Showing that the judgment of the court in this matter reposed entirely, not upon the orignial Act to which they were parties, but upon subsequent legislation and subsequent events. Then, in the judgment of Sir Elzear Taschereau, there is this passage :

It may well be that the framers of the British North America Act have not foreseen or provided for every possible eventuality in the respective positions of the different provinces of the Dominion as to population or other matters; it may be that some provinces would have refused to join the union had they foreseen all the results that their adhesion to it is now ascertained to carry, but with such consideration we are not here concerned.

Of course Sir Elzear Taschereau sitting as a judge was interpreting in strictness of law the language of a statute that was before him. But I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and the members of this House, if that which Sir Elzear Taschereau said was not a consideration for him is not fairly a consideration for this parliament—whether the confederation delegates could resonably have foreseen these conditions. If they could not, and the conditions have since been altered by legislation with which they had nothing to do, then I say it is but simple justice and equity that this parliament should intervene to restore the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, to the position which they undoubtedly occupied, to the position which was undoubtedly guaranteed to them by the Act as it was originally passed. In conclusion I feel that, although this matter has been before the House on several occasions, it is one of such great importance to the province of New Brunswick that I must renew my urgent request that the government take action and remedy the injustice, the admitted injustice, from which we have suffered.

MILITIA TRAINING CAMPS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the motion carries I would like to ask the Minister of Militia whether he is prepared to give a statement with respect to the camps?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The statement which I made this morning was practically correct. It having been decided to hold camps of instruction in eastern Canada and the maritime provinces, a militia order was at once issued, dated the 11th May, giving the places and dates of same, also the provisional staffs and brigades to be trained thereat. The dates fixed were approximately, the same as in previous years, which have been found to be more convenient for the officers and men of the several corps ordered to train in those camps. Changes have been ordered in the dates of certain of the camps for the following reasons :

Goderich, Ont.—From the 16th to the 15th instant, by special request of the Grand Trunk railway, owing to the necessary rolling stock not being available to handle the troops on the 27th of June, that is the date of the closing of the camp.

Niagara, Ont.—From the 9th to the 15th of June. The officer commanding Western Ontario having reported that, owing to the weather being backward, more time was needed for the installation of the water supply system; it having been decided to remedy, this year, a complaint which has existed for some time past relative to the insufficient water supply at that camp. The postponement was also necessary owing to seeding being delayed.

Barriefield, Ont.—From the 15th June to the 31st August. The officer commanding Eastern Ontario has stated that the medical officer has strongly reported against using water for this year's camp obtained from the same source as last year. To complete the necessary arrangements to obtain water from a fresh supply will occupy some little time, hence the recommendation that camp be postponed this year until after harvesting operations are completed.

Rockliffe, Ont.—From June 22nd to date not yet fixed. Last year the troops in No. 4 military district trained at the permanent camp grounds at Petawawa, but, owing to typhoid fever developing subsequently among the permanent force in camp there, it was decided to install a complete drainage system at Petawawa this year, thus rendering the camp ground there unavailable at the present time, hence the decision to hold the camp at Rockliffe. The Ottawa city authorities have undertaken to lay a three inch water pipe to the range.

The contract for the pipe was given on May 12, but the department has since been informed that the pipe required has not yet been shipped from Scotland. Therefore the mains cannot be put in in time to permit of the camp being held on the 22nd instant.

The date has not yet been fixed, but it is hoped that it may be within a few days after that date.

Laprairie, P.Q.—The officer commanding, Quebec command, has recommended that the proposed camp at Laprairie be either postponed, or another place selected, as, owing to the recent floods, the camp ground is in a swampy and unsanitary state.

Mr. DANIEL. When will the Sussex camp be held ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have no dates here, but there is no change in the date, whatever it is. The date has been published and the dates also, of the Nova Scotia camps. There has been no change. They are generally held later in the season. The Nova Scotia camp at Aldershot is always held in September.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Except in so far as the minister has mentioned, the dates will be the same as already announced ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. In addition there was a militia order passed on the 29th ult., which I presume has caused the inquiry to be made and may have caused some of the remarks to which the hon. leader of the opposition referred, I think, last evening in the House as having been made in the newspapers. At any rate, I have seen some references in the newspapers to this order, No. 8, of the 27th of May, which is as follows :

It is notified, for the information of all concerned, that, in the event of provision not being made by parliament for the several camps of instruction referred to in militia orders Nos. 66 (1) and 108 (1), 1908, prior to the dates fixed for their commencement, it will be necessary to postpone the same until the requisite funds are available.

That is the order. Of course, it would be impossible to go into camp until the funds were voted, but there are some days yet before the camps would begin. Therefore, there is ample time. This was thought to be a proper precautionary notice to give. In addition, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that in so far as the camps of western Canada are concerned, that is Manitoba, the Northwest and British Columbia, they are proceeding as the department has funds. The one-eighth vote which was granted some time ago under the Supply Bill approved by His Excellency, is in hand for these camps and they are being carried on.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Although there is a vote in the estimates, I am not aware of parliament, up to the present time, having been requested to vote the necessary funds for the camps, and I can only say that if the request had been made it would have been favourably entertained.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is plenty of time yet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is plenty of time yet, as the minister says. Therefore, while the notice was sent out, properly, no doubt, by way of precaution, it has given rise to certain rumours which have come to me and for that reason, I desired to have the matter cleared up, and at the same time to make it perfectly apparent that we did not obstruct the granting of supplies for the camps simply for the reason that we have not been asked to vote the money.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Of course, the militia vote is a part only of the Supply Bill and although the vote might be granted, although the full amount might be passed by this House of the money necessary for the annual camps, it would not follow that the money would be available until it had passed through the Upper House and received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General. As a matter of fact, the whole Supply Bill has been before parliament for some months. I may say that the militia votes were called earlier in the session, but the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster)—and I am not complaining of this—took exception to going on with the votes, because at that time either some of the reports connected with the department or the portion of the Auditor General's Report referring to the militia estimates of last year had not been laid on the table of the House. I take no exception to that. I think it was a perfectly fair objection to make.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As far as the Supply Bill is concerned, of course, it is quite practicable to do as has been done on many occasions—pass an emergency Supply Bill with respect to any service if the government think that course proper or advisable.

Mr. FIELDING. I am obliged to dissent from the statement of my hon. friend when he says that no obstacle has been placed in the way of the passing of the militia estimates. I wish to say that an approach was made to hon. gentlemen opposite to take a vote on account for the public service, and that we received intimation that it would not meet their concurrence. However, it is six o'clock and perhaps you, Mr. Speaker, do not wish to remain any longer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The only militia estimates that were placed before the House went through on the 26th of May, after five minutes discussion.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not specifying which estimates were passed or were not passed ; I am simply saying that an application was made to hon. gentlemen opposite to take a vote on account of the whole of the services of the country, including the militia estimates, and we were informed that we would not have their co-operation to do that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As a matter of fact, the application was made by the government to pass militia estimates received instant attention. Subsequent to that difficulties arose with respect to a certain Bill and when hon. gentlemen opposite requested that the rules of the House should be superseded there was not that concurrence which had been manifested on a previous occasion.

Mr. FIELDING. Whatever may have been the cause of the hon. gentleman's objection, it is not for me to say. I do not want to discuss it, but I wish to state that it is within my personal knowledge that application was made to hon. gentlemen opposite to co-operate with us in making a further vote on account to permit the public services to be carried on and that hon. gentlemen could not co-operate with us. I am not finding any fault, but I am putting on record a fact which is beyond controversy.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The proposition which was made to us was that the rules of the House should be suspended and that we should depart from the ordinary course.

Mr. FIELDING. The proposition was the same as was made before to vote a sum on account, including the militia estimates, to assist us in carrying on the public service.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was to suspend the rules of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. All right.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Lest it should seem discourteous if nothing were said on our part, I desire to say a few words with reference to the observations of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) on the very important subject to which he invited the attention of the House to-day. I think it was worthy—if it had to be dealt with at all—of receiving fairer treatment than the hon. gentleman himself gave it, or than he permitted the House to give it. At an early stage of the session the hon. gentleman placed a notice on the paper intimating his intention to bring this matter before the House and he had abundant opportunity to do so, but for his own reasons he did not avail himself of it, and months passed, and now in the seventh month of the session he has brought up the question at a time and in a manner which certainly is not calculated to advance the cause he claimed to have at heart. He brought it up in an empty House with little more than a quorum present, with half a dozen of his own friends in the House, with the two front benches of the opposition vacant nearly all day, and with indeed a similar condition on both sides of the House. It was quite evident that the object of my hon. friend was not so much to invite the attention of the House to the matter as to join his friends in that policy of delaying the business of the House which in their judgment they have seen fit to pursue. Now, I desire to say that while the representation of the maritime provinces is an important question, there are at this moment more important questions which concern the maritime provinces as they concern all other provinces of the Dominion. In our judgment the most important business this parliament can do now is to devote its attention (after fair inquiry and criticism) to the appropriation of the sums of money needed for the carrying on of the public service, for the payment of our officials, for providing the money for Public Works, and for all these services which the Dominion has to carry out. Believing that any extended discussion would simply play the part that my hon. friend desired to play, and assist in the policy of delay in the voting of supplies, I do not think it necessary to enter into any extended discussion of the question, important though it is. I would therefore say to my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) were he in his place, that if we do not allow his observations to pass without notice—because that would seem discourteous—we are obliged to consider that important as the question is that he brought before the House it is less important than voting supplies for the public service.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee of Supply.

Immigration—Salaries, agents, employees, Canada, Great Britain, and foreign countries, &c., $200,000.

Mr. MONK. Are the moneys paid on account of the immigration service in England paid through the London office and at what intervals are statements rendered here?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The salaries are paid monthly and the other accounts are paid as presented on cheques signed by the High Commissioner conjointly with the assistant commissioner of immigration. The accounts are sent here every month to be entered in the books of the department.

Mr. MONK. What proportion of this $200,000 is expended in the British Isles, what proportion in France, and what proportion in continental European countries?

Mr. OLIVER. Great Britain and Ireland, $32,484; United States, $43,320; Canada, $119,140; continental Europe, $4,700.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Wiallard and Mr. Geoffrion are I think the only two immigration agents we have in France and there is considerable complaint about the service in that country. I do not think Mr. Wiallard has made any special study of immigration. He is a Frenchman by birth was occupied in other things while in France and when in Canada I do not think he devoted any of his attention to that subject. Mr. Geoffrion is a young lawyer who I think has in no way studied the subject of immigration except perhaps since the government recently sent him to France. Does the government intend appointing other agents in France? What reports have been received from Mr. Wiallard and Mr. Geoffrion? There is very good immigration to be had from France but proper means must be taken to get it. I have never seen any of Mr. Wiallard's reports in any of our official publications. Mr. Geoffrion is a very nice young man no doubt, and apart from letters he has written to the papers and which indicate that he is having a very pleasant time in Paris, nothing has been brought to our notice to show that he has taken up seriously the question of immigration. I would like to know if the minister has received any report from either of these gentlemen, and what is the general direction of their efforts ? Is it in Paris that they are looking for immigrants, or have they made any efforts in the provinces of France ?

Mr. OLIVER. When I visited France in 1906, I saw Mr. Wiallard and discussed the subject of immigration with him. He informed me that his plan of operation was, by means of newspaper advertising or otherwise, to get into communication with people in the country parts who would be likely to emigrate to Canada and to become desirable settlers. Then he made it his business to go to that part of the country and take counsel with these people. When he was successful in inducing them to look favourably on the project of emigrating to Canada, he saw what was to be done with regard to their embarkation. His work was personal and direct. He explained to me that under the restrictive laws of France a campaign such as we were able to carry on in England was not possible in France, and that we had to depend either on a very cautiously carried on publicity campaign or on personal effort such as he was putting forth. He is assisted by Mr. Geoffrion and by Mr. Montpetit, who is employed temporarily. Besides these, Mr. Foursin is employed in the office. We sent to France several farm delegates such as we sent to Great Britain and Belgium. We have also selected certain responsible booking agents in France to whom we pay commissions on immigrants who pass our inspection and are otherwise satisfactory to us.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend, before he occupied the responsible position which he occupies to-day, and when I think he entertained somewhat different opinions on immigration from those which he seems to hold to-day, expressed an idea which I have found confirmed by all those of long experience in immigration; that was, that the immigrant must be followed from the time he has been selected in a foreign country until he gets absolutely settled and acclimatized in Canada. In the province of Quebec, the provincial immigration agents succeed very well, because they correspond with the immigrant before he comes out here, or with societies that take an interest in sending immigrants here, and when the immigrant arrives, he is met by these men and is guided by them to the place where it is intended he shall settle. The testimony of those agents is to the effect that for two years at least they have to follow the immigrant. They go at stated periods to see where he is settled, in order to make sure that he is settled there, that he has all the assistance necessary, and that he becomes a good and valuable addition to the nation. I mention that because I have noticed for the last year or two that from most of our numerous agents we get no reports or they are not published in that part of my hon. friends yearly report which relates to immigration. We have several immigration agents in the United States, but what they do is not apparent, so far as I know, from the reports laid before this House; and we have no reports from these agents in France. I think my hon. friend would render very much more effective the work of these men if he required them to make a monthly report, as to the work they are doing, what immigrants they have sent out, what parts of the country they come from, and what is their destination. You would then be able to trace some of those people after their arrival, and a very useful purpose would be served. In regard to Mr. Geoffrion, we have read some very interesting letters of his, from a literary standpoint, as to his impression of France, but they have nothing to do with immigration. I think that young man would be much better employed if he gave us a report every month of what progress he is making in the work he has been sent there to prosecute. The same remark applies to Mr. Wiallard. I think our agents, not only in France, but in all foreign countries, should send us frequent reports, so that we would know how the tide of immigration is flowing in all those countries. I would like also to ask the minister if he has contemplated the possibility of imposing a head tax on immigrants—not such a one as is exigible in the United States, but one that would enable the country to lighten somewhat the burden of its immense immigration budget. I think that this year we shall be spending considerably over a million in the way of payments to agents and others and their expenses of advertising. My own belief is, of course, that we should abolish bonuses, and that we should content ourselves with doing a certain amount of advertising to make our country known. If last year we had imposed a head tax of $2, or half the American head tax, we would have derived from it $500,000 on the immigrants that arrived here. I do not think we would have one immigrant less and we would have had a considerable amount for the purposes of this vote. That is a subject which might well engage the attention of my hon. friend, especially now that our immigration is increasing so much.

Mr. OLIVER. To take the last criticism first, let me point out that our immigration is not increasing.

Mr. MONK. Well, it has increased every year until this.

Mr. OLIVER. It is in the process of very rapid decrease as far as numbers are concerned. That is the tally this year, so far as it has gone, as compared with last year. There is about thirty-seven per cent decrease in ocean port immigration as compared with the first four months of last year. As regards the suggestion concerning the bringing of reports by our agents, I would beg to inform my hon. friend that these gentlemen do report from week to week. It would not be practicable to publish all these reports in the blue-book, but they are available, and my hon. friend or any other hon. member can have access to them whenever he pleases. He is mistaken when he says we have no printed reports from these gentlemen, because I find in the report of the Department of the Interior for the nine months ending March 31, 1907, a report from Mr. Paul Wiallard of Paris, dated April 1, in which he gives a statement of the class of work he is doing and generally such a report as we receive from our different agents in the same service in different parts of the world. My hon. friend would do well to read the report of the Department of the Interior pages 80 and 81.

Mr. MONK. It is a very summary report and there is none from the United States.

Mr. OLIVER. When we have to deal with so many reports, we cannot give much space to each one, but he will find that the report in question is a very complete statement of the case for the space it occupies. Mr. Wiallard mentions that:

> This year we have a delegate, Mr. Vauriot, a Frenchman, settled in Manitoba for many years, and who has succeeded there. He has taken part in some of our gatherings and been able to judge of the work that we do. In company with Mr. Pierre Fourcin, my colleague, whom I sometimes send into the provinces when I am detained in Paris or called in other directions, Mr. Vauriot has himself spoken and given verbal information in regard to the Northwest at five private assemblies held in four days and at each of which there were present from forty to fifty persons, making ready to leave, and in every case enthusiastic for our country.

So that I think we are giving a reasonable measure of publicity to the work we are carrying on in France. It is to be regretted that it is not more extensive, but my hon. friend will understand that there are difficulties in the way which need not be enlarged upon, but which render it neither possible nor advisable in other circumstances and conditions such as prevail in the United States. There are several good colonies of old country French people in different parts of the Northwest, who are very satisfactory as citizens and farmers. Their numbers are being increased in a moderate degree from year to year. As regards my own views on the subject of immigration, while I do not know that they are of interest to the House and the country, my hon. friend and those beside him seem to have some trouble in their minds over them. Well, my views are exactly now what they have always been. I did object some years ago to the system of indiscriminating bonusing, and I say so still. I am not asking the House to sanction such a system but on the contrary a system of most careful and discriminating bonusing. At present instead of bonuses being used simply as a means to secure numbers of immigrants, they are used as a means to secure specially well selected settlers, such as are best suited to our conditions and circumstances. I have, therefore not a word to retract of anything I said regarding immigration in past years, because the policy I am urging at present is distinctly the one I then enunciated.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend is very modest when he says that because we echo the opinions he expressed in this House several years ago in opposition to the then declared policy of the government, we are giving indication that we have trouble on our minds. The policy of the government has not changed since then.

Mr. OLIVER. As far as my poor understanding goes, it has radically changed.

Mr. MONK. I do not want to prolong the discussion, but my recollection is that my hon. friend was then thundering against the importation of Galicians and others from eastern Europe and stated very vigorously that we were grouping in the Northwest elements which would one day cause great trouble. Yet to-day we are paying bonuses in the same part of Europe.

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. MONK. The order in council granting bonuses covers that part of Europe from which the Galicians come although we have not named booking agents there. My own impression is that people coming from that part of Europe book at Antwerp and other western European points and that we actually pay for them. My hon. friend to-day is, however, entirely in accord with the rest of his colleagues upon that point. I shall not deal further with the bonus matter, because I referred to that some time ago. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) points out the report from Mr. Wiallard. I had forgotten his report. But it is a very short report indeed. It seems to me that a man who is entrusted with the direction of a great immigration movement should be able to give us an annual report containing some more detailed information than is to be found in what we can read in the report of Mr. Wiallard, printed in the report of the Department of the Interior. We ought to have a review of several pages informing us fully as to the chances we have of getting immigration from France, what the law is absolutely, to what extent our efforts may go without violation of that law, and what has been done during the previous year, with a quantity of detail. We need not fear the trifling expense of printing a few more pages of this material. We are extravagant enough in other respects, that we need not mind, on such a vital question as immigration, the expense of procuring a sufficient report and printing it. Did I understand the minister to say that we had a weekly report from all our agents ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have a weekly report from all our salaried agents.

Mr. MONK. Then we have such reports from Mr. Wiallard and Mr. Geoffrion ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have from Mr. Wiallard and I think from Mr. Geoffrion also, but, as Mr. Geoffrion is the subordinate, it is possible we may not have a report from him. Mr. Geoffrion is not the agent, Mr. Wiallard is the agent.

Mr. MONK. Would my hon. friend have any objection to laying on the table the reports received from Mr. Wiallard and Mr. Geoffrion during the last few months ?

Mr. OLIVER. No objection.

Mr. MONK. When the discussion on these estimates continues, I should like very much to see them. As regards the immigration agents in the United States, their bills foot up to a very large amount —somewhere between $50,000 and $75,000. Each agency in the United States—and we have a number—costs us between $4,000 and $7,000 a year. I think that we should have, at the end of the year, and should print in the minister's report, something more exhaustive from these officers that we may see exactly what they are doing and judge if their efforts are worth the money we are spending on the posts. My hon. friend knows very well, that most of these agents of ours in the United States are men who never specially qualified for a work which, to my mind, requires study and preparation. They are political friends of the minister, relatives of members of this House on the government side, and so on. That does not mean, nor do I pretend, that they are not qualified for the work ; but it lays upon them, and upon the government the obligation to fully justify the large amount we expend for their wages and expenses. I would suggest to my hon. friend that, for next year, he should get fuller reports from these men. and that we should incur the trifling expense to embody these reports in the annual report of the minister, in order that the people may judge of the value of the efforts being made by these salaried agents. Do I understand the hon. minister to say that the government at one time considered the question of putting on a head tax ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member (Mr. Monk) but I may say, as a matter of information, that when the Immigration Act was introduced in the session of 1906, it contained a provision which would enable the government to impose a head-tax should it see fit to do so. However, that provision was so strenuously opposed by some of my hon. friend's (Mr. Monk) friends that it was thought advisable to drop it. I may say, however, that it was not the intention of the government to impose a head-tax under the conditions then prevailing ; the object was merely to give power to impose such a tax under some such conditions as now prevail which call for direct effort on our part, to exclude, as far as possible, certain classes of immigration. The government, I say, did consider the question of imposing a head-tax, but the House, and especially some hon. gentlemen opposite, seemed to think it inadvisable to confer this power upon the government, and therefore we are not in a position to impose such a tax.

Mr. MONK. This would indicate that the government at that time desired to take the necessary power to impose the tax, and, as he states, the government contemplated that in view of conditions that existed then and now——

Mr. OLIVER. Not then, but such conditions as exist now ;—I do not say the actual conditions existing now, but such conditions.

Mr. MONK. I do not look upon the immigration question as a party question. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that it was opposed by hon. gentlemen on his own side.

Mr. OLIVER. It was not a partisan proposition. I merely mentioned the fact that it was opposed by some hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MONK. I take the hon. gentleman's assurance as to that, having no recollection of it. I assure him that if I had been in the House I would have supported the proposition very strongly, because I believe that a small head-tax would recoup us a good deal of the expense to which the country is put on account of immigration. The hon. gentleman will find that in the United States not only do they impose a head-tax, but that they have increased year by year, and yet every year have had a larger immigration than the year before. The reports of the superintendent general of immigration of the United States are all in the same direction—that the imposition of a head-tax has not prevented the coming in of immigrants, but, in the United States, this tax enables the authorities to meet every single dollar of the immense expense occasioned by immigration inspection and management and have a handsome surplus at the end of the year. I think that if our government had that power it would be necessary for the government to consider whether it ought not to use that power, at least to some extent. The position in the province of Quebec is this—and I think it must apply to every province that has ocean ports: the serious, earnest immigrant who intends to settle on the land, as a rule, goes through our province to the west, and this is the tendency with the large crowds of immigrants who arrive during the summer months. But the worthless immigrants and the malefactors—for there are many of these who come—stay in the large cities. It is an absolute affliction in the city of Montreal, the number of immigrants who, when they land, stick in the city and become criminals there. My hon. friend will find, if he seeks information from our magistrates, and even from the judge of our higher criminal courts, that most of those who have, in the last few years, before these tribunals for serious offences, such as assault and murder, are immigrants. These cases are far less frequent in the Northwest. Those who observe the movement tell me that the farmer and the farm labourer who settle on the land, come in through the ocean ports and go thence into the interior. Under those circumstances I think the imposition of a head-tax would deter, not the immigrants who are useful, but those who come out here either because they are sent away or helped out of those countries, or those who come here to pursue a career of crime.

I would like to say a word in regard to French immigration. As I have already mentioned in this House, there are parts of France where we can get an excellent class of immigrants, men of good reputation, who would settle on the land. I mentioned at that time that from the southern ports of France there had gone out to the Argentine Republic last year over 17,000 immigrants, from Bordeaux and some other southern ports. They make excellent farmers and law abiding citizens. Under the laws of the Argentine Republic they are not admitted unless they can show by documentary evidence that they have an absolutely clean record in their own country, and every one of those 17,000 immigrants carried to the Argentine Republic a livret such as almost every citizen of France has to carry in his pocket, showing exactly what his record has been. The fact that they were admitted into the Argentine Republic shows that they were men who would make very excellent settlers upon the land. I think it would be well if my hon. friend would call the attention of Mr. Geoffrion, for instance, to the fact of these settlers leaving France last year. Although it would perhaps be a sacrifice to Mr. Geoffrion to leave Paris for a few weeks, I think he could do more useful work in those provinces of France from which this class of immigrants remove.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am glad my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has again brought up the question of French immigration, and has discussed it in so friendly a spirit. The hon. gentleman referred to the relatively large number of immigrants who annually leave the southern ports of France for the Argentine Republic. It is quite true, a large number of immigrants leave, not only the ports of Bordeaux and Marseilles, but all the Mediterranean French ports, for South America. For many years France has had a commercial treaty, with that republic, and there are in Paraguay, for instance, in Uruguay and on the La Plata river, as well as in the Argentine, large French settlements. But we must bear in mind that the reason of this large tide of immigration from the southern ports of France to South America is that there has been for years a number of lines of steamers established and subsidized by the French government and by the southern republics, and where you have a subsidized line of steamers you can trace out the emigrant. Last year I read to the House, and this year again I have seen in the library, exhaustive statistics in regard to French immigraton. We are told that thousands and thousands of French immigrants leave the soil of France every year for South America and for the United States. Last year the figures were given in this House, and I think they showed that there had been 50,000 or 60,000 immigrants leaving France for South America and the United States. Well, Mr. Chairman, these are not by any means all French people that leave the southern ports of France, a great many of them are Italians, Spaniards, Swiss, Syrians and Greeks, who come from their respective countries to Marseilles and Bordeaux where they take ship to cross the ocean. My hon. friend knows that the two largest ports whence Italians emigrate are Naples and Marseilles. Marseilles, in fact, is one of the largest French ports in Europe, coming second after Liverpool. As a matter of fact, however, the French do not emigrate in large numbers. The other day I was reading a book on immigration to the United States of American, and I was surprised to learn that during the last ten years the French immigration to the United States hardly amounted to two per cent of the total immigration. There are some Frenchmen who go to New York, and especially to New Orleans, and a few go to San Francisco and Chicago. According to a statement made by a noted French writer, Le Comte d'Avenel, whose book, no doubt my hon. friend has read, most of the French immigrants coming to the United States are professors, artists, waiters, and so forth. I am pleased to say that it is from France that the artists and professors chiefly come who go to the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend suggests that our agents in Paris should visit some of the most desirable districts in France, and he has mentioned a country which is inhabited by that famous race, the Basques. I am pleased to inform my hon. friend that Dr. Brisson, who has taken a great deal of interest lately in French emigration to Canada, returned a few weeks ago from that region specially inhabited by the Basques, accompanied by two or three hundred of them, and I am sure they will make good settlers on our farm lands.

My hon. friend knows also that in France it is quite difficult to publish anything which might induce immigrants to come to Canada. There has been a standing law since 1861 or 1862, issued under the French empire of Napoleon III, prohibiting any display of advertisements or any inducement to people to emigrate from the country. The reason is quite obvious. In France the birth rate has decreased instead of increased. It is an appalling fact in France to-day that with the exception of the large centres, such as Paris, Marseilles, Bordeaux and in most of the departments, with the exception of the northern departments, the birth rate has decreased very materially. The French government from the economic and national point of view cannot help our agents in carrying out the policy of sending emigrants to Canada or to any other country. That law of 1862 is an edict of the Emperor Napoleon III prohibiting any agents from carrying on any propaganda and inviting the prefects to report immediately or to arrest, if need be, any agents trying to send emigrants to foreign countries. That law has not been applied very severely but it is still on the statute-book of France. My hon. friend was speaking a moment ago of Mr. Wiallard, one of our agents in France. I have read some of the letters that Mr. Wiallard has sent to the Department of the Interior. I had many conversations with him when I was in France two years ago and since that time I have been in correspondence with him, as has my hon. friend, the Speaker of the Senate, who is a personal friend of Mr. Wiallard. Again and again Mr. Wiallard has remonstrated and stated that if the number of emigrants from France to this country was not larger—it has increased very materially the last ten years from practically nothing to 1,600 per year—one reason was that they could not publish in the papers any advertisements in order to give Canada as good a show as possible. He said that he was obliged to be constantly on his guard because he might be remonstrated with by the authorities. My hon. friend knows that Mr. Wiallard is a Frenchman by birth but that he became a Canadian thirty-five years ago. He married a Canadian, his family was born and brought up in Canada and he is interested in seeing that as many as possible should come to Canada of a desirable class. He is personally an able gentleman, a hard worker and a very good agent. In order to dispel from the minds of hon. gentlemen, especially those coming from the province of Quebec, any erroneous idea which they may have, let me state that by the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and also his predecessor we have been treated with very great fairness indeed on this question of French emigration. Through the Hon. Mr. Sifton we have been able to secure the appointment of Mr. Foursin-Escande of the Canadian Bureau of Paris. Mr. Foursin-Escande was brought to this country twenty-five years ago by the late Sir Adolphe Chapleau. He established in the far west several French settlements and I am informed by some of the clergymen whom I know and by some of my hon. friends who represent in this House western constituencies that the French and Belgian settlements in the wast are most prosperous We have obtained from the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) the appointment of Messrs. Geoffrion and Montpetit. I am free to speak of the ability and special fitness of these two gentlemen because my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) knows them personally and knows them well. Both have been his students and have been following his lectures as a professor in Laval Uuiversity. He knows that Messrs. Geoffrion and Montpetit are specially fitted for the positions which they occupy in France. Messrs. Geoffrion and Montpetit are travelling from one department to another in France giving lectures. My hon. friend knows that these lectures have certainly produced good results. Just a word to explain to the House that the department, the head of the department and his subordinates have been very fair towards French immigrants. At my request and at the request of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), they have not only doubled but trebled the number of pamphlets and books on Canada and Canadian resources and the Northwest published by the department and issued every year. Very interesting pamphlets on the country have been issued in French and distributed broad-cast in France through the instrumentality of Messrs. Geoffrion and Montpetit, Wiallard, Foursin-Escande and Fabre.

My hon. friend is probably aware of the campaign which is being waged at present in France against all immigration. There seems to be an increase of bitterness on the part of certain Frenchmen against the emigration of their own kindred to any other country. My hon. friend must have read some very bitter articles published recently by prominent Frenchmen, among others a sensational article written by Senator Delpech and another written by Mr. LaBroue, a member of the French assembly.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. France may some day send her agents to Canada to repatriate these immigrants.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If we increase at the same rapid rate we have in past years, we may some day be able to replenish the population of old France. The Department of the Interior has willingly though cautionsly done its best to encourage desirable immigration from France and the returns show that proportionately we receive a larger number of French immigrants than do the United States. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) also said that Quebec should have the same opportunity as other provinces to retain desirable immigrants for farm work. I may say that at the close of last session we appealed to the Minister of the Interior and he has made the same arrangement for Quebec and for the eastern townships as was in effect with regard to Ontario. Each county can appoint an agent whose name is sent to the immigration authorities at Ottawa and that agent is authorized to meet the incoming steamers and to select a number of immigrants according to the need for labour in his county. Many of the counties in Quebec, (among others the county of Jacques Cartier) have availed themselves of this arrangement made by the Minister of the Interior. I agree with my hon. friend that we should encourage desirable immigration from France, and I believe that we can get excellent settlers from the country of the Basques, from Normandy, from Poitou, from Anjou, and from Brittany. But the work must be done in a manner which will not embarrass the French authorities.

Mr. MONK. The Postmaster General is mistaken when he says that the immigration from France to the American continent, to which I refer, is composed of Italians. As a rule the Italians ship from Naples and Genoa but there are some who sail from the French ports. When I spoke of the 17,000 immigrants who left from Bordeaux, from Arcachon, and from another French port I did not refer to the Italians. From these three ports 17,000 Basques went to the Argentine Republic in 1907. The Year-book for the present year states that in 1905 there were 94,098 Frenchmen in the Argentine and in 1906 there arrived there 127,000 Italians, 79,000 Russians, and 3,698 French from France.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will the hon. gentleman look at the trade returns between France and the Argentine.

Mr. MONK. I do not think France subsidizes any steamship line to the Argentine Republic but if she does then the Minister of Marine was doubly wrong when he gave $200,000 a year to subsidize a direct line between Canada and France without having asked the French government to pay a portion of that subsidy, in view of the fact that it is stated they subsidize a line to the Argentine republic. The statement of the Postmaster General in that regard was a condemnation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as a negotiator. I would not like the Postmaster General to infer that I have any special grievance against Mr. Wiallard or Mr. Geoffrion. I know these gentlemen very well and I would not like to reflect on them but still we must express our opinions in this House on such an important matter as immigration without respect to personal friendship. Mr. Geoffrion is a charming and very talented young man but I would never dream of entrusting him with the work of an immigration agent. The same may be said of Mr. Montpetit. The Postmaster General knows that Mr. Foursin-Escande is too old and infirm to engage in any active work of that kind. The Postmaster General has stated that we are not permitted to conduct an immigration propaganda in France. If that be so how is it that we have four immigration agents in that country and that we cover France with pamphlets and advertising matter just as we do countries where there is no prohibition ? The Postmaster General says we must do it with certain caution, but if the laws of France be against that work he knows Frenchmen well enough to know that it would not be tolerated for five minutes. If there is a country in the world where the eyes of the police and of the secret agents of the government are upon you, it is France, where the government watches the action of every individual in every minute detail. The information which I have from competent men is that there is no impediment whatever to an immigration propaganda being carried on in France. It is a long time since Napoleon III disappeared, and I think the law to which my hon. friend has referred has been abrogated or has fallen into disuse. An agent of the local government has just gone to France from Montreal, at a cost of $5,000, to get servants of every description, and he has publicly advertised his mission. If there were a law in France against that kind of work, does my hon. friend think these operations would be possible ? I think not. How is it that the Minister of the Interior has never taken the trouble to ascertain definitely whether the laws of France allow that kind of work or not ? It is my belief that there is no law against it.

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, yes, there is one, When I was in France I got a copy of the law, and I will send it to my hon. friend.

Mr. MONK. I would like to see it, because I do not think there is such a law that is put into operation.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Although the text of the law has not been sent by Mr. Wiallard, he refers to it in his last report, where he says :

In regard to the question of publicity, as we have already said elsewhere, we cannot make a very active propaganda by means of the press, as is done in England and in the countries where no prohibitive law exists; we enjoy, however, a certain liberty in this respect, of which we shall know how to take advantage, as we have done before. Newspaper articles, distribution of pamphlets having only an historic, geographic, or economic character, and consequently not giving rise to any objection on the part of the authorities, notices drawing the attention of the public to the existence of the office of the Commissioner General for Canada, always ready to give official information as to the advantages offered to certain classes of emigrants; such are the means we have employed up to now and which we count on using further and on a larger scale, to accentuate still further and to increase the favour which our country enjoys in France.

Mr. MONK. This of course does not give us any information as to the real state of the law. It is quite possible that there exists in France some prohibition against actually seducing a man out of his own country and taking him abroad. There are several countries in Europe where it is not allowed to induce a man by false representations to leave the country and go to another country. But this is a different matter, and Mr. Wiallard's opinion as to the extent to which the law goes in France is worth nothing. It is surprising that none of these agents that we have in France should have sent a report, giving us the exact state of the French law on this subject. If it is forbidden to carry on any propaganda in France, why are we spending thousands of dollars every year to maintain agents for the purpose of carrying on that propaganda? My hon. friend says we are doing it cautiously. Well, I must say that I do not like that way of doing things. It reminds me of the mysterious contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company, under which we paid thousands of dollars to agents for the purpose of carrying on a propaganda, and when we wanted to have the names of those agents, my hon. friend, the incarnation of Liberalism in the province of Quebec, voted that we should not have their names and applauded when his leader, the Prime Minister, expressed a fear that they might commit suicide if they were discovered. Does my hon. friend think there is any danger of our young and jovial friend Mr. Geoffrion committing suicide? Oh, no. I entirely approve of the system they have in the United States, and I venture to think, without being a prophet, that we shall have the same system here before long. They forbid all immigration propaganda. They do not spend a single cent to employ people in foreign countries to induce other people to come to the United States. They have never for a single moment entertained such a policy. They consider it undignified. They make their country and its progress known by judicious advertising at world exhibitions, and I venture to say that the United States as a country of settlement is much better known in France than Canada is. So that for my own part I do not at all approve of the system of having immigration agents anywhere. But if we have them in France, we ought to act openly with them. If there is a law there forbidding them, we ought to withdraw them. We pay a considerable sum for these agents, and we ought to know the work they are doing. The fact that they are residing in Paris does not satisfy me that they are employing their time continuously for the purpose of advancing the cause of immigration.

Mr. LENNOX. My hon. friend knows that their work is not confined to Paris. The office of Mr. Fabre is in France, but these agents go into different provinces to do their work, returning on Saturday night to Paris.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend knows that Mr. Wiallard has his residence and his office in Paris. I do not know whether Mr. Geoffrion resides in Paris or not. I assume that he does, from those very interesting letters which he has been sending to the French papers in Montreal, which are dated from Paris, and from which it abundantly appears that his excursions into the provinces do not necessitate his being absent from Paris very long; and in Paris there is not very much immigration work to be done. What alarmed me most in my hon. friend's statement was the announcement that we were going to have immigration agents in each county in the province of Quebec. Is the system which has existed in the province of Ontario of having agents in each county going to be duplicated in the province of Quebec?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly.

Mr. MONK. I am not aware that those agents have been a success in Ontario, and I am afraid that the system will not work much better in Quebec.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The farmers of Ontario are very much pleased with it.

Mr. MONK. I do not think it has served the purpose for which it was established. It was established for the purpose of enabling certain political friends of the government in Ontario the opportunity of making a little money.

Mr. OLIVER. Will my hon. friend tell me the source of his information that the system of distribution agents in Ontario has been a failure?

Mr. MONK. I have seen in the papers a very severe criticism of the system, and one of those agents, I think, was arrested and is being prosecuted in Ontario. I am against all this kind of immigration expenditure. In Ontario it has been resorted to for the purpose of giving encouragement to political friends, and I have no doubt whatever that if the system is now introduced in Quebec, it is for the same object.

Mr. OLIVER. Does it encourage my hon. friend's political supporters to prosecute them?

Mr. MONK. When they are caught with their hands in the cash box, they have to be brought to justice. I think if we were to prosecute all those who waste part of that million and odd dollars spent on immigration, the minister would be kept very busy indeed. We have agents in the eastern townships, and my hon. friend has consented to add to the number by appointing agents in other parts in the province of Quebec, and he consented to do all this because of representations made to him by gentlemen on his side that he must do to the rest of the province of Quebec what he has been doing so abundantly for Ontario the past year or two. I do not think he will deny that.

Mr. OLIVER. What evidence has my hon. friend of this aggressive attitude on the part of the province of Quebec?

Mr. MONK. It is very difficult to give evidence on that point. It is, in that respect, like many other things everybody speaks of, which we hear about in the corridors of this House, which we see hinted at in the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite in the province of Quebec, but if we are asked to do, as we are asked every day in the Public Accounts Committee—if we are asked to produce the best written and absolute proof, such as is required in a court of justice, of course we cannot do it. But there is no one in the province of Quebec who has any doubt about what I have asserted.

Mr. OLIVER. My objection was to the assertion of my hon. friend that it required an aggressive attitude in order to bring to my mind a case of injustice, if one should exist.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend the Postmaster General said last year that there was no immigration from France. I am glad to see him back here so that I may remind him. He said last year that it was useless to seek immigration from France because Frenchmen do not emigrate.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend must not put words in my mouth which I did not utter. I have no hesitation in saying that of all the countries of Europe, France is probably the one which sends the fewest emigrants to foreign countries. I base my opinion on all authorities who have written of late on the subject, and my hon. friend knows perfectly well that such is the case. But I am in favour of desirable French immigration. It will come in a limited number, but if we can capture that limited number, so much the better. We are doing our best in that respect, and we have met on this side of the House from the hon. gentleman who is at the head of the Department of the Interior, and we also did from his predecessor, much sympathy and the best encouragement possible.

Mr. MONK. I notice that my hon. friend is very generous in the praise he bestows on the Minister of the Interior. He even went so far as to praise the previous encumbent of the office.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am only stating the truth. And I am saying this because my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) and his immediate predecessor have been greatly misrepresented in the province of Quebec as being deadly opposed to all French immigration. Why should they be? As a matter of fact they have not. We have received from both the best possible encouragement; but even with the best possible encouragement, as I said last year, we cannot expect a very large flow of immigrants from the country of our ancestors.

Mr. MONK. That eulogium of the previous minister is very significant? Are we to infer that he is coming back? My hon. friend will remember that when the previous minister (Mr. Sifton), towards whom he is so generous to-night, resigned, my hon. friend's organ in Montreal made a terrible attack on him; and among other accusations was this very one, which no doubt emanated from my hon. friend or his neighbour the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), and which went to say that he had been bitterly opposed to all French immigration ever since he was made head of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I never realized how apt is the good English expression 'a figment of the imagination.' This is indeed a figment of my hon. friend's imagination.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend knows very well what appeared in his organ in Montreal.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have no organ there unfortunately.

Mr. MONK. He has a very noisy and turbulent organ in Montreal, and at the time attacks appeared in it, emanating either from my hon. friend or his neighbour the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who both inspire that organ, and the gravamen of these accusations, which appeared every morning against the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) at that time, was that the government were obliged to get rid of him because he was so much opposed to French immigration. Now my hon. friend tells us that he noticed at all times how friendly that hon. gentleman was to that particular branch of the service. My hon. friend says that there are not many emigrants who leave France. That is not what Le Vicomte d'Avanel says. My hon. friend has just referred to that eminent writer.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He deplores the fact that so few Frenchmen avail themselves of the immense opportunities which are to be found in the western states.

Mr. MONK. What he deplores is that they have not taken their share in the immense prosperity of the west.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. And I would infer from his remarks that Frenchmen have not been conspicuous in the development of the west, but I would not infer that they had not emigrated in fair quantities. Another thing remarkable is that he does not point out that there is any law against French emigration. My hon. friend will remember that quite lately in an article in 'La Revue des deux Mondes,' one of the leading French periodicals, written by one of our French lecturers in Montreal, on French emigration—although there are many inaccuracies in his article—he does not refer in any way to the laws of France as being opposed to emigration from that country. My hon. friend was mistaken in saying that there were more immigrants came from France to Canada than came from France to the United States.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In proportion.

Mr. MONK. The proportion of immigration is much larger from Italy, Russia and Germany. But my hon. friend would be astonished, if he took up the four last reports of the immigration commissioner of United States, to see by the valuable compilations of statistics there, how many Frenchmen have migrated to the United States. As a practical conclusion, I would like a statement from the Minister of the Interior that we are to have more extended reports from Mr. Wiallard and his associates in the future. The report given in my hon. friend's return covers scarcely two pages and is in such general terms that it merely conveys no information whatever of a valuable kind.

Mr. LAKE. I see that this same amount of $200,000 was appropriated for this service in 1907-8. But in the Auditor Generals' Report, I cannot find any distinction between the salaries under this head and other expenses. How much was actually spent in salaries last year ?

Mr. OLIVER. The whole vote was expended, $200,000.

Mr. LAKE. But did $200,000 cover all the salaries of the agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries ? Or was it necessary to get a further sum from some other source ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are some other things besides that are paid out of contingencies.

Mr. LAKE. Under what authority is the minister able to pay salaries out of contingencies ? I want to know exactly what was spent last year under this item of the estimates, and from what sources the money came and by what authority ?

Mr. OLIVER. I say that the sum spent under this item is $200,000.

Mr. LAKE. But I want to know the sum spent on this service : 'Salaries of agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries.'

Mr. OLIVER. The information is not arranged just in that way, but I may be able to give the answer in a few minutes.

Mr. MONK. Has the minister with him the list of booking agents in France to whom we have given the privilege of earning this bonus ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Currie & Son, Hernu & Perron and Pitt & Scott. Each agency has ten subagencies in France, making thirty subagents who are working in our interest.

Mr. MONK. I can scarcely understand that. For, the evidence we had before the committee on immigration led me to believe that we had only three certified or authorized booking agents in France.

Mr. LEMIEUX. But they have subagents.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. MONK. But we find that in the British isles, every booking agent must take out a license, and every licensed booking agent in the British Isles has the authority of this government to earn the bonus. And there are hundreds of them.

I hear some hon. gentlemen crying 'carried.' Perhaps the subject of immigration does not interest them. But it interests us, and the subject ought to be examined somewhat carefully before we vote a million dollars for the service. We are entitled to get information, even if somebody is driven to commit suicide.

I say that, in England, every licensed booking agent is the authorized agent of this government. He receives circulars showing the advantages he may reap by selling tickets to Canada to get the bonus. In France, there are only three agents. If it is a country where it is worth our while to recruit, why do not we have a sufficient propaganda ? What is the use of having three booking agents in Paris, if, as the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) says, the really good immigration is to be found in the Basque provinces or in the Norman country ? Why not have your booking agents in Rouen, in the centre of Normandy ? And if the Basques are good immigrants, why have not you booking agents in the cities of that region ? Why have not Mr. Wiallard and these other gentlemen whose salaries we are paying, taken an interest in this matter ? If this system of $5 a head and $2 for babies is a good system, why not carry it out in a proper way, in every country in which we think it worth while to carry it on at all ?

Mr. OLIVER. The booking agent, both in England and in France, is licensed as my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has said : The booking agent may have a number of subagencies. For instance, my hon. friend has heard of the booking agency firm of Cook & Son, in England, Scotland, France, Belgium, Holland, and, I suppose, every other European country. These people have numerous agencies throughout the British islands, to say nothing of the continent, but it is the firm of Cook & Son that is responsible to the British government for all these agencies. In France, there is the firm of Pitt & Scott, which has subagencies in all parts of the country. But it is the firm itself which puts up the security with the French government and is responsible to the government for the conduct of those agencies. Because there is only one firm of Pitt & Scott, it does not follow that there is only one point at which that firm sells tickets to Canada. There are three firms in all with which we are doing business in France, and each of these has subagents. We do not deal with the subagencies, but with these firms, because we believe them to be reliable firms, firms who will not get us into trouble with the French government or deal improperly with the immigrants. They are responsible people, as we understand it. Whatever is being done is done in the open light of day, and will be. We believe that by dealing with responsible firms we are achieving a measure of publicity which we could not achieve in any other way at the same price. With regard to the inquiry by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), there is a contingency vote out of which we paid last year about $7,000 in salaries. I cannot give a detailed statement of the balance of the contingency vote, because it was out of this vote that we pay the detention hospital charges, which charges are recouped to us, in many cases, by the steamship companies.

Mr. LAKE. Am I correct in assuming that the $207,000 will cover all the salaries of last year?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Is a bonus still being paid on Galicians coming to this country?

Mr. OLIVER. No, we have no booking agencies operating in Austria-Hungary.

Mr. MONK. At one time the government gives one explanation and at another time a totally different one. When this question of paying bonuses was discussed, my hon. friend stated, and the superintendent General of Immigration stated at that time in an interview he gave to the 'Globe' newspaper, and we by no means paid this bonus to anybody who sold a ticket to an immigrant for Canada. There had to be a selection, and if a man was found qualified he got an authorization from this government, and that man alone could receive the bonus. Now what are the facts as revealed to us this evening? They are quite different. Every booking agent in the British Isles can earn a bonus, there is no special authorization of any kind given. The mere fact of the booking agent receiving the little package of circulars in which this bonus system is made known to him, constitutes his authorization. Therefore every booking agent in the British Isles who has a license to sell tickets is ipso facto authorized by this government. That admission was made by the Superintendent General of Immigration before our Committee on Agriculture. Now on the continent it is different. I saw by the evidence given before the Agricultural Committee, and by the documents of the committee, that we had three booking agents in Paris. It now turns out by a statement which seems to have no foundation—I mean to say that it does not seem to result from anything that has been put before this House—that through these three agencies in Paris we extend our ramifications for bonus all over France. Is that the case? Are these men at the sub-agencies, whose names are not known to us, authorized to collect a bonus? We had a statement previously that only the man who is examined, found qualified and specially authorized by this government, would get the bonus. Now to-night we are told that there are over forty agencies throughout France.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that any number of sub-agencies in France was mentioned.

Mr. MONK. The Postmaster General said that each of these three agencies had ten sub-agencies. Where did the hon. gentleman find that out?—because we had the testimony under oath of the head officer of the department in the Committee of Immigration that we had three agents, and their names were given.

Mr. LEMIEUX. When was that evidence taken before the committee?

Mr. MONK. A few days ago.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is no discrepancy between the statements. There are three large firms in Paris, Pitt & Scott, Currie & Son, and Hernu & Perron. Hernu & Perron have their central office in Paris, just in front of the Canadian office, Rue de Rome. It is well known that they have sub-agents in every large city of France. I saw the names published this summer. Take the Cooks, for example. A firm like the Cooks has an agency in every city and every town of France.

Mr. MONK. Does the hon. gentleman pretend that if Cooks in London are our authorized agents, all Cooks' sub-agents can earn the bonus?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I say that those three agents get the premium, and they are interested in getting as many as possible from the different suboffices all the same. They will get the premium on every immigrant they bring from any portion of France, not only from the place where they have their central office. They have agencies all over France. A firm like Hernu & Perron has agencies at Bordeaux, at Marseille, at Dunkerque and at Havre, in fact in every large port of France, and the whole staff of every sub-agency is working for the central agency in Paris.

Mr. MONK. I pretended that was the case when I discussed the motion for the abolition of the bonus, and my hon. friend the minister sternly denied it. He said that we only had agents specially authorized. The Postmaster General says that Cook & Company are the greatest booking agents in Europe; and he says that Hernu & Perron in Paris have sub-agents everywhere. Therefore the sub-agents are entitled to earn the bonus.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, I hope the hon. gentleman is not playing upon words. I say that these immigrants which are being gathered by the sub-agencies of Hernu & Perron, entitle Hernu & Perron to the premium on those immigrants. Whether they are gathered by Hernu & Perron in Paris, or whether they are gathered beyond Paris by the sub-agents, it is the firm of Hernu & Perron which gets the premium.

Mr. MONK. That is what I argued at the time. Now what is the consequence of the minister's statements? Cook & Sons in London, Cook & Sons in Glasgow, and Cook & Sons in Aberdeen are authorized agents entitled to collect the bonus. Now surely their sub-agents are in the same position, and they earn the bonus also.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hernu & Perron's agents are paid by them, not by the government.

Mr. MONK. Therefore it follows that Cook & Sons agencies all over the continent of Europe, wherever the bonus is authorized to be paid, earn the bonus. Does the Minister of the Interior admit that the proposition of the Postmaster General is well founded?

Mr. OLIVER. I will try again to explain the situation. My hon. friend has said that Cook & Sons in the British islands are entitled to the bonus under certain conditions as other booking agents in the British islands are.

Mr. MONK. They are authorized to collect the bonus.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend says that they are allowed to collect the bonus.

Mr. MONK. Because all licensed agents are.

Mr. OLIVER. As a matter of fact all licensed agents are not because for cause we refuse to deal with certain booking agents.

Mr. MONK. If they rob you, of course, you do not deal with them.

Mr. OLIVER. Not only if they rob us but if they do not act properly we refuse to do business with them. But as a rule what my hon. friend says is correct, that licensed booking agents in Great Britain and Ireland are entitled to secure the bonus under certain conditions. That condition prevails in the British Isles because there is no restrictive law against immigration, but, on the continent of Europe, because of the restrictive laws, we do not make a general.

automatic arrangement with all booking agents. We only deal with those whom we consider reliable and satisfactory. We select in those countries the agents whom we will do business with. In the British Islands we select those whom we will not do business with. Cook & Sons are not those whom we have selected to do business with in France or on the continent.

Mr. MONK. It seems that it is very difficult for me to make my reasoning clear to the hon. gentleman. We have agents in Paris to the number of three ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. MONK. They have sub-agents all over France and when these sub-agents book emigrants to Canada the head office collects the bonus ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. MONK. We have Cook & Sons in London and when Cook & Sons book an immigrant to Caanda they collect the bonus ?

Mr. OLIVER. Cook & Sons in the British Islands but not Cook & Sons in France, Belgium, Holland or anywhere else on the continent.

Mr. MONK. Why not ?

Mr. OLIVER. Because we have no agreement with Cook & Sons.

Mr. MONK. You have no agreement with Hernu & Perron. Your arrangements are the same as you have with your English agents. You have no special arrangement differing from that which you have with your English agents.

Mr. OLIVER. They are appointed by us as our agents. They are selected by us to act as our agents just the same as we select certain agents in Great Britain to act in Great Britain for us.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman is simply playing on words. There is no appointment and my hon. friend knows it.

Mr. OLIVER. I will not continue the discussion with the hon. gentleman as a matter of argument but I want to state to him as a matter of fact that we do not pay Cook & Sons a bonus on each immigrant booked by them from France.

Mr. MONK. Well, there is no appointment of agents. When we were put under that impression some weeks ago it was entirely erroneous unless you call an appointment the fact of giving a booking agent three or four circulars in which it is shown that he can obtain the bonuses by booking to Canada railway navvies, farm labourers, farmers, and domestic servants. Does the mere fact of our immigration agent giving the booking agent these circulars constitute his appointment? Hernu & Perron and Currie & Sons in Paris have the same appointment as the booking agents in the British Islands in that they get these circulars in which it is shown that they can get $5 or $2 a head for immigrants of a certain class. We pay a bonus, under the terms of our order in council to immigrants from Galicia. The order in council covers German Galicia ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. MONK. And Russian Galicia ?

Mr. OLIVER. Sure.

Mr. MONK. But my hon. friend says that we do not pay any bonus because we have no booking agents there. What I want to know is this : Cook & Sons have agents all over Galicia and in all those countries ; supposing they get their immigrants booked through Cook & Sons in London what is to prevent Cook & Sons of Paris from claiming the bonus through Cook & Sons in London ?

Mr. OLIVER. Our arrangement is that the booking agent can only claim bonus on a citizen of the country in which he is a booking agent.

Mr. MONK. I say that there is no such indication in their appointment whatever. If I can be shown that there is I will retract that statement.

Mr. OLIVER. Our circular to booking agents makes that distinct statement for the very reason that my hon. friend has suggested to the House.

Mr. MONK. There is a suggestion in the circular that the bonus is paid to the booking agent himself and not to any sub-agent. I remember that suggestion but that is not what the Postmaster General has told us this evening.

Mr. OLIVER. The circular most distinctly points that out and it is in the circular for the definite purpose of preventing what my hon. friend suggested a little while ago—a booking agent say, in Antwerp, collecting commission on an immigrant from some other country than Belgium. A booking agent in Antwerp can only collect commission upon people of Belgian citizenship.

Mr. MONK. Has my hon. friend a circular with him ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I am not able to give the hon. gentleman evidence of that fact but that is the statement as I remember it in the circular. However, that is the administration for the very obvious reasons that he has already placed before the committee.

Mr. MONK. Of course, if it is in the circular we can find it, but my recollection of the circular is that it forbade the right of a booking agent to get the bonus through any other person whatever.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. Minister of the Interior said a while ago, in answer to my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), that he was of the same opinion regarding paying bonuses that he held a few years ago. Well, that may be so, but if so the minister has changed his method of expressing his ideas because, as far as my recollection goes, and I think I have refreshed my memory by reading the hon. gentleman's speech, he denounced in toto the bonus system in the old country. He declared distinctly that the payment of bonuses to the steamship companies and the payment of bonuses to permanent agents in the old country was money worse than wasted, and the only feature of the immigration policy he did not condemn was the sending of farm delegates from Canada to the mother country. I understand the Minister of the Interior has continued sending delegates to the old country to whom he pays $100 per month and expenses. Probably some of these farm delegates have induced immigrants to come to Canada, but some of them not being practical farmers themselves proved of doubtful benefit to the country. Some were clergymen, some residents of towns who knew nothing about farming, but they had a nice jaunt at the expense of the government and a salary of $100 per month besides. Can the minister give me the names of the farm delegates who were sent to the old country in 1907 ?

