and he reported that this was a far and reasonable price for the lot.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I wish to say that I am very well acquainted with all the towns about that size in the west, and I do not hesitate to say that $80 per foot frontage is a very excessive price for a lot in a town the size of Dauphin. I do not object to Dauphin having a post office. I believe these smaller towns in the west are as much entitled to public buildings as other towns anywhere in the Dominion ; but I do say that a lot of 75 feet frontage could be bought in any town of the west of from 1,500 to 2,000 population for $3,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend know of the sale of any lot in the business part of Dauphin having been made within the last six months at less price ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I know the value of lots in other towns of similar size, and I know that Dauphin is not different in that respect from other towns. I do not hesitate for one moment to say that $6,000 for 75 feet frontage in any part of Dauphin is an absolutely extravagant price.

Mr. BARR. This is another instance of extravagance in erecting public buildings throughout the Dominion. Here is a village with only 1,000 inhabitants whose future is very uncertain, and yet the government are going to put up this expensive public building. In the village of Shelburne where I live, a village of 1,500, the headquarters of militia regiment for years, we have to rent a room on the third flat over a shop in which to keep the arms. The result is that on several occasions the rain has come through and injured the arms and accoutrements. Not a dollar has been spent on a public building in that village, yet in this village of 1,000 the government are going to spend $40,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This vote is not for an armoury but for a building for a post office and other public purposes.

Mr. BARR. The village of Shelburne has neither post office nor armoury. But it does not happen to be represented by an ex-minister or somebody with a pull. There is no big four in that section. But the big four can accomplish anything they want. All they have to do is to ask for something from the government and they get it. The time has come when we should have some pronounced policy on this question. We should have such a pronouncement before voting these large amounts of $50,000 or $60,000 for public buildings.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the postal statistics ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The postal revenue for the nine months of last year was $4,310.65, money orders issued, $34,118.43, money orders paid, $25,981.55.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the expenditure ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The expenditure for the rent of the post office was $275 and the other expenses $1,608 including salary to postmaster, $1,125, and commission on money orders, $100. My hon. friend (Mr. Barr) must see that he has put forth somewhat narrow views. He says we should not erect a public building in Dauphin because we do not know what its future is going to be and have not yet erected a public building at Shelburne. My hon. friend might not be able to get all the members of this House to agree with him. While I should be very glad to consider the claims of Shelburne as well as those of any other town, yet I think we should not stop all expenditure on public buildings simply because we cannot erect one in every town of Canada. The resolution of the municipal council of Dauphin sets forth that the postal business in 1905 stood the sixth in Manitoba, that Dauphin has a rapidly growing population, and its postal business will rank fourth in the near future. It is the trade and district centre of northwestern Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan. It is the centre of a large and fertile country which is rapidly increasing in population. In erecting public buildings, we have to look to the future. We have to consider whether or not the town is a railway centre or whether or not it is the centre of a fertile country with a rapidly growing population.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister the census figures of the last census ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. BARR. I could give the hon. minister a similar resolution from Shelburne or any other village.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall have to go up to Shelburne.

Mr. BARR. That resolution does not prove anything. We know the population is only a little over 1,000 and it is a small place.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Twenty years ago the whole province of Saskatchewan had only a few thousand. To-day its population numbers in the hundreds of thousands.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Dauphin is one of the most thriving towns in the west to-day. It has nearly 2,000 of a population. The Canadian Northern has made it a divisional point and is spending a very large amount in shops and other buildings—possibly $100,000 or $150,000. There can be no question as to Dauphin's future.

Mr. STAPLES. Another railway runs in there ?

Mr. FOSTER. I think there is a little railway projected that runs down some twelve miles from Dauphin or very close to Dauphin.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is all Canadian Northern.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a little junction there.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Prince Albert Junction and Edmonton Junction.

Mr. FOSTER. Under what circumstances was the land bought? All we have had from the minister is that some one told him that the price was not too high.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) missed part of what I said. I explained that an inspector was sent to examine the land and compare the price asked with the prices for which other lots similarly situated could be obtained, and he reported that the price is as low as that at which any lot suitable for public buildings could be obtained.

Mr. FOSTER. Who was the inspector ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Greenfield of Winnipeg.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Where is the lot situated ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is lot 16 and the easterly half of lot 17 in block 9, situated on Burrows avenue. It has a frontage of 75 feet.

Mr. BARR. Was the fact that a lot was required for a post office advertised ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, that is not usual.

Mr. STAPLES. From whom was the lot purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From Mr. T. W. Iredale.

Mr. BARR. Is it a corner lot?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does not appear to be.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I would like to ask the member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) if lots in Dauphin are more valuable than in his own town?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not know that they are. There are lots in the town I live in held at $6,000 and $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What frontage?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Frontage of 30 feet, with a depth of 99 feet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This lot is two and a half times that size.

Mr. LALOR. I do not know anything about the claims of Dauphin for a post office, but I think that every member of the House must be surprised to find $6,000 paid for a 75-foot lot in a town of 1,100.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In a rapidly growing town with a population, as we are told by the member (Mr. Crawford) of about 2,000.

Mr. LALOR. I do not see how it can be growing very rapidly. It is an old town; I have heard of it for a long time. And to pay $6,000 for a lot of that size in a town of 1,100 people must strike every member of this House as ridiculous.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The population was 1,100 last census, but it is about 2,000 now.

Mr. FOSTER. What authority has the minister for saying that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford).

Mr. FOSTER. Does he speak from census returns?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No, but I understand it is about two thousand now.

Mr. BARR. Then, you do not know.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not positively.

Mr. BENNETT. After the statement of the member for Portage la Prairie, it is quite evident that this has been a bargain day in this place Dauphin when they can sell land for $80 a foot. The member for Portage la Prairie tells us that in his own town, lots of a depth of only 90 feet, sell as a common occurrence——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I did not say, as a common occurrence.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman said that a lot 33 by 90 feet sold for $6,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No, I did not.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, if the hon. gentleman will state what he did say ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. You are making the statement. And I say your statement is not correct.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, if I misunderstood the hon. gentleman, how much did it sell for?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Some lots sell for $6,000, some for $5,000, or $3,000 or $2,000. It depends on the location.

Mr. BENNETT. I accept the statement of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, for I know if it was not true he would not say it. The hon. gentleman has repeated the statement that a 33-foot lot sells for $6.000. That is nearly $200 a foot. Well, I can tell him that if real estate is worth that there, it is worth more than in similar towns in Ontario.

An hon. MEMBER. Of course.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, from the hungry cry being sent up from the west now, it does not seem very far ahead of Ontario for the present. Is the report of the Postmaster General right in saying that about $200 a year is paid for rent, fuel and light for the post office premises in Dauphin?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The amount is $275.

Mr. BENNETT. The report of the Postmaster General gives it as $206.25.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps that would be for nine months.

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, probably.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The hon. minster (Mr. Pugsley) will remember the purchase of a lot in Sandwich. This is the renowned town of Sandwich, one of the oldest in Ontario, and situated on the Detroit river, where property is naturally held at a high figure. The hon. minster will remember that he purchased a lot in Sandwich much larger than this one in Dauphin and paid only $1,600 for it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That shows that we purchase as cheaply as we can.

Mr. CLEMENTS. And the former purchaser made a profit of 50 per cent. I state this case as a matter of comparison.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know that in some towns property can be purchased for a good deal less than other towns where the population is considerably less. A good deal depends upon the age of the town. A town may be fifty years old but if it is not growing very much even though it has a fairly large population, real estate will not have so high a value as in smaller but more progressive towns. It may be that the town of Sandwich is not growing rapidly, and it may be that there are many sites available for post office purposes. I happen to know some places in the west where land, many years ago when population was not nearly so large as it is now, was held at a higher figure than the same land can be bought for to-day. In the course of time, values settle down, for people realize just what the land is really worth. Dauphin has become a divisional point of the Canadian Northern Railway and is the distributing centre for all the fertile country to the west and northwest of it. It is rapidly increasing in population, I believe. From the knowledge I have of real estate. I am not prepared to say that this price for a lot and a half, well situated in the centre of business—for that is where we must select sites for post offices and custom houses—is an excessive price.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the contract been let?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. In fact, we have not actually acquired the site, but we have agreed to buy on inspection by an inspector.

Mr. PORTER. The minister has emphasized the fact that an inspector was sent to examine the property before it was purchased by the government, and cites it, evidently, as though that must settle the matter. This House and this country have had some experience of the work of inspectors. There was a purchase in the city of Halifax where an inspector was sent down to determine the value of property, and yet, upon further investigation, it was found that we got very much the worse of the deal. I can recollect another case, in Moncton, where an inspector was sent down on behalf of this government to ascertain the value of land, and a similar circumstance seemed to exist there. But the government got the worst of the deal, and the middleman was introduced, as the evidence shows he has been frequently introduced by this government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman say that in the Public Works Department there is any evidence that lots have been purchased through middlemen?

Mr. PORTER. I said there was evidence that the government did this, I did not single out any department. I want to refer the minister to another case to show what an exorbitant price is being paid for this post office site in a small town of 1,000 inhabitants.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. The information I have is that the population of the town, by the census of 1901, was 1,135, and that it is about 2,000 to-day.

Mr. PORTER. If an increase of 100 in the population will help the minister, I am willing to concede that it has 1,100 or 1,200. But even that population does not seem to justify the expenditure of $6,000 for this small piece of land, when you compare it with a recent purchase by the same department in the city of Belleville. There they had occasion to purchase a piece of land for the erection of an armoury, a piece of land more than double the area that is being paid $6,000 for here. Not only is it double in area, but it is a corner lot, fronting on two of the most important streets in the city of Belleville, in the central portion of the town. Belleville is well known to be a very progressive Ontario city, situated in an old and well settled district, where land has a high value; yet the Department of Public Works was able to buy that piece of land for about the same price that is paid for this small piece of land in Dauphin. Now, I would like to know from the Minister of Public Works how frequently this piece of land for the post office has changed hands within a year or so before the government became the purchaser. In the Moncton land deal and in the Halifax land deal, we find by the investigation that took place that there were a number of transfers just before the government bought the land. Perhaps that is the cue to this matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman ought not to make a suggestion like that without some evidence.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I may tell the hon. gentleman that Dauphin had a population of 1,135 in 1901 and 1,670 in 1906, and I think I am fairly within the mark in saying that to-day it has a population of nearly 2,000.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. As showing the increase in the value of land, I may mention that in my little town of Stonewall there were 585 inhabitants in 1901 and 1,087 in 1906. The Bank of Hamilton, a very conservative institution, two years ago bought a lot and paid $50 a foot for it. We have in that town perhaps one block of 550 feet square, and you cannot buy a foot of land in that block for less than $50 a foot.

Mr. BENNETT. Is that a corner lot?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Yes. They bought a corner lot for $50 a foot. That is a sample of the value of land. Nearly all the business is done in that one block. The bank is now putting up a building to cost $18,000. Hon. gentlemen coming from Ontario vilages do not realize how quickly land values go up in western towns. Take the town of Selkirk in the county of that name. We have a district there almost as large as a small province, 100 miles by 150, but there are very few public buildings at that point. Selkirk is 25 miles from any other town, and yet it will undoubtedly become a large town, because they have a water-power available at the St. Andrew's locks which will be utilized for manufacturing purposes and the town is sure to increase and prosper. It would not be good business to put up a small building in any of those western towns that are growing so rapidly, and the expenditure of $41,000 on a public building at Selkirk is justified by the situation of the town. Dauphin is in a similar position, 25 or 30 miles from any other place. It will likely become a very important point, and there should be a building put up there that will serve for the future.

Mr. NORTHRUP. We are told that in this town of Dauphin there is a building that has been occupied as a post office for some time back. That building must occupy a considerable space, and it cannot have much less than 75 feet frontage if it is used as a post office. It must cost something to heat and light that building, but the owner of it is willing to rent his property to the government at a figure equal to about $275 a year in view of the increased interest on the value of the land and of the building and of the cost of heating and lighting. I suppose there would not be more than $75 for heating and lighting, and if we call heating and lighting $75, this gentleman owning that building is willing to rent it to the government for $200 a year, which at 10 per cent represents a value of $2,000 for that land with the building on it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What kind of building is it?

Mr. NORTHRUP. I do not care, it must be good enough to use as a post office or it would not be used as such. There is your lot, plus your building, which the man is willing to rent for $200 a year, or perhaps less. That will represent 10 per cent on $2,000 for this lot, including the building. Now, in this case we find $6,000 paid for a vacant lot. I think the statement in itself is sufficient to show that the figure is unreasonable. But apart altogether from the question of price, it is a pity that the minister just coming into office would not lay down some principle according to which these buildings might be erected.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This building is to be used as a custom house as well.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Add that if you like, and you have interest on a capital of $2,000, you have heating and lighting additional, your janitor, and probably an additional staff in the office, meaning $3,000 or $4,000 a year that this country will have to pay as against $275; or if you allow rent for the custom house of $75, you have $350 or $400 at the outside, to say nothing of repairs and incidentals of that nature. I am quite prepared to admit that the late government went further than I thought they should have gone in erecting public buildings in places not sufficiently large to justify it, but I think that if the late government punished the people with whips, the present government are certainly doing it with scorpions, because they have out-Heroded Herod since they came into office and each year seems to be worse than the preceding one. I would say to my hon. friend that it would meet with the approval not only of the people of the country, but of his own friends as well if he would lay down the rule that public buildings should only be erected in the same way that private individuals would erect buildings. If a city or a town is doing a large amount of business, if it would be necessary to pay a large rental and if the government can borrow money cheaply, by all means put up a public building. If a town is going to grow like Dauphin, when it has grown give it its public building. but it seems absurd to say that we will spend a large sum of money to erect a public building in a town because a few years hence it is expected to increase in size and importance.

Mr. NORTHRUP.

Mr. BERGERON. I think that we should follow a good deal of the advice which my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) has given because the time will come when all this will have to be stopped. With reference to public buildings in British Columbia and the Northwest, I found when I was in the west, that the government are in the habit of buying property and paying a very large price for it. I will not say whether they buy it from their own friends or not. That is not the point I am making. But, the price that the government pay seems to regulate the price of property in the town in which the government purchase property. I would not be surprised that if a good deal of the prevailing scarcity of money in the west was due to the fact that a great many people have put their money into real estate and it is locked up there in the meantime. I was in a town where the government had bought a property for a public building for which they had paid a large amount of money. I could hardly believe that property in that place would bring as high a price as was paid.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Where was that?

Mr. BERGERON. That was on the main street of Saskatoon. The government bought a piece of land and paid for it nearly a thousand dollars a running foot, the price being higher than would be paid in Montreal. You could not approach property on the main street in Saskatoon where the government are putting up a very costly post office. This is outside of the ordinary criticism that is made with reference to erecting post offices and public buildings here and there, but I wish to call attention to the speculative prices that the government are paying for property in these small towns. This has been going on to such a degree that a great many people have gone into speculation and there is a great scarcity of money in the west because it is locked up in that way. I heard not long ago that merchants in the west cannot pay what they owe to eastern merchants on account of their money being invested in speculative transactions, a large amount of which speculation is no doubt due to the fact that the government are paying these high prices for land. The government have lots of money and they can pay these prices. I do not mean to accuse them of buying property from their friends although I believe that they do buy most of the property from their friends. Probably their friends know of the intentions of the government in advance, buy the property at an ordinary price, then put up the price and the government pay it.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. We heard that same absurd speech with regard to the post office property that was bought at Winnipeg. The government held that property but a very few months when it could have turned it over at $100,000 advance on the price paid. That condition has prevailed in the west and we cannot understand it in the east. Take a city the size of Edmonton; I priced ordinary lots there last summer for which they wanted $700 a foot. Hon. gentlemen talk about the large buildings put up by the government. What are the banks doing? The banks are showing the greatest example of what they think of the future. There are no such buildings in this part of the country as the banks are erecting in the west, not only in Edmonton and Winnipeg but in the whole of the west. Even in the dull little town of Rossland the Bank of Montreal have a magnificent building. I was in Dauphin last summer and the people were claiming that there was a population of about 2,000 and 2,500. The most optimistic I met stated that there were at least 2,500 people. Dauphin is so situated that it is going to be a very important point. There is no doubt that it will be the distributing centre for the people all the way up to the Pas and Winnipegosis and I certainly think from what I ascertained as to the values of western land last fall that $6,000 for a lot in Dauphin is a very reasonable price. I am judging that from my own personal observation on the ground.

Mr. WARD. I think my hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. Zimmerman) forgets that he struck Edmonton just at the top of the boom and that the boom has fallen out. You cannot judge of the Northwest by boom prices, and I do not think it is fair to advance an argument of that kind especially when my hon. friend got the price just at the top of the boom. Everybody knows that you can buy land at Edmonton at a very much less figure than my hon. friend has quoted.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Not in the centre of the city.

Mr. WARD. Well, this same land. My object in rising is to ask the Minister of Public Works if he will comply with what my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) asked him; that is as to what transactions had taken place with this property in Dauphin during the past year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend (Mr. Ward) will see how impossible it would be to do that. I would have to send out and have a search made of the records of the registry office. We have no information whatever with regard to previous transactions.

Mr. WARD. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has stated that the government have decided to purchase this property. The Minister of Justice must have that very information in his office. The abstract must have been returned by the solicitor who is looking after the title for the government. Therefore, if my hon. friend would send down to the Minister of Justice he could probably get the information that has been asked for by my hon. friend from East Hastings. The Minister of Public Works has stated that they must look to the future of places like Dauphin in erecting these public buildings, but I would suggest to him that it is not necessary that we should allow the sellers of property to look to the future and fix their prices about ten years in advance, which, I venture to say, has been done in this instance.

Mr. ALCORN. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Zimmerman) has not answered the argument of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). All he has done has been to take a particular instance of undue inflation in the value of property. May I ask the minister whether there were any other sites considered and at what price?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The only knowledge I have is that information came to the department that this site which was sultable could be obtained. A gentleman experienced in land values was sent there to make an examination and also to get values of other lots in the business part of the town which would be similarly situated. He reported that this was an exceedingly good lot and that the price was reasonable as compared with the values of other lots in the town.

Mr. LALOR. Is there a copy of that gentleman's report? If we had that we would throw a good deal of light on the former value of this property.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume that report is in the department and I will have it here on Monday.

Mr. ALCORN. Were there negotiations with any one else?

Mr. PATERSON. What strikes one from the east in going to the west is the value put on lots.

Mr. FOSTER. When he wants to buy them.

Mr. PATERSON. I happened to be in Edmonton on two occasions a few years ago. At the time of my first visit the Bank of Montreal had purchased a lot 50 by 300 feet for $15,000. A gentleman whom I knew took an option on a similar lot at the same price. I expressed surprise and said I would be afraid to take it. On my second visit I inquired about his transaction and was informed that the option had expired but that it was a bad thing for him as the lot had since been sold for one half more. The same thing applies in proportion to all of the western towns which are growing and, of course, if we come to compare these prices with prices in a town like Belleville, they seem very high. I think it was the banks that set the pace in Edmonton.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I also asked the other day on what principle the government established public buildings in the different constituencies. In looking at these votes for Manitoba buildings it would appear that they are erected only in constituencies represented by followers of this government. We find public buildings in Brandon, Dauphin, Emerson, Neepawa, Selkirk, St. Boniface and Winnipeg, all represented by supporters of the present government. That may be a coincidence, but my belief is that it is not. The hon. member from Selkirk (Mr. S. J. Jackson) referred to one of the members here as coming from Ontario and not being able to understand the value of land for public buildings in western towns. I claim to be fairly familiar with land values in all Manitoba towns and I have no hesitation, while I am not opposing the building of a post office in Dauphin, in saying that $6,000 for this lot is an excessive price. Dauphin is not a very big place, it is a railway divisional point, but not a railway centre; only the Canadian Northern Railway goes into it.

The member for Hamilton was exceedingly unhappy in referring to the post office at Winnipeg. If the member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) had been here he would not have allowed him to speak as he did. He knew very well that the post office in Winnipeg had to be placed next the 'Free Press' office no matter what it cost. The 'Free Press' is owned very largely by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton). While we are not going into that there is a very nice story in connection with that affair. The post office building had to be placed so near the 'Free Press' office that a light-well had to be placed between the two buildings. This is an exceedingly extravagant price, $6,000 for that lot 75 by 132 feet, even if it is in the very centre of Dauphin.

Mr. BURROWS. It is in the centre, where the old post office was.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Grant that, but the land was still not worth $6,000, and I do not think it helps matters to say it is where the old post office was because that land would not be so very valuable.

Mr. LAKE. Might I also urge on the minister to lay down some settled principle on which he intends to proceed in the erection of public buildings in the west?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought I had done that two or three times already.

Mr. LAKE. Not in my hearing and I have been listening attentively for it. There are many growing towns in that country which will have considerable population in the near future, and I think the minister will find himself in all kinds of difficulties unless he can lay down some definite principle which will involve the postal and customs revenue or other indication of the business likely to be done in the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could hardly be expected upon such short notice to do what none of my predecessors since confederation, who have erected many public buildings in all parts of Canada, have done. I do not think it is possible to lay down a hard and fast rule, you cannot do that. You have to take into account very many things. We have to take into account not only the population of a place, but the business done and the revenue derived by the government. It may be a small town where the government derives a large inland or customs revenue. It is also fair to consider whether or not considerable sums of public money are being expended in a town. Take a town which is a seaport. With considerable money being expended for harbour work, dredging or wharfs, the claims of that town for the erection of a public building may not be so strong as the claims of a town which is inland and where there is no large expenditure of Dominion moneys. One has to have regard to a great many considerations, so that it is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule. All I can say is that I am prepared to listen to reasonable representations on behalf of the different cities and towns for the erection of public buildings. I am quite prepared to give careful consideration to any representations which are made by hon. gentlemen opposite as well as to those made by our friends on this side of the House. In the present estimates it will be seen that there are quite a number of public buildings being erected in constituencies represented by our opponents.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Not in Manitoba.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There may be some reason for that. A large majority of the constituencies in Manitoba are represented by gentlemen sitting on this side of the House, and it may be that the claims of the constituencies represented by our friends opposite have not been very strongly pressed upon the attention of the Minister of Public Works. However, the reasonable requirements of the people in all sections of the country will receive careful consideration.

Mr. LAKE. I understand then, that patronage is to enter very largely into this question?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not said so.

Mr. LAKE. Then, the other principle which the minister has laid down is the revenue derived by the government. Am I to take that as the principal reason he adduced?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said that a large number of considerations had to be taken into account.

Mr. LAKE. Then I think we may conclude generally that the matter is to be left to the discretion of the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. To the sense of justice of the minister.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is this building on the main street of the town?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is on Burrows avenue.

Mr. BURROWS. There are two business streets; one is Gartmore Road and the other Burrows Avenue.

Mr. GANONG. What is the customs revenue of the place ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The post office revenue is $4,310.

Mr. BURROWS. Customs revenue last year was $10,000.

Mr. GANONG. The present post office building is rented ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, at $275 rental.

Mr. ALCORN. What other demands, if any, have been made for this building, by whom and when, and how long has this project been before the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As long ago as 1906 a memorial was presented by the Board of Trade. It has also been pressed by the town council and the municipal council of Dauphin.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the hon. member for Dauphin if the present post office building covers the whole 75 feet frontage ?

Mr. BURROWS. No.

Mr. BENNETT. How much vacant land is there on either side of it ?

Mr. BURROWS. The present post office building has about 30 feet frontage, and there is a vacant space on each side.

Mr. BENNETT. So that there is 45 feet vacant of the 75 feet. It looks strange, if this is such a desirable property and is worth this large amount, that 45 feet of it should have stood idle for years. One would have thought land of such great value would be built up completely.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is the present building a two-story building ?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is it occupied for any other purpose than a post office ?

Mr. BURROWS. The postmaster lives in it.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has the government bought the building as well ?

Mr. BURROWS. No. It is a frame building, and is not safe for a post office.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The owner of the building has sold the lot to the government ?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes. It has been the expectation of the postmaster for several years to sell this property for post office purposes.

Emerson public building, $3,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote. The site has been purchased. It has a frontage of 60 feet on Main street by 140 feet on Dominion street. The building is required for post office and customs purposes.

Mr. BENNETT. How much was paid for the lot ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $1,000—60 feet by 150.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is the population of Emerson ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 920.

Mr. BARR. That is not a very flourishing town, is it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is an ambitious town.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the total estimated cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $20,000.

Mr. STAPLES. The last three sessions of this parliament I have been making a claim for the little town of Carman. I have no objection to money being spent so long as the people are getting good value. I am only too anxious to see that Manitoba gets its share of the large public expenditure. Carman has a population of over 2,000. It is one of the oldest, and I think it is the prettiest town in southern Manitoba. It has three lines of railway running into it—the Canadian Northern, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Jim Hill railroad. Therefore I am quite within the mark when I call it a railway centre. It is a very convenient and necessary place for a port of entry. It has sent here petition after petition asking for some consideration out of the public chest but without success. Last year, as you will find by referring to Vol. 3 of 'Hansard,' I got the promise that this town would get some consideration or at least that its claim would be looked into. That promise has not yet been fulfilled. The town of Carman certainly deserves more consideration, especially when we see what other towns in Manitoba are getting. Last year its postal revenue was $3,415.38 whereas the postal revenue of Emerson is only $1,120, yet it is getting a public building that will cost some $20,000. Neepawa has a postal revenue of $4,783.30. Selkirk has a population of 2,700 and a postal revenue of $2,385.80. Dauphin has a postal revenue of $4,310.55. In my opinion the town of Carman is better entitled to a building for a post office and custom house than any town in Manitoba.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In what constituency is it ?

Mr. STAPLES. In the constituency of Macdonald which I have the honour to represent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is there any public building in the county ?

Mr. STAPLES. Only a provincial building, the lands title office. I might make a further claim on behalf of Manitoba as a province. I have a list of the appropriations for the little province of Nova Scotia but it would take too long to read it. Comparing these appropriations with those for Manitoba and the revenue in each province, I do not think that the province of Manitoba is getting a fair deal. All we ask is fair treatment. All we ask is to be dealt with as the other provinces. I hope that the Minister of Public Works will consider the claims of Carman and give me at least the further promise that these claims will be looked into and an appropriation made.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am very happy to say, in all sincerity, that I shall look carefully into the claims of Carman. My hon. friend cannot expect me to promise that an appropriation will be made. That is a matter for consideration.

Mr. STAPLES. Should the minister find that the conditions are as reported, will he make an appropriation for the town ?

Mr. FIELDING. Would not that be bribery ?

Mr. STAPLES. Not at all. If it would be bribery in any direction, it would be for the benefit of the government.

Mr. SPROULE. A part of this has been spent. What was that for ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site has been bought.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it paid for ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It appears in the statement up to the 31st of March, $1,500. I presume it has been paid for. An order in council was passed on the 27th of August last for the purchase of the site at $1,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Several years ago Emerson was a town of over 3,000 but to-day it is down to 900. I saw a public building put up in that town which cost $125,000 and is offered at $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a doleful picture.

Mr. SPROULE. I only mention it to remind the minister that it was not because of any great business ability that he was able to purchase a lot for $1,000 in a town of that importance. It is an unfortunate fact, as every one knows who has been in Emerson more than once, that it has greatly decreased in recent years both in population and in the value of land. It is on the boundary line, but, for some reason, which may be known better to the people there than to outsiders, the town has not been growing. I do not know that the minister would be doing wrong in providing a building there, because, as it is on the boundary, and an important customs port, a custom office as well as a post office are needed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It may be of interest to the hon. member to know that for nine months of the last fiscal period the customs income was $15,677.

Mr. SPROULE. It is a place at which a great many Americans come in, bringing settlers' effects, and so will be an important port of entry notwithstanding the fact that there is not a very large village there at the present time. And I suppose that this building will house the post office and customs house and also the inland revenue.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The post office and customs house, but as to the inland revenue I am not sure.

Mr. SPROULE. If it were so, it would be all the stronger justification for the expenditure. What is the amount to be spent?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The estimated cost is $20,000.

Mr. STAPLES. When I was making my remarks, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) suggested that, if the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) made the promise I asked, it would be considered bribery.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some of our friends opposite might so regard it.

Mr. STAPLES. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) speaks of bribery in such a case, what would he consider the proper name to apply to his own case when there has been spent in his constituency, from the year 1897 down to 1900, the sum of $2,145,030.13? On the ground on which he takes exception to my request, I should say this was wholesale bribery actually committed.

Neepawa public building, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote, and is to make provision for a public building. The site has been purchased.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What is the size of the lot?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the figures before me. But the size of the building is 65 feet by 48 feet.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The lot is 99 feet square.

Mr. CROCKET. What was the price?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $3,000. It is made up of lots 14, 15 and 16, on the corner of Mountain avenue and Cameron street.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Have there been protests against the selection of the site for this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not heard of any and my deputy tells me he has not heard of any.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Perhaps the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) can tell us?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No documentary evidence of it has been filed with me.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That so? I would like to read a little article that appeared in the Liberal paper of his own town, his own political organ.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Sure about that?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. About what? That it is the Liberal organ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. You said my political organ.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Well, I am not going to say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) entirely owns it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Don't say anything that is not according to the facts.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Does the hon. gentleman deny that it is supporting him?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not making this speech.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. And that he is supporting it as well? When was the site purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was authorized by order in council in 1906, and steps immediately taken to purchase it after that.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. This was the particular lot authorized to be purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the order in council always specifies the lot.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Here is the protest of the Liberal 'Press,' of Neepawa:

The post office site.

There is no getting away from the fact that there is very general and deep-rooted dissatisfaction with the site chosen for a federal government building to be erected in Neepawa for postal and customs purposes. It will be generally admitted that any public building should be so located as to be convenient for the greatest number of people and especially for those who use it most. A centre of population is desirable, but a centre of business is much more essential. In neither respect, however, does the site chosen in Neepawa fill the bill. It is so far north as to inconvenience almost everybody in the two south-end wards and not far enough to be any more convenient to the north-end people than if it were two or three blocks farther south, where it would have been in the business centre and near the territorial centre as well as the centre of population.

The site chosen never will be central. Conditions are such that there can be no clustering of business around the post office, while two-thirds of the population and four-fifths of the business is now south of the site.

That is a pretty large proportion.

The probabilities are that, five years hence, four-fifths of the population and nine-tenths of the business will be south of it. It is, and always will be, as unsatisfactory to the farmers as to the business man, for no matter which end of town a farmer may wish to do business at, he must go a considerable distance to the post office.

Perhaps that will refresh the memory of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie as to whether there have been protests. The town is divided into two portions, the north and the south. The major portion is the south. The north end is where the station is located, from which the street runs up to the business part of the town, perhaps, three-quarters of a mile. The business houses are almost entirely on the west side of this street, and it is on this street that the site has been selected. I think I am correct in saying that, except a butcher shop, grocery, Chinese laundry and implement warehouse, and a couple of blocks down from this post office site, a hotel, there are no business houses on that side of the street. I am personally aware that there has been great dissatisfaction with this choice of a site. I have seen many articles, not only in the Conservative newspapers but in Liberal newspapers as well, condemning the choice of these lots. I notice that the minister says that the order in council was passed in February, 1906. Right opposite this site is what is called the Liberal club room. There is a lot and a half in that property, and it cost $600, or at the rate of $400 a lot. The property bought for the post office cost at the rate of $1,000 a lot.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was that a corner lot?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I am not sure. At any rate it was nearer the south side which was the business side of the town.

Mr. CRAWFORD. When was that purchased?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The article I am reading was in 1906. I will tell you what this lot cost when it was bought. By looking up the land titles office records it will be found that on January 5, 1906, this lot for the post office was purchased from W.

J. Mathers for $2,000, and it was transferred by him to W. J. Harrison on March 30, 1906. In less than two months afterwards the property was transferred from Harrison to the King for $3,000; in less than two months it had increased from $2,000 to $3,000. It may be significant that the hon. member who represents the constituency and who lives in the north end of this town has property north of the site of this post office. The business end of the town is almost entirely south, and businessmen, irrespective of politics, protested against this site. This article in the press says the site is inconvenient, not only for businessmen, but for farmers as well. This Liberal paper states it never will be in the centre of the town, and great dissatisfaction has exised. I think some other influence than the benefit of the town and of the business interests has been at work in the selection of this site.

Mr. STAPLES. I would like to ask the hon. member for Portage la Prairie if any public meetings were called in regard to the selection of this site for a post office, and did the people say where they would like it to be situated?

Mr. CRAWFORD. There was a public meeting called at which I was present myself, and one of our Tory friends said that if they had the control of the situation they would place it opposite the land titles office, away at the other end of the town and away from the business centre. I admit there was a division of opinion over the location of the post office, but the post office was placed as near the centre of the town as possible. Now, some of the largest business interests in the town are half a mile north of the site selected. The south side of the town, where the hon. gentleman says the business interests are largely located, is not right, as they are not more than a third of that distance from this site, not more than a quarter of a mile, if it is that. Now, one of the sites that some of our friends wanted to get was only 172 feet from this present site, but that was going to cost $6,000 instead of $3,000. I may say that I had a good deal to do in advising the selection of this site, and I thought it was not wise to pay $6,000 for a site when you could get one for $3,000, and when a large percentage of the people were in the opposite direction. I think I have one of the largest business concerns in the town and that is half a mile north of this location. We have three business places at the north end, half a mile north of this site, while the furthest place on the south is not more than a quarter of a mile away. But the main business firms have not more than five or six hundred feet to travel to reach this post office, while we on the north have to travel almost three quarters of a mile. To satisfy all interests and to save expense, I advised that the post office be placed as near as possible in the centre of the settled portion of the town, and that is where it is. The hon. gentleman, in talking of the business places, did not mention the business places on that side of the street at all. There is the Union Bank that cost $20,000 on that side of the street, within 500 feet of where this post office is to be located. We have one of the largest hardware stores in any country town in Manitoba on that side of the street, two harness shops and one of the largest and best hotels in Canada on that side of the street, within 300 feet of the post office site, and one of the best livery stables in the country very close to it. There is no question as to the location of the site being central. I thought it was wise to save $3,000 in the purchase of that site, as it was only 172 feet from the point where a great many thought it should be situated. I think that our hon. friends opposite will be liberal enough now to give us some credit for trying to save public money.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I hardly think it was economy that influenced the hon. member in recommending this site, especially as the board of trade in his own town protested strongly against the selection of the present site. Who compose the board of trade? The business men of the town. Are they not the better judges? I do not think the hon. member was influenced solely by a desire to save $2,000 or $3,000 in the purchase of a site, when the business men of the town who desired the location to be where it would suit business interests, protested strongly against the present site.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did they want the $6,000 site purchased?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I do not know what the price was but they recommended a different site. The hon. gentleman is entirely astray when he says this location is in the business centre. I think his constituents will be surprised when they read his remarks in the 'Hansard,' unless he revises them considerably before the 'Hansard' comes out; they will be surprised to see the defence he has put up for the recommendation of this site.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like to make a further statement. The only protest I have received in an official way in regard to this site was a largely signed petition from a large percentage of the people of the town, urging that if there was any protest filed in regard to this site no change should be made and that the site should remain where it is. I have that petition in my desk and it is largely signed

Mr. SCHAFFNER. From the people on the south side?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The south side and the north side. I would like to say in regard to the board of trade in the town of Neepawa that one of the strongest Conservatives in that town said : We might as well be honest about it, if the Conservatives had their way we would have it down opposite the lands titles office, which is entirely away from the business centre of the town.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is that what is called Mitchell Corner ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Did the hon. gentleman favour that personally ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes, personally I favoured that but the majority of the people thought it should go on the main street. The Mitchell corner is one row of lots off the main street. Personally I would have favoured that because it would have been just as central and as cheap.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The hon. gentleman speaks of the northern part of the town being three quarters of a mile from the post office. As a matter of fact, has not the business in the northern part of the town been decreasing and is it not becoming centred down south of the post office ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. All the elevators, the grain business, outside of some shipping in cars, and the milling business are at the north location.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that there were $12,000 voted last year. Part of that was spent. For what purpose ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Up to the 31st December last year there was an expenditure of $3,-437.56. That included $3.000 for the site, the remainder being expended for survey, legal and travelling expenses, advertising, &c.

Mr. SPROULE. How is it that you have only marked $2,000 here as being expended because the revote is $10,000 ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. There were a couple of thousand dollars voted for the site earlier.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is not well informed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like to say that there were $2,000 voted before this.

Mr. SPROULE. Not last year ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not talking about last year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The year before.

Mr. SPROULE. But there were $2,000 spent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There were $2,000 voted the year before and $12,000 last year; that would make $14,000 altogether.

Mr. SPROULE. Well then $2,000 must have been spent. For what purpose ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That goes into the purchase of the land.

Mr. SPROULE. The land was not purchased in this year. It could not be because that would be a revote and it would lapse at the expiration of the financial year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The order in council authorizing the purchase of the land was passed on the 3rd of February, 1905. I think it probable that the land was purchased in the then current year; but at all events in 1905-6.

Mr. SPROULE. Then that money was spent in that year. There were $12,000 voted last year in addition. There has been $2,000 of that spent since. How was that spent ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Three thousand odd dollars in all that should have been spent.

Mr. SPROULE. But the estimates say that the first $2,000 was spent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman want that information ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes. I notice that a great many times, whether the minister understands it or not, he does not take the trouble to give the House the information. I think there is a principle involved that we should deal with at some time or other. We vote money from year to year which is either needed or not needed. If it is not needed it should not be voted because it is always on the estimates and is a standing bribe whenever an election is called up. We do not seem to be able to ascertain how much was spent. There has been a portion of the vote spent but when we ask how much was spent and what proportion was spent for the site we are unable to get that information. This is the same as some other items. With respect to the last item that we dealt with we were told that a site was purchased but we could not find out what the expenditure was. We ought to be able to get all this information.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend has not followed very closely what I said; otherwise, he would not venture to make the statement that there was any lack of informaion in respect to the previous item. In the case of Emerson I said that there was an assumed expenditure to the 31st of March of $1,000. That was the cost of the site. I said there were further expenses for survey, legal expenses, travelling expenses, &c., of $500 which made $1,500 altogether and we are asking for a revote of $3,000. That made a total of $5,000 which has been voted in the previous year. In this case I did decline to give the hon. gentleman the information as to the cost but I want the hon. gentleman to understand that when he asks me and I do not know what should be the proper information I do not give it. I do not profess to tell what I do not know.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman ought to know because he should have the memorandum before him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In this case the site cost $3,000. The money has been actually paid. There is nothing to conceal. Any information that the hon. gentleman desires that I can give to him I will be only too happy to give. The first vote for this building was $2,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Was that spent ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would be spent on the site. Then there was another vote of $12,000. That would make $14,000. But we are only asking a revote of $10,000. We have already paid for the site and other expenses $3,437.56. But there will be $563 of last year's vote which we are not asking for it.

Mr. SPROULE. But you are asking for it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. SPROULE. You got last year $12,000, you have spent $2,000 and there is a revote of $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend see that out of the total votes we have had heretofore we have spent $3,437.56 ?

Mr. SPROULE. You have spent $4,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, $3,437.56.

Mr. SPROULE. You must have spent $4,000 if the wording of the item is correct.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, the remainder of the $4,000 has lapsed.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister said that this $2,000 was spent on a site. Last year we voted $12,000 and we are asked to-day to give a revote of $10,000 thereby indicating that $2,000 has been spent. That, added to the $2,000 previously voted makes $4,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not necessarily. The total expenditure up to the 31st December is $3,437.56 and now we are asking for a revote of $10,000. The result, as a matter of book-keeping, is that $563 lapses.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no indication of it lapsing because you are asking for a revote of $10,000. What you have spent you do not ask for a revote of. That is spent and your estimates show it. We had $2,000 voted the year before, the minister admits that is spent, there was $12,000 voted last year, there is $10,000 of a revote and therefore the other $2,000 must have been spent and he has not given an account of the way in which it was spent. Therefore the other $2,000 must have been spent and the minister has not given us an account of where it was spent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. These estimates are made up in November and this is an assumed expenditure of $2,000 up to March 31. The actual expenditure up to December 31 was $3,437, of which $3,000 was for the site and $437.56 for survey of the site, legal and travelling expenses, printing, &c. The revote which is to be applied for in the main estimates, 1908-9, is $10,000.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Who was the middleman ? It seems that the property increased in value $1,000 in a few months.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think it follows that there was any middleman. I have not heard of any.

Mr. J. D. REID. How are the places in Manitoba in which buildings are to be erected, selected ? When I was in the west I saw some fine towns that are not mentioned here, like Hamiota, Carman, Manitou and others, some larger than these.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You would condemn us very much if we attempted to put public buildings in all the tows at once.

Mr. J. D. REID. But some of these towns are larger than those mentioned here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In which one would you say I should recommend the erecting of a public building ?

Mr. J. D. REID. Take Carman, for instance, a splendid town.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have said I am going to consider that.

Mr. J. D. REID. The trouble is the minister has been considering all of these. Will he give us a promise that he will include any one of these buildings we have suggested in the supplementary estimates ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not in a position to say what will be contained in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It is only necessary to compare the cost of this lot in Neepawa, $3,000, with the cost of the lot in Dauphin, $6,000, to see that either the price of the Dauphin site is extravagant or that an inferior and unsuitable site has been chosen at Neepawa. I have the highest opinion of Neepawa, it is a smart, thriving town ; in fact I was sorry to part with that town when they took it away from old Marquette because it always gave me a good majority. When it was in Marquette no public building was granted to it. I have also a high opinion of Dauphin. They are much the same in population and I am sure that no one will say that Neepawa is surpassed by Dauphin. I also think that town property is as high in Neepawa as in Dauphin.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What do you think a really good site in Neepawa should cost ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I would not place value on it as I do not live there. But, the member has stated that for a site which I believe was where the townspeople desired it, $6,000 or $7,000 was asked.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How can you give such a close value for Neepawa and not for Dauphin ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I am drawing a comparison between the two towns. My own private opinion is that the Dauphin price was exorbitant.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would my hon. friend say that $6,000 which some gentleman wanted for the other site in Neepawa, which my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) declined to recommend, would be reasonable ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I do not know where the other lot is. The Board of Trade selected a certain site. That board is composed of business men and the site recommended by them was not selected, but another site was selected for which I claim the price paid was unfair because the member for Portage la Prairie says the ordinary value is from $3,000 to $6,000 for these lots.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The population of Neepawa in 1905 was 300 more than that of Dauphin, the figures being Dauphin 1,530, and Neepawa, 1,895.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The population of Dauphin now is represented to be 2,500 people.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. We must take the census. Neepawa is more of a railway centre than Dauphin, as it has both the Canadian Northern and Canadian Pacific Railway. It all goes to show the exorbitant price we have to pay for the building of a post office on Burrows Avenue.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The site for which $6,000 was asked was only 66 by 90 feet.

Mr. SPROULE. I see that $167 was paid for surveying the lot and making a plan. The minister gave us that information last year. Does not that seem to be a very extravagant figure for surveying and making a plan of a village lot ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It would strike me as high unless there was some exceptional reason for it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The surveyor may have had to come from Brandon, as there was no surveyor at Neepawa.

Mr. J. D. REID. How far is that ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. About a hundred miles.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me totally absurd when compared with transactions of that kind in this part of the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is more than the usual cost, which runs from $25 to $50. It was paid in 1905. I will take occasion to have it looked into, and I will bring information as to the particular reasons for it.

Mr. SPROULE. A surveyor in our country will go ten or fifteen miles and survey a hundred acres, running the lines and making a plan, for from $5 to $7.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In addition to surveying the lot, the surveyor had to take the levels of the ground in order that the plans might be prepared at Ottawa, and to test the ground to see what the foundation would be like.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I may say that the surveyor was no friend of ours. He is one of the prominent surveyors of Canada. I can assure our friends that there was no graft in connection with it.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What is the surveyor's name ?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Moses McFadden.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What is the estimated cost of the building exclusive of the site ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $41,000. The total estimated cost, including the site, is $44,437.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I see by 'Hansard' of last session that Mr. Bennett asked : 'What does the minister intend to spend on this Neepawa building ?' And Mr. Fisher, who was acting minister at the time, stated : 'I should think about $25,000, but the plans are not yet prepared.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract price was $28,000, and the additional expenditure is for the cost of the site, the heating, electric wiring, fittings, lock boxes, sidewalks, fencing, &c.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that an expenditure of $44,000 for a public building in a small village like that is extravagant. In the province of Ontario you will find dozens of small villages of that size and larger that have had no expenditure for that purpose and are not asking for it. It seems to me that these large expenditures in small villages, unless there is a strong probability of their growing to be large places, are not justifiable.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should explain that this building is to be for a post office, examining warehouse and militia armouries as well.

Mr. SPROULE. What militia have you got there? In these votes for armouries we should have the Minister of Militia present to give us information as to the size of the force and why these expenditures are needed. In the towns and villages of Ontario we have no such expenditures. We only have them in a few of the large cities. But if it be right to put up these public buildings in these small towns in the new provinces, it is right that we should do so in the old provinces. And if it be not good policy in the old provinces, it is not in the new. There should be no discrimination. And whenever we are called to vote any expenditure for militia purposes we should have the Minister of Militia present.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There are two rifle companies there with their equipment and a cadet corps as well. They require some place in which to store their arms.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the cadet corps?

Mr. CRAWFORD. They are boys from fourteen to sixteen years of age.

Mr. SPROULE. How many men?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Eighty men and thirty boys.

Selkirk public building Manitoba, $30,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote of $10,000 and a new vote of $20,000. It is a two-story brick building with stone basement, 44 feet broad and 48 feet deep. The site cost $2,000.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The sites are coming down. Here is a place a good deal larger than Dauphin, yet the Dauphin site cost $6,000.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Is the contract let?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it is let to Brown & Garson at $24,000.

Mr. STAPLES. Does that include light and heat?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. The heating and boiler are estimated at $2,500, electric wiring, $1,000; fittings, $5,000; sidewalks and fencing, $1,000, besides contingencies. Total, including the site, $40,111.60.

Mr. STAPLES. Last year we were led to believe by the acting minister (Mr. Fisher) that the expenditure would be $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The cost of the building.

Mr. STAPLES. No, the total expenditure. Yet we are now up to $40,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. We should have fuller explanation. Last year the acting minister (Mr. Fisher), in reply to the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), said:

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Tenders have just been received. The site cost $2,000. It is 58 x 150 feet at the south-east corner of Manitoba and Main streets. The building will cost about $20,000.

His reply would lead the House to believe that that was the total amount of expenditure. When we get an explanation we should have the whole thing in detail.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am giving it to the hon. gentleman. I have given the amount of the contract, the cost of heat and boilers, electric wiring, &c.

Mr. J. D. REID. When we come to an item such as this and the minister gives an estimate of the cost, we take it for granted that that will be the whole cost.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I draw a distinction between a contract for the erection of a building and the total cost, including fittings, &c.

Mr. J. D. REID. We have been deceived in every case. Up to the present every year the answer has been practically the same. Here is an instance where, instead of the estimates given by the minister, the property is to cost $50,000 to $100,000 more. Is it not a fact that when the total work is completed it will cost a great deal more than the estimate?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is aware that when we ask for an amount in the estimates, we do not ask for the whole cost in one year, but ask what is intended to be spent during the current year.

Mr. J. D. REID. When it is stated that a building will cost so much, does that mean only the portion of the work to be done during that year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I take it that that would mean the estimate given by the chief architect to the minister of the cost of the building. But, if nothing else is stated, that would not be supposed to include the cost of the site, heating, wiring and so on.

Mr. STAPLES. Does the minister think it a good policy to begin a building such as this and only finish it in three years or so? Especially, in a little town like Selkirk? Ordinarily, a building begun in such a place is completed in three months.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are asking for enough money to finish the building.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The building was started last November—up to that time, not a stroke of work had been done. The foundation was put in and perhaps two or three feet above that. The work is now going on, and it is expected to be finished in July.

Mr. PUGSLEY.. The contract was let in October.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Yes, and I would point out to the hon. member for Grenville

(Mr. J. D. Reid) that two years ago the estimate given by Mr. Hyman was $25,000. The contract was let for $24,000. The owner of the lot asked $3,000 for it. It was a corner lot. At the other end of the same block, the Traders Bank has put up a pressed brick building to cost $30,000. The price asked for the lot was considered too high. Mr. Greenfield, who is in charge of the public works office in Manitoba was sent to Selkirk and inquired as to the value of property there. The owner afterwards offered to take $2,500 but ultimately accepted $2,000, which price was considered satisfactory and the lot was bought. So, there is nothing wrong with the site. There are to be rooms in this building for the Indian office, the inspector of fisheries for Manitoba and Keewatin, the customs office, the forest ranger for the county of Selkirk, and the examiners of masters and mates. Selkirk is the point where these things centre. There will probably be $200,000 or $250,000 worth of shipping there. The population in 1906 was 2,700. The postal revenue for nine months was $2,385, which would be about $3,200 for the year, in Stonewall also, we have a postal revenue nearly as large as that of Selkirk.

Mr. STAPLES. It is evident from what the hon. gentleman (Mr. S. J. Jackson) has stated that the Minister of Public Works of two years ago deceived us as to the cost of this building.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Why, the contract was let for $1,000 less than he estimated.

Mr. STAPLES. But we understand that this was to be the total cost, including the purchase of site and equipment of the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman, perhaps did not inquire particularly as to these other things.

Mr. STAPLES. It is not so very long since I read a speech of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. S. J. Jackson) in which he took credit for inducing the government to construct this building. And he did not stop at that, but went on to claim credit for every mile of railway constructed in his constituency. I began to wonder if he thought himself Sir Thomas Shaughnessy. He took credit for the snagboat that runs up and down the river. You would think he had more influence with this government —evidently he has considerable—than any other member.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I said that four years ago in one municipality there was not a single mile of railway, and that last November, nearly 100 miles of the Grand Trunk Pacific had been graded and would soon be ironed, and also that there were 40 miles of a new line of railway forced upon the Canadian Pacific Railway because the Grand Trunk was the shorter line. There was also the Canadian Northern, making a total of 150 miles of road that was not there when I was elected four years before. I certainly took credit for supporting the government that brought about these improvements.

Mr. STAPLES. I suppose the inference the hon. gentleman's hearers would draw was that, if he had not been elected, the Grand Trunk Pacific, when it came to the line of his constituency, would skip it, and not construct a line there at all.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The people appreciate the expenditure that the government have made in that section of the country in the last four years.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the hon. member for Selkirk had better move round all over the country, as he seems to take railways with him wherever he goes. In the matter of heating for these public buildings, will public tenders be asked ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister assures us that the tenders will be asked for the heating in every case ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should say in every case—yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will these be public tenders ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tenders will be asked from different people in the business.

Mr. BENNETT. That is, it will not be public competition, but restricted to party friends ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) can see that the advertising would be out of all proportion to the cost. I can assure the hon. gentleman and the committee that we will take care to get competitive prices.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say a word with reference to the controversy that has arisen here. As I understand the purpose of asking these questions, and the reason why we expect proper answers to be given, as near as they can be given by the Minister of Public Works, is this : When you propose an item for an expenditure in a particular place the first question we ask is : What is the country to be committed to, what is it going to cost ? We mean by that, What is the cost of the whole undertakings, what will it stand the country ? The minister gives an estimate of what he is going to ask parliament to vote, that is intended to inform the House what the country is being committed to in toto, not the amount of the contract, not the cost of the land, not the price of the site only. We must take that into consideration, but that is not all. For instance, the minister might ask for an expenditure of $100,000. Now if he told us we were committing the country to the expenditure of $200,000, does he think that parliament would give it? Not at all. Therefore we naturally ask every time: What is going to be the cost of this in toto? When we look at the discussions last year, we find this year that the expenditures have crept up in almost every case beyond what we were told last year they would be, they do not accord with the facts that are given us this year as to the actual expenditure. In every case the expenditure has largely exceeded what we were told. Are we not justified then in saying that the House was misled, absolutely misled? Because we gave the vote last year on the understanding that the country was only committing itself to the expenditure of so much money, while we find this year that the expenditure has increased by thousands of dollars over what we were told it would be. Of course we understand that the minister only gives us an estimate and there will be some difference, but we ought to have a pretty close estimate, otherwise we would not be justified in commencing an expenditure of $25,000 if it afterwards turned out to reach $50,000 or $75,000. That is why we are particular to get this information at the commencement of the undertaking.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will see how that occurred. Last year the question was asked as to what the building would cost, and the minister said: Tenders are being received. Now when tenders are received for a building the architect always estimates what the building will cost, and when tenders come in they can be compared with the estimates. No doubt that is what the minister meant at that time.

Mr. SPROULE. No, I cannot admit that. In every instance we ask when the first estimate is placed before the House: What is this going to cost? That means what is the whole undertaking going to cost. We do not mean what the land is going to cost, what the cost will be according to the plans, or the contracts, but we want to know what will be the entire cost.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I certainly understood the hon member for Grenville to say that when the minister was asked as to the cost of this building he replied that tenders had been received, and the cost was estimated to be so and so. Now that would apply to the cost of the building for which the tenders were received.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

Mr. SPROULE.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES.

House in committee on Bill (No. 151) respecting the Grand Trunk Branch Lines Company.—Mr. Crawford.

Mr. SPROULE. I was requested by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) to say that it would be impossible for him to be here to-day and as there is an amendment which he intends to propose he requested me to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) to be good enough to allow the Bill to stand.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I have no objection, but, of course, it will not be said that the government is retarding the public business. I have been ready for six weeks to go on with this Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. The last couple of times the government asked it to stand. We did not ask it to stand. The hon. member for South Simcoe was here upon the last occasion and he was ready to move his amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM. Certainly, I know that the government asked that the Bill be allowed to stand a couple of times. But I want to be in the position of having it understood that I am not asking that it shall be allowed to stand to-night.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. G. H. McIntyre). Stands.

BELLEVILLE-PRINCE EDWARD BRIDGE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 20) respecting the Belleville-Prince Edward Bridge Company.—Mr. Porter.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that the hon. member who is in charge of this Bill (Mr. Porter) is not here. Still, if you consent to put a Bill through in the absence of the promoter in one case you ought to do it in all cases. He should be here to attend to the Bill.

Mr. ALCORN. Has the Bill been printed?

The CHAIRMAN. Apparently it has.

Mr. GRAHAM. There was some question with regard to this Bill as to the rates to be charged. We discussed it one evening at some length. The hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) was interested in it and we had quite a discussion as to the rates payable to and fro. That night we got to a certain point when it was suggested that we leave it over until the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Porter) was here.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, and he is not here to-night.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have no position to take on it, but I want it to be put in proper shape; that is all.

Mr. ALCORN. I have no position to take either. I would be willing that the bridge should be free. In the Private Bills Committee we agreed on a tariff. I have not the Bill as reprinted before me to know if it is correctly reprinted or not. The suggestion that was made when the Bill was up before was that the tariff should be submitted to the Lieutenant Governor in Council instead of the Governor in Council, and the hon. member for West Hastings expressed himself to me as being perfectly satisfied with that change. It was said that it was a provincial measure and should be dealt with by the provincial legislature, and it was suggested that the tariff should be made subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario. The hon. member for West Hastings said that he was perfectly willing that should be done. So am I.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not going to make any objection to it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I took the exception to this legislation. It seems to me that we are certainly invading the jurisdiction of the local legislature. This was done a few years ago and this is merely an amendment. I thought then and I still think that this parliament should not come down to the discussion of the tariff or tolls over a highway bridge that is wholly and unquestionably within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature. I made the suggestion that instead of section 8 there should be substituted a section placing upon the company the onus of applying to the provincial government to have the tariff approved of. I do not think that this section should ever appear on the statute-book of the parliament of Canada. The only way to remedy the matter is to have a general clause to enable the company to have such a tariff as may be approved by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of the province of Ontario. I think that in justice to this parliament that amendment should be made and that we should pay some attention to the requirements of the British North America Act.

Mr. J. D. REID. The amendment suggested by my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) that the words 'Lieutenant-Governor' be inserted in the Bill, I suppose, would overcome the objection that has been mentioned by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson). As I understand this amendment, as proposed by the hon. member for Prince Edward, it is that the tolls should be subject to the order of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, which practically means that it gives absolute control to the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario instead of the Governor General in Council, as is now in the Bill; so that if the word 'Lieutenant' is inserted in the Bill it meets the objection that the hon. member for Westmoreland has stated, does it not?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, for the reason that this parliament, by this legislation, undertakes to fix the tolls. It is true that there is a clause which says that the Governor General has to approve of the tolls which are charged. If you were to say the 'Lieutenant Governor in Council,' that might in a measure remedy or obviate the difficulty, but it seems to me that we should not even attempt to fix the tolls, but that we should have a general clause stating:

Providing, however, that the rates and tolls collected and charged shall be subject from time to time to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province of Ontario.

Mr. J. D. REID. If these rates were established as they are in the Bill, but subject to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, would that not meet the case?

Mr. EMMERSON. This puts it into the hands of the company as to whether they shall apply or not, and they may never apply.

Mr. J. D. REID. But cannot the people apply to the Lieutenant Governor in Council?

Mr. EMMERSON. No, I submit not; that is the point which I have in view.

Mr. J. D. REID. By adding the word 'Lieutenant' before Governor in Council we would bring this within the jurisdiction of the local government, which would meet the wishes of the hon. member and carry out what I am trying to state the Bill should be.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not wish to oppose the Bill, but I am objecting to this on principle. It seems to me the parliament of Canada should not undertake to fix rates and tolls on a provincial highway, and it should never be set out in the statutes of Canada that there shall be charged so much for a baby carriage, so much for a horse and carriage, so much for an adult, &c. I would expunge every word of this tariff and substitute a general clause empowering this bridge company to collect such tolls as from time to time may be approved of by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province of Ontario. My hon. friend's suggestion to insert the word 'Lieutenant' would not remedy it, because you were here fixing the tolls, and if they are not satisfactory to the people and are satisfactory to the company there is no redress for the people unless, indeed, this company choose to apply from time to time to the provincial government.

Mr. SPROULE. But you may do as you have done in several cases, make the tolls subject to be revised from time to time by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. That has been done with several Bills. Wherever we have incorporated companies to build bridges across streams for highway as well as railway purposes we have set out the tolls.

Mr. EMMERSON. That came within our jurisdiction.

Mr. SPROULE. So does this.

Mr. EMMERSON. I submit not.

Mr. SPROULE. It does because we incorporate this company. Why? Because it is passing over a stream of water that is navigable and there is a draw in the bridge to allow boats to pass.

Mr. EMMERSON. That is not within our jurisdiction although we may usurp those powers. A bridge across a navigable stream does not give jurisdiction to this parliament; it is within the jurisdiction of the provincial parliament. There are some four or five large bridges over the St. John river and every one that has been built by companies has been built by companies incorporated by the provincial legislature of New Brunswick. The companies obtained the privilege from the Public Works Department of Canada to construct their bridges over a navigable stream.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that in the cases of the bridges at Prince Albert and Edmonton we set out the tolls. We did the same with the Victoria bridge and again when the Victoria bridge was enlarged.

Mr. EMMERSON. That was a railway bridge at Edmonton.

Mr. SPROULE. There is provision for a passenger bridge as well. I have always understood, and I think I am correct, that this federal parliament is the only authority that controls the crossing of navigable waters. I think we provided for the tolls over the St. Maurice river when we gave 15 per cent of the cost of all bridges costing over $25,000. We have exercised this right, whether correctly or incorrectly, for many years.

Mr. ALCORN. This is not a bridge over a river, but a bridge over an arm of Lake Ontario, a mile wide. The bridge itself is three-quarters of a mile or more in length. There is a swing and vessels of the largest size pass through there. The Bill does not assume to fix arbitrarily a tariff, it simply fixes a tariff which the company is not to exceed, and I am instructed that this Bill was on two occasions brought before the provincial authorities who declined to have anything to do with it on the express ground that this parliament alone could deal with it as navigation was involved, and with all due deference to the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) I think he will find that where navigation is involved, as in this case, over a body of water of this size, that this parliament is the only body with jurisdiction.

Mr. EMMERSON. I contend that this legislation is an interference with civil rights which is subject to the jurisdiction of the provincial parliament. I also contend that a company of this character asking these privileges or the original privileges should be incorporated by the provincial parliament, and if the bridge goes over a navigable river or even over an arm of the sea, the company has the right to build the bridge thereupon, subject to the approval of the Department of Public Works for Canada. There is a provision in the Public Works Act of this Dominion whereby in similar cases and with a similar condition companies can make their applications, and it is for the Public Works Department to determine whether or not the right shall be granted. The mere fact that it has been done in the past does not give us jurisdiction. We have the right where it is a public work for the general benefit of Canada; I am not going to discuss that point, but if this is proper legislation for the parliament of Canada, it necessarily follows that we have the right to fix the tolls, and the duty is upon us to do so and it should not be left to the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province of Ontario. But my contention is that we have not that right, and that this is a subject matter for the control of the provincial authorities.

Mr. SPROULE. I have given the reasons why the conclusion was reached that we had the right, and that this was the only parliament that had the right. Might I remind my hon. friend, who is a lawyer, of the long litigation over the Streams Bill of Ontario? What was the decision of the Privy Council in that case? It was that navigable streams were under federal control, and streams that were not navigable were under provincial control.

Mr. EMMERSON. That does not in any way affect my argument.

Mr. FIELDING. On the question of navigation I think there is no doubt that my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) is absolutely right. Any interference with the right of navigation would be subject to Dominion authority, and it would be necessary to get permission for that from the Department of Public Works,

It may not be the construction of a bridge; it may be the construction of a wharf or a pier. But that does not affect the legislative right of chartering a company for a work that is purely provincial in its character. The trouble here is that this work, though properly provincial in its character, has already been dealt with as a Dominion work. It is rather an anomaly that we should first treat it as a Dominion work, and then proceed to place it under the authority of the Lieutenant Governor in Council of a province. As my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works properly suggested, it might be that the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province of Ontario would not be willing to assume it.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the proper authority to deal with it, if we assume the right at all, is the Railway Commission.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that it is not a railway bridge.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not a railway bridge, but a general passenger bridge.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am disposed o agree entirely with my hon. friend from Westmoreland and the Minister of Finance. In the first instance this company should have been incorporated by the provincial legislature, as under the terms of the British North America Act the exclusive right of chartering companies with provincial rights is vested in the provincial legislature. What should have been done, I think, would have been for the provincial legislature to have incorporated the company, with power o erect this bridge, subject to the approval of the Minister of Public Works being first obtained. That is the course that has been pursued in the New Brunswick legislature, and there has never been any difficulty with regard to it; and I know that that was the view of the late Mr. Justice Burbidge when Deputy Minister of Justice. But the difficulty which confronts us in this case is that this parliament has already, whether rightly or wrongly, incorporated the company, that tha company has erected a bridge, that the public are using the bridge, and that it is desirable that by some authority these tolls should be regulated. I am inclined to agree that, if we are going to deal with the company at all, the better way would be to provide that the tolls shall not exceed the amounts named in the Bill, and then leave the fixing of the tolls within that limit to the Governor in Council. I doubt very much whether we ought to assume the right to impose on the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario the obligation to fix these tolls. I do not think the legislature of Ontario would properly impose that duty upon the Governor in Council, and, if so, what right would we have, by reason of our legislaive Act, to assume that we have jurisdiction to impose an obligation on the Lieutenant Governor of the province in respect to it?

Mr. ALCORN. I agree with the hon. gentleman, and I would direct his attention to the fact that subsection 4 of section 8 already makes the tolls subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

Mr. GRAHAM. It strikes me that whatever error was made, was made in the introduction of this legislation into this House. This bridge connecting the county of Prince Edward with the city of Belleville and the county surrounding it is a purely local affair. It does seem quite a small matter for the Governor in Council of the Dominion of Canada to be spending their time fixing the tolls to be charged on bridges of a purely local character. If, however, we are to retain the position that this is a matter for Dominion legislation, I am not in favour of delegating our powers to the Lieutenant Governor in Council of Ontario or to anybody else. If it is our legislation, on our statute-book, it is ours to enforce and regulate. Then, as my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works has said, though we may have the power to delegate any power that we possess to some other party, the other party may not wish to exercise that power.

Mr. SPROULE. Cannot we as a federal power impose duties on any citizen of the country?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is a question if we can impose upon any one duties which are not his.

Mr. EMMERSON. The Lieutenant Governor of Ontario is a representative of His Majesty as well.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not aware that we could impose the duty upon the Lieutenant Governor in Council of regulating the bridge tolls, particularly when it is our bridge. There is a point involved in section 2 on which, not being a legal man, I would like to ask an opinion. Here is a new enactment put into this Bill, providing for the regulation of a public highway in a municipality. The Bill is going further than to ask us to deal with our old Act. It has a clause in it providing for an agreement between the city of Belleville and this company in regard to something which will become a public highway. I think we are going too far in asking the parliament of Canada to regulate public highways.

Mr. SPROULE. It strikes me that as the hon. member who has charge of this Bill is absent, we had better iet it stand until he is here.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have stated that this parliament has not jurisdiction, and I want to give the special reason. It will be admitted that lands under these waters, or under any navigable stream, belong to the province, and this parliament usurps authority to control or deal with these lands, when it authorizes individuals in the name of a company to place piers or to do anything upon these lands. This parliament has no right to authorize any one to do that, and the provincial legislature of New Brunswick has acted properly in claiming jurisdiction for itself by incorporating such companies, giving them the right to deal with the land under the water and authorizing them to seek from the Public Works Department of the Dominion permission to do that in so far as it might in any way interfere with navigation. The point taken by the Minister of Railways in connection with section 2 is absolutely unanswerable and for the same reason. This Bill is an interference with the property and jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. Although this parliament has seemingly committed the error in the past, I do not think it should extend or perpetuate that error by interfering in any way with the tolls that may be charged because that would be an interference with civil rights.

Mr. SPROULE. In part the hon. gentleman is right and in part wrong. He is wrong in saying that as the land belongs absolutely to the province, we have not the right to give the authority asked. Go to Rainy river, that may be dividing this province from a foreign county, but we have given a charter to a company to cross there. The land there belongs to the province, but the federal parliament is the only one that can give authority to build across there, and we have given the right to build the abutments of the bridge on the land on the Ontario side. We do the same when it is a case of passing from one province to another. It is only the federal parliament that has the authority to give that right.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is under the express terms of the British North America Act.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman's contention is that because the land in the bed of a stream belongs to a province, that deprives us of the right to give authority to build a bridge there, I have given instances where we have given that authority.

Mr. FIELDING. There is another feature of interest in this. My hon. frien from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) speaks of this as being distinctly a provincial work. It strikes me, on the surface that it is, but sometimes we endeavour, whether wisely or not, to withdraw a work from the exclusive jurisdiction of the province by declaring it to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. It does not appear that in this instance that was ever done. It does not appear that in the original charter of this company the work was declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, and the question might arise whether it really has become a work which comes under our Dominion authority at all. I think we would do well, under the circumstances, to accept the suggestion of my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the Bill be allowed to stand, in the absence of the hon. gentleman who has it in charge.

Progress reported.

THE SASKATCHEWAN POWER COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 153) to incorporate the Saskatchewan Power Company.—Mr. McCraney.

Mr. McCRANEY. When this Bill was before the committee on a former occasion, the question was raised whether it was not a subject more particularly for provincial legislation. I pointed out that under section 21 of the Saskatchewan Act, the Crown lands of that province are in the Dominion as representing the Crown. Consequently the river bed, the waters of rivers, the shores are vested in the Dominion, and complete jurisdiction over them is in the Dominion parliament and not in the provincial legislature. Since that time I have been handed a letter, written by the Deputy Attorney General of the province of Saskatchewan to Messrs. Smith & Johnston, of this city, who are representing the promoters:

Regina, April 28, 1908.

Sirs,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22nd instant in reference to the Saskatchewan Power Company Bill and have also heard from Messrs. Chrysler, Bethune & Larmonth in connection with the matter. Upon consideration of the matter and of the Bill as amended, this province is, I understand, offering no further opposition to the Bill.

Your obedient servant,
FRANK FORD,
Deputy Attorney General.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have serious objection to this Bill because it looks to me as though it were simply got up by a lot of promoters for speculation. There is no proviso that they must commence work immediately. It simply states that if the powers granted shall expire by non-user during four consecutive years, or if the company does not come into actual operation within three years from the passing of the Act, the charter will lapse. Should we pass this Bill, the town of Saskatoon will be tied up for at least three years from any other possible chance of having any other water-power.

Mr. McCRANEY. This Bill gives no exclusive right of that sort, and there is no reason at all why any other company could not come here and get similar powers. The vested rights only come in when the plans are approved by the Governor in Council.

Mr. J. D. REID. How could you get any other power on the river if a dam is put across it? That will prevent any further power being obtained above, and a dam cannot be placed below because that would spoil the other. I was in Saskatoon last fall and I saw there a place where I believed power should be developed. Saskatoon is growing very quickly, and to be tied up for three or four years, as it will be if this Bill passes, would be very serious, not only for the town itself, but for other municipalities adjoining, interested in getting water-power. The people out there want this water-power developed. they want all the advantage they can get from it, and we ought to see that the promoters of the Bill undertake to proceed with the work at once. But if we pass the Bill as it is, we shall give these people at least three and probably four years—because all they would have to do would be a few hundred dollars worth of work to entitle them to claim they had begun operations—of absolute control. If there were anything in this Bill which would compel the company to go on with the work at once and spend so many hundred thousand dollars per annum, I would not hesitate to agree to its going through. But the capital is $1,000,000, and for the next four years not even $100 have to be expended. In my opinion this is a piece of legislation that ought not to go through this House, because it would give a body of men an opportunity of peddling the charter around the world and making a lot of money out of it, whereas it only cost them the charges of putting it through this House, while at the same time they are tieing up the water-power for years. Saskatoon will undoubtedly grow and in the next few years it will want this water-power. I protest against this Bill going through in its present shape, and unless a clause is added by which the expenditure shall be proceeded with at once, I would be justified in opposing the Bill.

Mr. McCRANEY. I do not know whether my hon. friend was in the House the other evening when I read a letter received by me from the city clerk of Saskatoon. The original Bill as introduced in the Senate was forwarded by me to the mayor for consideration of the council, because I knew that this matter had been discussed by them, and there had been some agitation in favour of the municipally developing power. Here is a letter which I have received respecting the Bill as it is now before the House :

I am in receipt of your letter, also your telegram of April 15, and in reply would say that I have been instructed by the city council to write you thanking you for the interest you have taken on the city's behalf in regard to the passing of the Saskatchewan Power Company's Bill. The council are of the opinion that it would not necessitate the sending of a delegate to Ottawa on Wednesday, the 29th instant, as clause 3 seems to be in keeping with the petition that we forwarded to you some time ago.

When we come to clause 3 the hon. gentleman will see that there has been an attempt to protect the interests of the city by providing that they shall have proper notice of the plans and an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have no doubt that these gentlemen have gone to the city council and told them that they intended to commence the work at once. I have no doubt that the people want this work to go on immediately. But the hon. gentleman knows that the damming of the river is not a very expensive matter, I suppose $100,000 will construct all the dam that is required for this water-power. If these men are sincere they should not hesitate to go to work and build that dam at once. The river is narrow where they intend doing it, and the banks are so high that the construction of a dam would require but a small expenditure, and they should not hesitate to go to work at once. The hon. gentleman knows very well that immediately this Bill is passed one of these gentlemen will take that charter in his pocket and start for England or some other place and sell it and get a rake-off, and that is all they intend to do with this charter. We should put a clause in this Bill that they shall commence work at once, this summer, and expend $100,000 developing it, otherwise this charter is null and void.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice a suspicious circumstance in the fact that among these names is that of the celebrated James R. Stratton who is a past master in this kind of device. They are trying to get hold of this thing as a speculation, and then peddle it around the country and make money out of it. I think the city council of Saskatoon are not paying proper attention to their own interest, otherwise they would not desire that any company should get possession of the only available water-power that is within reasonable distance of the city.

Mr. GRAHAM. I wish to correct my hon. friend. The gentleman named here is not the Hon. J. R. Stratton, he is another man altogether.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood he was out there for some time last summer speculating ; and knowing his operations in Ontario, I naturally concluded that he was engaged in the same business out there.

Mr. BENNETT. Perhaps the Minister of Public Works knows if this gentleman is a well known capitalist from New Brunswick.

Mr. DANIEL. This James Stratton I think is a lawyer, and was formerly a resident of New Brunswick.

Mr. J. D. REID. This Mr. Stratton I understand is the gentleman who used to conduct the elections for the Minister of Public Works in New Brunswick.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think Mr. James Stratton has always been a good Conservative.

Mr. J. D. REID. In the last local election in New Brunswick this Mr. Stratton came all the way from Saskatoon down to Ottawa, only a week or two before the elections, I understand, at the instance of the Minister of Public Works; and I understood that he was down in New Brunswick carrying on the campaign.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You must not believe all you hear.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister cannot deny it.

Mr. MICHAUD. Mr. Stratton was in England at the time of the elections in New Brunswick.

Mr. FIELDING. I would call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the wording of subsection 2 of section 3, which appears to contemplate that the Governor in Council shall, at a particular time and at a particular place, put aside all other things and take up the hearing of this particular matter. It seems to me the procedure contemplated by clause 3 is somewhat unusual. It is not usual but very unusual, for the Governor in Council to grant hearings to any body. There are some exceptional circumstances under which hearings are granted, but all hearings take place before a minister or a committee of ministers. It seems to me that the proper procedure in this case would be that the application for hearing should be to the Minister of Public Works, then he should report to the council, and the Governor in Council could approve. I would like to make that suggestion to my hon. friend, because I think that is the proper procedure in any matter of this kind. It would seem that for parties to fix the date and say that they would appear here, and that the Governor in Council must hear this particular case, is a very unusual proceeding.

Mr. McCRANEY. I would be willing to adopt any reasonable suggestion of that sort.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would ask the hon. member (Mr. McCraney) who has charge of this Bill if he would accept an amendment compelling these people to go on with the work during the present year and to expend a certain amount? or does he intend to insist that the clause should be left as it is so that, practically, the charter may be carried about for sale and probably the work tied up for the next four years?

Mr. McCRANEY. The clause which my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid) is discussing is the last clause in the Bill. I have not considered, nor have I discussed with the promoters, the question which he has raised. Even if we go on with the consideration of the Bill, I do not suppose we shall reach that clause. When we do reach that clause, I shall probably be able to give information on that subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the Bill in its present form been submitted to the civic authorities of Saskatoon?

Mr. McCRANEY. Yes. I will send the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) a letter which I received from the city council approving of the Bill in its present form.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did the promoters assure the council of Saskatoon that they would proceed with the work during the present year?

Mr. McCRANEY. I cannot inform my hon. friend as to what assurances were given by the promoters to the city of Saskatoon. But the city authorities had before them the Bill with the clause as it is now before the committee.

Mr. J. D. REID. I think it would be well for the hon. member (Mr. McCraney), in justice to the city of Saskatoon which he has the honour to represent, that he should write to the city authorities at once and bring their attention to this clause, so that we may know that they have been advised of the seriousness of the matter. I, for one, would like to be thoroughly assured that the inhabitants of Saskatoon realize what this may involve. I do not wish to oppose the passage of the Bill with the present incorporators, but, on behalf of the people of Saskatoon and of the towns that will be started in that locality, I think there ought to be some assurance that the work will be commenced within a reasonable time. Otherwise, this Bill means the tying up of that whole country in respect of one of its most important public services. I do not know the men who are concerned in this company, except Mr. Stratton. I do not say anything against him personally. I would be just as glad to see Mr. Stratton go through with it as any other man provided we are assured the work will go ahead. But, in view of the seriousness of the matter I hope the hon. member (Mr. McCraney) will to-morrow send a copy of 'Hansard' to the city authorities of Saskatoon that they may see the little discussion we have had. They can then say whether they are quite satisfied to let the Bill go through.

Mr. SPROULE. And what becomes of the argument of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) and the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) with regard to the proper authority to give these privileges? This seems to be a local affair; it does not go outside the province. It may cross a navigable stream——

Mr. J. D. REID. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, if it does not, what argument can be used in this case that will not apply with greater force to the Bill if just dealt with?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have been greatly bothered about this Bill. When it was before the committee on a previous occasion ,I raised this point of the jurisdiction of parliament to deal with the matter. My hon. friend (Mr. McCraney) who was promoting the Bill called my attention to the fact that by the terms of the Irrigation Act, all the waters of every river in the Northwest, and the bed and shores of every stream are vested in the Crown in right of the Dominion. He raised the question whether the provincial legislature could give authority to erect a dam upon property belonging to the Dominion of Canada. I suggested that he should confer with the Minister of Justice, who was the proper authority to advise on the subject. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McCraney) has assured me that it is the opinion of the Minister of Justice that the Bill could properly be passed by this parliament. That being so, even though I had some doubt at first, I do not see that I should press my views, more particularly as the government of the province of Saskatoon has written, through its Deputy Attorney General, stating that the advisers of the province see no objection to the passing of the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. With reference to that, I remember that there was a dispute about the fisheries in the province of Quebec on the Matane river, if I remember right, it was decided that the foreshores belong to the people.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But the Irrigation Act expressly reserves these rights.

Mr. SPROULE. But, once the land is sold, the Act cannot reserve it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, parliament can do anything.

Mr. FIELDING. I think there is always danger of error in amending a Bill like this at the table in a hurried way. I have an amendment here which I will not move, as the discussion on the Bill is not likely to be finished to-night, but I will hand it in and I would suggest to my hon. friend (Mr McCraney) that he should look it over and consult the law clerk of the House about it. I propose that, instead of saying that the time and place for hearing shall be fixed by the Governor in Council, the following shall be embodied in the Bill, following the words 'time and place' in subsection 2 of section 3:—

At which application will be made to the Minister of Public Works for his approval of such plans; and the Minister of Public Works, after hearing such application, at such time or such other time as may be agreed upon by him, shall report to the Governor in Council, whether in his opinion such plans should be approved, and the Governor in Council may approve of such plans, &c.

SUPPLY.

The hour for private Bills having expired, House resumed in Committee of Supply.

St. Boniface public building, $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site for this building cost $4,500, and it is estimated that the total cost of the building, including site, heating, electric wiring, fixtures, furniture, &c., will be $39,920.82, and this amount which we are now asking is expected to complete the work, including fitting and furniture.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Is this lot in the centre of the town?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not acquainted with the locality. It is on the corner of Provencher avenue and Aulneault street.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is the size of the lot?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 66 feet on Provencher avenue and 120 feet on Aulneault street.

Mr. J. D. REID. What is the cost of the fittings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Heating and boilers, $2,500; electric wiring and fixtures, $1,000; fittings and furniture, $5,000; sidewalks and fencing, $1,500.

Mr. J. D. REID. The building is erected now?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The building is pretty well along. There was expended to December 31 last, $19,920. That includes the site.

Mr. J. D. REID. When will it be completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is expected to be completed on September 4 next.

Winnipeg—new examining warehouse, $30,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote and it is asked to make provision for the erection of a new examining warehouse in the city of Winnipeg. This is to be a very large building four storeys in height, brick and steel, with stone facings, concrete and stone foundations. It is to be fire-proof throughout. In erecting these large buildings for the purposes of the customs examining warehouses, particularly, it has been thought that they should be as near fire-proof as possible.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the full cost expected to be ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total probable cost, inclusive of the site and heating, electric wiring, fixtures, &c., is estimated at $417,744.59. The amount of the contract is $276,000. The site cost $88,125. The remainder covers the cost of heating, boilers, electric wiring, fixtures, fittings, furniture and sidewalks.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who has the contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. J. McDiarmid & Co., Limited, Winnipeg.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who drew the plans ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They were drawn in the department.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is strange you have men here capable of drawing plans for a building like this in Winnipeg, while for a shed in Quebec there are no men capable of drawing the plans.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentlemen forgets what kind of a shed that is.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that this vote has been up once or twice before. I was in the examining warehouse at Winnipeg last summer, and this new building is certainly not coming any too soon because it is much needed. I think it is a disgrace to the government and the country, and it does not allow the people who have the work to do an opportunity for properly doing it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sure my hon. friend will commend us most highly for endeavouring to wipe out that disgrace or stigma as quickly as possible.

Mr. SPROULE. I will, if proper foresight and economy are used in the expenditure of the money. I do not know about the cost of the site. Land, of course, is very high there. I presume that you purpose building alongside of the present building ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have endeavoured to have the building erected at the lowest possibly cost consistently with securing a first-class building for the purpose. We asked for tenders in the usual way. There were three tenders received ranging from $276,000 to $319,000, and we accepted the lowest tender.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will there be any extras ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not that I am aware of. I think the steel alone will cost about $100,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are there any schedule prices ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, a lump sum contract.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is the site ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Corner of Rorie street and McDermott avenue.

Mr. J. D. REID. From whom was the site purchased ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was purchased from Wm. Mackenzie, D. D. Mann and Roderick J. Mackenzie.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was there a commission paid to any one for purchasing it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. SPROULE. It was never purchased without a commission.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a hard thing to say.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, it is only in line with what we have found when we have got the information out.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have been here for a good many months and I have never heard the suggestion made that there has been any secret commission paid to any person who has bought land as a site for a public building.

Mr. SPROULE. In nearly every case we have had this session, the minister has given us the amount of the commission ; I cannot remember the instances.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Paid to people for buying property for the department ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, real estate agents. Do you buy land on the Intercolonial Railway for nothing ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend does not suggest——

Mr. SPROULE. That you are as bad as they are with reference to the purchase of property on the Intercolonial Railway. You have a reputation that is a hundred per cent worse.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister has a nice way of putting it when he says there is no commission paid. Take the Transcontinental Railway. I will not refer to that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would ask my hon. friend who has taken his seat (Mr. Sproule) to point out a single instance in which the Department of Public Works has been shown to have paid a commission upon the purchase of land.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Were not commissions paid for the purchase of this property on Mackenzie avenue ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A man was appointed specially to act for the government. I do not understand that the employment of a person to buy land, and the open payment of a commission, as was done then, is what was referred to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what my hon. friend refers to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not what he says.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. We have the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) explaining it, but that is only paying commission in another form. Another way is that a friend of the government gets a hint, he purchases the property and makes a great big profit on it. The minister would say that there was no commission paid in that case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tell me of a single case in my department in which such a thing has been proved.

Mr. J. D. REID. We will probably before the end of the session, if we can reach the items in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You have the fullest opportunity of examining the Public Works accounts.

Mr. J. D. REID. Yes, we have examined some and the minister knows it has been rascally.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know anything of the kind.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister knows it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have made inquiry and I have never found anything that would justify the statement of the hon. gentleman. There may be some cases which would be open to some criticism, but there is nothing at all that I have seen that would justify the severe statement the hon. gentleman makes. It is all very well to take hearsay evidence, insinuations and suggestions, but in order to get the facts you must have proof and have some one who can speak from knowledge. As far as I can observe there has been no proof on which you can place reliance in regard to anything wrong in respect to the purchase of land for public buildings.

Mr. SPROULE. Last year information was given to the House that we paid $40,000 commission for buying lots of land down there for public buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Surely my hon. friend must see he is wrong. Does he say that for the purchase of properties on Sussex street commissions of $40,000 were paid ?

Mr. SPROULE. I do say so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. To whom ?

Mr. SPROULE. I think one White. He paid $3,000 for elections in London and he said he was friendly to the government and therefore it was justifiable for him to give it. I am sure I am within the mark when I say he got $40,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information from my deputy is that Mr. White received $1,500. That is as near the mark as my hon. friend usually is.

Mr. SPROULE. I will remind my hon. friend ; my memory is not so bad as that and I went over the transaction with great care.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You say it was paid to White ?

Mr. SPROULE. I said my impression was the name was White.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You said positively——

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say positively, I said my impression was. I do not want the minister to pin me down to what I did not say. When I make a statement I stand by it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You say now it was $40,000 ?

Mr. SPROULE. No, I said, speaking from memory, the amount I believed was $40,000 and I think I can hunt it up and show him I am correct. I said my impression was the name was White but I was not sure.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was not here last year but I venture to challenge my hon. friend to produce evidence of that. I do not believe anything of the kind ever took place, and I happen to know that the gentleman who has been appointed to purchase the properties is purchasing them upon a small commission. It is absurd to say that $40,000 was paid.

Mr. SPROULE. Not solely as commission.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman said as commission and I challenge my hon. friend to look up the evidence and submit it to the House.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not at all concerned about the hon. gentleman's belief if he was an atheist or anything else, but I am concerned about my own knowledge and I shall hunt this up.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I venture to say you cannot find anything of the kind.

Mr. SPROULE. My hon. friend need not be too positive. It is not the first time he has been positive, nor is it the first time he has been shown to be absolutely incorrect. I will take the trouble to look it up, I am not going to be beaten down in that way.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not trying to beat you down.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What commission was paid ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was a small commission, I think 2 per cent.

Mr. J. D. REID. I remember the discussion on this last year. There was not only

Mr. White but, if I remember right, another gentleman in Ottawa and the amount was more than $1,500. The minister has taken the ground to-night that his department has not been in the habit of paying commissions for the purchase of land. We on this side are not in a position to disprove that statement as far as he is concerned, because we have not before us the Auditor General's Report for the expenditures since he assumed office, but we can prove that up to this last year amounts have been paid to certain individuals for purchasing properties.

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend assume that the payment of a commission would be improper? I am not discussing whether commissions have been paid but I say that in many cases if one known to be an agent of the government goes to purchase land he will immediately find the price raised. That is human nature. It is the part of wisdom that persons shall be employed to get land who are not known to be agents of the government. And if a fair business commission is paid on a transaction of that kind it is a good transaction for the treasury as for one dollar spent in commission you probably save $10 in the price of the land. Of course I am assuming a fair and reasonable commission.

Mr. J. D. REID. As far as that is concerned I do not take issue with the minister; but when Dr. Sproule asked what the commission was the Minister of Public Works took it as an insult and as absurd.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not intend to say anything offensive. My remarks were induced by the suggestion or insinuation which we have had to-day that there was some secret commission, a middleman who had bought the property and had got a commission in some way out of it. That is very different from the appointment of men like Mr. Riopelle who was appointed openly to purchase the properties on Sussex street. What made me speak as I did was the unjustified statement that we had paid as high as $40,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the total amount paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that the commission was 2 per cent and as the property costs between $500,000 and $600,000 the commission would be $10,000 to $12,000.

Mr. SPROULE. That was not what invited the reply from the minister. My first question was what commission was paid and the minister answered that it was absurd to ask the question and that there was an insinuation of something wrong.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did not the hon. gentleman say: It is always the case, always a commission? I took that as suggesting that secret commissions were paid to middlemen.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not until the hon. gentleman said it was absurd to ask such a question.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I do not think any hon. member of this House will agree with the minister that the payment of this commission is justifiable. There are in the department many men just as capable as any man in the city of Ottawa to make terms for the purchase of these lands. It was well known in the city of Ottawa that these gentlemen were the agents of the government. Every man on Sussex street knew that the government were purchasing these lands. Then why did the government throw away $12,000 on one of their friends when they had many men in the department quite as capable of doing the work.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman perhaps forgets the evidence that was given by Mr. Riopelle before the Public Accounts Committee, why this commission should be paid. It greatly exceeded $12,000, because in the first instance Mr. White and two or three other gentlemen took a preliminary canter around, announcing to the people that they were going to purchase for the government. I think they were paid pretty nearly $8,000. Mr. Riopelle frankly admitted before the Public Accounts Committee that when he went over the ground he told everybody what he was there for. He established a regular bureau at his office on Rideau street, and the department furnished him with a clerk and a messenger. I think the expense ran altogether to from $20,000 to $25,000. Mr. Riopelle assigned an excellent reason why his intervention was sought. It was that after a conference with Mr. Hyman, they came to the conclusion that there was no person in the department fit to conduct such negotiations. That was an awful reflection on the Department of Public Works. I would ask the minister if the services of Mr. Riopelle and the clerk and messenger are still continued?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information is that Mr. White and the other gentlemen to whom my hon. friend refers were not employed for the purpose of purchasing the properties, but were appointed as valuators. The department was desirous of getting these properties as cheaply as possible, and in cases where they could not be obtained at prices which the department thought reasonable, proceedings would be taken by way of expropriation, these two gentlemen were appointed for the purpose of valuing the properties. I think Mr. Riopelle was the only one employed for the purpose of making purchases. Mr. Riopelle and his clerk are still employed by the department, but the services of the messenger have been dispensed with. We intend to retain their services until the expropriation proceedings are completed.

Mr. BENNETT. How much is it expected that there will be further coming to Mr. Riopelle?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able at the moment to tell my hon. friend.

Mr. CROCKET. What were the valuators paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister has not told us yet from whom the land for this building in Winnipeg was purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was purchased from Messrs. William Mackenzie, D. D. Mann and K. Mackenzie.

Mr. SPROULE. Through whom?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no memorandum beyond the names of the vendors and the price.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister get the information and let us know through whom the purchase was made, and what was paid as commission and for the examination of titles?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was the land acquired by expropriation?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The order in council authorizes the purchase from Messrs. Mackenzie and his associates and therefore I assume that it was not acquired by expropriation.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the $417,000 complete the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and pay for the site, fittings, furniture and everything else.

Winnipeg—new immigration building, including additional land, $2,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make payments in connection with the erection of the immigration building at Winnipeg. The building is 200 feet by 61 feet 4 inches. It is four storeys high from the basement. It is built of brick, the roof is covered with copper, the floors are fire-proof, the staircase is of iron, the partitions are covered with iron lath and cement plaster. It is made pretty nearly fire-proof. I may say that the expenditure up to the 31st of December last was $252,585.33.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Does that include the heating apparatus, the furniture and everything connected with the building, or is it only for the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That $252,885 covers everything, fittings and all.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. When was it finished?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are asking now for $2,000. There will be a further vote of $6,000 required for furnishings.

Mr. SPROULE. To come back to the question of commissions, I have found the reference in 'Hansard.' The acting Minister of Public Works at that time (Mr. Fisher) was asked what was the cost of the properties purchased by the government and he replied $400,000. He also stated that Mr. Riopelle of Ottawa had acted for the government in getting options on them. My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) asked what about the commission and the acting minister replied: 'He is paid 5 per cent, I think.' Now, 5 per cent on $400,000 would amount to $20,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. colleague, Mr. Fisher, was either misreported or was in error.

Mr. SPROULE. I take this from 'Hansard.' I was not so very far out in my recollection. That $400,000 was only for part of the land.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Much more than the half—pretty nearly the whole.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The government had a vote last year for additional land. Would the minister inform us what is the total quantity of land?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was an exchange apparently with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think this is a description of the land:

It is composed of the southern fourteen feet of lots 61, 87, 96 and 118, and the northern 52 feet of lots 60 and 88, according to a plan of survey of lot 35, east of Main street, of the parish of St. John, registered in the Winnipeg land titles office, Winnipeg division, as plan 63; and also that portion of lots 95 and 117 of said lot and plan which may be described as follows: Commencing at the northwest corner of lot 95, thence south along the west boundary of said lot 52 feet; thence east parallel to the south boundary of said lot a distance of 98 feet; thence along a curve to the north of 521·6 feet, more or less radius to the northeast corner of lot 117; thence westerly along the north boundary of lots 117 and 95 to the place of beginning.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is this building to be used exclusively for immigration purposes? What length of time are the immigrants allowed to stay in it? Is any portion of the supplies to be furnished by the government other than beds?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is to be used exclusively for immigration purposes. As regards the manner and the length of time, that is in the control of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That is a very good reason why the Minister of the Interior should be here. It is not treating this House properly to have any minister absent when supplies are being voted concerning which only he can give the information. The Minister of Public Works cannot give the information I ask because the Minister of the Interior is not here. But these are things we ought to know before we allow the estimates to pass. When an item comes under two departments, both ministers should be present.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All we are asking for is $2,000 to complete the payment. The information my hon. friend desires can be had when the estimates of the Minister of the Interior come before the committee. What information is it he requires?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Is the building to be used solely for immigration purposes? Does the government furnish any supplies to the immigrants? How long are the immigrants allowed to stay there? Is there any charge in connection with the supplies to immigrants who have the means to pay? The estimates of the Minister of the Interior are usually in block sums—four or five items in all, and we get very little information. If the member interested does not happen to be present, the information is not given. If this item goes through without our getting the information I ask, the chances are we will never get it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can give the practice at St. John and also at Quebec. The right to furnish meals to the immigrants is let by contract, and the meals are supplied at a very small sum above actual cost.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Are none paid for by the government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, unless perhaps in the case of a very poor immigrant.

Winnipeg—new post office, land and building, $100,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote. It is for the erection of a new post office situated on Fourteenth avenue between Garry and Fort streets. It has a frontage of 134 feet and a depth of 166 feet. The rear line measures eighty feet in extent. The front portion of the building is to be six storeys high. It has a basement. The total cost, including site, heating, lighting, fittings and furnishing letter boxes will be $774,004.97. There was expended to the 31st December $656,159.97.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). When will it be completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is practically completed now.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Two years ago the minister said it would be completed that year.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. LEFURGEY. When the building is completed, it will not be large enough to accommodate the work required to be carried on.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Winnipeg is growing so marvellously, it is difficult to anticipate the requirements of the near future. This is a very large building. The lower stories will afford 17,000 superficial feet of space and the upper stories 15,000 feet. The post office alone has 10,000 superficial feet.

Mr. LEFURGEY. They will have to get additional space.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They thought years ago that the old post office was large enough.

Mr. LEFURGEY. We are here to think of the future, especially when we are spending millions.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. We have heard of the practice in other departments as to the opening of tenders. Would the minister (Mr. Pugsley) explain the practice in his department as it has been and as it is since he became minister?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the advertisement calling for tenders parties are notified to direct their tenders to the secretary of the department. When tenders reach the secretary in ordinary course, they are laid away in the safe. When the time comes for opening them, they are opened in the presence of the deputy minister and the minister.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Not the stenographer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, the deputy minister and the minister.

Winnipeg—postal station 'B,' north of Canadian Pacific Railway track, $35,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would move that this vote be reduced by $10,000. There is in the vote as it appears a revote of $10,000, which amount was spent during the last fiscal year.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What is the total cost to be?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total probable cost including site, heating, electric wiring, fittings and furniture is $76,629.33. The total expenditure to 31st December last is $51,629.33, leaving to complete $25,000.

Amendment agreed to.

Public Works—chargeable to income—Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories—Battleford public building, $7,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote. It is to make provision for a site and to begin the erection of a public building at Battleford for post office, &c. We are negotiating for the site and have sent a representative from the department to Battleford to look over the ground and make a recommendation.

Mr. BARR. What is the building to be used for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For a post office, and I understand that the Dominion lands office, telegraph office and immigration office will also be in the building.

Mr. LAKE. In which Battleford is the building to be erected?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The old town of Battleford.

Mr. LAKE. And negotiations are going on for a site in old Battleford?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the site expected to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We hope to get a suitable site for $2,500 or $3,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Then why this vote for $7,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is hoped to proceed with the building and do something on it this year.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the total estimated cost, including heating, electric lighting, furniture, &c.?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that he estimates it at about $35,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Are the plans being prepared?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They have not yet been prepared.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand the $35,000 estimated is exclusive of the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. LAKE. How long has this item been in the estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was in last year, but whether it was in the year before or not I am not informed.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the population of old Battleford, as it is called?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By the census of 1906 it is 933.

Mr. BENNETT. And what is the population of the new town of Battleford?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the figures before me.

Mr. BARR. Is not old Battleford going back?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The people are very hopeful of its future and it seems to be getting along very well. It has two churches, two hotels, flour mill, sawmill, newspaper and telegraph office. I am not prepared to say that it is going behind; in fact, I do not think that is the case.

Mr. BENNETT. The building is to cost $35,000 and the site $3,000—$38,000 in all. Does that include every contingency of expenditure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is my information.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems a pretty large amount to spend in a town that has a rival within six or seven miles.

Mr. LAKE. The new town of Battleford is probably nearer than that—within two or three miles, if you could go direct across, and I believe there is to be a bridge. The new town has nearly reached the population of the old town. It seems a rather extraordinary proceeding, if the new town is likely to be the larger of the two, to put this building in the old town in preference.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Battleford seems to be quite an important place. As the hon. member (Mr. Lake) is aware it is perhaps the oldest town in Western Saskatchewan. It has a post of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, it has a land titles office, an Indian agency. And I have the statement here that the population is now 1,100, which differs a little from the figure according to the census.

Mr. BENNETT. The census was several years ago.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I am informed that the population now is 1,100.

Mr. LAKE. What the minister has said rather gives point to the suggestion that North Battleford is the town in which this building should be placed. These government institutions of which he has spoken are placed in the old town. I find that in 1906 the old town had a population of 933. The new town was not in existence in 1901, but in 1906 it had grown to a population of 824. So the new town has equal claims with the old town to have this government building.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the post office revenue ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the nine months, $3,501. The money orders issued were $26,794, and the money orders paid $31,998. The building will cost about $35,000.

Calgary public building—enlargement for post office and examining warehouse purposes, changes, fittings, &c., $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The original building has been found too small, owing to the rapid growth of Calgary, and it has been found necessary to make an addition. The addition is larger than the original building. The contract has been let, and this grant will complete the payments. The amount of the contract was $77,000. There are other contracts for heating, wiring, passenger elevator, and some additional work, amounting to $2,596.

Edmonton public building, $60,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to continue the erection of a public building in the town of Edmonton upon a site which was purchased in 1906. The building, which is under contract, will be three stories high with a basement and attic. A portion of the building on the street corner is carried up five stories above the basement. The site cost $20,000. We have paid the contractors $98,720 up to the 31st of December, and there are other expenses in connection with the building, such as surveys, travelling, printing, advertisements, architects' fees and so forth, amounting altogether, including site, to $124,842.67. The contractors are the May-Sharp Construction Company. I believe they are giving good satisfaction. The total cost of the building including site, heating, wiring, furniture, will be $285,785.67. It is to be used for a post office, customs house, examining warehouse and weights and measures. The architects were the Ottawa Engineering and Architectural Construction Company.

Mr. BENNETT. Who comprise that company ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect informs me, Band, Burritt and Meredith. They were paid two per cent for the plans and specifications. We have a clerk of works on the spot.

Mr. CROCKET. Why were these plans and specifications not prepared by the architects of the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This firm was employed because at the time the department was pressed with other work. The clerk of works is Mr. Manson. The chief architect thinks he is getting $4 a day.

Mr. CROCKET. That seems a large amount to pay for a site. Who was it bought from ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Edmonton is becoming quite a metropolis. The site is a large one, 90 by 100 feet, and was bought from Gariepy and Lessard. The land was vacant at the time of the purchase. The property is a corner lot with a frontage of 90 feet on one street and 150 on another.

Mr. LAKE. Does this work take up all the time of the clerk of works ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, he is supposed to be on the works all the time.

Mr. LAKE. Does the minister think it is good policy to employ a man at a very small salary like that to oversee a great public work of this nature ? There must be a great temptation to a man at a very low salary to pass over improper work if approached by the contractor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of course we have to be guided by the wages that are paid to inspectors by the wages which are paid to masons and builders. In the east we pay $3 and sometimes $3.50 per day. When we get to Victoria we have to pay $5.50, and in some cases more. In one case on the mainland of British Columbia we have to pay as high as $7 because stone masons and bricklayers get as high as $7 per day. We have been thinking of fixing a scale of wages for the clerks of works in each province equal to the highest fair wage scale of the Department of Labour with respect to the particular work upon which the man employed may be engaged. This man has been doing work for the government for a long period and apparently he has not insisted upon his wages going up proportionately with the wages of other people.

Mr. BENNETT. Is he a practical man?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A thoroughly practical man.

Mr. BENNETT. What is his calling?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is a carpenter and builder.

Mr. LAKE. It seems to me that we are not proceeding on the right principle. I think that the class of man who is employed to do such responsible work as overlooking the work done by a contractor on a very big undertaking is open to temptation, if he receives the ordinary wages paid to the ordinary workmen on the building, to allow work to be scamped if he is improperly approached by the contractor. On some of these large works a very small amount of work scamped would mean a very large sum of money in the aggregate, and I think we ought to have the very highest class of men employed in overseeing these works. I think that is something that the minister might take into his consideration. Some of the works which have been built by the government of late have not been very satisfactory. We have heard of some of them coming to grief, and it is quite possible that it is attributable to employing men of that class who would consider as a sufficient compensation the ordinary workman's wages.

Mr. BENNETT. Who inspects the work outside of this clerk?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From time to time an architect is sent from the department to inspect.

Mr. HERRON. I would like to ask the minister if there are any particular qualifications required for a man to be overseer of a building at the present time. The minister must be aware of the fact that you cannot get to-day a competent foreman to oversee work of that kind for $4 a day. Ordinary carpenters were getting $4 a day all last year in the west. Every man who could handle a saw would get $3.50 and $4, and a stonemason would get $6. You could not hire a man in any town in the west for less than that. How do you expect to get a competent man to oversee a $250,000 job at an ordinary workman's wages? I know that men have been employed to oversee public works who are not competent. Party service is about the only qualification that some have for their appointment. The overseer is on the job and paid every day although the workman is very often off work. That may be some compensation for him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of course, we cannot always be sure that an employee is honest even if we pay him $5 or $6 a day, but we do find that we can get clerks of works who are willing to work for the same wages which those who are actually engaged in the work get. While the responsibility is greater the work is not of such an arduous character as the work of the stone masons, carpenters and bricklayers. This man who is clerk of works on the Edmonton public building has been acting in that capacity for the government for years. It must be borne in mind that he, having proved himself to be a capable and honest man, as the department thinks, has received steady employment and $4 per day right along, and that is not too bad.

Mr. LAKE. Winter and summer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Winter and summer. We are fortunate in being able to retain the services of this man at that figure. I think he is just as honest and faithful as he would be if we paid him a dollar a day more.

Estevan land office, $3,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We did away with the project of erecting a public building for a land office at Alameda, and we propose erecting a building of a more expensive character at Estevan, making it a post office and land office as well; so that, this building, it is supposed, will cost about $22,000 when completed.

Mr. CROCKET. How many of these land offices have been built in Saskatchewan?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell my hon. friend offhand, but we will get the information.

Mr. LAKE. Have you acquired the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. LAKE. Where about, and what is the price?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend. perhaps knows the locality. The site is composed of lots 1, 2 and 3, block 43, on the corner of Fourth street and Thirteenth ave., there being a frontage of 75 feet on Fourth street and a depth of 120 feet on Thirteenth avenue. The price is $2,000. It was purchased from Dr. D. R. Davis. He was acting on behalf of the owners, whose names I do not know.

Humboldt public buildings, $10,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Explain that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of this amount $2,000 is a revote. It is to make provision for the erection of a public building at Humboldt for post office purposes, &c. We have not yet obtained a site. We made an agreement to purchase one but the vendors have not so far been able or willing to give title and it is not unlikely we will have to get another site.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What is the population of Humboldt?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the population. The postal revenue for nine months of 1907 was, money orders, $15,087; money orders paid, $14,883. It is a growing town, a divisional point on the Canadian Northern half-way between Battleford and Dauphin. The cost of the building will probably not exceed $20,000.

Mr. LAKE. I would again ask the minister on what principle these buildings are distributed? I find that Humboldt has a population of 279, but there are other towns in the same district with larger populations such as Davidson, 520; Hanly, 568; and Melthorpe, 351. Why did the minister select Humboldt in this particular case for a public building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is difficult for me to answer that as the selection was made by my predecessor. Humboldt has been made the location of the Dominion Lands Office with five officers and employees, and it has also been made a customs port of entry so that a public building may reasonably be located in Humboldt.

Mr. LAKE. Humboldt is very fortunate indeed. and apparently is getting quite a lot of patronage.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site consists of three lots having a frontage of 75 feet on Main street by 132 feet on Franklin street. It is a corner lot. We agreed to pay $3,000, but I regret that the vendors do not seem willing to complete the purchase.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is an absolutely ridiculous price.

Mr. BENNETT. They know they will get more.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, they know they will not. In fact we have given them notice that as they have failed to complete the transfer, unless they complete it in ten days the agreement will be cancelled and we will purchase a lot elsewhere.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. To pay $3,000 for a lot 75 by 132 feet is ridiculous.

Mr. ADAMSON. Humboldt has a population of from 500 to 600.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I do not care if it has a thousand.

Mr. ADAMSON. It makes a difference.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. To pay $3,000 for a site in such a town, is as bad as the Dauphin purchase.

Mr. ADAMSON. The vendors will not make title.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. From whom was it bought ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. H. J. McDonald.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is a ridiculous price.

Mr. J. D. REID. Did the member recommend that price to the government ?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, I recommended the government to close at that price. The vendors asked $4,000, but I advised the government to pay $3,000 and if they could not get it for that to get a lot elsewhere.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Did they know it was to be bought for public purposes ?

Mr. ADAMSON. I presume they did, that the inspector went up there.

Mr. LAKE. When the hon. member said that the population was over 500 he was making a very generous estimate.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have a report from the overseer of the town, the mayor.

Mr. LAKE. There are other towns of larger populations in that district and in other districts that are not getting public buildings.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The question of the principle on which these buildings are erected is significantly answered by the buildings in the Northwest. Public buildings are being erected in the constituencies represented by our Liberal friends, Messrs. McCraney, Adamson, Turriff, Oliver, Knowles, Sifton, Burrows, Cyr, Jackson, Crawford and Dr. Cash; while my colleagues on this side, Messrs. Schaffner and Staples and myself from Manitoba have not a public building. We cannot induce the government to spend even $500 to build a shanty to protect the firearms in our town. I think that illustrates the discrimination made, and the fact that the only principle recognized in the erection of these buildings is the principle of patronage to those supporting the government. We have just as important towns to say the least in our constituencies, which are just as deserving of public buildings as other towns, except in the matter of sending a supporter of the government to this House. The hon. minister, who is so politic in some respects, might possible make more headway from a political point of view by pursuing a different course. The town in which I reside, Minnedosa, is of considerably more importance than Humboldt and several other towns which have been given public buildings. We have there a company of dragoons and a post office, and we at one time had a land office, but we have not been able to induce the government to erect a building.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Will the hon. gentleman give us an idea of what they paid for any other lot of the same size in Humboldt?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think a statement was sent in and is on file showing the prices of other lots. I am not prepared to admit that the town of Minnedosa is superior to Humboldt, though it is very much older. Humboldt is in the centre of a very fertile farming district, with a dense population about it and it is growing well.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It has not been pressing its claims so long as some of the other towns I have referred to.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am not prepared to speak on that point ; but there is a customs office and a land office there as well as a post office, and the officers employed in them should be properly housed.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is the distinguishing feature of this lot ?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is high and dry and is well situated in the centre of the town, where a public building will be shown off remarkably well.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is a high and dry price, at any state. I would like to ask the minister if his inspector went to inspect that lot ?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Who is the inspector?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Mahler.

Mr. CROCKET. What did he report ?

Mr. ADAMSON. He reported favourably.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I would like to call the attention of the public to the purchase of this lot for $3,000 in a town of 500 people, while a lot was bought in the centre of St. Boniface, quite a large city, for $4,000, and a lot in Neepawa for $3,000. This item should not be allowed to pass.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say, with regard to Mr. Mahler, who valued the land, that he is a gentleman who has a very high reputation indeed. He was selected as the expert to value the land and buildings of the Dominion government when they were taken over by the province of Saskatchewan, as one in whom both governments might have the utmost confidence. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that one would hardly be warranted in saying that in a growing town like Humboldt, which has become a divisional point of the Canadian Northern Railway, which has a land office, and which is the centre of a splendid farming country, $3,000 would be an excessive price to pay for a corner lot equivalent to three 25-foot lots at $1,000 each. At all events, we have the fact that while the department has been urging the vendors to complete the sale, and has been ready to hand over the money, they have declined to do so, and we have been compelled to notify them that unless they complete the title in ten days, we will cancel the offer and look elsewhere.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the name of this place prior to the last general election?

Mr. ADAMSON. Humboldt.

Mr. BENNETT. I have the election returns, but I do not find a polling place of the name of Humboldt.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is no polling place, because the town was not commenced, or the railway built.

Mr. BENNETT. I find in the election returns that at the polling place of Bonne Madone there were 31 votes for the hon. gentleman and none for his opponent; at Schafer there were 41 votes for the hon. gentleman and none for his opponent; at Wakwa lake there were 17 votes for the hon. gentleman and none for his opponent; at Crooked lake there were thirty votes for the hon. gentleman and none for his opponent. Crooked lake, thirty for himself and none for his opponent. Trojca, forty-six for himself, none for his opponent. Halzxs, one hundred and nineteen for himself, none for his opponent. Kolonzia, one hundred and twenty-three for himself, three for his opponent. Fish creek, ninety-three for himself, none for his opponent. After the magnificent votes the hon. gentleman got at those different places,—and I may say too there seemed to be no spoiled ballots there, probably owing to the fact that the deputy marked them——

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think there is any reason for such an insinuation.

Mr. BENNETT. The names are rather indicative of a foreign element.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, and they are there still.

Mr. BENNETT. No doubt that is a comfort to the hon. gentleman. Why should these places, with only 500 or 600 people, be given public buildings, when these other places which poll 123 votes for the hon. gentleman to six against him, such as Kolonzia, has gone? What is the population of Kolonzia?

Mr. ADAMSON. Kolonzia is not a town but a township. There are a good many more than 100 votes at that place now.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have listened to some of the most reckless statements with regard to the expenditure of public money in that western country, coming from the Minister of Public Works. One would hardly expect a man in his position to make such statements. He is satisfied to give away the peoples' money to the constituencies only which support the government. When charged that only such constituencies may expect the expenditure of public money the hon. minister smiles and says that is practically where he intends to put it. We find the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) showing that there are a dozen other towns, with two or three times the population, urgently in need of public buildings, but not even a shed will be offered them because they are represented by opposition members. I feel compelled to make my protest against the use of public money in this way. The minister is using the money of the whole country and not of only one political party, and when I see how he is distributing that money to bribe the constituencies I cannot help entering my protest.

Mr. SPROULE. In view of the very rude challenge which I got from the Minister of Public Works after I had told him that $40,000 had been paid in commission on purchases of property in this city by the government, I felt compelled to look up the particulars. In the Auditor General's Report for 1896, I find that these properties cost $685,000. I find also in the 'Hansard' that the acting minister at that time, Mr. Fisher, said that 5 per cent commission was paid. That commission on $685,000 would amount to $34,250. But I find further in the Auditor General's Report that, in connection with the same property, there was paid to sundry parties, one of whom was Mr. James White, $7,314. True one or two of these items were for valuation and the other is for securing options, but they are all payments to secure the properties. Adding these items together, you have a total of $42,564. I now ask the minister if he does not think he was too hasty in the very imperative challenge he gave me and in the offensive way in which he referred to my statement when I said the commissions footed up to $40,000? If I was misled, I was misled by the Acting Minister of Public Works. In the 'Hansard' of 1906-7 the following question was asked by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Blain):

What properties in Ottawa have been purchased by the government since January? What amount of commissions have been paid on such purchases and to whom? What was paid for legal expenses, outside the Justice Department, on each property?

The acting minister (Mr. Fisher) asked the hon. member to make a motion and promised to facilitate his getting the return. It was too much, he said, to give in the form of an answer to a question. I find that afterwards a motion was made for this return but up to the present it has not been brought down. It is like some other returns moved for, with reference to which the order of the House has been entirely disregarded.

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the statement my hon. friend makes, no doubt he was quite right in saying what he did about commissions; but knowing, as I do, that 2 per cent was the amount paid Mr. Riopelle, the hon. gentleman will understand how astonished I was at his statement. The land agents would only make a commission of $12,000 if the properties cost $600,000 whereas at 5 per cent they would get $30,000. I wish to express regret if I said anything which hurt my hon. friend's feelings. I certainly had no intention of doing so and I think that the hon. gentleman in turn should withdraw the expression 'rude' which he applied to me. The whole thing is a mutual mistake, and that is owing to the fact that there is an error in the 'Hansard' as to the amount of the commission.

Mr. SPROULE. I have no objection in the world to make any amends due the hon. Minister of Public Works. I said what I thought as absolutely true and which I had good grounds for believing was true. In view of the explanation made by the hon. minister, I accept his withdrawl.

Mr. HERRON. It is astonishing how liberal the government are in spending money in those constituencies which return supporters of the government. Here we are spending in a town of 500 or 600 people some $20,000 to $25,000 on a public building. I have seven or eight towns in my riding, which never had a public building, and are just as prosperous as the one referred to, and a number of them have 3,000, 4,000 and some have 5,000 population. And I have no doubt that the post office and customs revenue are double the amount which they reach in those other small places. Yet no attempt has been made to supply these places with public buildings. It is evident that the government is liberal only in the case of towns which elect government supporters. Take the two southern constituencies in Alberta: The constituency of Calgary receives only the repairs of a few buildings that were constructed years ago.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are spending a good deal of money in Calgary. We are putting an addition to the public building there larger than the original.

Mr. HERRON. And in my own constituency, the first settled in the whole province, one of the earliest settlements in the Northwest Territories, we are not getting a single dollar of public money spent. The fact is, that is merely a way of giving patronage to the people who 'vote right.' The government should surely have a better method of handing out public money.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the total cost of this building including site, lighting, heatings and fittings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Between $22,000 and $25,000, apart from the site.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. For a place with 500 people?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By the time the building is erected, it will be more.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have been looking over the reports concerning piers built by the Public Works Department at three places on lake Huron. If I had time to go into these matters, I could give the minister facts to show that his department is run in a most reckless manner. Apparently, the ministers in charge have allowed the affairs of the department to be run practically for party purposes. And the present minister appears to be going along in the same way, simply asking for money to spend in the ridings of members on his own side. But the money the minister is spending is the money of the people of the Dominion, not the money of one party.

Mr. BENNETT. Where is the thing going to stop? We are putting up this building in a little village of 500 people. In fact, there is no authority for the statement that there is even that many. The hon. member for the district (Mr. Adamson) has not said there are 500 people. Does the hon. gentleman reside in this village?

Mr. ADAMSON. No, but I have been there frequently, and can vouch for there being at least 500 people. It is the centre of a very large district. The constituency is over a hundred miles square and has a great number of settlers.

Mr. BENNETT. But they do not all go to this post office.

Mr. ADAMSON. No, this is for a land office and customs office. The land office, of course, has a great number of valuable documents, and these are not properly housed at the present time. This is for the use of the whole district and not for Humboldt alone. There is not a public building within 150 miles to the east of us or nearer than Prince Albert, nor is there one nearer Battleford on the west, which is 90 miles. It seems to me any person who considers the matter fairly will see that this affords accommodation for a large number of people and in an important district.

Mr. BENNETT. If we are to erect a public building in every village of 500 population, what will become of the credit of the country?

Mr. ADAMSON. This is for the accommodation of the 25,000 people in the district.

Mr. BENNETT. Of course, there must be people surrounding a village, or there would not be a village. I should think the Minister of Finance would sit up nights wondering what is to become of the credit of the country if this kind of things goes on.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And yet hon. gentlemen on the other side are urging us to build more.

Mr. BENNETT. No, they are urging that some prudence and foresight should be displayed and that the public money should not be spent on the principle of party favouritism. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) was heralded by the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Fowler) who told us that the minister would be the greatest spendthrift the Dominion had ever known. The hon. gentleman is certainly making good. And his reputation is in his own province seems to have been justified, because they are finding there that a province that was supposed to be on an even keel is millions behind.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Absurd! There is no province that is in a better financial position than New Brunswick.

Mr. BENNETT. That is what the hon. gentleman says, but he cannot make the people of that province believe it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They do.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman says that in his own province they have confidence in him. He must be mesmerized; he is suffering under a hallucination.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We shall see when the time comes.

Mr. BENNETT. The time has passed. The hon. gentleman certainly came back from the general elections in New Brunswick in a very dazed condition, and he has not recovered from his daze yet. And let the hon. gentleman remember that he is carrying out this policy himself. He is the one who goes to council and recommends that these expenditures should be made. Of course, he has his colleagues in the same boat with him, but he is primarily responsible. While it is true that we cannot prevent them going on, we can enter our protest against this disgraceful expenditure—that is the right word I believe—of $25,000 in a village like this.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Is the minister willing to take responsibility before this House and country of paying $3,000 for this site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have to. The agreement was made, and I propose carrying it out unless they fail to make good. I have given notice that unless they make good within ten days, we will buy elsewhere.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. There ought to be some way to prevent an expenditure that is so absolutely ridiculous and extravagant as this. The state of affairs indicated by the hon. member for Marquette is bad enough. It is bad enough to have this large expenditure on public buildings in different towns to go on without any principle to guide it. But it is still worse that this country should be called upon to pay $3,000 for a corner lot and two other lots in a town of 500 people. I cannot understand how men would ever have the cheek to ask that amount of money. A fair value for that corner lot, I would say, is about $500 and the other two are worth $200 each, and that is more than would be asked in any town in southern Manitoba. Southern Manitoba is a much better district and much more thickly populated, and you can buy a lot in any town in southern Manitoba from Winnipeg to the border of the province for less than half that money. If there are any means I can use, or any words I can say, to prevent such a reckless and extravagant transaction being put through by this government I want to be considered as having used it and as having said it. This is a parallel case to Dauphin.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Has the hon. gentleman ever been in Humboldt and does he know what lots have been selling for recently in Humboldt?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I have never been in Humboldt. and I have never been to the north pole either, but I know pretty well what land is worth in any town in Manitoba. I would like to know if the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Adamson) can give to this House any reason why lots in the town of Humboldt should be worth more than town lots in southern Manitoba?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know anything about the value of town lots in Manitoba, but I do know their value in Humboldt?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If the hon. gentleman says that a lot 75 by 132 feet in the town of Humboldt, with a population of 500, is worth $3,000, I take it upon myself to say that he does not know anything about the value of land. It is not worth that money, and he cannot find any valuators in Manitoba or any other country to say it is. I can ask for no better instance to explain to the people on a public platform how it is that public expenditure has been increasing so rapidly in this country. We have the same thing over again as occurred in Dauphin. In connection with all these public buildings we find this graft going on and it is high time to stop it. Perhaps the minister is not in a position to know the value of this land, nevertheless I hold him responsible.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentlemen think it is right to make assertions of graft without the slightest evidence?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I do not suppose graft is a parliamentary word, and I withdraw it.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is no ground for the hon. gentleman's statement whatever, there is not a tittle of evidence for any thing he has said. I can tell the committee that there have been town lots, to my personal knowledge, sold for $1,000 in Humboldt before there was a building erected in the place.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. How long ago?

Mr. ADAMSON. Within four years.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What makes this land so valuable?

Mr. ADAMSON. Because it is a growing town.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Five hundred people; talk about being a growing town! I say again that the hon. gentleman can give this committee no satisfactory reason why town lots in Humboldt are worth any more or nearly as much as town lots in Manitoba towns. If the minister wants to protect the financial interests of this country he ought not to sanction a vote like this.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. A few moments ago I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Simcoe and the reply of the minister in regard to his own province. I would like to read for the minister's benefit what I find in to-day's evening 'Journal':

Fredericton, New Brunswick, May 15.—Hon. J. X. Flemming began his first budget speech in the legislature yesterday. He made some interesting statements. The old government had estimated $8,000 surplus for the year ending October 31 last. He took exception to the way this was arrived at, and said that juggling with the accounts was practiced throughout to make it possible, in the words of an hon. gentleman not now present, for the government to come out each year with a 'tidy surplus.'

To figure out the fallacious surplus of last year, the government not only had to leave their overdraft unpaid, but they had to swell the income by holding open the books for the receipt of money for over a month after the close of the year.

A statement by Mr. Flemming which aroused much comment, was that that very afternoon a bill had come from the Intercolonial Railway for $47,496.34 for rails said to have been supplied the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company in the year 1902. Here was an account out of sight for six years, though an order in council authorizes its payment. To-day it stands unpaid, with interest on it to the amount of over $8,000. What kind of miserable system had they to admit of such a condition of affairs?

Mr. Flemming figured the total of actual and contingent liabilities of the province at $10,253,193.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is an absolutely false and misleading statement.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What I fear is that when we come to investigate the expenditures in the Public Works Department we will find them carried along in the same old slipshod, careless manner as they have been for the last few years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not suppose it is proper to bring into the discussion of an item like this things that have occurred in the New Brunswick legislature and questions of provincial politics. But as the hon. gentleman has done so, I simply wish to say that the article which he has quoted is absolutely misleading. It refers to a claim from the government railway for rails said to have been supplied to the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company, and the paper says the accounts have been hidden. Nothing of the kind. The accounts have been rendered by the Railway Department each year and there has been a standing claim against the Dominion government for double subsidy which would pay the contra account of the Dominion government for rails. The statement contained in the newspaper which my hon. friend has read from is absolutely misleading and is on a par with statements which are being made in the New Brunswick legislature in regard to myself and others who have left that legislature, who are not there to answer, and which are absolutely false and misleading.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the people ever send them back to answer them?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The people have sent me here, they have sent me notwithstanding the objections made on the other side, and they have sent me by acclamation.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to ask the hon. member for Humboldt if he has any property there?

Mr. ADAMSON. Not one foot of property, and never had.

Mr. J. D. REID. The government, in favouring these small places, are practically injuring real estate along the line, cause the erection of a public building creates the idea that these are to be the central points. The government are going a little too fast in making an expenditure of this kind in a small place like this. I certainly do not believe that land values in a place like Humboldt are as great as the minister states they paid for this lot.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not paid but agreed to pay, providing they complete the title.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am taking it for granted that the purchase will be carried out if they complete the title. I have not heard of prices such as those which have been paid at Humboldt. A third of the amount paid would be a very large price in a place like that and that is discounting the future to a very great extent.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. If hon. members on this side of the House do not bring the claims of their respective constituencies before the Minister of Public Works, and if they subsequently bring them to the attention of the Minister of Public Works, they are at once confronted with the declaration: This is the first time that I have heard of it. The hon. minister has been Minister of Public Works for some time and he says: This is the first time that the hon. member has brought this to my attention. He tries to leave the impression upon the country that we are derelict in our duty, that we have not been looking after the interests of our constituencies, whereas if we, session after session, impress upon the minister the desirability of putting up certain public buildings in our towns he accuses us of desiring to increase the expenditure of the country. It seems almost impossible to please the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Rather it is the inconsistency of the hon. gentleman to which I direct the attention of the House.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It is not inconsistency but the position we take is that it is unjust discrimination. If towns with a population of from 2,000 to 4,000 and upwards are not treated just the same as towns in constituencies represented by supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite we say that it is unjust discrimination. It is not right that there should be expenditures only in constituencies represented by hon. gentlemen opposite. The system of purchasing land for the purposes of the department is entirely wrong. Why is it necessary to advertise broadcast through a town that the government want a certain piece of land for a certain purpose? The hon. member for Humboldt has admitted that he acted as the intermediary in the purchasing of this lot and he says that they asked $4,000 and that he got them to reduce the price.

Mr. ADAMSON. I was not the intermediary. It was referred to me by the department and an offer was made of $4,000. I do not know the owner of the property, never saw him, never met him and I never wrote to him or he to me. I thought that the price was too high and eventually the department got the land for $1,000 less.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The parties knew that it was required for government purposes.

Mr. ADAMSON. They could not help knowing. A government inspector was sent from the department.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The Minister of Finance has stated that it is a well known fact that if parties know that property is desired by the government they raise the prices. No doubt that is true and I think the system of purchasing land should be changed. In the town where I reside with nearly four times the population of Humboldt I guarantee that on the main street you could get a lot with a 60 feet frontage for $1,500. To say that in a town of 500 population it is necessary to pay $3,000 is ridiculous.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I would like to ask that this item be allowed to stand till the minister takes a little pains to find out the facts. I never expected to run up against anything like this. It is beyond any decency and I am going to ask that the item stand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not see any advantage in allowing it to stand. I told the hon. gentleman that before I became minister this was carefully inquired into. The department sent one of the most reliable experts in land value in the west, a man of the highest character, Mr. Mahler, a gentleman who was employed by both governments, and who valued some of the buildings which were taken over by the Saskatchewan government, to value this land. An agreement has been entered into to pay $3,000. The lot is 75 by 132, it is a corner lot, centrally situated, and I see no reason why the item should stand. I will get any information in the department with reference to the matter and I will submit it and it will be open to the hon. gentleman to discuss it at another time.

Mr. ALCORN. Did this commissioner make inquiries on the spot or look for any other lots and get prices on them?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is what I understand he did; I understand he compared prices with other lots.

Mr. ALCORN. What were the prices of other lots?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot say to-night; it is three years ago.

Mr. WM. JACKSON. I have a word to say in reference to this kind of public improvement. It is pretty hard to build a harbour except where there is navigation. But in erecting a post office or public building it seems to be the kind of public improvement that you can pass around any place. I do not think that the members on the government side should try to make the people believe that the money that is expended on these public buildings all comes from the Liberal party. It comes out of the funds of the Dominion of Canada. I know of a constituency in which there is no public building although it is one of the oldest constituencies in the Dominion of Canada one of the most fertile and one which has a very lively town in the centre of it. Unfortunately for that town and county—or rather fortunately—the sitting member is a gentleman on this side of the House. At a meeting held there not long ago this question came up and one of the speakers I believe, the ex-president of the Liberal association, said: The present member for this riding has asked for a post office but cannot get one. What you want to do is to send a Liberal to Ottawa and you will get your post office. Graft or intimidation of this kind is used to the utmost extent in the erection of public buildings. It is a bid to get a few parliamentary votes, but I have to tell you that the people of that constituency have had that gauntlet thrown down to them for the last twenty years that if they elected a Liberal they would get a post office. I say they are entitled to that building and they resent that base attempt to bribe them in their franchise by telling them to vote for this government or they will never get a post office. I have heard that statement from a Liberal. The people of Ontario and of that constituency denounce that kind of thing. We will not stand for it, we will do without our post office rather than sacrifice our franchise.

Mr. TURRIFF. If they were entitled to it for twenty years why did not your friends give it the last eight years they were in power?

Mr. WM. JACKSON. What I said was absolutely true.

Mr. TURRIFF. Why did not your friends build it?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. They were spending $40,000,000 and you are spending $130,000,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. You will find that post offices were not being erected in such small towns as they are now erected in.

Mr. TURRIFF. In many western towns, even where the population is not very large, the post office revenue is much larger in proportion to the population than in the east. This building will be a post office, land office and customs house.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Does that make any difference in the value of the site?

Mr. TURRIFF. The hon. gentleman is aware that in many small towns in the west of from 500 to 1,000 people if you go outside the main portion of the town you can buy lots for $100 or $200, but in the centre of the town the lots sell for a very high price. I understand there was discussion with reference to the town of Dauphin and I was told by a gentleman who has lived there a great deal and knows it very well that a lot had been bought for $11,000 by a private individual for his own purposes, not for the government.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. How big was the lot?

Mr. TURRIFF. 44 feet wide. The government site was purchased for $6,000 for a 75-foot lot, and the $11,000 lot was within 300 feet of it. I venture to say that in Humboldt there may be a dozen lots right in the centre of the town that you could not buy for less than $1,000 apiece, the price being paid here. I do not think it is an out of the way price. It may be a little high but in many towns of from 500 to 1,000 people, $3,000 for three lots, one of them a corner lot, would not be considered high.

Mr. BENNETT. Would that be a fair criterion for the prices of lots in Blairmore?

Mr. TURRIFF. Perhaps the hon. member knows more than I do about that.

Mr. BENNETT. I was not as deep under the surface in that transaction as the hon. member.

Mr. TURRIFF. If the hon. member insinuates that I was interested in the Blairmore townsite he is altogether mistaken, and it is a cowardly thing for him to do, but it is what you might expect from the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The hon. member knows towns in his own constituency and in mine better entitled to buildings than this, and can he give reasons for the erection of a public building in this town and not in the others?

Mr. ADAMSON. I have given reasons. I have said that lots were sold at $1,000 apiece before there was a building there. Before there was a town, lots sold at $1,000.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Why are they sold so high?

Mr. ADAMSON. Because the people wanted them, it is a case of demand and supply.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Does the hon. member mean to say that anywhere in the western country in a town of 500, land is worth $250 a foot. That is what your lot cost in Dauphin.

Mr. TURRIFF. The hon. member heard the same statement as I did in the corridors made by a gentleman from Dauphin that a lot within 350 feet of the lot sold to the government had been bought by a private company there for $11,000 and the lot was only 44 feet wide.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I heard it but I did not believe it, but Sir, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) has said that right in the centre of the town which is a good town, one of the best in the Northwest, lots can be bought for $1,500.

Mr. KNOWLES. Is there any reason why the hon. gentleman should believe one statement rather than the other?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I accept the statement of the hon. member for Marquette.

Mr. ADAMSON. Knowing nothing whatever about the subject.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say that. I say there is not a member from the west on the other side of the House who will say that these three lots, one of them a corner lot, in the small town of Humboldt, are worth $3,000.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The best way to test the accuracy of my statement is for the hon. minister to put in the supplementary estimates $1,500 for the lot, and I will produce it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Without attempting to cast any reflections upon the town the hon. gentleman represents, I might say that it is on a side line, it is an old town, and it is not a divisional point.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. It is a divisional point.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is not on the main line of a railway.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It will be on the main line of a railway to Edmonton.

Mr. ADAMSON. Humboldt is a divisional point on the main line of the railway. The price of land there is governed by demand and supply, like any other commodity, and I can assure the committee that town lots of 25 feet frontage were changing hands at $1,000 each before there was a building in the town. We cannot account for these things, but such is the case.

Mr. SPROULE. Why do you pay such a price when you can get the accommodation for the post office to-day for a rent of $75 a year?

Mr. ADAMSON. They are paying as much more for the land office and possibly as much more for the custom house for buildings entirely unsuitable for the purposes for which they are used.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, admit that you pay three times as much, it would amount to only $225 a year. There are many places yielding a revenue of over $2,000 a year which have no post office at all.

Mr. ADAMSON. I admit that there are places that should have post office buildings which have not. This is not only for a post office, but for a land office, and it is particularly important that we should have a place for the safe keeping of the records of the land office.

Mr. SPROULE. You could build a fireproof registry office for $3,000. In Ontario and other provinces you will find villages yielding a revenue of twice or three or four times as much as Humboldt, and yet they are not getting a post office or applying for one. It does not seem to me to be defensible to spend such large amounts for public buildings in small new places and to neglect places which are two or three times as large.

Mr. ADAMSON. In the land office there are six people employed, in the custom house two, and in the post office two, making ten public servants who have to be accommodated.

Mr. LAKE. One point that should not be overlooked is that after you buy a site at a very high price in a new town in a new district and put up an expensive building, you may find in a short time that the town may sink to nothing, and you may have to move the land office and other buildings somewhere else. I remember very well, on the line where my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) used to live, the land office was moved successively from Cannington to Alameda, Oxbow and Estevan. There were four moves, and there would have been a corresponding waste of so many public buildings if this policy had been carried out in those early days. I think it is a mistake to jump into a new town when it is just on the boom and put up a public building. The people may flock out as quickly as they flocked in, and you may find in the end that the buildings may be all waste.

Mr. TURRIFF. The hon. gentleman has given one very good reason why a land office should be built. He has instanced the land office at Cotran district. It was first established at Carlyle, where I lived somewhere about 1882 or 1883. It was moved from Carlyle from lack of accommodation and because there was better accommodation up at Cannington. A few years later it was moved from Cannington on account of lack of accommodation. It was moved to Oxbow temporarily. From there it was moved to Alameda. From Alameda it was moved, because of lack of accommodation, to Estevan on account of the latter being so much nearer to the great bulk of land available for homestead entry and because it was the junction of two railways and much more convenient for the immigrants to make entries. But the main reason why the land office has been moved around so often has been lack of accommodation. If there had been proper accommodation at Carlyle in the first place, the chances are it would never have been moved.

Mr. LAKE. The very fact that it has been moved shows that the new places were very much more convenient for the purposes of a land office. The hon. gentleman himself admitted that it was moved to Estevan because it was nearer the centre of operation.

Mr. TURRIFF. And because there was no accommodation at the other places.

Mr. LAKE. And because the people to be served in this new district would have to go so much further to do their land business.

Mr. CLEMENTS. If the minister has a conscience, and I think he has, this discussion should result in a great deal of good to this country. In my judgment the prices paid for these lots are absurd. I am quite willing to sanction the erection of public buildings throughout the whole Dominion, so far as they can be built by the Public Works Department, so long as the money is properly spent, but I will not approve of the purchase of lots at such high prices as those shown to have been paid. It seems absurd to pay $6,000 for a lot where there is not a town but only the site of a town. That is simply paying an inflated price. There is no reason why the government should pay such exorbitant prices. Rather than pay such prices, the minister should refuse to supply the building. I can take you into many flourishing towns in Ontario where you can get the building lots very much cheaper. I want to refer to the town of Sandwich, where a gentleman purchased 208 feet on the main street for $2,000. Sandwich is one of the oldest towns in Ontario.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was it bought at ordinary sale ?

Mr. CLEMENTS. Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would you not say that was very cheap ?

Mr. CLEMENTS. It is about the price you can get lots for in any town of that size throughout the Dominion except in places in the west where the prices are inflated and exorbitant. The man who purchased that lot for $2,000 sold the half of it to the government for $1,700.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The lot sold the government was 104 feet for $1,700. That was not out of the way.

Mr. CLEMENTS. That would look fairly reasonable compared with $3,000 for a lot in the western country.

Mr. TURRIFF. Three lots.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Judge them by the feet. You get 108 feet for $1,700. There is not a town in this Dominion which would not give the lot in order to have a public building. I think myself that the government should buy their lots but only pay reasonable prices. The minister ought to lay down some policy with regard to the erection of public buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was in hopes the other side would lay down the basis.

Mr. LAKE.

Mr. SPROULE. We are not charged with the responsibiliy.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The Posmaster General lays down a policy so far as free delivery of the mails is concerned. There must be so much revenue and so much population. I would not have the nerve to ask for a $30,000 public building for a place with 500 of a population. There should be some policy laid down. Make the population 1,500 or 1,000 or 2,000 and take the revenue into consideration. Then you will have something substantial to go on.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would you give a public building to every town having that population ?

Mr. CLEMENTS. Always taking into consideration the revenue and the customs. I put in a claim the other day for a public building. I advocated a public building for the town of Tilbury and the minister kindly said he would take my application into his consideration.

Maple Creek public building, $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Have you bought the site ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The property is situated on the corner of Gaspard street. It is 150 feet by 130. The building will be a two story brick building with stone foundation. Dimensions 59 feet by 54.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the price of the lot?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is a government site

Mr. BENNETT. What is the population of the place?

Mr. PUGSLEY. According to the last census, 687.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the total cost, everything included?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Including everything, $32,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What railway is this town on?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I saw Maple Creek ten years ago and admired the town site at that time. I had the pleasure of seeing it again last season. It looks to me as if it ought to be an important town, but it seemed to me that it was about the same size when I saw it last season as it was on the occasion of my first visit. This would indicate that some of the western towns do not go ahead as some of their enthusiastic admirers seem to think.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The postal revenue is $2,424. Apparently Maple Creek does more business than many towns of larger population.

Mr. SPROULE. It is the centre of an important ranching district.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Medicine Hat public building, $22,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of this $15,000 is a revote. This is to complete the building.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Including everything, $47,108.06.

Mr. BENNETT. When will it be finished?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It should have been finished on December 4 last. It is now about ready for the roof; there has been delay.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the contract let by tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. Five tenders were received and the tenders of Messrs Oakes & Everard was accepted.

Prince Albert penitentiary—site, &c., $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I believe the site that is being bought at Prince Albert for a penitentiary is admirably well suited for that purpose. We have purchased from different parties lots of 183 acres, 165 acres, 125 acres and 174 acres. The total cost is $30,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Where is it located?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is within the boundaries of Prince Albert. I am told that it is a very desirable property.

Mr. SPROULE. Better cut it up and sell it for post office sites. If you get prices such as you paid in Humboldt you will make money.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the contract let?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. The plans have not been prepared yet.

Mr. BENNETT. And no steps will be taken under this vote to construct the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should suppose not. We might prepare plans and something might be done, but I am not really prepared to say.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What will be done in the meantime with the land that has been bought?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will be left. I understand that the Minister of Justice is of the opinion that this will be needed for the purposes of a penitentiary within a short time. I am told that the site is exceedingly well adapted for the purpose.

Mr. CLEMENTS. What is the population of Prince Albert?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not that information before me, but I should think it would be about 5,000.

Mr. CLEMENTS. It seems to me that this 640 acres of land at $30,000 within the town site of Prince Albert is not out of the way. It figures out at about $47 an acre. There is a lesson here for some of the hon. gentlemen who have been claiming $1,000 a lot in small towns.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it necessary to have 640 acres for a penitentiary? Is there any other place in Canada where the penitentiary has half that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are urged to make a further purchase.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. In my constituency we have the Stony Mountain penitentiary with 640 acres.

Mr. SPROULE. It is all rock.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. There are 40 acres of rock where the building is. And, if I mistake not, besides what I have stated, they have 240 acres of hay land.

Mr. BENNETT. No contract will be entered into under this vote?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not for a building.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see what you need so much land for unless you are going to speculate in it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At the penitentiary in Dorchester, N.B., they have, I think, 700 acres.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. With a couple of hundred convicts, you can work a lot of land.

Regina post office, custom house, &c., $88,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to complete the public building. It is on the corner of 11th avenue and Scarth street.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the total estimated cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Including every thing, $212,565.87. It is to be used for post office and customs house. Regina is a rapidly growing town.

Mr. LAKE. Could the minister give us any information about the site and the price?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The purchase was made from the Knox Presbyterian Church of Regina, at a cost of $10,000.

Saskatoon public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is under contract. The total cost including site, heating, electric wiring, is $90,614. We paid $9,000 for the site, which is situated on the corner of Second avenue and Twenty-first street. The building is to have a frontage of 64 feet by

72. It is to be used for a land office, customs, inland revenue, post office and weights and measures.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The hon. gentleman's predecessor claimed that this building would cost in the neighbourhood of $42,000 or $43,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was an under estimate. Mr. Stewart is the clerk of works; he gets $4 per day. The contract was let on the 27th of June, 1907, and calls for completion on the 1st of April, 1909. The amount of the contract is $64,500.

Mr. BENNETT. Where do the other $26,000 come in ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is made up by the boilers for heating, the site, survey, legal expenses, printing, advertisements, heating, electric wiring, fixtures, fittings, furniture, sidewalks, fences, superintendence and contingencies.

Yorkton public building, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site cost $4,000, and is 100 feet by 120. The population of Yorkton by the last census was 1,363. The contract has not yet been let. The chief architect has not made the plans yet, but I presume it will be a building like at Dauphin, running from $30,000 to $35,000, exclusive of the land, probably.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Yorkton is a thriving town. I think this price is about $40 a foot, which is exactly the price paid for the lot in Humboldt. But Yorkton has a population three times that of Humboldt, and lots in Yorkton should be much more valuable than Humboldt.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will we take up on Monday ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think it was understood that the debate on the Election Bill was to be resumed. I did not ask the Prime Minister before he left, but I think that is the understanding. If we resume Supply, it will be with the estimates for Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.05 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 18, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 167) respecting the Phœnix Assurance Company, Limited.—Mr. E. M. Macdonald.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Bill (No. 166) to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act, in so far as the same affects the province of Nova Scotia.—Mr. Aylesworth.

YUKON ACT AMENDENT.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 169) to amend the Yukon Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. member be good enough to give an explanation ?

Mr. OLIVER. The Bill is very short. It contains three principal provisions. One is to provide for an entirely elective council for the Yukon Territory. Another is to provide for an audit of the public accounts of the Yukon Territory by the Auditor General's office. The third is in regard to the office of public administrator of the estates of deceased persons in the Yukon Territory, to provide for security and duties and an audit of his accounts.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. BERGERON.

On the orders of the day being called :

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I rise to a question of privilege. In the Regina 'Leader,' which has been placed in my hands, I find an article concerning myself to which I desire to draw the attention of the House. I shall not read the whole article, as it contains matters which are a subject of discussion which I do not want to take up with that paper, but I shall read the portion of the article which I wish to contradict, and which deals with a matter of fact. The part to which I object is as follows :—

All Canada knew, moreover, that in the Prince Albert by-election, Mr. Haultain and Mr. Bradshaw were doing their utmost to stir up anew all the anti-Catholic prejudices on the autonomy school clause, and were making every possible use and abuse of the text of Mr. Turgeon's nationality and religion. Knowing all this, Mr. Bergeron deliberately went to Prince Albert on the eve of that by-election, stood deliberately on the same platform with Mr. Haultain and Mr. Bradshaw in a campaign meeting and did deliberately all he could to procure Mr. Turgeon's defeat and Mr. Bradshaw's election on a platform conceived in anti-Catholic prejudice and nothing else. So entirely did Mr. Bergeron identify himself with the anti-Catholic candidate in Prince Albert and wish for Mr. Turgeon's defeat, that on the following evening at Rosthern he publicly referred to Mr. Bradshaw as 'our condidate' and gloated over his possible election. Mr. Bergeron's championship of the minority is indelibly besmirched with shameless insincerity.

I desire to say that there is not one word of truth in the whole of the part of the article which I have read. I was not on the platform with any of the gentlemen mentioned. I never said one word, directly or indirectly about the local elections and I never called Mr. Bradshaw or anybody else 'my candidate.' I may say that both of us, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and myself, kept scrupulously out of the legal fight. We spoke of nothing but federal issues.

ALLEGED IMMIGRATION FRAUDS AT HALIFAX.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) whether it is correct, as stated in the press that a Mr. Joseph Bernstein, who, I think, was an interpreter at Halifax, has been dismissed as the result of an investigation held recently. I would also ask whether or not the same commissioner investigated any other matter—whether there has been any investigation into the circumstances which were commented on in the press with regard to certain facts disclosed in the police court in London some two or three months ago.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior?. The complaints against Mr. Bernstein have been fully investigated and the result has been the production of a great deal of conflicting evidence. If the House desires, I shall lay a report of the investigation on the table. The conclusion arrived at by the investigating officer was that although the charges against Mr. Bernstein were not fully substantiated, it was a question whether the amount of suspicion which had been engendered against him had not done away with his usefulness. I do not know what my hon. friend would do if he had such a report presented to him, but I must say it left me in a somewhat undecided frame of mind. With regard to the Dickey matter, we have had several inquiries concerning it which I am not in a position to place before the House, but so far as I have beee able to ascertain yet, there has been nothing disclosed beyond what has already been published. That is to say, we have not been able to substantiate the more extreme charges which were made against Dr. Dickey. He has offered an explanation of his conduct, and I have not been able to overthrow that explanation although I have examined it as carefully as possible.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood the hon. minister said that the same commissioner was investigating both matters.

Mr. OLIVER. No. Perhaps I did say that the same commissioner would investigate both, but what I wish to say now is that I had a separate investigation made apart from that altogether.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That has not been concluded ?

Mr. OLIVER. It has, but it is of a character which I would not feel warranted in placing before the House. It was an entirely confidential investigation. The investigation which was made by the officer who inquired into the case of Bernstein was on the surface. He took what information he could which was open to the public.

THE ALGOMA STEEL COMPANY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals been directed to the fact that he Algoma Steel Company has stopped operations for the present and that the stoppage is said to be due to some extent to the lack of orders. I would also ask whether the minister has under consideration the possibility of placing further orders with the company in order that work might be resumed whether these orders might come from the Intercolonial or the Transcontinental Railway Commission.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals. Of course the consideration of any large work such as that would have to depend on our getting the cash to carry it on. The difficulty in the Soo works has been brought to the attention of the Railway Department. As far as the Intercolonial Railway is concerned, I have not been considering the purchase of any rails from the Soo industry, but the question is under consideration with the Transcontinental Railway Commission to see whether anything can be done to relieve the situation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am sorry to hear that the country is in so bad a condition financially as the minister seems to suggest.

STRIKE AT OWEN SOUND.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Lemieux) what steps have been taken in connection with the strike at Owen Sound ?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Minister of Labour). I have not yet received any report from the officers as regards this riot—I do not know that I should call it a strike—which has taken place at Owen Sound. My information is that there was no strike in the proper sense of the word. I am informed that there was no engagement by the company and therefore no employer and no employee, and the law could not be applied. That is my own private information. I have no official information. I have asked the Deputy Minister of Labour to prepare a report. If my hon. friend will call my attention to this riot a little later, I may be able to impart more information to the House.

DAMAGE BY WATER TO THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the attention of the Minister of Railways been directed to a statement in the public press that a portion of the National Transcontinental is partially flooded, and I notice the suggestion that there seems to have been some mistake in the estimate of what high water levels might be expected. I would ask whether or not there is anything in the report that a portion of the railway in the vicinity of La Tuque will have to be reconstructed and that a portion of the track will require to be rebuilt at a distance from the place where it has already been partially constructed.

Mr. GRAHAM. That matter has not been brought to my attention but I shall make some inquiries.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Let me just read the despatch in the Montreal 'Gazette' of 16th inst. :

La Tuque, Que., May 15—(Special).—The unusual height of the St. Maurice river this spring has apparently shown up a bad engineering mistake in the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway in this district, which may necessitate a complete redrafting of the plans. At the present moment several miles of the roadbed of the new railroad are several feet under water; in fact, one of the contractors came into La Tuque this afternoon and reported that he had paddled in a canoe for two miles over the tracks of the railway, there being two feet and more of water over the tracks during the entire distance.

The floods will undoubtedly cause havoc on the work, the swiftly rushing water undermining the roadbed. It is also stated by the engineers that the piers on the new bridges have been greatly damaged, and many of them will have to be rebuilt during the summer, and the bridges probably elevated.

There is every indication that in planning the road the engineers miscalculated the high water levels, and have laid the road in such a way that it will be flooded whenever the St. Maurice rises unusually high. The river this spring has risen higher than it has done for many years past, and the whole country in this district is flooded. This is, perhaps, fortunate, as it has shown the mistake by the engineers before the road was completed. Whether the plans are changed or not the present floods will cause great expense to the contractors, as the roadbed will be practically ruined by washouts.

Mr. GRAHAM. I shall make inquiries.

IMMIGRATION ACT.

Mr. LENNOX. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to a matter concerning which I asked a question the other day. At what date may we definitely expect to have the order in council in reference to immigration which we were informed had been passed pursuant to the recent amendment of the Immigration Act. The minister has promised it on one or two occasions but it has not yet come down.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I expect to be able to give the hon. gentleman a definite answer tomorrow.

QUEBEC BRIDGE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. MONK. I ask the Minister of Railways when we may expect that the report of the Royal Commission on the Quebec Bridge will be printed. As there is a committee named to inquire into certain matters connected with the bridge it is important we should have that report printed in full as soon as possible.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I understand that the copy is all in. It seems to be a question whether there is to be an index and table of contents. The printer makes this explanation :

The report consists of technical matter and a number of technical signs were required which had to be ordered and we expect to receive these every day. They were ordered some weeks ago. The above remark applies to volume 1; there will be a second colume consisting of evidence, &c.

Mr. MONK. I would suggest that we might have the report without the index as soon as possible and the index might be added afterwards.

MONTREAL POST OFFICE BUILDING—STRIKE.

Mr. VERVILLE. Is the Minister of Labour aware that there is a strike going on at the Montreal post office ? Is he aware that Mr. Peter Lyall, the contractor, refuses to pay the men under the fair wage clause of this contract? Is it the intention of the government to take any action to compel him to pay the wages he has contracted to pay?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). There is, of course, no strike in the Montreal post office, if the hon. gentleman refers to the employees. There is, I understand, a difficulty between Peter Lyall & Sons, the contractors, and the bricklayers and stonecutters who are engaged in constructing the addition to the post office. The contract between Peter Lyall & Sons and the government contains the fair wage clause. The contract was let on October 12, 1907, and the fair wage schedule was prepared by the Department of Labour in accordance with the fair wage resolution of 1900. I am not officially informed that there is a strike among the bricklayers, but my hon. friend (Mr. Verville) has told me that the bricklayers are protesting against a reduction in their wages. There has been a complaint lodged against the contractors by the stonecutters who allege that Peter Lyall & Sons have sublet the contract for stone cutting contrary to the provisions of the fair wage clause of 1900. As soon as I received the complaint from the stonecutters I immediately sent Mr. Dubreuil, the fair wage officer to investigate and he reported that the complaint was well founded and that report has been forwarded by my department of the Department of Public Works. Although I am not officially informed as to a strike among the bricklayers, I intend, at the request of my hon. friend (Mr. Verville) to send the fair wage officer to Montreal to investigate the matter.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES.

House in committee on Bill (No. 151) respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company—Mr. Crawford.

Mr. GRAHAM. Stand.

Mr. LENNOX. I don't want to pick a quarrel with the Minister of Railways because he is usually very fair, but the other night in my absence he seemed to think that the opposition were the cause of this Bill standing. During the four weeks it has been before the House it has been called about a dozen times and except on two occasions the government asked that it should stand. I am ready to go on now. I am quite prepared to bow to what the government say in reference to it, but I want to say that should I not be here on an occasion when it is called I expect the Bill to stand. I have been here ten times when it was called with a number of books ready to proceed, and only twice did I ask that it should stand on my account.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have asked it to stand several times and my hon. friend has asked it to stand several times, and I suppose we really ought to be ready to go on with it whenever it is called.

Mr. LENNOX. Then let it go on now.

Mr. GRAHAM. I ask it to stand to-day as a matter of convenience. I agreed to postpone it the other day because my hon. friend was not here, but if we both attend to business we ought to get rid of it some time this week.

Progress reported.

BELLEVILLE PRINCE EDWARD BRIDGE COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 20) respecting the Belleville Prince Edward Bridge Company—Mr. Porter.

Mr. FIELDING. It was understood the other night that this Bill should stand in the absence of the hon. gentleman in charge of it, and I suppose the same rule will prevail to-day.

Progress reported.

SASKATCHEWAN POWER COMPANY

House in committee on Bill (No. 153) to incorporate the Saskatchewan Power Company—Mr. McCraney.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill is not present and I would ask it to stand. The last clause of this Bill gives the promoters the right to delay this work for four years. I have communicated with some gentlemen in Saskatoon, and if they are satisfied with the Bill I have no objection to its going through. In the meantime it had better stand.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member (Mr. McCraney) in charge of the Bill is not present. Unless he has asked somebody to act for him, I would ask that the suggestion be accepted and would move that progress be reported on the Bill.

Progress reported.

PACIFIC AND ATLANTIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 138) respecting the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company.—Mr. Dyment.

Mr. BERGERON. The promoter of this Bill is not present either.

Mr. FIELDING. I move that progress be reported.

Progress reported.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 164) for the relief of Edith May Gilmore.—Mr. J. D. Reid.

QUESTIONS.

THE RAMA INDIANS.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. What sums are at the credit of the Rama Indians with the government?
2. What interest or sums are annually paid these Indians?
3. Under what conditions is it possible to draw from the fund to the credit of the Indians?
4. Have moneys been at any time drawn from the funds of the Rama Indians?
5. Have all legal procedures been taken in the removal from the Indian fund of these sums?
6. Will the government lay upon the table of the House a copy of all correspondence in the matter of withdrawing such sums?
7. Was the consent of Indian council obtained for withdrawal of these moneys?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. On the 31st of March, 1908, the funds at the credit of the Rama Indians were as follows :

Capital	$49,024 82
Interest	722 54
	$49,747 36

2. In 1907, $1,200 was paid to these Indians.

3. The conditions under which it is possible to draw from the capital funds at the credit of the Indians are regulated by sections 87-90 of the Indian Act ; that is, the consent of the band and the authority of His Excellency have to be obtained for any capital expenditure—except for surveys, compensation to Indians for improvements or for any interests they have in lands taken from them ; or by way of contribution to schools attended by Indians : in these three cases the authority of His Excellency in council is sufficient without the consent of the Indians. Expenditure from interest is undertaken at the request of the Indians from time to time with the concurrence of the department.

4. Money is constantly being drawn from the funds of the Rama Indians. The expenditure from interest is for general purposes, including interest distribution in equal per capita amounts semi-annually ; for the payment of medical attendance ; and for other miscellaneous purposes. Expenditure frequently takes place from capital. The expenditure from the latter fund for the five years ending the 31st of March, 1908, has been :

For surveys	$1,176 91
For sidewalks	387 20

5. Yes.

6. If necessary the government will lay upon the table of the House copies of correspondence dealing with the withdrawals from capital for the five years period mentioned in answer to question 4.

7. The expenditure for sidewalks was agreed upon by the Indians. The expenditure for surveys was taken from capital without the consent of the Indians, under section 89 of the Indian Act.

ANGLO-FRENCH EXHIBITION—REPRESENTATIVE OF CANADA.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Who are the persons appointed by the government to represent Canada at the Anglo-French exhibition being held in London?

2. What are the salaries and travelling allowances established for each such person?

3. How much has been paid on account to each?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) :

1. The permanent Canadian Exhibition commissioner, Mr. William Hutchison, is so far the only person appointed to represent Canada.

2. His salary is $3,000 per annum and he is given a living allowance of $20 a day for nine months of the year and $10 a day for three months.

3. Up to the 18th instant he has been given on account, $3,605.15.

CAMPBELLTON WHARF—PILING.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. What amount of piling was used in connection with the public wharf at Campbellton this year?

2. Who supplied the piling, and at what price per foot?

3. Were tenders asked for in connection with the supplying of piling in this wharf?

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. No piling was supplied this year (1908); the accountant's books show the following was supplied in 1907, 5,632 lineal feet. This piling was required to be from 45 to 50 feet in length.

2. Messrs. Mann & Baxter, of Campbellton ; 12 per lineal foot.

3. No.

CAMPBELLTON HARBOUR—GAS BUOYS.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. How many gas buoys are in use in the harbour of Campbellton, New Brunswick, and for how long have they been in use there?

2. Who has the job of placing and taking up said buoys each season?

3. Were tenders asked for before the job was let?

4. If so, who were the tenderers and what were the several amounts?

5. What sum is paid for placing and taking up said buoys each season?

6. Are tenders asked for each season for this work?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine) :

1. Six gas buoys are maintained on the Restigouche river between Campbellton and Dalhousie, N.B. Gas buoys were placed in this district for the first time in 1906.

2. The Shives Lumber Company of Campbellton, N.B.

3 and 4. No. The Shives Lumber Company appeared to have the best equipment for handling the gas buoys and the work was placed in their hands.

5. In 1906, $885.88 for five buoys. After that year $150 per annum for each buoy.

6. No. As the work was very well performed by the Shives Lumber Company and the price is reasonable, an arrangement was made with them to maintain the buoys at $150 per annum for each buoy.

THE MINT—MANUFACTURE OF SILVER COINS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked :

1. How many dollars worth of silver has been coined in the mint since it opened, and what amount of said coin has been disposed of outside of souvenir coins?

2. Is it the intention of the government to continue the manufacture and storing of silver coins?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. $313,338.35—of this amount $28,025 has been received from the mint and issued to the several assistant receivers general.

2. The amount of silver coins manufactured will be regulated from time to time by the demand for that class of currency.

PAYMENTS TO MR. EUGENE FORTIER, CHICOUTIMI.

Mr. MORIN asked:

1. What amounts have been paid Mr. Eugene Fortier, painter and decorator of the town of Chicoutimi, by the Department of Public Works, since May 1, 1905, to date?

2. What was the nature of the services rendered?

3. Wherein are they mentioned in the Auditor General's Report for 1905-6, and 1906-7?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1, 2 and 3. March 30, 1906 (Auditor General's Report, 1905-6, page V—228), painting, papering and repairing windows, $153.60; March 16, 1907 (Auditor General's Report, not published), sundry painting on tugs and dredges, $13; September 2, 1907, (Auditor's Report, not published), painting tug 'Monitor,' $39.50; September 23, 1907, (Auditor's Report, not published), painting tug 'Storm King,' $60.25; total, $266.35.

RIDEAU CANAL—BUOYS BETWEEN MERRICKVILLE AND EDMOND RAPIDS.

Mr. J. D. REID asked:

1. Had B. McGrath the contract for lighting buoys between Merrickville and Edmond Rapids on Rideau canal during season, 1907? If so, at what price?

2. Were tenders publicly called for? If so, how many tenders were received?

3. Has B. McGrath the contract for the same work for season 1908? If so, were public tenders called for? If not, why not?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. No. Byron McCaw is the contractor. $450 for the balance of the season from 1st June.

2. Yes. Five.

3. No. The present contractor is working under this contract which the department had the option of continuing in operation for three years and has continued as the service given last year was satisfactory.

LAND SUBSIDIES TO RAILROADS.

Mr. AMES asked:

What area of land was granted by way of subsidy to railroads during each of the following years: 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895 and 1896?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). 1892, none; 1893, none; 1894, 793,600 acres; 1895, none; 1896, none.

THE FRENCH TREATY.

Mr. BRISTOL—by Mr. Blain—asked:

When is it expected that the French treaty will go into effect?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). It is difficult to forecast the time for coming into effect of the treaty. My hon. friend is aware that the Canadian parliament has approved the treaty. But, so far, the treaty has received the approval of only one branch of the French Chambers, and until it has received the approval of the second branch of the French Chambers we cannot anticipate when it will be brought into effect.

IMPORTATION OF OPIUM.

Mr. ELSON asked:

1. What amount of money has been received by the government as duty upon the importation of crude opium in the years 1906 and 1907, respectively?

2. What amount has been received on powdered opium in 1906 and 1907, respectively, and what amount on opium prepaid for smoking?

3. Has the government received any petition or petitions from British Columbia asking for the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of opium?

4. Is it the intention of the government to introduce a Bill this session, prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of opium other than for medicinal purposes?

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1. The amount of duty collected by the government on crude opium during the fiscal year 1906, was $47,281.34, and during the fiscal year 1907, $75,028.34.

2. The amount of duty collected by the government on powdered opium during the fiscal year 1906, was $218.25, and during the fiscal year 1907, $423. There was no duty collected during these years on opium prepared for smoking.

3. None by the Department of Customs so far as the officers are aware. I spoke to the First Minister about it, and he thought that he might have had communication or representations in reference to the question from some quarter, but he thought not from British Columbia. I suggest that the hon. gentleman ask the Prime Minister when he is in his place.

4. I have not an answer.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—DELAYS OF MARITIME EXPRESS.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville) asked:

1. How many locomotives belonging to the Intercolonial Railway are lying idle at Moncton awaiting repairs?

2. How many are at Halifax, Rivière du Loup and other points, awaiting repairs?

3. How many times during the month of January was the maritime express from Montreal late when arriving at Halifax, and how many hours? Also how many times was it late during February, March and April?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Twenty-one at Moncton.

2. None at Halifax, Rivière du Loup 2, Campbellton, 1.

3. Month of January, 1908.—Five occasions 4 to 16 minutes late; Three occasions 1 hour to 1 hour and 15 minutes late; seven occasions 1 hour and 50 minutes to 2 hours and 30 minutes late; five occasions 3 hours to 6 hours and 40 minutes late; five occasions 5 hours to 6 hours late; one occasion 9 hours and 17 minutes late.

Month of February, 1908.—Seven occasions 11 minutes to 55 minutes late; six occasions 1 hour to 1 hour and 55 minutes late; four occasions 2 hours and 13 minutes to 2 hours and 30 minutes late; 2 occasions 3 hours and 11 minutes to 3 hours and 15 minutes late; five occasions 4 hours to 5 hours late; three occasions 6 hours and 5 minutes to 6 hours and 45 minutes late; one occasion 7 hours and 12 minutes late; one occasion 9 hours and 35 minutes late.

Month of March, 1908.—Nine occasions 3 minutes to 33 minutes late; one occasion 51 minutes late; one occasion 57 minutes late; nine occasions 1 hour and 10 minutes to 1 hour and 55 minutes late; four occasions 2 hours and 23 minutes to 2 hours and 29 minutes late; one occasion 3 hours and 41 minutes; one occasion 4 hours and 33 minutes late; one occasion 5 hours and 8 minutes late; one occasion 9 hours late.

Month of April, 1908.—Fourteen occasions 8 minutes to 55 minutes late; five occasions 1 hour and 20 minutes to 2 hours late; five occasions 2 hours and 5 minutes to 2 hours and 55 minutes late; 1 occasion 4 hours and 29 minutes late; one occasion 6 hours and 16 minutes late.

PURCHASE OF GOODS FROM THE T. LINDSAY COMPANY.

Mr. BERGERON asked:

1. What is the amount of goods purchased from the T. Lindsay Company, Limited, of this city, for the purposes of the Anglo-French Exhibition in London?

2. What kind of goods and at what price?

3. Are the goods so acquired to be exhibited marked at their cost price?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture):

1. $18.36.

2. 102 yards Hessian at 18 cents per yard.

3. The goods purchased are not to be exhibited. They were used for packing.

Mr. J. D. REID.

DUTY ON UNLEAVENED BREAD.

Mr. BRISTOL—by Mr. Blain—asked:

Has any petition been received at any time by the government or any member of it, or any department of the government for placing a duty on unleavened bread? If so, what is the date of such petition or request, and by whom was the same signed?

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I will say a few words prefacing my answers, so that they may be better understood. There has been a duty on unleavened bread, as the department understands it, for years and years, dating away back to the 1894 tariff, and before that, I believe. My colleague the Minister of Finance as well as myself cannot recollect any representations having been made to us on that question during the tariff commission. I think my answers will be satisfactory to the hon. gentleman, because he probably refers to something that has happened lately.

Unleavened bread has been dutiable under the present tariff and under previous customs tariffs, but remission of such duty has been made at times by order in council.

The Customs Department has no information as to petitions for placing duty on unleavened bread. Representations, however, have been made to the Department of Customs by solicitors on behalf of the National Matzo and Biscuit Company, Limited, asking that the provisions of the customs tariff in respect of the duty on unleavened bread be observed.

SUBSIDIES TO THE PROVINCES.

Mr. BERGERON asked:

1. What was the amount of the provincial subsidy paid to the different provinces of Canada by the Dominion government before the adjustment of such subsidies?

2. What is the subsidy now?

3. How much was paid to each province before such adjustment, and how much since?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. The annual subsidies paid to the different provinces before the passing of the British North America Act, 1907, were as follows:

Ontario	$1,339,287.28
Quebec	1,086,713.48
Nova Scotia	432,805.56
New Brunswick	491,360.96
Manitoba, including allowances for lands, &c.	621,497.46
British Columbia	307,076.66
Prince Edward Island	251,051.98
Alberta, including allowances for lands, &c.	1,124,125.00
Saskatchewan, including allowances for lands, &c.	1,130,335.40
	$6,784,253.78

2. The annual subsidies paid to the different provinces since the passing of the British North America Act, 1907, are as follows:

Ontario	$2,128,772,08
Quebec	1,686,579.08
Nova Scotia	610,464.76
New Brunswick	621,360.96
Manitoba, including allowances for lands, &c.	751,497.46
British Columbia	522,076.66
Prince Edward Island	321,051.98
Alberta, including allowances for lands, &c.	1,254,125.00
Saskatchewan, including allowances for lands, &c.	1,260,335.40
	$9,156,263.38

3. Answered by 1 and 2.

ALBERT G. McDONALD—COMMISSION ON IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. ALCORN asked:

1. What sum has been claimed by Albert G. McDonald, of Pictou, Ontario, as payable by the government for commission on immigrants placed with farmers or other employers, between March 28, 1907, and May 10, 1908?

2. Has said McDonald claimed payment of any other, and what, sum, or any, and what account other than for commission in respect of such immigrants so placed?

3. What sum has been paid said McDonald for commission, and on any other account connected with placing immigrants during the period aforesaid?

4. Did or does the government dispute any and what part of any such claims, and upon what grounds?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. $294.

2. Claimed $12.25 expended in housing and feeding immigrants.

3. $270 paid in commissions.

4. Government refused to pay account for board, &c., as instructions stated 'The department will not be responsible for any other expense than the $2 per capita commission.'

There is a dispute as to the claims of commission to the amount of $30.

DREDGING AT PORT ARTHUR AND FORT WILLIAM.

Mr. BENNETT asked:

1. What amount has been paid for dredging at Port Arthur and Fort William or Mission river during the season of 1907?

2. To whom were any amounts paid therefor?

3. What quantity of material was removed at each of said points, and what was the nature of the material or materials?

4. What were the prices paid at each of said points for different kinds of material removed?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. Port Arthur, $29,523.71; Fort William, $309,705.64; Kaministiquia and Mission Rivers.

2. R. Weddell and Great Lakes Dredging Company.

3. Port Arthur, 306,933 cubic yards of clay and sand; Fort William, 2,859,238 cubic yards of rock, sand and clay.

4. Port Arthur: Rock, $3; all other materials, 9½ cents per cubic yard, scow measurement, with an additional charge for haulage of 1 cent a yard for each extra mile.

Fort William and Mission River: $2 for rock and 9 cents for all other materials, scow measurement, with an additional charge for haulage of 1 cent for each extra mile.

LIGHT-KEEPER, INGONISH ISLAND.

Mr. BERGERON asked:

1. Who is employed by the government as light-keeper on Ingonish island, in the province of Nova Scotia, what salary does he receive, and where is his place of residence?

2. Is it true that the said light-keeper has not resided upon the island during the past winter months and up to the present time, and that he has employed another man to attend to his duties?

3. Has the government sanctioned this subappointment?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. (a) Robie V. Warren. (b) $360 per annum. (c) Ingonish, N.S.

2 and 3. The department has no such information.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—MEDICAL SERVICE.

Mr. MORIN asked:

1. Who is the medical officer employed by the construction commission upon the eastern portion of the Transcontinental Railway?

2. Is it a Mr. Parent? If so, what is his salary per annum?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The medical service and attendance on men employed on construction are furnished by the contractors, and this service is carried on under the supervision of the inspectors of the Department of Agriculture. The only medical officers employed by the commission, are as follows:

J. B. Piegay, District 'C,' salary $80 a month; D. Handfield, District 'C,' salary $75 a month; Geo. R. Johnson, District 'D,' salary $80 a month; W. J. Taugher, District 'D,' salary $75 a month.

2. No.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

House resumed adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Aylesworth for the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act and the proposed amendment of Mr. W. J. Roche thereto

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Kootenay). Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to detain the House at any great length discussing this matter as it has already been referred to and considered pretty thoroughly by members on both sides of the House. However, there are a few features of the case that I would like to draw the attention of the House to and to emphasize. The question of the preparation of the voters' list for a federal election in the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia, which is involved in the first section of the Bill introduced into this House by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), is one of the principal features that has been discussed so far. Between 1885 and 1898 the Dominion government kept control of the lists to be used in elections for federal purposes. In 1898 the government of that day saw fit to delegate to the different provinces of Canada, under certain restrictions, the power to make up and revise the lists that should be used in Dominion elections. I have no doubt that the government of that day felt that they had good reasons for bringing about that change. I did not have the advantage of being a member of the House at that time, nor of having been in the position to look thoroughly into the matter or to participate in the debates that took place, but I notice, from the extracts which have been read in the House, that there was a distinct line of cleavage as between the Liberal party, then the government of the day, and the Conservative party, or the party in opposition, as to whether or not it was advisable to make that change in the franchise law. It is equally apparent to me from those extracts that have been read here that while the government of the day delegated this power to the provinces they did not divest themselves of the right or power at any time, for certain reasons and under certain conditions, to take back unto themselves that power to have control over their own lists. Speaking generally, in so far as I see the matter now, I believe to a very great extent in the principle of the federal government controlling the preparation of their own lists for federal elections, but whether that was or was not a wise move in 1898 is a matetr that I am not going to discuss. I am not going to quarrel with the position taken by the government or the position taken by the opposition. It was an experiment and the question is: Has it worked out satisfactory in all cases? If there are cases in which it has not worked out satisfactorily, the government have reserved to themselves the right to take control of these lists in cases where the privilege has been abused. I will deal first with the question as it seems to me to affect the province of Manitoba, and secondly with the question as it affects the province of British Columbia. In so far as the question affects the province of Manitoba, I have sat in this House and listened to members who have spoken on both sides; I have, as it were, taken the part, if I may say so, of an outsider in order that I might come to a fair and reasonable conclusion as to whether or not our hon. friends opposite from the province of Manitoba have any grievance with regard to the provisions of this Bill as it would affect them. I am sure my hon. friends opposite will not expect me to give more credence to the statement made by themselves than to the statements made by hon. members from Manitoba on this side of the House. I think I will be taken as having acted fairly towards them if I say that in coming to the conclusion at which I have arrived I have given to them the same degree of credence that I have given to my hon. friends on this side of the House. It has been borne in upon my mind, in listening to this discussion, from that standpoint that whatever reason may have been present in the mind of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice when he introduced this Bill or in the minds of members of the government who agreed with him in introducing it, as to the necessity of applying its provisions to the province of Manitoba, there are the greatest reasons for retaining this provision in the Bill. It strikes me that there are only three arguable grounds upon which our friends opposite can base their objections to this Bill as it was originally brought into the House. The first ground is the taking away of the right of the province of Manitoba; the second ground is the fear that has been stated to exist in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite from the province of Manitoba that the preparation of the lists will partly be done under government officials, under the Bill as it was originally introduced, and that they will not receive fair treatment at the hands of officials appointed by the government, and the third reason, if these two are disposed of, is the fact that they are singling out or separating Manitoba from the other provinces of Canada and applying this legislation to it. To my mind these three reasons are all the real reasons that can be urged against this legislation. Let us proceed to take these reasons one by one and to discuss them briefly. Take the first reason, namely, the taking away of a right. I think my hon. friends will not dispute the point when I say that there is no inherent right in the province of Manitoba or any other province of Canada to prepare, for federal elections, federal lists. That is not a right given to them the same as many other rights were given to the provinces by the British North America Act. What they have is not an inherent right. It is simply a power delegated to them by the Franchise Act passed by the Dominion parliament in 1898. Now you can delegate a power for a time and you can take back that power. Having delegated that power, not only can you take it back from the province of Manitoba but you can take it back from every other province in the Dominion. In 1898 this parliament delegated to the different provinces a power which was inherent in itself and so the taking back of that power is not robbing a province of its inherent right nor is it seizing the franchise of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not discrediting the honesty and fairness and the sincerity of Manitoba in making up the voters' lists when you take back the power from that province and not from the other provinces?

Mr. GALLIHER. I will deal with that phase of the question in a moment.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. Are you delegating powers to the provinces in any proper sense of the term when you merely accept their work in the preparation of the voters' list?

Mr. GALLIHER. When you accept their work?

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. Is it delegating powers to a province when you merely accept the work of the province for your own purpose?

Mr. GALLIHER. My statement is that certain powers are delegated to the provinces with regard to the preparation and revision of these lists.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman said a moment ago that this parliament delegated the powers to the provinces.

Mr. GALLIHER. This parliament did delegate power. It said: We will take the lists of the province of Manitoba as they are prepared and revised by provincial authority.

An hon. MEMBER. You adopt their work merely.

Mr. GALLIHER. You adopt their work, but you must have delegated certain powers or otherwise the Dominion itself would have to prepare the lists. I stand by my first statement in the matter. If I am correct in my premises that disposes of the first objection, because, as I pointed out, there is no inherent power vested in the province of Manitoba to hold control over federal voters' lists any longer than the federal parliament permits it to hold that control. Now, as to the fear expressed by hon. gentlemen opposite from Manitoba that the officials appointed by the Dominion government will not be fair in the making up of the lists, surely that fear is dissipated by the suggestion of the Prime Minister with regard to the preparation of these lists.

Mr. FOSTER. What does my hon. friend understand that suggestion to be?

Mr. GALLIHER. I will state what I understand it to be. I have read a good many of the newspapers on that point and no two of them seem to have grasped the same idea.

Mr. FOSTER. What does my hon. friend think to be the reason for that—stupidity in the newspapers?

Mr. GALLIHER. Sometimes, perhaps.

Mr. FOSTER. Or a lack of definiteness of the part of the Prime Minister?

Mr. GALLIHER. Sometimes the newspapers have been stupid and purposely so, and while I do not mean to say that I am less stupid than the newspaper editors, there is no doubt in my mind as to what the Prime Minister meant. The proposition of the right hon. the Prime Minister is that the county court judges of Manitoba be appointed to revise the present existing lists or the lists as they may exist after the latest revision by the provincial authorities; that, taking those lists as a basis the registration clerks and other officials shall be appointed not by this government, but by the county court judges. That would take the whole modus operandi of the preparation and revision of these lists for the federal elections absolutely out of politics.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman mean that the judges having revised the lists under the provincial law are to immediately begin to revise them again under a Dominion law?

Mr. GALLIHER. The judges may have revised them under the provincial law, but before that revision many names are put upon these lists by the registrars who are appointed by the provincial government, and the proposition is that these registrars, or those who shall place before the revising judges the lists, shall not be appointed by the government of Manitoba or by the Dominion government either, but shall be appointed by the judges and responsible to the judges for their work.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Under what provision of the Manitoba Franchise Act do the registrars put names on the lists?

Mr. GALLIHER. I notice in to-day's 'Citizen' that the Hon. Mr. Rogers, Minister of Public Works for Manitoba—a gentleman whom I know very well—states that no name can be put upon the lists or taken off the lists except by the judges of the province under the present law.

Mr. STAPLES. That's right.

Mr. GALLIHER. The Hon. Mr. Rogers does not state that quite fairly because he knows that the registration clerks receive applications at stated times and stated places and many of these applications are written in on a list handed to the registrar, and if these lists are submitted regularly the judges cannot strike these names off unless they are objected to and the objections sustained.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Is there not a provision in the Provincial Act to enable representatives of both parties to be present when these sworn applications are received?

Mr. GALLIHER. I have no doubt.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). And is there not a provision that immediately the representative of either party may hand in an appeal to the registration clerk?

Mr. GALLIHER. That may all be, and for the present I am not quarrelling with the Manitoba Act.

Mr. ALCORN. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not object to being asked a question now and then during my address nor does it bother me much, but I do object to standing up here to be cross-examined by hon. gentlemen opposite with question after question. I do not interrupt very often when hon. gentlemen opposite are speaking, and I only wish the same courtesy to be extended to me. My hon. friend from Prince Edward county (Mr. Alcorn) will have his opportunity to speak. However, I have no objection to answering his question.

Mr. ALCORN. The hon. gentleman says the Premier announced that he intended to have lists made wholly under judicial authority.

Mr. GALLIHER. Hear, hear.

Mr. ALCORN. And that a certain modus operandi was suggested by the Premier for that purpose. Where in the right hon. gentleman's speech does the hon. gentleman find that modus operandi laid down? I might call his attention to this fact, that at the close of the right hon. gentleman's speech I asked this question:

> Has the right hon. gentleman mapped out or has he in his mind any modus operandi by which his new lists will be made altogether under judicial authority?
> Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think so. I think we will be prepared to do so at the proper time, when we are in committee.

Where else in the speech of the right hon. gentleman does the hon. gentleman find any modus operandi laid down?

Mr. GALLIHER. If my understanding of the right hon. the Prime Minister's suggestion is correct, and if I am stating what is correct, would my hon. friend (Mr. Alcorn) be prepared to accept an Act on lines such as I have suggested?

Mr. ALCORN. The lines are so very faint I do not think any one could accept or reject it.

Mr. GALLIHER. My hon. friend says the lines are very faint. At the risk of repetition I would say that my understanding of the proposition of the Prime Minister is that every official, including the revising judges, who shall take part in the preparation of these lists in Manitoba for federal purposes, shall be an official absolutely beyond the control of politics. Can you suggest any fairer method of preparing lists? Can any politician, either on the Conservative or on the Liberal side, say that this is not the fairest way in which a list can be prepared, to take it absolutely out of politics and place it in the hands of county court judges? My hon. friends cannot complain of the county court judges in Manitoba for in running over the names I find that five of the seven are appointments of their own, and I think I know them all, all honourable gentlemen in every sense of the word. I make that comment to show that no fault can be found with the majority of the judges on the ground that they will be Liberals.

Mr. ALCORN. Where in the speech will the hon. gentleman find that?

Mr. GALLIHER. The hon. gentleman will get his chance to speak and I shall be pleased to listen to him. As I say, my understanding of the proposition of the Prime Minister is that the lists of Manitoba, taking as a basis the lists as they will exist after the last provincial revision before a Dominion election, shall be revised by county court judges, that they shall be taken absolutely out of politics, so that every man, Grit or Tory, will have a fair opportunity of being on the list and a fair opportunity will be given to each party to have the names of any who should not be on the list struck off. I do not believe it is possible to suggest a fairer method.

Mr. CROCKET. Why apply that only to Manitoba?

Mr. GALLIHER. I am going to that. I think it is clear that any fear hon. gentlemen may have felt that the lists to be prepared under this Bill as it originally stood would be unfair, is met and completely obliterated by the proposition of the Prime Minister. Thus reason No. 2 disappears.

Reason No. 3, the singling out of Manitoba. I shall refer in this connection to some quotations of the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). I will be fair enough to admit at the start that if no good reasons are shown for singling out the province of Manitoba, that province should not be singled out. I make that as a flat proposition to start with. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has asked: Why do you select Manitoba and not Ontario or Nova Scotia or any other province? If you have a school of nine children, to use a homely expression, and one of those children for some cause or other deserves punishment, if you like to call it so——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh, hear, hear.

Mr. GALLIHER. My hon. friends laugh, but I said I was using a homely illustration; probably punishment is not the word, let us say deserves correction. My hon. friend would not say it was fair to the other eight provinces of the Dominion that you should correct them all for the fault that was committed by one.

Mr. FOSTER. How about the little boy, British Columbia.

Mr. GALLIHER. I shall come to the little boy 'British Columbia' later on. I do not intend to forget British Columbia. If no reasons can or will be given in the discussion why Manitoba should receive different treatment from the rest of the provinces, which is probably a better way to put it, I agree with my hon. friend that this Bill should not go through; but if it can be and has been shown and the very arguments of my hon. friends opposite as well as those of my friends on this side, have forced me to this conclusion—that in Manitoba, without reflecting on the government of that province, a state of affairs exists and has existed for some time by which justice is not done to all concerned, I would go almost as far as the Prime Minister himself did when he stated that it was the bounden duty of this government to interfere.

The hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), at page 8688 of 'Hansard', referring to the words of the Prime Minister in the debate of 1898; on the Franchise Act, quoted as follows:

> But if the day comes when a fraud is committed against this parliament, when legislation of a hostile character is brought forward in the legislature, then it will be always open to this parliament to resume its own powers and to enact a franchise law of its own.

The leader of the opposition himself during that debate said he quite understood the principle that the Dominion government was not depriving itself of its rights for all time to come but could take back to itself again its right if necessity arose. The Prime Minister said:

> But if the day comes when a fraud is committed against this parliament——

I think the leader of the opposition said that it was not clear whether this fraud was a fraud against the Liberal party or not. It need not necessarily be a fraud committed against the Liberal party, in fact I think the fraud is much broader and would be, if it is a fraud at all, a fraud against all the electors of the province, whether Liberal or Tory.

Again the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) at page 8690 of 'Hansard', in speaking of the perfection of the Manitoba Act says:

> And this law, enacted by the legislature of Manitoba, under a Conservative administeration, has been subject to so little criticism that I say here I do not believe there is in the Dominion of Canada a single province which can show legislation more satisfactory, more fair and effective than that which we have been discussing.

But my hon. friend must know that while we may have an excellent Act on the statute-book, if, in the carrying out of that Act, abuses occur, if the Act is not administered fairly, the results are just as vicious as if the Act itself were vicious.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is then the administration and not the terms of the Act itself to which the hon. gentleman objects.

Mr. GALLIHER. That is what I am objecting to at present. My hon friend also at page 8694 quotes the following words used by the right hon. the First Minister:

> But, sir, I ask my hon. friends if they will not admit that, although the legislation which to-day exists in Manitoba and the manner in which it is administered may be satisfactory to the Tories, it is not satisfactory to the Grits, and that is the reason why we have introduced this legislation.

And my hon. friend the leader of the opposition very astutely rather played on those words and asked: What if we came into power and we should find a provincial Liberal government in office in Nova Scotia and should want to change the Act as regards Nova Scotia, because, although it may be satisfactory to the Grits, it is not satisfactory to the Tories? My hon. friend sought to leave the impression that the First Minister was merely making this change in the law in Manitoba because the lists did not please the Grits and do please the Tories. But he knows well that outside that little quotation I have read, there have been grounds brought before the right hon. gentleman, and afterwards proved in discussion here, which show unfairness in the administration of this law. Nay, it has been shown that the grossest kinds of frauds have been committed in some parts of Manitoba in the preparation of those lists. These frauds I do not lay at the door of the government of Manitoba, but they must be laid at the door of the officials appointed by that government and of the men who acted as the agents of those officials, and I suppose that the government of Manitoba is the responsible party in the end.

With regard to the reasons why Manitoba is singled out from the other provinces, I intend making some quotations from the speeches of hon. members on this amendment. I have already pointed out that in 1898, the right hon. the First Minister stated that while the government of Canada would be justified, on the ground of fraud or of hostile legislation, in taking back control of the federal lists, there were other grounds on which it would be justified in doing so. Let me refer to the speech of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford). Discussing the very point mentioned by the Hon. Mr. Rogers in his interview with the 'Citizen,' the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) brought out some interesting facts to show what the officials appointed by the provincial government had to do with the preparation of the lists in Manitoba. On page 8344 of 'Hansard' the hon. gentleman said:

> Who limits the time for registration? The executive council of Manitoba. Who decides that there should be but one registration clerk and one booth in each constituency? The executive council of Manitoba. Who fixes the places of registration booths and the hours during which they are to be open? The executive council of Manitoba, the political machine. Who appoints the registration clerks who have very considerable discretionary powers? The executive council of Manitoba. Who fixes the courts of revision, allowing but for a single day, for a part of a day or a number of days? Who fixes the time for the sittings of the court of revision and the duration of those sittings? Who limits the hours during which the court of revision can sit? The government of the province of Manitoba has full control over the courts of revision and everything else, in so far as registration and the revision of the voters' lists in the province of Manitoba are concerned.

The judges, of course, sit where they are authorized to sit, and, during the time they are authorized, decide as to who should or should not be on the lists.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Will the hon. gentleman be surprised to learn that the judges name the places, the dates and the hours?

Mr. GALLIHER. Since when?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). In practice ever since this Act has been on the statute.

Mr. GREENWAY. Did the hon. gentleman read the proclamation the other day?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). And they are confirmed by order in Council, but it is they who fix the dates.

Mr. GALLIHER. What does the hon. gentleman say to the last proclamation?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Will the hon. gentleman deny that the judges name the places, the times and the dates for the holding of the courts of revision?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And have them confirmed by order in council.

Mr. GALLIHER. If my hon. friend will take the last proclamation issued in the Manitoba 'Gazette' of April 25, he will see that what is complained of is still being done in Manitoba even yet, in the face of the Bill being brought down to supply a remedy.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I can assure my hon. friend—and my statement can be verified by the judges themselves if necessary—that the judges fix the dates, the places and the hours during which they shall sit. The government of Manitoba interferes in nowise with those. Upon the report of the judges being brought to council, an order in council is passed and the proclamation issued.

Mr. GALLIHER. My hon. friend admits that the judges make their recommendations to council, and the council may or may not put them in form of an order in council.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the council do?

Mr. GALLIHER. It will probably be hard to answer what, in all cases, it does. But that is only one point of the many I have here. I have here half a dozen different ones that are not challenged.

Mr. STAPLES. They were all challenged and answered long ago.

Mr. GALLIHER. My hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) has challenged them all holus bolus. He pleads the general issue, in other words, but that after all is not a very good answer to a direct statement. Now, let me quote from the hon. member for Portage la Prairie at page 8300 of 'Hansard' with regard to the distances people have to go to get on the list. Holding up the proclamation, the hon. member said:

> Well, here is the proclamation, and you can read it for yourself. For a man to get on the list in Gladstone he will have to travel two hundred miles coming and going. To be registered in Russell, he will have to travel 156 miles; in Emerson, 216 miles; in Selkirk, 200 miles; in La Verandrye, 240 miles.

Now, let me point out to my hon. friends opposite that there are different degrees of fraud. Where, in the administration of a franchise Act, it is rendered practically impossible for persons duly qualified to be placed on the voters' list to reach the place appointed for them in order to have their names placed on that list within the time allowed, you are committing, in a degree, fraud against those citizens. Now, there is a state of affairs, which, if it existed in British Columbia, would bring down the condemnation of every man, Liberal or Conservative.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It is not correct.

Mr. GALLIHER. My hon. friends opposite had their opportunity of cross-examining the hon. member for Portage la Prairie who made this statement and who knows the facts. These hon. gentlemen know that I cannot know these facts personally. But I am quite sure they will do me the justice to say that I have just as much reason to accept the statement of my hon. friends on this side as I have to credit the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the name of the man who has to do this?

Mr. GALLIHER. I think my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) cannot be serious in that question. Certainly, I cannot give him the information. But the hon. gentleman would have quite a walk if he went afoot to ask this man his name. Now, the hon. member for Portage la Prairie——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) permit me a question? What is the length of Manitoba from north to south and its breadth from east to west?

Mr. GALLIHER. Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that. But I travelled Manitoba in the old days and I know a little about its physical features. I know that, very often, you have to go around a long way by reason of natural physical impediments. Two places may not be far apart as the crow flies but you cannot always travel that way, as muskegs and swamps intervene that you cannot cross. Now, it has been said that registration clerks have no powers in connection with the preparation of these lists. Let me give an instance, given by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Crawford) at page 8365 of 'Hansard':

> In connection with those voters in the particular case I was going to refer to at Lansdowne last year, here is where an abuse crept in to the extent of 40 voters, owing to the fact that the registration clerk failed to do his duty. Applications were made to strike 40 names off the lists, but when the case came before the judge, owing to the fact that the registration clerk had failed to notify the electors whose names were protested the judge would not deal with it at all, and those men were allowed to remain on the lists.

That shows you that this matter is not all in the hands of the revising judge, for others—and these appointed by the executive council of Manitoba—have duties to perform. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) proposes that these men shall not be political appointees, but shall be appointed by the judge who is chosen to prepare and revise these lists.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What year is that?

Mr. GALLIHER. I am informed that that was in 1907. Now, let me quote from the speech of the hon. member from Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) with regard to the action of the registration clerks. I quote from page 8617 of 'Hansard',

> The hon. leader of the opposition and other gentlemen opposite have challenged us to show where any person was left off the list of electors by any official of the Manitoba government, or where any complaints had been made against the lists that had been prepared. My hon. friend from Selkirk gave last night a good many instances of this kind, but I might refer in addition to the incident at Balsam bay where 28 voters applied to the registration clerk to put their names on the list, but they could not get the registration clerk to receive their applications and they were disfranchised. The registration clerk, in making the return wrote to his friend, who was the candidate for the constituency, and said: 'Nobody had applied but the few Grits, and you bet I did not put them on.'

Mr. STAPLES. Have you that letter?

Mr. GALLIHER. I took the trouble to ask the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) if that letter was in existence and how the letter had come out. He told me that the case came up in court and this is how it was brought to the attention of the public. Will my hon. friends opposite say that that was not a fraud committed on these electors? If these citizens were justly entitled to be placed upon this list in order that they may exercise their franchise, was not this refusal of this registration clerk, because they were Grits forsooth, a direct, a gross fraud practised against these citizens?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The hon. member (Mr. Galliher) knows that the reply has been given to that statement. I do not wish to repeat the facts. But there was not a man of these disfranchised—they were all put on the list.

Mr. GALLIHER. They were, for the time being. Hon. gentlemen opposite can reply to what I am saying in good time. The hon. member (Mr. Burrows) who makes the statement I have quoted is responsible and I give the statement on his authority. But I will quote some statements later that my hon. friends cannot take this objection to. Now, let me quote from the hon. member for Dauphin—page 8261 of 'Hansard'—with regard to the disfranchisement of the Lac du Bonnet electors. I would like to quote another statement made by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) in that regard.

Another case which has been cited before, a very glaring case—a case which shows we had grievances under this Act—was the deliberate disfranchisement of 38 electors at Lac du Bonnet. In this case the revising officer, Mr. Heap, in order to enable the people who were living at Lac du Bonnet to be placed on the list, and at the request of representatives from that district, adjourned his court and agreed to go to the lake and take the applications of the residents there.

Now Mr. Heap saw himself that it was not possible to deal out fair play to these men if he did not appoint another place which could be reached by them, where they could have their names put on the list. He did so, and what was the result ?

The train goes to Lac du Bonnet once a week, remains about two hours and returns. The clerk sent word that he would be there on a special train, the residents met him, and he took all their applications. They were bona fide electors. Nobody raised a claim that they were not entitled to vote. But as soon as the government found out that he had adjourned his court, they notified him that his action was illegal; and notwithstanding the fact that the registration board certified to the list, when the election took place, the sheets containing these names were torn off, and these men were disfranchised.

I have a copy of his certificate here.

Mr. STAPLES. Better read the two certificates.

Mr. GALLIHER. I will read the one I come to first. When their own officer was trying to do what was fair and to give these men an opportunity of being placed on the list, what did the government do ? The government, or those delegated for the purpose, did not draw any thin red line through these lists, as the hon. member for Selkirk has said, but they tore them off holus bolus ; and I am informed by an hon. member who took the trouble to look it up, that notwithstanding they had torn these thirty-eight names off the list, when the list came down here certified by the clerk to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, fourteen of those names that had been torn off were interlined on that return, and that was returned as the proper list to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. It is quite reasonable for Liberals to assume that these fourteen names were not friends of the Liberal party. Now in regard to the resolution of the Trades and Labour Council of Winnipeg, the hon. member for Dauphin quoted that also. This resolution was published in their organ, and I draw attention to it in order to show that it is not only the Liberals who are complaining of the manner in which the local Act is being carried out, but those belonging to the great labour party as well. On page 8625 we find this in the speech of the hon. member for Dauphin.

The resolution which the Trades and Labour Council passed unanimously and which the boards printed in large type on its front page was as follows:

Whereas the facilities for registration of voters have proved altogether inadequate for the purpose, therefore be it resolved:

That this trades council demand of the government that registration be re-opened and be kept open for at least five days.

And my hon. friend went on to say that the Roblin government did not reopen the registration proceedings. Again, on page 8631, the hon. member for Dauphin alludes to what took place when the returning officer, in the last Dominion election, urged that an additional poll should be opened in one of the ridings of Selkirk, at Lac du Bonnet, so that the people might have an opportunity of exercising their franchise. My hon. friend said :

If the provincial polling division had been followed in the Dominion elections of 1904, the people of Lac du Bonnet, in Selkirk, would have been obliged to go to Cromwell to vote. This would have involved a railway journey from Lac du Bonnet to Molson, and another railway journey to Beausejour, and a drive from Beausejour to Cromwell, in all a drive of forty miles. It is very difficult, in fact impossible, for the electors to go from one place to the other, as there is only one train a week. If the train happened to go on election day it would be all right, but trains do not, as a rule, run on election day any more than on any other day if it does not suit their convenience. The Dominion returning officer put a poll at Cromwell and another at Lac du Bonnet, and they had to divide the list to agree with the polls. That was one of the cases in which action was taken against the returning officer for using the thin red line, as stated by the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

So that wherever it was sought to give the electors an opportunity to record their votes we find that even the returning officer was arrested for attempting to do so. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word with regard to the affidavits that were placed on 'Hansard' by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole), in his speech on this Bill. My hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) seemed rather to reflect upon the hon. member for Winnipeg because he had read those affidavits in the House. Now, Mr. Speaker, if that rule were to obtain in this House, I think we would find among our hon. friends opposite very many offenders in that regard. If it is wrong to read an affidavit in the House which discloses improper acts on the part of any person, our hon. friends opposite, who have heretofore read such affidavits in this House, would be to blame fully as much as my hon. friend from Winnipeg. The whole question is as to the truth or falsity of these affidavits. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), in his speech a few days ago, paid me the compliment of saying that if I would rise in the House and, in my fair and manly way, as he put it, would give my opinion of this matter, I might speak in a manner differing somewhat from my hon. friends. Now I do not want to destroy the opinion the hon. member for North Toronto had of me; still I must say that if I had in my possession affidavits which I knew to be true, or had every reason to believe were true, and which disclosed wrong-doing in the preparation of the lists in the province of British Columbia, I would rise in my place in this House and read those affidavits, if occasion called for it. I think that the hon. member for Winnipeg only exercised his privilege in reading those affidavits, nay more, it was his duty, not only to his party but to the country at large, to read them as he did. Therefore I think that the reflection cast upon my hon. friend from Winnipeg by the hon. member for Macdonald for reading those affidavits, was not at all warranted. And how did the hon. member for Macdonald treat those affidavits? Did he venture for a moment to say that the contents of those affidavits were not true? No, he met them by flourishing a cheque and saying, there is the cheque that paid for them.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Hear, hear.

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes, and I intend to say, hear, hear. The question is not whether those men who made these affidavits were paid for the time that they lost in leaving their work and going to make them; the question is as to the truth or untruth of those affidavits. What is the use of saying whether these were paid for or not if the cheque which my hon. friend there held was paid for by his friend's friends too? But, be that as it may, so long as the statements in this affidavit are true it matters not to me whether the men were paid for their time or not. If they are true the gist of the whole thing and the application of the cheque has nothing to do with it whatever. If they are untrue, of course, it is a different thing. But, there must be either one or two conditions with regard to these affidavits. If these affidavits are not true then what should be the result? These affidavits were made in the city of Winnipeg right under the nose of the Attorney General's department of the province of Manitoba by residents then and now, as I understand, of Winnipeg. I heard that one of them has taken a trip away, but the majority are there yet, and if there is anything untrue in these affidavits the Criminal Code of Canada provides a means of dealing with men who make false statements under oath. It is the bounden duty of the Attorney General's department of Manitoba to prosecute all these men if they have made false statements in these affidavits. I am not going to say that the Attorney General's department was derelict in its duty in not doing that. I am rather inclined to take the charitable view of the case and to say that the reason that these men were not prosecuted is that the contents of these affidavits are absolutely true. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), when the four or eight affidavits were quoted and the circumstances stated, remarked that that was the herd that the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) and the right hon. Prime Minister were travelling with. How he came to that conclusion I do not know. Not only were his friend's friends—if I am wrong I wish to be corrected—travelling with these four or eight men, but they were travelling with a herd of 450 men, a herd bigger than the herd of buffalo which my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) has imported into this country. It is not unreasonable to suppose that hon. members on this side of the House, knowing the contents of these affidavits, would not wish to have men of that description on the list and would wish to have men who were placed on the lists under these circumstances removed in order that they might have a fair election. I will read some extracts from these affidavits. My hon. friend from Winnipeg read these affidavits, but made very little comment upon them. I propose to take a short time in making some comments on these affidavits. We will take first the affidavit of Theodore Rudneski:

Province of Manitoba, to wit:

I, Theodore Rudneski, agent, make oath and say as follows:—

I am personally, intimately acquainted with W. H. Hastings, the organizer in the province of Manitoba for the Conservative party, and I have been acquainted with the said Hastings for upwards of two years.

About the middle of the month of January 1907. I pointed out to the said Hastings that a large number of foreigners, particularly of the class usually known as Galicians, were residing in various parts of the city of Winnipeg who were at that time entitled to take out naturalization papers in Canada, but who had not at that time done so and who were otherwise qualified to become electors in the elections then in contemplation in the province of Manitoba.

This is how it started:

Shortly after the middle of January, 1907, the said W H. Hastings, in my presence, made arrangements with a committee of six composed of Joseph Makarski, Thomas Snezek, Frank Szablewski, George Czornij, Michael Humiłowicz, Thomas Jestremski, to proceed at once to make up a list of Conservative Galicians eligible for naturalization.

I noticed that the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) asked my hon. friend from Winnipeg if this were not in connection with naturalization and not in connection with the preparation of the lists. My hon. friend does not imagine for a moment that we are so guileless as to believe that the Conservative party in Manitoba are going to pay for the naturalization of 450 Galicians unless with the object of having them placed on the list as good Conservative voters. The first step in placing a foreigner on the list who is not a British subject is to get him naturalized and it is with the naturalization of these people that these affidavits have to do. I will not read all the affidavits but I will read some parts of them that strike me very forcibly:

Prior to the third day of February, 1907, the committee aforesaid and other friends of the Conservative party made up a list of some 450, more or less, Galicians, Polanders, Germans, and other foreigners said to be at that time eligible for naturalization.

Prior to the said third day of February, 1907, the signatures of a few of the men on the list of 450 as aforesaid, were obtained——

The signatures of a few of these men were obtained.

—by different parties to blank oaths of residence——

Blank oaths of residence:

—and oaths of allegiance on the forms in common use in connection with the naturalization of aliens, but the greater number on the list aforesaid had, prior to the third day of February, 1907, signed no papers whatever, or taken no oaths or affidavit whatever with a view of complying with the requirements of the Naturalization Act.

The great majority had signed no papers. A number of them had signed what? Were they aware of the papers they were signing? Was it filled in? Not at all, but it was a blank form of naturalization paper.

On Sunday the third day of February, A.D. 1907, I, this deponent, and Thomas Snezek, Frank Szablewski, Thomas Jestremski, Billey Chicocki, Vladmir Rudko and Julian Nowacki went, at the request of the said W. H. Hastings, in the Maw block on Market square, in the city of Winnipeg, and set to work about two o'clock in the afternoon to prepare the naturalization papers for the parties on the list of 450, thereabouts, above referred to.

And they continued that work until two o'clock on Sunday, just these men there present, nobody else, none of the applicants.

I was personally present at the time and place aforesaid, and I saw the said Thomas Jestremski sign as commissioner, the various naturalization papers aforesaid and certify that the contents of the said papers were sworn to or affirmed by the respective parties mentioned therein, without any of such parties swearing or affirming or being present on the occasion in question.

Actually the commissioner, the man employed, the man paid by the Conservative party to get these men naturalized so that they might be put on the lists as good Conservative voters in North Winnipeg actually purported to swear men who were not present at all, and he actually affixed their signatures as having sworn when they had in reality made no deposition at all.

Mr. GALLIHER.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend allow a question?

Mr. GALLIHER. Surely.

Mr. FOSTER. Has my hon. friend read the affidavits of Mr. Hasting's and the other gentleman concerned in which they absolutely deny this? Why not give as much credence to these affidavits as to the others?

Mr. GALLIHER. I have not read the affidavit of Mr. Hasting's. I am not taking second-hand proof. I am taking the sworn statement of the very men that Mr. Hastings employed to do this work. This is direct evidence. Talk about the thin red line, but when it comes down to swearing in 450 invisible men you are drawing a very much finer and more evanescent line. This affidavit goes on to say:

12. The only commissioner present at the time and place referred to in paragraph 7 hereof, was Thomas Jestremski, and it was necessary in order to complete the naturalization papers for the 450 applicants, more or less, above referred to, for the said Thomas Jestremski to sign his name some twelve or fifteen hundred times, more or less, and the said Thomas Jestremski complained from time to time towards the latter part of the session in question of fatigue and complained that he was too tired of writing to complete all the papers. To overcome this the said Jestremski told others of the parties referred to in paragraph 7 hereof to sign the names of the said Jestremski to a number of the papers which were being made out as aforesaid, and the same were signed accordingly.

Thomas got tired of his job before it was all complete. I believe there is something known as writers' cramp, and Thomas appears to have got the writer's cramp, although I can find nothing in these affidavits that discloses the fact that he had any cramp in his conscience. And what did our friend Thomas do under these conditions? It was a mere matter of form to Thomas to declare that people were present before him when they were not present, but greater things were required of Thomas and when Thomas had worked to the point of exhaustion for his employers, Thomas very calmly turned over to his co-workers, who were also paid by the Conservative party, the right of signing his name as a commissioner for taking affidavits. There might be some powers that Thomas could delegate, but the taking of affidavits is not one of them. However, Thomas was equal to the occasion, and this affidavit goes on to say that these men signed the affidavits with Thomas' name until they completed the lists. We can imagine how closely the signatures of Thomas Jestremski was copied by his four or five co-workers when we know that the person whose duty it was to see that these affidavits were in regular order could not distinguish between the genuine and the bogus signature of Thomas. Is it reasonable to suppose that these affidavits were not only not scrutinized, but deliberately allowed to go in knowing they were improper. Then I would take the affidavit of Mr. Rudneski (page 8192 of 'Hansard'), and it follows closely on the lines of the affidavit of Thomas Jestremski. He also knows Mr. Hastings and he also says that these other men were employed to do this work by Mr. Hastings for the Conservative party, first at a stipend of $2 a day and as they improved in the manner of doing their work they got it increased to $2.50. This gentleman also says among other things that Jestremski was the only commissioner there and that he was troubled with writer's cramp and delegated his powers as I have mentioned. Further we find that a Mr. Irving connected with the Attorney General's Department has said that some of these affidavits ought to be dated back to January so that it would make them appear as being at a certain time before the holding of the court in February in order that the naturalization papers might be issued. He says distinctly that Mr. Hastings was present and knew the nature of the work being done on the said Sunday, February 3, and that they were dated back to January 2, 5, 8, 10 and 11, 1907. Now, as to how these people got naturalized: First, the great majority of them never signed the papers at all; secondly, a few of them signed in blank; thirdly, none of them were present when the commissioner took the oath which it was necessary to administer to them; fourthly, the commissioner delegated his authority to somebody else to sign these affidavits for him, and, fifthly, the dates of these that were taken on the 3rd of February were put back to certain days in January in order that they might meet the conditions that would arise. Now, Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness I ask if in that case an unmitigated and indefensible fraud was not perpetrated upon the electors of North Winnipeg? These affidavits are taken from the mouths of the very people who were employed and paid to do the work. Hon. gentlemen may say that these affidavits were not made by very high-class people, but if that be the case the fault lies with the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite who employed and paid that class of men to do that class of work. But something else occurred in connection with these naturalization certificates. I shall refer to an affidavit put in by the hon. member for Dauphin at page 8622 of 'Hansard,' the affidavit of John Hyzy, who says:

To wit: I, John Hyzy, of 627 Lorette avenue, in the city of Winnipeg, do solemnly declare I am at the present time vice-president of the Polish Conservative club. I have seen in the 'Free Press' of this morning certain affidavits from Theodore Rudneski and others as to the way in which naturalization papers were made out just previous to the last election, in March, 1907. I have also seen in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of this evening affidavits denying such charges, and, with a full knowledge of the facts and the seriousness of such charges, I do say and solemnly declare:

After having read the affidavits and contradictions, I would like to know how Hyzy or any one else who was not present would know in what way this was done.

1. During the month of February, 1907, I went to the headquarters of the Conservative club, in the Maw block, and met Mr. Rudneski and Mr. Sablewski, and asked them about the naturalization papers for Mr. Desput and Mr. Jaworski and others, and they told me that they were not ready, but Rudneski said it was easy to make them out.

Yes, there is no doubt that their methods of making them out were free and easy.

2. Mr. Rudneski then sat down and filled in one of the papers and several others afterwards. I had to spell the name of Desput for him. He then went into an inner room on the right hand side of the large room where I was. I followed him to the door of the inner room, but he told me not to come in. There were other persons there whom I did not know.

3. I saw him go to the table, then the door was closed. He came out a few minutes later with the papers. Before he took them in I noticed they had no stamp on them, but I could not say whether the signature of the clerk of the court was on them or not. When he came back and gave me the papers they had the stamp or seal of the court on them down in the left hand corner.

Now what a state of affairs. A man swears positively that this naturalization board, went in to the back room of the committee of the Conservative committee room in the Maw Block in the city of Winnipeg, that the papers when they went in did not bear the seal of the court, and when they came out from that room a few minutes afterwards did bear the seal of the court. In my opinion, and I think this will be agreed to, there is one proper place of custody for the seal of the county court of the county of Selkirk, or the city of Winnipeg, whichever it may be called now, and that is within the precincts of the court, and neither the clerk of the court nor any body else has any right to take the seal of that court either into the Conservative committee rooms or into any other rooms outside the court. It is there for a special purpose and when we find the seal of the court brought into the back room of the Conservative committee rooms in the Maw block in Winnipeg, in February, 1907, and have these naturalization papers stamped with that seal in that room, will any one say that there is not another case of fraud? These affidavits disclose absolutely cases of fraud probably unparalleled in the history of the preparation of voters' lists, and when my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and other hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House ask why Manitoba is singled out from the rest of the provinces of Canada, I refer them to not only the conditions in Manitoba which have been set out in concrete form by my hon. friends the Liberals from Manitoba but also the scandalous actions in naturalizing these men and placing them on the list, for Rudneski swears that most of these names were placed on the lists afterwards——

Mr. STAPLES. Would my hon. friend like to see the original cheque with which he was paid for the affidavits?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes. Might I ask my hon. friend how much his friends paid Rudneski for that cheque ?

Mr. STAPLES. Not one cent more than its face value and I will prove it to the hon. gentleman if he wants it.

Mr. GALLIHER. My hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) need not get warm at all ; I am speaking in all kindness and we are old friends, when he played short-stop I played long-off.

Mr. STAPLES. And you are a good sport too. Play the game fair.

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not think I will be accused of playing it unfair. I have not made statements and called them my own——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GALLIHER. I have taken affidavits right from the root of the thing, right from the very men who did the work and I have taken statements of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who, I believe know what they are talking about and I have given them as their statements.

I shall now proceed to British Columbia which, as my hon. friends know, is also included under the provisions of this Act. In British Columbia we have in many respects an excellent franchise Act but in some respects it is weak. One of the good features of the British Columbia Act is that the list is revised twice a year in May and November. One of its weaknesses, to my mind, although this is possibly owing to the conditions physical and otherwise of British Columbia, is that it permits registration without personal application. The provincial government can give authority to any one to take affidavits in connection with the placing of names on the list. such a person can then go about among the people, as they do on both sides of politics, and in three or four days hand in a list of names of men who have taken affidavits without those men having to come personally before the registration clerk. I think myself that the only actually safe way to register is to have personal application for registration, but that would be difficult in the case of many miners who work in mines removed from a town where a commissioner is appointed. Probably that is why the commissioners are appointed in this way, although that practice gives rise to frauds, as I have no doubt there are many cases where men are placed on the list who cannot read or understand the English language. No doubt in many instances men are on that list who cannot read or understand English, yet I suppose who have taken the affidavit with regard to residence and naturalization required by that Act, without understanding it.

Mr. BERGERON. That works on both sides.

Mr. GALLIHER. I am not making any distinction but merely pointing out what is probably a weakness in the Act, which, in many other respects, is an excellent one. I notice that one of the provisions to entitle a man to be placed on the voters' list is that he shall be able to read the Act or any portion thereof, if so required, to the satisfaction of the registrar. But as a rule that provision is never exercised. My hon. friend will see that in the schedule that there is no provision regarding that in the affidavit, and the test can only be administered by the registration clerk or the registrar. Another and probably a more serious defect in the Franchise Act of British Columbia is this. Take the present list which is now five years' old. There is no question that in every riding in British Columbia to-day there are hundreds of names on that voters' list which ought not to be there as they represent either dead men or absentees. I consider that a serious weakness, and while owing to British Columbia being a new country and owing to its conditions, I would not go so far as my friend Mr. John Houston, the editor of the 'Empire' of Prince Rupert, who asks that the list should be revised every year, still I think the suggestion is one it would be well for the government of British Columbia to consider. It would, I think, be only fair to have a complete new list made up at least every two years.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman say that the lists are only revised once in five years?

Mr. GALLIHER. I say that the list now in existence is five years old. During that time we have had two courts of revision every year, the first Monday of May and the first Monday of November, and our Act provides that the registrar may, on giving notice or on the application of any one strike off the names of dead people or absentees; but in the practical working of the Act, it is very difficult to strike off names unless very special attention for a very special purpose is paid.

Mr. SPROULE. Have not the other provinces to do the same thing?

Mr. GALLIHER. I am not arguing that there is any distinction. I am merely endeavouring to point the excellencies and the defects of our lists. There is the power to strike off names but a lot are allowed to remain on from one election to another, and moreover you have to deposit one dollar for every name you object to. If you wish to have 200 names struck off, you must deposit with the registrar of votes $200. In every case in which you succeed, your dollar is returned. Otherwise it is forfeited. But while you may be morally certain that John Smith went away from the district of Kootenay a year ago and is not entitled to be on that list, yet you will hesitate before making an affidavit to the registrar that he is not in the district. The provisional divisions are very big, and it is barely possible that John Smith may be in some out of the way place, up in some mine, and never comes to town for six months in the year. Add to that the circumstance that you forfeit a dollar if the name is not struck off, and you can see that a great many names are left on the list which ought not to be there.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be interesting to know how many dollars the hon. gentleman squandered in trying to get names struck off.

Mr. GALLIHER. If it would be interesting to the House, I have no objection to telling my hon. friend that in the district of Kootenay I have gone before the people taking my chances on the will of the majority, and that I neither squandered dollars that way nor in buying any man's vote. In fact I did not have to. While we have a good Act in many respects in British Columbia, it has some defects, and if the Bill submitted to the House does not become law, we shall in British Columbia have to face an election with lists loaded up with a lot of driftwood and absentees. But I may say candidly to my hon. friend that if we were alone in this matter, while the revision of the lists, as provided in the Bill submitted to the House would certainly work no injustice to the province of British Columbia, yet I am disposed to say that had it not been felt desirable to introduce a Bill of this kind because of the conditions in the province of Manitoba there is no very grave necessity for applying it to my province. I candildy admit that I have not received from my district any expressed wish on the part of those who support me that this legislation should apply to British Columbia. On the other hand I have received from Conservative associations—and as I represent all the people there, I think it but fair that I should state this—objecting to the application of this Act, some from misunderstanding, some on the ground that the lists are all right as they stand, and others on the ground of disapproval of the principle. Now, I have stated the matter fairly, and I state just as fairly, that I believe that, had there not been, as there is, in my opinion, every necessity for applying this Act in the fair manner in which the Prime Minister proposes to the province of Manitoba, it would not have been asked as applying to British Columbia.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Galliher) know whether the Liberal members sitting in the legislature of British Columbia have ever made a move to have the Act amended in the way my hon. friend suggested a moment ago?

Mr. GALLIHER. I do not know of any instance in which they have done so. But I will frankly say to my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) that I do not really think that makes any difference ; I think that is beside the question ; because, whether I happen to be a member of the federal House or a member of the local legislature, I certainly am entitled to my view as to what should be a proper franchise Act and what amendments I think should be passed in the interests of the people.

Mr. BERGERON. But, in 1898, we adopted the principle of leaving all this to the local legislature.

Mr. GALLIHER. I understand that that is the position, but I presume that my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) will admit that if you have the power to give you have the power to take away, for reason. I think we have scriptural authority which might possibly be applied to that. If I might make the quotation, Scripture says : 'The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away.' So, we might say, the government gave and the government takes away. And, perhaps my hon. friends opposite would not object to my applying the latter part of the quotation also and saying 'Blessed be the name of the government.'

Mr. SPROULE. You are not well up in that.

Mr. GALLIHER. I quote that subject to correction by my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) who is an authority. Before leaving British Columbia, I would say that the Liberal members of British Columbia have been considering some features of this Bill and may ask for some change later on when certain sections come up for consideration separately. In other words, we wish to be understood as having in view certain matters that will be in the interests of British Columbia.

Now, I will only refer to one other section of the Act and then will leave the matter of discussion on any other section to the time when the Bill is being discussed clause by clause in committee. I refer to section 17. I quite agree with the view expressed by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) when he says that it is very desirable to preserve the secrecy of the ballot. I think that is something that will be admitted by members on both sides of the House. Probably, the wording of section 17 as it is may be a little wide; it may give cause of the apprehension expressed by the leader of the opposition. However, this Bill, like others, must be taken up for consideration clause by clause, and it should be the endeavour of every hon. member to make the Bill as good a measure as possible. Merely expressing my own opinion hurriedly, I would say that it seems to me that the wording of the clause leaves it open to the serious objection that my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) sees in it. What, as I fancy, is intended is that, if the returning officer places a mark upon the ballot of a voter through inadvertence, his doing so is not to have the effect of disfranchising the voter, but the ballot should be counted. Left in its present form, this section might possibly give rise to the abuse suggested by the leader of the opposition. But if the section be so framed as to allow only for cases of omission or inadvertence, then it will not be open to the same objection. For, after all, we have to consider the right of every elector to exercise his franchise; and, when he casts his vote, that vote should not be cancelled because of an error of the deputy returning officer. We all know what took place in the Wentworth election two or three years ago. I had in mind, in this connection, a case decided in the Supreme Court of the state of Washington. It is the case of Moyer and Van de Vanter, and is reported in 12 Washington, page 377. I have not gone into the case itself but have merely taken the syllabus. It says:

> The provisions of the general statutes, section 391, directing that in the canvass of the votes any ballot which is not endorsed by the initials of some one of the election officers shall not be counted——

That is, as in our case, if the returning officer, being required by the statute to initial the ballot, through error or inadvertence, fails to initial it, the principle announced by the Supreme Court of Washington would validate that vote. For it says that not to count such a ballot would be:

> —in conflict with the constitutional provision entitling all male persons having certain qualifications to the right to vote at all elections, since the effect of such statutory provision would be to debar voters of their constitutional right to vote, without fault on their part.

In other words, declaring that it was unconstitutional to say that a vote should be void and bad and could not be counted through an error or omission on the part of the returning officer. That is the extent to which they have gone in the state of Washington, and I understand that the same ground has been taken in the courts in Michigan. So it does appear to me that if, through inadvertence, a returning officer happens to place an initial on a ballot where it should not be, a man who has an inherent right to be on the list should not on that account be deprived of his franchise. It is an easy matter to distinguish between an error or inadvertence and a deliberate act; I do not think the court would have any difficulty in deciding that. So I say that if, through inadvertence or omission of the returning officer to do a thing which the law called upon him to do, and through no fault of the elector, who had marked that ballot in accordance with the law, it seems to me that it is due in fairness to that elector that his ballot should be counted. I think probably this section 17 could be so redrafted as to do away to a certain extent with the reasonable and proper objection that was raised by the leader of the opposition, namely, that it would be absolutely wrong to leave it in the hands of a dishonest returning officer so to mark a ballot that John Smith could be identified.

Mr. ALCORN. Where does the hon. gentleman find anything about inadvertence in this section?

Mr. GALLIHER. I am saying that I think the section can be redrafted so as to include only such cases as I am suggesting. As I say, the court can easily distinguish between what is an error and what is deliberate. For instance, no returning officer has a right to write the name of John Smith on a ballot, or to mark the initials of a voter. The only difference between this Bill and the present Act is that, under the present Act, the returning officer, if he is dishonest, can put these marks on the ballot, and the result is that the ballot would not be counted, and the voter is deprived of his vote by the wrongful act, not of himself, but of the returning officer. This Bill would in effect say: Notwithstanding that the returning officer wrongfully puts a mark on the ballot the voter shall not be deprived of his franchise. But if this provision is going to open the door too wide, surely we can come to some conclusion with regard to drafting, so that at all events the error or omission of a returning officer will not deprive a qualified elector of his vote.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken on this Bill much longer than I intended, and I ask pardon of the House for having taken up so much time. I thought I would be able to condense my remarks into half an hour, or an hour at the most. Although this question has been discussed at great length on both sides of the House, I felt it my duty as a member of this House to place my views on record. I trust that there is no misunderstanding with regard to the proposition of the Prime Minister, because, if I understand aright, it appears to me that no reasonable man in Manitoba can say that in so far as the preparation of the lists is concerned, the proposition of the Prime Minister would not provide an absolute guarantee that every qualified elector in Manitoba shall have the right and the opportunity of registering his vote.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, before the House rose at six o'clock we heard from the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) several statements with regard to the proposed Bill which is now before us and, knowing that hon. member as I do, I cannot help but feel that he was labouring very hard to-day in the effort to make out a case on behalf of hon. members on the government side of the House. I believe that the hon. gentleman sings a song called 'Play the game; play the game fair.' I only wish that he would take the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) aside for a few moments and sing that song to him. I believe that if he did we would have better results than we are likely to have from the arguments which have been advanced by government members. However, his whole speech goes to show that the government is not playing the game fair. Statement after statement that the hon. member made, in attempting to defend the government's action on this Bill, certainly proved to me conclusively that the government are trying to force on the House and the country, and upon the province of British Columbia and Manitoba in particular, an unfair and unreasonable measure. He said that the statements he made were not his own but that he took them from the speeches of the hon. members who are supporting this measure, but, if you investigate these speeches you cannot help but feel, as hon. members on this side of the House feel, that they contain statements which are not founded on reasonable grounds. He did not tell us about the short space of time that the government would give the people of Manitoba to register their votes under the operation of this Bill. He did not tell us that practically the people of Manitoba would only have four weeks in which to register and have the lists revised as well. The one great cry of hon. gentlemen on the government side of the House is that the Manitoba Election Act does not give them sufficient time in which to register the names of voters in the different polling divisions or to revise the lists, but when you inquire as to the time they are likely to grant for the courts of revision and for the placing of names on the voters' lists you cannot help but feel that the Act which the legislature of Manitoba has given to the people of that province is much better than the one which is proposed by this government. He did not tell us that the government were likely to introduce the Ross ballot clause in this Bill. Clause 17 is a clause that the people of Ontario fought for many years to eliminate from the statute-book of that province and we are proud and glad to know that we have in the province of Ontario a body of men who have been able to carry out the promises that were made to the electorate previously to their coming into power and one of the promises that they have carried out since coming into office has been the elimination from the statute-book of the numbered ballot. We are surprised that an effort should be made to introduce this into the Dominion Election Act and we can only think that the Hon. Mr. Ross, in coming to Ottawa, has had something to do with placing that clause in the Bill which is now before the House because it was through having that clause on the statute-book of Ontario that he was able to carry practically the last two elections that he did carry and was able to retain office for a longer period than he otherwise would have been. The hon. member who took his seat before six o'clock did not quarrel with the Manitoba Act. He had practically nothing to say in opposition to that Act. He was trying to explain, for one thing in particular, the Prime Minister's speech but the press of this country and members of the opposition have been unable to understand what the Prime Minister's meaning was in making the statements which he did make to this House in defence of the Bill. The hon. member for Kootenay also stated that Manitoba must be punished. That is a pretty strong statement for a member of this House to make in regard to the Bill which is now before us and which deals with the province of Manitoba. Why should Manitoba be punished, may I ask that hon. gentleman? Why should Manitoba and British Columbia be singled out for special legislation in connection with the Election Act of the Dominion? I cannot help but feel that if the hon. gentleman would investigate this matter thoroughly he would be satisfied that the Election Act of Manitoba is not only a reasonable and fair measure, but that the province of Manitoba, should not be singled out as a province to be dealt with in the manner in which this government are attempting to deal with it. Manitoba must be punished. He said that it was practically for her own good that she should be punished.

Then he spent an hour dealing with affidavits which have been presented to this House by some hon. gentlemen opposite and which have been dealt with by hon. members on this side of the House, particularly the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J.

Roche) and the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) in the most able manner. They were able to show that these affidavits were not founded on fact and they had affidavits from prominent men and officials in the west distinctly stating that the affidavits quoted by hon. gentlemen opposite were false. Take the affidavits for instance of Mr. Hastings, barrister, of Winnipeg, and of Mr. R. C. Irving, inspector of legal offices for the provincial government. I will read the affidavit of Mr. L. N. Betourney :

Dominion of Canada, province of Manitoba; to wit:

In the matter of naturalization of aliens in the Winnipeg county court, in the year, 1907.

I, L. N. Betourney, of the city of St. Boniface, in the province of Manitoba, do solemnly declare

(1)—Since the amendment to the Naturalization Act requiring three weeks' notice to be given to the court by aliens applying for naturalization, no applications have been read in open court and no certificates of naturalization have been issued by me, without such notice having been given by such aliens as required by law.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

(Sgd.) L. N. BETOURNEY.

Declared before me at the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, this 7th day of May, A.D. 1908.

AUGUSTUS MILLS,
A Commissioner in B.R., &c.

As you are aware, Mr. Betourney is clerk of the court of that province, he is a reliable person and he says distinctly that these affidavits are not authentic and that they have not been presented to him for record. The hon. gentleman depended on the speeches of the government members for his information which he placed before the House to-day. If the hon. gentleman had investigated these speeches and looked into the statements which have been made by a number of hon. members coming from the province of Manitoba and others who have addressed the House on this question he would come to the conclusion that the government were prepared to take an unfair advantage of the Conservatives of Manitoba. Year after year the Manitoba government have been courting inquiry into their Franchise Act and year after year the Liberal opposition in the legislature have been unable to point to one serious irregularity under the election law. And yet we find the Dominion government selecting Manitoba for invidious distinction and attempting to belittle it in the eyes of the Dominion. Some of these gentlemen opposite told us that voters had to go as far as 212 miles to vote, but the province of Manitoba is only 264 miles long by 284 miles wide, a fact which goes to show how reckless have been the statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. gentleman from Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) was fair enough to tell us that the election Act of British Columbia was just and reasonable and he told us that so far as he was concerned he was willing that British Columbia should not be included in this Bill. No doubt a great many constituents of the hon. gentleman have been pleading with him to give fair play to his own province as well as to Manitoba. In the province of Manitoba there are 41 constituencies and there are on an average practically 12 registration booths in every one of these constituencies. I have here a proclamation referring to the electoral division of Turtle Mountain, and had I time I would read the whole of it in order to show how fairly registration booths are conducted in that province but the following paragraph which is printed in large type will suffice :

Only such persons whose names are not on the last revised list of electors but possess the qualification to be registered as electors under the provisions of the Manitoba Election Act need attend the registration sittings or court of revision for the purpose of being so registered. Electors can make application for registry at any of the places mentioned above.

As I understand it this means that if a man who resides in the lower part of a constituency happens to be at the extreme other end when a court of revision is being held there he would be justified in going before the court and getting his name on the list, and the application would afterwards be investigated before the judge and his name would appear on the list in its proper location. The hon. member for Kootenay in effect admitted in his speech that the Prime Minister had practically goldbricked not only the opposition but the press of the country. He told us that the Prime Minister was anxious to give a square deal to the Conservatives, but let us see what the right hon. gentleman said and I quote from page 8296 of 'Hansard.' Here are the right hon. gentleman's words :

I have no hesitation in saying that I am a partisan but in all fairness to myself I do not believe that I would willingly and conscientiously strike below the belt in order to take unfair advantage of an opponent.

I have been a member of this House for a number of years and I must say that I do not believe the right hon. gentleman is responsible for the clauses in this Bill which have no other object in the world than to strike below the belt.

The right hon. gentleman continued :

I am a partisan and I have sufficient experience of political life in this country to know that very often the judgment of a partisan may be blinded and warped.

I cannot help but think that the right hon. gentleman's position on this Bill is blinded and warped, and that he is attempting to force down the throats of His Majesty's loyal opposition a measure that is unfair, unreasonable, and invidious and a measure as to which the opposition of this House are justified in straining every nerve to oppose. The right hon. gentleman continued :

I understand fully, I think, the motive of the opposition which has come to this Bill from gentlemen on the other side of the House and especially from the members from the province of Manitoba. They dread the effect of the law of their own province if it is to be administered not by officers appointed by themselves, but by officers appointed by this government.

The hon. member for Kootenay tried to defend the position of this government in seeking to let their officers take charge of the lists in Manitoba, but he was unable to say a word against the Manitoba Franchise Act. He was willing—no I could not say he was willing for the hon. gentleman plays ball, as he reminded one of the members on this side that he played ball with him, and the hon. gentleman knows how to play the game fair, and his laboured remarks this afternoon plainly proved to me that he would like to play the game fair, but he could not do so and defend this Bill. The hon. gentleman was defending this Bill with one hand while he was taking back the words he uttered with the other hand, and instead of taking a manly stand against the measure he was compelled to make a weak and vacillating defence of it. I am sure when he reads his speech to-morrow he will feel humiliated because knowing the hon. gentleman as I do I know that the task imposed upon him as a western member to defend this Bill was most distasteful to him. The right hon. Prime Minister further said ('Hansard' page 8298) :

Sir, is it not a fact that in 1885 the Conservative party crammed down our throats a system whereby the lists were taken from independent officers and placed in the hands of officers appointed by themselves.

And yet the right hon. gentleman is today trying to cram down the throats of the opposition a measure which, were he in our place he would use his most strenuous efforts to prevent becoming law. Sir, I admire the men on this side of the House who are coming out boldly and manfully in defence of Manitoba, of British Columbia, and of the unorganized districts of Ontario and Quebec which are attacked by this Bill. When you see these men fighting for their existence in this House and for the rights of the people, you cannot but admire the position they are taking. The right hon. gentleman says that in years gone by the Conservatives attempted to cram down the throats of the then opposition a nefarious measure. Why then should he bring in such a measure as this and attempt to cram it down the throats of the opposition ?

At page 8557 the Prime Minister says :

We held to the opinion that the preparation of the lists should be left in the hands of the provincial authorities.

That is referring to the conditions previous to 1885.

—still, we had, in the language of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, to keep watch over the provinces and if we found that conditions arose which would not be fair to this House, then it would be our duty to resume our powers and to have the list prepared by ourselves.

What are the sections in the Provincial Act of the province of Manitoba to which the right hon. the Prime Minister alludes when he says:

If we found that conditions arose which would not be fair to this House then it would become our duty to resume our powers and to have the list prepared by ourselves.

The right hon. gentleman was unable in the whole of his speech to refer to any section in the Act of the province of Manitoba that was unfair or unreasonable. He was unable to show this House or the people of the Dominion that the Provincial Act of Manitoba was unfair or unreasonable in any way, and was not for the general benefit of the people of that province.

The right hon. gentleman referred to the overlapping of constituencies in the western provinces, but he could find similar overlapping in every eastern province. In almost any province in Canada he will find overlapping more serious and very much greater in proportion than he will find in the western provinces. For instance in my own riding there is overlapping and there are irregularities in regard to voters' lists and the same thing prevails in many Ontario constituencies. The hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) was able to state that for the one irregularity that could be pointed out in Manitoba he could show two in the province of Nova Scotia. I feel sure that on investigation the Prime Minister and his cabinet would find that the Manitoba Provincial Act is reasonable, that it does justice to the people of that province irrespective of party and that the proper course for this government would be to adopt that Act. Pages of the Prime Minister's speech on Thursday last were devoted to the defence of Leach, but after the statements made by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), I am sure that those who were attempting to defend Leach will feel that his position in the eyes of this country is not a good one The Prime Minister said :

If the polling divisions are not divided by the boundaries of the Dominion constituencies, I do not see any necessity for intervention; it is only where they are divided, so far as I can see, that the necessity for intervention arises.

But when you come to look into the results of the forcing of such a Bill as this upon the province of Manitoba before the last Dominion election, it is found that many irregularities resulted.

Let me read from the Prime Minister's words at page 8311:

On this side of the House there is an intimate conviction that the lists in the province of Manitoba are very unfair to the political party to which I belong. The members from Manitoba who sit on this side have given what seem to me conclusive evidence on that point. I have looked into the Manitoba Act. In many respects, it is a commendable Act.

In the whole of his speech he was unable to point out one section of that Act which was not for the general advancement of the franchise in that province and when he refers to the members who are supporting him in this matter, I cannot but feel that by this time he is surely cognizant of the fact that they have not been furnishing him with the proper kind of information in regard to the western provinces

Then at page 8315 he says:

I ask my hon. friends if they will not admit that although the legislation which today exists in Manitoba and the manner in which it is administered may be satisfactory to the Tories, it is not satisfactory to the Grits—and that is the reason we have introduced this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, there is practically the crux of the whole question. The First Minister admits frankly and fairly that as far as he is concerned he must have partisan administration in the province of Manitoba and the unorganized districts or he cannot carry the next election; and I believe it is our duty to see that this province and these unorganized districts are protected and that he shall not secure that advantage.

At page 8317 the Prime Minister says:

That is the proposition I have to make. The judge who is empowered to adjust the lists will be entrusted with the work of correcting all errors which may have been committed in the preparation of the lists in Manitoba.

If that is the only proposition he has to make to the members of the opposition, the Provincial Act provides for that in the province of Manitoba and there is no need of discussing this question any further. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) asked him the question:

Will the right hon. gentleman point out some of the abuses committed by the registration clerks?

Although that question was asked twice the right hon. gentleman was unable to point to one abuse by the registration clerks.

Having read carefully the speeches of the Prime Minister and his prominent supporters in defence of this measure, I can only say that I do not find any argument that will substantiate their statements in regard to the forcing of such a clause upon the people of Manitoba. The opposition are called obstructionists. I think that on Friday last we were able to give to the House and the country proof that we are not obstructionists. But, Sir, we are patriots, we are ready and willing to stand by this province, and by the unorganized districts and to see that justice is done to them.

The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) laughs at my statements. Does he think it is right that this measure should be crammed down our throats. I cannot believe that he is supporting this Bill with his splendid energy and voice, nor can I believe that he will stand by and see this little province saddled with an obnoxious measure such as is now proposed. Coming from the province of Ontario, he will not wish to see the province of Manitoba saddled with the marked ballot which for years kept the Ross government in power Is that the object of the hon. the Minister of Customs ? Does he want to force upon the people a numbered ballot ? Does he think it is in the interest of the country that a man should be able to go into a poll and write his name practically on a ballot ? Clause 17 is one of the most unfair clauses we could possibly place in an Election Act. Let me read it:

Provided, however, that no ballot papers shall be rejected on account of any writing, number or mark placed thereon by any deputy returning officer.

That practically means that the door is flung wide open to acts of corruption. It means that what was practised upon the province of Ontario up to the advent of the present Ontario government is to be perpetrated upon the whole Dominion. I cannot believe that the Minister of Customs has given his sanction to this Bill. I cannot help believing that when he comes to speak, as no doubt he will shortly, in defence of this measure, he will not attempt to defend that clause. On his own side man after man has pronounced that clause a most unfair and invidious piece of legislation which should never have been proposed by the Minister of Justice. If they have not done this on the floor of the House they have done it in the intimacy of friendly conversation. The Minister of Justice knows that it is unfair. The First Minister is well aware that it is most unjust and unreasonable. Yet we are called obstructionists because we are trying to have it eliminated, and the right hon. gentleman is threatening us with dissolution. Well, all I can say is that we welcome dissolution. It is high time that the people were given an opportunity to drive this government out of power. It would be the best thing that could happen this country if we should have a dissolution and have these barnacles cleaned off the ship of state. Let this government go into the dry dock of public opinion and get the barnacles scraped off, they will soon met their fate in the next election however. According to the Montreal 'Star' of to-day, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) declared in Montreal that provincial politics must go hand in hand with federal politics for both are destined to work for the good of the country. I can hear the Minister of Agriculture down in that province telling the people of the wonderful advantages this Bill is going to give them. He went on to say:

While provincial issues must be more particularly discussed on such occasions, he wished to warn the electors of the county of Brome that they must be ready for another campaign in a very short time. The opposition at Ottawa are trying to usurp the powers of government.

Just fancy the Minister of Agriculture, with his sixty majority, going to the province of Quebec and telling the people there that the opposition at Ottawa are trying to usurp the powers of the government. Did he tell them it was high time the opposition were on the treasury benches? Did he tell them about the corrupt acts of this government, about the corruption carried on in every department of the government, not excluding his own? No, but he went down and said:

The opposition are trying to usurp the powers of government. The latter have been entrusted with that duty, however, and if we cannot carry it out with the present parliament, we will appeal to the country in three or four weeks and have another parliament to do the work of the country.

I want to tell the hon. gentleman that he cannot go to the country any too soon, and when he does he will find that this moribund government, with one foot in the grave, will be compelled to give up the offices they now so unworthily hold. The hon. minister was trying to buoy up his own courage.

An hon. MEMBER. He was feeding the chickens.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Perhaps. Or talking about his cold storage scheme and other measures which he has not yet been able to make any practical use of. The government appear to be very unhappy over the Manitoba list. But we do not find any complaint from the Liberal members in the legislature of that province. We do not find any complaint from the men who are living in that province and who represent the people on the opposition side in the provincial legislature. They have not been making any outcry against the present voters' lists there. They have been unable to see that any unfair advantage is taken of them. Hon. gentlemen opposite, however, have recourse to all kinds of means to force this measure on that province.

When we consider the unhappy position in which this government is, we cannot help but conclude that the country is ripe for dissolution. The government to-day are practically in the hands of the money lenders. Look at the position in which the Grand Trunk Pacific stands to-day financially. Look at the position in which our bonds are in the old country market. Consider the tens of millions of dollars which we shall have to borrow in the old country in the near future. To-day we are obliged to pay four, five, six and as high as seven per cent for our money. Is it not time, therefore, that the present government should be ousted and a business government be given control? This government are in the hands of the middlemen and the grafters. When we compare the way our finances are managed at Ottawa with the way the provincial finances of Ontario are administered, we cannot congratulate the present administration. I need hardly point to the Quebec bridge and the corruption in the different departments. With regard to this measure, the opposition have been contending all along that clauses 1 and 17 should be eliminated. In this matter each province to-day is a little kingdom unto itself, but the central authority is trying to change that condition. What they ought to do is deal out justice to Manitoba. They are trying, however, to ignore provincial rights and, further, to take the ballot from the people in the unorganized districts.

Reference has been made to the position taken by the Prime Minister in 1904 with regard to the measure which was then contemplated. I can only say that the Bill must have been drafted in the Justice Department and that some one in the government must have been responsible for it, for we find that it is was 'printed by the King's Printer' some one must have directed this. The Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says that he is ignorant of it. Then, who is the dominating force in regard to this measure? Was it the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). And is that hon. gentleman dominating the government in regard to this matter and forcing it upon the provinces of the west? I cannot but believe that the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) is largely responsible for the present Bill. We have the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., (Mr. Carvell throwing slurs upon the laymen of this House and parading his greatness as a lawyer and a legal luminary before the country. As I understand it, law is based on common sense. But when you read clause 1 and clause 17 of this Bill, you cannot but see that, instead of being based on common sense and fair play, they are based upon the very opposite. That hon. gentleman asked why it was that more days were allowed for registration in Manitoba in 1903 than in 1905. But, though he asked the question, he would not give the opposition an opportunity to explain. The obvious reason is that, in 1903, every man had to be registered, but in 1905 only those who had not been registered before needed to have their names put upon the list, and so it would have been folly to have allowed an equal number of days for registration.

Our duty in regard to this measure is plain. The Liberal-Conservative party are fighting for a square deal and we should be weaklings not to fight for our position. The Liberals of Manitoba are not asking that the present measure should be forced upon that province. The Prime Minister appealed to the sense of honour and fair play of hon. members on this side. Why, we have been fighting for nothing else than honour and fair play. Hon. gentlemen opposite accuse us of obstructing the business of the country in this House; but when these hon. gentlemen look back upon their own record, they can hardly find fault with us for the position we take. The Prime Minister tells us that Leach is a respectable man. Well, so is Preston a 'respectable' man; so is Vance a 'respectable' man; and the O'Gorman's, and the Lewises and the Pritchetts and all who have been doing the dirty work of this government—so are they all 'respectable' men.

If this Bill becomes law, the candidate in Manitoba or the unorganized districts will not have an opportunity to see the voters' lists practically until polling day. What do you think of that, Mr. Speaker? Is that playing the game fairly? Is that giving the square deal to the opposition? Is that a reasonable measure to cram down the throats of the opposition?—to use the words of the Prime Minister. The Conservatives ask that the government allow the judges to take the present lists, and, where overlapping occurs, let them make the changes. That is all that is necessary in order to attain the end which the government says is the end desired in this case. We find the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin) admitting that there were no irregularities in the Manitoba law; and the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Duncan Ross) practically said that, so far as he was concerned, he knew of no irregularities in the Manitoba law. Man after man on that side is unable to find fault with the Manitoba law as it exists, but still all are ready to take advantage of the little province of Manitoba and of the unorganized districts.

I cannot but think that this is all part of a great election scheme prepared in advance by this government. Months ago, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) came from Europe amidst a great blowing of trumpets and firing of guns, with government ships to meet them as they approached our shores and many willing helpers to tell the news that a treaty had been made between the Dominion and the French republic. After these gentlemen landed, at public meetings in different parts of the country they gave the people to understand that the treaty was a wonderful thing that would give the people of this Dominion immense advantages in the French market. But when that treaty was laid on the table of this House, the members of the opposition were able to show that it would not benefit our agricultural classes and that only a few manufacturers would reap advantage from it. But this was only part of the election scheme. We had also the all red route. In the imperial conference, the Prime Minister took a position in which I am surprised to see hon. gentlemen opposite supporting him. He listened approvingly to a scheme of transportation by fast steamships on the Atlantic, then overland across our own country, thence by steamship to New Zealand and Australia. Next we heard it heralded throughout this country that the premier was going to have a fast line of steamships to Australia and New Zealand. But, when we came to this House expecting to find that some definite steps had been taken in regard to this measure, we found instead—

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) will see that he is wandering a little away from the subject.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Possibly I am, Mr. Speaker. I was going to show that this measure was but a part of a government election scheme. This is the crowning act of the drama and the worst, for it takes an unfair advantage of the people and, instead of being for the general welfare, it will allow corruption to be sown broadcast throughout the country. Well, that is another blunder of the Minister of Justice, because we have seen many blunders on the part of that hon. gentleman since he became a member of the cabinet. I cannot think of a worse blunder than this. It simply means that ballots can be marked, that ballots can be stolen, as this government have been in the habit of doing, and burnt, as the Ross government have been in the habit of doing; it means that all kinds of corrupt acts are liable to be tried on if this measure becomes law. Are the requests of the opposition unreasonable? No, Sir, we are not unreasonable in asking the government to withdraw sections 1 and 17, because we believe that those sections will encourage corruption in elections. If hon. gentlemen who are so strenuously defending this Bill on the other side of the House will look back and read the words of the Hon. David Mills, or the Hon. Edward Blake, or of their own Mr. Sifton, or Mr. Fitzpatrick, and see what those gentlemen said in favour of adopting the provincial franchises, they would not persist in their advocacy of a measure like this. The Minister of Justice says that the Manitoba Act is tyranny and oppression as compared with this Bill; but he was unable to point to one section in the Manitoba Act which was either tyrannical or oppressive. I say that these two clauses in this Bill will open the door to all kinds of corrupt practice, and I think that this government should be better employed than in bringing down legislation of this character and asking us to pass it. There is no room in this Dominion for men who will bring down measures such as this, and try to force them down the throats of the opposition, when they know very well that they will have the effect of depriving of their franchise electors in the outlying districts of this Dominion. Now who are the people living in these outlying districts? They are the friends, the kinsmen and the relatives of members of this House. Instead of hon. gentlemen taking the position they are taking, they should bring down a measure that will do away with electoral corruption. The government should have brought down legislation dealing with corruption in elections. There is no provision in this Bill for holding by-elections at a certain time, no provision made as to the character of the returning officers, no provision with regard to corporations contributing to election funds. Civil servants are still allowed to take part in the elections, there is no statutory declaration for financial agents to take. The door is thrown wide open to criminals and the Lewises, the Pritchetts' and the Prestons will have full swing if this Bill becomes law. Are these people in the outlying districts not worthy of the protection of this government? The Minister of the Interior says that he is willing to allow men who are only receiving $30 a month in the civil service to go on the platform and take an active part in electoral campaigns. Did I understand aright, the Minister of the Interior to say that because officials in his department were only receiving some $600 or $800 a year, they had a perfect right to go on the platform, a perfect right to become scrutineers and to take an active part in elections? I can only say that if that is the position taken by the Minister of the Interior, the time has come when we should have a Civil Service Act that will do away with such abuses, and afford no occasion for ministers of the Crown to take such a position as that.

Now this Bill takes away the right of appeal before a judge, which is the safeguard of men living in the rural districts. This government would not dare to force such a measure on the older provinces, this government would not dare to force this measure on the province of Ontario. Let them come before the province of Ontario with such a nefarious measure as this, and they would very soon find reason to regret it. The Conservative party stands for hands off Manitoba, it stands for the rights of minorities, for purity in elections. But we cannot have purity in elections with such a law as this on the statute-book. However, we feel that brighter and better days are dawning for the people of this Dominion. The present government are tottering to their fall, their knees are shaking like Belshazzar's at the feast. All I can say to the opposition is, stand firm on this question and let dissolution come. Let the government go to the country on this question if they dare.

Mr. TALBOT. When?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Whenever they dare. The Minister of Agriculture who boasts down in the province of Quebec, of the little he has accomplished for the farmers, let him go out into the western provinces if he dare, and talk of the measures he has put on the statute-book. Instead of going into the province of Quebec and trying to rouse up the people and telling them to look out for what is coming, he had better go into the west and say to the people of Manitoba that he is going to give them a square deal in this matter. But I am afraid that the Minister of Agriculture is too much of a party man to be willing to give the opposition a square deal in regard to this Bill. I am afraid he is falling into the views of the men who sit behind him, that they cannot possibly win the next general election unless they bring in some nefarious measure like this which will give them an unfair advantage. I can only say to the men who are fighting this Bill to stand to their guns. It is our duty to stay here and to persist in our present attitude. I say that we are justified in withholding a large portion of the estimates, so that this government may not hold the whip hand over us for the next few weeks or the next few months. We feel that we are justified in taking the stand that we and our friends from the Northwest have taken in regard to this measure, we stand by the convincing statements that we have made, statements that no man who will investigate this question and who will take a reasonable view of it can fail to support, and we confidently believe that it is our duty to stay here until the snow flies if necessary, to fight this Bill. In closing, I would ask the government to take this matter into their serious consideration and to give to the western provinces and the unorganized districts of Ontario and Quebec a square deal. If the government will eliminate clause 1 and blot out clause 17 they will find the opposition ready and willing to sit down and discuss with them a measure that will be for the general benefit of the country.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. Speaker, the objection to the present Manitoba law regarding voters' lists is not so much to the registration as to the revision. In the compilation of voters' lists there are two separate stages: registration and revision. Under ordinary conditions a voters' list is fixed by the revision, not by the registration, but under the Manitoba law as administered, registration is more important than revision. Names are placed on the preliminary or registration list by the registration clerk, on a statutory declaration being made personally before him by the applicant at a certain time and place. If personal presence is insisted upon in some cases and not in all and especially if it is insisted upon in the case of members of one political party and not in the case of members of the other—a great advantage is thereby given to the favoured persons or party in getting their names on the preliminary lists. An instance has been given and admitted in which three names and declarations were accepted by the registration clerk without the presence of the parties, which names were allowed by the judge at the final revision of the lists notwithstanding opposition based on the wording of the law. The position taken by the registration clerk, as stated by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), was that his duty was merely to accept applications for consideration and decision by the revising officer. The revising officer approved the application and added the names to the list although he was satisfied that application had not been made in person to the registration clerk, as required by the statute. Being satisfied of the qualifications of these voters he ruled, as stated by the hon. member for Marquette, that he would not allow the technicality of their failure to appear for registration to debar them from the list According to this precedent and under this ruling of the revising officer the presence of the voter is not an absolutely necessary condition of registration. Given registration clerks appointed by and only responsible to the provincial government, guided by such precedent and ruling, it is only reasonable to believe that the presence of the voters, as required by the statute, was not insisted upon by the registration clerks in the case of Conservative voters as it was in the case of Liberal voters. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Jackson) stated, in addressing this House, that on going to the registration office himself to have his own name placed upon the list, the name was placed upon the list by the registration clerk without any affidavit on his part and he personally saw the registration clerk add the names of a number of other voters without affidavits on their part. We have this indisputable evidence that names have been placed on the lists by the registration clerks without affidavit and again we have absolute evidence that they have been placed on the registration list and allowed by the revising officer without the person's presence at the registration booth. These two facts being established, we have not then a compilation of the list as required by the Act. This is an instance where the law is satisfactory but the administration is not satisfactory. In a country where population is scattered and distances great, registration without the presence of Conservatives while the presence of Liberals was insisted upon, would give a tremendous advantage to the Conservatives in getting names on the preliminary list. No provision was made for the printing of the preliminary list. It was posted on the door of the building in which the revision was held and copies could be demanded of the registration clerk, but to get the copy from the registration clerk was quite a different matter from making the demand. Compliance with the demand could at least be delayed so as to render the right of demand of little value. The list as compiled, in many cases, did not give the post office address of the voter. In case of an attempt to have a name struck off the list by the revising officer notice had to be sent to the person whose right was questioned. In case a person whose right to be on the list was questioned——

Mr. STAPLES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what document he is reading from.

Mr. OLIVER. I am reading from a document of excellent authority, quite superior to the affidavits that my hon. friend (Mr. Staples) read.

Mr. STAPLES. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I ask your ruling?

Mr. SPEAKER. My ruling as to what.

Mr. STAPLES. The hon. Minister of the Interior is reading his speech.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course the rule is plain that an hon. member is not permitted to read his speech.

Mr. OLIVER. I take the point of order that my hon. friend raises as a considerable compliment—that the remarks which have been placed before the House have been direct and to the point. I will admit that the remarks that I have been placing before the House are written. They are written for the purpose of enabling me to put before the House the arguments that I desire to place before it in the shortest and most concise form in order to save the time of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Whose are they?

Mr. OLIVER. When they are placed before the House they will be mine.

Mr. GRAHAM. They will be presented to the House.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. I want to continue if I may.

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the point is pressed, of course the hon. gentleman cannot continue to read.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I would like to impress upon the attention of the House the eminent fairness with which it is proposed by our friends of the opposition to carry on this debate. I think that is a fair sample of the fairness with which they carry on the business of revising the voters' lists in the province of Manitoba. However, I do not think that the point of order, or the effort that they made, will at all deprive the House of the views that I desire to put before it although it may cost the House a little more time. As however it seems to be the object of hon. gentlemen to squander the time of the House and the country I presume they are thereby attaining their object. I was proceeding to say, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FOSTER. No, to read.

Mr. OLIVER. I was proceeding to say, Mr. Speaker, that unless it could be shown to the satisfaction of the revising officer that the voter whose name was objected to had been notified at his post office address the revising officer properly and legally refused to strike the name off the list. By the device of not giving the post office address of the voter on the registration list the name was protected from revision by the revising officer, although the revising officer was a judge of the county court.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). What list is the minister referring to?

Mr. OLIVER. The list as compiled by the registration clerks.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Appointed by the judges?

Mr. OLIVER. Appointed by the judges if you like.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). But not since they have been appointed by the government. They put the post office address in each case ; that is the superiority of the present system.

Mr. OLIVER. I have said that the lists as they stand to-day are without post office addresses of a large number of the men whose names are on them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. OLIVER. That has been stated and restated here.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is wrong.

Mr. OLIVER. It has been stated and restated by hon. members whose word is absolutely good on the question.

Mr. FOSTER. Their word may be good, but their facts may be wrong.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, it is a fact or it is not a fact and it is not worth while arguing it. It was stated as a fact by hon. gentlemen who have personal knowledge and their statement was not contradicted.

Some hon. MEMBERS. It was.

Mr. OLIVER. I beg pardon, it was explained very clearly that while the lists as they existed up to a certain time did not contain the post office addresses, names added to the lists after that time did contain the post office addresses. Therefore, the lists as they stand to-day contain names which have not post office addresses and, therefore, are not subject to the same scrutiny in revision as if the post office address were given. That seems to be admitted by gentlemen on both sides. It is also admitted, I think, that the time which elapses between the preparation of the preliminary lists and the revision is not sufficient. It was stated by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie that in one case the time allowed between the close of the registration and the opening of the court of revision was three days. Under the law the revising judge is entitled to have the lists in his hands three days before the court of revision opens and the registration clerk not being required to deliver up those lists until two days after the court of registration is closed, five days would be required therefore to fulfil the terms of the land and in this case only three days were allowed.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Who fixed the date of the court of revision?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The judge did.

Mr. OLIVER. It would appear from the proclamation which the hon. member for Kootenay had here to-day that it was fixed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). That is wrong.

Mr. OLIVER. It makes no difference as to that, because the point I am making is that there was absolutely no opportunity for revision in that case.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. gentleman refers to the case at Neepawa. It was the judge who appointed the date for the court of revision there and I stated at the time that I was convinced it was an oversight on the part of the judge. His attention has since been called to it and the judge has postponed the date of the court of revision for upwards of twenty days.

Mr. OLIVER. Any way here is an indisputable instance of the allegation that has been made——

Mr. FOSTER. But it is not a partisan instance.

Mr. OLIVER. Never mind, it is an indisputable instance of the fact that there was not sufficient time allowed between the registration and revision. The allegations we make is that the whole system of administration is such as to prevent adequate revision.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And the non-partisan officer who had control of that has rectified it.