Mr. OLIVER. About 20 were sent but I am sorry I have not the names at hand. I will give them later.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Were they selected from each province in the Dominion ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, except from the maritime provinces.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has the minister any figures to show the number of immigrants which each delegate has induced to come out ?

Mr. OLIVER. It would be impossible to give the result of their work in the actual number of immigrants who came here. We get a report from the delegate showing in such detail as may be where he has been and the means taken by him to present the advantages of Canada to the British public. We expect that the presentation of the advantages of Canada by a credible representative will have an effect beyond the mere fact of his presence, and that at a later date people will come to Canada who have been influenced by him. My hon. friend will agree that it is not the man who is most easily moved to emigrate who makes the best settler ; possibly the man who is slowest to move is the better man after we secure him. True we may have made mistakes. We desire to give a reasonably fair and equal representation to the various provinces with a special preponderance to the prairie provinces. We have to get men as we can, and I am sorry to say the selections have not always been entirely the best. But taking it year by year and considering all the circumstances the system is thoroughly justified by its results. We have been able by this means to bring the agricultural advantages of Canada directly before the population of the British Isles in a way that we could not otherwise do. Our efforts are particularly directed to get people who will settle on the land and the difficulty in former years was that the advantages of Canada had been brought prominently before those who were not fitted to take advantage of our conditions. So far as we have been able to follow the work of the agricultural delegates it has been eminently satisfactory, and those who have come as a result of their mission have been in the majority of cases the very people Canada wants and is quite willing to spend money to get.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Have the labours of the delegates been confined to the British Isles ?

Mr. OLIVER. One has gone to France, one to Belgium, and one or two more will go.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Who went to Belgium ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Morel.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What time of the year was he sent ?

Mr. OLIVER. November or early in December.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Was he a native of Belgium ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What qualifications must these men possess ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have to do the best we can, but the qualifications we ask are that the man shall be an actual farmer, that he shall be a successful farmer, and if possible a native of the country to which he goes.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I suppose he must have farmed on the prairie for a time ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, he must be a man who has made a success of practical farming in this country.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is the policy of paying the farmers ?

Mr. OLIVER. Last year we sent them immediately after the new year, to remain three months, and we paid them $100 a month and their expenses during their absence from home. We found, however, that the season was rather short, because these men, being engaged in practical farming, had to be at home on their places early in the spring. So that this year we tried to get them away in December. The period is three or possibly four months.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I feel a little sensitive on this point of immigration from Belgium, because I made efforts last fall to get a very successful farmer in my constituency, Mr. Hardy, of Hartney, sent there, and after trying for two months, I found that he could not be sent. I think that one of the important qualifications of these men is that they must be Grits.

Mr. GRAHAM. They are the people who talk well of the country.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. They have always a pleasant smile. Who went to France ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am sorry that I am unable to give the name of the man who went this year. The delegate who went last year was Mr. Vauriot. Both of them were from Manitoba.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). How long has the system of paying $100 a month been in vogue ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say at the moment when it was made a system. It has been the practice ever since I have been in the department, and I think some time before. At first I think there was a system of sending what were called returned men, that is to say, men who had come from the old country a few years before and who wished to make a visit home. They were given a free passage back or some slight assistance in that way. But it was found that that was not satisfactory, and it was decided that if we were to get good service we would have to send men whose time was worth something to them, that is, men in actual business, who could not afford to go simply for fun, and we had to pay them something as a salary, so that they could provide for filling their places at home while they were absent. They were placed at the disposal of our regular agents, to go and come and give their services as they were required. Although that appears to be more costly than the other way, we believe that we get more value for our money.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The reason I ask that question is that about a year ago I met one of these returned farm delegates on a political platform. The preceding speaker had twitted him with having received a considerable amount from the government as a delegate, but he rather repudiated the idea and posed as a philanthropist, saying that he had only got his expenses. However, I find in the Auditor General's Report that even this gentleman is down for $100 a month ; so that he must have had a slip of the memory. I wish to ask the minister if the government has been assisting any needy settlers in the province of Manitoba within the last year by buying provisions for them ? If so, in what portion of the province do they reside, who made the request, and what quantities of provisions were dispensed ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, it has been unfortunately necessary this year to provide some assistance in what are called the Toulon and Gimli districts in the eastern part of the province. That is the only part of the province where it has been necessary to give assistance.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). What did the provisions consist of ?

Mr. OLIVER. I could give the hon. gentleman a complete return. The principal supply was flour, in addition to which there were some small articles which were absolute necessities.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). What security has the government ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have taken a lien on the homestead as security for the advance.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Who was it made the request for assistance ?

Mr. OLIVER. A petition was received from the locality, and the case was investigated by our officers, and it was decided that it was a proper action to take.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The minister would not object to bring down that petition ?

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, no.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The reason I ask about this is that I saw an article in a newspaper of the district in which these provisions were distributed, stating that it was felt by many that while there may have been a few deserving families requiring assistance, advantage had been taken of the distribution by some of the government agents there to get a hold on these people, and to use this distribution, like the distribution of seed grain, as a political lever. It was reported that the advances were held back until an election was on, and that they were then used for the purpose of influencing votes. In the method of distribution of this flour among the Galicians and other foreigners the object seems to purchase their votes in that way. Let me read an article which appeared in a Selkirk paper:

Surely the elections are not very far distant. They are casting their shadows before them in the shape of three or five carloads of flour sent by the government for the foreigners at Gimli and Winnipeg beach. These people are getting too wise to be inveigled in this way, as they find out it is to be charged up against them when they receive the patents for their lands, or in other words they are expected to pay for their own election bribes, and many of them are refusing to take any of it. It looks like another election dodge such as was acted upon at the last provincial election when innumerable patents were granted to those who had complied with the requirements and the duties of a homesteader on condition that they cast their votes for the Liberal candidate. The game was to hold off granting these patents until election times and then to convince the foreigners that it was a gift if they put up the goods on election day, although they were entitled to these patents some time before.

According to that article inducements in the shape of distributions of flour were held out to those who were really not in need of it in order to get their votes. I am aware that there has been purchased from the Lake of the Woods Milling Company some $870 worth of flour, distributed amongst those foreigners, to say nothing of over $400 worth got for the same purpose from the Ogilvie Milling Company, and a good many of these foreigners repudiated the idea that they were in need at all. No one is going to condemn the distribution among needy settlers, but there were comparatively few that required this distribution. Whatever truth there may be in this article, those in charge of the distribution will be better able to tell. Who did distribute this flour?

Mr. OLIVER. Having seen probably the same article my hon. friend has read, we had a further report made, and will be able to present the whole of the facts to the House to-morrow, as well as the names of the officials who made the distribution.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. When was it made?

Mr. OLIVER. In January and February of this year.

Mr. BARR. Among the Canadian immigration agents appear the names of a large number of officials at Ottawa, such as Mr. Bryce, Mr. C. H. Beddoe, Mr. Dan McGillicuddy, and others. Are they paid as agents $100 per month and expenses besides their usual salary, and how long are they kept on the other side?

Mr. OLIVER. Dr. Bryce is the chief medical officer of the department. He has charge of the hospitals and of the examinations for medical fitness at the ocean ports. He is also medical officer for the Indian Department. Mr. Beddoe is chief accountant for the Interior Department. As such he went to Europe to investigate the accounts of the North Atlantic Trading Company and was paid his travelling expenses in that connection.

Mr. BARR. Two hundred and ten dollars are charged for his expenses in that connection. One would judge from the Auditor General's Report that all those mentioned went to Europe. Mr. W. W. Cory obtained an advance for travelling expenses. Dr. Bryce also appears in the list of Canadian agents of immigration and was paid $450 expenses. Then I think my hon. friend to the left must have been mistaken when he said they must all be Reformers, because I find in the list the Hon. Frank Oliver $2,900 for travelling expenses. We always looked upon him as an Independent. I suppose he went to the old country also.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentlemen whose names have been mentioned receive a good deal more than $100 a month, and these expenses are in addition to their salaries.

Mr. BARR. How long would they remain in the old country?

Mr. OLIVER. The farm delegates remain generally about three months. Dr. Bryce did not go to the old country. Mr. Beddoe went to Amsterdam in connection with the North Atlantic Trading Company's contract, and I think he remained there three or four days. I was absent some seven months from Canada.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Mr. Smith, formerly of Winnipeg, head of the immigration branch there, was transferred to the old country and Mr. Bruce Walker brought over in his place, but why was the transfer made, and what are their respective salaries?

Mr. OLIVER. The salaries are the same in both cases, $3,000. Mr. Smith was getting $3,000 in Winnipeg and Mr. Walker $3,000 in London, with $600 living allowance in addition. Mr. Walker desired to change his location on account of the health of his wife with whom the English climate did not agree, and Mr. Smith desired to change his on account of the health of a member of his family with whom the climate of Manitoba did not agree.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I desire to bring to the attention of the minister a matter which is mentioned almost every session, but which will stand repetition particularly upon the eve of an expected election. I refer to the part that immigration and other officials of the department are taking in politics. Notwithstanding that this parliament unanimously passed a resolution a few years ago—acquiesced in by the minister—declaring that no civil servant shall take part in elections, I received information from numerous sources that the hon. minister's officials are taking an active part in elections at this moment. During the past few weeks, a Galician interpreter connected with the Interior Department, is making a house to house canvass in the Galician colony in my constituency. This took place last election and has taken place at intervals since, and the same is now going on. The expectation is that he would get a number of these people naturalized—and that is another thing, commissioners appointed under the Naturalization Act passed by this parliament, have been going there taking their naturalization papers and rounding the people up together to get them registered, and taking a very active partisan part in politics. When I was coming through Winnipeg, a month or so ago, I heard that two or three officials had been amongst the foreign population in the northern part of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I am sure that the minister, personally, would like to see the mandate of this parliament obeyed, therefore, I call this matter to his attention. But immigration agents and others do not of their own volition and without some instruction from their superior officers, carry on such work as this. The minister may not be cognizant of it, but some of his officers must be, and they must have taken it upon themselves to direct these immigration agents to take this active part in politics.

Mr. OLIVER. Can the hon. gentleman give me the name of the interpreter of whom he speaks ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Of course, the old stand-by is always there, Philip Harvey. But he is not the one I speak of as being in my own constituency at the present time. I have not under my hand the letter telling about this man, but my recollection is that his name is Genik or something like that. I can let the hon. minister know.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to have the name. I have already said in this House, and I say again, that I do not think the government stands to profit by political activity on the part of its employees; and, so far as I am concerned, I object entirely to that activity. I have addressed a letter to the employees of the department warning them against taking an active part in politics. I should be very glad to have information from any of our friends on the other side in regard to improper activity on the part of our officials, and I will find out whether my instructions can be carried out or not.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is the penalty ? No doubt, the minister is sincere in this, and yet, though we bring the matter to the attention of the minister, these officials still go on as before. What does the minister do when he finds that his instructions have been disregarded ? I have already referred in this House to cases of which I know. I can give names to-night if necessary of public officials whose principal occupation is canvassing for elections. The minister says he would like information, but, if he is given the information, what penalty will he inflict? Will he dismiss the official ? There is no doubt of the facts—these men in Manitoba, in the Northwest and in British Columbia are continually canvassing for election.

Mr. OLIVER. The only penalty we can enforce is dismissal from the service. Of course, that would not be done without careful inquiry, and our friends opposite would not expect us to dismiss a man unless the eivdence is clear. Certainly they would not expect us to dismiss him on mere report. That is why I said I would like the name and occasion, so that I could bring the matter to an issue. And, of course, hon. gentlemen opposite may be to some extent mistaken and may believe that certain action is taken when it is not taken. I suppose they will admit that there is a possibility of even themselves being somewhat biased in their view as to the action of officials. It has been absolutely necessary that our officials in connection with immigration should visit many settlements during the past winter. As, for instance, we had to give relief to some people in the northern part of Manitoba, giving certain people seed grain——

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Did you have to give seed grain in Manitoba ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, in some of the unorganized parts of the province in the north, we distributed a little seed grain. The Manitoba government, of course, had full charge in all organized municipalities, acting through the municipal organization. But in the territory which is not municipally organized, in the northern country, there is no provision made, and we had to give a small amount of seed grain taking liens on the homesteads. Throughout the other provinces, Saskatchewan and Alberta, where there was a general distribution, of course it was necessary that the services of our officers should be very generally used that the occasion might be met as fully as possible. Hon. gentlemen opposite may perhaps admit that it may turn out that they have been charging to political activity that which was a necessary act in the ordinary transaction of the business of the department.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The minister did not quite understand the drift of my question. Under what authority does this government distribute seed grain in the unorganized parts of Manitoba ? The Bill applied to Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Mr. OLIVER. Under the same authority as that under whihc we gave relief of the new settlers in the vicinity of Toulon.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Was there any appropriation ?

Mr. OLIVER. No. There is a vote for contingencies which has always been at the disposal of the Immigration Department to meet such cases, and where the amount is not large it is met under that vote. Last year, of course, we had to have a vote of $30,000 to meet the special conditions which existed southwest of Saskatoon. In ordinary years, we are able to meet any cases which may arise out of the vote for contingencies, but this year we were not able to do so. It is out of that vote that we are allowed to give the relief that we did give at Toulon, in the northern part of Manitoba, and in Saskatchewan.

Mr. LAKE. When the minister is bringing down the information he has promised in respect of the special relief, I would ask him to include all the places he has mentioned, and also to bring down information in regard to repayments of relief given in the past.

Mr. OLIVER. There will be no difficulty in bringing down the information in regard to relief given during the past winter, but it would take a considerable amount of research to make a return of repayments that have been made from time to time, because no separate account has been kept of them.

Mr. LAKE. All I wanted was a general idea as to how the money was collected, and to what extent it was being repaid.

Mr. OLIVER. There will be no difficulty about giving a general idea.

Mr. LAKE. In regard to officials of the government taking an active part in elections, I would suggest to the minister that he could at least furnish them a strong excuse for abstaining from taking part in elections by putting a clause in the Election Act inflicting a penalty upon any man who takes an active part either on one side or the other.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Genik, the interpreter that I mentioned, was engaged in the municipality of Rosthern where no seed grain was distributed, and consequently there was no excuse for his being there at that particular time. Even had he been engaged in that particular occupation, it was long past the time. The reason why I think it was this man that I refer to, is that one year ago when the provincial elections were going on he was engaged in the same work. I was in the constituency and he was pointed out to me. I know he has been actively engaged in the past, and I think it is the same one.

Mr. OLIVER. Would the hon. gentleman give me the name, whoever he was ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I see in the Auditor General's Report the name of L. B. Cochrane, Medicine Hat, who gets $75 a month as immigration agent. Is he engaged in any other occupation ?

Mr. OLIVER. He is also sub-land agent at Medicine Hat.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Is he not a merchant ?

Mr. OLIVER. His son is a merchant.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I think he is head of the firm.

Mr. OLIVER. That would not necessarily interfere with his employment as a subagent. Almost invariably the persons whom we employ as sub-land agents have some other calling or profession.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. A man who gets $75 a month should spend most of his time in the service of the government, without engaging in mercantile pursuits.

Mr. OLIVER. So far as my knowledge goes of Mr. Cochrane, whatever his other interests may be, he does spend his whole time in the capacity as immigration agent and sub-land agent.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Is there more than one medical health officer in Winnipeg ?

Mr. OLIVER. Only one.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is the duty of the inspectors ? I see one, Thomas Cory, of Gladstone, inspector, receiving a pretty large salary. What would be his duties?

Mr. OLIVER. He is an inspector of British immigrant children, and his salary is provided by the imperial government, under an old arrangement in regard to the immigrant children. We pay him and two or three other inspectors, and we are recouped by the British government. This gentleman resides at Gladstone, and wherever any of these children are located he has to inspect them and report on their treatment.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I see another item about a party of Scotch ploughmen. Give us a little explanation about that.

Mr. OLIVER. What does the Auditor General's Report say ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Expenses in connection with a party of Scotch ploughmen, $110. It does not say to whom the money was paid. It may have been paid to Robert Adamson, in Winnipeg.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Adamson some years ago busied himself in going over to Scotland and engaging ploughmen, and bringing them out to the prairie provinces. But he has not been in that employment for the past three years. I presume the amount of the hon. gentleman finds there is payment of some balance due on former work.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What did these Scotch ploughmen do ?

Mr. OLIVER. They are immigrants, and they engage with farmers in the west. I understood that the men brought out by Mr. Adamson were of a particularly desirable class.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I don't say they were not. The way the item appears here, I do not know whether it means that they were brought out to teach the farmers how to plough.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Adamson went over to Scotland and went into the agricultural districts to get in touch with men who were practical farmers, and men who were ploughmen employed on farms. He brought out ten or twenty of them, and accompanied them to the west and placed them with farmers. They were ordinary Scotch immigrants.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to tell the minister that when I was on the train going from Montreal to Sherbrooke, at Christmas, I met a man whose name I forget, but I think he came from Moosejaw. He told us that he had been living in the west for twenty years, and was on his way to Scotland to see his friends. He said to us : 'I am not very rich, and a friend of mine came to me and said: 'What will it cost to go to Scotland ?' He told him what it would cost. Well, he says, I will help you.' He said that he went to a man at Moosejaw and this man got him appointed an agent to go to Scotland. He said : The government pays my fare from Moosejaw to Scotland and back again, it pays all my expenses, it gives me $2 a day for my time, from the time I leave home until I get back, and if I get some immigrants to come out with me, I will receive $2 per head. I heard him say this on the train. He was a Scotchman probably 50 or 55 years of age and he said he had been supporting the government all his life and it was time he should get some benefit.

Mr. OLIVER. I guess he was a Scotchman.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). In the Auditor General's Report, page L—29, I see the name of Martin Jerome, Winnipeg, and that he is down for $100 a month or in all $680.64. Martin Jerome comes within the category, I understand, of an active politician. He was a delegate to the Liberal convention in Provencher two months ago, and he was ballotted for in opposition to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Cyr). He seems to be at all the Liberal conventions. He is a very active politician and still he is drawing $100 a month. Then, I see the name, on the same page, of Mr. Thomas McNutt, of Saltcoats, seven and a half months at $125 a month, $937. I have nothing against Mr. MacNutt personally. He is speaker of the Saskatchewan legislature and a most active politician. He could not occupy the position he does as a member of the legislature without being one, and still his name has been figuring in the Auditor General's Report for many years past. I think both these gentlemen come within the category of active politicians, and still they are employees of this government in contravention of the rule laid down by parliament.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Jerome is not now in the employ of the department.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Since when?

Mr. OLIVER. Some time last fall he ceased his connection with the department.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). What about Thomas MacNutt?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. MacNutt is well known as an old-timer in that locality and he has been employed, not on salary, but from time to time at a per day payment.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). He is down here for $125 a month.

Mr. OLIVER. At any rate his engagement is not, as I recollect, an engagement at a yearly salary. I am not at all sure what objection there may be to the employment of Mr. MacNutt, but I have always understood that he was a man who stood very well in the community and, although a member of the local legislature, he was not considered an active or offensive politician.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I think he is an active partisan or he would not be where he is.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who is the superintendent of the Halifax detention hospital?

Mr. OLIVER. Malcolm Chisholm.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). At page L—25 of the Auditor General's Report there is an item for the North Atlantic Trading Company of $24,333. Is that the final payment? Does that cover all the arrears?

Mr. OLIVER. No, that is not the final payment. The final payment is $36,901.50, paid during the year 1907-8.

Mr. LAKE. Was the renewal of the bonus on European immigrants a consequence of the cancellation of the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company?

Mr. OLIVER. To some extent it may be said to have had a connection with that. The agreement with the North Atlantic Trading Company was brought to an end on November 30, 1906. From that time on there was no bonus paid on immigrants coming from Europe. It will be remembered that the North Atlantic Trading Company agreement did not provide for bonus on immigrants coming from Belgium or France, but only from certain other countries of Europe—Holland, Norway, Sweden, Germany, Austro-Hungary and Russia. After the 30th November, 1906, there was no special inducement for immigrants from any part of Europe. It was thought advisable in the early part of 1907 to adopt in a measure the regulation that prevailed in the British Islands with regard to dealing with European immigration, with the restriction that instead of dealing with all booking agents we only would deal with the booking agents selected by us in such countries as we might feel safe in selecting. That brought France, Holland, Belgium, Norway, Sweden, Germany, Denmark, Finland, Austro-Hungary and Switzerland all under the same provisions as those which existed in England with two exceptions. One was that the bonus was only half what it was for a British immigrant and the other was that we only paid it to selected booking agents instead of to booking agents generally. That system ran on for nearly a year and it was found that it seemed to produce very little result. We found that we were not securing very many of the class of immigrants that we wanted to get and we thought it would be fair to increase the bonus to the same amount as that paid on British immigrants. That is the position as it stands now. Had the North Atlantic Trading Company's contract not been cancelled the present system of bonus would not have been instituted, but this has followed the cancellation of the agreement with the North Atlantic Trading Company. There are some very radical differences between the two arrangements. With the North Atlantic Trading Comany there was only nominal restriction as to the classes of immigration. Now the restriction is very definite and strict. Therefore the number upon whom the payment is made is very small. The North Atlantic Trading Company agreement covers all the countries mentioned except France and Belgium. In Russia, Germany, Austro-Hungary and Switzerland we have not yet been able to arrange for booking agents. We have booking agents in France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Finland. In these countries we have an arrangement with select booking agents as to the payment of a bonus on the same conditions that we pay the British bonus. A booking agent can only collect bonuses in respect of citizens of the country of which he himself is a citizen and in which he is operating.

Mr. LAKE. Since the cancellation of the North Atlantic Trading Company contract no bonuses have been paid to immigrants from countries where there are no select booking agents. Has there been any considerable falling off in the immigration from these countries in consequence?

Mr. OLIVER. I am rather inclined to think there has, but I cannot say definitely at the moment.

Mr. LAKE. I suppose the government will keep careful watch to see whether the bonus system is productive of any increase in immigration. The order in council provides for the payment of the bonus upon navvies or miners who have signified their intention of following farming or railway construction in Canada. Is it sufficient that a navvy should make the mere statement that he intends to pursue farming when he gets to Canada ?

Mr. OLIVER. The navvy or miner gets no benefit himself from the bonus, and he has no object in making a mis-statement as to his intention. We accept the statement of the booking agent in the old country, and if the statement of the booking agent tallies with the statement of the immigrant to the agent at our port, the booking agent is entitled to the bonus. But, we are able by our system here to a very great extent to trace our immigrants and if we find that the immigrant does not follow farming we make a deduction of the amount of the bonus from the next payment due to that booking agent. If we find the booking agent has entered into collusion with the man in order to improperly secure the bonus we cease doing business with that agent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the object of advertising in the Christmas numbers of a great many papers.

Mr. OLIVER. We think it a very satisfactory way of bringing the advantages of Canada before the notice of desirable immigrants. These papers publish a special issue in which the advantages of a particular part of the country are written up, and we purchase a portion of that special issue for distribution through our agencies to the desirable classes. In other cases a newspaper will get out a special issue the circulation of which will be very large and we sometimes advertise in that paper.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I could not understand precisely was what advantage it was to advertise in a Canadian paper, which presumably is almost entirely circulated in Canada, and could have little or no influence in promoting immigration from foreign countries.

Mr. OLIVER. That is true, but the special number of the 'Globe' in which we had this advertisement was not a part of the regular issue of the 'Globe' or sent to its regular subscribers. It was a special issue offered for general sale, and we thought that it was a very creditable representation of Canada, and would be used to a great extent by people who, though living in Canada, have interests in the United States or in England, and who would send copies to their friends in those countries, thereby bringing before them the advantages of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not alluding more to the Toronto 'Globe' than to a great many other papers. It seemed to me to be a very indirect way of reaching people abroad. I can understand the purchasing of a large number of copies of a particular issue of some journal and sending them abroad. That is simply another form of immigration literature; but it does not seem worth while for the department to advertise in these Canadian papers unless it takes some means of assuring the sending of copies of the advertisement abroad. Coming back to special issues of newspapers, have they been pretty thoroughly distributed? Some time ago the statement was made that a large number of copies of the Halifax 'Chronicle' which had been purchased, not by this government, but by the Nova Scotia government, had been lying in London for some time and that storage was charged on them. Has anything of that kind occurred under this department?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say. I think it would be inexcusable if it did. We have plenty of means of distributing these papers. If there was such a case, I do not pretend to offer the House any excuse for it.

Mr. LAKE. I understand that some time ago the minister ordered the distribution of a million copies of the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' and that reports came from the United States to the effect that a large number of copies were lying in the post offices because there were apparently no such individuals as those to whom they were addressed. Is the minister continuing to order these very large editions of the Winnipeg 'Free Press' or other papers?

Mr. OLIVER. The edition my hon. friend speaks about was gotten out some years ago.

Mr. LAKE. I think two years in succession.

Mr. OLIVER. Since I have occupied the position I do not think we have had such an issue as my hon. friend speaks of. In the annual report there is a list of the special editions we have purchased during the preceding year. The largest is one of 36,000 copies of the 'Northwestern' a German paper published in Winnipeg.

Mr. LAKE. Where did they go?

Mr. OLIVER. They were distributed chiefly among our agencies in the United States. One of the most successful features of our immigration from the United States is the German immigration, and I think we have had good value for the money expended.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). An enormous amount of money is expended for printing and advertising, a great deal of which seems to be spent in the way of subsidies to party papers. Winnipeg seems to have fared very well in this respect. The Winnipeg 'Canada' got $591.99, the Winnipeg 'Canadian Hungarian,' $426, the Winnipeg 'Loberg,' $1,280, the Winnipeg 'Nordwestern,' $807, the Winnipeg 'Stovel' Company, $2,214; and some of these payments were not at all for special editions, but simply for copies of regular editions. The Toronto 'Globe' got $10,281, the Halifax 'Chronicle,' $1,132, the Ottawa 'Free Press,' $3,285, the Saskatoon 'Phoenix,' $300. Not only have large amounts been paid to newspapers, but any person who has had a fad for getting out any particular article can sell it to the government for immigration purposes. For instance, the Rev. Dr. Bryce, of Winnipeg, got out a book entitled 'Everyman's Geology,' and the government purchased 5,000 copies and paid him $887.50. I do not know what particular influence that book would have in inducing immigrants to come to this country. I have not seen the work, but I know that the Rev. Dr. Bryce has got out several books, and has a faculty of unloading them on the government and the public at very remunerative rates. Rand, McNally and Company, of Chicago, got from the government last year no less than $23,355. No doubt the atlas they got out could not be got out in Canada; but surely some of the printing done in Chicago could be done in Canada. These are only a few items. There is an enormous amount of money paid out for printing and advertising, and I do not know that we have a sufficient return for the outlay. The regular issues of a great many of these weekly papers are of no particular use in the way of inducing immigrants to come to Canada, and a great many of the payments to them are only subsidies.

Mr. STAPLES. In nearly every little local paper favourable to this government throughout the western country you will find advertised the homestead regulations. What does that insertion cost?

Mr. OLIVER. It varies according to the circulation and standing of the paper. Each paper has its own rate, and we pay either the paper's ordinary rate or something approximating it. For the ordinary country paper it runs about $4 or $5 a month. That however is not paid out of immigration but out of Dominion lands. It is for the information of settlers distinct from information to intending immigrants.

Mr. STAPLES. I have learned for the first time that there is a distribution of seed grain throughout Manitoba. Where has that been distributed?

Mr. OLIVER. The distribution is only in that part of the northern section which is not organized into municipalities. The amount distributed was to the value of about $5,000.

Mr. STAPLES. In what township and range and who were those who received the grain?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not got the information but there will be no difficulty in giving it. I have already said that we would lay it on the table.

Mr. STAPLES. What was the nature of the grain distributed?

Mr. OLIVER. Principally oats.

Mr. STAPLES. Where purchased?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Mr. Castle informed me a short time ago that he purchased a large quantity of oats in Prince Edward Island and also in Scotland and was selling them at 85 cents a bushel.

Mr. STAPLES. Who got the seed grain?

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I do not know, but no one got any in my district.

Mr. HERRON. Some years ago I was told that when foreign immigrants landed in the locality of a land office, the agents had instructions to hire teams and give assistance in that way to foreigners who wanted to examine the land, but that they were not allowed to do the same for immigrants from the British Isles.

Mr. OLIVER. The rule is that if a settler looking for land desires to engage one of the land guides, the settler has to pay the guide for the use of the team. We pay the guide ourselves $2 a day. and that is paid irrespective of the nationality of the applicant.

Mr. HERRON. I was told by a subagent that he had instructions to do that for foreign immigrants only.

Mr. OLIVER. The subagent had no warrant for any such statement.

Mr. STAPLES. I see in the Auditor General's Report that the government have purchased blankets at $6.50 and $7.50 a pair. That appears pretty expensive. What are those used for?

Mr. OLIVER. They have to be purchased for the immigration sheds and hospitals.

Mr. STAPLES. Were they bought by tender?

Mr. OLIVER. Whom were they bought from?

Mr. STAPLES. From Craig & Company, Winnipeg, according to the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. OLIVER. They were not bought by tender.

Expenses of deporting undesirable immigrants, $2,000.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. How many did you deport last year?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed that since the Medical Act went into force, in 1902, we have deported 1,400.

Mr. STAPLES. From what part of Canada have they been deported?

Mr. OLIVER. From all parts. Wherever a complaint has been made we have always acted upon it.

Mr. LAKE. Are they sent from the port of entry, or from any part of the country?

Mr. OLIVER. The Immigration Act provides that any person who, within two years of his arrival in Canada, becomes subject to certain disabilities, if complaint is made, can be deported on a certain course being taken.

Mr. STAPLES. Under what regulations are they deported, and from whom must the information come?

Mr. OLIVER. The Act provides that, where there is a municipality, the information shall be laid by the clerk of the municipality; elsewhere, the department may act through it own officers. Where there is a municipality we prefer to act on a recommendation or wish of the municipal authorities.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the government bear the whole expense of deportation?

Mr. OLIVER. The law provides that municipalities may be required to share the expense, but, in practice, either the transportation company or the Dominion government bears the expense. I do not think we have had one case in which municipalities have borne a part of the expense.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I may be mistaken, but I have some recollection of a speech made by the provincial secretary of Ontario in which it was shown that considerable expense was incurred by that province for deportation. But probably I am mistaken.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it was probably on account of the presence of undesirables.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There was that but I thought there was the other also.

Mr. OLIVER. I think not.

Mr. LAKE. Can the minister give any idea of the proportion deported by nationalities, showing from what countries we get the desirable and from what country the undesirable immigration ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not it worked out in that way, and I do not think the result would really give the information my hon. friend desires. It is somewhat dangerous to rest simply on the doctrine of percentage when it comes to a question of the desirability of a number of immigrants.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). What disposition was made of the Doukhobors who were taken back to Saskatchewan ? I understood that the provincial government protested to the Dominion government against their return there. Are they being looked after by the provincial authorities, or has the government here any responsibility in the matter ?

Mr. OLIVER. I think I explained on a previous occasion that the position taken by the government is that these people are not immigrants and are outside the immediate control and responsibility of this government. My information is that these people are being dealt with by the provincial government, although I have no definite information on the subject.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Has the provincial government sent in any protest or request in the matter ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have had some communication with the provincial government on the subject ; but the position that we took was as I have stated. The law is perfectly clear that, up to a residence of two years in the country, immigrants are under the authority of this government, but, after that, we have no authority over them. It is not a matter of dispute or argument but a matter of fact.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). As I understand it, they are being looked after by the Mounted Police. Is not this government in control of the Mounted Police.

Mr. OLIVER. There is a dual authority there. The organization of the force is under the authority of this government, but the force is employed at the instance and under the legal authority of the provincial government. So, any duties the Mounted Police may be discharging in Saskatchewan in regard to these people are at the instance and under the authority and direction of the provincial government.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. For what reasons may people be deported ? Because they become a public charge ? Is that the only reason ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is one reason. Another is insanity, conviction of crime, or disease.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Was application made by the city of Toronto recently for a number of young men to be deported ?

Mr. OLIVER. Last month, something over a hundred men, Bulgarians and Macedonians, were deported from Toronto on complaint of the city that they had become a public charge.

Mr. STAPLES. Up to a certain period, immigrants would have to be looked after by the municipal authorities, and it costs them considerable to communicate to this government and have the undesirables deported. Does the government reimburse the municipalities what they have paid ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. HERRON. From the information we received before the Immigration Committee from the superintendent general, it would appear that there was not sufficient precaution taken at the port of entry to examine these immigrants for disease or anything else which would disqualify them for entry. I believe the information was to the effect that a medical officer would examine 400 immigrants in an hour. Now it must be an impossibility to make any proper examination of an immigrant in so short a time in order to discover whether he should be admitted under our laws. Perhaps that is one of the reasons why we have had to deport so many. We receive a good deal of information in that committee that would be of advantage to the government in dealing with immigrants, for instance, with regard to the relations between the booking agent and the immigrant. It would seem to me quite natural that when the booking agent and the immigrant meet together the agent should suggest to the immigrant how to answer certain questions, establishing a collusion between them. There also appeared to be a lack of medical supervision at the ports of entry.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It would be interesting if the minister would explain the system of inspection of immigrants who come to Halifax, for instance, in the large ships.

Mr. OLIVER. A choice has to be made between care and speed in the inspection of immigrants at the port of entry. At the present time, in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway boats, the medical officer boards them at Rimouski, and he has the opportunity of looking over the passengers during the trip to Quebec, that is about twelve hours. In the case of the other boats that arrangement has not yet been made, but it appears to be a desirable arrangement and will be extended to all the boats, as all the boats that come to Quebec land at Rimouski. When a vessel lands at Quebec, if the examination has not already been made on the boat the medical officers make an examination of the first and second class passengers immediately. Then the third-class passengers are landed at the detention sheds and are passed under review as rapidly as possible. If the officer has reason to suspect any physical imperfection in an immigrant, instead of stopping the line of immigrants until this person has been fully examined, he is sent to the waiting room, and when the main body of passengers have been examined, then the suspected cases are taken up and examined more fully. This gives every reasonable opportunity to the medical man to make a thorough examination. Unless he is absolutely satisfied that the immigrant is all right, he can hold him back and give him a special examination without detaining the great body of passengers. If, after having made the second examination, he finds that his suspicions are confirmed, he may either send the passenger to the hospital or send him back to the country whence he came. When we consider the large number of immigrants who have come out during the past four or five years, we have very little reason to complain of inefficiency in regard to our medical inspection. Just to show that the inspection at the port is to a considerable extent effective, since the Medical Act has gone into force there have been detained in the way I have mentioned at ocean ports 16,000 people and of these over 3,000 have been actually excluded ?

Mr. CROCKET. In how many years ?

Mr. OLIVER. Six years. When you consider the large number of immigrants who have arrived during that time, and when you take the number of deportations and the number of instances where deportation has followed detention, I think it is fair to say that the medical inspection at the ports has been fairly efficient and is becoming more efficient and that there is a reduction in the number of undesirables since the Immigration Act of two years ago was passed which provided for deportation. Before that we did not have the authority to deport. Once the immigrant was landed and entered into Canada we had no authority to send him out, but since the Act providing for deportation came into force there is really very little purpose in an immigrant who is physically unfit attempting to pass the inspection, because even if he does pass the inspecting officer he can be picked up at any place throughout the country within two years and sent home. This deportation provision of the Act is a very drastic provision. It is really heart breaking to enforce it in many cases but it is the only effective way of preventing undesirable immigration. I have every confidence that the deportations which have taken place within the past year or two will have a very manifest effect in checking physically undesirable immigration.

Mr. CROCKET. How many have we deported in the past two years after passing the port of entry?

Mr. OLIVER. 1,400 have been deported.

Mr. CROCKET. After passing the port of entry?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, that includes people who had come in for two years before. That included four years immigration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was the Act applied to people who had come into the country before it was passed ?

Mr. OLIVER. The Medical Act which purported to exclude these people went into force in 1902, but the Deportation Act of 1906 gave us authority to deport those who should have been excluded.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What about the bonus paid to immigrants who were deported ?

Mr. OLIVER. In all such cases we charge that amount against the booking agent and deduct it from any future payments that may be made to him. If we find he has not been acting in good faith we discontinue business with him.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Does the minister not think that if these immigrants had to produce a certificate of health prior to embarking from the country from which they came it would save a great many of these heart-rending scenes that he speaks about? If they had to undergo a strict examination prior to getting on the vessels by reliable medical men it would save a great deal of trouble and sorrow and avoid the hardships which these people have to endure in travelling thousands of miles to and from their own homes.

Mr. OLIVER. That is something that looks very good on the face of it, but it is not feasible when you come to deal with it. There is just as much difficulty in dealing with the medical examination of immigrants on taking the steamer as there is in dealing with them on the immigrant leaving the steamer. These people do not live where the steamer sails from. They come from a distance to take that steamer, they come intending to take it immediately and delay at the point of embarkation is just as difficult, in fact it is more difficult to deal with, than delay, at the point of debarkation. Of course, it would be an advantage if that could be done, but there is just the same difficulty in doing it and by only making a medical examination at the port of debarkation the responsibility is thrown absolutely upon the steamboat company. We believe that in the end we will get better results by putting it up to the steamboat company that they shall only carry people who can pass our medical examination. The steamship company do not like to take people back at their own expense. We believe that we will have a more effective check by checking them at the port of debarkation than at the port of embarkation because if they were examined at the port of embarkation the steamship company would be relieved of responsibility.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do the steamship people make a medical examination themselves ?

Mr. OLIVER. They purport to make a medical examination themselves but it is simply for the purpose of assuring themselves that there is little or no danger of anything occurring during the passage. That is not good enough for our purpose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. One would suppose that if there is a certain danger of their being put to the expense of taking a large proportion of the immigrants back they would make a medical examination of the same character as that to which the immigrant is subjected on his arrival here.

Mr. OLIVER. That is our object, and I believe we are in the way of attaining it.

Mr. LAKE. Could you not induce the shipping companies to a frame of mind which would lead them to require medical certificates at the port of embarkation ?

Mr. OLIVER. We are probably getting them to that frame of mind by compelling them to take the immigrants back.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the United States make a medical examination at the port of embarkation ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, at southern European ports, but not at British ports.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If immigrants have been in this country for a year and six months are the steamship companies responsible for their return ?

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. OLIVER. We think it unfair to hold the steamship people responsible for more than a year after the arrival of the immigrant, but if an immigrant were here for over a year we have an arrangement with the steamship companies to take them back at a charity rate which we pay.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is that rate?

Mr. OLIVER. Fifteen dollars across the Atlantic.

Mr. STAPLES. Do the booking agents go through the rural districts soliciting immigrants?

Mr. OLIVER. Generally they advertise their business, and I understand that a few of them do make such a canvass.

Mr. STAPLES. If these agents go to the homes of intending immigrants the medical examination should be made at the originating point. A responsible medical officer in the district should give a certificate which would be presented to the booking agent and by him to the steamship company. This would save a great deal of trouble to the government and a great deal of distress to immigrants who may be sent back. For what disease is the majority of these immigrants deported? I understand that trachoma is very prevalent and that the disease is spreading and is incurable.

Mr. OLIVER. I have heard it said that the disease is incurable and I have also heard it is not difficult to cure. In the hospitals which have been established at the ocean ports we give treatment for it, and in a very large number of cases there is said to be complete recovery.

Mr. HERRON. Who can tell whether an immigrant is or is not a farmer so that the booking agent is entitled to the bonus? To my own knowledge men who professed to be farmers knew nothing at all about the business, but no doubt the bonus was paid on them.

Mr. OLIVER. I have already gone over that question twice to-night, but for the information of my hon. friend I will go over it again. The booking agent makes his claim, stating that the immigrant has represented himself thus and so to him. That claim is checked against the statement made by the immigrant to the inspecting officer at the point of landing. The ship's manifest shows the name of the immigrant, so that the chain of identification is complete. If it is found that the statement of the immigrant accords with the claim of the booking agent, there is a prima facie case for the payment of the bonus. However, the department has an opportunity of knowledge in regard to the subsequent movements of the immigrant, which is fairly accurate; and if it is found on inquiry that a man in regard to whom a bonus has been paid has not followed the occupation he declared his intention of following, the amount of the bonus is deducted from the next payment to the booking agent. That is not an infallible check, but I think that the statement of homestead entry made upon the lands in the Northwest generally, in proportion to the total immigration, fairly well bears out the belief that we do not pay bonuses on more people than the booking agents are really entitled to receive payment upon.

Some resolutions reported.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 179) to incorporate the Synod of the Diocese of Keewatin.—Mr. McCraney.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are you to take Supply to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. We shall continue with the estimates of the Minister of the Interior, and later, if opportunity offers, we will take up those of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Motion agreed to, House adjourned at 12.20 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, June 5, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 182) for the relief of Hattie Spratte.—Mr. Ralph Smith.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I would like now to present the motion of which I gave notice a day or so ago regarding the fourth report of the committee appointed to supervise the official reports of the debates of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Would my hon. friend permit me—I have received a communication from Mr. Gervais, chairman of the committee, in which he asks that this report be not taken up in his absence. I would ask my hon. friend to let the matter stand until Tuesday next when Mr. Gervais will be present.

Mr. MONK. As that report was adopted on the 20th of May it might be acted upon and that may be invoked as a reason against my motion. If I have the assurance of my right hon. friend that the delay will not be invoked against the motion which I am about to make I have no objection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am informed that action has been assumed upon that report.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. JOHNSTON moved that the third report of the committee on Public Accounts be concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER. In all these cases there must be appended to the motion a clause asking that the rule be suspended. We had a discussion on that matter a little while ago and this course was recommended.

Motion amended and agreed to.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Last report of the International Waterways Commission—Soulanges Canal.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

SOULANGES CANAL.

Mr. MONK. Will the Minister of Railways and Canals be good enough to lay upon the table of the House the report made by Mr. Boyer upon matters concerning the Soulanges Canal. It is absolutely necessary we should have that report before the estimates for that department are gone into.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). That report has been received but I have not had an opportunity to act on it as yet. It would hardly be wise to place the report on the table before I have had a chance to digest it and take action on it. I expect in a very few days to be able to lay it on the table.

Mr. MONK. It is necessary that we should wait for that report until the department takes action upon it. The matter is a serious one, and have we not the right before going into the estimates to see what the commissioner has reported as to the state of affairs existing upon the canal ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Before we get through with the estimates there will be no trouble about it. I think my hon. friend will agree that it would be unwise to discuss these reports in public before the department decides what action it will take.

ORDER IN COUNCIL re IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LENNOX. When will the order in council regulating immigration into western Canada passed in pursuance of the statute of this session, be laid on the table of the House ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I think I will be able to lay it on the table of the House as soon as the estimates are taken up.

Mr. LENNOX. This is a matter of urgency and importance and there has been already a great deal of delay. I ask that it be laid on the table of the House at once.

Mr. OLIVER. As soon as I have an opportunity to see the commissioner of immigration I will do so.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MR. DANIEL.

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St. John). As a question of privilege I desire to refer to some of the remarks made by the Minister of Finance last night when I was not present in the House. Referring to me and to the subject I brought to the attention of the House yesterday he said :

> At an early stage of the session the hon. gentleman placed a notice on the paper intimating his intention to bring this matter before the House and he had abundant opportunity to do so but for his own reasons he did not avail himself of it, and months passed, and now in the seventh month of the session he has brought up the question at a time and in a manner which certainly is not calculated to advance the cause he claimed to have at heart. . . . It was quite evident that the object of my hon. friend was not so much to invite the attention of the House to the matter as to join his friends in that policy of delaying the business of the House which in their judgment they have seen fit to pursue.

With regard to the latter statement I have to state that it is untrue in fact.

Mr. FIELDING. Order.

Mr. DANIEL. Well, if there is any other parliamentary term that the hon. minister prefers that expresses the same idea, I will use that. The statement attributes a motive to me which did not exist. There is no basis for any such insinuation. I placed this proposed resolution on the Order Paper as early as the 13th of February. There were a very large number of resolutions on the Order Paper, and mine was not reached before the time came when the private members' day was taken away altogether. After that, on two occasions, at the most, I made arrangements to bring the matter up, but at the request of gentlemen who wished to speak upon it, I delayed it, and this was the first time——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hardly think the hon. member is out of order in explaining why he brought up this question yesterday, and not earlier.

Mr. DANIEL. I am not debating the question. I am simply giving the reasons why it was not brought up before. After the private members' day was taken, the only method left to me to bring this matter up at all was on the motion for the House to go into Committee of Supply, and I took the first clear opportunity that occurred to me to do so, and brought it up yesterday.

Mr. FIELDING. As the hon. gentleman has been allowed to give the reasons why he did certain things, I am at liberty to give the reasons why I made the observation I did. The hon. gentleman had ample time, long before the private members' day was taken by the government, to bring forward this matter, if he desired to treat it as a great and important matter. I do not undertake to discuss the wisdom or unwisdom of the course he has pursued. As to whether or not he delayed the business of the House, I have nothing further to say than that the record of yesterday's proceedings will speak for itself.

Mr. DANIEL. It was only in the first week or two after the resoultion was put on the Order Paper, at the most that I had the opportunity to bring it up on private members' day.

Mr. FIELDING. Private members' day stood for several months during the session.

Mr. DANIEL. There were previous motions on the paper and they took up the time.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—HON. MR. PUGSLEY.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Mr. Speaker, I desire to rise to a question of privilege. I was out of the House last evening, when, as I observe by the report in 'Hansard,' the hon. member for the county of York (Mr. Crocket) referred to the fact that I had, previous to coming to this parliament, taken an interest in this question of representation and that I had argued the question on behalf of the province before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as well as before the Supreme Court, and he criticised quite severely my absence from the House and my not taking part in the discussion. Mr. Speaker, all that I desire to say is that I felt, and felt most strongly, that the hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. Daniel) had brought this question before the House at a most inappropriate time—at a time when, if hon. gentlemen on this side of the House engaged in any lengthy discussion, they would only be aiding my hon. friend in what I thought was an obstruction to the important business which this House was called upon to deal with. In my department there are public works of great importance, the carrying on of which is delayed by reason of our not getting the Supplies. There are thousands of labouring men throughout this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Just allow me one word. Mr. Speaker,—and therefore I thought that I ought not to be a party to wasting one minute of the time of this House under such circumstances.

Mr. TAYLOR. What are you doing now?

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to a return which I asked for on January 29, with regard to the public expenditures in Prince county, P. E. I. It would not take very much trouble to make up that return, but it is not down yet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am quite satisfied that that return was brought down some weeks ago.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I went to the return room yesterday morning, and was told that the return had not yet come down.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I find by the Votes and Proceedings, on page 1015, that that return was brought down on the 26th of May.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals when we may expect the return that was promised early in the session in regard to the investigation of the tunnel matter.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think my hon. friend will remember that it was not a report of an investigation, but a return of certain information that the chief engineer had been compiling on the subject. I might say that so far nothing very definite concerning the tunnel has been found. I will make inquiry about it.

ILLEGAL DISTRIBUTION OF WHISKY.

Mr. MONK. I would like to call the attention of the government to a very urgent and important matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is only for the purpose of asking a question ?

Mr. MONK. Only for the purpose of asking a question. Information has reached me from a reliable source to the effect that there is $8,000 worth of whisky in bond in charge of the customs at Thetford Mines belonging to F. X. Labranche of Megantic, and the whisky is being distributed in the counties of Beauce and Megantic without duty being paid. My information is to the effect that the whisky is out of the possession of Mr. Labranche and that he is not a consenting party to this operation. I would like to ask the government if they have any knowledge of these acts, and if they will take immediate steps to check this violation of the law if it exists.

Mr. FIELDING. Is my hon. friend in a position to give the source of his information ? Such charges are almost invariably denied, and if we had the source of the information, it would facilitate inquiry.

Mr. MONK. My information comes from a very reliable source, and I will have no objection, when my hon. friend is through, to communicate it to him.

Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend will send me the name privately, I will make inquiry of the Customs Department at once. I think that there must be a mistake; or that the information is incorrect, because I cannot imagine that the customs authorities would permit such a thing as my hon. friend has mentioned.

SUPPLY—CHARGE OF OBSTRUCTION.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. C. L. OWEN (East Northumberland). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I wish to bring to the notice of the government a report in that great Reform newspaper, the Toronto 'Globe.' That paper does sometimes sin a little in reporting the sayings of hon. members on this side of the House, but I admit that it is always very accurate when reporting the sayings of hon. members on the government side. Therefore I take this report as being correct. It is a report of a political meeting held on Wednesday evening in the city of Brantford, where the hon. Minister of Customs, Mr. Paterson, is reported to have said :

> In his department there were 1,800 men who could not get their pay because the Tory obstructionists would not vote supplies.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OWEN. The Hon. William Paterson knew, when he stated upon the hustings in the city of Brantford, that his supplies had been voted by this House before he left Ottawa on Monday evening for Brantford. Therefore it was very unjust and unfair for him to endeavour to mislead the people in his own city by making them believe that we would not vote him supply required to pay the men in his department.

Mr. EMMERSON. Where is the Supply Bill ?

Mr. OWEN. I am coming to that in a few moments. I notice also that the employees in the postal service have been finding fault because their salaries have not been paid. If I take the Toronto 'World' —and that good paper is generally correct —I see that the whole amount of the post office supply was voted the 22nd May last —the full amount of over $5,000,000. I am given to understand that the trouble is that the government have not brought down their Supply Bill, and until that Bill is brought down this money cannot be paid out in salaries. It is very unfair and unjust for a minister of the Crown to go around the country trying to make the people believe that the opposition are obstructing.

An hon. MEMBER. What are you doing now ?

Mr. OWEN. Why, it was only about a week ago that the Minister of Customs brought down his estimates. We held him up a week and were justified in so doing, because he was asking for $100,000 more this year than last and could not give any satisfactory explanation what he was going to do with it. He said that a lot of men had worked overtime but he could not tell who they were or what they were doing. All he could say was that they had sent in affidavits. What kind of an explanation was that to give ? Then he wanted $50,000 more but could not say what that was for. He said it would be nice to have that amount on hand. But we do not approve of that way of voting money and the people will uphold us. Before voting money we want to know how it is going to be spent. I submit that the fault lies with the government in not having brought down its Supply Bill. How can we concur in a Supply Bill before it is submitted to us ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I regret that my hon. friend did not deem it expedient to wait until my hon. colleague the Minister of Customs returned and was in his place.

Mr. OWEN. I was hoping he would be in his place this morning.

Mr. FIELDING. No doubt my hon. friend hoped that the minister would withdraw his valuable voice from the political campaign. But if, in the exercise of his judgment as a citizen, my hon. colleague sees fit to absent himself, as other hon. members are doing, in the exercise of his rights as a citizen, that is no reason for attacking him in his absence. It is no reason why, if the hon. gentleman has anything to say against the minister, he should not wait until my hon. colleague is in his place. I can assure him that he will have difficulty in persuading the country that the Minister of Customs would make a statement before any public audience which was not made in good faith and could not be substantiated. He is too well known for any one who knows him to assume that he would do anything of the kind. I repeat that not a dollar of supply has been voted for the Customs or Post Office Departments.

Mr. OWEN. Have not all the supplies that have been asked for been voted ?

Mr FIELDING. They have not been voted at all.

Mr. OWEN. Have they not passed this House ?

Mr. FIELDING. They have not. I again say that they have not been voted. Not one dollar of supply has passed this House.

Mr. OWEN. Did they not pass this House in Committee of the Whole ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. Then the fault lies with the government in not having brought down a Supply Bill.

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend contend that every time we pass an item in the Committee of Supply we must immediately bring down a Supply Bill ? Last night we passed a couple of hundred thousand dollars for the Department of the Interior, and according to my hon. friend's view we should immediately bring down a Supply Bill converging these items.

Mr. OWEN. Are you sure you have not used that money for any other purpose ?

Mr. FIELDING. We have not. There is no power under Heaven could get a dollar of that money until the votes pass through their several stages in this parliament—not only of this House but the Senate as well. When my hon. friend says that we did not bring down a Supply Bill, he is mistaken. We did some time ago, and after the usual procedure it became law ; but surely he will not seriously say that every time we pass an item we must bring down a new Supply Bill ? Such a contention is preposterous. The Supply Bill is usually brought down after we have passed all the estimates. The estimates are then consolidated into a Supply Bill which is duly presented. But the hon. gentleman assumes that the moment the Post Office items were passed we should bring down a Supply Bill, then later on bring down another Supply Bill when the Customs estimates are voted, and so on with each department. My hon. friend must see that the argument he advances is entirely unwarranted.

Mr. OWEN. I notice that we passed last month over $11,000,000 of Supply through Committee of the Whole. Was it not worth while to bring down a Supply Bill covering these items and thus enable the employees to obtain their wages ?

Mr. FIELDING. I am not disposed to discriminate. I am not disposed to make fish of one and flesh of another. The public officials and others who have claims against the government in the different departments and provinces have all equal rights and I do not propose to discriminate among them. I do not propose that the employees in one branch shall be paid for their services and the others not.

Mr. OWEN. I have not forgotten that the Minister of Finance did say a few months ago that we have no rights in this House.

Mr. FIELDING. That phrase for a time seemed to do my hon. friends opposite some good. I will be glad to repeat the same statement and give my hon. friends the benefit of it once more. Every member of this House and every group of members has just as much right as the majority accord to them, and no more. That is true to-day as it was true then. But the trouble is my hon. friends opposite have abused their rights. The trouble is that we have got into the habit of permitting an easy going method of procedure whereby hon. gentlemen opposite are permitted to delay the business of the House to an extent that would not be allowed in any civilized country outside of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FIELDING. It was just such difficulty that compelled the mother of parliaments to adopt a procedure which allows the majority to rule. But it is difficult to bring some people to understand why the majority of this parliament should not rule. Let it be understood that if men on both sides would realize their responsibility, if they would realize their obligations to the State as well as their party interests, they would admit that this parliament has allowed a latitude and freedom of discussion which enables any half dozen men in this House to hold up any one measure the whole session. It was never supposed that any member would abuse that privilege the way hon. gentlemen opposite are doing.

Mr. OWEN. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he remembers the hold-up in 1896 ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, but in the so called hold up in 1896 there never was an hour when the necessities of the public service were not provided for. In all the discussions in 1896. supplies were available, the public servants were being paid, the public works were going on, contracttors were getting their money and they were paying their workmen, and these, in turn, were paying the grocer, the butcher and the baker—all the wheels of government were turning and there was no obstruction. That is not the condition to-day. Supplies that were held up in 1896 were the supplies of a future period, and there was always abundant money for the immediate purpose of the government. That is not the situation to-day. To-day, by the exercise of a privilege that this House mistakenly has given to the minority, a privilege which is not granted in the mother country, a privilege which is not granted in the corresponding body at Washington, a privilege more liberally interpreted in this House than in any other legislative body in the world, hon. gentlemen opposite have been able to hold up the supplies and prevent the people of this country from getting the money which is their due.