Mr. OLIVER. Admitting that, it is not yet established that there has been any rectification in other instances throughout the province which are not quite so glaring.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the minister know of any case which has been brought to the attention of a judge where it has not been rectified?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not here to give instances. The friends of my hon. friends have made a law and they have administered it, and when the attention of the country is called to an iniquitous piece of administration of that law it is not good enough to say it is rectified in that instance and left as it was in every other instance. The fact that there was such a case is evidence enough that a law which can be so administered is not a proper law or that its administration is not proper.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). But that is the law which this Act is going to perpetuate, and not only that, but it is the same revising barrister or judge who by this Act is going to administer the law.

Mr. OLIVER. We will come to that presently. We have established that there is not a fair opportunity for revising the lists, and that the lists in the first place are compiled with such lack of scrutiny, supervision and control as to give the advantage of so-called registration to the one party and to cut it off from the other.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Explain how that could be?

Mr. OLIVER. I don't object to make a long speech if gentlemen opposite insist on it, but I did intend to be brief. I have already stated how it is. May I go so far as to say that the very fact that my hon. friend and his friends are so determined to retain this law affords evidence that there is a great gain to them in doing so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE.

Mr. OLIVER. If they would be willing to discuss this matter fairly we might believe that they intended to play fair, but do they expect us to believe that in the back township of Manitoba with a registration clerk appointed by a government which, however much it is entitled to credit for energy and executive ability has never yet been accused of impartiality to its opponents, do they expect us to believe that the registration clerks appointed by such a government would give us any fairer play than these gentlemen opposite give us in the House of Commons in the broad light of publicity before the whole Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the minister think that the accidental oversight of a judge in fixing the date for revision in one instance is sufficient ground upon which to argue that the law ought to be entirely changed?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not at all admit that there was only one instance. The hon. gentlemen from Manitoba stated numerous instances but I mention only the most glaring one.

Mr. FOSTER. And that fell to the ground.

Mr. OLIVER. That did not fall to the ground. It is thoroughly established that the date fixed for the court of revision was not a proper date because the same authority that fixed it changed it. As far as I have followed the information given by the members who directly represent Manitoba, the interval between the closing of the court of registration and the holding of the court of revision was in the majority of cases too short to give a fair opportunity to revise the lists. It must be remembered that the constituencies in Manitoba are in some instances very large, that mail communication is not in all cases frequent and that notification to the voter whose name is on the list must practically be made by post, and unless he has been notified of the sitting of the court of revision by mail addressed to his post office then, when the removal of his name comes up before the court of revision, it cannot be struck off. Given a rural constituency 100 miles in length and given a desire to revise the list in regard to names of men residing in remote parts of the constituency with only a weekly mail, will any one say that an interval of a month between the sitting of the court of registration and of the court of revision is sufficient or more than sufficient? I say unquestionably it is not. There should be at least a month in many constituencies in Manitoba in order to secure a fair revision.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What proof is required by the judge that people have been notified?

Mr. OLIVER. It would vary in different cases.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. All that is necessary is simply a certificate of the registration of a letter from the office where is was posted.

Mr. OLIVER. I suppose the judge would take account of the length of time necessary for the letter to reach the person to whom it was addressed and to permit that person to make appearance or to be represented at the court. If the judge does not give consideration to that feature of the case, I think we will have to revise our opinion as to the judgment of the judges. If the man whose name is appealed against is to have an opportunity to appear on his own behalf or to make representations on his own behalf there must be an allowance of time, and I submit that an allowance of a month between the closing of the court of registration and the opening of the court of revision is not more than sufficient time in some constituencies in Manitoba.

The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) the other night read to the House the times allowed in the diffenent constituencies, and in no case that I remember was more than a month allowed; it seemed to me that it was seldom that a month was allowed, in the large majority of cases it was considerably under a month.

Mr. FOSTER. Clause 1 of this Act states that the whole operation shall take place after the issue of the writ which runs for about 28 days. How does he propose to get all the other notices in and then give this month's notice of revision ?

Mr. OLIVER. If my hon. friend had read the first clause as carefully as he probably has read some other portions of the Bill, he would have seen that the Bill does not confine action in the ordering of the revision to a date subsequent to the issue of the writ.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It permits it and why should it not ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, and why should it not? If there had not been a revision before that time and a revision was required before the election it could not do anything else, it could only give the time available and no more. But when my hon. friend says that is the only provision in the Bill, he is mistaken, because he will find on reading that it provides after the issue of the writ or at such other time as the Governor in Council may see fit. Therefore the revision is not confined necessarily to that period after the issue of the writ, it is only confined to that period in case there has not been a revision previous to that time and I suppose my hon. friend will admit that even this government is not required to give more than is possible or more than exists.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman think he will be a better judge of the length of time necessary than the board of registration of the province of Manitoba which consists of all the county court judges of that province ?

Mr. OLIVER. I can only say it has been up before the House repeatedly——

Mr. BURROWS. The court of revision does not decide the date, it is fixed by proclamation based on order in council.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The judges in every case fix the time, hour and place. How else would the people be notified of the time except by proclamation.

Mr. BURROWS. The time is fixed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council by order in council.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. It is not.

Mr. BURROWS. I beg pardon, I can get the order in council. The Lieutenant Governor in Council are the only party having power to fix the time for the court of revision and they do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the hon. gentleman went further he would see that is always done on the report of the board of county judges.

Mr. PATERSON. So what the hon. member (Mr. Crawford) says is true.

Mr. CRAWFORD The county court judges have no power to fix the time. The power is vested in the Lieutenant Governor in council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who in practice have always acted in the representation of the board of judges.

Mr. PATERSON. What the hon. member (Mr. Burrows) says is true then ?

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman asked if it was not reasonable to suppose that the board of registration, composed of the county court judges, would know better and would be more likely to give adequate time between registration and revision than the Lieutenant Governor in Council. My only answer is that in the instance mentioned here a few minutes ago, whether it was determined by an individual judge or the Lieutenant Governor in Council, sufficient time was not given in a most glaring case. It strikes me as remarkable that this most glaring case should have occurred in the constituency of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie. It will be observed that it did not occur in the constituency of my hon. friend from Marquette or that of my hon. friend from Souris, or even that of my hon. friend from Macdonald—it occurred in the constituency of Portage la Prairie.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE That is rather a reflection upon the judge.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentlemen have said repeatedly that the judges fixed the dates for the sittings of the court of revision. The statement has been challenged from this side of the House and in explanation the leader of the opposition replied that the dates were fixed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the report of the judges.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Which has never been departed from.

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot accept the explanation. It is not good enough. When there is such a villainous case as that in the local constituency of Beautiful Plains, it is not sufficient to say that the order in council was based upon the report of the judges. I am not questioning the action of the judge but I am questioning the authority which passed the order in council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will my hon. friend agree to withdraw this clause if the judges are called upon to substantiate what I have said and do so ?

Mr. OLIVER. Most undoubtedly not. I do not know whether my hon. friend has made the suggestion simply as a suggestion or to draw attention from the argument. I am rather inclined to the latter view. I say again that under the statute, the sittings of the court of revision are fixed by order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Upon the report of the judges.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette) The statute does not say that the judges alone shall be the revising barristers, but in practice they are.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the House is entitled to rather fairer treatment than it is receiving.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. When my hon friend said that this court of revision was appointed by the judges, he should have had better evidence. I now have the authority of the statute for saying that the dates are fixed by order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. I have the text of the proclamation fixing the dates by order in council. My hon. friend says that in practice the report of the judges is accepted by the Governor in Council. In reply I say that I think he is going too far in asking the country to believe that the judges of Manitoba—one or all of them—are responsible for the fixing of the date in the Beautiful Plains case.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The best way to find that out is to ask the judges to come down here.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE.

Mr. OLIVER. If our hon. friends are going to rest their case on a proposition of that kind, they should have come here fortified by a statement from the judges. It is established that the dates of the sittings of the court of revision are fixed by order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council empowered thereto by a statute of the provincial legislature. Let me add that the period between the closing of the court of registration and the opening of the court of revision does not correspond, in the list the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) read, with the areas of the different local constituencies, with their means of communication, or with the opportunities within them of proper notification regarding the sittings of the court of revision. The dates did vary considerably. In some constituencies there were upwards of thirty days, in some there were less than twenty days, and in others they were down to seventeen and fifteeen days. I am not familiar with the actual circumstances, but I say that it is a fair supposition that the difference in the periods between the closing of the court of registration and the opening of the court of revision in the various local constituencies depended rather upon political exigencies, as understood by the provincial government, than upon the merits of the case or a desire to secure a fair revision, and I instance in this connection the case of the constituency of Beautiful Plains. The places at which the courts of revision sit are fixed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. They may be convenient or they may not. We have the instance often alluded to of the Lac du Bonnet case where the court was appointed to sit at a place where it was impossible for twenty or thirty voters to get their names on the list. When the court was adjourned so that these men could get their names on the list, the sittings were illegal and the names were not legally inscribed. Although on some occasions permission was given to have a number of registration offices in each local constituency, at which hundreds of names were registered, with or without personal presence, according to or contrary to the law, as the case may be, the court of revision—if I remember rightly the statement of the case made by the hon. member for Marquette—sat in a large majority of instances only one day or a part of a day in each local constituency. It is proposed under this measure that the revision shall take a day or part of a day when the registration took four, five, six, eight and ten days. I would ask the House how it could ever have been expected that a registration which took eight or ten days, could be revised in one day or less and yet have the revision adequate. The evidence is incontrovertible that the court of revision was not intended to revise. In fact it was intended to prevent revision. We have the statement of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie that in his constituency there were 600 names of Conservatives on the list which should not be there as compared with 200 Liberals; and he told the House that it is impossible, under the law, to have these names struck off. If they are ever to be struck off, it must be by mutual agreement between the two parties in the interest of fair play. Just to revert to the point which we were discussing a few minutes ago. The Manitoba Election Act, chapter 52, revised statutes of Manitoba of 1902 with amendments of 1903 and 1904, published by authority, says, in section 21:

The list of electors shall hereafter only be made and revised at such times and in the manner hereinafter provided

Annually on or before the first day of May, the Lieutenant Governor shall, by order in council, authorize the issuing of a proclamation setting forth:

. . . . . .

4. The date or dates on, the place or places at, and the hours between which courts of revision will be held in the several electoral divisions of the province to consider and decide such applications, and to receive further applications of others to have their names added to the list of electors.

I find nothing there in regard to the authority of the judges to either revise or amend that authority. The 'Manitoba Gazette' of Saturday, April 25, 1908, contains a proclamation in regard to the revision of the voters' lists, and gives the names and post office addresses of the persons appointed as registration clerks in the several electoral divisions. It appoints the hours at which they shall sit and says:

That, where not otherwise stated, the hours between which registration clerks shall sit to receive applications for registration and the correction and striking off names of electors, shall be from 9 o'clock a.m. to 12 o'clock noon and from 1 o'clock p.m. till 6 o'clock p.m.

I find nothing, so far, stating that the judges have any authority whatever in this connection.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. That is with regard to courts of registration.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, I have already read with regard to the courts of revision.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Oh, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) does not understand it. He has posted you wrong.

Mr. OLIVER. I find in this publication, the same issue of the 'Maritime Gazette,' the following:

A proclamation.

Whereas it has been determined to add to and revise the lists of electors in and for the several electoral divisions in the province of Manitoba, pursuant to the provisions of the Manitoba Election Act, and it is necessary for the said purpose to constitute the several judges of the county courts in the said province a board of registration:

Now, therefore, we have thought fit and do hereby, pursuant to the powers and authority contained in the Manitoba Election Act, constitute the several judges of the county courts holding office in the province of Manitoba a board of registration for all and singular the premises.

In testimony whereof, we have, &c.

Now, our friends opposite have stated in so many words that the boards of registration composed of county judges, appointed the registration clerks.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Never.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. OLIVER. They did not?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I hope we have the point fixed——

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Certainly they did not.

Mr. OLIVER. Very well, that is accepted.

Mr. FOSTER. It never was contended otherwise.

Mr. GRAHAM. It was stated to-night.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. Who stated it?

Mr. OLIVER. I think it was stated by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche).

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The member for Marquette stated nothing of the kind. I did not refer to the courts of registration at all.

Mr. OLIVER. When I was alluding to the instances of names which were put upon the lists without the presence of the voters, my hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche) rose and said: Who appointed that registration clerk?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Yes, because it was done under the original Act, the Act of 1903. The hon. minister (Mr. Oliver) is not posted; that is all.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, my hon. friend gave the House a most excellent impression in regard to the fairness of this Act, which, whether I am well posted or not, I have, in my ignorance, been fortunate enough to show clearly is not justified. My hon. friend by his statement, whether intentionally or not, conveyed to the House the impression that the registration clerks were appointed by the board of judges.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Originally.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So they were at one time.

Mr. OLIVER. So they were at one time? But they are not now. So, we have that established for the first time in this discussion. It is established that the registration clerks are appointed by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor in Council. They are then partisan appointments.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. OLIVER. Do I understand they are not partisan appointments ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Do I understand the hon. Minister (Mr. Oliver) to say that when the judges appointed the registration clerks they did not appoint Liberals as well as Conservatives ? And, if so, does he claim that the Conservatives were partisans but that the Liberals were not ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not talking about that at all. What I am asking—if the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. J. Roche) wants cross-firing in this way—is : The registration clerks who, to-day, are appointed by His Honour the lieutenant governor, are they or are they not partisans of the government of the day ?

Mr. BERGERON. Why should they be ?

Mr. OLIVER. Are they or are they not ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. What do you call a partisan ?

Mr. OLIVER. A man who votes consistently and persistently for one political party.

Mr. TALBOT. And is rewarded.

Mr. OLIVER. And I say that my hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche) will not deny that these registration clerks are partisans of the provincial government.

Mr. BERGERON. And then—— ?

Mr. OLIVER. Well, now, that point is established—that to these partisan appointees is entrusted the choice as to whether personal registration shall be insisted upon or not.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the law that is proposed here ?

Mr. OLIVER. If that is the case, I ask what is the provision as to personal registration but a provision to keep Grits off and let Tories on ?

Mr. BERGERON. What about the law that is proposed here ? Will it not be the same on the other side ?

Mr. OLIVER. We will come to that——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the minister (Mr. Oliver) aware that two of the main cases that have been relied upon on the other side are cases which occurred when these registration clerks were appointed by the judges ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that has anything to do with the case. But now we have that preliminary point established —that the compilation of the preliminary list is absolutely in partisan hands under the interpretation that has been given to the law on the authority of my hon. friend from Marquette, and on the statement of my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. S. J. Jackson) they are given practically a free hand in the compilation of these lists to party advantage. Now, I said before, and, I beg to repeat, that in instances where it is considered necessary that there should be a number of courts of registration in a single constituency, it is not considered necessary that there should be an equal number, or anything like an equal number, of courts of revision. That is to say that, where names can be put upon the list by the partisan registration officer at his own sweet will, in four, five, six, eight or ten different places——

Mr. BURROWS. Seventeen.

Mr. OLIVER. —these names could only be struck off in one place in the constituency in one day or part of day. I said, and I beg to repeat, that that is not a provision for the revision of the lists, it is a provision to prevent the revision of the lists. The time that is allowed for the revision of the lists is, as I have shown, absolutely inadequate. There are naturally a number of people who have not been able to get their names on before the court of revision and who are anxious to get on. They may be of one political party or the other, or of both ; we will suppose they are of both parties. The court of revision has but one short day to sit. Now, it is natural and proper that the application of the men who are present to be on the list will be taken up before the applications to strike off are considered, with the result that in practice there is to all intents and purposes no striking off the lists compiled in the way I have described. Do my hon. friends contradict that statement?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I will refer them to the statement of my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner), who informed the House that at a certain date there was a revision in the city of Winnipeg which resulted in the striking of 2,500 names off the list. Nobody questions that it was a proper revision. The city of Winnipeg is a large city and has a very fluctuating population, much more so than any city in eastern Canada. My hon. friend from Souris informed the House that in the year succeeding that revision there had been in one year 25 names struck off, in another year I think 30 names and in another year 30 or 40 names. I think he managed to total up in three or four years about 100 names that had been found to be improperly on the list in the great city of Winnipeg ; when in the revision immediately before that it was found there were 2,500 names that were improperly on the list. Now, these lists having been compiled as I have described, hon. gentlemen will not suggest that there is any good opportunity to get names off those lists improperly. When in the city of Winnipeg, where every effort is made, if it is made anywhere, to get the lists revised properly, it has only been possible to get a paltry hundred or so off the list in three or four years, the House need not go further for absolute evidence out of the mouth of the member for Souris that there is no such thing as a revision of lists in the province of Manitoba.

In this connection it might not be out of place to refer to the methods employed to secure names for insertion on the lists in the city of Winnipeg, as described by my hon. friend who represents that city. He placed before the House certain sworn statements by certain people, that at a certain day, a certain hour and a certain place, and under certain circumstances, some 450 men who, in a large majority of cases were not entitled to be naturalized, and in any case were not entitled to be naturalized as they were, were naturalized by the assistance of the party machinery of the local government in the city of Winnipeg. The affidavit is explicit, it gives time, place, dates and persons. The affidavit is denied by our friends on the other side and is denied by counter affidavits. It is not creditable to the city of Winnipeg, it is not creditable to the party in power there, that their party machine did, as admitted, employ the person who made this affidavit, and which affidavit they declare to be false. They declare that he was a jail bird and that now he is a fugitive from justice. This is the man that their party machine employed. They admitted that he was in their employ, that he is the man they employ to-day to do their work. He is the man who has made this affidavit as to the management of the party machine. We find that these 450 naturalizations took place on the day immediately preceding the day for registration of the voters in the city of Winnipeg. And we find on searching the records here the remarkable fact that there were some 790 naturalizations put through in the city of Winnipeg on that particular day. It is a coincidence of course that the affidavit of Rudneski accounting for 450 of these should happen to be made on the same date. But it is a coincidence our friends will admit. It is also a coincidence that in the constituency of North Winnipeg, which was considered to be a safe Liberal seat, one of the leading citizens, one of the oldest inhabitants in the city of Winnipeg, a man who had enjoyed the honour of being mayor of the city, in that safe Liberal seat was defeated in the election by the candidate of the Conservative party machine by a large majority, a majority, if I remember right, of about 400 or 450. Those who are acquainted with the political conditions in Manitoba were astonished when they heard how the election had gone. It was indeed a famous victory. It is only a coincidence that the Conservative majority in North Winnipeg was approximately the same as the number of manufactured naturalizations that Mr. Rudneski swears to. But it was a coincidence at any rate.

Now, it is said that this Rudneski is a very improper person, that he has been a jail bird, that he is now a fugitive from justice, and that he committed perjury in making that affidavit. That is a serious charge. It is asserted also that not only did he commit perjury, but that he was suborned to commit perjury, that he was paid for doing it by a cheque to the amount of $25 given to him by a certain gentleman named Walton, who acts in some capacity on behalf of the Liberal party. I submit that the statement on the part of members of the Manitoba government that Rudneski was a jail-bird, that he is now a fugitive from justice, that he is a suborned perjurer, or that Mr Walton suborned that perjury, is not good enough in this case. These gentlemen are charged with the administration of justice in the province of Manitoba. I hope that under their administration perjury has not become so common as to have no attention paid to it or that subornation of perjury should not be dealt with as the Criminal Code provides. If the facts are as these gentlemen have stated—have stated broadly in the newspapers—in the newspapers of their own ownership, as it is even said—their position it seems to me is not enviable. Either the Rudneski affidavit is true or the government of Manitoba is not maintaining the law as the government of Manitoba is charged with the responsibility of doing. The government of Manitoba is winking at perjury, at the subornation of perjury if it does not take every proceeding within its power to bring the men Rudneski and Walton to justice, to lay them by the heels in jail and to see that they are punished to the full extent of the law. That is the only answer they can make to the Rudneski affidavit. It is that or it is nothing. Either Rudneski and Walton should be in jail or the Rudneski affidavit is true. There is no escape from that. Rudneski is out of the country, it is said. Perhaps he is and perhaps he is not. We do not know whether he is. My hon. friend from Macdonald rather indicated to the House that the government of Manitoba, or at any rate the party machine in Manitoba, had knowledge of the whereabouts of Rudneski while they had knowledge of the nature of the affidavits which he had made.

Mr. STAPLES I beg to contradict the hon. gentleman. I never made any such statement. I never said anything of the kind. I am surprised at the minister.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend knew the price that was paid for the cheque ?

Mr. STAPLES. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. He says he knew the price that was paid for the cheque. Does he know who paid it ?

Mr. STAPLES Yes, I know who paid it.

Mr. OLIVER. Does he know where it was paid ? My hon. friend knows too much about this cheque for his own good and so do his friends know too much about it. This is a question of perjury, a matter of seven years' penitentiary if justice is done.

Mr. STAPLES. Did this government undertake to prosecute Nixon or Wagner ?

Mr. OLIVER. This government is not called upon to prosecute Rudneski any more than it was called upon to prosecute Nixon or Wagner. It is the business of the government of Manitoba to prosecute Rudneski.

Mr. STAPLES. May I ask the hon. gentleman whose duty it was in Wagner's case?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that it makes any difference as to whose duty it was to prosecute Wagner. But, I will say that Wagner was prosecuted. Wagner was convicted, I think, on improper evidence. Our friends who have been shouting in this House and out of it against Wagner, whose prosecution or persecution has been referred to by the hon. gentleman, are not taking any steps against Rudneski. Again I say that either the Rudneski affidavit is true or the government of Manitoba stands convicted of being a government unworthy to govern.

Mr. STAPLES. I would like, in reply to the minister, to say that the government of Manitoba are to-day trying to find Rudneski.

Mr. OLIVER My hon. friend had possession of the cheque which he held up in this House.

Mr. STAPLES. Do you want to see it ?

Mr. OLIVER. I saw it or what my hon. friend said was it, I am taking his word and it is good enough. He said that the cheque had not been cashed.

Mr. STAPLES. Neither it had.

Mr. OLIVER. That no more had been paid for it than its face value.

Mr. STAPLES. That was right.

Mr. OLIVER. Then my hon. friend knows that somebody got it from Rudneski.

Mr. STAPLES. Precisely so.

Mr. OLIVER. That it was not in the interests of the party machine in Manitoba.

Mr. STAPLES Why not ?

Mr. OLIVER. No reason in the world why not, but it could not have been got by the party machine in Manitoba for its face value unless there had been protection to Rudneski guaranteed by the province of Manitoba. Why should Rudneski give up a $25 cheque for $25 instead of taking it to the bank and getting it cashed ?

Mr. BENNETT. The bank was closed.

Mr. OLIVER. If it would give evidence of his having been suborned to perjury to the men who are charged with the responsibility of punishing him is it to be supposed that he would give up that cheque unless he got a promise of protection? Rudneski is accused of being a jail-bird, he is accused of being a fugitive from justice, he is accused of being a perjurer, but he is not accused of being such a consummate fool as that. However, we will drop the question of Rudneski.

There is an affidavit placed before the House by my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) of another person who, in so many words, confirmed every statement made by Rudneski. Apparently he was not paid anything for this, at any rate, our friends have no cheque to show that they got from him. They have not said that he is a fugitive from justice, that he is not in the province of Manitoba. If the Rudneski affidavit is false the affidavit of this other man is just as false, and it is the duty of the Attorney General of Manitoba to see that the man is laid by the heels in jail under the terms of the Criminal Code if they dare do it. It is not good enough to send broadcast statements in the newspapers that this, that, or the other statement is not true. It is not a question of veracity, it is a question of the breaking of the criminal law in one of its most important provisions; of the breaking down of one of the greatest safeguards of society done with the cognizance, in the case of Rudneski, and I very much fear with the assistance of the party machine in the province of Manitoba. Another affidavit was read in the House today from a citizen of Winnipeg and a voter in the province. It has not been alleged so far that he has been paid for his affidavit; it is not pretended that he is a jail-bird and a fugitive from justice ; it is up to the Manitoba government to put that man in jail on a charge of perjury and not ask this House to believe that the fact that Sandy Macdonald was defeated in North Winnipeg by 450 votes and that 450 names were improperly placed on the list, were merely a coincidence.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Was not that constituency already in the hands of the Conservatives by a very large majority?

Mr. OLIVER. And apparently the friends of my hon. friend did not think it was a safe seat or they would not have taken such strenuous measures to secure it. Had there been a fair opportunity for the revision of the lists in North Winnipeg this would not and could not have occurred for it would have been useless to put these bogus names upon the list. But it was in the full knowledge that there was no opportunity for revision that these measures were resorted to and these naturalizations made out in order to secure the defeat of the Liberal candidate on that occasion. And if these things were done in North Winnipeg what is there to hinder their being resorted to in every constituency of the province. The court of revisions is the safeguard of the liberties of the people and when the court of revision is not given a fair opportunity to discharge its duty it matters not whether it is a judge or a layman who presides over it. It is in restricting the opportunity for revising the lists that the great iniquity of the Manitoba law exists and it is because of that iniquity, it seems to me, that our hon. friends are so persistent in holding on to the law.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Can the minister quote any authority to say that there was any complaint from the Liberals of the city of Winnipeg about sufficient time not having been given for the court of revision to discharge its duty ?

Mr. OLIVER. They did not know what the results would be until the votes were polled and it was the surprise of the elections that this constituency went as it did. How were people to know that such acts had been perpetrated when they were not given a fair opportunity to know what names were on the list and to have the list revised ? To sum up : The registration clerks are appointed and hold sittings as directed by order in council. The requirement of personal registration is interpreted to give all the advantages to those whom a partisan registration clerk may desire to place on the list. Once the preliminary list is made up there is no fair opportunity to secure a proper revision of the names on it. The publicity given the list is not sufficient. The location of the persons whose names appear is not sufficient. That point has been established. The time allowed for the preparation of appeals may be and sometimes is manipulated by the local government so as to be absurdly insufficient. That point was established. The number of courts of revision allowed is insufficient. The time allowed the courts is insufficient. The place of sitting of the court is frequently inconvenient. The provision that the court may not adjourn from day to day until its work is completed makes the preliminary list compiled by a partisan registration clerk, and not the list as revised by the judge, practically final, under the present provincial law as it is administered. So far as the overlapping of provincial and federal constituencies is concerned there must be a revision or there cannot be an election. The present provision for correcting the overlapping by the returning officer has not been satisfactory in practice, therefore some other method should be provided. In order that the people may freely cast their votes it is necessary that polling divisons should be conveniently arranged. In a country where the population is rapidly increasing there is need for a frequent readjustment of polling subdivisions such as would not exist under other circumstances. There is the same need that the right to subdivide into federal polling divisions should exist, and should be used when needed independent of provincial divisions as that the boundaries of federal constituencies should be independent of the bounds of provincial constituencies.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this a quotation ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, it is a statement that I am making to the House. Does my hon. friend agree with it or not ?

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the minister's own statement ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is my own statement. No provision exists in the present law for such a readjustment of polling divisions and voters' lists and therefore provision should be made. The conditions actually existing demand a distribution of the voters on the provincial lists amongst the several constituencies of the province and amongst the several polling divisions in these constituencies by some legal authority. Given adequate opportunity for revision of the lists and for the proper distribution of polls and of voters, and the compilation of the lists as at present would not be greatly objected to. It is believed, however, that so long as the principle of personal registration is accepted there should be a registration office opened in each polling division as established at the last preceding election. But without proper revision of the lists and distribution of voters the compilation of the lists and distribution of the voters however made, is only a means of reaching the end of unfair lists.

What is wanted is :

Printing of the preliminary lists. The lists as printed to give post office address in all cases. A statutory minimum period between registration and revision that shall be sufficient in all ordinary cases. Actual dates to be fixed by registration board, not by order in council. I am suggesting that what my hon. friend said was now the practice shall be made the law.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that in the Bill before ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is not in the Bill before.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a new departure.

Mr. OLIVER. The times and places of sitting of courts of revision to be fixed by the registration board, not by order in council, and courts to be adjourned from day to day until all applications to put on or strike off names are disposed of. Officers appointed to revise the lists to adjust the voters' list as revised to the limit of the Dominion constituency to which they properly belong. Returning officer to have authority to establish polls, define polling divisions, and adjust lists to meet requirements as now done in provincial elections subject to appeal to the registration board. If the law as it stands at present were in itself fair and not subject to improper administration, there could be no reasonable objection to placing it in the hands of the federal government for administration in regard to federal lists as proposed by the Bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is very dangerous.

Mr. BERGERON. Would you do that in Nova Scotia ?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) said that would be very unfair.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, I said it would be dangerous.

Mr. OLIVER. The whole burden of the interruptions which have been directed to me to-night have been on that line, that it is not fair that the provisions of the Bill should be adopted. It is not fair that the provisions of the Bill should be adopted it surely is just as unfair that the Manitoba election law should remain as it is, because all that the Bill says is that the law as it stands shall be applied to a revision of the lists for federal purposes, and all the criticism and all the objections that my hon. friends have made have been with respect to their own law. They have accused us of all sorts of constitutional and political crimes because we have, in the innocence of our hearts, supposed that they would accept the application of their own law in this case. But, when we undertook to apply to them their own law administered by us, their shrieks of agony rent the heavens. They threatened a dissolution.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear, no, no.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, and they threaten an obstruction of Supplies.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. OLIVER. Their newspapers do. I understood my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) to make that threat on behalf of his colleagues.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not think the hon. gentleman wishes to misquote me. My statement was that my personal feeling and I know the general feeling of the country is that the sooner a dissolution comes the better for the people of the whole country.

Mr. OLIVER. Exactly, that is exactly what I said. Our hon. friends have threatened to exert every constitutional resource —and I must say they are prepared frequently to stretch the constitution—in order to prevent the application to themselves of their own law in our hands. Surely if that is the reason for the action which they threaten to take, it is as good a reason for our action in attacking the law now existing in that province. I speak of a law under which 450 names of men who are not entitled to vote have been put on the list. We know of the actions of these men in the election in North Winnipeg, and I submit that a law under which it is not possible to have a proper revision made in the time allowed by its provisions gives us every reason when it is applied to us to complain, and to ask for its amendment. I do not wonder, now that we have gone into this matter and have the facts before the House, that my hon. friends shrink against the taking of their own medicine. I am satisfied that neither the Minister of Justice nor the Prime Minister had any idea that the law and its administration was as it has been shown to be or they would never have thought of introducing the Bill in its present form. They never would have undertaken to apply to my hon. friends on the other side of the House such an administration and such a law as their friends have applied to us in Manitoba. In proof of that I have to point out that the right hon. the Prime Minister has said to the House that he does not wish now to take into his hands the power and authority that have been abused by the government of Manitoba, he does not want to be tied to such a law to be administered by this government ; he is willing and wishful to be clear of it, and not to ask the hon. members opposite to take their own medicine, he offers instead to produce to the House an amendment that will give the readjustment and the revision of the lists in the province of Manitoba into the hands of the registration board instead of the hands of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) have said to this House to-night that in practice that is what is done to-day. In all fairness, if that is the practice and if it is satisfactory to them as practice, where is their objection to its being made law by us? We are not satisfied with the practice, we are not satisfied even that it is the practice, but if it is and they say it is, and they say the practice is fair, then I say give us the law instead of the practice and there is no disagreement between us on this question.

Mr. J G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, Sir, that the rules of the House did not permit my hon. friend to continue the reading of his speech; it would have been a great deal shorter and it would have been more to the point. My hon. friend is not quite posted upon the laws of Manitoba and while he displayed great cleverness, he had to work very hard to answer the criticisms and interruptions from this side of the House. I have listened to many of the speeches delivered during this discussion and I have to say to you, Sir, that I had no idea that the lists in Manitoba were made as well as they are. I do not believe that there is another province in Canada where the lists are as well made as in Manitoba. Of course I understand why the government want to make the lists in Manitoba, but the more I have listened to gentlemen on both sides of the House the more I have been convinced that everything that can be done to give the vote to a man who has a right to vote, is done in Manitoba. As far as British Columbia is concerned, we had this afternoon, from the lips of the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) a representative of that province, the statement that they are perfectly well satisfied with their election law. Why he says there are excellent things in that law. There are weak points. What are they? That registration does not have to be made in person, and for this he gave the reason that miners cannot come to central points to register, a perfectly good reason. Otherwise they are entirely satisfied with their lists. I asked him whether any objections had been made in the House at Victoria last session on account of the lists? He said: No, not a word. Did you ever hear of any complaint? No, on the contrary I have letters from Conservative clubs and even from Liberal clubs saying they are perfectly satisfied with the present lists in British Columbia.

The Minister of the Interior has been working very hard to defend this measure. I do not think that any one of us in the House will convince others on the opposite side. My intention, in the few remarks I have to make, is to talk to the man on the street. It seems to me that this measure is not well understood outside the House. Look at the great title of this Bill:

An Act to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

That is a fine title. Is there any thing there to say that elections will be carried on in an honest and clean manner, and that the will of the people will be allowed to assert itself at the polls? Not a word. Is there any thing in this Bill to say that the election shall take place all on the same day? That was one of the old and sacred principles of the Liberal party, but there is not a word about it in this Bill. This Bill is an attempt to manufacture Liberal votes in some provinces in this Dominion. Quebec is introduced simply as a pretense. My right hon. friend admits what was said by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), that there is no necessity for this measure in the province of Quebec. The franchise there is under the control of the local government and every thing is done there, as far as it can be, in a proper way, though the election law in Quebec is far from being as good as is the election law of Manitoba. And in Ontario, they are carrying on elections to-day for the local legislature. Why not carry them on for this House just as they are carried on for the local House? This Bill is simply an attempt by this government to elect their friends in Manitoba and British Columbia if possible.

We can discuss this Bill very briefly and very plainly. We can discuss it so that the man on the street will understand it thoroughly. We are discussing a principle. When I hear my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) arguing for all he is worth on a little technicality, such as whether the delay between the closing of the registration and the opening of the court of revision shall be thirty days or twenty days or fourteen days or whether a man shall have to travel ten miles or fifteen miles to register his vote, I need only reply that is not the question before the country. The question is shall we have a franchise made by the Dominion parliament or shall we accept those made by the local legislatures? That is the sole question. In 1885 we had a Dominion Franchise law passed by this parliament in spite of all the efforts of hon. gentlemen opposite who were then on the opposition benches, and that law provided that the Dominion franchise would be the same all over Canada. It provided that every man elected to this House would be elected on the same franchise, whether he came from British Columbia or Prince Edward Island. Hon. gentlemen opposite fought that law as much as they could. They were afraid that partisan enumerators might not do them justice, and there might have been something in that contention, although subsequent events proved that their fears were unfounded and that no injustice was done then. It was under that system that my right hon. friend was returned in 1896 by an overwhelming majority, thus showing that no injustice was done him and his party by means of that Franchise Act. But of all the pledges made by the Liberal party when in opposition, every one has been discarded except that to abolish the Dominion Franchise Act. They did abolish it in 1898, and in its stead they accepted the local franchise Acts, and the members of this parliament were to be elected upon franchises made by the local legislatures. That was the principle adopted by this government and that is the principle on which elections have since been held. Why are they not now willing to stand by that principle which they themselves established? When Manitoba had a Liberal majority in its provincial legislature, no man said a word about its franchise law. When British Columbia was Liberal, its franchise law was all right. When Ontario was Liberal, there was not a word against its franchise. But just as soon as a province becomes Conservative again, this Dominion government steps in and says: We shall not trust you to make the franchise; we are afraid you will not do it in the proper way. Surely no sensible man will take that as an argument. I say that this Bill is unconstitutional. This parliament has not the right to discriminate against any one or more provinces. It has not the right to legislate for one province against another. It has not the right to say that in one, two or three provinces, the local authorities shall make the election lists but that in the other provinces they shall be made by the Dominion officials. What have we had said by hon. gentlemen opposite as a reason for our passing this Bill? They say that things are not carried on exactly right in Manitoba. Well, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing perfect in this world. Although the Manitoba Election Act is the best in the whole Dominion it is not absolutely proof against defects or against illegal practices. You may find the same in the province of Quebec, where we have a good franchise law and also in Ontario, whose law is on the whole a model one. But as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has pointed out, is there any partisan list made in any province in the Dominion as partisan as that made in Nova Scotia, where the local officer may put on the list the names he wants and strike off those he wishes, and there is no appeal. My hon. friend said there were old men in Halifax who had been on the list twenty-five or forty years, whose names were struck off at the last election. I may be told that that was an error. Still there is nothing in this providing that the revision of the list in Nova Scotia shall be taken out of the hands of the local authorities in that province. Why that omission? Simply because the Nova Scotia government is a Liberal government. In the province of Quebec there are thousands of men who are disfranchised and will not be able to vote at the next election. There are men who lived in my county in the month of September last and have since gone to Montreal. They are not on the list of my county nor in that of Montreal, because the lists in Montreal were made the year before, and are only made every two years. Those men therefore will not vote in either place. And there are thousands of voters who travel around from one district to another, who are in the same position. How are you going to remedy that? Are you going to say that the lists shall be made here? If the right hon. the First Minister should come down with a law providing that the Dominion shall control the making of the lists, if he should come down with a Dominion Election Act, I will stand by him. But if he says he is in favour of the provincial legislatures controlling the franchise, let him stand by that. The present government obtained office by promising every thing they could imagine to the electorate, but not one of those promises has been carried out except their promise to adopt the local franchises, and now they are trying to get rid of a part of that. They have taken every possible means, both in and out of parliament, to secure power and retain it. They have carried on the elections in every possible way in their disposal or at the disposal of their friends. They have done every thing possible to prevent the election of Conservatives. We know the history of the West Huron election, where it was proven under oath that the votes of the electors were stolen by men who were sworn to do their duty—what has happened to them? The Minister of the Interior says that there was nobody sued for perjury in the province of Manitoba. He besmirched that government because of their failure to do so. Well, what is the matter with this government or with our Minister of Justice or our Department of Justice in not suing for perjury the men who swore they had stolen the votes of the electors in West Huron. We do not hear a word about that. When that matter was brought before parliament a second time for investigation, what were we promised by the right hon. the First Minister? He promised to give us a royal commission to investigate the West Huron and the other elections in which frauds were committed. But we have not heard a word about that royal commission since. Not a single appointment has been made to it. And the consequence has been that election crooks were given a free hand throughout the Dominion. They knew that they were protected by the Dominion government, and they did every thing they could to carry the elections for their party. They did it in West Elgin, in Brockville and in Belleville. They went down to St. James division, Montreal. Is there anything in this Bill to prevent such frauds as were committed in the St. James division, where it was proved that fifteen ballot boxes were opened by the deputy returning officers and the poll clerks, the Conservative ballots stolen out of them, and replaced by ballots for the Liberal candidate. And there is nothing at all in this Act to prevent that kind of thing from occuring again. And when I——

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) allow me? He refers to his own election in St. James division and the case of Brunet. The parties who were accused with tampering with the ballot boxes, were they not arrested? Were they not prosecuted?——

Mr. BERGERON. I was coming to that if my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) had given me another minute.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I was the prosecutor in that case, and I think that my hon. friend will agree with me in saying that the offenders were sentenced and sent to the common jail. I think that, in that case at least, justice was done.

Mr. BERGERON. If my hon. friend had waited a moment I think he would have had an answer to all that. I know the case very well, for I was the candidate; I was the man who was robbed. I got these men arrested. The one who had been the manipulator of the whole thing was sent to jail for four months, but the jail door was opened by the Minister of Justice of Canada and this man came out after he had served barely two months.

Mr. LEMIEUX. At the request of whom?

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know. Does the hon. gentleman say that I asked——

Mr. LEMIEUX. Who signed the petition for their release? I could tell the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know. I did not. But even if a thousand people had asked to get this man out of jail I would not say that the Minister of Justice should have freed these men. Why they are the greatest criminals. The hon. minister (Mr. Lemieux) will not insinuate that I signed that petition or that any one that I know signed it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. What does the hon. gentleman mean—that I signed it?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Some one very near you.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the right hon. gentleman say that I signed anything of that kind?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have not seen the petition.

Mr. MONK. I think you are alluding to me. I know that I got dozens of telegrams from Ottawa, and I think I could name the parties who sent them, saying that the Minister of Justice was disposed to act, but would not act unless I signed the petition. I knew the parties, and as they came to me and stated that as it depended upon me and not upon the Minister of Justice I signed it.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is well able to defend himself and I leave the case in his hands. I know I did not sign the petition, and I had to fight the people who asked me to sign, though to ask me to sign such a petition I thought was an insult to me. This man Brunet was sentenced to jail for four months, but he was set at liberty in two months. Yet a poor woman, who had personated a voter in a municipal election in St. Jean-Baptiste village, was sent to jail for four months, and though she was a widow and her children were on the street, she was not liberated until she had served the term of her sentence. And the deputy returning officer, Hetu, who had sworn to do his duty and who had manipulated the ballots as he himself declared, was found guilty and sentenced to jail for four months. But in two months he also was liberated by the Minister of Justice. I ask my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) if the Attorney General of Manitoba, knowing of such cases, would be likely to be anxious to put the whole legal machinery of the province of Manitoba in play to put a man in jail and then have the Minister of Justice of Canada use his authority to let him out?

Mr. OLIVER. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) has asked me, I may reply that, judging by the action and attitude of the Attorney General in the case of Leach, there is every reason to believe he would.

Mr. BERGERON. I was saying that this government have tried many different means of keeping in power. The rules of debate do not allow me to go as far into that subject at this time as I would like. The matter can be further discussed on another occasion. What does the government want now? They want to find new ways to keep in power. And hon. gentlemen opposite know very well what their record is. And they know very well what they can expect from the independent electors of this country when they appeal to those electors. They know what they can expect from the province of Ontario, and they are by no means in doubt as to what they may expect from New Brunswick. And they have a strong suspicion how Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island will treat them. And they will very soon know what to expect from the province of Quebec. So they look to these provinces in the west, believing that, if they can snatch a verdict there, it will be of assistance to them. And so they bring forward this Bill under which an officer is to be appointed for the preparation of the list. And he will not be a partisan. Oh, no! This officer will be appointed by the Dominion government. He will not be a judge. But he will be a good Grit, I will swear to that, a good strong partisan. And for the purpose of preparing the list of voters, the Governor in Council is to be authorized to appoint all the necessary officers and to confer on them all the necessary powers. These men are to be appointed by the Dominion government to make the lists in the province of Manitoba. In that province the lists are prepared with every possible care and are revised by the judges of the land. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister will appoint his man. And what will he do, this man appointed by the head of the government? He will strike off the lists those whom he wants to strike off and will put on those whom he wants to put on. The Bill provides that he is to add the names of persons who are qualified and to strike off the names of those who are not qualified. The man on the street will not believe that there is a man on this side who is worthy the name of a man who would allow such a Bill to become law. I do not wish to discuss the details of the case, for I stand on the principle that we have not the right to touch these lists. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver), when he was obliged to drop his manuscript, seemed to go astray when he dealt with the question of the time allowed for registration. How could he expect to make the people believe that it was better to allow, as under this Act, twenty three days when they have in Manitoba fifty-five days? And, if I understand this Bill, it is said that only when the time of election has arrived, when the writs are out, is the preparation of the list to be begun. How can you have time to prepare the lists and revise them after the issuing of the writs?

Mr. OLIVER. Might I suggest to my hon. friend that there would be just the same time for the compilation and revision of the lists after the issue of the writ for a Dominion election in the province of Manitoba, as now exists for the compilation and revision of the lists in the unorganized districts of the province of Ontario in respect of the provincial election now going on.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is certainly not correct. Those lists are now under revision in Ontario, and have been for nearly two months.

Mr. BRISTOL. They are first prepared by the sheriff and then revised by the stipendiary magistrate. It is done every year.

Mr. OLIVER. I am speaking on the authority of the member for Rainy River and Thunder Bay (Mr. Conmee), who represents one of those constituencies, and he informed the House that unless the date of the election was postponed a large number of electors in that district would be disfranchised under an application of the law regarding the revision of the lists as applied in the province of Ontario to-day.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. I represent the constituency, and I know whereof I speak.

Mr. BERGERON. Then my hon. friend switched off to the province of Ontario. I was talking about Manitoba, because it is Manitoba that the government wants to strike principally. Now this measure is very improperly put before the public. On Saturday last I was reading in one of the leading newspapers of Montreal an article speaking to this effect: Is it not extraordinary that the opposition in Ottawa are trying to prevent the government from giving to Manitoba voters' lists revised by the judges of the land? How unjust! The government at Ottawa wants every man to exercise the franchise who is qualified, and as the government do not make the lists in the west, they say they should be made and revised by the local judges. Of course, all that is a misstatement of the case, but that is the way the people are being misled.

Now I want to say a word more about section 17 where the government provide that even if a ballot is disfigured or mutilated, it shall remain good. I have heard my right hon. friend in years gone by speak about the sanctity of the ballot. Why, the Bill is not passed yet, and I do not think it ever will be passed, but I have heard some people in the provincial elections telling their friends that on the 8th of June they will be voting under this new law. The right hon. gentleman said the other day, why there are men who will lose their votes by a little spot on the ballot. Suppose a hundred or two hundred men lose their votes, it is very unfortunate, but if you pass this Bill with clause 17 in it, the result will be still more unfortunate. A man will say, how much will you give me for my vote?—$5—How can I know that you voted for me? I will make such and such a mark on the ballot. The deputy returning officer, who is a partisan, and the clerk of the poll, who is also a partisan, find this promised mark on the ballot, and the voter gets his $5. And my right hon. friend thinks we should allow a Bill of that kind to pass so that every voter and the deputy returning officer will know how such and such a man voted. Where is the secrecy of the ballot? Where is that principle that it required so many years of eloquence and work to obtain? And yet it is a so-called Liberal government that proposes a Bill which will abolish the secrecy of the ballot, a government who pretend that they follow the example of the Liberal party in England. They ask us to pass a Bill which will make of elections a farce, worse than that, criminal. My right hon. friend says —if not himself, some of his colleagues and his press organs—why, we are threatened with a refusal of Supply. I am not going to make any such threat, but I am going to tell my right hon. friend that if everybody thought as I do, this Bill would never become law. I would revise the Bill and put in some clauses to insure honest elections, providing that if a deputy returning officer does not do his duty he shall go to jail, and the same with the clerk of the poll. There is nothing in the present law like that. When I wished to prosecute dishonest men in Montreal, I had to appeal to the Criminal Code, because there was nothing in the election law under which any of those men could be sent to jail. Why not put something like that in the law ? Why not have all the elections on the same day ? My right hon. friend knows that I am right, and that all the elections should be held on the same day. We know what it means to have by-elections after a party has got into power.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. How could you carry an election on the same day in the district of Yale-Cariboo, for instance ?

Mr. BERGERON. It is very easy, hold your nomination a week ahead of the other nominations. The right hon. gentleman need not laugh. That is done in the county of Gaspé ; the nomination is some two weeks before the election, and the election takes place on the same day as in other constituencies.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Assuming that that could be done, after the issue of the proclamation dissolving the House and calling an election is issued, how could you arrange to have the nomination in the district of Yale-Cariboo within a week of the general nomination ?

Mr. ALCORN. Have the writ in the returning officer's hands twenty-three days before the nomination.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that it is a physical impossibility to issue the proclamation in the various districts in Yale-Cariboo as required by law within twenty-three days.

Mr. BERGERON. Well, I think my hon. friend will have to accept the method I suggested. It is very easy, it is done in Gaspé and in some other counties, and it is done in the province of Ontario. There are cases where the nominations are held a fortnight before the election, and the election takes place on the same day as in the other constituencies, instead of weeks afterwards. That is perfectly feasible, and every man listening to me knows that it should be done so. The present mode takes an undue advantage of one party or the other.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. But you say you are going to win ?

Mr. BERGERON. We will not have the pleasure of his presence in this House if his election takes place on the same day.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Yes, you will.

Mr. BERGERON. That is what the electors told me when I was in the hon. gentleman's county. I stated at the commencement of these remarks that I was talking for the man on the street. When this measure is understood, when it is known that the government want to make the lists in provinces where the governments are Conservative and that they do not want to touch the lists in Nova Scotia which is a Liberal province and where the lists are so unjust to the Conservative party, the people will understand why we are fighting this measure with so much determination.

Mr. TAYLOR. What about Alberta and Saskatchewan ?

Mr. BERGERON. The preparation of the lists there is done through the instrumentality of this government. They are all right. Any man can go and register there and if he takes an oath that he has the right to vote he has the right to vote whether he is a British subject or not. We have heard a good deal of dissolution talk. I do not believe that the right hon. Prime Minister will ask for a dissolution. He dare not do it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Why ?

Mr. BERGERON. He will not go to the country to-day.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Why?

Mr. BERGERON. Because the record of the government is too bad. That is as clear as day. There is no danger of it. We have read in some of the papers that we want to starve the civil service. We are not the government. The government are responsible for the civil service. The government are responsible for carrying on the public works. The government are responsible for everything that happens in the country whether it is good or bad. Why ? When we had good crops it was due to my right hon. friend, and if so why should he not take the responsibility for bad crops or anything that happens ? We have a duty to perform and we will perform that duty. It is to see that no iniquitous law shall be put upon the statute-book of this country. The House has been sitting for five months and hon. gentlemen opposite knew that they had this contentious Bill to bring before parliament. This was known at the commencement of the session. This Bill might have been brought down in December and discussed at that time. We had even to grant the government the courtesy of consenting to a one-eighth Supply Bill. They want an other eighth and we say: Hold on we are not going to do that until we know whether you are going to carry this nefarious scheme through or not. They say that we are going to starve the public service and stop public works. Whose fault is that ? It is the fault of the government and they will be looked upon as being responsible for it by the people of the country when they understand the whole situation. As far as dissolution is concerned there is no danger. Never would there be a better time to go to the country than the present. The hon. gentlemen opposite are so much afraid of it that they had to appoint one commission to explain another. There was the Cassels Commission appointed to explain the Royal Commission, and when it had explained a very small part of the Royal Commission it adjourned sine die and probably we will never hear anything more about it. There is no danger of dissolution. The right hon. gentleman has only one thing to do and that is to withdraw the obnoxious clauses of this Bill, follow the kind advice given by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, strike out clauses Nos. 1 and 17 and let us see if we can devise some means of carrying out honest elections in the country.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I did not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman who has taken his seat (Mr. Bergeron) but I wish to put one question. He spoke, once, twice, thrice of the partisan lists in the province of Nova Scotia, and he also spoke of the nefarious proceedings in the county of Halifax. I want to ask him now if he knows of his own personal knowledge that there were any more Liberal-Conservatives left off the list in the county of Halifax than there were Grits through inadvertence.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not care about working too hard. I will put the matter in the hands of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition who knows a great deal more about the province of Nova Scotia than I do and who will answer my hon. friend (Mr. Roche).

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). I only ask the hon. gentleman, if, in making that statement, he made it of his own personal knowledge ? I was not here when the leader of the opposition made his statement, but I heard the hon. member for Beauharnois.

Mr. BERGERON. No, I made it after hearing the statement made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in whom I have perfect confidence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I may tell the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) that I do not know how many Liberals were left off but I do know of many Conservatives being left off.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). How many does the hon. gentleman know of to his own personal knowledge ?

Mr. BERGERON

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I could not state the exact number, but I know that dozens came to me during the election of 1904 and complained of it and I gave the names of a number of grits left off.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman kindly give me the names of any more than a dozen who came to him and complained ? There must have been a number of grits left off.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not doubt it at all. That only shows that the lists in Nova Scotia are very defective.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). I would tell my hon. friend that it was quite possible that a number of individuals who had the right to vote in the various districts, through the reviser's inadvertence, were left off the list. There were as many left off, to my certain knowledge, on the Grit side as on the other. But that there was a partisan revision I deny and repudiate. The lists were revised by the city clerk and they were scrutinized by both parties.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there an appeal to a judge ?

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). There is a revision. In certain country districts the lists are revised by the municipal authorities and every care is taken to have the names properly corrected. Any man whose name is left off can go and have it put on ; any man can apply to the sheriff and have it put on.

Mr BERGERON. Is there an appeal to a judge ?

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not state that the list in Halifax had been prepared in a partisan way. I stated that a great many people in Halifax who were Conservatives were left off in the last election and at the previous election, for that matter. I said that in some of the counties in the province the lists had been dealt with in a very partisan way, and I gave illustrations which I am prepared to bring before a committee of this House.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). I am only speaking to my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) who alluded in very pointed terms to partisanship in the county of Halifax. I knew my hon. friend was not speaking of his personal knowledge and that he knew nothing of what had taken place in the county of Halifax. Both parties did their utmost to put upon the lists all that were qualified. Every effort was made to do so in every possible way according to the law, and when my hon. friend charges the province of Nova Scotia generally with partisanship, with the preparation of improper lists and with nefarious conduct I deny and repudiate it and I think the hon. gentleman ought to withdraw his statements if he has not made them on his own responsibility.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not think my hon. friend followed what I said all through.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). I followed the hon. gentleman very closely.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want the hon. gentleman to put words in my mouth that I did not utter. I said that after hearing the remarks made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition I came to the conclusion that the making of the lists in the province of Nova Scotia was very far from being as fair to both parties as the making and revising of the lists in Manitoba, because there they are revised by the judges of the land, whilst in Nova Scotia there is no revision before a judge, but it is before a sheriff who is an appointee of the local government. If the government want to make the lists in some of the provinces, instead of going into Manitoba where they are well made, they should go into Nova Scotia where they are not well made.

Mr. JOHNSTON. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) will have very great difficulty in producing before the people of this country or a committee of this House any evidence to show that in the province of Nova Scotia there has been any undue interference with the preparation of the lists by anybody on behalf of the Liberal party, and I can produce to my hon. friend the evidence that proves most conclusively that some of the gentlemen interested in the party which he supports have been guilty of improper conduct in connection with the preparation of the lists.

Mr. BERGERON. Where ?

Mr. JOHNSTON. In the county represented by the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Stanfield).

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). You would have to pass a new Act for the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. JOHNSTON. We are looking after that.

Mr. BERGERON. The leader of the opposition has asked for a committee to investigate and he will bring evidence.

Mr. JOHNSTON. There is no necessity for an investigation. The evidence has been taken and neither my hon. friend nor anybody else in his behalf will undertake to challenge the evidence which is on record in Nova Scotia for some years as to the conduct of this political party in the county of Colchester.

On motion of Mr. Miller the debate was adjourned.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken to-morrow ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not prepared to say which just now, but we will either go into Supply or resume this debate.

Motion agreed to, House adjourned at 11.17 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May, 19, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 170) respecting the Nipissing Central Railway.—Mr. J. J. Hughes.

TREATIES BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I would like to lay on the table a treaty between Great Britain and the United States concerning the fisheries and waters contiguous to the Dominion of Canada and the United States, signed at Washington on April 11, 1908 ; treaty between Great Britain and the United States providing for the more complete definition and demarcation of the international boundary between the Dominion of Canada and the United States, signed at Washington on April 11, 1908.

The correspondence will come later on.

I beg to move that the treaties be printed forthwith.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC TERCENTENARY — ATTENDANCE OF MILITIA.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). Before the orders of the day are called, I would ask the attention of the Minister of Militia to a letter which I have received :

Mono Road, Ontario, May 15, 1908.

Dear Sir,—From information given out by the Toronto press we are led to think that only the permanent forces and city corps, Ontario and provinces east will be represented at Quebec in July. It is quite needless to note the rural corps have been our country's greatest asset in times of hostilities and should be in evidence at this event. As an officer in the rural district of the good loyal old county of Peel, I would very modestly ask you, as an honoured and trusted representative, to ask the government what they purpose doing in the matter. It will be a great disappointment if we be not given the privilege of showing our undoubted loyalty and paying our deepest respect to His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, when he visits our Dominion on the above occasion.

Believe me, Sir,
I am yours very respectfully,
DAN. McCAUGHRIN,
Lieutenant,
'D' Company, 36th Peel Regiment.

I would ask the government what they purpose doing in the matter. There will be great disappointment if the rural militia are not given the privilege of showing their undoubted loyalty and paying their deepest respects to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. I would ask the Minister of Militia what has been decided ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). While I agree entirely in the high encomiums passed on the rural militia, I have nothing to add to what I said the other day. The statement I then made represents everything up to date that has been decided with reference to the tercentenary at Quebec.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. minister state that briefly again ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is all in the 'Hansard' about a week ago. I said that owing to the difficulties of transportation it had been found impossible to carry out the idea of assembling at Quebec a large camp. To mobilize the whole militia at Quebec was the original idea. That has been found impossible, and it had not yet been decided what portion of the militia would be sent to Quebec. I think my hon. friend the member for North Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) asked me the question, and I said I was unable to give any better answer. A considerable portion of the permanent force will be sent to Quebec. What other portions of the militia will be sent I cannot say, but as soon as it is decided I shall be prepared to make an announcement to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask whether a small proportion of my veterans will come in or not. I understand that application was made to the commission and the commission cannot see their way clear and referred it back to the Department of Militia. It will be a great shame if preparations are not made for the representation of these old veterans. They have scars ; we have not.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Some of them. I can only repeat what I said to my hon. friend the other day. In the letter which he sent me from Captain Collins reference was made to the fact that these veterans had appeared before the Prince during his last visit in 1901 at Toronto and I believe at other points. I pointed out then that this was done without any expense to the public whatever. Those veterans resident in Toronto and vicinity marched past there. The same thing might happen at Quebec and Halifax. I do not see why the veterans might not be represented at Quebec by that portion which happens to live in Quebec. I said I would submit the question to the commission. I have done so and have an answer which I am going to send to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster). It is to the effect that the matter is being considered.

Mr. SPROULE. The militia think that if they are not allowed to go, the transportation companies will not have very much trouble in handling the crowd that will go.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would ask the right hon. the First Minister whether any other influences have been brought to bear on him or his government or the commission than the lack of transportation or accommodation or the other causes put forward to prevent these troops going to Quebec. If so, what were these other influences ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not aware of any kind of influence brought to bear on the First Minister either one way or the other unless it be the genial smile of my hon. friend.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to have some information with reference to a return ordered for copies of the tenders and contract for dredging let in 1907.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In what province ?

Mr. BENNETT. Principally I think in Ontario.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am under the impression that return was brought down. When was it called for ?

Mr. BENNETT. Only three or four months ago.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall make inquiries.

Mr. LEFURGEY. When may we expect the return moved for early in the session in reference to the expenditure in Prince Edward Island?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I think that return is nearly ready; probably in a day or two.

Mr. LENNOX. Yesterday the Minister of the Interior promised that he would tell us to-day when the order in council with reference to immigration would be laid on the table.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). It escaped my memory; I promise to give the information to-morrow.

Mr. LEFURGEY. What steps, if any, have been taken by the government to establish telegraphic communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and what progress has been made in repairing the cable between the capes. I have numerous complaints from the island that business is tied up and that great inconvenience is occasioned for want of telegraphic communication. I understand the Marconi system is working between the island and Pictou.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY. I am afraid my hon. friend does not receive the latest news from his native province. I received a telegram yesterday stating that with the assistance of the steamer 'Stanley' the cable had been repaired and was in operation.

SUPPLY—SASKATCHEWAN VALLEY LAND COMPANY—TIMBER LEASES.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (East Assiniboia). There is a matter on which I want to speak before the House goes into Committee of Supply. My attention has been called to an article in the Halifax 'Evening Mail' containing a report of a speech delivered on the 18th of April last by the hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Ames). Among other statements that are pretty wide of the mark there is one that is particularly so. The article refers to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company.

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear.

Mr. TURRIFF. You won't say hear, hear, so much when I am through. I will read the article so as not to do the hon. gentleman any injustice and in order that he may have an opportunity of correcting it.

Mr. AMES. What is the paper?

Mr. TURRIFF. The Halifax 'Evening Mail' of April 20 last. The article after referring to one of the planks of the Liberal platform is as follows:

We contend that this promise also has been completely shattered. Nowhere is this more clearly demonstrated than in that deal known as the Saskatchewan Valley Company concession. In the middle west, between Regina and Prince Albert, there lay a stretch of country which did not receive early settlement. It was regarded by some as semi-arid, but Dominion Colonization Agent Epeers, one of the best authorities in the west in his time, believed and said that this belt could support a thriving agricultural population. He reported his belief to the government and requested that he be given an opportunity to establish an experimental farm to show what could be done with the land. At that time Mr. Turriff was Deputy Minister of the Interior. He appears to have turned a deaf ear to Mr. Speers' request. But Mr. Turriff had a brother-in-law by the name of Adamson (they both have since become members of parliament). Mr. Adamson formed a syndicate for the purpose of acquiring land in the Saskatchewan valley. First of all the syndicate purchased from the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway their right to select 800,000 acres of land.

Then what follows is what I particularly wish to draw the attention of the House to; and as it is printed in large type I would judge that it is an exact report of what the hon. gentleman said.

Now so long as the government had been dealing with it, the railway company had been compelled to select its lands within a limited area north of Regina, but, no sooner had Mr. Adamson and his friends purchased the railway's right, than the area of selection was vastly enlarged so that it became no longer difficult to find enough good land to satisfy the grant. This kind of treatment by the government increased the value of the railway grant enormously.

Now Mr. Speaker, I want to say that that statement from the first to the last in every shape, form, and manner is absolutely false. There is not one word of truth in it from the first word to the last word. I do not want to do the hon. member (Mr. Ames) any injustice, but he sat in this House when he heard the statement made clearly that instead of increasing the area it had been largely reduced, after Osler, Hammond and Nanton had sold their railway grant to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. I expect he will try and make out, from the fact that the order in council was passed in August granting 1,700,000 acres out of which they might select, that the land grant was increased; but that very order in council itself—if he is depending on that—points out that the large areas that had previously to this been set aside for the railway company represented by Osler, Hammond and Nanton—the Mr. Osler of that firm is Mr. E. B. Osler, member for West Toronto—that order in council pointed out that these large blocks set apart for this railway company from which to select its lands, had been withdrawn. Now in order that there should be no more misrepresentation in any respect with reference to this land grant at all events, I purpose placing before the House to-day the exact facts of the case so that the members of this House and the people of this country will be able to understand how little dependence may be placed on statements emanating from the source that statement emanated from.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before the hon. gentleman proceds I would like to ask him a question. I understood him to say there was not one word of truth from start to finish in the article he read.

Mr. TURRIFF. That is what I said.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask my hon. friend if Mr. Adamson, M.P., is not a brother-in-law of his?

Mr. TURRIFF. I am glad you are not my brother-in-law. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to give a short history of this railway land grant. In 1884, a land grant was given to this railway company and an area of some 2,822,000 acres was set apart out of which the land grant might be selected. Osler, Hammond and Nanton selected some 300,000 acres out of their total grant, and then they stated that they could get no more land that was fairly fit for settlement within the area of that land grant, and two years before the sale was made by them to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, the correspondence which I shall read took place between the Minister of the Interior of that date and Mr. Creelman, representing Osler, Hammond and Nanton. I will now read a letter from the Minister of the Interior.

Ottawa, January 25, 1900.

Sir,—I inclose herewith a map of Manitoba and the Northwest territories on which is coloured all the tracts of land in which chiefly the odd sections are set apart to satisfy the land grants of the various railways other than the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan railway and steamboat company. From the uncoloured portion of Manitoba and the territories the land grant to the above mentioned corporation could be selected, and I think there is ample to satisfy said grant, both as to quality and location, within the lines prescribed by the order in council of the 20th June, 1887.

In the uncoloured portion there are small areas set apart as reservations for stock watering, timber and probably for some other purposes. These areas, however, are each so small that they could not be delineated on a map of the scale of the inclosed, but the total amount is very inconsiderable and in any locality that you would desire to have a list of same, such will be furnished if requested.

This action is taken at the present time in view of your intimation of proceeding by a 'petition of right' to obtain a 'fiat' in the matter of the controversy now existing respecting the land grant available for the said railway. I am of the opinion that the department is in a position to offer land which satisfies the terms of your order in council and that the same can be found in unoccupied areas as shown on the inclosed map.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) CLIFFORD SIFTON,

Minister of the Interior.

Adam R. Creelman, Esq., Q.C.,
Barrister, Toronto, Ont.

Mr. Creelman, at that time, was acting as solicitor for Messrs. Osler, Hammond and Nanton in connection with their railway land grant. What that letter means is this: Mr. Sifton, as Minister of the Interior, sent them a map on which the areas set apart for the other railways were marked in colours, and advises them that they are entitled to go and take the odd sections in any other portion of the province of Manitoba or the territory which is now the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. Wherever there was an available quarter-section that had not been set apart for any other railway company, they were entitled to go and select it. And here is Mr. Creelman's reply:

Toronto, February 14, 1900.

The Hon. the Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th ultimo, inclosing a map of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, the coloured portions of which indicate the tracts of land in which chiefly the odd sections are set apart to satisfy the land grants of the various railways other than the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan railroad and steamboat company.

I note also your statement that from the uncoloured portions the land grant to the Qu'Appelle company can be selected and your opinion that there is ample land within such portions to satisfy such land grant.

I gather also from the letter that this notice is given to me in consequence of my intimation that we are about to proceed by petition of right to secure a settlement of the controversy which has for many years existed between the government and this company respecting its land grant. In this connection I beg to say that at the time your letter was received I had just completed the petition of right to which you refer and the printing was then in progress and could not very well be stopped.

I hope very soon to have the pleasure of submitting this petition to you before its final presentation for fiat and at the same time I will embrace the opportunity of discussing with you your letter of the 25th.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) A. R. CREELMAN.

So, you see, Mr. Speaker, all the available odd sections in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta were made available two years before the sale to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, allowing them to go outside their land grant and select the land they wanted.

Mr. BRISTOL. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) allow me a question for information? Do I understand that these lands were made available, or that Mr. Creelman claimed they should be available and proceeded to file a petition?

Mr. TURRIFF. Mr. Creelman was preparing to file a petition. The Minister of the Interior of that time wrote to him stating that, in addition to the original land grant of 2,822,000 acres which had been set apart, they were at liberty to go into any portion of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and select any of the odd numbered sections that were not then set apart for selection by the other companies. And that covered many millions of acres. However, that is not all. There was no further correspondence for about a year. But in May of 1901, and about a year before the sale was made by Messrs. Osler, Hammond and Nanton to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, Mr. Sifton wrote as follows:

Ottawa, May 22, 1901.

Qu'Appelle vs. The King.

Sir,—On January 25, 1900, I wrote you inclosing a map of Manitoba and the Northwest territories indicating certain tracts of land from which the grant claimed by the suppliants might be satisfied. To this letter I received no reply beyond yours of the 14th February, 1900, and your petition of right was presented immediately afterwards. While I do not admit that the Crown is bound to present to the suppliants the offer in this letter contained, yet in order to close the transaction my department is willing to permit the suppliants in satisfaction of the grant in question to take such of the odd numbered sections or portions thereof within ten miles of the line of the railway on either side thereof as the suppliants may deem proper subject only to an exception of the following areas therein which are not available by reason of previous grant or reserves.

Then follows a list of townships not available :

After making the aforesaid selections the suppliants may take the deficiency in area, if any, out of the following lands in the Northwest territories, namely, parcel 1—

Then follows a description of a block :

All the odd and even numbered sections within said Parcel 1 are open for selection by the suppliants, with the exception of Hudson bay and school sections, and other lands in actual occupation of settlers.

I want to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to this House, that in the block called No. 1, the map of which was sent to them, there are odd and even numbered sections to the extent of 3,290,000 acres, and this was made available to them in addition to their original land grant.

Parcel 2, the odd numbered sections within the area described as follows:

Then follows a description of the area in parcel No. 2, consisting of 1,250,000 acres of odd-numbered sections.

Parcel 3, from townships 1 to 6 inclusive in ranges 19 to 30 inclusive, west of the second meridian.

In the townships not yet subdivided within said parcel 3, as shown on the accompanying map all odd and even numbered sections, are open for selection by the suppliants, excepting Hudson bay and school sections and lands in actual occupation of settlers.

In parcel No. 3, there was a total area of 1,362,000 acres set apart for them.

Parcel 4.—From the south boundary of township 50 to the north boundary of township 60 and from the east boundary of range 16 westward to the third meridian.

All odd and even numbered sections within said parcel 4 are open for selection by the suppliants with the exception of Hudson bay sections, school sections, Indian reserves and timber berths as shown on the accompanying map.

Parcel No. 4 contained 950,000 acres. The letter concludes as follows :

The suppliants are within three months to designate the portion of land within the ten mile belt which they will accept upon notice of which to the department patents for the same, on payment of the survey fees at the rate of ten cents per acre will issue to them subject to the right of the Crown, under the agreement of August 5, 1889, between the Crown and the suppliant railway company. Upon such selection being made, the balance of the land within the ten mile belt will be withdrawn and may be used to answer land grants other than those of the suppliants. The suppliants must designate within six months the portions of land to be taken within the above mentioned parcels, 1, 2, 3 and 4, and upon notification thereof to the department patents will issue for these portions upon payment of the survey fees as above, and subject as above to the rights of the Crown under the said agreement. Failing such selections being made by the suppliants within the times mentioned above, the Crown will proceed to allot the lands and make out the patents which will be passed upon payment of the survey fees.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

CLIFFORD SIFTON,

Minister of the Interior.

That was the offer made to them by the government, and that offer contained in addition to the land originally set apart by order in council in 1884 and 1887, 9,267,000 acres, making, with the original grant, a total of 12,099,235 acres. So, at the date when the sale was made by Messrs. Osler, Hammond and Nanton to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, they had set apart for them blocks of land representing 12,099,235 acres from which to make their selection. After the sale was made to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, the company came down to Ottawa and maintained their right to have the same selection that Messrs. Osler, Hammond and Nanton had at the time the sale was made, and I am bound to say I think they were entitled to it. But they did not get it. Instead of leaving their 12,099,000 acres to select from, the government, by order in council of August 2 cut out all these others amounting to 9,267,000 acres and added 1,700,000 acres to the original land grant given in 1887, making a total of 4,545,435 acres from which they had the right to select.

So you see, Mr. Speaker, the facts of the case are as I have stated, and as I stated them a few years ago in this House, that instead of the area being increased, it was cut down from 12,000,000 to 4,500,000 acres. Now how, in the face of these figures, any hon. gentleman who has any regard for what he says, can go around the country and make the statement that the government after the land had been sold by Messrs. Osler, Hammond and Nanton, largely increased the area out of which, selection might be made, and thereby made it much more valuable, is something that I cannot possibly understand. In this connection I want to make a further statement. The original land grant, as I have said, contained 2,822,235 acres, and since the date of the sale to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, there has been selected out of that original land grant over 2,000,000 acres, not by the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, but by the Saskatchewan Land Company and the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and the subsidy grants in connection with the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Railway ; so that in the original grant that they claimed was so very poor, and where they could not get the lands they required, in that grant alone there has been over 2,000,000 acres selected since that date. Now, Mr. Speaker, as this statement has been made, not only in Halifax, but I understand in Toronto, and was published by the 'Mail and Empire,' I wanted to put the facts of the case before the House, and to state absolutely that the area was not increased but was reduced from 12,000,000 acres to 4,500,000 acres.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I have heard the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Turriff), and if I mistake not other members on the other side of the House, complain of a lack of courtesy when they thought that something was brought up on this side in which hon. gentlemen opposite were interested, without any due notice having been given. Now I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if, before making this attack on the member for St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Ames), an attack which he premeditated, which he prepared for, he in any way made an intimation to the member for St. Antoine that he was going to bring it up, and impugn his reputation for accuracy, and impugn also his veracity as a man. I took the precaution to ask my hon. friend from St. Antoine whether he had received any notice, and my understanding is that he had received none at all from the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). Very well. The hon. gentleman then will not complain if he receives a Roland in return for his Oliver. At this moment it seems apropos to bring another case before this House, which I think will have a good deal of interest to the country at large, and considerable interest to the department in which this hon. gentleman who has just made this fiery attack and then subsided, was at one time a very prominent officer, and perhaps of some little interest to himself, who has been on more than one occasion fond of impugning the veracity of my hon. friend from St. Antoine, a member in good standing on this side of the House, and in good standing as a business man from one end of the country to the other.

Now I propose with your permission to make a short analysis of the case and to lay the facts before this House and the country, and before the hon. member for East Assiniboia. There is a section of land known as section 29, township 1, range 6 west of the 2nd meridian, which at one time was school land ; I believe it was also coal land. I believe at present that section 29 is being developed as a coal field, and promises to be a pretty rich development. The coal field is called at the present time, if I mistake not, the Roche-Percé coal field. Now this land has a history, a history with which the hon. member for East Assiniboia is to a certain extent connected, and I propose shortly to trace that history. As I have said, this was a school section, and belonged to the category of coal lands. It was applied for in the years 1900, 1901 and 1902 in the order named, by T. H. Gilmour, August, 15, 1900, J. F. Howard, May 1, 1901, and S. J. Griffis, on March 25, 1902. When Gilmour applied he was told that the department was not anxious to sell the land, that it was in fact school land, and could only be sold by public auction, and that was not available for lease. So these three applicants in the order named received, I suppose, the same answer through and through. However, difficulties are made to be overcome ; and if that is not the proper way of putting it, departments are made for the purpose of overcoming and solving difficulties. So after a little consideration a way out was found, and an order in council was passed in June, 1902, opening this school section, and may be others in that vicinity, so that they could be leased as coal lands by the Department of the Interior. Now remember Gilmour one, Howard two, Griffis three, in the order of application, were all applicants before this was opened by the order in council for lease, and were all told that it could not be leased, as it was school land, and the department had to go according to a certain rule. It is on record that these people made no other application before the order in council opened it to lease, and the department had become, by that order in council, authorized to lease these school lands. In the end it turned out that Griffis, who was the last applicant, got the lease of the school lands on November 14, 1902 ; that is the last applicant became the final possessor of the lease of this section. Gilmour, the first applicant, does not seem to have been satisfied. Consequently through his solicitors, in the belief that he had not been fairly dealt with he brought legal training and service to his hand and on the 9th of May, 1903, certain solicitors sent in his behalf $96 as the rental for the six current months to the Department of the Interior and asked that it be credited to their client, the first applicant, Mr. Gilmour. This letter is replied to by Mr. Keyes who says that the lease has already been given to Mr. Griffis and that Mr. Griffis has paid the rent and the $96 is forthwith returned to the solicitors of Mr. Gilmour. Mr. Gilmour is not satisfied yet and so he brings a suit in the Supreme Court in the Northwest Territories at Moosomin. An order was secured from the court dated the 25th of June, 1903, to one G. W. McLaren to examine J. G. Turriff who was, at the time of this transaction, commissioner of lands. On the 7th day of July, 1903, Mr. J. G. Turriff was duly examined under oath and gave his testimony. I think I shall have to read that testimony so as to have it upon the records of the House. In the first place I have a declaration by Mr. J. D. McLeod, deputy local registrar of the town of Moosomin, in the province of Saskatchewan, deputy to the local registrar of the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan, for the judicial district of Moosomin, and he says:

I do hereby certify that the annexed is a true copy and correct copy of the examination of one J. G. Turriff held in connection with the action brought by Thos. H. Gilmour against Silas I. Griffis, which said action now remains of record in the said Supreme Court of Saskatchewan for the judicial district of Moosomin and which said examination was filed in the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories for the judicial district of eastern Assiniboia on the 12th day of June, A.D. 1903.

Given at the town of Moosomin, in the province of Saskatchewan, the 7th day of April, A.D. 1908.

(Sgd.) J. D. McLEOD,
Deputy Local Registrar.

Here is the attached copy of the evidence, but before that comes we have a statement of Mr. McLaurin, the examiner:

In the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories, Judicial district of eastern Assiniboia, between Thomas H. Gilmour, plaintiff, and Silas I. Griffis, defendant.

I, whose name and seal is hereunto subscribed being the examined named in the order issued in this action dated the 25th day of June, A.D. 1903, hereunto annexed, hereby certify as follows:

1. Before I in any manner acted in execution of said order I on the 7th day of July, 1903, duly administered to John G. Turriff named in said order the following oath, namely: 'You are true answers to make to all such questions as shall be asked you, without favour or affection to either party, and therein you shall speak the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God.'

2. The deposition hereunto annexed is the deposition taken down before me of the said Turriff, examined, cross-examined and re-examined before me in my office according to my appointment herein hereto annexed and under the said order; and the signatures subscribed to such depositions are respectively the signatures of said Turriff and of me, before whom such deposition was taken; and each of the documents annexed to such deposition and marked by my initials was produced by said Turriff at the time he gave the evidence in such deposition contained and thereat declared by him each to be respectively true and certified copies of the originals thereof now on file in the Department of the Interior of the Dominion of Canada, and in his custody as the Commissioner of Dominion Lands in the said department.

3. The said deposition truly states the evidence given by said Turriff before me as examiner under such order at said time and place.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 7th day of July, A.D. 1903.

(Sgd.) G. W. McLAURIN, Examiner.

(Seal.)

Here follows the evidence given in this court by this witness:

In the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories, judicial district of eastern Assiniboia, between Thomas H. Gilmour, plaintiff, and Silas I. Griffis, defendant.

Pursuant to order made herein the 25th day of June, 1903, John G. Turriff did appear before me on Tuesday the 7th day of July, 1903, to be examined herein.

Present—W. H. Curle for plaintiff, H. Millar for defendant, and the said John G. Turriff having been duly sworn said as follows:

I am the Commissioner of Dominion Lands in the Department of the Interior of the government of the Dominion of Canada and as such I have in my custody in such department all the papers and correspondence in connection with the lease of section 29, township 1, range 6, west of the second meridian, in the Northwest Territories, to Silas I. Griffis, dated the 14th day of November, 1902, from the said department.

There was an application from Mr. Gilmour to purchase the land but he was told that it was not for sale. This is school land and can only be sold by public auction to the highest bidder. The mode of disposing of these lands is fixed by the Dominion Lands Act. Subsequently it was decided that we might lease school lands for coal mining purposes; regulations were framed governing the leasing of school lands and an application was then made by J. F. Howard either to purchase or lease and also by a Mr. Griffis. Subsequently both Gilmour and Howard withdrew their applications on condition that the lease would issue to Mr. Griffis, and when that was done it left Mr. Griffis as the only applicant and the lease was granted to him in the ordinary course. Mr. Griffis paid six months rental and the lease was issued to him.

As commissioner, these matters are referred to me in the ordinary way, and I am speaking altogether from my knowledge of the letters on file in my office, certified copies of which I now produce.

I know the statement I have made is correct, because I have the correspondence on file now.

I produce certified copies of all correspondence from both Mr. Gilmour and Mr. Howard and Mr. Griffis as requested by counsel on both sides.

The papers marked exhibit 'A' are certified copies of all the correspondence between J. F. Howard and the department in connection with these lands, and exhibit 'B' is certified copies of all correspondence between the department and T. H. Gilmour, and exhibit 'C' is certified copies of all correspondence with Mr. Griffis in connection with the same.

Exhibits 'A,' 'B' and 'C' constitute all the correspondence we have with Gilmour, Howard and Griffis in connection with these lands.

To Mr. Curle:

The department received the plaintiff's, Gilmour, application in August, 1900, John F. Howard's application in May, 1901, and the defendant, Griffis' application in March, 1902.

The department became authorized to lease school lands in the month of June, 1902.

Just above you will notice that the witness declared that the latter two made application after the order in council in 1902 had been issued authorizing the lease of school lands for coal mining purposes. There seems to be a little disparity in that. I imagine that the latter statement is the correct one. This would be a considerable time after the latest of the three applications:

The applications of these three persons were not renewed after the order in council was passed authorizing the lease of coal lands and the three original applications stood.

So that the witness of course has twice discussed his first proposition and he leans to the opinion in the last two utterances that these were not renewed after the order in council, so I imagine that is the proper statement of the case.

The department recognizes the relative time of applications in considering who shall be the successful applicant.

Q. Then which of these three applicants has the best right to the lease of these lands under the practice of the department?—A. Mr. Gilmour's application was first, Mr. Howard's was second and Mr. Griffis was third. If Mr. Gilmour and Mr. Howard had not withdrawn their applications Mr. Gilmour would have been given the first opportunity of leasing. If he had not carried it out then Mr. Howard would have been given the next opportunity. The custom of the department in all cases is to deal with the applications in the order of priority.

Q. Then Gilmour's withdrawal was of material assistance with Griffis in enabling him to get the lease?—A. Yes.

That finishes the evidence. I have said that Griffis, the last applicant, got the lease in the end. At a certain time Griffis got busy; he evidently wanted, if you can infer from the correspondence, to get that section of coal lands for himself and he wanted, if possible, to get rid of Gilmour and of Howard and I imagine pour parlers went on between them, Howard clinging to his right of priority and to have a portion if they made any arrangement amongst themselves and he does not seem to have got that portion. Some telegrams were produced by the witness at that time. He said he produced all the correspondence they had in the department. These letters and telegrams were introduced. What are they?

September 18, 1902.

Mark the date:

Winnipeg, Manitoba, September 18, 1902.

The Minister of the Interior,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,—Re coal mining rights on section 29, township 1, range 6, west second meridian.

On or about July 2, A.D. 1902, I made application for lease of and right to mine coal on legal subdivisions 5 to 12 inclusive in section 29, township 1, range 6, west second meridian.

I hereby withdraw said application and do hereby relinquish all claim to any mining or other rights in or on said land, provided a lease therefore is granted to Silas Griffis.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) JOHN F. HOWARD.

That was on September 18, and by it he released absolutely and relinquished all claims on one condition, namely that this lease is issued to Mr. Griffis. But he does not seem to have lost interest after making the relinquishment, and on October 8 he telegraphs:

Winnipeg, Manitoba, October 9, 1902.

J. G. Turriff,

Department of the Interior, Ottawa, Ontario.

Kindly wire giving date when Griffis lease likely issue. Important.

(Sgd.) JOHN F. HOWARD.

Note that Mr. Howard has absolutely relinquished his right and all claims he has to these lands on condition that the lease goes to Griffis. A few days after having written that letter on September 18, he again becomes interested and he says:

Kindly wire giving date when Griffis' lease is likely to issue. Important.

(Sgd.) JOHN F. HOWARD.

Evidently the man must have some interest still in this property. We may exercise our own judgment as to what it was. Was it an interest arising out of an arrangement he had made with Griffis that the lease should issue in Griffis name but that he should receive consideration of some kind for relinquishing and assigning his rights.

On October 28, we have the following

John F. Howard,
Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Form of lease before Department of Justice. Am hastening matter as much as possible.

(Sgd.) J. G. TURRIFF.

That is the correspondence so far as it was brought down and Mr. J. G. Turriff swore that he had brought down 'All the correspondence which we have with reference to this lease with regard to Griffis, Howard and Gilmour.' Well, Sir, it was not quite all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. FOSTER. Howard got busy at Winnipeg with his letters to Turriff relinquishing his claim and his later telegram to Turriff urging him to hasten the issue of the lease to Griffis. On September 18, he started in to hurry and I have here a letter dated Ottawa, September 15, 1902, reading as follows:

Dear Mr. Howard,—I duly received yours of the 2nd instant, addressed to Mr. Sifton, in reference to the coal mining rights on section 29, township 1, range 6, west second. The way the matter stands, Gilmour might be considered the most entitled, although after the orders in council providing for leasing were passed your application and his are on even dates.

There was only one application made by each applicant up to this date, but Mr. Turriff in writing to Mr. Howard says:

The way the matter stands, Gilmour might be considered the most entitled, although after the orders in council providing for leasing were passed your application and his are on even dates.

He continues:

It will, however, be more satisfactory if Griffis can do as he says,—get an assignment or withdrawal from Gilmour—and we will issue lease to him for the whole section. I trust that you can get this arranged satisfactorily. If not, let me know and I will see if we cannot do it anyway, but I would much prefer to have Gilmour withdraw.

Yours truly,
J. G. TURRIFF.

This is marked private. That was correspondence as much as any correspondence that ever went on with reference to those negotiations between the deputy commissioner and the gentlemen themselves. What right had he to mark that as private and after swearing that he produced all the correspondence with reference to this section of the land retain this amongst his own private correspondence. What right had the commissioner of lands in the Interior Department of this government at this city of Ottawa to interest himself as between Howard and Gilmour and the man Griffis. What right in the world? None. He is the sworn officer of this government. He has to stand there as a judge in the case and issue in the final resort what is proper to be issued. He has no more right, Sir, than a judge upon the bench who is trying a case would have to write private letters to one of the litigants suggesting means and methods by which some of the litigants could be got out of the way to his pecuniary injury.

On September 15, Mr. Howard takes a hand and gets in his own relinquishment quick, and as a matter of course, I believe Mr. Gilmour was acted upon and put in his relinquishment too. But, the interest of Turriff did not wane after the writing of the letter of September 15. He slept over night—two nights—and then he thought and sent this telegram:

Ottawa, Ontario, September 17, 1902.

That is two days afterwards.

John F. Howard,
Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Do not act on my letter of fifteenth. Writing you to-day.

J. G. TURRIFF.

Well, he wrote on that same day, September 17. Here is the astounding letter that was written by an officer of this department, the Commissioner of Lands, who had all these lands under his particular care as lease issuer.

Private.

Ottawa, September, 17, 1908.

My dear Howard,—I just wired you to-day not to act on my letter of the 15th until you saw Griffis. I have just seen a friend of his here who tells me that possibly Gilmour will hold you up for one-quarter or one-third interest in the business, and I do not want to put you in that position, and unless Griffis can get Gilmour's withdrawal for a very trifling amount it would be better not to go near him at all, and we will issue the lease to Griffis.

Yours sincerely,
J. G. TURRIFF.

John F. Howard, Esq.,
Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Mr. SPROULE. Crooked as usual.

Mr. FOSTER. Those are letters written by J. G. Turriff, Commissioner of Crown Lands, to the contestants before him, Gilmour having the prior right, Howard the second and Griffis the last by his own sworn testimony. Gilmour having the prior right to be considered first, Turriff interfered by private letters and telegrams in the interest of the last applicant, Mr. Griffis, in order to save him paying a fair value to Gilmour for the prior right and telling him in the end: Don't let yourself be held up. I will see you are not held up and unless you can get rid of him for a mere trifle I will issue the lease—and it was issued. No comment is needful after that, I leave it with the House and with parliament and with the country.

Mr. TURRIFF. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course the only motion before the House is the one to go into Supply and the hon. member cannot speak unless with the consent of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Let him speak.

Mr. TURRIFF. With reference to the hon. gentleman's first remarks as to the bringing up of a matter of privilege in connection with reflections made on myself by the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) I certainly was not aware that in matters of that kind it was customary to give any notice, one way or another. I notice that the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) does not give me any notice when he goes around the country traducing me. However, the facts of the matter which the hon. member for North Toronto has brought up are exactly as he has stated.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TURRIFF. I do not see that there is very much in it. I never met Mr. Griffis as far as I know, I have met Mr. Gilmour once and Mr. Howard was a friend of mine. He had failed in business in Winnipeg, was absolutely down on the rocks and he was applying for a lease of coal lands for this particular section. When Gilmour first applied to purchase they could not be sold, as I said, except by public auction but a year or so after, on an application by other parties to lease coal lands in other parts of the country, regulations were made and it was a question, as I said, whether the applications that came in beforehand would be covered by these regulations or not, especially as Gilmour's application was an application to purchase and not to lease if my memory serves me aright. At all events both Gilmour and Howard had withdrawn their applications in favour of Griffis, and I had not the slightest doubt that they had formed a coalition or arrangement among themselves. I had no interest in it one way or another and never had. I do not know who owns the land now and do not know if it was ever worked, I know in fact, nothing about it. I was dealing with it absolutely in an official manner. As to the letters which the hon. member has read, I do not know how he got them, but I will tell you this that when I was in Winnipeg some time after that a gentleman came to me and said: Mr. Gilmour has two private letters of yours that are very compromising, and if you do not give him a grazing lease for which he is an applicant he will publish those letters. I said to this gentleman: You go to Mr. Gilmour and tell him to go plumb.

Mr. H. B. AMES (St. Antoine). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) did not have the courtesy to notify me that he intended in any way to deal with the question of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, and I do not propose to take up the time of the House with any observations on that particular subject; but I propose this afternoon to speak with reference to another matter which has, in one form or another, at various times occupied the attention of this House. Some weeks ago the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) made a motion asking for a general investigation into the policy of the present government in respect of the leasing of timber lands in the Canadian Northwest. That matter was discussed and the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) was voted down. Since that time, however, there have been laid on the table of the House a number of original documents, at that time refused. Since that time too, many returns which had been previously asked for by members on this side of the House have become accessible and a limited inquiry, very much hampered in many ways by the usual obstructionist methods, has been carried on in the Public Accounts Committee and from this and other sources we are now in possession of considerable new information which as yet has not been officially laid before the House and the country. I claim that this new information justifies us in reopening this question and in discussing it from a different point of view this afternon. A number of individual transactions have been examined to ascertain the method in which certain gentlemen, close to the administration, have acquired timber berths. This examination has necessarily been confined to a comparatively few transactions and yet the disclosures which have been made from these investigations are so significant that we cannot pass them over without reviewing them and submitting them to the further examination of the House. The documents and the evidence show that vast areas of timber land have been improvidently alienated and have fallen into the hands of speculators by whom they are held today. The documents and evidence show a series of remarkable coincidences, proving at least that there has been great looseness in the awarding of these timber berths and proving also that the method under which these concessions were granted has been such that it might easily have been taken advantage of by ill-disposed persons, in fact that it opened wide the door to fraud and imposition.

I propose to show this House a number of distances in which the success of the bidders has been so marked, so inexplicable, that it is difficult to find any other reason to account for that success other that there must have been collusion in connection with the granting of limits.

The documents that have been produced and the evidence that has been taken show beyond a doubt that immense areas of timber lands in the Northwest have been improvidently alienated and have fallen into the hands of speculators. Nor is that all. The transactions examined exhibit a series of remarkable coincidences, as yet wholly unaccounted for, disclose a looseness of method in awarding berths by so-called public competition that might easily have been taken advantage of by unscrupulous persons and present evidence of phenomenal success on the part of certain bidders in close relationship to the minister of the day, all of which, to say the least, demands some reasonable explanation.

Within the comparatively short period of three and a half years, between 1902 and 1905, more than three thousand square miles of selected timber, that is to say, about one-half of the entire area under lease in the western provinces, fell into the hands, not of operators, but of speculators. One-half of this amount, comprising 25 per cent of the timber of the three provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, was acquired by a group, which may be called the Burrows-Fraser combination, of which the brother-in-law of the then Minister of the Interior was the central figure, and acquired under circumstances so peculiar as to have excited general comment.

An analysis of the holdings of this group shows Mr. T. A. Burrows as having acquired 549 square miles, the Imperial Pulp Company, 417 square miles, the Big River Lumber Company 250 square miles, A. W. Fraser (alias John McBain) 250 square miles, A. W. Fraser, for himself, 120 square miles—in all, 1,586 square miles of selected timber, only 109 square miles of which are being operated, the remainder held presumably for speculation.

The extent of the holdings of this favoured group may be illustrated. Were these blocks, nearly 250 in number, selected out of an area many times their size, placed end to end they would form a continuous strip of thick timber one mile wide stretching from Montreal to Winnipeg, or, putting it another way, their combined area would completely cover two of our own counties such as Stanstead and Brome and make them one continuous forest.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the hon. gentleman say that I own 1,600 square miles of timber limit?

Mr. AMES. I say that you have been interested in 1,586 square miles of timber limits to my own knowledge, and I do not know how much more beside.

Mr. BURROWS. It is not true.

Mr. AMES. To go on with our illustration, on the sworn returns——

Mr. BURROWS. How does the hon. gentleman make out that I own 1,600 square miles of timber limits?

Mr. AMES. I shall have pleasure in taking fully an hour to do this. For the year ending the 30th April, 1907, sworn returns furnished the Department of the Interior show that 80 berths in the three provinces, aggregating 1,125 miles, furnished all the sawn lumber marketed during that year. The ex-Minister of the Interior has told us that the supply was ample to cover the demand. Hence we are justified in concluding that 1,200 square miles of timber limits could easily fulfil the present requirements of the three western provinces. The holdings of the Burrows-Fraser group, therefore, are more than sufficient to supply the entire demand of the western provinces for sawn spruce lumber.

In the acquisition of these limits, under the form of quasi competition then followed by this government, the members of the 'inner circle' have been remarkably successful. Mr. T. A. Burrows, brother-in-law to the ex-Minister of the Interior, owned in 1901 three limits. Between June of 1902 and June of 1905, Mr. Burrows bid, directly or indirectly, nineteen times for timber berths. He succeeded eighteen times; he failed once. The time he failed to get his limit is one worth considering. It was in respect of berth No. 1050. Mr. Burrows put in an offer of $6,000 and Mr. Macdonald put in a bid of $13,125.

Since June, 1905, Mr. Burrows has but once tested his luck. When berth No. 1281 was put up to competition he lost, but by a very narrow margin. His single tender of $5,000 was overstopped by a bidder who offered $5,195. Since June, 1805, Mr. Burrows does not appear to have ever tendered, at least not under any recognizable name. Naturally, we ask the reason why—whether it be because all the good timber is already annexed, or whether he does not find the present atmosphere as favourable to his operations as in years gone by.

Now, there is a company known as the Imperial Pulp Company, which has occupied, to a considerable extent, the attention of this House. It is one of those companies—there are many of them ; you will find them in every department—which keeps itself scrupulously hidden, but which has constant dealings for its own profit with the government. This Imperial Pulp Company, which has provoked curiosity and defied inquiry, entered the field as a bidder in December, 1902. It never applied for a limit. Search the records, and you will not find one case where the Imperial Pulp Company, in advance, indicated that they wanted timber ; but, during these two years, under diverse names—sometimes the name of one party and sometimes the name of another—the Imperial Pulp Company put in bids nine times, and it never failed to secure the limit it was after every time it put in a bid. So it was the Imperial Pulp Company, this mysterious company, whose identity we could not discover, which had no office, no post office address, except the box in Winnipeg, which did its business through a lawyer and a banker here, signed its letters with a stamp and 'R.R.P.' and could not be found in any business directory on the North American continent, this company went on bidding successfully until it had acquired 417 square miles of limits worth to-day a million dollars, if not more. Now, I took the trouble to add up the offers the Imperial Pulp Company made when they were acquiring limits, and I find the total amount they offered on 9 limits for which they tendered was $54,975, and also that the combined bids of the next nearest highest bidders were $51,771.

Mr. BURROWS. Wrong again.

Mr. AMES. It is a difference of only 6 per cent. I have the official figures here.

Mr. BURROWS. Wrong again.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Burrows and the companies with which he is connected have been so remarkably successful, their success has differed so greatly from that of their competitors that it has excited a good deal of comment outside this House and has occasioned, I may say to the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), a good deal of distrust of the Department of the Interior throughout the Canadian Northwest. We undertook a partial investigation, an investigation very limited—it could not be otherwise under the reference—and so we find ourselves with but little of the information we would like to have about the transactions with which this company is connected. In the Public Accounts Committee, however, the original documents were all produced, and we examined several witnesses. We examined Mr. Campbell and Mr. Finnie. When we asked Mr. Finnie—who did the banking for Mr. Burrows and supplied the cheques for him with most of the tenders—when we asked Mr. Finnie in one specific case the order of entry of the cheques and whether they had been accepted upon a certain day the committee stopped us and we could proceed no further. So, we reached the point where it was necessary for us to review the evidence and report to this House; and that is what I propose to do this afternoon.

Now, in all this inquiry, Mr. T. A. Burrows was the central figure, and his remarkable success is one of the features of the investigation. As I have said, on September 1, 1901, Mr. Burrows had limits 571a and 814, an aggregate area of 44 square miles. Between that date and June, 1905, he had added to his holdings about 500 square miles. He tendered in various names, but always with the same success. Twenty times during these four years he tendered, in nineteen cases with success and only once in that time did he fail. Compare the experience of the next largest speculative holders, Messrs. H. and K. MacDonald. They are shrewd firm of timber operators. There were two brothers. Kenneth was the practical man who went to the West and explored the timber limits and learned just what to offer. Hector was the Ottawa man; he stayed here and handled the business. They tendered thirty times during the period when Mr. Burrows was so successful, fourteen times they succeeded and sixteen times they failed. Add up their bids, and you find that they paid three and a half times as much for their limits as was offered by the next highest bidders. Contrast their bids in these thirty times, and you will see that they vary greatly. Trace the bids of Mr. Burrows and the Imperial Pulp Company and see by what narrow margins they always win.

Now, I propose to lay before this House a number of specific instances which have come out in connection with the Public Accounts Committee and have come to our knowledge by the study of the original documents that have been presented from time to time. This will enable us to ascertain something of the unique methods by which such success has been acquired by the brother-in-law of the late Minister of the Interior. The first limit is berth 1046. This lies on the Pembina river, 40 miles northeast of Edmonton. It is a selection berth and very valuable, or will be when the railway reaches Athabaska Landing. The bids were opened on May 7, 1903. They were four in number. The lowest was that of Crafts and Lee, of Edmonton, $815; next, James A. Powell, Edmonton, $1,510; then D. R. Fraser and Company, $3,015; and finally T. A. Burrows of Winnipeg, $3,500. If you examine the four original bids you will find that the tenders of Crafts and Lee, James A. Powell and D. R. Fraser and Company are all on the regular printed forms of the department. They were all filled out in perfectly proper manner, and in each case there was one accepted cheque and one only. There is other evidence that these three bids were perfectly regular. But when you examine the original Burrows tender, what do you find? He encloses two cheques on the Bank of Ottawa here, one for $3,000 and one for $500. These figures are somewhat significant when we consider the other tenders. Here was the next highest, that of D. R. Fraser and Company, $3,015. If only the Burrows $3,000 cheque had gone in, or he would have lost the limit, but the second cheque carried him over and he won the berth. Now, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if there is not something strange and suggestive in these facts.

Again, take limit 1047, probably the most valuable limit of its size in the whole Canadian Northwest, traversed from end to end by the Canadian Northern Railway, lying right along the railroad and on both sides of it, a selection area of 50 square miles out of seven townships on the north slope of the Porcupine Hills. Last summer, an adjacent limit, 964, which contains only 32 square miles, selected from a smaller area, was sold by Shaw brothers to the Ruby Lake Lumber Company for $100,000 in cash. I have the documents to prove that fact. If this latter limit was worth $100,000, then limit 1047 was worth double the amount. Limit 1047 was applied for by Mr. Burrows, or rather by the Burrows interest—Mr. Burrows' stenographer in this case—and bids were opened on May 7, 1903. In this case there were five tenders : Pritchard and Stone, $2,000 ; J. S. Hough, for client, $4,050 ; Mutchenbacker brothers, $5,510 ; H. and K. McDonald et al of Ottawa, $13,524, and T. A. Burrows, $15,000. And, when we came to examine the originals, we found—what we never could have learned from any copies—we learned, from the marginal notes, that Mr. Burrows' bid of $15.000 was made up of three cheques, $6,000, $5,000 and $4,000.

Until the McDonald bid arrived, Mr. Burrow's $6,000 cheque was quite enough to capture the limit. But after the McDonald tender came in for $13,524, it required the combined three cheques of $6,000, $5,000 and $4,000 to clear the barrier and capture the limit. Now, I ask : Is that coincidence or is it design ? When we came to study before the Public Accounts Committee the history of 1046 and 1047, we found that bids for both berths were opened on the same day, the 7th of May, 1903, and we learned that upon that day Mr. Burrows had out at least five cheques for $6,000, $5,000, $4,000, $3,000 and $500. Now we examined Mr. Finnie, and we said to Mr. Finnie, these cheques were on your bank, did you accept these cheques on that day, and if you did, in what order did you accept them ? Now I leave it to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the right hon. the leader of the government, if that was not a fair question to ask. Here was Mr. Bristol's question :

Q. On March 7, 1903, there appears from the record to have been five cheques of T. A. Burrows, one for $3,000 and one for $500 put in in respect of timber berth No. 1046, forming part of the tender, and in the other case of three cheques for $6,000, $5,000 and $4,000 respecively, put in in respect of timber berth No. 1047, and the record also shows that they are on the bank of Ottawa with whom you say Mr. Burrows had an account. I want you to tell me whether those cheques were charged up to Mr. Burrows' account on that day?

Mr. Macdonald objected to the question, and asked for the ruling of the chairman. The chairman ruled against the question, and on appeal being taken, it was voted down by the usual partisan majority. That is why the inquiry came to a close. That was a crucial question. We had to know the order in which those cheques were accepted in order to ascertain whether they were really there before 12 o'clock on the day when the tenders came in.

Now take up berth 1099, another berth of value.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ? Is it not a fact that in the committee I said that if you would put me in the box I would tell you where the cheques were, and you would not do so, you would not give me an opportunity of telling you anything about the cheques ?

Mr. AMES. The hon. member was too busy drumming up Liberal members out in the corridors. He was quite at liberty to be called by his friends, if they had desired.

Now berth 1099 consisted of forty-four square miles on Brulé lake, west of Edmonton, and close to the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Bids were opened on the 11th November, 1903. There were three offers, J. W. Blain, of Strathcona, $3,300 ; Kidd and Thompson, of Ottawa, $5,116, and T. A. Burrows, $6,500. Mr. Blain's and Thompson's tenders were on the regular printed form of the department, and there was one accepted cheque in each and no more. They were both perfectly regular tenders. The higher of them came in just before 12 o'clock. When we came to examine Mr. Burrows' original tender we found it was on plain paper, but in a departmental envelope, with crest, and probably written in the department. We found it contained two cheques, one for $3,500 and the other for $3,000. There again you have the same coincidence. It is strange that Mr. Burrows' second cheque for $3,500 was just $200 above Mr. Blain's tender, and when at the last moment a tender comes from Kidd and Thompson, for $5,116, a second cheque of $3,000 makes it possible for Mr. Burrows to still capture the limit. Now again I ask : Is that coincidence or is it design ?

Take another berth, 1192, fifty square miles on the Pembina river, near the Grand Trunk Pacific. Bids were opened on December 7, 1904. There were three tenders, Hector and Kenneth McDonald for $5,551, John Walter, for $5,060, and T. A. Burrows for $5,500. There again there were two cheques of Mr. Burrows, one for $3,000 and one for $2,500, and the two cheques together were just a little above the John Walter tender. Once again: Is that coincidence or is it design ? If there were only one or two cases like these, we might say it was coincidence, but when we find case after case where the tender differs from the regular method, and where the results are always the same, and success always comes to the same individual, I leave it to you, Mr. Speaker, to say whether these circumstances do not call for some explanation.

Now something was said in this House some time ago about timber berth 1108. I will not refer to that at great length. Timber berth 1108 consisted of sixty square miles on Moose lake, north of Lake Winnipegosis. It was transferred to the Imperial Pulp Company. When the originals came down in connection with that timber berth, what did we find ? We found that Mr. A. W. Fraser, of Ottawa, had written with his own hand an offer of $1,000, that Mr. James Currie, of Cumberland, bidding for another party, had put in an offer of $6,420, and that Mr. Fraser had written a second offer, signing W. H. Nolan's name to it, not his own, and that second offer, was for $7,000. We asked Mr. Fraser, and he admitted that he had written both his own tender for $1,000 and Nolan's tender for $7,000; but he said that he wrote the $7,000 tender in Mr. Nolan's name on instructions from Mr. Burrows, that he put it in envelope which he gave to Mr. Burrows, and that Mr. Burrows must have added the $7,000 cheque. That was Mr. Fraser's testimony. At all events I may say that Mr. Currie firmly believes that he was euchred out of that berth. He believes that the other tender was either bogus or that it came in too late; and I would certainly say that the circumstances are such as to lend strength to such a belief. Now I will digress for a moment and deal with Mr. Fraser, because Mr. Fraser carried on several transactions, I do not know for whom; but inasmuch as he often acted for the Burrows syndicate, in all probability he is connected with these deals. There is a large and strong company known as the Red Deer Lumber Company. It is financed by American capital, and it controls a considerable area on the Red Deer river, and sells great quantities of cut lumber. The Red Deer Lumber Company, in the early days, found it apparently necessary to procure their limits through middlemen. Latterly they have been acting directly apparently with much better satisfaction. Among their earlier acquisitions was timber berth 988. That was put up on the 16th of December, 1901. There were two bidders, A. C. Fraser, of Brandon, for $3,500, and A. W. Fraser, of Ottawa, for $3,769. A. C. Fraser's bid arrived by mail the day before the tenders were opened. The other offer arrived on the morning of the last day. When the bids were opened it was found that A. W. Fraser's bid was accompanied by a letter which says: 'I inclose an accepted cheque.' Yet there were two cheques in it. Mr. Fraser acquired the limit, and sold it to the Red Deer Lumber Company for a very valuable consideration. It would be of interest to this House to know who were the parties with whom he divided. Again, there was berth No. 1051 which went in the same way; bids were opened on the 6th March, 1903. They were as follows:

Henry Christopherson, Yorkton.. ..	$2,800
Mutchenbacker Brothers, Rosseau..	3,510
John Hanbury, Brandon..	4,650
J. S. Hough, Winnipeg..	6,509
John McBain, Ottawa..	7,000

Now we find on examining them that Mutchenbacker's tender, Hanbury's tender and Hough's tender were all on the printed form of the department and were put in the regular way, but we find, when we come to the original John McBain tender, that it was written in A. W. Fraser's own handwriting. Thus Fraser has a second alias. He was first writing out tenders in the name of W. H. Nolan and now he is using the name of John McBain. In the McBain offer we find no amount stated, but there were three cheques which the marginal notes show came from Mr. Fraser, one for $3,000, another for $2,000 and a third for $2,000. It will be seen that the $3,000 and combined $2,000 would have been enough to have captured the limit against the first three competitors, but when J. F. Hough's bid arrived it was necessary to put in an additional cheque for $2,000 so as to make up the $7,000. This limit was also sold to the Red Deer Lumber Company for a good figure.

Look now at berth No. 1239. Berth No. 1239 acquired by the Red Deer Lumber Company shortly afterwards, without the intervention of the middleman, Mr. A. W. Fraser. It was acquired direct and the company paid for it $25,150; in other words, they paid the government instead of paying A. W. Fraser.

Now, I propose to discuss for a few minutes what is known as the Prince Albert deal. This story discloses a betrayal of trust for the benefit of the same parties which is without parallel in the history of the Department of the Interior. It is the story of the Big River Lumber Company and its twin aggregation the McBain-Munson combination. We will extricate the limits as we go on. On the 17th of January, 1903, Urquhart, Richard and Pattison, real estate agents of St. Paul and Winnipeg, writing, as they said, 'on behalf of a syndicate of Urquhart, Richards and Pattison, real estate American financial men,' asked that 50 blocks of timber, each ten miles in extent, at the head waters of the Churchill river to the northwest of Prince Albert, should be put up at one time to competition. The southeast corner of the area of selection came within 25 miles of Prince Albert and these people asked that they might have an opportunity of selecting this timber throughout an area 100 miles long by 70 miles wide. It was an unprecedented demand. There is no such demand as that in the history of the whole department; 500 square miles to be selected out of an area of 7,020 square miles. Both the area of selection and the other features in connection with it were most unusual. It is almost impossible to understand at first sight how the department should have been persuaded to put such a proposition up. Think of the magnitude of it! This means a strip of continuous woodland four miles wide all the way from Montreal to Ottawa. It meant a monopoly of the timber resources of Prince Albert for practically all time. There was a large number of people at Prince Albert dependent on the timber trade. It meant a monopoly which would shut them out to the last man and yet this enormous transaction, the largest on record, is characterized by practically the shortest delay of almost any of these transactions. The delays allowed are in inverse ratio to the magnitude of the proposition. Of advertisements there was one in the Manitoba 'Free Press' and one in the Prince Albert 'Advocate.' The time allowed from the time that the advertisement left Ottawa till the bids got back to Ottawa, was from the 28th January to the 7th March, thirty-eight days from Ottawa to Ottawa. That meant four weeks for the people of Prince Albert to ascertain where that timber lay and to decide what they would pay for 500 square miles of timber spread out over 7,000 square miles. Protests galore came pouring into the department. The ex-Minister of the Interior told us the other day that only one protest had ever come to his notice, but let him look through the file in the department and he will find that there were protests in this instance from the mayor, from the board of trade and from everybody in Prince Albert who had any interest in the country. That made no difference. To all the protests the Commissioner of Dominion Lands made this curt reply :

As these berths were put up and advertised in the ordinary manner it was not thought advisable to make any change.

The tenders were opened on the 7th March, 1903 ; there was no competition. Not one of the Prince Albert people who had been objecting made any attempt to bid, and when the department and its friends learned that there was only one outside bidder, namely, Mutchenbacker Bros., they realized that they had the whole situation in their own hands and so they bid $5,000 for the first choice and they put in another bid of $1,000 for the second choice. A. W. Fraser, at one time president of the Ottawa Liberal Club, using the name of William Crown, of Prince Albert, but acting under the instructions of T. A .Burrows, put in a bid in the name of the Big River Lumber Company for the first choice at $5,000, and again, this time using John McBain's name, he put in a tender for the second choice, and we find that in the envelopes there were unidentifiable manager's cheques on the bank of Ottawa which were given in exchange for cheques of Mr. Burrows. So that Mr. Burrows in this way acquired berths Nos. 1048 and 1049, comprising 500 square miles with the right of selection out of 7,000 square miles for the sum of $6,000, or $12 per square mile, or two cents per acre.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the hon. gentleman say that I acquired berth No. 1049 ?

Mr. AMES. I do.

Mr. BURROWS. I say you are telling an absolute falsehood and you know it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. That language is hardly parliamentary.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Fraser under oath, swore that he put in a tender in the name of John McBain and that he owned the limit.

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The expression 'falsehood' is unparliamentary.

Mr. BURROWS. I will withdraw the expression, but I say that the hon. gentleman's statement is not correct. Mr. Fraser swore under oath that he put in a tender in the name of John McBain and that he owned the timber limit. My hon. friend knows that and yet he makes the statement that I acquired this timber berth.

Mr. AMES. You had No. 1048 and the two go together. Well, I will go on with my story.

Mr. BURROWS. You make a statement that is not correct and we have sworn evidence by a man who went into the witness box and stated that he put a tender in for himself, that he owned the limit and that he afterwards sold it.

Mr. AMES. If the hon. gentleman states that he has never had any interest directly or indirectly in berths 1048 and 1049 I will accept his statement. But, my statement that he retains an interest in 1048 remains.

Mr. BURROWS. I will deal with No. 1048 afterwards.

Mr. AMES. Very well.

Mr. BURROWS. Now will you take back your statement? You made a statement which is absolutely incorrect. You know it is incorrect because the printed evidence shows that Mr. Fraser put in a tender in the name of John McBain, who, I understand, is his brother-in-law. Mr. Bristol asked him what he got for it and he said it was his own business. In view of that fact you should not malign me by such a statement.

Mr. BRISTOL. May I ask you a question, Mr. Burrows? Do I understand you to say you never had an interest direct or indirect in No. 1049?

Mr. BURROWS. I had no interest whatever in the tender of Mr. McBain.

Mr. BRISTOL. I am not asking you that, I am asking had you any interest in 1049 at any time.

Mr. BURROWS. The only interest I had in it was that I afterwards acted as agent for Mr. Fraser and sold the limit for him. I never owned it myself and had no interest in it before or after the tender.

Mr. BRISTOL. I want to be absolutely fair. I see on the record that you paid the rental to the department on August 12, 1905, for this limit 1049 and you sent in your cheque for that.

Mr. BURROWS. That is quite correct, but I did not own the timber limit. Acting for Mr. Fraser I sold the limit to a party and at that time I paid the ground rent. I never was interested in the tender and Mr. Fraser swore so.

Mr. BRISTOL. You are quite right there, Mr. Fraser swore that.

Mr. BURROWS. My hon. friend (Mr. Ames) should now take back the statement. He has absolute sworn evidence that I was not interested and I say I was not. Will he take it back?

Mr. AMES. So far as No. 1049 is concerned, if the hon. gentleman says he never had any interest directly or indirectly in No. 1049, I accept his word, but so far as No. 1048 is concerned I am going to continue my remarks. Now, these two limits, first and second choice, this immense area was disposed of by this government for $6,000, or $12 per square mile, or 2 cents per acre. That limit has been cruised and I understand it contains over 1,000,000,000 feet of spruce. It was the largest proposition that was ever put up in the Canadian Northwest of a timber character, and yet it was put up with such evidence of haste that the competition for it was practically nil. You may search the records of the department for that year and the year before and you will find that the average bonus the department was receiving in these two years was $150 per square mile throughout the whole department. And yet, they were prepared to let this immense area go, the timber reserve supply of Prince Albert, for the paltry sum of $12 per square mile. Now, as to No. 1048, although that limit stood in the name of the Big River Lumber Company it was a limit in which Mr. T. A. Burrows has shown a very great interest. Before it was explored, before it was even blocked out, Mr. T. A. Burrows sold his half interest in limit No. 1048 and whatever interest he may have had in No. 1049 for $80,000. What is more, he was paid in full in cash three instalments of $30,000, $25,000 and $25,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Speak now.

Mr. AMES. There is a member of this House who has seen all the documents connected with that case and who is prepared to show that my statement is correct.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. AMES. In a former debate in this House there were certain members upon the opposite side of the House who had the effrontery to say that this limit went to Mr. Cowan, a Conservative.

An hon. MEMBER. So it did.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Cowan a Conservative —why, Mr. Cowan never would have got within 40 rows of apple trees of that limit if Mr. Burrows had not been behind him.

Mr. BRISTOL. Mr. Cowan would never have acquired that limit if it had not been for the force that drove it through in the person of the brother-in-law of the Minister of the Interior of that day, and Mr. Cowan and his associates, before they could become full owners of that limit, had to buy out that brother-in-law for $80,000. That is what the middleman cost in that job.

Mr. FOSTER. Great is the middleman.

Mr. AMES. Now, I say that if these ten timber limits had been put up, 50 miles at a time, every one of them would have brought $5,000 or $6,000 to the government. And I say that it was a perfect outrage to put up 500 square miles (the whole reserve supply for the district of Prince Albert) at one time and under conditions which forced out every local bidder, in order that it might go where it went.

I have a little more evidence on that same matter; a little more evidence to show the value of that immense proposition. Lying midway between that area and the city of Prince Albert there was a berth known as the Sturgeon Lake reserve. For the good of the country fortunately the putting up of that berth was in the hands of another section of the Interior Department, namely, the Department of Indian Affairs. The 35 square miles of timber in the neighbourhood of Sturgeon Lake were put up by the Department of Indian Affairs and they were well advertised. Very different indeed was the manner of their advertising from that of No. 1048 and No. 1049. They were advertised six times in the Manitoba 'Free Press,' three times in the 'Weekly Times' of Battleford, three times in the 'Weekly Phœnix' of Saskatoon, three times in the 'Weekly Advocate' of Prince Albert, and two whole months were allowed for interested parties to go out and explore that limit, although it is only 35 miles in extent and close to Prince Albert and just this side of the limit of which I have just spoken. Well, you can see what happens when a limit is properly advertised and when sufficient time is allowed. There were three bids for that limit: $21,300, $27,609 and $28,000. In other words, that limit sold for $800 a square mile, although the adjacent limit had been sold for $12 per square mile. This Sturgeon lake limit sold for $1.25 per acre, or for $5.50 per thousand feet standing, whereas the other limit sold at $12 per mile, or 2 cents an acre, or half a cent per thousand feet standing. No more iniquitous transaction ever went through the books of the department, and it never would have gone through if it had not been for the motive power behind it.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. AMES. Yes.

Mr. BURROWS. The hon. gentleman should state that No. 1048 was on the north side of the height of land where there were no rivers flowing through the country and where timber had not got the same value as timber in a well settled area easy of access. If this limit is worth $1,000,000 does any one think that I as a business man would have sold out my interest and got Mr. Fraser to sell out his interest for $80,000.

Mr. AMES. I did not say anything about $1,000,000.

Mr. BURROWS. Be honest about it.

Mr. AMES. You might deal with the other part of the transaction.

Now, I come for a few moments to speak of the Imperial Pulp Company, that same mysterious corporation whose identity we have been trying to discover for three years, which lived in a post office box in Winnipeg, which had no sawmill, no officers so far as we could find except R. R. P., and, when it is dug out in the Public Accounts Committee, the centre of which we find to be Mr. T. A. Burrows. That Imperial Pulp Company has limits on the North Saskatchewan river that are worth at least $750,000. It also has limits which their own agent has put on the market accompanied by a circular saying it was worth $500,000. Not a stick of timber has been cut on any of these limits, and yet the Minister of the Interior knows perfectly well that some of these limits have been held five or six years and nothing has been done to make the people cut on them.

That mysterious corporation the Imperial Pulp Company, which has provoked curiosity and baffled inquiry for more than five years, but which we now learn is controlled by the same Mr. Burrows, first entered the field as a competitive bidder on timber limits in December, 1902. It continued to operate with the department from 1902 to 1904. It never once applied in its own name for a limit. These bids always went in from Mr. A. W. Fraser, or some one of his coterie. Its cheques were usually managers' cheques on the Bank of Ottawa, which could not be identified, and everything the company did was shrouded in the deepest secrecy. But that company never once failed to get the limit it bid for. It only bid nine times, directly or indirectly, and it never once missed. During these two years this company, under diverse names, observing the greatest secrecy, bid upon nine limits. It never asked to have a limit put up, but it never failed to secure a limit upon which it bid. The total of its bids amounted to $54,975, the total of the next highest bidders in the nine cases amounted to $51,771, a difference of only $3,204. In other words this company secured its limits by an average excess bid of but 6 per cent above the next competitor. This mysterious company, that possessed no domicile, whose home was a Winnipeg post office box, whose communications had to pass through an Ottawa lawyer or banker, acquired, for less than $55,000, during these three years, 417 square miles of timber limits that have a value to-day exceeding $1,000,000.

I want to say something of the bids of the Imperial Pulp Company, and I shall do it as rapidly as I can. The first appearance of the Imperial Pulp Company on the records of the department is in reference to timber limit 1031. In the summer of 1902, a local Edmonton syndicate sent an exploration party to examine the timber along the upper waters of the North Saskatchewan river. In conformity with their report, application was made to the department to put up 118 square miles in eleven blocks. The applicants asked that there be no unnecessary delay, as they wished to construct a saw-mill and commence operations at once. In this case the government did not act as rapidly as they sometimes do. It only took them fourteen days to make up their minds about the great Prince Albert area, but they took a couple of months to decide whether they should open this Saskatchewan River section or not. In the meantime they instructed Mr. John Cameron, a homestead inspector, to investigate and send back a correct description of the timber to be found along the river. That was a praiseworthy thing to do and it is what the department should have done in other cases. In this case it had the additional recommendation of enabling the inner circle at Ottawa to know, from a reliable source of information, what timber there was along the river. Finally the department decided to put the berth up to tender.

On November 19, 1902, the notices were issued putting up the entire area for competition as a single proposition. Forty-two days were allowed from the issue of the notice to the date of opening bids. One advertisement appeared in the Edmonton 'Bulletin' about December 1. This gave about four weeks to outsiders to acquire information on which to make competitive offers. That this length of time was wholly insufficient is shown by a letter on file from W. S. Dwinnell, who represents wealthy Minneapolis capitalists and who has also a large interest in the Edmonton Lumber Company. Mr. Dwinnell in his letter says :

I have been endeavouring to secure information which would enable me to act intelligently, but have not had sufficient time to do so. I would ask you to have this sale postponed for thirty or sixty days preferably the latter, to the end that I may complete an examination and make a substantial bid for the property. I am satisfied that the interests of the Dominion government would be subserved thereby, and that a much larger bid would be received than if the sale took place at this time. This tract comprising, as it does, 118 square miles, is so extensive that the time given under the notice is altogether insufficient to permit any one to make proper examination thereof.

It is the same story disclosed in connection with other transactions 'insufficient time' 'tract too large.' A further letter from Messrs. Crafts & Lee, of Edmonton, asks 'must the tenders be on each block separately or on the whole 'intimating that' if so large an area be put up at one time there were few possessed of sufficient capital to bid upon it. It meant shutting out the small Edmonton manufacturer and granting every advantage to the wealthy Ottawa speculator.

But the department did not postpone the sale as asked by Mr. Dwinnell. Presumably sufficient information was by this time in the possession of those in whose behalf information was desired. The bids were opened on December 31, 1902. They were as follows, omitting several smaller offerings:

a. T. A. Burrows.. .. ..$ 6,057
b. James Ross, on behalf of Edmonton syndicate.. 17,010
c. H. & K. McDonald & Frith.. .. 31,161
d. The Imperial Pulp Company.. 31,575

The tender of the Imperial Pulp Company was a model of brevity. It read:

Toronto, December 29, 1902.

To the Secretary,

Department of the Interior, Ottawa.

Sir,—Inclosed please find tender for timber berth No. 1,031.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) IMPERIAL PULP COMPANY,
Toronto.

That was all.

Mr. BENNETT. It should have been 'yours surely.'

Mr. AMES. There was no amount specified in the letter at all. We find, however, that there were two cheques, when we get the original documents. One was for $17,575 and the other for $14,000. We find that the cheques inclosed were managers' cheques on the Bank of Ottawa, given to Mr. Burrows in exchange for his own deposit. We find that the letter dated Toronto, December 29, was accompanied by cheques dated Ottawa and we assume that the element of union in this business was the same Mr. Burrows. Look at the way those cheques dovetailed in. The cheque which came in with the first tender was for $17,575, which slightly exceeds the bid of James Ross and the Edmonton syndicate. The combined cheques exceed the McDonald tender by a narrow margin. Is it any wonder the question is asked: 'Was this coincidence or design'?

Edmonton advices show that the local syndicate was represented at Ottawa on the day the tenders were opened by Frederick E. Moroney, who brought down the $17,010 Ross cheque. This gentleman told on his return of his experience and impressions. You will find his story, as repeated by Dr. H. L. McInnis, in the Edmonton 'Weekly Journal' of February 28, 1908. After stating that the Edmonton syndicate sent a man to Ottawa with a marked cheque the citation reads:

When the man got there a tender had been submitted by Burrows for $6,610. The man was at the office a few minutes before the tenders were opened. The tender was taken inside and in the meantime a conference took place and a blank cheque signed by Burrows was filled out. . . . This made Burrows' total amount $31,110 and so he got the berth.

The figures may not be quite accurate, but it is plain that, rightly or wrongly, the Edmonton representative believed that his tender was tapped. Certainly the circumstantial evidence in regard to this transaction does not tend to remove that impression.

We will now for a moment examine the circumstances connected with the acquisition of two small berths on the Pembina and Brazeau rivers (1052 and 1058) by this same company. The bids were opened for the berth 1052 on the 11th March, 1903. There were three tenders:

(a.) Grafts & Lee, Edmonton.. .. .. $110
(b.) John Walter, Edmonton.. 125
(c.) Imperial Pulp Co., Winnipeg.. .. 300

The tenders of the first two bidders are on the form of the department, properly filled out, with amounts stated and a single cheque enclosed. The tender of the Imperial Pulp Company is a typewritten letter as follows:

Enclosed please find tender for timber berth No. 1052.

Yours truly,
IMPERIAL PULP CO.
Per R. R. P.

It will be noted that no amount offered as a bonus is stated in the letter and that the marginal note on the original is the only clue as to the denomination of cheque enclosed. The letter is typewritten, the number of the berth filled in afterwards in ink. The cheque was a manager's cheque drawn on the Bank of Ottawa. The identity of the bidder was entirely concealed. It must be admitted that a tender so drafted opens wide the door to collusion and fraud.

The next is berth 1058. In this case the tenders were opened on April 22, 1903. The tenderers were R. B. Ferguson, Edmonton, $310; Crafts & Lee, Edmonton, $350; Imperial Pulp Company, Winnipeg, $500. Ferguson and Crafts & Lee sent their bids in on the regular forms of the department; they stated the amount and inclosed a single cheque. The Imperial Pulp Company sent in another small typewritten letter :

Box 644, Winnipeg, Manitoba,
April, 18, 1903.

The Secretary, Department of Interior,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,—We hereby inclose for yearly license to cut timber on timber berth 1058 being two and a half square miles on Brazeau river and also inclose cheque for bonus for same.

Yours truly,
The Imperial Pulp Co.,
per R.R.P.

No amount stated, typewritten letter, two cheques again, one for $350 and one for $150. It will be noticed that Crafts & Lee were the principal competitors, that if Burrows had put in only the $350 cheque he would not have got the limit, it was the second cheque of $150, making the total $500, that got him the lease. Again I ask, is that by coincidence or by arrangement ?

I now come to berths 1097 and 1098 on the Brazeau river. These two limits had a combined area of sixty square miles. They were put up on November 11, 1903, after a postponment of one month for which no reason was assigned. The bids for 1097 were John Campbell, $10 ; Aylmer & Featherstonhaugh, $500 ; H. & K. McDonald & Firth, $930; Imperial Pulp Company, $1,000.

The tender of the Imperial Pulp Company is on their own paper and reads as follows:

Winnipeg, Man., Nov. 7, 1903.

The Secretary,
Department of the Interior,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—

Enclosed please find tender for timber berth No. 1097 and bonus for same, $1,000.00.

Yours truly,
THE IMPERIAL PULP CO.
(Sgd.) R. R. Pattinson.

The letter is typewritten but the amount $1,000 is written in with pen, apparently at a time subsequent to the writing of the letter, the signature is made by a rubber stamp. From the endorsement on the original we learn that the $1,000 was in cash.

For berth No. 1098 there were three bidders:

a. Aylen & Featherstonhaugh, Fort Saskatchewan.. .. .. $ 300
b. H. and K. MacDonald & Frith, Ottawa.. 1,860
c. The Imperial Pulp Company.. .. 2,500

The tender of the Imperial Pulp Company reads as follows:

The Imperial Pulp Co., Limited,
Winnipeg, Man., Nov. 7, 1903.

The Secretary,
Department of the Interioir,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—

Enclosed please find tender for timber berth No. 1098 and bonus for same, $2,500.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) THE IMPERIAL PULP CO.
Per R. R. Pattinson.

Here again the body of the letter is typewritten, the figures setting forth the amount offered as bonus are written in ink and the signature is stamped. The marginal note on the original shows that $2,500 in cash accompanied the bid. These two tenders of the Imperial Pulp Company (1097 and 1098) are so drawn as to render collusion and fraud possible—were such action intended. It would not have been a difficult matter to have filled in the amounts and to have added the requisite cash after the offerings by the other bidders were known.

Berths 1118 and 1119 on the North Saskatchewan river and West Sheep creek have a combined area of 120 square miles. They are of great value, bearing magnificent timber, worth $150,000 or more. The Burrows interest applied in the fall of 1903. The advertisement was issued on December 10, once in the Manitoba 'Free Press' and once in the 'Albertan' and the 'Tribune' of Calgary. But any one will tell you that this district is tributary to Edmonton, it is up the river from Edmonton and the two advertisements issued in Calgary would not reach any Edmonton man who wanted to tender; there was not a shred of an advertisement in any Edmonton paper. Forty days were allowed from Ottawa to Ottawa leaving four weeks net to explore. Even if an Edmonton man had been tendering he would have had to go 150 miles up the river from Edmonton or seventy miles across the hills from Red Deer to get to the limit. It was impossible for him to explore it. As might be expected, when the day arrived there were no tenders except those from the Burrows interest. It would not do to have it go abroad that there was no competition, so A. W. Fraser was instructed to prepare two bids, one in the name of T. A. Burrows and the other in the name of W. H. Nolan, the deposit in each case being in cash. Nolan was awarded the limit and immediately transferred it to the Imperial Pulp Company. Although the Imperial Pulp Company were the owners of this limit within a few hours of its being awarded to Nolan, the fallacy was kept up in the books of the department for years that Nolan was the owner of that limit.

These two limits cost the Imperial Pulp Company $1,100 and their value must be in the neighbourhood of $100,000 or $150,000. At all events the limits went for $9 per square mile or about one and a half cents per acre, and these are valuable limits at the headwaters of the Saskatchewan.

I wish to refer to one more limit, No. 1122. The award of this limit was accompanied by every objectionable feature which appears in the case of practically every other limit to which I have referred. The applications were called for on November 27, 1903. They covered seven widely separated tracts amounting to 110 square miles, on the McLeod and Pembina rivers. When this was applied for the department acted immediately. The advertisement was issued on December 15, and the bids were to be received by January 22, 1904; that was forty-three days Ottawa to Ottawa, or four weeks net for any one in Edmonton to explore the limits. If you plot out on the map these tracts which were put up at that time for competition, it will be seen that a man would have to travel 450 miles from Edmonton to simply make a tour of the limits without any examination, and as this would have to be done in the dead of winter it was utterly impossible to explore the limits and put in an adequate bid. The country cannot fail to conceive that it was never intended or expected that anybody but men with advance knowledge would bid on that limit. The whole thing was a lottery as far as any one else was concerned. There were four tenders, McDonald & Frith $1,220; J. B. Lamont, $4,000; Kenneth H. McLeod, Edmonton, $10,025, and A. W. Fraser, (the Imperial Pulp Company) $11,000. The McLeod tender was doubtless put in by Edmonton people who knew more about the limit than any other group, but the offer of the Imperial Pulp Company was $11,000 which just cleared the jump. If you examine the original tenders of the Imperial Pulp Company what do you find? The offer consisted of a letter written by A. W. Fraser in his own hand, and signed by him. From the marginal notes it appears there were two cheques, one for $5,000 and one for $6,000. The letter was written at the instance of T. A. Burrows and it was handed to him unsealed and the cheques that accompanied it were those that he supplied. That is the evidence of A. W. Fraser. The Finnie evidence was that there were two managers' cheques that were issued by him in exchange for cheques given by Burrows and that the $5,000 cheque was the first. Look at the facts. J. B. Lamont offers $4,000; Kenneth H. McLeod, $10,025. Then on behalf of the Imperial Pulp Company you have one cheque for $5,000 and another cheque for $6,000 and with these two together the limit goes to the Imperial Pulp Company. I ask if that dovetailing does not indicate that there is design and that this is not merely coincidence. This limit was transferred by Fraser to the Imperial Pulp Company the very next day and it is now found to be covered with dense spruce which is valuable for railway ties and much of the timber on it will be sold to railways now going through that country. Look at the file and you will find hundreds of settlers protests against this concession. In fact after four years the government was forced to abandon one of these tracts because the settlers of the whole country rose in arms against having a lawyer in Ottawa keep them out of their own supply of building material.

To recapitulate, the Imperial Pulp Company have nine limits and you will find about every one of them something which is suspicious and which cannot but call for an investigation. As to 1031 I have spoken of the absence of amounts and in the cases of 1052 and 1058 no amounts are stated. 1097 and 1098 were accompanied by cash; 1118 and 1119 give evidence of friendly competition between Nolan and Burrows both representing the Imperial Pulp Company. In the case of 1122, it is perfectly impossible that there should have been any competition. So it is with all the Edmonton reserves for 150 miles around that city, to the value of $750,000. All these limits have been secured by this company which will hold its limits or sell them wholesale or perhaps retail but in any event they stand to make a very large amount.

I have brought to the attention of the House the unique method of tender they followed. The advertisement in the case of each one of these applications quotes the regulations under which a license will be issued and also states that a printed form of tender may be obtained at the land office or from the department. The department indicates to any one who wants to tender that there are regular printed forms and the natural inference is that they expect any on tendering to use those forms. The form of tender is:

> Sir,—I hereby offer a bonus of dollars for a timber berth of square miles selected, for which berth public competition is being invited, and I inclose an accepted cheque on the bank of for dollars, being the amount of said bonus
> I undertake to comply with all the conditions of the Timber Regulations.
> I have the honour to be, sir,
> Your obedient servant,
>
> The Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa.

That is the printed form used in 75 per cent of the cases. It is a form the department furnishes to the ordinary man who makes an application. It states in two places the amount and the bank on which the cheque is drawn. If that form were used in every case, there could be no such hocus pocus as that in the case of the limits secured by the Imperial Pulp Company.

Mr. Speaker, at the recent meeting of the Canadian Forestry Association in Montreal, a very significant remark was made by Dr. Fernow. He said, 'The forests are the capital of the future not the spoils of the present.' I wish that this remark had been uttered about five years ago and had sunk deep into the minds of those who have the control of our western timber areas. To-day, half the timber areas in these three provinces are in speculators' hands, and for these areas the country has received a mere bagatelle. These forest areas are worth from three to five millions at a fair computation. There was no necessity for the government to put them up for sale at the time they did. There was no possible excuse for disposing of the outlaying areas. One-quarter of the area would have been sufficient, if those portions had been chosen within the range of transportation facilities, to supply the needs of the three provinces. The other three-quarters should have been held by the government until they became valuable, and the increase in the value should have belonged to the people and not have been given to the speculators for a mere song. So, I feel that a great opportunity has been lost; it has been lost in order that certain gentlemen, close to the government, might become millionaires. And to this end our three new provinces have been despoiled. The day will come when there will be handed over to these provinces the ragged remnants of the lands that should have been theirs long ago. But, before that is done, practically all the timber of value will have been given away. These are the assets that these provinces should have in order to develop themselves and carry on their internal affairs. A short time ago, the provincial treasurer of Ontario brought down his budget, showing that province had derived a revenue of $1,800,000 for the year from a judicious use of their timber supply. And we are not far behind in the province of Quebec. Hon. Mr. Weir, in his report, shows that $1,000,000 a year is received by the province of Quebec from its timber resources.

Yet you propose to shear the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan of practically all their assets to give them into the hands of speculators.

Mr. Speaker, the circumstances connected with the tenders we have examined and which I have endeavoured to review before the House lead, to my mind, to one inevitable conclusion, and that is that there has been either fraud or imposition practised in obtaining some of these limits. That belief is general throughout the west. If it is well founded, what is the logical conclusion of the matter? It is that the country has been robbed and that certain persons to-day are in possession of stolen goods, goods that should be restored to the people of Canada. Out in the constituency of the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) they probably have read the evidence given in the Public Accounts Committee including the hon. member's valuable testimony, which, I am sure, will be all the more appreciated after what has been said on the floor of the House to-day. We find the farmers there gathering together and moving a resolution, not that there ought to be an investigation—they have got beyond that—but that the timber and coal and other lands which have been unjustly taken away from the people should be restored.

Take up the report of your Civil Service Royal Commission, and turn to what it says concerning the Department of the Interior. The commissioners say that they had not time to investigate that department:

> The commissioners regret extremely that with the short time at their disposal they were unable to visit the Northwest, much as they desired to see how the land, and more specially, the timber sales are affected.

The most cursory investigation of the Department of the Interior persuaded the commission that there was need to investigate the way the timber areas had been disposed of. A little while ago we had complaints brought before the government of my province showing that there was fraud in connection with the timber in the township of Boyer, that fake homesteading had been going on by speculators who took this means of securing the timber fraudulently. And what did they do in that good old province of Quebec? They held an investigation; they found 88 cases in which the timber had been acquired through fraud, and they cancelled every one of those leases, so that the timber came back to the Crown. We have an equally good reason to demand an investigation here and now. I would ask the Prime Minister to give an inquiry by an independent outside judicial authority into this whole question of the alienation of the timber of the Northwest, to ascertain whether these allegations are true or not. And if that were done, and if what I believe to be true were found to be true, I think the government would be right in taking back at least a million dollars' worth of timber and placing it once more at the command of the public.

Mr. T. A. BURROWS (Dauphin). Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to follow all the insinuations which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) has cast upon me, and upon the gentleman who opened these tenders, and upon the government for their management of the country's timber resources. The hon. gentleman was so voluble that speaking only from memory and immediately following him, I may not be able to deal with all that he has said. If I do not reply to all the remarks he has made, it will only be because some of them have escaped my memory.

I will first refer to the timber limits which I secured myself and to which the hon. gentleman referred. The hon. gentleman's criticism is very unfair; if parliamentary rules will allow me to use the word, I would say it was very mean because it was so unfair. He referred particularly to two limits I secured and tried to cast a reflection upon myself, and tried to misrepresent the conditions regarding these limits. Take, for instance, timber berth No. 1046 He said that in this case he tried to find out from the bank manager certain facts in regard to the cheque put in. And he insinuated—if the English language means anything, this is what he meant—that I was here in Ottawa and found what the competing tenders were and went to the bank to get a cheque covering a larger amount than the amount of the highest tender. When the matter came up in the Public Accounts Committee, the hon. gentleman made inquiry of the bank manager to see if he had the cheques. The manager said that he had not the cheques, that if he ever had them they were mine and must have been returned to me. The record shows that it was a Bank of Ottawa cheque that was put in. It was a cheque marked Winnipeg.

Now with regard to that matter, I will add what the hon. gentleman left out. He was very free in making insinuations, insinuations which he had no ground for making. But when it came down to making a clear representation of the facts, the hon. gentleman had not honour enough to do so. Now take berth 1046. Here is the copy of the application, and here is the original cheque. He could have got them from me in the Public Accounts Committee, but for some reason known to himself, he was afraid to put me into the witness box, he was afraid to let me show my side of the case. I was there, and the chairman of the committee said to him: If you want to find out about these cheques here is Mr. Burrows, put him in the box and he will produce his own cheques. The hon. gentleman was too mean, I will use that word——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BURROWS. I will say unfair then.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was the hon. gentleman in the Public Accounts Committee himself at the time he speaks of?

Mr. BURROWS. I was.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then why didn't he take the stand and give his evidence if he wanted to?

Mr. BURROWS. The member for St. Antoine went out of his way to subpoena everybody, and Mr. Macdonald asked him to subpoena me if he wanted to get this information, and he would not do it.

Mr. LANCASTER. You were there, and you didn't need a subpoena.

Mr. BURROWS. Now with regard to this timber berth 1046, I will read the application, and I defy the hon. gentleman to point out anything wrong with it. In putting in applications for timber, the hon. gentleman knows as well as anybody that in many cases the regular form is not used, lumbermen very seldom have the printed form, and the department do not exact the use of a printed form. But in this case I used the printed form, and I will read it. The tenders were opened on March 7, 1903. Here is my tender, dated Winnipeg, March 3, 1903:

I hereby offer a bonus of three thousand five hundred dollars for a timber berth No. 1046, containing forty square miles situated near the Pembina river for which public competition is being invited, and I inclose accepted cheques on the band of Ottawa for $3,500, being the amount of said bonus. I undertake to comply with all the conditions of the timber regulations.

I inclosed two accepted cheques on the Bank of Ottawa, and both cheques were marked good by the Bank of Ottawa in the city of Winnipeg. Both were dated on the same day, that is 46 days previous to the opening of the tenders. The application was in proper form, it specified the total amount of the tender, and the cheques were inclosed and sent to Winnipeg. I think that is clear enough.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why did you make two cheques instead of one?

Mr. BURROWS. The hon. gentleman was in the Public Accounts Committee when that matter was investigated, and he heard what the solicitor said with regard to it. In putting in tenders, lumbermen well know that the amount of a tender often becomes known. A competing tenderer could go to the bank and ask for the amount of my cheque. If the amount is known, and if there is a competing tenderer who wants to get a cheque at the same time, it is possible that one man may find out what another man's tender is.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. And none of the rest of the tenderers know anything else about that?

Mr. BURROWS. They do, that is just where the hon. gentleman is wrong. I will give him an instance. Mr. Fraser has acted for myself in regard to timber matters, he has acted in regard to the Red Deer Lumber Company, and he has acted for himself and his friends, because he is interested in the timber business. He was asked to say why more than one cheque was put in the tender, and here is what he said:

It is a pretty hard question, except in a general way. I have known clients who had an idea that by varying the cheques, by taking them from different banks and putting different amounts in, it would prevent the amount of their tender leaking out. They have an idea, rightly or wrongly, that in getting cheques marked in the bank it might leark out what the amount of their cheque was.

Q. Leak out from where, from the bank?—A. From the bank. I have had cases where clients have sent cheques through the bank to me to put in with their tender, and have come along themselves and supplemented that cheque and asked me to put in an additional amount beyond what they had sent through the bank to inclose with their tender. As to their motives or reasons for doing so, I am not here to say so far as my practice goes that has not been confined to one individual, it has been adopted time and again by different clients.

Now that is quite understandable. The hon. gentleman who interrupted me asked me if anybody else did it. I will give him a little information in regard to some parties whom probably he knows. It is in regard to timber berth 1275, which was put up for public tender. W. Anderson, of Ottawa, manager for J. R. Booth, tendered one cheque of $15,050; and H. Finger, of Port Arthur, tendered $15,000, and inclosed cheques for $10,000, $2,000, $1,000, $1,000 and $1,000 making $15,000 in all. Now this circumstance proves two things; it proves that it is the practice of lumbermen to put in more than one cheque; it also proves that tenders are often very close to each other. In this case there was only $50 between the two tenders, although they were for the large amounts of $15,000. I am sure that if I had been the successful tenderer, the hon. member for St. Antoine would have been examining the tenders with a microscope, and he would have insinuated on the floor of the House that I had been doing something wrong.

Mr. AMES. If there were twenty cases like that, I would.

Mr. BURROWS. Here is another case. Take timber berth 360, that was old berth No. 208 on the Columbia river, B.C. Two tenders were put in very close to each other. One was by M. A. Anderson, manager of the Imperial Bank, on behalf of the Columbia River Lumber Company, for $20,611. The competing tender was put in by a firm of Ottawa barristers, Wyld & Osler, who I understand are Conservatives. They tendered on behalf of Messrs. Doherty, Bennis, Bird and Newton, of Bradford, Pennsylvania, and sent in two cheques, one on the Ontario Bank for $13,000, and one of the Molsons Bank for $7,566, making $20,566.65, or only $44.35 higher than the unsuccessful tenderer. This instance also proves that it is possible for two tenders to be very close together. I do not wish to insinuate that there was anything wrong in this case, far from it; but it proves what I have said, that even large tenders are sometimes remarkably close together. This case also proves that the firm of Wyld & Osler, in the city of Ottawa, apparently knew how to conduct their business. They not only put in two cheques, but they were not satisfied with one bank, and they put in one cheque on the Ontario Bank and another on the Molsons Bank.

I am referring to this point to show that it is a practice that is knwon to public men and governments. It is a practice among lumbermen and apparently it is a practice amongst lawyers. The hon. gentleman made some insinuating remarks about the fact that tenders were put in in other people's names, but he, himself, before he sat down, told us of the instances in which McDonald Bros., of the city of Ottawa, put in a tender for berth No. 1108 in the name of James Currie. It is quite a common occurrence and I do not know that it suggests any idea of wrong-doing. Here is another instance. Timber berth No. 1388 was put up during last year. There were various tenders put in, I think, five tenders altogether. I know something about this berth myself, because it was applied for by a gentleman who was my competitor in the lumbering business in Dauphin, Mr. Shaw. There was also a competitor in another gentleman who resides in the same district. Mr. Shaw tendered, in his own name, $430 and tendered, in the name of a broker in Ottawa, $6,300. Why did he do that? He aparently first put in a small tender in order that if anybody found out the amount of his cheque he would not find out the amount of his actual tender and then he came down to Ottawa and got a broker to put in another tender in the broker's name. I am not making any insinuation against Mr. Shaw. He just did what lumbermen do in a case of that kind.

An hon. MEMBER. Where does he live?

Mr. BURROWS. He lives in Dauphin and he is a good Conservative. He is a most respectable citizen and I am casting no reflection upon him at all. He did what I probably would have done myself. There were three cheques inclosed in one of the tenders in that case. Take another instance, berth 333 situated in British Columbia. There were a great many tenders for that limit. I believe it was a valuable limit. It was situated on the Arrow lakes and it contained large British Columbia timber. One of the competing tenders amounted to $25,225, made up of cheques for $10,575, $7,650, $4,000 and $3,000.

Mr. BRISTOL. Will the hon. gentleman tell me where he got all his information from and whether these are all the cases that have occurred in the department?

Mr. BURROWS. These are all the cases that have occurred in the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are these original files?

Mr. BURROWS. They are extracts from the original files. In regard to three of these cases I have personal knowledge myself. I referred a moment ago to my putting in a tender for berth No. 1046. I pointed out that the application was regular according to the criticism of the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, that the application was on the printed form, that it specified the amount of the tender, the cheques were made out and marked good four days before the time for opening the tenders, and if the hon. gentleman wants to see them I will show him the cheques now. He could have seen them in the Public Accounts Committee if he had asked me or if he had put me into the box. In regard to berth No. 1047, I made application in that case. The tender is dated Winnipeg, March 3, 1903, and it is written on the printed form prescribed by the department as follows :

Winnipeg, March 3, 1903.

Sir,—I hereby offer a bonus of fifteen thousand dollars for a timber berth No. 1047, containing fifty square miles, situated near Red Deer lake and Arnut river for which public competition is being invited, and I inclose an accepted cheques on the Bank of Ottawa, for fifteen thousand dollars being the amount of said bonus.

This application read 'an accepted cheque.' I did not strike out the 'an,' but I put in an 's' at the end of 'cheque.' The hon. gentleman tried to make a point out of that.

I undertake to comply with all the conditions of the timber regulations.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
THEO. A. BURROWS.

To the Secretary,
Department of the Interior, Ottawa.

I inclosed three cheques. The tender was dated March 3, 1903. The cheques are dated March 3, 1903.

Winnipeg Manitoba, March 3, 1903.

The Bank of Ottawa, Winnipeg.

Pay to deputy Minister of Interior or order, $5,000. Five thousand dollars.
(Sgd.) THEO. A. BURROWS.

This cheque is marked 'good' on March 4, 1903. The next cheque is in the same form, drawn on the same day and also marked good on March 4, 1903, and the third is the same. There are the three original cheques The hon. gentleman can see them; they were marked good at the time I say and they have the endorsement on the back of them of a gentleman in the Department of the Interior who acted for the deputy minister—Mr. T. G. Rothwell. The tenders were opened on March 7, 1903, and the cheques were dated March 3, 1903, and marked good March 4, 1903, in the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would the hon. gentleman tell me if these cheques were all drawn on the same bank?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. And accepted on the same day?

Mr. BURROWS. Accepted on the same day.

Mr. LANCASTER. How would the hon. gentleman disguise the amount if he were afraid of a bank clerk telling on him?

Mr. BURROWS. As far as that is concerned there were three or four tenders put in on the same day.

Mr. LANCASTER. I understand that his reason for giving more than one cheque was that the bank clerks could not see what was the total amount.

Mr. BURROWS. I was tendering on more than one item that day.

Mr. LANCASTER. I understand that the cheques were all on the same bank and that they were tendered the same day ; how is it that the bank clerk would not know the total amount because it would be a matter of simple addition ?

Mr. BURROWS. There were several tenders put in at the same time. I was tendering on various limits at the same time. These two applications that I have read are dated the same day, March 3, and the tenders were opened on the same day, March 7.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) also spoke about berth No. 1099. I have also the application here. It is not on the printed form. Tenders were opened on November 11, 1903, and the application was made in Ottawa on November 11, 1903. It reads as follows :—

The Secretary, Department of Interior,
Ottawa.

Sir,—Inclosed please find tender for timber berth No. 1099, containing forty-four square miles on the Athabasca river and bonus for same amounting to six thousand five hundred dollars.

(Sgd.) THEO. A. BURROWS.

Inclosed two cheques for $3,500 and $3,000.

My tender in that case was $6,500 and the next highest was $5,116. My hon. friend tried to insinuate that there was collusion between myself and some gentleman in the Department of the Interior. If there was collusion between myself and some gentleman in the Department of the Interior by virtue of which I was able to find out what was the next highest tender, is it reasonable to assume that I would throw away $1,400 when I could have secured the limit by tendering $50 or $100 higher than the other tenderer ?

At six o'clock, House took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES.

House in committee on Bill (No. 151) respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company.—Mr. Crawford.

Mr. LENNOX. When we last discussed this Bill in committee I moved an amendment. Although we have an agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to take over, at the end of fifty years, branch lines which they may construct in connection with the eastern division of the Transcontinental Railway, we have no such agreement with this, the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company. This latter company is identical in interest with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, but it is a distinct corporation and our agreements with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company will not bind this company. I have framed my amendment somewhat differently from the provision of the contract of 1904 between the Grand Trunk Pacific Company and the government in that I provide that the government shall have at the end of the fifty year period the right to take over all the branch lines and not such only as the company do not desire to retain. It would I believe be unfair for the country to be compelled to take the refuse lines and to leave in the hands of this company those branch lines which were profitable. If at the end of fifty years the government sees fit to resume possession of this national highway and to operate it, we certainly should have control of the important feeders which by that time will probably be constructed. If there is any doubt as to this company being the same practically as the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, that doubt will be removed by a reference to the first clause of the Bill which provides that Charles M. Hays, Frank W. Morse, Wm. Wainwright, W. H. Biggar and Darcy Tate, of Montreal, and others be incorporated under the name of the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company. These gentlemen are identified with the interests of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company and the Grand Trunk Railway Company. There is no objection to these three companies having separate names so long as they are not enabled by that fact to evade their responsibilities to the country. I retire from the discussion of this matter for the time being in order that the House may have at once the advantage of hearing the opinion of the government on this question and that the Minister of Railways may state the attitude which the government takes. I hope the technical objection taken by the Minister of Public Works the other night does not mean that the government is hostile to the amendment I have taken considerable pains to draft and which I have at some inconvenience to myself attended here to support on several occasions. I may say for the benefit of those who were not in the House the other night that I have added to the amendment a provision safeguarding the people's rights by providing that any government which may happen to be in power when the fifty year period runs out shall not act without the consent of the people, and that parliament must give its approval before we avail ourselves of this option. I trust the Minister of Railways will give the amendment his friendly support and hearty endorsation.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is a pleasure to hear the hon. gentleman speak so hopefuly. The whole Grand Trunk Pacific project is a question of national importance and so this amendment is of more than ordinary interest. The amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) has something to commend it. He tells us that this branch line company while not the same in name is yet the same in interest as the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. That being the case I presumed that if we treated this company in identically the same way as we treated the Grand Trunk Pacific in making the agreement with them as amended in 1904, no real objection could be made. That matter was threshed out at great length at that time as hon. members will remember. I had not then the honour of having a seat in the House, but I read with a good deal of interest the discussion of this very question of the right to take over branch lines in the transcontinental section of the railway. As I said a moment ago, granted, that the interests are the same in the Grand Trunk Branch Lines Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, I am not sure that this is correct, but for the moment we will grant that it is, legally it is another company and stands on another footing—but taking the statement of my hon. friend I again ask the committee to consider whether if we place this company in the same position as the Grand Trunk Pacific was placed in regard to taking over branch lines, we have not performed our duty to the public. The hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Barker) the other night in discussing this asked me if I would be content to amend this Bill so as to confirm with the Act passed in 1904. That is a matter that I have had under consideration. I realize at once that the interests of the people ought to be safeguarded in these branch lines and I would not for a moment allow the Grand Trunk Branch Lines Company under the guise of getting a new charter for a new company to get away from provisions which the same people contracted for under the old arrangement. I think we could not fairly do that If we went further than that I thought we would be going too far in placing this company in a position inferior to that in which we placed the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. The position as described by my hon. friend is this: In the agreement of 1904, the government took power to take over all the branch lines of the company at the end of the fifty-year period; if they concluded to take over the management of the road they took the power to take over such branches as the company did not elect to keep. That decision was arrived at after a full discussion in this House, and it was the decision of the committee that that was a fair proposition and so it went on the statute-book. It is hardly fair to say that in doing that we merely take over the refuse and leave the company only the paying roads. Superficially it looks as if that might be true, but as a matter of fact it is not. Roads can be profitable as branch lines that could not be profitable if made independent lines. The Act really and practically will work out in this way that at the conclusion of the fifty-year period if the government decides to take over the management of the Transcontinental they will take over such branch lines, as the company does not elect to keep. What does that mean? There may be some of these branches that will pay independently of the trunk line altogether, that is lines which as main lines will be paying propositions. If the company has a few of these I do not think it would be fair to the company to take over from them lines which they can operate independently on a paying basis. The other lines are not the refuse but they may be lines that in conjunction with the trunk line will pay as feeders to the trunk line, but which if left as independent lines will not pay. That distinction was made in this House in 1904. Without entering into a full discussion of that matter I may say that after considering the matter I have decided that it will be fair to all parties and will be a sufficient protection to the public to take the judgment of the House in 1904 and place the Grand Trunk Branch Lines Company in exactly the same position as the Grand Trunk Pacific would have been in, had this company not been formed in reference to branch lines; in other words to place the new company in exactly the same position as the Grand Trunk Pacific Company was placed in by the agreement of 1904. I shall read the amendment I propose which is identical with section 11 of the amended contract of 1904. The amendment is as follows:

In case the government as defined in the schedule to the National Transcontinental Railway Act, 1903, in pursuance of the terms of the said schedule, shall at any time determine to undertake the operation of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway, the government shall take over such of the lines of railway running from a point or points in the eastern division authorized by chapter 99 of the Acts of this parliament of 1906 as the company may elect not to retain, at such value as may be agreed upon between the government and the company, or as may in case of failure so to agree, be determined in manner provided by paragraph 24 (2) of the agreement between the Government of Canada and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, dated 29th July, 1903, forming schedule to chapter 71 of the statutes of 1903. If any such branch line or lines shall have received any grant or grants under the provisions of any Act of the parliament of Canada the amount of such grant or grants without interest shall be deducted from such value and the difference only shall be payable by the government upon the taking over of such branch line or lines. Provided, however, that nothing in this Act contained shall authorize the government to take over the said lines of railway or any of them without the consent of parliament previously obtained to the exercise of such right of taking over as aforesaid.

That means that on any lines taken over the government shall deduct from the price to be paid to the company under the arbitration any amounts that may have been given in subsidy to these lines. I submit that this is fair. It places this company in the position in which the parliament of Canada placed the Grand Trunk Pacific in 1904. As my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) has moved his amendment I would move this as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. I will support the amendment for the same reason that I opposed the amendment to the original proposition in 1904. I always regarded it as an unwise proposition from a business standpoint if we were to take over any part of the road to take over only such parts as the company elected to give up, allowing them to keep such portions as they found desirable to keep. Under such a proposition the most natural thing would be for the company to retain the paying portions and hand over the rest to the government. We have an example in some parts of the Intercolonial. Some parts of that never paid expenses, although others yield a profit from year to year. But because these roads were connected with the Intercolonial it was contended by the maritime province people that since we owned the main line we should take over the branch lines as well. And what has been the result? It is that these parts of the road have not paid and are not likely to pay for a long time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What branches are they?

Mr. SPROULE. I could not name them off-hand, but I have looked into the matter and am quite sure that my statement is correct. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) knows that it is substantially correct.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was under the impression the Intercolonial did not purchase the branch lines.

Mr. SPROULE. Did it not purchase the Prince Edward Island Railway and some branches connected with it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That road was built as a government work.

Mr. SPROULE. But there are some branches connected with it, and did not we——

Mr. PUGSLEY. The only branch that the Intercolonial has bought in the maritime provinces, so far as I am aware, is the Canada Eastern, and I am told that it is a line that pays very well.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the Gibson line?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. It was not paying before we took it over.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But I am told it pays well to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. After very heavy expenditure. It certainly was not a paying line for years before we took it over, and it was not expected to pay the Intercolonial. Take any railway system you like—any such system as the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific or the Canadian Northern, and if a proposition were made to buy them would it be regarded as wise to purchase only those portions of the road the company desired to give up and allow them to retain the other portions? We held that the principle was wrong and unsound when it was carried through before. It was carried through against the will of a large number of the members of this House, carried through by the force of the government majority. The mere fact that such a thing was carried at one time, it seems to me, does not justify the argument of the Minister of Railways and Canals that we must adopt it in connection with this Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company because we put a similar clause in the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill. I imagine that there will be a connecting link between the main line and the city of Montreal and that will probably be a paying line. It is likely that there will be another such link with the city of Toronto. These lines connecting with metropolitan centres will probably pay well. These would not be the lines the company would wish to give up. If the government took over the line without these branches, having no feeders from the great cities, they would find the line in a condition of starvation for many years until, at heavy expense, they had completed these links between the great cities and the main line. This is a bad proposition from the point of view of sound business principles. It is a bad proposition from the point of view of the government. In my judgment, the country will not endorse it. The proposition made by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) is a good one, and I am heartily in accord with it. I believe that a government that fails to accept this proposition will be regarded as one that is not doing its duty and is not maintaining the interest of the public.

Mr. HAGGART. The objection to the proposition of the Minister of Railways and Canals is the same as was urged in the case of taking over the branch lines of the Transcontinental. The bargain is that the government may after fifty years take over that line, but also, if it does so, it must take over any lines that the railway company may elect to give. That is, the company can compel the government to take over non-paying lines that are worth very little. The Minister of Railways is adding something to this Bill which the House does not want and did not mean to adopt. And to add this amendment to a private Bill is certainly a strange and unusual procedure. What is the object of adding this to the Bill? There is some sense in the amendment of my hon. friend from South Simcoe, for he gives the government the option to take over whatever lines it chooses if parliament consents to the transfer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like to point out to my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) that the amendment proposed by the hon member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) does not make it necessary for the government in case it exercises the option, to take over all the branches, but it allows the government to take over just such branches as it pleases. The result would be that the government could pick out all the paying lines when it took the main line, and leave the company with the non-paying branches. That would be most unjust.

Mr. HAGGART. But what about the others where the company had the option to say that the government must take them over?

Mr. LANCASTER. I cannot see why the Minister of Public Works should be so afraid of the government doing what it ought to do in the interest of the country against the Grand Trunk Pacific. This is another instance of the kind of legislation which this company gets through this parliament. Everybody representing the government is afraid that they won't give the Grand Trunk and the Grand Trunk Pacific everything that it is possible to give them. Two years ago when this proposition was up in regard to these branch lines, I made a strong opposition, and moved the six months' hoist of the Bill, because the government, represented by the present Minister of Justice, insisted upon putting the Bill through without any precaution being adopted to protect the public interest. Having failed to get the government to adopt any reasonable amendment to protect the people of this country, I had the temerity to move that the Bill be not then read the third time. Some of the objections I urged then are urged again to-day by the hon. member for Simcoe with regard to this measure, and I think very properly urged. I realize that no words of mine will stay the hand of this government in continuing every session to give to the Grand Trunk Pacific everything they want. The Minister of Public Works has indicated that the government is afraid that they will be unjust to the Grand Trunk Pacific. I must say with all courtesy to the present Minister of Public Works that I think he would be better employed in looking a little more carefully after the public interest as against the railway, instead of looking after the railway as against the public. These branch lines are something that never was contemplated in 1903 when the main contract was made. We thought then we were making a bargain with a concern which would keep its assets in its own name; we did not suppose that we were making an arrangement with a concern which would come to this parliament and ask for the privilege of doing a large part of their business in the name of another concern and thereby escape the liabilities of the original company. This Branch Lines Act which was passed in 1906, is still open to the objection that they are allowed, by doing business in the name of another company called the Branch Lines Company, to escape the liabilities of the Grand Trunk Pacific to the people of Canada under the original contract which was made with that company in 1903, and confirmed again in 1904. The measure now before the House is a continuance or furtherance of an effort to give to this company every possible advantage that it can desire, and at the expense of the people of this country, I say this advisedly. They come to-day and ask for an extension of time, a privilege which they did not tell us in 1906 they would want. And when it is proposed by the hon. member for Simcoe to put in an amendment to the Bill that would give some slight measure of protection to the people by allowing them to take over the lines which the company may or may not build, I cannot understand how anybody wishing to protect the public interest can hesitate to vote for that amendment. It is only a slight measure or protection, but it is a measure that ought to be given. Speaking for myself alone, I would not be inclined to pass this Bill at all. As it is I do not think the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company has made out a case for the extension of time they are asking for all the lines. But if the measure is going through, at least it ought to contain an amendment which if not worded exactly like the amendment of my hon. friend, would at least contain a provision that this country shall not be at the mercy of the Grand Trunk Pacific as to what lines the company may choose to force this country to pay for. We are assisting this company, we are practically financing their concern, and if we buy this railway we have a right to buy it without being compelled to include all the branch lines which the company may choose to ask us to buy. Simply because they are the Grand Trunk Pacific Company is no reason why we should give them everything they want, as we did this session when we allowed them to take the most beautiful part of the people's park for the purpose of building a hotel.

Mr. BLAIN. I deem it my duty to support the amendment of my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox). I have before me the amendment moved by my hon. friend and also the amendment to the amendment moved by the Minister of Railways. I do not wish to weary the committee by reading them both, but will just select the important point out of each. The resolution of my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) contains this paragraph :

> The government shall thereupon and thereafter have the right to take over any of the lines of railway authorized by chapter 99 of the Acts of this parliament, 1906, as are connected with that line and with any point or points on such eastern division, at such value as may be agreed upon between the government and the company.

The amendment to the amendment reads:

> The government shall take over such line or lines of railway running from a point or points in the eastern division authorized by chapter 99 of the Acts of this parliament, 1906, which such company may elect not to retain.

I prefer the amendment moved by my hon. friend from South Simcoe because it leaves to the discretion of the parliament of Canada what line or lines we shall take. If the Grand Trunk Pacific had on the floor of this House a special representative, that representative could not submit a resolution stronger in the interests of that company than the one proposed by the Minister of Railways. His amendment is strictly in the interests of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and I am sure Canadian people will be surprised that my hon. friend would come forward with a resolution directly in the interests of that company. Surely my hon. friend has forgotten the promises he made to protect the interests of the people. I do not wish to weary the committee by going over the reasons which have been so fully given by my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) and my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), but I do say that, in my opinion, it is in the interests of the people that we should adopt the amendment moved by my hon. friend from South Simcoe. Looking into the future I am sure that the people who will then have to deal with this matter will be surprised that a Minister of Railways should have felt it his duty to move a resolution directly in the interests of the Grand Trunk Pacific and against the interests of the Canadian people.

Mr. LENNOX. It is my duty to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, who has been at the trouble of drafting this amendment, that I should say a word or two to explain why I cannot agree with his suggestion. Whilst I am perfectly willing to accord to the Grand Trunk Pacific everything they have a right to, I am not willing to concede to them a discretion which is antagonistic to the rights of the people. The Minister of Public Works suggests that it is not equitable that we should take the right to select certain railway lines without taking over certain other lines constructed by this company. I would venture to submit that there is nothing in that contention. We are building, for the convenience and advantage to a large extent of the Grand Trunk Pacific, the eastern division of the Transcontinental Railway, which is the difficult end of the proposition. And we are chartering some of these branch lines long in advance of the necessities of the country. We are giving that company a blanket charter to construct such branch lines as they may see fit. Having come to us two years ago to obtain a charter, we are disposed to renew it, but only upon fair and equitable terms. The minister says it would be unfair that we should take over a portion of these branch lines and not all of them. Why so? During a period of fifty years, the railway company may see fit to construct log lines, and these log lines, during the twenty-five or thirty years they may be in operation, may give an adequate return for the capital invested in them and at the end of that period they may not be worth one dollar to the company. The company may construct a line into a mining camp and the mine may become exhausted, and at the end of the fifty year period the line, which may have paid for itself over and over again, may not be worth anything to the company or the people. But the Minister of Public Works, for whose astuteness I have the greatest respect, suggests that it would be eminently fair that we should be compelled to take over such a line and operate it. I do not think so. On the other hand, the Minister of Railways suggests that we should re-enact section 11. I am afraid that would be worse than a blunder. See what section 11 of the schedule to the Act 1904 provides. It provides that we shall have the right to take over—what? To take over the useless line and leave to the company the valuable line. It provides that:

> If, at the expiration of the said lease, the company shall undertake the operation of the said eastern division, the government shall take over such branch lines as the company may elect not to retain.

That is the proposition of the minister to-day. That proposition amounts to this that if the country shall determine to operate the eastern division, these lines to defunct mines shall be taken over by the people of Canada and the company shall have the right to retain all their paying lines. I cannot consent to any such proposition I cannot agree that we are to be at the enormous expense—double or treble the expense announced to us when the scheme was launched some few years ago—of constructing the eastern division, and that after covering with blank charters the territory that contributes to those branch lines, then at the end of 50 years, if the company should operate it for that period—which I venture to think it is very uncertain—we can only take it back from the company upon the condition that we shall also take with it such refuse, exhausted and useless lines, as the company determine not to retain, and that, mark you, even though the feeling of the people in favour of government ownership and operation should be far more pronounced than it is to-day.

Let there be a fair, square deal in this transaction. We are furnishing for the Grand Trunk Pacific the means of access to the ocean. We are giving them the rich and fertile prairies of the west as well. We are allowing them to get the construction of all that is easy, and we have taken upon ourselves the construction of all that is difficult and hazardous. Surely, when we are doing that, when we are giving them the right to construct branch lines of railways which equal in extent the total mileage of the original Transcontinental Railway, lines of railway which are to determine whether the eastern division shall or shall not pay, it is not an unreasonable proposition that we should have the right to take over that railway upon some such terms as I have proposed in my amendment. I have so drawn my amendment that in extending this charter, in giving this additional concession to the Grand Trunk Branch Lines Railway Company, we shall make it a condition that the public may acquire all or any of the branch lines at the end of the fifty-year period, that in case of a dispute it shall be referred to an impartial tribunial, to the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, with the right of appeal without leave by either party and that the sanction of parliament shall be obtained before we shall commit ourselves to the proposition. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that, as contrasted with the proposition of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, that we shall go back to the burdensome provision of the Act of 1904 and to the obscurely worded provisions of that Act there should not be a moment's hesitation on the part of the government in adopting this amendment. I trust that upon further consideration the Minister of Railways and Canals, after consulting, I hope, with the right hon. leader of the government, will see the eminent fairness of the proposition I have made and recognize that merely because, in 1904, at a time when a portion of this parliament appeared to be ready to concede almost anything to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, we made great blunder, is no reason why we should repeat the mistakes made at that time; and that the government will see the necessity, the wisdom and the justice of standing by the interests of the people in this regard and also see their duty, as has been suggested to me, and safeguard the rights of the public by securing not necessarily the exercise of the purchasing power in this matter, but by securing an option which will give the people a fair deal at the end of the fifty-year period.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish it to be understood that I would in any way favour any measure or any amendment that might be unfair or unreasonable towards this company, but I cannot help but remember that the people of Canada are contributing nine-tenths in money and guartee to the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Transcontinental Railway. In the light of that I feel that any amendment made to the charter which is now before us should be along the lines of giving greater protection to the people rather than to the company. I feel that we are doing nothing unfair in protecting the people's interests in so far as we possibly can in this matter, and for that reason I am in favour of the aemendment proposed by my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) rather than the amendment proposed by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham). I realize that the first amendment is one that will give greater protection to the people and I believe that the other is an amendment designed to give the greater protection to the railway company.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—TIMBER LEASES.

House resumed consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BURROWS. When you left the chair at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the statement made by the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) in reference to three timber limits secured by myself, Nos. 1046, 1047 and 1099. The hon. gentleman insinuated, in reference to these limits, that I, by some means, had found out what the tenders were which had been put in by those who were competing against me, and that I was thereby enabled to put in a tender just a little above the others. I showed to the House a copy of the original tenders sent from the city of Winnipeg four days before the tenders were opened in which the amounts of my tenders were specified and accompanying which were cheques marked, in the city of Winnipeg, four days before the tenders were opened in the city of Ottawa. That proved conclusively that four days before the tenders were opened four days before the other tenders were put in, my tender had been sent here and were bona fide. What is the inference to be drawn from the statement of the hon. gentlemen? The inference is that by virtue of my finding out what the next highest tender was I was enabled to put in a tender just a litle higher than the others. That argument refutes itself. The amounts of the competing tenders were as follows:

Berth No.	My tender.	Highest competing tender.
1046..	$ 3,500	$ 3,015
1047..	15,000	13,524
1099..	6,500	5,116

So that the aggregate of my three tenders was $25,000 and the aggregate of the highest competing tenders was $21,655. My three tenders therefore were $3,345 in the aggregate more than the next three highest tenders. If the argument presented by the hon. gentleman or the insinuation which the hon. gentleman endeavours to make had any ground in fact, namely, that I was enabled to know what the other tenders were, would it be fair to assume that I would have thrown away $3,345 when I could have got the limits by bidding $10 more than the next highest tender in each case? All that it is necessary to do in this case is to state the facts which will absolutely prove to any fair-minded man that the insinuations, in so far as these limits are concerned, are without foundation and altogether ridiculous.

The hon. member (Mr. Ames) made a statement this afternoon which I presume he did not know was incorrect until I pointed it out to him. However, this statement has gone the round of the party press for the past three months and the party press evidently under inspiration has been writing articles with reference to timber limits and at various times it has been stated that I owned so many limits. In the month of February the Toronto 'Mail and Empire' in an article sent as 'special' from Ottawa stated that I owned 1,336 square miles of limits; in another Conservative paper it was stated that I owed 1,500 square miles, and my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) in a speech he delivered in Halifax was bold enough to say that I owned 1,600 square miles. It does not matter what limits I own so long as I got my limits in an honourable way, but just let me state that I never owned 1,336 square miles, I never owned 1,590 square miles, and I never owned 1,600 square miles so that all three of these statements are not true in any part. My hon. friend (Mr. Ames) also stated that I owned timber limit 1049. Now, timber limit 1049 was tendered for by Mr. A. W. Fraser, of Ottawa, in the name of Mr. John McBain, and it was insinuated in the newspapers that Mr. Fraser was acting for me, and that Mr. McBain's name had been used virtually for that of Mr. T. A. Burrows. The fact is that I never was interested directly or indirectly in this tender and Mr. Fraser in the witness box before the Public Accounts Committee gave the following evidence which will be found at page 63 of the report of the committee :

By Mr. Macdonald (Pictou):
Q. Who is Mr. John McBain?—A. John McBain is a millwright and contractor by occupation, and at that time, and for some time previous had been carrying on building operations and real estate in the city of Ottawa in which he and I were interested.

Again at page 72 of his evidence, I read as follows:

By Mr. Macdonald (Pictou):
Q. On whose behalf was this tender of John McBain, of March 7, 1903, for berth No. 1049 put in?—A. On my own.
Q. No. 1049?—A. Yes, that was on my behalf.
Q. You have that limit still, have you?—A. Oh, no, I have not.
By Mr. Bristol:
Q. Did you sell the limit?—A. Yes.
Q. For how much?—A. That is my business, I am not going into that part of it.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) must have known of this if he read the evidence, indeed he was present when Mr. Fraser gave that evidence before the committee, and it was not fair for him to make the statement to which I have alluded or to assume that I owned that limit. I had no interest whatever in the tender or in the limit afterwards.

Mr. AMES. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to make a correction. He misunderstood me. I stated that the Burrows-Fraser combination owned 1,586 square miles. What Mr. Burrows did not own Mr. Fraser or those he represented did own.

Mr. BURROWS. I have nothing whatever to do with any limit that Mr. Fraser owns, and that brings up another question. The hon. gentleman referred to some limits that Mr. Fraser had tendered for and which he afterwards sold to the Red Deer Lumber Company, referring to limit No. 958 of forty square miles and No. 988 of twenty square miles, and I think he insinuated that I had something to do with these timber limits.

Mr. AMES. No.

Mr. BURROWS. I never had anything to do with them and I am glad the hon. gentleman is fair enough to admit that. In the Toronto 'Mail and Empire' of March 28, there was an inspired article written from Ottawa which contained certain statements regarding me, and these statements were copied into the western papers and went the rounds of the Tory press. This is one of them:

Few berths acquired by Burrows are without value far exceeding the price paid for them. For $500 a 50-mile limit on Cedar lake was acquired in the name of A. W. Fraser, and that property was subsequently put up for sale for $500,000.

I want to say that I never had a one half cent interest in that limit at Cedar Lake. I was not interested in the tender and have not been interested since directly or indirectly, so that that statement is absolutely without foundation. In another article the 'Mail and Empire' said that 120 miles appearing in the names of Mr. Fraser was virtually owned by Mr. T. A. Burrows, and that 120 miles is made up in this way : Timber limit No. 1051, thirty square miles, and No. 1107, ninety square miles. I want to say that I never was interested in either of these limits directly or indirectly before they were tendered for or afterwards. I have never had anything to do with them whatever. These are the kind of statements which have been going the round of the press regarding me. They are entirely incorrect, and I would have taken occasion to state so before this were it not that I knew this debate was coming up and that the whole question would come under review, and that I could then make a detailed statement in regard to these matters. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) said that I was interested in timber limit 1048. Now, timber limit 1048 was applied for by Wm. Cowan, a lumberman of Prince Albert, and Wm. Cowan and E. H. Moore, of Prince Albert, two lumbermen, and myself were associated together in the tender. We tendered for the limit; it was owned by an incorporated company in which the three of us were interested called the Big River Lumber Company, and I afterwards sold out my interest to Mr. Cowan in that business. With regard to the other limits I have a statement here which I want to make to the House. Since the present government came into power there has been put up to public competition, 1062 different parcels of timber in Manitoba and the Northwest To read the Toronto 'Mail and Empire' and other strong Conservative papers one would conclude that T. A. Burrows tendered on about 1050 of these and that all the rest of Canada had tendered on about twelve. But here are the facts: Out of that 1062 timber limits I secured nineteen and I tendered on seven on which my tender was too low. Two of these which I secured were no good. I paid $3,800 on them and I found when I came to survey them that the descriptions were wrong and that they did not cover any timber, and I have thrown them back on the government and the government got my $3,800 for nothing. That leaves seventeen limits, six of which are owned in joint shares between myself and some other lumbermen in the Northwest Territories, so that I really own only eleven limits out of the seventeen personally and I have a half interest in the other six. But assuming that I owned all the other six what does it amount to. I intend to read a list of the limits and the tenders and how much my tender was above the others. &c. The first limit on the list is No. 814, fifteen square miles and my tender was $1,500, and the next highest tender was $1,100 which was put in by James Stewart of Winnipeg on behalf of Shaw Bros., of Dauphin. Hon. gentlemen on the other side have been casting insinuations on the idea of anybody tendering for timber limits in the name of anybody else, but here is a case where my opponents in business in Dauphin, good respectable lumbermen tendered for this limit in the name of somebody else. I do not cast any reflection on them for doing that, they could tender that way if they wanted to.

For the next limit, No. 986, 50 square miles, my tender was $4,600, and the next highest was $4,305. For limit No. 992, 40 square miles, my tender was $1,502 and the next highest $1,100. For timber limit No. 1000, containing 5 square miles, my tender was $625, and the next highest bid $210. Limit No. 1001, containing 6 square miles my tender was $1,003 and the next highest $640. Timber limit 1002, 4 square miles, my tender was $640 and the next highest $60. Limit No. 1046—this is one of those I had referred to this afternoon, my tender was $3,500 and the next highest $3,015. No. 1047, 50 square miles, my tender was $15,000 and the next highest $13,524. The next limit, No. 1054, containing 1 square mile, my tender was $500 and the next $200. No. 1068, 5¼ square miles, my tender was $400 and the next highest $310. This is one of the limits that is no good and has since been handed back to the government after I had paid $135 in dues. So that the government got that area back and my $535 for nothing. No. 1073, 20 square miles, my bid was $2,750 and the next highest $2,500. That is another case where the description was not correct and I relinquished the limit to the government so that the government got from me some $3,800 and the property back again.

Mr. BURROWS.

No.	Square miles.	My tender.	Next highest.
1093..	12	$1,500	$ 700
1094..	29	2,500	2,025
1099..	44	6,500	5,116
1120..	15	700	*
1121..	50	6,000	5,350
1191..	50	1,075	584
1192..	50	5,500	5,060
1219..	50	3,260	3,000

*No other tender.

These aggregate 534 square miles.

Mr. AMES. How about 571A ?

Mr. BURROWS. I did not buy it from the government but from a private individual.

Mr. AMES. You acquired it however.

Mr. BURROWS. Not from this government but from Shaw Bros., who bought it from the Tory government eighteen years ago. The whole area put up to public competition, which I secured, was 534 square miles. Deducting the area I have relinquished and adding the amount I have surveyed, I have secured altogether 433 square miles. In surveying these limits you often find a lot of waste area. In some instances I have cut that out, and instead of 534 miles I got 433. Six out of the seventeen are limits in which I have only a half interest. The total amount of my tenders was $59,069 and the total amount of the competing tenders was $48,799. My tenders therefore aggregated $10,290 higher than the next aggregate, or 21 per cent, so that the government received $10,270 more than if I had not tendered at all. The average price which I paid per mile was $112.50, and the average price during the time I was tendering, which the government received for timber limits, was $60 per mile. So that I paid pretty nearly twice as much as the average price paid for all the limits that were sold during that time.

It has been said by the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) that vast areas of timber have been improvidently alienated. In answer to this, I will point out that that were a great many limits put up to tender during the last eleven or twelve years—some 1,062 altogether. In that western country, where there are so many men with speculative tendencies from all parts of the world, men with money which they are seeking to invest, surely there would have been some cases in which higher prices would have been paid for timber limits, if they were sold so cheap. But the fact is that until recently timber limits were not looked upon as a good speculation in that country at all. In fact they are not a good speculation at big prices, at present as there is great risk connected with them by reason of fires and considerable expense in carrying them. A short time ago my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) got a telegram from the agent at Prince Albert, notifying him that there were extensive forest fires raging in the timber limits north of Prince Albert, and asking authority to send forty or fifty men to fight the fire, which request the minister granted. West of Edmonton there were forest fires in every direction. In 1906, I had a survey party out at that time, and for two months they did nothing else but fight the fire trying to save one of my limits, but all the work done by the forest guardians and the men who worked for me would have been of no avail were it not for a timely rain. Had rain not fallen most of the timber between Edmonton and Yellow Head Pass would have been burnt that summer. Here is a telegram which I find in an Ottawa paper of May 12 :

Devasting bush fires—Hundreds of square miles of timber destroyed.

Edmonton, May 12.—Charles Tompkins, contractor on the Grand Trunk Pacific, seventy miles west of here, brings a report of devasting bush fires which swept through the district last week. Hundreds of square miles of timber were destroyed, and a construction camp was only saved by the strenuous work of the men engaged on the grade, who worked all Thursday night, when the wind suddenly veered and the camp was saved.

I have myself had a report recently from the man who represents me in the neighbourhood of Edmonton to the effect that on two limits in which I am interested the fire this summer did considerable damage but I do not know to what extent. In that western country where the grass grows so luxuriously in the spring and autumn, the fire takes in the grass it is very dangerous for the timber. A fire there, is far more dangerous than it is in the eastern country where there is more moisture and not nearly so great a chance for bush fires to take place. In the east you have more moisture and there is not nearly as much danger of fire as there is in the west. Thus when you come to talk of timber limits as a speculation you find that there is a great risk of fire and that is why men who have money to invest would rather invest it in land than in timber limits ; you cannot insure a timber limit and if it is burned you lose all the money you have invested.

My hon. friend (Mr. Ames) said this afternoon that the government had been very improvident in the prices at which they have disposed of their timber. In answer to that I would say that if the timber was so cheap as the hon. gentleman tries to make out, surely in some cases men would have tendered at higher rates for the thousand limits that have been put up during this period.

It has been charged against me that I did not pay full price for the limits I secured. I have a statement here showing what has been paid by others for timber limits in that western country during the time I bought timber. I got the clerk of the Crown Timber Department to prepare me a short statement which is as follows :

Memorandum showing average bonuses paid for timber limits from 1896 to 1905 in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories.

Total area disposed of by public competition, 4,576·58 square miles. Bonus received, $276,-778.65, or an average per square mile of $60.

It will be seen from the above memo. that the prices I paid were a good deal higher than those paid by any one else with the exception of the late Mr. Thomas Mackie, member for Pembroke, and the Imperial Pulp Company. Mr. Mackie paid an average of $130 per mile bonus, the Imperial Pulp Company an average of $114.50 and I paid an average of $112.50 per square mile. The average paid during that time for all the limits sold was $60 per square mile of timber. I give these facts in order to show that in securing timber in the west I paid prices not only equal to the average paid by others but nearly twice as high.

It has been stated by hon. gentlemen opposite that all the farmers of the western country are at the mercy of the lumber combine, and that the lumberman, having secured all the timber in the west, can charge what prices he likes. That statement is not correct. According to the regulations portable saw-mill men can secure and do secure timber berths of one square mile on which they can cut timber for the use of farmers without competition. Those berths are not put up for competition but any man who owns a little saw-mill can apply for one square mile and when the timber on this mile is cut they can secure another mile, get a permit to obtain timber for the use of the settlers and need only pay the same dues as the lumbermen, fifty cents per thousand feet, and $100 as a bonus for the square mile. There are a great many of these mills throughout the whole country. Take the district represented by the Minister of the Interior and there are in it hundreds of mills, cutting timber for the settlers. In my own district it is the same.

I notice in the Dauphin 'Herald,' a Conservative paper published in Dauphin, in its issue of April 30, 1908, the following item:

The following is a statement of the timber cut under permit granted by the Dominion land office here from March 31, 1907, to March 31, 1908:

Lineal feet of logs	18,582
Board measure of lumber	4,945,752
Roof poles	6,945
Fence posts	44,330
Cords of wood	7,751
Shingles	25,000
Piles, lineal feet	8,000
Fence rails	25,700

It will be seen that in the county of Dauphin, which I represent and where my lumber business is situated, the farmers get a large portion of their supply of timber by going to the bush themselves, getting a permit to cut timber, getting it out themselves and having it manufactured by the portable mill. Although I have a lumber yard in Dauphin, I do not think we sell three-quarters of a million feet in the year to farmers. The farmers get their permits, they get out the timber themselves, using their own horses and men and in that way obtain it much cheaper than they could if they went to the mill and bought the lumber manufactured. I mention this to show that in Manitoba and the west there is ample provision by which the farmers can secure timber. A farmer has a right to secure a permit to cut 9,000 feet without charge. If he has exhausted his right to cut under a free permit, he can apply to the land office and get a permit to cut timber by paying $1.50 a thousand for as much as he wants to cut, or he can buy from the portable mill operator. There is a popular but very erroneous idea that the government having sold this timber receives no further revenue from it. This is not in accordance with the facts. The amount paid as a bonus is a very small proportion of the sum which the government secures on the cutting of timber. The regulations provide that the lumberman first of all cannot secure a limit except by paying a bonus for the right to do business. After that he has to cut the timber according to the regulations and pay the dues provided by the regulations. At the present time the dues are fifty cents a thousand, but it is in the power of the government to change the dues from time to time. If they wished they could charge $5 a thousand, their power is absolute to charge whatever dues they like at any time, now or hereafter.

I shall give a concrete instance in my own experience to show what the government received for one piece of timber. In 1898 I tendered for timber berth 814, for which I paid a bonus of $1,500 and I have since cut all the timber off that area. I have paid to the government, first of all, a bonus of $1,500. I have paid also, by way of dues, $11,907.48. So the government has received, through bonus and royalty on the timber cut on these 15 square miles the sum of $13,407.48. I did not secure any right to the land; I did not secure any right to the timber still left. There is growing timber on the land, and if this is cut hereafter dues will have to be paid on it. It sometimes happens that the government makes more out of the timber than the lumberman does. The lumberman may be unfortunate, but he has to pay his dues whether he makes money or not. Take the case of this berth No. 814 on which I paid $13,407.48 royalty. I secured the right, under a clause that used to be in operation, clause 17 of the regulations of 1897, to cut the timber on the adjacent area. One of the terms under which the concession was granted was that the man who cut the timber should pay double dues. I cut the timber and paid dues to the government amounting to $22,014.88. So that on this operation, at a place called Pine River, I paid the government for cutting these two pieces of pine timber $35,422.36 by way of dues and royalty. I venture the statement that if I had charged interest on the money invested, charged a salary for my own time when I was looking after that business, charged wear and tear on the plant and other expenses and losses, it would be found that the government made more out of that operation than I did. The government made between $35,000 and $36,000 at no expense whatever. But I had two fires—my mills were burned down twice. The mill was insured, but you can never get enough insurance to cover you for a loss of that kind. So I say emphatically that if I charged these expenses, it would be found that the government had made more money out of that timber than I made. When a lumberman secures a limit he has to pay all the cost of survey and half the cost of fire-guarding, and $5 per year per mile ground rent, besides the royalty on all the lumber he cuts.

Now, let me make a brief statement showing the amount of dues I have paid altogether since this government came into power. The amount of bonus I have paid on limits altogether is $59,069. Also I have paid in dues $58,585.42 in nine years—an average of between $6,000 and $7,000 a year in dues for cutting timber. Any lumberman carrying on business in an extensive way is a large contributor to the revenue of the country. This is a fact to which the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) takes no cognizance. The hon. member for St. Antoine may be an authority on some things, but certainly he is not an authority on the value of timber or the quality of timber in the Northwest. I do not wish to cast any reflections on the hon. gentleman, but I do not see how he can know anything about these matters; when he speaks here he shows himself to be thoroughly incompetent to be a judge. The hon. gentleman talks freely about some timber limits of fifty square miles being worth $500,000. I state here, as a lumberman with twenty-nine years' experience—and I think I know as much about timber limits as any man in the Northwest country—that there is not a limit in the Northwest that is worth any such money. And I venture to say that no man but a novice would make any such statement as that which the hon. gentleman made. While timber there is valuable, it has no greater value than timber down here where you have the markets of the world to ship to. During a debate here some time ago the hon. gentleman spoke about a limit on Cormorant lake as being worth $375,000. Promptly the gentleman who owned that limit offered to take the $75,000 for it and allow the party who valued it so highly to pocket the $300,000. I feel sure that that gentleman would sell the limit for less than $75,000. I know that I have limits that I would be glad to get rid of at cost price. Some limits that I have secured, of course, are worth more than I paid for them—I am frank to say that.

But there is a case in my own experience which I will relate which shows what dependence can be placed on the statements of the hon. gentleman concerning the value of limits. This was the case of berth 571a which I bought from Messrs. Shaw Bros. This is an experienced lumber firm, and one worth considerable money. These men came from Shawville, up the Ottawa river. They moved out to that western country twenty-five years ago, and have been lumbering there ever since. They owned a limit on the Valley river, and I owned limits on that river also. I have a large mill there and they have no mill. If there was a limit anywhere that there was strong reason for me to obtain it was that one, because the Valley river is so small that it would be impossible for two of us to drive on it in a practical way, our logs would get all mixed up. Therefore, Shaw Bros. had me at a disadvantage—I simply had to buy their limit. This limit had an area of 28½ square miles, and three years ago I bought it for $16,000. This is a first-class limit. It is within three miles of the main line of the Canadian Northern, where a transcontinental train passes each way every day. It is within ten miles of my mill at Grand View. This shows what limits are really worth. Here were men who were not stuck for money, who did not have to sell, and who had me at a disadvantage. They figured there was about 16,000,000 feet, and that I was paying them $1 per thousand. I do not think there was 16,000,000 feet, and I figured I was paying $1.25 per thousand. So there you have an actual sale from bona fide lumbermen to a bona fide lumberman. I venture to say that this is the best situated limit in the whole of Manitoba and the Northwest. The limit was a very valuable one in proportion to the amount of timber that was on it. So I say that the statement made here by hon. gentlemen who have no knowledge of the facts that limits are worth from $300,000 to $500,000 has no foundation at all. No limits have ever been sold at any such prices. There have been but a few sales made of timber limits in the Northwest Territories. Had they been as valuable as the hon. gentleman tries to make out, surely there would have been more sales, because there are lots of people in that country who are looking for investments. But in the last five years, to my personal knowledge, there have not been half a dozen limits sold in that whole country, that is as a speculation. Big lumber firms from the United States have come into the west and bought limits at Prince Albert. They formed a company called the Prince Albert Lumber Company. This firm were worth a couple of million dollars. They were practical lumbermen and are still lumbering in the state of Minnesota. They bought these limits at Prince Albert and made a purchase on the basis of 50 cents a thousand for the standing timber. The Red Deer Lumber Company bought a couple of limits, one of which had been owned by Mr. Dickenson, of Ottawa, a former Conservative member for Russell. Mr. Dickenson secured timber limit No. 92 for nothing when his friends were in power. I understand that afterwards it fell into the hands of a financial corporation in the city of Toronto, who sold it to the Red Deer Lumber Company. Then Mr. A. W. Fraser, of Ottawa, sold two limits to the same company. Shaw Bros. sold a couple of small pieces of timber, besides what I bought from them. But outside of that, I do not know of any sale having been made throughout Manitoba and the Northwest for speculative purposes. I do not know of any lumberman who has bought timber limits, I did not buy any myself except the one I refer to, and I do not know of any limits being sold.

Mr. AMES. Has the hon. gentleman heard of the sale from Shaw Bros. to the Ruby Lake Lumber Company for $100,000?

Mr. BURROWS. I do not think they sold it for $100,000.

Mr. AMES. I have their statement to that effect.

Mr. BURROWS. That is all right, but I know differently. The company sold that timber on the basis of stumpage; that is, when the timber is cut out, if it has not been burned, they will get $100,000 if there is enough timber on the limit to amount to that sum. But that was not a straight sale for cash.

Mr. AMES. I have the statement in writing from a member of the firm of the Ruby Lake Lumber Company that in 1906 the sum paid was $100,000. Here is the letter if the hon. gentleman wishes to see it.

Mr. BURROWS. They never paid $100,000; they may have agreed to. Will the hon. gentleman read the letter?

Mr. AMES. The letter is dated April 18, 1908:

Dear Mr. Ames,—I find the number of the timber berth about which we spoke is 964, and it was purchased by the Ruby Lake Lumber Company in the summer of 1906 from Shaw Bros., of Dauphin, for the sum of $100,000 not $110,000 as I stated to you. The Ruby Lake Lumber Company is composed of a number of Amherst men who took hold of the proposition as a prospective money maker

That is signed by Edgar N. Ross, of Amherst, N.S.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. That gentleman is a Conservative candidate in Cumberland, N.S. He knows nothing about lumber.

Mr. BURROWS. I have been criticised by hon. gentlemen opposite in connection with my timber operations. I would like to read an extract from a Tory paper published in my own town where I have my mill. It is a Conservative paper edited by Mr. George Graham. I believe he is a relative of the Minister of Railways, is a good strong Conservative, and a very decent man. When the question of the timber limits was under discussion in the House, he wrote this article. I quote it from the Grandview 'Exponent' of February 14, 1908:

Those Timber Deals.

During the past few weeks there has been considerable discussion in the Dominion House at Ottawa in the matter of timber deals, and there seems little doubt that some of these transactions have been of a very shady character. Locally we are interested, owing to our member, Mr. Burrows, being among those mentioned. In this case, however, the public have been getting results from the contracts, and while Mr. Burrows may not be in the business from philanthropic motives, he has been utilizing his timber limits, and his extensive milling establishment here in Grandview has meant much toward the advancement of our district. The people of Grandview as a whole have derived much benefit through Mr. Burrows' lumbering operations. He has for several years employed a large number of men, both winter and summer. His last season's cut for instance, was the largest in the history of his operations, and owing to the financial stringency throughout the country he may have to carry many millions feet of lumber in his yards here for a considerable time, and take long chances on the question of price, danger from fire, &c. In the interval he has expended a large amount in wages, &c, on which interest is constantly accruing. So that the criticisms can hardly apply in the case of Mr. Burrows.

That statement was written by a gentleman who is not a supporter of mine, but it shows the public sentiment in that district. The hon. member for St. Antoine has been very much affected over a company known as the Imperial Pulp Company. I have a statement here of the timber limits owned by that company. They are nine in number. The company secured nine timber limits aggregating some 407 square miles. The first limit they secured is 1031. When that limit was tendered for it was supposed to cover 118¼ square miles. It was divided into eleven different blocks situated on the Saskatchewan river, and they were accurately defined. The area covering them was described by metes and bounds. That limit has been surveyed since and it is found that instead of there being 118 square miles there was only 52½ square miles. The amount paid for that limit was $31,575. In the Public Accounts Committee the tenders for that limit were discussed, and Mr. Finnie, the manager of the Bank of Ottawa, was put into the witness box with regard to a tender given by the Bank of Ottawa through the manager. His evidence was to this effect: He said that I went to him and deposited $31,575 in the Bank of Ottawa, that I asked him to make out two manager's cheques for the whole amount, payable to the Deputy Minister of the Interior, and that he made two manager's cheques, dating them on the 30th December. The tenders were opened on the 31st December. These two cheques were put in with a tender for the Imperial Pulp Co., and secured the limit. Now, I want to make it plain that I deposited that much money in the Bank of Ottawa and I asked for two cheques, the cheques were made out by Mr. Finnie himself in his own handwriting; they were produced in the Public Accounts Committee and he swore to them. They covered all the money I had in the bank at the time, and they covered enough to secure the limit.

Now the hon. member for St. Antoine this afternoon undertook to criticise several other tenders in connection with the limits secured by that company. Amongst others he referred to limit No. 1098. Again he made the insinuation, or his remarks bore out the insinuation, that through some collusion between myself and some officer of the department—the insinuation was that it was between myself and the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), who at that time was Dominion Land Commissioner,—I was enabled to know what the next highest tender was and put my tender in accordingly. I think the hon. gentleman is rather unfortunate in his statements. My tender was $2,500. He also made some reflections with reference to the fact that my tender was put in in cash. The next highest tender was $1,860. Does he think that I am so flush of money, that, knowing that the next highest tender was $1,860, I was going to put in $2,500 cash? I do not think that I am so easy as that. I think that if I had an opportunity of knowing how much money was going to take a timber limit I would not waste $500 or $600 more than was necessary. I think that is all that is necessary to show how ridiculous the statement made by the hon. gentleman is. The hon. gentleman's remarks about other tenders were equally ridiculous.

With regard to the Imperial Pulp Company I have stock in that organization. The company was formed with the object of going into the pulp business in the western country. We secured timber in the neighbourhood of Edmonton. The intention was to erect a pulp mill in that locality. We secured altogether four hundred and odd square miles but we have only three hundred and six square miles. The area was cut down. Berth No. 1097 proved to be of no use, so that notwithstanding the fact that we paid $1,500 for it on account of bonus and dues it was no good whatever and it will never be surveyed. Berth 1031, instead of getting one hundred and eighteen square miles we only got fifty-two square miles, and as to berth 1119, instead of getting twenty square miles, we only got eleven. The same applies to some other limits. We did not survey the whole of them because the timber was not there. The Imperial Pulp Company have secured three hundred and six square miles of timber limits and these timber limits were secured with the object of erecting a pulp mill in that western country. Upon going into the matter I found that that was not the place for a pulp mill, that while the timber is valuable for saw-mill purposes it is not valuable for pulp. To successfully manufacture pulp and make it pay in that western country you will have to have a a paper mill. If you ship pulp from a western point like Edmonton to an eastern mill the freight would be so great that you could not make a dollar out of it. That is one point against a pulp-mill in that particular district. Another point against it is that it is necessary to have water-power to operate the pulp-mill and it is also necessary to have good water. In that western country where freshets occur during many months in the year the water is so muddy that it would not be available for use in the pulp industry. The original idea of the company to erect a pulp-mill proved not to be a business proposition and the idea is now to use the limits for lumbering purposes. The company intend to erect mills and cut the timber into lumber. Hon. gentlemen opposite try to make out that there was some great secrecy about this company. This company was organized in the city of Toronto by a reputable firm there. Like any other company, it had its shareholders and, like any other company, it did not advertise on the streets who owned the shares in the company, but anybody who wants to know can easily find out. But, for political reasons hon. members of the opposition were trying to create the impression that we were trying to keep the identity of the company secret and notwithstanding the fact that my hon. friend the member for St. Antoine knew that I was a member of the company he scrupulously avoided asking me any question or putting me in the witness box when the committee was investigating this matter for fear that I would have an opportunity of stating the position regarding this matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have taken up the time of the House at considerable length, and there are just a few more remarks I wish to make. In the first place I have been in the lumbering business in Manitoba since 1879. I have never done anything else as a business except follow the lumbering business since I went to that western country and was able to conduct a business of my own. I have had saw-mills in various parts of the country. I first owned several mills on Lake Winnipeg and I afterwards changed my scene of operations to the western country so soon as we had railway communication in that district which made it possible to do a lumbering business there. I have at the present time three mills in operation. This year, the lumbermen in that country are not manufacturing so extensively as they did some few years ago. A couple of years ago there was a great agitation in regard to a lumber combine and it was stated that there was going to be a lumber famine. At one time there was shortage of lumber and all the lumbermen in the west undertook to get out large stocks. The consequence was that at all points when the hard times came, every lumberman throughout Manitoba, the Northwest and even British Columbia found himself with a very large stock of lumber that he could not sell. In the west you will find nearly every mill stocked up and in British Columbia you can buy fifty per cent of the mills at a good deal less than the cost price.

The limits which I secured and which I have enumerated to the House were secured by me before I became a member of parliament. I do not know that it makes much difference because I think a member is free to tender upon timber limits if he wants to, but at the time I bought most of these limits I never expected to be a member of parliament and did not aspire to the candidature. I do not understand why members of the opposition have picked me out for attack. I am a lumberman and I have a right to follow my business if I want to. The timber areas, being owned by the Dominion government, it is necessary for all the lumbermen to deal with the Dominion government. In the east, where the provinces own the timber, as in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec and Ontario, the lumbermen deal with the local governments, but in Manitoba and the Northwest it is absolutely necessary for the lumbermen to deal with the Dominion government. It therefore became necessary for me to deal with the Dominion government. Some time ago insinuations were made to the effect that because Mr. Sifton happened to be the Minister of the Interior I got advantages, being related to him, that I would not have got as a stranger. I never secured any advantages over any other man in my line of business and any timber limits that I have secured at any time have been secured by public competition with the exception of the timber patent which I have before referred to. There is one point I want to make again before I sit down. It is a point which has been hammered at considerably by the opposition press. I do not think that is material. As to how much timber I own I wish to make this statement from my place in parliament and upon my responsibility as a member of this House—I do not own 1,600 square miles as said by the hon. member for St. Antoine, nor do I own 1,500 square miles as said by the hon. member for Calgary, nor do I own 1,336 square miles as stated by the Toronto 'Mail.' The total amount of my holdings at the present time is four hundred and thirty-three square miles which I own myself—with the exception that I mentioned that in six of these limits I only own a half interest, but suppose I own them all they amount to four hundred and thirty-three square miles. Then I own one-half interest in the Imperial Pulp Company which has some three hundred and twenty square miles. Outside of that I have no limit interest in the west with the exception of a limit I bought from Shaw Brothers and it was not got from this government. Therefore, instead of owning 1,500 square miles, or 1,336 square miles, or 1,600 square miles I own about 600 square miles altogether, including some in which I own only an interest. I do not think it is germane to the question that I should make this statement but it has been debated so often and so unfairly that I thought it only just to myself that I should deal with the subject.

My. hon. friend (Mr. Ames) seems to have an eye for irregularities; he seems to be suspicious about any man that has holdings in the west. He singled me out specially for attack and I would judge from the diligence he has displayed that he has gone through all the public records and knows exactly what limits everybody owns. But it does seem very strange that everything else escaped his attention except what T. A. Burrows happened to own. If he had cast his eye out to British Columbia he would have found a firm out there—I am not saying anything against them for they are a good legitimate business firm—who secured 18 limits before this government came into power, and who have further secured in their own name and in the name of others 50 limits since this government came to power. They own to-day 68 different parcels of timber and it is not scattering spruce such as we have in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories but it is large timber growing on the Columbia river. That firm is the Columbia River Lumber Company. Why did not Mr. Ames with his natural disposition for suspicion cast his microscope on that transaction ?

As to the general statement that the government has been improvident with regard to the timber resources of the Northwest, I would point to the fact that since the present government came to power they disposed altogether of 6,400 square miles of timber by public competition and the records show they sold that timber at an average bonus of 81 dollars per square mile, in addition to the dues and ground rents which the lumbermen have to pay when they cut. The late Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) speaking on this question some months ago pointed out that in the province of Quebec between 1885 and 1906, 26,000 square miles of timber were sold and that the average price obtained was $81.16 per square mile or just about the price the Dominion government obtained for its timber in the west. I am sure that any one who knows anything about timber in the Northwest and Quebec will agree that the timber areas tributary to the Ottawa and other rivers are of greater value are closer to market, are not so subject to fire, are a better investment in every way than timber areas in the Northwest where the timber is scattering and liable to be burnt up at any time. If you take that comparison which I think is a fair one, you will find that the statements of gentlemen opposite that this government has been improvident, are not borne out by the facts because we see that timber limits in the older parts of Canada have not realized any more per square mile than have the limits in the Northwest. Now, talking about areas owned by one limit holder, if you tell a lumberman in eastern Canada that a man owned 500 square miles, or 600 square miles, or 1,000 miles and gave that as an example of large holdings, he would simply laugh at you. There are men living within a 100 miles of the city of Ottawa who own more ; there is one man in the city of Ottawa who owns not 500 miles but 7,000 square miles of white pine, red pine, spruce, cedar, the very best timber in the Dominion. There are two other firms who own about the same area. There is a firm in the city of Montreal, who I am credibly informed support the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) and who own some 7,000 square miles of limits in Quebec, an area greater than the total amount of timber sold by this government in eleven years. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) that he might start his crusade on these people and point out to them that they own too much of the public domain and demand from them that they hand back some of it to the government of the province of Quebec.

In conclusion I wish to say that the references which have been made to me by the member for St. Antoine and his friends are very unfair, indeed. I came to this House a lumberman, I have been a lumberman for many years in the Northwest; in the pursuit of my business as a lumberman it became necessary for me to tender for limits and I tendered for timber in the regular way and I secured it and I had the right to do so. Sometimes I was successful and sometimes my tenders were too low, and in that case I did not get the limit. I do not see why it is that because I have the honour to be a member of the House of Commons I should be singled out for attack simply because I am following the business that I have followed during all my business career. If the criticism of me had been reasonable I would not have felt it so badly, but I have a character to sustain in the western country just as well as the hon. member (Mr. Ames) has in Montreal. I can tell him furthermore that if he goes out to the west and meets the people that have associated with me for the past quarter of a century he will find that my character stands just as high there as does his character in the city of Montreal or anywhere else. Therefore I say, Mr. Speaker, that many of the aspersions that have been cast upon me through the Conservative press and which have been used as a political lever more than as a personal attack in some cases, have been unfair, unjust, and without foundation. I have nothing to be ashamed of. I tendered for timber limits, I tendered in a legitimate way like other lumbermen, I got nothing except what I am entitled to get and I have no apologies to make.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). The hon. member (Mr. Burrows) has not attempted to make an answer to the speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) which was a most powerful arraignment of the policy of the present government in its disposal of the timber areas of the Northwest. The only attempt at defence put up by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Burrows) was his statement that there are several people in some of the older provinces who own very large areas of timber and that because of that the Dominion government was not improvident in disposing of vast areas of our timber resources of the west for speculative purposes. The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) has confined himself chiefly to a personal explanation as to the part he has played in the distribution of these limits, and he searched far and wide for individual cases of tenders which appear to be very close, and for instances in which more than one cheque was inclosed in the tender. But these do not account for the remarkable coincidence which time after time occurred in connection with his own tenders, nor do they account for the remarkable success of the hon. gentleman in securing 18 out of 19 limits for which he bid; nor do they account for the invariable success of the Imperial Pulp Company in their tendering, in which company, he tells us he owns a half share. The practice of lumbermen, which he says, is common of giving more than one cheque, sometimes on different banks, does not explain why it was advisable to go to one particular bank and get two or three cheques at the same time drawn on the same bank, because if secrecy were the reason for giving these different cheques, that end would not be accomplished by getting two or three cheques at the same time and on the same bank. I might further point out that when the time came to send the tender to the department, surely there was no reason for not stating then on the face of the tender itself what the amount was. The time for concealment as to the amount surely had expired by that time, and that excuse would not carry any weight when it came to sending in the tender.

The hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) had been afraid, he said, to put him in the witness box, and he used some very strong terms in denouncing my hon. friend. But the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) seems to have forgotten that he himself could have asked to be placed in that box, or he could have got his friend and confident, the member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) to call him in as a witness. He passes over that as a very light matter. He must also have forgotten that only a short time ago in this Houes, he spoke and voted against a resolution calling for an inquiry by a commission of nine members into the whole disposal of the timber limits of the country. That very fact in itself would surely lead the hon. member for St. Antoine to conclude that the hon. member for Dauphin was not likely to be a candid and willing witness. If the hon. gentleman had desired to give evidence he would have gone into the box of his own accord. And it seems to me, as his name has been connected so closely with these timber limit transactions, he should have welcomed the idea of a committee being appointed to go into the whole question, so that everything might be cleared up, if there was nothing which was not capable of being cleared up in connection with this whole matter.

With regard to the Imperial Pulp Company, he told us that anybody who wanted to know who the shareholders were could easily have found out.

Mr. BURROWS I have them here and if the hon. member wants to see the names he can have them.

Mr. LAKE. I am not particularly anxious at present, but the point I wish to make is that he told us anybody could tell who the shareholders were if he wanted to find out. That question was asked more than once.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Who was asked?

Mr. BRISTOL. Mr. Fraser was asked, the solicitor of the company.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. And he told you the moment he was asked.

Mr. BRISTOL. No, he did not.

Mr. E. M MACDONALD. He told you you the moment he was asked.

Mr. BRISTOL. The evidence shows the contrary.

Mr. LAKE. Mr. Fraser's answer was that Mr. Burrows, Sir Daniel McMillan, the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba, were members and that Mr. Pattinson was the secretary. Did they include the whole members of that company?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes.

Mr. LAKE. I am glad to hear that at last. For a very long time inquiries were being made as to who the members of that company were. Throughout the Department of the Interior there was an immense amount of curiosity to know who the Imperial Pulp Company consisted of, and there was a great deal of secrecy in connection with the matter. The only address given of the company was a post office box at Winnipeg. That fact itself would show there was secrecy in connection with this matter. The statement of the hon. member is rather amusing when he says that anybody could have found out at any time of whom the company were composed. But it was not until the original papers—which we fought for from day to day and week to week—were brought down that it was discovered that Sir Daniel McMillan was the president and Mr. Pattinson the secretary. In the earlier part of his speech the hon. gentleman complained that the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) had not pointed out the small value of the limits lying to the north of Prince Albert. When he made that complaint, the hon. gentleman did not, as he might have well done, inform the House that he had been able to sell one half a share in the 250 miles of these limits which he had secured for some $80,000. It does not appear to me that he offered the slightest defence of the policy of the department in putting up these other timber limits which lie to the north of Prince Albert and the northwest of Edmonton. Then he went on at some trouble to deny certain allegations as to the specific amount of timber limits which were said to have been owned by him; and after a good deal of discussion, he finally brought down the amount from some 549 square miles—which was the amount he originally obtained—to 534 miles. For these limits he said he paid some $59,000, and he went on to say that the timber business was very poor indeed. He forgot that little transaction I have just mentioned in which he sold one half share in the limit, which he with two others procured for $7,000 for $80,000. That cannot be a bad business in which one can make a turnover of that sort. There are many who would like to have a look in at the same sort of business. He went on to say how very bad an investment timber limits were. He said that the government, out of one lot of timber he owned, had made some $39,000 in dues, and that if he were to charge against his profits the whole of his salary and interest on the money, he would not have made so much out of it. Well, if a man can make anything like $39,000 in addition to paying another $39,000 in dues out of a single limit, he is doing considerable business, and the hon. gentleman has no great complaint as regards the profitableness of his timber investments.

I do not intend to speak at any great length. My hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) has made out a case with great clearness and considerable trouble, and it is one on which we propose to protest against the policy of the government regarding the timber lands of the Northwest. This question was raised in the House on a previous occasion in the early part of the session. At that time we considered we had sufficient information at hand to demand a searching inquiry into the whole question of the disposal of the timber in that country, and I moved a resolution asking that a committee of nine should be appointed to inquire into the question. I laid down my reasons for making that request in a most categorical way, and looking over these reasons to-day I concluded that they contained nothing whatever on which I should now go back. But since that time a vast amount of additional information has been obtained. Some voluminous reports have been brought down and also a number of original documents for which we fought in a determined way, and we have also some partial inquiry before the Public Accounts Committee. All three sources of information have shown us not merely that we were justified in the statements and suggestions we made when we asked for an inquiry in the earlier part of the session, but that we have far greater ground for asking for such a committee at this time, and that the reasons for as thorough an investigation into the whole timber business are far greater now even than when the resolution was moved a few months ago.

My hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) has called attention to many points that have been brought out since that time. He has pointed out that one group had acquired some 1,586 square miles of timber limits. The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) has explained that some of these limits are not owned at the present moment by some of the persons in this group who acquired them. Nevertheless the fact remains that they did acquire these timber limits and, as the hon. member for St. Antoine pointed out, if that area could be placed in a continuous strip it would be seen to contain an astounding amount of timber. If you took a train at Montreal on Monday evening and travelled all the way to Vancouver, arriving there on Saturday after travelling over some 2,987 miles, this timber would give a strip more than half a mile broad over the whole of that immense stretch of country and these limits have been selected out of an area many times as great as that. That gives a graphic idea of the immense quantity of timber which has passed from the hands of the government into the hands of that group who are holding it to-day, to a very great extent, for speculative purposes. I speak of them as a group. They are the group who tendered through or by the firm of A. W. Fraser or his law firm of Perkins, Fraser & Burbidge. Then again we have those remarkable coincidences in the way of bids which Mr. Ames has pointed out, and the remarkable success of the member for Dauphin and the company in which he was interested, the Imperial Pulp Company, in the bids they made between 1901 and 1905. The fact that the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) is a brother-in-law of the ex-Minister of the Interior and as a member of parliament is the possessor of vast areas in the Northwest which have been acquired from this government, would in itself be matter for some remark, though it would not necessarily mean that there is anything wrong in the acquisition of such limits by a gentleman who is a lumberman as Mr. Burrows is. That being the case I was very much surprised that he did not endorse the proposal that there should be a complete inquiry into the whole matter. But when you consider the peculiar facts which were brought to light in regard to tendering for these various limits by him and by his company, I think there is pretty strong ground for asking for a thorough inquiry into this matter and some ground for suspicion in regard to it. We have found that in the tenders put in, a considerable number of names and aliases have been used.,

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. When the hon. member speaks of a considerable number how many does he mean ?

Mr. LAKE. There are several of them.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. How many ? More than two ?

Mr. LAKE. There is Mr. Nolan, Mr. McBain, Mr. Fraser——

Mr. BURROWS. I told you I had no interest in Mr. McBain's limits.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Do you call these people aliases ?

Mr. LAKE. At any rate I have given two and there is also the Imperial Pulp Company. These have put in tenders, so that there were three at any rate. Mr. Fraser himself has used other names.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. How many other names did he use ?

Mr. LAKE. He used the names of McBain and Nolan.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Does my hon. friend think it fair to use the words 'a considerable number' when he can only state one ?

Mr. LAKE. I have stated two at any rate and if the hon. gentleman takes exception to 'a considerable number,' I will say 'more than one.'

Mr. BURROWS. I never was interested in any timber limits or tenders with Mr. Fraser directly or indirectly and am not now.

Mr. LAKE. Of course I accept the hon. gentleman's statement. Has he ever in his own name tendered for the Imperial Pulp Company ?

Mr. BURROWS. In my own name ?

Mr. LAKE. The hon. gentleman does not answer that but he has put in his own cheque in tendering for the Imperial Pulp Company, so I think it may be assumed that he has been one of the tenderers for that company.

Mr. BURROWS. Yes, I have tendered on behalf of the company.

Mr. LAKE. We have the Imperial Pulp Company, Fraser, Nolan and Mr. Burrows. all tendering for the Imperial Pulp Company. I think that in itself shows there is a necessity or ground for inquiry into the whole series of transactions. Then again duplicate tenders have been put in by the hon. member for Dauphin in his own name and in the name of the Imperial Pulp Company of which he is the half owner, as he has told us. In more than one instance there has been bogus competition, two tenders put in apparently to lead the public to suppose there was competition, when in reality there was no competition at all. As I said, to many of us the Imperial Pulp Company was a matter of mystery for a considerable time and it came quite as a shock to myself and other gentlemen on this side of the House when we heard the member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) in the Public Accounts Committee say that of course he knew and supposed everybody knew that Mr. Burrows was a member of the Imperial Pulp Company. I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Burrows) that I did not know, and, I am sure there were not many people on our side who did know that for a fact.

Mr. BURROWS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) may be interested in companies that I do not know anything about.

Mr. LAKE. Now, in connection with this Imperial Pulp Company there was another very peculiar circumstance, and that was the way the applications were made to have these limits put up. I looked through a few of the applications, and in almost every case it seemed to me the applications were put in by persons who, in some instances—in one, at any rate—did not put in any tender themselves at all. In fact, the persons who tendered for the Imperial Pulp Company seemed to comprise quite a large circle of gentlemen. In two instances the then member for West Assiniboia, Mr. Walter Scott, now the premier of Saskatchewan, made application on behalf of another gentleman to have limits put up for public tender, which were subsequently acquired, on tender, by the Imperial Pulp Company. And it certainly would strike one as a peculiar circumstance that there were gentlemen of such standing who were asking to have these limits put up for public competition. Now, there was another fact which struck me as rather peculiar and somewhat worthy of remark, and that was that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), who appeared—if I may so style him—as the chief counsel of the government during the inquiry which took place, and who had inside information, which a considerable number of us, at any rate, did not possess, did everything he could to prevent the inquiry into the tenders in connection with these timber limits. He took up, I think, more than half the first day's session in protesting and arguing the point whether the inquiry should go on upon the lines on which it had been begun. It also struck me as peculiar that, when it came to the crucial point, when we thought we would get information which would settle things one way or the other, he was the one who stepped in and objected that Mr. Finnie should not be called upon to produce certain books. As I have said, it is curious to find that a gentleman who possessed this information was the one to block this inquiry as far as possible. I think the country has a great interest in knowing everything in connection with these matters. Their timber is being disposed of, and they ought to know for what it is being sold and to whom.

Another important matter, and one which has been called attention to by the hon. member for St. Antoine, is the way the tenders were made in blank with cheques inclosed. In the evidence given by the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), if I understood him correctly—and I think I did—that hon. gentleman stated that the tenders were opened by him and that he noted the amounts of cheques inclosed in these blank tenders, and that Miss Monro, who was present with him as secretary, made a note of the amount. Let me point out that nothing of these memos. appears in the papers which were laid before the House. I looked at some of the original documents, and I notice that the blank tenders have initials on the margin, but they had not any statement of the amount of the cheques inclosed in them. The statement of the amount of the cheques only appears after the papers have got into the accountant's branch, one or two days later.

Mr. TURRIFF. May I set my hon. friend (Mr. Lake) right? When the papers were down before the Public Accounts Committee I went over a number of these files, and I think I found in every case but one, where the amount had not been stated in the tender, I made a memorandum of the amount.

Mr. LAKE. I went through several of them this morning, and found it the other way. Where the amount was stated in the tender the marginal note restated the amount, but where it was not stated—and there were many cases in which it was not stated in the tender—no amount appeared until it appeared in the handwriting of the assistant accountant or the gentleman who signed for the accountant. What I wish to point out is that in the interval it would be easy to manipulate the cheques after they passed through the hands of the commissioner and before they got to the accountant. It would be interesting to read the remarks made by the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee in regard to the system of tendering which was in vogue in that department when the matter was up for inquiry :

We have given a great deal of latitude because it has been suggested that on account of the form of the tenders there was room for suspicion that cheques might have been supplemented after the tenders were opened. As I understand it that is the suggestion. In some cases the tender does not say the amount of the bonus and the amount is only ascertained by the cheques that are inclosed with the tender. That is not a good way to put in a tender and it leaves it open to that suggestion that there is a possibility that a cheque might be abstracted after the tender was opened or another cheque might be substituted, or something of that sort might be done.

Mr. LANCASTER. Whose language is that?

Mr. LAKE. That is the language of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke), the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee. He did not consider it a good system of tendering. But I have pointed out that when these blank tenders came in there were cases in which no memo. was made as to the cheques inclosed, and, even in the one case where mention of the amount had been put in the body of the tender, the memo. was only in pencil and could easily be rubbed out. Nothing appeared on those tenders until they reached the accountant. During that time there was ample opportunity to take some such action as was suggested as possible by the hon. member for South Essex.

Mr. TURRIFF. If the hon. gentleman will allow me ; I think he is perfectly well aware that when I was giving evidence before the committee I stated that I had never opened a tender before twelve o'clock. I have never given out any information about tenders, and I have never received a cheque, or allowed any change or substitution of cheques after the tenders were opened. The remarks of the hon. gentleman are a sort of reflection that something like that could have been done, and I say it was not done.

Mr. LAKE. I made no statement or reflection in regard to that matter. The statement which I make is that tenders were opened by the hon. gentleman and that a certain space of time elapsed after they were opened and the time that the cheques were deposited in the hands of the official accountant of the government. Between these two periods there was room for such action as my hon. friend from South Essex declared to be possible under the circumstances in which these tenders were being dealt with.

Now, I propose to submit a resolution calling for an investigation into the sale of these timber limits, and if the investigation shows that there has been fraud or imposition practised, it says that those timber berths so disposed of shall be revested in the Crown. I will refer to only two cases in regard to which very suspicious circumstances have been shown, limits 1031 and 1048. 1031 was a limit of 118 square miles north-west of Edmonton. It was advertised on the 19th of November and only 40 days were given for inspection. The advertisement mentioned 11 different blocks of land, and they all had to be included in the tender. Protests were put in against the shortness of the time and applications were made for an extension of the time in order to ensure proper competition. Limit 1048 lies some distance to the north of Prince Albert. In this there were 10 blocks of 50 square miles each put up for sale. A very short time was given between the calling for tenders and the date of sale. These blocks had to be selected out of an area of some 7,000 square miles, and this fact alone would make the exploration a matter of absolute impossibility. These limits have been disposed of for a mere song. I consider that in view of the fact that the most strenuous objections were taken to the Prince Albert limits being put up and that a further time was called for by the citizens of Prince Albert by their board of trade and by the municipality and others, there should be a full inquiry into the whole matter, and this House should be put in a position to know why those reasonable protests were disregarded and why the sales went on. I beg to move the following amendment :

That all the words after the word 'that' be eliminated and the following substituted therefor:

This House regrets that the present government has permitted the improvident alienation of immense areas of valuable timber lands which are now held for speculative purposes to the detriment of the people, and records its opinion that such full and unrestricted investigation should be made and such available proceedings taken as may be necessary to revest in the Crown any timber lands in respect of which fraud or imposition has been practised.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). I am sure that every member of this House, with the exception of one or two who affect to take special interest in this matter, must have come to the conclusion that the attempt to discuss this question at the present stage of the session is nothing more than an attempt to resurrect an absolutely dead proposition. Ever since this matter was discussed in January and February the universal verdict of the House and the country was that the masterly addresses of the Minister of Interior and of the ex-Minister of the Interior had entirely disposed of the whole question.

Mr. LANCASTER. How was the verdict unanimous? Was there not a vote?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Well, my hon. friend sometimes votes differently from what he thinks.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the hon. gentleman is joking I don't mind that, but if he means it seriously, he will have to take it back.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is not serious if he concludes that there are many members on his side of the House who have not arrived at the conclusion long ere this that nothing in the shape of a serious argument has been brought forward to-day. Now, Mr. Speaker, following that discussion at that period of the session we had an investigation before the Public Accounts Committee of these fantastic theories and these unnatural insinuations. That investigation went to the point that the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, became almost hysterical in his desire to have it stopped. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), who has just sat down, in alluding to me as having acted for the government before that committee, made a reference that was entirely unwarranted. His colleague, the hon. member for St. Antoine, took advantage of the fact that I, as a humble member of that committee, happened to be out of the committee one day to move that all proceedings should be closed and reported to the House when he himself had four or five witnesses subpœnaed who were still outstanding and whose evidence had not been taken. I leave it to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) whether or not in his experience in legal matters or in investigations of any kind it is usual that the gentleman who is initiating the proceedings, who is acting for the plaintiff, who is given every opportunity in the way of documents and evidence, asks that the proceeding be terminated in such a way.

Mr. LANCASTER. Since the hon. gentleman has appealed to me, we all know that the hon. member for St. Antoine could not discuss the matter in the House until a report was made by the committee. I think the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) knows that that was his sole and only reason for wanting the matter closed. It was that it could be debated on the floor of the House. We all understand that anyway.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is very ingenious. He is always ingenious. What I thought that the hon. member for St. Antoine wanted was not to have a discussion in the House, but was to have an investigation and when he had an opportunity of having an investigation he tried to stop it. Then, after this peculiar proceeding before the investigating committee my hon. friend attempts to resurrect this dead and buried question and after the statement made by my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) to-night and after the last vestige of the possibility of insinuation has been swept away, I think my hon. friend ought to do the candid, the fair, the honourable thing and stand up in this House and say that he was entirely unwarranted and unjustified in making the assertions that he did make. Why? My hon. friend very judiciously and insinuatingly couples together the question of the policy of dealing with timber lands and the question of whether or not the regulations made by the department with regard to the letting of these lands by public competition have been complied with and he asks us to talk about the improvident alienation of the immense areas of valuable timber lands. I do not think that the hon. member for St. Antoine wrote this resolution. While he is an adept at insinuation and while he possesses the quality of being able to distort language yet he is not an adept in the use of adjectives. Some hon. gentlemen whose idea of forming resolutions runs usually along the line of superlatives has been drafted for this occasion in order to write this resolution on the 'improvident alienation of immense areas of valuable timber limits to the detriment of the people.' My hon. friend from St. Antoine has been talking about this question so much that he has probably persuaded himself and, of course, judging from the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the peculiar opinion he has as to what went on in the Public Accounts Committee, he has evidently managed to persuade him that there is something to be said for his position.

Mr. LAKE. I was present during the whole of the investigation at the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. All I have to say to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is that either his hearing or his judgment is bad.

Mr. LAKE. It is a matter of opinion.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Whether the hon. member for St Antoine has persuaded the hon. member for Qu'Appelle upon this question, he, at least, wishes again to exploit in this House the peculiar statements that he has been making in the country and in regard to which, in the short time at my disposal, I hope to be able to show that the hon. member for St. Antoine has been deliberately misleading the people of this country.

Let us pass to the consideration of the question as to whether or not the proper policy has been in operation down to 1907 in dealing with the timber lands of the Northwest. Of course my hon. friend would like the people to forget altogether the fact that the policy of dealing with the timber lands of the Northwest was a policy adopted by his party in 1894 and followed exactly along the same lines down to 1907. Of course my hon. friend takes absolute care to suppress the fact before the people of the country that every one of the things which he says should be done in regard to the policy in dealing with these timber lands was accomplished and put into effect months before he spoke in this House by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). My hon. friend, in an adroit manipulation of the facts and conditions which were the basis of his speech, suppresses, while speaking all over the country and even in this House the fact that these timber lands of such immense value are being exploited by the department in the interest of the treasury of this country and are not being given away to speculators. All the theories which he advanced as to how the latter result could be avoided were brought into effect by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior months before he ever discussed this question in the House.

Now, coming to the question as to whether there was a proper compliance with the regulations and as to whether every one was treated fairly in the disposal of these limits by the Department of the Interior, I apprehend that it is as to this subject upon which my hon. friend would allege that there should be an investigation. That is an investigation which he knew, there was no way of having and which he never expected to get when he addressed the House. We had a full and complete investigation upon this subject. Let me call your attention to what has taken place.

After the discussion in this House in the latter part of January my hon. friend went to the Public Accounts Committee and, on February 7, he moved for all the papers relating to payments on account of rental first made by R. E. McCracken, second, by W. Anderson, third, by Perkins, Fraser and Gibson, made in 1907 in the Winnipeg district, fourth, by Charles R. Smith and fifth, by Herman Finger.

On the first day he moved that the original documents in connection with all these payments should be brought down. This original document question is one that vexes the soul of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. If my hon. friend was in the Public Accounts Committee and I think he was there, he ought to have known and he must have known that there never was a time during this or any other session of this parliament at which original documents moved for in the Public Accounts Committee by any hon. gentleman were not at once produced and brought before that committee for inspection. So that, when the hon. gentleman talks about the long and weary effort to get original documents he ought to know this fact now that there never was a time in this or any other parliament when original documents moved for in the committee were not produced before that committee. The hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine, got them. He moved for them on February 7.

On February 13, what did he do? He moved for further documents regarding payments made by Perkins, Fraser and Gibson, in the Prince Albert district in addition to the Edmonton district, regarding payments made by William Cowan, by the Big River Lumber Company by John McBain, by Perkins, Fraser and Gibson in the Calgary district and by T. A. Burrows. No less than twelve large files moved for by the hon. gentleman on these two days were brought over to the Public Accounts Committee and inspected by him with his miscroscopic and photographic machines and all the paraphernalia which he has. They were thoroughly and fully investigated. What followed? We have heard talk about attempts at obstruction by the chairman. Did my hon. friend come to the Public Accounts Committee and say: I desire to go into an investigation of these papers with a view of showing this substantive wrong-dong on the part of any hon. gentleman or on the part of the administration. No. On the contrary he said: I want to be permitted to go back to the original advertisement and tenders in order that I may show that the amount paid by the lessee to the government in the way of rental was not the amount that ought to be paid according to the original tender.

Mr. AMES. Has the hon. gentleman any proof of that statement?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Yes, that will be found in the very first day's proceedings and every hon. gentleman who belongs to the committee knows it, and the chairman of that committee permitted my hon. friend to go back to the original tender and the original advertisement and to the last shred of every document in every one of these files.

Mr. AMES. Which is far more than you would have done if you could prevent it.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. This afternoon the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) abused the chairman of that committee because he did not rule according to his view, but now he admits that the chairman of the committee permitted him to go back to the very last document and the very last file.

And now as to this talk of obstruction which the Conservative press indulges in at the suggestion of hon. gentlemen in this House in reference to myself and other members of that committee who are endeavouring to see that parliamentary usage and rule is observed, and that there should be some regard for the traditions not only of this parliament, but the traditions of the mother of parliaments as well. We are accused of obstruction because forsooth we want to see parliamentary usage followed and because we venture to suggest that irrelevant questions which do not relate to the matter before the committee should not be allowed. But let us remember that when there was a question as to whether two cheques or three cheques inclosed with the tender was suspicious, and when it was sought to show that if this absurd insinuation was to tell against the hon. member for Dauphin it was an insinuation that should be made against most of the other people who tendered; when it was sought to prove this very relevant fact it was the member for

St. Antoine and those associated with him in the committee who were the obstructionists.

Mr. AMES. Will you allow me to make one statement? I want to set you perfectly right in that respect. Never has there been the slightest objection on our side of the House to Mr. Burrows going into the box if he wanted to. You could have called him any time you wished. It was not our business to call him and we did not call him. We never obstructed or objected to any thing.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is now referring to a point which I have not yet mentioned, but I will discuss the singular unwillingness of my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) to not only call Mr. Burrows but several other people whom he knew were in possession of all the evidence and whom he did not call because he did not want to prove the truth.

Mr. AMES. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is it right to say that I did not want the truth to come out?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that is a suggestion the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) should not make.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I want to observe the rules of this House to the fullest possible extent, and while I do not want to discuss your decision, Mr. Speaker, and while I shall gladly withdraw anything you think is improper, I must say that I have sat here and heard some hon. gentlemen opposite make use of language in regard to the ministers we follow and with regard to those with whom we are associated (and whom we know to be just as good as they are) which would not seem under that ruling to be parliamentary. In a case like this we are dealing with a tissue of absolute insinuations and nothing else, and I desire to characterize the conduct of some hon. gentlemen opposite in this respect in as plain and clear and definite language as possible, and to treat this question as it is and this story as it is. I want to say that when I hear some hon. gentlemen opposite and when I see the Conservative press of this country describing myself and those associated with me as being obstructionists, I resent any such imputation.

Mr. AMES. Do I understand that the expression objected to is withdrawn?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend had better wait.

Mr. LAKE. Withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. The suggestion has been made that the hon. gentleman for St. Antoine did not want the truth. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) has taken objection to that and I think it is a statement which should be withdrawn.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. With all due deference to you, Mr. Speaker, suppose I said that the hon. member for St. Antoine did not want the country to get the truth that is a statement which I believe is absolutely in order and which I am also sure is absolutely correct.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. That imputation as to my motives in the matter should not be made.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think I shall also have to rule that the amended suggestion is an imputation which an hon. member should not make in reference to another hon. member.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Of course, in deference to your ruling I take back the proposition as it is understood by you, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HENDERSON. Don't qualify it.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Now that my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) has interrupted I will go on with my remarks.

Mr. AMES. Has he taken it back, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand the expression has been withdrawn.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Take your medicine; it's a little bitter.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. While I want to keep within parliamentary rules, Mr. Speaker, yet when I see the good name of hon. gentlemen who sit around me defamed I am inclined to think that the language I have used was not in contravention of the rules of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I believe that in dealing with this question I have a perfect right to deal with it in the broadest possible way because it is only in the broadest possible way that it can be discussed. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that it is the first occasion since I have had the honour to sit in this House that you have had occasion to direct my attention to any utterance not strictly parliamentary but such has been the line of conduct pursued against my hon. friends here that the offence calls for special treatment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what were the subjects we had before that committee? I have told you of the different papers that were moved for and that were there to be investigated. Here is a list of files on which were based the imputations made in regard to my hon. friend from Dauphin—the files which relate to berths 1281, 1282, 1118, 1119, 1122, 1031, 1052, 1058, 1068, 1097, 1098, 1108 and 1048. Well, in regard to berth 1281 it was discovered that the highest tenderer for that berth was Mr. O. A. Robertson whose tender was $5,195, and the next highest was Mr. D. M. Finnie, tendering for Mr. Burrows at $5,000, and the next tender was $4.013. Mr. O. A. Robertson's tender was only $195 higher than Mr. Burrows' tender, and Mr. Robertson got the berth, and although Mr. Burrows had been in regard to other tenders $400 and $500 higher than the gentleman who was next to him, and although that in the mind of my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) was a cause for deep suspicion, yet because Mr. O. A. Robertson was only $195 more than Mr. Burrows and got the berth we never heard anything more from my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) about berth No. 1281. It was dropped out of mind altogether, no witnesses were examined, no analysis of envelopes and of red ink or black ink. There was no Sherlock Holmes business indulged in by the hon. member for St. Antoine. Indeed, the difference between my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) and Sherlock Holmes is that the hon. gentleman always draws wrong conclusions whereas Sherlock Holmes always seemed to draw right conclusions. My hon. friend did not exhaust much of his energy on berths 1281 and 1282, because he found that Mr. O. A. Robertson again had bought these and Mr. Burrows had not tendered for the latter, and therefore it was not possible to find any evidence in that connection which could be possibly tortured into some possible connection with the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) either through relationship or other cause.

But with regard to eleven berths we did hear something. He summoned Franz Loyer, P. Robertson, G. U. Kyley, D. M. Finnie. Mr. A. W. Fraser he summoned twice. On March 3rd he subpoenaed Mr. Hector Macdonald, Mr. C. H. Beddoe, Mr. R. A. Campbell. On March 6th he summoned Mr. R. R. Pattinson. On the 11th he subpœnaed Mr. Greenway, Sir Daniel McMillan, and later he got after Fraser again and again subpœnaed him, and also D. M. Finnie on two separate occasions. That made thirteen witnesses.

An hon. MEMBER. At whose expense?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. At the expense of the country, of course ; and if the number of the witnesses be a fair indication, the case is an unlucky one for its sponsor. That fatal number was significant of its collapse. My hon. friend who is so anxious for an investigation that he even gets the hon. member for Qu'Appelle to move a resolution for further inquiry, what did he do when he had every opportunity to investigate? Why, he only examined six of those witnesses. On the 7th of March Mr. Fraser, after he had been hanging around a day and a-half waiting to be called, was told to go away either by the hon. member for St. Antoine or one of his friends. He was told that they would not have him at all. He was not asked to give a word of evidence about the Nolan tender or the $7,000 being inserted in different ink, whether that was done by Fraser or somebody else. After Mr. Fraser had been subpœnaed no less than four different times, and after he had come there and been in waiting on the committee, my hon. friend or some one for him told him to go away, that they did not want him at all, and we would have never heard his testimony if my hon. friend for Lunenburg (Mr. Maclean) had not moved in the matter, and called him to the stand.

Mr. AMES. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to say what would have happened in that case. He has no right to say that I would never have called Mr. Fraser. He has no right to intimate what I would or would not do.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. If my hon. friend is serious about that proposition, I do not think it is wise on his part. Why did he not apply the same rule to himself this afternoon when he was insinuating anything and everything under the sun?

Mr. SPEAKER. I can hardly see that in this case there is any insinuation.

Mr. LAKE. I ask your ruling, Sir, as to whether the hon. member is correct in constantly accusing my hon. hon. friend from St. Antoine of insinuations. He accused him constantly of insinuating against hon. gentlemen on that side.

Mr. SPEAKER. I can hardly apply the rule unless a concrete case is put before me.

Mr. LAKE. That was the case.

Mr. SPEAKER. If, when a case comes up, the point is taken, I shall endeavour to rule upon it, but can hardly rule upon some general statements.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I was referring to the fact that we would not have had Mr. Fraser's evidence unless some hon. gentleman not associated with the hon. member for St. Antoine had insisted upon his going on the stand. Nor did the hon. gentleman put Mr. Loyer or Mr. Robertson on the stand. He or some of his friends pledged their word that these witnesses could give important evidence or the subpœnas for them could not have been issued. They did the same with regard to Mr. Hector McDonald and Mr. C. A. Beddoe and Mr. Fraser. Mr. McDonald was one of the gentlemen who had tendered on this timber limit No 1031 we have heard so much about. That was the limit concerning which we had the theory put forward by the hon. gentleman that Mr. Burrows had put in an additional cheque of some $14,000 to the cheque first given in order to cut McDonald out. The hon. gentleman had subpœnaed Mr. McDonald, but although the latter was in attendance from day to day, waiting to be called, he was not asked to give evidence. Neither was Mr. Beddoe put in the box. The hon. gentleman had also a subpœna served on Mr. Pattinson, of Winnipeg, the secretary of the Imperial Pulp Company, and he received a telegram from Mr. Pattinson stating there was illness in his family and his examination would have to be deferred until a certain date, but my hon. friend, at the time indicated by Mr. Pattinson, did not take the slightest interest about his coming, but tried to get the investigation closed, and put up an attack on myself and gentlemen associated with me in that committee as being obstructionists, because we stood in his path and prevented him from closing the investigation. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), whose soul was yearning for information with regard to the Imperial Pulp Company, did not push for the examination of Mr. Pattinson. That was very surprising. One would have thought these gentlemen would have pressed for the examination of Mr. Pattinson, but they did nothing of the kind, and Mr. Pattinson never was called.

Then when it was discovered that Fraser's examination disclosed frankly, without the slightest reservation, who the membres of the Imperial Pulp Company were, and that there had never been any doubts about it except in the imagination of some hon. gentlemen opposite, these gentlemen who were talking so much about subpœnaing my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), never called upon him to give evidence. What then occurred? One would have thought that if the hon. gentlemen were honestly carrying on an investigation into the management of the Department of the Interior down to a period anterior to 1907, the first man he would have called as a witness would have been my hon. friend. But what actually took place ? The committee met on March 5 and 6, and, no request was made to call him. On March 13, at the next meeting of the committee, my hon. friend asked to be called. At that time we were sailing along under innuendoes and all kind of peculiar constructions, and things were going rather swimmingly for my hon. friend, The hon. member for Dauphin, seeing that there was no indication of calling him, said that as his name had been mentioned several times in this connection, that as prejudicial inferences had been drawn, he would like to be heard. What did the hon. member for St. Antoine, who wanted this investigation so badly say? He said nothing. He never once suggested that he wanted to hear my hon. friend (Mr. Turriff). On the next meeting of the committee, March 19, Mr. Turriff said :

I desire to say that during one of the previous sittings of the committee, Mr. Ames tried to prove by Mr. Ryley, when he was on the stand, that I opened the tenders for these timber limits in secret. I have been here every day expecting Mr. Ames to call me. If he wanted to get the truth, why did he not ask for me to be called? I was not called at the last meeting although I asked to be. I have come here again to-day and I am prepared to come at any time and give evidence under oath and be cross-examined. I have nothing to hide or to be afraid or ashamed of.

If the hon. member wanted to get the truth why did he not ask that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) be called ? Here is the hon. gentleman who wants an investigation. Why, when his soul was yearning for this truth which he wanted so much and he had the gentleman at hand to go on the witness stand, why did he not ask for him to be called ? Mr. Turriff stated that he was not called at the last meeting although he had asked to be. He invited the fullest examination saying that he had nothing to be ashamed of or afraid of. Would you believe it that my hon. friend still failed to yield to the insistent requests of my hon. friend from the west ? It was not until the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. Maclean) moved in committee on the 19th day of March that Mr. Turriff be summoned to appear before it that we were able to hear Mr. Turriff's evidence. We had a right to expect that my hon. friend who was pushing this investigation and was so anxious to have it, would have called that hon. gentleman, but he did not do so. Then in regard to Mr. Burrows who know all about the pulp company, as my hon. friend was aware, because Mr. Fraser had told us who were the members of the company,

I was surprised that my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) did not insist on Mr. Burrows being called. I had suggested several times to the hon. gentleman for St. Antoine division that if he wanted information in regard to these matters he should call Mr. Burrows, but we could not coax the hon. member to call Mr. Burrows, he did not want to hear the story, he was perfectly willing to let all this distortion in regard to envelopes and red and black ink and peculiar dates and alleged difficulties in documents and all that sort of thing to go to the country without explanation. He did not want it and did not have it, but he stood up here to-day, after telling us that the hon. gentleman who was chairman of that committee was eminently fair and gave the fullest opportunity for investigation, and complained that he did not get fair treatment in regard to the question of the examination of Mr. Finnie upon the cheques. What were the facts ? Mr.

Finnie is manager of the Bank of Ottawa in this city. He said that certain cheques had been issued by him as manager, in place of cheques given by Mr. Burrows. Certain of these cheques were in the bank and they were produced in the committee and given to the committee. As regards the other cheques they were in the possession of Mr. Burrows, being his property and having been handed over to him. We suggested that all they had to do was to call Mr. Burrows and they could obtain the cheques. Mr. Burrows produced them here to-day during this discussion and gave my hon. friends a chance to look at them, but they did not want them ; they saw that they were on the wrong side of the story and that they could not make out their case. My hon. friend from St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) found that the wiser heads around him, the older and shrewder and calmer and perhaps fairer men of his party who had watched the proceedings in the committee, the men who wanted to give a semblance of fair play to decent people in the country and had heard the evidence, told my hon. friend just where he stood and that it was about time to drop this business. Ever since then, instead of my hon. friend wanting investigation, he has done the best he could to prevent investigation all over the country. Even to-night in regard to this resolution we have a most peculiar situation. Mr. Ames is asking for an investigation when, with all the original documents before him and with six or seven witnesses whom he did not call and with power to subpœna any witness in the country, he had run away from the chance to investigate the matter in the committee. Is it any wonder that I should use language that may be deemed to be trespassing on the rules of debate, is it any wonder that I should say to you that I doubt the sincerity of my hon. friend in this matter?

My hon. friend went down to Nova Scotia a few weeks ago and held two meetings there, one on Saturday and one on Sunday afternoon. My hon. friend's Sunday afternoon address was delivered before the Young Men's Christian Association in the city of Halifax, and what was his subject? Hon. members of the Public Accounts Committee on both sides of the House away down in their hearts, even the hon. gentlemen who sit around my hon. friend, will, I am sure, be surprised at the title which my hon. friend took for his speech that Sabbath day. The subject was 'Fair Play.' He went on to speak about fair play in sport, business and politics, and here is a surprising statement to come from my hon. friend in view of my hon. friend's course in this matter both in and outside of the House. He is reported as saying :

> That there was nothing in public life to make him lay aside the principles for which Christianity stands.

Now, I hope that every hon. gentleman in this House stands for the principles for which Christianity stands, and I do not think my hon. friend should have found it necessary to have suggested the possibility of a different attitude on the part of any member of this House. He went on :

> If democratic government is worth anything we must see that the maximum of opportunity is given and unless fair play is recognized this cannot be.—Fair play, respect for ourselves and for the other men.

Just think of that, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) honestly, in his heart of hearts, feels that this man who sits in this parliament as the member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) who went up to the Northwest land when it cost something to be a pioneer, who went up there and grew up with the country, grew up with it honestly, grew up with it along legitimate lines, developing proper business conditions, until he reached a position where he received the confidence of the people and was elected as their representative first in provincial politics and subsequently in the broader arena here—I wonder if, following the principles my hon. friend enunciated in Halifax, he in his heart of hearts feels that he was giving fair play to Mr. Burrows.

> Fair play, respect for ourselves and for other men is a fundamental principle which must be observed in the interests of our country.

I agree with that doctrine ; I agree that unless we have fair play all around in politics it will be very bad for the interests of this country, and I know that there is a good old Golden Rule, one which should always guide our actions in politics or anything else, that we should do unto others as we would they should do unto us, and I am in the judgment of this House and of any hon. gentleman who is familiar with this subject whether without being in anywise unfair to my hon. friend, there has been an exemplification of those Christian principles which some of us are not so loud in proclaiming from the house tops but perhaps observe as well as he does, or an exemplification of the principles of that Golden Rule or that fair consideration of the rights and position and good name and fair name of hon. members of this House who have been wantonly attacked and insinuated against by the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames). Nineteen hundred years ago there were men going up and down the country who thanked God that they were not as other men were and they received their just rebuke from the great Teacher who came to lead us all along the way we should go and in the land from which my forefathers came the poet of our race has sung of 'Holy Willie' and his prayers. I want to say in the light of the evidence I am going to endeavour to present to you that we have to-day in this twentieth century some people who bear a strong resemblance to these men who lived in the olden days.

Now, my hon. friend, speaking at Halifax, endeavoured to lead the people of the province of Nova Scotia to believe that there were not to-day upon the statute-books of this country fair and proper regulations in regard to the disposition of timber limits. Why did not my hon. friend tell his Halifax audience about the regulations made by the Minister of the Interior last December? Why did not he tell them that the Minister of the Interior, even before he (Mr. Ames) had said a word in this House upon this question, had provided for preliminary investigation and survey before timber limits were put up for sale, had provided for reports to be kept in the department, had provided for sales by auction, had provided for the compulsory establishment of mills and in the event of non-compliance the cancellation of the leases? If he was so strong an advocate of fair play, why did he not tell the people of Nova Scotia all this?

But what did he tell the people of my province? He told them that over 6,500 square miles of timber had been granted by this government. Whereas, I find, at page 2271 of 'Hansard' that he said that 1,840 square miles had been leased previously to 1896—that is, there were only 4,562 square miles of timber to be charged to this government according to his own statement on record in 'Hansard' in this House. But he came down to the province of Nova Scotia, and, in the city of Halifax, told the people that the quantity granted by this government was 6,500 square miles, which was 1,938 square miles out of the way and to that extent incorrect. Was that fair play to this government? Was that fair play to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton)? Was it fair play to the people of Nova Scotia?

And, if he so strongly desires fair play, why did he not tell the people that there are to-day in Ontario and Quebec men belonging to his own political party who own in their own right individually more square miles of timber than have been granted by this government since it came into power in 1896? Would not you think, Mr. Speaker, that a gentleman who enunciated these glorious principles—principles to which no one will take exception—should be the first to stand by them and should be most careful that there should be no departure in his statements from that accuracy which we have a right to expect from a public man? He did not tell the people that we have in Nova Scotia, in the person of Mr. T. G. McMullen, a Conservative and a former member of the local legislature, a man who is said to own in his own right 150,000 acres of land, not by lease, but by absolute title. And my hon. friend knows, when he was talking about this 6,500 square miles of timber limits that he was astray to the extent of 1,938 square miles. He knew, when he was telling the people of Nova Scotia of the alleged enormity of the grants in the Northwest, that there were in his own province of Quebec men who own timber lands equal in extent to all this aggregate of grants by this government of which he was speaking.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Speaker, is the hon. gentleman in order in saying I knew I was leading the people astray?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) said that the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) said that he knew he was leading the people astray, that would be an unparliamentary expression.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I simply assumed that my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) knew what he was saying——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. If he did not know what he was saying, then there is nothing more to be said about it. And perhaps, Mr. Speaker, that is the most charitable view to take of it—that he did not know what he was saying.

Mr. AMES. Do I understand that the hon. gentleman——

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) used the expression that it has been suggested he used, or not. If he did, I think that expression exceeds the bounds of parliamentary discussion, and, of course, should be withdrawn.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I am very much surprised, Mr. Speaker, at the objection taken by my hon. friend. I ventured to make the statement that my hon. friend had said in Nova Scotia that 6,500 square miles of timber had been granted by this government, though he knew at the time that there were men in Ontario and Quebec who held timber of an area equal to that—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Unless my hon. friend wants to take the position that he did not know what he was talking about, I do not understand the point he is now raising.

Mr. LENNOX. What the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) did say—I think he will agree that I understood him correctly—was that when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) made the statement he knew that he was representing the leases by this government to be 1,938 square miles more than they actually were. He ought to take that back.

Mr. LAKE. I understood the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) to state that the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) made a statement which he knew to be untrue.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Not at all. Mr. Speaker, I want to keep myself right, and I bow to your suggestion that I should take back any expression I may have used that is an infraction of the Rules of the House. My only desire is to discuss the material before me. My comment was based on the statement of the hon. member as it appeared in 'Hansard' and what I have under my hand as representing what he stated in the city of Halifax. When he spoke in Nova Scotia he attempted to give the impression to the people that this quantity of land had been given away by this government covering all the timber lands to be found in the Northwest Territories. There is no question about that. I am not going to take up time quoting the statements he made ; I simply say that he endeavoured to convey the impression to the people of my province that this government, since 1896, had given away all the available timber land found in the Northwest countr. If I am not stating a correct conception of my hon. friend's language, I speak subject to correction. My hon. friend knew that that was the idea he was attempting to put forth, and also knew that the superintendent of forestry had been discussing that question not so very long before and had reported that, over and above the timber land granted, there remained 722,578 square miles of timber in the Northwest country and that of this 130,000 square miles were of the very best timber land. That is even making allowance for all the small timber, the scrub and that fit only for pulp and other purposes of that kind, there still remains 130,000 square miles of the best timber lands, after allowing for every foot of land granted not only by this government since 1896 but also by every government since 1867. Yet my hon. friend, not only there but all up and down this country, attempted to show that this government had wasted the timber lands of the Northwest, and had given away to political favourites all the available timber lands ; and he sympathized with the poor settler, because when he goes now to the Northwest he finds there is no timber, it has all been given away to Mr. Burrows. Now was my hon. friend carrying out the golden rule, was he playing the game fair when he attempted to lead the people of Nova Scotia to believe that there was no available timber land in the Northwest to-day owing to the action of this government, whereas he knew that not one-thirtieth of the total available timber lands in the Northwest had been affected by all the grants made by this government ?

Then he attempted to lead the people of Nova Scotia to believe that these lands, which he said had been given away, had passed into the absolute ownership of Mr. Burrows and his friends for all time. I will quote what he said :

> Often times he was the only tenderer. At other times several offers for paltry sums would be received, but as a rule the man who wanted a berth though a form of public competition was gone through with, would secure the limit at his own price, and once having obtained it he was practically the owner for ever.

Mr. AMES. I say that statement is absolutely true.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. He wanted the people of my province to run away with the idea that every one of these 6,500 square miles of land had gone to Mr. Burrows and his associates and had become their property and the property of their heirs and assigns for ever. Now what are the facts? My hon. friend knows that they were not the owners in fee simple of the land, they were only tenants. He knows, but he did not tell the people of Nova Scotia, that over and above any possible bonus that might be paid in public competition every man who had received timber lands from this government since 1896 was bound to pay $5 per square mile for ground rent, and had to pay it annually ; not only that, but the lease runs from year to year, it was not even a twenty-one years lease, but was a yearly lease, and could only be renewed from year to year by compliance with all the regulations which were contained in the lease granted by the government. He did not tell the people that every man who had a timber limit was obliged to cut lumber upon it and to pay to the government fees, under the provisions of section 20 of the regulations for sawn lumber fifty cents per thousand feet board measure. Railway ties 8 feet long one and one half cents each. Railway ties nine feet long one and three quarter cents each. Shingle bolts twenty-five cents per cord and five per cent on the sale of all other products of the berth. In addition to that, there were provisions in regard to putting up a mill which my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior attended to last year by giving notice to the holders of limits requiring them to put up a mill. In face of all this, what possible grounds had my hon. friend, this apostle of the gospel of fair-play, to tell the people of Nova Scotia that when a man got a lease from year to year of timber limits he practically became the owner for ever ?

Mr. AMES. So long as there was merchantable timber upon it.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. According to the regulations made by the department a lease can be cancelled whenever the government sees fit, if the conditions are not performed under which the lease is held.