Mr. D. A. GORDON (East Kent). Mr. Speaker, the innocence of hon. gentlemen opposite is certainly most notable. I think the time appropriate to discuss at some length the question of obstruction so that we may see where these hon. gentlemen stand. Before I finish, I will take opportunity to refer to the rules that have been adopted in the British parliament, and I think it will be seen that hon. gentlemen opposite stand in exactly the position in which the Minister of Finance has put them to-day so far as their relation to the voting of supplies is concerned. I fully realize my inability to discuss this question from either a legal or technical standpoint, but must content myself with viewing it from the standpoint of the plain, ordinary business man dealing in simple parlance with the organized tactics that are daily pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite for the purpose of obstruction. It is a time-honoured custom, on going into Supply, for an hon. member to discuss any question affecting his constituency or the country at large, to air a grievance or complaint. This rule is a most salutary one and, particularly in the earlier part of the session, the greatest latitude of debate in this respect should be allowed and should be taken advantage of by members on both sides of the House. This is consistent with free speech, as it affords ample opportunity to discuss questions of importance. On this freedom we pride ourselves. But we should jealously guard our discussions and in no way permit them to interfere with the transaction of public business. When this good rule is broken, when freedom of debate is taken advantage of, not to discuss matters of urgency or importance, but simply to delay or block the despatch of legitimate business in the House, then, Sir, I submit, the freedom which is so abused should be curtailed in some way. It is my humble opinion that, after a certain stage in the session, such discussions as I have referred to should not be permitted on more than one day in the week, and even then only for a limited time—at most for an hour or two.

Although the government, as is well known, was ready with its work at the opening of this session, practically nothing has been done to date; in fact, any reputable business house in the country could transact in six weeks' time as much business as we have put through here in six months. Generally speaking, I believe the average voter throughout the country feels disposed to hold the government responsible for the delay, not understanding clearly our methods of procedure, not realizing that a dozen men—or two men, for that matter—can hold up indefinitely the voting of supplies or the transaction of the country's business. Under such conditions, it becomes, in my judgment, our duty to find such a solution of this difficulty as will effectually overcome the evil we have to face. We are sent here to legislate for the country's benefit and generally to assist in the transacting of the country's business. We believe it to be our duty to assume any responsibility necessary to attain these ends and to render an account of our acts not to the opposition in this House but to the people we represent.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to put myself on record as advocating the adoption of such rules as will enable the House to proceed with the business of the country, giving that business preference in all cases, and shutting off the long, windy speeches, which, at best, are only for party purposes and cannot serve the best interests of the country in any sense. Year after year the length of the session is growing greater. In order to make the comparison clear, yet as brief as possible, I have made up the figures in 10-year periods.

Mr. MONK. Is not my hon. friend (Mr. Gordon) delaying the House by this long disquisition ?

Mr. GORDON. I hope that, in the end, it will have the effect of facilitating the business greatly. In the period from 1878 to 1887, the average length of the session was 100 days, and the average length of each day's sitting was 3 hours and 34 minutes. From 1888 to 1897, the average was 114½ days, and the average sitting of the House was 7 hours and 9 minutes. From 1898 to 1907, the average session was 169 days and the time of the average day's sitting was 7 hours. Now, to make a comparison, I have taken the figures for South Australia, Tasmania and Victoria. The figures are as follows :

	Average length of session days.	Average length of days sitting hours minutes.
South Australia, average for 25 years of..	82	4:30
Tasmania, average for 25 years of....	83	4:28
Victoria (previous to 1880)....	64	6:51

Now, as to the tactics pursued here, we on this side are not alone in complaining. We find that newspaper organs representing the Conservative party also complain. In this connection, I would take the liberty of reading an article which appeared in the Montreal 'Star,' a paper well known to hon. gentlemen opposite :

So far as we can gather from the sleepy reports which the papers have been able to give us of the 'terrible struggle' which went on at Ottawa during the last three days of last week, it was a fight for more readiness to bring down information. Now an opposition is certainly justified in demanding the fullest information. But the minister who was behind with his 'information' explained that his department was getting it ready as rapidly as it could, and that he would soon lay it on the table. He did not refuse to give the information; he promised to give it.. . . The result was the opposition kept parliament sitting, at great cost to the country, through three weary and empty days while they protested against a minister who could not turn out information faster than his clerks could work. Obstruction is the heaviest piece of siege artillery available to an opposition. It is, moreover, a gun which can very easily blow itself to pieces. At Westminster it has blown itself to pieces, and that is a free parliament. At Washington the very pieces have been buried out of sight, and the minority lies helpless at the feet of the majority.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY. That is what you would like to have.

Mr. GORDON (reading) :

The opposition should think of this before it runs out its hundred-ton cannon to brush away the fly.

I believe the House would agree, and not only the House but the country, that these hon. gentlemen opposite have been every day bringing out their 100-ton guns to brush away flies.

If the minister positively refused information, then the situation would be changed. If the information, when it comes down, reveals scandalous wastefulness or worse, then we shall expect the opposition to make the most of it. But it will only weaken its power to attract public attention to great wrongs if it insists upon flagging the fast express of parliament every time it wants to ask a mail clerk why a letter has been delayed.

Now in view of what has transpired, it is easy for us to realize whether we are drifting when, on many occasions, a whole day is taken up in voting a single item of a few thousand dollars. As the country develops, the envy and jealousy of our opposition friends appear to increase because such conditions exist under Liberal rule. Let me refer the House for comparison to a vote recorded on page 150, volume 3, in the proceedings of the English parliament. There it will be found recorded that a vote for £31,234,235 was put through immediately under the proceedings in the British House of Commons. I wish also to place on record certain rules adopted by the British House of Commons, and also comments by authorities, showing the causes which led to their adoption. I have selected the extracts which I thought most pertinent. On page 339 of 'May's Parliamentary Practice' I find the following :

The rules of parliament are designed to afford every legitimate opportunity of discussion, to ensure reasonable delays in the passing of important measures, and to guard the rights of minorities; and freedom of debate has been maintained and observed by the rules and usages of both Houses, with rare patience and self-denial.

Mr. LANCASTER. Whose language is the hon. gentleman reading which speaks of the rights of minorities ?

Mr. GORDON. May on Parliamentary Practice.

Mr. LANCASTER. Will he send the book over to the Minister of Finance for his information about the rights of minorities?

Mr. GORDON. If my hon. friend will be patient he will see what this leads up to.

But of late, these salutary rules have been strained and perverted, in the House of Commons for purposes of obstruction. Such a course, if persisted in, would frustrate the power and authority of parliament, and secure the domination of a small minority, condemned by the deliberate judgment of the House and of the country. That it was unparliamentary and opposed to the principles of orderly government was manifest: and on the 25th of July, 1887, it was declared by the Speaker 'That any member wilfully and persistently obstructing public business, without just and reasonable cause, is guilty of a contempt of the House, and would be liable to such punishment, whether by censure, by suspension from the service of the House, or by commitment, as the House may adjudge.'

Mr. LANCASTER. What about the hon. gentleman's own course at this minute ?

Mr. GORDON. If the hon. gentleman will only have patience, the much needed light will come :

That a revision of the standing orders must be made to secure the due transaction of public business, and to maintain the dignity of the House, became obvious. The matter was considered by a select committee in 1878, and a standing order was passed, 28th February, 1880, amended 22nd November, 1882, for the suspension of a member from the service of the House, on question put forthwith, who shall be named by the Speaker, or the chairman of a committee of the whole House, whether he be the chairman of Ways and Means or any other chairman, for committing the offence of disregarding the authority of the chair, or of abusing the rules of the House by persistently and wilfully obstructing the business of the House, or otherwise. Suspension under the standing orders as amended, 22nd November, 1882, lasted on the first occasion, for a month; the second, for a fortnight; and on any subsequent occasion, for a month; but these periods of time were taken out of the standing order in the course of its amendment in session 1902 with a view to the substitution of other periods. As these, however, were not agreed upon by the House, the suspension of a member under the standing order continues for the session unless the House terminates it sooner. An amendment of the standing order made on the 7th March, 1901, provided that if through the refusal of a member who had been suspended to withdraw from the House the Speaker has to call the attention of the House to the fact that force was necessary to compel obedience to his direction, such member is thereupon without further question put suspended during the remainder of the session. Notices standing in the name of a suspended member are removed from the notice paper of each day as it is made out, as long as the suspension lasts. Suspension carries with it exclusion from the precincts of the House. The offence must arise in the House, and be dealt with at once. No motion can be made that a suspended member be heard at the bar.

Temporary provision was also made by the urgency resolutions of sessions 1881 and 1882, to facilitate the consideration of several important Bills; and in subsequent sessions resolutions have been agreed to by the House prescribing the conditions under which, and the times at which, the outstanding stages of Bills should be concluded.

Limitations were also placed by standing orders No. 22, 23 and 30, passed during the session of 1882, amended session 1888, upon obstructive motion for adjournment, and vexatious divisions, and provision was made by standing order No. 19 to check the irrelevance or repetition in debate. These standing orders, during session 1888, received increased stringency; and the transaction of business was also furthered by providing for the classification, on the notice paper, of Bills other than government Bills, after Whitsuntide, and for the appointment of motions for the introduction of Bills, and for the nomination of select committees at the commencement of business. By standing order also, with few exceptions, the Speaker leaves the chair forthwith for a Committee of the House.

On page 605 we find the following :

In session 1896 the practice was introduced of devoting a day in each week to the business of supply, and of limiting the time to be allotted for that business during the session. This practice, which was carried on with various modifications under sessional orders until 1902, was in that session embodied in the standing order, Business of Supply. Under this standing order the Business of Supply must be the first order of the day on Thursday as soon as the Committee of Supply has been appointed and the estimates have been presented, while not more than twenty days, being days before the 5th of August, are allotted for the consideration of the annual estimates for the army, navy and civil services, including votes on account, to which additional time, not exceeding three days, before or after the 5th of August, may be allotted by order of the House. The days allotted do not include any day on which the question has to be put that the Speaker do leave the chair, or any day on which the business of supply does not stand as first order, or any day occupied by the consideration of estimates supplementary to those of a previous resolution, or of any vote of credit, or of votes for supplementary or additional estimates presented by the government for war expenditure, or for any new service not included in the ordinary estimates for the year.

As has been already stated on page 259, on an allotted day, after the orders have been entered upon, no business other than the business of supply can be taken before eleven o'clock except a motion for the adjournment of the House under standing order No. 10, or opposed to private business, and no business in committee or procedings on report of supply can be taken after eleven o'clock, unless the House otherwise order on the motion of a minister of the Crown, moved at the commencement of public business, to be decided without amendment or debate. This is also the case even if a general order exempting business from interruption understanding order No. 1 is in force.

Of the days so allotted, not more than one day in committee shall be allotted to any vote on account, and not more than one sitting to the report of that vote. At eleven o'clock on the close of the day on which the committee on that vote is taken, and at the close of the sitting on which the report of that vote is taken, the chairman of committees or the Speaker, as the case may be, must forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the vote or the report.

At ten of the clock on the last day but one of the allotted days, the chairman is directed to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the vote then under consideration, and then to put forthwith the question with respect to each class of the civil service estimates that the total amount of the votes outstanding in that class be granted for the services defined in the class, then in like manner to put severally the questions that the total amounts of the votes outstanding in the estimates for the navy, the army, and the revenue departments be granted for the services defined in those estimates. At ten of the clock on the last (not being earlier than the 20th of the allotted days) the Speaker is directed to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the report of the resolution then under consideration, and then to put forthwith with respect to each class of the civil service estimates, the question, that the House doth agree with the committee in all the outstanding resolutions reported in respect of that class, and then to put a like question with respect to all the resolutions outstanding in the estimates for the Navy, the Army, the Revenue Departments, and other outstanding resolutions severally.

On the days appointed for concluding the business of supply, its consideration may not be anticipated by a motion of adjournment, and no dilatory motion may be moved on proceedings for that business and the business may not be interrupted under any standing order.

The standing order also provides that any additional estimate for any new matter not included in the original estimates for the year, shall be submitted for consideration in the Committee of Supply on some day not later than two days before the committee is closed.

An instruction to the Committee of Supply cannot be moved, as following the Speaker's ruling, 'nothing can be brought on in that committee of which notice has not been given in detail, by the estimates laid before the House.'

The rules of the House governing the Committees of Supply and Ways and Means are to be found at page 921 of the last edition of May. Some of these rules are as follows:

15. (1) As soon as the Committee of Supply has been appointed and estimates have been presented, the business of supply shall, until disposed of, be the first order of the day on Thursday, unless the House otherwise order on the motion of a Minister of the Crown, moved at the commencement of public business, to be decided without amendment or debate.

(2) Not more than 20 days, being days before the 5th of August, shall be allotted for the consideration of the annual estimates for the army, navy and civil services, including votes on account. The days allotted shall not include any day on which the question has to be put that the Speaker do leave the chair, or any day on which the business of supply does not stand as first order.

(5) On a day so allotted, no business other than the business of supply shall be taken before eleven, and no business in committee or proceedings on report of supply shall be taken after eleven, whether a general order exempting business from interruption under the standing order (sittings of the House) is in force or not, unless the House otherwise order on a motion of a Minister of the Crown, moved at the commencement of public business, to be decided without amendment or debate.

(6) Of the days so allotted, not more than one day in committee shall be allotted to any vote on account and not more than one sitting to the report of that vote. At eleven, on the close of the day on which the committee on that vote is taken, and at the close of the sitting on which the report of that vote is taken, the chairman of committees or the Speaker, as the case may be, shall forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the vote or the report.

(7) At ten of the clock on the last day but one of the days so allotted the chairman shall forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the vote then under consideration, and shall then forthwith put the question with respect to each class of the civil service estimates that the total amount of the votes outstanding in that class be granted for the services defined in the class, and shall in like manner put severally the questions that the total amounts of the votes outstanding in the estimates for the navy, the army, and the revenue departments be granted for the services defined in those estimates.

(8) At ten of the clock on the last—not being earlier than the twentieth, of the allotted days, the Speaker shall forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the report of the resolution then under consideration, and shall then forthwith put, with respect to each class of the civil service estimates, the question, that the House doth agree with the committee in all the outstanding resolutions reported in respect of that class, and shall then put a like question with respect to all the resolutions outstanding in the estimates for the navy, the army, the revenue departments, and other outstanding resolutions severally.

(9) On the days appointed for concluding the business of supply, the consideration shall not be anticipated by a motion of adjournment, and no delivery motion shall be moved on proceedings for that business and the business shall not be interrupted under any standing order.

The Speaker of the English House has, under the rules, been entrusted with power to check obstruction which renders it impossible for one, two or a dozen members to prevent the transaction of public business. What has been found effective in England should be given a fair trial here and that without further delay. Briefly, Mr. Speaker, in England the object constantly in view is the transaction of public business and the rules of the House there are so framed as to prevent obstruction, unreasonable delay and tedious repetition. The protection of the rights of minorities is left largely in the hands of Mr. Speaker, but the protection of the House as a whole is his no less imperative duty. The closure may be moved for in either the House or the Committee of the Whole, but Mr. Speaker shall not put the motion if he considers it an infringement on the rights of minorities. If the closure is adopted, the vote is at once taken and the discussion is at an end.

I cannot see that any good purpose would be served by filling pages of 'Hansard' with statistics or quotations from every land on this question. We are living in a practical age and should adopt such rules as will reasonably meet our conditions. Canada to-day is, I believe, practically the only country where there is absolute license in debate. In this regard benighted Russia is in advance of us, the Douma having recently introduced an innovation with a view to keeping wordy oratory to a limit of time. A red lamp is lighted in front of a speaker, and it is automatically extinguished when ten minutes have expired.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman's light would have been out some time ago.

Mr. GORDON. As far as the member for North Toronto is concerned, I would fear the results.

Mr. Speaker, before closing I desire to enter my strongest protest against hon. members opposite interfering with the transacting of the country's business, by means of obstructive tactics such as has been resorted to during the past six months. We believe many members on both sides of the House would welcome a change in rules, and trust now that the time is opportune, that the House will agree to such changes in the rules as may be necessary to prevent in future such wanton waste of time. If this cannot be done then speaking for myself, I believe the government should take the matter in hand and show the country that while they have been patient there is also a limit to which patient endurance will not submit, and that the country will no longer suffer what we have been forced to endure during the past six months.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln). As I am anxious that the proper business of the House shall be conducted, and unlike my hon. friend who has just sat down do not wish to take up the time of the House by talking of matters entirely beside the question before the chair, I desire first of all to say a few words in protest against the language of the Minister of Finance who replied in a very impatient and angry manner to the perfectly proper matter which was brought up by the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Owen), and then I shall say a word or two in regard to the remarks of the hon. member for East Kent (Mr. Gordon). As I said, the question brought up by my hon. friend (Mr. Owens) was a perfectly proper matter to deal with on a motion for supply. The Minister of Customs has seen fit to leave his duties in the House of Commons and to leave his department to enter a provincial campaign in the province of Ontario. He has not been talking on provincial politics but, according to a 'Globe' despatch, he talked of nothing but Dominion matters. The 'Globe' despatch devotes an inch and a half space to Mr. Paterson and all of that refers to what he said on federal politics. The Minister of Customs is improperly away from this House, and when my hon. friend drew this matter to the attention of the Minister of Finance, he should have thanked him and apologized and promised to do better, if he could, in controlling the noise and thunder of the Minister of Customs and keeping it in this House, in order to get the business done and not allow him to go out of his sphere into provincial politics, during a session of this House. The Minister of Customs, speaking in Brant, as reported in the 'Globe,' said:

> There were 1,800 men who could not get their pay because the Tory obstructionists would not vote supplies.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANCASTER. My hon. friend from Cape Breton says 'Hear, hear.'

Mr. JOHNSTON. Sure thing.

Mr. LANCASTER. Well, he has forgotten, as the Minister of Finance seems to have, what happened. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman who is so fond of applauding everything said by the 'Globe' or any of the ministers whom he so blindly follows, was awake in the House when the Minister of Customs ceased to do his work here two or three nights ago. The Minister of Customs got all the supply he asked for through.

Mr. JOHNSTON. When ?

Mr. LANCASTER. Three nights ago.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Why not the night before?

Mr. LANCASTER. He didn't ask for it the night before.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Pardon me, he did.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Minister of Customs brought down the information which he promised on the second night and he then got through five items and the sixth item he was asked to allow to stand so that the member for Brantford might be present. The Minister of Customs stated that under ordinary circumstances it would be reasonable to let that item stand, but he pleaded with us as a matter of courtesy to pass the item and let him go because he had made an arrangement to be out of the city next day, and he went with the consent of the opposition who according to his own admission had the right to keep him here. The Minister of Customs went to Brantford and made his speech, and when it is brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for East Northumberland, the Minister of Finance gets excited and undertakes to read my hon. friend (Mr. Owen) a lecture about bringing up the matter in the absence of the Minister of Customs. But what was the Minister of Customs doing in Brantford? He was talking to the electors who did not know what was taking place in this chamber about what had taken place here, and he was talking to them behind the backs of every member of the opposition, who had they been present would have shown where he was wrong. The Minister of Customs was talking behind the backs of the members of this House who were absent at Ottawa attending to their duties while he was neglecting his.

Mr. FIELDING. Has my hon. friend not been absent on the same mission as the Minister of Customs?

Mr. LANCASTER. Not for one minute during the whole of this campaign, because I thought my duty was here.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman has been frequently absent from his place in the House and I assumed he was engaged in that work.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Minister of Finance had better not assume what he knows nothing about.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not assuming anything when I say the hon. gentleman has been frequently absent. I know that.

Mr. LANCASTER. My total absence from this House has been 12 days since last November. Has any one got a better record than that? Let the Minister of Finance look at his own supporters ; let him look at the member for Welland (Mr. German). How many days has the member for Welland been here to look after the interests of the Niagara district? Before the Minister of Finance undertakes to talk to people on this side of the House he had better know the facts. We all know the Minister of Customs is absent in the provincial election campaign.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The reference to the hon. member for Welland is not fair because that hon. gentleman has been ill all this session.

Mr. LANCASTER. That statement is not correct because I have seen the member for Welland in court half a dozen times this session. I have known the hon. member for Welland to be attending to his private business every month except the last month. I understand he was ill during the last part of May, but he was attending to his own private business up to that day to my certain knowledge. What is the use of the hon. member for Hamilton trying to mislead the House about that matter? But my difficulty is with the Minister of Finance who, because he is not satisfied with the way in which the people of Canada view the actions of the government——

Mr. FIELDING. But I am satisfied.

Mr. LANCASTER. He knows the people of Canada do not approve of the actions of the government and so he gets excited and finds fault with the opposition. If the Minister of Customs made that statement at Brantford as reported in the 'Globe,' he made a misleading statement. I do not say that the statement is wilfully untrue, but I do say it is not a fact and the member for East Northumberland was only discharging his duty when he brought the question to the attention of the House, and the Minister of Finance blames the hon. gentleman for talking behind the back of the Minister of Customs. But the Minister of Customs is talking behind the back of every member on this side of the House and talking what is not correct. Now, these supplies have been voted by the Committee of the House, but the Minister of Finance complains that no Supply Bill has passed. Does he expect the leader of the opposition to draw up his Supply Bill for him?

Mr. FIELDING. When we asked the leader of the opposition to consent to a vote on account the leader of the opposition refused.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as the appropriations for the Department of Customs are concerned, and it is with them we are dealing, no Supply Bill has ever been asked for. The Minister of Finance did ask to have the rules of the House suspended in order that one-eighth or one-fourth of the total Supply Bill might be passed at once and without discussion. That was assented to last March ; it was not assented to later.

Mr. FIELDING. If the rules of the House require to be suspended for that purpose why should they not be suspended? But it is implied whenever you attempt to facilitate business in this way that the rules of the House will be suspended and all that I asked hon. gentlemen opposite to do was to give us a vote on account for the customs and for every other department, and that was refused. If that vote had been granted as we asked it, or had the opposition given us the vote of one-fourth which we originally asked for, to-day the departments would have money to pay the public service.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was not refused in the way in which the hon. gentleman states.

Mr. FIELDING. I did not say in what way it was refused. I say it was refused.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We asked, before we should consent to the suspension of any rules of the House, that we should come to an understanding about a certain very controversial measure which had been brought on for discussion in this House nearly five months and a half after the opening of the session, and brought on with the full knowledge that it was an extremely controversial measure which would produce great discussion.

Mr. FIELDING. The fact that my hon. friend differs from us regarding a certain Bill respecting the province of Manitoba is no possible excuse for failing to give supplies to pay the postmaster down in St. John.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As far as the postmaster in St. John is concerned, the supplies for him have already been voted in this House.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is incorrect again; the supplies have not been voted by this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as I am concerned all have been voted that have been asked for.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is wrong; they have not been voted by this House.

Mr. LANCASTER. I was anxious to let the Minister of Finance go on because he is proving my case every time he opens his mouth. He admits now he did not ask——

Mr. FIELDING. Would my hon. friend permit me——

Mr. LANCASTER. Let me finish my sentence.

Mr. FIELDING. I ask my hon. friend to permit me——

Mr. LANCASTER. I am not going to be interrupted by the Minister of Finance when I am in the middle of a sentence. I am perfectly willing to let him get as excited as he can when I have finished, but I am not going to be interrupted in the middle of a sentence, because it does not do justice to the people who sent me here and who know that I can frame a sentence correctly. The Minister of Finance knows that too, and he does not want the sentence finished. He knows the Minister of Customs has not asked for any Supply Bill to pay these customs salaries.

Mr. FIELDING. I said that on behalf of the Minister of Customs and on behalf of every minister of this government I applied to the hon. members opposite through the proper channel to ask them to consent to a Supply Bill, first for one-fourth of the estimates. The hon. gentlemen refused, but agreed to vote one-eighth. That was done. Whatever credit they are entitled to for it I frankly give to them. When that was exhausted, I called for a further vote on account of customs, the Post Office and every other service of the government, and hon. gentlemen opposite —I do not debate their reason, that is their business—refused.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Minister of Customs did not say what the Minister of Finance has just stated, but the very opposite. He said that in his department there were 1,800 men who could not get their pay because the Tory obstructionists would not vote the Supply. He knows that that is not correct ; he knows that the supplies for those 1,800 men were voted the very night before he left here to go and interfere in the provincial elections. He must have had that fact in mind when he went to Brantford, and it is no wonder that the Minister of Finance cannot find any other way of getting around it than by getting angry.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think the hon. gentleman should accuse me of getting angry. I am not angry.

Mr. LANCASTER. Appearances are very deceptive, then. The hon. gentleman should take a stage manager with him, so that we would not think he was angry when he was not. We must be judged more or less by our actions in this House, and the Minister of Finance must expect to be judged by the tones he uses. If the Minister of Customs wanted to make a statement to the Brantford audience in good faith, why did he not say what the Minister of Finance has just said ? What he should have stated was that the supplies for those 1,800 men and every thing he had asked for had been voted the night before he left, and that it only needed the Supply Bill to put it into full effect, and that the government had not yet asked for the Supply Bill. I shall be curious to hear what the hon. Minister of Customs will say when he returns to this House. He is a gentleman for whom we have always had the highest respect, and I do not think that he will be willing to live under the imputation of having made a statement so absolutely deceptive. The Minister of Finance says you cannot bring down a Supply Bill every day. If he will look through the statutes of this parliament during the last seven sessions, since I have been here, I venture to say that he will find that there has not been one year in which there has not been more than one Supply Bill, and in some years there have been three or four. If the hon. gentleman wanted a Supply Bill in order to get the money for these 1,800 employees, why did he not ask us if we would pass a Supply Bill ? He knows very well that we would. He knows that as soon as an item goes through the Committee of Supply, our opposition to it ceases, and we always allow a Supply Bill to go through in five minutes, whenever it is brought in. The Minister of Finance must not try to deceive the people of this country ; they are too intelligent to be deceived by that sort of thing. We have passed, as has been pointed out, between eleven and twelve million dollars. Why, then, has the Minister of Finance not asked for a Supply Bill, if he wants this money ? The hon. member for East Kent (Mr. Gordon) had the temerity to refer to the fact that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was not able to get his estimates through for two or three days. He forgets entirely that the whole trouble was that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries wanted us to take his word instead of bringing down some original papers which we wanted to see. If the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had exercised any common sense, he would have withdrawn his item and said that it was not reasonable that he should ask this House to vote it when the original papers were asked for and were not produced. The hon. member for East Kent intimated that the department were making up the papers as fast as they could, and that the clerks were overworked. The hon. gentleman knows that we were not asking for any copies, or for one minute's work to be done by any clerk in the department, but that it was the original papers we wanted to see, the papers on which the minister was relying for the statements he was making, before we allowed that large and very contentious item to pass. The hon. member for East Kent also, following the Minister of Finance, undertakes to give us some advice as to what we ought to do in discussing the business of this country, and he quotes an authority who is dead against what the Minister of Finance said about the rights of minorities. Let us settle this matter if we can, seeing that the hon. member for East Kent, for some reason, does not want the Minister of the Interior to get through any supplies this morning. The hon. gentleman got up at 11.30 o'clock and stopped supply by making a speech about amending the rules of the House with regard to matters which should have been attended to a year or two ago when the rules were being amended. The hon. gentleman says the rights of the opposition should be curtailed but does not propose any amendment defining in what respect they should be restricted. We had from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) over and over again the statement that the minority in this House have no rights except what the majority give them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are these hon. gentlemen who interrupt not satisfied with that declaration of the Minister of Finance or are they convinced that he is talking nonsense when he says the majority have no rights in this House?

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman continues to repeat that I said the opposition had no rights. I said nothing of the kind. I said that every member of this House has the rights which the rules of the House, passed by the majority, give him.

Mr. LANCASTER. We had a lively discussion on that question, and the Minister of Finance said that we have no rights except what the majority chose to give us.

Mr. FIELDING. That is right.

Mr. LANCASTER. Now the hon. member for East Kent (Mr. Gordon) says our rights should be curtailed.

Mr. GORDON. We complain that you are abusing and going beyond your rights.

Mr. LANCASTER. If we have none at all how can we go beyond them? The Speaker could prevent our exercising any rights if we have none. When the Minister of Finance said that we have no rights he said what was not true, and now we have the hon. member for East Kent (Mr. Gordon) making a speech to prove that the Minister of Finance was all wrong in his statement and that the rights of the minority should be more curtailed than they are. But he is thus opening up a very large question indeed; and if that question be discussed until midnight, it is entirely his fault. The hon. gentleman said, on the motion to go into Supply, that he had an important question to bring up which should be settled. But he did not move any amendment, and therefore we are completely in the dark as to what method he proposes to curtail our rights. I apprehend that he himself has been taking up the attention of the House simply for the purpose of obstructing Supply. When he talks of preventing members of the opposition from discussing matters which are properly before the House, he should have backed up his speech by a motion so that we might have some idea of what he proposes this House should do in order to accomplish the object he aims at. He should have moved an amendment in concrete form and in not doing so he has been guilty of discourtesy to this House. He urged that before going into Supply, the rules of the House should be amended. In this way he was obstructing Supply, and yet he does not submit any motion which would indicate exactly in what way he proposes to curtail our rights. And while raising such an important discussion and thus taking up valuable time, he expressed the hope that this discussion would not delay the House too long. But if he were sincere in not desiring to waste the time of the House, why did he not move an amendment so that we might know what he means? Possibly the hon. gentleman is one of those many members from the province of Ontario who are convinced that their usefulness as members of this House has gone and that they stand no chance, or very little chance, of being re-elected. Possibly he feels that he cannot expect re-election if he undertakes any longer to support this government through thick and thin, and therefore is seeking a pretext which will enable him to go before his electors and claim that he is not backing up the government in everything. True the government were complaining that the opposition were preventing Supply going through, but the hon. gentleman wants to be able to say that he has acted as an independent and was not going any longer to follow the Laurier government in that regard. How else can we account for the fact that when the government is asking for Supply, we find him raising such an important question now as that affecting the rights of members of this House to criticise the conduct of the government. For my part I protest against the hon. gentleman arguing that the rules should be amended and then sitting down without putting his ideas into the concrete form of an amendment to the motion to go into Supply.

Mr. GORDON. Was it not the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Owen) who started the issue?

Mr. LANCASTER. Not at all. That hon. gentleman simply drew attention to a statement of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), which was utterly unfounded, and which he made while neglecting his duties in this House in order to take part in a local election. Had the hon. member for East Kent not interfered my hon. friend from Northumberland would have made his statement, which did not take him five minutes, we would have had the answer of the Minister of Finance and my reply, and we would have been in Supply an hour ago. But the hon. member for East Kent (Mr. Gordon) stood up in his place; and in order to show the people of his constituency that he was not entirely in the hands of the government on this question, he raised the issue of amending the rules of debate without at the same time iudicating, by a motion, in what respect he would have them amended. Had it not been for his interference in the discussion and for his bringing up a question so open to discussion, we would have been in Supply at twenty-five minutes to twelve. The hon. gentleman in fact blocked the Supply and prevented the Speaker leaving the chair, and he did this by raising the question of interfering with the rights of the minority, although his leader, the Minister of Finance, has declared that the minority have no rights.

Mr. GORDON. The hon. gentleman finds fault with me for taking up half an hour of the time of the House. but how many hours has he taken up this session?

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not pretend to know, but I do say that the hon. gentleman who has just spoken is the first member of this House who has said that I wasted time by speaking here. He may have plucked up courage enough to say that here, but I venture to say he will take it back if he should meet me at lunch time. He has said to me in conversation, not once only but half a dozen times, that if all the members of the opposition talked as little and as sensibly as I do there would be no waste of time. Now, I do not care a button which of the different opinions the hon. gentleman expressed is his real opinion. All I say is that he ought to have a conservative mind and say the same thing whether he is in the House or out of it. He ought not to be so good a supporter of the Laurier government as to say one thing at one time and a different thing at another time. I am not influenced one way or the other by the hon. gentleman's opinion, I do not speak in this House with a view to either winning or opposing such opinion concerning myself. I think that like other hon. members on this side I speak only when it seems to me in the interest of my constituents and the country that I should speak. But, when we are in Supply and a cabinet minister refuses information, refuses even to produce original documents, would the hon. member say that we should allow that Supply to go through without getting the information to which the country is entitled ? The hon. gentleman's argument is that the rights of the opposition should be curtailed according to the wish of the Finance Minister or any other member of the government who may have certain business he wishes to put through. What would become of responsible government if that view of the case should prevail ? The government undertakes to do something knowing that the people are against them, and knowing that the feeling against them will be the more increased the more the matter is discussed. The hon. gentleman would say : Gag the opposition. If this could be done, there would be no object in people electing members to check and criticise the government, for the opposition would be deprived of the opportunity to perform that function. What would be the result ? There would be a petition to the King to reconsider the constitution of the country. If the hon. gentleman knows anything about public rights he must know that.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Give it to him.

Mr. LANCASTER. Give what to whom? If I could give the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) some knowledge of the duty he owes to his constituents—who, I understand, are not very anxious to send him back after the approaching elections—it would be a good thing. But what the hon. gentleman says does not affect me, for he no more than the hon. member for East Kent (Mr. Gordon) gives me sincere advice. The hon. gentleman is willing that the country should be dealt with by the government as the government pleases. But we are not in that position. The people have the right to know what is to be done with the taxes they pay to this government, and it is the duty of the opposition to see that that information is supplied. It would suit the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) very well at present to have the government all-powerful. But after the next election, he will come to the conclusion that the opposition should have some rights.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It is just a quarter to one. Does the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) think he can talk it out ?

Mr. LANCASTER.

Mr. LANCASTER. I will try, if it will accommodate the hon. gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Only a quarter of an hour more.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am willing to sit down now if I have convinced the House of the correctness of the position of the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Owen) in raising this important question. And the hon. members who are interrupting me are doing no good to the country as a whole by taking the position that the Minister of Customs, or any other minister, is justified in leaving the House, especially at a time when business is so pressing that morning sittings have been ordered, to take part in the provincial election and to complain to the public about the business here not being done. I wonder that some good intelligent Reformer, did not ask the Minister of Customs why he was not down here doing what he could, at any rate, to have the business put through. In fact, that may have happened, but the 'Globe' has not seen fit to repeat it. And the Minister of Customs has not represented the matter fairly before the country, in complaining that the money of which he spoke was voted.

Mr. JOHNSTON. No, no.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is what he said. What is the use of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Johnston) denying it ? The money was voted in Committee of Supply. It could not be available without a Supply Bill, but the Minister of Customs did not propose a Supply Bill. So he is misleading the people when he says he cannot get his 1,800 men paid. In view of the statements made by the member for East Kent (Mr. Gordon) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) concerning the rights of the minority, I thought it well to discuss this matter, but I understand that some hon. gentlemen desire to speak, so I will give way.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS (Yale-Cariboo). Mr. Speaker, it is not in keeping with the eternal fitness of things that the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) should represent Lincoln and Niagara—that there should be so much wind-power located so near the magnificent water-power of Niagara Falls. This question has come up, and I do not think the House could be better engaged than in discussing the situation that has developed here during the last two or three months. I take it that this government was sent here by the people, with a majority of 60 or 70 members, to transact the public business. I also take it that if the rules of the House do not enable this government to transact the business of the country as against a weak minority, the sooner the rules are changed the better. I am not surprised that hon. gentlemen opposite should strive so valiantly to justify the hopeless and indefensible position in which they find themselves to-day. They have simply brought the parliament of Canada into disrepute by their actions during the last two or three months. Now they are trying to argue that they have not held up Supply. Why, Sir, they have systematically held up Supply ever since this House began this session. Every time the government has endeavoured to get Supply, some senseless, silly resolution has been moved by some hon. gentleman opposite, and the discussion continued until we find that, after five or six months of session, we have been unable to carry on the business of the country. Let me say in all seriousness to this government, that the responsibility attaches to them to see that the business of the country is carried on; and let me also say that if hon. gentlemen opposite persist in the course they have been pursuing for the last two or three months, the sooner the government realizes the fact that the people of this country expect them to carry on the public business, the better it will be for this parliament and for this country. Let me call attention to the fact that a similar situation developed in the imperial parliament a number of years ago, and the then Speaker, exercising an authority which the House did not give him, but acting in the best interest of the country, put the question immediately without any authority by the rules of the House. A similar situation has developed here, and if the House does not transact the business it ought to transact, business that a majority of this House is no doubt willing that it should do, and which the people are now insisting upon, I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, you will have to do what a distinguished Speaker did in the imperial House, and put the question without being so authorized under the rules of the House. Let me take up a minute of time by putting on 'Hansard' the position which the British Speaker thought it his duty to take at that time:

> A crisis has thus arisen which demands the prompt interposition of the chair, and of the House. The usual rules have proved powerless to ensure orderly and effective debate. An important measure, recommended in Her Majesty's speech nearly a month since, and declared to be urgent, in the interests of the state, by a decisive majority, is being arrested by the action of an inconsiderable minority, the members of which have resorted to those modes of 'obstruction' which have been recognized by the House as a parliamentary offence.
> The dignity, the credit, and the authority of this House are seriously threatened, and it is necessary that they should be vindicated Under the operation of the accustomed rules and methods of procedure, the legislative powers of the House are paralyzed. A new and exceptional course is imperatively demanded; and I am satisfied that I shall best carry out the will of the House, and may rely upon its support, if I decline to call upon any more members to speak, and at once proceed to put the question from the chair.

No doubt that was a drastic course for the Speaker to take, and it was not until a year afterwards that the imperial parliament amended the rules of the House by adopting closure. I say, and say most emphatically, that the minority of this House have absolutely no rights but what the majority choose to concede them. I also say that the rules of the House as at present constituted can only continue so long as the majority wishes them to continue. I am bound to say that when a minority of this House attempts to obstruct business, and attempts impudently to dictate to the majority what legislation shall be introduced and what legislation shall be passed, the sooner the rules of the House are amended the better it will be for the government of this country. Let me quote an authority which even hon. gentlemen opposite will appreciate. In introducing the closure in the imperial House, in 1882, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone said, as will be found on page 1145 of the British 'Hansard' of that year:

> There is but one sound principle in this House, and that is that the majority of the House should prevail.

And again later on he says:

> But God forbid that we should see so vast an innovation introduced into the practice of this House, applicable to our ordinary procedure, as would be a rule of the House under which the voice of the majority was not to prevail over that of the minority.

So you see, Sir, that the situation which has developed here is that the minority have said to this government—they cannot get away from it now—that unless certain legislation, good or bad, wise or unwise, is withdrawn, they will refuse to allow the business of the House to continue; that unless certain legislation is withdrawn we are going to be here until the snow flies; that unless certain legislation is withdrawn they will vote no Supply to this government. Now, that is the position they have taken; it is an intolerable position, a position that this House and this government, if it recognizes its own dignity and importance, cannot yield to for a single moment. I do say in all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, that we would be much better employed at the present time in discussing, but not discussing for very long, the question of amending the rules of the House so that the business of the country may be proceeded with. I say more than that, Mr. Speaker, that while the people sent this government here with a large majority to do the business of the country, if they do it well, it is all right, if they do it badly, they must answer to the people therefor. But the people are not going to stand by and see this government held up by a hopeless minority, while we sit here month after month incapable of carrying on the public business.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). I have five minutes before one o'clock, and I presume it is well to utilize it so as to save time.

Mr. FIELDING. Will my hon. friend be able to finish before one—otherwise we might as well call it one.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I will not be able to finish. The Minister of Finance said with reference to a statement made by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) that the Minister of Customs has had just as good a right to go into his own constituency and talk at a provincial election as my hon. friend from Lincoln had, or any other private member of the House. Sir, I claim that there is a great difference between the position of a cabinet minister and that of a private member. If a private member absents himself from the House, $15 a day is deducted from his sessional indemnity. It may be the case with the ministers. But the people of this country are paying the ministers, besides their sessional indemnity, $7,000 a year to stay here and attend to public business. They are not supposed to vacate their seats when parliament is in session, and run away to take part in provincial politics, as the Minister of Customs is doing. It has been the practice of other ministers to absent themselves for two or three weeks when they ought to be here to answer questions relating to their departments. They are being paid by the people of this country their sessional indemnity of $2,500, and $7,000 in addition, to be here and attend to public business. What would be said by any bank or any other corporation in Canada if one of their chief clerks, without saying a word to anybody, left his office and went out into the country whenever he saw fit, to take part in politics or in any other outside business and at the same time draw his salary from the company? The company would soon dismiss that servant as the people of Canada will, on the first opportunity dismiss the ministers, saying: We are paying you $7,000 a year to stay in your place while parliament is in session, yet nine out of thirteen of you have been away taking part in the provincial elections. Will the Minister of Finance say that it is right to have the Minister of Customs go away and defraud his employers of the services for which they are paying him?

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I say that is what it amounts to. No cabinet minister has a right to go away when the people are paying him $7,000 and expecting him to perform services in return for it.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. TAYLOR. When the House rose at one o'clock I was trying to convince the Minister of Finance that he was in error when he stated that the Minister of Customs had as good a right to be away stumping in the provincial elections as had the member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster).

Mr. LANCASTER. And I was not away stumping.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Hon Edward Blake and the Hon Alexander Mackenzie always claimed that the Dominion government had no right to interfere in provincial elections, but the present Liberal government has repudiated that great plank of Liberalism, and to-day we see the ministerial benches empty and the ministers away stumping Ontario and Quebec notwithstanding that the people of Canada pay them $7,000 a year and their indemnity besides to stop here and transact public business And yet the Minister of Finance says the ministers have as much right to be absent as have the members of the opposition but if the members on this side are absent they are docked $15 a day, while the pay of the ministers goes on.

Mr. FIELDING. The ministers are docked too.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not on the $7,000.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Is the leader of the opposition docked?

Mr. LANCASTER. He is never away.

Mr. TAYLOR. I notice by the Auditor General's Report that the ministers draw their full indemnity and yet we have questions on the Order Paper day after day and the government has to ask them to stand because the ministers are not ready with the information and these questions have to be reprinted from day to day at a cost of thousands of dollars to the government. The statement made by the minister of Customs at Brantford is not correct in any particular. The government has no good reason to put the blame on the opposition because some of the civil servants have not got their pay.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is cruel to blame the opposition.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes it is cruel, and the country does not believe it is the fault of the opposition. This government is trying to mislead the people about that. Parliament was called on the 27th of November and although the law states that the Auditor General's Report shall be laid on the table a few days after parliament meets yet when we returned after the vacation in January the Auditor General's Report was not yet printed. And when complaint was made the Minister of Finance said the Auditor General was an officer of this House and the government had no control over him, whereas the fact is that the ministers were perambulating the country and they did not send their departmental reports to the Auditor General, and hence he could not present his report and parliament could not consider the estimates. To-day we see that some of the most important legislation of the session is not brought down yet by the government and it ill becomes them to blame the opposition for delay. The Minister of Finance stated it never before happened that the civil servants could not get their pay but let me quote to him this article from yesterday's 'Citizen' as to what occurred in 1895-96:

Civil Servants outside the city anxious for their pay.

Toronto, June 3.—The postal clerks and employees of the civil service have begun to feel the need of cash. In some branches of the service notice has been given to cut expenses in every way and to travel only where it is absolutely necessary, as the funds at the disposal of the department are small.

The letter carriers and clerks who are receiving from $1.25 to $1.50 per day cannot stand the strain long, and in some cases have been obliged to negotiate loans at high rates of interest to tide themselves over. The civil servants are hoping that the experience of 14 years ago will not be repeated, when they were compelled to go without any pay for a period of seven weeks.

Now I want to show the Minister of Finance what happened in 1896 when the Liberals then in opposition would not allow a dollar to be voted and when after the 30th of June of that year the civil servants were without their pay for 7 weeks. I quote from 'Hansard' of September 3, 1906, from a speech made on a resolution moved in this House by Mr. Foster in the session held after the elections.

No, Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary control is the vital point. The unforeseen character of the expense is the condition precedent to the Governor General's warrants being issued. If hon. gentlemen are excused in the case of these warrants, they could, sir, have prorogued parliament until the 19th day of October, and taken another Governor General's warrant; they could have gone on until January; they could have gone on until they were brought up by the statute which makes it necessary that parliament shall meet at least once every year. You must look at the consequences which follow on the line which has been adopted; and if one step is allowed—and by parity of reasoning, the second step may be taken on the same principle—it is time that this House without taking into account any predilection, should make its voice known with regard to a principle so important and so vital, a principle in which the people of this country are most interested at this present moment. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move:—

That all the words after the word 'that' be left out, and the following added instead thereof: 'the sixth session of the seventh parliament, met on January 2, 1896, and on the 27th day of the same month the government submitted His Excellency's message transmitting the estimates for the year 1896-7, which were forthwith referred to the Committee of Supply.

That these estimates provided appropriations for the foreseen and necessary salaries and contingencies of the several departments of government and for the maintenance and construction of public works and for other services.

That on the 28th of January the House was asked to go into committee of the whole for granting supply, and to consider first the appropriations for departmental salaries and contingencies.

That neither then nor on the several occasions thereafter when the House was asked to grant supply did the opposition agree thereto.

That appeals were made by the government setting forth the urgent necessity for making provision for the ordinary and regular expenditures for the approaching fiscal year, or in view of the impending dissolution and of the fact that the new parliament could not possibly assemble before July 1st and would probably meet shortly thereafter, for a part thereof.

That despite these repetitions and although the circumstances were well known and there was ample time at the disposal of the House, supplies for the year 1896-7 were refused and parliament rose on the 23rd day of April without the supplies being granted.

I would ask the Minister of Finance if he ever read that before, and if he did he would not make the statement he made to-day. In this case the Liberal opposition refused to grant a dollar to pay the civil servants of Canada.

Mr. BRODEUR. There was money voted.

Mr. TAYLOR. There was money voted up to the 30th June and after that the civil servants went without their pay for six or seven weeks.

Mr. FIELDING. We were talking about what happened when the Conservatives were in power but that was under a Liberal government and we were not discussing that.

Mr. TAYLOR. This shows what the Liberal opposition did in those days—they refused the Supplies without cause, while we have cause. It goes on:

That parliament was dissolved and a new parliament was summoned to meet for the despatch of business on the 16th day of July, 1896.

That the government resigned office on the 10th day of July, 1896, and the Hon. Wilfrid Laurier was called upon by His Excellency to form an administration which he undertook to do.

That thereafter, parliament was on the 13th day of July, 1896, prorogued to meet for the despatch of business on the 19th day of August, 1896.

That by chapter 29, 49 Victoria, Revised Statutes of Canada, the Governor General in Council is empowered to issue special warrants authorizing the payment of money not previously voted by parliament under the following circumstances only, to wit:

If when parliament is not in session, any accident happens to any public work or building, which requires an immediate outlay for the repairs thereof, or any other occasion arises when any expenditure not foreseen or provided for by parliament is urgently and immediately required for the public good, then upon the report of the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General that there is no parliamentary provision, and of the minister having charge of the service in question, that the necessity is urgent, the Governor in Council may order a special warrant to be prepared, to be signed by the Governor General for the issue of the amount estimated to be required.

That on the 16th dav of July, 1896—the date when parliament had been summoned to meet for the despatch of business—His Excellency was advised to issue his warrant for the expenditure of $1,067,576 for departmental salaries and contingencies, and on August 18—one day before the actual meeting of parliament—was again advised to issue his warrant for $935,561 for similar expenditures, and that these warrants did issue and that the sums named were accordingly placed at the disposal of the department.

That these amounts were not called for by any accident to any public work or building, nor were they required for any expenditures which had not been foreseen, and which could not have been provided for, but were used to pay ordinary salaries and contingencies, for which parliament had been asked to provide, and which had been refused by the House of Commons.

That, under these circumstances, this House is of the opinion that the issue of the said warrants was in contravention of the well understood principles of parliamentary control, an abuse of the powers vested in the Governor General in Council by the said Act, and a usurpation fraught with danger to public liberty and constitutional government.

That was the amendment moved by the ex-Minister of Finance. Sir Richard Cartwright replied, making a very long speech, in which he tried to justify the action of the Liberal opposition in refusing the Supplies, but he made a very lame case of it indeed. However, that is an answer to the Minister of Finance and to the arguments of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. And now the Minister of Finance and the government are trying to make the people believe that the opposition are responsible for the civil service not getting their pay. Who is responsible? This government met parliament on the 28th of November. They had not the Auditor General's Report down complete until some time in February or March. The Election Bill, which is now the bone of contention was introduced on the 9th of March. So that the government had four months before that Bill was introduced, which was plenty of time in which to have passed their entire estimates. Why did they not put through their Supplies then? Simply because they had been in Europe spending their holidays and neglecting their work, for which they are paid $7,000 a year, and had not their work prepared when the House met. The government are responsible, and they alone. We did not know anything about the Bill. It was not printed for several weeks afterwards. The second reading and the explanation of the Minister of Justice took place on the 5th of May, when this House had been in session more than five months, in which time the opposition would have voted every dollar of the estimates for the civil service of the country if the government had been ready to go on with them. The civil service and everybody else in the country must know that if the estimates have not been passed, it is due entirely to the negligence of this government in not being prepared with their work, and in not having the Auditor General's Report ready, so that the opposition could properly criticise them. The discussion on the Bill was adjourned until the 6th, again until the 7th, again until the 8th, again until the 11th, then until the 12th, then until the 13th, and lastly until the 18th of May. That is the time that this iniquitous Bill has been before parliament. Then hon. gentlemen opposite quit and said, now we must get some Supplies. The opposition, out of the kindness of their hearts, had voted them a month and a half of Supplies, enough to carry them until the 15th of last month. That was done before this Bill was brought down; but when they saw the iniquity of the Bill, they said, with the country behind them; No; a government that would introduce such an iniquitous measure as that should not get a dollar to spend in this country. They knew that they had been kept in power in the last election—in Manitoba by the thin red line and in Ontario by ballot-stuffing and fraudulent ballot boxes, only two of which my hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Porter) was able to discover. We do not know how many there were, but we think a great many were used in the province of Nova Scotia. With bribery and corruption, switching of ballots and the thin red line, they managed to carry themselves into power. And now they know that the Conservative party has got on to that, and they want to do something that is even worse than ballot switching and the thin red line. They have introduced this Bill simply for the purpose of keeping themselves in power. What is the Bill? They want to destroy the secrecy of the ballot, so that they may use the money they collect from contractors and the people from whom they purchase goods——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw that statement if it is unparliamentary; but the only interpretation you can take from the reading of section 17 in the Bill——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The objection I understand is that the hon. member is discussing a Bill which is on the Order Paper, and which is not the question now under discussion.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then we will discuss it outside, and tell the people of this country what it means. The Bill is before the House, and the opposition have a right to refuse the Supplies until it is withdrawn or is so amended that it will not be a weapon in the hands of this government to enfranchise every navvy who is working on the Transcontinental Railway in the province of Quebec, the province of Manitoba and the other provinces. The opposition have that right, and they will maintain that right as long as they can stand and endure before they will allow such a measure as that to pass, and deprive the honest electors of this country of the secrecy of the ballot.

An hon. MEMBER. Now we have it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, our hon. friends have it. It is due to them, and not to the Prime Minister, that such a Bill was introduced.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. Four or five years ago, these same men from Manitoba tried to bring in a similar Bill, but the Minister of Justice of that day said : No, I will never be a party to introducing such an infamous measure. The right hon. the First Minister denied any knowledge of any such Bill having been framed or contemplated, but the Bill itself, printed in the Government Printing Bureau—which is controlled by the right hon. gentleman—was read here the other day by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples) ; and it was that Bill—exactly the same Bill as was brought down to-day—which the then Minister of Justice refused to introduce. To-day, however, we have a Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), who was brought up at the feet of ex-Premier Ross, of Ontario, and taught to do his dirty work in that province——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must not use such an expression.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw it, but the Bill is there and speaks for itself, and the name of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) is attached to it. It was he who introduced it this session. I have read an article in to-day's Montreal 'Gazette' which describes the way this government have arranged the ballot, and it is for the purpose of enabling the government to manipulate the ballots at their will and get themselves again returned to power, that we have had this measure introduced. Here is the article from the 'Gazette' :

Winnipeg, June 4.—(Special)—Rev. Dr. John Pringle, a prominent Presbyterian divine, who has been in the public eye for some time owing to his fearless exposures of corruption in the Yukon, has arrived in the city as a delegate to the Presbyterian assembly.

I have, as a minister, got out into the open because of the present Yukon conflict, and I intend to stay. The half has not been told. The next three months I will have free, and when the members of the government have said their say in their endeavour to discredit my statements, then I will vindicate my statements.

One must have lived in the country itself to know in what standard it has been dragged to under the administration of the past few years. There have been other instances of corruption, of graft and immorality, and of scandalous action, but all of them have been a high standard of goodness as compared with the Yukon. A man may filch from the public treasury and violate a good many of the crimes in the code, and yet pass for honest in the Yukon, I can cite instances which people would not think of believing. I could tell of facts which reek so of immorality and corruption and sensuousness that they dare not be put in public print, all of which concerns government workers, and they are all facts that for decency sake dare not be put in print, and are being daily practised in the far north. These are facts which I intend to bring forth on the public platform for the benefit of Canada. I am not affording information for party ammunition, although it is impossible for me to avoid it being used as such. No man who had an atom of self-respect or a trace of decency could pass by the practices that are being perpetrated.

Immorality is so rife in the country that there is no standard of right and wrong. Public funds and the people's money have been wasted and stolen from where it belongs. Men have been disfranchised by the hundreds, aliens have been brought into vote in elections who had no right, and affairs have sunk to a level which has shamed this country'e name.

So far as I am concerned the fight is only beginning. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his ministers have the facts before them, both from letters I have written them and from interviews which I had with them. I know of one instance where in an election contest there were eight names on the list. On election day 120 voted at the booth.

How came it that 120 voted when there were only eight names on the list ? That could have been done only through the manipulation of the officers of this government in order to have the government candidate elected.

One man I know voted six times. I have proof for every word I utter and every accusation I make. This is equally at the service of the government at Ottawa, if they dare to make an investigation. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Sifton both have information which I gave them in a personal interview in 1904, and which in itself would be sufficient to discharge every official there. The franchise instance which I have just cited is one of the mildest of those connected with voters' lists. Most of the other matters are unfit to appear in print.

'No matter what the cost,' said Mr. Pringle, 'I have an aim in view which I intend to carry out. I have only begun the fight, and I hope to prove to the people facts which show an adminstration unbelivedly corruptible. I have no personal feeling against any Yukon official. The fault is at Ottawa, and they will have to be responsible.

Then, speaking before the General Assembly in Winnipeg, the Rev. Mr. Pringle thus referred to the immorality in the Yukon :

Rev. John Pringle, of the Yukon, spoke of the conditions surrounding missionary work in the northern field. Mr. Pringle made only a passing reference to the charges he has advanced regarding the moral conditions in Dawson and the conduct of some of the officials. 'I may have been unwise,' said he. 'I may have said things unwisely, but I have tried to do right, and I have spoken the truth.'

In the conference, before his brother ministers, Mr. Pringle reiterated that every word he had spoken was the truth, yet we have ministers of the Crown in this House contradicting him. He declares, as a minister of the Gospel, that every word he spoke was true. Then he went on to say:

Mr. Pringle declared that he did not take these things into the pulpit in the Yukon. In the pulpit he preached the Gospel to those who came to church, not to be denounced but to be encouraged, and to be helped. When he had anything to say on the outside he took off his clerical collar and donned his moccasins and sweater and went on the public platform, where he could be answered. However, Mr. Pringle promised that at a later stage of the conference he would have something to say, so that those who expected to see him in his fighting clothes need not be disappointed.