My hon. friend wished to lead the people of Nova Scotia to believe that all these gentlemen owned in fee simple for themselves, their heirs and assigns for ever, these 6,500 square miles of land that had been given away by this government.

Mr. AMES. Absolutely untrue, for I showed them the form of the lease.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman characterizes a statement made by my hon. friend from Pictou as absolutely untrue. His words are equally objectionable to those that he has complained of himself.

Mr. AMES. I say that the member for Pictou was misinformed, inasmuch as I showed the people the very form of the regulation.

Mr. FIELDING. I understand that he takes back his previous statement.

Mr. AMES. Certainly.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I am glad to see that my hon. friend is willing to take back something that is palpably wrong. Again, my hon. friend told the people down in Nova Scotia that thirty per cent of the transactions were legitimate, that twenty per cent of the lease holders were reserve men, and fifty per cent were speculators. Of course these are figures he has made up himself, he has no data whatever to back them up. He has never given to this House any list of the people whom he put down in the class of speculators, or as reserve holders, or whom he put down as honest lumbermen. This is a pure figment of his imagination. And to show how ridiculous his position is let me quote what he says again :

> Foremost among these speculators is T. A. Burrows, M.P., the brother-in-law of the Hon. Clifford Sifton, who, in his own name, and as a member of various companies owns or controls nearly 1,600 square miles, or twenty-five per cent of all the timber under lease in three provinces.

Now I think that the hon. gentleman owes the amende honorable to my hon. friend from Dauphin, in view of the latter's positive statement to-night that he does not own 1,600 square miles of timber limits, but only 640. I hope that the hon. gentleman will do the square thing by my hon. friend from Dauphin. When he attempted to show that Mr. Burrows has been speculating in land he was doing something that he knew was not fair, he knew that he was not playing the game fair ; because I leave it to you, Mr. Speaker, whether, in view of Mr. Burrow's record as he has given it to us to-night, going out into the Northwest as a pioneer, spending his whole life in the lumber business, growing up with the country, he is open to the insinuation of the hon. gentleman that Mr. Burrows is not a bona fide operator in timber limits. This is the impression that he wanted the people of Nova Scotia to get from his remarks because the hon. gentleman did not want to tell the people there that Mr. Burrows was one of the largest operators in timber limits.

Mr. AMES. I did.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I have the report of the hon. gentleman's utterances in the Halifax ' Herald '.

Mr. AMES. I have the lantern slide that I showed.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. You have the lantern slide?

Mr. AMES. Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Bring them on.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I am afraid that the dignity of parliament would hardly permit of an exhibition of this kind. But the point I wanted to make was this, that the official organ of the Conservative party in Nova Scotia says that foremost amongst these speculators was T. A. Burrows, who we here and the people of Manitoba know to be the mill owner, the mill operator, the man whose men did the cutting upon these limits to supply his mills. That is the type of man the member of Dauphin is. But the member of St. Antoine described him as T. A. Burrows, brother-in-law of the Hon. Clifford Sifton, the man who got these limits when he had no right to get them and the man who got these limits not as a mill man but as a speculator.

Mr. AMES. How about 1048?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. We had a curious exhibition with regard to 1048. My hon. friend produced a letter presumably from some one in the Northwest Territories telling us about the price at which lumber was selling and his informant turned out to be not a man from the Northwest but a young man from Amherst, Cumberland County, Nova Scotia, who happens to be the Conservative candidate there and who knows no more about timber lands in the Northwest than my hon. friend knows about some of the people in Nova Scotia. My hon. friend talks about giving authority in making statements. My hon. friend's conduct to-night in regard to that question is a fair indication of how much reliance we can put upon some of the statements and suggestions put forward on this subject.

Mr. AMES. The Red Deer Lumber Company is made up of a number of people from Amherst, N.S. Even the people of Nova Scotia are interested in these timber limits, and if a company is formed and if the stockholders are there are they not in a position to say what they have paid for lumber?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. If it had not been for the suggestion of my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Harty) that the letter had better be read and the name of the gentleman who wrote the letter had better be given, the hon. member for St. Antoine would have allowed this House to get away with the idea that some expert lumberman in the Northwest had written that letter. I say that my hon. friend's conduct upon this subject was characteristic of and in keeping with his whole conduct in the discussion of this question. My hon. friend had no right to characterize Mr. Burrows as being a speculator. If my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) is not a bona fide lumberman in this country I would like to know where you are going to find them and it was a matter of pure malevolence on the part of the hon. member for St. Antoine that he should have gone down to Nova Scotia where Mr. Burrows was not known and, instead of playing the game fairly and telling the people that Mr. Burrows was one of the foremost lumber operators in the Northwest, he entirely suppressed that fact and told the people of Nova Scotia that he was not a bona fide operator, but a speculator.

Mr. AMES. I told them about every square mile over which Mr. Burrows had cut a stick of timber and the quantity.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I must not keep the House at this late hour, but this is a subject that perhaps had better be threshed out. I have dealt with the way in which my hon. friend exemplifies the principles of fair-play.

One of his charges is the making of leases with fictitious persons and this idea of fictitious persons seem also to have got into the head of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I think my hon. friend has hardly got over the wrong impressions that some people get on coming out from the old country. I am afraid that he requires to be educated along certain lines yet. He has been travelling in bad company, because if he had not he would not have given to this House, the peculiar impressions he did give with reference to what took place in the Public Accounts Committee. He told us that there was a considerable number of fictitious persons. I always understood that when you spoke of fictitious persons you had reference to persons who did not exist.

Mr. LAKE. I do not think I used the word 'fictitious,' I used the word 'aliases.'

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Well, we will take that. My hon. friend has got into a worse hole because he must know that when we speak of a man using an alias we refer to an existent person using the name of another person who is or is not existent.

Mr. LAKE. I merely wanted to correct the hon. gentleman.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is welcome to any correction that he thinks he has made in that regard. I am afraid that he is getting into the mire a little farther. He will have to get away from the influences that surround him because, while I regard my hon. friend as being sincerely desirous of doing that which is right, I think he gets off pretty often. My hon. friend got the idea from the hon. member for St. Antoine about the fictitious persons. The delightfully natural way in which the hon. member for St. Antoine insinuates and suggests and makes innuendoes of a most improper character is found at page 47 of the Minutes when we were discussing the question of evidence. Mr. Ames says :

I want to prove the facts—you have finished with what is on the margin of that bid, have you Mr. Campbell?

Mr. Campbell says :

I have answered all the questions I was asked.

The discussion went on and then Mr. Ames said:

Supposing John McBain never wrote that bid at all, supposing he is a fictitious person altogether?

The chairman says :

That does not make any difference so far as this inquiry is concerned. The money has been paid, that is the question we are investigating.

Mr. AMES. The question is, was the government making leases with fictitious persons?

I believe that the hon. member for St. Antoine thought, down to a short time ago, because with that naturally suspicious mind of his, he is certain to go wrong, that the government had made leases with fictitious persons. How in the world does he imagine that the Minister of the Interior was going to avoid giving a lease to a man who came in, no matter what name he used and paid his money, he being the highest bidder at the sale ? I would like to know how my hon. friend would be held responsible if any person came along at an auction and bid or had some one else bid for them. But my hon. friend suggests that this government were making leases with fictitious persons though he knows now they did not. My hon. friend went down to Halifax and misled them there upon this subject although he knew days before that it was sworn to by Mr. Fraser in answer to a question by myself, because I felt that the hon. member for St. Antoine ought to be corrected and that that terrible body of suspicion ought to be removed from his mind, that Mr. McBain was not a fictitious person. I asked the question : Who is John McBain ? Mr. Fraser said upon oath :

John McBain is a millwright and contractor by occupation, and for some time previous and at that time had been carrying on building operations and real estate in the city of Ottawa in which he and I were interested.

So that he was not a fictitious person after all, nor an alias either.

We have heard a good deal about the tenders being in irregular form, and it is said that because the tenders were not on the regular form of the department there should be investigation. Now, it appears to me that if a man were going about the task of misleading the department, and if he could get a printed form of tender, is it not common sense that the man who was going to do wrong would take the proper form to do it on? He might want to juggle with the amount, but what sense there would be in writing informal tenders if he wanted to do wrong is more than I can conceive. Any one who takes the trouble to think must come to the conclusion that any such inference as the hon. member (Mr. Ames) draws from that is so absolutely foreign to what a sane business man would suggest that it is impossible for me to imagine how my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) could put such an idea forth. Here is the proposition he lays down : A brother-in-law of the minister wants to get a timber limit and he wants to get it through connivance with an official in the department and instead of writing out his tender upon the printed form and leaving the name blank—which according to the theory of my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) would be the proper thing—Mr. Burrows wrote the tender hurriedly, did not see that every 'i' was dotted and every 't' crossed and therefore it must be assumed that there was wrong-doing. I say that proposition is absurd and untenable.

Then we heard something about Mr. William Sifton, the brother of the Hon. Clifford Sifton, and my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) read this afternoon, and it is quite characteristic of him, the fairy tale that some Dr. McInnes, Edmonton, told about some man named Maloney, who came to Ottawa, and although his statements and everything were wrong in connection with the story it was thought to be something to base an insinuation on. Why, this Dr. McInnes was the gentleman who said in Edmonton that the Imperial Pulp Company was made up of William Sifton, the brother of the Hon. Clifford Sifton, and prominent gentlemen of the Conservative party went up and down talking about William Sifton, the brother of Clifford Sifton being interested in the Pulp Company, and it did not make any difference to them that the Hon. Clifford Sifton had denied that story in parliament on his honour as a member, nor did it make any difference to them that the Hon. Clifford Sifton never had a brother named 'William Sifton.'

Then the hon. gentleman for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) was strong on envelopes. When the unfortunate official in the Public Accounts Committee had gone through these documents with the greatest possible care the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) said : Let me see the envelopes, and if there was a tear here or a pencil mark there the hon. gentleman noted it down. He had the science down so fine that he distinguished between an envelope provided by the department and marked 'tender for timber berth' and an envelope with the simple stamp of the department on the outside, and he inferred something from that, and then of course if the envelope did not bear any official mark at all there was another inference to be drawn and the inference was always against the government. As to the question of different cheques with each tender we had a frank statement on that subject from the hon. member for Dauphin and we have the evidence of Mr. Fraser and we had other evidence which went to show that it was a common practice of the people tendering here and elsewhere to use different cheques in the tenders. But here is the amusing part of it—my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) was perfectly willing to insinuate that because Mr. Burrows had used three cheques when he put in his tender he was a frightful speculator and a man whom the people of Canada ought to condemn. But when we wanted to show that it was a common practice for other people to use different cheques in putting in their tenders, who was the obstructionist who wanted to prevent that evidence going in ? None other than the great investigator from St. Antoine. Let me read from the record. My hon. friend (Mr. Ames) had just said :

Will you turn us the envelope and tell us whether there were any marks on it?

And the answer was :

There is a memorandum 'received 7-3-03 at 11.35,' I think it is.

Then says my hon. friend from St. Antoine :

In——

And of course the clerk knew what he meant and he said :

In pencil.

Then the hon. member for St. Antoine said :

You recognize the writing?

And the clerk answered :

I cannot say whose writing it is.

And then Mr. Ames said :

It is in black lead pencil?

And what do you think the clerk answered ; he answered, yes. Now, this is very significant, for if it had been red pencil or blue pencil instead of black, just fancy the frightful consequences. Then I asked :

Just turn to the tender of the Macdonald Brothers on that file.

And the record says :

Mr. Ames objected to the question on the ground that he had been refused permission to examine witnesses with reference to other tenders than the successful ones.

Mr. AMES. Quite so.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend (Mr. Ames) objected to my asking a question as to other people having put three cheques in, not because that he thought I should have the right to ask him upon that ground, but he says :

I object because I have been refused to ask in regard to other tenders.

Then I went on to say :

I want to say upon this question that when my hon. friend asks a question which is practically irrelevant to the inquiry, as he did when he asked Mr. Campbell how many cheques mae up the $15,000 bonus——

And you will remark, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend had brought out from Mr. Campbell that the $15,000 bonus was made up of three different cheques. Then I said :

I want to show him that if there is any significance about there being three cheques making up the aggregate of the bonus it does not apply to that particular tender alone because in McDonald Brothers' tender, which is on the file alongside that of Mr. Burrows, there were three cheques inclosed which made up the amount of $13,500.

Mark, because my hon. friend from Dauphin puts in three cheques which make up $15,000, then according to the member from St. Antoine you are to infer there was all kinds of villainy. But when another gentleman puts in three cheques footing up $13,500, the hon. member (Mr. Ames) thinks there is nothing significant about that at all. I said :

Perhaps my hon. friend will withdraw his question as to the number of cheques?

Because I thought my hon. friend ought to have some appreciation of the ridiculous position in which he was in view of the evidence. Then I said :

Perhaps my friend will withdraw his question as to the number of cheques, but if he does not, I think it is quite proper to show that these cheques also accompanied another tender for the same berth, and that the sending of three cheques making up the amount of the bonus, is not confined to Mr Burrows. If you go through these files you will find that in almost every case there is more than one cheque making up the amount of the bonus. That is why I want to ask the question. If Mr. Ames is willing to withdraw the irrelevant question, I do not wish to go further on this line.

Mr. AMES. Would the hon. gentleman kindly read the next five lines ?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Certainly. My hon. friend then said :

If the hon. gentleman wants to put this upon record I have no objection, but in that case I shall find it necessary to bring Mr. McDonald here in order to show that in every instance where there is more than one cheque whenever there have been two cheques or three cheques inclosed with his tender it has been because he has had partners in the transaction, each of whom has forwarded his cheque and that there could not possibly be any collusion.

Now the great trouble with the member for St. Antoine was he had Mr. Macdonald sitting around waiting for days and never put him on oath and never called him.

Mr. AMES. Does the hon. gentleman remember that the chairman, at the beginning of the inquiry, said that he would not permit any one to be examined except the successful tenderer, and consequently we were not permitted to call any other tenderer who had not succeeded in getting a limit.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I do not remember anything of the kind. I do not remember his having asked that Mr. Macdonald be called and he did not call him ? If he had, he would have had the assistance of those present on the government side to have him examined. I can go through this evidence and show where my hon. friend's innuendoes were unfair and his insinuations unjust.

Let us take this innuendo regarding the way tenders were opened. There was no subject dwelt upon so earnestly and concerning which so much suspicion was sought to be aroused, as the method in which the tenders were opened. The wail of my hon. friend on that subject was almost equal to that of my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) about original documents and equally as misplaced. What did the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) say on that question ? He made a very violent speech. He dwelt with that question along lines it is perhaps just as well to recall. My hon. friend (Mr. Ames) was a little more cautious than his leader on the front benches but this is what the hon. member for North Toronto said :

And that gentleman was formerly——

He was there referring to my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff).

And that gentleman was formerly a trusted employee who went into his own private room, locked the door, kept all inconvenient witnesses away and adjudicated upon the application of his brother-in-law and other relatives and party friends. I say, and I do not fear to say it, that the exhibition he made of himself in this House and in Stanstead for the advantage of his party, stamps him as a partisan who in the inmost recesses of his unwatched room, would not be beyond doing something for the good of a party supporter in the matter of tenders.

In another place he said :

When all that took place, a strong partisanship dying every fibre of his body, he was put into a darkened and seclued room and given the full power of making a decision in reference to these matters.

I need not quote the remarks of my hon. friend on this subject, though it might be as well to put them on record because I am sure, if he has any sense of fair play, he will have the manliness to stand up and declare that all the insinuations and allusions he and his confrere had made concerning the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) have been shown to be absolutely unfounded. But I shall not take time to hunt his remarks up. What was the position of affairs ? I have told you the difficulty we had in getting Mr. Turriff on the stand. My hon. friends refused to call him, but he came on the stand, and then it was evident why they did not want him. They first put Mr. Riley on the stand and he told how this matter of tenders and so forth was absolutely fair. When Mr. Greenway came on, they discovered that their fairy tales about secluded and darkened chambers and locked doors were even more creations of the imagination than one would have supposed, and that at all times in that department there was no secrecy and that there was always two persons present when the tenders were opened. When they heard Mr. Greenway's evidence, the courage of the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) and others began to ooze out and they wanted to close the investigation. They knew what Mr. Turriff was going to say and they were anxious to avoid hearing him. If we are to have any practical illustration of the glorious principle of fair play, it is up to the men who in this House slandered the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) by these insinuations regarding private chambers and locked doors, with which they flooded the press of this country some three months ago, to stand up in this House and declare that their impressions were wrong and the statements they made utterly unfounded.

Then my hon. friend in connection with limit 1031 told a story about a Mr. Mooney coming from Edmonton, and a cheque for $25,000 and a $6,000 cheque. Why there were never such cheques at all. My hon. friend from St. Antoine wants to give the impression that there was somehing terribly wrong. Mark you, he said Mr. Burrows first sent a cheque for $17,000. Look, he said, at the similarity of the tenders, look at the fact that Mr. Ross' tender was $17,010, and that Mr. Burrows cheque was $17,575, just enough to beat Mr. Ross. Then Mr. Burrows gives the $14,000 cheque because McDonald brothers came in and tendered at $31,161 and Burrows had to bid higher. So he gave the $14,000 cheque and in support of that story the hon. gentleman gave his yarn about Moroney coming down from Edmonton. My hon. friend would like people to believe that, but unfortunately when he got fooling around the envelope, it was shown that the two first tenders were received in the department fifteen minutes after eleven on the 31st December, and that this tender of McDonald brothers of $31,161 did not get in until twenty minutes later. Not only that but Mr. Finnie the manager of the Ottawa Bank came before the committee with the cheques, and the cheques on their face showed that they were issued the day before the tenders were put in, so that it was absolutely an illusion to suppose that the second cheque was put in to be added to the first in order that the amount of Mr. Burrows' tender might exceed that of McDonald brothers. That was in regard to timber limit 1031. I could take you to 1022, 1122 and 1147, where my hon. friend built better than he knew and in his anxiety to hunt all around among envelopes produced the evidence that was his undoing, so far as his theories were concerned.

Then we have this question of close bidding. We had thirteen timber limits before us. In two of those Mr. Burrows was not the highest tenderer and did not get them, so we need not worry about them. In nine of these timber limits he was the highest and he got them, and how much do you suppose he was higher than the people who were next to him in all these competitions? In those nine cases he paid $5,134 more than the total amount of the next lowest tenderers. That is a pretty substantial amount for a man to pay, and I think the argument of the close bidding is rather far-fetched. What will my hon. friend think of this case, for instance? A timber limit, range 10, lot 21, was sold by the Ontario government on February 11, 1907. The tenderers on that occasion were as follows :

Name.	Logs, per 1,000 feet.	Board, pine, per 1,000 feet.
Foss	$10 52	$35 00
Morgan Lumber Company	10 00	25 00
George Gordon	9 00	40 00
Michigan Land and Lumber Company	9 85	30 00
Burton	9 27	27 00
Shannon	9 10	35 00
Thessalon Lumber Company	8 80	1 50
Gilles	8 26	2 00
Perry Lumber Company	8 20	2 00
McCool	6 00	3 00
McFadden	7 76	2 00

The result of the above tenders was not announced till the following day. The Foss Lumber Company, Bay City, Michigan, was the successful tenderer. The Michigan Land and Lumber Company and the Morgan Lumber Company are one and the same, S. O. Fisher, of West Bay City, Michigan, being vice-president and general manager of the Morgan Lumber Company and president and general manager of the Michigan Land and Lumber Company.

The pine on Franklin Island, Georgian bay, was sold by the Ontario government by tender, September 3, to McGibbon, of Penetanguishene, Ontario, who bid $12.26 per 1,000 feet, the next tender was $12.12 per thousand, and followed by another for $12.06 per 1,000. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he should go up there and bring all his great powers of introspection and all his paraphernalia to bear on these cases, and tell us what the Whitney government do when bidding is close.

My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) is worried about the Imperial Pulp Company. We have heard many innuendoes and suggestions in reference to that. The suggestion that Governor McMillan was a member of the company and his alleged connection with it was discussed. There has never been any mystery about this company. We had full evidence in respect to it before the committee, and in the records of parliament for 1903, on the very first page of the report of the Secretary of State, there is a statement showing the incorporation of the company, the original shareholders and directors, all of them being in Toronto, and no attempt being made at secrecy. The mind that is so crooked and warped as to be able to draw some wrong intent from the association together of two men like Mr. Burrows and Governor McMillan, who has so long borne an honoured name in Manitoba, has reached a depth where he is entitled to the sympathy of any hon. gentleman. What mystery was there about the connection of these gentlemen with the company? Do the opposition expect Governor McMillan and Mr. Burrows to go around the country with a sign out: saying we are members of the Imperial Pulp Company; or do they expect them to do business as any ordinary business people would do, with an office? Where was the secrecy and mystery, except in the minds of the men who wanted to conjure up evil and could not attribute to decent men in this country the ordinary methods of doing business? They regarded it as suspicious that the tenders were signed by R. R. P. How is any tender by a company to be signed except by the secretary, or the company through the secretary, and when these gentlemen had the opportunity of bringing Mr. R. R. Pattinson before the committee they did not bring him, but were content to go around heralding these miserable innuendoes, these subversions of every principle of fair-play, as they are doing outside this House and, in a somewhat timid way, in this House to-night.

During this whole discussion not one man has been produced to show that he was unfairly treated in the tendering. It was open to my hon. friends to have brought before the committee any man to be found between Montreal and Vancouver who had any evidence that would indicate that the Department of the Interior had acted wrongly or unfairly in regard to the awarding of these timber limits. But no such person existed except in the wild imagination of my hon. friends, who had built up this fabric of suspicion which is falling and crumbling to pieces.

There has not been one actual case of land sales at the enormous prices quoted by these hon. gentlemen up and down the country, they are mere figments of the imagination. These gentlemen have taken the exaggerated descriptions to be found in the real estate offices in Winnipeg which might be found in reference to any property in boom times. In a distant province like Nova Scotia they quote these as if they were fair values and endeavour to lead our people to the belief that there have been actual transactions at these figures. There has been an absolute and complete failure of all these insinuations that have been made in regard to this matter.

Then we have the use of the photographs of the tenders by my hon. friend from St. Antoine. It is insinuated that because a man writes off a document informally, whether because he is illiterate or busy, it is suggested there is something improper. I have dealt with the question of whether there can be any inference or wrong-doing on that account and, in view of all that has occurred, I venture to say that the conduct of (Mr. Ames) in the use of these photographic documents is such that he knows that it can only convey to the mind of the man who has not studied this question an entirely erroneous impression of the true facts of the case.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. Is it permissible for the hon. gentleman to say that I know I am conveying an erroneous impression?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member will see, of course, that this is an insinuation that is not proper.

Mr. E. M, MACDONALD. I think I can say that my hon. friend, if he does not konw, is reckless whether he knows or not.

Mr. AMES. Is that proper?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think a statement that the hon. member might be reckless might be in order.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I am sure that all reasonable men will agree that there should be a limit to this particular policy that has been introduced into the politics of this country, a novelty, it would seem, introduced under the peculiar conditions that have been developed within recent times. I have never heard such an unworthy and unjust interpretation put upon evidence as was given this afternoon. No man who wanted to be judicial, who wanted to be fair to his fellow man would try to establish the conclusion sought to be established here from the evidence that is before us. If I were counsel in such a case as this, I would go before any fair-minded jury in this country, confident that the verdict would be that no case had been made out that was worthy the attention of any reasonable man. So far as the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) and other members of this House are concerned, honourable men who have been recklessly maligned by people who go up and down this country loudly announcing the principle of fair-play and the exemplification of the doctrine of the golden rule, I have never known a more unfair and unjust attack than these that we have heard made in this case.

Both in policy and practice the course of this government on this subject has been amply justified. The Minister of the Interior anticipated the opposition by months in regard to the changes in the regulations as made necessary by the changed conditions, which fact is carefully suppressed. Why the west was found by the Liberal party——

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is always ready to say 'hear, hear.' I would call his attention to the fact which he knows full well that the west was a pretty poor place when it was taken in hand by the present government. There were but few people there. And now the people are coming in in such numbers that we are making a new province every 365 days that go to make up a year. With the increasing population you have a change of conditions which makes a change of methods necessary. The Minister of the Interior has anticipated these conditions and any improvement that hon. members opposite have been able to suggest was made a part of the government working policy before it was discussed in the House by these gentlemen.

It seems to me that in the name of everything that is fair and decent, in the name of fair play and the golden rule, this policy of innuendo, insinuation and misrepresentation ought to cease. Men of all parties should come to a realization that we cannot advance in Canada unless we are prepared to treat our brethren though differing in politics as entitled to fair play, unless we realize that in dealing with public questions we must deal with them as men, and, I hope, as gentlemen. If we do this, Canada will be better off, parliament will be better off, and some hon. members of this House will be free of the consciousness which I am sure now rests on some of them, they have not practised what they preach.

Mr. EDMUND BRISTOL (Centre Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of attention to my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald). If I were to analyse his speech briefly, I would say that a fair proportion of it consisted of abuse of my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames). that another portion of it was made up of eulogy of my hon. friend from Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) and that the rest of it was made up of a discussion of what happened in Nova Scotia and a statement concerning timber limits that are two thousand miles away—statements somewhat resembling these limits in that they appear to be two thousand miles away from the facts.

Now, I hate to keep the House here for a couple of hours to follow my hon. friend through his extraordinary speech. I can well understand why the Liberal party put up that hon. gentleman whenever they get into a corner. I will give him credit for making the best defence possible of one of the worst cases that have ever come to the attention of this country. As my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has been looking for a new minister, I do not understand why he does not reward quite the ablest man sitting behind him in this respect.

It will not do for my hon. friend to talk about insinuation and innuendo. What he had presented by the hon. member for St. Antoine was a clear, precise statement of facts taken from the public records and conceded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) himself. The only innuendo —if such it can be called—in the whole case as presented by the hon. member for St. Antoine was that, after detailing each of nineteen different cases of extraordinary bidding on the part of Mr. Burrows and nine on the part of the Imperial Pulp Company, he asked the question: Was that accident or was it design? I am at a loss to understand the English language if that be innuendo or insinuation. He had a perfect right to state the facts as they appear in the records—he had the duty resting upon him as a member of parliament to do so. And we should have had a fair defence from the hon. member (Mr. Macdonald). But, instead of that, we have been treated to a tirade of abuse and to an argument relating to matters not before the House at the present moment. We have not heard an answer of any kind whatsoever to the statement of facts presented by my hon. friend from St. Antoine.

Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) takes a great deal of credit to himself because, as he says, changes have been made lately by the Minister of the Interior and that government must change their methods with changing circumstances. I am glad indeed that the Minister of the Interior, even within the past few months, has had the good sense to make changes in the regulations. But I beg to advise the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) that the regulations were criticised by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) before the changes were made, and, no doubt, the objections then taken led to these changes. It was well known to hon. members opposite that a rotten state of affairs existed and had existed in the Department of the Interior. It has been a matter of attack for the last three years. It was a matter of small moment indeed that after practically all the best timber lands reasonably convenient and accessible to the population of the west for the next twenty years had been practically given away the Minister of the Interior should see that it was right to change these regulations.

But I want to go back a little in this matter. I think we are entitled to a little better statement of the position of matters in dealing with the question. In 1897 the First Minister took into his cabinet the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton). Now, that gentleman had been in the west for twenty-five years. He was intimately associated with the growth of the west. There was no one better acquainted with western affairs, according to his own statement and that of his friends, than the hon. member for Brandon. I am sorry he is not here to-night, because I do not wish to say anything about an hon. member when he is not present to hear me. When he took charge of the Department of the Interior he was fully acquainted with the condition of affairs in the west. The hon. gentleman stated to-night that the Liberals ten years ago discovered the west. That was in 1897 when the member for Brandon was Minister of the Interior. Well, when I hear a Liberal like the hon. member for Pictou making a statement of that kind, and when I think of the years in which the Liberal party fought against the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which really opened up that western country, it seems to me that he is losing his sense of humor. Then it is claimed for the member for Brandon that he not only discovered the west, but populated it. Well, this inevitably calls to one's mind the famous North Atlantic Trading Company and the Leopold scheme and the methods that were adopted by the government to bring emigrants into this country. It recalls to our mind the reward which was given to Mr. Preston for doing the dirty work of the Liberal party by appointing him agent general in London. In 1900 another general election took place. The member for Brandon had then been in power for about three years, and had, so to speak, got his feet in the saddle. He had become master of the situation. He had got orders in council passed so that instead of matters having to go before the council he became the practical dictator of the Department of the Interior and could do as he pleased. From 1900 to 1904 we have an extraordinary history of scandals which took place in that department, and who do we find as profiting therefrom? Why, the particular personal friends and following of the ex-Minister of the Interior. We find Mr. McGregor, we find Mr. Hitchcock, we find these and other gentlemen getting thousands of acres of land by an irrevocable lease. I will not go into the details, but I will say that there has been no such record in any department of the administration of this country so disgraceful as the record of the Department of the Interior under the management of the hon. member for Brandon. After the election of 1900, when he became master of the situation, he got rid of the old and tried officials of the department who might stand in his way and we find Mr. Smart as Deputy Minister of the Interior, a certain delightful personage whose record stinks in the nostrils of the people of this country in consequence of his connection with the North Atlantic Trading Company. The mystery of that company is not solved yet. Then what happened? Mr. Smart is the gentleman who got tired in the year 1902 of opening tenders and he called in the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) to do that work. Now, does the hon. member for East Assiniboia ask what is the practice of the department in that regard? Not at all. He does not ask and he does not know, and he swears under oath that although he opened tenders in the way he described he was not concerned to know how it was done before. Well, the ex-Minister of the Interior in 1900 saw the population coming into the west from the United States and from the old country. The fame of the west had gone abroad, and he claimed for himself the credit of the influx of population. He knew that the Canadian Northern Railway was being built through that country ; he was well informed of the needs of the people and the question of timber limits, and one of the matters which I propose to take up is the fact that, although he had full knowledge of the circumstances, he not only did not change the conditions, as the present minister did two months ago, but if he had acted as an honest man, if he had a feeling of the trust reposed in him by the people and the duty which he owed to them, he would have changed these conditions in 1900 and would not have allowed the alienation of the public lands to grafters as the evidence has disclosed has been going on.

Now, I want to deal with some of the extraordinary statements of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). The hon. gentleman told us that there was not a tittle of evidence before this House that there had been a sale of any timber limits of any value. Well, Sir, I would have thought that out of common courtesy the hon. member for Pictou, knowing Mr. Rhodes, the Conservative candidate in Amherst, knowing Rhodes, Currie & Co. to be the biggest car builders in this country, would have been willing to concede that Mr. Rhodes had told the truth when, over his own signature, he had said that the Ruby Lake Lumber Company had bought a limit for $100,000. He denied apparently the truthfulness of that statement of Mr. Rhodes. We have the absolute admission of the hon. member for Dauphin that he got $80,000 for his and Fraser's share of the limits 1048 and 1049. We know that as a matter of fact they paid between them the sum of $6,000. Hon. gentlemen sitting here to-night must have felt great pain when they heard the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) describing how much money he was paying to the people of this country in timber dues. He actually paid 50 cents a thousand for sawn lumber; if he had been living in Ontario he would have paid $2 a thousand. He says that he paid out $35,000 in dues and if he had charged for his time and interest and other losses he would not have made $35,000 clear. I would like to know how many gentlemen there are in this chamber who would not be glad to pay some one else $35,000 if they could make anything like $35,000 clear by doing so. I think we need shed no more tears about this hon. gentleman when we reflect that with this $80,000 he got more money by $36,000 than the total of all these limits cost him. He says that the total money he expended was $58,000. But he and his brother Fraser make a profit on one transaction of $80,000.

Mr. BURROWS. I never said I got $80,000.

Mr. BRISTOL. I said he and his brother Fraser.

Mr. BURROWS. He is no brother of mine.

Mr. BRISTOL. I think he is a brother in this transaction. If you will allow me to make use of this term in a colloquial sense. We do you honour in associating you with him. The hon. member for Pictou, speaking of No. 1031, refers to the cheques of Mr. Finnie and he says that these cheques were both drawn on December 30. There is only one way to contradict a gentleman of that character and that is to read the evidence. I am free to say that Mr. Finnie's evidence was not as clear as one might expect but perhaps we can get at the facts. I propose to quote from pages 80, 81, 87, 88 and 89.

Q. Is there anything to show on these cheques to you, Mr. Finnie, the order in which they were made out?—A. The entry shows that they were made out, $17,575 in the first place, immediately followed the next entry by $14,000.

Page 81:

Q. Is there anything in your books to show the order in which the cheques were made out?—A. Yes, one entry follows the other.

Mr. BRISTOL

Page 87:

Mr. REID. These two cheques were issued one on the 30th and the other on the 31st December, and the ledger will show when they were issued, because the ledger-keeper marks on his ledger, '30th December so much' and '31st December so much.' That is what the book will show; these cheques show there is a possibility that one of the cheques has been altered.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). Suppose it does show that? It will show this, that Mr. Finnie, of the Bank of Ottawa, issued to Mr. Burrows a cheque dated 30th December, that is the only thing this committee is interested in, as to when the cheque was issued doesn't make any difference.

By Mr. Barker:

Q. I think there is a reason here why we should see these books. You say both cheques are dated 30th December, 1902?—A. Yes.

Q. I see they are both accepted by your bank on the 31st December, 1902?—A. They are, yes.

Q. And one of these cheques was first written '31st December, 1902,' will you look at it?—A. I know what you refer to, there is a slight mark there, that is not a '1,' it is not an alteration.

Q. It is distinct '31.' Now if it had been the other way I would understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me see what it is.

By Mr. Barker:

Q. Is not that an alteration?—A. No, Sir, these cheques were written at the same time.

Q. I dare say. Will you explain why there was first written '31'?—A. I do not think it was ever written '31.'

Q. Do you mean to say this '31' is not written distinctly?—A. There was no alteration afterwards.

Q. I do not say it was; it may have been done at the time?—A. It was done at the time, yes.

Q. How is it that the larger cheque seems to have been dated '31' and then the '0' put in afterwards?—A. I can't explain it at all.

Q. That is the date it was accepted?—A. They were both accepted on the 31st, both charged in the ledger on the 31st and both provided for on the 31st.

By Mr. Ames:

Q. Were they written on the same day that they were——?—A. Yes.

Mr. AMES. Mr. Finnie has stated they were written on the day they were accepted.

By Mr. Macdonald (Pictou):

Q. Were they written on the date they purport to be dated?—A. Yes.

Mr. AMES. I understood him to say they were dated on the day they were accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. He answered before you finished your question.

By Mr. Ames:

Q. Did you see them after they were finished?—A. I wrote them myself.

Q. Did you write them on the same day they were accepted?—A. I believe I did, yes.

Q. How do you account for the fact that they were dated on the 30th and stamped on the 31st?—A. I believe that '30' is simply an error in dating.

The final statement that Mr. Finnie makes on the matter is that these cheques were both written on the 31st and not one the 30th as stated by the hon. member for Pictou.

Q. In your belief you think they were written on the morning of the 31st?—A. I am disposed to think so.

By Mr. Macdonald (Pictou):

Q. Have you any recollection of having made a mistake on that date in the writing of these cheques?—A. No I have no distinct recollection about it.

Page 89:

By Mr. Bristol:

Q. A moment ago you told Mr. Ames that you wrote them on the 31st?—A. Not quite.

Q. Do you want to change that now?—A. Well, I may have written them on the 31st, yes.

Q. You may have written them on the 31st?—A. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If one cheque was written on the 30th and another on the 31st, it makes a lot of difference. I think it is most important.

The CHAIRMAN. He says he did not do that.

Mr. BARKER. He did not say he did not do it.

By Mr. Bristol:

Q. The cheques were both written and accepted on the same date, is that not right?—A. Yes.

That is the correct statement as regards these cheques. I am not here to say that this matter was vital or material, but I simply wished to point out, as I propose to continue to do, how impossible it seems to be for the hon. member for Pictou to quote any hon. gentleman correctly.

Now, I want to place on record, because I am really taking the speech of the hon. member for Pictou, the exact position, as I understand it, of the timber limit proposition. In the first place, the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) obtained 534 square miles in his own name, then he obtained with Cowan and Moore 250 square miles and the Imperial Pulp Company got 483 square miles. Fraser obtained the second choice or 1,048 and 1,049, 250 and 120 square miles. And so the statement was made that the Burows-Fraser combination had got 1,637 square miles. That was the statement, as I understand, that my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine, made and at the time that it was made, he believed it to be correct, but we find now that instead of Mr. Burrows getting 534 square miles he only got, when the timber was selected, 433 square miles. The Imperial Pulp Company only got 320 square miles, so that together they got 753 square miles. Mr. Fraser has still 120 square miles, making a total of 873 that the Burrows-Fraser combination got. But, there were 500 square miles, 250 of which went to Mr. Burrows and 250 to Mr. Fraser, a half interest in which has been sold by them for $80,000, making a total of 1,373 square miles that the Burrows-Fraser group obtained.

My hon. friend (Mr. Ames) has been criticised for stating that Mr. Burrows was a speculator. My hon. friend has never failed to state that Mr. Burrows owned and operated 109 square miles of timber as a lumberman but that these other limits were of a speculative character and that in the nature of things for a period of 10, 15 or 20 years, they would continue to be of a purely speculative character. For the hon. member for Pictou to go into hysterics over the alleged statement of my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine, because he had actually described Mr. Burrows as a speculator seems to me as ludicrous as some other things which were said by the hon. member for Pictou. There was another matter that seemed to give him an awful pain. I suppose that this speech has been made to-night for use in Nova Scotia. I cannot understand it being used for any other purpose because it had nothing to do with matters in question.

Mr. BENNETT. It will be of no use in the Northwest.

Mr. BRISTOL. It will be of no use in the Northwest, because they know the facts there. I do not know that it could even be used in Nova Scotia. But, as I was saying, it seemed to worry my hon. friend, that my hon. friend from St. Antoine should say that under the existing timber regulations the holders of these speculative timber limits had practically a perpetual title. I have never heard that contradicted by any one. I have heard the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) get up in this House and defend it as sound policy that it was so. But, the real essential point, in my humble judgment, of this transaction is that you will find that the Imperial Pulp Company, that T. A. Burrows, that the Cowan-Moore-Burrows syndicate and the Fraser syndicate had acquired a large proportion of these very valuable limits particularly 1048 and 1049, 500 miles of speculative limits selected out of 7,000 square miles, that they had obtained these most valuable concessions under the old regulations which were not nearly so favourable, which, of necessity, would require them to pay much less for the limits, which would, of necessity, lessen competition, and shortly after they obtained these valuable concessions, in April, 1903, this regulation was passed which made these licenses practically perpetual. Among the other things that the minister did for his friends after they acquired these limits, was that he turned a yearly license into a practically irrevocable lease. I want to put on record section 3 of the timber regulations in effect on July 1, 1898, which reads as folows:

When a licensee has complied with all the conditions herein set forth in his license and the regulations, and where no portion of the timber berth is required for settlement or other public purpose, of which the Minister of the Interior is to be the judge, the license may be renewed for another year, subject to such revision of the annual rental and royalty to be paid therefor as may be fixed by the Governor in Council.

That was the regulation under which these limits were bought. Now, the following is the regulation passed on the 14th of April 1903, and published in the 'Gazette' on the 16th of June, 1903, in substitution of the section which I have just read :

So long as the licensee complies with the conditions of his license and of the regulations, he shall be entitled to a renewal of his license from year to year while merchantable timber remains upon the area licensed. When a substantial portion of the said area has been denuded of timber the minister may dispose of the same under sale or settlement regulations provided that no such disposition shall be made of land immediately contiguous to merchantable standing timber, or in such a way as to endanger destruction thereof by fire.

And so these leases which were before that period yearly licenses became, so long as there was merchantable timber, licenses which they had the right to demand the renewal of from the government. On the 23rd of July, 1906, the Privy Council passed the following :

Therefore the Governor in Council in order to make the intention clear, is pleased to order that the said section 3 shall be and the same is hereby amended by adding to the first sentence thereof immediately after the words 'the area licensed' the following 'provided, however, that such renewal shall be granted subject to any changes which may have been made in the regulations increasing or altering the rental or dues to be paid or otherwise varying the terms and conditions under which licenses are granted.'

I am told that the following year this regulation, which changed the terms of the bargain under which these people bought, was actually inserted in the licenses granted to timber licensees without their attention being called to the fact. I am further advised that since the attention of the licensees has been called to the fact, they have made strong objections to the government for pretending to change the terms on which they purchased and to charge any timber dues or royalties which the government may think proper. See the confiscatory effect that such a clause would have. A man pays a reasonable bonus for a timber limit and he has the right to hold it so long as there is merchantable timber upon it, and then the government assumes to say that instead of paying fifty cents per thousand they may charge him $10 or $20 or any sum they like. That is practically confiscation of these limits and I am told that the licensees have entered strong objection to it. It would, of course, have been perfectly proper at the time their revocable license was being granted to have inserted such a provision, and if the government exercised proper forethought they would have inserted it, but after they had got the licensees' money and the matter had gone on for two or three years it was practically confiscation to attempt to change the contract in the manner I have indicated. So far as the Burrows-Fraser group is concerned they got the benefit of this particular transaction in that they have their yearly license turned into a practically perpetual lease.

There was another thing that afforded me considerable amusement and that was the hysteria which the member for Dauphin and the member for Pictou exhibited about poor Mr. Burrows not being called as a witness. Well, that is a most pitiable thing when you come to think it over. Our right to investigate in the committee was to find out whether the annual payments for rental made paid in respect to certain leases were correct or not. If I were to read to the right hon. gentleman the long arguments which my hon. friend from Pictou put forth in the committee to show that the chairman had no right to allow any question outside of that particular fact, even my right hon. friend's sense of the ludicrous would be aroused at the contention of the hon. member from Pictou to-night. You understand that these bonuses were paid in 1902, 1903, and 1904, and that consequently there were no bonuses in the Public Accounts but only the rental for these properties. We had endeavoured to obtain the original documents in the House and the member for Pictou seems to forget that we worked for two weeks over that before we got these documents. We thought if we went to the Public Accounts Committee we would get some light but we were met at once by the objections set forth by the hon. members from Lunenburg and Pictou, and set forth ad nauseam that we could not get evidence on anything beyond the payment of the rental itself. My hon. friend from St. Antoine asked if there had been licenses granted in respect to which this payment was made and when that lease was produced he asked to see the lease that came before it and so we got back to the original lease. Then after another fight we were allowed to see the original tender and as some tenders had no amounts stated in them and as the cheque formed part of the tender we were permitted to look at these cheques. But we were not permitted to look at any of the other tenders. We were not allowed to call Mr. McDonald as to his tender or method of tendering. Our rights were confined as I have stated, and yet we have the member for Pictou telling us to-night in the most delicious way that we had all the investigation we wanted and that we got more than we bargained for. Then we got to the point when we wanted Mr. Finnie as a witness. My hon. friend from Pictou who was counsel for the defence in this particular matter naturally wanted us to call Mr. Burrows and Mr.

Turriff ; it was their idea that we should call the defence before we had the case properly laid and we were not allowed to lay the case properly for the obvious reason that the scope of the inquiry would not permit it. And so these hon. gentlemen were anxious to place the defence on record in full without our having the case for the prosecution properly presented. There were many interesting facts we would have liked to bring out from the other tenders but we were told this could not be done. I quote from the evidence on that point.

Will you kindly take cognisance of that return, which is the return brought down to the House on March 12, 1906, sessional paper No. 39, and see whether the item there corresponds with the advertisements—will you kindly read that item——

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). Do you rule that an order, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not suppose you will be justified in going into the other tenders.

That was the ruling of the chairman, and it was perfectly proper under the circumstances, because the matter before the committee was the question of these payments and the other tenders had absolutely nothing whatever to do with them. So that when my hon. friend talks about our having had full scope to investigate, he is simply romancing, because it was absolutely impossible for us to make the full investigation we would have made, even if permitted a proper inquiry. But we had to drag out what little bits of evidence we could, with our hon. friends continually objecting, and calling on us to put the culprits in the box and let them do the talking.

My hon. friend from Pictou seemed to make a great point about our not having put Mr. Burrows on the stand. Well, I do not see that there was anything to prevent my hon. friend calling Mr. Burrows, if he wanted to put him under oath. If there is one man more than another who has declaimed in loud tones about the hon. member for Dauphin not having been called, it is the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). But what did he do ? He called on Mr. Burrows' solicitor, Mr. Fraser. He made a great fuss because we did not propose to put in Mr. Burrows' solicitor for the defence, and so he called Mr. Fraser himself. And what then did he do ? He had the audacity to ask Mr. Fraser to give under oath his reasons why other lumbermen did certain things. He took good care not to call Mr. Burrows and ask him why he did certain things in certain ways ; and there are pertinent questions I would like to put to the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) if, instead of coming under the shelter of the House, where we have to accept his statements, he had come before the committee. There we could have cross-examined him, but it is much simpler and much safer for him to come and make his statement here where he cannot be contradicted. But even if he had appeared before the committee, we had no right to controvert his evidence in any way, because we could not get beyond the scope of the inquiry which was whether the rentals paid to the Department of the Interior by Perkins, Fraser & Co., in connection with the timber agencies at Edmonton and Calgary were correct. And the man who would not let us get away from that was the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). Yet he is the hon. gentleman who cries out so loudly here : Why did you not call Burrows ? My hon. friend from Pictou called Mr. Fraser but not Mr. Burrows. They also called Miss Munro and Mr. Turriff. But poor Burrows they would not call, and consequently they are now waxing eloquent over the grievance that the opposition did not call him. I would not however like my hon. friend from Pictou to run away with the idea that we did not tell him he was the right one to do the calling. At page 92, you will see that we were not getting the information we were entitled to get. We were asking about certain cheques, and the chairman, ruling on the objection raised by the hon. member for Pictou, said :

I think that the cheques ought to be identified before the witness is asked that question and if you require corroboration—I understand that Mr. Burrows is to be called to produce these cheques.

Did the chairman understand that from us? Not at all. We never subpœnaed Mr. Burrows, and one of the theories on which the chairman ruled, was that we could not ask Mr. Finnie about certain cheques entered in his books until we had the original cheques produced. I replied as follows :

If my hon. friend calls Mr. Burrows that is another matter, but we still want further information from Mr. Finnie.

I knew that if Mr. Burrows was to be called, he was coming as witness on behalf of the government and it was for the government to call him. My hon. friend was told so by me and he was told so by the chairman of the commission. What happened further ? After this inquiry was closed, the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) came back to the committee and with the aid of the servile majority he has there, he got the inquiry reopened and held it open two weeks or more for the purpose of calling further evidence, but he never called a solitary witness. What then was the object of reopening the inquiry ? It was to prevent the subject being debated in this House when it was fresh in the minds of the people and to postpone the debate until the public had lost sight of it. He did not call Mr. Burrows. He got scared. He thought it safer to get up here and ask : Why did you not call him ?

My hon. friend spoke of Mr. Pattinson. I may simply say that we had the information from Mr. Fraser that Burrows was practically the Imperial Lumber Company, that Sir Daniel McMillan was the president and Mr. Pattinson the secretary. We did call Mr. Pattinson, but he begged off a month or more on account of his wife's illness. And as we were anxious to get the matter before the House, we did not think it worth while to postpone the debate in order that we might ask Mr. Pattinson if Burrows was not practically the Imperial Pulp Company.

But there is a little mystery still left. My hon. friend talked a great deal about the Imperial Pulp Company. He said that anybody could find out of whom they were composed. They were simply a legal firm in Toronto. Think of that. Nothing hidden. A lot of information which he gave us. An hon. gentleman wrote to this legal firm and asked who were the Imperial Pulp Company, but they declined to give any information. They said they were the solicitors. The hon. member for Pictou says we ought to have known long ago who was in this matter. Why, Mr. Fraser, the solicitor for the company, who for five years had been putting up money for the company as their agent, swore that he did not know who were the directors. While they were not secretive, he said, they were certainly not communicative. All he could tell was that Sir Daniel McMillan was the president, that Mr. Pattinson was the secretary, and that Mr. Burrows was connected with it. But although the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Burrows) has been giving this House a long statement of several hours, he has failed to solve the mystery as to who constitute the other half of the Imperial Pulp Company. It is impossible to find it out in the records of the company. My hon. friend may say that this is immaterial, but as they have made a point of the fact, I call their attention that after they have given these names, we do not know where half the company reside, and some people think it resides among some gentlemen on the other side of the House who should not have any business there.

The hon. member for Pictou said that my hon. friend from St. Antoine had stated to the chairman that his reason for wanting to see the original lease was to check the acreage or something of that kind, and that he misled the chairman in reference to that matter. My hon. friend from St. Antoine asked him in a manly way to point it out, but the hon. gentleman did not do it. I think that, in justice to my hon. friend it was only fair to him that the hon. member for Pictou should have pointed it out if he could. But I wish to call your attention to the evidence, page 16, where this matter is under discussion as to the hon. member's reason for wanting to see the lease.

Mr. BRISTOL.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). Is my friend, Mr. Ames, alleging that in the case of berth No. 1122 there is any incorrect receipt by the government or that a less amount was paid than ought to have been paid in 1906?

Mr. AMES. I am asking for similar information.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). Why are you going behind the account in 1906?

Mr. AMES. For the purpose of obtaining information in the public interest and on my reputation as a member of parliament.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). For nothing else, is it?

Mr. AMES. In the public interest, I think that is sufficient.

Here is another of these extraordinary mis-statements made by the hon. member for Pictou which I have a right to correct because it absolutely misrepresents the position of the hon. member for St. Antoine who, in the public interest, was endeavouring to get such information as the chairman of the committee would permit him.

Now, perhaps it would be wise, in view of the repeated statements of my hon. friend from Pictou, that we could have had a full investigation, to read some of the observations of the chairman and of the hon. member (Mr. Macdonald) in reference to this matter. I refer to page 10 of the evidence :

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). Has this any reference to the question before the committee ? I would like to ask whether the envelope it came in has anything whatever to do with the question now before the committee, the question that has been referred to the committee by the House whether the amount paid was correct. My friend, Mr. Ames, started out in a very guileless way to say that he wanted to prove whether this amount was correct or not in accordance with the lease.

That is the limit of the investigation and of the rights he wished to give us. But when it suited his purpose, there was no limit to the questions he was allowed to ask and did ask in reference to matters quite extraneous—for instance, what changes were made in the regulations in 1907. What had that to do with the correctness of the rental? I only mention that by the way, to show not only the unfairness but the inconsistency of the hon. member for Pictou.

My friend, Mr. Ames, started out in a very guileless way to say that he wanted to prove whether this amount was correct or not in accordance with the lease. In the goodness of your heart, Mr. Chairman, you allowed him to go outside the reference and to deal with other matters that have nothing at all to do with it. I submit that the question as to what kind of an envelope the offer was contained or that it was in blue ink or red ink, whether it was open or not, anything of that kind, has nothing whatever to do with the account of 1906.

Mr. AMES. I think that the envelope has an important bearing upon the case. It was only the covering of the tender.

And it goes on, at page 55-56 :

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). I was going to say that I do not intend asking any questions as to what took place between solicitor and client. Mr. Fraser misapprehended the object of my question.

Mr. BRISTOL. Mr. Fraser has, of course, made certain payments on behalf of clients, and his clients, he says, have given him leave to give certain information here. Now, if my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) desires to go into the whole question of the timber limits which were held by the Imperial Company and by Mr. T. A. Burrows and all matters connected with it, there is nothing that would suit us better so long as it is understood we are to be allowed to follow it up and to investigate it as fully as we can before the committee.

That is our position. Yet the hon. gentleman says we did not want inquiry. These hon. gentlemen wanted an inquiry so far as it suited them, but we wanted a full inquiry :

But I do not want Mr. Fraser to be allowed to make what I would say, and very properly say, was a statement for the Imperal Pulp Company, a statement for the defence, without us having the very fullest possible opportunity to cross-examine and call witnesses on the other side.

Then the hon. member (Mr. Macdonald) switches round.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). This has arisen from a misunderstanding of the object in asking the question. By consent of the committee, Mr. Ames has been allowed to go back to the tender, the chairman laying down certain limitations with regard to the examination upon them.

You see the hon. member (Mr. Macdonald) takes the position that we could not look at anything but the original tender.

I am simply showing Mr. Fraser tenders which were shown to Mr. Campbell, they are in his handwriting, apparently, and I am going to ask him about it.

Now, I want to emphasize that, because on that occasion and on every occasion we declared that we want investigation; we wanted to be allowed to call witnesses and to cross-examine them as to these tenders and their correctness and whether there has been fraud or not. And yet, in spite of what the hon. gentleman said in the committee, he has the effrontery, the brazen effrontery, to stand up and say that we had all the investigation we wanted and could have had the fullest inquiry. I do not happen to possess the same command of the English language as my hon. friend—I mean the same picturesque part of it—but if I had I would use some of his own words to treat the question under discussion. Now at page 60 we have this question by Mr. Macdonald :

Q. Well, now, perhaps you would just tell in detail, in so far as it is possible for you to do so, the circumstances in connection with the putting up of this berth for tender, and these two tenders that are here.

Listen to that.

Mr. BRISTOL. Mr. Chairman, there is happening now just what we outlined would happen all along—counsel for people who have got timber berths is now asked to make a statement before this committee not in relation to any payments he has made, or the legality of any tender, but an ex parte defence on behalf of the people who have obtained these berths. We have no objection to that provided we are going to be able to call all the witnesses we desire in regard to this transaction. What is going on now is virtually what we have asked for in the House, and that is an investigation into these tenders and we are only too glad to have this investigation go on, but we want to be permitted the fullest rights of cross-examination in regard to this witness and the other witnesses.

And what do you suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) said? Did he say, 'Certainly'? Not at all:

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). I was asking this witness a question in regard to a certain phase of the question, but if my friends object——

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think you ought to go beyond what has already been brought out; that is the tenders that have already been put in.

Then the witness interrupts.

WITNESS. I have not been subpœnaed for that purpose. I have not qualified myself for this examination.

Mr. BENNETT. We are simply asking the chairman if he will allow a cross-examination afterwards.

Mr. AMES. We are simply asking that the same privilege be accorded to both sides. There may not be the slightest objection, but we are simply calling attention to the fact in the fullest confidence in your fairness, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not want the inquiry to be widened; as far as I am concerned, I do not think we are here to try everything that is brought up in the House. My idea in going into the tenders the other day was that they might throw some light upon the question of the ground rent, which is the question we are investigating here, and no other question than the ground rent, but we found that the tenders will not throw any light upon the amount of the ground rent which is uniform, they deal only with the bonus. I do not think we are here to investigate the amount of tenders. That was in the Auditor General's Report of three or four years ago and is not referred to us at all. I think what ought to be done is to deal with the tenders only so far as they affect the question of ground rents. This matter has gone a little further, referring to two or three cheques being put in or items of that sort; I think that is as far as we have gone. The witness ought to be allowed to speak of it, but I do not think we should extend the investigation any further.

And yet the hon. member from Pictou has the effrontery to say that we had the fullest possible investigation, and could have examined witnesses and done everything we pleased. The ex-Minister of the Interior was fond of saying, in answer to criticisms: Why, I did just as the Conservatives did. That has really been the policy of the Liberal party since they assumed office. If we had a good policy they were willing to take it, but if we had committed sins they were willing to commit greater sins of the same kind, and say: You did it and we do the same. It was a species of Chinese imitation. The ex-minister and the member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) said that they found certain regulations which were put in force in 1894 and they were continued until 1907. Here we have changed conditions which should have been recognized by this business administration in 1906. The ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) knew the west and was alive to the conditions of settlement, he boasted of his knowledge of the timber situation. He knew that in 1902, towards the end of the year, timber was scarce. But I find in reference to timber berth 1031, which was dealt with in December, 1902, and which embraced 118¼ square miles, this letter, which I think proper to bring to the attention of the House. It is a letter from Mr. A. E. Harris, C.T.A., dated December 4, 1902, addressed to the Secretary of the Interior:

Department of the Interior,
Dominion Lands Office,
Edmonton, Alberta, December 4, 1902.

Sir,—Re notice of tenders being called for timber berths. Would you be kind enough to have forwarded to this office at least fifty copies of each notice when the tenders are called.

I may say owing to the great demand for timber and in order that the department may receive the highest bids possible I have made out a list of thirty-five different individuals and firms to whom a copy of each notice is sent when received here.

The list will increase in the future. In regard to tenders for berth No. 1031, there were just sufficient notices sent, being about forty in all, four of which are on hand at present. There are quite a few inquiries regarding the sketch map to be furnished this office in connection with this notice of tender. As yet this map has not come to hand. Would you kindly have same forwarded as soon as possible.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) A. E. HARRIS,
C.T.A.

The Secretary, Department of Interior,
Ottawa.

There are two things there of importance. First, he calls the attention of the department to the great demand for timber; and, secondly, to the fact that the sketch map, which would enable any one to find out where the timber was, did not accompany the notice. The length of notice was forty-eight days from Ottawa to Ottawa, and this was in mid-winter.

We have, first of all, a letter of December 27, to the secretary of the Department of the Interior from Messrs. Crafts and Lees, reading as follows:

Edmonton, Alberta, December 2, 1902.

Secretary Department of Interior,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Regarding a block of 118¼ square miles of timber on the Saskatchewan river advertised for tender on 31st instant, advertisement says it is in eleven blocks, must tenders be on each block separately or on the whole. Also will a tender on one or more of the blocks be considered without tendering on the whole of them. An early reply will oblige.

Yours respectfully,
CRAFTS & LEE.

There is another letter of great importance from W. S. Dwinnell, dated December 26, 1902, as follows:

Minneapolis, Minnesota, December 26, 1902.

To the Secretary, Department of the Interior, Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir,—On the 10th instant, I was advised by the Dominion Lands agent at Edmonton that berth No. 1031, district of Alberta, comprising 118¼ square miles, would be offered for sale on the 31st instant. I am already the owner of some timber in the vicinity of this berth and am desirous of making a substantial bid upon it in case there is sufficient timber to warrant it. I have been endeavouring to secure information which would enable me to act intelligently, but have not had sufficient time to do so. I would ask to have this sale postponed for thirty or sixty days, preferably the latter, to the end that I may complete an examination and make a substantial bid for the property. I am satisfied that the interests of the Dominion government would be subserved thereby, and that a much larger bid would be received than if the sale took place at this time. This tract, comprising as it does 118 square miles, is so extensive that the time given under the notice is altogether insufficient to permit any one to make proper examination thereof. It seems to me that when so large a tract is offered for sale a much longer time should be given than if the tract covered but a few square miles. I trust I may be advised at an early date of the postponement.

Respectfully yours,
W. S. DWINNELL.

Thus the department had specific knowledge at the time of the disposal of 1031 that there was great demand for timber and that a great deal more time should be given. We had a speech not long ago from the ex-Minister of the Interior, in which he said he received no letter in relation to this. He may not have received those letters, but I suppose there is some one in the department who is responsible. We have another limit, 1048, and if the Minister of the Interior did not get two letters, he got a telegram, which is more apt to call the attention of an hon. gentleman to such a matter. I have here a telegram of February 23, 1903, signed by the mayor of West Prince Albert. It is as follows :

Canadian Pacific Railway Comany's Telegraph,
West Prince Albert, N.W.T.,
February 23, 1903.

Hon. Clifford Sifton,
Ottawa.

People of Prince Albert protest against sale of timber berths north of river timber limits passing into hands of speculators to the detriment of settlers.

(Sgd.) J. F. ANSTULL, Mayor.

On February 22 he received a telegram from the president of the board of trade, as follows :

Canadian Pacific Railway Comany's Telegraph,
West Prince Albert, N.W.T.,
February 22, 1903.

Hon. Clifford Sifton,
Minister of Interior,
Ottawa.

Am forwarding you to-day resolution passed by board of trade re timber limits to be tendered for on March 7.

(Sgd. J. H. WILSON,
President Board of Trade.

Here is the resolution referred to :

Prince Albert, February 23, 1902.

At a meeting of the Prince Albert Board of Trade held to-day the following resolution was unanimously passed:

It has been brought to our attention that in terms of the notice, dated Ottawa, January 28, tenders are called for a license to cut timber on Dominion lands in the district of Saskatchewan on the following described berths.

Berth No. 1048, comprising 250 square miles. Berth No. 1049 also comprising 250 square miles.

We consider that in the interest of the town of Prince Albert and the country at large the area tendered for is too large, as few have sufficient capital to tender for such a large block and respectfully suggest that these berths be withdrawn and new tenders called for in blocks of fifty square miles and that the time for receiving same be extended for six months to enable lumbermen to examine limits for themselves.

We also further suggest that action be taken with a view of amending the present Act governing the sale of timber berths.

Sgd.) JOHN H. WILSON,
President Board of Trade.

Here is this wonderful ex-Minister of the Interior, this Napoleon of the West, this man of gigantic intellect, this man who made the west—the others only discovered it—with these facts before him, with notice that the regulations should be changed, with a request from responsible people like the mayor of the town and the board of trade, saying that a resolution had been passed asking that these 500 square miles be not offered in this way, but that the sale be postponed for six months and that it should be in small lots. Why, he has his office boy write a letter to say that they don't see any reason for changing it at the present time. Here is the letter, dated the 13th of March :

In reply we beg to say that as these berths appear to be advertised in the ordinary manner, it was not thought advisable to make any change.

And this is a Reform government ! Now, Mr. Speaker, if there had been nothing else in this whole transaction, I say we have a right to condemn the ex-Minister of the Interior and the administration on the fact that away back in 1902, with the facts before him as shown to-night by telegrams and this resolution of the board of trade, he made no investigation, he did not postpone the sale. What happened then ? Why, Mr. Burrows did not have the effrontery to-night to deny the statement of my hon. friend from St. Antoine that it was his pull with the ex-Minister of the Interior that got him these limits. He made a great many other denials, but he did not have the effrontery to make that one. What we say is this, that the ex-minister thought that under the name of William Cowan it would all be hushed up and nobody would know, and it was not until we got Mr. Fraser in the Public Accounts Committee that we knew for the first time that William Cowan's name was used by him under Mr. Burrow's instructions, and that Mr. Burrows provided the $5,000 cheque, and he never saw William Cowan. So here we have the hon. member for Dauphin sitting around with his $5,000 cheque, and we have the door closed against the possibility of bids by any other people, and we have 500 square miles of timber limits going under these circumstances to the brother-in-law of the ex-Minister of the Interior alias William Cowan, and Fraser as his satellite. The hon. member for Dauphin says he has no interest in 1049. I am bound to accept his statement. But in looking at the records we find this receipt :

September 11, 1905.

Received from Mr. Theo. A. Burrows, of Grandview, Manitoba, for John McBain, the sum of $1,250, in payment of one year's rent of timber berth No. 1049 to the 1st of May, 1906, and interest to 7th instant with the exception of $22.000 charged for interest.

(Sgd.) G. U. RYLEY,
Chief Clerk Timber, Mines and Crown Lands Branch, per Frans Loyer, bookkeeper.

Well, the hon. member for Dauphin may be a philanthropist, I dare say he is ; but when he says that he had no interest direct or indirect in this limit, I am astonished at the way he spends his money, and I am surprised that he has so much of it. He did say that he acted as agent for the sale of this property ; but I never yet have been able to discover an agent who was kind enough to pay the rent on the property as to which he was merely agent for the sale.

Apparently the relations between the Burrows and Fraser syndicate—I beg pardon, I mean the Burrows and Fraser group, are a little more intimate than the member for Dauphin has informed us to-night. I affirm that if there was nothing else shown on the records than the facts as they appear to-night, we have a right to an investigation as to that 500 square miles of timber, to find out from the ex-minister why he thought it was all right to go on in the ordinary way, and his brother-in-law sitting around here with a cheque for $5,000, which was slipped in under the name of William Cowan. Those are facts from which the people of this country will draw their own inferences. The hon. member for Pictou says that my hon. friend from St. Antoine is making insinuations; on the contrary I think that my hon. friend from St. Antoine has made the fairest and most reasonable statement that any man possibly could make on the records that are before this parliament. It will be for the people to judge whether the reckless assertions of the hon. member for Pictou are to be relied on in preference to the reasonable and well founded statements made by my hon. friend from St. Antoine on the records before this House. Now I want to emphasize this point. The ex-Minister of the Interior gets up and says that nobody made any objections. In the first place, he was there to do his work. He tells us that he is a great man, all his friends tell us that he is a man of great ability. He may be a very able man, but if so, how much greater was his responsibility when, although the mayor and board of trade of the town brought the facts before him in 1902 and asked that the timber regulations should be changed, yet this reform and business administration did not make any change until 1907. But what happens in the meantime? The brother-in-law of the ex-minister is found possessed to-day of some 500 square miles of timber limits, part of which was obtained in the manner I have described. Now if the minister knows that it is practically impossible for anybody to examine those limits except the particular man who has asked them to be put up if he prevents anybody else from examining them, if he so hedges around the regulations and tries to work them that of necessity the limits must fall into the hands of the particular person who happens to be his brother-in-law, it is as great an act of fraud against the people of this country as if there was some shuffling with cheques.

Now there is another thing that is rather amusing. The hon. member for Dauphin said he went over to the department and asked them to make up a list for him. Well, it is a great thing to stand well with the administration. When the hon. member for St. Antoine went over to the department to look at an original document, he had to get out of the office. If you are the member for Dauphin, or the member for East Assiniboia, you will have all the departmental clerks working for you, you can have all the information the department has got, all this information which the hon. member for Dauphin was so anxious to give us to show that he paid $112 a square mile on the whole for the timber limits, and the Imperial Pulp Company had paid a certain amount, and somebody else had paid a little more. Now the price paid for a timber limit naturally depends as to whether you applied and got first choice, as Mr. Burrows, or William Cowan did in connection with 1048 and paid $5,000 therefor, or whether you paid for the second choice as Fraser did, who paid $1,000. As the hon. member for Dauphin did not want anything but the very best he paid more. But even if it was, he only paid apparently for 537 square miles the sum of $58,000. But he also went to a good deal of trouble to show that there were two or three cheques used in some other instances, and he spoke in a mysterious way as to some British Columbia lumber company having paid three cheques through Wyld and Osler. While I do not know anything about the facts connected with the matter I do say that if as a result of the investigation of the department they were only able to find, outside of the Imperial Pulp Company and Mr. Burrows, three cases where there had been more than one cheque, then we have established the contention that the three cheque proposition or the two cheque proposition was the invention of Mr. Burrows or the Imperial Pulp Company.

The suggestion was made that because a Conservative firm inclosed two or three cheques in one case a matter of that kind should not be criticised. You can always get a firm of lawyers to send in a certain number of cheques or to draw up tenders. Mr. Fraser drew up certain tenders but he handed them to Mr. Burrows and Mr. Burrows put in a certain number of cheques. We have not Wyld and Osler here, but Wyld and Osler could have acted in the same way although there is no evidence of it, Wyld and Osler could have written out a tender and another gentleman could have put in as many cheques as he thought proper. Yet, you have a great effort on the part of the department to show that what was done was usual and ordinary instead of being unusual and extraordinary.

Mr. TURRIFF. It was customary in dozens and dozens of cases when tenders were put in to inclose several cheques.

Mr. BRISTOL. I am going to come to that in time. I have the hon. gentleman's evidence. I think I might as well deal with the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) now. That hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Dauphin are naturally, under the present circumstances, in the centre of the stage to a large extent. I do not suppose that if they had been guilty of any wroing-doing they would be likely to get up and admit it. It would not occur to you that any man would do that. The only thing you have on the one side is circumstantial evidence and what you have on the other side is the statement of the hon. gentleman and he has denied absolutely, directly or indirectly, any wrong doing. I suppose, that as he has gone into the box as a witness it is only fair to a certain extent to criticise his evidence. There was one thing that the hon. member for East Assiniboia was anxious to establish, in so far as I can understand his evidence, and it was that there was no change under his regime in the opening of tenders from the system which had prevailed previously. I am not going to read his evidence on that point, but I think it is a fair statement of it. I want to show you how the tenders were opened before and how they were opened during the regime of the hon. member for East Assiniboia. From 1882 to 1892 the evidence given at pages 27 and 28, shows that they were opened by two responsible persons. What I mean is that there were two people charged with the responsibility of opening these tenders. It was not an individual responsibility as it was in the case of the land commissioner who had the absolute right to do as he pleased in the matter, but there were two people charged with the duty of opening these tenders and that is the whole distinction between the two cases. At page 27 Mr. Ryley is giving evidence:

Q. How long had that been the custom in the department?—A. Well, since the summer of 1902.

Q. Previous to that, the tenders were opened by a committee of three, of whom you were one, were they not?—A. No.

Q. Were you not, in former years, one of the three who opened the tenders?—A. Two.

Q. The tenders were always opened in the presence of two or three?—A. Two.

Q. The tenders were always opened previously in the presence of two. Who were those two?—A. The deputy minister and myself, and in his absence the secretary of the department and myself.

Q. Who would they be?—A. Mr. James A. Smart, who was the deputy for some years, and Mr. P. G. Keyes, secretary of the department.

That went on from 1882 to 1902. I do not think that the hon. member for East Assiniboia showed a great deal of courage in trying to hide himself behind a stenographer. I never like to see a man trying to shield himself behind a lady. We will see what the hon. gentleman said with reference to that lady. The young lady said she was present in the office; she stated quite frankly, that she was there as stenographer and that she had no other duties to perform. At page 122 Mr. Turriff gives evidence upon this point:

By Mr. Alcorn:

Q. Did you have Miss Munro there because you considered it necessary to have more than one person present?—A. No.

Q. She was there simply to take stenographic notes?—A. She was there as my stenographer. I did not consider then that it was necessary to have anybody else, no.

Q. Then she was there simply as your stenographer to take notes?—A. She was there as one of the officials of the department to take notes.

Q. For what purpose or reason?—A. I do not know that I had any purpose in view, she was doing that particular work, keeping track of the tenders and brought them in to be opened and kept the memorandum of the amount of the tenders.

Q. She was doing her part, what was her part?—A. Taking a memorandum of the different tenders.

Q. As stenographer?—A. As an officer of the department or stenographer, put it any way you like.

Then, to show you what the hon. gentleman's view was as to what had taken place before, I will quote from page 118:

By Mr. Bergeron:

Q. That was a new feature when you opened tenders, it had not been done before by any person in that position as I understand it?—A. As I understood from Mr. Ryley's evidence tenders were opened, prior to my time, by two officials of the department, and after I took hold they were opened just the same by two officials of the department.

So you see, Mr. Speaker, the moral obtuseness which the hon. gentleman displayed in his evidence with respect to certain matters. He seems to think that when a lady acting as a stenographer was present in his office and when there were two gentlemen charged with the joint responsibility of opening tenders it was one and the same thing. Well, if that is the view of the hon. gentleman, all I can say is that I am afraid that the hon. gentleman's view is somewhat distorted and incorrect. Now, there was another matter. I have read evidence to-night, with reference to the advertisement for timber limits 1048 and 1049. I asked the hon. member for East Assiniboia if any good public purpose was served by not extending the advertisement and he said: No, there was not. But, he was so eager to defend this class of advertisement that he stated that on several occasions he thought that limits had been sold for more than they were worth because there was not time for people to examine them. It seems to me extraordinary that any official of the government should take the position that they wanted to give such short notice so that in matters of this kind they could defraud the public because they could not by any possibility properly examine the limits in the west. To give that as a reason in defence of the ex-Minister of the Interior in view of the protest of the mayor and Board of Trade of Prince Albert with reference to the time allowed for the examination of these 500 square miles seems to me certainly an extraordinary perversion of justice. My hon. friend was anxious to show that the method of tendering adopted by Mr. Burrows and by the Imperial Pulp Company was quite usual, and his evidence is as follows:

Q. Some of the tenders received in connection with these timber berths did not state the amount of the bonus offered?—A. Some of them did not.

Q. You have noticed that, was it a common thing?—A. Yes, a good many did not.

Q. A great many did not?—A. No, a good many did not.

Now, Mr. Speaker, among all these that were produced I am not aware of more than three which did not state the amount of the bonus and yet my hon. friend tells us that in a good many instances they did not.

Q. Have you from casually going through the files noticed tenders put into the department that did not state the bonus offered prior to your going into the department?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Did the tenderers always have a certified cheque or cash or both?—A. Sometimes one, sometimes the other and sometimes both.

Q. It was not an unusual thing to have the monies in cash and cheque?—A. No.

Among all these cases there is only one case where there was cash and cheque and yet my hon. friend says it is not unusual.

Q. It was not then an unusual thing to have cash accompany the tender?

I am not aware except in the two instances where the Imperial Pulp Company put in typewritten tenders and in ink was written $1,000 and in red ink was written $2,500, that any case occurred where the money was in cash. And yet we are told by this hon. gentleman that it was not unusual. And so we have the statement of this hon. gentleman, we have the statement of the hon. member for Dauphin, and we have had the statement of the solicitor, Mr. Fraser, and instead of asking Mr. Burrows why he put in double bids, and two or three cheques, and wrote tenders without stating the amount, and wrote tenders without even mentioning the cheque, we have the solicitor called to give under oath reasons that Mr. Burrows alone had in his own mind. And yet these gentlemen opposite speak of the fullness and fairness of this so-called investigation. Another humorous thing in connection with this is in respect to 1018 and 1019. We have had a good deal of explanation from Mr. Burrows, but we have not had any in respect to these two.

In this case what do we find? We find the member for Dauphin putting in a tender and supplying a cheque to Mr. Nolan to put in another tender in the same transaction. Did Mr. Burrows know there was no tender? What was his idea in putting in a fake bid himself as if he were beaten, and as if Mr. Nolan apparently got these limits? But Mr. Nolan inside of twenty-four hours executed an assignment of these limits to the Imperial Pulp Company. What was the object of the Imperial Pulp Company using other names? We have not had any explanation of that, but perhaps I may give one. I do not think that my hon. friends from Dauphin and East Assiniboia are quite as popular to-day as they were a year ago because during the last three months the people of this country have got on to the fact of who it is that were getting the timber limits. Up to the present time it was shrouded in mystery except as regards those limits obtained in his own name by Mr. Burrows, but latterly he was getting limits in Nolan's name. The Imperial Pulp Company only bid nine times and the last four bids out of nine were put in the name of others outside the pulp company. The Imperial Pulp Company itself was not sufficient to shroud Mr. Burrows and his associates and so they resorted to Mr. Nolan and Mr. Fraser, the solicitor.

I venture to think that as an opposition we have done all that it was possible for us to do in respect to this matter. We have got all the original documents we were permitted to get at; we have obtained all the facts that these documents would throw light upon ; we have examined to the extent to which we were permitted the public accounts in respect to this matter. But, Mr. Speaker, we were prevented both in connection with Mr. Finnie and by the narrowness of the investigation to get at the facts. We wanted in connection with Mr. Finnie to find out whether on the 7th of March when there were five cheques out apparently in Mr. Burrows' name, these five cheques had been charged up in the bank on that date against Mr. Burrows and the order in which they were charged up. That was a perfectly fair and proper question, but my hon. friend from Pictou who says he was anxious to give the fullest possible investigation objected, and the chair sustained the objection and Mr. Burrows was going to be called. But Mr. Burrows never was called and there never was the slightest intention of calling him and for the very obvious reason that they intended to let him make a statement here instead of where he could be cross-examined. I venture to think in view of the facts we have before us; in view of the clear and absolutely uncontradicted statements which my hon. friend from St. Antoine has made in reference to this matter; in view of the extraordinary success of the bidding of the hon. member for Dauphin ; in view of the still more extraordinary success of the Imperial Pulp Company in bidding; in view of the fact that Messrs. McDonald and others who apparently bid against Mr. Burrows only succeeded fourteen times out of thirty bids, and paid three and a half times as much as the next highest bidder for the limits they obtained while Mr. Burrows only paid 6 per cent higher; in view of such an extraordinary set of circumstances as has been shown here, I believe it would be only proper and fair in the interests of the people that an investigation should be granted now, and if the right hon. gentleman does not grant an investigation the time will come when the people of Canada will have their rights in this matter and when there will be an investigation and when restitution will be made to the country.

House divided on the amendment (Mr Lake).

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. members for East Hastings and L'Islet have not voted.

Mr. PAQUET. I have paired with the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Ross). Otherwise, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I have paired with the Minister of the Interior or I would have voted for the amendment.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Progress reported.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Supply, Mounted Police, Civil Service, Railways and other like matters.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 2.32 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 20, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES.

Mr. HONORE GERVAIS (St. James, Montreal) presented the fourth report of the committee appointed to supervise the official debates of the House, as follows :—

The select standing committee appointed to supervise the official report of the debates of this House, during the present session, beg leave to present the following as their fourth report. Your committee recommend that E. Charlier, who has been employed in the capacity of proofreader on the staff of translators of debates, be appointed as translator at a salary of $2,000 per annum, and that Rodolphe Girard be appointed to replace the former as proofreader at a salary of $1,500 per annum.

Mr. GERVAIS moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. FIELDING. Is that the one my hon. friend called my attention to to-day ?

Mr. GERVAIS. No.

Motion agreed to.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC—GUARANTEED BONDS.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 171) respecting the government guaranteed bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific. He said : The first purpose of this Bill is to authorize the Grand Trunk Pacific to pledge the bonds guaranteed by the government as security for the raising of money. The earliest legislation undoubtedly contemplated that the company should have the power to pledge the bonds as well as sell them. It would seem, however, that the machinery provided is inadequate and it is necessary to specifically give the company the power to pledge the bonds. If the market were deemed unfavourable to press the sale of the bonds, the company might raise money by pledging the bonds as collateral security. The second purpose of the Bill is due to certain judicial decisions given in England to the effect that when a bond is pledged in the way contemplated by this Bill, it is deemed to have been issued and the power of the company to sell it ceases. Consequently when the bonds given as collateral security are restored to the possession of the company the company would not have the legal right to sell them. To remove all possible doubt, we propose to declare that the pledging of the bonds will not interfere with the right of the company to sell them at a later stage. The same difficulty will probably come up in connection with other companies and it may be necessary to pass general legislation upon the subject. In the meantime, as we are dealing with this particular case, we ask that the company be given the power to pledge the bonds as security in order to raise money and that this shall not interfere with their right to sell the same bonds when the company again obtain possession of them. The third purpose of the Bill is intended to facilitate the operations of the company in the construction of the railway. To avoid delays which, it has been found by experience, sometimes happen, and enable the company to make prompt payment for work done, it is proposed that we give them a letter of credit, practically as we do now in connection with our own departments, authorizing the company to expend a limited sum, not exceeding at any time the sum of one million dollars. That letter of credit is to be dealt with in the same way as a letter of credit under our ordinary financial operations. The expenditure must of necessity be used for the purpose authorized by the Transcontinental Railway Act. At regular intervals, say at the end of each month, the chief engineer must examine these expenditures and if they all fall under the Act and are such as he can certify to, he will certify accordingly. If it be found that, under this letter of credit, the company have used the proceeds thus obtained, or any part thereof, for any purposes not entirely within the meaning of the Act, then the sum so used must instantly be made good by a deposit in the bank to the credit of the same fund from which they were withdrawn. Before any letter of credit shall be issued, the Grand Trunk Railway Company, which is the parent company, must enter into an agreement to make good any money which may be expended in the unauthorized way to which I have referred. These are the three purposes of the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the Finance Minister if he does not think this is one of the Bills which should be introduced by way of resolution.

Mr. FIELDING. At one time I was inclined to think as does my hon. friend, but I took advice on that point. It is not the money of the Consolidated Fund of Canada but money which belongs to the Grand Trunk Pacific, but inasmuch as it is raised on the credit of the government of Canada it is placed in a special account to the credit of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General and can only be drawn upon on certificates of the government engineer. The government therefore supervise the money very properly, but it is not a part of the consolidated fund. However, even if it were a part of the consolidated fund, this Bill does not create any new obligation in any way ; it simply gives directions as to the manner in which the fund already created shall be distributed. It does not create a new obligation or add to any former obligation of the government.

Mr. SPROULE. Does it not give power to raise money ?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it does not give power to raise money in the sense in which the word is used by my hon. friend ; the power to raise money has already been given by the granting of power to issue the bonds. This is a power to take the bonds to the bank, and to say : We do not find it expedient owing to circumstances to sell these bonds at present but we will leave them here as collateral. That is a power which all railways have under the General Railway Act, but for the special reasons in this case it is necessary to introduce this Bill. There is nothing unusual in the Bill, I have had it looked into and I do not think it is necessary to adopt the suggestion that has been made.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand the credit is based on money already in the funds.

Mr. FIELDING. Quite so, and only on the money derived from these bonds. It is not a letter of credit on the consolidated fund at all.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not an advance.

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, no.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—JUDGE CASSELS INVESTIGATION.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What amount per day is being paid to Messrs. Watson and Perron, as counsel for the prosecution of the inquiry before Judge Cassels?

2. Are they now at work, and will their work be continued during the time the court is adjourned?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) :

1. Mr. Watson is to be paid a retaining fee dependant upon the extent of the inquiry and $100 a day with necessary out of pocket expenses.

No arrangement has yet been made with Mr. Perron as to the amount of his fees.

2. The government is not informed whether counsel are now at work, but it is inevitable that considerable work will have to be done at times when the commissioner is not sitting for the actual hearing of evidence.

WHARF AT POINTE-AUX-TREMBLES.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. What was the date fixed, in 1904, by the Department of Public Works for the reception of tenders for the construction of a wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles, county of Portneuf?

2. What is the date of the contract of Dusseault & Pageau for the construction of that wharf?

3. In virtue of their contract what length of time was given them to construct that wharf?

4. As Dusseault & Pageau were not able to construct the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles on the date specified in the contract, what was the date fixed by the Department of Public Works for the completion of the construction of that wharf?

5. On what date was the notice to that effect given to Dusseault & Pageau?

6. Were there any complaints against the contractors, Dusseault & Pageau, in regard to the construction of the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles? If so, by whom, what was the nature of such complaints, and were they written or verbal?

7. At what date did Dusseault & Pageau suspend their work?

8. What are the names, Christian names and residences of the engineer and inspector who had the superintendence of the construction of the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles?

9. Did the engineer make any report against the work done by Dusseault & Pageau?

10. What is the estimated amount of the material that Dusseault & Pageau had upon the ground when they suspended work?

11. What is the amount estimated by the engineer for the work done by Dusseault & Pageau when they suspended work?

12. What amount was paid on account of their contract to Dusseault & Pageau, and what is the date of each such payment?

13. Was anything paid to Dusseault & Pageau, or to any other persons, in connection with the construction of the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles, since the suspending of the work? If so, to whom, at what dates and what amounts?

14. Was anything done in connection with the construction of the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles since Dusseault & Pageau suspended work?

15. Before receiving the contract for the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles, had Dusseault & Pageau performed any other contracts for the Department of Public Works? If so, what were those contracts?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). My hon. friend will see that this question is a very lengthy one. All I can say is that all the papers connected with it and which are necessary to enable the answer to be made are with the Public Accounts Committee upon the motion of the hon. gentleman who has placed the question on the Order Paper. If the hon. gentleman will ask the committee to return the papers I will have much pleasure in having an answer prepared.

Mr. TAYLOR. Stand.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question will stand.

DREDGING AT FORT WILLIAM.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

What amount was paid to the Great Lakes Dredging Company, for work done at Fort William or Mission river for rock and other material, respectively, during last year?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

For rock	$ 4,094 00
For other material	257,146 29
Allowance for extra haul	48,465 35
	$309,705 64

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS.

On the orders of the day being called :

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether it is proposed to go into motions again this session, but I notice that there are some very important pieces of information called for by motions for returns. It might be possible to run through the unopposed motions at some time and get them off the paper.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall be happy to look at it.

SUPPLY—STANSTEAD ELECTION PAPERS.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before you leave the chair, I would like to bring to the attention of the House very briefly the circumstances attending the loss or destruction of the papers connected with the Stanstead election of 1908. I thought the matter of sufficient importance to justify me in procuring a copy of the evidence which is too long to read to the House, but the facts in which I shall bring to the attention of members. In the first place it would appear that the present Clerk of the Crown in Chancery received a letter from the solicitor of the petitioner on the 23rd of April, 1908, inquiring who was the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery at that date and asking that information for the purpose of serving a subpœna upon him in order that he might produce papers relative to the by-election in Stanstead in 1908, which was then under consideration upon the proceedings already taken in the court. It would appear that that letter was answered by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the 24th of April and that before answering the letter, the purport of which does not appear from the evidence, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery made search in his office and discovered that the papers referred to, that is the papers relating to the by-election of 1908, were missing and that in the box or place where he might have expected to find them he found instead the papers relating to the Stanstead general election of 1904. It does not appear that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery made any communication whetever of this very important fact to the solicitor of the petitioner, and I gather from what has been said by the right hon. the Prime Minister that he was consulted upon the subject by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery immediately after the loss of the papers was discovered.

I would not have brought the matter up for the purpose of making the observation I am about to make, but I think it is pertinent to make it in this connection. It would seem to me to be the duty of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery—and it would have been proper for the Prime Minister to have advised the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery of that duty—to acquaint at once the solicitor of the petitioner with the fact that public documents of this country, properly required for the purposes of a trial which would determine the right to a seat in this House, could not be found and were either destroyed or stolen or made away with in some manner. It is perfectly obvious to any hon. gentleman in this House who realizes the importance of this matter, that that should have been done. To prove the election properly under such conditions it would be necessary to have certain searches made and certain inquiries carried on in order that secondary evidence of that which would be properly proved by the best evidence, might be admitted by the judge presiding at the inquiry. If it had happened that the judge presiding at that inquiry had not granted an adjournment, very serious consequences might have followed the failure of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to adopt the course which I have suggested as a proper one for him to adopt. As a matter of fact, the counsel for the petitioner with whom I have conversed on this subject, states to me that he did not know until the witness actually went upon the stand and gave his evidence, that the papers would not be forthcoming ; and although he made inquiries from Mr. Foley after his arrival at Sherbrooke, as to the production of the papers, he was unable to obtain any information upon that subject.

Now the facts seem to be these : in the first place, let me say at once that whatever suspicion, if there be any suspicion, may attach to the loss of these papers—and I am not suggesting any suspicion at the present moment—the late Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, Mr. Lamothe, is absolutely above any suspicion whatever, either as to his character or his ability. All who knew that gentleman realize that the proper discharge of his duties of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was his chief consideration, and no one would for a moment suppose that he would be concerned in any way, either directly or indirectly in any act at all improper in connection with these papers or any others. His assistants and clerks I believe to be equally reliable and faithful. It appears that Mr. Lamothe fell ill in March, and that during the month of March he suffered more or less from the disorder which eventually carried him off. It appears further that the papers relating to the Stanstead by-election had been received on the 5th day of February by registered mail from the returning officer ; and also that a man by the name of L'Heureux came to the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the 8th or 10th of February in order to ascertain if any papers in that office were ready to be taken away and burned. I should perhaps state in this connection that it is the practice, in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery as in other departments of government, to give to this man, who has some contract or mandate for that purpose, the papers which are useless and which it is desired to get out of the way. He came on the 8th or 10th of February, but the evidence is not very plain, so far as I can understand it, whether he actually took away some papers at that time, but it is probable that he did so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Who is L'Heureux ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. L'Heureux is a carter or a man of that class, who is employed in the various departments of the government, and in this building I think, to come and take away the papers that are put aside as waste and useless. I understand that he takes them away and destroys them in a furnace. It appears that L'Heureux went to the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery about the 8th or 10th of February, and it would appear probable that he did take away some papers on that occasion. But it is to be remembered that the papers relating to the Stanstead election had been received in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery only three days before. The papers are kept in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, in pigeon holes, each one having a door which is fastened by a key, and I believe that one or two keys fit practically nearly all the locks on these pigeon holes.

Mr. Lamothe was last in his office on the 1st day of April, 1908, and he died on the 8th day of April. He was subpœnaed to attend the hearing of the preliminary objections apparently for the 6th day of April, 1908. I gather that by inference rather than by direct statement. It would appear that the hearing was adjourned in consequence of his illness to the 6th day of May. At all events he was subpœnaed on the 1st day of April, and that was the day on which he last attended in his office. Mr. Chadwick, a clerk in the office, declares in his testimony that he saw the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery get the papers ready after receiving the subpoena on the 1st day of April. He is not sure as to the date, and he says further in his evidence that in the ordinary course Mr. Lamothe would have done this about two days after receiving the subpoena. He seems to be confident however that he saw him get the papers ready for the purpose of taking them to the hearing of the preliminary objections. If that is correct, and I think it is, Mr. Lamothe must have done that on the 1st day of April, the very day on which he received the subpœna, because he was not in his office after that date.

Mr. Foley was appointed Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the 21st day of April. During the interim there was no person specially charged with the duties of the office, except in so far as Mr. Chadwick and the young lady stenographer who was employed in the office, might be considered as invested with any mandate to discharge such duties. Mr. Foley, the present Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, attended at the preliminary objections on the 6th day of May, when he made known for the first time the fact that the papers were missing. He says that after receiving his subpœna to attend the hearing he immediately proceeded to look for the papers, and he then discovered the box bearing the label 'Stanstead by-election, 1908,' and he proceeded to get those papers ready to take with him in attending the court in obedience to the subpœna; and happening by accident to look into one of the envelopes, he discovered that these papers were really the papers for the general election of 1904, and not for the by-election of 1908. He discovered, however, in the box, along with the other documents, the stamp used for the purpose of the by-election of 1908, but he did not discover the stamp used for the election of 1904. The stamp of course does not accompany the copy of the deposition which I have, but an impression had been forwarded. It is just a stamp containing the words 'Returning officer, Stanstead, 1908.' I will not weary the House with reading any portion of the evidence giving Mr. Foley's explanation of the presence of that stamp. I could not follow very clearly the explanation, and I am inclined to think that there has been some mistake on the part of the stenographer in taking down the evidence. That of course very often occurs. For example, on the top of page 4, he gives the following answer :

Did you make search yourself?—A. Yes, Sir, I made most diligent search myself and also my deputy Mr. Chadwick whom I called in at once. And we both made all possible search for the papers, but could find nothing else. Mr. Chadwick afterwards went to Mr. Lamothe's house and made search there without avail. The only evidence I could find of the 1908 election in the box, is the little stamp that I have here (witness produced a rubber stamp). I suppose that was on account of the box being placed on one end, this remained on the bottom.

It is the last sentence of the testimony which I have just read that I do not understand. It does not afford to me, at least, an adequate explanation of how it was that although all the other papers relating to the Stanstead election of 1908 disappeared, this rubber stamp was found in the box where these papers should also have been found. So much for the circumstances of the case.

Mr. BENNETT. Would it not have been thrown in outside of the envelope ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know whether or not the evidence gives us any information in regard to that. I made some inquiry and I understand that the stamp might come back in a bag with other papers or it might come with another parcel. I do not feel that too much importance should be attached to the fact that the stamp was found in the box. But, it is a singular circumstance that every other paper which should have been found in the box had disappeared and that the stamp of 1908 was found there while the stamp of 1904 was not found there. The matter with which I am chiefly concerned, in bringing this subject to the attention of the House, is this : the evidence disloses that a great many persons have access to the office, persons employed in the building who require to visit the different rooms for any purpose, all these possess keys to this room. For example, the engineers and other persons requiring to do any work in the different rooms of this building possess keys. The messengers of the House possess keys. I am not making reference to these persons with the slightest idea of casting suspicion upon them, but simply in connection with another circumstances which is of the gravest possible nature and it is that a great many keys are available for this room and any person who can obtain access to this room, can, by using two or three keys, of the most ordinary description, find eventually a key which will open every one of these boxes and expose to that person public documents which may affect the seats of half a dozen members of this House. I have made inquiry on the subject heretofore and I understand that the officials of the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery have been asking for two years that they should be provided with steel file cases which would make these papers absolutely secure. These file cases would be provided with locks which would not be susceptible to being opened by such ordinary means as those I have indicated.

We do not know what may be the result of the loss or destruction in the present case. I do not desire to make any comment upon the Stanstead election. I did not rise for the purpose of doing it, but let us assume an election in which there were not only genuine ballots but ballots fraudulent upon their face such as we discovered upon examination of the ballots of the West Huron and Brockville elections ; does not my hon. friend the Prime Minister, does not every member of this House, realize how absolutely essential it may be to the interests of persons concerned in such frauds that the ballot papers in that particular case should be destroyed, and should not be forthcoming when they were called for upon the preliminary inquiry or any other inquiry ? That emphasizes the absolute necessity of providing the clerk of the Crown in Chancery with proper steel cases secured by proper locks in order that public documents of this character which may be required in the courts of the country may be preserved and in order that parliament may be properly and regularly constituted. As I have said here I understand that has been the urgent wish of the officials in that department during the past two years and such a wish has been expressed on several occasions, to the proper authorities who have, up to the present time, absolutely disregarded it. Then, there is another suggestion that I would like to make to the government, that there should be some departmental inquiry or investigation, or an investigation by the House, if necessary—the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is attached to what department ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He is attached to the House of Commons.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He is not attached to any particular department ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No. When Mr. Lamothe was in office the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was attached to the Department of the Privy Council and had been for some years, but it was suggested that he should be attached to the House of Commons to which he properly belongs and when we appointed a successor, Mr. Foley, we transferred him to the staff of the House of Commons.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I recollect that the right hon. Prime Minister announced that owing to the suggestion made by the Civil Service Commission that change had been made. It would seem very desirable that Mr. Speaker should make some investigation into this matter if it were not thought worthy of the attention of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I would be inclined to think that an inquiry should be prosecuted at once. It is not for me to say how serious under the present circumstances may be the loss of these ballots. It is represented to me that the loss may be a very serious one in prosecuting the inquiry which it was proposed to carry on by the proceedings in the courts. I am not at the present time attaching blame to any of the officials. I have not the material upon which I could be justified in imputing blame to any official, and I should require circumstances of a very cogent nature before I would propose to cast that blame. But, there are two things which are absolutely certain. In the first place, Mr. Lamothe was not only a most conscientious officer, but he was a most careful and diligent officer in the discharge of his duties. One finds it difficult therefore to believe that on the 8th or 10th of February last, three days after he had received the papers relating to the by-election in Stanstead, he should have sent these papers away to be destroyed, making the mistake of believing that they were papers which had come to him in connection with the general election of 1904. I find it very difficult to bring myself to the conclusion that there was any such mistake as that and yet it is the only explanation which has been vouchsafed up to the present time. In the second place, I desire to call attention once more to the urgent, thorough necessity of providing the officials of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery with such steel cases, or other appliances of a like character, as will place suspicion of any wrong doing in connection with a matter of this kind absolutely beyond question. At the present time we have this condition of affairs: The papers have been lost, a certain explanation has been given and that explanation depends upon the most remarkable negligence and inadvertence on the part of a very capable, reliable, diligent and conscientious officer. If we do not accept that explanation then we simply require to conjecture some other and it is impossible to conjecture any other without at the same time casting suspicion which ought not to be cast without adequate and grave reasons. It surley is undesirable that the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery should be accessible to so many persons and that it should not be provided with the means of keeping these papers absolutely safe and secure. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I thought it nothing more than my duty to bring the matter to the attention of the government in the earnest hope that immediate steps will be taken so that an occurrence of this kind cannot possibly come again to the attention of the House.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). My hon. friend has paid to the late Mr. Lamothe a tribute of which he was altogether worthy; no more faithful officer ever lived. I may say also that to Mr. Chadwick, the other clerk in the office, the most unqualified commendation can be given.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Chadwick is also a most honourable and painstaking officer. Mr. Foley, the present Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, is also a very excellent officer but of course he had nothing to do with this. The office of the council of the Crown in Chancery is in this building and Mr. Foley before his appointment was working in the Privy Council office in the eastern block. It is difficult to account for such an accident. but having given it consideration since it was brought to my attention I must say the conclusion I have arrived at is that the papers disappeared before the death of Mr. Lamothe. I do not care to enter into this further than to say that I believe it was the result of an accident and nothing else. I think everybody admits that. My hon. friend has stated that Mr. Lamothe and Mr. Chadwick of late years have repeatedly made applications for these steel cases. These applications would necessarily come to me first and if Mr. Lamothe did make such an application I must say that I do not remember it. If a requisition of that kind should come to me, after having discussed it with the officers I would send it immediately to the Department of Public Works. But I have no recollection of having received such an application although it is quite possible it may have been made. As to the suggestion that the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is accessible to several people, I think that applies to every office in the departments, for the charwomen must go there every morning and other people must of necessity have access.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course that is absolutely necessary and I was not objecting to it. I merely mentioned it to show the necessity for providing these steel file cases so that those who go into the office could not get at the papers.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery properly belongs to this House and there is no reason at all why it should be attached to any department of the government. When the commission reported that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery should be on the staff of the House of Commons it seemed to be perfectly reasonable, and when we appointed a successor to Mr. Lamothe we put him at once on the staff of this House and he is now under the jurisdiction of Mr. Speaker and not under the President of the Privy Council as was formerly the case. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is the custodian of the archives connected with elections to this House and he therefore holds a very important position. I welcome the suggestion that we should have an investigation so that attention may be given to the advisability of taking extra precautions for the keeping of these records. If it be the wish of my hon. friends opposite I should be quite willing to consent to the appointment of a special committee to investigate the whole question. I may say that the matter was brought to my attention for the first time shortly after Mr. Foley assumed office. He came to my room in the House of Commons, on what date I do not remember further than it was Friday afternoon and he had been summoned to appear at the trial on the following Tuesday. I advised Mr. Foley to at once report to the Speaker of the House and to get from the Printing Bureau a list of the electors so that if the solicitor for the petitioners wanted secondary evidence, that might facilitate the proceedings. I repeat that we are only too happy to have any further investigation as to the cause of the accident, if the cause can be found, and with a view of guarding against as far as possible any such accident taking place in future.

Mr. FOSTER. This matter has been known for some time; is it true that up to the present no special investigation has been made?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No special investigation has been made and I do not see what special investigation could be made. Nobody blames Mr. Lamothe and everybody must come to the conclusion that it was merely an accident. If there was any reason to suppose that there had been dishonest design in the destruction of these ballots the case would be different, but I cannot see for what purpose anybody would destroy these ballots.

Mr. FOSTER. The purpose is very evident.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is not evident at all. As I understand it the controversy in the courts is simply as to a matter of form and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery was summoned to give the usual formal evidence as to the holding of the election. These papers having been destroyed it is not difficult at all to make secondary evidence.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. FOSTER. If the process is to eventuate in anything, the case would come to trial and then the ballots would be important, and the ballots have gone.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As I have been informed, the preliminary objection has been taken in the trial that the returning officer did not initial or certify the lists which were delivered to the deputy returning officers, and if that be the point it can be determined by secondary evidence. As a fact I understand the returning officer admits he did not sign these papers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Prime Minister is quite right that secondary evidence could be produced and it would be foolish for any one to suppose that the petition would be absolutely defeated by destroying the ballots. But the importance of the ballots does not cease there, because if certain fraudulent acts have been committed at certain polls the production of the ballots would be an important feature.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am informed by the counsel for the petitioner that he regards the ballots as very important evidence for his client.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is the first intimation I have of that.

Mr. FOSTER. The really important point is that it is possible for ballots to be destroyed in any way, thus rendering the restitution of his rights to an aggrieved candidate practically impossible. Surely it is important that such an occurrence should be inquired into. The gravity of the whole thing, I think, is in that. Granted that Mr. Lamothe was not to blame—and in that opinion I agree heartily with the Prime Minister and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition—the ballots have disappeared. It is just as fair to suppose that Mr. Lamothe did not by accident destroy the ballots or allow them to be destroyed, as it is to suppose that he may have committed an error unwittingly and thereby the ballots have gone. It is just as easy, and I think much more natural, to suppose that a third party has been able to intervene, and for some purpose or other to do away with the ballots. I would rather suppose that than that Mr. Lamothe, a very careful officer, who has been in that office for a long while, could have allowed the ballots to have been taken away in mistake for those of 1904; and it is to me a little startling that the Prime Minister seems to have thought that it was quite well enough to let the matter slip along and to make no investigation of it at all, but only now is willing to take the suggestion that has been made. It seems to me that such a thing ought immediately to have been put in the hands of the Dominion police. They work by clues, and might have been able to discover whether or not some third party had intervened and had made away with the ballots. That is a supposition that is quite plain to be taken.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My opinion and my information is that there was nobody to blame, but that it was an accident; but I concur in the suggestion of my hon. friend that the matter should be investigated by a special committee of this House with the view of ascertaining the cause and what precautions may be taken to prevent similar accidents in the future.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). As the right hon. leader of the House has explained, it is only recently that the officer has been transferred to the jurisdiction of the House of Commons. I am aware that since that transfer has been made, Mr. Speaker has communicated with Mr. Foley, now the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and has requested him to make suggestions as to what improvements he would wish to have made for the better care of the documents, in the way of improved accommodation or otherwise. No doubt, if there has been any laxity, the necessary arrangements will be speedily made for the better care of the documents in the future. Mr. Speaker has already taken action for that purpose.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The peculiarly regrettable feature of the matter seems to be this. We have had twice in the history of Canada the destruction of ballots and papers that were supposed to be necessary and valuable for determining the result of a contest in the courts over elections, once in Toronto, and once here; and is it not strange that the papers in both cases disappeared apparently at the very time they were most needed, and that the history of the loss appears to have been exactly the same in both cases—they were destroyed by accident? In the West Elgin case the ballots were burned, as it was said to be the custom to burn the ballot papers after they were several years old; and those which had come in recently got mixed with the old ones. Does it look natural or reasonable, that any business man charged with the responsibility of keeping the papers relating to an election of three or four years ago would allow them to get mixed up with the papers relating to an election of only a month ago? It does not seem to me to be natural or probable or reasonable. Therefore, while not desiring to say too much on this matter, I cannot refrain from the suspicion that there is fault somewhere, and that the act was the result of design rather than of accident. In both cases the papers were destroyed just when an election contest was going on in the courts, and when the destruction of the papers would serve the interests of the same political party, once in the province and once in the Dominion. Another strange coincidence is that an important member of the cabinet was the confidential adviser of the party in Ontario at the time that this happened there, and when the fact came out the same explanation was given that is given to-day in this instance. This shows either that great minds run in the same channel or that it was really and purely a coincidence. Another feature that seems to be interesting is the fact that when the matter was brought to the attention of the government, they made no effort to ascertain the cause of it. The destruction of these papers might result in keeping a member improperly sitting in this House for the remainder of the term, or they might put him out of the House by disclosing irregularities or devices that in law would be very serious punishable offences. But the destruction of the papers destroyed all that. The very fact that these weighty consequences were involved, and that it is very desirable that all public officers should be above suspicion with regard to the faithful and careful discharge of their duties, should have led to a most searching inquiry at the earliest possible moment so as to satisfy all that it was purely and simply an accident and nothing else. If that had been done, the incident would have ended there; but the indifference of the government with regard to it in itself creates the suspicion that they did not think it worth while to have an inquiry made until some one brought it to the attention of the House, and then they say if the House desires they will have an inquiry. If such a thing had happened with the other party, either in this House or in Ontario. I venture to think that not a moment's delay would have occurred before a most searching inquiry would have taken place to ascertain what was the real history of the destruction of these important papers.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To-morrow I will move that this matter be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or, if hon. gentlemen prefer, to a select committee.

THE PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. LORENZO ROBITAILLE (Quebec). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Agriculture to certain reports in the newspapers. It is stated in the 'Star' of Monday, the 18th May, that at a meeting held at Knowlton on Saturday, the 16th, the Hon. Sydney Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, declared that 'provincial politics must go hand in hand with federal politics, for both are destined to work for the good of the country.' In the 'Herald' of May 18 it is stated:

Hon. Mr. Fisher congratulated Mr. Vilas on his record at Quebec, and on the evident approval of the electors of Brome. There was, he said, an intimate connection between the politics of the province and the politics of the Dominion, because each was destined to conduct the country in the same paths of progress and prosperity.

The 'Free Press' of May 15, giving a report of the meeting at the Russell House, reports the speech of the Hon. Mr. Graham thus :

He (Hon. A. G. Mackay) stood for the same Liberalism as did the federal party, and the Dominion leaders were behind him.

The 'Evening Journal' of the 15th May reports the same hon. gentleman thus :

I want to say that as a member of the federal government I believe in and support Mr. Mackay as the leader in Ontario.

I would ask the hon. gentlemen if they are reported correctly. Also, I would appreciate the courtesy if the right hon. leader of this House would say whether he approves of provincial issues being identified with federal politics ?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). All I have to say is that I am a supporter of the Hon. A. G. Mackay in the province of Ontario and am proud of it. I do not propose to go into a discussion of political issue. Mr. Mackay is well able to do that himself. If he were holding a meeting to-morrow, and if I could get away, I would be on the platform behind him or beside him.

THE QUEBEC TERCENTENARY—MOBILIZATION OF MILITIA.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL (South Toronto). Before you leave the chair. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be permitted to make a few remarks regarding the abandonment by this government, to a great extent, of the military demonstration at the Quebec tercentenary. The present attitude of the government is an abandonment of the intended mobilization of the militia of Canada at that celebration. The matter is one, in my opinion, of very great, if not of immediate, public importance. The people of Canada have been led to believe by the government that at least fifty per cent of the Canadian militia, besides the permanent force, would be mobilized at Quebec on the occasion of the tercentenary celebration. When the Minister of Militia was passing some of his estimates, as far back as the 27th March last, the question came up and he then said, as far as I was then able to understand, that the government had made certain arrangements with regard to this matter. On that occasion hon. gentlemen on this side who spoke supported the proposition, and the House was unanimous in its approval of the course then outlined by the hon. minister to abandon the rural camps in the summer and have only one camp or mobilization of our militia on the Plains of Abraham or thereabouts at Quebec. On that occasion the government made a contract with this House and the people and the militia of this country that that proposal would be carried out. But we are now told something entirely different. We are told, if we are told anything definite, that it is proposed to abandon the position then taken for the reason that the transportation companies are unable or unwilling to convey the militia at a time when they have to convey such a large concourse of people as will necessarily go to Quebec. As early as 27th March last, the Minister of Militia, who ought to have been aware of the attitude of the transportation companies, said, as appears on page 5748 of 'Hansard':

The department appreciate the importance of this matter of transportation, and the very first thing we did was to address letters to all the transportation companies to ascertain what kind of accommodation they will be able to give us. The answers are coming in now.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. That was as far back as the 27th March last, and it was not until the 13th May that this House was startled by the announcement of the Minister of Militia of the practical abandonment of this proposition. The government appointed a commission, and the members of that commission were appointed by the right hon. gentleman himself previous to the announcement of the Minister of Militia, and into the hands of that commission was committed the programme for the celebration at Quebec. It seemed to me that that was a matter which the government should not have delegated in that way. It seems to me that the duties were such as they should have performed themselves, and that they were in a better position to deal with these matters and the transportation companies than would be the commission. Be that as it may, the government appointed this commission, composed of very able men, and this commission mapped out a programme, which they published throughout Canada and the neighbouring republic and in fact the whole world. That programme consisted of four features. One was the mobilization of our military, which was practically Canada's only contribution to the event. Then there was to be a display of the British fleet, and I believe France and the United States were also asked to send warships to participate in that naval display, and then there was to be a grand pageant during eight or nine days depicting various scenes in the early history of this country, and in the end there was to be a display of fireworks and an illumination. The commission, on the faith of the government's attitude, and no doubt carrying out their instructions, proceeded upon the basis that there was to be a mobilization of the army of Canada. That was something to be desired and which had not heretofore taken place in our history. The people were to be treated to a display of Canada's national army, mobilized to the extent of some 20,000 or 25,000 men. It was largely on that basis that the attraction of the celebration was based. That was to be the great attraction, as far as we are concerned in Canada. The British people were to contribute their quota towards the entertainment, and there is no reason to suppose that they will not carry out their engagement. The commission, having made these tentative arrangements, proceeded to Quebec. I am informed that they went there in company with the officials of the Militia Council. At all events these officials went to Quebec and viewed the property where it was proposed to locate the camp, and in a general way mapped out arrangements for the accommodation of these men and for the carrying out of the military features. Let me say in passing that there can be no excuse for withdrawing the military mobilization scheme because of the lack of accommodation at Quebec, because the soldiers would in no way trespass upon the accommodation of civilians.

They would be provided with accommodation by the Department of Militia, entirely independent of the civilian quarters of the city so that they would not in any way interfere with the citizens. The commission proceeded upon that basis, so I am informed, and had interviews with the transportation companies who, while not anxious to undertake this matter, were ready to transport these troops and carry out the arrangement as intended, but in view of the expected congestion of traffic on the occasion, they asked to be allowed to take the troops down two days earlier and remove them from Quebec two days earlier than was otherwise intended. Even if the transportation companies were allowed to have their way, surely that was ground on which they could have been meet. If the abandonment of this whole matter hinged upon the presence of the troops there two days earlier than the people would arrive and their withdrawal two days earlier than the people would leave, surely that is a flimsy reason for the abandonment. Whether the transportation companies were right or wrong, if this arrangement could have been made to bring the troops there as I said two days earlier, it was surely worth while meeting them in that matter. The people were informed that these troops would be present, various contributions poured into the fund for this purpose, the province of Ontario contributed, I think, $100,000 and the province of Quebec $100,000, and there were other contributions from private persons, some in England and some in Canada. It seems to me that one feature of the programme on which these contributions were based was this military display. Why has it been abandoned? What sufficient reason is there for the abandonment? The military of this country were given to understand that they could have this opportunity of meeting in a joint camp. The citizen soldiery of the province of Ontario, and especially of Toronto, have looked forward to this, many of them have made their arrangements for the summer accordingly. the regiments have filled up to complete strength, and this is due in no small measure to the opportunity they expected would be afforded them in participating in this manœuvre and going to Quebec. Is the government going to break faith with the people and with the military of this country? Surely some way can be found by which the original arrangement can be carried out. It seems altogether a flimsy excuse to say that the transportation companies must have their way in this matter and not carry these troops. The Minister of Militia would naturally be expected to know before he announced his scheme to the country whether or not the military could be entrained and properly handled. He said in this House on a subsequent occasion that the Militia Department could mobilize and handle twice that number of troops in 48 hours at a central point like Quebec where a number of railways centre. The commission have made their arrangements, the public have made their arrangements and now we are practically told that with the exception of the permanent force there is to be no military demonstration. That I think is not an unfair meaning to take from the remarks of the Minister of Militia who has said in the House :

> A considerable portion of the permanent force will be sent to Quebec. What other portions will be sent I cannot say, but as soon as it is decided I shall be prepared to make an announcement to the House.

The impression has got abroad in this country that there is an abandonment of the whole military feature, except perhaps that it will be taken part in by the permanent force. If there is to be a renewal of this arrangement let it be announced at once. The time is approaching when the celebration is to be held. 25,000 men cannot get away on an hour's notice, and it seems to me the government have not kept faith with the militia or with the people of Canada or with this House. The railways, of course, expect a large concourse of people and the number who will attend is largely due, I believe, to the expected appearance of the military. When it is found that the military are not to appear it seems to me that Canada is practically abandoning all the portion that she was to contribute to that display. It is my opinion that the attendance will fall off in proportion. None of us want to see this celebration a fizzle, we all want to see a large number of people there, but certainly if the plans at present contemplated by the government are pursued, there will be a great reduction in the number of people who will go there. If the government do not intend to abandon it they should, at the earliest possible moment, make an announcement to the country of what they intend to do so that people would know what part the military are to play in this celebration.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). I wish to reassure my hon. friend at the outset that there has been no abandonment of anything. There has been a change of plans, although at the time this matter was first mentioned in the House, on the voting of certain supplies to the militia, to which my hon. friend has referred, I was very careful to say :

The plans have not yet been completed, in fact, they have scarcely been begun. It is the present idea that it would be desirable that a portion of the vote for the annual drill should be used in the transportation and mobilization of a considerable number of the militia at Quebec where they will be under canvass under the usual conditions of camp, and the duties ordinarily performed in camps of instruction will be discharged there, and of course the troops will take part in the review to be held at Quebec in connection with the celebration. I do not know how many days that will take, but whatever the cost will be it will be charged up against the vote for the annual drill and the officers of my department think that this will be a very valuable experience.

And so on. There was nothing definite and 'abandon' is altogether too strong a term.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought it was announced afterwards that it was expected that 40,000 or 50,000 would be taken, or 50 per cent of the militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I said that 50 per cent of the active militia, the rural militia, would be taken, which would be about 20,000. The fact is that there will be a mobilization of a certain number of the militia of Canada at Quebec on this occasion, nobody has thought of abandoning that idea. I stated in the House the other day that it had been found impossible, on account of the difficulties connected with transportation, to mobilize such a large number as was at first thought of, some thirty odd thousand, and I stated that would have interfered with one of the chief objects we have in view, namely, the bringing together at Quebec of a very large number of people from all over this continent, who will have to be brought there by the railways. After going into the thing carefully, the Quarter-Master General, who has charge of matters of transportaion, found that it would be very difficult indeed to carry out this mobilization.

Mr. MACDONELL.

It would be full of risk, because accidents might arise in transporting guns, horses and all the paraphernalia attending a large camp, which would seriously interfere with the transportation facilities by which the people who expect to go to Quebec could alone be carried there. The other day I stated in the House fully the reasons why we had reluctantly given up the idea of a large camp which would practically include nearly the whole of the militia of Canada, but I said at the same time that there would be a force mobilized at Quebec. I do not suppose, Mr. Speaker, that there is any special advantage in making a military demonstration of great power and force at Quebec on that occasion. It does not seem to me that it is at all necessary. What I think we want is a fair representation of the militia of Canada, and that we expect to have, that, I think, is all that is necessary. I could go on and enlarge upon the subject, but I think I have said enough to satisfy any reasonable man. I am perfectly certain that I will be able to satisfy the militia of this country that we are doing what is in the interest of the militia itself. My hon. friend has stated that the militia regiments are all full now, beyond their normal strength even. Well, has it come to this, Mr. Speaker, that in order to have the regiments of the militia of Canada up to the full strength, it is necessary to provide some picnic such as they would expect to have on this visit to Quebec ? I have a higher opinion of the militia of Canada than that. I think they will be in full strength, and will attend to their duties at the camps this year just as well as they have ever done. I may say to my hon. friend that I have had many communications from different parts of Canada expressing pleasure at the fact that we have given up the idea of mobilizing the whole militia of the country at Quebec.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I would like the hon. minister to announce to the House what his programme is, and let the people know what the military features are going to be.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Precisely, and that is what I propose to do as soon as it is convenient. I said the other day when this question was brought up :

It is not correct to say that the troops are not going to the tercentenary. It is a fact, however, that the annual camps of instruction will be held as usual throughout the Dominion this year, instead of being held at one common point at or near the city of Quebec, as was proposed. The annual drill of the city regiments will also take place as usual this year. The reason of the change in the programme, which programme I announced briefly to the House three or four weeks ago, is chiefly due to the difficulty of transportation. It will be understood, I am sure, that one of the principal things to keep in mind in connection with this tercentenary celebration is to bring together the largest number possible of people to Quebec to witness the ceremonies. Some time ago the chairman of the commission called my attention to the fact that the transportation lines, the railways and steamboats, must be left free as far as possible to bring the people to Quebec and take them home again, and he thought it proper to ask the Militia Department to agree not to move any troops on a certain number of days before the celebration began and a certain number of days afterwards. It will be readily understood that such an arrangement would hamper the railway transportation lines very much. An earnest effort was made to see whether the difficulty could be overcome, but it was found it could only be partially overcome. It was therefore thought better that the camps should be held at the usual places of holding camps. As to the statement that has been made that the headquarters of the militia were unable to cope with the mobilization of 25,000 or 30,000 troops at a central point like Quebec, the story is absolutely without foundation, and is entirely absurd.

Then I went on to say that as soon as it was determined what number of troops would go to Quebec, I would make an announcement. I said that the Militia Department would be prepared to co-operate with the Battlefields Commission in every way in its power ; so it will be, and I hope before many days to be able to make an announcement to the House on that subject.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford). On the 27th of March I had the honour to ask the minister a question when this matter first came up, as will be seen on page 5741. I quite coincide with the opinion of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) that the minister has considerably changed front since that matter was first brought to his attention in the House. I asked the minister if the statement was correct which I had seen, that 60 per cent of the militia regiments would be taken to Quebec.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. Is the percentage stated correct, 60 per cent?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. About 50 per cent.

Here was an answer in distinct terms as to the number that were likely to go. Now the department seems to have retired from the position they took up at that time. At that time the matter appeared to be under the charge of the Militia Department entirely, and we were given to understand that it would be handled by the headquarters staff altogether. Now, if we are correctly informed, there has been a change, and the matter is to be handed over to the Quebec Battlefields Commission, because we see it stated in the papers that the Quebec Battlefields Commission are to select what regiments shall go to Quebec and what regiments shall not go.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would ask my hon. friend to observe what I have said, not what the papers have said. I am not responsible for what the newspapers have said.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I hear what the minister says now, and I am not sure that he has always stated the same.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I read what I stated.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I have the very best information that that is not what took place the other day when a certain number of colonels and commanders of regiments appeared before the minister. What went out to the public at that time was practically what the member for South Toronto has said, that the Militia Department had entirely retired from the position they had taken of making a big military demonstration at Quebec, and that is the impression that prevails in all sections of the country.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Entirely erroneous.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I was told by more than one military man that the terms decided upon were such that it would be impossible for them to go, and the surrender of their pay and the difficulties that have been placed in their way would make it a financial impossibility for the regiments to go under the conditions named. Now if that is the case, it appears evident that Canada is to take a very little part in this great demonstration. If this demonstration means anything, it means a celebration of a military character, it is a military demonstration. We have fleets coming from Great Britain. No doubt if they hear on the other side that our militia are not going to take any part, that we have no fleet except the ice-breaker 'Montcalm,' and a few other disabled vessels, they will conclude, that we are practically out of it. Now we are told that even this military demonstration of which we expected so much, is going to be curtailed to such an extent that perhaps 3,000, or 4,000, or 5,000 may assemble. I say, Mr. Speaker, that this is a great and keen disappointment, not only to the militia, but to the citizens of Canada who look upon this as a great national occasion, an occasion when the patriotism of the people should be stirred, and when, if they were unable on account of financial or other reasons to go to Quebec themselves, they would take a keen interest in watching what was going on there, recognizing that we were celebrating the third centenary of an event which is very notable in Canadian history. I say it is to be deplored that the Militia Department are going back on what was expected of them. Whether it is going to be handled by the Battlefields Commission or the Militia Department, I think that the 50 per cent named in the first place is not too great. The agreement was practically unanimous, as my hon. friend from South Toronto has said, no opposition developed on this side of the House.

Personally, I supported it very strongly as did several other gentlemen and I sincerely regret, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has apparently become comparatively lukewarm with regard to what was to be a great feature of the occasion. He told me, in reply to a question at the time, that the question of transportation was already engaging the attention of the department and that answers were coming in at that very time. Transportation could be easily managed if taken hold of in time. The river is open, there are plenty of first-class boats to be obtained and practically the whole western peninsula of Ontario could be served by the water route much more expeditiously and cheaply than in any other way. I believe that information has already been received by some gentlemen who have made inquiry that large boats can be obtained at a comparatively small cost for the transportation of the men and then they will feed them at the same price that the railway companies will charge for transportation alone. That is a statement that I received the other day from a gentleman who is thoroughly conversant with the question. If the railway and transportation companies of this country cannot take charge of the transportation of all these men, the United States alongside, I believe have intimated that they will allow the troops to pass through their territory if the request is made. I do not know that that is official, but at any rate I have it on good authority that some of the American railway companies have stated that they will see to it, if necessary, that troops are transported more cheaply in first-class cars than can be done by the Militia Department in box cars on this side. In that case why could we not send one, two, three, four or five regiments through the United States? It might appear humiliating that we had to avail ourselves of American transportation for such an event but still it would be worth while making the attempt. I trust that such offers will be received by the minister in the spirit in which they are conceived. The people are desirous of having a splendid demonstration on that occasion and they want to show what the Canadian militia system is. There has never been an opportunity in modern times when the minister and the department had such a chance of distinguishing themselves as they have on this occasion. To hand it over to the Battlefields Commission and to load them up with something that they do not want would be to make an unnecessarily large addition to their other duties and with the very expensive staff that we have in the Militia Department at Ottawa we should be able to place in the city of Quebec, 20,000 or 25,000 troops without seriously interfering with the ordinary traffic of the country. I think it can be done. I think that I am voicing the desire of the people and of the militia and when a great national occasion of this kind occurs and when we have an opportunity to show what the Canadian militia is and what our transportation facilities are it would be a pity if we should not take advantage of the occasion. There will be some large ships from across the water at Quebec. I understand the French Republic is going to be represented officially, the British government will be represented, the Prince of Wales will be there, an impression will be made that will be carried all over the world and if we fail to do what is expected of us I think we will do an injury to the country and an injury to the militia system of which we all to-day have every reason to be proud. I trust that the minister will give this his earnest and most serious consideration and that within a very few days he will come down with a statement that will be more satisfactory to the House and the country in regard to this tercentenary celebration that we are holding in the city of Quebec in the latter part of July.

Mr. H. A. WARD (Durham). If my hon. friend the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) will permit me, I desire to say that I think a mistake was made by the department in issuing orders to the regimental commanders with reference to the tercentenary until the arrangements were absolutely conclusive as to the transport of the troops. I do not think my hon. friend quite realizes the amount of disappointment that has ensued among the rural corps at any rate in consequence of the change of plan affecting them in going to the tercentenary. The orders issued to the commanding officers were to have fifty per cent of their respective commands in readiness.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, there were no orders issued at all.

Mr. WARD. These were from the district officers.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Inquiries were sent to see what could be done. No general orders were issued whatever.

Mr. WARD. I think the minister is making a mistake in regard to that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, I looked it up to-day because I knew this was coming up.

Mr. WARD. I will have to produce the orders to convince the minister. But, certain papers were issued—we will not call them orders for the present—advising the commanding officers to have fifty per cent of their respective commands in readiness to go to Quebec. Another order, or another paper, came out a day or two afterwards requesting the commanding officers to say to their respective commands that they hoped they would understand that they might have to be transported in box cars. Surely, if it were not the intention to take them to Quebec it would not be necessary for the commanding officers of regiments to advise their officers and men that this was proposed to be done.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is entirely a mistake. Certain inquiries were made, and, owing to the difficulty at the very outset as to this question of transportation, it was thought wise to ask the commanding officers of the regiments, through the regular channel, whether, in the event of there being a difficulty about transportation, they would be willing to go in box cars. They were to have their option. If they did not choose to go that way they need not go. It was thought wise to point out at the outset the difficulties that there would be and that there would be a possibility of the accommodation not being such as we would like to give them. There were no orders ; it was simply an inquiry.

Mr. WARD. Unfortunately I have not the papers here. I accept the statement of the minister, as I am bound to do, and I am perfectly certain he would not say that unless he was sure he was correct. At a later stage, I will have an opportunity of showing him the particular papers that I refer to. But, that is beside the question. What I wish to state, in so far as the rural regiments are concerned, is that I know, as a matter of fact, a number of regiments in our district have been drilling for the last three weeks in anticipation of going to Quebec. There is no doubt about that ; I have seen them myself. It is a matter of keen disappointment to these men in the rural districts that they are not to take part in the celebration. I believe that it would be a good idea in the educative sense. There are thousands of young men in the rural districts who will never have an opportunity of seeing Quebec and I am sure the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) would like the members of the militia force to visit Quebec upon that occasion. We all take the greatest possible interest in the old city with its historical and other associations. It is a disappointment to these men in the rural districts because they will never have another opportunity such as this to visit the old city associated as it is with the history of the country. There is another thing that I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to and it is that in a pecuniary sense a good many of the officers are suffering. I happen to know that uniforms have been ordered by officers expecting to go, and which will have to be accepted notwithstanding the fact that these officers may not go to Quebec. There are many things that the minister should consider. If there is any possibility of a change with regard to the rural regiments taking part in the celebration I trust the Minister of Militia will seriously consider the carrying out of the plan as at first proposed.

Mr. E. GUSS PORTER (West Hastings). I understand the Minister of Militia has stated that that the Battlefields Commission are to make a selection from the different city corps.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I never said that.

Mr. PORTER. I have been informed that it was the intention to hand over the selection of the different corps to the Battlefields Commission.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There has been no arrangement of the kind.

Mr. PORTER. There is a feeling of great disappointment among the volunteers in the district which I represent that they are not to be permitted to join in the celebration. They are chagrined that they are not to be allowed to exhibit their proficiency and their military spirit which they have so well demonstrated on many occasions in the defence of their country. They feel their services to the country in the past have been such as to entitle them to be selected for duty at Quebec, if any city corps is to be selected. I speak more particularly in reference to the 15th Argyle Light Infantry.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is a good regiment.

Mr. F. R. LALOR (Haldimand). The officers and men of the 37th Battalion of Haldimand have been expecting to go to the historic city of Quebec, and they will be greatly disappointed if the Militia Department decides that they are not to go. I impress upon the minister that in selecting the troops for Quebec he should not forget the rural battalions. I fear the city battalions get too much attention to the detriment of the rural battalions. I call the minister's attention to the fact that in the 37th Battalion there is a company comprised entirely of Six Nation Indians and I believe they would be a very attractive feature of the celebration.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. LALOR. I trust the Minister of Militia will provide for a strong representation of the 27th Batalion at the Tercentinary celebration.

Motion agreed to, House went into Committee of Supply.

Office of the Comptroller. of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police—

Salaries, $14,762.50; contingencies, $900.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). There is a decrease of $1,912 in this appropriation as compared with last year. The accountant, Mr. Fisher, was retired on the first of January, and his work has been taken by the chief clerk, Mr. Fortescue, with a member of the mounted police from the Northwest to assist in the details. One clerk has been transferred to the Department of the Interior and his work is now being done by a sergeant of the police. Mr. R. M. Gallwey, who had a salary of $1,457, died and his work is performed by a junior at a smaller salary. The promotion of Mr. Duplessis from second to first-class does not give him an increase of salary until January, 1909. The promotion of Mr. Wilfrid Gravel from junior to senior second means an increase of $250. The others are statutory increases.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a diminution of one clerk.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Is he to be replaced?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is not intended to replace him.

Pay of force..	$300,000
Subsistence, forage, fuel and light, clothing, buildings, repairs and renewals, horses, dogs, arms and ammunition, medical stores, billeting, transport, water service, stationery and contingencies..	450,000
	750,000

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In this estimate we ask provision for 700 men; 500 in Alberta and Saskatchewan, 100 in what is now the Northwest Territories, and 100 in the Yukon. We are gradually reducing the force in the Yukon. I think we have only eighty-two men there now and henceforward we intend to make no distinction between those in the Yukon and the rest of the force except as to pay.

Mr. BERGERON. What men have you in Manitoba?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have no men in Manitoba except one or two who form a cordon on the boundary to protect the revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. How are the one hundred men distributed in the Northwest Territories?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At Churchill there are eight or ten men, at Fullerton an island on the west shore of the Hudson bay, five men; at Fort Macpherson, at the mouth of the Mackenzie river, four or five men; at Herschel island, four or five men. There are men on the Peace river, at Stone lake and other places. I have here a map, showing the distribution of the force, which I will lay on the table. We have a patrol from Winnipeg to Fort Churchill to assert our authority on the Hudson bay. Some years ago we commenced to assert our authority both on the Hudson bay and on the Arctic ocean at Herschel island, because we found that American whalers were going there without authority. Since the police have taken possession and asserted our authority, the American whalers have taken licenses from us and have paid customs duties, and our authority is no longer disputed. At first these American whalers were inclined to demur, and I think they made some complaint at Washington; but of late years we have had no trouble. We have a patrol from Winnipeg to Fort Churchill and a patrol from Dawson to Herschel island, so that at present our jurisdiction is fully established.

Mr. FOSTER. The mounted police who have asserted the sovereignty of Canada on those exposed portions of Hudson bay, are the permanent emblems of authority; they are always there, and they have force as well as appearance. The Prime Minister has said that although at first the American whalers were a little obstreperous and did not wish to take out licenses and pay customs duties, yet now everything is peaceably acknowledged and our sovereignty in those portions of the northwest and northeast is permanently established. If that be so, what is the use of sending Captain Bernier on an expedition this year and next year at an expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars? I am not finding fault with this in any party sense or wish to make party capital. I am simply asking the Prime Minister seriously to consider whether or not this should be allowed to go on under the plea of protecting the sovereignty of Canada where absolutely nobody questions it. The United States has not raised a cavil with reference to our authority. These American whalers take out their licenses and pay their customs dues to the Mounted Police, who are the customs officers. Is not that sufficient? If it costs a good deal, the country is quite willing to pay the necessary cost. Why should it be duplicated by sending Captain Bernier on a useless expedition to the north?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Captain Bernier goes much farther north than the points I have mentioned. He goes to the Strait of Behring, to Baffin's bay and to much other territory over which we claim jurisdiction, which at present is of very little use perhaps, but the value of which we do not know and which may develop.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is trying to take it away from you?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Possession is nine points of the law. If we had sent the Mounted Police twenty years ago into the Yukon Territory, we would have to-day more territory than we have. The great mistake we made was not in attaching sufficient importance to our country. The Americans have been much shrewder in that respect. I do not know whether my hon. friend has seen the last map of the northern country that has been issued at Washington, which shows that the Americans are taking possession of and claiming everything in sight. I do not think they are entitled to it, however.

Mr. BERGERON. That does not give them the right to it, because they take possession of it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They got Skagway by means of possession. If we had taken possession of it in time they would never have had it.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the way we lost Alaska?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have not lost Alaska, because it belonged to the Russians and was ceded by them to the United States. But there was a disputed territory between the United States and Canada, and if we had taken earlier the precaution which we have now taken, of sending men into the country to take possession of it, we would have had Skagway to-day. In the last map issued at Washington, I think by the War Department, there are various islands in the north with American names attached to them, conveying the impression that these lands belong to the United States. Captain Bernier goes north in order to put the British flag and assert our authority on this territory, which we claim as ours. If my hon. friend reflects, I think he will agree that it is proper that we should take this precaution. My hon. friend asks who will take away this territory from us. If we had not asserted our sovereignty on Hudson bay four years ago, as we did, white men, attracted by gold or the discovery of the country, would probably have gone in and we would probably have found the Americans disputing our jurisdiction on Hudson bay. But by taking the precaution of asserting our jurisdiction we have reached a point where our authority is no longer disputed. My hon. friend asked why it is now necessary to assert authority since it is recognized and why we should maintain these posts?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not finding any fault with the Hudson bay posts. I think we ought to keep them, and according as people flow in the greater is the reason why we should keep them. But I object to this indeterminate charge and this expenditure of Captain Bernier in islands where there is no settlement and never will be any.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. How is my hon. friend sure that there will be no settlement in these northern islands? I understand there are most valuable coal deposits in some of them, and it will be well for us to keep possession of them.

Mr. FOSTER. But we are in possession and there is no question of giving them up.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, but there is question of somebody else taking possession of them. If we want to assert our jurisdiction in our own country, we must be all the time vigilant. Vigilance is the price, not only of liberty but of security as well. I am making no complaint of our American friends, but they are very enterprising, and if they find anything in any place where there is nobody, they are apt to take possession. For that reason the expenditure connected with the expedition of Captain Bernier is well warranted. On consideration my hon. friend will come to the conclusion that it is better to spend money in those high latitudes and maintain our jurisdiction.

Mr. FOSTER. Whatever is necessary.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is necessary. If my hon. friend says we are spending too much that is another question, but we can all agree that it is necessary we should spend something in order to maintain our jurisdiction in these waters, no matter what the cost may be.

Mr. AMES. With what rifle are the Mounted Police now armed?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Lee-Metford and Winchester.

Mr. BERGERON. I see that the department buys many things from Revellion Bros. at Edmonton. Is that done by tender?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have already explained on former occasions that about seventy-five per cent of the expenditure on the police force is done by contract. Twenty-five per cent is done in the locality where the expenditure is made, but all the large contracts are by tender.

Mr. BERGERON. Were the purchases from Revellion Bros. by tender?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Some of them.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to distribution of men in the territories, has each squad its own officer?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Colonel Perry is the commissioner stationed at Regina. There are some posts of more or less importance at Calgary, Fort Saskatchewan, Fort McLeod and elsewhere, where there may be ten or twelve or five men. There are a number of posts scattered all over the country in which there are only two and sometimes only one man. They are all subject to some other direction.

Mr. FOSTER. Commissioner Perry is chief of all the Mounted Police, including those outside Alberta and Saskatchewan?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the general instructions go through him to all the others, and each of the officers in isolated posts is in supreme command while he is there ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. We are paying for 500 mounted policemen in the two provinces we have created, how long are we to provide these two provinces with mounted policemen ? How long before they are to undertake their own policeing ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have an arrangement with them for five years and they pay us $75,000 each year.

Mr. FOSTER. What proportion is that of the whole expenditure in these two provinces ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. One-third.

Mr. BERGERON. How many men in the mounted police ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Six hundred and eighty.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood my right hon. friend to say that there are fifty in the Yukon and it is intended to cut down that force ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Are the repairs they were making in Regina yet finished ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They are going on all the time. This year we put up some new buildings in Regina. The work is done by the men themselves.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not see anything in the Auditor General's Report covering this work. I found one of the buildings at Regina in a very bad state, and the government were replacing the wooden foundations by stone. I found every other building in first-class condition. I think the works were stopped for some reason or other, and I do not see anything about them in the Auditor General's Report.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is all done.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it found as easy to recruit new members as formerly and are the new recruits as good a class as the old ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is very difficult to get men and still more difficult to keep them, owing to the prosperity of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. Is our force deteriorating ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think it is as good to-day as it ever was.

Mr. HERRON. I would like to draw attention to the murder of a policeman at Crows Nest Pass some time ago. The policeman's name was Lewis and he was murdered in the town of Frank. The government have offered a reward of $200 for the capture of the assassin. It seems to me that the government might well offer a reward of $500 or even $1,000. I think some steps should be taken to give a decent reward for the securing of a murderer. It is very important that the police should maintain their standard for enforcing law and order. Along the western border and perhaps in the Crow's Nest Pass there are a number of pretty bad characters, but the police have always maintained law and order in a highly creditable way. When a man is murdered in the discharge of his duties I think the government should not be backward in the granting of reward for the capture of the murderer. A year ago I said in the House that I believed the mounted police were not paid sufficiently in that country. The Prime Minister has stated that it is very hard to keep good men in the service. That must be the case where ordinary labourers are getting $30 to $50 a month with board while the mounted police get only $15 to $25 per month. I believe it would be better if we had a smaller number of men who were better paid, particularly men of long service, because one good man of considerable experience in that country is worth two or three new men not accustomed to the conditions there.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. A reward of $200 has been offered for the capture of the murderer referred to. We could not have done better as under a standing order the police have power to do that without referring to us but they could not go beyond that amount.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it is only an act of justice to say one word in favour of the mounted police as it is to-day. I am generally pretty hard upon the government and sometimes on my right hon. friend under other circumstances, but I have seen in the west that these men are really a credit to the country. They are well dressed, well kept, well disciplined, and their conduct is splendid. I have had the pleasure of visiting some of the mounted police posts and I found everything in perfect order, in fact their barracks I fancy were equal to anything that you would find in the regular army in England. I consider the force to be very useful. I remember in the old times when my right hon. friend and his friends were on this side they criticised the Conservative government for having the mounted police in the Northwest. One Liberal who is now a senator was very severe on that score. I was of the opinion then that we needed the police and I am still of that opinion. I think the maintenance of that force has a salutory effect in that immense country, their presence does much to uphold the peace and tranquility of the west.

As to the question raised by my hon. friend of the pay of the force I have nothing to do with that. I leave that to the generosity of the Prime Minister, but I would point out that the ordinary man who would receive $40 to $50 a month in that country is not the same kind of man as those who are employed in the police. The mounted police are real soldiers, and many of them quite exceptional men. Their life is a special life and they seem to be perfectly happy. None of those I met made any complaint about pay, and I am sure that many of them would rather work in the force for $15 or $25 than outside for $40 or $50 a month. I believe they must be well taken care of and well fed and that their lodgings must be kept in perfect condition. On the whole I must congratulate my right hon. friend and his department. Neither in reading the Auditor General's Report nor in travelling in the Northwest do we find a word of graft in that department.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have to say to my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Herron) that the question of increasing the pay of the police has been brought to my attention more than once, but on the whole we have not yet seen the advisability of changing the present rate which was established some years ago. There is a great deal, of course, in what was said by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron). The life of the police is a special career. the men are paid from 60 cents to $1 a day, according to a certain scale. They are provided at the end of thirty years with a pension. If a man engages at the age of twenty, then at the age of forty, while still a young man, he can withdraw from the force with a pension and, knowing the country, if he wishes to go into other business he is well equipped to do so. There are a certain number of men who like the life, they are paid a certain amount, they are fed and clothed; they become accustomed to the life and do not care so much for the money because they know they will not be left destitute in their old age, and that they can count on the bounty of the government. On the whole I think they are satisfied. During the twelve years I have been in charge I have not heard a complaint from the force with regard to that. They are too well disciplined of course to send me a complaint even if they thought they had reasonable ground of complaint, but I would have heard from the comptroller of the force if there had been any grievance in that respect.

Mr. LAKE. Where is the recruiting taking place now?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have no special place of recruiting. Recruiting takes place in Ottawa, but the officers are authorized to take men. We have received applications from all parts of the British empire, but of late years, when we were not increasing the force, we have not thought of taking any from outside of Canada as there was no necessity for doing so.

Mr. FOSTER. What percentage of the personnel of the force change each year from causes other than death?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The comptroller is not ready to give a definite answer but he thinks about 15 per cent to 20 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that percentage increasing gradually?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have not observed that it has increased of late.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there a change in the nature of the offences with which they have chiefly to deal, and what is the chief offence now against which the mounted police have to act? I suppose that, with the increase of population, cattle stealing and horse stealing have been reduced to a minimum.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At page 6 of the report of the mounted police we find a comparative statement of offences for the years 1900-1907. The figures are :

1907	5,685
1906	4,256
1905	3,767
1904	3,465
1903	2,613
1902	1,520
1901	1,250
1900	936

The most numerous offences last year were:

Offences against—
The person	729
The property	877
Public order	66
Religion and morals	2,208
Indian Act	336
Provincial statutes and Northwest Territories ordinances	1,308

There is nothing further in these statistics that I can see that would not apply equally to any other province.

Pensions payable to Mounted Police, Prince Albert Volunteers and Police Scouts, on account of rebellion of 1885, $2,400.53.

Mr. FOSTER. How many pensioners are there on that list?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There are 10 persons still remaining on the list.

To compensate members of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police for injuries received while in the discharge of duty, $3,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There are about 30 of these receiving compensation for injuries received while in the discharge of their duties.

Mr. FOSTER. What board establishes the amount?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. A medical board first, and then an officers' board.

Mr. BLAIN. What amount is paid at present in pensions to the Mounted Police?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The amount last year was $5,666, and the amount estimated for this year is $5,601.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the number on the pension list altogether?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Sixty.

Department of Militia and Defence—salaries, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $63,500; contingencies, $12,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is a net increase of $3,450, of which $1,050 is due to 21 statutory increases at $50 each. There is provision for four additional first-class clerks, $2,000. That is not an actual increase, because these clerks have been working for some time in the department and they are now made permanent.

Mr. FOSTER. Where were they taken from?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They were connected with the stores, I think. I am not absolutely certain. They were supernumeraries. They were not permanent but they have now been appointed and they have passed the examination.

Mr. FOSTER. What salaries are they getting ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Four third-class clerks ; $2,000 for the four.

Mr. FOSTER. Were they appointed at the same salaries they were receiving in their former service ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, some of them at even less, I think. They do not mind that because they prefer to have permanent employment.

Mr. FOSTER. They go out from the stores department and then the vacancies in the stores department are filled ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. So that makes an addition to the whole service ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, I am told not.

Mr. FOSTER. It must be so if you have filled the old vacancies and you are making four additions here.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Perhaps I am wrong in saying the stores department. There is always a certain number of extra clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you filling the vacancies made by the appointment of extra clerks ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there any extraordinary increases amongst all these clerks ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, I think there are none. There are 21 statutory increases.

Mr. BERGERON. I see that a new order has been passed by which so many officers are to be made full colonels. What is the reason for that ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the order is based on a continuous service of 25 years. The idea is to reward men who have served most of their lives in the active militia by giving them a higher rank for long, continuous and meritorious service.

Mr. BERGERON. I remember that under the old administration there were only five or six colonels.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The recent militia law gave power to appoint a colonel and even a major-general under certain conditions.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it true that the other day in opening the House in New Brunswick, as stated in the press—I thought it was a mistake—there were five colonels, ten majors, fifteen lieutenants and one private for the escort of the Governor.

Mr. DANIEL. And a general.

Mr. BERGERON. And a general.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I could not give my hon. friend any information on that but I will look it up.

Post Office Department—salaries, $366,531.25.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). There is an increase of $6,468.50 made up as follows : 187 statutory increases of $50 each, making $9,350 ; 5 increases of $78 ; 1 increase of $40 ; 1 increase of $10 ; 8 additional junior 2nd class clerkships at $800.

Mr. BERGERON. That would make more than $6,000. There must be some reduction somewhere else.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is a difference between the salaries of certain clerkships which became vacant and the salaries of the officers appointed or promoted to vacancies of $11,372, making an increase of, as compared with last year, of $6,468.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the matter with the man who inspects the boots ? I see that under the head of contingencies there is the following item :

Clerical and other assistance, including $50 a year to pay W. Cooch for inspecting letter carriers' boots, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This man has been employed in the department for several years. We have to provide the boots for the letter carriers and Mr. Cooch, who has been employed as a packer and sorter since 1882 and who is an old shoemaker and well qualified for the work, inspects the boots.

Mr. BERGERON. Do I understand that all these boots are brought here ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We call for tenders in the different cities and if the prices are found to be acceptable we give an order. The boots are brought here and distributed.

Mr. BERGERON. If these boots are made in Toronto or Montreal why should they be sent here and sent back again either to Montreal or Toronto ? The expense would be a great deal more than the salary and travelling expenses of a man sent out to inspect them.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are sent by mail cars and it does not cost the department a cent. It is for the better administration of the department. We have to look after the uniforms in the same way. The uniforms are made in this city but last year they were made in Toronto and sent here. We have nearly 600 or 700 letter carriers and we have to test the boots and clothing. Sometimes we have complaints. This year we had a complaint about our suits and if we did not have the contractors in Ottawa under our own eye probably the complaints would be more numerous, but in consequence of having the clothing made in Ottawa and tested here we avoid a good deal of criticism.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the minister make a statement as to the irregularities in the post office service in western Canada?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I saw it stated in the Toronto 'Globe' and the Toronto 'World' recently that robberies to the amount of $12,000 had been committed in the Winnipeg post office, but our inspector has reported that this statement is not true. Sometime ago a young man in the Winnipeg post office misappropriated $900, pleaded guilty, and his father refunded the amount and the boy went away. One of the British mail bags disappeared from a station between Montreal and Winnipeg some time ago and we expect to locate the culprit. Fortunately the money orders contained in some of the letters could not be cashed and duplicates are available for those who are properly entitled to them.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What action was taken with regard to the young man in Winnipeg who was convicted and whose father refunded the money ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I should not have said that the boy pleaded guilty. He was strongly suspected however and the father paid the money that was missing. We surround the services with every safeguard, and in comparison with the enormous number of money letters and the great number of employees in the service all over the country the offences have been comparatively few in recent years. When a man is found guilty he is sent to the penitentiary. In a recent case in Montreal a man was arrested, brought before the police magistrate, and sentenced to three years in the course of twenty-four hours.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Do I understand that the minister has appointed inspectors to some of the outside districts ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. When the amendment to the Post Office Act is passed I intend to appoint a financial superintendent, not an inspector. The expansion of the postal service especially in the west gives our local inspectors as much work as they can do in other directions and the book-keeping is so complicated that we must have a special man to instruct the different postmasters. It is my intention to appoint Mr. Johnston, a reliable officer who has been thirty-five years in the service. He is now chief accountant at Ottawa and he will select his clerks specially adapted for the work in the large post offices. They will follow his instructions and so we will have uniformity throughout the Dominion.

Mr. BERGERON. Is he a very good accountant ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, he is quite an authority. He has been asked by one or two other departments to help them.

Mr. BERGERON. Why did you not send him to the Marine Department ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. He was probably too busy in our own department.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. There are a number of matters I wish to call attention to in connection with the Post Office Department, but as I do not wish to delay the proceedings now I shall avail of another opportunity.

Mr. BERGERON. How many male employees are provided for in this item.

Mr. LEMIEUX. 400.

Mr. BERGERON. And how many ladies.

Mr. LEMIEUX. About 100. The ladies are specially proficient in certain work and young men would not accept the salaries paid for such work.

Mr. BERGERON. Did the minister read the Report of the Civil Service Commission on that subject ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. The report is that the employment of ladies prevented young men from going through the lower grades and obtaining the higher positions.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Some people criticise the employment of ladies in the departments, but I found the ladies there and as they are rendering very good service I do not think I should displace them. My individual opinion is that I would rather have university trained young men in the service, but it is very difficult to get young men speaking both languages which is a useful accomplishment in our department which deals with all the provinces in the Dominion. The ladies are employed in typewriting and shorthand writing, and young men who have had a university course will not spend their lives at that occupation. For such duties, I am bound to say, the young ladies in our department give very faithful and efficient service.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want to be understood as opposing the employment of these young ladies. They probably perform their duties as well as young men would perform them and at much lower salaries. But I was very much impressed with the statement in the report of the Civil Service Commission that in the different departments young men are not being trained for the higher positions, as would be the case if they commenced at the bottom of the ladder. That is the point I wanted my hon. friend to explain. Could my hon. friend say how long his department has employed young ladies?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think for about twenty years. We have some young ladies, still young, who entered the department twenty years ago. My hon. friend will remember that ten or fifteen years ago a general movement began on the part of banks and other large financial institutions for the employment of young ladies in large city offices. With regard to the young ladies in the department, I repeat that I have no reason to complain, although of late I have declined to accept the services of any more ladies. I think we have reached the high-water mark; we have about a hundred in the department, and I think that is enough. The reason why we have of late years employed so many ladies in the department is not to the credit of the young men, because it is quite difficult to find young men who are willing to pass the civil service examination, while the young ladies are, as a rule, both more willing and more successful than the young men in these examinations. We need young men in the service, but young men want to be employed without passing the examination. When we cannot find the young men, we take the young ladies.

Mr. BERGERON. I am surprised to hear my hon. friend say that he cannot find young men. I was under the impression that there were thousands of young men who had passed the civil service examination waiting for positions.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is true, some of them have passed the civil service examinations, but they do not wish to enter the service unless they get $1,000 at once, whereas the law provides that they must begin with $450 and go up the ladder with an increase of $50 a year. An ordinary labourer comes into the department at $1.25 per day, and can go up to $2.25 per day; but when he passes the civil service examination, he must, according to the law, fall back to $450 a year.

Mr. BARR. Does my hon. friend say that the young ladies in the different departments are equal to the occasion and in every way as efficient as men?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Perhaps I should have qualified the statement I made. The young ladies in the department fulfil their duties quite creditably in the special class of employment in which they are engaged. It is principally routine work, but they do it well. There are classes of employment in the department which I would not give to ladies, because I do not think, generally speaking, they would be proficient in them.

Mr. BARR. Would they not be capable of going up to the top of the department?

Mr. LEMIEUX. My predecessor, Sir William Mulock, established a regulation under which examinations are held every year in the various branches at Ottawa and in the larger city offices, to test the way in which the employees are performing their duties; and on the results of those examinations we promote the officials. As I have stated, the young ladies cannot go above a certain grade.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the scale of salaries, and how far can they go?

Mr. LEMIEUX. As a general rule, they commence at $500 and go up to $700; but we have two or three ladies in the department who have reached a higher salary.

Mr. BERGERON. I imagine that in all the departments in Ottawa there must be about a thousand young ladies employed. I do not understand why the ladies, if they pass the examination, could not climb to the top of the department—why one of these young ladies who have been there for twenty or twenty-five years should not be Deputy Postmaster General. I am considering what ought to be done in the future and am not saying anything about those employed. I am simply talking of the principle in the matter. Who is it that gave the model for the uniforms of the letter-carriers? I do not think anything could be invented that could look worse. If it can be changed without a damage to the constitution of the country, it ought to be.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The present uniform was adopted many years ago. I had first thought that I should be somewhat of a reformer in that direction. I wanted to change the hats, for instance, but I found many objections.

Mr. BERGERON. From the contractors?

Mr. LEMIEUX. From the men themselves. The helmets are used in the British army in southern climates, and our letter-carriers, during certain weeks of the summer, are in many sections exposed to very high temperature and they find the helmet quite a protection. I wanted to substitute straw hats, but they said to me that, while they were of that opinion in the beginning, they found by experience that the helmet was the best headgear. The uniform is not a bad one. It is not as heavy as it looks. Last year when I visited the Toronto post office and saw the men sorting the letters and going out to deliver them, I had some of the uniforms weighed and found they were very light. A good deal of the appearance depends on the men themselves. They ought to keep neat and tidy, and it is my intention later on to give something more to the men just to teach them to be a little neater and tidier in their wearing apparel. They should have creased trousers and clean shining boots.

Mr. BERGERON. Have they only one uniform?

Mr. LEMIEUX. They have a winter one and a summer one and they have oilcloth coats.

Mr. BERGERON. What cities are entitled to letter-carriers?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Last year I made new regulations. Cities whose population is 12,000 and whose revenue is $20,000 are entitled to letter carriers. I may tell my hon. friend that some cities which are entitled to letter delivery object to the system because it prevents the men, and especially the ladies, from going out to the post office and stopping at the shops en route.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like my hon. friend to inquire from Valleyfield whether they would like to have letter carriers or not. Valleyfield has the population and the revenue as well.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The population, according to the information given me by my hon. friend is there, and I shall inquire as to the revenue.

Mr. MONK. How are the boots purchased?

Mr. LEMIEUX. By contract after public tender.

Mr. MONK. Are they purchased wholesale?

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are not purchased indiscriminately. We have a contract and the boots are made to order after measurements are taken.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. With what firm?

Mr. LEMIEUX. With Lecompte in Montreal.

Mr. MONK. He is not a manufacturer.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He is a large shoemaker.

Mr. BERGERON. He has a retail store and is a shoemaker as well.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, he has a large store on St. Catherine street, and he has besides a large establishment where he employs many men.

Mr. BERGERON. If he is the lowest tenderer he is entitled to the contract. I know the man, and if he undertakes a contract he will carry it out.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Each carrier goes to Lecompte and has his measure taken and the boots are made to order.

Mr. MONK. What is the price.

Mr. LEMIEUX. $4.75.

Mr. BERGERON. How many letter carriers in Montreal?

Mr. LEMIEUX. 380 in round numbers.

Mr. BARR. Is there a contract let in each city by tender or is this contract for the whole Dominion?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, in each large city we give a contract to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. BARR. How long does it continue?

Mr. LEMIEUX. For a year.

Mr. BENNETT. I am surprised that the minister, in the face of the Auditor General's Report, would say that all these boots are purchased in Montreal. When Sir Wm. Mulock was Postmaster General he resorted to one of the pettiest jobs of patronage and gave to Aurora in his riding the patronage of the whole department. The minister says these boots are purchased by contract in Montreal. Do the facts bear that out? Let me show by the schedule what is purchased in Aurora, simply to give the benefit of the patronage to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) in whose constituency that town is situated.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What volume ?

Mr. BENNETT. Volume 2 of the Auditor General's Report, page S—54. I presume that if the present Postmaster General will stand for it, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) will be quite willing to continue the precedent set by the former Postmaster General who represented his riding. Here are the items :

J. Fleury & Sons, Aurora: newspaper and parcel receptacles, 50 at $25; street letter boxes, 23 at $15.25, 293 at $10.60; sundry repairs, $12.84, $4,719.39.

McDonald, B. H., Aurora, inspecting letter boxes, &c., July to December, 1906, 153 at 25 cents, $38.25.

Willis, Wm., & Son, Aurora: leather leggings, 100 pairs at $1.25; letter carriers' waist belts, 100 at 75 cents; sheepskin washers, 3½ gross, $4.20, $204.20.

Watson, Wm., Aurora: letter carriers' boots, 46 pairs at $4.50, $207.

Watson, Wm., Aurora, letter carriers' boots, 13 pairs at $4.50, $58.50.

Boots for letter carriers at $4.50 per pair: Charles Tilley & Son, Toronto, 69 pairs, $310.50; Wm. Watson, Aurora, 80 pairs, $360, $670.50.

Watson, Wm., Aurora, letter carriers' boots, 35 pairs at $4.50, $157.50.

Boots for letter carriers at $4.50 per pair; A. Lecompte, $4.50; P. Turcotte, $148.50; Wm. Watson, $243, $841.50.

Charles Tilley & Sons, Toronto, letter carriers' boots, 51 pairs at $4.50, $229.50.

Charles Tilley & Sons, Toronto, letter carriers' boots, 53 pairs at $4.50, $238.50.

I picked these out at haphazard, but practically all of these, which amount to quite a sum in the aggregate, were purchased at the little village of Aurora. Letter boxes, newspaper boxes, lock boxes, &c., which we see all over the Dominion are purchased there, none are bought by public competition; all must be bought at the foundry of Mr. Fleury, a political henchman of hon. gentlemen opposite, president of the Liberal association in that riding. Why should these not be bought by public competition? The Postmaster General says they are purchased by public competition, but there could be no competition with this gentleman who is a dealer apparently in the town of Aurora. I do not blame the Minister of Justice for it, because it was commenced by his predecessor, the ex-Postmaster General; it was petty patronage and it seems absurd that you have to go from Toronto to Aurora to purchase boots because it is in the riding of a minister of the Crown.

On that same page S—62 I find another item; of a purchase in Toronto of boots for letter-carriers:

Charles Tilley & Sons, Toronto, 69 pairs, $310.50.

In addition to these items we have all the mail bags carted up to North York for repairs.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are repaired in Ottawa and all the large cities. There are three or four different parties in Ottawa repairing mail bags.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems odd they should have to be carted from Toronto or up to North York.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Aurora is a stone's throw from Toronto.

Mr. BENNETT. Not by any means. In order to make the patronage as useful as possible, a fair amount of this work is thrown into Newmarket. It is all a question of patronage on the same lines as the giving to the Office Specialty Company at Newmarket, $350,000 worth of business in the last few years. Passing the Supreme Court building this last week one can see thrown out on the waste heap splendid hardwood and clear pine cases with drawers and bronze handles, with letters on them, thrown out of the departments in order that the Office Specialty Company of Newmarket could make sales to the department.

Mr. BERGERON. What are they doing with that?

Mr. BENNETT. Smashing it up for firewood. Why cannot the minister buy letter-carriers' boots in Toronto or Montreal?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not see what objection there is to distributing here and there throughout the country what my hon. friend calls patronage, which is simply what is needed for the department. I take issue with the hon. gentleman's statements. I am informed that in every case the price paid was the result of tenders asked. Take, for instance, the case of Tilley & Son, Toronto, to whom reference has been made and who sold boots at $4.50 per pair. That is the price paid in Montreal and every one knows it is not an exaggerated price. There is nothing here to show the department has paid an excessive price. Is there any reason why we should concentrate, or to use a new expression, Bovrilize the patronage in one city? If tenders are asked what objection is there to some of the work being done in Aurora or Newmarket.

Mr. BENNETT. Who were the competitors for the supplying of these goods for Hamilton, Kingston and Montreal besides Watson of Aurora, and what were the respective rates at which they tendered?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I could not give off-hand the competitors, but I may say that the lowest price was accepted in each case.

Mr. BARR. Were they advertised in the newspapers?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Would my hon. friend approve of my hon. friend spending $200 or $300 to advertise for tenders in the case, for instance, of this item of $211 for forty-seven pairs of shoes?

Mr. BARR. Then it is simply the favoured few, those on the patronage list?

Mr. LEMIEUX. When reliable firms are called upon to tender and when the price is fair as this price is, $4.50——

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Does my hon. friend consider Tilley & Son, of Toronto, a large wholesale house? I think their principal business is dealing in shoe findings. I know the firm, it is a small place. Is it true that the men leave their measures and have the shoes made to order?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, the measures are taken and sent to the makers. I know that is the case in regard to the uniforms which are made here in Ottawa. The firm making them do not establish a branch in each city where we have a letter-carrier service, but they send their cutter to each city and he takes the measurements of each man; the uniform is then made to order here where they have their establishment. The same thing applies to the shoes.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. And you are paying retail prices for all your shoes and getting no better shoes than you can buy ready made? Forty years ago you could get better shoes made to order.

Mr. LEMIEUX. We do not buy ready-made.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not care whether you do or not. You can get as good shoes ready-made as to order, if you pay the price. I have been dealing in shoes for forty years. We used to make many shoes to order. we would keep ten to twelve men busy, but now you can get a much nicer shoe ready-made than you can get made to order. I venture to say that not one in ten of the members of this House have shoes made to order now.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Are you sure of that?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. That is my experience in my part of the country.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend wears American shoes?

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not wear American shoes. Geo. T. Slater, the Slater Company and McCready & Company are leading houses where you can get as good shoes as in the United States and cheaper than in the United States. You can go to the wholesale manufacturers and get them made at different widths. You can get a narrow width or a middle width, five or six different widths so as to fit any foot. I see that these boots are being bought in the same way as goods have been bought for the Marine and Fisheries Department, that is at retail. No one will say a word against Tilley & Sons, who are a very respectable firm and who no doubt will furnish a first-class shoe. But the chances are that they take the orders and get some wholesale men to furnish them, and you are paying middlemen's profits.

Mr. BENNETT. On S—54 there is an item, J. Fleury's Sons, Aurora, newspapers and parcel receptacles, and so forth, $4,719.39. Was there any competition in that line, or are they handed over to the president of the North York Liberal Association?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, there is competition.

Mr. BENNETT. When the minister comes to his estimates again, will he bring down the names of all those who competed for these articles?

Mr. BERGERON. With regard to the items of S—64, my hon. friend from Lennox and Addington (Mr. Wilson) says that these goods were not made in Victoria where they were distributed. I see that goods of this class are made in many places. For instance H. Leger, Ottawa: letter carriers' boots, 25 pair at $4.50. J. W. Wright, Ottawa, letter carriers' boots, 26 pair at $4.50. It strikes me that it would be better to allow shoemakers who want to get orders the privilege of tendering.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is the price too high?

Mr. BERGERON. I am not a shoemaker, I do not know. It seems to me that if tenders were sent all over Canada, for instance, to the Mr. McCready firm in Montreal, one of the largest firms in Canada in this line of goods, you might probably get boots for $3 which you are paying here $4.50; you could get them cheaper on account of buying a large quantity at the same time. Then the country would save $1.50 each pair on boots. It seems to me that the department should look at the subject from an economical point of view. I see also that uniforms are bought in the same way.

Uniforms for letter carriers: blue melton trousers, 27 pair at $3; blue melton tunics, 16 pair at $5.45; overcoats, 10 at $6.30; pea jackets, 6 at $6.30.

But there is no name given to show who they were purchased from. On page S—62 I find another case of a purchase without any name being given.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are all purchased from the men who have the contract. The uniforms to which my hon. friend refers as having been bought without any name being given, are all bought from Noel & Chevrier, who have the contract for uniforms for the whole Dominion. It sometimes happens that letter carriers are appointed over and above the number that were specified when the contract was given, and of course these have to be supplied afterwards. But they are supplied at the same price as the other uniforms and the lowest tender was accepted.

Mr. BERGERON. At the Ottawa post office I find another item:

Uniforms for letter carriers: blue melton trousers, 38 pairs at $3; blue melton tunics, 18 at $5.45; overcoats, 9 at $6.30; pea jackets, 9 at $6.30.

Turning over to the Montreal post office I find:

Uniforms for letter carriers: blue melton trousers, 15 pairs at $3.25; 137 pairs at $3; serge overcoats, 22 at $6.30; pea jackets, 15 at $6.75 and 59 at $6.30.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will explain why orders are given sometimes for different numbers. The uniforms are not all delivered at one specified period of the year. For instance, a man comes into the service at the beginning of the summer and gets a uniform. If he comes into the service in the middle of the summer he will get his second uniform only at the middle of the summer. We cannot apply the same rule as to the delivery of trousers and shoes to every man, because they do not all enter the service at the same time.

Mr. BERGERON. I think it would be better to supply them all under one contract.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is only one contract, and that contract was awarded to the lowest tenderers, Noel & Chevrier. There were five or six tenderers in all. Now some men will enter the service at the end of a season, they will get their summer uniform. The next year they cannot expect another uniform at the beginning of the summer because they have not used long enough the uniform supplied them in the previous summer. That accounts for the difference in the delivery of uniforms. You will see that at one place 100 uniforms are delivered, at another place 30, at another place 35 and so on. This does not prove that there is more than one contractor, it proves that the uniforms are delivered at different times.

Mr. PORTER. The Post Office Department appears to be not quite so generous in dispensing credit where credit belongs, as it is in dispensing patronage to political friends. I had occasion, during the canvass of the election in 1904, to visit a section of the riding I have the honour to represent, which was not served by a post office, and in which there was a very considerable settlement. I saw at once the necessity of some provision being made for these people, and while I was in the vicinity I drew up a petition which was largely signed. The petition was headed by the Rev. Father McInenney, who was parish priest at that particular point. This was Bell's Rapids, in the county of Hastings. I presented that petition to the department here, and urged the necessity of establishing a post office at that point. Nothing was done for some considerable time, and I repeatedly wrote to the department urging upon them again and again the necessity of having these appointments made. Finally I received a letter from the then Postmaster General on the 19th of April, in which he says :

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter expressing the hope that the department might establish a post office at Bell Rapids. In reply I have to state that some time ago on the application of Mr. Henry Pringle, of Belleville——

I ask the Postmaster General to note that.

—instructions were given to establish a post office at Bell's Rapids and the inspector reports that the office went into operation on the 1st instant.

I was of course surprised at being informed by the Postmaster General that the post office had been established upon the recommendation of Mr. Henry Pringle. I can quite understand that the government would not give me any credit for being instrumental in having a post office established in my riding, although such is the fact. Shortly after I received this letter Sir Wm. Mulock went to England and I had not an opportunity of calling his attention to the matter. He was succeeded in the office by Mr. Aylesworth and the following questions and replies were put and answered in the House :

BELL'S RAPIDS POST OFFICE.

Mr. PORTER asked:

1. When was the post office known as Bell's Rapids established?

2. Who is the postmaster?

3. Upon whose recommendation was such office established, and such postmaster appointed, and when?

4. Were there any other recommendations or applications for establishment of such post office? If so, by whom, and when?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Postmaster General). Bell's Rapids post office was established on April 1, 1905, with John Hicks as postmaster, on the application of the Rev. Father McInerney, of Maynooth, the report of an inspector, and the recommendation of Mr. Henry Pringle, of Belleville.

Here we have the statement repeated that the post office was established on the recommendation of Mr. Henry Pringle. When Mr. Aylesworth gave this answer in the House I immediately telegraphed to a newspaper reporter at Belleville asking him to see Mr. Pringle to ascertain whether the statement made by Mr. Aylesworth, and in the letter of Sir Wm. Mulock, was in accordance with the fact. The reporter saw Mr. Pringle and he telegraphed me on the 3rd of May :

Pringle says he knows of no such office. If he ever had any communication with the government he cannot recall it.

The reporter also made a declaration in connection with the matter in which he says :

I am personally acquainted with Henry Pringle, of the city of Belleville, in the county of Hastings.

On the 3rd day of May, 1905, I had an interview with the said Henry Pringle in Belleville when I asked him if he knew where Bell's Rapids post office was or whether there was such a post office in this county to which he answered: 'I know of no such post office.' I then said: 'Have you ever had any communication with the Post Office Department about such office?' To which he replied: 'I cannot recall any, I don't think I did.'

Without explanation it would seem remarkable that Sir Wm. Mulock should write me as he did and that Mr. Aylesworth should corroborate his statement giving credit to Mr. Henry Pringle, of Belleville, in view of the fact that Mr. Pringle did not even know there was such a post office in the world. I have stated that I considered that this government was more generous in bestowing patronage upon its political friends than in giving credit to a member of this House who might be entitled to it for acting in the public interest, and my statement is based on the fact that in the election of 1904 I was opposed by a man whose name is well known not only in this House but throughout the country, Mr. Byron O. Lott. Mr. Byron O. Lott, as the defeated Liberal candidate, would be entitled to the patronage of this riding.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Where is he now.

Mr. PORTER. Had Mr. Byron O. Lott been still residing in the west riding of Hastings, the answer of the Postmaster General would have been that the post office was established on the recommendation of Byron O. Lott, but Byron O. Lott then and now is sojourning in the United States to escape criminal prosectution for his connection with the bogus ballot boxes. The government could not, therefore, give the credit to Mr. Lott, and being determined not to give the credit to me they looked somewhere else. One would have thought they would have selected the local Liberal member for that district, but he also has been discredited and so they left the riding of North Hastings where this post office is located and went to West Hastings and there selected the defeated Liberal candidate in the legislature and gave him the credit for establishing this post office at Bells Rapids. I hope the day is past for that manner of establishing post offices and bestowing the credit for establishing them. I do not attribute any of this to the present Postmaster General, but I do hope that the course pursued by Sir Wm. Mulock and repeated by Mr. Aylesworth will not be adopted by the present Postmaster General in his administration and that he will give credit where credit is due.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the House adjourns I wish to say that according to arrangements made the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) will bring up the Ross rifle question on going into Supply. Will the House be moved into Committee of Supply?

Mr. FIELDING. We will take Supply to-morrow and we will proceed with the Post Office vote generally, to be followed by the Customs vote generally, and if there is sufficient time by the Railway vote generally.

At six o'clock, House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, May 21, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PETITION IN BEHALF OF THE FRENCH LANGUAGE.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE (Montmagny). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition addressed to the honourable ministers and members of this House and which reads as follows:

To the Honourable Minister and Members of the House of Commons.
Considering that the French and English languages are on the same footing, especially in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, he is reading the petition.

Mr. SPEAKER. Do I understand that the hon. member is reading the petition? That is not customary.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I am stating the object of the petition.

Considering that, in fact, the public utilities, the companies and their employees do neglect to use the French language to the great annoyance and detriment of the majority of the citizens in many cases.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Nobody has called me to order.

Considering that the expostulations and the complaints often expressed by the newspapers about this said condition of things have been ineffective.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. What is the point of order?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member, I understand, is reading the petition, and that is not in order.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I am not reading the petition, but stating the object of the petition.

Considering, in fine, that to remedy the evil an appeal to the courtesy of the companies will not suffice, but that a law must be added to it by which they will be bound.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand the hon. gentleman says he is not reading the petition.

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). He says that——

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I am not. I hope the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) understands that.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. I am glad. That is something new in the House.

The undersigned do ask that:

1. In the province of Quebec the railway companies. . . . .

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TALBOT. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is the acceptance of your ruling to be a sham? We want to see some respect shown for this House. I do not care from what part of the country the hon. member (Mr. Armand Lavergne) comes, he should show respect for the authority of the chair and for the courtesy due to hon. members.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) wishes to show respect for the rules of debate of this House, he should not rise when another member is speaking without that member's permission.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Armand Lavergne) will please state shortly the object of the petition.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. That is what I am going to do. The petition follows and I am stating the object of it.

1. In the province of Quebec the railway companies, the street railway, telegraph and telephone companies and the public utilities be bound to use the French and English languages in all their relations with the public.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I was simply reading the motives of the petition. This petition bears the signatures of 433,845 French and English Canadians.

Mr. TALBOT (Bellechasse). (Translation.) How many children in that number?

Mr. LAVERGNE. (Translation.) It has been signed by people who have all reached the age of reason, which I could not say my hon. friend from Bellechasse has reached. I moved that this petition be laid on the table of the House.

I desire to present a petition signed by 433,845 Canadians of French and English speech, asking that, in the province of Quebec, public utilities shall be required to put the French and English languages on the same footing in their transactions with the public.

STANSTEAD ELECTION PAPERS.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved:

That the committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to make inquiry into the loss from the office of the clerk of the Crown in Chancery of certain papers relating to the recent election in the electoral division of Stanstead; and that for this purpose the committee be authorized to send for persons and papers.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). The committee, being a general committee of this House, already has that power.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is what I understand.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That might be omitted, perhaps.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. WILLIAM JACKSON asked:

1. What amount did the Montreal harbour commissioners spend for the cleaning, sweeping and watering of Montreal wharfs for the season of navigation, 1907, and was the work done by contract or day work?
2. Have they asked tenders for this work for the coming season of navigation, 1908? If so, how many tenders have been received, what is the name of each tenderer, and the amount of each tender?
3. Was the contract given out? If not, for what reasons?
4. What is the salary of each commissioner?
5. Are they supposed to give all their time to the commission? If so, is the government aware that the three commissioners still give most of their time to their respective businesses?
6. Is any one of the commissioners a relative to Mr. Peter Lyall, the contractor for the new wharf sheds?
7. What amount was paid by the Montreal harbour commissioners to said Peter Lyall & Sons, contractors, for extra work since the formation of the new board, and what was the nature of this extra work?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The following answers have been prepared by the Harbour Commissioners:—

1. In view of the fact that the commissioners may in the future call for tenders for cleaning, sweeping and watering the wharfs, it is not considered advisable to make public the cost in 1907. The work was done by day work.
2. Yes, tenders were asked for this work for 1908 and four tenders were received. It is the rule of the board not to give out the prices quoted in tenders or names of tenderers.
3. No tender was accepted as the commissioners now have a well organized cleaning department equipped with the necessary plant to carry on the work, and are of the opinion that they are in a position to carry out the work at a less cost than the lowest tender received.
4. The salaries are fixed by order in council and are payable out of harbour revenue. The president's salary being $7,000 per annum and the other two commissioners $5,000 each per annum.

5. They are not supposed to give their whole time to the commission. They give the time necessary for the proper administration of the trust and meet daily.

6. No.

7. The amount paid to Peter Lyall & Sons for extra work since the formation of the new board, was $56,134.19. Of this amount, $25,000 was for the laying of the concrete floors in winter so as to make five sheds available on the opening of navigation, 1907, the expenditure being authorized by order in council. The balance, $31,134.19, was for sundry extras, for changes in towers and galleries of the conveyor system, for cutting the overhang to make provision for a railway track along the front of the sheds, increasing the height of doors and sundry minor changes, all decided and authorized by the former board of commissioners to meet the views of the shipping companies. Since the new board of commissioners have been conducting the work, not a dollar of extra work has been authorized or claimed.

TRAVELLING EXPENSES AND REFUNDS.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What advances for travelling expenses have been charged to the ice-breaking steamers' vote for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1908, at what dates and to whom issued?

2. What refunds have been made to date by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and Mr. Wiallard on account of travelling expense advances made since January 1, 1907?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Advances issued to R. A. Wiallard:—

July 2, 1907	$1,000
July 30	1,000
September 3	1,000
September 5	500
	$3,500
Less amount credited to this vote from the amount voted for negotiation of French treaty	2,500
	$1,000

C. Dugald, for salary, living and travelling expenses :—

September 6, 1907	$ 243 33
February 17, 1908	250 00
March 25, 1908	500 00
October 30, 1907	2,433 33

2. Refunds by minister:—$877.94, $307. This last amount was refund of an account paid in error by the department. Refund by Mr. Wiallard, $45.30.

The advances above-mentioned as having been made to Mr. Wiallard, on the 30th July, the 3rd and 5th September, 1907, and amounting to $2,500, were expended by the minister in connection with the negotiation of the French treaty and when the money for the negotiation of the French treaty was voted by parliament in the further supplementary estimates 1907-8, and available, the ice-breaking steamer vote was credited with the said sum.

PAYMENTS TO K. FALCONER.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What sums have been paid to K. Falconer since September, 1907, and at what dates?

2. What is the total cost of the services rendered up to date?

3. Was Falconer's full claim allowed, and is the account finally settled?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. September 10, 1907 $ 177 71
   September 10 74 01
   October 1 1,000 00
   November 2 124 00

2. The total cost of the services rendered is $42,315.89. Out of this amount $6.816.34 is still held by the department.

3. The account is not finally settled.

WHARF AT ST. JOSEPH, ONTARIO.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked :

1. Were tenders asked for building a wharf at St. Joseph, Ontario? If so, when were tenders asked, and in what papers were the advertisements placed?

2. Does the government intend repairing the wharf? If so, when will operations commence?

3. What part of the original wharf is now intact?

4. Were plans and specifications prepared before commencing operations?

5. If tenders were not asked for, what reasons does the government give for not requesting same?

6. What amount of material, plant, tools, &c., did Mr. Corry receive from the Department of Public Works, as appears in Mr. Gray's letter of June 3, 1904, and what amount did Mr. Corry pay the department for same?

7. Did Mr. Corry complete his contract to the satisfaction of the department, did he receive payment for same, and in what condition did he leave the pier?

8. What is the date of the contract between this government and Mr. Corry?

9. If this contract has not been carried out, what reasons does the government give for not compelling Mr. Corry to carry out the contract of completing the work?

10. What amount of money has been paid H. F. Lamb, engineer in charge of St. Joseph wharf for his services in inspecting said wharf?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. No.

2. Wharf is now being repaired.

3. The cribwork portion.

4. Yes.

5. I am unable to state accurately the reasons which made it, in the judgment of the then minister, better to do the work by day's labour.

6. The contractor, as appears from letter of resident engineer Gray to the chief engineer, of May 19, 1904, was to have the use of the materials, &c., on hand.

7. 8. and 9. Mr. Corry agreed to complete the work for $3,957. He was paid $3,950.50, on July 16, 1904, on the certificate of the resident engineer, Mr. Gray, now deceased. At or about the time of the alleged completion of the work, part of it was washed away by a storm. I have called upon Mr. Corry for payment of $1,500, the amount required to rebuild the portion so washed away, and the department is retaining this amount out of rent accruing due to him. Mr. Corry protests against this action, claiming that he expended more than twice the amount agreed upon as payment for the work.

10. Mr. Lamb was not paid anything beyond his salary and travelling expenses as engineer in charge of the district of western Ontario.

IMPROVEMENTS IN POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked:

1. What improvements have been made in the postal facilities for handling mail during the past six months that will reduce the mutilation of envelopes, delays and mis-stateing of mails?

2. Did the government ask for tenders for carrying mail out of Sandy Cove, N.S.? If so, how many tenders were received, what was the amount of each tender, and the names of those tendering?

3. Did the government accept the lowest tender? If not, why not?

4. If the government did not ask for tenders, what reason does it give for not doing so, and when will the present contract expire?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. There is no mutilation of envelopes in the mails other than that caused by the necessary handling of the mails from post office to station, and station to post office, and the natural wear and tear caused by huge sacks piled one upon another in the trains en route. All cases brought to the attention of the department have been immediately investigated, and in no case has the department been able to ascertain that there was any intentional or wanton mutilation of mail matter or mutilation that in any way exposed the contents of the letters to observation, or that there was any mutilation whatever, except such as arose from the causes mentioned above and which are unavoidable.

All cases of delayed and mis-sent letters receive the prompt attention of the department and a return was lately made by the department to parliament, the perusal of which the department is confident will convince the most skeptical of the truth of this assertion.

2. Tenders could not be asked for carrying mails out of Sandy Cove inasmuch as no independent route from Sandy Cove exists, Sandy Cove being a way office supplied on the existing service between Digby and Westport. The second part of the question is answered by the first.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

All information as regards the contract for the mail service between Digby and Westport, and on which Sandy Cove is situated, was given in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Lambton on the 27th of April last.

PIER AT GRAND BEND.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked:

1. Is Mr. Eugène Lafleur Chief Engineer of Public Works?

2. Did said Eugène Lafleur personally see the pier at Grand Bend when completed? If not, who furnished him the information on whih he made the final estimate as furnished in a letter dated October 10, 1905, to the Department of Public Works, and what are the contents of reports to the chief engineer relating to the said pier?

3. Has the pier at Grand Bend been completed according to contract?

4. Were tenders called for under the contract given to John D. Warwick? If not, why not?

5. What reason does the government give for paying extras over and above the contract price?

6. Is the government aware that the pier at Grand Bend is in need of immediate repairs?

7. Does the government intend to dredge the river alongside of said pier? If so, when will the work commence?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. (a) No.

(b) The engineer in charge who forwarded the final estimate duly certified.

3. Yes.

4. Yes.

5. No extras allowed.

6. The necessity for repairs has been brought to the attention of the department.

7. Matter under consideration.

MONCTON SHOPS—PAYMENTS TO E. A. WALLBERG.

Mr. CROCKET asked:

1. What amount has been paid to date to E. A. Wallberg on account of his contract for the construction of the new Intercolonial Railway passenger car repair shop, paint shop, office and stores building at Moncton?

2. What amount has been paid to date to Mr. Wallberg for work and materials over and above that shown on the plan and specifications on which tenders were invited for the construction of said buildings?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Amount paid on bulk sum contract, $138,656.74.

2. Amount paid on account of schedule for additions or deductions, $9,079.34. Total amount paid, $147,736.08.

TIFFIN—TENDERS FOR DREDGING.

Mr. BENNETT asked:

What tenders were received for dredging besides that of the Owen Sound Dredging

Company for dredging at Tiffin in the year 1907, and what in each case or cases was the price for rock and for other material?

HATCHERY OF SHAD AT WINDSOR, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. BLACK asked :

Has the government any intention of undertaking the hatching of shad at the fish hatchery at Windsor, Nova Scotia?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Matter stands for consideration.

SHAD FISHERIES ON ATLANTIC COAST.

Mr. BLACK asked :

1. Does the government propose to appoint a commission to make inquiries and gather information in regard to the shad fisheries on the Atlantic coast of Canada?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The subject is at present under the most serious consideration.

EMPLOYMENT OF MESSRS. ALONZO, LOUIS AND CHARLES L. CHILVERS.

Mr. CLEMENTS—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked :

1. Is one Alonzo Chilvers, Louis Chilvers and Charles L. Chilvers, recently from Essex county, in the employ of the government?

2. If so, in what capacity, what is the date of each appointment, and the amount of salary received by each?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clements) could give an idea of what department these men are supposed to work in perhaps I could answer it. At present we have no information that such men are employed by any of the departments.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands.

ADJOURNMENT—EMPIRE DAY AND ASCENSION DAY.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved :

That when this House adjourns on Friday next it stand adjourned to Tuesday, the 26th instant; and that when it adjourns on Wednesday, the 27th instant, it stand adjourned to Friday, the 29th.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

On the orders of the day being called :

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). There is a matter which was brought up in the House a day or two ago of sufficient importance to demand a reply.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can only bring this matter up at this stage with the consent of the House.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is in reply to a question asked by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). With the consent of the House I wish to make just a few observations. The other day the hon. leader of the opposition read from a despatch in one of the newspapers, which I noticed afterwards had very large headlines over it, that a portion of the Transcontinental Railway in the vicinity of La Tuque had been badly damaged by flooding and that it would probably be necessary for the location of the line to be changed or for the roadbed to be very materially raised. I immediately inquired into the matter and I have a memorandum from the district engineer in charge which, I think, in view of the publicity that has been given to the statement, should be read. This is a letter which has been placed in my hands by the chairman of the commission. It was addressed to him yesterday by the district engineer.

Ottawa, May 20, 1908.

Hon. S. N. Parent, Chairman.

Dear Sir,—In answer to your inquiry concerning the despatches published in the newspapers as to the flooding of the Transcontinental Railway in the vicinity of the St. Maurice river, I have to confirm the reports in so far as they allude to the exceptionally high water experienced this year, not only on the St. Maurice river, but also on all the other rivers and streams in my district, and to give the most unqualified denial to the reported damages caused to our railway by these same floods. There is not one foot of track under water in my district extending from the New Brunswick boundary to Weymontachene on the St. Maurice river. The reports seem to have originated through the flooding of an embankment at La Tuque which had been built temporarily, and which was not within seven feet of the grade laid down on our profiles. Owing to the extreme floods this year, it might be prudent to build concrete substructures of some of our bridges higher than we originally intended to protect our steel superstructures later on from possible damages by ice and log jams, but I am glad to say that not one dollar's worth of damage has been done so far to the structures and culverts in district 'B,' neither will it be necessary to change one foot of our adopted location.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) A. E. DOUCET,
District Engineer, 'B.'

QUEBEC TERCENTENARY—POSTAGE STAMPS.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to find out from the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) if the souvenir postage stamps to be issued in connection with the tercentenary are still under consideration and if any decision has been reached especially with regard to the question as to whether the stamps are to be printed in both languages.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). It is not customary in matters of this kind to give to the public, before the day of issue, the nature of the stamp to be issued, but still I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. A. Lavergne) that I will be in a position to make a statement very shortly. I intend that the stamps shall be issued the very day the tercentenary begins. Otherwise I would have no objection to give my hon. friend and the country a description of the stamps.

Mr. A. LAVERGNE. I do not want a description of the stamp. But I put two questions to the minister lately and I want to find out if the two languages are going to be used. Am I not entitled to an answer ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have just answered my hon. friend.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—CONSIDERATION OF REPORTS WITHOUT NOTICE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). Mr. Speaker, might I make inquiries as to the necessity of notice of motion to confirm reports of an important nature which are presented to this House before these reports shall be confirmed. I observe that one was moved yesterday without notice, a report of the Committee on Debates of a rather important character, and in order that the practice may be known in future I would venture to bring the matter to your attention that you may lay down, for the information of the House, the correct practice for the chairman of these committees to observe in making such motions. I am not doing this for the purpose of finding fault with the particular report confirmed in this instance but merely to safeguard notice to the House in order that there may be a proper discussion, if discussion is necessary, of these matters.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Perhaps I may be permitted on this point to say shortly that when I was Speaker of the House it had been established as the practice that when reports came from committees they should not be concurred in on the same day, but that notice should be given that upon some future day a motion to concur in these reports would be made. If it were possible to adopt this practice I think it would be very much better for the members of this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I found the practice to be very much as is laid down by Bourinot. On referring to past proceedings of the House I found that it had been followed almost systematically. The practice is laid down by Bourinot at page 555 as follows :

Many motions for concurrence in reports of select standing committees are brought up without notice and allowed to pass by unanimous consent.

That is frequently the case. Usually I pause for a moment to see if there is any objection and if there is I intimate to the House that a proper course to adopt is that the matter should be allowed to stand as a notice of motion. The sentence immediately following the one I have just read is as follows :

But in all cases objection may be taken, and it is the regular course to give notice.

It certainly would appear to be the more proper course that notice should be given in all cases.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed, on the same subject that was brought up by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and in reference to which you, Sir, made some remarks, I desire to say that there was a report of a committee made yesterday. The committee was called in the morning at ten o'clock after the House had adjourned at three o'clock on the same morning. Some of the members of the committee had no notice of it. Some action was taken by the committee and the report was moved in the House at two o'clock in the afternoon. We all know that very few members are here at two o'clock on Wednesday afternoon as they have not yet become accustomed to the House meeting at that hour. The report was carried immediately—on the very same day upon which it had been adopted by the committee. Without discussing the merits of the report it seems to me extraordinary that it should be carried so quickly when there has been a report of the same committee before the House for three weeks which has not yet even been considered by parliament. It seems to be somewhat irregular. I understood that the chairman would to-day bring up the report adopted at the previous sitting of the committee. He did not happen to be in the House when the Speaker called for the reception of reports and as a matter of fact this report has not been discussed yet. It certainly looks extraordinary that a report of the same committee and upon a similar subject should be passed hurriedly in the morning and adopted by the House at its opening in the afternoon, while this report which has been before the House for three weeks has not yet been considered.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Was my hon. friend informed of the sitting of the committee yesterday morning ?

Mr. BERGERON. I found my notice in the box when I got here in the afternoon. The post office was closed when I left the House late the previous night and I suppose my notice was there, it having been delivered very late apparently, and I got it in the afternoon. What strikes me as most peculiar is that the Minister of Finance, when the report was moved yesterday, should have asked the chairman of the Debates Committee : Is that the report my hon. friend called my attention to, and the chairman of the committee said : No. There seems to be something strange in that. Why not discuss the prior report of the committee as soon as possible and let the House get rid of it ? The right hon. the Prime Minister has always been very strong in his attitude in supporting the reports of the committees of the House unless there is something extraordinary in them ; he has always maintained that these reports should be respected, and yet here is a report made by a select committee of the House three weeks ago and it is not yet adopted. The powers of this committee are delegated by the House and it is a slight on the House not to adopt the report. I do not say anything against the report the committee made yesterday as to the merits of the case, but I trust that this report of the same committee made three weeks ago will be considered by the House as soon as possible.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). As to the report of three weeks ago to which my hon. friend refers, when in the House the chairman of the committee proposed that that report should be adopted some time ago, the right hon. the Prime Minister suggested it should stand over. The reason for asking it to stand over is that the report—I am not speaking of the report of yesterday, but the prior report—proposed to increase salaries and make payment for former years, both of which were matters which we thought should receive the consideration of the government, and that the government should have to take the responsibility of approving or disapproving, on the general principle that appropriations of public money should receive the assent of the government. It was for that reason the report was allowed to stand over. That was a good reason and it is only for that reason. It is fair to the chairman of the committee to say that the report of the committee which was adopted yesterday was not open to the same objection as the report which was presented a few days ago.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not yesterday's report involve a charge on the revenue ?

Mr. FIELDING. No ; the chairman of the committee told me of the report of yesterday before it was presented and I said at once : Are you proposing to increase any salaries. He said, No ; we are proposing to fill a vacancy, this adds nothing to the expenditure ; and I said : If that is the case the objection which was taken before would not apply, and the assurance was given me that it was not a proposal to create any new vacancy or to create any increase of salary.

Mr. FOSTER. But it adds to the expenditure ?

Mr. FIELDING. The information given me was that it was to fill a vacancy.

Mr. FOSTER. If the vacancy was not filled there would be no money expended for it.

Mr. FIELDING. Whatever may be said as to the powers of the committee to select officials to fill vacancies and to make a choice of them, it seems to me there would be a distinction between such a proposition and a proposal to increase the expenditure. At all events that was the line of difference in my own mind between the two reports. The one proposes to fill a vacancy at an established salary, so I was informed, and the other proposes to add to the salaries and to make payment for the services of past years.

Mr. BERGERON. The statement of the Finance Minister shows how useful and necessary it is to discuss these matters. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance is entirely mistaken in his understanding of what was said to him. There is no doubt that the report of the committee yesterday created a new office and a new expense. It was to appoint a new employee altogether and that at a certain salary and that is the report which was adopted. I do not object to it. It is a report made by a committee of the House and I am ready to stand by such a report. Now as to the other report of three weeks ago which has been delayed at the demand of the government, it again shows how useful it will be to discuss these matters, because there are any number of precedents to show that such reports have been adopted by the House time and time again. I hope therefore that for the sake of the proper conduct of the business of the House that the adoption of this report shall be moved as soon as possible and that we shall have an opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. FIELDING. There is some room for difference of opinion as to the method of procedure by committees under such circumstances. There are precedents to show that the work of the 'Hansard' staff—because it relates to these gentlemen—comes under the direction of the Committee on Internal Economy.

Mr. BERGERON. That is entirely new.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend will find it is not entirely new. But, there are also cases where a committee without objection has been allowed to deal with these matters. There is room for honest difference of opinion as to what is the proper channel and I am not offering any decided opinion as to which is the better way. It is only fair to say that was the reason why this report was laid aside for consideration.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART. If I understand your ruling now, Mr. Speaker, it is that nothing of this kind shall occur again and that although there is no objection to a motion, the only way you can possibly put it to the House would be by suspending the rule. Last session I objected again and again to reports of committees of the House coming up for consideration without the necessary notice required by the rules of the House appearing upon the Votes and Proceedings, and as I understand you now, Mr. Speaker, you will in future strictly enforce the rules of the House and that unless there is unanimous consent on motion for the suspension of the rules of the House, none of these motions will be allowed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It would seem to me that if the principle laid down by my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) is adhered to it would impede the proceedings of this House. Many of these committees are simply formal and require no debate, and they are adopted whenever presented, such for instance as a report from a committee that it should have power to take evidence under oath and employ shorthand writers. Mr. Speaker has stated that yesterday he waited to see whether any objection was taken to the adoption of this report and no objection was taken. When the report was brought in I inquired from the chairman of the committee and I understood from him that the report did not involve any new charge on the revenue, but simply filled a vacancy, and I understood under such circumstances there would be no objection at all. I may say to my hon. friend and to the House that if the good faith of anybody has been infringed upon, we will reconsider it. I do not want to have the matter passed in that way. There is no reason why this report should not be debated if it is to be debated at all.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (Leeds). The Minister of Finance must have either misunderstood the chairman of the Debates Committee or the true state of the facts was not represented. There was a meeting of the Debates Committee in the morning at ten o'clock and I was present at that committee with four others, just enough to form a quorum. The chairman of the committee stated there was a demand for a new translator, an additional translator. I took exception to it and I moved—but I did not get a seconder—that we should have the work done by tender and contract. There are some nine or ten men there now doing the work that two men with two stenographers ought to do. The member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) moved, seconded by the member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) and supported by the member for Calgary that the appointment be made and I voted against it. However it carried and the report was presented to the House and rushed through yesterday. It appeared to be a rush thing altogether. It was the appointment of a new member to that translation staff without any doubt in the world. I have not the slightest doubt but that the staff is now overloaded and that half the number of them could do the work. One of the proofreaders was appointed to the translating staff at a salary of $2,000 a year and there was a new man appointed to fill the position of proofreader. There is no doubt there was a new appointment and an increase in the public expenditure.

Mr. FIELDING. Lest I should mislead the House, I want to say at once that I have not the slightest doubt that the chairman of the committee acted in good faith, but from what he said I certainly did understand that this was not creating any new office, but filling a vacancy. That is why there was in my mind, whether properly or improperly, a distinction between this report and the previous one, this report not adding any obligation, but the previous one adding a considerable sum. It may be that I misunderstood the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be as well to read the report, and it is necessary to read more than is on the face of it to get the understanding which the Finance Minister said he received :

Your committee recommend that E. Charlier, who has been employed in the capacity of proofreader on the staff of translators of the Debates be appointed as translator at a salary of $2,000 per annum, and that Rodolph Girard be appointed to replace the former as proofreader at a salary of $1,500 per annum.

It does not say that the proposed appointment is to fill a vacancy or anything of the kind. On the face of it, it means a new position, and my hon. friend says it is a new position. I most certainly would like to discuss the matter of adding translators before the report goes through, and I think the suggestion made by the Prime Minister should be carried out, to have this report reconsidered and committed to the House to be discussed when the next report comes up.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would not like to take this position to-day in the absence of the chairman of the committee, but, certainly, if there is not a proper understanding of the report, there is room for explanation.

INQUIRY FOR PAPERS.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if he will bring down the original papers with reference to the fire extinguishers on which we had a little mild discussion in the House. It was supposed to be exigent at the time that the papers should be copied to get them into the hands of the commission, but the commission is now at leisure, great leisure I may say, and I suppose the minister will now lay them on the table of the House.

Mr. BRODEUR. I may say that some of the papers were personal. I suppose the hon. gentleman does not ask that these should be brought down?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the file as used and quoted from by the minister should be brought down. I have a great suspicion of personal communications. We had an example yesterday of things marked private which were absolutely public. I think that whatever was on the file should be brought down.

Mr. BRODEUR. I may say that the papers quoted by myself were not marked personal. But I find that a paper which was quoted by my hon. friend was marked personal.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not make it not a public paper.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know whether my hon. friend was justified in quoting in a file which was handed over to him a letter which was marked personal.

Mr. FOSTER. It appears to me that you cannot change the value of a sovereign by stamping it twenty-five cents.

IMMIGRATION—ORDER IN COUNCIL.

Mr. LENNOX. I desire to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) if he is prepared to bring down the recent order in council with reference to immigration founded upon the recent amendment to the Immigration Act ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I am sorry that the order in council is not ready to be brought down. It is under reconsideration by council and as soon as the reconsideration has been completed it will be brought down.

Mr. LENNOX. I presume the minister will lay it on the table of the House when it is passed?

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely.

SUPPLY—THE ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. A. N. WORTHINGTON (Sherbrooke). Mr. Speaker, I propose for a short time this afternoon to discuss the Ross rifle and to conclude my remarks with a motion. In bringing the subject of the Ross rifle before the House I would refer to my remarks of last session, in which I stated that it was not my intention to endeavour in any way to embarrass the Department of Militia, to injure the manufacturer or to impede the manufacture of the rifle in Canada. My object was to have placed in the hands of the militia of Canada a safe, serviceable and efficient rifle. With that object in view I urged the Minister of Militia to submit the rifle to such an inspection at the hands of musketry experts of note as would result in one of two things—in alaying the fear which existed in the minds of an already gun-shy militia, or in the rifle being perfected or a better rifle being placed in the hands of the militia of Canada. This the minister refused to do in spite of the criticism in the House and in the press, in spite of the absolute condemnation of the rifle by the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, in spite of its more or less general failure in the hands of the permanent force and the militia, in spite of the refusal of the men to use it, and in spite of the severe accidents which have happened at St. John, at Eastman and at Lethbridge; so that to-day, Mr. Speaker, I have no apology to offer for a strenuous criticism of the weakness of the right hon. gentleman who leads this House and his War Minister in placing in the hands of the militia of Canada an unsafe and unserviceable rifle—an action, Mr. Speaker, which, in the mind of any one who has read the report, is nothing short of criminal.

To begin with, I would refer to the raison d'etre for the rifle. It was a very commendable idea on the part of the Minister of Militia and the Militia Council to have a rifle manufactured in Canada—to have a factory established within our own borders capable of turning out a sufficient number of arms so that in the event of our being cut off from the mother country in the time of trouble we will still have our own source of supply. This was a very commendable idea, but we shall soon see, Mr. Speaker, how this idea failed, and how a contraband Yankee rifle came to be placed in the hands of the militia of Canada. The Minister of Militia started in search of a rifle and somebody to manufacture it. The manufacturer was soon forthcoming in the person of Sir Charles Ross, and the rifle adopted was the Ross straight-pull magazine rifle. A company was formed and incorporated. As to the personnel of the company it matters little, as we were told by the minister in the House that the original company never went into existence, but that Sir Charles Ross is doing business individually under his own name. The company was given a free site on the Plains of Abraham. It might be well to inquire why the Ross rifle was adopted? How it came to find favour in the eyes of the Minister of Militia and the government? It is very hard to say, but we were told in the Public Accounts Committee by the solicitor of the company that the Ross rifle was an exact reproduction of the Manlicher rifle with which some 250,000 men of the Australian army were armed.

We were also told that the commission had sat upon and adopted this rifle as being one of the best and most up to date. But in the event of the rifle having been adopted on the strength of its being the same as that used in the Austrian army, that army has not been rearmed since 1896 so that we are not getting a very new or up to date weapon. As no very favourable opinions were given at that time, it would be only reasonable to ask if the rifle had been reported on by the war office or any particular commission up to then. We have been told by the Minister of Militia that the War Office had never reported upon or criticised the rifle for the simple reason that it had never been submitted to the war office. A fairly comprehensible alibi. But a statement I would be inclined to take with a grain of salt considering the fact that the hon. minister has told us that none of the component parts of this rifle were manufactured in the United States. For that reason I would be inclined to doubt that statement, but, in any event, about the time the rifle was adopted, or shortly afterwards, Lord Middleton, then secretary for war, in a despatch to Lord Minto, regretted that while the Ross rifle would take the same ammunition as the Lee-Enfield, the different parts of the two rifles were not interchangeable, which would be a great drawback.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Whose report is that?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Brodrick, who was then secretary for war.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is the hon. gentleman aware that no two parts of the Lee-Enfield are interchangeable, and there are eighteen different sections?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The hon. gentleman will have ample opportunity to speak his little piece when I am through. This despatch also says that two of the Ross rifles had been tested by the officers of the Musketry School at Hythe in connection with two Lee-Enfield rifles, and the report showed the marked inferiority of the Ross rifles. This, of course, has been denied by the Minister of Militia. There is therefore good reason to suppose that the Ross rifle must have been adopted for some and good and sufficient cause.

We are told that the Ross rifle was tested at Springfield and New Haven and other places and passed very creditable examinations. The test of the earliest date of which we have cognizance is to be found in the report No. 5 of the Public Accounts Committee on the Ross rifle. I take the following from the report of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) page 197, after stating that he had visited the United States of America arsenal and factories at Springfield, Massachusetts, and the Pratt & Whitney and other works in Hartford, Connecticut, and expressing his appreciation of the courtesy extended to him, he reported as follows to General Otter:

It may be noted that on active service in South Africa I chanced to take several straight pull actioned rifles from the Boers. Though the action was weak, the resistance lug or block being at the rear of the bolt, yet the ease in loading and firing, the steadiness of the rifle, its magazine, its steadiness impressed me. It was of the Mannlicher type straight pull. The Sir Charles Ross rifle has all the advantages of the other with none of its drawbacks. The Sir Charles Ross rifle locks its resistance lugs at the forward end of the bolt; is the strongest rifle I have seen; is least likely to get out of order, and is the simplest to dismount and put together.

He also speaks about the tests of the Ross rifle made at Hartford in comparison with the Lee-Enfield. He says:

The first defective in the Lee-Enfield blew off and smashed the magazine.

That is the defective shell which is used in testing the Lee-Enfield.

The second Lee-Enfield was disabled by the next defective, the extractor spring being broken. Thus far nothing had happened the Sir Charles Ross action. It may be noted the first defective from each was fired with the rifles firing screwed in a vice at the muzzle, both rifles slightly opened the action from the recoil.

I simply quote that because it differs very materially from the report I have here, which comes from the Springfield armoury, dated 31st of August, 1903, and which is signed by the members of the board, Charles H. Clark, manager of the ordnance department, president; John P. Thompson, captain, ordnance department member; W. S. Pierce, captain ordnance department, recorder. A number of tests were made. The first one or two I shall not read as they are not important, as they deal with rapidity and accuracy, and also the single shot tests. But when they got down to test the rifle as a repeater, the report is as follows:

As repeater—time 1 minute—number of shots, 29.

In this and other tests in which the piece was used as a repeater, the magazine was charged from pasteboard boxes holding five cartridges each. The cartridges were intended to be poured from these boxes, using the latter as chargers. The boxes, however, were not of exactly the right shape and frequently failed to work satisfactorily.

Test No. 111—endurance.

In this test the piece was fired in a fixed rest.

First series of 50—At one charging of the magazine only four cartridges could be entered, due apparently to stacking of the first two.

Second series of 50—The same difficulty in charging magazine occurred several times. On one of these occasions the fact that the fifth cartridge had not entirely entered the magazine was not observed until an effort was made to close the bolt when a jam resulted.

Third series of 50—One miss fire occurred.

Fourth series of 50—A jam occurred after charging the magazine as noted in the second series. Two cases extracted with some difficulty.

Fifth series of 50—One miss-fire occurred.

Sixth series of 50—One empty case stuck, and in the effort to extract, a portion of the rim of the case was sheared off by the extractor. The case was rammed out from the muzzle. Another case failed to extract at first trial, but was extracted on second trial.

Seventh series of 50—No remarks.

Eighth series of 50—Two cartridges missed fire at first trial, but fired when struck a second time. One cartridge failed to feed from magazine in closing the breach, but fed properly on second trial.

Ninth series of 50—The stacking in charging the magazine noted in the second series occurred once. Two cartridges missed fire and two cases required a second effort to extract.

Tenth series of 50—Three miss-fires occurred and one cartridge required two blows to fire it.

Series (b).

Five cartridges required two blows of the firing pin and five misfires occurred in this series. Three cases failed to extract after several efforts due to shearing of the rim in one case and over-riding of the extractor in the others, and had to be rammed out from the muzzle. One case required a second effort to extract and another several efforts. One jam resulted from throwing the magazine on by accidentally moving the catch lever.

Then comes the series of August 10:

August 10, 1903.

Test No. 4—Dust.

After dusting as prescribed for two minutes, the piece was fired 20 rounds as follows:

(a) Magazine empty when dusted. Before firing the magazine to be loaded and held in reserve until 15 rounds are fired as a single loader; then the cartridges in the magazine to be fired.

Three misfires occurred. The mechanism worked rather stiffly at first, the cutt-off requiring some manipulation before it functioned properly.

(b) Magazine loaded when dusted. The cartridges to be removed and wiped before firing, and piece used as a repeater.

Six misfires occurred and three cartridges required two blows of the firing pin.

Test No. 6—Excessive charges.

This test was taken up before test No. 5 pending the preparation of the defective cartridges required for the latter test. Cartridges giving a chamber pressure of 75,000 pounds per square inch were used.

1st round.—The primer blew out of the case giving what practically amounted to a blow back. The bayonet lock in the rear end of the bolt-head which held the main-spring sleeve in place was destroyed by the breaking off of part the part in rear of the slot forming the lock, and the firing pin was forced about one inch to the rear.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the hon. member (Mr. Worthington) read that again? What blew back, the cartridge, or the rifle?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The primer blew out of the case.

The remainder of this test was discontinued for the time.

Test No. 5—Defective cartridges.

Defective No. 1.

The bolt shield was bent up and the forward end broken off. The slot in the bottom of the bolt sleeve at the rear end in which the lug of the cocking-piece slides was contracted and bound the cocking-piece slightly. This was remedied by filing out the slot until the movement was free. The shield was removed before the next round.

Defective No. 2.

The cartridge missed fire. As it appeared that without the bolt shield the firing pin might be released in the act of closing the breech, the rifle was withdrawn for alteration. The possibility of the release of the firing pin as noted was due to the fact that with the shield removed the bolt sleeve is not supported by the guide groove on the right side of the receiver and can therefore rise at the rear end sufficiently to disengage the cocking piece from the rear.

The inventor then submitted for a continuation of the defective cartridge test a second rifle which differed only in length of barrel and a few similar details from the one withdrawn and the test was recommenced.

Defective No. 1—The bolt shield was entirely blown off the edge engaged in the receiver groove, being stripped and remaining in the groove.

In both these rounds the cartridges were so placed in the chamber that one of the cuts in the head pointed up and the gas escaping upwards struck against the under edge of the front of the shield with the results noted. It was evident that the shield was not strong enough to withstand the blow and that some modification in it was necessary. The second rifle was accordingly withdrawn and further trial discontinued pending changes to be made in the shield.

The next test, No. 6, was a test with excessive charges. As before, cartridges were used giving a chamber pressure of 75,000 pounds to the square inch—five rounds used.

1st round.—No remarks.

2nd round.—The firing pin appeared to move stiffly on examination, after this round, apparently from fouling due to the previous rounds with defective cartridges.

3rd round.—The action of the firing pin same as after previous round. The bolt was cleaned before the next round.

4th round.—A blow back occurred. The firing pin moved with greater difficulty. On examination it was found that the rear of the cocking-piece slot in the bolt sleeve was slightly burred, binding the movement of the cocking-piece and firing pin. This portion of the bolt sleeve had not been hardened. The burrs were filed off and test proceeded with.

5th round.—A partial blow back occurred. The case could not be extracted by hand, but on the second trial using the foot to move the bolt back the case was extracted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the test of the rifle as made in the Springfield armoury.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the date?

Mr. WORTHINGTON August, 1903.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And what is the date of mine?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not see any date. Possibly this report is made after that of the hon. gentleman.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). I would like to ask for some definite information as to this report—as to where the hon. gentleman (Mr. Worthington) got it; whether he knows that the rifles supplied were of the same kind that Sir Charles Ross is delivering to the Canadian government, and so on. I think we are entitled to know something about this report.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. This report, I believe, emanated from the Springfield armoury in Massachusetts, and I believe it was made on rifles submitted to that board by Sir Charles Ross himself.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Can the hon. gentleman (Mr. Worthington) give us any evidence—the names of the board?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have already read the names of the board. I will read the first part of the report:

The board met at 10 a.m., August 6, 1903, pursuant to the verbal instructions of the commanding officer. Present, all the members. Meetings were continued from time to time until the tests were completed.

Sir Charles Ross appeared before the board and presented his magazine rifle for examination and test.

So, I presume, this was an authentic test made of the rifle.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I suppose this is taken from a printed document?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. This is a typewritten copy.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If I may be allowed to interject a word here, the papers which have been brought down to this House are given with full authority from the Department of Militia and Defence. It seems to me that the House ought to be seized of the origin of this report, and ought to have proof of its genuineness.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is nothing seriously wrong with it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. This report winds up as follows:

Approved, and concurring in the opinion of the board that there is no advantage to be gained from further experiments with the Ross rifle.

(Signed) FRANK H. PHIPPS,
Colonel, Ord. Dept., U.S.A.,
Commanding.

Springfield Armoury, October 17, 1903.

Now, it seems to me that on these reports mainly, this Ross rifle was adopted. And the result is, a site was given on the historic battlefields of Quebec to the Ross Rifle Company, and in a building on that site the company, is now manufacturing,—or, rather assembling, from the small arms factories of the United States component parts of this rifle. The contract was entered into between Sir Charles Ross and the Department of Militia and Defence, the preamble of which is as follows :

Whereas, it is considered in the general interest of Canada that the rifles required by the government for the purposes of militia and defence should be manufactured in Canada, and whereas the contractor has proposed by himself or his assignee to undertake the establishment and operation of a suitable factory in Canada for the manufacture of such rifles and to supply the government with the rifles so required, manufactured at the same factory and delivered at a cost to the government not exceeding that which the government would have to pay for similar rifles purchased by or for the government as heretofore in the English market.

Now, this is the reason for the rifle being manufactured in Canada. I would like to show the facts concerning the importation of the component parts of this rifle from the United States. The great cry in favour of the Ross rifle was that it was to be made wholly in Canada, a Canadian product, so that if, in case of trouble, we were cut off from the motherland, we should have our source of supply within our own borders. This was a very commendable idea, but it will be seen that for some years back we have been living in a fool's paradise, for no less than from 17 to 20 of the component parts of the Ross rifle have been made in the United States. Suppose we were called upon to-morrow to defend our southern border from invasion, what position would we be in with the component parts of our rifles manufactured in the small arms factories of the United States?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Does my hon. friend say there are seventeen parts of the rifle completely manufactured in the United States ?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will go further than that and say there were more than that made at one time.

Mr. CARVELL. Now ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We are talking about the present.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am talking about the position until the time the 'Star' got on to the job. I do not know that there are now as many, but there are some, and if the minister makes inquiry from the Quebec Central Railway Company, I think he will find they are still coming through in barrelfuls, almost as many as ever.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is where you get your information, is it ?

Mr. CARVELL. Would the hon. gentleman give the names of the different parts manufactured in the United States ?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will give them all in just a minute. The minister does not anticipate any trouble with the United States, he has already sheltered himself behind the Monroe doctrine and is very fond of entwining the Old Glory of the United States with the Union Jack on festive occasions. On one occasion, at Windsor, Vermont, while he was engaged in the interchange of international bouquets, the Union Jack, almost at the moment he was speaking, was being trailed in the dust at Detroit. So the time may come when the hon. gentleman will regret the terms of that contract.

In this connection I wish to draw the attention of the House to the minister's straight denial of the fact that parts of the rifle are manufactured in the United States, a statement I believe to be not only absolutely incorrect but wilfully misleading.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. member has gone a little far ; the statement 'wilfully misleading' can hardly be permitted.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The statement was not only absolutely incorrect but had the effect of appearing wilfully misleading, for at this very time importations had been and were going on from the United States in large quantities as the payments to Billings & Spencer, Hartford, Conn., will show. I have here a statement of payments to Billings & Spencer for 1902 and 1903, which is as follows :—

Quebec, June 11, 1903.

PAYMENTS ON ACCOUNT OF MATERIALS.

1902.

Oct. 16.,	To Billings & Spencer Co., rifle forgings..	$ 4,044 37
Dec. 22,	To Billings & Spencer Co., barrels bands, etc..	4,814 47
		(4,912 72)
Dec. 24,	To Billings & Spencer Co., freight, sundries..	106 60
Dec. 29,	To Billings & Spencer Co., receivers....	2 72
Dec. 29,	To Billings & Spencer Co., rear bands....	11 54

1903.

Jan. 27,	To Billings & Spencer Co., receivers..	1 74
Feb. 9,	To Billings & Spencer Co., barrels, etc..	8,438 64
Feb. 23,	To Billings & Spencer Co., freight, sundries..	163 59
April 23,	To Billings & Spencer Co., freight, sundries....	75 21
April 23,	To Billings & Spencer Co., barrels, pins, etc..	4,241 67
March 4,	To Billings & Spencer Co., sight leafs....	149 40

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Surely my hon. friend knows that these are steel forgings and not completed parts. That was proved in the Public Accounts Committee, and he knows it very well.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Then there are a number of items during March, which I believe to be fixtures and which no doubt came in quite legitimately, amounting to about $10,000, which I shall not read.

I have here another statement of payments to Billings & Spencer amounting to $17,681.92, the items of which are as follows :—

BILLINGS & SPENCER.

1903.

Feb. 9, Gun barrels, $7,582. Bolt sleeves, 427.
" Bolts, $12,382.....Butt plates, 8,045.
" Trigger guards, $3,600.
" Rear banks, $9,370.
" Receivers, $5,038.
" Sears, $15,038.
" Triggers, $4,857.

I wish to quote from the 'Hansard' a few questions and answers showing the minister's denial of the fact that any parts were made in the United States. On May 14, 1906, at page 3246 of 'Hansard,' I asked the following question and received the minister's answer :

Is any part or parts of the Ross rifle manufactured in the United States? If so what parts and by what company?—A. No.

The minister's answer could not have been more explicit. On January 14, 1907, the following questions and answer appear :—

1. Are any parts of the Ross rifle manufactured by Messrs. Billings & Spencer, of Hartford, Connecticut? If so, what parts?
2. Are these parts dutiable? If so, under what clause do they come?
3. Is it the intention of this company to establish a branch factory in this country? If so, at what place?
4. Is this company incorporated in the Dominion of Canada? If so, under what statute or Act?
5. Who are the members of the company?
6. What contracts, if any, exist between this firm and the Ross Rifle company?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). We have no information in the Department of Militia with regard to any of these questions. I have made inquiries at the Customs Department and find that nothing is known about the matter there.

I hope my hon. friend the Minister of Customs was not going around with concealed arms, as well as the Minister of Militia. We have these invoices from Billings & Spencer amounting to many thousands, and yet this firm is unknown at either department. At this very time Billings & Spencer had incorporated in Canada and were hunting for a suitable place to establish a factory. They are situated now, I understand, at Welland, Ont., where they are manufacturing forgings. Some of their drop forgings are manufactured there but some are imported from the United States, at least three of the most important parts of this rifle. At page 1107, Vol. II., 1906-7, I find the following :—

Is it true that parts of the Ross rifle manufactured by the Ross Rifle Company at Quebec are imported into this country from the United States; if so, what parts?—A. Yes, flat springs.

Q. Have any parts of said rifles been manufactured by Messrs. Billings & Spencer, of Hartford? If so, what parts?—A. No, but some rough drop forgings had been supplied by Messrs Billings & Spencer.

Then the Minister of Customs gave the importations of component parts as follows: For the year ending June, 1904, parts had been imported to the amount of $38,116 ; 1905, $28,939 ; 1906, $38,314.

Mr. TAYLOR. Were duties collected on parts?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Everything comes in free for this company. The fact seems to have been established in 1906 that the Ross Rifle Company were manufacturing the component parts of their rifle largely in the United States. This fact has been more recently brought out by the Montreal 'Star' and the Boston 'Herald.' The Montreal 'Star' seems to have taken a trip into the interior of the Department of Militia, with the result that one of their agents visited the United States and found the Frank Mossberg, of Attleboro', Mass., in his bicycle bell and manicure factory, was manufacturing seventeen or eighteen parts of the Ross rifle. Although these facts were published and were brought before the government in the Montreal 'Star' and the Boston 'Herald' under large headlines, there does not seem to have been any denial of them in this House, or any denial by any authority of the Department of Militia anywhere. The Montreal 'Star' of March 4, 1908, publishes an article under the following heading :

Essential parts of Ross rifle are to-day being made by United States factories.

Canada's national rifle factory would have to stop operation if communications with the American republic were broken. Seventeen important parts turned out by one manufacturer in Massachusetts. New national enterprise inaugurated six years ago is still dependent upon foreign makers.

Then it goes on to state that a representative of the 'Star' visited Mr. Frank Mossberg's bicycle bell and manicure factory and found that, behind closed doors, all these component parts were being manufactured under contract with Sir Charles Ross for Canada's great arm of defence, and for the factory at Quebec. This rifle was to have been manufactured in Canada.

The Boston 'Herald,' in a tone of blasphemy, described the Ross rifle factory as being as useless as a cheese factory. The Boston 'Herald' of March 5 contains the following headlines :

Canadian army rifles mostly American. Seventeen leading parts of Ross weapon made in Attleboro. Contract calls for manufacture in Quebec.

This paper enters into a description of the component parts of the rifle that are sent here. I will read a part of it :

The rifle is turned out by the Ross Rifle Company, of Quebec, a firm made possible by its contract with the Crown, and subsidized by the Canadian government. The head of the firm is Sir Charles Ross, a Scotch baronet. The contract under which he was granted the right to manufacture the standard military arm specifies that it shall be strictly a Canadian product.

However, all the Canadian workmen have to do is to assemble the pieces, and hand over the finished product. Only one principal part of the work do they attend to—the boring and rifling of the barrels.

The steel from which the barrels are made comes from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

The wood for fashioning the stocks is ordered through a New York firm and is carried up the St. Lawrence in ships from Europe.

The forgings from which trigger guards, receivers and bolt sleeves are manufactured, are made by the Spencer-Billings Company, of Hartford, Connecticut. The springs are made in England.

The metal punchings and the pressed, stamped or dyed steel parts are made by the Frank Mossberg Company, of Attleboro, Massachusetts.

In case of war or any national emergency requiring the immediate supply of arms, the Ross rifle factory, quietly reposing behind the big guns of Quebec's impregnable citadel, would be about as much use as a cheese factory.

That is what the Boston 'Herald' says.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is conclusive.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes. In what condition were these parts brought in? Many of them were brought in from the Mossberg factory ready to be put into the gun, in a finished condition. I have a letter from a man who served four or five years in the Mossberg factory, and it is as follows :

Dear Sir,—I got your letter yesterday. In reply would say that I have worked for the Frank Mossberg Company, of Attleboro, for over five years in two different times. The first time was seven years ago. Worked for them four and a half years, and left their employment for about six months and went back for them for another year and left them the last a little over a year ago.

Now, about the manufacturing parts of the Ross rifle, I can't say how many parts are made, and name them as there are many parts that I don't know by name, but I can show them on the rifle.

As for the parts that I remember I can give you a list of them that were made just a year ago.

The pawl.
The sear.
The trigger.
The stock plate.
The lifter is made in two parts and assembled in the Mossberg shop.

As near as I can remember there must be between 15 to 20 parts made there, and all sent ready to be put in the rifle, except a few parts that have to be case-hardened, as ever part is made of machinery steel, cold rolled. Find inclosed a few sketches of parts made there that I made some of the tools myself.

Hoping this will help you a little.

I remain, yours,
(Sgd.) X. T. DELORME.

Here is a drawing of the parts which he has made from his memory after having been engaged in making these parts. On March 5, 1908, the Montreal 'Star' comes out with another big sensational column, headed as follows :

How Mr. Mossberg, of Massachusetts, came to make seventeen essential parts of Ross rifle. Visit to the factory at Attleboro where, behind locked doors, force is working hard on 'Canadian rifle' contracts. Make every effort to keep visitors from seeing the work in progress. In interview with 'Star' reporter, Mr. Mossberg says he joined hands with Sir Charles Ross on a purely business basis. One asks for goods, the other sells them.

Then on March 10, Mr. Mossberg pays a hurried visit to Ottawa, and the Montreal 'Star' reported the visit under the following heading :

Sir Charles Ross issues hurry up call to Mr. Mossberg to explain.

Massachusetts manufacturer in Montreal this morning after session of Ross rifle authorities makes interesting statement.

Mossberg goes on to say in this paper that although there are certain alleged affidavits produced may be he is still doing business at the old stand and manufacturing most of the component parts of the Ross rifle.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. He denied that the next day in the Montreal 'Star.'

Mr. WORTHINGTON. He did not deny it in the 'Star.' The 'Star' confirms the report that his previous statements were practically correct.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Is my hon friend (Mr. Worthington) aware of the fact that Sir Charles Ross has specifically denied this whole statement and that this Mr. 'Mossback,' or whatever his name is, also made a denial?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I don't quite understand what the minister has said.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I suppose the hon. gentleman is aware, or perhaps he is not aware, that Sir Charles Ross has specifically denied the allegations made in that paper and that this Mossville' or 'Mossback,' or whatever his name is, also denied that he made such statements as are attributed to him in the 'Star' or to the 'Star' reporter?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I know there are a great many 'Mossbacks' connected with the rifle, but if your Mr. 'Mossback' was not guilty of manufacturing parts of the Ross rifle why did he come up here on Sir Charles Ross' suggestion? What call had Sir Charles Ross on Mr. 'Mossback' and why did he respond so quickly to the call?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Who says he did? You don't know. That is a newspaper statement.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Mossback was here for two or three days and he confirmed every statement he made previously. He says he personally made a number of these parts until a year ago, and if the hon. gentleman will inquire at Welland, Ont., where the Billings & Spencer Company are now doing business, he will find that although they are making some drop-forgings, and very good drop-forgings, they are still importing at least three of the essential parts of the rifle from the United States to-day.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am glad the hon. gentleman approves of the drop-forgings.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be a mighty poor case if he could not find something good in the whole thing.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is a proper thing for a committee to investigate.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Now as to the contract between the government and the Ross Rifle Company. This contract was one of the most ridiculous and unbusiness-like contracts ever entered into by any business like government and a totally one-sided affair. According to the terms of this agreement the Department of Militia and Defence was to purchase from the Ross Rifle Company a number of Ross rifles at the rate of 10,000 a year at the price of $25 a piece, the company to receive an advance payment of 75 per cent on the selling price of the rifles on advance estimates. The company also is allowed to import the machinery and raw material free of duty. This means that the government actually became the bankers of this company which had previously received a free site on the Plains of Abraham at Quebec for the nominal fee of $1 for 99 years with the option of extension. It is needless to discuss the manner in which this site was obtained. The lease in its present form is simply a subterfuge to alienate portions of the Plains of Abraham. The reasons advanced by the government for locating at this point, as we were told by Mr. Nesbitt in the Public Accounts Committee, was that the factory would be under the guns of the fleet. Which fleet is not stated. Possibly it is the fleet which the right hon. gentleman and his government have accepted the protection of since they came into power, but towards which they have refused to contribute one cent. It is certainly not the fleet of vessels which might be giving us protection on our Atlantic and Pacific sea-board, had the right hon. gentleman and his government contributed towards instead of putting the money into the pockets of the British ratepapers through the British preference. However, one thing is certain in the granting of this site, and that is that there must have been a straight pull on the site as well as on the gun. There the Ross Company has been assembling the component parts of this rifle and putting them together at a prince of $25. which is more than the cost of the Lee-Enfield or the new Springfield, the American rifle.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That statement is incorrect.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Which statement?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As to price.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The $25?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The statement as to the price of the English rifle and as to the price of the American rifle is incorrect.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. As to the price of the American rifle I am going to take the word of one of the Minister's own Rifle Commissioners, and that is Colonel Anderson who in writing to the 'Militia Gazette' concerning the Palma trophy and the respective merits of the Lee-Enfield and the new, states that the price of the Springfield rifle is $15. Possibly some of these commissioners do not know anything about rifles, but I am willing to accept Colonel Anderson's statement that $15 is the price of the rifle.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Possibly he took the erratic figures of the hon. member for Sherbrooke last session.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. In view of the price which this government is paying for the Ross rifle and the terms under which it was to be delivered, I would like to consider the previous armament of our militia and the value and stability of the rifle with which it was armed. During a discussion of this matter on February 26, 1907, I quoted a letter from Messrs. Greener, small arms manufacturers in England, to the effect that they would supply this government with the new pattern British army rifle with bayonet complete for 80 shillings if large lots were required. Now, as the minister knows there is always a 5 per cent discount for cash on these firearms and they are generally delivered f.o.b. at a British port in cases at that price. The letter also states :

We may tell you that we are making large quantities for Australia at the present time.

I also had a letter from a colonel in the militia who has been several times at Bisley in which he states that men of the Bisley team have frequently while there bought in the open market Lee-Enfield Greener make rifles at £3 10. Mr. Henry Burns, of New Haven, Conn., who at one time was in the employ of the Ross Rifle Company, states that $25 is not too much for the Ross rifle manufactured as it is under the present management, but he states they could be manufactured for the same price as the Springfield or 'Model 90' Winchester, which I believe is $15. Now, the former Conservative government bought the same rifle, the Lee-Enfield, for about an average cost of $17, as was quoted by the Minister of Militia himself.

Mr. TAYLOR. That included the bayonet?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. The Lee-Enfield rifle cost delivered here $26.40. bought from the trade.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does that include the bayonet.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. it includes the cost of inspection.

Mr. TAYLOR. And duty added?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Certainly the hon. gentleman is a protectionist.

Mr. FOWLER. And you are bringing all the parts of the Ross rifle free into this country.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think the hon. minister has stated differently elsewhere, which I will try to show before concluding my remarks. Practically the difference in cost between the Ross rifle and the Lee-Enfield rifle is in the vicinity of $10, which would make a difference on 100,000 rifles of $1,000,000. A man prominent in the United States Small Arms Manufacturing Company states that the Ross rifle could be made at a profit for $15. But when discussing the cost of the rifle, the minister says we have to take into account the cost of the factory, the rent of land, the interest on capital and all that sort of thing. I do not know why we should in this case. The Minister and the late deputy minister of Militia have stated, and it has been sworn to by many in the Public Accounts Committee, that the Ross Rifle Company is a private concern doing business with the government. So these things should not be taken into account. When the minister buys boots for the militia, he does not take into account the rent of the Slater Shoe Company, he buys boots in the open market. So in buying uniforms for the militia, the minister does not take into account the cost of the Sanford factory.

As regards the record of the Lee-Enfield rifle, which we are casting aside, I would refer to the remarks of Lord Roberts made at the close of the South African war. He said it had been brought to his attention on more than one occasion that when the Boers picked up a Lee-Enfield rifle on the line of march they so preferred it to the Mauser that they threw away the latter and took the Lee-Enfield. Mr. Haldane, late Secretary for War, in his report, stated that the Lee-Enfield had been subjected to many hardships in South Africa and the northern parts of India and had proved a most satisfactory arm. In addition to these recommendations may be added the significant fact that it is still retained by Canadian marksmen in all international contests at Bisley, and almost entirely in the Dominion and provincial rifle matches. In fact, it is seldom that a Ross rifle is seen on the ranges in competition unless in the hands of some marksman of note who has been employed by the company to exploit the gun.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. May I ask the hon. gentleman how is it that the English people are so obtuse as not to use the new Lee-Enfield rifle ? Why do they stick to the old Lee-Enfield on the ranges at Bisley ?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Because they think the old rifle the best, I suppose. I might ask, why don't they take the Ross rifle ? Now, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman has introduced the subject of the new Lee-Enfield rifle, I may say that the London Small Arms Company are prepared to supply 10,000,303 Lee-Enfield rifles, at 80 shillings each, packed in tin-lined cases, and delivered f. o. b. at a British port, subject to 10 per cent discount for cash, which bring it to about 75 shillings. The new Lee-Enfield rifle is quoted in their catalogue at several dollars more than the old Lee-Enfield.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman, I suppose, knows that the upright view is a very inferior rifle, It is not the War Office test at all. I would like to have the date at which that quotation was made.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It was made this month. In regard to this contract, what the public of Canada wants to know is how it is that the Ross Rifle Company have been able to get such an amount of coddling from the government. A site for a nominal rental, free importation of machinery and raw material ; 75 per cent advance on working estimates, and estimate of the estimate paid on orders, months and even years before the delivery of the previous orders. Most industries would never dream of asking a government to provide them with capital upon which to start their enterprise. They would be satisfied to get a protective duty upon their output. Even a contractor working entirely for the government is expected to supply his own capital and live up to the terms of his contract. But the Ross Rifle Company, it appears, has been required to do none of those things. The government openly becomes its bankers, pledges itself to advance the money for the purpose of enabling it to purchase raw material, and even for the payment of wages up to 75 per cent of the value of the completed rifles ordered. This was a very generous proposition——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If it were true. But the hon. gentleman surely knows better than that. Why should he persist in misrepresenting the company and the government in this way ?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Am I to understand from the minister that the government are not advancing 75 per cent on the working estimates ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman will understand from me that the government are not advancing capital to the Ross Company, and he knows it. Why should he persist in making that statement ?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The government are paying the Ross Rifle Company 75 per cent advance on the working estimates, which amounts to $18.25 or thereabouts, which is several dollars more than the price of the Lee-Enfield or the new Springfield rifle ; so that I think I am practically right in saying that the government is supplying working capital to the company and even becoming responsible for the wage account up to 75 per cent of their orders.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not at all. The hon. gentleman knows that Colonel Wurtele's evidence before the Public Accounts Committee proves that out of $1,100,000 which had been paid over to the Ross Rifle Company, the Ross Company had expended on the work alone of manufacturing the rifle $100,000 more than that, besides the cost of the building and the cost of the machinery, and that $90,000 out of the $1,200,000 had gone to pay labourers in the city of Quebec. The hon. gentleman knows that, and why should he persist in making these statements ?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am stating practically what is in the contract.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not the money that Sir Charles Ross pays his labour working capital ? If the government had not advanced it, would not Sir Charles Ross have had to get it elsewhere ?

Mr. WORTHINGTON.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. What the hon. gentleman means, I take it, is that the government advanced to the Ross Rifle Company its entire working capital. What he knows is that Sir Charles Ross constructed his building and put in his machinery, and he must have had capital in order to do this, because he did not get the money from the government until after the work was done.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand the hon. gentleman said that the government provided the capital for working the concern, and it absolutely does.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But it did not buy the machinery.

Mr. FOSTER. Nobody said it did.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. This proposition was of such a generous nature that the government felt itself obliged to limit it, and so required that the rifle must be delivered within the year in which these advances were made. But, after having made this proposition, the government soon proceeded to ignore it. It made its first advance, on this first order of 12,000 rifles, in March, 1903, and did not get its first delivery until August, 1905.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Whose report is that?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am reading, as far as I can figure it out, from the blue-book.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Does the contract require that these rifles must be actually delivered into the possession of the government before the advances are made?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am not saying whether it does or not. I am stating what happened until the intervention of the Auditor General. The government made its first advance on this first order of 12,000 rifles in March, 1903, and did not get its first delivery until August, 1905. It had made all its advance payments up to the full 75 per cent of the selling value of the whole order by July, 1904, when there were still 3,000 of these rifles to be delivered. This is an example of the manner in which the agreement was kept. The advance on the second order of rifles began in February, 1905, though the delivery of the first order had not then commenced, and the second order was then 3,000 short.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I know how anxious the hon. gentleman is not to mislead the House. Does he not know that the balance of 3,000 which were short on the first order of 12,000, was delivered in the form of Mark II., and there was no shortage on that 12,000 order?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. What difference does it make whether they are marked one or two?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman is trying to create the impression that this government advanced 75 per cent on 3,000 rifles and never got anything for it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not say that. I say they got them later, but the delivery was three years behind. I say that the government had made all its advanced payments up to the full 75 per cent of the selling value of the whole order by July, 1904, when there were still 3,000 of these rifles to be delivered. The advance on the second order of rifles began in February, 1905, though the delivery of the first order had not then commenced, and the second order was then 3,000 short. Advances were made in February, 1906, on the third order, and though for a long time no delivery was made, advances began on the fourth order.

This question of advances and delivery then assumed vexatious proportions. The company was usually two years behind in the delivery of the goods, although their contract called for delivery the same year as that in which the advance payments were made, and it was only when attention was called through the press to the fact that Mark I. rifles, on which the whole advances were paid three years ago, had not then been delivered, and that the company was two years in arrears on some later contracts, that the advances were stopped, and for three or four months there was nothing doing in the way of payments. This was largely due to the fact that the Minister of Militia was absent in England. During his absence the Auditor General and the acting minister, Sir Richard Cartwright, had stopped these payments, and it is understood that there were some hot times trying to finance the company, and some pretty warm discussions in the Militia Council. However, on the return of the hon. gentleman, the financing of the company was a very easy matter.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman inform me where he gets his information about what goes on in the Militia Council?

Mr. FOSTER. He got it from one of your own ministers, when he told us that you fought like blazes.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. This question of advanced payments and deliveries culminated in the refusal of the Auditor General to sanction any more advances, and he suggested, as one of his reasons, that we might find ourselves in possession of a lot of material only fit to be sent to the junk heap and on which we had made large advances. Does the hon. minister dispute that statement? He has disputed nearly everything else.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Auditor General was new then. It was just after he got office.

Mr. FOSTER. You have him broken in by this time.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The correspondence makes it clear that a deadlock occurred until an order in council was passed extending the time for delivery of the rifles. On May 13, 1907, the Auditor General wrote to Colonel Fiset, Deputy Minister of Militia, as follows:

I notice that you paid to March 31, 1907, on account Mark II, 1906, order, $272,441.04, and $11,250 on Mark III, although apparently no rifles have been delivered. Paragraph 8 of the contract allows 75 per cent of the advance of the costs of only such rifles as are to be delivered in that year. Pending your explanation of the non-observance of this part of the contract in connection with the payments made on account of the rifles, I would ask that no further payments be made to Sir Charles Ross on account, out of your letter of credit.

To this letter Colonel Fiset replied:

I attach herewith the statement called for in paragraph 2 of the above mentioned memo, showing the payments that have been made to the Ross Rifle company up to date. Up to the present date, the department has paid to the Ross Rifle company, $329,743.55 in advance on progress estimates. My predecessor, Col. Pineault was of opinion that the Ross Rifle company in accordance with the terms of the contract, were entitled to 75 per cent progress estimates on all orders received, independent of delivery, and acting on his advice, my minister had always authorized these payments.

Then comes a statement of the payments:

The statement attached showed that up to May 14, 1907, the following payments had been made:

Total advances..	$872,243 55
Twenty-six payments (final) at.. ..	6,250 00
Twenty-six thousand rifles received.	162,500 00
	$1,034,743 55

27,000 received to date at $25 each (no final) payment made on the last 1,000 received, $675,000. Balance (this represents payments made on progress estimates on the 25,000 rifles still to be delivered by the company) $39,743.55. The advances were made on account of orders given the company as follows:

No. 1.. ..	For delivery in	1903..	12,000
2.. ..	"	"	10,000
3.. ..	"	"	10,000
4.. ..	"	"	10,000
5.. ..	"	"	10,000

In his reply to Colonel Fiset, on May 23, the Auditor General said that, according to his interpretation of the contract, no advances should be made on account of work done or material supplied except on such rifles as might be delivered in the year. He added:

At present advances have been made amounting to about $360,000. This represents over 15,000 completed rifles; and judging by the rates of delivery so far, it will tax the energy of the company to complete and deliver that number during the year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. gentleman give the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice? The department was acting under the advice of the Department of Justice.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The Auditor General suggested, in conclusion, that an examination of all the stock on hand and represented by progress estimates should be made by an expert competent to judge the value of the stock. 'Otherwise,' he said, 'the department may find itself in possession of material to be consigned to the junk heap, for which large advances have been made.' Now, there's a prophecy which possibly may be soon fulfilled. On May 28 the Deputy Minister of Militia wrote to the Auditor General, inclosing the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice as to the advances made, as follows :

I see no reason to doubt that your department is liable to pay the accounts in question. It may be that you had a remedy against the contractor for breach of his contract to supply the rifles within the stipulated time, but you would have to proceed accordingly, and cannot yourselves break another term of the contract as a sort of set-off against the contractor's breach of contract, which I suppose to be what your proposition really amounts to.

Referring to the ruling of the Justice Department, the Auditor General said, after repeating his former argument :

If this ruling is accepted and acted upon, whither are we drifting? Does your department intend to advance seventy-five per cent on 10,000 rifles for 1907 delivery and receive no rifles, seventy-five per cent on 10,000 rifles for 1908 delivery and receive no rifles, and so on ad infinitum? I am not credulous enough to believe that the government would enter into a contract containing any such possibilities.

All I can say there is that the Auditor General did not know the government. The correspondence continued at intervals until August 6, 1907, when the Auditor General wrote to Colonel Fiset a letter which is explanatory of what progress had been made towards the settlement of the dispute. He said :

I received a copy of the order in council of July 27 last, extending the time for delivery of the balance of the Ross rifles ordered, viz.: 15,000 to be delivered before January 1, 1908, and 10,000 before June 1, 1908.

The Department of Justice having reported that under contract the company is entitled to advances on progress estimates on orders for rifles to be delivered up to 75 per cent of the cost of the rifles, and your department having agreed to appoint an officer competent to examine the books and accounts of the company and certify to the expenditure made on the rifles, and having had an interview with Sir Charles Ross and Colonel Wurtele, the proposed inspecting officer for the purpose, when it was agreed that a certain form of certified statements would be furnished this office, a copy of which statements was handed to me to-day and afterwards transmitted to you, I therefore withdraw the restriction placed on your letter of credit in connection with the payment of these advances.

Thus we find that, through the intervention of the Minister of Justice the restrictions placed upon the letter of credit were withdrawn and the ruling of the Auditor General as to the payments for advance estimates was overruled. Now, before going on with my remarks as to the efficiency of the rifle, I would like to read letters from two of the former employees of the Ross Rifle Company, in order that the House and the public may see what was transpiring in the factory at the time. The first is a letter from Mr. R. Henry Burns, of New Haven, Conn. He was employed in the Ross rifle factory in the latter part of 1903 and the early part of 1904. He said :

I have made a specialty of the manufacture of guns for several years. I realized at that time that it was and would be impossible to manufacture guns under the systems they had adopted. I understood the condition of affairs throughout when I was with this company, and as I was somewhat interested, I have kept in touch with the conditions that have existed ever since. I can safely say that the Ross Rifle Company has made no progress towards manufacturing their rifles since 1903, and I can positively say that they never will, under the present arrangements. From the general manager down to the men in charge of the several manufacturing departments, there was not a man that had had any experience in the manufacture of guns until he entered the employ of the Ross Rifle Company. I should judge that there is a strong feeling that an A1 rifle should be manufactured on Canadian soil. The United States government manufacture their rifles and bayonets very satisfactorily. There is no reason why your government cannot do likewise. $25 is not too much for the Ross rifle, manufactured as it is under the present management. It can be manufactured for the same price as the Springfield or the model 90 Winchester.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the date of that letter ?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The date is torn off. I can give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) the original. Another employee is Mr. J. H. Stanton, who wrote from St. Catharines as follows :

St. Catharines, December 11, 1905.

Sir F. W. Borden, K.C.M.G.

Sir,—I trust you will pardon me for taking the liberty to write you and ask a simple question. Are the shops now running in Quebec and known as the Ross Rifle Factory, being run as a private enterprise or are they being run as a government concern? My one idea in asking this question of you is to get at a few simple facts.

He goes on to state, at the conclusion of his letter :

I have been advised to take this course by Mr. E. J. Lovelace, our defeated member for the county of Lincoln.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Mr. Lovelace never wrote. He never supported that letter.

Mr. LANCASTER. He is postmaster there now.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The deputy minister wrote back telling Mr. Stanton that the Ross rifle factory was a private concern. Mr. Stanton wrote the following letter :

St. Catharines, December 28, 1905.

Department of Militia and Defence,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir,—Your favour in answer to my inquiry regarding the Ross rifle factory at Quebec received and fully noted, and in reply to same will say:

From authority gained in the factory the Ross Rifle Company is a false face, and the factory is a government concern, and a veritable sink-hole, as bad as the Curran bridge or Langevin block.

It is needless to comment on these—all Liberals know how bad these two deals were said to be. We heard a great deal about them, and they were supposed to be very rotten.

The rifles they are turning out are useless and worthless as a military arm and for several reasons, too, and would not be accepted by any country wanting a first-class military arm.

Many of the arms now being turned out will not stand 100 shots in succession without becoming a complete rattletrap, and a danger to any one using them, and will be pitched in a scrap heap.

He has anticipated the Auditor General there.

While I am a thorough supporter of the present government, the country is being robbed by aliens, and there must be a thorough investigation. Perhaps the government can afford to wink at this, but the evidence will be pie to the opposition. If this develops into a McGreevy, Curran bridge or Langevin block scandal, the government must stand pat, as a warning note is sounded.

In another letter in January, 1906, he said :

I have no object in view except to protect the land of my birth and born of United Empire loyalist stock. I may say as a prelude I was not popular, because I found fault with the drawings furnished for men to work from. It was the remark of the men without exception that they were the crudest attempt at drawings they had even had put in their hand to work with.

And further on :

I have not said anything regarding the construction of the gun they are now turning out. The original Ross rifle was a fairly serviceable arm, but the one they are now building I would prefer to have it reported on by a thorough expert in military arms.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That would be Mark I then ?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mark I.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. You will not have a good opinion of Stanton after that?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. (Reading).

If you would care to satisfy yourself on one point alone, write to either the Winchester Arms Company, New Haven, Conn., or the Marlin Arms Company, same address, Remington Arms Company, Ilion, N.J., or the Savage Arms Company, N.J., or any company in Great Britain building military arms, and ask them if they approve of using a thread, four to the inch, or a four pitch, to join the barrel to the receiver and you will get a prompt reply. I have it from the Winchester, Marlin and Savage people, saying we do not approve of such a coarse pitch for a rifle using such heavy charges. Just say the arm is to use the heavy government charges. Another serious defect: the action is not fastened to the stock in any way except by the three bands around the barrel and stock. The wood under the action is cut away to receive the magazine till there is no strength left to it and many of them will not stand one hundred shots fired from them without the stock becoming a complete wreck. The working mechanism is complicated with a number of small parts and spring and very easy to go wrong in the hands of a novice, and the arm is useless.

I read this letter because the remarks continued in it are practically substantiated by the reports of many of the Militia Board of inquiry later assembled to pronounce on the rifle.

In order to understand the quality of the rifle in relation to stability and efficiency it is necessary for us to take a sort of transcontinental tour from Halifax to Vancouver, for really the rifle has been condemned from one end of the country to the other. A board was held at Halifax. The report of that board was forwarded by Col. Cotton, and read as follows :

Headquarters, October 8, 1906.

From the Master General of the Ordnance,
To the Inspector of Small Arms, Ross
Rifle Factory, Quebec.

Board of Officers Ross rifles.

Inclosed herewith is a copy of the proceedings of a board of officers on Ross rifles held at H.M. Gun Wharf, Halifax, by order of the officer commanding maritime provinces.

Most of the defects are those of which we are aware, but some further rather startling weaknesses have shown themselves.

Will you please be good enough to note them carefully and report progress being made in the line of improving these weaknesses and defects.

(Sgd. W. H. COTTON, Col.
Master General of Ordnance.

This was forwarded to Col. Drury and in due course Col. Drury commanding the maritime provinces, reports as follows:

1. That a large proportion of the mechanical defects and the defects in sighting reported would be remedied by greater care in details of manufacture and in testing for accuracy at the shorter ranges.
2. That the construction of the back-sight and bolt of the rifle require reconsideration with a view to strengthening.
3. That the butt trap should be strengthened
4. That the foresight should not be white.
5. That the sling should be altered to permit of its being used for steadying the rifle when firing.

I would also suggest for consideration that the magazine should be fitted for clip ammunition which might overcome the present tendency to jam which is to some extent due to the cartridges not lying true when inserted one by one in the magazine.

The report of the proceedings is as follows:

Proceedings of a board of officers assembled at H.M. Gun Wharf, Halifax, N.S., on August 23, 1906, by order of officer commanding fortress of Halifax, N.S., for the purpose of reporting on the defects found in the Ross rifle, Mark II by units which have lately undergone their annual musketry courses.

President, Lieut.-Colonel R. L. Wadmore, R.C.R.

Members, Major H. C. Thacker, R.C.G.A., Captain P. H. French, R.C.E.

In attendance. Nil.

The board having assembled pursuant to order proceed to record evidence:

First evidence, Lieut. R. B. Willis, R.C.R., states:

I have been acting as musketry instructor to the Royal Canadian Regiment at their musketry training at McNabs. I have been five years and seven months in the Manchester regiment as lieutenant before joining the Royal Canadian Regiment. I was three years assistant adjutant (musketry) in the fourth battalion and am in possession of the Hythe certificate.

On the morning of May 15, 1906, I commenced the instruction of the recruits of four companies of the Royal Canadian Regiment. in table A, and immediately defects were reported as under mechanical (a) foresight. In many cases I find the fixing screw comes loose, and in a few cases, when the screw is firm, the foresight will still be loose.

(b) Lower band—Being riveted, in some cases becomes loose and consequently the hand guard drops off.

(c) Back sight—The leaf of back sight easily bends to right or left. In two cases the wind gauges broke completely off, in a great many cases when the rifle is fired the back sight jumps 100 to 200 yards.

In a great many cases the projections to back sight leaf which hold it in its place are too short and do not retain their grip so that the leaf flies over on to the hand guard. The gooseneck of the slide in some cases is too high, and one cannot see the foresight in the V of back sight.

The wind gauge leaf has a tendency to work loose.

Bolt stop—In a great many cases the bolt stop when pressed down remains down and the consequence is the rifle cannot be pressed down.

Bolt—In a great number of cases, the projection on the left slide of bolt breaks off, this also renders the rifle useless for magazine fire. This frequently happens in opening the bolt.

Extractor—The hook of the extractor in a few cases has broken off (about 2 per cent). This renders the rifle useless.

Main spring striker—In a great many cases the main spring is too weak, the striker leaves an indent on the cartridge but does not explode it.

Striker—In a very large number of cases the striker breaks off inside the bolt head.

Safety catch—In a great many cases the safety catch does not go home, but gives a click leading a man to think it has gone fully home. The consequence is that the rifle goes off when the safety catch is pushed home, and on releasing it again, the rifle sometimes goes off. In one case the safety catch blew right away and was never found.

Magazine—In a few cases the magazine cut-off will not remain down.

Butt trap—The slide is too thin, when arms are ordered and it strikes a stone it gets indented and cannot be opened.

Barrel—In a few cases the barrel can be taken by the hood of foresight and twisted right round until hood is underneath.

Piling swivel—If this gets broken, a new one cannot apparently be put in.

General—Very frequently on ordering arms the bolt slips open.

Special defects active service.

(a) Foresight—Being of white metal militates against accurate and rapid sighting.

(b) Sling—There is no means of slinging the rifle properly, nor is there any chance of steadying the arm for firing by using the sling.

(c) Bayonets—None yet issued for the rifle.

(d) Micrometer thimble—When at zero, leaves a space open with three of the threads which the screw works on exposed to sand and dirt, which would choke its efficient action.

(e) Bolt action—The space in rear of the bolt being exposed is easily clogged with dirt or mud, and would quickly render it impossible to fire the rifle by stopping the action of the sear.

(f) General—Between May 15, 1906, and July 1, 1906, forty-five rifles were reported as defective from various causes, that was about 25 per cent of the rifles now in use.

The weakness of the striker spring as above mentioned in miss-fires is a most serious defect on active service.

(Sgd.) R. B. WILLIS, Lieutenant,
Royal Canadian Regiment.

I propose to read all of these reports because they are most convincing and every one of them is equally as damaging as that. The magazine is useless, the side of the bolt breaks off, the back sight on the rifle jumps when fired from 100 to 200 yards. One would think to read these reports that these were rifles picked up on a field of battle and reported on after a severe scrimmage. But it is not so. These were rifles shipped direct from the Ross Rifle Company to the regiments, issue and taken from the racks, taken down to the ranges, used carefully and brought back.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are they not inspected before they are sent down ?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. My hon. friend ought to know.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I say they are inspected.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Second evidence. —No. 105 Armourer Sergeant Edward Billings, Ordinance Stores Corps, states :

I was a professional gun and rifle manufacturer for about eight or nine years before joining the service. I joined the Imperial service in 1894 in what was then the corps of armourers and I completed 21 years in the Imperial service, in the armourers section of A.O.D. I have been about six months in the O.S.C. I am attached to R.C.R. for duty as armourer sergeant, and in that capacity, have been repairing damages and defects to the Ross rifle Mark II since it was issued to the R.C.R.

Mechanical.

(a) Foresight—A large number of rifles have been sent in with loose foresights. These have been adjusted by tightening the foresight screw, after this has been done I do not know if they again work loose.

(b) Lower band—This is so thin that there is no thickness for a screw thread to be properly made, the consequence is that the screws fall out. In the Mark I Ross rifle, there was a good sound lower band with a sling swivel on it, which in my opinion was much better.

Back sight—The projections to back sight leaf which holds it in its place, are simply riveted in. Both these should be screwed in. When necessary to repair the spring of back sight, one of these pins has to be knocked out, and then knocked in again. This is a faulty system.

The wind gauge in some cases when screwed right over to extreme limit, cannot be screwed back to centre. This is due to the milled head not being properly fixed, it is only driven on to a cylindrical shaft. When screwed right over, the backsight side of the milled head gets burned up and jams.

As regards to backsight jumping, the spring which engages the slide on the toother gearing is very faulty and does not act in some cases; it can hardly be called a spring.

Bolt stop—Is made of iron, case hardened. There is not sufficient bearing surface to give the necessary resistance.

Bolt—Is of iron, case hardened. The resisting lug frequently breaks off, the metal being extremely brittle just surrounding it.

The bolts should be numbered, with the rifle, in order that the right bolt goes in the right rifle.

Extractor. The hook sometimes breaks off. It is not strong enough.

Main spring striker—This spring is defective, and misfires are due to the defects. It is not powerful enough, and a certain amount of the force of the spring is lost due to friction on the channel of the bolt. There should be little or no friction there. The outside diameter of the spring should fit the channel, and the inside diameter should fit the shaft. Owing to fit not being good there is too much side play of the spring.

It is very difficult to take out the spring striker and to replace it.

Striker—The point frequently breaks.

Safety catch—The milled head for attaching safety catch falls out in some cases. This renders rifle useless. Some of the bolts open when the safety catch is home. The trigger sometimes jams when the safety catch is home and on the catch being released, the rifle fires.

Magazine—The bottom plate to magazine drops out in some cases. This cannot in some cases be replaced without using undue force.

Barrel—Frequently the barrels have not been fitted properly into the body. The browning is very inferior.

Piling swivel—If broken, a new one cannot be put in, in any way whatever.

Butt—Inadquate protection for the butt when arms are ordered.

Magazine platform spring — Frequently breaks.

General—Interior parts are not oiled when put together. To the best of my recollection, I have repaired defects in at least 150 rifles since May 12, 1906.

(Sgd.) E. Billings.

Sergeant Billings demonstrated each point fully and practically to the satisfaction of the board, using a Ross rifle Mark II. in which a number of damages and defects had been collected from other rifles, for the purpose of demonstration.

Third evidence.—Capt. M. St. L. Simon, R.C.E., O.C., 1st Fortress Company, R.C.E., states :

My company is armed with the Ross rifle and commenced table B for R.C.E. on July 16, 1906, at McNab's Island. During the course, I noticed the following defects in the Ross rifle :

Mechanical (a) foresight—is too blunt and band holding foresight is shrunk on, which causes uneven expansion of a heated barrel.

(b) Lower band—Should have a swivel for sling.

(c) Backsight—Too delicate. Leaf is too flimsy, the micrometer screw has been reported to move on firing and sometimes cannot be moved at all. The slide of backsight sometimes jumps 100 or 200 yards on firing, the V of the backsight is too small. The centre line on leaf is very badly marked in some cases.

The backsight leaf in some cases jumps right over, owing to projections to backsight leaf being too short.

At low elevations, the V of backsight is sometimes hidden by the wooden grip.

(d) Bolt stop—in some cases the bolt stop, when pressed down, remains down.

(e) Bolt—The resisting lug has been found to shear off sometimes.

The striker will go forward with the bolt open one inch.

Extractor—Sometimes fails to extract and ejector sometimes fails.

Main spring striker—Misfires were very frequent due to weakness of main spring, or wrong adjustment of striker.

Striker—In one or two cases head of striker was broken.

Safety catch—Sometimes goes apparently home when it is not truly so, giving a false impression and leading a soldier to think that on pulling the trigger, the rifle will not go off. On replacing the safety catch to danger position the rifle has been found to go off without pulling the trigger. I consider this a most dangerous defect.