And Mr. Pringle tells us that he has not told one-tenth part of the truth yet. He asked the government to grant him a committee, and they will not grant it. They sent instead an official to the Yukon to hear what people had to say, they did not take the statements of these people under oath, and then they attempt to force upon the people of this country a law which would deprive them of the secrecy of the ballot and empower this government to appoint their own officials to manipulate the lists and compel every navvy in their employ to cast a vote in their behalf. The opposition would be worse than serfs if they did not most determinedly oppose such a Bill, whose only intent is to defraud the electorate. We do not want anything unfair.

Mr. SPEAKER. That Bill is not under discussion.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am now talking about the franchise in Manitoba.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman was discussing the Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am pointing out what this government want to do. The province of Manitoba has the fairest franchise on its statutes of any province in the Dominion, yet this government want to take that franchise away. This government want to appoint their own men to make up the election lists for the provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia and the unorganized districts in Quebec. The opposition would be worse than serfs were they to allow any such legislation to pass. So far as I am concerned, I have told the right hon. the First Minister that I am prepared to stay here and fight that Bill with the only weapon we have. The government want their estimates through in order that they may then force through this iniquitous Election Bill by means of their huge majority. They want to introduce the closure. Let me tell them that the people will insist on the rights of parliament being respected and maintained. The Minister of Finance says that the minority in parliament have no rights except what the majority choose to give them. He is confounding power with right ; but we have shown the government that when they refused to bring down original papers, we were in a position to compel them to do so. The government withheld this Election Bill until they can get their estimates through. They had it before the House from the 5th to the 19th May, and then they laid it aside in order to get their estimates through. They want to run through their estimates and then take up this Bill. But our constitution gives the opposition the right to ventilate their grievances before granting Supply, and this Election Bill is simply an outrage on the rights of a free people.

And whenever the government wish to remove that grievance, they will have no trouble in getting Supply, but until they do, I am satisfied that the opposition will use the weapon which law and constitution places in their hands. My belief is that not only Conservatives, but nine-tenths of the honest Liberals, justify the stand the opposition have taken and are taking, and would justify them if they did not vote a dollar even to pay the civil service. For the civil servants and the people at large know that it is the government and not the opposition that are responsible for the delay. As I have already said, they have allowed five months to pass with nothing done. The opposition did not hinder them ; there was no obstruction until this nefarious Bill came before parliament. In every way possible, the opposition helped on the work of legislation. But the government had no legislation ready ; they simply marked time ; the House met and adjourned. The government had not put in their accounts to the Auditor General in time to have the Auditor General's Report printed for the use of parliament. If there is delay in paying the civil service, that delay is the fault of the government and not the fault of the opposition. Now, I hope the Minister of Finance will rise and apologize for having attacked my hon.

friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) and told him that the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), although paid $7,000 a year to stay here and attend to the people's business, had just as good a right to go stumping in a provincial election as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) who did not go at all. Why, look at the seats of members and supporters of the government to-day. There are only four or five ministers in their places and many of their supporters are away taking part in the election campaign on Monday. And when the returns of that election come in, I fancy that the government will be glad enough to withdraw this obnoxious legislation and allow the business of the country to proceed.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.). It is really very amusing to see the attempt that hon. gentlemen opposite are making to get out of the hole that they find themselves in on this question of Supply. If my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) had been here in the earlier part of todays's sitting, he would not have taken the stand he has taken. This discussion was launched by the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Owen) complaining of the action of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) in taking part in the campaign in Ontario. The hon. gentleman took exception to a statement made by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) on Saturday last, that the Tory opposition in this House were withholding the Supply necessary to pay the salaries of Customs officials. We had the hon. member for Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) taking up an hour and a half of the time of the House trying to prove that the opposition were not blocking Supply. Now, we have the hon. member for Leeds taking up an hour and a half declaring defiantly: We are blocking Supply.

Mr. TAYLOR. The House opened this afternoon at 3.05 o'clock, and it is now 3.40. So, I spoke, just 35 minutes. But the hon. gentleman's statement is about as correct as any thing we hear from that side of the House.

Mr. CARVELL. The hon. member (Mr. Taylor) started at five minutes to one. The House rose at one and sat at three and it is now twenty minues to four. So the hon. member (Mr. Taylor) has been talking for three-quarters of an hour. So I stand corrected—the hon. gentleman has only taken three-quarters of an hour to say: We are blocking Supply we will continue to block Supply. I give my hon. friend credit for being honest in the matter. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) I believe was the first to state, as he did about a month ago, that the opposition were justified in taking what he said was the only constitutional course of blocking Supply until obnoxious legislation was withdrawn. That was repeated by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and has been re-echoed all over the country. The member for Leeds boldly stated it here last week.

But now the members of the opposition are getting scared. Last week, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) took an hour and a half to prove that the opposition were not blocking Supply. Today, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) tried to maintain the same position. What are the facts? We are told that there is to be an election in Ontario and an election in Quebec——

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) ought to know; he was out stumping.

Mr. CARVELL. I do not vote in either of these provinces, but I take the hon. gentleman's word as to the election. As I have said, members of the opposition are getting scared. About a week ago, the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) tried for three or four days to get Supply to pay the salaries of the officers of his department. In the course of that discussion, the hon. member for Leeds said: Withdraw sections 1 and 17 of the Election Bill and we will give you Supply in a few minutes. But then they found that there was an immense vote in Ottawa dependent upon that Supply for a living. And they got scared—and virtuous. And now their cry is: For God's sake, give these people their money; we have voted it why don't you give it to them? Then, it was stated that no militia camps could be held because there was no money. And these hon. gentlemen got scared again, and I should imagine from the statement made by the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) that they are begging him: For God's sake, hold the militia camps. They are very anxious that all votes of Supply that can benefit them should be put through, but they will refuse to grant any thing that will not secure votes for their side. The action of these hon. gentlemen raises the question fair and square: Can the government of this country, whether Liberal or Conservative, afford to be placed in such a position as that? Can any government afford to place itself at the mercy of an opposition and virtually declare that, if the opposition do not like any thing contained in legislation that is introduced, all the opposition has to do is to withhold Supply and the government will back down? carried out in practice and you have a country ruled not by the majority but by the minority. The facts in this case are very short. About March 1, a Bill was introduced providing for amendments to the election law. In the first week in May the second reading of this Bill was moved and the opposition opposed it. I am not going to discuss the merits or demerits of that Bill. Nor will I deny the right of the opposition to oppose a Bill that they believe to be unjust. But I do say that they have not the constitutional or moral or equitable right to say: Unless you will withdraw those provisions of the Bill which we regard as objectionable, we will deprive the Ottawa civil servants, the contractors, every man or woman who is paid by this government throughout the Dominion of their pay. There is no use trying to get away from it; there is no use in these hon. gentlemen saying: We will let you pay the Customs officials for fear we shall not get their votes in the pending election: take the money to hold the militia camps for fear we may not get the votes of those interested. These hon. gentlemen would like to get away from this, but we will hold them to it—the plain question is whether this country is to be ruled by the majority or by the minority. Concede what these hon. gentlemen now contend and you establish a precedent under which any future opposition can demand the withdrawal of any section of any Bill under threat of withholding Supply. Can any government, I say, afford to be placed in that position? Will the people of Canada justify any government in allowing itself to be put in that position?

It is no wonder the members of the opposition are trying to recede from this position. The course they took during the last week shows that they are trying to recede from it. They persistently obstructed Supply for three or four days over the vote to pay the civil servants in the Customs Department, then they gave in. Ever since then they have, by foolish and silly questions, delayed the granting of Supplies for hours, and finally have allowed one or two small items to go through in order that they might be able to say to the country: We are not blocking Supplies. Take their course last night. The Minister of the Interior brought in a resolution to grant $200,000 for the payment of certain salaries. I am willing to admit that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) had a right to ask the question with which he started the discussion, I am willing to admit that probably a quarter of an hour could be reasonably spent in the discussion of that question. After that, we had a spectacle which would not be tolerated in any other parliament of any civilized country in the world—we had three hours of obstruction, three hours taken up in every possible way, from the leader of the opposition down to the hon. member from Macdonald (Mr. Staples), for three hours and a half all sorts of silly questions were asked, and finally they granted the $200,000.

Mr. STAPLES. I want to ask the hon. gentleman who says: 'Down to the hon. member for Macdonald,' does he not think that the questions which the hon. member for Macdonald asked last evening are quite as intelligent as the stuff he is getting off at the present moment?

Mr. CARVELL. If the hon. member wants an honest answer I shall have to tell him that I do not think so, and I think that every honest member of parliament on either side of the House will agree with me in my conclusion—except possibly the hon. member himself. Now, Sir, when the next item came up, as I said before, what did the opposition do? They deliberately blocked Supply, and then allowed the item to pass so that they might go to the country and say: We did not block Supply, because we gave you the $200,000. I ask again: Can any self-respecting government afford to be placed in this position? I say there is only one solution to this question; if this opposition, or any other opposition, chose to pursue such a course, the inevitable consequence will be the closure. I am not the first one to advocate the closure. I am going to quote to the hon. gentleman an authority coming from their own party, I am going to quote to them an article from the Montreal 'Gazette' of June 1, in the form of an editorial, a portion of which reads as follows:

> It is not the use, but the abuse of the right of discussion that creates public weariness and leads people to upset the natural order of things and to think of the government which acts as of more importance than the parliament that only talks. So, probably, the mass of the people, without knowing much about the situation, would approve of a plan which promised to shorten the session of parliament by checking the flow of unreported talk, Closure began in the French parliament. It was adopted by that of Great Britain. It exists in the Congress of the United States. These are in their way the three leading parliamentary bodies in the world. What they have agreed to accept may be expected to come in other popularly ruled countries.

To my mind that is the proper doctrine. I am sorry that it has become necessary that we should discuss the question of closure. Hon. gentlemen opposite, and more especially the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), have tried to show that this is not the first time Supply has been blocked in this parliament in order to prevent obnoxious legislation going through, and they have referred to the conduct of the Liberal opposition in 1896. But I want to tell the hon. member, and he knows I am telling him the truth, that it is not a parallel case at all. The records of this House can prove that there was no blocking of Supply. As a matter of fact parliament expired by effluxion of time on the 24th of April, and Supply was granted up to the 1st day of July following. The opposition gave the then government Supplies up to the first of July, and there was plenty of time between the 24th day of April and the 1st day of July within which to hold an election, to call parliament together and vote Supply. Therefore, I say that is not a parallel case. It is just as well that the people of this country should know that it is not a parallel case, and I hope the members on this side of the House will not forget to show the people that it is not. I am glad this question is beginning to be agitated. I am much obliged to the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Owen) for bringing on this discussion. It is a question that needs to be discussed, it is a question on which the people should have more light. I think the people ought to know that if the civil servants cannot get their pay, if contractors cannot get their pay, if the railway navvies, as the hon. member for Leeds calls them, cannot get their pay, if the merchants and others from whom the government purchase supplies cannot get their pay, the people ought to know who is responsible for it. The idea of talking such nonsense as some hon. gentlemen do here, that they are not blocking Supply! I ask you, Sir, has there been an instance since this session began on the 28th of November last, when the government have asked for Supplies that they have not been met by an organized system of obstruction? I am safe in saying that in nine-tenths of the cases where the House has been moved into Committee of Supply they have been met by some sort of a ridiculous resolution, in many cases pressed on to a vote; if not pressed on to a vote, then by a ridiculous discussion, such as we have witnessed the last fortnight. The whole day has been taken up by discussion, and then along about midnight we get into Supply. Still hon. gentlemen opposite get up and say they have not blocked Supply. Take the last month. While the Minister of Public Works was trying to get his estimates through, we sat here night after night while they were blocking Supply, and towards the small hours of the morning perhaps one or two small items would go through. Now they come down and say: We are not blocking Supply, we want the employees of the Customs Department to get their pay, we want the militia to get their pay. But while they say so, all the time they are blocking Supply. Then they find fault with the Minister of Finance because he does not come down with a Supply Bill every other day, while they are only willing to allow a small item of $200,000 to get through in the course of a day. It is just as well that the people should know who it is that is blocking Supply. Let me give you two instances of what occurred when I was in New Brunswick last week. I met two contractors, one of them doing some work for the Grand Trunk Pacific, and another building a wharf in the county of Northumberland. Both of them have progress estimates amounting to thousands of dollars; and although they have been obliged to borrow money from the banks, although they have incurred liabilities while doing the work for the government, they could not get a dollar. Why? Because this loyal opposition won't allow them to have it, and because this opposition have deliberately pursued this policy of obstruction and have refused to let the estimates go through. They want to stop the construction of every public work in Canada, and it is just as well that the people should know upon whom to lay the blame. The blame is to be laid at the doors of the opposition, and not at the doors of the government. Therefore I say that this is a matter which ought to be discussed thoroughly; and I believe that if the opposition determine to persist in this unpatriotic, unworthy course, the next move the government will have to take is to adopt the closure. And I now say to the government that in my opinion, while I think that is the only course they can pursue, it is one that will be sanctioned and approved by the people of this country. Let the government start in at once to change the rules of this House, if it takes months to do it, in order to adopt the closure. While I say this, I do not claim that the opposition have no rights; I admit they have rights in this House, they have rights in every parliament. They have a right to discuss any question, they have a right to ask questions when the government are asking Supply and they are entitled to all possible information, but there is not a man of them, except the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), who has intimated that the government have withheld any information which would justify them in taking the course they have taken. They have a right to discuss all these questions and then they have a further right to demand a vote upon any item; but that is all they have a right to do, and the people of Canada are justified in asking that they shall be reasonable and when they have exhausted these rights allow the business of the country to proceed. Therefore I repeat that it is useless for them to attempt to withdraw from the position. Either they have to take the position that they will block Supply deliberately, as the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has done and stand by it and be responsible or take the other course and say: We will act constitutionally, we will discuss these questions as they should be discussed and when we have discussed them to that extent we will vote against these measures and leave it to the people to say whether we have acted rightly or wrongly.

I feel that this is a matter of such importance that we should hear from more members on this side of the House. I feel further that it is up to the government, to use a slang expression, to take more drastic measures than they have in the past unless this policy of deliberate obstruction is withdrawn in a very short time.

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). We have listened to quite a lecture from the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. We are not unaccustomed to it, as during this session there has been hardly a day that some hon. junior member of the Liberal party has not seen fit to tell the opposition how they should conduct the affairs committed to their hands. For my part I prefer to be guided by the advice of those in whom I have confidence and by my own judgment. I have been absent from the House for a couple of days and have met a great number of intelligent people, Liberal and Conservative, and I venture to say that the voice of the people has come back to the members of the government and they know pretty well what they are up against now, and so, as the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) has just said, they are glad of an opportunity of speaking to-day and so they may be. The government to-day realize that if they can possibly get any excuse for talking and beclouding the issue until after the elections in Ontario and Quebec, it is better to do so than even to get Supplies through. Who are obstructing to-day? Who but the Minister of Finance and those who, at his instance, have taken up the time of the House. Was any hon. gentleman on this side opposed to going into Supply? Is there anything to prevent us, except the organized system which has developed among the supporters of the government, from going into Supply? I understand that in my absence Supply has been granted from day to day, and there is no reason, so far as I know, why we should not have been in Supply at 11.30 this morning, had it not been for the excited and unnerved speech of the Minister of Finance, followed by the long and in some cases utterly irrelevant speeches of hon. gentlemen who support him. Now that the Minister of Finance should be unnerved and excited is not surprising. If he knows the pulse of the people of Canada to-day it would be surprising if he was not unnerved and excited. If he could calmly, as a statesman, reason the questions that come up from time to time in his old time way it would be surprising to me. He knows perfectly well that the current of public opinion has set so strongly against the government that it is absolutely necessary they should resort to any plausible excuse for tiding over the difficulties pressing on them, pending the two elections which they know will have such an important bearing on the election they will soon have to face themselves. They want to try and modify the feeling of want of confidence that exists in the electorate to-day. The fact is that the government are at sixes and sevens on almost every point they have to deal with, and that they are so on this very question of Supply is perfectly evident from the statement of the Minister of Finance to-day. The Minister of Finance would like the House to understand that the Minister of Customs was right in his statement that he was prevented by the action of the opposition from paying the 1,800 officials in his department. On May 26 at 3 o'clock in the morning an item of $1,705,000 was brought up for us to vote. To show you that the Minister of Finance has not one leg to stand on in his contention that there is anything to prevent those 1,800 people from being paid, I refer to the 'Hansard' and find that an hour and a half later, at the close of the discussion, the minister said :

> I want to pay these men to-day. This is the day that we issue our cheques. We do not want them to be delayed, we want to issue our cheques if possible to-day and we want you to grant this item of $1,705,000.

And so it was recognized that if we would grant Supply the money would go immediately to these employees. On the 29th, the next time it came up, the greater part of the item having gone through, he said :

> Let the whole item go through because I do not think I can use a part of it. I do not know that the Auditor General will issue the cheques unless the whole item is passed.

Therefore he pleads to let the amount go through. The leader of the opposition said that it would be no harm to let it stand until Monday when the minister would have the cheques. The minister said:

> Yes, but it is discriminating between the inside and the outside service. But will I get it on Monday so I can issue the cheques?

He was told that he could in all probability and he received the amount which was granted on the statement that it was necessary to issue the cheques at once and that the Auditor General would allow the cheques to issue as soon as the item was approved of by this House. And so he would have done if he had confidence in the administration. But it appears by the press that the Auditor General does not see his way under present conditions to allow it unless the Supply Bill passes. The leader of the opposition said at that time :

> Let the $40,000 item stand.

Mr. FIELDING said :

No, it would stop the whole item. The several items constitute one resolution, so that there would be nothing to report.

But now, when they find that the Auditor General, for reasons that are sufficient to himself and in which he may be perfectly justified, refuses to allow the cheques to issue until the Supply Bill is introduced and passed, these gentlemen assume another attitude. Why do they not bring down a Supply Bill? They have brought down Bills for infinitely smaller matters than this, and there is no reason why they should not bring in a Supply Bill. As a matter of fact, I claim it is absolutely their bounden duty to introduce a Supply Bill at once. They have made the statement that we were preventing the holding of militia camps. They know that we were never asked for a vote for that purpose and when we ask them to take action they hesitate. They do not know what they want or do not want, but meantime slander the opposition by innuendoes and statements in their press.

Is it worth while to introduce a Supply Bill? Let us see what we have passed within a little more than half a month. On May 15 we passed $533,000 of estimates for the Minister of Public Works. On May 20 we passed estimates amounting to $1,104,975. On May 22 we passed $5,479,110, a pretty big day's work. On May 29 and June 1 this item of the Minister of Customs was completed and by it we have passed $1,815,187 which, with the amount already passed, made a total vote on that item of $2,074,075. On June 2 we passed $198,548 and on June 3 we passed $216,293. Not counting the hundreds of thousands of dollars we passed yesterday we have in 15 or 16 days at six sittings of the House voted $9,347,113, and that money is immediately available for the government and for the men.

Mr. TAYLOR. Just one-quarter of the annual expenditure under the Conservative government.

Mr. LENNOX. That may not appear a great deal of money to these gentlemen opposite with their wild ideas of expenditure and ghastly extravagance, but under ordinary circumstances it is a very large sum. And they can add to that within 24 hours, because if they bring down any reasonably non-contentious items they will be passed at once. There is no disposition on the part of the opposition to absolutely block Supply, but in view of the disclosures we have had this session, last session, and the session before, the government has shown itself absolutely undeserving of the confidence of the people and in the public interest the opposition must carefully scrutinize these expenditures. The Minister of Finance has again reiterated the statement that the opposition have no rights except such as the majority at his back see fit to concede and the member for Yale-Cariboo has endorsed that statement, while the member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) has adopted a more rational view. Well Sir, it will be a poor day for Canada and it will be a wretched opposition when the opposition will consult the government of the day as to what they shall do and how they shall criticise the expenditures of the country and the policy of the government. It is the duty of the opposition to guard the public treasury, to watch closely the progress of public business, to scrutinize the acts of the government, and in the honest discharge of that duty there should be no hard and fast rule laid down to bind them. The opposition are to-day only too anxious to take the verdict of the people of the country on whether they have been faithfully discharging their duty, and on whether the government should be allowed longer to remain in power. I have very great respect for the hon. member for East Kent (Mr. Gordon) both in his personal and public capacity, but I must say that he had a very ungracious task assigned to him this morning by some members of the government in having to go through an argument in which he evidently took no interest and which I doubt very much that he himself appreciated. I venture to say that no one in the House thinks that argument of the hon. gentleman had any relevancy whatever to the practical issues we are discussing to-day. The hon. gentleman said that the opposition had on occasions come out in their war paint, and he asked why should they use 100 ton guns to shoot flies. Well, I would like to know that too. Look at the flies on the other side of the House. It used to be flies on the wheel but now it is flies on the run or it will be as soon as the people of Canada get a chance at them. When the time comes that these gentlemen on the other side of the House are sitting in opposition, and that time will be soon if we can judge of the public sentiment, I wonder if they will advocate the principles we hear them advocate to-day. You talk about killing time by delivering long and irrelevant speeches, as being obstruction, and yet the supporters of the government are the chief sinners of this session. For some purpose or other they have been constantly delivering important speeches which have had no relevancy to the question before the chair, and this I attribute to the fact that the government were not ready with public business, and so their supporters had to come to their aid and cause delay. Where is the Civil Service Bill, so long promised? Where is the Land Bill? It was introduced just one week ago although we had it up last session and presumably the government should have introduced it the very first day of this session; but it has been delayed until the 7th month. It is an intricate Bill and one which will require to be well considered and discussed. It is no secret that on these questions with regard to which we on this side are opposed to government, there have been dissensions amongst the supporters of the government themselves, —want of harmony in their ranks—and therefore in order to get time to bring the warring factions of the Liberal party together the government has delayed its measures. Does the Minister of Finance think that we are going to enter a blind pool every time he asks us. He wanted one-quarter of the total Supply without the items being discussed and the leader of the opposition granted him one-eighth. After letting the whole time run until, as the Minister of Customs said, the last day for payment of these officials had arrived, they come and asked us to give another one-eighth, another blind pool. If we had granted that, they would have wanted one-half, and we would have come practically to the end of the session without one important item of legislation being brought down and the whole of the Supplies voted without our knowing what those Supplies covered. I protest against that. The hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick, (Mr. Carvell) thinks we should be limited to a quarter of an hour in discussing important questions. I do not think we are to be told that we are to have a quarter of an hour or half an hour or anything of that kind. We are sent here to be our own judges of the course we pursue. I put myself in the judgment of the people, and not in the judgment of the hon. gentlemen opposite as to what course is proper. Each member must judge for himself what course he should take on the various measures as they arise.

Mr. CARVELL. Does the hon. member adhere to the principle laid down by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) that the opposition will and ought to resist the granting of Supplies until the Election Bill is withdrawn?

Mr. LENNOX. That is just another illustration of the fact that the supporters of the government cannot appreciate either what the opposition say or what the trend of public opinion is in many cases. The hon. gentleman utterly fails to understand the significance of the argument of the hon. member for Leeds. The hon. member for Leeds, as I understand him, propounds this principle, that when an iniquitous measure is brought in, one that is far reaching in its consequence, one that is totally indefensible, one that should not be passed in the interests of the people as a whole, not some little side issue that affects a small number of people, but a great measure that affects the dearest rights and privileges of all the people of Canada, the opposition should use every legitimate means in their power to prevent such legislation being passed.

Mr. CARVELL. Just one more question. Does the hon. member contend that the absolute refusal to grant Supplies is a legitimate means of opposing the proposed legislation?

Mr. LENNOX. There are times when it would be quite proper for an opposition absolutely to refuse to grant Supplies, and I think we are probably approaching very close to that time now. I do not say that we are actually up against it. I say that when the government have acted in such a way all along the line that the opposition can have no confidence in their administration, and have no reason to believe that the public moneys will be honestly expended in the interest of the people, then we have reached a time when it is not only the privilege, but the incumbent duty of the opposition, to stand firm as one man and present a united front against the passage of any Supplies. I hope we won't come to that condition; but I do say, feeling the responsibility of my words as a member of this House, that we have approached perilously near it. I say, looking all along the line of this administration, and seeing how it is marked by extravagance, and it does not stop at extravagance—by reckless extravagance—that would not describe it either—but by acts which I shall not characterize in this House, but which are well known to the public—I say the administration of this government, in almost every department, is marked by things which indicate that the people have lost confidence in it; and the members of the House knowing more of their administration than the people outside, but not more than I hope the people will know very soon, I say it may become the duty of the opposition to stand firm as one man and refuse to grant Supplies to the administration. We are not at that point yet; we are not yet at the parting of the ways; and, on the other hand, I think we ought to be almost at the point of granting Supplies this afternoon. I hope we will get into Supply now, unless as a matter of fact the government want to distract public attention unless they do not want anything done this afternoon. But if they want to tide over the first of next week, as I think they do, then we may expect that the suggestion of the hon. member for Carleton will be followed, and that we shall have more oratory from the government side of the House. Answering the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick, let me refer to other authorities on this question of withholding the Supplies. Sir Richard Cartwright, in 1896, discussing a similar question, said :

These gentlemen were responsible for the good government of the country while they occupied seats on the treasury benches. They knew perfectly well long before the 1st of April that there was not the ghost of a chance of their getting the Remedial Bill through under any condition of things.

I pause there to say that these hon. gentlemen who introduced the Bill that has been referred to, left it until the 9th of March and then until the 6th of May, and they knew perfectly well that there was not the ghost of a right to get it through under any conceivable condition of things.

They knew perfectly well that there was not a ghost of a chance of their getting their estimates through.

These gentlemen held this Bill back, and so created the same kind of difficulty as that which Sir Richard Cartwright is here dealing with, knew perfectly well that the fiscal year expired on the 31st of March, and they did not introduce this contentious Bill until the 9th of March.

They knew perfectly well when the fiscal year expired on the 1st of July that they could not get Supplies, as they had lost control of the parliament.

Is there any doubt about this administration having lost the control of parliament? They have not only lost control of parliament, but the confidence of the people, and it is because they realize that to-day and do not know where they are at that they do not know what is the wisest thing to do. Whenever the Finance Minister gets up now to speak, he has lost his old time vigour and firmness and is utterly unnerved and unstrung, and talks in that exciting, uncontrolled, unmeasured style I so much regret to see.

Mr. TAYLOR. Lost his head.

Mr. LENNOX. I will not say that; but he is going to lose his position very soon if we can get the general elections on. Sir Richard Cartwright went on to say:

What would honourable men have done in such a case? What would men imbued with the spirit of British usage and precedence have done? Why, Sir, they would have dissolved the parliament they could not control, and found out whether or not they did enjoy the confidence of the people of Canada.

Hon. gentlemen opposite suggested that they would dissolve parliament. They let it go out in the press that they would do so; but when the time came they had not the nerve to dissolve parliament, because they did not want a speedy trial and a speedy conviction. Further, Sir Richard said:

More than that, they would have taken care to have dissolved in such time that they might have had their elections early in May, and met early in June at the very latest, in order that parliament might deal with the questions which it was clearly impossible for parliament to have dealt with at the time I have referred to.

I have also under my hand utterances by the Prime Minister, but they are very voluminous. I will just take a statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), whom I see in the House. He said:

My remarks, Mr. Chairman, are quite relevant. I wish to point out that the government are unable to pass this Remedial Bill into law, that they no longer represent the people, that they no longer enjoy the confidence of the members of this House, and therefore, that parliament would not be warranted in trusting to them the expenditure of $1,000,000 to boodle with.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. Sometimes we are called to order in this House. This hon. gentleman used the expression 'boodle' and applied it to the transactions of the government and was not called to order. He declared that the government of that day, which had been elected by a large majority, had so demonstrated their unfitness that he would not trust them with the expenditure of $1,000,000. Are we therefore to be censured for not being disposed to trust this government, whose disregard of all honesty and decency is so evident with the vast sums they are asking us to vote in the dark? I am prepared to vote Supply. We want to co-operate with the government in voting Supply. We have to call on them to bring forward the necessary estimates—estimates in the interests of the people. Speaking for myself, I am not very much in sympathy with the remarks of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) regarding the contractors. The contractors are a dangerous element in elections. If this election Bill of the government is to go through, we ought to scrutinize these matters very closely. The distribution of large funds to contractors on the eve of the elections in Ontario and Quebec is very dangerous, and I am convinced it is better not to disburse these large amounts to contractors until after the elections. Of course I can well realize the anger and disappointment of some supporters and members of the administration over their failure to have the supplies voted before a general election. But if you will look along the line of the discussion, you will find that there has been no instance in which the opposition have been obstructing the passing of reasonable estimates. We have certainly demanded a certain amount of information, but the trouble is that when the opposition are ready to grant Supply the government are not prepared to go on. Just as happened yesterday and the day before, whenever an offer is made to facilitate business, the government show that they are utterly unready. They realize that they are far behind with the necessary legislation—legislation they have promised and must pass this session if they are going to discharge their duties at all—and then they set up speaker after speaker to obstruct business and in this way tide matters over until after the provincial elections in Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. J. B. KENNEDY (New Westminster). I do not very often trouble the House, and I can assure the gentleman who has just spoken that I have not been put up to obstruct legislation or delay proceedings. I was going to say a few days ago what I intend saying now, but unfortunately for myself I mentioned the election Bill and was ruled out of order. To-day however it is pretty hard to tell when one is out of order after what I have heard. I do not intend to mention the election Bill any more than to say a little about the position in which we are to-day. When I was a young man I joined a society, and one of the first things impressed upon my mind—and it was continually impressed upon me at the opening ceremonies—was that I should yield a cheerful compliance to the constituted majority. I had the idea, from my experience in societies and organizations of one kind and another ever since, that the majority should rule, and that when a man finds he is in a hopeless minority, he should fall in with the majority or at least give way when he sees he cannot get the majority to think as he does. But it is entirely the opposite in this House. There does not seem to be the majority rule here. When a certain Bill was brought into this House—I have to be very careful, but I assure you, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to discuss the Bill—which affected one or two provinces, all the representatives from the province to which I belong, were quite agreeable to the provisions of the Bill. They were agreeable at least to its going into committee, and in committee they would no doubt lend a hand in altering some of its provisions. But the majority from the province of British Columbia, which is one of the two affected, were quite agreeable that this Bill should pass its second reading. In the other province affected, seven of its representatives were willing that the Bill should be proceeded with but three objected. The opposition took up the view of those three and have proceeded on the assumption that those three gentlemen are possessed of brains of such a superior calibre that their opinion and judgment should have far more weight than the opinion and judgment of the other seven. Well, I do not think that is at all in accord with our ideas of responsible government. Those men should have yielded cheerfully to the opinion of the majority—a majority elected in the same way as they were. In my province there was no protest against the election of any members. They were all elected in a straightforward manner so far as I know, and I have heard very little objection from my province to that particular Bill. Therefore I do not see why the House should be tied up as it is simply because three members from one of the provinces do not like the provisions of the Bill. But even if every member on the opposition side objected to the Bill, they are only one-half as many as those who are willing that the Bill should be proceeded with. We have heard a good deal about the opinion of the man on the street. Well, let the members of the opposition take the opinion of the general run of men on the street, and they will find that these men are wondering how a government, with so strong a majority, can be held up as this government has been for some time past. On this question of holding up, we find contradiction among our opponents. One section says that the government are not held up, that they are willing the government should go ahead, and that it is the fault of the government when they do not get ahead with their Supply. But one or two others threaten that the government will not get a dollar unless they drop that election Bill. What are we to understand from this? My hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has told us that he had gone up and consulted his constituents and they instructed him to come down to Ottawa and fight this election Bill to a finish and that they would get up a subscription to pay his board bill, if he were not able to pay it himself, so that he might stay here until the snow would fly.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is the opinion of the man on the street.

Mr. J. B. KENNEDY. I would like to ask: Who are these people from Leeds? It seems to me that my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) thinks the sun rises and sets in his constituency. I would like to ask him some day to follow the sun and proceed west, and he will find that it takes five days and nights on a railway train to find out where the sun sets in this Dominion. And he will find constituencies all along that line each one with just as intelligent a population as that of the constituency of Leeds, and who have sent a majority here who are as well able to form a judgment as any of the people of Leeds. We have been taunted this afternoon with taking up the time of the House and keeping the House from getting into Committee of Supply. I am not going to be guilty of that. I am one of the 'burdocks' on the back benches—that, I think, is the elegant expression which was used by an hon. gentleman not very far from where I sit—I am not very often heard from nor do I obstruct or take up the time of the House. But I would ask the opposition to consider this matter seriously, to think for themselves how the man on the street is likely to view their proceedings in this House. It is wonderful the prophetic view of these gentlemen and how they can tell exactly how the people regard every matter and what is to be the result of the next election. But we have heard the same thing over and over again for many elections back. And still the results have come far short of what these hon. gentlemen would wish. I think that after the next election they will find the result about the same.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM (East Huron). Like the last speaker, (Mr. Kennedy) I seldom address the House. Nor should I detain hon. members long. But there are times when even the quietest member in this House should rise in his place to protest against the way business is conducted. The question now under discussion was brought to the attention of the House this morning by the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Owen) in a speech of five or ten minutes. And we have found hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House ready to carry that discussion along; every time a member on this side has risen to speak to-day, he has been answered in a long speech by an hon. member from the other side. I was glad to hear the hon. member for East Kent (Mr. Gordon), for like myself he seldom troubles the House, and I am sure that his only reason for rising to speak was that he thought that what he was to say was of importance to the House and the country. Such a member should always be listened to.

Now, in the first place, when we came here—and it is nearly seven months ago—we expected that the work of this parliament would be ready to go on with. But what do we find after seven months? We find that the most important legislation of the session is only now being prepared for our consideration. Could there be a more important subject, for instance, than the Hudson Bay Railway? That is a subject that should be discussed here with the very greatest care. We should consider the course that road is to take, for it would be a very serious matter if it were built in the wrong position. My own opinion is after considering carefully all that has been said in the long discussion of the matter that the road should go directly from Prince Albert to Fort Churchill. Then, we have the Civil Service Bill—another question that will require time. In the third place, we have this disputed question in regard to the election law. All these things are being brought before us after seven months of sitting? Why were these not all ready when we came here in November? In the county of Huron we have a county council composed of business men and farmers, and I would undertake to bring them here and they would finish the business of this parliament, do everything that has to be done here, and do it well, in six weeks. I am ashamed to think that we have sat here all this time and accomplished so little. It is not that we do not go through the form of working, for we sit here such long hours that we actually endanger the health of members of the House. There is only one factory in this Dominion that I know of where the employees are expected to go to work at eleven o'clock in the morning and work until three or four the next morning, and that is this factory on Parliament Hill where we empty windbags and manufacture laws. I think that if we were to try to get our speeches into condensed and concise form, it would be much better. Why, Sir, Mr. Chamberlain has delivered some of the best speeches ever delivered in the British parliament in half an hour. And here we are on both sides—there is no use in finding fault with one side more than with the other—making speeches of four and five hours duration. Do you think any body will ever read them? Do not you think that the people who read 'Hansard' in after years will say that we spend forty times as long in expressing our ideas as we have any need to do? At the origin of parliament, you know, Mr. Speaker, the struggles that were gone through to establish the rights and privileges of the body of representatives of the people. The sword, and even the stake and the axe, had to be met and overcome that we might have certain privileges and advantages. And I am sure that even the opposition has its rights that were gained in those struggles. I do not think that hon. gentlemen opposite should say that the opposition has no rights except such as the majority choose to allow them. In fact, I do not think they meant what they said. I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell) admit that members of the opposition had some rights. This parliament takes up more time in legislating for six millions of people than is occupied by the British parliament in legislating for four hundred millions. I am only speaking for myself, but I should be very much pleased to see the speeches cut down. In the United States Congress, I understand, a member speaking on an amendment is limited to five or ten minutes. I think that it would be a good thing if our speeches could be made equally short. I believe also that the Speaker should leave the chair at twelve o'clock at night, just as he does at six o'clock in the evening. If these changes were made, I believe we should make better progress. It is something terrible what the members here are expected to submit to. I came down here from the county of Huron three years ago on the tenth of last January, and five of my neighbours came with me as members of this House. We were all strong, healthy men—I was the oldest and most worn-out man of the whole six. And where are the men now? Three of them are dead and buried and other men sit in their places. We six were the representatives of the three Hurons, the two Bruces and North Wellington. All must have been strong able-bodied men, or we could not have gone through the labours of a political campaign. But long hours, irregular meals and worry did their work. Why, it would appear to be more dangerous to come to this parliament than it was to go to South Africa and fight the Boers—the death-rate here is much greater than it was there. Let me draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that, since 1904, we have had the following deaths amongst us: Messrs. McCreary, McIntosh, Proulx, Clarke, Sutherland, Demers, Johnston, Prefontaine, Bland, Laurier, Martin, Stockton, Cochrane, Gunn and Lovell—fifteen men taken away in that short time. I have no doubt at all—and I am sure the medical men on the other side will back me up in this—that this room is an unhealthy place. We get here no direct sunlight; and we know that sunlight is necessary for health. Take a potato and plant it in a cellar where there is no light, and though you may have moisture, good soil, proper temperature and all other necessary conditions, what will be the colour of the stems? The stems will be pale and sickly.

I think it would be well to change the rules of the House. For instance, we should have short, concise speeches. Let it be understood that when we have something to say we say it and then sit down. A gentleman about to address the House was asked how long he intended to speak on a certain subject, and he said, 'If I know nothing about it, it will take me three hours; if I understand it fairly well, I can get through in an hour; and if I know it perfectly well, I can get through in half an hour.' I think there are some members here who speak sometimes when they do not understand very well what they are talking about. I think there should be a time limit for speeches, with perhaps some way of giving a special privilege to members under certain circumstances. I think the rules of the House might be changed in that direction. I think also that the government should have their business ready when parliament opens so that we can get right down to work. The government cannot get out of this whole difficulty by trying to throw the blame on the opposition. A certain amount of blame may be attached to the opposition. I think, however, it is a good thing we have a 'Hansard,' because that 'Hansard' will show, this year's 'Hansard' at any rate will show, that the members on the government side of the House have taken up as much time as we have, and perhaps more. There is no use denying what is put down in the 'Hansard.' All the important measures of the government should be ready at the beginning of the session. There is another thing we should not forget, the health of the members ought to be considered. If we are to be kept here so many months every year it will soon become impossible for a poor man to come here at all. In fact any man who has business, or anything to do outside this House, can scarcely afford to come here now, because he has to stay here so long that it spoils his business. We will not be able to get good men to come to parliament as long as the sessions are as lengthy as they are now. I formerly thought that all the men who come to parliament were great men, but I am obliged to confess that my opinion has undergone a considerable change since I came to this parliament. My idea was that we had here two hundred and fourteen men, the greatest men probably in the world, and I came to my first session in awe and trembling. I am beginning now to think that after all they are not such great men. But I suppose that is a consequence of my view point. Now I want to say also that long sessions are causing more deaths than used to take place when the sessions were shorter. I find that during the first ten years when the sessions were shorter, there were only twenty-five deaths, while during the last three years there have been fifteen deaths. It is, however, not only a question of health, but one of business. I hope therefore we will not go on in this fashion like a lot of school boys. I think if the government gave the back benchers a chance to settle this question, and allowed the front benchers to go off on a picnic, both the members of the government and the leaders of the opposition, we on the back benches could get together, and I am satisfied we would settle this whole thing and finish up in about two weeks. I did not get up to talk long, and I do not intend to transgress the rules that I am recommending the House to adopt.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Contingencies in Canadian, British and foreign agencies, and general immigration expenses, including salaries of extra clerks at head office, $710,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the minister why this large appropriation, nearly three-fourths of the total $920,000, is offered to us under the item of contingencies? Is it not possible to give a more definite idea of the purposes to which this is to be applied? I suppose it is an old custom.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I do not wish to be held responsible for the method in which the item is placed before the House; as my hon. friend has said, it is an old custom. While it is possible that in many particulars the House might fairly be asked for a definite amount, on the other hand, it is a fact that the expendiures covered by this part of the vote are variable in their character, owing to circumstances and conditions uncontrollable by the government. If the amount were divided up and apportioned to different purposes, it might be found that by reason of changed circumstances one item would be more than was necessary while another would fall short of the requirements. That is probably the reason that prompted the former government to present the estimates in that way. Of course, we are able to give a statement of the sum that has been voted for the former year, and to give to the House our expectations in regard to the sum that we ask the House to vote now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I thoroughly agree that this particular item is one which embraces an extremely varied expenditure, but I would have thought that if you left $150,000 for contingencies it might meet the requirements. I would not press that very much if the minister with his experience in the department thinks it necessary to have the vote in this form. If he would, however, give the heads of expenditure last year and briefly the heads of expenditure this year, I think it would assist matters.

Mr. OLIVER. If I might finish what I was about to say, generally we are able to state to the House our expectations or intentions in regard to the amounts we ask for, but in this item, if circumstances arise which render it unnecessary to make an expenditure, then when we get the bulk vote we are able to vary the expenditure, whereas if it were voted item by item we would not be able to make that variation, and it would necessarily result in a very much larger total amount being required to be voted so that all possibilities of change would be guarded against. The amount asked for this year is the same as was asked for last year. Of that amount the estimates that we make as to the expenditure as follows: Advertising, printing pamphlets, &c., $178,000. This is for advertising in Canada, the United States, Great Britain and Ireland and the continent of Europe. It includes the printing of what we call literature in all the different languages of the countries in which we are undertaking to do business and indeed, in the immigration work in the United States we require to use printing in different languages, Scandinavan, German and French. The expenditure in the fiscal year 1906-7 on this account was $117,500 for nine months.

Mr. FOWLER. Who gets up that literature, your own officers?

Mr. OLIVER. We just do the best we can. Some of our own officers compile some of the publications and sometimes we engage the services of other parties.

Mr. FOWLER. How much have you paid for outside parties during the year and who were they?

Mr. OLIVER. The matter contained in the atlas of Canada, which has been distributed very extensively, was chiefly prepared by Mr. Carmen, of Montreal. He is a newspaper man employed on one of the papers there.

Mr. FOWLER. The 'Herald,' probably.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it is on the 'Star;' he is an editorial writer.

Mr. STAPLES. How many of these atlases were published last year?

Mr. OLIVER. We have published several editions. I cannot give the actual figures, but approximately about 150,000.

Mr. STAPLES. What do they cost per copy?

Mr. OLIVER. The edition that is now being circulated costs 7½ cents apiece in 100,000 lots. Another gentleman who was employed was a Mr. Cliff, a newspaper man of Sault Ste. Marie, formerly resident in the Northwest for many years. Mr. Dean, editor of the Nelson 'News,' contributed the matter for British Columbia that is contained in the atlas.

Mr. FOWLER. He was an unsuccessful candidate in the local election, was he not?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. STAPLES. In how many languages have they been published?

Mr. OLIVER. Seven languages. Mr. Kennedy, of the London 'Times' staff, was engaged during the past winter to do some work, the results of which have only partly been published.

Mr. STAPLES. What would he know about Canada?

Mr. OLIVER. He lived in Canada most of his life, being acquainted with conditions in Canada through his residence here for most of his adult life, and being in newspaper work and now resident in England, it was thought that he would be able to present Canadian facts in a manner that would appeal to the people of the British Islands possibly better than one who was not acquainted with the British Isles.

Mr. FOWLER. That would seem to be reasonable.

Mr. OLIVER. I was very much impressed with some work he did in describing the Northwest the year before in letters which appeared in the London 'Times,' and he afterwards practically compiled the same matter into a publication which he issued at his own cost in the old country. I was very favourably impressed with his grasp of the subject and his method of presenting it, and went so far as to engage him especially to come to Canada during the past winter in order to present the conditions as to labour which existed then. I suggested that by going through the maritime provinces he might prepare something in regard to those provinces in reference to which so far we have been rather lacking in literature.

Mr. FOWLER. Very neglectful of.

Mr. OLIVER. Lacking at any rate. I have already received what Mr. Kennedy has given us in regard to Nova Scotia. It is now in the printer's hands and I think it will be found to be fairly satisfactory.

Mr. FOWLER. I hope the minister has not neglected New Brunswick?

Mr. OLIVER. No, the matter which he has prepared for New Brunswick is in my hands, but I have not handed it to the printer, and I am expecting what he has to say about Prince Edward Island very shortly.

Mr. FOWLER. How much time did he spend in the maritime provinces getting up these facts?

Mr. OLIVER. I think about a month. Of course I must admit that the time is short. It seemed to me that this gentleman had particular ability in that line. We were doing the best we could to get the facts with regard to these provinces as well as we could gather them and present them in a form that would commend these provinces to the minds of the people in the old country for whom we think there is a desirable field there.

Mr. FOWLER. Some men could gather such information in a month and others would need six months, just depending upon the ability of the man. If Mr. Kennedy having had a long experience from residence in Canada is a clever man he ought to be able to present these facts in such a way as to be attractive to the English readers.

Mr. OLIVER. That was my idea. He is not a cheap man by any means.

Mr. FOWLER. It depends on his ability whether he is a cheap man or not. What will it cost?

Mr. OLIVER. I think the whole cost will be about $1,500 or $2,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What time will he occupy in that work?

Mr. OLIVER. I can hardly say. It was an experiment and it appealed to me as being a good idea. As we propose to spend a considerable sum of money in publications which will present these provinces to the people of the old country we think it is by no means waste to spend a good deal of money in getting the right matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is a sound principle because the printing and distribution will cost the same whether the matter is good or bad. I agree that it is worth while to try the work of a man who understands the view point of the people among whom the literature is to be distributed. I think the minister has made a wise move in that.

Mr. FOWLER. I suppose this literature is first written in English and translated into the various languages?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. STAPLES. What are the seven languages?

Mr. OLIVER. English, French, German, Flemish, Holland (Dutch), Danish, Swedish, Norwegian and Finnish.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I see that the London 'Advertiser' was paid for printing 50,000 copies of the land reports. In what form were they printed, and were they intended for distribution in eastern Canada?

Mr. OLIVER. That particular pamphlet was intended for distribution especially in Great Britain.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Are the subagents resident in the United States working under our salaried agents at different points?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Was any portion of this vote used for paying for these new Doukhobors that have come to the country?

Mr. OLIVER. No. I presume my hon. friend refers to reports in the newspapers as to a carload of Doukhobors having some trouble with regard to their passage money.

Mr. FOWLER. I think it was a train load.

Mr. OLIVER. I can assure my hon. friend that so far as any information we have in the department goes no Doukhobors have come to this country, and if any have come they have certainly come without cost to the government and without any inducement being held out by the government in any shape or manner. We are informed that one family arrived about two months ago, but as they did not come within the requirements of our present regulations which are somewhat stringent, they were excluded.

Mr. FOWLER. How long has the government ceased to encourage the immigration of Doukhobors?

Mr. OLIVER. I might answer that by saying seven years, but to make it plain I should say that the arrangement entered into with regard to the Doukhobors was a single effort in relation to a certain special colony or section, and was supposed to be made in the joint cause of religious liberty and the beneficial settlement of the Northwest. It was not carried any further.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). How many of the Doukhobors migrated last year to British Columbia?

Mr. OLIVER. We have no official information. Our immigration branch is not responsible in regard to the colony as now constituted. But I have heard through the ordinary channels that about 100 heads of families have recently gone to British Columbia to occupy lands which have been purchased there on behalf of the community.

Mr. FOWLER. I understood that an order had been issued by the department compelling the Doukhobors who desired to live in the communal condition to give up the lands that had been issued to them. Is that correct?

Mr. OLIVER. That is hardly the way I would care to have the matter put. The Doukhobors made homestead entry for certain lands in 1903, but did not comply with the homestead conditions.

Mr. FOWLER. Were those entries made by the individuals themselves or by some person on behalf of them.

Mr. OLIVER. They were made just as other entries were at that time allowed to be made, that is to say, they were proxy entries. Ostensibly they were made for the individual Doukhobors, each of whom made his entry in exactly the same terms as other people, and signed his application in just the same way.

Mr. FOWLER. Afterwards?

Mr. OLIVER. No. The entrant was not required to be in bodily presence in the land office, but he had to sign his application personally and he became responsible for the affidavit contained in the application.

Mr. FOWLER. Was there not such a think as a blanket entry which the individual did not have to sign?

Mr. OLIVER. No. When the Doukhobors came to the country certain lands were set apart as a service, upon which they alone might secure homestead entry. Up to 1903 few if any of them had made entry. In 1903 they were informed by the department that if they were going to retain control of those lands, or any part of them, they must make entry for them. In accordance with the negotiations that then took place, they made entry in the way that I have mentioned, on the ordinary forms, and these forms were accepted, and their entries stood in the book against those lands subject to the ordinary homestead conditions.

Mr. FOWLER. What precaution did you take to make yourselves sure that the signature to the application was that of the individual, and that some one person did not sign 100 or perhaps 200 applications? Did you have them witnessed or sworn to?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think the affidavit requires witnesses.

Mr. FOWLER. The applicant has to swear that he is the person making the entry?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, as I understand it. At any rate, the entries were made, and the people who made the entries, in the large majority of cases instead of breaking away from the community system, as had been expected, were rather more confirmed in the community system than before, and were not conforming to the terms of the entry, as the law required. The matter was under consideration for some time; but the upshot of it was that in the early part of 1907 a commission was appointed to visit the settlements and to find out how many of these people were conforming to the requirements of the Homestead Act. The Rev. John McDougall was the commissioner, with Mr. Mavor, a clerk in the employ of the lands branch of the Interior Department, and Michael White, a man of Russian birth and German parentage, who understood the Russian language and was educated in English, as interpreter. They examined the conditions carefully, and ascertained how many people were conforming to the terms of the Homestead Act and how many did not wish to conform, as nearly as they could. They made a calculation as to how much land would be required to give to those who did not want to conform to the terms of the Homestead Act, enough land to cultivate and occupy and make a living upon. It was found that during the seven years that the Doukhobors had been in the country, their total cultivation amounted to about five acres per head of men, women and children. Before we appointed this commission we had arrived at the conclusion that we could not and would not be justified in maintaining their homestead entries against lands in regard to which the duties were not being fulfilled, and that if they refused to conform to the requirements of the law by individual ownership and cultivation, there was no recourse but to cancel their entry and leave the lands open to entry and occupation by other persons. At the same time, we had to recognize that the people were there, and that they had been living from the products of their fields for some seven years—because I may say that, with the exception of the expenses incurred in connection with their coming to the country and their first year's residence here, they have been no cost to the government in any shape or manner.

Mr. FOWLER. What was the cost of their first year's residence ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer that. They were responsible for certain advances which were made, but I cannot say just how the account stands. But since then they have been entirely self-supporting, and not only that, but they have been reasonable contributors to the general productiveness and therefore the wealth of the country. We found that they would not conform to the requirements of the Homestead Act. Their religious belief absolutely precludes private ownership of anything particularly private ownership of land ; they abhor the idea.

Mr. FOWLER. That being the case, why did these people make these applications for the homesteads ? Either they must have been deceived when they made them or else they were false to their religion, or they have changed their views since.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it was a little of all three. When our commission visited them, they declared that their religious belief prohibited the private ownership of land. That was in the early part of 1907. They were then more than self-supporting. They were adding measurably to the production and wealth of the country, and we did not consider that we would be justified, although they were not conforming to the requirements of our homestead laws, in taking action which would amount to saying to them: You must get off the earth. We did not think we would be justified in doing so, as a matter of common humanity. Those people had been then five or six years in the country, they had five acres per head under cultivation, they had been supporting themselves successfully and accumulating a little wealth off that area, and if we continued to their use say three times that much land, we thought they could have no possible grounds of complaint, and they would have abundance of opportunity for reasonable expansion as their population increased. Therefore around each village we gave a reserve which would aggregate in area fifteen acres per head of the people resident in that village.

Mr. FOWLER. About seventy-five acres to a family.

Mr. OLIVER. Their families are small. They hardly average as large as those of the surrounding settlers. First we cancelled all the entries, we cleared the books of the entries made by the Doukhobors who were not conforming to the homestead conditions, and in the vicinity of each village, including the site, we held in reservation land aggregating fifteen acres to each resident for the benefit of that village. We said we would hold that in the hands of the Crown for their use and benefit, so long as they saw fit to use it and we saw fit to let them have it. That was not done by agreement but of our motion. The remainder of the land held under entry by them, saving that held in conformity with our homestead law —because quite a considerable number did conform with the homestead law—was declared open for homestead entry. We announced in the newspapers that on June 1. 1907, there would be open for homestead entry to the first applicant at the counter the land thus cancelled in a certain township; that on the second day, the land in another township would be opened, and so on until all the land which had been cleared off the books had been offered to the public for homestead entry. All of the land has not been taken because some of it is not desirable. Still there was quite a rush for the land, and the great majority of it was taken up.

Mr. LAKE. Odd as well as even-numbered sections?

Mr. OLIVER. In the York district their reserve included the odd sections as well as the even. In the Prince Albert district, they only had the even sections. The odd-numbered sections were held for other settlement.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Who were associated with the Rev. John McDougall ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Maber of the Interior Department and Mr. White as interpreter.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. About how long were they occupied?

Mr. OLIVER. What my hon. friend is asking me now has to do with the lands branch, and the officials present are not able to give the information at the moment.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. We can defer any discussion on that until those estimates come up. I observe that the Rev. John McDougall, was paid for services $3,910 and there was advanced him for expenses $4,600. When these estimates come up, I shall ask for further details.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that the same Rev. John McDougall, who figured in the newspapers a little while ago as speaking very eulogistically of this government? Perhaps that newspaper did not come to the attention of the minister. We shall perhaps be able to see some reason why the reverend gentleman should speak of this government in such very high terms.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure he had every reason to speak in the highest terms of this government and so would every other honest man.

Mr. FOWLER. He had nine thousand reasons—good crisp Dominion bank bills.

Mr. OLIVER. That hardly applies to the subject before the House. I may say that this matter was not one to be easily approached. It was an undertaking of very considerable delicacy and difficulty. Now that it is over, it looks quite easy, but I beg to assure my hon. friend that I approached it with anything but confidence. However something had to be done, the question had to be dealt with, and I saw no better way to deal with it. Whatever my hon. friends may think of the amount paid the Rev. Mr. McDougall or the commission, my belief is that the money was well spent in getting a satifactory settlement of a difficult and delicate question, affecting a very large area of very valuable land.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is what I wanted to ask about. He cancelled their entries and gave them fifteen acres in the centre of the village for each person residing in the village. Did they thoroughly understand that and are they satisfied with it?

Mr. OLIVER. That is my information. Of course, I cannot say that they were satisfied with it in the first place. Two deputations came down to interview me, objecting to the action we proposed to take. Although their religious views were entirely prohibitive of the private ownership of land, those views did not prohibit, apparently, the community ownership of land, and they were prepared to assert the retention of the control by the community over this area on which they seem to think they had some special claim as a community and were prepared to excite sympathy throughout the country and generally to make as strong a case as they possibly could. However, I think, owing very greatly to the tact of Mr. McDougall and his assistants on the commission, since the work was actually done, I have not heard one word of complaint either directly or indirectly from the Doukhobors or from the public except in isolated instances from people who felt, perhaps, that their particular right was not given the consideration they might have wished.