Magazine—The magazine cut off is not easy to work, the feed of magazine is bad.

Barrel—There has been a case of a loose barrel.

Chamber—Numerous cases of split cartridges, all split at forward end. This may be due to defective ammunition.

Piling swivel—has not been used yet.

General—The parts have the appearance of being loosely fitted together.

Special defects active service and musketry.

Foresight.—Bad colour.

Sling—Is too short.

Bayonets.—None issued.

Backsight.—Would be easily put out of action by sand and dirt.

Bolt.—Would be easily put out of action by sand and dirt.

Sighting—Under 100 yards the sighting is inconsistent.

In one rifle, firing at 200 yards, backsight was at zero, and man was aiming below the bottom of target, and was getting hits. In another, firing at 200 yards, backsight was at 250 yards.

In another, the rifle threw 3 feet to the left at 200 yards. This would appear due to want of adjustment of foresight before issue. At 300 yards, the elevations varied between 80 to 6 yards, and 340 yards the deflection varied from zero to six feet in practically still weather; this latter would also appear due to faulty adjustment of foresight before issue.

General remarks.—I found 35 rifles defective out of 79. I can get the numbers to identify the defects as above noted, if required. The company have not done much parade work with their rifles, but it has been noticed that the bolt opens sometimes in ordering arms.

(Sgd.) M. ST. L. SIMON, Capt. R.C.E.,
O.C. 1st Fortress, R.C.E.

Fourth evidence.—Capt. A. C. B. Gray, R.C.R., states :

I am of No. 1 company, R.C.R., at present at McNab's island during musketry table B. My company started on August 1; and defects were reported as follows:

Mechanical.

(a) Foresight.—One rifle burst at muzzle. This occurred while man was firing standing, at third or fourth round, he had previously fired some 60 to 70 round. This may have been due to a stripped bullet, but nothing was found in barrel.

Foresight is very loose, moves about from side to side.

(b) Lower band.—Rivetted on. In one case it has come away, causing handguard to come off.

(c) Backsight.—Sometime firing at 200 yards, the foresight is obscured by gooseneck of leaf of backsight. In one case the left band side of ratchet band was loose.

The windgauge is frequently very loose. The backsight slide jumps sometimes on rifle being fired.

The leaf of backsight frequently gets out of projections to backsight leaf, and goes right over on to the handgaurd.

Bolt stop.—Sometimes will not go down, and frequently when down will not come up.

Bolt.—The resisting lug, in many cases, shears right off. This has occurred particularly in rapid fire. Difficult to replace in fire.

Extractor.—No faults so far.

Ejector.—Has sometimes broken off, and sometimes when not broken, does not eject.

Main spring of striker.—Misfires were very frequent.

Striker.—No case of broken heads.

Safety catch—In many cases the safety catch appears to be home, when it is not so, and the rifle can be fired. When catch is put to danger the rifle goes off. I consider this a most serious defect.

Magazine.—The feed is bad, and jams were frequent. The cut off is faulty, and sometimes does not stay down.

Butt trap—Liable to be bent on ordering arms.

Barrel—One case of a loose barrel.

Piling swivel.—If broken, a new one cannot be put in.

General—The trigger guard appears to be very soft metal and bent easily.

Active Service and Musketry Defects.

(a) Muzzle of barrel is cut off flush, and the interior is more liable to accidental damage.

(b) Foresight. White sight is objectionable. gives bad definition.

(c) Sling—No use as at present attached.

(d) Bayonets—None issued.

(e) Backsight—Micrometer screw very liable to get choked with dirt.

(f) Bolt—Liable to be choked with dirt.

(g) Sighting—Backsight generally is flimsy and liable to be bent. Little consistency in sighting. In elevation, in one case, firing at 150 yards, the man was at zero, firing low, and made good shooting.

(h) General—No oil bottles issued. Up to date (27-8-06) I have sent in twenty-four defective rifles out of about seventy, but have not yet completed my practices, and have at least two more defective rifles on hand.

Sgd. A. C. B. GRAY, Capt.
No. 1 Company, R.C.R.

I know my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) does not like to listen to this tale of woe. This may appear to him to be the abomination of desolation, but I wish he would keep quiet while I am reading.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Oh, yes, but I want to put some life into this thing ; it is very dead.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Well you can't put much life into it ; its a dead dog.

Fifth evidence : Captain A. P. B. Nable, R.C.R., states :

I am in command of No. 6 Company, R.C.R., now going through table B at McNab's island.

My company is armed with Ross rifle, Mark II. I started table B on August 1, and defects have been reported as under.

Mechanical.

Foresight—No complaint.

Lower band—In many cases, worked loose.

Backsight—In one case, leaf bent. The clamp (or slide) of backsight sometimes moves when rifle is fired. The micrometer thimble in many cases moves when rifle is fired.

Bolt stop—In many cases slides down, will not come up, in others will not go down.

Bolt—Resisting lug frequently breaks off. Is difficult to replace in rifle. The striker and bolt will go forward on pressing the trigger, when bolt is open one inch.

Main spring striker—Very large number of misfires.

Striker—Frequently broken off.

Safety catch—In very many cases it goes in and appears to be home when it is not so. A man is led to believe that the rifle is safe when it is not so. On pressing the trigger, the rifle fires. Also when safety catch is put back to danger from this half-way position, the rifle fires. I had to stop firing from the magazine in field practices, on account of weakness of safety catch. I consider this a most dangerous defect.

Magazine—Large number of jams, especially when cartridges are put in hurriedly, as they generally would be. The cut off sometimes does not work. There is not sufficient distinction in position of cut off when open and closed. There should be no doubt whatever on such a point.

Butt trap—No complaint so far.

Barrel—One loose barrel.

Piling swivel—Was easily bent, preventing arms being piled.

Trigger guard—In one case, a man was skirmishing, his rifle got knocked on a stone. This bent in the trigger guard, and the trigger could not be used. The trigger guard was not strong enough.

Active Service and Musketry.

Foresight—White colour is objectionable, does not give clear definition.

Sling—Cannot be used.

Bayonets—None issued.

Backsight—Very liable to be broken. Very liable to get out of order from dirt. Generally too flimsy for active service.

Sighting—The sighting is inconsistent, the variations in elevations of different rifles at same range being considerable.

General—No oil bottles. Out of my company, firing seventy-eight, I have sent in thirty defective rifles from one cause or another; and have not yet completed table B.

The barrel is cut off flush at the muzzle. I consider this renders the interior more liable to damage.

Sgd. A. P. B. NAGLE.
Captain R.C.R.

Sixth evidence: Captain E. H. Robinson, A.O.D., (Inspector of Ordnance Machinery) states:

I have noted the following defects in the Ross rifle, Mark II:

Mechanical.

Foresight—Screw of foresight works loose due to the plate being too thin, causing only about 1½ threads to be doing the work.

Lower band—Not sufficient number of threads in the band to take the threads of male screw.

Backsight—Hinge pin of back of backsight leaf is too small in my opinion, and also the boss where it passes through should be solid and not hollow as it is. This would add very little to the weight.

Micrometer screw jams occasionally. Windgauge screw jams occasionally.

The projections from slide of backsight which hold leaf down are too short, or the lip of leaf too narrow.

Bolt stop—Material is too soft. If made of wrought iron, it should be case hardened.

Bolt—Resisting lug broken in several cases.

Main spring of striker—Is in my opinion weak. It starts compressing at four and a half pounds to five pounds instead of seven pounds to nine pounds, as it should do.

Striker—The striker protrusion varies in all rifles, and no gauge is yet available to correct these. If the strikers were all one protrusion and that the correct one, misfires would not be so frequent.

Magazine loading tray—Sometimes found to throw to one side more than the other.

Barrel—The ·072 inch gauge goes into the chamber and allows the bolt to shut, whereas the ·64 inch gauge should only be able to go in and allow the bolt to close home.

One barrel was found to be loose in its attachment to the body.

General remarks—All these defects can in my opinion be overcome. The backsight can be strengthened, the stop to bolt can be made harder still, the broken lugs on bolts appear to be more difficult to overcome, but even this with some alteration in manufacture can be made good.

(Sgd.) E. H. ROBINSON,
Captain, I. O. H.

Seventh evidence: Lieutenant R. F. C. Horetzky, R.C.R., No. 2 Company, R.C.R., states:

I was with No. 2 Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, during its musketry training at McNab island, table B. Captain Caye, who commanded the company is now on leave. I noted the following defects in the Ross rifle, Mark II:

Mechanical.

(a) Foresight—I found the foresight in many rifles loose.

(b) Lower band—This works loose in a few cases.

Backsight—When the leaf of backsight is up, in numerous cases, it jerks from right to left. When at short ranges, the V of backsight is obscured by wood of hand guard, in some cases.

In firing, sometimes the slide of backsight will alter 100 yards.

The wind gauge screw in some cases is very difficult to work.

Bolt stop—No remarks.

Bolt—Several of the resisting lugs were broken off.

Extractor—In some cases the extractor would not work.

Main spring of striker—During the course there were a number of misfires.

Striker—There were about 8 strikers broken out of a strength of 98 men firing.

Safety catch—Most of the men were not aware when the safety catch was on, as it would appear to go home without actually being so. I consider this a very dangerous defect.

Magazine—The cut-off is too small, and does not always work. There is not sufficient distinction between its two positions.

Butt trap—In my opinion is of too thin metal, and would quickly get damaged.

Special defects, active service and musketry.

(a) Foresight—The white foresight does not give clear definition. Hood protector spoils shooting.

(b) Sling—No swivel on lower band.

(c) Bolt action—Liable to be clogged with sand.

(Sgd.) R. F. C. HORETZKY,
Lieutenant, R. C. R.

Eighth evidence: Captain J. D. Doull, R. C.R., states:

I am in command of No. 3 Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, which commenced the musketry training, table B, about June 7. I found certain defects in the Ross rifle Mark II, as under:

Mechanical.

(a) Foresight—Works loose in many cases. The adjustment of a foresight is a very delicate matter at any time.

(b) Lower band—In one case the screw came out.

(c) Backsight—In some cases the gooseneck of leaf of backsight is too high, and covers the aperture in the backsight.

In a number of cases the projections to backsight leaf works out and leaf springs right over on to the hand guard.

The wind gauge slide sometimes works loose. The sight is one that takes a great deal of teaching to recruits and is at times very slow to adjust.

Bolt stop—In one case when pressed down it remained down.

Bolt—I have seen several cases where the resisting lug had broken off.

Extractor—It failed to work once on account of a split cartridge.

Main spring of striker—A large number of misfires have occurred.

Striker—One the head flattened, and a number were broken.

Safety catch—I consider dangerous. It catches twice as it goes home, a man hears the first catch and imagines it is home. If the trigger is then pressed and safety catch put to danger, the rifle goes off.

Magazine—Jams are liable to occur. The loading tray jammed in one case. The cut-off is not sufficiently distinct in its two positions, and it is not easy to tell when it is on or off.

The screws on under side of magazine plate occasionally drop out.

Butt trap—Liable to damage from stones.

Barrel—The chamber is too large for the cartridge, a very large number of split cartridge cases was observed, which I consider due to too large a chamber.

One case of a loose barrel. This is dangerous.

Special defects, active service and musketry.

Foresight—The white sight does not give clear definition. I consider the band objectionable from a shooting point of view.

Mr. WORTHINGTON.

Sling—Cannot be used.

Bayonets—None issued.

Micrometer thimble—Liable to get out of order quickly on service due to sand and dirt.

Bolt action—Liable to be clogged with sand and dirt. Hand to be put in quickly.

Loading tray—Attachment liable to be easily damaged.

General—No oil bottle. About 40 defective rifles sent in for various repairs out of 120. 18 were beyond the work of the armourer sergeant.

The barrel gets extremely hot very rapidly. Sighting is very erratic.

(Sgd.) JOHN D. DOULL,
Captain, R. C. R.

Then I will read the following resume of defects:

A.—Mechanical defects.

Foresight.—1. Works loose in very many cases.

Lower band.—1. Works loose in many cases; 2. No swivel for sling.

Backsight.—1. Leaf. Too flimsy, hinge pin weak. Flies over on to handguard frequently; 2. Windgauge. Works loose or screw jams in many instances; 3. V. Gets obscured at short ranges frequently; 4. Slide. Jumps on discharge frequently; 5. Micrometer screw. Moves on firing, or jams, in many cases.

Bolt stop.—1. Works inefficiently in many cases; 2. Considered weak.

Bolt.—1. Resisting lug. Breaks off frequently; 2. Extractor. Occasionally fails, and occasionally breaks off; 3. Ejector. Occasionally fails; 4. Main spring of striker and striker. Misfires extremely common. Strikers frequently break.

Safety catch.—1. Works inefficiently and is a source of danger.

Magazine.—Cut off occasionally faulty; 2. Little indication to a soldier, between cut off open, and cut off closed; 3. Feed generally poor and jams frequent; 4. Loading tray occasionally jams; 5. Platform springs occasionally break.

Barrel.—1. Several cases of loose barrels; 2. Cartridge cases frequently split, chamber considered too great a diameter for ·303 inches ammunition; 3. Muzzles cut off flush exposes interior to accidental damage.

Butt trap and butt plate.—Metal too thin, liable to injury from stones; 2. Inadequate protection to butt or rifle.

Piling swivel.—1. Renewal very difficult.

(Sgd.) R. Lyndhurst Wadmore, Lt. Col.,
President of board.
(Sgd.) H. C. Thacker, Major, R.C.R.,
(Sgd) P. H. French, Captain, R.C.E.,
Members.

B.—Special defects active service and musketry.

Foresight.—1. White foresight gives bad definition.

Sling.—1. No practical provision for use of sling.

Bayonets.—None issued.

Backsight.—Liable to be easily choked with dirt.

Bolt.—Liable to be choked with dirt.

Sighting generally.—Shows want of adjustment before issue.

Generals remarks.—No oil bottles. Bolts occasionally drop out on ordering arms. Trigger guard of weak material. The bolt is difficult to replace in the rifle.

(Sgd.) R. Lyndhurst Wadmore, Lt. Col., President of board.
(Sgd.) H. C. Thacker, Major, R.C.A.,
(Sgd.) P. H. French, Captain, Members.

That, Mr. Speaker, concludes the evidence of the board of inquiry on Canada's great national arm of defence, held at Halifax in October, 1906.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. When the House rose at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I had completed reading the report of the inquiry into the Ross rifle held at Halifax. From that report it would seem that every one of the witnesses examined concurred in four or five particulars. They were all of the opinion that, as a magazine gun, it was deficient; that, in a great many instances, it jagged. Every witness said that the back sight jumped when the rifle was fired from 100 to 200 yards ; that the bolt lugs frequently broke off and were of improper material. These are practically the main points upon which they all agreed. In summing up their evidence, I find that every witness said that out of his particular company there was from 25 per cent to 35 per cent of the rifles issued damaged during target practice, so that it would seem it is hardly a weapon which the people of this country would care to have put into the hands of their brothers and sons who go out to defend Canada and the empire.

While discussing the experience in handling the rifle in the maritime provinces, I would like to read a report from the camp of instruction at Sussex in 1906, page 280 of the Public Accounts Committee report on the Ross rifle :

SUSSEX CAMP OF INSTRUCTION, 1906.

Defects reported in certain Ross rifles (Mark I) produced for inspection at the above named camp:

Four rifles—extractor failed to work.
Two rifles—went off as bolt was closed.
Nine rifles—screw head (top of block) broken off.
Four rifles—loose foresight.
One rifle—catch for locking bolt failed to engage.
Two rifles—bolt falls out when rifle is ordered. (Screw top of block) split. Stiff action.
One rifle—stiff action.
Three rifles—piling swivel fallen out or broken off.

Then follows a list of the casualties more or less serious, which are as follows :—

Cartridge sticks in breach, extractor failed.
Two screws fallen out from trigger guard plate.
Screw (top of block) deficient when issued.
Cut-off broken. Striker does not touch cartridge.
Extractor fallen out.
Interrupted screw, head of cocking piece, badly made. The head of cocking piece flew out when firing blanks.
Magazine platform fails to work.
Bolts sometimes jam when pressed home.
Piling swivel deficient. Fails sometimes to extract.
Micrometer timble jammed.
Defective elevating back sight spring.
Stiff bolt action. Protruding striker. Very dangerous.
Cocking piece comes out when drilling. Inferior thread to screw.
Screw deficient from trigger guard plate.

That is a list of the casualties at the Sussex camp, and with each casualty is given the number of the rifle, but I have not thought it necessary to read the numbers. As I said this afternoon, in summing up the weaknesses and general deficiency of the rifle, it was necessary to go from one end of the country to the other to ascertain its defects. We are next billed for St. John, N.B. This is the report sent in by Beverley R. Armstrong, major commanding the 3rd Regiment of Canadian Artillery :

The rifle practice of the Unit under my command for the annual training in 1906 has not been carried out owing to the fact that the regiment is armed with Mark I Ross rifles, which, in consequence of accidents to two of these on the 24th May last, when being used by No. 2 company, the officers and men are afraid to use them.

The following is the report on those two accidents. This is from the officer commanding 3rd Regiment Canadian Artillery and the district officer commanding Militia District No. 8 :

There have been casualties in the way of explosion of parts of two rifles but no casualty to the men however resulted.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. When did the alleged explosion occur ?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. On 24th May.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And it was not reported until the end of December.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That shows lack of discipline on the part of the militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It shows that they did not think anything about it until reminded by somebody here.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It was reported to the district officer commanding on the 3rd December, 1906, in reply to a request for annual rifle practice returns :

That in consequence of two accidents having happened to rifles when in use by No. 2

Company, such practice had not been carried out.

There was an accident on the 24th of May, when the breech block of two rifles exploded, but no men were injured.

In one case the milled thumb pull at end of firing pin was burst in at least three pieces, on discharge of the cartridge, and blew in different directions. Two pieces were afterwards picked up. In the other case, a cylindrical piece of steel, about three-quarters of an inch long, from in front of the milled thumb pull, flew over the rifleman's shoulder and was picked up in rear. The thumb pull in this case was blown away but not found. This accident is thought to have been caused by premature explosure, due to the fact that the firing pine had worked forward, the closing of the breech caused the firing pin to strike the cartridge before the breech was properly closed. It was only by good fortune that the men handling the rifles, in these cases, were not injured.

The annual rifle practice of the 3rd Regiment Canadian Artillery was not carried out this year because, as stated on December 3, on account of the accidents mentioned, the men would not voluntarily use the rifles, and the officers did not care to take the responsibility of ordering them to do so.

This practically confirms what was said at the Halifax board—that even when the safety catch is set, the rifle may still go off; so that the soldier who puts down the safety catch is never sure but that his rifle may go off when he least expects it.

Now, we will take the report made on the rifles at Quebec, where, on the Plains of Abraham, the component parts of this rifle are assembled and put together. This report is from Major Fages. I will read only the most important parts of it:

I may add that a few of the rifles when firing from the magazine (rapid fire) twice or three times out of five shots it will be a misfire.

The musketry is only starting and I have no doubt that by the time it is completed other defects may be found out and a further report will then be sent.

The retaining pin that prevents the back sight from flying forward is also loose and liable to come out at any moment.

The leaf of backsight is of light material and is easily bent. At this morning's practice there were several misfires and when using the magazine the cartridges jammed in it and did not work properly.

The extractors also in many cases failed to respond. The ten rifles referred to above have been handed to the Master General of the Ordnance for inspection at his request, and should said rifles not be returned to the depot instructions to remove them from our books will be required.

At the board of inquiry held at Quebec, a great many witnesses were examined and gave testimony as to how they considered the rifle to work. None reported favourably on the rifle.

One man, No. 8236, Pte. R. W. Bell reported:

I was firing at the 500 yard range on the 18th instant. After firing several shots, I placed another cartridge in the chamber and fired it, whereupon the bolt blew open, the dust-plate in the bottom of the magazine blew out and the hand-guard blew off. The cartridge knocked around the base.

Then, we come to St. Johns, Que. And I attach a good deal of importance to this report because it was sent in with an accompanying letter from a man who now holds the position of Adjutant General in the minister's department.

Ottawa, January 29, 1907.

From the Officer Commanding the Royal Canadian Dragoons to the Master General of Ordnance.

Sir,—I have the honour to state from reports of the officers commanding 'A' and 'B' squadrons, Royal Canadian Dragoons, relative to the Ross rifle at present on their charge, it would appear that 'A' squadron is in possession of the Mark II Ross rifle, but did not put in its annual musketry practice, 1906, with that rifle for the reason that there is no rifle range at St. Jean, Quebec.

2. The Mark II, Ross rifle was used by 'B' squadron at its annual musketry practice and no serious accidents happened during the practice.

3. About 20 per cent of the rifles were damaged during practice, the following being the principal defects:

(a) The retaining lugs on the bolt are very weak, and a number of them were broken off (about four or five).

(b) The magazines were useless, in almost every case when the magazines were ordered to be used the cartridges jammed at the second shot. There seemed to be a weakness at the platform spring.

(c) The leaf of the backsight in nearly every case, had to be adjusted after each shot, and seemed to be very easily injured.

I have the honour to be Sir,

Your obedient servant,

F. L. LESSARD, Brevet Col.
Commanding R.C.D.

Accompanying this report is a long list of defective rifles, in which it is said that the projections on the left side of the bolt broken off; foresight and backsight became loose; magazine jammed; strikers are broken, and a long list of other casualties.

Then, at Eastman, in the province of Quebec, it was found necessary to hold a board to examine into the casualties that occurred there last fall. It appears that two rifle associations, one from Mansonville and one from Eastman, met to have a friendly shoot and, incidentally, to test the merits of the Ross and Enfield rifles. I happened to be in the vicinity at the time, and perhaps know the facts as well as anybody else. Seeing a young man about the hotel with his head swathed in bandages, and blood spots oozing through the bandages, I asked what was the matter. His reply was that he had been fool enough to get behind a Ross rifle. He said that during the contest he was selected to shoot with one of the opposite party, Captain Seale, who was using a Ross rifle. The young man objected to shooting beside it, stating as his reason that on a previous occasion at some shoot an accident had happened to a Ross rifle while he was shooting with an opponent at the butts. They rather laughed at him and said that his fears were due to the fact that he was a Tory and had nothing good to say for the Ross rifle. So he got down beside his opponent. They were at the 500 yard range. Captain Seale put his cartridge into the chamber and pushed back the bolt. The magazine exploded.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman tell——

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will tell what I——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Have you the photographs there?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. As the hon. gentleman does not feel inclined to take my word, any more than I would his, I think I had better read the evidence, which is as follows:

I am the captain of the Eastman Civilian Rifle Association, which was formed about a year ago and is composed of forty-two members. We received ten Ross rifles, Mark 1, last fall for use of the members. We had a practice with them almost every Saturday during the summer. We also received a free issue of ammunition about the same time, but as we were out of it on the second October instant, we borrowed two hundred and forty rounds from the Mansonville Civilian Rifle Assocation. It was 'cartridges S.A. Ball 303 Cordite, 24-1-05, Mark IV,' which we were using as far as I know on 2nd October. On that date we were having a friendly match at Mansonville with this association twelve men a side. We had all finished firing at the 200 yards range and I was firing at the 500 yards firing point, when my rifle exploded. We were shooting in pairs, and my mate was a Mr. Peabody, of Mansonville. We had each fired three sighters and five shots on our scores when the accident happened.

I was on my sixth shot. I had pressed the bolt home pretty hard, but can't swear that it locked. I produce the damaged rifle, which is numbered E923, and all the broken parts which I could find in the field near me, some may be missing—I was not aiming, and it was just when I pushed the bolt home that the explosion occurred; my fingers were not on the trigger, and my right hand was on the bolt sleeve knob.

Both my hands were numbed by the shock and I could only use the first finger of my right hand. One of the pieces hit Mr. Peabody on the right temple, and must have gone horizontally as he was lying down as I was. I cut an artery, I think, and Dr. Painting attended him.

There is a part of the cartridge case still in a barrel of the rifle, but I cannot produce the wrapper of the ammunition, because we were not in the habit or keeping them, ... I always used the same rifle and looked after it in my own house. I also allowed others to shoot out of it, but always cleaned it myself.

In this case the board came to the conclusion that,—

From the evidence so far adduced it is impossible to arrive at a definite conclusion as to the immediate cause of the accident, and recommend that the broken parts, exhibits and proceedings be sent to experts for their examination and report.

The men composing that board were Lt. A. McMillan, Royal Canadian Dragoons, a man who has seen considerable service; W. L. Carey, Royal Canadian Engineers, a man who holds a prominent position in the Militia Department, so prominent in fact that he has been entrusted with the inspection of the fortresses in course of construction at Quebec, and J. S. Dunbar, Lieutenant-Colonel and Deputy Adjutant General for the province of Quebec. I understand that after these broken parts were sent to the Ross Rifle Company, the cause of the explosion was found, that it was stated, although this is heresay, by the experts of the Ross rifle factory that the trigger had been filed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman but he knows, he heard Major Pym state in answer to his own question, that that rifle had been tampered with. The rifle was sent to Major Pym, not to the Ross rifle factory, it was sent to the inspector. The inspector was present at the meetings of the board and the hon. gentleman himself asked Major Pym the question in the committee and elicited the information which I have just given.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Perhaps he could tell us more about it if he chose, about the photographs and all that sort of thing.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) is very much worried about my advocacy of the Lee-Enfield rifle. I do not know whether it is because the commercial instinct is so strong that the hon. gentleman thinks I have some interest in the Lee-Enfield.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Hear, hear.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I may tell the hon. gentleman that I am doing this because this is my own, my native land.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Possibly he does not understand that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No, I know nothing about it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would not if I were you. As to the statement of the minister I have no objection to telling him that Major Pym was present at the board of inquiry. He did not state that the rifle had been tampered with, did he ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, but in answer to a question put by the hon. member in the Public Accounts Committee he did.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not remember that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is not convenient.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Major Pym was present at this inquiry. This tale of woe seems to excite the minister and my hon. friend.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No, it amuses us.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is a misstatement.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am going to read a report now from no less a man than the Brigadier General who commands the forces in Canada to-day. I presume that both my hon. friends have some respect for the opinion of this officer. In sending in a report of a board of inquiry he addresses the secretary of the Militia Council and in reference to a rifle on which he was specifically reporting he states :

1. I found in each instance that the retaining lug upon the bolt had been broken off, so that in the action of extracting the empty shell the bolt would come out.

2. It was impossible to tell whether the break was wilful or accidental, nor was I able to tell whether the break was caused by a flaw in the metal or not, owing to the time that had elapsed between the break and my examination.

3. Upon returning to the armourer's shop I tried six of these rifles, using no unnecessary force in extracting; two of the retaining lugs came off. An immediate examination of the break showed that there was a flaw in the metal at the butt of the lug. I did not try any more of the rifles.

4. I compared the retaining lug of the mark I rifle with the lug of the mark II rifle, and find the lug on the former to be over half an inch in length, while the latter is a ¼ inch in length.

5. I have not known a mark I retaining lug to break as the mark II has done. In order to more closely describe the part affected, I am to-day forwarding by express the bolts of the rifles complained of, viz, Nos. 123, 130, 372 and 378.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd) W. D. OTTER
Brigader-general.

He incloses with his report a resume of the list of casualties which is as follows :

There are two more reports from London, where boards were held, and which show very much the same defects and deficiencies as were found in the other rifles which were issued to the other companies of the Royal Canadian Regiment. Lt.-Col. J. Vance Graveley, in one of his reports, says :

Twenty-three were more or less damaged, many of the complaints being that the rifles were oversighted and that they missed fire. It was impossible to test these faults.

About this time the acting Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence, Mr. E. F. Jarvis, writes to the Ross Rifle Company a confidential letter, as follows :

Ottawa, July 18, 1906.

Confidential.

Gentlemen,—I am desired by the Minister of Militia and Defence to forward for your information the inclosed lists of defects which have been found to exist in rifles, both Mark I and II pattern, manufactured by your company.

Without attaching undue importance to these lists, it will be seen that they afford sufficient grounds for the conclusion that serious defects have developed in both patterns of the Ross rifle, while in the hands of the troops, indicating, in one form or another, defective workmanship in its manufacture, and possibly also, insufficient inspection before the rifles are accepted by the Militia Department.

This being the case, the minister directs me to give your company immediate notice of these reports, as it is clearly necessary that some radical change must be introduced in the system of inspection, both during manufacture and by the inspection staff before the rifles are taken over by the department.

Mr. Jarvis seems to have struck the nail on the head when he said that :

Some radical change must be introduced in the system of inspection, both during manufacture, and by the inspection staff before the rifles are taken over by the department.

Within a week, or within a day or two, I asked the minister about the inspection, and his answer across the floor of the House was that the component parts of the rifle were inspected, and that then an inspection was held of the assembled parts, that is an upright inspection. Whatever the inspection is, or however it is carried out, certainly it must be defective, because it is hardly credible that anybody would accept these rifles unless they were reported as being thoroughly satisfactory and as having passed a creditable inspection. The minister incidentally told us also that this inspection costs something like 90 cents per rifle, which, any one will see, adds $1.90 to the cost of each rifle, making the price $26.90, to say nothing of the other charges, which, when added, bring the price of the rifle up to the vicinity of $30. Now, I think enough has been said as to the unsoundness of the rifle and as to the fact that it is an unsafe rifle. As the rifle is not in use on the ranges of this country, either in the provincial or Dominion matches, or in the matches at Bisley, it might be well to inquire why the marksmen of this country have not taken kindly to it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is not quite correct. The rifle is in use on this range now, and on all the principal ranges.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It may be in use every day now, but not during matches.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It has been.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It happened to win the first prize last year at Toronto.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The hon. gentleman gave us an exhibition of what he could do with it last year at 500 yards, and he did not hit the target.

Mr. FOSTER. The target was not big enough.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I may say that it was a 9-foot target.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman is just as fair in that as he is in everything else. He is absolutely unfair, he does not know how to be fair, but we will teach him when our time comes.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Some members of the Bisley team have won such honour and distinction in these competitions that their names have come to be household words with the militia, and perhaps one whose name is as well known as any other is Sergeant Hayhurst, of Hamilton. Sergeant Hayhurst has made a report upon this rifle. I consider him a most competent person and one able to report from an impartial standpoint, because he has received many favours from the Militia Department of this government. His statement is as follows :

Hamilton, December 20, 1907.

Lieutenant Colonel E. E. W. Moore,
Commanding 13th Regiment Infantry,
Hamilton, Ontario.

Sir,—In reply to your communication asking for a report on the improved Ross rifle issued to me during the summer, I have the honour to say that:

Shooting—I have given the rifle a fair test under favourable conditions making the following scores:

July 20—

200—4 4 3 5 5 4 5=30
500—3 2 3 4 4 4 5=25
600—5 5 4 5 5 5 5=34
—99

July 26—

200—3 4 3 4 5 4 3=26
500—3 3 4 5 5 3 4=27
600—4 3 3 5 5 2 5=27
—80

August 2—

200—4 4 4 4 5 4 5=30
500—5 4 5 3 5 2 4=28
600—5 4 4 5 2 5 3=28
—86

August 15—

800—4 4 4 4 3 5 5 0 5 3=38
900—3 0 2 5 3 2 2 3 2 4=26
1,000—3 5 5 3 3 0 3 5 2 2=31
—95

Giving an average of 85 at the shorter ranges and of 95 at the longer compared with 93 and 124 respectively in all my shoots this year with the Lee-Enfield.

You will notice in all my scores with the Ross some very wide shots, more particularly at the longer ranges. I also used the improved Ross in practice for one week at Bisley in 1906 and had a similar experience.

Sights—The above wide difference of results I place by far the greater part to the imperfect state of the rear sight, which is much too weak in its parts to stand the strain of even careful usage, and any service rifle must necessarily be subjected to a certain amount of strain.

The sight consists of too many working parts all of which must have some play, the aggregate of which make a serious disturbance of aim.

I consider the worst features of this sight, the range locking plate with its square recesses instead of V-shaped, and the light sheet metal leaf. Of the foresight I do not look upon the hood as of any advantage except to protect the barley corn, the possibility of adjustment is a decided advantage as a true shooting rifle is most necessary to the soldier.

Given a rigid sight bed and firm strong removable leaf, of which there are several excellent examples of Canadian make, and I mention three in the order in which I consider they come, from a mechanical as well as a rifleman's view. The Reardon, Mitchell and Sutherland. With any of these sights the shooting and serviceable qualities of the rifle would be much improved.

Barrel—Of the barrel there is not much to say, if greater care were taken in selection of material and workmanship in rifling, as it is an almost exact copy of a well proved barrel which has given splendid results. Extreme accuracy in long range target shooting has been somewhat sacrificed for less weight and shorter length but this does not materially detract from its usefulness as a general service rifle barrel.

Breech mechanism—Of this there are many excellent features, particularly the head locking, with its strong durable lugs, preventing any lift of the bolt at the discharge and less liability of wear. Also the straight pull. There is a weakness in some of the smaller parts as instanced by the breaking of the shell ejector at the first shot. I fired from rifle No. 69. The long drag pull can and should be eliminated.

As to the magazine there is no question but that it would be much improved by the introduction of the clip feed in place of the hand feed. I found after careful practice that more cartridges go on the ground than into the magazine, and this would be much worse under the excitement of even rapid fire, not to speak of action.

Stock.—There is much that could be improved in this feature particularly the fitting, selection of material and strength.

Of the many rifles I have examined the fitting was very bad, and the wood was frequently crossgrained and spongy where it should have been straight and sound especially at the small of the butt, a weak point.

In conclusion I would say that with all of the bad faults and many of the weak features removed and strong durable parts introduced in their place a very fine serviceable rifle would result, but which for a fine accurate target shooting rifle would still be inferior to the present Lee-Enfield barrel with good sights and ammunition.

I remain, sir,

Yours obediently,

(Sgd.) F. H. HAYHURST,

Sergt. Instr. Musk., 13th Regiment.

That is signed F. H. Hayhurst, sergeant instructor of musketry, 13th regiment. You will notice that he says that with all of the bad faults and many of the weak features removed and strong durable parts introduced in their place a serviceable rifle would result. Well, that would be like buying an old horse on the market and after removing his spavins and ringbones you would make him perfectly sound. I shall now read the following report from Major M. S. Mercer, second regiment Q. O. R., president of rifle club, to H. M. Pellatt, commanding the same regiment:

Mr. WORTHINGTON.

Headquarters, Toronto,

January 10, 1908.

From Major M. S. Mercer, 2nd Regt., Q.O.R.,
President of Rifle Club,

To H. M. Pellatt,

Commanding same Regiment.

Sir,—I have the honour to report as follows on the Ross rifle issued in 1907, to the 2nd Regiment for test purposes, being Nos. 37, 62, 72 and 80, 1906.

The rifle is of the Mark II. pattern.

The woodwork is still rough and unfinished, badly fitted and permits too much dampness remaining underneath the barrel

The toe is too long.

The magazine still occasionally jams.

The backsight is useless for service purposes. the 'V' is too shallow, and the elevated sight too liable to injury. I used this rifle in wet weather, thoroughly cleaning all parts, but the sight, after leaving it standing for fifteen hours, the sight was unworkable, and required several hours work to restore it to its original condition.

The hands are entirely too light.

The bolt arm is too long, result in skirmishing is that the least touch of arm releases bolt from position and shot is lost. The discharge returns the bolt to the proper position but force of spring is so diminished that cartridge is not discharged. To further test this feature I used rifle in hunting and lost several shots through bolt arm being slightly released by coming in contact with twigs and light underbrush. The bolt action is eminently superior to that Mark I. rifle, which should never be permitted to be used as it is dangerously defective.

The shooting qualities of the rifle I found fairly good, from 100 to 500 yards for five or six shots. When barrel became heated, shots were wild and uncertain. At longer ranges, results were more satisfactory. I attribute this somewhat to the lightness of the bands, and also to the lightness of the barrel. I have tested a number of Mark II. rifles with like results in this respect. This rifle has not the merit that would justify me in recommending it for sharpshooters or to expert riflemen for match purposes.

In many respects I like the Ross rifle. It is light, simple, has a good foresight, well hooded; is easily cleaned and easy of adjustment, but many improvements are yet required before it can be said to answer the requirements of a national service weapon. Troops armed with this rifle in its present condition would be at a terrible disadvantage against forces equipped with other well known national arms.

If permission were given to apply the test of 'rough usage' even to the destruction of one of these rifles, with a view to ascertaining inherent defects, if any, I would be pleased to continue my investigation, as I believe this test necessary to any complete judgment on the merits of the rifle.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) M. S. MERCER, major,

President Q.O.R., R.C.

The following report which I shall read was sent in by a man who possibly knows the Ross rifle as well as anybody who has been connected with it since it was brought to the attention of the public. This report is from Major E. Helmer who at one time held a responsible position on the commission which reported on the rifle and this is his report to the chief staff officer at Petewawa :

Petewawa, August 14, 1907.
To C.S.O., Petewawa.

Sir,—I have the honour to report that in accordance with instructions contained in H.Q. 314-15-28, the necessary arrangements were made to carry out the tests of the Ross rifle requested by the M.G.C., and beg to submit the following:

The men selected to carry out these tests are experienced instructors, excellent rifle shots, and altogether reliable. The rifles used bear the 'S' inspection mark (as well as one Mark III) and had not been previously issued to any corps. The tests carried out, together with results, are as follows:

1. Accuracy.—One sighting shot and seven rounds were fired at each of the following ranges: 100, 200, 500, 600 yards, and while there were cases of over undersighting the rifles tested were found for all practical purposes to be accurately sighted.

2. Magazine fire.—The magazines were used for one minute rapid fire at 100 yards. There were a number of jams due to two cartridges lying side by side in which cases the cartridges had to be released from the top, the lifter finger piece being of no assistance. Bad extraction and ejection caused jams in other cases preventing a reasonable number of rounds from being fired.

In connection with the above there was no attempt made to fire a large number of rounds as each shot was carefully aimed so that 'troubles' were not due to undue haste on the part of the firers.

3. 'Handling of sights when rifle is hot.'—Magazines 669 were charged at 350 yards and 5 rounds fired. The squad was advanced 50 yards at a time firing 5 rounds from the magazine at each halt adjusting the sights to suit the distances. At the fourth halt the men complained so much about the heated sights that the firing was stopped although it had been intended to advance to 100 yards as per instructions. The shots were deliberately aimed as the appended detail of hits will show. Both the finger clamps and micrometer rings were so hot as to be unbearable even to hardened fingers. Some of the 'rings' were 'bound' so tightly that they could not be turned at all.

(This applies also to Mark III sight as well. See report S. M. Duncan herewith.)

4. The O.C. cavalry was requested to test the buckets supplied and to report on the suitability of the rifle for mounted units.

Appended hereto will be found reports and details of the shooting as well as the impressions of the different men engaged in carrying out these tests.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant.
(Sgd.) R. A. HELMER, Major,
D. AA. G.M.

The last report I have to read, although really it was the first report that came in, is from the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. It contains a list of casualties similar to the others and it was stated by Major Perry who was in charge of the force that the rifle practice had to be discontinued for fear of accident owing to the dangerous nature of the rifle. At the present time we find that the Royal Northwest Mounted Police force which is under the charge of the right hon. the Prime Minister is armed with rifles of any old pattern and vintage dating away back to the Winchester 1876, Lee-Enfield, Lee-Metford, and Martinis. All these rifles have no component parts interchangeable and all take different brands of ammunition. That is a very deplorable condition of affairs and we find that during the practice in one instance the bolt flew back and resulted in an accident by which Sergeant Major Browbridge almost lost his eye. This report is sent in by Assistant Commissioner McIlree to Commissioner Perry. The reference to it is as follows :

I got a telegram yesterday evening that Bowbridge's eye injured, bolt of rifle flying back at target practice.

Mr. Speaker, any one criticising this rifle is subject to the imputation that he is disloyal and unpatriotic, and that he is prejudicing the minds of the militia. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether or not you are a militiaman ; probably all of us at some time or other have borne arms for our country ; and I would like to ask you whether you consider a discussion of the defects of that rifle to be prejudicing the minds of the militia ? Would you rather experiment with the rifle or run the risk of having your mind prejudiced, or would you require an ocular demonstration of the carrying qualities of the rifle similar to that which Sergeant Major Bowbridge received ? I do not think we have to look very far to see why, when these reports came in from the Northwest Mounted Police, a halt was not called and the rifle improved or perfected. This body of men is under the direct charge of the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, and has been under his charge for a number of years. Report after report of a damaging nature reached his department, so that the right hon. gentleman has not even the excuse of having been asleep at the switch. He knew from the first, that the rifle was bad, and yet we do not find him giving the benefit of the doubt to the man behind the gun, to the men directly under his control, to the riders of the plains who have preserved order in the west since the inception of the provinces, who have served their country with distinction at home and abroad; but he gave the benefit of the doubt to the war minister's little manicure gun which is warranted to do business at both ends simultaneously. The benefit of the doubt had to go to the gun with the straight pull, and at a very serious time.

We heard some nights ago of the unerring instinct which guided the right hon. gentleman in settling the affairs of his party and of the country; but this unerring instinct does not seem in this case to have been at work. For the right hon. gentleman, the other night, according to 'Hansard,' said this—I hope he will excuse me if I do not read all the speech:

Yes, I see signs of war——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is out of order.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If the right hon. gentleman went into action with a gun such as the hon. gentleman who controls the Militia Department sees fit to put into the hands of the militia of this country, I am afraid that it would be worse than another catastrophe which the right hon. gentleman mentioned in a discussion on the census in connection with the Immigration Bill, when he spoke of the angel of death visiting the first-born throughout Israel. I would like to tell the right hon. gentleman, and I tell him frankly, that I think his angel of death is but a kindergarten angel of death in comparison with the angel of death which he has put into the hands of his war minister. My hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes), of glorious and immortal memory, seems to be distressed more or less. About the time the discussion was going on in the 'Star' and other papers regarding the importation of parts of the Ross rifle from the United States, an article appeared in the 'Herald' saying that the Norwegian army was about to be armed with the Ross rifle: but a cable despatch shortly afterwards admitted that the commander-in-chief of the Norwegian army did not contemplate re-arming the Norwegian army, and had not even heard of the Ross rifle. Now, these reports of a very unflattering and uncomplimentary nature have been coming in, in one continuous stream, to the Militia Department. So it has been found necessary to do something to brush up this gun; and working on the assumption that what cannot be cured must be endured, a whitewash board was held at Quebec and a number of friends hied down to the ancient capital, where, on the historic battlefield and under the guns of the fleet, they proceeded to subject this rifle to some most serious tests. One was in regard to disassembling and putting together the motor parts of the rifle. In this engagement a Tommy was taken from the citadel and an expert from the Ross rifle factory, and the test went on, and it naturally resulted in the component parts of the Ross rifle being reassembled in a few seconds quicker than the component parts of the Lee-Enfield.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. member is such a fair-minded gentleman that I am sure he would not like to deceive or mislead the House in any way; but he should know that the sergeant who took down the parts was the most experienced army sergeant in the Dominion of Canada.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Hear, hear; that is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. Did he put them back again?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No, he could not get it together at all.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. However, that test is of little moment, because nobody is allowed to take apart the Ross rifle; it is forbidden in the instructions of the hon. gentleman who controls the department. Militia order 98 says:

All tampering with small arms or the stripping or removing of any part of the arm (not intended to be used in the ordinary use of the weapon) is strictly prohibited unless carried out by the district armourer or by a regimental armourer who has been through a course of instruction at an ordnance depot, and who has received a certificate that he is capable of executing minor repairs.

You can see very readily that was a very unfair test.

This is practically the history of the Ross rifle. Canada's national arm of defence, the rifle which passed such creditable examination at the hands of Canadian musketry experts and with which the minister intends arming the defenders of this country—a rifle, which placed in the hands of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, was discarded by them because they considered it dangerous and were forced, by reason of that danger, to discontinue their target practice; a rifle which has been more or less a failure when placed in the hands of the permanent corps and the militia; a rifle which resulted in several serious accidents at St. John and Lethbridge; a rifle which is not used by the sharpshooters of this country for the simple reason that they cannot make good scores with it and prefer the old Lee-Enfield. But the manufacture nevertheless goes on just the same.

The minister tells us that no government ever perfects its first rifle, that it must run through successive stages of development from the cradle to maturity. Well, I hope my hon. friend is not going to assume the parentage of the dozen or so brands of vintages of the Ross rifle. I should recommend that he be guided more by a little incident which occurred in the history of a young curate who had a yearly stipend of only $80, but who had a sanguine temperament and high ideals and married for love. He christened his first child—Mark I—Alpha; the second Omega, but, alas, for the judgment of the reverend gentleman, he was obliged at the expiration of some time to call his Mark III. 'Errata.' I would suggest that the right hon. gentleman instead of calling his last rifle 'Mark III.' should call it 'Mark Time,' and then take the means to obtain a perfect rifle which would be a credit to himself and the country and which could be safely placed in the hands of our militia.

But according to reports which we hear from time to time possibly all our difficulties in the way of the Ross rifle will be brushed away. A 'peace at any price' park is to be established on the historic Plains of Abraham, and it is rumoured that possibly that will entail the removal of the Ross rifle factory, which now defaces the ancient battlefield and stands there as a tribute to the monumental egotism of the right hon. gentleman and his War Minister. Those gentleman know more about rifles than the officers of the Musketry School at Hyde or the commission which reported on the Ross rifle at Springfield or the officers of the permanent force who sent reports from all points from Halifax to Vancouver, and who persist in the idea of placing it in the hands of the militia of Canada. It does not seem that the people of Canada wish to have their militia armed with a rifle such as the one I have described to-night. It is not safe, it is unserviceable, and it comes to grief on the slightest provocation. The reports are unanimous in condemning it and in condemning almost every component part of it. However, there is one thing on which we may congratulate ourselves, and that is that the only Canadian product of the Ross rifle factory, namely, the noise it makes when it goes off, has been omitted from this category of defects, so that we have at least one feature which we may be proud of. I have nothing more to say in connection with the reports as to the efficiency and desirability of the rifle. I trust that the right hon. gentleman and his Minister of War will see fit to reconsider their determination to place this rifle in the hands of the militia. It will be a very serious thing to send troops into action, or even to keep them during peace, armed with a rifle which is not absolutely the best that can be obtained in the world's markets to-day. I beg, therefore, to move :

That all the words after the word 'that' in the proposed motion be left out, and the following substituted instead thereof:

The dealings of the Department of Militia and Defence in connection with the adoption and manufacture of the Ross rifle as an arm for the defence of Canada have displayed deplorable inefficiency, have been characterized by gross extravagance and improvidence, and have impaired public confidence both in the alleged efficiency of the rifle and in the management of the department.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). It can scarcely be truly said, Mr. Speaker, of the hon. gentleman's performance that he was 'all things by turns and nothing long.' He was all things by turns, but always very long. It would be difficult to say in which roll he was most interesting—whether as a Heaven-born patriot, as he declared himself in the opening of his speech, or as a humorist, in which mood he seemed disposed to close his remarks. But though his peroration may have been really genuinely humorous and amusing to himself, I doubt if any one else in this House fairly appreciated it. The hon. gentleman has succeeded at last in carrying his point with his party. He has apparently been strong enough to convince his party that it is a desirable thing——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Pardon me, please.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN—a portion of his party—that it is a desirable thing in the interests of that party and in the interests of the country that this question of arming the militia should be brought down to the level —the low level from the hon. gentleman's point of view—of party warfare. The hon. gentleman talks about patriotism. He says that he is actuated by a strong patriotic desire—and by that alone—to benefit his country and to benefit the militia, of which he is an officer. But I doubt very much if he will be able to convince right-thinking men, right-thinking officers of the force to which he belongs, that this is the truest and best way of exhibiting his love for the country and his love for the militia force. He may feel that his efforts have been rewarded to some extent. I think they have. If the desire to throw doubt upon a weapon with which the army of this country is to be armed, if that, in his mind, is the highest thing to be sought after, the thing which a member of parliament and an officer occupying a prominent position in the militia, should work for above and beyond everything, then I think the hon. gentleman may congratulate himself upon a certain measure of success, because, with the aid of certain newspapers—which, in some cases, he has inspired, and which, in more frequent instances, have inspired him—the hon. gentleman has been able to cause a condition of doubt to exist among the militia force of this country ; a condition, however, which, I am happy to be able to say, is very rapidly disappearing since the reports of the investigation which has taken place before the Public Accounts Committee during the past year and a half have been thoroughly circulated among the people. The hon. gentleman has taken a long time to get his courage up to the sticking point. He spent all last session asking questions—every day——

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Will the hon. gentleman (Sir Frederick Borden) allow me to say just here : the reason of the delay is due to his usual length of time in bringing down the reports we asked for, and the length of time the Public Accounts kept the report before them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am not responsible for the Public Accounts Committee. I was willing to have the question reported here long ago. No, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Worthington) is entirely responsible.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The hon. minisister did not bring down these reports until within the last two months.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, two months. Here is an hon. gentleman burning with a desire to save his country. He was lamenting over the dangers which beset the people of this country, and especially the militia—and here he has allowed, according to his own statement, two months to pass during which he should have been on his feet with the kind of impassioned eloquence we heard to-day, warning the House and the country of the terrible disaster awaiting us.

I do not propse to follow this line of argument any longer. The hon. gentleman has occupied three hours and a quarter, and I shall try not to emulate him in this respect at least. I propose, in view of the seriousness of the resolution which is now before the House, to address myself to two or three points connected with this matter which I deem to be of importance. I do not, for a moment, intend to follow the hon. gentleman in his meanderings among the reports of all sorts of committees which are of more or less consequence—and generally of much less consequence than more. However, before I take my seat, I shall refer specifically to the only three cases out of the whole number he has referred to in which the Ross rifle has been seriously attacked. And I propose to show that in each and all of these cases the statement that any accident occurred, any blow out or anything that might have seriously menaced life, is absolutely without any foundation in fact. And I propose to do that by the record, and not by reading such papers as the hon. gentleman did, a paper the authority for which he could not state, purporting to be a report from the United States government as to the test of certain rifles from the Ross factory——

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If the hon. gentleman (Sir Frederick Borden) will pardon me. Somewhat like his little manicure rifle, he is going off at half-cock. This report came from the Springfield Armoury, and is signed by competent and credible men, and they state that Sir Charles Ross was present and asked to have his rifle inspected.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I say that this House has no evidence before it beyond the hon. gentleman's statement, and—to return him the compliment that he paid me—I do not value that statement one single particle; it is not good enough. Now, if the hon. gentleman is going to bring down ordnance reports, let him bring them down with the proper seal upon them, as has been done by the Militia Department in every case; every paper is there to speak for itself, and it bears upon its face the authority from which it emanated. I do not come here, as the hon. gentleman did, with a typewritten paper which he tells us may have come from the Springfield Arsenal in the United States, but concerning which he has given us no proof that it came from there.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Does the hon. gentleman deny the accuracy of the report?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am not denying it or amirming it; I say that that paper has no business to be brought into this House, because the hon. gentleman is not able to say where it came from.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I may say that the report of the Springfield committee on the Ross rifle is infinitely better than the Springfield report on their own rifle, as I shall show in due time.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would like, at the earliest moment, to set the mind of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Worthington) at rest with reference to the dangerous character of this rifle, which he so hates, and in connection with which he has become a sort of monomaniac; because he has done nothing else for two years, he has thought of nothing else, spoken of nothing else, apparently knows nothing else—and very little about that. But I want to make a statement at once, which I hope may have a soothing effect upon his mania, and that is that I will undertake to bring the evidence of men competent to judge to prove that there is not a single rifle which has been delivered and accepted by the Department of Militia from the Ross rifle factory—except the rifle which his friend tampered with at Eastman at a meeting at whicn the hon. gentleman was present and——

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was not present; I was not within twenty miles.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman said he was.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I said I was in the vicinity.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He knew it had been tampered with, and did not like to go. I say that with the exception of that one rifle, which was tampered with in that way—and I will show in a few miutes what was done with that rifle so tampered with—there is not one single rifle of the 42,000 which have now been delivered that is not a service rifle and is not fit and safe to use in the Canadian army if it were necessary to use it. I make that statement here and accept full responsibility for it. I make it upon the report which I hold of those who are competent to advise me as to matters of that kind. I shall read the particulars necessary to show that of those rifles which are not now serviceable there is not one which cannot be made serviceable with a very slight expenditure. Yet we have this hon. gentleman trying to terrify the militia, trying to persuade the House that we have purchased 52,000 rifles which are only fit to be placed on the scrap heap. I assure you there is not one word of truth in it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The Auditor General said it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Auditor General did not say it—and the Auditor General, anyway, is about as good an authority as the hon. gentleman himself upon the usefulness of a rifle. I would ask the House to consider with me one or two questions that I propose to put to myself. First, what justification was there for adopting the policy of securing a rifle manufactory for Canada? I propose, in that connection, to read two or three short extracts from the proceedings of the Colonial, or Imperial Conference as it is now called, of 1907. I have here a paper which was laid before that conference, having been brought down by the Secretary of State for War. I shall quote from it briefly, giving only the salient words of each paragraph :

1. No review of the strategical conditions of the British Empire, even when such a review is limited to the purely military aspects of the question, can be undertaken without admitting as a first and fundamental principle that the maintenance of the empire rests primarily upon supremacy at sea.

2. The second great principle which must govern the military organization of the empire is that each portion of it should, as far as possible, maintain sufficient troops for self defence.

3. The third principle to be borne in mind in this consideration of the military requirements of the empire is the great one of mutual support at a time of emergency. It is evident that under certain circumstances the land forces of the various territories of the empire may be impelled by considerations both of safety and sentiment to act together in some great conflict which may imperil our national existence. Should such a situation arise it would be impossible to overrate the advantage of having in every case a system of military organization capable of being readily assimilated to that of the many other contingents which would compose the Imperial army.

Under the heading :

PATTERNS AND PROVISION OF EQUIPMENT AND STORES FOR COLONIAL FORCES.

It says :

It is essential that the small arms supplied to any force which may have to act side by side with troops from the United Kingdom should fire the same ammunition as that supplied to the latter.

And again :

It is most desirable that the area of supply of the warlike store under reference should be as wide as possible, and, therefore, the colonial governments should be urged to arrange for local manufacture and provision, rather than to rely on the resources of the United Kingdom.

It seems to me, taking the highest point of view, that we have in that paper evidence that it was the duty of this country to undertake to manufacture for itself the small arms required by it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Worthington), in a sneering way, referred to the alleged fact that the right hon. the Prime Minister had refused to contribute to the imperial navy. The hon. gentleman did not say whether he himself would be prepared to advocate the voting of a large sum of money to support the navy. We on this side of the House have taken the view that it is our duty in Canada to assist the mother country, at least to the extent of being able, in the first instance, to defend ourselves on our own soil; and we have taken a further step, and said to the mother country that we do not wish her over-burdened taxpayers any longer to pay for supporting garrisons in Canada, and that we in future, as we are doing to-day, will continue to relieve her from all expenditures of that kind; and while we are not able at the present moment to construct a navy, and while we are not disposed to pay any money to support a navy, in the control of which we have no direct interest, we are prepared to do our full duty so far as concerns maintaining control of our own territory and being able to defend that territory. One of the ways in which to do that is to be prepared to manufacture for ourselves our own small arms. This is the first step then, Mr. Speaker, and the first ground I give in justification of the policy which we have adopted.

In February of last year, on a similar occasion to this, I made a statement, and I shall trouble the House by reading very briefly from that statement to show other reasons which moved me and which influenced the government to undertake the responsibility of manufacturing our own small arms or having them manufactured in this country. 'Let me tell him that in the year 1900, when this government wanted to purchase rifles through the imperial government, it was impossible to secure a thousand rifles in Great Britain.' It will be remembered that this was during the South African war, at a moment when we wanted 10,000 rifles. We had sent away to South Africa a large number of the rifles we had —and we had all too few—and it was desired to purchase 10,000 yet, not 1,000 could be procured in the whole United Kingdom.

It was impossible to secure a thousand rifles in Great Britain during the time of the South African war, and I thought that it was the duty of this government, under the circumstances, to make as soon as possible some arrangement by which our rifles could be manufactured in Canada. I was in England in 1900 and went to the Birmingham small arms people and tried to induce the company to come to Canada. I quite recognize the desirability of our having, if possible, precisely the same rifle in Canada as is used by the British army, because if the militia of this country should ever be called out for war, it would be better that we should have the same rifles. We have one, however, which differs so little from the Lee-Enfield that there will be no trouble on that score.

It was found impossible to prevail upon the Birmingham Small Arms Company, or any other small arms manufacturer in England, to come out here and start a factory. About that time Sir Charles Ross happened to be here. He had not then come to Canada for the first time, but, as the hon. gentle man must know, had been living in British Columbia, and had spent a great deal of money there in developing water-powers and establishing electrical works. He was introduced to me, I think, by Mr. Mackenzie, of Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, and brought other letters from the most reputable men in Canada. He explained to me that he had a rifle factory in the United States, and was selling sporting rifles, rifles similar to what are being manufactured here now. He said that he would be willing to establish a factory to manufacture rifles for Canada with the same bore and to use the same cartridge as the Lee-Enfield rifle. It seemed to me that it was a patriotic thing on my part to recommend and on the part of the government to accept this opportunity to secure a factory which would turn out rifles for Canda.

These are the grounds then, Mr. Speaker, upon which I justify the adoption of the policy of manufacturing, or having manufactured in Canada, our own rifles. Somebody may say : Why did you not construct a factory yourself ; why did you not become your own manufacturer ? I frankly admit that that may be a question fairly open to argument. We took the view that it would be better to allow Sir Charles Ross to manufacture his own rifle and so we adopted that policy. We knew that he had the capital to do it, we thought that the better course, we made a contract with him, as I shall show presently, and he proceeded to construct his factory. What was the rifle that we agreed to adopt ? I have already said that it was a rifle of the same calibre or the same bore as the Lee-Enfield. It had a slightly different action but the difference was not serious. Of course the parts of that rifle would not be interchangeable with those of the Lee-Enfield, but that is not a serious drawback.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is no Lee-Enfield that is interchangeable with its neighbour.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. So I believe. What was this rifle ? It was known as the Mannlicher rifle, the rifle with which, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Worthington) told us to-day, the whole Austrian army is armed. He said that that army was armed with that rifle in 1896. The British army was armed with the Lee-Enfield before 1896 ; so that, that is not a very grave or serious complaint against it. The Mannlicher, I believe, is considered to be as good a rifle as there is in the world. At any rate, Austria is a warlike nation and I think we may fairly assume that the rifle that is good enough to satisfy the generals of the Austrian army may be good enough to satisfy the militia of this country. What did I proceed to do ? Knowing this, I proceeded, after consulting my colleagues, to bring together a committee of the best men I could find in Canada, as I believed, to examine this rifle and report to me as to whether it was a fit rifle to adopt in this country. Whom did I appoint on that committee ?—General Otter, now the chief of the general staff, one of the most distinguished Canadian soldiers, a man whose name is honoured not only in his own country but in England as well, a man who was offered, the other day, one of the best commands in the gift of the War Office in England ; Colonel Gibson, for many years an active militiaman, a man who took his part in repelling the Fenian invasion and a man who was for years and years the president of the Dominion Rifle Association. Colonel Hughes, who is well known in this House and the country, was the third man whom I appointed on that committee.

Mr. FOWLER. Colonel Sam ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Colonel Sam There is no other Colonel Hughes.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Yes, pardon me ; there are two more in the same family.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. When you speak of Colonel Hughes in this country every one knows who is meant. Colonel Anderson of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, a distinguished engineer, and Major Gaudet, at the head of the Dominion arsenal, a man of great experience and possessing technical knowledge, were also members of this committee. Those gentlemen met, the Ross rifle was handed to them, they reported, and I suppose I will have to trouble the House, very briefly, with an extract from their report. I am going to read the whole of the opinion expressed ; I am not going to follow the example given us to-night of simply picking out things that suit my case and omitting those that do not. This is the opinion :

On the whole, the board find that the Ross rifle has features which in their opinion, afford advantages over the Lee-Enfield. All agree that the straight pull is a very important advantage over the Lee-Enfield action. The sample mechanism is evidenced by the fact that the breech can be taken entirely apart and put together again without tool other than an ordinary knife, and the operation of taking apart and assembling the parts, takes considerably less time than the Lee-Enfield. Another important advantage, is in the strength of the breech mechanism, while the limit of the Lee-Enfield is restricted. It may be said that any increase of velocity which is ever likely to be required, can with absolute safety be obtained in the case of the Ross rifle.

The Ross rifle is approximately a pound lighter than the Lee-Enfield.

The chief objection or difficulty which was found in connection with the tests to which the Ross rifle was subjected, was brought out in the 'endurance test.' While in firing 1,300 rounds out of each of the rifles, the Lee-Enfield stood the test quite satisfactorily. It was found that after heating, the breech of the Ross rifle closed with more or less difficulty, the action being very stiff with occasional jamming besides which a possibility of 'double loading' exists.

Were this an inherent objection to this rifle, independent of details of mechanism, the board would regard it as a very serious matter, but Sir Charles Ross states, that any difficulty in this respect can be effectually obviated, and the board submit herewith a memorandum (exhibit 'D') from him in reference to this point which in his opinion, affords an explanation of the unsatisfactory result of this test, and the manner in which the same may be overcome.

Speaking generally the board believe that the Ross rifle has features which are a positive advantage over the Lee-Enfield, while it is contended by Sir Charles Ross that he can easily remedy any of the drawbacks which have been pointed out.

The rifle has been on the ranges during the week of the Dominion Rifle Association meeting——

And yet the hon. member for Sherbrooke said that it was never on a range.

——and has been examined and fired more or less by many riflemen of experience, and while it is not suggested that any conclusive testimony has been afforded from such desultory examinations and tests, it is significant of the favourable impression of riflemen, that no adverse comments were known to have been made, and all seemed to be pleased with the action of the rifle.

Here is what Sir Charles Ross said in that connection.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the minister leaves that, there seems to be a good deal left out of this report, a good deal of responsibility left for the minister before adopting the rifle. Because, while they say that certain defects exist, they do not themselves point out that they can be remedied, but merely declare the opinion of Sir Charles Ross to that effect. There is one paragraph which the minister did not read ; it is rather significant :

The board do not profess to pronounce upon the question of a complete remedy of this objection, but having called attention to it, assume that due precaution and provision with reference thereto will be taken in the event of the rifle being adapted.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I see I left that out and the clause following also.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is a very important clause. I would like to ask what was done along that line before the rifle was adopted?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, the officers of the department were consulted and Gaudet, who was an expert and had taken a course in England just before that, was consulted with reference to the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. Gaudet is the ammunition man ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Is there any written report?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not think there is any memorandum on the subject. If there is it has been brought down.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It has not been brought down.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, then, there is not any. A great deal of the negotiations, a good deal of the advice obtained directly from the officers of course was verbal. It was the result of consultation between Gaudet, Cotton, my late deputy, myself and others.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The chief trouble at that time was because of cartridges sticking in the chamber.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. There is one thing which was pointed out to me and I might mention it now since the question has been asked. The rapidity of fire of the Ross rifle is very much greater than that of the Lee-Enfield, and for that reason there is a great deal more liability to heating of the barrel and jamming. I wish to call the attention of the House, however, to Sir Charles Ross' statement, and I will only read the concluding part of it with reference to this matter, because it has a bearing upon the question of remedying all the defects :

We particularly draw attention to the fact that the trouble is only a small detail of manufacturing owing to the difference in the shells, not having had the advantage of testing with government cartridges and we undertake to meet all the necessary requirements on this point. (Sgd.) Charles Ross.

(Sgd.) J. A. BENNETT.

Bennett was his manager.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that report in the printed evidence?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, you will find it at page 204. Then, of course, there are letters from Colonel Hughes and from Colonel Anderson which I will not delay the House by reading. The hon. member (Mr. Worthington) read to-day certain alleged reports from the Springfield arsenals. I have already referred to them and given my opinion that they are not of much value until their authenticity is proven. So far as I am concerned I am not prepared to accept their authenticity. The hon. member also referred to what he called War Office reports and Hythe tests, and he ventured to say that when I was asked a certain question I had denied that any communication had been received from the War Office with reference to the Ross rifle. If the hon. member had been fair enough to read my answer he would have seen I had done nothing of the kind. I said there had been a communication and that it was marked 'secret,' and I referred to the nature of the communication. The communication points out that it might be undesirable to adopt a rifle which was not precisely like the Lee-Enfield because two forces fighting together in the field might require different parts and their armourers might be serving out parts for only one kind of rifle. That is a difficulty that no doubt would exist, but so far as the Ross rifle is concerned there was no very great difficulty about it. As I pointed out in 1902 when this matter was discussed in the colonial conference, the rifle is so simple that it is quite easy for a man, or at any rate for a sergeant in each company or in each regiment, to carry with him the necessary spare parts. That was pointed out and it was not denied; in fact, it was affirmed. What was denied was a statement which appeared in a newspaper in this city, and which the hon. member (Mr. Worthington) seems disposed to adhere to notwithstanding my contradiction, and which was that the Ross rifle had been tested at Hythe. I gave the specific statement on that head: That neither Sir Charles Ross nor his agent nor anybody for him nor any one on behalf of this government had ever handed over to any of the authorities at Hythe any rifles whatever for the purpose of testing them. In that connection I was practically charged—and this will illustrate the animus which actuates the opponents of this rifle—I was charged with having purloined from the parliamentary library a book which was said to have been there and to have mysteriously disappeared. I was able to produce here from the librarian a distinct statement that no such report from the War Office had ever been in the library and that every report of the year mentioned or of recent years that ever had been in the library was there still. I mention this again to show the animus behind all this and the unfairness of this crusade, for it is nothing else. A newspaper stated—inspired I believe by the hon. member—the Ottawa 'Citizen,' stated that I had refused to bring down a report sent here by the War Office with regard to this rifle and that such report had been kept off the files. And I was able to bring here to my desk the next day the return as I laid it on the table as long ago as March, 1907, and showed to this House the full report of the War Office just as it was sent to the Department of Militia, and I was able to show further that I had in the speech which I made in this House in January, 1907, referred to this very report as having been received and stated I was going to bring it down to the House. It is just as well perhaps to take note of these things so that the House may discount a little bit the professions of patriotism put forward by the hon. member who moved this motion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is this report of the War Office the report of the alleged trial or experiment at Hythe?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. I am speaking now about the report made at the Woolwich Arsenal on rifles which I sent to the War Office for the purpose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was the Hythe investigation?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I said that neither the department nor Sir Charles Ross nor anybody for him ever sent any rifle there, and Sir Charles Ross assured me that it is an entire mistake to say that his rifle has ever been sent to Hythe or reported upon there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose it might have been tested there although it was not sent by Sir Charles Ross. Does the hon. minister know whether the Ross rifle was tested although it was not tested under his auspices?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would not say that it was not. It was about the time that the original rifle was handed to the government to be submitted to the committee which I spoke of a moment ago. I do not think there could have been such a test.

Mr. FOSTER. How many rifles have been accepted for that report of the Woolwich test?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I could not say, but my impression is that there were very few. The report, I think, was received from the War Office in the autumn of 1906.

Mr. NORTHRUP. There were 14,000 rifles up to the end of 1906.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I may say that the rifle sent was the Mark II, and that was the rifle reported on.

Now, Mr. Speaker, another question which I would like to answer is: Was due care exercised in making the contract? Recently there has been a report, somewhat famous now, by a commission known as the Civil Service Commission, and in that report I find some more or less complimentary references to the Militia Department, which I hope to have an opportunity of dealing with some day before long. But incidentally, as a slight instalment of the good things given out to the Militia Department by that commission, it is stated that the contract was drafted by the contractor's solicitor. Now, in order to elicit information upon that point, the chairman of the commission, when he was examining the deputy Minister of Justice, Mr. Newcombe, with reference to the conduct of the Department of Justice, put certain questions; and I would like to read what took place:

Q. You prepare all contracts entered into by the several departments which you are asked to put into legal form, I suppose?—A. We draft them all or revise the drafts prepared in the departments.

Q. We had before us this morning the Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence, and we were asking him some questions about the Ross rifle contract. Was that contract drafted in the Department of Justice?—A. I do not know where it was drafted, but we had a great many conferences over it. It was, I think, drafted preliminarily by Sir Charles Ross' solicitor.

This is all the reason apparently that the Royal Commission had to jump at that conclusion.

Q. Had he a solicitor acting for him?—A. Yes.

Q. In drafting these contracts, if it should appear they contained something that might be detrimental to the interests of Canada, would it be your duty to go on with the drafting or call the attention of the department to the matter?—A. I would call the attention of the minister, or the officer from whom I was taking instructions, to any situation of that sort and ask him what was intended. As to the substance of the contract, I would not interfere with the policy, but would endeavour to see that any deficiencies that suggested themselves to me or any supposed provisions that I thought would not work with adequate security to the government, were called to his attention. Then, that being considered, I would take the policy of the contract from him and give effect to his intentions.

Q. You have nothing to do with the policy of the government—A. No, so far as concerns the business of the departments.

By Mr. Fysche:

Q. I suppose there is such a thing in the government service as cultivating a habit of doubt or suspicion about everything?—A. As far as I am concerned I have no suspicion. I point out to the government, or the minister or the officer who is instructing me, what I suppose to be reasonable or what may work unreasonably, but the policy in regard to that is a matter for him to consider and settle.

I think it is abundantly clear from this that the deputy Minister of Justice would have considered himself in duty and in honour bound to call the attention of the minister to anything which he thought would not work well, but would work to the disadvantage of the country. He had nothing to do with the policy. Whether we should have a rifle factory or not was none of his business. But when a contract was to be made with Sir Charles Ross, the Deputy Minister of Justice stated that he felt it to be his duty to see that the government's interests were protected in every way. And yet in the face of that statement, we have the spectacle of a royal commission trying to stab and injure the department and the government by the casual statement, the unjustifiable statement, to which I have referred, that this contract was drafted by the contractor's solicitor. Now, I have a very definite recollection of what took place in connection with that contract. There were eight or ten or twelve different drafts, and time after time I took to council a draft to consult with my colleagues about; and in my room over and over again, there were present Sir Charles Ross, my deputy minister, the Deputy Minister of Justice, and on one or two occasions Sir Charles Ross had with him his solicitor. The idea was to get at a contract which would be fair; and I was determined, so far as I was concerned, to enter into no contract until I had the advice of the Department of Justice upon it. I got that advice, and I got it in the view expressed by the Deputy Minister of Justice that it was his duty to warn me if he saw anything in the contract which was unjust or improper.

Now, the contract provides:

The contractor is to establish, at or near the city of Quebec, in Canada, a factory for the manufacture of rifles, with the necessary plant.

It is to be a Canadian factory, established at Quebec. The contractor undertakes to deliver a certain number of rifles in a certain length of time—only 12,000. He wanted to make a contract for a much larger number, but it was pointed out to him that that would be impossible without taking a vote of money. He said: Well, if you cannot give me a contract for 100,000 or 60,000 or whatever it might be, then you must undertake to buy from my factory all the rifles you may require. Therefore the third provision of the contract stipulates that the government shall buy from the contractor. Surely there was nothing improvident or unfair in that. Here was a man going to invest half a million dollars or more in the manufacture of rifles in Canada, and you could not expect him to do that unless he had some guarantee of continuous patronage for a reasonable time at least.

In this third section there is a provision that, in case of war or a sudden necessity for a larger number than the contractor will be able to manufacture, he shall be given notice of the large requirements of the government and if unable to fill them, then the government would be at liberty to buy wherever it chose. I should not think that this was an improvident arrangement.

Then as to inspection, we have heard something about inspection and no doubt will hear more about it.

The said rifle hereby contracted for shall, previous to delivery, be inspected by the inspector of small arms of the government, and if, after such inspection, the rifles be found up to sample, delivery will be taken.

All sorts of absurd statements have been made as to the want of proper care in this matter of inspection. Any one can understand that the inspection would be according to the custom and usage in such matters, and so it has been. This of course was a new undertaking in Canada, and it is possible that the inspection in all cases has not been so rigid as it ought to have been. But I can say without hesitation that during the last two years there has been no failure in that regard. I do not wish to blame anybody ; I am here to take full responsibility for any mistake or error that may have been made by any officer in my department. But it was a new work they were undertaking and those errors, if there were any, were of the head rather than of the heart. These officers were undertaking new work, and I would not think of saying that every rifle which came out of that factory, any more than I would say of the Lee-Enfield or any other, had been thoroughly inspected and that nothing had been overlooked. There have been undoubtedly some defects discovered but they were only trifles and can be easily remedied. I am inclined to believe that a more rigid inspection—such an inspection as we are giving to-day—would have practically prevented the issue of any rifle which would show defects under ordinary usage. I am not claiming that this rifle is perfect or that every rifle we have received is absolutely perfect. There is no perfect rifle in the world. I know more about rifles to-day than I did four or five years ago and not very much yet, but I have read enough to have learned that there is no perfect rifle in the world and that there is not any country to-day absolutely satisfied with its rifle. There is no rifle which satisfies every rifleman. Why, you will not find one rifleman in fifty satisfied with any rifle you may give him. Show him a rifle whether Lee-Enfield, Mauser or Ross or what you like, show him any variety of sights you choose, and I venture to say he will want this to be changed or that and tell you that if this or the other thing were done, it would be an absolutely perfect rifle. But these are small things and things which are not material. It is not a target rifle we have been buying. It is a rifle with which to arm the forces of Canada, and I repeat that every one which has been accepted is a rifle fit for service.

The next clause to which I want to call attention provides that if any changes are required, they can be obtained on giving notice. Clause 6 provides that if a new rifle be invented, the government shall have the right to have that rifle. It goes so far as to say that, in laying down his plant and machinery, the contractor shall provide the best facilities to enable him to manufacture any such new rifle.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the system of inspection in Great Britain ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is the upright view, which is the simplest form.

Mr. FOSTER. Give it to us colloquially.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The upright view is taking the rifle completely finished, without any reference to its component parts, and testing it. The other is the government view, as it is called in England. That means the inspection of every part of the rifle or of the important parts, and that is the inspection which has been followed here. The rifle is inspected during the process of manufacture in all its essential and important component parts and marked by the inspector, so that he will know, if that rifle is refused and sent back, whether he has seen it before or not. That is the inspection followed to-day and it is a fairly good inspection—perhaps not quite as good as or up to the government view inspection in England, but Major Pym who knows his business fairly well, thinks it is absolutely satisfactory.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the British government inspect as to the interchangeability of parts ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you sure of that ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Unless very recently. The Lee-Enfield rifles, which we have, are not interchangeable in their parts. The Ross rifle is inspected as to interchangeability. That is one of its strongest claims but Major Pym has reported that it would not be safe to rely entirely on its interchangeability.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the difficulty about interchangeability ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. When you are dealing with the two-thousandth or five-thousandth part of an inch in the circumference or thickness of a part, you see how difficult it is.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have understood that in large manufactories of watches, for example, the parts are made interchangeable. One would suppose that a watch would have as minute parts as any in a rifle. So if this can be done in watches, I do not see that there should be any great difficulty about it in rifles.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I agree with the hon. gentleman in that. I think they ought to be interchangeable, and I think any difficulty that exists in the way of making them so will be overcome. I am stating the facts as they are. I have no desire or intention——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was only asking for information.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The parts are interchangeable in many of them, but I would not like to say they are all interchangeable.

Now, we come to the question of the price. We heard a good deal about the prices at which rifles could be obtained from some dealers of whom I never heard before. I notice that as they were quoted they indicated purchase on upright view. I am not going to say that the firms whose quotations were read are not the best in the world. I do not know. I am going to quote prices which I do know. The price of the latest pattern of the British rifle, made in the government factory—mark you, made in the government factory—is £4 5s, or, laid down in Canada free of all charges, $27.35. This makes no allowance for trade expenses or profit, and to cover these you should make an allowance of about 35 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that include inspection?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, it includes inspection, which is 6 per cent. The same rifle, if purchased from the trade, would cost approximately $6.25 more, or $33.60. Now, that is absolutely authentic information.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does that include duty?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, 20 per cent. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) will remember that when he was Finance Minister a large number of rifles was purchased in England. Part of them were from the War Office—that is, the government factory—and part were bought from the trade. I will deal with those bought from the trade :

	£	s.	d.
Birmingham Small Arms Factory, 13,000; and from another firm, 8,150..	4	0	0
Departmental expenses, &c.	0	4	5
Case, freight, &c..	0	2	3
Carriage..	0	0	9
Total..	4	7	5

Cost laid down in Canada in 1896, $22, or with duty—20 per cent—added, $26.40.

Now, it is only fair to say at once that that includes inspection. The rifle bought in 1896 under my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was bought on most favourable terms, as I shall show in a moment. It would have cost $26.40 if there had been the usual duty which now exists, as against $26.90—because I am going to add the cost of inspection, $1.90. So that the cost of the Ross rifle to this government to-day is $26.90, and the Lee-Enfield imported in 1896 would have cost to-day $26.40, or a difference of 50 cents in favour of the Lee-Enfield.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman permit me a question? The way he deals with the duty is a little confusing to me, though there may be a perfect explanation of it. As I understand, in making the computation he takes into account the duty on rifles coming from Great Britain, but in considering the case of the Ross rifle, as it is to-day, he does not, as far as I can understand, take into consideration the duty on materials brought into this country for the manufacture of that rifle.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have not done so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would seem that if you add the duty in one case you ought to add it in the other. I would suggest that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the duty would be very small, because notwithstanding all that has been said here to-day, there are no finished parts imported.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But to make a fair comparison, I should think the duty, whatever it is, should be taken into account.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I could have the computation made in that way. It would not materially change the figures. I want to show how the price at which these rifles were bought in 1896 happened to be very favourable. I have discussed this matter with General Lake, who, I think, was employed to purchase these rifles, and I have from him this memo, which I have liberty to read :

Ottawa, January 29, 1907.

The Hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence.

You asked me to-day what reduction in price of the Lee-Enfield rifle had followed the decision of the War Office to revise, in 1896, the contract rates paid to the trade in England, upon the ground that the primary cost of installing machinery to manufacture the magazine rifle had by that time been recouped by the trade.

Speaking from memory, I said it was about 10 shillings, but that I could not be certain.

I find that in the priced vocabulary of stores, 1893, the charge for the Lee-Metford rifle is £4 10 2.

In our contract with the War Office, March, 1896, the price for rifles supplied by the trade was to be £4, plus five and one-half per cent for inspection and departmental expenses, and for rifles made in the government factories, £3 12 0. The prices for the Lee-Enfield and Lee-Metford are given as the same.

Hence the 10 shillings reduction which I mentioned is probably an understatement; while it is clear that there was certainly a large reduction.

P. LAKE,
Chief of the General Staff.

Headquarters, January 29, 1907.

So that if the low price was due to the fortunate moment at which General Lake arrived in England to purchase this rifle, when the initial price given to the small arms factory had been reduced—for there is always a special allowance made in England in cases of that kind, where any new lot of war material has to be manufactured. That unusual additional price had been taken off so that under the ordinary course of procedure if General Lake had gone there a year before he would have paid 10 shillings more for the rifles, which would make the comparison very much more favourable to the price of the Ross rifle.

Something has been said about American rifles. I have not been able to get the cost of the Springfield rifle, I do not suppose it would be possible to do so. Even if you did, it would not be of much value because it is a rifle, made by the government and you would have to add 40 per cent to 50 per cent in order to get the price at which the trade could sell such a rifle. I find that the price of the Winchester rifle is $32 delivered here, less 10 per cent or $3.20, so that it is something like $29 without a bayonet. Thus we have the price of the English rifle as it was in 1896, the price of the English rifle to-day and the price of the Winchester rifle to-day. Of course the Winchester price does not include inspection, they would have to be inspected after delivery here.

I shall now read the clause of the contract governing the price, because it is important:

8. The government shall pay for the said 12,000 rifles mentioned in the second clause of this contract at the rate of $25 for each such rifle. The government shall pay out of moneys to be appropriated by parliament for the purpose for all rifles subsequently ordered as herein stipulated the same price of $25 for each of such rifles, unless one of the parties hereto shall upon the occasion of any demand for further rifles notify the other of such parties that the price of such rifles in similar quantities in the markets of Great Britain has relatively to the present price increased or diminished, in which case the aforesaid price of $25 shall no longer govern, but the price for the rifles so ordered and to be thereafter ordered shall depend upon a futher agreement of the parties, and in default of agreement the price to be fixed as provided in the ninth clause hereof.

I now come to the payment of money before the actual delivery of rifles, payment on account of progress estimates:

The price for all rifles herein contracted for or to be supplied pursuant to the provisions of this agreement shall be payable upon delivery; provided, however, that after the establishment of the said factory and supplying of the plant for the running of the same the contractor shall be entitled to payment in advance of delivery of moneys actually expended upon the rifles or parts thereof or fixtures therefor to be delivered in that year upon a statement certified by him of the amount so spent upon establishing the fact of such expenditure to the satisfaction, testified by his signature of such statement, of the government inspector of small arms, such payments in no case to exceed 75 per cent of the price of such rifles, the contractor undertaking whenever such advances are made to insure and keep insured the said rifles, parts and fixtures against loss or damage by fire for the benefit of the government to the extent of such advances.

A statement was made to-night with reference to this clause of the contract which was misleading, though of course not intended to be so. It was stated that the present Auditor General had discovered something very loose or undesirable in the way in which this business was being done by the Militia Department, had held up the department and had practically brought about a new system. It is only fair to the department, to the memory of my late friend and deputy, Colonel Pinault, that I should say that if any such impression as that were given it would be entirely unjust, entirely erroneous. I have read the provision by which this advance of 75 per cent was to be made:

Upon a statement certified by him of the amount so spent upon establishing the fact of such expenditure to the satisfaction, testified by his signature of such statement, of the government inspector of small sums.

Under this provision there seemed to be a difficulty at once. The then inspector of small arms did not feel disposed to certify upon the statement of Sir Charles Ross or anybody else and said he was not in a position to verify the statements.

Mr. FOSTER. Did he not say it was impossible to do it?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am speaking now of Gaudet. He may have done so. A good deal of correspondence took place, and there were several meetings between my late deputy and Major Gaudet and Sir

Charles Ross, with the result that Sir Charles Ross, or perhaps my late deputy, made the suggestion that a chartered accountant, a man of the highest character and standing, should be appointed to verify and certify to these accounts instead of the contractor. This was entirely satisfactory to Sir Charles Ross and it was satisfactory to Major Gaudet, who proceeded after that to certify all accounts so long as he was there. I do not know that there were more than one or two of these accounts. The point I wish to bring to your notice is that the chartered accountant who was selected to do this work and who has done it from the day that factory was started is Colonel Wurtele, and that the so-called change in system is a change between tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee—it is not even that, it is no change, except that to-day the government of Canada is paying Colonel Wurtele and that before the change Sir Charles Ross paid him. The Auditor General said that, technically, under the Audit Act, the conditions of the Audit Act were not met by having that work done by an employee of the contractor. He satisfied himself that Colonel Wurtele was an absolutely reliable man and agreed to the change, which was simply this, that for the future the Department of Militia would pay him, whereas in the past Sir Charles Ross had paid him. My late deputy was something of an economist, he was always making the best bargain he could for the department. I suppose he thought it was under the contract, Sir Charles Ross' privilege and duty to do this, and that he should pay for having it done. This Auditor General takes a different view, but if any hon. gentleman wishes to satisfy himself upon that point, let him turn up Books Nos. 1 and 4 of the Report of the Public Accounts Committee of this session, and let him look at Colonel Wurtele's testimony and read all the evidence of the Auditor General, and he will find what I have stated set forth fully. So that all this talk about a change in the system of accounting is moonshine. There is nothing in it. The accounts have been carried on properly from the beginning. We pay the accountant now; Sir Charles Ross paid him formerly. Colonel Wurtele was recommended by the Bank of Montreal as the best man to do this work, and no man who knows him will dare to insinuate, no one has, that it made any difference to Colonel Wurtele whether he was paid by the government or paid by Ross.

Now, we come to another point in this contract, as to the change with reference to the way that prices would be determined in the event of a new rifle—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before leaving this I would like to inquire whether or not it is reasonably practicable to comply with the provisions of that section. How could the government inspector of small arms determine that so much money has been spent upon the rifles which are to be delivered to the government?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. As a matter of fact the Auditor General relies entirely upon the accountant and the accountant takes stock every time. The departmental accountant, Colonel Wurtele, goes to the Ross rifle factory for the purpose of reporting upon progress estimates. He takes stock of everything there is there and makes a complete report to the Auditor General. The Auditor General is entirely satisfied with that method; so that the inspector has nothing to do with it until he inspects the finished rifle and then he give his report upon it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose the money expended must be represented by a great number of very small parts?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How does the inspector, assuming, of course, that he is diligent, faithful and capable—and I am not calling that in question—know whether or not, when he goes to make another similar report, that he is not embracing some of the material that has already been reported upon?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The inspector does not report; the accountant reports,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How can the accountant report upon a thing of that kind?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, he does it and he satisfies the Auditor General.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thought the report would be made by some one familiar with the process of constructing the rifle.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not necessarily, but he has access to everything in the factory, he goes through it thoroughly, he audits the accounts and he is given all the vouchers and bills of every kind and makes his report upon them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose it is capable of explanation if one had sufficient time to go into it, but how does the accountant know when he goes through these books that a part of the material which has been paid for has not gone into the rifles already paid for? How does he know that when he reports on what is in the factory at that time?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, I heard his evidence before the Public Accounts Committee and I think he satisfied that committee that he was able to do that.

Mr. LENNOX. Is the minister satisfied that it has been done?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am quite satisfied if the Auditor General is satisfied.

Mr. TAYLOR. May I ask the minister how often the employees are paid ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think once a month or once a fortnight,—certainly once a month.

Mr. TAYLOR. If it is once a fortnight it would take a fortnight to take stock. I know what taking stock is.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. These progress estimates are not paid every fortnight or every month. They are paid perhaps once in three months. It is only when progress estimates are made that this is done. At page 187 of book 4 the Auditor General gives evidence upon this point :

Mr. John Fraser, Auditor General, called.

By Sir Frederick Borden:

Q. I would like to have you state, Mr. Fraser, whether you consider the present method of guarding the interests of the public treasury in the matter of advances to the Ross Rifle company under the terms of the contract are sufficient, and if you will describe what they are, roughly?—A. In the first place Colonel Wurtele examines the books of the company to ascertain the amount they have expended, the books, vouchers and cheques for payment. At least these are the directions given to Colonel Wurtele, and I presume he carries them out. He examines the books, pay-lists, and vouchers for the purchase of material, etc., to ascertain the amount that the company is expending on the rifle, and he also is instructed to make an inventory once a month and a variety of statements in connection with it to satisfy us that all this labour and material is expended on the Ross rifle and not on any other rifle that may be manufactured in the establishment. Also, that the amounts included in the certificate do not include anything for—I do not just exactly know what you call it—but for the guns that do not pass inspection—

The very point that my hon. friend raised.

—the guns that may have to go back—the rejected guns that may require some work done on them. His instructions are not to include money expended on them, but that the expenditure he certifies to should be absolutely the first expenditure, 75 per cent of the cost of the first process of turning out the guns.

By Mr. Nesbitt:

Q. That is what he does?—A. I presume he does.

Q. You are talking about it from the government standpoint, I would like to go into the box and tell my impression of it—we get the worst of it every time.

By Sir Frederick Borden:

Q. Do you know anything of Colonel Wurtele, his character or qualifications?—A. I never heard anything against him; I believe his qualification is all right, and I am satisfied with Colonel Wurtele's certificates.

Q. You are satisfied with the work he has done?—A. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is a question by Mr. Hughes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (reading) :

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN.

By Mr. Hughes:

Q. In regard to the 75 per cent is it all paid in one sum or is it paid on estimates as the work progresses?—A. It is paid on progress estimates.

By Mr. Northrup:

Q. Have you any check at all, Mr. Fraser, as to whether or not the arms as to which advances are made will be delivered during the year?—A. We cannot tell what will be delivered during the year.

Q. You have no check at all that they will be delivered?—A. That is not necessary at all under the interpretation of the contract.

Q. I am not asking you that, I am asking you whether or not there is any check that they will be delivered during the year?—A. As soon as they expend 75 per cent on account they are entitled to 75 per cent.

I think that is practically all. Then Colonel Wurtele goes into that quite fully, but I think this evidence of the Auditor General ought perhaps to be satisfactory on that point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If that is a correct interpretation of the contract, it is different from the progress estimate conditions as they are usually found in a contract. The usual form of progress estimate contract is that 75 per cent of the amount of work done and material used, or a certain proportion, shall be paid over. But this seems to prove that everything shall be paid over up to 75 per cent; so that, for example, when 50 per cent of the amount has been expended the contractor gets everything and there is nothing left as security to the government.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. So far as I know, except the insurance. There is a provision in the contract that the material shall all be kept fully insured. Clause 9 provides that in case of the new rifles being invented the government has the right to demand that the rifle shall be made at this factory on giving proper notice, and then it states how the price shall be reached. An important paragraph at the end of this clause is the following :

It being the intention of this agreement that the price of the rifles furnished hereunder shall so far as it is possible be the same as that of similar rifles in like quantities purchased by or for the government, from British manufacturers in the open market in England and delivered in Ottawa.

So that the price of the English rifle is the basis of the price paid, and it is the basis of comparison in the future :

The contractor shall be permitted to import into Canada tools and machinery not manufactured in Canada up to the required standard necessary for the said factory and also all material or parts in the rough unfinished to be used in rifles to be manufactured by him for the government, free of duty, or in case of payment by the contractor of any duty on any such tools, machinery or material or parts as aforesaid, the contractor shall be entitled to a drawback or remission of duty paid in respect to the finished parts to be used in any such rifles, consisting of screws, nuts, bands and springs.

Now, this is a clause about which a good deal has been said, and I regret to say that a great deal has been said that is absolutely unfair and untrue. It is not an unusual thing, Mr. Speaker, to give to a new industry special consideration of this kind, and particularly, I think, should that be so when it is one which can practically have only one purchaser. The government are practically the only customers who will require the products of this factory, and surely, with all the risk that this contractor was taking, it seems to me not unreasonable that he should be allowed to bring in, what?—machinery that is not made in Canada, material that cannot be procured in Canada, and unfinished parts and parts in the rough that cannot be procured in this country. The changes have been rung from Montreal to Boston—and Sherbrooke—about certain parts that were imported into Canada of this Ross rifle, and the hon. member thought it not beneath his dignity, shall I say—his patriotic dignity, perhaps I had better say—to call this arm a contraband Yankee rifle. That is the kind of thing we have to submit to, and the kind of thing Sir Charles Ross has to submit to. There is nothing in all this to justify any such statement as that. The parts are not imported completed. They are not completed parts. There may be one or two screws and two or three springs imported from the United States or imported from England; but, Mr. Speaker, this factory could not go on without permission to import materials out of which the rifle should be made. It is absolutely untrue to say that this factory is simply a factory for assembling parts. I would refer again to the evidence given by Colonel Wurtele, and what did Colonel Wurtele say on that point? Colonel Wurtele is the man who makes up the accounts, progress estimates; the man who sees every charge that is made in that factory, who is absolutely acquainted with every voucher and all the books of the company; sees every labourer's account, knows everything about it, so far as the premises are concerned, from beginning to end, and what does he say?

Q. How many men are employed?—A. From 300 to 500 men. There is something here I notice in the evidence with reference to a sporting rifle made there.

Q. What is the selling value of the sporting rifle?—A. $35 to $40.

Q. Have you taken an inventory?—A. I took an inventory in September.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Were not some affidavits published about these parts in the Montreal and Quebec papers?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think there were, but I never took any stock in the reports in the newspapers.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There were affidavits by the workmen.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think so.

But the government itself sent down experts to take an inventory of every screw and everything else in the factory.

General Cotton went down there and spent three weeks, and found there was an immense amount of value over and above any claim that the government might have against the Ross rifle on account of advances in the event of their not going on and delivering the rifle.

Q. Speaking generally, from that information, are you able to say that the balance of the rifles are substantially completed?—A. Well, of course, taking it on the average I should say the contract is complete because they have got a great number of parts finished and complete, over and above the 52,000 contract.

Q. Now can you tell me the amount that has actually been paid out in wages up to date, in actual wages that has gone into the work in the city of Quebec by Sir Charles Ross? A. Roughly?

Q. Yes? A. Over $900,000.

Q. Over $900,000? Can you tell me how much has been expended in actual material and shop expenses? A. Over $300,000 shop expenses and material.

And yet we are told that all the principal parts are brought in from the United States. What have these 500 men been doing there? Can any one suppose that Sir Charles Ross is so stupid and unbusinesslike that he brings 500 men there to look at the parts which he brings in from the United States?

Q. Right in the city of Quebec? Of course, some material is purchased outside. That has nothing to do with the building, plant or anything of that kind?—A. Absolutely nothing.

By Mr. Reid (Grenville):

Q. Does that include the building? A. Nothing.

By Mr. Nesbitt:

Q. Then assuming that the rifles that are there in the inspection department are ready to be taken over when there is room for them, that would practically mean 38,000? A. 38,000 rifles.

Q. Better than 38,000 rifles. Then that would mean that there has been expended in actual wages in the city of Quebec and on materials and so on, over $100,000 more than the total advances of the government to-day?—A. About that, yes.

Q. And a lot of that material was purchased in Quebec?—A. Lots of it, yes.

Hon. Mr. Foster.—By wages and material you mean wages employed on, and material used in, the manufacture of rifles.

Mr. Nesbitt.—Yes.

Hon. Mr. Foster.—Simply that?

The Witness.—Yes.

Q. As to these sporting rifles of which there were 150 but you say 200, you have allowed for these?—A. Yes.

By Hon. Mr. Foster :

Q. I want to find out if any portion of that is for purposes outside of this contract, if it is for material and labour to make rifles, not to make plant for the manufacture of rifles or to get in water supply?—A. I understand thoroughly; it is for the manufacture of rifles and not capital. It is entirely independent from the capital of the company.

That is what I ventured to assert this afternoon, although my hon. friend was doubtful.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me for a moment. This is all a play upon words. The capital spoken of there in one respect was what went into the buildings and machinery ; that is, the fixed capital. But after a man has scraped up all he can and put it into his buildings and machinery, he cannot do anything unless he has working capital.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Precisely. Nobody denied that the object of this contract was to assist the contractor reasonably. A man who puts half a million of money into buildings and machinery and gets ready to operate and pays for them all before any money was handed over to him by the government, is surely entitled to some consideration. The hon. gentleman this afternoon was endeavouring to lead this House and country to believe that we were supplying all the money the Ross Rifle Company expended.

Mr. FOSTER. He meant working capital.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He did not say so.

Q. It has absolutely nothing to do with what is chargeable to capital account?—A. Nothing.

Q. This suggestion has been made to me among older things: have you been through the factory very recently?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you seen any boys employed on machines?—A. I have not noticed any boys on machines, no, sir.

Q. The tool makers, for instance, are a very highly paid class of mechanics?—A. Yes, Sir, they are more of experts.

Q. Do you know whether or not there was an understanding between the Ross Rifle Company and the government that the balance of the 12,000, assuming that only 9,000 of Mark I were delivered, that the balance of the 12,000 order of Mark I should be made up by the delivery of Mark II?—A. My recollection is that they supplied the deficiency in Mark II.

Q. So that there was no loss to the government in any particular as regards the 3,000 rifles which were not delivered, there was no loss to the government in those parts?—A. No, the company had to make good.

Mr. Northrup:

Q. When you came to look over the pay roll, if you found any Mark I rifles upon which 75 per cent had been advanced, and those rifles were afterwards turned into Mark II, would there not be double payment on them?—A. I do not see how you could exactly keep that labour separately.

Q. I do not think so either. As a matter of fact, you say you certified 75 per cent of the labour on Mark I, and if those rifles were afterwards used as Mark II, would there not be double labour upon those rifles?—A. Of course there would be some labour involved in the change.

Q. Then, when you came to estimate on Mark II, would you not be estimating a second time?—A. No, I could only estimate on 75 per cent of the total, all over and above that would be a loss to the factory.

Notwithstanding this evidence, a grossly unfair attempt has been made in the press and in this House to make it appear that the Department of Militia and Defence had advanced 75 per cent on 12,000 rifles, and had only got delivery of 9,000, and that the balance of 3,000 had been thrown somewhere into the dust-heap and the country was out that much—an assertion for which there was not the slightest foundation. So much for the contract. I do not think there are any other portions of it that I need deal with.

With regard to parts imported I would like to say a word. I suppose it will be generally admitted in this House that it would be reasonably good policy to encourage an industry of this kind, an industry which employs 500 men and which means the manufacture of our own rifles in our own country. I would expect at any rate that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House would be extremely anxious, in accordance with their professions, to encourage a new industry of this kind. But I am beginning to think that they are going back on themselves ; for we find them criticising this factory for doing in a small way what nearly all the great factories in this country are doing in a large way. There is not a factory engaged in the manufacture of similar articles which does not import largely from the United States steel and various other raw materials. Take agricultural implements, the manufacturers are constantly obliged to bring in from the United States articles that go into the manufacture of these implements. Why, my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who is engaged in the manufacture of carriages, imports largely the material that go into his carriages. He would have to shut up his shops to-morrow if he did not import from the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman is mistaken with reference to carriages. With reference to the wheels——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, the wheel is a part of the carriage. I never knew of a carriage that could run without wheels.

Mr. TAYLOR. The wheel is simply the timber we have not in the country.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman does not know as much about the way his carriages are manufactured as he thinks he does. I have here from a carriage manufacturer a statement of the things brought in from the United States :

When special screws, spring or special fixtures are required, it becomes necessary to import or make them ourselves.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman has enumerated a great many articles that do not go into the construction of a carriage.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Of carriages and cars.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman mentioned tire steel. We purchase it all in Nova Scotia, and do not get a bar outside this country. Nearly everything except the wood is made in Canada.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Since how long?

Mr. TAYLOR. For years. I have been manufacturing twenty years and we purchase nearly all our supplies in Canada.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have factories making motors in Canada. There is one which boasts that it makes an all Canadian motor. Well, of the various materials which go into that 50-H.P. motor, $1,900 worth are imported out of the $4,500. And for an 18-H.P. motor, $136 of materials out of the $1,600 price, come from the United States. I do not object to this, but I do object to applying to the Ross rifle a rule which hon. gentlemen are not prepared to apply to other manufactures in Canada. The time will come no doubt when all these things will be manufactured in Canada, the time will come when the steel will be manufactured here, and Sir Charles Ross has told me that the moment he can get the suitable steel in Canada for the manufacture of the parts of his rifle, he will buy it here. I am told that at Peterborough there are three or four most important industries which would have to close their doors to-morrow if they were not allowed to purchase from the United States, not raw materials, but finished products. Take door bells, the springs are imported ready to put on the bell. Take an auger or bit, the point is imported from the United States; it cannot be made in Canada. Take the manufacture of shovels, the wood and I think the steel must be imported. Surely we are not going to go back on our policy, surely the importance of having the labour done in Canada is something, when we find that out of $1,200,000 expended in the factory $900,000 were spent on labour alone. That one statement should put an end forever to these vain imaginings—for they are nothing more—begotten from a diseased mind——

Mr. FOSTER. Order; go it easy.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would like to have said a base desire to injure a Canadian industry—I shall not say anything about the government and myself.

Mr. FOSTER. The government is beyond injury now.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will find that out to his cost.

Mr. TALBOT. He is thinking of the old government.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, the good old days. We have heard a good deal to-day about defects of rifles. We hear of the defects of the Ross rifle. Now, I am not here to make damaging or injurious statements about any other rifle. I am here to give the facts. And I am here to show this House that there are at least other rifles besides the Ross rifle to which accidents may happen. The Lee-Enfield rifle is, in my opinion, a good one. I would have been quite content to have had it manufactured in Canada. I gave the manufacturers in England the first chance and tried on more than one occasion to prevail upon them to come here. They would not do so. I have here a report of some damaged Lee-Enfield rifles :

S.O.O. also reports 4 bolts blown back. In some case 'bands' were found to be 'loose'. Stock butts, some found loose. Piling swivel screws some lost owing to short screws.
Eye of magazine, about 1 per cent pull out owing to defective brazing.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Were there any big headlines in the newspapers about these ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not yet; there may be to-morrow. Now, what a terrible thing for my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) to have armed the volunteers with such a rifle as that. I am not going to trouble the House by following the long weary reading which the hon. member (Mr. Worthington) made of certain reports which he wanted to place on 'Hansard,' but I have here a statement giving the whole thing boiled down. What it took the hon. gentleman two hours of our valuable time to read is here. It shows the number of damaged rifles, ranged under the headings 'Serviceable, Reparable' and 'Unserviceable.' And in this whole list, there is not one rifle that is not put down as 'serviceable.' Of all the list that the hon. gentleman read, every one is mentioned here by my officials, who take the responsibility for this, as being 'serviceable' and 'reparable' and not one 'unserviceable.' It happens—and a great deal was made of that—that there is a return of a large number damaged at Halifax, no fewer than 257. There are also 36 in Militia District No. 8 and 38 at Quebec. These are the only large numbers except at Halifax. The rifles were issued to all the districts throughout Canada and subjected to the same tests. I cannot account for it. I shall make further investigation. Whether it is due to the fact that there are in Halifax a lot of old English soldiers who had been accustomed to using the Lee-Enfield and who were not properly trained in the use of the Ross rifle, or whether there were officers who were prejudiced against the Ross rifle and in favour of the other, I am not prepared to say. But I intend to find out. I shall make it my business to find out. It is certainly a remarkable thing that nearly all these complaints come from Halifax. And yet there is not one unserviceable rifle, not one rifle that could not be repaired and put in proper shape of any armourer. Here is what appears at the end of the statement:

On receipt of these reports the inspector of small arms sends for such rifles or parts of rifles as cannot be repaired locally, or else forwards such spare parts as are necessary to enable the repairs to be made locally.

The general nature of the damage to these rifles is such that all are easily reparable.

In that connection, I wish to repeat what I said in the earlier part of my remarks. And I will read this so that there may be no doubt about it as to Mark I.

Although the details are not complete, there is every reason to believe that the complaints made against the Mark I rifle can be met and the arm put to very good use. For this purpose they have been recalled into stores and replaced by a later issue of March 11, and when the proper time arrives the necessary changes can be made, keeping the Mark I rifle as it is at present, and only remedying the complaint incorrectly described as to blow-back of the bolt. The very trifling expense of putting in a cross-pin will do all that is required.

As to Mark II.:

The majority of complaints have been made about the earlier issue of Mark II.

That is the Halifax issue.

And can be overcome in many cases, if not all——

These are the words of the inspector endorsed by the Master General of Ordnance, and I am sure every one of them can be made right.

—merely by the issue of spare parts to be fitted by a competent local armourer.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN.

And this is the sum in toto of the indictment made by the hon. gentleman this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I insisted upon the Ross rifle being sent out to the troops all over the country, and in this respect the Ross rifle has been treated unfairly and differently from the Lee-Enfield. The Lee-Enfield was brought here about the time I assumed my present position and I wondered then what it was intended to do with it. When I asked: Where is the Lee-Enfiel rifle, I was told: Oh, it was packed away carefully—apparently in cotton wool, you could not get it out, they would not issue it and it was years and years before that rifle was issued except to camps of instruction to allow the militiamen to see it and fire a few shots. That is the way the Lee-Enfield was treated. But the Ross was unfairly treated and I am responsible to some extent because owing to the unjust criticism that was being made and the prejudice that was being created all over the country in order to injure the rifle, I thought it desirable that it should be issued, and it was issued before it should have been. I wish to say now and at once that at the camps this year I intend that the Ross rifle and the Ross rifle alone shall do all the target practice. The Lee-Enfield will not be used in this year's camps and we will have a still better test than we have had of the qualities of the Ross rifle. We are not afraid to use the Ross rifle. The Ross rifle is not dangerous, and the statement that it is dangerous is a diabolical invention intended to injure the rifle, intended to injure the factory, intended to alarm the militia of Canada. A more outrageous campaign was never undertaken in Canada and such a campaign was never thought of in either England or the United States. You could not find a man in England or the United States who would abuse his position in the army of either of those countries and in the parliament of either country to try to strike a blow at the service rifle which has been deliberately adopted by that country. We know what troubles they have had in those countries. It is not a question of Mark I, Mark II and Mark III in the case of the Lee-Metford rifle in England, it is a question of Mark XII, and the story goes to-day that the latest rifle is by no means satisfactory. Those who have followed events in the United States know that the same thing has happened there and yet you will search in vain the records of congress and the records of the British parliament to find anything to compare with the treatment which has been meted out to this government and to this rifle.

A great deal was said to-day about blow-outs or blow-offs. The hon. member said that this rifle was dangerous. He read for two hours from reports, but failed to find anything more than a screw loose in a back sight, or a front sight, or some other sight and some little insignificant or trifling matters. He had to go back to the two or three cases upon which he rang the changes last year. He brought up a case at Lethbridge, another at St. John, N.B., and another at Eastman, the latter more or less made to order. I propose to say a few words about these three cases. Sergeant-Major Browbridge, of the Northwest Mounted Police, gave evidence before the Public Accounts Committee last year. I have the evidence here, but I do not wish to detain the House. After giving evidence for two or three days he came down off his high horse and admitted in almost as many words that it was not a blow-back, but some little nut on the end of the bolt had become loose and the spring had been forced back. That is what it came to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There was some report by an official connected with the Northwest Mounted Police. Is that the same man?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, he gave evidence here. I would like to say a few words about the St. John, N.B., case. The hon. gentleman read some letters this afternoon from Major Armstrong. It seems that there was a rifle practice on the 24th of May by the 3rd Canadian Artillery and an alleged accident happened. Nothing more was heard of it, no report was made until some time in December, when from headquarters the question was asked why this particular corps had not done its annual shooting. Then some excuse had to be put forward, they had forgotten all about the accident that happened on the 24th of May. No board was held, no report was made, but at the end of December, when it was necessary to account for their not having done their annual shooting the report came in of this terrible accident which nearly took somebody's life.

Mr. CARVELL. It came by telephone ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. Parliament was not sitting in May, or perhaps it was; at any rate it was sitting in December and the Ross rifle campaign had been begun. I am not going to delay the House, but I am going to read Major Pym's report of this accident. Major Pym was at once sent to St. John to look into the case, the rifles were secured and brought to Ottawa to see whether there had been one part of the rifle blown into three pieces or what had really happened :

Headquarters, March 12, 1907.
The M. G. O.

'The Inspector, Small Arms,

Inspection of Ross Rifles St. John, N.B.

With reference to your minute of the 4th instant, I beg to report that I proceeded to St. John, 6th instant, to investigate the circumstances under which two Ross rifles, Mark I, were damaged on May 24, 1906.

1. The case containing the two rifles in question was opened by me at the District Office. These rifles have been identified by the Officer Commanding No. 2 Company, 3rd Regiment, C.A., as those reported on by him.

2. I obtained from this officer a statement as to what occurred on May 24, 1906, when one of these rifles was reported to have exploded and the other considered unsafe to fire.

The information he gave me when compared with the official report previous to submission (Section 514, 15, 19) seems to show some confusion of ideas as to what actually happened; but taking his latest statements in connection with those of other members of the regiment, together with a further examination of the rifle, I arrived at the following conclusions :—

(a) There is no evidence to show that any part of the rifle flew into three pieces.

(b) No broken part has been found.

(c) No substitution of parts has been made.

(d) The rifle bears no evidence of a premature explosion.

No official report appears to have been made to the D.O.C., M.D. No. 8, of the occurrence until January 19, 1907, when it was given for the reason for not having completed the musketry course.

A broken cover screw was the only defect in the other rifle referred to.

(Sgd.) J. BEVILLE PYM, Major,
D.M. Inspector Small Arms.

For the Ministers' information.

(Sgd.) W. H. COTTON, Col., M.G.O.
12-3-'07.

This is the terrible case of the blow back referred to. I think, we might call it a boomerang.

Mr. TALBOT. Or a roorback.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Or a roorback. There is a more interesting and a more recent case—the Eastman case. That is an eastern townships case, and I propose to refer to that as briefly as I can. Something happened at a competition in the Eastern Townships. My hon. friend mentioned it to-day. He said it was a very narrow escape. There was a board held in connection with this alleged accident and at that board Major Pym was present. I think I will have his report a little later, but there are one or two questions and answers that I would like to read here.

By Mr. Barnes :

Q. Were you present at every practice when this rifle was used?—A. I may have missed two or three practices.

Q. Has the rifle been in your possession ever since the 2nd of October instant ?—A. It has—but on the 3rd of October, I think, any way shortly after the accident, I am sure now it was the day after, I was telephoned to by Sidney Longhurst at Mansonville asking me to send the rifle and parts there. There was a Conservative caucus there that night and my idea is he wanted it for that.

That is the way they are running the Ross rifle into politics. This is the sort of thing that my hon. friends are encouraging.

Q. Has this rifle always been in your possession?—A. No. Sometimes when I have been away other members of the rifle association have come to my house for it. I never took it to pieces and only put it together thus once when it came apart.

There are a number of questions and answers which I will not detain the House by reading but I have another little bit of evidence on this point which I would like to read. It will be found at page 142 book No. 4. Major Pym is giving evidence :

By Mr. Worthington :

Q. You have heard, no doubt, of the number of accidents that have been happening from the use of the Ross rifle throughout the country ?—A. I have.

Q. Have the rifles injured been submitted to you for your opinion ?—A. Some of them have.

Q. As a rule what was the cause of the accident, what was the cause in most of these cases ?—A. I think it depends upon what the nature of the accident was. If you could state that, perhaps I could remember the details.

Q. Did you see a rifle sent from Eastman, Quebec ?—A. Yes.

Q. I believe it was previously investigated by a court of inquiry ?—A. I was present at the court of inquiry.

Q. I think there was one court of inquiry held at Eastman ?—A. I was at Eastman too.

Q. What was the verdict of that court of inquiry ?—A. So far as I recollect the verdict of the court of inquiry was that there was reason to believe that the rifle, or some part of the rifle, had been improperly used and, therefore, that the bolt might have closed ; that is to say that the rifle might have been fired in closing the bolt, but there was no evidence to show what caused an explosion, which is a very different thing.

Sir Frederick Borden :

Q. The rifle might probably have been tampered with ?—A. Well, tampered with inasmuch as that riflemen will always tamper with their cocking-pieces, or with the sear, to get what they call ' a sweet pull off.'

Q. Was there not absolute evidence that a certain part of the rifle had been filed ?—A. Yes, it had that appearance. It bore that appearance.

I think we may fairly assume that we have disposed of the only three serious cases that have been put forward out of all the thousands of rifles which have been distributed throughout the country and which have been in use for the last two or three years.

There were a good many other matters that I had notes of but I am not going to detain the House. I will only stop to say now that a committee known as the Small Arms Committee has been permanently established in connection with the Department of Militia and Defence. There is such a board or committee, I believe in every country in the world. In England it performs an important function, that function being of an advisory character to the War Office. In the United States I believe there is a similar board. I thought the only safe way to deal with matters of this kind would be to establish by order in council a similar board and that has been done. Most of the gentlemen composing that board are well known throughout Canada although they were contemptuously referred to this afternoon, as a whitewashing board, by the hon. member who entertained us so long. The proper title of this board is the Standing Committee on Small Arms, authorized by general order 36, 1908.

President—
Brevet Colonel Sam. Hughes, M.P.
Members—
Lieutenant Colonel W. P. Anderson, R.O.
Lieutenant Colonel J. H. Burland, R.O.
Lieutenant Colonel C. Greville Harston, R.O.
Major R. A. Helmer, D.A.A.G.M.
A. O. Fages, R.C.R.
J. B. Pym, I.S.A., M.G.
W. H. Davidson, 8th Regiment.
J. E. Hutcheson, 43rd Regiment.
Associate members—
Lieutenant Colonel F. M. Gaudet, R.C.A., Superintendent Dominion Ordnance.
J. W. Harkom, R.O.
A. E. McIntyre, Esq., Ph.D.
A. H. Walters, Esq., M.A.

These last four are employed for their special scientific and general knowledge. Colonel Greville Harston is an ex-imperial officer, and was at one time employed by the British government in doing some work in connection with converting one type of small arms to another. I believe these men are able, conscientious and determined to do their duty. Some of them are now at Quebec testing carefully an improved, I suppose it might be called, or a modified Ross rifle. As the result of what has happened : as a result of the reports which have been made, and information which has been gained, the contractor, with the assistance of members of the Militia Department, has thought it desirable to make certain changes, and before the manufacture of the new order for 10,000 rifles is begun this modified form of rifle will be thoroughly tested. Already many valuable tests have been made, but I shall not go into that ; I am not an expert, and I know my hon. friend (Col. Hughes) will take that up when he has an opportunity of speaking. Suffice it to say that every effort has been made, as has been done from the first, to secure the manufacture of the very best rifle. I have been told by some men who were supposed to be somewhat critical of the rifle as first issued that they believe it is a remarkably good rifle. Certainly the shooting that has been done all over the country with the new rifle sent out by Sir Charles Ross himself (none have been issued by the department yet) has been remarkable. Most extraordinary shooting was made here a few days ago by the Ottawa member of the committee. I overlooked one thing which I would like to say before I conclude. The hon. member, in his speech to-day, referred to two friends of his, I suppose, who had been saying nasty things about the Ross rifle. He gave the name of one as Luther R. Henry Burns, a former employee of the rifle factory, and the other he gave as J. H. Stanton, of St. Catharines. also an ex-employee. I know nothing about the former man, Mr. Burns. although I would think it somewhat undesirable for a member occupying such a prominent place as the hon. member does as an officer of the militia and as a member of this parliament, to read letters from a disappointed or dismissed employee.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Without any date.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Mr. Stanton—I do not want to do him any harm—wrote letters to me, and they were sent to the Ross Rifle Company and were answered. I do not know whether the answers were published or not, but they are on the file of the return I brought down. He also wrote to the Prime Minister, and I find this letter in the return I brought down last session, and part of which has been printed in No. 5 of the reports of the Public Accounts Committee. But this letter seems to have escaped somebody's eagle eye, and so I shall read it. Mr. Boudreau, then the Prime Minister's secretary, had evidently written a letter to my late deputy, Colonel Pinault, who had sent him Stanton's letter, and this is Colonel Pinault's reply :

Ottawa, February 2, 1906.

Dear Mr. Boudreau,—With reference to the attached letter from Mr. J. H. Stanton, of St. Catharines, I would suggest that the premier should give very little of his time to this man. He has written several letters to this department, and for some reason perhaps known to himself, he refuses to accept as true what I have told him as regards the Ross rifle factory being a private concern. He has been told that we have nothing to do with the management of the company, and that all that we are concerned about is obtaining arms up to the standard for which the company have entered into a contract with the government, as to which our inspector is the judge.

Stanton was an employee of the company, and as is not infrequent when a man has been dismissed, he is disgruntled. He is known to have offered a bribe to have an invention of his own helped on, from which fact alone, he is hardly a man to be taken seriously when he preaches honesty.

The grounds I have taken in answering his letters are that such questions as the foreman's keeping the labourers waiting until he sees fit to give them work are for the company and not this department to deal with; that what we are concerned about is that the rifles they turn out are according to pattern.

Very truly yours,
(Sgd.) L. F. PINAULT.

Rodolphe Boudreau, Esq.,
Private Secretary to the Premier, Ottawa, Ontario.

In conclusion, I observe that the motion before you refers to 'the dealings of the Department of Militia and Defence in connection with the adoption and manufacture of the Ross rifle' and so on. Well, I have pointed out so far as I could the dealings. I do not quite know what the mover of the motion means by using that phrase. There were no dealings as to the adoption or as to the manufacture of the Ross rifle which were not absolutely straightforward and above board. I have given the reasons for encouraging the establishment of this factory in Canada. I have given the reason first of high policy, of imperial policy, and of policy which would properly safeguard the integrity of our own domain. I have stated that I did my best to persuade somebody in England—the Chamberlains, whom I saw more than once—to establish a branch of their great factory in Canada, but I failed. I am free to admit, and I will never deny the fact—there is no reason why I should—that I would have preferred the establishment here of the same service rifle as the imperial army is armed with. Not that it is a better rifle. I do not think it is as good a rifle. But I am not called on to make comparisons of that kind. As a matter of convenience I would have preferred it, and I did my best to bring it about ; but I did not succeed. I did what I thought was the next best thing, and I have been instrumental in encouraging the establishment in Canada of a great industry, and I wish to say that I am more proud of that act and that fact than anything else in my twelve years of administration. I am willing to stand or fall by what has been done. I do not pretend to say that no mistakes have been made. It would be utterly impossible that the introduction of a new industry like this could go on smoothly without some friction and some difficulty. It has never happened anywhere in the world, and it is not likely to happen here, because we have had less experience than other countries. But I repeat what I said, that the country has got value for its money, and that there are no rifles issued or to be issued or to be received by the inspector which are not good value and which could not be made serviceable in a very short space of time; and there are not many of them which are not at this moment serviceable. Now, Mr. Speaker, I must leave myself in the hands of this House. The House must judge as to my motives and my administration. If it will treat me fairly and consider fairly all the facts, I have no doubt what the result of this vote will be.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour not to emulate the preceding speaker in one respect at all events; because, when he rose at a quarter past nine to address the House, he referred in almost indignant and contemptuous tones to the fact that the hon. gentleman who had preceded him had held the House three and a quarter hours in making the attack, which of necessity should last longer than the defence, if the defence could be anything more than words, and yet the hon. minister has occupied within a few minutes of three hours in making his defence to the attack which he treated so contemptuously. The hon. gentleman, in beginning his remarks, said that the hon. gentleman who had made this motion had succeeded in bringing down the question of arming the militia to the low level of party politics. Now, sir, there are two ways of looking at this matter. The man who would wilfully and deliberately, in order to injure the soldiery of his native land, say one single word, would be a traitor of the deepest dye; but, sir, I think that a traitor of equally deep or perhaps deeper dye would be the man who, having been in the militia service, having left his native shores to fight for the old flag, having come back to this country has been honoured by the people by being elected as one of their representatives in this House, if he believed that there was being put into the hands of the soldiers of this country an inferior weapon, for which the money of the people of this country had been illegally paid, failed to bring these matters before this House. The minister contemptuously accused the hon. member for Sherbrooke of having excited discontent in the minds of our soldiers on this matter; and yet that hon. gentleman only took it up in 1907. It was in the year before, in July, 1906, that the complaint from all parts of this country were so numerous, so specific and of so unquestionable a character that General Cotton wrote, under the direction of the Department of Militia, because he swore that he did nothing without its direction, to the Ross Rifle Company, putting an embargo on the receipt of their rifles. Was the minister treating this House with proper respect when he made such a statement, knowing the facts as he did, and no one knows them better than he. Now, I think I can perhaps avoid following his example, and can discuss this question quietly and dispassionately, although I may differ with him in the conclusions at which I arrive. I agree with him that he must stand or fall by this question. It was mere braggadocio on his part to say that he must stand by what everybody knows he cannot help standing by. I hope he will take a broader view of his past career, and that the day will come when he can find some thing in that career on which he can look back with greater satisfaction than he can upon his connection with the Ross rifle. I think I am correct in saying that there has been no question before this country for years which has excited more widespread interest than this very Ross rifle. Perhaps it will not be out of place if I give a brief historical retrospect of that question, to show how it came about and how it stands to-day.

Mr. NORTHRUP.

We have a very voluminous report here. Our examinations before the Public Accounts Committee lasted a considerable time last year and this, and I must confess I was astonished that the hon. minister should have had the assurance to stand up in this House, where practically every member of it knows the facts as well as he, and taunt my hon. friend from Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) with delay in bringing on this matter. Does the minister not know that it is he who is the culprit and that every member of the House is convinced he is? Why, the very returns brought down in connection with this matter and laid on the table on April 9, 1908, was brought down in compliance with an order of the House passed on the 11th December, 1907. Does the hon. minister charge this delay of over a year in bringing down this return to my hon. friend from Sherbrooke? I would not be at all surprised if he did. Yet it is just delays of that kind which account for this resolution only having been moved to-day and for my rising to address the House at this late hour. The Public Accounts Committee sat on this matter last year and had not finished its investigation when the session prorogued. The minister knows that no debate could have been had on the subject last session because the matter was then before the Public Accounts Committee. The proceedings of that committee were continued this session from last year. Nothing could be said in this House while the matter was before that committee. Then take this whole volume, the report of the Public Accounts Committee, selected from 3,000 pages of correspondence and reports brought down—not more than three weeks at the outside have passed since this literature was put in our hands, and this is really the first opportunity we have had of discussing it. Every one knows that the peculiar circumstances of the last couple of weeks prevented our taking up this Ross rifle matter. I state here on my responsibility that no man could have been more anxious to bring the matter before the House than my hon. friend from Sherbrooke, and he brought it up the very first day he could.

Coming now to the history of the question, in 1901 Sir Charles Ross—I think I can discuss the question without referring to him in any other way than as a business man who came here and made a very successful contract, very unsuccessfully carried out—in 1901 Sir Charles Ross and the Minister of Militia met—in an unhappy hour I think for this country. Evidently the establishing of a rifle factory was then discussed, with the result that a meeting of officers was called in the city of Ottawa and took place on June 28. There were present Colonal Otter, Lieutenant-Colonel Anderson, Lieutenant-Colonel Sam. Hughes and Major Gaudet. Colonel Gibson was absent. Sir Charles Ross attended the meeting and presented his rifle for inspection. Major Gaudet had made some experiments with it in Quebec prior to that time. A discussion took place, and they agreed that a number of tests should be made in Quebec, after which some decision would be come to by the committee. But on that very occasion, when Sir Charles Ross appeared before the committee and when the committee decided to investigate the subject, the first thing they did, before making any special investigation, was to decide that six alterations would have to be made in the mechanism. So that we had this man who had never been in the business of manufacturing rifles before, this embryo contractor, going to the minister with a rifle of such a character that the board, on which the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) sat, declared that before they would bother making any test of the rifle at all six changes would have to be made in it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Sir Charles Ross carried the rifle all through Africa and did very good execution with it during the African war.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Of course I accept the hon. gentleman's statement. No doubt Sir Charles Ross carried it through Africa, and it was so worn out that it required at least six improvements to make it fit to be tested in Canada. However, I presume these changes were made, though on that point I find no exact report. At all events the officers did meet in Quebec and then came back to Ottawa. Then they came to a decision and made a report. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia said tauntingly that he would not read this report in the way the hon. member for Sherbrooke read it, that he would not pick out only what suited him. Well, I accept the minister's statement, and no doubt it is because the opinion of the board, which I am about to quote, suited him so well that he omitted to quote it. The board, in its first report, points out that there was a tremendous objection to this rifle from the point of view of endurance. This they would regard as a very serious matter, but Sir Charles Ross promised to remedy it. They went on to say :

The board do not profess to pronounce upon the question of a complete remedy of this objection, but having called attention to it, assume that due precaution and provision with reference thereto will be taken, in the event of the rifle being adopted.

Is it any wonder that my hon. friend the Minister of Militia should have left this out? Had it not been so eminently satisfactory to him no doubt he would have read it. Then the board continued :

This is all the more important inasmuch as, in comparison with the Lee-Enfield, there is not the leverage in opening the breach which the mechanism of the latter rifle affords.

That is the report. Would any sane man, guided wholly by patriotic motives, say that that was a report giving an unqualified approval of an unknown rifle? Colonel Anderson was unable to be present at the meeting of the board, but he wrote a letter in which he pointed out that if a contract should be entered into with Sir Charles Ross for a number of weapons, strict specifications should be provided. He wrote as follows :

If a contract is entered into with Sir Chas. Ross for a number of weapons, it should be under a strict specification and detailed drawings as well as a sealed pattern. The specifications should contain in full details respecting materials to be used for each part, tempering, finishing, etc.

There was something practical which would appeal to business men. Do not enter into a contract unless you have drawings and specifications as well as sealed patterns. Yet we find that the contract with Sir Charles Ross was drawn with such skill that it does not contain the slightest reference to drawings or specifications.

There is one letter and this letter is the only recommendation of the Ross rifle which was given up to the time the contract was made. I am not prepared to say that nobody ever said a word in favour of it, but after careful research I have been unable to find any trace of any individual who had a good word to say, much less give unqualified commendation, with the exception of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes). That hon. gentleman, at the very beginning, when the other members of the committee were most reserved, when they pointed out that certain defects were very serious and trusted that the minister would see that Sir Charles Ross carried out his promise to remove them——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where has the committee pointed out serious defects?