Mr. STAPLES. How many communities did Rev. John McDougall deal with and where are they located?

Mr. OLIVER. If my memory serves me well, there were forty or forty-one villages. The majority—about thirty—were located in what is called the Yorkton district, that is, north of Yorkton and on the line of the Canadian Northern Railway. Some ten or twelve villages were situated in the Prince Albert district west of Rosthern, also on the Canadian Northern Railway. My hon. friend will understand that when the Doukhobors were located on these lands the lands were distant from railway communication and were not considered valuable to any degree. They were good enough for the Doukhobors, but not good enough for anybody else. But when the railroad was run through these tracts, the condition was absolutely changed. Besides there had been seven years' residence of the Doukhobors, during which time the fertility of the soil and the suitability of the climate had been demonstrated. So when the road was constructed these lands acquired a very great value—not only an actual, but a speculative value. We had not only the difficulty of dealing with the Doukhobors, who thought they owned the land or ought to own it, but we had also the difficulty of dealing with the people who saw in it a very considerable cash value which they felt that they would like to handle, and thought it was theirs by right as citizens of the country who were first on the ground to get it.

Mr. STAPLES. I think the principal objection of the people in these respective localities was that the holding of these lands by the Doukhobors retarded development. I had occasion to travel across that country and know the most valuable lands in these districts that had been located upon. People of other nationalities who went there found that they could not carry on their farming operations successfully in the same locality owing to the difference of habit and custom, and so they naturally asked the government to deal with the matter in some way. Are all these districts dealt with? Have all these questions been settled?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. STAPLES. Well, now that is over, perhaps the minister would say whether he thinks that the system the government adopted by way of cancellation and reopening these homesteads was the best way in the interests of the people? The reason why I ask is that I know a good many people who went from Manitoba to that section to secure homesteads and who underwent a good deal of hardship—they had to wait day by day upon the officials who were dealing with these homesteads, and many, when they got to the place where they had to make application, had to wait for hours in the rain before they could be admitted to the building where applications were to be filed. The Liberal press at that time gave great encouragement to all to go there and get a homestead, representing that all they had to do was to go there and there would be no difficulty. Consequently many went and spent a great deal of time and money, and underwent, as I have said, a great deal of hardship, and I think that about 80 per cent of them came away without being able to secure a homestead. This was due entirely to the manner in which the press of the country represented the facts at that time. There was quite a loss to people, some of them right in my own locality. I think the government might have adopted a different system. Even had the minister followed the system in vogue in the United States in opening up tracts of country, I think the results would have been better. It is all over now, but I do think that the government might have adopted a better system in throwing open these holdings.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that any important purpose will be served by discussing the matter now. But it appears that the only objection that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Staples) makes to the system adopted by the government to make these lands available is that it was too popular—too many people applied for homesteads. But I think that when we offered the land to the first comer, advertised the fact that it would be available to the first comer, and opened it up township after township so as to minimize the rush, we did as well as my hon. friend (Mr. Staples) could have done had he had to deal with the same conditions.

Mr. STAPLES. I did not pretend to suggest a policy. But I did refer him to the policy adopted in the United States, and I think that the people there get just as well satisfied as the men did who went out to get these homsteads.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister (Mr. Oliver) has spoken very highly of the services of the Rev. Mr. McDougall. But the minister's commendation, high as it is, is scarcely in proportion to the salary which the reverend gentleman receives for these services. I am sorry to differ in opinion from the minister, for very often I agree with him in the work of his department—and that is something that I cannot do with the heads of some of the departments—but I must say that I think these results could have been obtained just as well without the services of the Rev. Mr. McDougall. I think this result could have been obtained just as well without the services of the Rev. Mr. McDougall as with his services. It would appear to me that these people being of a peculiar religious faith, the introduction among them of a gentleman who represented a different faith, would naturally antagonize them; and perhaps a layman would have had a far better chance of succeeding in allaying any suspicion or ill feeling they might have had, than would a gentleman wearing the uniform of the church. As to the agreement that was made, as to the disposition that was made of these lands, I do not know that I have any fault to find with that at all. I think the government was generous with these people in allowing them to remain on this land that they had cultivated, perhaps not too generous. But I do think that the money that was expended in connection with this mission was absolutely thrown away. The same information could have been gathered by the inspectors which the hon. gentleman employed, and their reports should have been sufficient for him to act upon. His own officers could have reached the same result without any additional cost. This government is altogether too fond of issuing commissions in order to reward their political friends. We saw in the papers the other day that the Rev. Mr. McDougall had given this government a clean bill of health; there seemed to be a mutual service and the reverend gentleman was no doubt well recompensed for his services. It seems to me that these gentlemen must have lived at a pretty expensive rate, since the expenses amounted to close upon $5,000 for the party. In the party there were only three persons. Mr. McDougall himself, Mr. Michael White, the interpreter, and Mr. Major, the officer of the department. Their expenses amounted to $4,600. I suppose it was thought prudent to travel in a magnificent style so as to impress the Doukhobors and to make them think that this new religious leader occupied as high a position as Mr. Peter Verigen did in the minds of the Doukhobors. As regards the land settlement, I think the minister acted properly. If these people choose not to conform to the regulations of the land department, it was right to take the lands from them; and again, having come under the conditions which they did, and being in the country, it was necessary to do something with them, and perhaps the minister took the wisest course in allowing them the 15 acres per head. Have these Doukhobors votes?—because it would look as if the government thought that would be a nice way to obtain control of the votes of these communities.

Mr. OLIVER. No, they object just as strongly to becoming citizens as they do to owning land. To return to the items of expenditure, we are estimating for British bonuses this year, $90,000. In the year 1906-7 we paid $58,000 on that account for nine months. That goes to the booking agents in Great Britain and Ireland. We have not got the figures for the year since the 31st of March last. But we are asking $90,000 for the current year.

Mr. FOWLER. How many individuals are there to whom this $58,000 was paid?

Mr. OLIVER. There are about 1,800 booking agents entitled to the bonus. We have a printed list of the names. We estimate $10,000 for continental bonuses, that is, bonuses on immigrants from continental Europe. We give bonuses on the same classes as we do in Great Britain, that is, people who have followed agriculture, and who intend to follow it in this country. During the fiscal year, 1906-7, there were no bonuses paid except those paid in winding up the business of the North Atlantic Trading Company. As I have informed the House, we closed business with that company on the 30th November, 1906, and we did not begin to pay bonuses on any other account until some time in 1907. The bonuses which we were entitled to pay in the early part of 1907 had not accrued until the close of that fiscal year, therefore there is nothing shown as having been paid in bonuses during that fiscal year except those paid to the North Atlantic Trading Company, which were earned before the 30th November, 1906.

Mr. FOWLER. They have not earned anything since you cut them off?

Mr. OLIVER. No, but they say they have.

Mr. FOWLER. Are they suing you? In that case we will get their names.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know who they are, except that they are doing business under the name and style of the North Atlantic Trading Company. The secretary is S. Cohen. Then, commissions on settlers from the United States, $5,000. In the fiscal year 1906-7, we paid $4,743, $3 per head on men, $2 on women and $1 on children. Seaport expenses at Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, North Sydney, Vancouver and Victoria, $10,000. These are the contingent expenses, not salaries. For travelling and living expenses of officers meeting boats and on trains of immigrants, also telegrams, postage, &c., in the fiscal year 1906-7, we paid $5,000. Contingencies and general expenses of United States agents were $65,000. Contingencies and agents' expenses in Canada generally were $25,000. Contingencies and general expenses of agencies in Great Britain and Ireland, including the London office, were $75,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you an agent at Boston and if so have you any means of checking the number of immigrants he sends to Canada?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, we have a salaried agent at Boston. The method we have of keeping track of the number he sends is his weekly report of the reduced-fare tickets which he issues by authority of the railway companies.

Mr. FOWLER. Would that be a good test? Would it not be possible for people simply coming to visit their relatives in Canada to get these tickets?

Mr. OLIVER. If it is good enough to justify the railway companies in issuing reduced tickets it should be sufficiently good evidence for us to accept that the person is likely to become a settler in the west. Last year the number of such tickets was something over 600.

Mr. FOWLER. Where did they go?

Mr. OLIVER. To the prairie west. The purpose of keeping the agent in Boston is rather to appeal to the maritime province people who are settled very largely in Boston and the eastern states. We believe that these are very desirable people, very suitable for settlers in the Northwest.

Mr. FOWLER. They are principally Canadians who wish to come back to Canada?

Mr. OLIVER. Who have gone from Canada to the United States. We think they are possibly more likely to be willing to come into Canada again than native born citizens of those states. Therefore the agency in Boston, differing from those in some other states, is with a special view of appealing to this class of people.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CROWN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 180) respecting the Crown Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Tisdale.

Mr. FIELDING. A few moments ago I received a telegram concerning this Bill. I have no information on the subject other than that contained in the telegram which is addressed to me from Montreal and which is as follows:

Hon. W. S. Fielding,
Minister of Finance, Ottawa.

I am advised Crown Life Bill comes up for third reading to-night at eight o'clock. Rodolphe Forget, M.P., now absent from city, has proxies from eighty shareholders of Crown Life who do not favour Bill, certain Montreal policy-holders also disapprove of cutting down of stock and complain of insufficient notice having been given. On behalf of Mr.

Forget and many shareholders and policyholders, I ask that Bill be referred back to committee to give chance for these opposed to be heard.

(Sgd.) GEORGE H. ROBERTS,
A shareholder of Crown Life.

My hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is familiar with the matter and I call his attention to this. I have no other knowledge than that which comes by this telegram.

Mr. TISDALE. Every shareholder had notice at least three or four weeks ago before the Bill was introduced in the Senate. In the Standing Orders Committee there was an affidavit filed that every one of them had notice in addition to the public notices which have now run their full time, that this Act would be applied for at this session. Mr. Roberts, the gentleman who sent that telegram, was formerly connected with the company, but we found it necessary to dispense with his services three or four years ago, and he has since been trying to give us all possible annoyance. The Bill is important to us as an enabling Bill, and therefore I wish to press it. We have to get a two-thirds votes of the proprietors before we can do anything under the Act, and it is most important, in the interests of the company, that we should have a chance of bringing the matter before the shareholders and getting it settled.

Mr. FIELDING. I would suggest, in view of what the hon. member for Norfolk has said, that we let the Bill go through its present stage, and stand for a third reading. I have no desire whatever to postpone it, but if the statement is correct that the hon. member for Charlevoix has proxies which he desires to use against this Bill, I would suggest to my hon. friend that he allow the Bill to stand until that hon. member can have an opportunity to be present.

Mr. TISDALE. The telegram does not come from him, but from Mr. Roberts. It is most important in the interest of the company that we should get the Bill through so that if Bills are assented to next week, we may save a month or six weeks in the reorganization. I may say that I represent now considerably more than half the proxies, apart from those shareholders who have not yet sent in their answers. A notice of what we were doing was sent to every shareholder. If we have any trouble, let us settle it before the shareholders. We have the burden of getting the two-thirds vote, while our opponents do not require to do anything. Under the circumstances, I would press the Bill.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no objection to accept my hon. friend's statement and let the Bill go through, as far as I am concerned.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 71), respecting the Standard Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and to change its name to the Standard Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. McLean (York).

Bill (No. 170) respecting the Nipissing Central Railway Company.—Mr. McCool.

Bill (No. 167) respecting the Phœnix Assurance Company, Limited.—Mr. Macdonald.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Contingencies in Canadian, British and foreign agencies, and general immigration expenses, including salaries of extra clerks at head office, $710,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What duties does Mr. F. O. Chapman perform in connection with the Immigration Department?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chapman is in charge of the motor bus which travels through England carrying exhibits of Canadian produce and from which literature is distributed.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the government own the bus?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. STAPLES. At six o'clock the hon. minister made the remark, if I caught his words correctly, that the American immigrants to the Northwest were a good class of immigrants notwithstanding the evidence from this side of the House. I do not know what evidence the minister refers to. I wish to state here that the class of American immigrants we are getting in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta is a very desirable class. They are men of experience who come with considerable money and they have shown their ability to get to work and develop that western country. When the minister says there is evidence from this side that we consider them not desirable, I cannot agree with him. I am sure I have not heard any one on this side reflect in any way on those immigrants. Where he got that evidence I would like to know. It would be well for this government to expend a large amount of their appropriations set aside for importing immigrants from the continent and devote it to bringing in the class of American immigrants we are getting. Take the large amount of money given the North Atlantic Trading Company and other companies of that nature in return for which this country has received little or no benefit and a very poor class of immigrants as compared with the Americans.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure the hon. gentleman's expression of opinion as regards the American immigrants is acceptable to all ex-members of this House.

Mr. FOWLER. I notice in the Auditor General's Report, L—23, a list of special delegates. What are they for?

Mr. OLIVER. A considerable proportion of those are practical farmers who are selected and sent to the old country because of the success they have achieved in Canada. We prefer to send delegates to the old country who have been born there and who have made a success in Canadian farming. These men are paid $100 a month and their expenses. While in the British Isles they are under the direction and control of our immigration service there and are generally employed in visiting the offices of the foreign booking agents. The booking agent makes the announcement that on a certain day a certain farmer from Canada will be at his office and be glad to meet any one who desires information regarding Canada. These men are not generally public speakers, but practical, successful men. And when given the opportunity of meeting practical men in the same business, they put the advantages of Canada in a very direct and favourable light.

Mr. FOWLER. Where do you send them?

Mr. OLIVER. They all report at our head office in London and then the assistant commissioner distributes them according to his best judgment and the localities from which they may come originally, and according also to the energy or reliability of the various booking agents. There may be a booking agent in a certain locality who does not take an active interest in his business, and it would not be worth while sending a delegate to him, and there may be another in a farming locality who may be very active.

Mr. FOWLER. Are they only sent to the British Isles?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, but last year we sent a Frenchman to France and a Belgian to Belgium.

Mr. STAPLES. I see in the Auditor General's Report, page L—24, that Mr. Larkin, one of those delegates, received $100 a month and $200 expenses. Another delegate, Mr. A. Shepherd, who is quite a capable man, just as capable as Mr. Larkin, only received $75 a month and $70.30 expenses. Why this discrimination?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say, but $100 is the maximum. No doubt there was an arrangement with Mr. Shepherd, and he was satisfied with the amount paid him. We desire to get men who have a going business and cannot leave without paying others to take their place, and we pay them sufficient to enable them to engage substitutes.

Mr. STAPLES. Mr. Shepherd is one of our best farmers, and he had to leave some one in his place. I heard indirectly that he felt somewhat annoyed on learning that the expense account he put in and the salary he asked had been pared down to a certain extent. He is just as good a man as the government could send from their side of politics. Why he should not receive as much salary as Mr. Larkin and many others, I do not know.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are they all Liberals?

Mr. STAPLES. As far as I know they are, and should be treated equally.

Mr. OLIVER. I really cannot say why Mr. Shepherd was not paid as much as the others, or why his expense account was not as great. I suppose that the fact that he was not paid so much is not an objection to the amount he was paid. At any rate we cannot be charged with extravagance in the case of Mr. Shepherd.

Mr. STAPLES. When Mr. Shepherd was in Europe, he did good service to the country. He paid careful attention to the way our grain reached the foreign market. He brought home samples and exhibited them in the Agricultural Committee. I do not see why he should not receive every consideration at the hands of the government.

Mr. FOWLER. In this list of special delegates, I see a familiar name—Wagner. This delegate is named M. Wagner. Would that be a relative of Philip of that ilk?

Mr. OLIVER. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. FOWLER. Where did M. Wagner go to—to Great Britain or to the continent? I see the amount is stated here as an 'advance' on his travelling expenses. He got his ocean passage of $30 and an advance of $75. How much salary was paid to M.—which might stand for Michael; we will call him Michael—Wagner, and what expenses did he receive besides this advance of $75?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to answer the question. He was to have his passage paid and he received an advance on expenses. But his accounts were not received for settlement when the books were closed.

Mr. FOWLER. Is he in the employ of the government?

Mr. OLIVER. Evidently, he is one of the delegates sent to the old country—I fancy to Germany, judging by the name.

Mr. FOWLER. I see here also Rev. Mr. Woodcutter, salary four months at $83.33, ocean passages $59.20, and travelling expenses $678.73. How does it come that the Rev. Mr. Woodcutter has such a large bill for expenses, and was paid salary for four months while most of the others were paid for from one to three months? Was Mr. Woodcutter a farmer? Or how and why was he sent?

Mr. OLIVER. His calling is indicated by his title—he is a Roman Catholic clergyman. He is a man of very wide linguistic accomplishments, speaking a number of European languages. He was for a time in our employment at the Winnipeg office as an interpreter. Some time after his continuous employment at the immigration hall in Winnipeg had ceased, it was his desire to visit Continental Europe, and we thought we should be well-advised to put him on the same footing as a farmer delegate, though he is not a farmer.

Mr. FOWLER. In fact, to give him an outing in Europe, you appointed him a special farming delegate, paid him for four months, gave him $59.20 for ocean passage —double what you gave anybody else—and paid him $678.73 for his expenses.

Mr. HERRON. Has the minister had any recent complaint from the south, of agents recommending people to go to any particular section of the country? There were complaints about a year ago from Macleod and that section, of agents somewhere in the United States recommending settlers going into Canada to go to the northern and not to the southern part, on the ground that the south was a poor place for settlers to locate.

Mr. OLIVER. No complaints have come to my knowledge within the past year. As my hon. friend (Mr. Herron) has said, there were complaints about a year ago. I am bound to say that, on inquiry, I did not find that those complaints were well founded.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Can the minister tell me the cost of maintenance of the office in London, England?

Mr. OLIVER. The Auditor General's Report shows that for the nine months ending March 31, 1907, the amount was $26,463.76. Adding one-fourth, you get a very close approximation to the amount we are asking parliament for.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. How many are employed on the staff in that office?

Mr. OLIVER. There are thirteen employees.

Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I do not know whether it has come to the attention of the minister or not, but the management of that office has been the subject of certain criticism in the western newspapers. I have seen a number of articles in newspapers published in Alberta, one purporting to give an interview with a gentleman who had recently visited the London office. This gentleman said that he tried to get some information there regarding the province of Alberta. He was handed two pamphlets six years old and could get practically no attention or information about the country. Without taking time to read these statements, I should be glad to send the papers to the minister if he has not seen them.

Mr. OLIVER. I have seen papers which I have no doubt are the ones to which the hon. gentleman alludes. One statement is made by Captain Thomas, of Camrose, and the other by Mr. Blaylock, of Calgary. I referred these statements to the office in London for explanation. I have not received the explanation as yet. I hope that the conditions are not quite correctly represented. But if they are, certainly some rearrangement requires to be made. When I was in that office myself it seemed to me that matters were being handled in a very different manner and a different spirit. We have supplied what we thought was up to date literature. It may be that our supply of up to date literature had at that particular moment been exhausted. We supply literature from this side, and it is possible that the new supply had not arrived at the time this gentleman called. I think there must be some explanation such as that.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. The statement of Mr. Blaylock was that he could get no information about the southern part of the province, and all he could find in the offices was a bird's eye view of the city of Edmonton. If what he states is true, while the people of southern Alberta have no objection to Edmonton being advertised in the London office as much as the minister chooses, they do not think the advertisement should be confined to that part of Alberta and that particular city.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the House will see that the two witnesses who have been called by my hon. friend for the prosecution hardly agree. One gentleman complains that he could not get anything up-to-date relating to Alberta and the other gentleman complains because he did get that which was up-to-date and which related to Alberta, because it did not relate to southern Alberta.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. What did he get that was up-to-date?

Mr. OLIVER. A view of Edmonton, as he says. If the description he did receive at the immigration office was a little out of the actual facts, the complaint of Capt. Thomas was that the information was too far out of date. In regard to the statement of Mr. Blaylock, I think I saw some discussion in the newspapers about it, and my opinion would be that some enterprising people of Edmonton had sent to the London office some advertising matter on their own account, and that Mr. Blaylock had seen it there. If the people of Calgary chose to send anything advertising their city it would receive the same prominence. I want to assure the House that none of the publications sent out by this department, place Edmonton in the light that my hon. friend speaks of, as compared with any other city in Alberta or in Canada.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I asked the minister if he had seen these complaints, and from what he has said I believe now that he has seen them. Having seen them, I would ask him to investigate them and see if they are well founded.

Mr. ALCORN. I notice in the Auditor General's Report the sum of $92,614 paid for bonuses. This, I presume, is the sum the details of which are given on L—24 and 25, for bringing immigrants to this country. On L—23 is a sum of $19,725 under head of grants made to various corporations and associations. Would the minister give some explanation of this latter sum, and state why those grants were made? They are apparently made to associations connected with immigration, and are expended in part at least upon immigrants after they reach Canada. How does that explanation fit with the grant of $6,000, for instance, to the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company? I notice that nearly $20,000 goes to associations in the province of Quebec. I understand that Quebec was in the same position as Ontario with regard to immigration agents, who are paid for the location of immigrants in that province. For what reason is the grant of this very large sum made to associations, and in what way would the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway get their grant?

Mr. OLIVER. I am glad my hon. friend has asked this question. We have had several attempts made in the House, both this session and the previous session, to make it appear that there was some undue discrimination by the immigration department in respect to securing and distributing settlers. The Department of Immigration is interested in securing desirable people to settle in all parts of the Dominion. its efforts and its expenditures are directed in the first place, to inducing the settler to come, and in the next place, to establishing him in the country to the best advantage. The one great difference between the policy of the present government and that of the late government, was that the late government rather confined its efforts to inducing people to come, and did not proceed further to help them to establish themselves in the various parts of the country. This government has adopted the policy of endeavouring to secure the establishment of the settler in the country after his arrival. It is for that reason that our immigration staff in Winnipeg is so large. We have a commissioner of immigration at Winnipeg, with a large and expensive staff, an immigration hall with a great many appurtenances of different kinds. We have immigration agents and immigration halls at many other points throughout that country, and land guides at many points. All this vast expenditure is made for the purpose of locating the settler where he desires to settle after he has reached Canada. In the province of Ontario we have taken an interest in placing immigrants by establishing employment agencies in the different counties. The agents work on a commission basis, and receive $2 for each immigrant that they place on a farm in their respective counties.

Mr. ALCORN. That policy it seems to me has resulted in the appointment as employment agents of partisan supporters of the government who work almost solely for the $2 a head, and the system does not seem to me to be very successful. If people of a higher standard were employed, such as we had formerly in my own county, I think the results would be very different. The results from that system in the county which I have the honour to represent have certainly up to the present been anything but satisfactory.

Mr. OLIVER. I was not for the moment discussing that side of the question. I was saying that we were making certain efforts in Ontario as well as in the west to place immigrants satisfactorily after their arrival. The expenditure my hon. friend has quoted from the Auditor General's Report as being made in Quebec are for the same purpose and to the same end. They are made on a different method from that employed in Ontario, just as the method in Ontario is different from the method in the prairie west.

Mr. ALCORN. Are there any employment agents in Quebec paid in the same way?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, but that is a very recent development and, in fact, can scarcely be considered to be an effective measure as yet, because, as my hon. friend knows, a large part of the population of Quebec is of the French language, and unless there are French immigrants who come and are available to be placed, there is very little of that to be done. There has been little placing of immigrants in actual practice as yet in Quebec except in the English counties. We have made expenditures in Quebec with a view to having the immigrants whom we induced to come to the country satisfactorily placed in the positions which would be of advantage to them and to the country. The payment to the Lake St. John Railway is one of these payments. The Lake St. John Railway is a colonization railway. It gives communication with points reached by it in the Lake St. John region where there is some agricultural development and where there is industrial development of various kinds. It seemed reasonable that the Lake St. John Railway, being especially interested in the colonization and development of that country, should be considered and dealt with as an active and effective agent for handling and dealing with people desirous of going into that country. There are several societies in the province of Quebec looking to the development of the hinterland of that province, and we have made certain payments to these societies with the same object of having the immigrant on his arrival placed satisfactorily so that both he and the country will be benefited. The payments in Quebec are for the same purposes as in Ontario and the west, but they are made on a different principle because of the different condition of the country.

Mr. ALCORN. In what way do the Lake St John Railway do the work?. Do they place immigrants on their own land or how do they distribute them and find them employment?

Mr. OLIVER. The railway company have no grant of land. The unoccupied land in that locality is owned by the provincial government. In consideration of this grant the railway company gives free transportation from Quebec over their railway.

Mr. ALCORN. Are these French immigrants who are brought in there?

Mr. OLIVER. Some are French, but there are some Belgians and other nationalities as well. Of course, it is natural that a settlement in that province will attract French immigrants, but the settlement is not confined to French. There is a Danish as well as a Belgian settlement there.

Mr. ALCORN. Do the society of colonization and repatriation and the Quebec and Lake St. John Colonization Society deal with the same section of country?

Mr. OLIVER. In the estimates of the current year we are not asking for any money for the Lake St. John Colonization Society. We now confine our grants to the Railway.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. ALCORN. Is this grant of $500 the only grant to the Salvation Army in connection with the work ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, that is not the only grant the Salvation Army get. That grant is paid in the year mentioned, but it relates to services given in a previous year. It provides for the special lectures given under the auspices of the Army, very much as the meetings I have described are held by ordinary booking agents employing farm delegates.

Mr. ALCORN. That would be for services rendered in Europe?

Mr. OLIVER. In England.

Mr. ALCORN. It is here under the head of grants.

Mr. OLIVER. But the service is rendered in Great Britain.

Mr. ALCORN. What other grants are made to the Salvation Army as a body in Canada with reference to immigration work ?

Mr. OLIVER. We are paying the Salvation Army a special grant this year in consideration of their placing immigrants in the four western provinces. The Salvation Army sees to the placing of their immigrants after their arrival in this country. They have a very complete and successful organization, and as they have recently developed their work very largely in the west we have thought it not inadvisable to recognize their services to the extent I have mentioned. West of Lake Superior we have our own staff on salary to look after the placing of immigrants and we do not pay a commission per head as in Ontario. The Salvation Army also has its staff and we pay it a lump sum of $7,500 for the work done in the four western provinces.

Mr. ALCORN. Has the department an agent at Quebec who exchanges foreign money into Canadian money for the immigrants?

Mr. OLIVER. We have an arrangement with James MacNider & Co., brokers of Quebec, to exchange the money of the immigrants, and we pay MacNider & Co. $250 a year, and give them an office in the immigrant building.

Mr. ALCORN. And furniture ?

Mr. OLIVER. The furniture is very limited.

Mr. DANIEL. What arrangement is made for that service in the winter?

Mr. OLIVER. We have a similar arrangement at St. John with J. M. Robinson.

Mr. ALCORN. I have had correspondence from some persons in connection with this matter and they are under the impression that the profit on the exchange is more than the government grant. Other people are willing to do the work without any grant.

Mr. OLIVER. Perhaps so. It is very important that this exchange of money should be done by people who can absolutely be depended upon whether it pays them or not. It may be that the business has increased to such an extent that there is a profit in it without any payment by the government. But I presume the payment was made when the business was less extensive and when there was no profit in the exchange itself. We handle a great many immigrants at Quebec and if we can get a competent and reliable person to do his work it is cheap at $250 a year.

Mr. ALCORN. Has the government any information as to what the profits on the exchange are?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. ALCORN. Has the exchange agent an absolutely free hand, or is there any oversight on him?

Mr. OLIVER. He is bound to give the bank rate of exchange. He is there under the eye of the officials and subject to any complaints that may be made.

Mr. ALCORN. He is dealing with a class who are not very likely to know the bank rate of exchange.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Has the minister any information as to the character of the immigrants brought out by the Salvation Army ? The Army officers claim they have brought out suitable immigrants and that none of them have become a public charge, whereas others declare that the immigrants are of an inferior class and not suitable to the requirements of our country. Have any of the Salvation Army immigrants been deported?

Mr. OLIVER. Considering the large number of people who have come out under the auspices of the Salvation Army the failures are very few. There have been instances where some have had to be deported, and there are some others in which the immigrants might be considered undesirable, but considering that thousands have been brought out by the Army it is safe to say that generally speaking the Army immigrants are perfectly desirable. We have had practically no complaint with regard to these immigrants. We find the army a reliable institution who take care of the people they bring out, and if they find they have made a mistake they are as ready to rectify it as we could expect them to be.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I quite believe that the Salvation Army looks carefully after the immigrants brought out under their auspices. I understand, however, they do not confine their efforts to the agricultural class and domestic servants for whom we pay the bonus. The Salvation Army take a proportion of their immigrants from the cities so that the government in paying them a lump sum is paying for a class of immigrants other than those specified in the order in council.

Mr. OLIVER. It is possible to place such construction upon the grant, but after all it is hardly fair because there is no doubt this Salvation Army brings out a very large proportion of agricultural people. It is true that they do not confine their efforts to that class, although we confine our bonus to that class; but the grant we have under discussion now is paid to them in respect of the work they do in distributing their immigrants west of Lake Superior, and I think, everything considered, they are entitled to the amount we pay them for that service, although it is not distinguished in the account from the other branches of their service. So that my hon. friend may claim, if he pleases, that we are indirectly assisting in bringing out people other than the agricultural class. We think that we may claim in fairness that we are not.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Is that the only organization or society to which the government gives a grant for the purpose of assisting in the work of bringing immigrants from the old country?

Mr. OLIVER. Allow me to put it the other way. We are not paying them this money to assist them in bringing people out. We are paying them to assist them in distributing the immigrants after they have come out. We are not paying a similar grant to any other society, because so far as I know there is no other society that distributes the immigrants it brings out.

Mr. FOWLER. I notice that you employ a number of clergymen. In the Auditor General's Report is a statement of the expense of employing four clergymen. What are their duties?

Mr. OLIVER. The principle on which they are employed is pretty much the same as that on which the importunate widow secured her desire. There are times and occasions when it is very difficult to do otherwise than accede to the propositions that are made. As I have already said, our principle is to employ practical farmers, but we are not always able to secure the men we want of that class.

Mr. FOWLER. What are these clergymen employed for? They do not understand farming. What pressure did they put on the department to cause themselves to be employed? I do not think the widow story will exactly cover the ground. Is it because they wish to take a trip abroad for the purpose of their health? There ought to be some reason given for this employment other than the fact that they belong to the clerical profession.

Mr. OLIVER. The reasons which they give, and which may very well be given, are that having lived most of their lives in country districts and in close touch with agricultural operations, they have a very good knowledge of practical farming; and of course, being accustomed to public speaking, they have ability in the way of addressing audiences that ordinary practical farmer may not have. While we do not object to utilizing the services of the clergymen or think lightly of their services, we want to confine our operations as closely as possible to the strictly agricultural class. Therefore, as like attracts like, we expect best to attract that class of people by sending as delegates successful actual farmers, and we employ very few clergymen, as my hon. friend will see.

Mr. FOWLER. I notice that you have employed a doctor—Dr. Pagé, who visited Liverpool, Glasgow, London, Antwerp and Paris, for which he charged $439 for expenses in addition to his ocean passage; and you also employed a Dr. Robins. What do you want doctors for?

Mr. OLIVER. Dr. Pagé is the examining officer at Quebec. He was sent to Europe for the purpose of better informing himself in regard to the sanitary conditions surrounding the emigrants and the diseases by which they are most likely to be affected. He was sent to Europe for the purpose of enabling him to give us better service at Quebec.

Mr. FOWLER. That is, you sent him to Europe to complete his education. I should have thought that he could have got sufficient practice by examining the people affected by trachoma and other diseases who come here. I notice that you sent two agents to Iceland. Why do you send two to that small island?

Mr. OLIVER. We only send one each year, but the two names appear because of the overlapping of the account.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you keep a resident agent in Iceland?

Mr. OLIVER. No. There are large and successful Icelandic settlements in Manitoba, and we send an agent from one of these each year for a period of about six months.

Mr. FOWLER. I notice that you paid the Allan Line bonuses on Icelandic settlers. Why do you do that? The Allan Line does not call at any Icelandic port.

Mr. OLIVER. This is an exceptional transaction which pertains only to Iceland. It is a small country, with a small population, it is not on the ordinary lines of travel and the expense of immigrants coming from Iceland is much greater in proportion to the distance than those of immigrants from almost any other country. They have to make a trip from Iceland to some point in the British islands; they usually come by Leith. Instead of paying a booking agent $5 a head in this case, we have an arrangement whereby the steamship company reduces the fare to the passenger by the amount of $5 and we pay the steamship company. This is the only case in which we bonus the steamship company. In all other cases we bonus the booking agent as an encouragement to his publicity campaign on behalf of Canada. In the case of Iceland, the population is entirely agricultural or outdoor people. There are practically no undesirables in Iceland. Therefore we have made a special arrangement in their case.

Mr. FOWLER. Then this is partially assisted immigration?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, but that is the only case.

Mr. FOWLER. Who pays the expense of sending a deported immigrant back?

Mr. OLIVER. The steamship company.

Mr. FOWLER. How is it then that we pay so much to these steamship companies for bringing them back?

Mr. OLIVER. The railway and steamship companies have to bear the expense, provided the immigrant is deported within the year. But if he has been here more than a year, the steamship company returns him at a special rate called the charity rate. There are also cases in which it is impossible to locate the steamship company by which the undesirable immigrant came, and in such cases we pay the charity rate.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you not deport the undesirables from the points of debarkation such as Halifax, Quebec and Montreal? Why then all these charges?

Mr. OLIVER. If an immigrant does not pass the examination at the port where he lands, the steamship company has to take him back at once free of charge. But if he passes the examination and gets into the country and then we find he is an undesirable, we have to pay the costs of transportating him to the sea-board. Then if we can determine by what line he came and he is deported within the year, the company must carry him free. Otherwise we pay the charity rate.

Mr. FOWLER. I notice on page L—26 that 15,000 copies of the Halifax Chronicle,' a Dominion Exhibition number, were paid for at seven cents each or $1,132.50. What was that for?

Mr. OLIVER. That was a number of the paper descriptive of Nova Scotia, its advantages and resources, and as we had not at that time published any literature having special reference to Nova Scotia, we thought it was not improper to purchase a portion of this issue and distribute it in the British Isles.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that the issue of which some ten tons still remain over in the immigration office in London, much to the annoyance and inconvenience of the officers in charge? There was something in the press to that effect.

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid the report my hon. friend has mentioned must have appeared in the 'Halifax Herald.' I have no knowledge of there being any portion of this issue left on the hands of the department in London, and while I have heard many peculiar stories of the unadaptability of people on the other side, I would think that where there are so many opportunities of giving away these numbers, they would not be allowed to remain in the immigration office to the disadvantage of its business.

Mr. HERRON. Has the immigration from the western states increased or decreased from latest reports?

Mr. OLIVER. Last year for many reasons it fell off considerably. This year the increase so far is very satisfactory over last year, but I do not think we have arrived at the volume of immigration of the year before, which was abnormal.

Mr. HERRON. My hon. friend should encourage that immigration because it furnishes us with a very desirable class of settlers, From my observation and experience of these people, they are the best adapted to our western country. It makes no difference from what part of Europe they may originally have come to the United States, they have gained an experience in the western states which is of great advantage to them in our new country. No matter where you find American settlers, you find them adapting themseves to new conditions very much better than immigrants from elsewhere.

Mr. STAPLES. I notice that Mr. Ayotte is employed as an immigration agent in Montana and has received from this government $1,690 for the last nine months ending the 31st of March. What are his qualifications and what does he do?

Mr. OLIVER. His headquarters are at Great Falls, Montana. He is working in the country in which my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Herron) has expressed a desire that we should, at any rate, not slacken our efforts. I believe that Mr. Ayotte is originally from Manitoba.

Mr. STAPLES. What qualifications has he in education and ability?

Mr. OLIVER. I can hardly answer that question. I fancy by the results which we have from Montana, partly through the efforts of Mr. Ayotte and partly through the efforts of others, that he has the necessary qualifications.

Mr. STAPLES. He is a graduate of that notorious class of the Dominion elections of 1904, the Leach class. There were Leach, Ayotte, Ingram and Kneeham, all of whom did great work in disfranchising the electors of Manitoba. And every one of these men, very shortly after the elections, was taken charge of by the government and given a salary, so that they 'each of them' is drawing from the government from $1,200 to $4,000 a year. It is evident that Leach was the principal director and tutor of the class, for he is given the largest salary. According to the Auditor General's Report, he draws somewhere in the neighbourhood of $4,000. I am of opinion—and I think members of the House generally will agree with me—that these men were well rewarded for their great work in the elections of 1904.

Mr. OLIVER. If this gentleman has done so much in disfranchising the Conservative electors of Manitoba, I fancy the hon. gentleman (Mr. Staples) will be well satisfied to have him located in Montana, and will consider it cheap at the price when we pay him a salary of only $900 a year.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Will the minister bring down the papers I asked for as to the distribution of provisions in Gimli?

Mr. ALCORN. While the minister is looking for these papers, I would draw his attention to another of the class referred to by my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples), and even more successful in that particular line of work—W. T. R. Preston. I would refer the hon. minister to page L—23 of the Auditor General's Report, where he will find it stated that Mr. Preston was paid $1,127. Where is Mr. Preston now, if in the employ of the government, what is his title and what are his duties? And can the minister say what success he has in the performance of those duties?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Preston is not in the employ of the Department of the Interior, so I am hardly in a position to give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Alcorn) the information he desires. I understand, from reports which are as open to my hon. friend as to myself, that Mr. Preston is in the employ of the Department of Trade and Commerce as a commercial agent on the Asiatic coast of the Pacific. He was quite recently in Japan, but the latest I have heard in regard to him was that he was in either Corea or China, making a trip in the interests of Canadian trade. While not able to answer with authority, the information I have is that Mr. Preston has done good work in the promotion of Canadian trade with China, Corea and Japan.

Mr. ALCORN. I have seen in the newspapers statements somewhat similar to those made by the minister, but I was in hopes that the minister would be able to tell us precisely what Mr. Preston was doing for the large salary he commands at the hands of this government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He must be in Corea. I see the Japanese have sent a large army there.

Mr. OLIVER. I have here the file covering the report asked for by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche). I will send it to him, but I would ask him not to consider it as a return laid on the table of the House, because I desire to keep it on the file in the department. I would like, however, to read the report of Mr. Walker made when his attention was drawn to the extract from the Selkirk 'Herald,' which my hon. friend read here last night. Under date of May 16, he says :

With reference to the inclosed extract from the Selkirk 'Record' of April 25, in which it is implied, if not actually expressed that the Immigration Department has provided relief to settlers at Gimli, with a view of influencing these people politically.

I beg to say in reply that I am entirely responsible for the relief sent to the Galicians and other foreign settlers in the Gimli district, in townships 18, 19 and 20, ranges 2 and 3 east. That I have not been influenced in the slightest degree by any political circumstances, that as a matter of fact, I have no knowledge of the political leanings of the persons referred to, nor do I even know the name of the member of parliament, nor the political complexion of the member of parliament, who represents that district. Such action as I have taken has been done solely in the interests of humanity and in the interests of the successful settlement of that district. It seems to me to be extremely unkind, as I know it is altogether untrue, to add to the sufferings of these unfortunate people, by an accusation of seeking or obtaining help of this character without good reason.

I inclose herewith copies of correspondence relating to this relief, from which you will observe:

That a deputation of people petitioned the local land agent of the district for urgent help.

That the people so petitioning were not speaking for themselves, but for their neighbours, whom they described as almost starving.

That a deputation of these people, aided in their transportation by the railway company, appeared at my office, and appealed personally for succor for their starving wives and children.

That John Lusted, a forest ranger, who lives in the locality, of his own initiative, wrote on the 12th March, among other things: 'There is a great destitution and almost starvation amongst the foreign settlers in that locality' and 'I have found places where people are almost on the verge of starvation, having been two or three days without bread or flour to bake it—immediate relief is necessary.'

That upon such urgent representations as this, I ordered on March 6 (see letter No. 1) Officer Abrahamson to proceed to the seat of the destitution, examine the matter carefully and closely, and report without delay.

On March 11 (see letter No. 2) I wrote Officer Abrahamson to remain and give his personal attention to this relief business. To investigate personally, each and every case, to report on each and every case and see that relief was given only to the most needy ones.

I inclose copy of his letter to me (see letter 3) in which he informs me that destitution of a severe character prevailed, not only among those whom he was sent to relieve, but others were coming and begging to him with the same cry for help.

On the 14th March I reported the circumstances to you (letter 4 herewith, being copy of my communication).

The shocking condition of destitution, verging upon absolute starvation, I found extended to altogether about 138 families in that neighbourhood.

In order to overtake the work satisfactorily, inquiring most rigidly into the merits of each case and to see that personal inspection was made before relief was given, I sent Officer Harvey to assist in the work.

In order further to satisfy myself that the needs of these people were really as serious as my information seemed to convey, I specially despatched Assistant Commissioner Gelley to look over the ground. He verified the reports of my officers, and to assist me in determining the amount and character of the assistance required. Assistant Commissioner Gelley fully bore out and confirmed the report of destitution.

I inclose herewith copy of the joint report of Officers Abrahamson and Harvey as to the work they have done, the number of cases relieved and the character of the relief given. In addition to this, 85 families in the same neighbourhood required assistance. Some of those helped were Swedish and other German settlers. I inclose copy of report by Officer Abrahamson on this last distribution.

In this very necessary work of distribution no help was given excepting what was urgently needed; no help was given excepting what was earnestly asked for; no help was given where the officers had not already satisfied themselves that it was necessary, and no help was offered any one who refused it. Liens were taken in the usual way, and only necessaries, such as flour, sugar and a little tea or coffee were given in any case.

It is regrettable that the crop conditions of last year should have placed these people in such an unfortunate and unenviable position, and it is equally regrettable that irresponsible writers, for what purpose I do not know, should seek to throw discredit upon efforts made to relieve their very serious and destitute condition.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Were these amongst the new arrivals?

Mr. OLIVER. Of that year and of the preceding year, that is to say, they were people who had come out and settled in a new country, and had not been able to get themselves well established before the bad season put them out of business so to speak.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Was assistance given to any but homesteaders?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. ALCORN. On page L—14 of the Auditor General's Report, under the heading, 'Superintendent's Office, Ottawa,' I notice that a number of men are apparently employed by the department at $4 a day and their travelling expenses. For instance:

H. Charlebois, 103 days at $4; board and lodging, $227; pullman, $124; bus fares, $8; livery, $3; total, $741.70.

J. O. Cowan, 102 days at $4; board and lodging, $264; pullman, $80; car fares, $4.80; care and board of immigrants, $7.50; telegrams, 50 cents; total, $649.75.

K. J. Henry, board and lodgings and horse feed, $204.35; boat fares and meals, $7.10; cabs and livery, $347.75; railway and boat fares, $16.45; sleepers and parlour car, $25.65; small items, $1.07; total, $716.62.

G. A. Johnston, 91 days at $4; board and lodgings, $262.60; sleepers and parlour car, $119; street car and cabs, $4.75; telegrams, $1.25; total, $733.60.

What work were these men engaged in, and how did they come to expend these large sums in travelling expenses?

Mr. OLIVER. Some of the names mentioned by the hon. gentlemen are of men who were employed in accompanying immigrant trains from Ottawa to Winnipeg. It was thought advisable that a government officer should be on board the train to look after the immigrants and to see that things were kept right. At present we do not employ any one in that service. These men were employed by the trip and paid by the day, going and returning, and given their expenses. Mr. Henry is an inspector of immigrant children. We have an arrangement with the British government whereby there is an inspection of children sent out under the auspices of boards of guardians. When they come out to Canada they are placed with farmers who desire to have them, and they are inspected yearly at the expense of the British government. We employ the inspector and pay him, and the British government recoup to us the expenditure.

Mr. ALCORN. Are these men constantly in the employ of the government, or are they engaged to make these special trips only?

Mr. OLIVER. The inspectors of immigrant children are employed by the year, but the men who were employed on the train whose names the hon. gentleman read, were only employed by the trip.

Mr. ALCORN. What was the necessity for their returning in Pullman cars?

Mr. OLIVER. In going to Winnipeg they travelled with the immigrants, and on their return there seems to be no reason why they should not travel comfortably.

Mr. HERRON. They seem to have charged more for travelling than an ordinary traveller who pays his own way.

Mr. OLIVER. We are not now employing men in that service.

Mr. HERRON. Did these men produce vouchers for their expenses, those who travelled in parlour cars, or did the government pay the bill of every man as he put it in?

Mr. OLIVER. They were required to produce vouchers.

Winnipeg and St. Boniface hospitals, $8,000.

Mr. STAPLES. I think that item is one that might be increased. There is no doubt that the hospitals in the city of Winnipeg are taxed heavily by the class of immigrants that are coming to this country. They are people with small means, and if they fall sick when they get here, they have to be placed in a hospital and well cared for. During the first session of this parliament I read to this House a couple of resolutions from the hospital board of the city of Winnipeg calling upon this government for a larger appropriation. At that time I believe only about $2,600 was given, and I am glad to know that the government have increased it. The hospital is carrying on a good class of work and is looking after a class of immigrants coming from the continent who would have no other protection. I would suggest that the item might be still further increased.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I would like to emphasize what my friend (Mr. Staples) has said, especially in regard to the Winnipeg hospital. It is one of the most deserving institutions in Canada. I think it is at present the largest hospital in Canada. I do not remember the proportion of foreign patients to the whole number admitted, but I believe they are in a large majority. I was through the institution a month ago and speaking to some of the head men in charge, and while they were grateful for the increased grant given them, still they felt they were not getting justice. It is a very useful institution and to-day they have not sufficient accommodation to admit all the patients desiring relief. They wish to extend the hospital if they can secure the necessary aid, and I think, if the government could see its way clear to make a more liberal allowance, it would be appreciated.

Mr. OLIVER. I am very glaid to hear the hon. gentleman speak so highly of the hospital and of the increased grant. I was successful in getting the grant doubled last year, and I am very glad that that action is approved by gentlemen representing constituencies in the province of Manitoba. I shall be glad to use my endeavours to still further increase it, because I fully appreciate the importance of the hospital, especially located as it is at the gateway of that country, at the stopping point of all immigrants from which they diverge in all directions. It makes the claims upon the Winnipeg hospital no doubt heavier than they otherwise would be. At the same time there are claims for hospital aid all over the Northwest, which are well founded, although not as large as those of the Winnipeg hospital. While doing what we can for the Winnipeg hospital we must not do so much for it as to at all detract from the other hospitals.

Mr. STAPLES. What other hospitals receive grants from the Dominion government?

Mr. OLIVER. The following general hospitals: Moosomin, Brandon, Edmonton, Dauphin, Medicine Hat, Calgary, Battleford, the Holy Cross, Calgary; the Presbyterian hospital, Moosejaw; St. Paul's hospital, Saskatoon. These are aided according to the immigrant patients treated, so that of course the aid varies from year to year. I have not a statement before me, but we paid the difference between the provincial grant, whatever it may be, and one dollar a day for non-paying patients.

Mr. LAKE. Did the government find it necessary to give special aid during the past winter to any settlers? For instance what has been done in different parts of Saskatchewan?

Mr. OLIVER. The only case occurring in Saskatchewan was at or near Lipton on the Kirkella branch. We received a letter from the Rev. W. E. Wallace, of Strasburg, stating that there was a somewhat unfortunate condition of affairs there. We made inquiry and by telegraph received a confirmation of that information from our sub-lands agent. We sent an officer, Mr. Wolf, from Winnipeg, to examine into the case and he reported that there was considerable necessity there. We then took measures to relieve it, much of the same nature as those mentioned in the case of Gimli and took liens on the land.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE.

Mr. LAKE. Were special stores selected to supply these settlers, or were they allowed to buy from their own business men, so as to get the goods at the best prices?

Mr. OLIVER. I think an arrangement was made with one of the leading business men in the neighbourhood for the supply of the goods upon orders. Mr. Walker's report says that the majority, but not all of the orders, were made upon Messrs. Hasting and McLaughlin. He states that he has no personal knowledge of these gentlemen except that they appear to be reputable business men conducting a good business in the locality, and that so far as he can see their prices are not unreasonable. They were charging $2.50 and $3 a sack for flour. He says that had time and circumstances permitted the flour might have been purchased by the carload and sent from Winnipeg which would have been cheaper, but the necessities of the case required immediate relief.

Mr. LAKE. Were they allowed to purchase other necessities besides flour?

Mr. OLIVER. I have here a list of the articles purchased by each settler. The first one purchased five sacks of flour, 50 pounds of sugar. The next purchased 14 sacks of flour, 25 pounds of pork, 14 pounds of sugar, 50 pounds of oatmeal, one pound of salt. Another one purchased 5 sacks of flour, 59 pounds of sugar, 25 pounds of beans, 25 pounds rice, &c.

Mr. LAKE. If you invited competition among local storekeepers you would get more reasonable prices. Have there been complaints of excessive prices having been charged?

Mr. OLIVER. No. I will send over a list of the articles and the prcies to my hon. friend.

Mr. LAKE. Was any special inspection made of the settlers living northwest of Moosejaw ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am informed we did not have any distribution east of the South Saskatchewan. That was done west of South Saskatchewan. Owing to the severity of the winter the year before last, $30,000 was voted for the relief of settlers who lived far from fuel and other facilities. This last fall fearing a repetition of the year before, we caused a pretty thorough inspection to be made by the homestead inspectors and immigration officers, and they reported that there was no necessity for any special relief in that region. If any was given it would be given by the mounted police.

Mr. LAKE. How many officers were employed in making the inspection?

Mr. OLIVER. Dodds, homestead inspector, Swift Current; Braun, immigration officer, Saskatoon; Ruffel, immigration officer, Moosejaw; Clouston, homestead inspector, Battleford; Roy, homestead inspector, Winnipeg, and one or two others. We tried to cover the district as thoroughly and as quickly as possible before winter set in.

Mr. LAKE. I have been informed that there are districts south of Moosejaw which are closed to all except certain classes of settlers. Is that correct?

Mr. OLIVER. No instructions are given the land officers to refuse entries from any one.

Mr. LAKE. Are they bound to accept the first applicant?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. In some of the townships which have been surveyed south of Moosejaw there has been considerable delay in getting the survey plan out so that entries cannot be given, and in the meantime people have squatted there which is apt to lead to complications, although not serious.

Mr. ALCORN. Does the lien attach to the homestead or to the land, so that if the original homesteader left a subsequent homesteader would be subject to the lien?

Mr. OLIVER. The officer in the department and I do not agree as to that. He says the lien attaches to the land even though the homesteader looses the land, but my impression is that the lien is charged upon the homesteader.

Mr. FOWLER. Why should it not be attached to the land?

Mr. OLIVER. It was the man and not the land who got the loan. If the advance were made to a private person it would attach to the land.

Mr. FOWLER. And why not in the case of the Crown?

Mr. OLIVER. Because the government is the owner of the land whether the homesteader is there or not.

Mr. FOWLER. The government has expended nothing on account of that homestead and it gives it as a free gift to the homesteader. In order that he may acquire a home the government makes certain advances to him which it charges as a lien against the homestead. If the homesteader is unable to pay all you have to do is to provide that the next homesteader shall take the land subject to the lien. If that is not the law it should be the law.

Mr. ALCORN. In my opinion it would be extremely unfair that a succeeding homesteader should be asked to pay a debt incurred by his predecessor.

Mr. OLIVER. I know that men who became indebted for advances many years ago were not afterwards personally relieved from liability under the lien they gave.

Mr. FOWLER. If you can recover it from him all right, but otherwise it should attach to the homestead. If the subsequent homesteader prefers to take that particular land with the lien on it he can do so, but otherwise he can go somewhere else, and I do not see any hardship in it. I think the government should have a lien and should enforce the lien.

Mr. LAKE. Considerable advances have been made to immigrants for their maintenance after their arrival here. What progress has been made in recovering those advances?

Mr. OLIVER. The following is the statement with regard to that:

Statement of repayments on account of relief advances from July 1, 1901, to March 31, 1908:

Fiscal year.	Amount.
1901-1902	$ 338 99
1902-1903	459 37
1903-1904	1,178 34
1904-1905	1,411 57
1905-1906	2,418 34
1906-1907 (9 months)	1,992 27
1907-1908	2,554 44
Total	$10,353 32

We do not press for the payment of the lien. As my hon. friends who have followed the amendments to the Lands Act will know, we even issue a patent to the homesteader without collecting the amount of the lien; but if he should transfer that homestead, then in order to give a clear title he has to pay us the amount of the lien.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you record the lien?

Mr. OLIVER. The lien is endorsed on the patent, so that it is an absolute security and we are not in danger of losing the money. When the settler makes a transfer, the person to whom he sells sees that we are paid.

Mr. FOWLER. What interest do you charge on the advance?

Mr. OLIVER. Five per cent after the first year; nothing in the first year.

Mr. STAPLES. I understood the minister last night to promise to bring down the information I asked for regarding the persons who received seed grain in Manitoba, and the districts in which it was given. Has the minister been able to get that information?

Mr. OLIVER. I have a list of the names and the acreage which I will give to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. I can see how this system of advancing money to settlers can be made very advantageous to the government in the way of getting votes. It gives the government considerable control over these new settlers in a country where interest on money borrowed from private persons is from eight to ten per cent, if they can borrow from the government at five per cent. It is quite an inducement to them to vote right, and I have no doubt that the government uses that lever to obtain the votes of these new settlers. With that great advantage in their favour, I should think they would not require this Manitoba Election Bill which works along the same line.

Mr. OLIVER. I can only say that the enormous sum we asked parliament for a little while ago for the distribution of seed grain was not asked, as my hon. friend knows, until the pressure of necessity became so great that it was dangerous to postpone the asking and the getting of it longer. We certainly were not acting hurriedly in that case. My experience is that the advantage is not at all as my hon. friend thinks it is. We really suffer more from jealousy and misunderstanding than we gain from the advances.

Mr. ALCORN. It occurs to me that, if the government are sincere in making these grants in order to meet the necessities of the settlers, the better plan would be to make them as absolute gifts. The waste and mismanagement attendant on the distribution, with the vast distances at which it is made, the character of the people in whose hands the matter rests, and the great expense and work entailed upon the government in keeping a record and in attending to recover the debts, seem to me to be altogether out of proportion to the amount expended.

Mr. OLIVER. The principle which has been followed ever since the first settlement of Manitoba, which occurred under very unfavourable circumstances, which rendered it necessary for the government to supply seed grain to the settlers, has been the principle that any advance should not be a free gift, but should be made on the understanding that it should be repaid. The belief was that to make it a free gift would tend to pauperize those who received it, and that it was very much better to make it as a business proposition.

Dominion lands, chargeable to capital—surveys, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, including $18,000 for irrigation surveys, &c., $800,000.

Mr. FOWLER. We would like to have an explanation of this large item.

Mr. OLIVER. The proposal is to expend this amount as follows. We desire to employ four parties for the survey of the base lines of Saskatchewan and Alberta at $12,500 each. We desire to have one party for the survey of a block of 3,500,000 acres in the Peace River district at a cost of $12,500. That is an area of land in British Columbia adjoining the Alberta boundary, the rights in which are handed over to the Dominion government by British Columbia in connection with the subsidy. One party is out surveying the Yukon and British Columbia boundary. Five parties for subdivision surveys in Peace River district, $12,000. Three parties for subdivision surveys in southern Alberta $8,000. Five parties for miscellaneous surveys $8,000. Three parties, subdivision surveys in British Columbia, $8,0000.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that in connection with timber limits ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, we make the same township survey in British Columbia in the railway belt that we do outside. The timber limit survey is made independently of the township survey. Hitherto such surveys were at the expense of the limit holders, but under the new regulations we make them.

Mr. FOWLER. Will that apply to surveys already made ?

Mr. OLIVER. All timber limits held under the old regulations have to be surveyed by the owners at their expense. Under the new regulations, they will be surveyed by the government before they are put up for sale.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the purchaser have to pay the cost of the survey ?

Mr. OLIVER. The government will get out of the purchaser the price and the cost of the survey will be charged against that.

Mr. FOWLER. It is expected that the tenders will include the cost of the survey?

Mr. OLIVER. At present the limit holder has to pay for the survey, so it comes to the same thing.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the average cost per mile of surveying townships in British Columbia in the railway belt ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think I can give that because that work is done on daily pay and the difference is very great between one time and another.

Mr. FOWLER. Has all the railway belt in British Columbia been surveyed into townships ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. FOWLER. In case the base line of the township would be the line of the timber limit, would not the government survey that ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. The government would pay the cost of surveying that line, which would be one line of the timber limit and at the same time the township line ?

Mr. OLIVER. We would have to agree beforehand to accept it from the private owner of the timber limit. We would have to agree with him to accept it before it was done. If he did it and then came and asked us to accept, we would not.

Mr. FOWLER. You would want to have the choice of your own surveyor ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Has there been any change in the regulations lately with regard to the disposal of land ? In former years when certain lands were not open to homestead entry, the land office would accept applications and keep them on file. Then when the lands were thrown open for entry, the first applicant would have priority. I understand there has been a change made recently, if not in the Act, in the regulations or the operation of them, according to which the applicant who first appears in person at the land office will have the priority.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is correct. It was the practice, up to a year or so ago, to hold all applications against lands not then open for entry, and when the land was open for entry, those applications were dealt with in order of priority. But we found that while theoretically that system was all right it did not work satisfactorily in practice. A great deal of the complaints made of favouritism and undue preference given to political friends by departmental officials arose from that system. Therefore at a certain date an order was issued that applications made for land, not then available, would have no standing in priority. It was only after the land became available that applications were considered and stood in the order of priority. That is printed in the regulations we issue now.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I would like to ask the minister again a question which I put to him last session. I then asked the minister what extent, if any, has the government or any department thereof carried on investigations in the western provinces bearing upon the measurements of streams and the conservation of water supplies for irrigation and other purposes by the reservation and withdrawal from sale and settlement of natural reservoir sites. The minister said he had three gentlemen in the field making these investigations. Later on I asked the question again and he said these men had not made any report. Have they made any report yet and could the hon. gentleman give us the substance of what they have reported ? The minister will remember that this question came up at the convention held in southern Alberta, at which a number of people were present greatly interested in this question. One of the officers of the department, Mr. Campbell, attended that convention. What information has the hon. minister to give us regarding what these gentlemen have found and what the government intend doing ?

Mr. OLIVER. Many years ago a general survey of the irrigation country was undertaken by the government of that day. In the course of that survey it seemed fit to make a number of reservations of water reservoirs or sites. Since then it has turned out that several of these reservoir sites were not of value for the purpose and they have been opened for settlement. At present our staff is employed rather in dealing with applications for the immediate operation of irrigation than in outlining a scheme or system of irrigation applicable to the whole country, such as would give the hon. gentleman the information he desires. While it is their duty to get such information as they may of the nature he mentions, so far the more pressing duty of meeting the demands of actual irrigationists have been such as to prevent their doing anything on a considerable scale in that way.

Mr. Campbell, the head of the irrigation branch, has submitted a report to me in which he draws attention to the fact which I have just stated, that the staff we have employed is not sufficient to cover the points mentioned which it is desirable to cover. He draws attention to the necessity of arriving at an accurate knowledge of the available flow of water for irrigation purposes in that country by a thorough gauging of the streams. This is something which has to cover a number of years in order to be of value. Mr. Campbell also draws attention to the desirability of making a more careful examination of the country with a view to reservoir sites. But to cover this work thoroughly and well requires more men than we have in employment at present; and, at a later day, I may have to ask parliament for an increased appropriation to cover that ground and collect information such as my hon. friend wishes to have, which, certainly, is very desirable.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Where can we get the information that has been obtained up to the present time? The minister told me on March 11, 1907 :

> One party was occupied in gauging the rivers and large streams to determine the flow of water therein and in obtaining general information for the hydrograhic branch. The two other parties were employed in gauging the smaller creeks in addition and in inspecting works in connection with irrigation schemes.

Can the minister refer me to the place where the information already gained is to be found?

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid that the report of the Irrigation Commissioner is not printed yet, but——

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Will it be printed?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that it is being printed. This report will go into the question with a fullness not possible in the general report of the Department of the Interior and will be printed separately. It will give all the information that we have available on the subject. I have not that information at hand. As I have said already, our staff has not been sufficient to go into the side of the question of which the hon. gentleman speaks as fully as is entirely desirable. In the answer to the question I gave, I mentioned that it was a part of their duty to secure such information as he asks for. That is true, but it is also true that, owing to the pressure upon their time of the duties necessary to meet the requirements of irrigation schemes under way or immediately in prospect was so great that they were not able to give satisfactory attention to the other side of the question.

Mr. STANFIELD. Referring to the Auditor General's Report, page L—91. I find that the amount of $8,547.09 is given as receipt from Rocky Mountains park. Is that the total of these receipts?

Mr. OLIVER. The revenue from Rocky Mountain park for the twelve months ending June 30, 1907, was $21,144.04.

Mr. STANFIELD. Where is that shown in the hon. gentleman's report?

Mr. OLIVER. The revenue mentioned at page L—91 of the Auditor General's Report is the total revenue except that from coal lands. The amount derived from coal mined in the park would be in addition to that. Of course, it appears elsewhere.

Mr. STAPLES. A few moments ago the minister was explaining the government's policy in regard to certain lands they were throwing open for homesteads. I desire to call attention to a claim that was sent to me by a gentleman living north of Cypress river in Manitoba. I brought his wishes before the department and I understand that he has been writing letters to the department himself. I understand that this land has been thrown open for homestead, and I would like to know the position in which it stands. This gentleman is Mr. Alex. Campbell, range 12, township 10—I think that is the location, though I am not quite sure. No doubt the minister will know in what position the land is at the present time. Mr. Campbell is a man who settled north of the village of Cypress river a number of years ago. He has raised a large family under a great deal of hardship, and has not been able to give his family such an education as he would like. He is very anxious to get this quarter section for two sons who are now of age. He has been making application in various ways, and has asked the government to promise him that when they threw the land open they would give him first consideration. Can the minister tell me whether Mr. Campbell has got those quarter sections; and if he has not, in what position does he stand?

Mr. OLIVER. What was the nature of the reservation on the quarter-section?

Mr. STAPLES. It was a timber reservation, but the timber has been burnt off for a number of years.

Mr. OLIVER. Speaking generally, the rule we follow is that when we decide to withdraw a reservation such as that, ten days notice is posted up in the land office, and the first applicant for it after the end of the ten days gets the land. Mr. Campbell's application made while the land was still under reservation, would not be considered as giving him priority of right.

Mr. STAPLES. Under these circumstances I would come to the conclusion that Mr. Campbell has not much chance of securing those particular quarter-sections, because they are a considerable distance from a well-settled district, and he has to make application in the Brandon office. From the correspondence I have seen between him and the department, I think he has not been fairly treated, if the government have allowed another person to step in and get these particular homesteads. No doubt the minister could find out for me whether applications have been made for these particular quarter-sections; perhaps he has the information now.

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the information at present, but if the hon. gentleman is willing to wait, I will take the name and location and give him the information at a later date.

Mr. STAPLES. I am sorry I cannot give the location of the particular quarter-sections. They are in township 9, range 12, I think.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Campbell's own land is in township 9.

Mr. STAPLES. It is quite close to Mr. Campbell's own land.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The Minister of the Interior referred to certain difficulties incident to allowing applications for land where the land has not been thrown open. But he must admit that under the present system there is a great deal of room for collusion between the land agent and friends of his, or between the homestead inspector, who knows when the lands will be thrown open and who could easily give the tip to some of his own friends. This could be done, and I think is done at the present time. The present system, to be impartial, should be accompanied by the greatest publicity. Every facility should be afforded the public of knowing the exact date when the lands will be thrown open. Numerous complaints have come to me with reference to this practice. About a week ago, a letter was sent from Edran's post office, Manitoba, to Mr. W. W. Cory, Deputy Minister of the Interior. It is as follows:

Dr. Roche, M.P., has kindly sent to me your letter to him——

I had some communication with the department on behalf of this correspondent.

—re my application for northeast quarter-section 34, township 12, range 13, dated April 28, 1908. Now in the latter part of your letter to him you say that 'there does not appear to be any ground for complaint from Mr. Seaman insofar as the land in question is concerned.' Now I entirely dissent from this statement. What are the facts? Some three or four years ago I, with a number of others, applied for northeast quarter section 34, township 12, range 13. We were informed that the land was not open for homestead entry, but as soon as it was, we would be notified. Now the former policy of your department was that applicants were given a chance to enter according to priority of their application. About a year ago I received a letter on a Friday evening from the land agent that the land was opened for entry, and if I desired to enter I was to apply. The following morning at 10.30 I phoned to the Brandon agent and asked to be permitted to make entry by agent living there, as was formerly the practice, but was surprised to be told by him that Mr. Leslie Sanderson had already entered for this land. Now, Mr. Sanderson had never applied for this land before, and he got private information that it was open for entry before my letter arrived. Now I am aware of the fact that this homestead was given for political services rendered. This land was promised to another man during the last Dominion election, and subsequently he was requested to give up his claim to the fulfilment of the promise, with the promise of a better homestead in another district. He gave up his claim and got another homestead in another place ahead of 17 applicants who had previously applied, whereas he had not previously applied. They were all notified by letter to appear at the land office to enter, but the chosen individual got private information over the telephone, and the individual who dickered in these homesteads was a Liberal member of parliament who boasted that he had the saying of who should get the homesteads. Now I am an Englishman by birth, and I have too much fight in me to tamely submit to this injustice without protest, and for every vote that the favoured individual got, I will get a dozen for the opposition side. This gross political partiality shall cut two ways. Had one of those got the homestead that had made prior application to myself, it would have been right and proper, and I would not have said a word. But the changing of the regulations so that the first person appearing at the land office with his $10 gets the entry, permits private information to be given to favoured individuals, and is an exactly similar case to those Burrows timber deals that we hear so much about. I had hopes of better and fairer play from Hon. Mr. Oliver's administration, but am disappointed. Will you please show Hon. Mr. Oliver this letter, and by so doing you will oblige,

Yours truly,
TOM SEAMAN.

It would appear from this letter that this correspondent had, along with others, applied for this particular portion of land before it was thrown open for entry. He got word by a letter from Brandon that the land would be open on a certain date, and the next morning he 'phoned in and found there was a prior entry, that a gentleman had appeared in person and secured the entry, notwithstanding that he had not been amongst the previous applicants. This is only one of similar complaints which I have had in reference to land in other districts. Certainly this particular regulation may be abused and is being abused by those who have knowledge of when the land will be thrown open. The minister will remember that certain lands taken out of the Riding Mountain timber reserve were advertised publicly as about to be thrown open and scores went to the Dauphin land office only to be told that the order had been cancelled and the lands would not be thrown open. Up to the present they have not been thrown open, but squatters have been permitted to go in there and have been told by inspectors that their rights will be protected. For instance in township 18, range 19, there are quite a number of settlers located not only on the even, but on the odd-numbered sections, and they say they have paid their money into the Dauphin land office, although they have not yet received their certificates. I have not had an authoritative statement from the minister as to whether these squatters will receive priority when they go on homesteads.

Mr. OLIVER. The only knowledge I have of settlers being permitted to occupy these lands which were taken out of the original Riding Mountain reserve is of squatters who were in the reserve as it was originally, squatters whom it was necessary to get out of the reserve in order that the purpose of the Act of parliament might be made effective. It may be fairly argued that the people who went and settled on the land when it was under reservation had no right and could be and should be ejected, but I submit it would not be sound public policy to act in that manner except as a last resort. Consequently in getting the settlers out of the reserve as established by Act of parliament I have offered to these people a priority of choice in the lands originally reserved but cut out of the reserve by the delimitation laid down in the Act of parliament. We think that is fair and reasonable. If any other people are going in and squatting there they are doing it without permission from us and I cannot guarantee them any protection.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). If what the minister says is correct, that those people who were located as squatters on the reserve are compelled to move out, I agree they should have the land, but are they to be confined to a quarter-section or a half-section of land? Around Clearwater lake, a colony of halfbreeds located as squatters. There might be ten families on one quarter-section. Does the minister think that each family should have a quarter-section in that part of the reserve? The minister's predecessor said that these people should not be looked on as farmers. Is it the intention of the minister to allow that class of settlers to have each the full amount of land ?

Mr. OLIVER. The squatters at Clearwater lake are squatters just as are the other people to whom we have given the privilege I have mentioned. These people have rights that we cannot ignore. I was speaking of people who have no legal right. They may be settled too close together to allow each one a quarter-section, but certainly the others, although far enough apart to have a quarter-section, were not occupying a quarter-section. I have reason to believe that a settlement with these settlers is now being arranged and I would not wish to be committed in the House to any serious or lengthy discussion in regard to them until we get the settlement. I am very anxious to get them out of the reserve and to carry out the will of parliament, and I am not inclined to allow anything that is not of vital importance to stand in the way of getting the lands cleared as parliament, I believe, desires they shall be cleared.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I am well aware that many of these settlers have been notified to vacate their premises on the reserve, but they have been notified so often that they look on it as a farce and have not the slightest intention of leaving. They say they will not leave and do not think the government have power or authority to expel them. I think the minister will have considerable difficulty in ridding the reserve of a considerable number of these squatters. I have here a letter from a gentleman who wished to take up land in one of the townships taken from the reserve. He says :

People are living on the lands in this township and say they have their entries in the Dauphin lands office; yet there has been no amendment in the Lands Act. Please state to me what this is? They are on the odd-numbered sections as well.

It would appear that a number of settlers are going in there notwithstanding the fact that it has not been opened for settlement. Can the minister state that he has any idea as to when those lands will be thrown open to homestead entries ?

Mr. OLIVER. We are using those lands as an assistance in clearing settlers out of the Riding Mountain reserve and as soon as we can clear them out or find that we cannot move them out the lands will be at once thrown open. But we think it will be sound public policy to continue the departmental reservation placed upon them many years ago with a view of assisting us in the work which as my hon. friend has declared, is certainly one of exceeding difficulty in getting the squatters out of the reserve. We cannot put the lands to any better use for the time being.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). What publicity will be given about the throwing open to these lands ?

Mr. OLIVER. The same publicity as was given to the intention to throw them open on a former occasion. It will be thoroughly advertised that they will be open on a certain day as in the case of the Doukhobor reserve.

Mr. HERRON. A number of settlers have squatted on the odd numbered sections in different parts of the country and particularly in southern Alberta. Has the minister any policy with regard to the protection of those people who have lived on the odd sections and made improvements? Some of them have applied to the land office for entries but I do not suppose they were accepted.

Mr. OLIVER. It is provided in the Land Bill now before the House that the odd numbered sections shall be open for settlement, but until parliament has declared its will on that point I have no policy at all. The odd numbered sections are under reservation and people who go on reserved lands go at their own risk.

Mr. AMES. Has the survey been completed of the sixteen townships which by order in council of the 17th of January, 1907, were reserved in the Peace River district for the Peace River Colonization and Land Development Company ?

Mr. OLIVER. Some six townships or parts of townships were surveyed some years ago.

Mr. AMES. Has there been any survey recently or will there be one this year?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. AMES. Has the minister any definite information from the surveys as to the agricultural character of the land in these sixteen townships ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are surveyors' notes made when the lines were drawn, but I do not consider these notes made for a different purpose, to be reliable information as to the character of the country.

Mr. AMES. Does not the surveyor generally report on the character of the soil, water, and timber ?

Mr. OLIVER. I believe he does but he is there to make money by running survey lines and he is under no responsibility as to the accuracy of any report he may make on the character of the country. One report might be accurate where another would be inaccurate so that I would not place absolute dependence upon the surveyors' notes as to the character of the land.

Mr. AMES. Is the government taking any steps to secure information as to the agricultural possibilities of these particular sixteen townships ?

Mr. OLIVER. Not at the present time.

Mr. AMES. How does the government intend to deal with that company if they are not in possession of accurate information of the character I have mentioned ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that such information has any particular bearing on the dealing of the government with the company. An agreement was entered into providing that under certain circumstances certain things would be done. The question at issue between the company and the government is : Has the company done these things ? If that is settled in favour of the company there is no difference between us ; if it is settled against the company the government will take such action as the circumstances require.

Mr. AMES. Has the government arrived at any conclusion as to whether they will continue this arrangement ?

Mr. OLIVER. The government has notified the company that in its opinion the terms of the agreement have not been fulfilled, and the matter is under adjustment.

Mr. AMES. When was that notification served on the company ?

Mr. OLIVER. Three months ago.

Mr. AMES. How long were they given to show that the concession should not be cancelled ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know there was any definite time stated. We are awaiting their statement of their position. They demand further time to make their defence on account of the absence of some of their leading men and other causes.

Mr. AMES. The minister stated that knowledge as to the character of that land from an agricultural standpoint had no bearing on the case. A return was brought down to the House not long ago and that, and other information available ought to convince the minister that it would be desirable for the government to be in possession of definite information as to the agricultural possibilities of this concession. This concession was first granted in 1900 and the time for fulfilling the obligations of the company was extended by a subsequent order in council of the 8th of July, 1904, requiring them to locate on the said tract within three years from the first of October, 1904, no less than fifty settlers. I wish to ask whether on the 1st of October, 1907, there had been filed with the department satisfactory evidence that fifty settlers had been located in accordance with the terms of the order in council of 1904.

Mr. OLIVER. Our contention is that there has not.

Mr. AMES. Probably the minister is aware of the statements made in the Edmonton newspapers and some of the American newspapers, to the effect that the commendable purpose for which the company was organized in the first place, viz.: to locate expatriated Canadians on these lands is not being carried out ; and that apparently the company is permitting an American real estate company to exploit their concession. That company is said to be the Kent Realty Company—Mr. Kent being connected with the original company—and last year it took up a party to this concession who underwent great hardships in getting there. When the party found themselves on the concession, they were told that the reason they were brought out was in order that they might condemn the particular sixteen sections as unfit for settlement, in order that they might be exchanged by the company for better sections. If this company is not really fulfilling the purpose for which it secured the concession, but is farming it out to an American syndicate operating for purely speculative purposes, the government should take that into consideration. The minister will see why I asked my question in the first place. It was this : what information is in the department as to the agricultural character of these sixteen sections ? If these are good lands, naturally the government will say these are the sections you are entitled to and no others. If they are absolutely unfit for settlement the question will be whether the government will allow the company to exchange them for other sections. In settling these questions it seems to me that the government will have to know something about the character of that country. Apart from that, the government should see that the bona fides of the company is lived up to. I would like to know whether the articles in these papers have been taken notice of by the government, and if so what the government intend to do with reference to this transaction.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to the question of the character of the land, I have to hold to the first position, that it has nothing to do with the case. The company may have conceived a desire to exchange these particular sixteen townships for some other sixteen townships, but the government has nothing to do with that. It is no part of the agreement between the company and the government that under certain conditions as to the quality of these townships, the company would be entitled to exchange them for some other townships. The company are entitled to these townships, not to any others. They are entitled to them on certain conditions. If they fulfil the conditions, they get the land. If they do not fulfil the conditions, to put it in the most favourable light, it is at our discretion whether they get the land or not. As the question is now at issue between the government and the company, I think it would hardly be advisable on my part to state in detail to the House the attitude and the intention of the government. I think it would be better to leave the elaboration of these particulars till after the matter has reached a conclusion. As I have already stated, our attitude is that the company have not fulfilled their agreement. It may be that they will be able to show that they have made a reasonable attempt to fulfil it, and are entitled to some consideration or leniency on that account. That is a matter to be considered. I can hardly be called upon to say what conclusion we may reach upon evidence which has not yet been furnished to us.

Mr. AMES. The government, as I understand from a return which was brought down a few days ago, on January 4, 1908, notified the president of the company that they would be given thirty days in which to produce satisfactory evidence of their intention to carry out the agreement. That thirty days expired long ago, and seems to have been extended from time to time. Perhaps the minister will tell us how long he intends to extend the time, and when he expects to come to a definite conclusion in regard to this matter.

Mr. OLIVER. The facts that have been placed before the public indicate that these people have gone to a considerable amount of expense in an attempt at any rate to virtually live up to the conditions of their agreement. I do not know that it is sound administrative policy to ignore that fact when the question is one of the settlement of the country, especially a remote part of it such as that—to consider only the fulfilment of the letter of the agreement if there has been a reasonable attempt to fulfil it. It is, as I have said, a matter for consideration as to what discretion the government will exercise. That is, I think, as far as I can go in the matter. We have not pressed these people unduly. We may have been, in the estimate of my hon. friend, perhaps more lenient than we should have been in bringing the matter to an issue. While I am desirous of seeing that the agreement shall be fulfilled, I am also desirous that people who have made considerable expenditure, as these people have, and have had considerable expectations of benefit to themselves as we have had of benefit to the country, should not be unduly or harshly closed out. However, I can assure my hon. friend that the matter will be brought to an issue, and that the rights of the government will be maintained.

Mr. AMES. The point I particularly wish to bring to the attention of the minister is this, that the order in council of July 27, 1901, bears upon its face the evidence as to what was the motive which actuated the granting of this concession. The motive was to induce certain classes of people who had moved out of Canada to come into Canada again, and also to induce certain people who apparently had the intention of moving away from Canada to come up into that country instead. As this company apparently originated in the province of Quebec, I think there is little doubt that it was the original intention of the promoters to endeavour to induce some people from our province to go into the Peace River section. As far as that was the object, every member of this House will agree that it was a creditable and desirable object; but it would seem as though these people were not living up to that intention, but were farming out their concession—to the Kent Realty Company—who, as the hon. gentleman knows, were largely interested in selling Davidson and McRae's land in the central part of Saskatchewan, and the lands of the Canadian Northern Railway—for the purpose of colonization of an entirely different character and class, which seems to me alters to some extent the attitude of the government towards this company. I would like to ask the minister in taking this matter into consideration, to endeavour to impress on the original concessionaires that the original intention should be carried out as far as possible.

Mr. LAKE. What are the terms of the concession?

Mr. AMES. They get the land for a dollar an acre on condition that they put in fifty settlers prior to October 1, 1907, and within five years one hundred more settlers. Then they can buy a certain portion at a dollar an acre, and ultimately a considerable tract at that price. They can begin by buying one-third of the total area, one-third five years later, and the remainder within ten years at six per cent. I think they can eventually acquire the whole sixteen townships by bringing in the settlers as they agreed to do.

Mr. LAKE. The remarks made by my hon. friend from St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) are certainly worthy of the minister's most serious consideration. It seems to be a very valuable concession, and while the original object is a worthy one, and would be still worthy if carried out, still it will not do to allow this very valuable property to fall into the hands of speculators. I understand the minister to say that he is having five survey parties subdividing in the Peace River country. In what part is he having this subdivision made?

Mr. OLIVER. I said one party for the survey of the fifth meridian to Peace river. That is not on Peace river, but going to it. And one party for surveying a block of 3,500,000 acres in the Peace River district. That is to survey and outline this block of land in British Columbia outside of Alberta, but in the Peace River country. These are all the survey parties I have on this list as being provided for Peace river. We find this year that the demands for surveys to accommodate the new settlers are so immediate and pressing that we cannot spare surveyors to do subdivision surveys in the Peace River district this year.

Mr. LAKE. I must have misunderstood the hon. minister, because I took him down as saying that five parties were doing subdivision work in Peace river and was very much astonished to hear it, knowing the difficulties.

Mr. OLIVER. I have that here, five parties for subdivision surveys in Peace River district, but that is an error. This list was made up at an early date, and our later information is that we cannot afford to send all those parties to Peace river because we need them in the country adjacent to the presently surveyed and settled country.

Mr. LAKE. The minister made some remarks about the surveyors not being required to furnish accurate reports of the country they were surveying. Would he tell us what is the nature of the compact made with those survey parties? I should think that one of the conditions should be that they would give a comparatively accurate account of the character of the country through which they strike their lines.

Mr. OLIVER. The contract surveyor runs the line subdividing the townships into sections. He is paid per mile of line run at certain rates which vary from prairie to scrub and timber. The notes he takes are an indication of the character of the country, so far as they affect the prices he receives for the work. That is information in which he is interested. A contract requiring that he shall report on the general character of the country could not be made effectively because that would be a matter of opinion. As I have said on previous occasions, we consider ourselves well off when we can secure surveyors, whom we can bind down by contract, to run lines as we want them run and give us a fair account of the nature of the work they do. We have sufficient difficulties in securing the surveyors we require for that class of work without insisting on placing further responsibility upon them which we would not have an equal means of enforcing. That is so far as the contract surveyors are concerned. The surveyors running base and meridian lines, who are employed on daily pay, do give some attention to the country through which they run, but their work is so strictly confined to the line of their survey that it has not any very serious value. To overcome that, however, we have now entered upon a system of attaching to the parties running meridian and base lines what might be called explorers, who have special knowledge of the land and its capabilities. Each explorer uses the survey camp as his headquarters, but occupies his time in ranging over the country. His travels radiate from the camp and he turns in his notes every night to the surveyor. In such cases we expect a reliable and fairly full account of the country through which those lines run. Until recently we have not adopted that system. Now that we have adopted it, I think we shall be able to give the information which is so valuable and so much desired.

Mr. LAKE. I suppose that the notes which appear in the Surveyor General's reports must be taken from the reports given by the contract surveyors. It would seem to me that these men, who are digging holes for their surveys and so on, ought to be able to give a very fair statement as to the nature of the soil they go through. All that the minister means is that he does not hold them responsible for an absolutely correct statement of the land through which they pass. But the Surveyor General's reports are based upon the reports of the contract surveyors' reports as to the kind of land they pass through. How much land is under contract to be subdivided during the present season?

Mr. OLIVER. We have under contract survey this year about 250 townships. That is only an estimate.

Mr. LAKE. How many acres would that comprise, about?

Mr. OLIVER. About 600,000 acres.

Mr. LAKE. And what amount of land has been subdivided already up there?

Mr. OLIVER. About 120,000,000 acres.

Mr. AMES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) speaking with reference to the Peace River Colonization Company, I think, misunderstood one point that I was making. He said that if the strict letter of the law was not absolutely fulfilled, it might not affect the settlement. I do not think it is so much the letter as the spirit of the bargain that we are interested in in the case of these concessions. The spirit of the concession was to bring to that north country repatriated Canadians and Canadians from other parts of the country. Taking up this Edmonton paper, the 'Clairion,' I see an article in the January and February number headed, 'Audacious attempt of American Land Corporation to capture a concession.' If the minister finds, on investigation, that this concession, granted for one object, is in danger of being captured by an American land corporation to be used for another purpose altogether, it seems to me it should have a very considerable bearing on the settlement of the case. This is a very valuable concession, when you come to look at it. The grant of 576 square miles means a grant of about 368,640 acres. Now, the condition upon which about half of this, or 176,620 acres could be purchased for $1 an acre on very long terms was that the company should put in, all told, 1,200 settlers as homesteaders. If they can purchase this quantity of land for $1 an acre and sell it for $6 or $7 an acre, that means a million dollars of profit. We do not object to the company acquiring this million dollars of profit, if, in return for it, they fulfil the original idea of the company—viz., placing repatriated Canadians and Canadians from other provinces in that western country. But, if there is to be sold to an American syndicate a concession out of which a million dollars can be made, it seems to me it is about time that that sort of thing was brought to an end. So, I want to call the minister's attention to the fact that the spirit of the bargain which underlies this concession is quite as important as the letter.

Mr. OLIVER. I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ames), and am glad to find that he agrees with me, that the spirit is really more important than the letter. But I do not agree with him as to the importance of what he seems to consider the spirit of this transaction. In the first place, let me say that this transaction is not in line with the policy of the government at the present time.

Mr. AMES. It is a relic of the past.

Mr. OLIVER. It is a transaction that was entered into a considerable number of years ago, when conditions were not at all as they are to-day. I agree with my hon. friend that it is a laudable purpose to try to secure the settlement of even distant parts of the country, and I suppose he will agree with me when I say that it may well be necessary, and, being necessary, it may very well be proper, that special arrangements should be entered into in order to secure the settlement of these distant tracts. On that principle, many years ago, special arrangements were entered into to secure settlement under the late government and under this government—under this government very few and under the late government very many. This is one of the very few instances under this government. My own impression is that, in the present circumstances of the country and under present conditions, it is not the best policy, in promoting the general settlement of the country, to enter into a special agreement with a special organization for any special class of people to be settled in any special place. I find no fault with the policy that prevailed years ago under different conditions. As conditions change, it is right and proper that our policy should change. My idea is that, under present conditions, our best policy is the principle of the land for the first comer and first come first served. On that principle, I should be inclined to take a somewhat unfavourable view of the claims of this company even on the lines suggested by my hon. friend in as much as it means a special effort on behalf of special people if I understood him correctly.

Mr. AMES. In this case our own people.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, even our own people. My idea is that the value of these concessions lay in securing a nucleus of settlement in the then far-distant, and still distant, Peace River country; a settlement which could demonstrate by the labour and enterprise of the settlers, the agricultural and other possibilities of that vast region. Now, it seems to me that if this company can arrive at that end, whether they arrive at it or not absolutely and strictly within the letter of their agreement, I do not say that we would, but I say that we might, be justified in overlooking their failure to actually live up to the letter of their agreement, without regard to whether they were securing the settlement of repatriated citizens of Canada or the settlement of even a Canadian colony there. I would be inclined to consider them as having fulfilled the spirit of their agreement if they were successful in placing upon their land a colony of a reasonable number, that would achieve a reasonable measure of agricultural success. However, I would much rather have the privilege of dealing with this question of the Peace River colonization according to the practice of the government as well understood, and place the result before the House ; otherwise our dealings may be somewhat hampered, to the disadvantage of the public interest.

Mr. AMES. What is the policy of the government at the present time with reference to granting timber and coal in areas that are not surveyed ? Does the government intend to continue that policy, and what steps are taken to ensure the exact location of berths ? For example, in this same section we are discussing, this Peace River section, the government have seen fit to give, I think, 350 square miles of timber for a mere bagatelle, to J. W. Stewart, who is connected with the firm of Larkin Brothers and Foley. Now what steps are being taken to secure a delimitation of that immense area of timber that has fallen into the hands of Mr. Stewart ? Who does the surveying ? Has the surveying been commenced ? How long has Mr. Stewart been allowed by the department to locate these tracts ? He has secured a practical monopoly of the best timber that supplies this Peace River section, and it will be needed as soon as settlement goes in there. Is it still the policy of the government to grant timber areas in sections which are remote from settlement, and in sections which are unsurveyed ? How does the government deal with timber limits in sections like that, and what is the present policy of the government in granting such areas ?

Mr. OLIVER. With regard to the timber limits secured by Mr. Stewart, my information is that the surveys have been completed by Mr. Stewart, as in all cases, under the former regulations, surveys are made by the persons who acquire the limits.

Mr. AMES. What is the character of that survey ? Does it include township lines and subdivisions ?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly not. He runs a line, he defines the timber that he has purchased by metes and bounds.

Mr. AMES. Does he lay it down in townships ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, because the townships are not surveyed. But he makes a survey which is a legal survey, and which can be mapped, and is just as definite as if it was made by a township survey.

Mr. AMES. How can you lay it on the map of the department ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not a map maker, but as a matter of fact the limits to which my hon. friend alludes are shown on the more recent maps issued by the department. I am sure he will absolve me from the necessity of explaining how it is done. But I know that the limits are surveyed and appear on those maps.

Mr. AMES. Do you describe the limits with any reference whatever to the townships in which they lie, or do you describe them simply by certain points representing bluffs or hills ?

Mr. OLIVER. By the survey lines, the lines run by the surveyor. The stakes set by the surveyor are the boundaries of the limits, and they are definable on the map, the same as section and township lines are definable.

Mr. AMES. Is it now the policy of the government to survey their own timber limits that they may henceforth grant ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, under our present regulations. They provide that when application is made for a timber berth, or when the government thinks the time has arrived that a certain body of timber should be offered for sale, the regulations provide that it shall first be surveyed by the government.

Mr. AMES. Is that a township survey ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, that is a survey just the same as the survey that is now being made, the only kind of survey that can be made where the township and range have not been defined by running meridian and base lines.

Mr. AMES. Now will the minister tell us what is done in the matter of getting accurate location for coal areas that are today under grant in the Rocky Mountains, for example in the territory at the head of the Brazeau waters ? How are those coal areas located ?

Mr. OLIVER. The system is laid down in the regulations that where there are no surveys coal claims are located by stakes, just as quartz and placer mining claims are located in unsurveyed territory. Two stakes are planted in the ground which define the claim, the claim extends from stake to stake, and for a certain distance on each side. That is the universal system the world over, and answers the purpose for the time being, until a survey such as I have spoken of in regard to timber limits can be made, or until a survey of the section, township and range is made. I would like to change the wording of this item. It now reads :

Surveys, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, including $18,000 for irrigation surveys.

I would like to move that $18,000 read $21,000. It does not alter the total vote, it merely takes $3,000 more out of it for irrigation purposes.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Am I correct in the impression that about two years ago a part of Turtle Mountain was resurveyed, that is, township 2 in range 20 and 21 west of the first meridian? It is very desirable that this work should be completed?

Mr. OLIVER. I would have to inquire at the Surveyor General's office, but I shall give the information next day.

Mr. LAKE. When Dominion Lands are up I wish the minister would give us some information with reference to irrigation projects, the Robbins Irrigation Company's application and several large projects which have been mentioned.

Mr. AMES. Would the minister also take notice that when this matter comes up again we will ask for information about the coal lands purchase of John Howie, the northwest quarter of section 8, township 53, range 8 west of the 5th.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am very anxious personally to stay very late if possible to get some few items of my estimates through. The condition is somewhat serious with men on the canals and with employees of the Intercolonial Railway. The idea seems to have got abroad among the merchants with whom some of these people deal in purchasing their daily bread that these estimates may not go through for quite a while and it is becoming awkward for some of these men. I would like to get these items through so that if the Supply Bill is put through I shall be sure to have them in for these employees. The Intercolonial estimates, so far as the revenue is concerned, are in a different position from any other estimates. The vote of this House simply means that we are allowed to use our own money. The income derived from the road has to be paid into the Receiver General and we cannot use it without a vote. It is merely asking for a release of the money the road has earned in order to hand it back to the employees. I want to be away on Monday, as some of my friends do—and I intend to be away.

Mr. TAYLOR. I might easily get a pair for your vote and allow you to stay here.

Mr. FIELDING. Could you not arrange to put it through to-night in the next 15 minutes?

Mr. TAYLOR. There is a difficulty. The committee in charge of railway matters, Messrs. Barker and Haggart, are not present. I was told to-day that the minister could use money if it is there.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Auditor General will not allow it.

Mr. FIELDING. He must not lay down such a rule ; the committee should be here to attend to business.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. What business will be taken up on Monday?

Mr. FIELDING. We will proceed with the estimates of the Minister of the Interior. No doubt they will be passed very rapidly, and then probably the Minister of Public Works will follow.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12 o'clock, midnight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, June 8, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

TENDERS FOR DREDGING.

Mr. BERGERON—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked :

1. Were tenders called for in 1907 and 1908 by the Public Works Department for dredging in Ontario and Quebec? If so, were tenders received?
2. What were the prices at the different places?
3. What were the names of the dredges mentioned in tenders?

SOULANGES CANAL ELECTRIC POWER.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. Is not the Soulanges canal lit by electricity its whole length?
2. If so, does the government itself produce that electricity?
3. What is the degree of horse-power at the disposal of the government in its workshops on the canal?
4. Why are not the villages of Des Cédres, St. Ignace and Côteau Landing lit by means of the same power?
5. Are those villages situated on the banks of the same canal?
6. Has the member for the county of Soulanges asked that this be done?
7. Have any steps been taken to secure this advantage?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. Approximately 250 horse-power is available at present.
4. The department has no information.
5. No.
6. No proposition looking to the entering into a contract with the department for electric lighting has been made by the villages in question or on their behalf by any person.

EMPLOYMENT OF W. S. BUELL.

Mr. PORTER—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. Is W. S. Buell, of Brockville, Ontario, in the employ of the government or of the commission appointed to inquire re telephone, &c., in any capacity? If so, what?
2. Has W. S. Buell been paid by the govenment for any services during the past two years? If so, how much, when, for what services, and how was he engaged, by day or otherwise?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Mr. Buell along with Mr. Shepley, K.C., has been retained in the public interest upon the application of the telephone and express companies to the Board of Railway Commissioners, for the approval of their schedule of tolls and rates.
2. He was paid in 1907, $2,514.66; he was paid in 1908, $1,064.53; total, $3,579.19. He was retained for the inquiry, and he is being paid at the rate of $30 per diem and expenses.

SKINNER'S COVE BOAT CHANNEL.

Mr. STANFIELD asked:

1. What was the amount of contract for the boat channel at Skinners Cove, Nova Scotia, who were the tenderers, what is the amount of each tender, and to whom was the contract awarded?
2. When was the work commenced, when was it completed, and what was the total amount paid under contract?
3. What extras, if any, did the contractor receive, for what were extras paid, and what were the several amounts paid as extras?
4. Since completion of the work has any expenditure been made on the same? If so, when were the expenditures made?
5. What were the reasons for making each expenditure since completion of work under the contract?
6. What is the total amount to date paid since completion under contract?
7. Is any further repair or addition to be made to work in current year? If so, what is the reason for such repair or addition, and what is the estimated cost of same?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) $10,965; (b) W. J. Landry, $10,965; A. W. Girroir, $11,200; Hugh McDonald, $12,285; (c) W. J. Landry.
2. (a) 17th June, 1905; (b) 1st August, 1906.

4. Yes, in November and December, 1907.
5. To protect the dredged entrance channel.
6. $822.37.
7. (a) Yes. (b) Construction of pile, brush and stone works at the inner end of pier for the protection of the channel leading to the harbour; also for dredging channel to depth of 8 feet, estimated cost, $6,500.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—AMQUI STATION.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. What sum has been voted by parliament for the construction of an Intercolonial Railway station at Amqui, in the county of Rimouski, province of Quebec?
2. What was the cost of construction of such station?
3. What was the cost of the changing of the Intercolonial Railway line at the time of the construction of the said station at that place?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. $5,500.

2. $5,450.
3. $5,942.71.

RIMOUSKI COUNTY PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. What sums have been voted by the parliament of Canada for public works in the county of Rimouski, province of Quebec, except for the Intercolonial Railway, during the years 1900 and 1907, inclusive?
2. What sums have actually been expended in the said county for public works, with the exception of the Intercolonial Railway, during the said years above-mentioned?

THE LEE-ENFIELD RIFLE.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. Is the government aware that within the last two weeks on the Rockliffe range, a Lee-Enfield rifle bolt blew back, inflicting an injury on Lieutenant Wolseley, of Ottawa?
2. Is it the intention of the government to call in all the Lee-Enfield rifles issued, owing to the number of serious and fatal accidents arising from the use of that weapon?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. On May 9 last at Rockliffe, Ont., while target shooting the bolt of a Lee-Enfield rifle, in the hands of Lieut. Wolseley, 43rd Regiment, blew back inflicting upon him slight injuries.
2. It is not the intention of the government to call in all the Lee-Enfield rifles issued at the present time.

WHARF AT LAKE MEGANTIC

Mr. AMES asked:

1. Is the government constructing a wharf in the county of Beauce at the point where lake Megantic discharges into the Chaudière river? If so, what expenditure has already been made in this connection and what work accomplished?
2. Who has been the inspector of said work?
3. At what rate per day has he been paid, and for how many days' service?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) Yes.
(b) $970.07.
(c) The crib substructure supporting outer pier was sunk in place and fully ballasted and the stone approach about one third done.
2. P. H. Renaud.
3. At $2.50 per working day. He was paid for 45 days covering all services to 31st March, 1908.

TORONTO HARBOUR CONTRACT.

Mr. KEMP asked:

1. What is the amount of the contract for the new western entrance to Toronto harbour?
2. Was there any provision in the contract that Canadian timber or lumber should be use in the work?
3. Is it the intention of the contractor to use timber or lumber made in the United States?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. $495,000.
2. No.
3. Department is not aware what the intentions of the contractor are; timber supplied must have approval of the resident engineer.

HALIFAX GARRISON COAL SUPPLY.

Mr. DANIEL asked :

1. How much coal is supplied each year for the Militia Department in connection with the Halifax garrison?
2. What price is paid for hard and soft coal, respectively ?
3. Is it true that the government pays $4.3' per ton of 2,000 pounds, while the imperial government paid the same price per ton of 2,240 pounds
4. Is it true that the imperial government obtained delivery not only in the city but at outposts and forts for the price of $4.35 per ton of 2,240 pounds, and that the present government, in addition to the increased price above-mentioned, pays the cost of delivery to the outposts and forts at a cost of about $1 per ton?
5. What part, if any, of the 12,000 tons is supplied after public advertisement and tender ?
6. How long have Messrs. George E. Boak & Son, or George E. Boak, had this contract ?
7. Is it true that the contract is given to them direct by the department without tender ?
8. What are all the facts in connection with the supplying of this coal and the increase in price to the country, if any ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. The quantity estimated as required for 1907-8 was 1,532 tons hard coal and 3,-061 tons soft coal. The accounts for the year are not yet closed.
2. $4.35 per ton of 2,000 pounds for soft coal ; $6.20 and $6.25 per ton of 2,000 pounds for hard coal.
3. Yes, the contract with the Imperial government was made in May, 1904 ; that with the Canadian government in January, 1906.
4. The contract made by the Imperial government with the Dominion Coal Company made no provision for an extra charge for delivery outside city limits. It was originally for one year ending May 31, 1905, but was extended from time to time till December 31, 1905. The last extension was for delivery within the city limits only.

The contract made by the Canadian government in December, 1905, after tenders had been obtained, provided that for delivery outside city limits and to outposts, an extra charge of 75 cents per ton would be paid. This extra charge was stipulated for by all tenderers.

5. Twelve thousand tons are not required. In December, 1905, tenders for soft coal were obtained from George E. Boak and Company, and the Dominion Coal Company, for the year ending December 31, 1906.

In June, 1907, tenders were obtained by letter from the Dominion Coal Company, A. T. Weldon, and George E. Boak and Son, for the supply for the year ending June 30, 1908. The contract was given to the lowest tenderers, George E. Boak and Son.

For hard coal competitive tenders were obtained by newspaper advertisement, in June, 1906, from George E. Boak and Company and James Hall, for 1906-7 ; and in June, 1907, by letter from Boak and Son, Dominion Coal Company and A. T. Weldon. The contract was awarded in each case to the lowest tenderer, George E. Boak and Company, and George E. Boak and Son.

6. Since January 1, 1906.
7. No.

BRANTFORD STRIKE.

Mr. COCKSHUTT—by Mr. Roche—asked :

Has the Honourable Minister of Justice had any correspondence with the officers of the law at Brantford in connection with the strikers who were under arrest recently in that city for picket duty? If so, what was the nature of such communication?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) : During May, 1908, two letters were received from the County Crown Attorney at Brantford and one from counsel for members of various trades unions and a reply was sent to each letter.

These letters discussed the provisions of section 501 of the Criminal Code and the true interpretation of the said section and whether any amendment of the said section was desirable.

PAY OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works if it is true, as has been alleged, that the employees of the Public Works Department in Hamilton have not received their April pay, and what is the reason ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware of it but will make inquiry.

Mr. FOSTER. Probably let us know in the afternoon session.

SUPPLY—PAY OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. G. W. FOWLER (Kings, N.B.). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to a certain misrepresentation which appears in what purports to be a letter issued by the Railway Department to its employees. I am quoting from the 'Daily Telegraph' of St. John, New Brunswick, Saturday, June 6:

Intercolonial Railway employees here have been notified by a circular, a copy of which is posted in the freight shed, that salaries or wages will not likely be paid until further supplies have been voted by parliament.

The circular which bears the name of the late superintendent G. M. Jarvis and is dated from Truro on June 3, informs all concerned that a letter dated June 2, had been received from the general manager which reads as follows:

I am instructed to advise you that the interim partial appropriation voted by parliament for works and staff under the control of the Department of Railways and Canals, will shortly be exhausted, if not already so, and that no further appropriation has been obtained from parliament at the present date, and to instruct you to notify the several members of your staff of the position, leaving it to their option to decide whether they will continue work on the understanding that no salary or wages will be paid them until further supplies have been voted.

Similar notices are posted at Moncton and elsewhere along the line. A Moncton despatch says: In view of the circular, employees are wondering whether or not they are to receive any pay this month. The office employees, including men in the shippings, train men, &c., have yet to be paid.

What I complain of is that those instructions, issued from the Department of Railways and Canals——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What date ?

Mr. FOWLER. It must have been previous to June 2, because on June 2 the General Manager sent his circular to the different road superintendents. Therefore the instructions must have gone from him before June 1 in order to have enabled him to issue these instructions on June 2. The idea no doubt was to make the people working on the Intercolonial Railway believe that the opposition were preventing them from getting their pay. As a matter of fact, however, the Minister of Railways has never asked this parliament for Supply to pay the employees of the Intercolonial Railway or on the canals. Last Friday night, after the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) had moved that the committee rise and report progress, and after midnight when we had been sitting from 11 in the morning, the Minister of Railways—evidently by preconcerted arrangement—rose and said he would like to get some Supply. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) objected that it was very late and that some of the members of the committee in connection with railways and canals, on the opposition side, were not present. The minister demurred to this on the ground that he could not be here on Monday. Well, we know why the minister could not be here on Monday. The minister is not detained by anything in connection with his department from being here; the minister is up in Brockville attending to the provincial elections. The minister has a right, if he sees fit, to take part in the provincial elections, I have no fault to find with that at all. But the minister should not neglect the work of his department in order to take part in provincial elections. We are now going into Supply; if the Minister of Railways were here there would be no difficulty in getting Supply for the employees of his department. But as I say, he has never asked for Supply except in the manner I have mentioned, on Friday night. I say that this instruction that has been issued from the Department of Railways and Canals is absolutely and entirely misleading, and is a misrepresentation of the true situation here. We have been charged with obstruction; and my hon. friend from Carleton, N.B., (Mr. Carvell) stated the other day that a great many resolutions had been moved by the opposition, who had taken up a great deal of time unnecessarily. Now as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the greater portion of the time of this House. as will be found by an examination of 'Hansard,' has been taken up by hon. gentlemen opposite.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. FOWLER. My hon. friend says oh. I have carefully examined the 'Hansard' from the first of this session in November down to the end of January, and during that time hon. gentlemen opposite have taken up a considerably larger portion of the time.

Mr. CARVELL. Do you include in that the time you devoted in asking questions over Supply?

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) has asked a question, I do not know what he means by that. I have taken very little time in asking questions over Supply; in fact I do not think, if there is any person that can be accused of obstruction on either side of the House, that any one can properly accuse me of having unnecessarily taken up the time of this House. I have taken up very little time, less time than my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell); but the short time I have taken up has been far more effective, so far as the general business of the country was concerned, than the much longer time taken up by the member for Carleton, because no man can use more words and say less than that hon. gentleman. Now I have examined the discussion of the various resolutions that were debated, the resolutions which the hon. member for Carleton said were silly and absurd. If they were silly and absurd, it is a singular thing that the ministerial members should find it necessary to talk so much about them. Of course my hon. friend, when he made that remark, did not mean it, he only made it for the purpose of getting a laugh from his friends. I find that on the various resolutions that were introduced in this House and discussed from the time we began to sit in November down to January, the ministerial members occupied thirty-eight columns of 'Hansard' more than the opposition members did —discussing these various resolutions which the hon. member for Carleton said were silly and ridiculous.

Mr. FIELDING. What was the number in each case, the totals for each side?

Mr. FOWLER. I can give them in detail, I can show the Minister of Finance how much time he wasted. Now take some of the larger questions. I find that on the address, the Prime Minister used up twenty-five columns of 'Hansard'; I find that the Minister of Finance used thirty.

Mr. FIELDING. Not on the address.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, he was the worst offender on the address. Now on the address the opposition used up more columns of the 'Hansard' than did the government, the government spoke 176 columns, while the opposition spoke 275. But in the debate on the immigration question, the Postmaster General was the worst offender, for he spoke 28 columns. The Minister of the Interior, in that debate, spoke 17 columns; total, 54 columns to the government and only 24 to the opposition, a debit of 30 against the government. Then on the motion for the appointment of a fishery commissioner introduced by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), the government spoke 27 columns to the opposition 12, making 15 against the government. On the British Columbia legislation, the government spoke 22 columns to the opposition one. On the original documents discussion, the opposition spoke 35 columns and the government 11. On the Franco-Canadian trade treaty, the government spoke 63 columns and the opposition 44, nineteen against the government. On the seed grain question, the government spoke 22 columns to the opposition 13. On the constitution of the Senate, the government spoke 53 columns to the opposition 50. On the motion of the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) on oriental immigration, the government spoke 57 columns and the opposition none; that debate was confined entirely to the members from British Columbia. On the motion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) respecting the Franco-Canadian trade treaty, the opposition spoke ten columns and the government one. Concerning original documents there were two debates; in the one on the motion of the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), the opposition spoke 41 and the government 22. On all these different resolutions there is a total against the government of 38 columns of 'Hansard,' and yet we are charged with obstruction. Now what is true of that time is also true of the balance of the time, and even in greater measure. It is natural that the opposition should occupy more time than the government, because we are here to criticise, to ask questions with respect to these various matters. But in these cases the government apparently desired that Supply should not pass, there can be no other conclusion. The ministers in giving their explanations, have given them very fully, in many cases more fully perhaps than was absolutely necessary, and in this way time has been wasted. But what I object to, Mr. Speaker, is misrepresentation on the part of the responsible minister of a department, when that minister knows very well that he has never asked for any appropriation from this House to pay the employees in his department.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). In regard to the number of columns of 'Hansard' that might be occupied by the respective parties, I have not taken the trouble to make any analysis, but I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that if he wished to go further into the question he should reduce the whole time to the basis of so much per column for the average member, and he will discover that inasmuch as our numbers are two to one, roughly speaking, as compared with hon. gentlemen opposite, I have no doubt he will find that the proportion of time occupied by the average member of the opposition is vastly greater than the proportion of time occupied by the average member on the government side of the House.

Mr. FOWLER. That means nothing.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, if there is any thing in the argument at all that is the only way to examine it. But I confess that I do not attach very much importance to that form of argument. It is not to discuss it that I rise to take exception again, and I do it with regret—I think my hon. friend from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) must have been out when the discussion came up on a previous occasion—but I am obliged again to take exception to the statement he made as to applications for Supply. The hon. gentleman says the Minister of Railways never sought the co-operation of the opposition to obtain Supplies. I state again that the Minister of Railways through me, acting for him officially and for all my colleagues, made application to hon. gentlemen opposite for a further vote on account. We received one vote on account, an eighth, and we desired to obtain a quarter. Hon. gentlemen opposite thought it was better to confine it to an eighth. If we had taken a quarter, as we asked, we should have had money in hand to fully meet the needs of the various branches of the public service. At a later stage we asked for a further vote on account. No particular figure was mentioned. Hon. gentlemen opposite—I am not quarrelling with them on the matter or finding fault, but merely stating the facts—when we made that application in a proper way, informed us that they were not prepared to co-operate with us and grant it.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). I desire to say a word or two on the question of obstruction. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) who has just spoken said it is not a question of the measure of time occupied, and that, I think, is true to a large extent, for surely any person who considers the matter at all carefully will realize that the opposition must necessarily occupy more time, if they are to adequately discharge their duty, than is occupied by the government and their supporters. I entirely dissent from the suggestion that in this matter we are to be measured by numbers. If there were only ten men in opposition here, the duty would rest upon them, with even greater responsibility, perhaps, than if there were a hundred. The opposition, whether few or many are bound to reasonably scrutinize and criticise the propositions advanced by the government from time to time, and it is altogether immaterial whether this work is done by many or by few, and it is really immaterial how much time is occupied, so that the time is usefully employed. I, for one, will not hesitate at any time to take up whatever time may seem necessary to discuss any question that may arise in order that I may fairly place my views before that House or the committee as the case may be. I may say, in passing, that from a hasty and somewhat incomplete analysis of the proceedings of this House during the last six months, I am led to the conclusion that the government have, as a matter of fact, occupied quite as much time as have the opposition. But that is not so material to my mind, as the fact which forces itself upon attention, that, on very many occasions, the government have manifestly put up their supporters for the purpose of marking time, for the reason, evidently, that they had not ready the legislation necessary to bring before the House. It requires no elaborate research to discover that this government, this session, have been notably remiss in bringing down legislation, and that the long time to which this session has been drawn out is attributable mainly to the fact that the government have not put themselves in a position to supply the House with the matters which have to be dealt with before we can prorogue. However, I more particularly desire to call your attention to a statement made and repeated in this House in somewhat varied form—insultingly repeated, I may say—by some distinguished members of this House (not always by members of the government), to the effect that the opposition have been delaying the progress of the House and blocking the Supply by the introduction of ridiculous resolutions supported by ridiculous arguments. Now, Sir, I venture to say that it is our duty to place before the people in a succinct, definite form what these resolutions are—or, at least, the main ones—and let the public judge whether they are ridiculous or not;—and I think that during the progress of debates the public have judged whether the arguments of the opposition are ridiculous or not.

Down to the adjournment for Christmas, the time occupied by the sitting of the House was very fairly distributed. There seemed to be no effort on either side, as far as I can see, to go very deeply into difficult questions. We had, of course, the address; and on that address three resolutions were moved by members of the opposition, resolutions which were voted down by the government, but which, I think, will commend themselves to the public. These resolutions I will not read. The first was that of the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) calling attention to absence from the address of certain matters of great importance as to the enormous expenditure and—what I think is evident to every one—the very serious mismanagement of the government on many important questions. Perhaps we could hardly expect that the government, at that early stage, would adopt that resolution. They did not adopt it. Then came the amendment of the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) in reference to rural mail derivery, a question which the government will have to face, a question on which, I think, many hon. members will find it difficult to explain to their constituents why they took part in voting down that resolution by a straight party vote. Then came the amendment of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) in reference to the Quebec bridge, a matter which the government will have to explain and answer for, but which I will not discuss here further than to say that, on this question also, some hon. members will find it difficult to explain the votes they gave. There were certain other matters under discussion before the House rose for the Christmas recess. We had the very interesting resolution moved by the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. A. A. Wright) in reference to the hours for adjournment. We had the motion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in reference to the Anglo-Japanese convention, with a necessary, but short, discussion. Then came the resolution of the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. J. T. Schell), a supporter of the government, in reference to the Transcontinental railway. Then we had the very full, interesting and useful debate introduced by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) occupying—and quite properly, I think—a very considerable time and confined, I believe, entirely to supporters of the government—of that I make no complaint. Then we had, concluding the part of the session before the Christmas vacation, the question on the motion of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) in reference to Japanese immigration, in which the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and a number of others took part.