Mr. NORTHRUP. I am perfectly willing to do my best to enable the hon. gentleman to understand, if possible, something about a rifle, but I do object being called upon to repeat what I have said two or three times, particularly at this hour of the morning. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) in his letter said :

On active service in South Africa I chanced to take several straight pull action rifles from the Boers. Though the action was weak.

I presume the action referred to the rifle. My hon. friend went on to say :

The Sir Chas. Ross rifle has all the advantages of the other with none of its drawbacks. It locks its resistance lugs at the forward end of the bolt; it is the strongest rifle I have seen; is least likely to get out of order and the simplest to dismount and put together.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I asked the hon. member to point out where the other members of the committee had reported defects in the rifle.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I suppose it would take less time to read the clauses over again to the hon. gentleman than to have him jump up and interrupt me so often. I was interrupted so often in the Public Accounts Committee by the hon. gentleman this session that I thought he would be weary by this time. Well, if he will kindly listen I will read, solely for his benefit, the words used by the committee.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What page?

Mr. NORTHRUP. Page 196 of the report of the Public Accounts Committee.

The chief objection or difficulty which was found in connection with the tests to which the Ross rifle was subjected, was brought out in the 'endurance test.' While in firing 1,300 rounds out of each of the rifles, the Lee-Enfield stood the test quite satisfactorily. It was found that after heating, the breech of the Ross rifle closed with more or less difficulty, the action being very stiff, with occasional jamming, besides which a possibility of 'double loading' exists.

Were this an inherent objection to this rifle independent of details of mechanism, the board would regard it as a very serious matter, but Sir Charles Ross states—— ——and so on.

The board do not profess to pronounce upon the question of a complete remedy of this objection, but having called attention to it assume that due precaution and provision with reference thereto will be taken, in the event of the rifle being adopted.

This is all the more important, inasmuch as in comparison with the Lee-Enfield, there is not the leverage in opening the breech which the mechanism of the latter rifle affords.

Now, at this hour of the morning, I trust the hon. gentleman will have a little regard for the feelings of myself and other hon. members. And I will be happy to explain unrevised 'Hansard' to him, so that when he comes to address the House he may be able to say something of interest and profit concerning the Ross rifle. In the meantime, I ask him to have a little forbearance——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. member made a——

Mr. NORTHRUP. Mr. Speaker, I do not surrender the floor——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I wanted to show the hon. member up, and to show his utter distortion of the facts.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) has the floor.

Mr. NORTHRUP. We have later the report, which was wholly non-committal, of Colonel Anderson, with specifications and drawings, and the unqualified commendation of Colonel Hughes. What was done next we know nothing. The minister tells us that he revised the contract, making twenty drafts of it. And then we have the contract between the Ross Rifle Company and the Crown. Before coming to this, however, there were certain tests made in Quebec. And, in this connection, I think I may say that the counsel for the Ross Rifle Company did not help his case by his conduct before the committee. I do not think that his treatment of Major Pym and General Cotton was of a kind that should have been tolerated before a committee of this House. I do not think that in reference to the tests made before the contract he was altogether fair and correct in his statements. He referred to the Ross rifle and the Lee-Enfield being subjected to a charge of 35 tons. It seems that, by the terms that were agreed upon by the committee, there was to be such a test, but when they got to Quebec they did not make such a test. Yet Mr. Nesbitt put it that, having agreed that such tests were to be made, and the fact that men of such standing as General Otter and Major Gaudet reported in favour of the rifle, showed that they must have been made. Whereas he must have known, if he knew anything about it, that such a test was not made. The report said:

A cartridge loaded with a charge of 40 grains of cordite, calculated to produce a pressure of 22 tons per square inch was employed. Thermo. 70 F.

1st round.—Percussion cap blown out. Action very stiff and considerable force exerted by hammering with heel to open breech.

2nd round.—Same result. Sir C. Ross declined to allow rifle to fire further excessive charges. Locking lugs examined after firing and found unaltered. Total rounds fired 1,441.

Now, I want to be perfectly fair. The Ross rifle was subjected to a test of 22 tons, but the Lee-Enfield to only 17:69 tons. But the Lee-Enfield came through the trial prefectly unharmed. So, though a great deal was made in the committee of the additional strength of the Ross rifle, it proved nothing. It was subjected to a heavier test and went to pieces, and the Lee-Enfield was subjected to a lighter test and came out all right. This does not afford a basis for a comparison favourable to the Ross rifle.

Now, the contract was made, and I suppose that this is one of the things the minister is proud of, the record of which he would wish to have engraved on his monument when he is called upon to leave this world and pass to another where war is no more. There are just a few comments

I would like to make on the contract. First, there is the reason given for the contract being made, and that reason is set out on the face of the contract. Let us see if in this there is a justification for this expense. The preamble says :

Whereas, it is considered in the general interests of Canada that the rifles required by the government for the purposes of militia and defence should be manufactured in Canada, and whereas the contractor has proposed by himself or his assigns to undertake the establishment and operation of a suitable factory in Canada for the manufacture of such rifles.

Now, are they manufactured in Canada? I do not propose to waste time discussing that. We may bandy words across this floor, but the fact remains that there is not a man in Canada but knows exactly whether those rifles are manufactured in Canada or not. Certain words have a certain meaning. When we speak of a rifle factory in Canada, in order to have our rifles manufactured within our own borders, the ordinary man knows what that ought to mean. It must mean that we can manufacture rifles independent of any foreign power.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. As we manufacture cotton, for instance.

Mr. NORTHRUP. My hon. friend (Mr. A. K. Maclean), like the hon. Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden), apparently cannot see the difference between a rifle factory and a cotton factory. I suppose that in case of difficulty cotton would not be contraband of war, and that we should be able to bring in cotton. But we certainly could not bring in arms. The government does not establish a cotton factory as it establishes an arms factory, in order that we may be independent of other countries. How can we be independent in this manufacture even if one essential part of the rifle is manufactured outside our own borders? It is all very well for the minister to say that the bulk of these things made outside came in in the shape of forgings. That makes no difference ; if you cannot manufacture your rifle wholly in Canada, there is no object, from that point of view, in having it manufactured here. The hon. gentleman says that we are not supporting the navy of Great Britain because we have not control of the expenditure, but we will help the down-trodden Englishmen by making a contribution by having arms manufactured in Canada instead of England. But I think it would pass the logic of the minister to show how the down-trodden Englishman is to benefit by having arms manufactured here instead of in England.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The stock of the English rifle is imported from Italy, and, I believe, the stock of the American rifle also. I think there are some other parts of the English rifle that are manufactured in Belgium.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I can quite understand that it might be advisable, if England does not raise the wood necessary, to import the stocks. But I can understand also that it would be easy enough to have a sufficient quantity of them on hand. And, as an hon. gentleman beside me suggests, wood would not be contraband in time of war. But when we have only one little factory for the manufacture of rifles, it must be self-evident that the manufacture in Canada is of no value unless practically every bit of the rifle is made here—and on that subject there was no dispute before the committee. The gentlemen examined before the committee rather fenced as to the extent to which the manufacture was carried on in Canada, but it could not be denied that, up to a certain point, the parts were manufactured and brought into Canada. But there is no part of the Ross rifle that is made in Canada.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The steel is not made in Canada.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Then, if the whole rifle is not manufactured in Canada, literally or substantially, what is the justification or advantage of having a factory here at all ; what is the use of it, when the factory could be put out of business in twenty-four hours?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The steel may be made here.

Mr. NORTHRUP. When these articles are made here, and with another and a wiser government in power, it might be well to start a factory. But until these articles are made here——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Then the hon. gentleman would have waited until every particle of steel and all the materials could be made in Canada?

Mr. NORTHRUP. I would have waited until so much of the component parts could be made in Canada that there was a reasonable certainty that the remainder could be made in a short time. I think then the establishment of a factory would be justifiable.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And the hon. gentleman's own friends started a cartridge factory, and until this much-abused government came into power every single thing that entered into the manufacture of those cartridges was imported. To-day the shells and a great many other things, practically all are made in Canada.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Quite possibly.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But still this government established a cartridge factory. What was the good of it?

Mr. NORTHRUP. If my hon. friend cannot understand the difference between making a start, doing a little work, and starting at the top and manufacturing the whole thing, making a complete rifle, I do not propose to enlighten him. It is perfectly clear that when this contract provided that they were to manufacture in Canada it provided for something that has not been secured. They were to be provided at a price not greater than the price of similar rifles in the English market. What is the truth about the price of the rifles? I suppose the minister took some steps to find out the proper prices before fixing on the rate of $25. In the report of the committee I see just what he did, and it is fair to say that he took about as much care in that as in any other matter in connection with the contract. He went to Col. Pinault and to D. A. McDonald, the storekeeper, the judge of the clothes for the volunteers, and this matter was referred to them. They say:

In accordance with your verbal instructions of the 7th instant, we, the undersigned, together with the chief small-arm armourer (an expert in this branch of mechanics) have made a careful inspection in every detail of the above rifle, with a view of determining its approximate value as compared with the Lee-Enfield.

The fact that the 'Ross' rifle is a special patent and not to be purchased in the open market, makes its market value more or less a matter of speculation. However, taking into consideration its many advantages and improvements over the Lee-Enfield, as detailed in the armourer's report attached hereto, we are of the opinion that the value of the rifle manufactured in reasonable quantities would be as stated by the armourer, viz., $25.

Next is the armourer's report which is as follows:

I have the honour to report, for your information, that I have carefully inspected the above rifle in all is details, and I find it superior, in my opinion, in every way to the Lee-Enfield.

He had evidently been reading a letter from Col. Hughes, you see.

I consider the straight pull a decided advantage and the resisting power greater than that of the Lee-Enfield. The magazine, back and fore-sights are also a decided improvement; the pistol grip, too, an important change; in fact the whole mechanism of the rifle is more simple in its construction for cleaning and repairing purposes.

I would consider this rifle might be manufactured in reasonable quantities for, say, the sum of twenty-five ($25) dollars, and would be a fair value. This rifle cannot be obtained in the English or any other market. Even were this rifle placed in the open market today, I am still of the opinion, in view of the material improvements, it could not be supplied at a less figure than above mentioned, viz., $25.

Here we have an armourer drawing, I suppose, $2.50 or $3 a day and the Deputy Minister of Militia who probably knew as much as he of the manufacture of rifles, as the minister, and Col. McDonald, equally blessed with information; these gentlemen sit down and deliberately make a valuation based on the extraordinary superiority of the Ross rifle over the Lee-Enfield which had not been established and assuming it to have all the advantages ever claimed for it, they think $25 a fair value. We had bought rifles before, we had bought rifles in 1896 and I think there has been a misunderstanding as to what we paid at that time. We then bought 40,000 rifles, 20,000 from the War Office and 20,000 from small arms manufacturers. We paid for our War Office rifles £2 17s. 3d. It is all very well to talk about $20 but we did not pay anything of the kind. We got with the rifles cleaning rods, for which we pay 8½d., we got a bayonet for which we paid 7s. 4d., a scabbard for which we paid 2s. 4½d., we got an oil bottle for which we paid 12s. 3d. a hundred, and other sundries.

When I speak of this rifle costing £2 17s. 3d. I am putting it against the Ross rifle as it is supplied to us. Why can we not have a fair valuation of rifle against rifle and bayonet against bayonet, take the rifle at the price given for it and the bayonet at the price given for it. If we take the Ross rifle with bayonet and all complete I judge the cost will be $35 or $36 and here we pay £2 17s. 3d. which included 5 per cent for the packing and the total cost of departmental expenses for inspection.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I quoted the prices of the rifle from the trade. The statement the hon. gentleman has just read is not correct.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It is absolutely correct.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is not correct.

Mr. NORTHRUP. My authority is better than that of the minister a good deal and I challenge the minister to go to his books in his department and disprove my statement.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The vouchers are there and I can produce them. The figures I gave are absolutely correct, the rifle cost about £4.

Mr. NORTHRUP. We paid £4 for the rifle?

SIR FREDERICK BORDEN. That is what I said.

Mr. NORTHRUP——to the trade. I said that we bought 20,000 from the War Office and 20,000——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman refused to distinguish them. I say it is not fair to compare the price paid the Ross Rifle Company with the price charged by the War Office.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I am going right on to give the two——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not if I had not called the hon. gentleman's attention.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I am going right on with it, I had it here, and why should I have it if I did not intend giving it? I think the minister is rather presumptuous when he says I did not intend to go on. I say the rifles bought from the trade cost £4, sword and bayonet 11s., scabbards 2s. 2¼d., so that it came to £4 13s. 2¼d., and adding 5 per cent for departmental expenses and inspection it came to £4 18s. 3¾d., or $26.29, so that the average price of the 40,000 would be $20,70.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The average price is not fair, it is the price to the trade that must be considered.

Mr. NORTHRUP. The average price is fair for this reason: It would be most grossly unfair for me to say the government should get rifles from the Ross Company as cheaply as from the War Office. It is equally unfair to compare the price to the Ross Company with the price paid to the trade in England.

Sir. FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh, no.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Certainly most ridiculously unfair. If the minister will tell me of any private factory in England which the government furnishes with all the land it requires and all the working capital needed, I will admit that it is fair to compare the Ross prices with those of such a factory, but until he can do so I say it is unfair.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The only difference in England is that the War Office pays in advance the whole amount.

Mr. NORTHRUP. A letter was read this afternoon in which the trade offers to supply the rifle referred to with an advance of only 10 per cent of the amount.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is not correct.

Mr. NORTHRUP. The letter was read and it is absolutely correct.

Mr. FOSTER. I have seen the letter and it is absolutely correct.

Sir FREDERICK BDRDEN. It is not correct.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It was read and it will not do for the minister to deny everything of which he knows nothing.

Sir. FREDERICK BORDEN. I dispute that anyway.

Mr. NORTHRUP. The minister showed how much idea he had of the price of rifles when he added the duty. He says that the rifle would cost $17 and he adds to the cost the amount of the duty. He knows that would not pay the duty and that it would not add to the price if it did. We only pay the duty to ourselves, from one department to another. The question is what it would cost the country one way or the other, and if it would not cost the country any duty in one case then it is preposterous to add the duty in comparing prices. The American government has a rifle which some people think is quite equal to the Ross rifle. I have here a statement, and I think the minister will understand it, which shows the cost to the American government. This is an official letter to the Secretary of State stating that the cost of a rifle to the American government is $14.90, and if it only costs the American government $14.90 to make a rifle it seems to me that we can hardly be said to have secured a rifle on as reasonable terms as the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence has claimed, because we pay Sir Charles Ross $25 and you allow all his material free entry into the country, make him a present of the land and advance him heaven knows how much money. I will come to that later on. I think I have shown that the preamble of the contract has not been carried out, that the rifles are not manufactured in Canada and that they are not as cheap as they could be got in England. Whereas in England we bought our bayonets for 11 shillings—they only cost the War Office 7s 4d—but buying them from the trade we get them for 11s., which is a shade over $2—the Americans get their bayonets for $1.49 apiece.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I thought 11s. was more than a shade over $2.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It would be under $2.25.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think 11s. is nearly $3.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Taking into consideration the minister's price of $5.12, 60 cents on the dollar would not be considered a very great difference. We find by the correspondence of Colonel Cotton that the Ross rifle is not adapted to the bayonet.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is not true. There is no rifle with a bayonet in England. The bayonets are made in a different place altogether—made by different people.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I am not saying that the bayonet was made in England, but the bayonet goes with the rifle in England.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If you choose to buy it.

Mr. NORTHRUP. We did buy it with the rifle.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We did not buy it from the same place.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I never stated that we bought it in the same place. I am pointing out that the rifle and bayonet can be made so that they can go together because they do go together. The correspondence of Colonel Cotton shows that the Ross rifle is not adapted to the bayonet.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is not correct.

Mr. NORTHRUP. That is in his correspondence and I can show that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, some one was stupid enough to ask if the Lee-Enfield bayonet would fit the Ross rifle.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It was not a case of Lee-Enfield at all. I will find it later.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) asked the question.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I was speaking of the contract. Let me go a little farther with this contract. I have only got through the preamble. The contract provides that the government shall receive 12,000 rifles between the 1st January, 1903, and the 1st January, 1904. Then it is provided that subsequently any rifles that the government shall require shall be bought from this company. So that the contract is an absolutely perpetual contract. The government were not bound to buy any number of rifles from this company and that is the only defect in the contract as far as I can see from the contractor's standpoint. Every other thing that the contractor could conceive of was in the contract except that, but I suppose that perhaps the minister thought that owing to the exigencies of parliamentary life he dare not put any specific quantity in the contract; so that from year to year the contractor would have to rely upon the goodness of the minister and have to stand in with the minister to secure the extension of his contract.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. What was the essence of the contract?

Mr. NORTHRUP. Cash, I think.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I admit that was a very important part of it, but I would like to ask my hon. friend if he considers that the essential part of the contract was that the contractor was obliged to sell rifles or whether the essential part of the contract was that the contractor was obliged to manufacture rifles for the government.

Mr. NORTHRUP. The contractor was not obliged to manufacture rifles unless they were ordered. If the government ordered rifles he had to manufacture them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. It is not an ordinary contract of purchase and sale?

Mr. NORTHRUP. It is not an ordinary contract, I must agree; it is the most extraordinary contract that I ever saw in my life.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Do not be funny. It was not an ordinary contract of purchase and sale?

Mr. NORTHRUP. No, nobody will claim that. To go on with this contract, it is admitted that the contract is a perpetual contract, the price being $25, but that may be raised as provided by the contract. Then there is another extraordinary clause. I wonder if this is the particular clause upon which the Minister of Militia and Defence bases his claim to bright, green recollection in the memory of his fellow countrymen after he is gone? It is as follows:

> Provided, however, that in case of war, actual or threatened, or any national emergency, requiring, in the opinion of the government, the immediate supply of additional arms, the contractor, upon receiving any notice or demand from the government for any number of rifles specified to be urgently required in view of this proviso, shall, within thirty days after receiving such notice or demand, notify the government in writing of the number of rifles which he will undertake to furnish in accordance with such notice or demand, and the government shall not, under any circumstances, be bound to purchase from the contractor in respect of any such notice or demand any number of rifles in excess of the number which the contractor so notifies the government that he will be able to supply.

I think my hon. friend (Mr. A. K. Maclean) had that clause in his mind when he asked me if this was an ordinary contract. We might imagine the jester of a European monarch suggesting in his monarch's ear after the fifteenth course at dinner such an absolutely absurd provision as this. If war breaks out with the States and if we are short of arms the government has the right to call on the contractor to state how many rifles he can furnish and then, after he has thirty days to make up his mind about it, by which time in all probability the Americans will have swept the country, he is to tell the government how many he can supply and then the government are not bound to buy any more from him than the number he has named. No wonder the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence is proud of this monument he has erected in the hearts of his countrymen.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is very funny.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It is the funniest thing I ever saw in my life. Then there is the provision that the government has to pay $25 for each rifle. But here is another extraordinary clause. I have not the faintest idea what it means, but it is here:

The price for all rifles herein contracted for or to be supplied pursuant to the provisions of this agreement shall be payable upon delivery; provided, however, that after the establishment of the said factory and supplying of the plant for the running of the same the contractor shall be entitled to payment in advance of delivery of moneys actually expended upon the rifles or parts thereof or fixtures therefor to be delivered in that year.

You have to give the contractor every dollar he has put in, only in no case is the payment to exceed 75 per cent of the price of such rifles. The meaning is perfectly clear. The rifle is sold for $25, the contractor is entitled to 75 per cent of $25, which is $18.25. Looking at the reasonable profits on this rifle and looking at what it costs the American government to construct its rifle and at what it costs the English government to construct its rifles, we see that $18 would more than furnish the contractor with all the working capital he requires. How was this thing really worked out? Colonel Wurtele was examined and we found out from him. I told the minister that I thought the examination was perfectly absurd and I stand by it. Here is what took place. The contract provides that this 25 per cent is only to be paid on the certificate of the contractor who is to satisfy the government inspector of small arms. The contract, therefore, is dependent solely on the government inspector of small arms. The government had an inspector of small arms there, Mr. Gaudet, and Mr. Gaudet was instructed to take charge of this inspection. Mr. Gaudet was sensible enough to know that he could not discharge the duties that were imposed upon him; he knew that no man living could. When Mr. Gaudet found he was charged with the duty of examining in order to certify the 75 per cent he objected, and at page 235 of the report it will be found that Mr. Gaudet says:

After careful consideration, it is found impossible, under this system to carry out the instructions received, in guaranteeing that the percentage laid down in the contract shall not be exceeded, for the following reasons:

2. The shipments of materials received consists of barrels, receivers and sundry components, far too numerous to mention; to comply with the contract, it is necessary to know the relative value of each component to that of the finished rifle. Similarly, as regards wages, it is necessary to establish the amount which should be expended on each component, in addition to materials, to produce rifles costing not more than $25 each. If the contractor pays more for materials or wages than is necessary, to produce rifles costing $25, the department will be paying a higher percentage than authorized by contract, and thus the invoices or statements produced are inadequate and of little value in determining the amount of advances.

It was the same way about the labour; if the labourers were idle and did not earn 100 cents on the dollar of their wages the government would be paying too much. He says:

The result of this misrepresentation is that an unauthorized advance of $8,000 on fixtures has already been made. What has happened in the case of this special clause, will unavoidably occur again, as I am not conversant with the law relative to the interpretation of contracts, nor have I the advantage of knowing what the parties intended by the present agreement, and repetition of such mistakes may cause trouble to the department. The surest way of precluding a recurrence of such errors, is that the contracting parties, who know the exact meaning of the terms to which they agreed, should themselves furnish interpretations and instructions for the guidance of those concerned.

8. It will be clear from the foregoing that the duties and responsibilities devolving on the inspector are greater than they appear at first sight, and are perhaps in excess of what was intended by the department. For reasons stated above, I beg to be relieved of the responsibility of recommending advances, and that these as well as the interpretation of the contract be dealt with at Ottawa.

There was an honest intelligent man who saw he could not follow out the conditions of this contract, and therefore he asked to be relieved. The government at once took a Col. Wurtele who was at that time in the employ of the Ross Rifle Company. He was not paid by the government it is true; he owed no obligation to the government, he was simply an employee of the Ross Rifle Company and he may be a worthy and excellent man, but according to his own evidence he took the invoices simply and whatever was on their face went. He never heard of a commission for cash, he never heard of trade discounts and inasmuch as every one in business knows, it is as certain as the Ross rifle factory is in Quebec that Sir Charles Ross would never pay cash without getting his trade discounts. We have it as plain as can be that when the government advances 75 per cent on the value of the rifles which means 100 per cent of the value of the goods up to the 75 per cent, Sir Charles Ross is getting perhaps 100 per cent more than he should get if the real truth were known as to the trade discounts he receives. In the same way when Col. Wurtele looks at the wages account he simply sees how much wages is paid and if any man is idle the government loses, and if any man does inferior work the government is losing also. You have absolutely no check in the world either on the value of the material supplied or on the value of the work done. That would be bad enough in all conscience, and that went on for years until the Auditor General had his attention called to it and perhaps it would be interesting to see what the Audi tor General did about that. In the Auditor General's reports for the fiscal year ending 1907, I find an order in council, which was passed in consequence of a letter from the Auditor General addressed to the Deputy Minister of Militia, dated, Ottawa, June the 3rd, 1907, which winds up in this way:

Let me call your attention to clause 8, where provision is made for the certificate of the inspector of small arms as to the amounts expended by the contractor and upon which the advances have been made, and permit me to say that, while the progress estimates are certified to by the inspector he has informed me that he is not certifying of his own knowledge but on the strength of a certificate made by Mr. Ernest Wurtele, a chartered accountant at Quebec. Now, Mr. Wurtele, may be competent to make the certificate on behalf of the contractor, but as he is not in the employ or under the control of the government his certificate cannot be accepted under the Consolidatel Revenue and Audit Act. If this arrangement of certificates has been made with the consent or on the instrutions of the department and advances made on the strength of these certificates aggregating over $800,000 I must say, that it is not only unbusiness-like but also illegal and no certificates of this nature will be knowingly accepted by this office.

And so we have over the signature of the Auditor General of Canada that under this contract the Minister of Militia deliberately went ahead, overrode the terms of the contract itself and illegally, without any justification whatever paid out over $800,000 to Sir Charles Ross on the certificate of an employee of Sir Charles Ross. Was there ever such a business transaction in this or any other country? Here is this government first agreeing to advance 100 per cent of the value of the goods, all the goods cost, up to 75 per cent of the value of the rifles, and it leaves it to an employee—I care not how honourable Col. Wurtele may be—it leaves it to an employee of Sir Charles Ross who makes out a certificate: amount of material so and so; amount of labour so and so, and the government promptly paid on that certificate to the tune of $800,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The same man is doing the work now.

Mr. NORTHRUP. Ah, yes, the same man is doing the work now, and the government is paying so much more and the same man is doing it because while your inspector of small arms should do the work you drew your contract so stupidly that you gave that officer work that he could not do, and as a sane honest man would not attempt to do. Then, you put the duty on an employee of the Ross Rifle Company, and when you were held up by the Auditor General and you could not pay on his certificate, then in order to carry on your payment to your friends you bring that employee of the Ross Rifle Company over to the government, give him $5 a day and he does the same work as he did before, but this time he does it at the expense of the government. And that is considered a fair business-like way of looking after the interests of the country. And since the minister has been good enough to interrupt me let me see how Mr. Wurtele came over to the government. He came over under a memorandum from the Minister of Militia to council dated the 12th September, 1907, which, after reciting the circumstances, reads as follows:

That Lieutenant Colonel E. F. Wurtele, R.O., was consequently employed for the work and that officer has certified to all progress estimates, which have been paid to the Ross Rifle Company since the contract was entered into, before such progress estimates were authorized for payment.

That is, Col. Wurtele has authorized every single payment up to date says the minister in the order in council. Is that true? The first payment that was made was made on May 26th, 1903, and if we look at the report of the Public Accounts Committee, page 230, we will find Mr. Gaudet was the man who certified to that.

Ross Rifle Works, Quebec, Canada.

Payment application No. 1.

On account of certificate of expenses No. 1 for $91,000, I hereby apply for the payment of $25,000 on account. I hereby certify that I have produced fixtures and material with duplicates of receipted bills attached hereto, for the inspection of the acting inspector of small arms.

I also certify that I have insured the said fixtures for the benefit of the government and deposited the policy with the Bank of Montreal of this city.

(Sgd.) CHARLES L. ROSS.

I hereby certify the above to be a true and accurate statement and recommend payment of the $25,000 on account.

(Sgd.) F. M. GAUDET,
Major,
Acting inspector of small arms.

Quebec, March 24, 1903.

On the 25th of March, 1903, Major Gaudet sends the certificate to the department, and on the 26th of March, 1903, as appears by the Auditor General's Report, $25,000 was paid. So, when the order in council states as the reason for appointing Major Wurtele that he signed every progress estimate since the contract began, I have proved from the files brought down by my hon. friend that, at all events, the first $25,000 was not paid on progress estimates, and I do not know how much more. The reason why Major Wurtele was appointed is thus stated by the order in council:

That before the payment of any such progress estimate, it became apparent that this provision of the contract could not be satisfactorily carried out because it was undesirable that such payments should be made upon the certificate of the contractor and because of the labour verifying every item thereof, which would devolve upon the inspector of small arms, would seriously interfere with his usefulness as such.

So Major Gaudet made a report showing that the reason he objected to certify was that no honest man could do it, and therefore he asked that the authority be taken at Ottawa for ordering the money to be paid. I say that the order in council brought in by the Minister of Militia recites, not the fact as set out in Major Gaudet's report, but another reason altogether. Surely, if there were nothing else in this contract, this in itself would be sufficient to justify suspicion—that we find in one minute of council two statements which are utterly foreign to the facts set out in the documents brought down by the Minister of Militia himself. The contract also provided that all tools and machinery and raw materials could be brought into this country free of duty. It also recited that any finished parts used in such rifles could be brought in free of duty, showing that at the very time the contract was made the minister understood that finished parts would be imported. It seems to me that if the minister had been anxious to have the rifles manufactured in Canada as soon as possible, and had allowed the unfinished parts to be brought in free of duty, he would have required the duty to be paid on the finished parts to encourage their production in this country.

Now, how did the contract work out? Advances, of course, were called for by the Ross rifle people almost at once. We have in the Auditor General's Report, at page Q—104, a statement showing what the advances were. There is one interesting statement, however, which I would like to give the House, and which, I think, will be surprising to some of the members. I spoke of the valuation being $25. In addition to the rifles we purchase, we have to purchase a great many component or multiple parts, and my information leads me to believe that a great many of these have to be purchased. By a subsequent contract between the company and the government it is arranged that the price to be paid for the component parts added together would be $31 instead of $25, but another inspection increases that to $32. Then advances were made, and for a long time not many rifles were produced. Up to the end of the year 1905 about $600,000 had been paid and only 136 rifles had been delivered. The minister may have thought that was a business transaction, but it seems to me that it would strike the ordinary man that there was something radically wrong with a contract which, made in March, 1902, required 12,000 rifles to be delivered in the following year, whereas the statement brought down by the department itself shows that up to the end of 1905 $600,000 had been advanced and 136 rifles had been delivered.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman will be glad to know that 41,200 have been delivered now.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I would be glad if I thought that the rifles were what the minister tells us they are; but, having the reports of officers and men all over the country who have suffered from the use of these rifles, I am obliged to conclude that the less we get of them the better off we shall be. At the end of the next year 14,000 rifles had been delivered and $800,000 had been advanced.

Something was said this afternoon about the immense amount of wages that were paid by the Ross Rifle Company. I am not in a position to say just what wages they do pay, because I have never been in their employ; but I find a statement, on pages 101, 106 and 126 of the last file brought down, which shows that from the 14th of December, 1906, to the 8th of March, 1907, the total Bill for superintendence and labour was $40,140; from the 8th of March, 1907, to the 16th of August, 1907, it was $42,421; and from the 16th of August, 1907, to the 30th of August, 1907, it was $2,521, making altogether about $85,000 paid for superintendence and labour from the 4th of December, 1906, to the 30th of August, 1907. During these eight and a half months they were supposed to be manufacturing, and I give the figures for these months, because they are the only months for which the returns seem to be brought down. I wish just briefly to recapitulate two or three other points which will show how this contract has been carried on. Very shortly after the contract was made it became necessary to decide what to do about drawings and specifications. They had neither specifications nor drawings, and any hon. member who will take the trouble to read the blue-book will find out how pathetically Colonel Panet kept writing to Montreal to Colonel Gaudet, begging him to see the Ross Company and have them consent to supply drawings and specifications. The pleadings of the Militia Department were most piteous, showing how completely it was at the mercy of the contractor. Finally they agreed upon specifications, but conditional on the minister allowing the contractor to bring in what he liked free from the United States.

Mr. TALBOT. Would the hon. gentleman repeat the figures he gave for the wages last year?

Mr. NORTHRUP. On page 101 of the latest file brought down in April last, I found the accountant's certificate to the order of 24th December, 1906, for superintendence and labour from the 15th March. It goes down from week to week from the 15th March to the 16th August, and the sum total is $42,421.32. On page 106 from 14th December to 8th March superintendence and labour $40,140.86. On page 126, from 16th August to 30th August, $4,474.18. That would be really three weeks. While this was $4,474.18 I only gave it at $3,528 because two of these weeks overlapped. At the bottom of one of these which I gave before, we find the week that comes up to the 16th August. It struck me as odd that the same week should be in the one place as $1,904 and the other as $2,258—apparently the same week.

After the difficulty about plans and specifications, there came the difficulty about gauges. The department wrote the Ross Company, as soon as they realized that difficulty, that the company must supply the gauges. Major Gaudet was of the opinion that the company should supply the gauges, but the company did not supply them, and after a time the government yielded and gave a contract to the company for these gauges. The contract price was $32,000, and that price was given in the face of the letter of Major Gaudet pointing out that, since there had been no test, he could not give any idea as to whether the price was reasonable or not. The gauges were contracted for on the 14th April, 1903, and they were to be supplied within eight months from that date and there was a clause providing as follows:

Terms—One-half in four months of the acceptance of this tender upon establishing to the satisfaction of the department that fair progress had been made in the manufacture of the gauges and furnishing certificates that the value of the material then in our possession to be used for this work, and the cost of labour in connection therewith, together amount to at least half the total cost of the gauges when completed.

It seems hardly credible, but not a single gauge turned up in the eight months. More months went on and then some material was supplied. Then apparently some 160 gauges were actually supplied. After this the rifle was changed from No. 1 to No. 2 and the gauges were of no use and so no more were got. Practically the result therefore was that the government paid for a lot of gauges which they never received, which were not even made. The total number was to be 489. Not one was supplied until months after the contract had expired. Eventually 162 were supplied. Then when the contract was put an end to, it was put an end to verbally so that it is impossible to know the exact date, and for aught we know the company may have gone ahead manufacturing gauges after the rifles had been changed. They claimed that they were to supply 489, they did supply 162, and said they had ready for delivery 197, yet the government never saw them. Then the company claimed that they had a number of gauges amounting to 130, for which the drawings were made and the material supplied, so that although the government only received 162 out of 489, they paid $26,000 on a $32,000 contract.

Then there was a dispute about some cocking pieces. The government as usual yielded and paid the company a couple of thousand dollars. Then there was a dispute about the sight. A new sight was asked for, the government yielded, and put up $15,000 for a sight. But perhaps the coolest thing of all was a letter from the Ross Company stating that they wanted to stow away some 9,000 rifles and asking for storage room. The government, desiring, of course, to be reasonable, said they would furnish storage room, but the cost of transportation each way would be at the expense of the company. Here is the letter which was written by Col. Cotton:

March 30, 1905.

The Ross Rifle Company made a proposition to the Militia Department to the effect that the department should lend storage room for about 9,000 incompleted rifles, Mark I, until brought forward for completion. These rifles to be transported to and from at the expense of the Ross rifle factory. To facilitate the movement of these rifles, it was decided by the minister to accept an offer of the company to make 400 boxes each to contain 10 complete rifles and to purchase such boxes at the price each of $1.50.

But after getting the minister to agree to buy 400 boxes at $1.50 each, the company came back and said the boxes at that price would not be satisfactory, but that boxes at $2 each would suit. So the minister paid $2 each for 400 boxes to transport 9,000 incompleted rifles for storage until it would be convenient for the company to complete them. That illustrates the way the business was carried on.

Let me call attention to this other fact. The government has spent enormous sums on inspection in addition to the purchase price of these rifles. It takes a great deal to have rifles inspected. You have to put up buildings, heat them, pay salaries, &c. By the time the 50,000 rifles are delivered, the government will have spent at least $150,000 for inspection alone. They have paid over $125,000 to date in connection with the inspection, in which I include the various items of salaries, heating, &c. Here are the details:

Travelling expenses..	$ 1,500
Salaries of inspector's staff..	45,823
Materials for inspection..	3,390
Heating, lighting, rent, &c..	2,188
Extra parts, gauges, &c..	53,029
Total..	$124,942

This is the expenditure up to last March in connection with inspection. So it will come to $150,000 by the time all the rifles are delivered, so that we must add $3 to the price of the rifles there.

Now, talking about heating and lighting, there was a rather odd occurrence in the committee. The Ross Rifle Company claimed quite a large bill for heating and lighting the premises. This was referred to Colonel Cartwright, and if you take the trouble to refer to pages 364-5 and 373 of the report, you will find in full what I will give only briefly. Sir Charles Ross said to the government, in effect: You have been occupying a part of my premises up to 1st May, 1905, and after that date, you occupied more. We have to heat the premises and we want you to make us some allowance. So he put in a claim for $1,746 up to 1st May, 1905—I bring this matter up because it illustrates the way Colonel Cartwright did everything in Quebec in connection with the Ross Rifle Company. He seems to have figured up a certain number of cubic feet that were lying around loose, and, where the company claimed $1,746, he came to the conclusion that they were entitled to $2,247. They claimed for the period after 1st May, $2,614, and he found, by his method of calculation, that they were entitled to $3,166. Their total claim was $5,233, but Colonel Cartwright thought that their bill should have been $6,604. And the government paid them $2,294 and they were mighty thankful to get it. And to make matters more humorous—as the minister seemed to like to look at things in that light, if you will look at the evidence of Major Gaudet before the Public Accounts Committee, you will find that he was asked when he left, and he said he was in the Ross rifle factory up to July 1, 1905. He was asked how much room the government occupied there, and his reply was that it was a little space, 'not bigger than this platform,' referring to the platform in the Public Accounts Committee. So, we have Major Gaudet, who was in charge, and must have known the facts stating that the space occupied was very small. And it must have been, because up to 1905, only 136 Ross rifles had been delivered, so that not much room could be required.

Now, there was another little matter to which I should refer in connection with the history of this affair, and that is the test of rifles at Regina. It was rather an odd thing, because it was done two or three months after the contract was entered into. At pp. 238, 239 and 241 will be found the record of the facts. There is a peculiar letter at page 373, to which I would call the attention of the House. This rifle was taken up to Regina. Those who have read the report will remember what took place. Two rifles were taken there. One was taken for examination, but was blown up, and so they sent for another. It was clear that they found fault with the rifle, but it was pointed out that all they had done was to test it for accuracy and that they knew nothing about its endurance. They wanted a sample to be made and put into the hands of the troops, and they decided that it would not be satisfactory until tried by them. A letter appears from the Minister of Militia, of which the following is a portion:

May 16, 1904.

Dear Colonel White,—I am in receipt of a letter from Sir Charles Ross, dated 12th instant, from which I make the following extract:

In the summer of 1902, the Northwest Mounted Police made a test of my rifle at Regina, with the result that its adoption was decided upon. I inclose you a copy of the report. A pattern was then sealed, which met with their requirements.

The minister comes to the conclusion that the man must be crazy to write such a letter. The committee had not approved the rifle, there was no sealed pattern and he must be dreaming. The only explanation I can make of the examination in Regina was that it was done that some such letter might be written and some department might be induced to purchase rifles for the mounted police, because the contract was made in March and this did not take place until the following summer. And there is an odd letter from Sir Charles Ross at page 470 of the last file brought down:

Now the state of affairs I found would, if discovered by the attackers of the government, have given them unadulterated joy, and would have been a really effective weapon not only against the whole department but against the government itself.

What was the state of affairs, I wonder, that he found when he came back?

Now, Sir, I have many points on which I would like to speak, but at this late hour I will be merciful to the House.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. NORTHRUP. The hon. gentleman need not be 'here, here,' unless he likes. Certainly, I should not if I did not have to. There was one matter that it seemed to me the government was singularly careless about, and that was particularly impressed upon me when Mr. Wallace Nesbitt was here. To my mind, nothing was plainer, in the examination by Mr. Nesbitt before the committee, than that the object was to lay the basis of a lawsuit against the government for damages in consequence of the way they had interfered with the manufacture of his rifle. The whole line of questioning, the suggestions to the witnesses, the line taken by Sir Charles Ross undoubtedly was: You agreed that I should manufacture a certain rifle, you agreed to a certain sample of a sealed pattern. The government had a sealed rifle, but they had no more than got it sealed than changes were made. Sir Charles Ross requested the first change. If you look into the correspondence, you will see that quite plainly. He wanted a change of a sight and a change of a cocking piece and receiver. Changes were made by him and also by the government. And how did it work out practically? So many changes were made that Mr. Nesbitt gave us before the committee a list, which is printed here, of over eighty changes that were made. Changes were made before the rifle was adopted at all. Sir Charles Ross asked for the three I spoke of. Then the government made others. Then this committee, of which my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) is so distinguished an ornament, made fifteen changes, and when these changes were communicated to Col. Cartwright he wanted another. And the changes made in 1904 to Mark I. made Mark II. They went on and changed Mark I, they made change after change. There is one report of Major Pym made in December, 1906, in which he gives about 11 different changes that the Ross Rifle Company had agreed to. There were 8 or 9 more that they thought good but they wanted to know who would pay for them. So we find that many changes were made. The exact circumstances under which the changes were made we do not know. The government contend it was the fault of the Ross Rifle Company and the Ross Rifle Company that it was the fault of the government. But it is clear that when so many changes were necessary the government was too precipitate in entering the contract. It is not necessary to accuse the minister of graft or the contractor of stupidity. It was simply that two men, one of whom had never been a manufacturer of rifles and the other a minister who did not know anything about the manufacture of rifles, attempted at the expense of the country to evolve something they did not understand. The result has been what we might expect, complaint after complaint, and if the case ever got into the courts it would be difficult to say which should be blamed most, the government or the contractor. When they blundered in that way, they changed Mark I and they changed Mark II, change after change was made in Mark I and surely, seeing that, a wise minister would have sat down and decided the kind of rifle he wanted before giving further orders. And yet in March of this year an order was given for 10,000 more rifles. What are the terms of the contract? The rifles are to be of such a kind as the minister may approve of on or before July 15. That was the contract, an order was given for 10,000 rifles and the minister himself did not know what kind of rifles he was going to have. That again is an illustration that justifies us in denouncing the management of the department in connection with these rifles. Just about this time in the month of May a contract is given to the company for 52,000 bayonets at $5.25 apiece. What is the House to think of a contract for bayonets at $5.25 that in England sell for 11s. while the Americans make them themselves for $1.49. Tenders were asked for. How? Letters were sent to the Ottawa Car Company and the Ross Rifle Company to see if they would tender. Why were these letters not sent to the Chinese laundry companies? Then there might be a dozen peanut stands in the city that would have tendered. Every one knows that they are as likely to tender as the Ottawa Car Company and it seems to be in view of the experience of the government with the Ross Rifle Company, every promise falsified, nothing ever done on time, to make such an outrageous bargain as $5.25 for bayonets, practically without competition is but another illustration of the manner in which this whole contract has been carried out.

I shall yield to the hint of my friend and not occupy the time of the House further. I only wish to say in conclusion that no one can read the evidence taken before the committee and brought down to this House without being impressed with one fact at all events, that if the Minister of Militia or his department, I know not whom to blame, had deliberately tried to prevent any member of this House ascertaining anything about what is going on through a perusal of the files, they could not have adopted a more ingenious way of jumbling them up than they did. The first file brought down contained some 1,152 pages. The first letter in order on that file might be dated 1900 and the next 1905, the next 1906 and the next 1903. A kindergarten could not have more completely jumbled up the files. A letter and the answer of the next day might be 500 pages apart. It was almost an impossibility to ferret out anything from the file. I call the attention of the House to that fact and wish to have it understood by ministers that when files are brought down in compliance with an order of this House they should be brought down in something like reasonable shape and in chronological order. Those who have had occasion to look into the Ross rifle files have had to spend five times the time that should have been required, owing to the lack of order in the files. Any one could see from the files that there is more in this matter of the Ross rifle than the minister would imply when he attacked the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) as being disloyal because he is dissatisfied with this rifle. If the minister is right, if the rifle is the best that could be got, and is really a good satisfactory rifle, let us all join hands in making it a popular as well as an effcient rifle. But when I find reports, as I find them, for I have under my hand here 16 or 17 reports from military boards from Vancouver to Halifax, board after board, carefully meeting, taking evidence and sending in their reports in every case condemnatory of the Ross rifle, I cannot but feel that all honour must have gone out of Canadian life if all these men have been suborned or all our influence used improperly, when they all attack the Ross rifle; and when I find the solicitor of the Ross rifle stating before the Public Accounts Committee that whenever he met an English officer he met an enemy of the Ross rifle, I think he made an unfortunate statement for the Ross rifle. It could mean only two things, either that he was rightly an enemy, because he should be, or wrongly an enemy because he had been improperly approached and biased. If every English officer is rightly an enemy of the Ross rifle, the sooner we get rid of it and blame the government for introducing it, the better, and if on the other hand, every English officer has been suborned, prejudiced and biased by improper means, so that he is what he should not be, an enemy of the Ross rifle, I for one would lose all confidence in the future of this empire, for I have always understood that an English officer was the synonym for a man of honour. I do not think that is the explanation, I believe that the English officers from their experience for the Ross rifle is well known in England and their knowledge of what has gone on in Canada honestly and conscientiously believe that the Ross rifle is not the rifle it is represented to be, not the rifle the people of this country want, and a rifle of which it may be said that the sooner we get rid of it, the better it will be for Canada.

On motion of Mr. Sam Hughes the debate was adiourned.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We will go on with this to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.38 a.m. Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, May 22, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 172) to incorporate the Dominion Lumbering and Power Company.—Mr. Hall.

USE OF TOBACCO BY YOUNG PERSONS

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 173) restraining the use of tobacco by young persons. He said: This Bill makes an attempt to meet the call which, to a greater or less extent, seems to prevail in many quarters for legislation upon the subject indicated in the title of the Bill, the use of tobacco by persons not of mature years. I cannot pretend to hope that the Bill I am presenting will satisfy those who desire legislation which would absolutely prohibit the manufacture and consumption of tobacco in some particular form which is supposed to be more than ordinarily deleterious. To try to meet in some part, at all events, the evil which is complained of, I am proposing by this legislation to make it an offence punishable by fine, to sell or to furnish to a young person of either sex under the age of 16 years, tobacco in any form for the consumption of that young person himself or herself; and also to make it an offence on the part of any person to sell, or give, or furnish to a young person under the age of 16 years any cigarettes or cigarette papers for the use of that young person or otherwise. The prohibition accordingly will be upon the furnishing to a young person under 16 of cigarettes for any purpose, and equally upon the furnishing to such young person for his or her own consumption, of tobacco in any form. Then I propose to supplement that prohibition by inflicting a penalty upon the young person himself or herself who commits any offence against the enactments in this measure; a penalty in the first instance, upon conviction, of a reprimand; for the second offence, a penalty not exceeding $1; and for the third or subsequent offence, a penalty not exceeding $4. I thought that some form of money penalty of a comparatively small amount would be, possibly, as far as it would be proper to go in the way of punishing the child himself who committed an infraction of this statute. I have also inserted a clause in the proposed Bill giving any constable or policeman authority under by-law to seize upon and summarily forfeit any tobacco which he finds a young person under the age of 16 years about to smoke, or actually smoking, in any street or public place. There is a clause providing for the case of automatic machines for the sale of cigarettes or tobacco in any form which may be used by persons under the prohibited age, and a provision exempting persons who may be employed in trade from the prohibitions of the Bill; also a provision as to the presumption of age, throwing the burden upon the person accused, if he or she appears to be under the age of 16 years, to prove the contrary.

That is the outline of the Bill. I have this further to say, that legislation upon the subject already appears in the statute-books of the greater number of the provinces. I think there is no legislation on the subject in the province of Quebec or in the province of Manitoba; but in each of the other provinces of the Dominion there is legislation of some nature with regard to this subject. With regard to age conditions, the provisions of the different provincial Acts differ among themselves. There is no provision in any of the provinces that I am aware of making it an offence on the part of the young person himself to purchase or to consume tobacco, although in some instances there is a provision for the summary seizure of the contraband article. There is, however, since the views expressed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of the Lord's Day legislation in the province of Ontario, room for question whether legislation of this character may not be ultra vires of the provincial legislatures as an encroachment on the domain of criminal law, and in that view, as well as in the view of the fact that the legislation is in the different provinces of such very diverse character, and that it is applied to different ages, it has been thought better that there should be some legislation of general application to the whole of Canada. For that reason this Bill has been prepared, and I now present it and beg to move its first reading.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PRIVILEGE—MR. BURROWS, M.P., AND TIMBER LIMITS.

Mr. T. A. BURROWS (Dauphin). Before the orders of the day are called, I feel it my duty to refer to certain statements in reference to myself that appear in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of May 20, more particularly as these statements were made after I had given my statement on the subject to the House. In the 'Telegram' of that date I find several glaring headlines, this one at the top of the page:

Burrows' possessions.

Limits acquired by Burrows, 1586 square miles.

Then at the bottom of the page:

The Burrows' possessions would span half a continent.

Below this there is a diagram showing a heavy red line on the north side of the Canadian Pacific Railway stretching from Winnipeg to Montreal. Below this there is the following statement:

As stated by H. B. Ames in the House of Commons yesterday, the selected timber limits secured by Theodore Burrows, M.P., brother-in-law of Hon. Clifford Sifton, would if placed end to end, form a continuous strip of thick timber one mile wide stretching from Montreal to Winnipeg.

In other words if Mr. Burrows' limits were flung out in a strip one mile wide it would take an express train two days and two nights to pass from one end to the other.

I want to characterize that statement as absolutely false. It is a slander. Any man who gives currency to it, be he a member of parliament or a private citizen is liar and a slanderer. I do not own half the area of timber stated above and which it is alleged I own, and I have already proven that in this House. I intend to refer to only a few of the statements made in this paper. Here is another false statement:

Since June 6, 1905, Mr. Burrows does not appear to have tendered, at least not under any recognizable name.

I say that statement is false and if the man who makes it took the trouble to look at the records he would have known it was false. This newspaper gives my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) credit for having made that statement although I have not noticed it in the report of his speech, but if he did make that statement I have to say that it is absolutely untrue. I have tendered since that time in my own name on timber limits 1282 and 1312. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames) was very diligent in hunting up the records and having done so he should be fair enough not to make statements like the above all of which are untrue and have them published all over the country to my detriment and injury. I feel inclined to apologize to the House for taking up time in referring to these slanderous statements and I would not do so were it not that an occasion of this kind is the only opportunity a public man has to defend himself. Although a great many very unfair and very untrue statements have been made about me during the last six months I have not taken notice of them, and hon. gentlemen will agree with me that I have not intruded on their patience by making personal explanations. All these false statements are made deliberately to do me injury, personally and politically. However, here is another statement contained in an editorial in this newspaper of the same date, and which says:

His (Mr. Burrows') first method was to send in a tender in the regular form with a space left blank for the amount of money tendered, and two or more certified cheques, one large enough to cover the bids already in, and the other against the contingency of late tenders being received. This was the method usually employed by T. A. Burrows himself.

I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that that statement is absolutely untrue. In any tender which I ever put in, I inclosed the exact amount of my tender and no more. In any tender put in by me it will be found on examination that I specified the amount of my tender. Another statement in this paper is as follows:

On one occasion a berth of 500 square miles was knocked down to the Big River Lumber Company, in which Burrows owned a half interest, for $6,000.

That statement, Mr. Speaker, is also incorrect. The Big River Lumber Company never secured a limit of 500 square miles; they secured a limit of 250 square miles and paid $5,000 therefor.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC SUPPLIES BY AMERICAN ROUTES.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Before the orders of the day, I wish to call the attention of the government to an article published in the British Columbia 'Saturday Sunset' under the title 'A question of vital importance to Vancouver and western Canada.' I wish to ask the government whether they have taken any action with regard to this particular matter and whether it is their intention to do so? The article says :

A question of vital importance to Vancouver and Western Canada.

Does the business community of Vancouver realize the seriousness of the situation which will confront this city from the policy which there are good reasons to believe, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway will adopt in using Seattle as the port of departure for Prince Rupert?

Has it yet been borne in upon Vancouver business men that this may become a most critical question for this city?

It is understood that Vancouver stands to lose all the benefits which should accrue to this city from the construction of that line and that we stand in imminent peril of losing the permanent trade of the territory that will be developed in the north.

We have already seen large orders for timber supplies placed in Washington and Montana, while our own mills and logging camps stand idle. No secret is made of the fact that Seattle will be used as the Pacific port of departure for all supplies originating in Eastern Canada for Prince Rupert. From Montreal to Chicago is a haul of about 800 miles over the line of the Grand Trunk Railway. From Chicago the Grand Trunk Railway has traffic arrangements with the C. B. & Q. to St. Paul. At this point it will deliver its freight to the Great Northern for Seattle. It should deliver it by Canadian lines through Vancouver .

Simply and solely because of the traffic and trade, the stimulus to business, that it would bring to Vancouver.

And now we are about to see British Columbia wing-dammed and the trade and other benefits all sluiced into Seattle. We have seen one such exhibition. We saw Seattle grow big and rich and prosperous out of our Canadian Yukon gold fields, while Vancouver beat time and awaited another chance. . .

The special treatment which should be meted out to the Grand Trunk Railway should be a peremptory demand that the Grand Trunk Railway accord to Canada the same consideration which it receives from Canada.

That consideration should be the handling of every pound of freight for Prince Rupert over as many miles of Canadian railways by Canadian workingmen as possible, and the Grand Trunk Pacific and its contractors should be compelled to transport all their supplies entirely through Canada.

Canadian workingmen's interest.

To bring a train of twenty freight cars through from Montreal requires twenty-four crews of engineers, firemen, trainmen and switchmen, a total of 168 men, to bring one train to this port. That train will consume——

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman will see that to read an article of that sort is practically a discussion of the general question and that would not be in order. If the hon. gentleman has a question to put about the matter it would be proper for him to do so, but it is hardly proper at this stage to read a long statement from a newspaper.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I will not continue, I was about finished. The article merely goes on to show the importance of the freight being carried through our own country.

Mr. SPEAKER. A question may be asked at this stage but no discussion can be entered into and the reading of a long newspaper article of that sort is practically raising a discussion of the whole question. If the hon. member has a question bearing on the matter he should put it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I put the question in the first part of my speech.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. member repeat his question?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would ask the government what they intend to do with regard to this matter, and whether the Railway Commission has sufficient power to control the shipping of freight so as to secure its going through Canada, for instance by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Do the government intend to take any action in the matter?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways). It is admitted with regret that Seattle has grown rich at the expense of Canadian cities owing to the fact that our friends opposite assisted in killing a project to build a railway on all Canadian soil to the Yukon.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid the minister is introducing a controversial question.

Mr. FIELDING. He is simply answering a question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no controversy about that. .

Mr. GRAHAM. There can be no dispute about that fact.

Mr. HENDERSON. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. GRAHAM. As to the question of freight being shipped through on Canadian lines I imagine it is largely contractors' material that is being shipped and it is a difficult matter at this stage to control the route over which such freight shall be sent. It is hoped and confidently expected that when the Grand Trunk Pacific is completed and even before that, the facilities afforded by Canadian railways shall be so superior that people of their own accord will ship goods over Canadian lines instead of over the American lines.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the minister observed the report of the Department of the Interior in regard to the Yukon in which it was announced that 80 per cent of the trade of that country is in the hands of Canadians?

STRIKE AT BUCK STOVE WORKS.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) a question based upon a very short statement that I have and which it will be necessary for me to read. The statement is that:

There is a strike of workers at the Buck Stove Works in Brantford and recently forty workers were sent up for trial by Magistrate Livingstone for peacefully picketing. The evidence was that the men were in twos in the neighbourhood of the very extensive premises of the company. They spoke to no one, were perfectly orderly, moved on when told and had been advised by Mr. J. G. O'Donoghue that they had a legal right to peacefully picket for the purpose of obtaining or giving information about the strike.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is doing very much the same as the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) was doing. We have introduced rules to prevent controversial matters being taken up at this point. Questions of importance may be asked of the government but if the habit is going to be introduced in the House of reading statements, which is practically the same as entering upon a discussion, the rule would be an utter nullity.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. These men have been placed in jail for picketing and the question is as to the opinion of the Minister of Justice on the matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. Without fee of course.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I think that I must disclaim any responsibility or duty in the premises to advise the gentleman in whose behalf my hon. friend has brought this matter to the attention of the House. I have no doubt that the law will be correctly interpreted by the courts before which they come and that any grievance they will have will be adequately redressed.

SUPPLY—THE ROSS RIFLE.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fielding for the House to go into Committee of Supply and the proposed amendment of Mr. Worthington thereto.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by the hon. member for North Toronto, (Mr. Foster) what I am going to do now. My first step is to draw closer to my leader in the hope that I may be able to induce him to see the error of his way and later on induce the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) to withdraw the motion which he has placed before the House or to turn around and support me in assisting to vote that motion down. With reference to my leader, I may say at the outset that I wish to correct a false impression which has been insidiously created, or attempted to be created, by gentlemen who have been supporting the views laid down by the hon. member for Sherbrooke. In fact, the hon. member for Sherbrooke himself stated that one reason why this important matter of the Ross rifle tragedy had not been brought by the Conservative party in a formal manner before this House and the country was that the leader of the opposition chanced to be of the same name and of the same family as the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden). In so far as the coming First Minister of Canada, the present leader of the opposition is concerned, in his suggestions to the Militia Committee of the Liberal-Conservative party—a committee of which I have the honour to be chairman—his requests have invariably been to probe to the bottom any matter concerning the militia expenditure of this country, or concerning anything arising from the expenditure of public money or the conduct of public affairs in connection with that department. He has given the same encouragement to inquire into the affairs of that department as he has to investigate other departments. I shall have something to say upon that subject later on. There is one thing that the hon. member for Sherbrooke is noted for, in which he stands pre-eminent, and that is the magnificent smile that he has. He is smiling now, but before I get through I purpose endeavouring to show that smile on the other side of his face. I purpose endeavouring to show what his conduct has been in the treatment of this matter. He may say that the Militia Committee has never done its duty. It rests with the hon. gentleman or with any other hon. member who discusses this question fairly and squarely to show wherein there has been anything neglectful or improper on my part in looking after the militia interests of this country. Long years ago, when the Conservative party went into opposition, the Rt. Hon. Sir Charles Tupper spoke to me and asked me to take general supervision of the militia affairs of this country. I consented to do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. Lightened the task of the minister!

Mr. SAM HUGHES. I mean from an opposition viewpoint—as far as criticism by the Conservative party is concerned, and I had the honour of being asked, when the Conservative party was in power, of occupying the position of Minister of Militia in this country. Sir Charles Tupper asked me, in opposition, to take general supervision of the militia affairs of this country and I consented to do so on the distinct understanding that, in so far as practicable, questions bearing upon the militia should be removed entirely from the arena of party politics. When Mr. R. L. Borden was appointed leader of the opposition I had the same understanding with him—that, as far as possible, matters affecting the militia would not be thrown into the arena of party politics unless it were absolutely necessary. You may search the records of the United States in vain, you may search the records of Great Britain in vain, of France or any other civilized country on the face of the earth; to the hon. member for Sherbrooke belongs the unique distinction of having first brought into the arena of party politics the discussion of the weapon or the arm that we may be called upon to use. Millions upon millions of dollars have been expended in Great Britain in changing rifles, in testing rifles; millions upon millions have been expended in the United States, as I shall show, in testing and changing rifles and I challenge the hon. member for Sherbrooke, with all his detective instincts, to produce one solitary instance wherein a member of parliament in Great Britain, or of Congress in the United States, or any representative of the people, has been found base enough to stand in his place, as this hon. gentleman has stood for two sessions, and endeavour to create personal animosities at the expense of the arm of the country. There are ways and ways of criticising these matters. The little defects—I use the term 'defects' advisedly—that have cropped up and shown themselves in connection with the Ross rifle from time to time, were being removed one after the other and the report to which reference has been made by the hon. member for Sherbrooke, the criticisms of those wiseacres in England and the criticisms of others in various parts of the country were not the means of calling attention to these defects, because they had been discovered and remedied by the Canadian committee before these reports were received in this country. However, the hon. gentleman told us last night how he had been sitting impatiently all session in order to get strewing the earth with the fragments of this Ross rifle and with the remains of the hon. Minister of Militia and incidentally with those of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton. Well, Sir, the mountain has laboured and brought forth a mouse, stillborn. Whether it was due to the fact that the parentage and the medical attendance were one and the same person or not I give it up, but it is the sorriest object I have ever seen presented to the people of a free country. I regret very much that on the present occasion I have to take issue with the Conservative party, but it is not the first time I have done so. One thing that I do remember having heard the late Hon. Sir Oliver Mowat say was that next to the approval of his own conscience he regarded the honest opinions of his fellow men. That is exactly the position in which I stand. But much as I regard the approval of my fellow men, I regard the approval of my own conscience very much more. In matters of politics, I am prepared to follow my leader in non-essentials, but in essentials I claim the right to follow my own bent, and I am prepared to abide by the consequences. I do not deny that it gives me a good deal of tribulation not to have my friends in the Conservative party stand with me; but on other occasions when I have differed from them, I have had the endorsation of the people of my own county. I have learned that my scalp remains on my head, not by grace of the hon. member for Sherrbooke or of any other set of men in this country.

On two notable occasions I have differed from my party. One of them was the occasion of the Manitoba School Act of 1896 when my good friend the present member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) sought with his mellifluous voice to induce me to give up the line of conduct which I had laid down for myself and take another line. I did not choose, as some other hon. gentlemen on this side of the House did, to follow the bad leadership on that occasion of the present right hon. First Minister, nor did I choose to follow the leadership of the present member for North Toronto. I took the line that there should be no separate schools imposed on Manitoba either then by the Liberal-Conservative party or six months after through the instrumentality of the First Minister. I took the stand that the people of Manitoba should be left free to take their own course, and, Sir, I faced the best gentlemen that could be sent by the First Minister or by the emissaries of the Conservative party who wished to destroy me, and I had the endorsation of the people of my county, and to-day I have the endorsation of the people of Canada along that line—at least the endorsation of any whose endorsation I care to have.

Another occasion on which I differed from my party was in the year 1898, when the Yukon question was before this House. The Hon. Sir Charles Tupper, the leader of the Conservative party at that time, conceived the idea, the patriotic idea, of having an all-Canadian route into the Yukon. His idea was to have the road start from Kitimaat Harbour and pass up through Canadian territory behind that strip of Yankee territory and into the Yukon country, I will not be contradicted by Sir Charles Tupper nor by any other man later on, for I know whereof I speak. With a broad spirit of patriotism Sir Charles Tupper approached the Minister of the Interior of the day, the Hon. Clifford Sifton, and induced Mr. Sifton to make that a plank in the platform of the Liberal government of the day. The question came before the country. The proposition did not commend itself to the present member for North Toronto; it did not commend itself to the Toronto 'World;' it did not commend itself to certain other gentlemen in the Conservative party. The agitation broke out and Sir Charles Tupper had reluctantly to bow in order to hold his leadership of the party and oppose his own project. I know whereof I speak. I chanced to be in Australia at the time. When I returned to Canada I found to my regret that Sir Charles Tupper had seen fit, in order as he thought to hold his party together, instead of breasting the storm, to turn around and oppose the project. The last time Sir Charles Tupper ever addressed a Conservative open causus in Ottawa—it is no secret, because he has himself told it publicly—in his own home down on the banks of the Ottawa, he stated that in the past the Conservative party had made two mistakes. One of them was a trivial affair, the other was that it had not loyally supported the Liberal party in pushing an all-Canadian route into the Yukon. I have seen the country, Sir, both on the Manitoba school question and on the Yukon question, come to endorse the stand I took in differing from my party on those occasions, and I have seen the best men of my party acknowledge that in stepping out from my party on those two questions I was right. I have no fear, Sir, that in six months or a year from to-day, possibly a much shorter time than six months, the universal sentiment in the Conservative party will be that I have taken the right line on this matter, and that the gentlemen who have followed the lead of the hon. member for Sherbrooke, misled by his little tittle-tattle of newspaper yarns throughout the country, will discover their mistake. At any rate, I am not losing any sleep over the issue; I am standing by the dictates of my own conscience.

Now, Sir, the question of a rifle is before the people of Canada. The hon. member for Sherbrooke has been instrumental in various ways in endeavouring to create sentiment against the government on this matter. If it were merely a question of creating a sentiment against the government, I think from my record in the past I could be trusted to do my duty for the Liberal-Conservative party to nearly as great an extent as the hon. member for Sherbrooke. Ask the Liberal-Conservatives in any constituency in the Dominion of Canada, and they will tell you that wherever my services could be of avail, they have always been at the disposal of the Liberal-Conservative candidate, and I can say without any egotism that the Hon. J. P. Whitney has on more than one occasion stated that I am possibly the only member of parliament who on all occasions has been ready in season and out of season to do his duty for the Ontario Liberal-Conservative party. What is the record of my hon. friend from Sherbooke? What has he done for the Liberal-Conservative party? In 1904 did he not bring members on the government side of the House and demand that the Minister of Militia give him the position of principal medical officer of the militia force of Canada? Did he or did he not? He dare not deny it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. What does the hon. gentleman say?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I ask the hon. member for Sherbrooke did he or did he not demand of the Minister of Militia that he be given the position of principal medical officer of the militia of the Dominion of Canada?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I did not.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. All I have to say is that the hon. gentleman admitted it to me in the presence of Dr. Daniel, the member for St. John.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is absolutely untrue. He did not utter these words.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Tobin) also said the same thing publicly, namely, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Worthington) had demanded from the Minister of Militia the principal medical officership for the Dominion, and then when he could not get it, threatened he would go back to Sherbrooke and run in the Tory interest. Then there was a sort of bargain made, and he agreed to take the position of principal medical officer for the province of Quebec. But the Minister of Militia, with his usual lethargy, was so slow in getting the appointment through, that the hon. gentleman was elected about the time he got it. Then we all remember that the Minister of Justice of that day (Sir Charles Fitzpatrick) had an Act passed amending the Act relating to the independence of the members of parliament in order to allow the hon. gentleman (Mr. Worthington) to draw out his pay of $1 or $1.25 per day, every day of his lifetime, in the position he holds in the province of Quebec. This is the gentleman who has the assurance to cast an imputation on my loyalty to the Liberal-Conservative party. Would or would not the hon. gentleman have been prepared to accept another military medical position, one at Victoria, since he has had a seat in this House? We know he would. And he forsooth is the man who drags the Liberal-Conservative party through the mud and mire in connection with this question of the Ross rifle. Later on I shall dissect the causes and motives of his action.

I do not object to criticism of rifles or criticism of any kind. A man in public life who thinks he is above criticism had better retire. I am always ready to meet my critics and give them a Roland for their Oliver. But we find various classes of critics. As far as the Ross rifle is concerned, there is no doubt room for some criticism. In fact there has never been a rifle issued yet that was above criticism. And whenever there has been a change of rifles, there always has been criticism and hostility to the change. When Colonel Dennison of Toronto was down here with his little operatic company playing in a theatre, one of the comedy hits was a statement that certain soldiers, in firing at the enemy, had missed, and fortunately missed, for they happened to be firing on their own friends. And when the thing came to be investigated, it was found that they were armed with the new rifle which accounted for their fortunate bad shooting. The hon. gentleman was present and his mouth almost split open with laughter because he thought the joke was on the Ross rifle. But as a matter of fact when the piece was written, the change had been made in the British army from the Martini to the Lee-Enfield, and the opposition was so strong to the change, that plays were written belittling it all over the British empire. I have never yet seen a change from one rifle to another which has not created wide dissatisfaction, unfair criticism and hostility. The soldiers, who have been accustomed to using the one rifle, will always find something to condemn in the new.

As a critic I myself am always anxious to get a crack at the enemy, but I am one of those who like to be sure of their data before going ahead. Nevertheless we cannot all examine into the details of every case, and in politics we have to be led by sentiment in many of these matters, and that is why the Liberal-Conservative party to-day finds itself committed to the motion submitted by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington). These men are absolutely honest and deserve every consideration, and I do not see why I should have the slightest feeling against any member of our party who deems it his duty to vote for this resolution? I know what their sentiments are and what their actions would be if this thing came up six months from to-day.

We have had the criticisms of the honest riflemen of the country, but taking the sum and substance of the criticisms which the hon. gentleman laid on the table yesterday, what do they amount to? A lot of tu'penny-ha'penny little things that would not be regarded as of any importance. Foresight screw loose, back sight out of shape and so on. Let me give the criticism of honest riflemen. They say that for rifle shooting, you must have a heavier barrel. Well, we have got that now. I shall not charge the hon. gentleman with dishonesty because I am not sure whether he knows that the United States have a short rifle and a long rifle. The English have a short rifle and a long rifle. And at not one of the important matches in England or the United States is the short rifle used. Why then should the short rifle of Canada be put in competition with the long rifle of other lands? At the Palma match at our range last year, which the right hon. the First Minister honoured with his presence—I was sorry not to have my hon. friend the leader of the opposition there—not a short rifle was used. The Yankees since 1903 have had the short rifle but they have used the long rifle, England uses the long Lee-Enfield, and so do the Australians. Why was the hon. gentleman not honest enough to say that for target purposes the short rifle is never put in competition with the long rifle? I appeal to my hon. friend from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) who, thirty or forty years ago, knew something about rifle shooting.

Mr. FOWLER. Before you were born?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Oh, no.

Mr. FOWLER. That is the time you won that Fenian medal.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is right. I appeal to my hon. friend from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) to state whether in those days he used his cavalry carbine in competition against the long Snider. These riflemen criticise the light barrel for target purposes; they criticise what I may term the abominable back sight on the rifle, and very rightly. But the back sight is one of the fads introduced in imitation of the Boers. The Mauser rifle, which was used by the Boers, had this lever sight. The sight hinged and worked from a lever back. It seemed to answer for field purposes; and consequently it was adopted, not only in England, but for a time in Canada and the United States. In Canada it has been discarded and also in the United States and its life will be short in England. The honest riflemen criticise the fastening of the barrel and the receiver. One of the criticisms made by a few of the critics has regard to the attachment of the barrel to the receiver and it is a very judicious criticism. The old attachment in Mark I was on fine thread. In Mark II it was changed to a large single coarse thread and that has been found in odd cases to work loose. It has been abandoned. Then the safety catch is another of the objectionable features. And speaking on this one thing, the hon. member for Sherbrooke said it was criminal on the part of the Minister of Militia to allow it to go before the people.

I was pointing out what the people of the United States have been doing in rifle matters. In 1900 they modelled their first short Springfield rifle. In 1901 it was adopted; in 1902 it was perfected. And in 1903 it was put into the hands of the troops. I have here their latest issue of instructions and I commend this to the Minister of Militia. These instructions were issued on March 3, 1904, revised April 18, 1906, and reissued on February 14, 1908. They are entitled: Instructions regarding the use of the United States service rifle. Although the rifle has been in the hands of the troops all these years, though it has been perfected from time to time, nevertheless we find instructions issued in regard to the safety catch in these words. I quote from the Instructions:

Precautions.

If it is desirable to carry the piece cocked with the cartridge in the chamber, the bolt mechanism should be secured by turning the safety lock to the right. In this position it is important that the safety lock be kept turned fully to the right, since, if it be turned to the left nearly to the 'ready' position and the trigger pulled it is possible that the sear may not engage the cocking shoulder. Should this happen the rifle will be discharged upon turning the safety lock fully to the ready position. Under no consideration should the cartridge be left in the chamber.

Identically what is pointed out if the safety catch in old Mark II does not engage properly. But, unlike the American rifle, the Canadian rifle—the Ross rifle—has amended this defective safety action. The English government have a safety action on the old long Lee-Enfield which is absolutely dangerous. And here is the instruction in the new work of the United States government, showing that on the 14th of April last, their safety catch is still absolutely unsafe, whereas as soon as we found any difficulty in the safety catch of the Canadian rifle we amended it, and it is as safe to-day as if the rifle were not loaded. So the only real criticism that was made against the safety of the rifle, so far as the safety catch is concerned, has been exploded. Let me point out that, before the safety catch in the Mark II Canadian rifle could do any harm, the rifle must be loaded, the safety-catch must be pushed in only half way, the trigger must be pulled so as to disengage the sear, and the safety-catch must then be released again. You must go through all these unlikely performances before an accident can occur in the Canadian rifle. In the American rifle they still have the danger, all must, and do, warn their soldiers against it.

Now, there is another criticism made, honestly made, and one worthy of note, and that is that the sights on the short barrel are so close together that one cannot get proper range in firing. That is known the world over.

But there is a critic of another class to whom I shall refer. He is a gentleman who is after personal preferment, possibly gain of some sort, or, possibly, after the scalp of his neighbour, with no fair justification. This is the class of critic you will sometimes find—whether in this case or not, we shall see later on. Before proceeding further, I desire to give a little history of rifles. And I may say that had this motion presented by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) been couched in somewhat different terms, if it were expressed in a little different tone or by any other man, it might have had some encouragement from me. For, I feel that the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) is more or less open to serious condemnation for his apathy—not to apply any harsher term—in trusting, as he has done, in the past, to his ordnance officials to too great an extent. He failed to send out instructions, similar to those I have shown in the American book, as should have been done in the case of an issue of new rifles. At all events, as responsible head of the department, the minister must be held answerable for this. I think the minister should have given more personal supervision to this important matter; he should have made sure that his ordnance officers, of one class and other, knew their business. I do not think they did know their business. I have no desire to injure any man, but I have no hesitation in saying that the gentlemen who have been in charge of these matters have not always been up with their business. I will go so far as to say that many have strong personal animus and may have been endeavouring to kill this rifle. That should not be tolerated by the minster. Had I anything to say about the matter, the head of such an officer would soon drop in the basket. If I saw such work as has been going on here, such confidential reports given away as have been given away, and encouragement given to destructive criticism, drastic action would have been taken; and, if that had been done, the matter would have gone along much more smoothly. I condemn the minister for not giving out instructions when the rifles were issued. He is now issuing these instructions when it is practically needless. He should have done what was done in the case of the Lee-Enfield. When that rifle was put in the hands of our soldiers, as commander of a regiment, I received positive instructions that the rifles were not to be left in the hands of the soldiers even over night. The rifles were to be placed in the boxes, shipped to the central armoury of the regiment, and taken out by an experienced armourer, and placed in the racks. We had to go to considerable expense, in our regiment, in order to carry out these instructions. Not a man, not even the company armourer was allowed to take out one of these rifles. If anything went wrong with a rifle it was handled as carefully as eggs and sent to the official armourer sergeant. No such instructions as these were sent with the Ross rifle. At once the critics got after the rifle. Instructions were given by the Master General of Ordnance to have all the reports of faults sent to the department. The rifle was torn to pieces, the foresight was taken off, the backsight taken to pieces, the bolts dismounted and not put back properly, and so on. It was no wonder the rifles met with mishap in these minor matters.

Now, in justification of the few changes that have been made in the Ross rifle, I wish to run over some of the changes that have been made in the Lee-Enfield—not to go back to the Enfield, or the Snider, or the Martini, all of which have been official in my own time. Mark I of the Lee-Metford rifle was adopted in December, 1888. If any hon. members are curious to get the full details, I have them here in the official Red Book issued by the British War Office. Then came the Lee-Metford Mark I* which was issued in January, 1892. The Lee-Metford Mark II was issued in April, 1892. The Lee-Metford Mark II* was issued in April, 1895. The Lee-Enfield Mark I, was issued in November, 1895; Lee-Enfield Mark I* in 1898, about the end of the year. These are all long rifles, and all are practically different marks of the long Lee-Enfield. Then came out the short Lee-Enfield. There have been one or two marks of the long Lee-Enfield since. Then there was the Mark I short Lee-Enfield issued in 1903, and there have been two different Marks since then to my knowledge, and I am told, three or four more. That is, in the long and short Lee-Enfield the official arm of the British service, we have ten or twelve distinctive issues and distinctive marks. The changes that have been made in some of these are shown in the official red book. In one change alone, that is from Lee-Metford Mark I* to Lee-Metford Mark II, the first issued in January, 1892, and the second in April, 1892, the changes made in the rifle, as tabulated here, item by item, at pages 314 and 315 of the red book of the British army, are no fewer than one hundred and twenty-five in number.

In other words, in that one change alone from the Lee-Enfield Mark I star to the Lee-Enfield Mark II, there were more important changes twice over than have taken place in the Ross rifle from start to finish. The history of the Ross rifle is simple. A number of years ago Sir Charles Ross, a young fellow in the old country with more enthusiasm than judgment, to my mind—I refer now to his risking his own financial interests in this rifle—an enthusiastic soldier, invented a straight pull rifle which is practically the same rifle as has been adopted by the Swiss and Austrian governments. We hear a great deal about the splendid service of the Swiss nation, and their rifle is practically the same as was first invented by Sir Charles Ross. I will not go into details of the rifles introduced here, but I will refer to the reports made on the Springfield, Lee-Enfield, and the reports made by the British War Office at Woolwich in connection with the Ross rifle, and show that the Ross rifle compared favourably with any rifle in the experimental stage of its career. Sir Charles Ross carried one of these rifles through the South African war. That rifle is to the front, and it is in splendid preservation, after having served through the South African war, just as the Ross rifles that are in the racks all over the country to-day are in splendid condition, and are ready to take the field at a moment's notice. I may point out here that the highest record for shooting that ever was made by any rifle was made by one of these rifles taken out of the rack in the city of Quebec the other day, taken out by the enemies of the rifle, and handed to a soldier, Lieut. Mortimer. He made with that rifle the magnificent score of 35 aimed shots to the minute, and every one of them hit the target, a thing that never was paralleled in the history of the world. The highest score up to that, I think, was 25 or 27. I think Wallingford made 27 with the Lee-Enfield at one time. But Mortimer hit the target with the Mark II Ross rifle 35 times in one minute, firing Mark II, a score that has never been equalled. He made 34 in a minute with Mark III, when the rifle was on trial for adoption. Now let me give you the result of trials of the rifle for adoption, and if we can see that the Ross rifle has come nearly up to the standard of the test of other rifles, in its experimental stage, surely there is no great disgrace to the Ross rifle, and no great cause of condemnation. I have here the United States report sent me by the Secretary of War, the report for 1901. It speaks of the board having made a test of the new United States rifle, and goes on to say:

> Rapidity with accuracy—At the third shot, a cartridge fed from the magazine, one cartridge going into the chamber and one partially out of magazine.

Then it speaks of jamming:

> It was noted that the clips were a little weak and bent when the cartridges were being forced into the magazine. The second and third clips were hard to operate. At the fifth clip there was a delay, due to difficulty of operation, of about 10 seconds. During the firing of the sixth clip a jam occurred. The second cartridge wedged forward, the rim being out of the channel.

Now comes rapidity at will, that is, an unaimed fire from the hip:

Jammed after the second shot, one cartridge partially in chamber and next wedged between upper cartridge and receiver.

That is the rifle which was officially recommended by the board of United States officers for adoption in their service. The first test was repeated on account of the failure.

Cut-off worked out almost entirely.
(a) repeated; cut-off worked out again completely.
(b) Repeated again; first shot caused cut-off to work partially out, allowing bolt to catch cartridge in magazine.
The cut-off was pushed in and another shot fired; this also caused the cut-off to work out.
After another shot, bolt just passed over head of upper cartridge. This was tried twice more, with the same result.

Now we come to the endurance test. Speaking of the firing:

At the first push of the bolt forward two cartridges started to feed forward, the lower cartridge being in advance with head out of guide groove.
During the firing of the second clip, when cartridges were pressed down, the next to the top cartridge clipped forward so that the head of the top cartridge was in rear of the head of the one below it, and when the bolt was pushed forward the two cartridges were carried forward together, causing a jam.

And so on page after page of this book speaks of the jamming and blockading of this American rifle. At the end of the report we find the following:

Conclusion—The board is of the opinion that the arm has successfully passed the test to which it has been subjected, the minor difficulties which were experienced being only what might reasonably be expected in the case of a new gun that had not been previously tested.

There is the official report of the board of the United States government on their splendid new rifle, said to be the best rifle in the world. Next, I come to 1902 where we have another report. In 1903 we come to another official test. On page 11 of the report of the Secretary for War, we find section 26:

As a result of the tests a good many changes were embodied in the arm, the most important of which were the following:

Then come six important changes and several minor changes made two years after it had been officially adopted, but I will not trouble the House by reading them. Now we come on to the test after it had been perfected for two years, and was found by thousands in the hands of the troops:

First lot of 100 cartridges fired from the magazine; time, 6 minutes. When charging the magazine with two of the clips the cartridges stacked; that is, the second cartridge remained directly above the first, along the right wall of the magazine, and all five cartridges could not be inserted.
Third lot of 100 cartridges fired from the magazine; time, 8 minutes. For the last 50 shots the bottom cartridge could not be fed from the magazine, as it was caught between the rib on the follower and the right wall of the magazine.

Then we find page after page of trials, and page after page showing defects in what is claimed to be the greatest rifle in the world to-day. In 1904 we find in the report of the Secretary of War a description of a change of the rifle, making the twist in grooving one in 10 inches, after various experiments. Coming down to 1905, four years after it had been officially adopted, what do we find there?

Changes made in four important features allowed only 34,000 finished arms to be assembled during the fiscal year.

He goes on to name them, four important changes, with several minor ones made in that year. On page 19 and following pages of the report of the Secretary of War for 1905, and even down to 1906, on page 20, we find this in the official report of the Secretary of War for the United States on this splendid rifle, the greatest in the world, that had been in the hands of the troops for five years:

Reports of the breakages have been received, but no trouble is anticipated from the parts made of the proper material. Other minor defects have also been developed, but corrective measures have been applied, and it is believed that the new musket will go into the service practically perfected.

Here is the report of the government of the United States and here is the line of conduct pursued by patriotic men in that country. They all settle together as to what changes should be made in the rifle, they agree as to the defects, and having determined these defects, they are properly remedied. They are laid before the board and they are remedied, but there are no pyrotechnics, no efforts to blast men's reputations or to drive men out of public life and no attempt to make political capital out of a question of this kind. In the report of 1907 what do we find?

The minor defects mentioned in my report of a year since have been overcome, and, with the exception of the weapons in the hands of the troops, the greater part have been rechambered for the model of 1906 ammunition.

So that they had to rechamber every rifle that they issued in order to meet the requirements of the service in that country.

That, Sir, is the record of the United States rifle. What is the record of the Canadian rifle ? Mark I was issued ; certain improvements were made in it. Mark II was issued. Certain changes were made from Mark I to Mark II which did not turn out to be very advantageous. These were changed back again from Mark II to Mark III. The old lever backsight has been abandoned and a return has been made to the form presented in old Mark I. The thread attaching the barrel to the receiver in Mark II has been abandoned and a return made to the thread in the old Mark I. This is the Whitworth thread. When Sir Charles Ross presented his rifle to the committee it had a double trigger action, it had a gathering pull and a final pull. That was in the rifle which he presented for adoption. We have abandoned the single pull and returned to the double trigger pull as presented in the original rifle. We have also returned to the long barrel so that it may be better adapted for shooting purposes. We have also done what the United States people have not yet been able to do and what the English people have not yet been able to do ; we have an absolutely perfect safety catch which acts the moment the sear is released from the cocking piece bent and insures its safe reengagement. There are some small changes, such as screws, bands and swivel straps, which are of no account. Last year, in my address to this House, I went with considerable detail into the difference between the Ross rifle and the Lee-Enfield rifle. I do not know that it is necessary at this time to repeat that comparison. There are important differences but they are involved in the one great principle of the straight pull. That is only two motions, in loading and firing, simply pulling the bolt back and pressing it forward again, as against four motions in what we call the lever or rotary motion rifles. The two nations that use straight pull rifles are the Austrian and Swiss nations. The other nations largely use the rotary motion. Fault was found by the hon. member for Sherbrooke yesterday with regard to the report of the United States government on the Ross rifle test at Springfield. I think I have made it absolutely clear that the report upon that rifle is satisfactory, taking into consideration the report of the same committee upon their own rifle. There have been fewer changes made in the Ross rifle since that date than in the American rifle. I have known a number of gentlemen high up in the Ordnance Department of the United States and had they not adapted, two years before, Sir Charles Ross appeared before them, the new Springfield rifle, the chances are a thousand to one that the United States government would have adopted the principle of the Ross rifle for their national arm.

I now come to the question of long and short rifles. The question of the backsight is the crux of the whole situation and the cause of the whole dissatisfaction with the Ross rifle. There is, I am free to say, in the lever backsight, an abominable sight to the Ross rifle. No man can make good scores consecutively with it. The sight will jump four or five degrees when the recoil comes. With the lever sight there is a straight reaction and a shock which frequently jars the springs holding the sight in its position and a change of three or four degrees would make a difference of 200 or 300 yards in the sighting of the rifle. The South African war was responsible for the fad of the lever or Dutch pattern sight. After the South African war the British government changed to the short barrel, adopting what they call the Dutch pattern sight and discarding the bayonet. But, they have got over that. We have seen the effect of the short barrel. The Russo-Japanese war showed the effect of the long barrel on accurate shooting. They found out that the short rifle was no good for accurate shooting. In all the matches held in England last year, at Bisley and everywhere else, there was not one short rifle in use, and in the great matches of the United States last year there was not one short United States rifle in use, although the new United States rifle has an initial velocity of 2,700 feet to the second and in that way it is supposed to overcome the defect of the short barrel. The Lee-Enfield barrel (short) is twenty-five inches long, the American rifle is twenty-four inches long and the Ross short rifle twenty-eight inches long, a little longer than either and, to that extent, better adapted for good shooting. That it has been successful in making a good shooting rifle I might refer to the fact that last year in Toronto Mr. Mortimer took the first prize in the aggregate matches even with the old lever sight, and I might also state that at the Ottawa ranges Ommandsen and Wallingford, the two noted English riflemen, made most magnificent scores. Ommandsen named his shot every time but he did not have the lever backsight on. He had the Sutherland sight. He named every shot. He said : I am going to make a bull at such and such a spot and he fired and made the bull. He hit the target in every instance at the exact spot that he had named. But, he admitted that holding the short barrel is much harder on the men. It calls for the exercise of much greater physical force to hold the short barrel down to position than if it were a more substantial and steadier barrel. There is a return in Mark III to the long rifle, first, on account of the accuracy of shooting, second, it is better adapted for the bayonet, and third, it has been shown that the important feature of warfare is no longer masses of men and troops but that the result depends largely on accurate shooting. In warfare to-day the effort is made to fire at individual men when one sees them. You rarely ever get a chance to fire at large masses of men. The great advantage of a rifle of this kind is that a sharpshooter can get his position and pick the gunners off the guns as far as they can be seen, and they can do it at 3,000 yards without much trouble.

We have, therefore, decided to return to the use of the long barrel. One was sent to British Columbia and it has given great satisfaction. I have letters and telegrams from various parts of the Northwest urging that the long barrel, Mark III, be rushed through immediately so that it can be used at Bisley and in the rifle matches this year. One of the highest scores ever made in Canada was made last Saturday at the Ottawa ranges, Mortimer scoring 102. Major Sutherland in the first shot made 97, and Major Hutcheson firing over the ranges first time of firing made 96 out of 105. It may be asked what use is this fast shooting ? I will tell you. The rule in warfare as regards the rifle is that you want to get the maximum of energy with the minimum of time and the maximum of effectiveness. The Ross rifle in the hands of Mortimer at Quebec a few weeks ago—when this whitewashing expedition was sent down there according to the member for Sherbrooke—was subjected to a public trial and the public trial was made because the 'Star' and its satellites in Montreal would have described it as a hole and corner affair if the test had been private. The famous man of the Montreal 'Star' stood there with his mouth wide open as if it were stretched when he saw four shells in the air at a time when the Ross rifle was being fired. Mortimer has made his record several times with a Ross rifle and he made it with this despised Mark II taken out of the rack there, and that record is 35 per minute aimed fire. The record of the Lee-Enfield with Wallingford, the most famous shot in the British empire, is 27, and the record of the United States rifle was 24, and this year it is 25. Here is the contrast: Ross rifle, 35 per minute aim fire ; Lee-Enfield, 27 per minute aim fire ; United States rifle, 25 per minute aim fire. Then, firing at random, at the enemy in the dark for instance; from the hip or the side unaimed fire. The United States rifle has gone as high as 35 to the minute ; the English rifle, I believe, has never exceeded 27, while the Ross rifle has gone as high as 50 to the minute unaimed fire, showing that in every respect the Ross rifle is infinitely superior in its rapidity of fire. At Quebec the Ross rifle fired 150 rounds, made 147 hits, 34 of which were bullseyes and all the rest close around the bull, in five minutes and one second, and they started with the magazine empty. That has never been approached in rifle shooting before.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is the meaning of the magazine being empty?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If a man starts with the magazine full he has five shots advantage, and with the magazine empty he has to put in five shots or ten, as the case may be, to get ready to fire. I understand that the English and American records were made with the magazine loaded. I thought the British and United States tests were conducted with the magazine starting empty and accordingly we tested the Ross rifle with the magazine empty, but I have since found that the British and American tests were with the magazines full, which would have made a few points more in favour of the Ross rifle in the comparison. However, we need not bother about that, as the record of the Ross rifle is pretty good as it is. Another record is that a Ross rifle fired 300 shots recently at Quebec and made 294 hits, aim fire, at target, 101 being bullseyes, and that was done in 14 minutes and 11 seconds, a record which no two rifles together have ever approached before in the world, and half of them were single-fire.

Mr R. L. BORDEN. What range?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Close range. The supposition is that the enemy is rushing at close range and that was the object of the test. If an enemy should rush at close range then the effectiveness of a rifle is as to how many shots you can pump into the enemy when he is approaching you in the rush which commences from 50 to 100 yards. That is where the effectiveness of the magazine rifle comes in, or otherwise a single fire rifle would be just as good as any.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was the time?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. 150 rounds, 147 hits, 34 bulls, in five minutes and one second, starting with the magazine empty. Then there were 300 rounds fired, 294 hits, 101 bulls in fourteen minutes and eleven seconds. The records of any two rifles in the world put together have never come up to that. The advantage of the Ross magazine is its great rapidity. The Ross magazine differs materially from any other magazine rifle. There are what may be called two types of magazine rifles, the clip and charger loader and the single cartridge loader. The cartridges are all placed in an iron fixture called a clip, and are put into the rifle and are fired shot after shot. The charger type slides them all into the magazine at once. The second class, or slow loader, places cartridge after cartridge in the magazine. One class is a quick loader and the other a slow loader, as in the British rifle where you load shot by shot. The Ross rifle differs from both in that by a lifter piece worked by the left hand you can depress the bed of the magazine and catch the cartridges all loose, throwing them into the rifle, and by working the fingers on this lifter piece a couple times the cartridges are all placed in position so that it is not possible to have it jam. When the Ross rifle jams it is owing to the fact that the soldier is not sufficiently trained in the use of this lifter piece. I will explain how the jam occurs in the rifle. In the British and Canadian cartridges there is what is called the head of the cartridge, where the end of the cartridge projects out beyond the side. In the Mauser rifle the cartridges have not this projection. When the top cartridge head comes behind the head of the second cartridge and is shifted forward by the bolt, it pulls the lower cartridge with it. That often occurs. It occurred in the Lee-Enfield at Quebec. We had the Lee-Enfield firing there, but I have not given the figures for it because the men who fired the Lee-Enfield at Quebec were experts only in the sense of ordinary listed men and not in the same class with Wallingford and Ormandsen, who made the records in the British army. Therefore, in fairness to these men I am taking the standard rifle record made with the British rifle by these experts. When a jam occurs with a Ross rifle the only way it can occur is because the soldier did not arrange the lifter piece properly. Mortimer fired 300 rounds with the Ross rifle and there was no jam at all. Now, I want to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to this: There was Sergeant O'Brien, one of his own men with his musketry instructor certificate, and he had never been instructed in the proper use of the working of that finger piece until he fired in Quebec at the experimental tests. He did not understand the working of it and he got confused, and yet that man is a splendid fellow and I am told one of the best musketry instructors in Canada. The minister should see that his instructors all over the country are trained in the use of the finger piece, so that soldiers under them will have some chance to know the strong point of the rifle. I need not deal with the magazine further than to say it is well known that the Ross rifle has the most rapid magazine of any rifle. It is easy of manipulation and it is very useful in night attacks. I have on other occasions made a comparison of the Ross rifle and the Lee-Enfield.

Our good friend the member for Sherbrooke assumed an entirely different tone this year from that of his last year's speech. I do not know the reason of that. Possibly he has had uphill work all over the country; for I know that the best men in the militia service to-day stand by the Ross rifle and are going to stand by it without any doubt whatever. Last year he had an air of confidence and assurance, and I may take the liberty of looking for a motive for his action. We knew that there were certain minor defects in the Ross rifle, and that these defects were being remedied, just as our friends in the United States have been remedying the defects in their rifle. Let me point out the defects in the United States magazine rifle, which is famous as the most perfect rifle in the world. The official book No. 1923 'description and rules for the management of the United States magazine rifle,' issued on the 4th of February 1908, at page 41 mentions the parts which are most liable to require repairs.' These are the bolt-stop, the cocking-piece, the lower band swivel and screw, the safety-lock, the stacking swivel and screw, the stock and the striker. It speaks of the stock being broken at the small of the butt. In the whole history of the Ross rifle there have been only two rifles broken at the small of the butt, and these were broken maliciously. There have been only two rifle stocks broken along the barrels; and when the men who broke them were brought before the committee and stated that they were broken by a fall, they were laughed at. Then this United States report goes on to tell how to replace broken parts, mentioning the butt-plate, cap-pin, the front sight, the lower band swivel screw, the stacking swivel screw, the trigger pin. These are not fatal injuries. It then goes on to point out the injuries that do not render the parts unserviceable. These are: the bolt, the butt, the plate, the butt swivel, the cocking piece, the extractor, the floor plate, the guard. With regard to the bolt it says:

The entire flange at front end may be broken off, except a small portion on the opposite side from the extractor hook which is required to hold in connection with the extractor hook the empty case while it is being drawn to the rear for ejection. If automatic ejection be not considered, the entire flange may be dispensed with.

Then it says:

The parts not essential, or only so to a degree, are the ejector, safety lock, cut-off, bolt stop, sleeve lock, floor plate, magazine spring and follower.

It goes on further to say:

Complaints have not infrequently been received that a main-spring was too weak to perform its office, when the fault rested with the soldier, who in sighting inadvertently raised the bolt handle with his hand before pulling the trigger, and thus caused the force of the spring to be expended in closing the bolt, instead of in exploding the cartridge.

All cams and bearings should be kept slightly oiled to prevent wear.

When firing many successive rounds care must be taken that unburned grains of powder do not collect and pack in the locking lug recesses of the receiver, as this will interfere with the perfect closing of the bolt. Such accumulations can be blown out from time to time, or, when packed, removed by a knife or the screw-driver.

If we had to do this with the Ross rifle, there would have been a rebellion in the country long ago. This book goes on to say :

Except when repairs are needed, the following parts will constantly be injured if allowed to be dismounted by the soldier for cleaning; and when repairs are necessary, they should be removed only by a company artificer, or some one familiar with the handling of tools and delicate mechanisms, viz.: bolt stop, cut-off, safety lock, sleeve lock, front sight, lower band and stacking swivel screws.

From start to finish the book gives details of breaks and smashes which are liable to occur in the Yankee rifle, which is regarded as the most perfect rifle in the world to-day. I have already indicated from this official book more defects in that rifle than are recorded in all this bundle of so-called expert reports on the Ross rifle. How are these reports furnished? The master general of ordnance issues to the various officers in the country an order for reports, and the officers pass on the order to the privates and tell them to point out all the defects they can find in the Ross rifle—a condition of affairs that is not to be found in any other country in the world. Most of these reports are reports of privates to their subaltern officers, and from the subaltern officers to seniors ; and when the seniors were brought before the committee last year, one after another said : ' I know nothing about the rifle ; I am only going by the reports made to me.' What are these reports ? They refer only to the class of defects regarded by the Americans as trivial.

Now, Sir, the reason I have been so persistent in following this matter up is this. I could not conceive it possible that any man could start an agitation on so little data, and I have looked for the motive at the bottom of it all. What have we found? Mr. Nesbitt, before the committee on Public Accounts, made a solemn declaration that he had been approached years ago by representatives of the leading manufacturing firms in England who tried to show him the utter impossibility of conducting a manufacturing establishment like this in Canada, and that we must buy our rifles from the English factories or let them take this factory over. Other attempts are known to have been made on experts in rifle matters, in order to chloroform them to discard the Ross rifle and to bring pressure on the Minister of Militia to induce him to adopt the Lee-Enfield.

These efforts were made from time to time and in various ways. I might point out, in connection with so many of the defects discovered in the rifle, that it was rather strange how many came to the light in Halifax; and just about the time the news could be spread from town to town, the agitation against the rifle began all over the country. It was pointed out yesterday that the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) was six months behind the General of Ordnance in pointing out the defects, but evidently they had been looking for someone to lead the agitation. I want to point out another matter. I did not learn this from the Minister of Militia nor did I ever ask him about it, but I ask him now whether the request was ever made to him, or whether a letter was ever obtained from him by a representative of a British rifle company, to the effect that in case the Ross Company chose to go out of business, the conditions of the contract with that company would be continued? Was the hon. minister ever asked to give such a letter or did he ever give such a letter or was he ever interviewed by any gentleman representing a rifle company in England in connection with this matter?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have no recollection of ever having given any such letter, but I have no objection to say that I was asked on one or two occasions whether, in the event of the Ross Company withdrawing from business and some other company purchasing it, the government would be prepared to continue the contract with the purchasers. I said that of course that would depend on who the successors were, but I could see no difficulty, if the new company were capable of carrying on the business, as the only object of the government was to have its business properly done.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I never asked the Minister of Militia that question before, but I received my data from across the water. I was told that it was done by a gentleman who is supposed to have influence.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I presume the hon. gentleman is referring to me. Might I ask him if he is?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I referred to 'a gentleman who is supposed to have influence,' and not to the hon. member for Sherbrooke.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am asking the hon. gentleman to reply. Let him either put up or shut up.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not know that I am called on to do either. I do not know that I need reply to a gentleman who has been hawking around the department, showing the commercial instinct as strong as he has been showing it. He referred to commercial interests yesterday, but he himself is a man who has shown a very keen sense of commercial interest by hawking after the Minister of Militia and others for appointment from time to time. Since he speaks of commercial interests, I think it only fair to myself that I should say I had the honour of being offered the highest military positions from the Conservative party in days gone by and that I refused. I was offered the Deputy Ministership of Militia and the Adjutant Generalship of Canada, and I never had to hawk after these position.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think I ought to say that the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) is not the gentleman to whom I referred. He never discussed with me the question as to the successor to the Ross Rifle Company.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Oh, no, the agent has a much greater man. I might as well be frank and say I understood it was a gentleman from Montreal, a multi-millionaire, the representative of the Vickers-Maxim Small Arms Company. I got word from across the water that that was done.

Mr. FOWLER. By cable ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It came at all events. When this notice was put on the paper a year ago, I looked for a motive. I thought it very strange that an officer who had served with me in South Africa, fighting the battles of the empire, under the same commander, should not have come and spoken to me on the subject.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. What have you got to do about it ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am just coming to that. It was strange that a gentleman, a member of the great Conservative party, following the same noble leader, would not have come to me and said something to me about it. Now I come to what I have got to do about it. Soon after the notice was put on the paper last year, the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) notified me that Dr. Worthington had something terrible against me. He is going to expose you, said Mr. Bergeron, and your grafting in connection with the Ross rifle. And he asked : Is it not possible for you to pay back the money?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I thought you knew Bergeron better than that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What right had any member of the Conservative party to hint about graft?

Mr. FOSTER. You are hinting at it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am meeting charges made. It was insidiously whispered in the saloon and the back lanes that the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) was going to drive me from public life. The hon. gentleman's friends said: Sam. Hughes is to be exposed in graft and driven from public life. That is why the matter was fought to a finish by me in the Public Accounts Committee and the hon. gentleman and his friends driven to the wall every time. And whenever he raises his voice against the Ross rifle, he will be driven into a corner. He should have known that I could not be so easily stampeded. He was within seeing distance on more than one occasion—but perhaps he was not in a position to see much—when better men than he failed to stampede your humble servant. He should have known therefore that one such as he could not stampede me. He saw that in another land than this. It will take a much better and bolder man than the hon. gentleman to stampede your humble servant. He has failed in his agitation. He has failed most signally. I have telegrams from different parts of the country demanding that the Mark III Ross rifle be placed in the hands of our militia for shooting this year. I take this opportunity of urging on the minister all due diligence in placing that rifle—which is now perfected as nearly as possible—in the hands of our soldiers. I have no doubt that the rifle is still open to improvement. No doubt there is still some slight imperfection. There is now—I would not call it a defect—but a very slight imperfection, but the material at hand did not allow of our making the improvement. In the next issue however that improvement will be absolutely carried out, and we shall have a rifle the most perfect and complete in the world.

I shall not refer to defects further than to say this. I have been told by militia officers that the reason that they have been against the rifle was the reports furnished them by gentlemen in connection with the government at Ottawa. I shall not refer in detail to the accidents supposed to have taken place at St. John, Eastman and Lethbridge. At St. John the accident was a trifling affair. The cocking piece and a small spring had flown back and struck the man in the face. The rifle was not rendered unserviceable but was perfectly serviceable the moment the spring was put in place again. The Eastman rifle had been tampered with. The sear had been tampered with and the bolt dismounted, the retaining washer had been left out in putting the parts in place again. Evidently whoever took the parts out was, like the boy with a watch, unable to put them back into their proper places, and to this the accident was due. It was not due to any defect in the arm itself. But it is very strange that the accident should have occurred in a locality so convenient to the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington). The hon. member referred to my reports of the Springfield tests. All that I have to say is that I have read to the House the reports of the Springfield tests of the American rifle, and I leave the House and the country to judge whether the Lee-Enfield is worse than the Ross rifle at Springfield. In both cases defects have been developed.

I shall not take up time discussing at length the cost of the rifle. On that subject, I have but a few words to say. I have the report of the British War Office showing that their rifles, in the preliminary stages, were paid for at the rate of £5 5s, and £5 18s. for others. This would represent a cost of upwards of $30 for the rifle in Canada, or $5 more than the Ross rifle costs to-day. I might point out that as late as 1904, the new short rifle was put into the hands of the soldiers in Great Britain at a cost of £4 11s. 4½d., which would represent a cost of at least $28 in this country.

My good friend from Sherbrooke yesterday, as one gentleman remarked, had nothing to say and said it very badly. So far as the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) is concerned, he also had nothing to say, but he said it very well. He made the best of a bad job. I was sleeping most of the time, but I understood that the part of his speech that I did not hear very distinctly was also very good. I would like to correct him in one point. however. He spoke of the Ross rifle being tested with forty grains of cordite giving an explosive force of twenty-two tons. I think he will find that nearer to thirty or thirty-five tons. But that is a matter of detail which does not greatly concern us here.

I may point out that the Ross rifle has been in the hands of the soldiers of this country for some time and that over 50,000 of them have been issued. No rifle ever issued to troops has been subject to the criticism, the adverse, interested criticism, to which the Ross rifle has been subjected. And yet, Sir, it stands before the country to-day the peer of any short rifle in existence. The long Ross rifle is but recently out, only a few having been issued, but, so far as issued, they are meeting with favour on every hand. The slight defects, if you may call them defects, that were found to exist in Mark II are already overcome in that rifle. These defects I pointed out in the short barrel, the light barrel and the imperfect safety catch. I have already pointed out that, in the American rifle, they have an unsafe safety catch, whereas in Mark III Ross rifle we have overcome that difficulty absolutely and have an absolutely safe safety-catch. We have also introduced a few minor improvements, such as strong trigger guard and double trigger action. The old trigger action in Mark I is the best. It is the one we wanted from the beginning, but we could not get it adopted. But now we are getting into line with other nations and adopting it. We might have been the first to use it. With these improvements, Mark III rifle stands unsurpassed, unequalled, in the world to-day.

I have been charged further with toadying to the Minister of Militia and toadying to the Liberal party. One gentleman makes it a cause of criticism that I cross the floor of the House and actually sit down and talk to hon. gentlemen on the other side. Well, I have seen my leader (Mr. R. L. Borden) do that. I have even seen the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) do that. And for myself, I may say that, when I want to talk to a gentleman, I am not afraid to talk to him in daylight. I do not go sneaking around the departments; I do not condemn a fellow member for walking across the floor and talking to a minister on business or on any subject. So, I do not accept censure from the very men in the Tory party, some of whom are accustomed to go to the departments of this government, sneaking round, asking favours and appointments—and getting them. Some of these are among the men who are attacking me in connection with this Ross rifle. I am not afraid to let the world know what I am doing. I have never found it advantageous to play the hypocrite. I am not under any obligation to the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) or the whole Liberal party. I have treated them as gentlemen, but when they have gone astray I have not hesitated to let them feel the weight—whatever it might be, heavy or light—of my indignation. I have been a loyal follower, so far as I could be, of the leader of the opposition; and so long as the Conservative party takes a straight line I will follow it. But, as I have said, I owe no allegiance to any man that affects my allegiance to my own conscience. So, when the Conservative party departs from the course of right as they have done in this case, as they did on the Yukon question, and as they did on the Manitoba school question, I will not follow it. I owe allegiance to my own conscience first and to my constituents second. I am not afraid to stand on my record. And, should I choose to come back to parliament, after the next election, you will find the electors of Victoria and Haliburton will not hesitate to back up your humble servant. I do not know whether the hon. member for Sherbrooke will be able to say as much regarding his constituency. At all events, I will be able to look the hon. member for Sherbrooke, or his constituency, or my own constituency of Victoria and Haliburton in the face, without fear that it can ever be shown that I have played the sneak, trying to track down, or injure or ruin the reputation of a fellow member. If any member wished to attack me, he should have been loyal enough to come to me. He should have come and said to me: I understand you have been caught grafting and I have the data here against you; prepare to defend yourself and get out of it as well as you can. But I had to learn from the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) of the complaints that the hon. member was bringing this year and last year. I reasoned with the hon. member for Beauharnois. For weeks after, I could not convince him that I was not in it up to the neck. I explain this to show why I was so persistent in fighting this matter out in the Public Accounts Committee last year and this year, and why I propose fighting it out to the bitter end.

Mr. GEORGE W. FOWLER (Kings and Albert). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) who has just taken his seat has enjoyed the singular and unique experience of receiving the plaudits of the party to which he is usually opposed in this House. They have received him with a good deal of enthusiasm. The right hon. premier (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself has done him the honour of remaining in the chamber—contrary to his usual wont—during the whole of his speech.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He knows a good thing.

Mr. FOWLER. Then, either he does not always know it, or the hon. gentleman (Sam Hughes) is not always good, because the Prime Minister seldom remains in the House when the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton is speaking. Sir Frederick Borden has also remained during the whole of the remarks of the hon. member. We find, Sir, that a momentary gleam of intelligence, fleeting it is true, has lighted up the face of the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman), so greatly did he appreciate it. Among the rank and file, why, they were so enthusiastic that even the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Johnston) could scarcely forebear to cheer ; and when that hon. gentleman cheers Tory speakers we know that he has very strong party reasons for it.

Now the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam Hughes) has given us a historical sketch in which there may have been some fact, but there certainly was a great deal of fiction. I should judge, reckoning on a basis of a thousand parts, about one part fact to 999 of fiction, which after all, is about as near the facts as the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton ever gets. He has told us that so greatly was he honoured by his party, so much did they appreciate his services in connection with the militia of this country, that Sir Charles Tupper, when premier of this country, was anxious to obtain his services, not only as adjutant general but also as Deputy Minister of Militia.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. No, I did not say that, Deputy Minister of Militia in 1891, when Sir John Abbott was Premier.

Mr. FOWLER. Then they recognized his tremendous services a little earlier than I thought they did. That of course will go to the country. He more than intimated that he could have been Minister of Militia, a much higher position, I assume, in 1896. Well, Sir, we have only the hon. gentleman's word for that, that is all we have for it.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. No, there are men in this House to-day who know it.

Mr. FOWLER. I venture to say that there is not a man in this House who will say so, except the hon. gentleman himself. Now the hon. gentleman has seen fit—I do not know why he did so—to make an attack upon the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington). It was not necessary, surely, for him, in the defence of his intimate friend, his bosom companion, Sir Charles Ross, and his rifle factory, which is largely the creation, I should say, of Sir Charles Ross and the member for Victoria and Haliburton—it was not necessary, in order to defend this rifle from the hallucination in the minds of the people that there was anything wrong with it, that he should attack the hon. member for Sherbrooke. Was the hon. member for Sherbrooke outside his rights as a member of this House, as a representative of the people of this country, in making a criticism of this rifle ? Has it come to this, that a man exercising what he conceives to be his public duty in the interests of his constituents, who criticises a rifle that has been put in the hands of the militia of this country, shall be charged with all sorts of improper motives because he makes this criticism, and because he happens to touch the feelings of my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton ? It is very easy, Mr. Speaker, to attribute motives to people. The hon. gentleman has a somewhat diseased imagination in attributing motives.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. The hon. member for Kings (Mr. Fowler) is the greatest expert in the House in that sort of thing.

Mr. FOWLER. Then I will justify that statement of my hon. friend in a minute by attributing a few to him. I say it is easy for a man to attribute motives to another, but he should be very careful lest the circumstances surrounding his own case should make him particularly liable to reprisals. Now I do not propose to attribute any motives to the member for Victoria and Haliburton, because he has told us that he alone of all the men in this country is independent. He looks only to the welfare of his country. Party ties have no effect upon him, they do not bind him in any way, he is ready to snap them at a moment's notice. He looks only and solely to the welfare of the country.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. He has never formed a coalition with the enemy.

Mr. FOWLER. We are not so sure about that, either. Now I want to show that the circumstances surrounding the hon. gentleman's case would lead a person who was not of a specially suspicious mind to suspect some of the motives impelling the hon. member to give his most strenuous support to this Ross rifle. What do we find to be the fact ? What singular coincidence has occurred ? We find that not very long ago, in a previous session, the hon. gentleman took occasion most strenuously to endorse the Ross rifle. He was fierce in his denunciation of any one who would venture, who would dare to criticise it. That was in an evening session of this House when the militia estimates were under discussion. The next day there was a meeting of the Dominion Rifle Association held in the city of Ottawa, and at that meeting the Minister of Militia rose, as I am informed—I was not there, the hon. gentleman may correct me if I am wrong—rose in that meeting and nominated the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton as president of the Dominion Rifle Association, and the hon. gentleman having the recommendation of the Minister of Militia, was elected by acclamation. That is one post that the hon. gentleman obtained through the recommendation of the Minister of Militia.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. How long had he been senior vice-president ?

Mr. FOWLER. As long as his chances for being president were nil. He was put in as vice-president just as Mr. Roosevelt was put in as Vice President of the United States, in order to shelve him so that he might never be president. But for the kindly recommendation of the Minister of Militia, he would never have become president of the Dominion Rifle Association.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think it is only fair to say that when the then president of the Dominion Rifle Association, the immediate predecessor of the member for Victoria and Haliburton, was chosen, that was Colonel Gibson, he was nominated by the then Minister of Militia, a Conservative, Sir Mackenzie Bowell. I knew that to be the fact, and it seemed to be only a proper return for the Minister of Militia of the Liberal government to suggest the appointment of a distinguished soldier and member of parliament on the Conservative side. That is the way he was nominated, not in payment for support of the Ross rifle; because my hon. friend is the leader of that particular party, and I am his supporter.

Mr. FOWLER. The Minister of Militia I have no doubt is quite correct in what he says, I am not imputing any motives, but I am pointing out these strange coincidences that have occurred. Here we have another fact, the fact that this hon. gentleman holds a considerable number of offices under this government, although he is supposed to be in opposition. Now I want to compliment the Minister of Militia on that fact. The Minister of Militia is an astute gentleman, and he realizes to the full the value of the services which the hon. gentleman for Victoria and Haliburton could render to this country, and therefore he made the pay proportionate to the value of the services. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton is a Brevet Colonel, no longer displaying those diminutive letters, Lieutenant, but C-O-L. It is full Colonel now, mark you. He is president of the Dominion Rifle Association. That is a position which is not directly in the gift of the administration, but indirectly very much in the gift of the administration. Then, the hon. gentleman has received, at the hands of his generous friend, the Fenian medal. There must have been an awful struggle in the hon. gentleman's mind when he had the opportunity of getting this medal because you know the Fenian raid took place a great many years ago and the hon. gentleman had been trying to convince his myriad of lady admirers that he was still young, in the eligible ranks, that he had not become a veteran; but, you see that he got the medal for service in the Fenian raid in 1870, an event which took place 38 years ago and he must have been more than a babe in arms at that time or he could not have done so much for his country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I will tell the hon. gentleman that I was entitled to the Fenian raid medal of 1866.

Mr. FOWLER. Better still.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, if I had applied for it.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, the hon. gentleman is very much older than I thought.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. One would think him about 45. If the hon. gentleman was at the raid of 1866 he would be very young at the time. He would be like a witness who said that he had been farming all his life and when asked what he did the first year he replied that he milked. The hon. gentleman is also a member of the committee—he is chairman, no mere, ordinary, one-horse member, but he is chairman of the committee on small arms.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why do you not say he is president ?

Mr. FOWLER. Same thing.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I want to keep the hon. gentleman absolutely right.

Mr. FOWLER. I know how sweetly these high sounding titles sound in his ears and therefore I should not have minimized it by calling him chairman instead of president.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. member for Sherbrooke should have primed you better.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman is chattering so that I want to say something to him. He said that the mountain had laboured and brought forth a mouse. He was referring then to my hon. friend from Sherbrooke. It would seem to me to be fair to say that the mouse that was brought forth was the hon. gentleman himself.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How clever.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman at length has come out in the open. He has been in hiding to some extent but at length he has been brought forth. He said that it was stillborn. That does not apply to the hon. gentleman because he is very far from being stillborn. It would be better perhaps and take up less time of this House if he had been. Not only is the hon. gentleman president of the small arms committee, but he is also on the general staff, on this top-heavy staff that we have. What was he put on for?—as a make-weight to keep it down? Again recognizing the fact that the hon. gentleman's real services were not of very much value. The hon. gentleman is on as 'unpaid' getting full value for the services which he renders the country.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I had the honour of being put on that staff by Lord Dundonald, and these words were placed in there in my own handwriting.

Mr. FOWLER. My hon. friend would have us believe that Lord Dundonald had tremendous influence. He had not even enough influence to save his own head let alone put a crown on the head of the hon. gentleman.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I may say that my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) was not put on without my consent. Lord Dundonald did not run the militia of this country as is pretty well known.

Mr. FOWLER. Pretty well known.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Agriculture was running it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Occasionally he helped.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) has enjoyed a very great number of honours at the hands of this administration and these have been chiefly dispensed by the Minister of Militia and Defence. He has been made a brevet colonel, he has been given the Fenian medal, although I fancy the hon. gentleman would be about a thousand miles away from the Fenians.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not come from Kings and Albert.

Mr. FOWLER. You never would have been allowed to come from Kings county here. They elect a better class of men. Better come again now.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will the hon. gentleman just tell us how he got out of the militia? I am sure it will interest the House.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, the records will show. If my hon. friend can find anything against my record in the militia he can produce it. I do not make nearly as much of it as the hon. gentleman does in the 'Parliamentary Companion,' where he takes up a page and a half, but in the official record he does not take up half so much space. I will give you the space that he takes up: A page and a half in the 'Parliamentary Companion' which he writes or supplies himself; a line in the official record. That is the position of the hon. gentleman with respect to his records. He has seen fit in this House to attack the record and throw insinuations upon the motives of a man who, as far as the official record shows, occupies a very much higher position in connection with the militia of this country. While I am on that point I might as well refer to it. The hon. gentleman's record can be found at page 286 of the Quarterly Militia List of the Dominion of Canada, corrected to the 1st April, 1908, so that my hon. friend cannot say that it is not quite up to date. Here we have the following record:

Hughes, Samuel: Fenian Raid, 1870; general service medal with one clasp.

That is for the Fenian raid of 1870.

South African war, 1899-1900.

Now, is not that a shame? The war would not have been ended in South Africa if he had not gone. And look at all the obstacles that were thrown in his way! Who threw these obstacles in the way? It must have been the Boers; they knew that he would end the war if he got out there and therefore they made it difficult for him. But, with that splendid courage that surmounts all difficulties, all obstacles, casts them aside as if they were mere chaff in his way, that hon. gentleman did at length arrive in South Africa and after he had convinced Roberts and Kitchener that he knew it all, they took his advice and the war ended. Let us compare the record of the hon. member for Sherbrooke with that of the hon. member for—I was going to say South Africa—Victoria and Haliburton. Let us compare the record of the hon. member for Sherbrooke as it appears in this same official record. It takes up ten lines of the record. Ten lines of the official record to show what the hon. member for Sherbrooke has done; one line of the official record to show what the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton has done! Oh, what an ungrateful country Canada is. What a cold step mother it has proved to the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton, not recognizing the tremendous, the splendid services which he has rendered to the country or the great honour and glory that he has brought upon Canada. Why? It has not recognized the fact, although others have recognized it, that the hon. gentleman is the bosom friend of Chamberlain, the bosom friend of Roseberry. He gives them pointers. He devises Chamberlain's scheme of protection for Great Britain, of tariff reform. That scheme was framed solely upon hints which Chamberlain had received from the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton in the many interviews that he had with him. He was also on exceedingly intimate terms with the great poet Rudyard Kipling, and, just in that connection, I would like to read a little poem, said to have been written by Rudyard Kipling in which the hon. gentleman appears as the central figure. Mr. Speaker, with your kind permission, I will read this poem :

The gallant Sam enjoys a fight,
At Fabre's farm his fame was bright,
He drew his sword and waved it high
And yelled ' Now watch the Dutchmen fly.'
The foe was frightened half to death
And ran till he was out of breath.
No single moment did he lose,
He knew the voice of Colonel Hughes.

So you see that the hon. gentleman has been sadder——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the hon. gentleman pardon me? I want to correct him on one point. He has not told the House that all these statements in the militia lists are written by the men whose names appear there. I have never required to write my record in the militia list but now that my attention is drawn to it I may do so. I am not ashamed of my record. I do not need militia lists to show my record. I may say more than that. I was not hiding at Fabre's Farm.

Mr. FOWLER. There cannot be a stronger confirmation of the hon. gentleman's statement that he did not write this in the militia list than the very fact that it only occupies one line. I think the House will agree with me that if that record were written by the person himself it would take at least two pages.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Pretty nearly that.

Mr. FOWLER. He says he was not in hiding at Fabre's Farm and I do not know what he refers to. I was not at Fabre's farm and therefore I could not hide there. But if there were some bales of hay there —good hay from Three Rivers at $30 a ton warranted not only to keep out an ordinary Mauser bullet but a cannon ball—I would not have been able to get behind it you know—they say some people did. Now, I was speaking a while ago about the tremendous number of honours and dignities that have been conferered upon my hon. and gallant friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes). He seems to have had some what of a pull—whether a straight pull like the Ross rifle or a crooked pull it is not for me to say. Anyhow the result of his pull, whether it be straight or crooked, has been very much better than the result of the straight pull on the Ross rifle. He has told us that there are only a very few defects and these only trivial defects in the Ross rifle. Well, it seems to me that the accidents which have occurred would not be regarded as trivial by the persons who suffered them. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) was shooting at a mark beside another man, and if a portion of the magazine of the other man's rifle blew out and hit him in the eye he would not consider it a very trivial thing. It is not very considerate of the hon. gentleman to speak in this light tone of accidents of that kind to the militiamen of this country. Of course the hon. gentleman has waded so much in bloodshed and gore; he has seen so many thousands and millions of men slaughtered and has slaughtered so many himself, that a mere trifling accident of that kind would appear small indeed to him. He says there are few defects in the Ross rifle but we have spent a great deal of money on that rifle and we have put it in the hands of the militiamen of our country and we will see what these defects are. He spent at least half an hour of his speech in commendation of the magazine of this rifle, and here I want to say this : That I propose to give the report of Colonel Lessard, Brevet Colonel Lessard, C.B., also a South African veteran and adjutant general to-day of the Dominion of Canada. Of course that is a position that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) contemptuously refused.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOWLER. Colonel Lessard was in South Africa. He also had a career there, he was mentioned in despatches, he was honoured by the British government with the title of Companion of the Bath. I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) is such a democrat that he would have refused such a title ; probably he would refuse knighthood for his services, but he has said nothing about that in the autobiography he has given us in Parliamentary Companion. Colonel Lessard is making his report to the master general of the Ordnance and he says :

About 20 per cent of the rifles were damaged during practice.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If you are honest you will read what goes before that and you will see it is not Colonel Lessard's own opinion.

Mr. FOWLER. I am reading Colonel Lessard's report. He says :

I have the honour to state from the reports of the officers commanding ' A ' and ' B ' Squadrons, Royal Canadian Dragoons, relative to the Ross rifles at present in their charge.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is right.

Mr. FOWLER. Every one knows he did not fire all these rifles himself. What has that to do with it any way? Did Colonel Lessard issue a false report ? I cannot understand the point my hon. friend is trying to make :

About 20 per cent of the rifles were damaged during practice, the following being the principal defects: the retaining lugs on the bolts are very weak and a number of them broke off (about 4 or 5).

And this is what Colonel Lessard in his report says about the magazines that my hon. friend has spent so much time in lauding to the skies.

The magazines were useless.

Useless, and this was mark 11 rifle, not mark 1 which has been discarded. The magazines were useless although we had spent over half a million dollars for these rifles when only 136 of them had been delivered.

The magazines were useless. In almost every case when the magazines were ordered to be used the cartridges jammed at the second shot.

It was not a case here and there but as Colonel Lessard says in almost every case the cartridges jammed at the second shot.

There seemed to be a weakness on the platform spring. The leaf of the back sight in nearly every case had to be adjusted after each shot and seemed to be very easily injured.

There is the report of Colonel Lessard and it is not dated back in 1905 but it is dated the 29th of July, 1907. It seems to me that it requires a tremendous amount of nerve both on the part of the Minister of Militia and the member for Victoria to stand up in this House and attempt to defend the character of the Ross rifle. Now, Sirs I have here the report of General Cotton. He was a colonel when this report was made but I guess he is a general since. These promotions in the militia take place so rapidly to-day that one hardly knows how to style a man when you meet him. It is generally safe to call him a general because it will never offend him but if he happened to be a general and you called him a colonel you would incur his everlasting antipathy.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. You should not forget that I promoted you to be major.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman had better not chatter so much ; he seems to be afraid.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton is not afraid of anything the hon. member for Kings and Albert can say directly or indirectly, and he might just as well understand that right here now.

Mr. FOWLER. Who's afraid ? The bold and gallant soldier from Victoria and Haliburton. Who's afraid. I would not want the hon. gentleman to be afraid. To think that the gallant member is afraid. Of course not, perish the thought.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I may take the hon. gentleman for Kings in hand some day.

Mr. FOWLER. This is what General Cotton says and this report is dated the 8th of October, 1906.

Most of the defects are those of which we are aware, but some further rather startling weaknesses have shown themselves.

That is strong language. The hon. member for Sherbrooke, in any denunciation he has ever made of this Ross rifle, has not used any stronger language than that of these two distinguished soldiers. General Cotton and General Lessard are both, I think, on the general staff, the same staff to which my hon. friend has been appointed in an unpaid position.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) enjoys a certain amount of distinction in this country as a marksman of notoriety—I was going to say of note. On one occasion he went down to the butts, bearing on his manly shoulders one of these Ross rifles. On his arrival there he undertook to show the ignorant militia men who did not appreciate a good thing when they saw it, the wonderful advantages of the Ross rifle as an arm for target practice. So he fired eight shots, and in doing so gathered up the nicest little nest of goose eggs one could imagine—eight good, full, round goose eggs; he never struck the target once. He fired at six hundred yards at a nine-foot target, about the size of barn door, and a double door at that. Here was the gallant soldier who had come from South Africa with a belt full of Boer scalps, but who couldn't hit a barn door at six hundred yards. Now, against the hon. gentleman's commendation of this Ross rifle I am going to put the statement of another marksman, a marksman of international reputation, a man who for the first time won for Canada the much-coveted Queen's prize—Sergeant Hayhurst, the sergeant instructor of musketry of the 13th regiment, with headquarters at Hamilton, a regiment which the Minister of Militia has described as one of the best infantry regiments in Canada. Sergeant Hayhurst gives an exhaustive report on the Ross rifle, practically every line of which is a condemnation of it. This is what he says of the magazine :

As to the magazine there is no question but that it would be much improved by the introduction of the clip feed in place of the hand feed. I found after careful practice that more cartridges go on the ground than into the magazine, and this would be much worse under the excitement of even rapid fire, not to speak of action.

Which, Mr. Speaker, would you prefer to take, the commendation of the goose-egg marksman or the commendation of the Queen's prize marksman. Sergeant Hayhurst goes on to say :

Stock—There is much that could be improved in this feature particularly the fitting, selection of material and strength.

This report is dated when ? The 20th of December, 1907, only a few months ago. They have been working at this Ross rifle since 1902, more than five years; and yet these are the criticisms made of it by one of the foremost riflemen of Canada. Still the Minister of Militia will stand up in his place and say that he wants no better monument to perpetuate his memory than the fact that he was the godfather of the Ross rifle, an honour which he of course shares with the member for Victoria and Haliburton. Sergeant Hayhurst says further :