Now as to the resolutions brought forward after we reassembled on January 8, which have been characterized as being ridiculous. The first was very concise—not at all ridiculous in wording—and the government met it and resisted it. This was the motion of the hon. member for St. Antoine which was as follows :

That an order of the House do issue to the proper officer for a return laying upon the table of this House the original applications and tenders in respect of timber berths 1107, 1108 and 1171.

That invoked a short but very decisive discussion. The government took a definite position on the subject, mainly at the instance, I take it—and compelled to it very probably—by the attitude of the Minister of the Interior. And the government's supporters, to a man, by a straight party vote, voted down that resolution and affirmed the principle that the members of the opposition have no right to have access to the public documents of this country. That motion was followed on the 21st by a motion of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) in these words on going into Supply :

And the question being proposed; Mr. Borden moved in amendment thereto, that all the words after the word 'that' be omitted and the following substituted therefor: 'subject to such consideration of public policy as can be validly urged in any case it is the undoubted right of the people's representatives, in parliament assembled, to be informed of everything necessary to explain the policy and proceedings of the government and for that purpose to have an opportunity of seeing and examining all documents connected with the transaction of public business; and the denial of such right by the government justifies the refusal by this House of further supplies to the Crown.'

That followed very closely upon the resolution I previously read, but, strange to say, this government then, as on many occasions, pursuing a peculiarly vaccilating policy, came down and accepted it. You would have thought that would end the matter, that the matter would have been definitely settled, but not so, Sir.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Mr. Speaker, is the hon. gentleman in order in referring to a previous debate?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think this is in illustration of the point that is under discussion.

Mr. LENNOX. We found that the government were going back upon the policy they had adopted on the 21st and a discussion which arose was determined on the 24th by a straight party vote in which the government not only went back on their record of the 21st, but every supporter fell into line. The resolution upon that occasion was moved by my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) in amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply, and was :

That all the words after the word 'that' in the proposed motion be omitted and the following substituted therefor: 'subject to such considerations of public policy as can be validly urged in any case members of parliament have the right to have access to all the records of the government and to all archives.'

It is pretty difficult to see in principle what the difference is between that resolution and the resolution of the 21st, but it does not always seem to be necessary to find a difference in order to justify hon. gentlemen opposite in taking a different position. Therefore, we find them voting down that resolution and thereby swallowing themselves on the position which they had previously taken.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that resolution was an exact transcript of a statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. LENNOX. If there was any difference there ought to be the difference of the additional merit which it might possess in the eyes of hon. gentlemen opposite by reason of the fact that it was a literal transcript of the words of the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I ask if the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) is in order?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) will not be permitted to discuss these resolutions.

Mr. JOHNSTON. He has been doing so all along.

Mr. SPEAKER. He can illustrate the point he is making as to delay or no delay.

Mr. LENNOX. That was the attitude of the government on the 24th January, but to follow the transaction, to trace the history of this government as to this——

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I again call your attention to the fact that for purely obstructive tactics——

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman who has first risen has the first point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. D. ROSS. For purely obstructive tactics——

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. D. ROSS. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I assert that my point of order be taken because it would prevent—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is plainly out of order. The hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Ross) rose to a point of order and I have not heard what that point of order is.

Mr. FOSTER. In making that point of order he imputed motives——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER.—and it is——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER.—on that point——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER.—that I raise the point of order.

Mr. FIELDING. Let the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo present his point of order and then we will take the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Foster) point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to know whether the hon. gentleman has the right or not——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. Let the hon. gentlemen both take their seats for a moment. If I understand the position it is that the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo rose to a point of order, and in the course of his statement of the point of order he stated that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) who had the floor was proceeding for obstructive tactics. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) then rises in the midst of the point of order that the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo is taking, to take the point of order that the suggestion that the hon. member who has the floor is taking the course he is for obstructive tactics, imputes a motive to that hon. gentleman. That, of course, is a proper point to be taken at any time.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I rise to that point of order and ask you if——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. D. ROSS. In order that my point of order may be properly before the House I have no hesitation in withdrawing the suggestion that they were purely obstructive tactics.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all I want.

Mr. D. ROSS. My point of order is that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) is relating the history of numerous debates that took place in this House during the present session and that consequently he is not in order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I may be permitted a word in so far as this is concerned, the statement has been made that the time of the House has been wasted by ridiculous motions supported by senseless arguments. It is perfectly proper to call the attention of the House to the nature of the motions which have been offered during the session.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that is the proper position, that he can illustrate the point which the hon. gentleman started out to make, namely, that members of the opposition have not obstructed, by a reference to past debates without discussing them. But if he attempts to discuss any motions that we have had before the House or to make a reference to a past debate otherwise, he will be subject to being called to order.

Mr. LENNOX. I quite recognize, Mr. Speaker, that I have no right, and I do not propose to try to discuss the merits of what has been discussed before. I merely want to show what we have done that has been complained of and the motions which have been characterized as ridiculous and which it is said have been supported by ridiculous arguments. That vote on the 24th was followed by a statement of the premier that he would make a statement on the following Monday, which he did, and which brought us to the position that the government then surrendered unconditionally. On the 13th February, however, we found that the difficulty had arisen in another quarter, and consequently my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) was compelled upon this same question of public documents, to move this resolution :

The Committee on Public Accounts is constituted for the purpose of affording full and free examination and inquiry into the receipts and expenditures of public moneys and the circumstances in connection herewith.

That in the public interest the greatest possible freedom of investigation and inquiry should be enjoyed by the committee.

That any action of the majority of that committee in excluding evidence, or restricting inquiry should be the subject of appeal to this House, and upon request for that purpose the necessary report of the proceedings ought immediately to be ordered.

By a straight party vote that right was denied. That disposes of the question of public documents. I shall now refer to other resolutions, some of which intervened,

On January 15 we had the resolution of the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) which did not occasion a division owing to the fact that amendments to it were moved and so the debate was shunted off. Mr. Cockshutt moved :

That in consideration of the great congestion that at present prevails in the labour market in many of the industrial centres throughout the country, it is highly expedient that assisted immigration, excepting only the agricultural and domestic servant classes, should immediately cease, and that no further bonuses shall be paid to individual agents or companies for sending or bringing in such immigrants. Further, that the time has come for the strict enforcement of the law that requires that only the financially, morally and physically fit shall be allowed to enter this Dominion as settlers.

Mr. Johnston moved in amendment thereto:

That all the words after 'that' to the end of the resolution be struck out, and the following inserted instead thereof: 'the House approves the policy of the Department of the Interior in confining its immigration operations to the encouragement of the coming to Canada of farmers, farm labourers, railway labourers and female domestic servants.'

Then we had a resolution by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) on February 6 last, which was defeated by a straight party vote. Mr. Lake moved, on going into Supply:

That all the words after the word 'that' be left out and the following substituted therefor: 'in the opinion of this House a committee of nine members should be appointed to investigate, inquire into and consider all matters connected with or relating to the alienation, granting, rental, leasing or other disposal by lease, license or otherwise, since the first day of July, 1898, of any timber lands, or timber berths forming part of the public lands of Canada, or of rights to the same, or to the timber thereon, and to report upon the matters aforesaid to this House, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses on oath or affirmation.'

On February 11 we had a division resolution moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) in amendment to the motion for Supply, as follows:

That all the words after the word 'that' be omitted, and the following substituted therefor: 'in the opinion of this House, the regulations respecting the purchase, sale and distribution of seed grain in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan should be amended by providing that payment for such seed grain shall be made in three years by three annual instalments instead of in one year, and by further providing that any person desiring to make payment at an earlier date may do so.'

That was opposed by the members of the government and their supporters unanimously on a straight party vote.

On February 19, we had the following motion by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk):

That it is the duty of the government to enter into negotiations with the government of the province of Quebec, with a view to removing all obstacles to the abolition of toll gates upon the roads of the Island of Montreal.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier moved in amendment thereto:

That the words 'enter into negotiations with,' be struck out from the said motion, and the following substituted therefor: 'receive all the overtures that may be made by.'

The motion of the leader of the government was supported and Mr. Monk's motion opposed on a straight party vote.

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. D. ROSS. I wish to rise to another point of order. As I understand, the hon. gentleman is attempting to answer an argument that was advanced on Thursday or Friday last to the effect that hon. gentlemen opposite were using obstruction.

Mr. LENNOX. No.

Mr. D. ROSS. My point of order is that that debate was disposed of last Thursday or Friday and the hon. member cannot now renew it, that the proper time for him to have made his speech was when the statement was made, not to-day.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not confining myself to the somewhat extravagant language used by the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) the other day, but I am talking of the attitude assumed by the supporters of the government and their press outside the House and on the public platforms from one end of Canada to the other.

On March 10 we had a resolution by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) moved in amendment to Supply:

That all the words after the word 'that' be struck out, and the following substituted therefor: 'in the opinion of this House tenders received by any department of the government should be immediately placed in safe custody under seal so as to prevent any possibility or suspicion of tampering, and should be opened in public at the time and place mentioned in the advertisement and in the presence of at least three of the principal officers of the department; and the persons so tendering, or their duly authorized agents, should be at liberty to attend at the said time and place and see such tenders opened and recorded, if they so desire.'

That was voted down by a straight party vote.

On March 12, we had the resolution of the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) on going into Supply, as follows:

That all the words after the word 'That' be struck out, and the following substituted therefor: 'the revenues of Canada belong to the people of this country and should be expended in the public interest;

And that this House condems the action of the present government in expending public moneys on works which are really for the benefit of favoured corporations and private individuals and not for the public benefit.'

The supporters of the government, one and all, saw their way to voting down that resolution.

On March 16, we had the resolution of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) in reference to cigarettes. Mr. Blain moved:

That the object of good government is to promote the general welfare of the people by a careful encouragement and protection of whatever makes for the public good; and by an equally careful discouragement and suppression of whatever tends to the public disadvantage.

That the smoking of cigarettes has been proved by overwhelming testimony to be productive of serious physical and moral injury to young people; impairing health, arresting development, weakening intellectual power, and thus constituting a social and national evil.

That the legislation, licensing and restricting the sale of cigarettes has not proven sufficient to prevent these evils, which will continue while the public sale of the cause of the mischief is permitted to go on.

That this House is of the opinion, for the reasons heretofore set forth, that the right and most effectual remedy for these evils is to be found in the enactment and enforcement of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes; and that it is expedient to bring in a Bill at this session to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

Mr. Clarke moved in amendment thereto:

That all the words after 'disadvantage' in the 4th line of the proposed motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

'That the smoking and use of tobacco in any form has been proved to be injurious to the physical and intellectual development of the youth of the country besides encouraging habits of idleness. That the legislation now in force restricting the sale of cigarettes, cigars or tobacco has been ineffectual to wholly prevent these evils. That this House is of the opinion that the most effective remedy for the existing evil is to amend the Criminel Code so as to make it an offence for persons under eighteen years of age to use tobacco in any form for smoking or chewing or to have possession of tobacco for either of such purposes, and also for the sale or gift of tobacco in any form to persons under eighteen years of age. That it is expedient to bring in a Bill at this session to give effect to this resolution.'

Although the hon. member for Peel on subsequent occasions endeavoured very strongly to get a vote upon that, he has not, by reason of private members' days being taken by the government, been able to get a vote. I am not able to characterize it under the ruling of the chair, I believe, any further than that. On March 30 we had the following resolution moved by the hon. member for North Toronto:

Mr. Foster moved, that all supplies purchased for the use of the various departments of the government should be procured on the basis of public tender and contract, under the direction of a competent purchasing commission, and with regard primarily to quality and price.

The government and their supporters voted down that resolution as being ridiculous and absurd. On April 23, we had a resolution in reference to immigration moved by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) on amendment to going into Supply:

That all the words after the word 'That' in the proposed motion be omitted and the following substituted in lieu thereof: 'while recognizing the importance of legitimate well directed efforts to encourage desirable immigration, this House declares that it is time to cease paying a bounty at so much per head to agents for immigrants coming to Canada.'

This was voted down by a straight party vote. On April 30, we had the following resolution moved by the hon. leader of the opposition in amendment to Supply:

Mr. Borden moved in amendment thereto, that all the words after the word 'That' be left out and the following substituted therefor: 'the investigation conducted by the Civil Service Commission was confessedly partial and incomplete.

That the proposed inquiry before Mr. Justice Cassels is unsatisfactory and insufficient, inasmuch as it relates to only one paragraph of the report of that commission and touches but a portion of the administration of one department.

That this House regrets the deplorable extravagance, waste, inefficiency and maladministration revealed by that report and declares that immediate steps should be taken to reform and redress the same.

That the public interest imperatively demands the appointment of an independent commission with full powers to make a thorough and searching investigation into the several departments of the public service.'

This was voted down by a straight party vote. On May 19, on going into Supply, we had this resolution moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle:

Mr. Lake moved in amendment thereto, that all the words after the word 'That' be eliminated, and the following substituted therefor: 'this House regrets that the present government has permitted the improvident alienation of immense areas of valuable timber lands which are now held for speculative purposes to the detriment of the people, and records its opinion that such full and unrestricted investigation should be made and such available proceedings taken as may be necessary to revest in the Crown any timber lands in respect of which fraud or imposition has been practised.'

And the government voted down that resolution by a straight vote of themselves and their supporters.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Mr. Speaker, let me renew my point of order. With reference to rule 16 Bourinot says, on page 479:

No member, in speaking, can refer to anything said or done in a previous debate during the same session.

My point of order is that the hon. member is placing on 'Hansard' in concrete form all that has been done by the opposition this session. I do not think he is within the rules of the House in saying that such a resolution was defeated and such a resolution was passed. It surely comes within the category of things done in the House.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Speaker, I propose to proceed. I do not propose to argue that kind of interruption.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have to rule on the question.

Mr. LENNOX. I suppose so. I am quite willing to take your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is obliged to hear the ruling. Hon. members are in the habit of making remarks of that kind which are quite out of place. My ruling is this. I can hardly think that the matter under discussion has been the subject of past debate, and my rulings have been based on that view. In the next place, I think that practically everything the hon. member has been saying thus far is in illustration of the point he has been seeking, rightly or wrongly, accurately or inaccurately, to make, namely, that the opposition has not been obstructing the business of the House, and to that extent I think it is permissible. I do not know just how far the point which the hon. member has taken as to references to what has been done, has force in it; but at the present moment I cannot rule that the hon. member is out of order in what he has said.

Mr. LENNOX. In saying that I was quite willing to take the ruling Mr. Speak, er, I think you will bear me out that I am always willing to take the ruling of the chair. I was only proceeding on the supposition that it was not necessary to discuss the question. The next resolution I propose to refer to, in combating the statement which has been made from time to time, that the resolutions have not been important or worthy of full discussion, is a resolution moved by the hon. member for Sherbrooke on May 21, as follows:

Mr. Worthington moved in amendment thereto, that all the words after the word 'That' in the proposed motion be left out and the following substituted instead thereof:

'the dealings of the Department of Militia and Defence in connection with the adoption and manufacture of the Ross rifle as an arm for the defence of Canada have displayed deplorable inefficiency, have been characterized by gross extravagance and improvidence and have impaired public confidence both in the alleged efficiency of the rifle and in the management of the department.'

That was voted down by a straight party vote, a very small vote, it is true, on both sides of the House, as it was during the current Ontario elections. On May 26, this resolution was moved by the hon. member for North Toronto on going into Supply:

Mr. Foster moved in amendment thereto, that all the words after the word 'That' be left out and the following substituted therefor: 'the civil service system of Canada should be based on merit and character alone, and the appointments thereto should be made from candidates whose competency has been established through open competitive examinations, conducted under a non-partisan civil service commission.'

Whatever the reason may have been, the members of the government and their supporters saw fit to vote down that resolution. On May 29, the last resolution to which I will refer was moved by myself on going into Supply, in reference to the debate affecting the Minister of Militia:

Mr. Lennox moved in amendment thereto, that all the words after the word 'That' be struck out, and the following substituted therefor: 'this House is of the opinion that ministers of the Crown should not be connected with associations or companies seeking contracts, aid or subsidies from the government of which they are members.

That resolution, after a most vigorous debate on the subject which had originated it, was accepted by the government.

Now, I had intended to refer to a number of matters which have occupied time during the session, introduced by members who are supporters of the government. Not that I complain at all of those resolutions. Some were very interesting, some were of practical importance, but many were merely academic. However as I am anxious that we should get into Supply as early as possible, I shall not take up time in referring to those, more than to say that an examination of the record will show that the government seems to have been actuated by a desire to get time. These motions were brought up from time to time by government supporters, just as we were in good position for proceeding with Supply, and take up a great deal of time, and some of them were mere theoretical motions which might very well be dispensed with.

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St. John City). I took the trouble to look over the month of April to see how the oratory was apportioned during that month, as between this side and that. I find that the government members took up 436 columns and the opposition 326½, showing a surplus of 109½ columns of Liberal oratory over Tory oratory. I find there were two main resolutions introduced—one relating to the Hudson Bay Railway, which was submitted by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knowles), and which took up some little time; the other, proposed by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), related to the cessation of immigration bounties. In addition to the discussion on these two main resolutions, there was a short debate on the postal mail service introduced by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), and then we had the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne), during one afternoon, moving the adjournment of the House. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Beauparlant) had quite a good deal to say with regard to the criminal code amendments. Therefore, as regards the month of April at all events—the only month I have looked over—I find that the opposition cannot be accused of having taken up more time than the government side. As a matter of fact, they took up 109½ columns less. Then as regards the moving of resolutions, one was introduced by a member supporting the government and the other by a member on this side.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I wish merely to make one or two remarks. In the first place, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the tabulation of the resolutions submitted this session by members of the opposition. I am very glad that they were massed together so that the country may see practically the effective answers to the wild statements made in the newspaper press and sometimes in this House, namely, that the resolutions proposed by the opposition were merely theoretical and designed to waste time. I do not think you can say of any one of those resolutions that it was purely academic. I do not think you can come to any other conclusion than they had the practical object of drawing attention to abuses and proposing a remedy. I am willing to let those resolutions go to the public, and I think no parliament need be ashamed of the discussion we have had on them.

It has evidently become solely the duty of the opposition to criticise the acts and policies of the government. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if we had to depend on gentlemen who support the government to raise a single voice of criticism or dissent along any one of the lines traced in these resolutions, would we have had one of them presented to this House? It does not seem to be considered the function of supporters of the government to raise a single note of protest or criticism regarding either any measure of the government or the estimates. That has to be done by the opposition, and the opposition are here for that purpose. No opposition would be worth its salt if it did not carry out that purpose, and no country would long tolerate an opposition which failed to do its duty in that respect.

Take the estimates. The government have brought forward $100,000,000 or more. Will any one have the hardihood to deny that if it were not for the members on the opposition side, these estimates would all go through practically without a word of criticism? The supporters of the government do not consider that they have any duty in that respect. The Minister of Finance would soon set them in their proper place, according to his idea, if they attempted to criticise the estimates. They are here to do the bidding of the government and not to criticise its acts or policy. Just as in the Public Accounts Committee, there would be no criticism or examination of a single item if it were not for the opposition. I am not sure that it was not the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who made the astounding suggestion a week ago that he thought the opposition ought to pass the estimates without any criticism. I hope that the opposition will never be so relax in its duty as to fail to criticise the estimates. When millions of dollars are put before us in block sums, it becomes absolutely necessary to find out what this money is wanted for. A vote comes down for $5,000.000 for the post office. It is divided into three items only, millions in each. And this is only illustrative of many other resolutions brought down in Supply. You might just as well argue in favour of bringing in one resolution providing for the appropriation of $100,000,000 for the government, to be spent by their different departments, and pass it through without criticism as to take up this blind mass estimates of millions of dollars for a given department, nothing definitely shown, either by statement in the estimates or by the explanations of the minister as to what exact use is to be made of the money covered by this lump vote. This, I think, the country will quite understand—that, if we are to have an extravagant government, we must have an over-vigilant opposition, that if we are to have a government with so many bad places in its policy and so many worse places in its administration, then the opposition must take the time to thoroughly criticise—so far as it can against the obstructive tactics of the government in committee and in this House—and bring to the knowledge of the country the facts concerning each vote.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). Before the motion is carried, I would like to say that I think it a matter of regret that the Bill to amend the Civil Service Act which is now on the Order Paper, has not been introduced in the House. It is a very important measure. It was first placed on the Order Paper on May 22. In respect of a portion of the delay, I have no complaint or criticism to offer, because the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) was necessarily absent. But he returned some time ago, and it is to be borne in mind that this has stood on the Order Paper for eighteen days, during which time we might have been considering the Bill—for, undoubtedly, it will demand very serious and somewhat prolonged consideration by the House if its terms are along the line stated in the public press. Though the item has stood on the Order Paper for eighteen days, we know no more about the Bill than we did on the 22nd of May last. And there are other government measures not yet before us. We understand that a measure is to be introduced with respect to the Hudson Bay Railway. That has not even been placed upon the Order Paper. Nor have we any means of judging what its terms may be. We were advised in the speech from the Throne that a measure is to be introduced with regard to the boundaries of Manitoba. But the House, up to the present time, is in complete ignorance what that measure may be. When hon. gentlemen on the other side suggest that the labours of the session should come to an end within five months, it would be well for them to bear in mind that if parliament had ended within that time, each of these three important measures could not have been brought before the House at all. And one, if not two of these measures, was mentioned in the speech from the Throne. It is hardly worth while to look at the matter from one standpoint alone, but we must bear in mind that the most important measures of the session are not yet before the House, nor does the House understand what their terms are to be.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). It is quite easy to see the effort made to-day, to cloud the issue which is now before the House and the country. The motive is quite transparent and the reasons also. We have been told on the floor of the House by members high and low on the opposition side that Supply would not be granted, the business of the House would be blocked, the aims of the government would be blocked, unless the government would drop clauses 1 and 17 of the Election Bill. It is easy to understand that this is the basis and motive of the opposition which we have had to carrying on the business of the country. Perhaps I may be permitted to say that, when we introduced the Election Bill, we received the criticisms made by gentlemen on the other side in no unfriendly spirit, not with any determination to force it down their throats willing or unwilling. We received their criticism, I believe, in a fair spirit, with an idea of improving the Bill, and meeting their criticism as far as we might. With regard to clause 1, the motives which have been attributed to us do not exist at all. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) stated that, as far as Quebec was concerned, the object was to have the votes of the aliens employed on the Transcontinental Railway on the lists. There is no such intention. We are willing to meet hon. gentlemen on the other side when this Bill is called up and discuss these questions on their merits and endeavour to meet their wishes as far as possible. We are told that section 17 is an attempt to interfere with the secrecy of the ballot. I have no desire to discuss the Bill, but I may be permitted to say that the effect of section 17 in the Bill as introduced is simply to provide that the honest elector who casts his vote shall not be disfranchised either by the accidental action of the deputy returning officer or, worse, by the wilful action of such officer.

The Bill does not provide more than that. But it may be that there are reasons why even this mild remedy should not be adopted in the public interest. We are willing to discuss that with our own friends to see whether the law should remain as it is, or whether it should be amended. We are willing to discuss whether it should be left in the power of the deputy returning officer to disfranchise any elector, or any ten or twenty electors, or whether the honest elector who casts his ballot should be responsible only for his own action and not made to suffer for the action of another man. But the question is not upon the Election Bill. The first duty of parliament is to vote Supply—and the question of the Election Bill and all other legislation is set aside. Generally, when parliament discusses legislation, the Supply is voted a year in advance, the machinery of government runs smoothly. But through the change that has taken place in the fiscal year, by which it ends on March 31, instead of June 30, the country has been left without Supply and the business of the government cannot be carried on. We did what is always done under such circumstances—for this has happened before—we applied to the opposition to give us one-quarter of the Supply covered by the resolutions before the House. We were not granted one-quarter, but we were granted one-eighth, which carried us up to about May 15. On May 15, a similar demand was made, but, up to the present time, it has not been granted. The first duty of the House, at the present time, therefore, is to see to it that the supplies are voted. If the Election Bill does not pass, if the Civil Service Bill does not pass, if the Hudson Bay Bill does not pass, the country still goes on—the public will be inconvenienced, some valuable improvements will be set aside, some valuable reforms will remain to be taken up another year, but the country will still go on. But the country cannot go on unless the creditors of the country are paid, unless the civil servants of the country get their salaries, unless the whole machinery of government is carried on—and this is what we are trying to effect at the present moment. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) says that we want the opposition to swallow these estimates holus bolus. No, we do not want anything of the kind. All legitimate criticism can be made, and ought to be made. But, for the last two or three weeks, what have we obtained from hon. gentlemen opposite? We have obtained the vote for the Post Office, the vote for the Customs and part of the vote for the Department of the Interior.

Mr. LAKE. And the Mounted Police.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. And the Mounted Police, also—certainly, there could be no criticism over that. These votes have taken two or three weeks' time. It is of no use to tell us that the opposition is facilitating the business. They may or they may not, just as they choose. But I have to point out to them that at the present time the duty of the government and the duty of the opposition is to see that the wheels of government are not clogged, that the King's government is carried on, that the public service is carried on, that the public servants and the creditors of the country are paid the money that is due them. If our friends opposite at the present time will give us what it is their duty to give us, there will be no difficulty whatever.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does the right hon. gentlemen mean by that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I mean to give us enough Supply to carry on the business of the government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Let me direct the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that since the 20th of May the voting of Supply has gone on at the rate of about a million dollars a day.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At the rate of a million dollars a day! And we were told on the floor of the House that if we would withdraw clauses 1 and 17 of the Election Bill the whole Supply would be voted in five minutes. I do not care whether you vote it at the rate of a million a day, or $500,000 a day; what I do care is that every day the government should have enough money at its disposal to carry on, not new projects, but the ordinary purposes which the government have to undertake as a matter of course every year. An hon. gentleman stated some time ago in this House that he was surprised that the government, with so large a majority, could not get Supply. That hon. gentleman surely must understand, and the whole country must understand, that under the rules governing parliamentary procedure. rules which we have adopted from Great Britain and of which we are all proud, every member of parliament has the right to speak and protect himself, the opposition have the right to protect themselves. At the same time, while the rules of parliament give the opposition power to protect themselves, and the right to speak, when the House is in Supply, once, twice, three time, four times, a hundred times, to take up the time of the House for a week, or a month or a year, the only limit which the opposition ought to recognize upon their privilege to speak is their own sense of what is reasonable and fair.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the right hon. gentleman suggest that during the time I have mentioned, the opposition have unduly criticised?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am surprised at the hon. gentleman's interruption. What else have they been doing?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I venture to say that during the ten days I have mentioned, more time has been taken up by the ministers than by the opposition.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I daresay, because the minister had to answer the questions put to him, not once, but twice, three times, again and again, and again; and after the minister had given his answer and his explanation to one hon. gentleman, the same question was repeated by some other hon. gentleman, and the same answer had to be repeated, and the same explanation given many times over. Under such circumstances we have been forced to speak much more often than we should have been. But I leave it to the common sense of my hon. friends on the other side, What else have they been doing but giving us Supply in driblets, while the time has been going on? But we have now come to a point when, not only the government, but the opposition must recognize that it is their duty to see that the business of the country is fairly carried on.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Dominion Lands—chargeable to income—commissioner's salary, $3,200; salaries of the outside service, $321,800.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why does not the Minister of Railways and Canals go on with his estimates for the Intercolonial?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Minister of Railways and Canals will be prepared to go on with his estimates to-morrow, I hope.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The reason I asked that was because we have been told that the members on this side of the House should be in their places attending to public business. If that is a practical observation as applied to private members, it is much more practical as applied to ministers of the Crown.

Mr. FIELDING. The ministers are here to-day. But the Minister of the Interior has taken up his estimates which, in the judgment of the government, are important.

Mr. FOWLER. We would like to have an explanation of this item.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The sum of $300,000 was voted last session for the fiscal year 1907-8. It was estimated that the sum of $325,000 would be required for the next year, an increase of $25,000. There are 362 employees to be paid out of this appropriation, and to cover their salaries for the twelve months, the sum of $320,760 will be required, leaving a balance of $4,330 to be used for increases to these clerks who will become entitled to the same during the twelve months ending March 31, 1909.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the commissioner?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. J. W. Greenway.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister mentioned that there were $4,000 required for increases in salaries, but that $325,000 was required. What does he propose to do with the other $20,000?

Mr. OLIVER. Since the last vote was submitted to parliament there have been a number of appointments to this service which will take up about $20,000 of the amount, leaving approximately $5,000 which will be available to pay the statutory increases or the increases which will be on all fours with the statutory increases of the inside service.

Mr. FOWLER. Were these appointments rendered necessary by increased work?

Mr. OLIVER. The work has increased and must necessarily increase from year to year. I had occasion to explain to the House, when the civil government estimates of the Department of the Interior were up, that although the number of homestead entries has not increased since last year, the increase in the number which took place three years ago is now bearing fruit in increased work in the department because of the work entailed by the inspection of homesteads, the recommendations for patents, and intermediate to these, the applications for cancellation. The taking of the homestead entry is the smallest part of the work connected with the land transaction. It is when we deal with the entry afterwards that the work accrues. Commencing five years ago, there was a very rapid increase of homestead entries from year to year, the number having risen from 10,000 to 20,000, to 30,000 and finally to 40,000 and it is due to this large increase that the work to-day is increasing in the department.

Mr. FOWLER. Are these additional officers principally homestead inspectors?

Mr. OLIVER. There are some additional homestead inspectors, but the requirements run through the whole list of the service. The inspection of a homestead is only one feature of the case. There are applications for extensions, for cancellations, for patents; there is an enormous amount of work that begins at the land office in the west and ends in the office here.

Mr. FOWLER. That means more clerical work then?

Mr. OLIVER. More clerical work as well as more outside work, such as the work of inspection.

Mr. FOWLER. Are the new clerks who have been taken on principally men or women?

Mr. OLIVER. The larger number are men, but there are a number of women.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand it, the expansion of a few years ago is of such a character that it entails a considerable increase in the work?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is why you are asking for this increase so far as it is not devoted to increases in the salaries of officers?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I call the hon. gentlemen's attention to the curious itemizing of his estimates in this respect? You have the huge item of salaries; I do not object to that There could be no object in the itemizing of salaries. Then you have an item of $100,000 for contingencies, the information in regard to which is of a very general character. Then you have protection of timber $100,000; the information in regard to this is also of a very general character. Then you come down to the salary of one carpenter, $914.50. It seems to me to be in curious contrast—huge items of a very general character and then one item for the salary of one special carpenter, $914.50. I do not understand it, although there may be consideration that make these large items necessary in special cases. The minister explained matters in that regard to my satisfaction the other evening. Would it not be possible with respect to an item like this to divide it up a little more without inconvenience to the public service.

Mr. OLIVER. It would be possible to divide the salary item up but it would be difficult to divide contingencies so that the item would be intelligible and at the same time applicable to the case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You may desire to have it general in order to have the money available for a purpose that may not be foreseen.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, for things that may not be foreseen. We know that the services will be required but we cannot tell how much will be required for each. As to this unfortunate carpenter's salary, he is not in any of the classifications that are covered by the general vote, and, of course as we are ground between the upper and nether millstone of parliamentary criticism and the Auditor General's check, we have to put his salary into the estimates in this way.

Mr. FOWLER. Is he at Banff or at Ottawa?

Mr. OLIVER. Ottawa.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems clear that he cannot be regarded as a contingency or he would not be by himself.

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. FOWLER. I notice that the vote for the protection of timber comes under this heading. Have you added a number of fire rangers or taken additional precautions for the protection of timber ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have added two forest rangers.

Mr. FOWLER. In what districts

Mr. OLIVER. One at Edmonton and another stationed at Sapperton, in the New Westminister district.

Mr. FOWLER. I would call the minister's attention to this very important feature ; that is the protection of forests, not only in British Columbia but in the Northwest. I think that the money expended for the purpose of protecting our forests from fire is money well spent, indeed, and I do not think at the present time the precaution taken is sufficient. I do not believe there are enough fire rangers provided in the west and, particularly since this new Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is going through different wooded sections of the country every precaution should be taken as you have the danger from natural causes in addition to the danger from the recklessness of the class of men who are employed upon these railways, who are very largely foreigners, who care nothing whatever for the interests of this country and who would be rather delighted in doing mischief of that kind just for the sake of seeing the flames arise. I think it is most important that the minister should look into that matter very closely and appoint the necessary number of fire rangers.

Mr. LAKE. I would like to ask what the policy of the minister is in regard to the filling of vacancies in the different land offices of the Northwest and in the outside service generally. I asked him a question the other day with regard to filling a vacancy at Edmonton and, from the answer he gave, I understand he brought a man in entirely from the outside, a gentleman who could not possibly have any knowledge of the details of the work and who would have to rely upon the juniors, the men whom he was going to supersede in that event, to coach him and make him familiar with the work that he was going to do. I do not know whether the same policy is being carried on in other parts of the Northwest, but I would imagine that it is an extremely bad thing for the whole outside service to let men labour under the impression that no matter how good their work is, they have no chance of appointment to the best positions going. I would like the minister to give us a general idea of what his policy is in regard to promotion in the outside service.

Mr. OLIVER. It is very hard to lay down a general policy that would not be chiefly known, like the rules of English grammar, by its exceptions. In the case mentioned, the appointment was made of a gentleman who had hitherto been outside the service but we believed that by reason of his opportunities he was able to bring into the service ability and advantages that no person whom we then had in the service at that point was able to bring, and we had need of all the men who might be presumed to be of equal standing at other points where they were employed.

I may say generally that while it is very desirable that employees in the land offices shall have accurate knowledge of the routine of the office and of the department generally, in as much as they are from day to day in immediate touch with the people for whose convenience and benefit these offices exist, it is even more necessary that the man at the head of the land office should have such standing and qualification as will be to his advantage in coming in contact with the public at large. We may be able to get men who are perfectly competent to transact clerical work, who can keep in touch with the routine of the office and of the department, who are in themselves in every way creditable persons, but who lack the knowledge of matters and things in the world outside that would enable them to deal satisfactorily with the general public and with the questions between the department and the general public which arise from day to day in those offices and the settlement of which questions is really the main duty of the land agent. Under these circumstances, while we have given due consideration to the possibilities of promotion from within the service, it would not be fair to the House or to the service to let it be understood that the principle of promotion was our leading principle in providing for the outside service. It is absolutely necessary that we should have men in touch with outside conditions and we cannot always depend upon meeting that requirement by promotions from the service. When occasion arises we have to do the best we can and take them from the outside.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. LAKE. At one o'clock the minister had been giving the reasons for bringing in men from the outside and putting them in good positions in the outside service over the heads of officials who had qualified themselves for those positions. The reasons which he gave were, to my mind, a considerable reflection on all the officials of the outside service. To say that men who are dealing with the public every day with regard to the special questions which come before their offices, who are thoroughly conversant with all the difficulties which arise in connection with those dealings, who understand how the ordinary run of questions are ordinarily dealt with, who know what questions can be decided locally and what questions have to be referred to headquarters—to say that these men are not as competent as anybody can be to deal with the usages of a land office is to my mind a reflection upon them. It is all the more of a reflection to say that they are not as competent as men brought in from the outside, with possibly no experience whatever of official life and having to learn all the duties after they come in. This must have an extremely bad effect on the members of the civil service. The Civil Service Commissioners in their report referred to the outside customs officers as men without hope. Unless the minister is careful, that will be the condition of members of the outside service of the Department of the Interior if this course is constantly pursued. Difficulties are inevitable in dealing with the many questions which come before these land officers if you bring in men without official training—men who are placed in those positions probably for services rendered to the party. However, much such men may wish to lay aside all partisan feelings in taking up a position of that sort, it would be impossible for them entirely to divest themselves of party feeling. Many cases have come to my notice in which I have been unable to avoid the feeling that local officials have allowed party bias to influence their judgment in dealing with the cases which came before them. I think that must inevitably be so if you bring in men without proper training for the positions which they are to occupy and who are being promoted for party services. The minister and his senior officials here may say honestly that they desire to administer the land laws without any bias or party favour, but if they are being served by men who are strong partisans I think they will find it impossible to prevent party bias from creeping into the service. When the minister was speaking of the Edmonton case, he spoke of there being no one on the spot as well qualified in his opinion as the man he brought in for the position of land agent there. It struck me that the first idea in his mind was that it was necessary to make a promotion of some one who happened to be in the land office at Edmonton. I think that would not be a good thing for the service. Where a man shows himself to have done his work well, it does not matter whether he happens to be in the particular suboffice where the vacancy occurs or not, and it should be possible for the minister to bring in the most efficient man he can find in the outside service to fill the position. Men should be encouraged to do their work well with the hope that if they do it properly they will be entitled to promotion at one time or another. I would like to ask the minister whether within the last couple of years he has brought in any others to take positions in the outside service who have not already been doing work in the service?

Mr. OLIVER. In establishing the new office at Moosejaw the gentleman who was appointed agent was from the outside. In the new office at Humboldt the agent appointed was from the outside. In the case of the Lethbridge office we promoted a man from the staff as agent. In the Regina office we also promoted a man from the staff. In each case we acted according to what we thought would give the best results in the public interest.

Mr. LAKE. In these other two cases I presume you had to bring in other officials to help the untrained officials put in as agents. What was the reason for the changes which took place in the Moosejaw office? I understood that another official had been appointed as agent and that after he had been doing his work for a short time the decision came that the office was to be closed, and then a further decision came that it was to be reopened again with the new officer in charge.

Mr. OLIVER. I think my hon. friend must be misinformed. The gentleman now in the office is the gentleman who was first appointed, and there has been no break in the business such as my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. HERRON. Has the minister any intention of opening the land office at Pincher Creek which was closed about a year ago? It is very desirable to have an office there. Our district is thirty miles away from the next subagency and there is a very large settlement extending in every direction. In my opinion there never was sufficient pay to induce a first-class man to keep the place. Would the minister not promise to reopen that office?

Mr. OLIVER. The reason of the resignation was that the salary paid was not sufficient. The agent was quite an efficient man and did very good work during a number of years. In fact he did so good work and so much of it that there did not remain sufficient to be done to warrant our paying him any increase of salary. A subagency is opened simply as a temporary convenience and does not at all replace the land agency. It is simply to enable people, who are not familiar with clerical work and have some difficulty in putting down upon paper their intentions, to get information from the subagent and deal with a person responsible to the agency. While it is our policy to open these agencies as the press of settlement renders them necessary, it is also our policy to close them when the need has passed ; and although I would not say that the need has altogether passed at Pincher Creek, yet when the agent saw fit to resign because his salary was not sufficient and when, because of the general settlement of the country, the need for a subagency had decreased, we did not feel called upon to reopen the office.

Mr. HERRON. The minister is aware that the settlers have to travel from Crow's Nest Pass all the way to Fort Macleod at present, which is a great inconvenience. Would the minister be disposed to continue the office at a salary of $25 per month ? Even at that price a suitable man might be found.

Mr. OLIVER. If we could get an efficient and reliable man to act as subagent, I think we would be willing to pay him the sum suggested, but of course, as the business is not as large as it was some years ago, there is not the same necessity for a subagent. If however we could get one satisfactory to us to do the work at a fair compensation, there would be no objection to reopening the office.

Mr. FOWLER. Does this cover the cost of the National Park at Banff ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, there is another item dealing with the park.

Mr. LAKE. With regard to the Moosejaw case, the statement was made in the papers that Mr. Plaxton had been appointed at Moosejaw, that after having had the office open some little time, the office was closed and the papers were packed up and sent to Regina. But after a week or ten days the boxes were returned from Regina unopened and sent to Mr. Plaxton by mistake. In the meantime another land agent had been appointed. Why was Mr. Plaxton dismissed and a new agent appointed ?

Mr. OLIVER. There was a subagency at Moosejaw and the business of that subagency increased so very rapidly, because Moosejaw is at the western fringe of settlement, that it became necessary to establish an agency there. A large proportion of the business of the Regina agency was transacted through the Moosejaw office. Mr. Plaxton was subagent at Moosejaw, and, as in the case of other subagents, we were not presumed to be paying him a salary for the whole of his time. He had other occupations and only worked for us as a convenience and advantage to the settlement in that direction. When we established a land agency, we appointed an agent and did not appoint Mr. Plaxton. There was no connection between the two positions.

Mr. LAKE. Am I to understand that Mr. Plaxton was not suspended?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. LAKE. And that his services were entirely satisfactory ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am under the impression there was no complaint. The trouble was that the volume of business became so great that it did not appear right and proper that it should be handled through a subagency.

Mr. LAKE. It seems to me that the proper man to appoint would be the man who had been carrying on the work of the subagency in a satisfactory manner and who had got in touch with the people. Another complaint was that the office was removed from a very convenient situation to one much less convenient to the public.

Mr. OLIVER. That is an error because there is very little difference between the location of the two. One was down a flight of stairs and the other is up a flight of stairs, and both are within a few doors of each other on the same street.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). How many subagencies were closed in Manitoba during the past year ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say at the moment.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Why was the subagency at Ranchville closed ?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend (Mr. W. J. Roche) asked the question in the House in the ordinary way, and, if I remember well, the answer was very much the same as I have given in the case of the question put by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) except that in that case the subagent had not resigned. We felt that the settlement of that part of the country had progressed to such an extent that it was not necessary to keep up the subagency. There is no doubt that the subagency is a very great convenience. But we have to draw the line somewhere ; the House would not justify us in establishing subagencies everywhere or in keeping them open everywhere they have been established. The subland agency is more particularly a convenience in the newly-settled sections. A great deal of the business to be transacted with the land office by old settlers can be transacted by letter, whereas entry must be made in person and the presence of the subagency enables the entry to be made by the settler in the vicinity of the land. So, there is a reason for the subagency in the new territory that does not exist in the case of an old-settled section.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). If the business had fallen off in this sub-agency, there would be force in what the minister has said. But I am informed that more business was done there last year than was done the year before. I know that the subagent has said—I have had no direct communication with him—that, judging by the business of 1907, there was more reason for maintaining the subagency than ever before. It was hardly necessary on the ground of economy to close the subagency. as the saving would be only $25 a month, I have had complaints from a number of the residents of the district concerning the closing of this office. A statement has been furnished me of the business of the office in February last. There were six entries for homesteads—proceeds $60—and implements, $15 ; three inspections were made ; there was one abandoned homestead, and there were thirty-two applications for patents. I think that this volume of business would compare favourably with that of any other subagency in Manitoba. Information with reference to the closing of this office has reached me as follows: The subagent, who in years gone by, was a very active politician, during the last provincial contest remained inactive. This did not please the Liberal candidate—who was defeated and who attributed his defeat not so much to the efforts of his political opponents as to the inactivity of the subagent. And it is no secret in that part of the country that this defeated candidate takes credit for having had this agent discharged because of his inactivity in the elections. If the information I have is correct, the business has not fallen off, but increased.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the committee will agree that the volume of business stated by the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. J. Roche) is hardly sufficient to justify the maintenance of this office. And, if this was an increase over that of previous months, I think it is pretty good evidence that instead of being wrong in closing the office when we did, if we had closed it sooner it would have been better in the interests of economy. But I admit that, once an office is established, it is difficult to get it closed. There is a certain amount of convenience to the public in having the office there, and there are always people who are offended and complain if it is closed. I do not wonder that there are complaints about the closing of this office any more than about the closing of the office at Pincher Creek. I have no hope of ever closing a subagency office without complaints being made, and yet I feel that we must close these offices from time to time as settlement progresses.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The nearest agency is in the town of Dauphin, and the land agency in my own town of Minnedosa has been closed. The people in the section to which I have referred must go across the Riding mountains to Dauphin, or must go round by way of Neepawa a couple of hundred miles, or else by way of Roblin on the Canadian Northern. These people south of the Riding mountains are very inconveniently situated to reach the present land office ; and I think I have shown that there was no good ground for closing this subagency.

Mr. LAKE. Before the Moosejaw question passes, will the minister please tell us what special experience had Mr. Smith before his appointment as agent ? And also, I would ask him whether the minister does not consider that it would be more in the public interest, if, instead of closing subland offices and taking away the business for a week or more, it would have been better to make the transfer on the spot ?

Mr. OLIVER. As to the office being closed down for a week or more, I can only say that it was an error. I do not know how it can be explained, but certainly it should not have been closed down for a week, whatever the explanation. As to the first question, I may explain that the agent's name is not Smith but Rutherford. I am not aware what experience he may have had with reference to land matters before he was made agent, but our experience of the conduct of that office since Mr. Rutherford's appointment has been eminently satisfactory. We believe we did not make any mistake in selecting either Mr. Rutherford or his staff. It may be to the credit of the staff, or it may be to the credit of the agent, but the office has been exceptionally well handled.

Mr. HERRON. When will the minister arrive at a policy with regard to forest reserve parks ? I have had some requests from men who wish to build hotels—temperance hotels, I may say——

Mr. OLIVER. What ?

Mr. HERRON. I say, requests from parties wishing to build hotels at Waterton lake. I understand from the people of the department that the government has not arrived at a policy on that subject. When will the minister be able to state when and how these men can get permits or privileges to build ?

Mr. OLIVER. As has been stated, we have hardly arrived at a definite policy in regard to these various reserves, because the conditions differ in each reserve. The particular matter to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Herron) refers came before me some time ago, and if any gentleman desires to establish a resort within the limits of that park, I do not think there will be any serious difficulty in our coming to an arrangement if they make a proposition—we can come to an arrangement for a lease of the ground for a term of years. The Waterton reserve, while, in terms, a forest reserve, is rather of the nature of a park, as it is reserved for park purposes rather than as a forest preserve. It completely surrounds with the Waterton lakes in the Rocky mountains and is eminently suited for a park.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. What new reserves have been made on the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains within the last year? I saw it stated in the newspapers in the west supporting the government that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) had said, at a meeting of the Forestry Association in Montreal, that all the east slope of the Rocky mountains from the national boundary to the northern limits of the country had been set aside as a forest reserve. Has the government made up its mind as to that?

Mr. OLIVER. There must be some error somewhere, there has been no such reservation. There is of course the Waterton reservation.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the size of that?

Mr. OLIVER. One or two townships. It is an old reservation set apart many years ago, and was never withdrawn from the departmental reservation. Then there is the Banff Park reservation, and there is also a large reservation at the Jasper House on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That is about fifty miles in length from the southeast to the northwest, and extends from the foothills to the summit of the mountains. It will not be as large as the Banff park in area, because the Banff park, in its northeasterly portion, extends out far beyond the foothills of the Rockies. The railway will intersect it at about the centre. These are the only reservations that have been made on the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains. But at some future time further reservations may be made.

Mr. HERRON. How many forest rangers are employed along the foothills from the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway near Banff to the boundary line—and I would like their names.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. W. I. Margach, with headquarters at Calgary, has charge of the timber business between Calgary and the boundary line. He has the necessary authority to appoint fire rangers at $4 a day whenever, in his judgment, there is danger from fire. He authorizes them to take such measures as may be possible to guard against fire. I have not a list of those fire guardians who are employed in that part of the country. They are merely temporary.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). What check, if any, has the government upon these forest rangers as to the work they do, and the number of days they are employed? I understand that those employed on the Riding Mountains timber reserve are paid $4 a day. Is there any particular time of the year in which they are supposed to do this work?

Mr. OLIVER. The timber inspector who authorizes their employment, that is to say, who calls them out for service, checks their diary and certifies to their accounts. They keep a diary for the time they are out. Whenever the timber inspector thinks it is desirable that, in certain parts of the country, there should be one or more fire guardians on duty, he warns them out. They are local men. Of course he has a note of the day when they are supposed to start out. They keep a diary of their operations until they return. He examines these, and certifies to their accounts.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Do they send in any reports?

Mr. OLIVER. We get our reports from the inspector who sends these men out. We do not get individual reports from the fire rangers in the head office. They come to the local land office and are dealt with there.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The minister speaks about their being local men. I could understand why it is necessary to have local men. But I am aware of at least one man who cannot be considered a local man. He lives in a town at least fifteen or twenty miles from the nearest part of the Riding mountains. I looked up his account, and I find that last year he put in an account for 112 days. I do not know when he could get in those 112 days, because for months at a time he is never outside of the town, and the impression is that there is very little work secured by the government for the $4 a day.

Mr. OLIVER. What is his name?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). His name is Armitage. You will find it on L—77.

Mr. OLIVER. It is in the nature of things that there may be abuses in the method by which we carry on this business, but I do not know how we can check it down any better than we are doing. It will be admitted that it is not desirable that men should be on pay all the year round for a work of this kind. In some years there is a great deal of necessity for their services, and in other years there is no necessity at all. I think the only thing we can do is to keep a watch for abuses, and to remedy them whenever we find any to exist.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the German system?

Mr. OLIVER. The German system would not be applicable to the conditions under which we employ these men of whom I am speaking. That is to say that the men simply go out into the Crown lands and do what they can to prevent the starting or suppress the spread of fire.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you have a statutory declaration made by the ranger ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think so.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you not think it would be an additional check if he were to make a statutory declaration as to the distance he travelled and what he did ?

Mr. OLIVER. I think that is a very reasonable proposition, I will take it into consideration.

Mr. STAPLES. How many acres of school lands were sold in Manitoba last summer and how much money was realized from the sale ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the information at hand but I will obtain it.

Mr. STAPLES. Is there any definite time mentioned during which these sales shall be advertised and how they shall be advertised ?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no time laid down in the law, as far as I am aware, but there is a custom which is followed with regard to the time and place of advertising and I do not think that custom has been deviated from.

Mr. STAPLES. Who was the auctioneer last summer in Manitoba ?

Mr. OLIVER. My memory is that most of the sales were conducted by Mr. Norris.

Mr. STAPLES. Is the minister not aware that Mr. Ingram sold probably as much as Mr. Norris ?

Mr. OLIVER. Where the sales were not on a large scale I believe Mr. Ingram did make them. In order to ensure, in so far as we can ensure it, the sale to the highest bidder and a fair opportunity to every one to bid, the auctioneer should be under the control of the department. Mr. Ingram is a salaried official of the department who is particularly concerned in the school lands and we have thought that where the sale is not on such a large scale as to require additional assistance Mr. Ingram can very well act as auctioneer. We think that his position is such that we can feel assured that the work will be done fairly. But where the sale is on a larger scale, where Mr. Ingram will be needed to keep track of the books and where we have to employ an auctioneer we think it is better to employ only one auctioneer, a gentleman whom we think we can depend on and who may look forward to further employment if his work is satisfactory. I think we have employed Mr. Norris in a very large majority of cases.

Mr. STAPLES. Are these lands put up at the request of any particular persons or under what circumstances are they advertised ?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, the province is always glad to have the lands sold provided they are likely to bring a fair price. The decision as to their being offered for sale is arrived at by the Department of the Interior, opportunity being taken of the construction of railways and the settlement of the country concerned when we think that the land has reached, if not its maximum value, at any rate a fair value.

Mr. STAPLES. How is the auctioneer paid ?

Mr. OLIVER. He is paid by commission except that the amount must not be more than $200 on any one sale.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Did the government sell any land at Fort Saskatchewan last November ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I am informed there was no sale. There was a sale advertised, but the upset price was higher than the people seemed inclined to pay so that the sale was abortive.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The reason I asked that question is that I remember reading a report in one of the western papers to the effect that there was a sale advertised to take place at Fort Saskatchewan and the objection was urged that it was a very inopportune time for such a sale to take place, in the midst of the financial stringency when people generally would not be in a position to bid and also there was a misconception as to where the lands were situated. They were believed to be in the town site of Fort Saskatchewan, when, as a matter of fact, the lands were, I am informed, two miles out. The sale would have had the effect of reducing the price of lands and there was very strong objection to the sale taking place at that time, the general belief being that the bidding would be confined to a few favoured individuals.

Mr. OLIVER. The sale did not take place. In answer to the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples) I may say that the area of school land sold in Manitoba year was 102,761.70 acres and the price realized was $1,063,157.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. I find the statement to which I referred the hon. Minister of the Interior some time ago about the announcement of the hon. Minister of Agriculture at the meeting of the Dominion Forestry Association, held in Montreal on March 12. The 'Calgary Morning Albertan' says :

Montreal, March 12.—The important announcement was made by the Hon. Sydney

Fisher at the Dominion Forestry Convention here to-day that the Dominion government had decided to set aside the whole eastern slope of the Rocky mountains forest area as forest reserve extending clear from the boundary to the extreme northern limit of the country. This vast region, he stated, would be kept free from settlers and held for forest growth which would be cut from time to time under such strict regulations as would preserve it for all time as a forest reserve for the west. The announcement was received with hearty cheers by the delegates.

That statement received a great deal of prominence throughout the press of Canada and I can hardly understand how it is that the Minister of Agriculture would be so reported if he did not make it. The impression has gone broadcast through the west that this was going to be done. Has the matter been discussed or is the minister at liberty to tell the committee if it has been under consideration? I understand that some ten years ago there was a reservation along the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains and that it was subsequently thrown open, I am given to understand, on the advice or suggestion of the Minister of the Interior. Apparently the Minister of Agriculture must have had some authority for making that statement because we could hardly suspect that he would force himself upon the Department of the Interior and make any such statement as that when there was no foundation for it.

Mr. OLIVER. I think there must be some misunderstanding. For instance in one point the Minister of Agriculture is quoted as saying that it was the intention of the government to make a reservation along the whole eastern slope of the Rocky mountains from the boundary line to either the northern part of Alberta or of the Dominion. My hon. friend is aware that the slope of the Rocky mountains after a certain point is not under the jurisdiction of this government but of the government of British Columbia. As to the fact of their being a general reservation, such as my hon. friend has mentioned, I understand there was some suggestion of such a reservation but I did not understand that it was ever made.

Mr. FOWLER. It is another instance of the Minister of Agriculture butting into some one else's department. He has not fared as well in this case as in the Militia Department, because the Minister of the Interior does not propose to back up his statement in regard to this reservation.

Mr. OLIVER. It is a matter between the Minister of Agriculture and the newspapers, not between the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. FOWLER. It shows conclusively that the Minister of the Interior proposes to run his own department.

Mr. FOSTER. The matter is important in two ways. I remember distinctly the announcement having been made at a great meeting in Montreal by the Minister of Agriculture, and I remember that all the newspapers heartily approved of the idea of what they thought to be, from the minister's statement, an accomplished fact, namely the reservation of the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains. It is strange indeed that the Minister of Agriculture should go to Montreal and before a very representative gathering from every part of the Dominion make that authoritative statement on behalf of the Dominion government and then, three or four months afterwards, when we come to question the Minister of the Interior who has it in charge he says that no such thing has been done and if I understand him rightly that no such thing has been discussed with any practical idea of carrying it out at the present time. That is a very reprehensive proceeding on the part of one minister of the government and, as my friend has just said, it is not the first time that the Minister of Agriculture seems to have spoken very recklessly and entirely apart from the record. If it was not done, it certainly was in harmony with all the resolutions passed during the last ten years by the forestry meetings, and by what we may call in Canada the authorities on forestry. I remember that in this House not long ago a speech was made by my hon. friend the ex-Minister of the Interior in which he took up as one branch of this subject the question of forest reserves and showed the immense importance of having forest reserves made and made quickly so that there should not be any longer delay. He was good enough to refer at that time to some remarks made in the House some months before on the same subject, and I understood that the government and the Minister of the Interior very heartily subscribed to those ideas as they were brought out in the general discussion in the House. If the minister has done nothing it rather goes to support what was said in the debate in the House some four months ago that whilst information has been 'being gathered' and while the statements have been favourable to such a policy the Dominion government is letting year after year pass practically without doing anything. Of course it is of no use to have forest reserves unless the government at the same time go in for a system of preserving the water flow of the country as well, that is setting apart the reservoir sites so that the waters which would otherwise be wasted in overflows might be preserved and be made very useful in the later time when the water was more necessary. The minister knows very well that the United States government has spent millions of money and inaugurated a really wonderful policy in that direction taking hold of the forest slopes and of the arid regions and by a system of water dams or reservoirs really turning millions of acres, formerly arid and of no use, into very eligible lands which they are selling at a large advance and out of which they will recoup themselves for all the expenses they have gone to and more. But what is of more importance is that at the same time they are keeping the forest reserves and turning arid lands into splendid agricultural lands and thus filling up the country with a very eligible population who go to these lands and do small farming in a tidy and intensive way, making themselves the best producing citizens in the agricultural line.

The minister to-day tells us that there are only three reserves, one of them the Banff, which we have had ever since we remember anything almost in our Northwest history, then this little picayune Waterton one, a township or a township and a half which really can hardly be called a reservation and the other one intersected by the National Transcontinental Railway. Those are the three at the present time and that is all we have. Does the minister not think that this is one of the most important questions that could engage the attention of his department and does he not think that most valuable time is passing while he is doing nothing? Is there not the possibility that the timber areas and water supplies will have passed into the hands of private parties before the government inaugurates a comprehensive policy of reserves? The minister comes from the west and knows that there is nothing which so agitates the people of that country and will agitate them as this very question. I read a most striking statement by Professor Robertson not more than three weeks ago in which he really called a halt to this self-glorification in which we have been indulging as to the mighty things we are doing in the west. He pointed out that we are in reality doing nothing in the west except shearing the fleece off and making no return or preparation for subsequent growth, that there is nothing like intensive farming and really no proper guarding of the reserves in water, forests and coal; but that we are simply taking all that comes in sight and laying up no reserve force for a rainy day. That process has taken place in the United States and the United States government has only recently, under President Roosevelt, taken up that large and broad system of reserves and of bringing in to the assistance of nature, nature's forces, which heretofore have been allowed to go to waste or to become destructive.

Now, we in Canada cannot commence too soon in that business. The fertility of our Northwest depends on our taking care of our forest reserves and looking after our resources of moisture. In the southern states and throughout the western states the immense losses from sudden overflows are year after year becoming more and more onerous, and men who give their attention to the subject point out that these losses arise very largely from the denudation of the forest areas. We cannot commence at this work too early; yet I am afraid that the minister is pottering around on non-essentials instead of giving full force to this very important consideration. Some one persuades him to build out here a sort of castle of Chillon in which to immure fifteen or sixteen astronomers who will try to discover a new ring around a planet or the tail of a comet in some far-off nebula. $150,000 has gone into that venture; but $150,000 put into this other matter would yield greater results to this country, and the stars might be allowed to cavort around a little longer without being subjected to the inspection of peering eyes. A man comes to a minister with a telegram, and we build a mint, and spend $600,000 on it; and now we have the mint, and we shall have the loss for ever and a day. In the meantime our western country is crying out for the preservation of those things which are essential to its growth and its continued prosperity. The minister is not doing much, though he is doing something. He takes particular trouble to secure a herd of three or four hundred buffalo at immense expense. It is nice to have the buffalo, but they will not form water reservoirs or keep the forest tracts of the country where they should be. All these things have their proper place, but it seems to me that if we neglect this matter of forest preservation, we neglect the greater thing while bestowing a great deal of pains and cost upon subsidiary things.

Mr. OLIVER. A mistake has possibly arisen from confusing the two words reservation and preservation. There is not much difference in the words themselves, but there is a vast difference in the meaning of the words.

Mr. FOSTER. One is necessary to the other, isn't it?

Mr. OLIVER. That is where my hon. friend and I do not altogether see alike. My hon. friend seems to think that reservation is preservation. I do not think that it is necessarily so. With regard to the preservation of the forest areas along the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains, I would not wish my hon. friend to suppose that the subject has not been considered; but it has been considered with this in view, that we have a Forest Reserve Act passed with a view to certain conditions, and we find that the conditions prevailing along the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains are such as hardly to make it advisable to apply the provisions of that Act along the whole slope. We have there deposits of coal of stupendous amount and value; but they are of no value unless they are operated, and the purpose of the government is, so far as it has any connection with the matter, to secure their operation to the limit. We want as much of them as possible operated as soon as possible. I think I am safe in saying that that is the view taken by the government.

Mr. FOSTER. As much as is necessary for the country's need.

Mr. OLIVER. As much as is possible to be operated; because we believe that we have coal to spare to all the world, and that the operation of these coal measures for an outside market would add greatly to the wealth and prosperity of our country and not do ourselves any harm. If the little country of England, with its stupendous population and its stupendous industrial requirements, all dependent on the use of coal, as ours are not, owing to our waterpowers, can afford to ship coal to all the world that will buy it—and it is as a matter of fact shipped to all the world, even to its most remote corners—we in Canada, with a coal supply in comparison with which that of the British Isles is insignificant, can very well afford to take the same view and make what money we can out of our coal as opportunity offers. That is at any rate my personal view at the present time. The application of our Forest Reserves Act and its limitations to the area to which we look for the operation of our coal measures would be a clash of interests. It would interfere with the operation of our coal measures and the general industrial development along the base of the Rocky mountains. That, however, does not exclude a policy of forest preservation or of reforestation with a view to preserving both the water supply and the supply of timber. With this explanation my hon. friend will see that there is not so very much difference between the statement as it appears in the newspaper and the statement I presented to the House. As I said a few moments ago, the hon. gentleman seems to think that reservation is preservation. On that point I want to take very direct issue with him. We must give opportunity for the investment of capital and the application of energy, enterprise and intelligence in the turning to account of our natural resources, or our natural resources are worth nothing to anybody. They are not worth reserving or preserving unless there is capital and intelligence and energy and opportunity to a reasonable degree to turn them to account. In the United States at the present time and under present conditions, with the stupendous development of population, of wealth, of industry which has taken place in that country, after having shorn the fleece of 99-100 of its value, they may very well turn round and adopt a policy of preservation, or reservation if you like, in regard to the balance. The time has come when that may very well be a leading policy of the government of that country. Had that policy been adopted when the United States had only a population of 5,000,000 people, had it been then announced that there would be a policy of reservation for the sake of preserving the natural resources of that country throughout all its vast area, we would have had to wait several thousand years for the development that has taken place. There has been a waste, if you like to call it so, of the natural resources of the United States, but there has been there the most phenomenal development the world has ever seen; and I am under the impression that, for the present at any rate, while we should have due care for the preservation of our natural resources, we should also see that there is ample opportunity for the employment of capital and labour in the development of those resources and in turning them to account as contributions to the wealth and prosperity of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. At the risk of taking up a few moments more I want to put another view. I do not agree with my hon. friend in the main. I still hold that reservation is absolutely necessary for preservation. I do not mean that the government should stretch its hand over every bit of natural resources we have and lock them up from any private or corporate development. That would be the climax of absurdity. But if you are going to preserve a sufficient amount of our natural resources, you have to begin now. Suppose you give to every corporation and individual with capital to invest all our natural resources, suppose you hurry to put every bit into their hands, what will you have for the state? Now is the time for the government to decide what it ought to reserve and reserve that portion. My hon. friend says, speaking of coal, that the government cannot make these reservations because there are coal areas upon them. But it is quite possible to reserve your coal areas and administer them as they ought to be administered. I do not think it should be the policy of any government to get as many of those coal areas as possible into the hands of capitalists. These are the country's own resources and the country has a perfect right to their usufruct. As they belong to the people, the people have the right to parcel them out as they please with the object of letting the people have at least its fair share of the profits. It is not necessary to give capital all the profit from these areas in order to have them developed. Mr. Whitney did not take that view, and his policy has been of great advantage to the province of Ontario. Under the old policy, the mining areas were sold at $3 an acre. Whoever applied for them and complied with the conditions got them at that rate. Mr. Whitney reserved, however, certain portions of the Cobalt area absolutely to the government and allowed no prospecting upon them. He had them prospected himself, through the government officers, and there is not the least doubt that there is a patrimony stored up in those reservations of millions and millions of dollars which will ultimately go into the treasury of Ontario. Is not that the proper policy? But if my hon. friend's contentions were carried out, Mr. Whitney would sell these areas at $3 an acre in order to bring in capital for the development. Take Cobalt Lake, for instance; there was supposed to be beneath the lake, which is 25 to 40 feet in depth, mineral leads of different qualities, because all along the sides these leads had been prospected. If the old government had been in office, under its policy the 40 acres would have been sold for $120. But Mr. Whitney did not do that. He put them up for sale and tender and he got $1,087,000. And there was no difficulty in getting capital to come in. My hon. friend asked what would the United States have been if they had adopted such a policy? Why, the wealth of the United States people would be to-day immeasurably greater than it is if thirty or fifty years ago they had reserved a proper portion of their natural resources in timber lands, coal lands and mineral lands and had kept them until the present to be operated by corporations or private parties or the state as they might think best. And the one thing which the best people in the United States deplore to-day in connection with this great question of capital and labour—the few rich and the many poor—is the improvidence of the state in having put too much its great natural resources into private hands instead of keeping them for the public good and giving the people their share of the profits. My hon. friend is anxious to get the coal areas in the Northwest opened up so that we may export our coal into every country in the world. I do not think that any well-wisher to the people is anxious for such consummation. He says that Great Britain has been exporting its coal a century and more. So it has, but to-day the British people are up against a coming failure of their fuel supply, and before many years you will find the people of England very chary of selling for export the only available fuel reserves they have. Canada is supposd to exist for more than a hundred years, for more than twenty-five centuries, and I am not at all anxious that we should too rapidly use up our coal reservations in the Northwest by sending out our coal to every country in the world in order to realize immediate profit. Our great natural resources are as much a national defence as the arms which we put into the hands of our soldiers. In this great competition between nation and nation, when coal is the only fuel we have left, the last thing in the world that Canada should do is to denude itself of its coal areas. If we should, future generations will curse the policy which disembowelled the earth of its fuel resources and distributed them to strangers for the sake of the little profit obtained at the time.

I believe that a country has just as good a right to defend itself by keeping its great coal area to itself, and its pulpwood and timber to itself—for the same remark applies to these—as it has to engage in any other defensive measure. Why should we hurry and rush to get our timber cut down and exported in exchange for a small sum of money, when, for centuries to come, our own people in increasing numbers will want timber? Rather we should regard this as a fund held in trust for the whole of Canada for the whole of the future, and we should make it a policy that not one stick of timber shall be taken off without making sure that another is growing to replace it. Reforestation rather than a spendthrift destruction for export of these natural resources should be the policy of the country. I invite my hon. friend to think over these things in the night watches, to consider what I have said and see if he cannot revise his opinion, and, by all means, get a hustle on and reserve these water resources, timber resources and mineral resources as far as proper. One thing more I would like to ask him: Is he taking any steps in regard to the large forest areas that have already gone into private hands, so as to have regulations made by which these forests shall be perpetually kept up? They have been granted, and for a song, and it will add, of course, to the value of the grant if the government makes regulations which make the supply perpetual; but the country has so great an interest in the matter that I would rather see this than see it left in the hands of these speculators to denude these areas of their timber. I think the minister ought, with all the wisdom there is in his department, to give his attention to how it is possible to preserve every acre of timber and prevent it being denuded, keeping it as a perpetual producer for the benefit of the people of this country, even though the benefit inures directly to the individuals who, at the present time, are the fortunate possessors.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has placed a proposition before the House, as it appeals to my mind, of having you cake and eating it. I do not think he has been able to make clear how that end is to be arrived at. He said that, if the United States fifty years ago, had adopted a policy of reservation in regard to its natural resources, that country would have been vastly richer to-day. We cannot tell what would have been the case had a certain policy been adopted fifty years ago. But I submit that the most valuable asset of the United States—admitted in all the rest of the world and admitted in the United States as well—is the individuality, the energy, the enterprise, the industry of the people of the United States. And, had it been the policy of the government of the United States at any stage of the history of that country—a policy which, of course, would have been impossible in the temper of the people—to put up the bars against the exercise of the energy, enterprise and inventive spirit of the people there could not have been the development, the prosperity, the success that there has been. It is because the forests have been cut down, it is because the earth has been 'disembowelled of its coal' and of its iron, it is because these natural resources have been turned to the uses of man that the United States is as it is to-day. Take the case of Ontario, this very country. Given conditions as they are on the continent of America to-day outside of the province of Ontario, and the province of Ontario would be more valuable if it were covered with the trees with which it was covered a hundred years ago than denuded of its trees as it is to-day. But had the province of Ontario and the rest of the continent remained covered with trees during all these years, there would have been no value in the province of Ontario to-day. You must give opportunity to the application of energy, intelligence, enterprise and industry, or you have no value. What I am trying to impress upon the minds of hon. members is that the natural resource has not, of itself, any value, it is made of value by the application of the energy, intelligence and industry of man in supplying the needs of man—in that way and in no other. There is a time coming—it has no doubt come in the history of the United States, and it is coming in the history of Canada—when there will be a sufficient aggregation of accumulated wealth and of population and of surplus energy, for a policy of reservation and preservation and special care of the natural resources that remain to be entered upon. But I submit that the fact that this time has arrived in the history of the United States is no evidence that it has arrived in the history of Canada. It is, however, a fact that we should be unworthy of our position if we did not learn by the experience of others. Recognizing what has taken place there, we may recognize also what has been done to couple preservation with enterprise, and that is the object of our policy at the present time. We hope to achieve a reasonable measure of preservation of our natural resources so that they may be turned to useful account, but it is not to the degree suggested at any rate by my hon. friend a policy of reservation that would prevent them being turned to account by the energy, enterprise and industry of our people. To get away from generalities, and to deal now with matters of more detail, speaking of our policy in regard to coal, under the regulations by which the coal lands of the west are administered at the present time, we do not contemplate the alienation of these areas except on condition that they shall be operated.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is the present policy ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Within what time must they be operated ?

Mr. OLIVER. Within a year from notice given by the government.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. On lease.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, and the lease is conditioned upon their being operated within a year from notice given by the government. That is the point I want to show—the difference between reservation and preservation, between reservation and development. We are not handing out—as I think my hon. friend suggested—the coal areas of the country to private hands; we are holding them in the hands of the government until the time arrives when they can be worked at a profit. And then our policy is that the opportunity shall be there to the firstcomer, the first man who is prepared to take them over upon the terms upon which we offer them, which terms involve their operation.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you increased the size of the area that may be given to one individual under the new system of leasing instead of selling ?

Mr. OLIVER. Our regulations do not provide for granting more than four sections to one individual, but they do provide that several individuals may combine their interests. When we sold, we only sold half-sections.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the form of lease you adopt, is there a certain ground rental and a royalty ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. The ground rent is $1 an acre a year ; the royalty is five cents a ton.

Mr. FOSTER. Can that be raised by the government ?

Mr. OLIVER. I think not during the terms of the lease.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any system of computation as to acreage payment and royalty payment ?

Mr. OLIVER. A coal lease is available to the first comer who will accept it on the conditions. We place a ground rent upon the land so that there will be no inducement to any one to hold it unless he operates it, and the condition of operation is a condition of the lease, upon notice being given. In regard to timber, the condition is somewhat different from that imposed in regard to coal. It is possible that for one reason or another the supply of timber within a section of country may at some future period become exhausted. It is also to be remembered that the timber supply may be renewed while the coal supply cannot. Therefore it is proper that any policy dealing with the disposition of the timber should have as a part of that policy the reproduction of the forest. That is, I may say, a part of the policy of this government, although not yet developed as highly as we hope it will be at some later time. But there are many things to learn in regard to this matter. We have not yet been able to form a scientific system with regard to the widely varying conditions prevailing over our vast territory. We may be going too slowly, but we have to consider the public purse, and we do not like to ask for large sums until we feel that we can assure parliament that we are going to get value for the expenditure. The timber which is under the control of the Dominion government, I may say, is but a comparatively small part of the total timbered area of Canada. Under the previous regulations the principle was the same as that which prevails in regard to coal, that is to say, that the first comer got it on application, subject of course to sale by tender. But now we hold practically the whole of our timber under reservation, and we only offer it for sale when we are satisfied that the public interest requires it. That is an important difference between the former system and the present one. Formerly our timber was open to the first applicant. We did not have to put it up, it is true, but our practice was that the timber was offered to the first applicant. Now we advertise it to the world when we think that the public interest will best be served by putting up any part of it. This system actually places the timber under reservation.

In regard to the reproduction of the forests, or the reforesting of the present forest area, let me say that while the forest is valuable and while the reproduction of the forest is valuable, the land is also valuable for agriculture. Where there is an area of country that to-day is covered by mercantable timber that is required for the use of the people and when that timber is cleared off the land is valuable for farming purposes, it is a question whether we would be warranted in all cases in insisting upon the reforesting of the area cut off. It is no secret that the Dominion of Canada, in its stupendous area, is not all fertile. We have, it is true, vast areas that are fertile; but I do not think I can be charged with decrying the country when I say that there are also vast areas that are not suitable for agriculture, but which, in many cases, are covered by timber and in some cases by timber of great value. Now under these circumstances if there are immense areas of country covered by timber the land of which is of agricultural value when the timber is cleared off, it would be a fair proposition to say that we should limit our efforts at reforestration to some extent at least, to those areas that are not valuable, or less valuable for agricultural purposes. That is the policy of the government. There is in the railway belt of British Columbia where the greater part of the timber supply is situated which is under the control of this government, very limited areas of most valuable agricultural land which is to-day covered by timber of great value. There is, however, in that same area a very large proportion of the land covered by timber, which land is of much less agricultural value. My view is that when the timber is cleared off land that is of especial agricultural value, we should not undertake to reforest it. At the same time we should have a well defined and aggressive policy of reforestation, and I will be glad to bring before the House such a policy as soon as we have information at hand, and are able to present to the government a system that we would be warranted in asking the House to support. I wish to confine our efforts at reforestation to the vast area in the railway belt which is of lesser value for agricultural purposes. The same policy will be applied to the three prairie provinces. Where the land is not suited for agricultural purposes it may be very well adapted to reforestation, but where it is suited for agriculture it seems to me that the greater value is achieved by employing it for purely agricultural purposes because, after all, there is plenty of land capable of producing timber and good timber that is not of great value for agricultural purposes.

Mr. FOWLER. There is a distinction between the different classes of natural resources which illustrates the difference between reservation and preservation. Timber is a natural resource that reproduces itself while mineral is a natural resource that does not reproduce itself. Therefore, where we have a natural resource which reproduces itself preservation will meet the full requirements of the case without any general system of reservation. If proper regulations are enacted governing the cutting of timber there is no question whatever, that, if you provide a proper fire guarding system, the present supply of timber in the country will be maintained throughout the years that are to come. But, it is important that there should not only be proper regulations with regard to the cutting of timber, but that these regulations should be stringently enforced. Having had some experience with regard to timber, I see no objection whatever to the leasing of the timber limits of the country under proper conditions. The difficulty has been in the United States that the men who have been engaged in the lumber business have thought only of the present and have, in taking out the larger timber, destroyed the smaller growth which eventually would make the larger timber and the fact that in the United States there is not a very great timber supply has made it necessary for them to adopt a general reforestation system. I think that at the present time in this country it is not necessary and it will not be necessary if we adopt and carry out proper regulations for the preservation of timber. Therefore, I am to a considerable extent of the same view as that which the minister has expressed with regard to the timber supply of the country. I think, that the minister should apply himself to the working out of a proper system of regulations. The regulations we have, in fact, at the present time, are not so bad if they are properly carried out and I think that this question of the timber supply and of the water supply, consequent upon the forest being maintained, will not be a serious question for at least many years to come in this country.

In so far as the coal in the west is concerned, I do not think we need, for many years to come, have a great deal of fear about exhausting the supply. I would be glad to see every ton of coal that is produced in this country used for the production of manufactures so that we would not be shipping out one ton of coal and so that it would not be shipping out a natural product but a product in its manufactured state. But, under the conditions as they are at present, that is not possible and therefore I do not think it would be advisable for us to enact legislation which would prevent coal owners from shipping to foreign countries. We hope the time will come when we can employ all our coal at home because it is a great advantage to us if we can use all our iron, coal, and limestone in the manufacture of steel and iron, but at the present time, I think it would be a suicidal policy for us to say that no coal shall be exported. On the coast of British Columbia the tremendous amount of labour which is employed to-day in the mining of coal, because the coal owners are allowed to ship south when they have no coal, would be turned out of employment if legislation of that sort were enacted. I think that the present policy is an excellent one, that the coal areas should no longer be absolutely alienated but that they should be leased, the Crown retaining control. I think that policy is all right. Perhaps it is not well that there should be an absolute figure fixed for the royalty which cannot be increased. I think that the government should have the power to make a general increase in the royalty. Again, on that question of royalty it does seem to me that the ease or difficulty with which the mine can be operated ought to have some effect upon the amount of royalty which a man should pay because it has a great effect upon the profit that would be produced from a mine and there should be a sliding scale. I can understand how difficulties might creep in and how favouritism might be used in this case but it seems to me that a distinction should be made, that a sliding scale should be adopted.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I would like to ask the minister if he has received many applications for the leasing of coal lands under the new regulations?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give the number. We have not had nearly as great a demand for leases as we have had for purchases, but still we have had a very considerable demand. I will give the figures later.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. With regard to the regulations governing the leasing of coal lands, my opinion is that it would be utterly impossible to get coal lands in the Northwest leased under these regulations because of their stringency. Every one knows that in coal mining, a large amount of capital is required and if you say to a man: You can have these coal lands, but you must agree to operate them, to pay a royalty and to give up your lease at the expiration of twenty-one years, you lay down conditions that will make it utterly impossible to get these coal lands taken up and operated. Twenty-one years in the life of a coal mine is nothing at all.

Mr. FOWLER. The leases are renewable?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. The regulations do not say so. It is entirely at the option of the Governor in Council.

Mr. GALLIHER. It is the usual way.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. It is the usual way, but we have to take what they say. A man will not make a large investment if he can only have a lease of coal lands for twenty-one years. The business is one which requires hundreds and thousands of dollars and in my opinion it will be utterly impossible to get the coal lands operated.

Mr. FOSTER. The timber leases are only from year to year; yet they are considered to be perpetual.

Mr. OLIVER. One of the objections that our hon. friends opposite take to the present leases is that there is a provision made that on the fulfilment of certain conditions which are set out the lease will continue so long as there is timber on the limit.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I do not think there is any such provision with regard to coal mining leases.

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I have consulted men who have been operating mines on Vancouver Island with reference to extending their business to the Northwest and they have refused to take any interest in these coal areas under the present regulations. As to the contention of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) with reference to the reservation of coal lands, if that were carried out we would not have any coal mined in British Columbia to-day. The principle laid down by the hon. gentleman was that we should simply hand over coal areas in proportion to the demand of the home market. The British Columbia coal mines have developed simply on account of the foreign market which they supplied. Seventy-five per cent of the production of coal in British Columbia to-day is depending on a foreign market. Not a dollar would have been invested in coal mining in British Columbia had it not been that the capitalists who went into these ventures knew that they had a market in the United States. The development of the Crow's Nest Pass mines proceeded upon the assumption that their principal market was in the United States. Of the coal of Vancouver Island for many years 98 per cent found a market in the United States. If the principle advocated by my hon. friend were carried out it would be impossible to operate mines. By operating mines you increase your home market. As a matter of fact within six or eight years in Vancover Island the home market for coal has increased from 10 per cent to 50 per cent; half of the coal of the island is going into the home market by reason of the development of British Columbia, especially the Pacific coast. According to the principle of my hon. friend the coal will have to remain there until you have a home market when, as a matter of fact, it is the operation of coal mines with the increased population and development of manufactures that creates the home market.

I would like the minister to consider the possibility of making extensive changes in the coal regulations. Under the existing regulations they have to operate, they have to pay a royalty and they have a lease for twenty-one years which may or may not be renewed according to the good will of the Governor in Council, which I am informed will prevent the development and operation of coal mines.

Mr. FOWLER. I did not know that the leases were for 21 years only. The royalty, I consider, is all right; perhaps an acreage royalty might be collected. I think you should have the leases renewable because as my hon. friend has pointed out the operation of coal mines calls for enormous capital. You cannot equip a mine to produce 700 or 800 tons a day without the expenditure of $300,000 or $400,000. If a man has to invest $300,000 and after 21 years he might be at the mercy of Tiberius, he will be in a serious condition and will not put his money in. You will remove the worst objection if you make the lease renewable.

Mr. R. SMITH. If all conditions are fulfilled.

Mr. FOWLER. If all conditions are fulfilled of course, and if the conditions are not fulfilled, you should have the right to enter at any time and take possession of the property. As to the area I do not believe that four sections are enough.

Mr. R. SMITH. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOWLER. The person going into the business has to get the names of fictitious persons to apply for leases.

Mr. GALLIHER. They may be genuine names but the leases may be assigned.

Mr. FOWLER. But they may not have any interest in the matter. We know that is the case. It is done all around. When we used to sell coal lands, the area was only 320 acres and of course you had to get people to assign them. I think it better to make the limit double that amount, eight sections. When you are going to invest $300,000 or $400,000, four sections is a small area to work. Coal mining is not all profit, I have had some experience and know that it requires a very large amount of money.

Mr. R. SMITH. I understand that according to these regulations the price at which coal is to be supplied to settlers in the district is fixed.

Mr. OLIVER. To settlers in the vicinity.

Mr. R. SMITH. Did the coal leases granted by the Crown contain such a provision ?

Mr. OLIVER. Oh, yes. It was because the previous regulation contained that provision that it was continued in the present regulation, not because I had any personal belief in its merits.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That period of 21 years does seem a very short term on which to invite the investment of a large amount of money in the development and operation of coal mines. The system under the Nova Scotia lease is for a term of 20 years with provision for three renewals, so that the total term reaches 80 years, after which the government is not obliged to renew, although, I suppose, under ordinary conditions they would certainly do so. There are also two important provisions in the Nova Scotia statute, section 46, chapter 18 of the revised statutes of Nova Scotia, 1900:

> Every lease shall contain a provision that the royalties may be increased, diminished or otherwise changed by the legislature.

And in respect to the renewals to which I referred, it contains this provision :

In any such renewal the rent payable by such lessee may be increased under the authority of this chapter or of any such statute, subject to the provsions of the next following section.

Under this provision the royalty might be increased at the end of each 20 year period. It seems to me that some such system as that would be a good one to adopt in regard to coal lands in the west.

Mr. OLIVER. When the present regulations were adopted I had in view the operation of coal lands in the prairie rather than in the mountains. The operation of coal mines where the seams are horizontal and regular and the distance below the surface is not great does not require such a large investment. I will confess that I had not in mind, to the degree that I should have had, the application of these regulations to the mountains where the seams are irregular and where the expense of installation of a mining plant is stupendously greater. However, as these are regulations and not statutes it is a matter that can be very easily adjusted, and I may say that the very great demand that was being made for coal lands under the recent regulations seemed to me to have outrun the probability of development to such an extent that I did not think the interest of the country were going to suffer seriously under the new regulations until we had at any rate plenty of time to see them experimentally in operation and to see where the faults and failings lie. I do not presume to be able to foresee every condition and I am very grateful for the suggestions that have been made to me. They have struck me also in this way. The Canadian Pacific Railway have a very valuable coal mine in operation in the Banff park under conditions as to lease and they have a lease for a term of 20 or 21 years. Everybody knows that they have made a large expenditure and are operating a very useful mine. They are intending to enlarge their operations and require the investment of a still larger capital, but in looking for further capital to increase their operations they bump into the restriction of a 21 year lease. They say to us : We would like to get the privilege of a renewal of this lease and unless we can get that privilege we cannot secure the larger investment that we desire to make, and that is desirable in order that the country should get the full benefit of the coal measures there. Thus the matter has been brought very pointedly to my attention and I think in time we will be able to remedy the difficulty.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there any distinction between the anthracite and the ordinary bituminous coal under the regulations ?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not under our present regulations. The former regulations made a difference, the anthracite was sold at $20 an acre while the ordinary coal was sold at $10 an acre. I do not think it would be advisable to provide for changes in the royalty, at any rate during the term of the lease. I think it would be very proper to arrange that there should be a renewal of the lease, and that at that time the royalty might be changed, but I do not think it would be a proper inducement to capital to hold out the possibility of the royalty being changed during the term of the lease. It would be very much better, if you ask people to invest their money in the enterprise, that you should let them know exactly what the ground rent and the royalty are, during a reasonable period, at any rate. If I were willing to concede any change, it would be in regard to the ground rent rather than the royalty. I may assume that the regulations, as far as they have come under criticism as yet, are reasonably satisfactory and I shall certainly take account of the representations that have been made in regard to the extension of the term.

Mr. GALLIHER. Will the royalty be applied to all companies which are now operating mines?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. GALLIHER. The government propose, however, to levy a royalty on all new mines?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. GALLIHER. I think the principle is a good one from the beginning, but it rather places the late developer at a disadvantage, because he will be called on to pay a royalty while some of those operating large mines obtained some time ago will not be, and so their coal will cost so much less. I have been written to in regard to this matter of discriminating against the men who now invest their capital, but I presume that the policy has been adopted by the department as being in the best interests of the country and of coal development. With regard to the leasing regulations that have been adopted, I have heard very much the same sentiment as that expressed by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith), that the term of twenty-one years is somewhat short. I can understand the desire of the minister to check some of the applications that were made at large in years gone by in regard to coal lands. At the same time, I would point out that under the leasing system he is practically placing all the coal lands in the hands of men with capital and beyond the reach of the prospector. Under the old system, which I admit had its abuses, the man who went into the hills and searched out these minerals and who could get together some of his friends and form a syndicate to purchase a tract of land for coal mining purposes, had some advantage. I do not like the idea of cutting out the prospector. With regard to the twenty-one year lease, I understand that the lease price is a dollar an acre. That means that for the term you are paying $21 an acre for your coal lands, or, if the lease is renewed for another term, $42, and by the time it is renewed for 99 years you are paying a pretty high figure for your coal. If it is decided to be the best policy to continue the leasing principle, I quite concur in the propriety of including in the lease a provision by which the lessee would know that at the end of the period, if he had conformed with the regulations, his lease would be renewed for a further period. I would also favour some reduction in the charge per acre.

Mr. OLIVER. The point which my hon. friend has mentioned in regard to the prospector is certainly a very important point, and it is one on which I feel quite as keenly as he does, and I am not sure that we might not be able to make some change in the regulations to avoid cutting out the prospector. But at the time the regulations were passed, I think everybody will agree, the prospector was rather overdoing a very good thing—he was getting in his deadly work at a rate which the country could not stand, and it was necessary to cut him off short. However, I appreciate the prospector and the value of his work, and I can assure the House that he shall get every possible consideration at my hands.

Mr. FOWLER. I think after all that the prospector will not be very much the worse. Previously he had to buy the land, now he can lease his four sections.

Mr. GALLIHER. He cannot dispose of it in the same way.

Mr. FOWLER. But still we must look at what is going to be in the general interest of the country. Perhaps the government will employ prospectors. I think they ought to do that, to find out where these coal lands are, because they are going to get a larger income from them.

Mr. FOSTER. I see the Minister of Agriculture has come in, and I think I will renew the matter that we could not decide during his absence. For his information I may say that in the course of the information that has been given us, it was stated by the Minister of the Interior that no reservation had been made or was contemplated of the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains. The hon. member for Calgary informed the Minister of the Interior that the Minister of Agriculture had some months ago in the city of Montreal announced to the Forestry Association that the government had reserved or was on the eve of reserving the whole of the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains, and great applause was given to the minister and to the government for undertaking that policy.

Mr. HERRON. I have the honour of representing a district where I think the largest coal areas are to be found and the greatest quantity of coal mines of any portion of the Dominion. I shall not take up time by repeating what has been well said by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Smith) and Kings (Mr. Fowler) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). But I wish to emphasize the fact that the development of new mining has practically been brought to a standstill by the system of leasing. The minister may have had many applications for leases of new coal lands but they are nearly all in connection with some coal lands already in operation. Were it not for that, I think I am safe in saying that he would not have had any applications whatever for the leasing of coal areas. I wish to point out the disadvantage a man is under who has only a lease. It is impossible for him to get capital to any extent to open up his coal mine, under the lease system, when the government practically only grant a lease for twenty-one years. The prospector has therefore quit looking over coal. Dozens of men know where there are large coal fields, who do not think it worth while to apply for them under the present system. It is quite true that there were great abuses under the old system but the new system has gone to the opposite extreme. Where a man complies with the conditions of the lease, it would be very easy to continue it. It would be very easy to give him a guarantee that if he complies with the conditions made from time to time by the government, he would be assured of a continuance of the lease for a longer period. It takes a very large amount of capital to develop a coal mine. One company in my riding whose mine has been in operation only four years, has put in two sets of machinery, their last set cost them over $400,000. Another company has spent in developing work mostly, in the way of machinery and a railway, over $4,000,000. It is impossible to develop a mine without from $250,000 up to several millions, and no one will risk that money under the present lease system. I would recommend the minister to make some provision by which, if a man is going to open up a mine, he will have a lease for a longer period than twenty-one years.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it will be found that the lease system is not so much against operation as against speculations. One of the most highly developed coal properties in the west has been developed under the lease system in the Banff park. This is the Anthracite coal property, now operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway. True they would be better off if they had a longer lease or if I could arrange so that they would have a longer lease ; but the fact nevertheless remains that out of the five or six mountain mines now in operation, this one is under lease and has the most thoroughly equipped plant of them all.

Mr. GALLIHER. That was long before the present regulation.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, under regulations which applied to Banff park alone. Those regulations are to a great extent the basis of the regulations now applicable to the whole country.

Mr. GALLIHER. Is the lease the same as at present ?

Mr. OLIVER. Practically the same.

Mr. GALLIHER. As to time ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, it does not provide for a renewal, but I think the difficulty can be overcome in the case by legislation. If I should come down with a Bill asking for an amendment, my hon. friends will understand that the question has been already before the House. There have been leases issued to the number of sixty-four since the 15th June, 1907, under the present regulations. Quite true, a good many were in order to add to property already held under purchase; but, on the other hand, there are also a number of applications for leases, for operation as separate mines. True it is that the inducements which formerly existed to prospect for coal—that is to say the speculative inducement—does not exist to-day; and I am free to admit that that speculative inducement was a right and proper, and up to a certain time, necessary feature of our coal development. We could not, in all human probability, have reached the development we have attained to-day under the existing regulations. There had to be in the beginning the element of speculation, but it seems to me that we have now reached a reasonable measure of development, and the spirit of speculation having absolutely run wild, it was thought the proper time to put the industry on a basis of development rather than of speculation.

I submit that, with the provision for an extension of the lease on the conditions being fulfilled, the present regulations are more favourable for actual operation than the former ones. The fact that a number of operating mines have taken out leaseholds under the regulations is fair evidence on that point. But to clinch the matter absolutely, the former regulations provided for the sale of the lands and coal area at $10 per acre, subject to a royalty of ten cents per ton. The present regulations provide for the sale of the land—if you like to call it so—at $21 per acre and a payment of royalty of 5 cents per ton. Now, if you calculate the amount of coal contained in an acre of ground and figure it at 5 cents a ton, you will find, in operation, the land that was purchased at $10 an acre has, in many cases, cost vastly more than that which is leased.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. But in one case they own it and in the other they do not.

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely—in one case they do not have to operate it and in the other case they do. Consequently, the element of speculation was very pronounced under the former regulations—though, as I have said, those regulations were prefectly proper up to a certain point. That element of speculation was too strong to be allowed to continue in the present condition of the country and especially in view of the fact instanced by the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) that there had been already alienated some of the best areas of coal-bearing lands in the grants to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Calgary and Edmonton Railway, and the homestead lands given to settlers before the imposition of the royalty. And the fact that we were selling coal lands on a royalty of 10 cents per ton alongside lands that carried no royalty kept out of operation the land that we were selling. We have reduced the royalty by half so that there is only 5 cents a ton between the coal mined under our regulations and coal mined free of royalty. Therefore, there is not the same bar to the operation of coal lands held under our present law as there was under the system of purchase which prevailed before.

Mr. HERRON. Has the minister come to a settlement with the companies in the Crow's Nest Pass that have applied for a rebate ?

Mr. OLIVER. The companies operating in the Crow's Nest Pass have applied for a rebate or remission of royalty, but so far, we have not been able to give either, and they are required to pay the royalty according to the terms of their purchases.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. First, I would like to ask one or two questions in connection with section 10, 17, 17 west of the 4th meridian, concerning which I have been trying to get information for a client of mine in Winnipeg. On June 1, I asked the following question :

1. When and to whom was patent granted for section 10, 17, 17 west of the fourth meridian?

To this the hon. minister replied:

1. Homestead entry has been granted for the four quarters of this section, but no patent has yet been given for the surface rights to any of the four homesteaders.

As I understand it—I am not well acquainted with these mineral districts—the surface rights of a given area may be granted to one party and the mineral rights to another. In that case, what protection has the man owning the homestead right against the man who has the mineral rights?

Mr. OLIVER. The homesteader owns the surface, but the man who acquires the mineral right, if he is operating his coal lands, has rights, practically, of expropriation against the surface holder.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I understand that these parties made application to homestead. It is the second part of the question and its answer that I particularly cannot understand. The question was:

2. How many applicants were there, what were the names of the applicants, and what was the date of each application?

And the answer of the hon. minister was:

2. No patent has yet been granted for the mineral rights under the section in question, but there have been five applicants for these mineral rights.

Then follow the names of the five applicants. Now, does the minister mean by this answer that the mineral rights have not been disposed of?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no intimate knowledge of the instance to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Schaffner) refers, but judging from what he has read I should say that the mineral rights had not been disposed of.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That is what I took from the answer, and sent off that information to my client in Winnipeg. But he was not satisfied; and, on going to the department, I found that these rights had been disposed of.

Mr. OLIVER. Let me revise the answer. I understood the hon. member to read a direct question asking if the rights had been patented. The question was how many people had applied. The answer did not convey the information that none of these applications had been granted.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. However, I find that the mineral rights have been disposed of. Perhaps, I misunderstood it, but I gathered that these rights had not been disposed of at the time I asked the question. But, from information I get, I understand that they were disposed of on March 20, 1907.

Mr. OLIVER. Disposed of to one of the applicants named?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. To two of the applicants named. But my client seems not satisfied that these were disposed of at the time his application came in. However, the point is the patent had not been granted, but two applicants had rights on two half-sections, though apparently the patents had not been granted.

Mr. SCHAFFNER.

Mr. OLIVER. They have not completely paid for it, and therefore they have not got the patent yet.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I asked a question the other night with reference to this Turtle mountain timber reserve, and the minister was not in a position to answer at the time, but said he would refer to it on the next occasion the matter came up. Has he now the information in regard to the resurvey of the land there?

Mr. OLIVER. The townships in two ranges, 20 and 21, were subdivided in 1879. The lines were marked with wooden posts, and the marks are now obliterated. A resurvey of these townships has been asked for several times. As most of the lands have been patented and have passed out of the control of the Crown, it was not considered to be the duty of the government to take care of the boundaries. But a resurvey can be undertaken when all the owners or persons having interest in that land shall agree to accept the new survey and abide by it. Should such an agreement be obtained, the request for a resurvey will receive careful consideration. The land having passed out of our hands we claim that we are relieved from the duty of making a resurvey. A survey made by us now would not affect the rights of the patentees unless they gave their consent. Therefore, while we are willing to go on and make a resurvey, it is absolutely necessary, in order that it may be of any value, that we first get an agreement by the patentees to accept that survey.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I think that is satisfactory as far as it goes. But I think I asked, about two years ago, if a part of this had not been resurveyed. I am told by the settlers that about two years ago a part was resurveyed and iron stakes were put down, but the work was not completed.

Mr. OLIVER. My information is that the question was asked of the Surveyor General, and he says the request had been made, but that no resurvey had been given.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. In regard to the timber reserves in these two townships to which we have been referring, I understood the minister to say that the forest rangers made no report directly to the government, but they made a report to the inspector, and he reported to the government.

Mr. OLIVER. That is as regards the fire rangers, men who are in the transient employment of the government, in the wooded country. But I think that the men who are employed regularly within the forest reserves do report to the head office.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. In the Turtle mountain reserve, for instance, there is one forest ranger who is permanently employed.

Mr. OLIVER. He would report direct to Ottawa ; but the men whom he employs, would not.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Has he any other duties outside those of forest ranger? I refer to Mr. Charles Wakinshaw, forest ranger of the Turtle mountain reserve.

Mr. OLIVER. My impression is that he is assigned to the duty of looking after the timber and the general interest of the forest reserve.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What the minister said a few moments ago in reference to reforestation bears out the principle I have been contending for in this House for two or three sessions. I fully recognize the necessity of reserving these forests, if we can do anything with them in view of our climatic conditions. The minister said that after the timber was cut on these so-called reserves it was not always advisable to replant them. I agree with that. I have brought this matter up several times, and more particularly in connection with this very reserve, that part of it which is in township 1, range 21, west of the 1st meridian. That is an illustration of what the minister has been saying. We have a forest there in township 1, range 21, over which the fire swept some years ago, and the timber on it has been practically all destroyed. I stated the other day that all the new timber, trees two, or three, or four years old, in this whole township, could be put into two sections, that would be only two sections out of thirty-six. I took pains to drive over that township last fall, and I say that it has all grown up with grass ; and as I stated the other day, no one knows better than the present Minister of the Interior that trees and grass cannot be grown together. Quite a lot of that land has been cultivated by so-called squatters, though I believe they are now practically all off. But I am confident we can never make a success of growing trees in that particular township. Now the township east of that, which would be township 1 in range 20, I think can be made a success as a forest reserve, but I am confident that township 1 in range 21 cannot be made a success. I agree with the minister that this is a township which comes under his definition, it is a township that will be useful as farming land. The best of wheat can be grown in the greater part of that township. I have asked before that some inspection be made of that township, because I think it is useless for us to plant trees upon it. Some men have planted trees this year, but they have sown seed on only a limited area of that land which has been cultivated. But undoubtedly seed that was sown on that land which was cultivated last year would grow, because we have had heavy rains. I am talking of the general principle of planting and I would like if the minister would look into the conditions prevailing in that township. If I am wrong I am willing to take back anything I have said. If we can get timber to grow there that is what we want. However, these settlers are confident that the efforts to establish a timber reserve in that particular township will be a failure and if it will not make a timber reserve they think that these squatters should have their rights recognized. If in two or three years my opinion with regard to the township prevails and this land is open to homesteading, and I have no doubt in my mind that it will be, then, I say, that a moral if not a legal injustice will be done to those who have been there for quite a number of years. These men have met with great hardship during the last winter and I do not think it is out of place to make a short statement in connection with that matter. They were promised land away up in the north some place, a great many of them went away last fall and I understand they had a very hard winter. I had a letter with regard to the matter this week. Certain privileges were offered them. they were to get hay and other provision was to be made for them and I understand that some of them have not been very well treated. Although these men had no right to squat on that land they did so and were there for a number of years. They erected buildings and cultivated the land. They were ordered off last fall and perhaps rightly, but if that land is thrown open these men should know it as early as possible and they should receive due consideration. I would like very much that the matter should be looked into by the Minister of the Interior this summer. I do not see why we should not have a proper inspection made. Who is the inspector over Mr. Wakinshaw—Mr. Stevens ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, Mr. Knechtel, a Canadian by birth who has had experience in scientific forestry in the United States, is the superior officer in the west of the forest rangers who are employed directly on the timber reserves and we depend upon his report from actual examination for final action in regard to these reserves.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Does he live in Winnipeg ?

Mr. OLIVER. His headquarters are in Winnipeg.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. How long has he been in the employ of the government ?

Mr. OLIVER. He came into the employ of the government on the 1st March, 1908, and went west immediately.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Can he have authority to inspect this township ?

Mr. OLIVER. I propose that he shall make a very careful inspection of the Turtle Mountain reserve. His first orders were to deal with these squatters who had been removed and see that the promises made to them were carried out. I have had some communication which would lead me to believe that he has done so and that the conditions are much more satisfactory than they were formerly.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I do not say that is not possible. Will he make an inspection this summer to determine whether it is suitable for a forest reserve or not

Mr. OLIVER. I will certainly assure my hon. friend that it will be inspected by Mr. Knechtel. I could not say definitely that a determination will be reached because such a question might depend upon more than the present appearance of the locality. It might require some little time to reach a conclusion.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If that township is inspected and it is determined that it shall be opened to homesteading will these people be reinstated or will they receive any consideration ?

Mr. OLIVER. I think that is looking pretty far ahead. These gentlemen had no legal right upon the land, they squatted on that land which was under departmental occupation, they were, under the authority of parliament, required to be removed and we gave them as much consideration as we could in their removal. They have taken land under ordinary homestead right elsewhere and I do not see that they would have any prior right should the township be reopened for settlement at a later date.

Mr. SCHAFFFNER. They have not all taken up homesteads in another place. Some have gone up there but the land did not suit them as well as in the Turtle mountains and they have not taken up homesteads. I think it would be only fair that these men who spent several years on these lands and made improvements there should be reinstated.

Mr. LAKE. I wish to make a few remarks with regard to the granting of the townsite of Buchanan on the Canadian Northern Railway. The papers in connection with this matter were brought before the Public Accounts Committee and after several attempts I managed to see them while they were in charge of an official of the department. But, I was only able to glance through them very quickly as the official was anxious to get away. I would like to give to the committee the result of the few notes I was able to make and to ask the minister if he will give an explanation of some of the points which stand forth in regard to this question. The townsite is in one of the odd numbered sections which was included in the Doukhobor reserve. It is the northwest quarter of section 35-31-6 west 2nd meridian. At the time that the correspondence opened the land was in the possession of Dimitry Soochochen, a Doukhobor, who was the owner of the quarter-section in the early part of 1905. The first matter of interest in the file is a communication from the agent at Yorkton on the 29th June, 1905, forwarding Dimitry Soochochen's abandonment of the north west quarter. I made inquiry in this House as to whether Soochochen had received any consideration for the abandonment and I was given the answer by the minister that he had not. Now, the information comes to me that he did receive a very considerable consideration, that is to say that he got the title to another quarter-section, or rather the title to another quarter-section was vested in Peter Veregin, head of the Doukhobor community, but of this I cannot speak with certainty. On receipt of this communication from the agent at Yorkton, dated 29th June, a telegram was sent by the Commissioner of Dominion Lands to the agent at Yorkton dated 5th July, 1905, as follows :

Dimitry Soochochen has abandoned northwest quarter of section 35; allow O. Ramsland to apply scrip forty acres and homestead balance.

No correspondence appears on the file to show how Ramsland came to be an applicant for this quarter-section, but apparently a week or so after the abandonment had been made a telegram is sent to the agent at Yorkton to allow a certain specified individual to make an entry for a quarter section, partly as a homestead and partly as scrip. This is an odd-numbered quarter-section. I understood the minister the other day to say that when the Doukhobor reservations were thrown open the odd-numbered quarter-sections included were considered in the light of homestead land and were thrown open to homestead entry. Apparently that was done in this case, but it seems to me that one principle at any rate was violated, that after an abandonment had been made of the land, instructions should be sent to allow a particular individual to make an entry on that land. I understood that the rule of the department was that the first applicant should have the first right of entry.

On July 27, the agent at Yorkton wrote asking what portion Ramsland should be allowed to scrip. He went on to explain that he understood that the Canadian Northern Railway had located the townsite of Buchanan on the section and he asked to be advised if the area of the townsite and the right of way was to be reserved and if so he wanted the area defined.

The next letter appeared to be after some considrable delay from the secretary of the Department of the Interior to the agent at Yorkton, dated October 13. He said :

It appears A. J. Sinclair (half-breed) allows to scrip south half. Please report all facts.

Have you ascertained where townsite is located?

It seems to me that throughout this whole question a good deal must have been done by personal communication, because there are several gaps and no letters appear to take up the continuity of the negotiations.

Next comes an acknowledgment of the abandonment by this Doukhobor, which is returned to the department undelivered, and the right to make a second entry which was sent to D. Soochochen. Apparently neither of them reached him, at any rate the papers were returned uncalled for and appear still on the file. If my information is correct, however, the Doukhobor had not much cause for complaint in this case; he got other land and apparently handed on the title to the head of the community.

On November 2, 1905, the agent at Yorkton informs the secretary of the Department of the Interior that Mr. O. Ramsland made homestead entry for the north half of the northwest quarter, on the 5th of August. He goes on to state that his information with reference to the townsite of Buchanan is that the township is not yet surveyed and when surveyed the entire site becomes the property of Mr. Ramsland according to arrangement with the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company.

The secretary of the Department of the Interior apparently wrote Ramsland on December 22, with reference to a letter which he had sent to the Minister of the Interior, referred to specifically, and which is not on the file :

It is assumed since the scrip was located thereon that the townsite of Buchanan forms part of the south half of the northwest quarter of 35, which has been assigned to you. There could not have been any objection on the part of the department to half-breed scrip being located on 80 acres instead of the legal subdivision only.

So it appears that the half-breed scrip finally is located on the whole quarter-section. The patent apparently had issued to Ramsland for the whole section, less right of way and station ground. That is in February, 1906. Ramsland abandons some months later the entry to the north half of this quarter-section in order that he may apply scrip to it and take up another homestead of 160 acres.

The secretary of the Interior on May 11, acknowledges Mr. Ransland's last letter and says :

It has been decided to permit you to scrip this land. This will exhaust your homestead right.

Now apparently he is told that he may take this choice between the two courses, either to scrip the whole of the land and exhaust his homestead right or to continue to homestead the portion for which he had obtained homestead entry. Then apparently some one else steps in and protests against this arranged infringment of Ramsland's right to make another homestead entry.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LAKE. Mr. Chairman, when you left the chair I was discussing the question of the town site of Buchanan, and I was referring to the fact that after Mr. Ramsland had been granted the right to place scrip upon the quarter-section upon which the town site was situated, he made a complaint that he was not to be allowed to exercise his right of homestead entry subsequently. I see by the correspondence that apparently Dr. Cash, M.P., the member for that district, complained of the action of the department in informing Mr. Ramsland that in placing scrip upon the quarter-section he had exhausted his right to homestead entry, and that instructions were sent to the land agent at Yorkton by the Commissioner of Dominion Lands that it had been decided that Mr. Ramsland's right of homesteading again had not been exhausted. It appears that a little previous to this many of the Doukhobor entries had been cancelled, and that the department had decided that the other three-quarters of this section should be put up for sale at public auction. Instructions were sent to the agent at Yorkton to this effect, with a poster advertising these other three quarter-sections for sale at public auction, and the agent was instructed to give notice that these quarter-sections adjoined the townsite of Buchanan. The instructions went up on May 13. 1907; the sale was to take place on July 8, 1907; but we find that on July 6, there was an application from Mr. Robert Buchanan, a very leading Liberal, I believe, in that district, to purchase one of the quarter-sections. This was granted to Mr. Buchanan, subject to the right of the Doukhobors in the property, and there is a memorandum by the chief clerk, dated November 14, 1907, stating that the land was sold to Mr. Buchanan subject to homestead duties. It does not appear in the return what Mr. Buchanan gave for the land. The return does not state that both of the other quarter-sections were put up for sale at public auction; but one of them apparently was sold at public auction for $19 an acre; and the gentleman who purchased it, Mr. Edward Pinkerton, had in addition to give free right to the Doukhobors to take off their crop and to pay for their improvements. There were eighty acres broken. and he had to pay $2 an acre for this. So that this very desirable quarter-section cost him $20 an acre. The papers are very incomplete. A good deal of the correspondence must have been done privately or the communications may have been personal. At any rate, this is the way the matter stands: That the government, in possession of the fact that the northwest quarter of section 35, township 37, range 6, west of the 2nd meridian, was destined to be the townsite of the town of Buchanan on the Canadian Northern Railway, agreed, on the Doukhobor who at that time had the homestead right abandoning his homestead, to allow Mr. M. O. Ramsland to place scrip on the quarter-section and in that way become its possessor; that subsequently, after the cancellation of the homestead entries for the other three-quarters of that section, the government decided to have them put up for sale at public auction; that one of those quarters at any rate was sold privately prior to the public auction to a supporter of theirs, the price not being stated, but carrying with it the homestead duty, so that it may be taken for granted that the price was not very large. A return has been brought down showing the sales of land during the last year and up to the early part of the present year, and in that return the sale at auction to Pinkerton at $19 per acre does appear, but the sale to Mr. Buchanan of the other quarter-section, with homestead duties attached, does not appear, so that I do not know at what price it was sold to him. At any rate, the whole transaction appears to me to be a very unusual one, and I think the Minister of the Interior should give us an explanation of it—in the first place, why he allowed an odd-numbered section to be taken from the Doukhobor reserve and scripped, and why afterwards he allowed a private sale of a quarter-section to take place just in advance of the sale by public auction, and at a very much smaller figure than it was afterwards found could have been got.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to the townsite of Buchanan, as the transactions occurred some time ago, they are not very fresh in my memory. But, as I gather from what my hon. friend has said and after hurriedly looking through the papers——

Mr. LAKE. I informed the Commissioner of Dominion Lands this morning that I was going to bring up the matter, and I was in hopes that he would have the papers here.

Mr. OLIVER. I have the papers here. As I said, in speaking the other day in regard to the Doukhobor reserves, the Canadian Northern Railway line runs through what was originally the Doukhobor reserve, and in this case runs through a quarter-section that was entered as a homestead of a Doukhobor. At the time the transaction spoken of took place, in the summer of 1905, we had not arrived at any conclusion as to how we were going to deal with the Doukhobor lands. Those who were in this House at the time will remember that when the estimates of that year were under discussion, some questions were raised, and I think it was made abundantly clear that the department had very little knowledge of the situation with regard to the Doukhobors. While the information of the department was in that condition and before we had arrived at any conclusion as to how we should deal with the question, it was brought to our attention that the Canadian Northern Railway desired very much to place a station upon this particular quarter-section.

And, if the station were to be placed there, it is altogether desirable, in the interest of the surrounding country, that the land, or a portion of the land, should be available for townsite purposes. My hon. friend will understand that a station of itself is not of the full value that a station is when accompanied with the advantages of civilization and settlement which naturally arise in the vicinity of a station. Therefore, it seemed to us that it was in the public interest that the wishes of the railway company and of the settlement should be met by arranging that this land should become a townsite. Now, it was impossible, as I understand it, to make any arrangement with the Doukhobor who had entered in regard to this townsite. His entry stood in the books, and it might have been possible to cancel it under the law as it stood. But I did not feel that we were justified in taking action in regard to these Doukhobor entries by piecemeal. I wanted to decide on some policy before I took action in regard to it, and I was not then in a position to decide upon a policy. Therefore, it seemed to me, when the proposition was made that this Doukhobor should be induced to abandon his entry and another man be allowed to take entry of the land—the other man one who would make arrangements in regard to the townsite—that the country stood to lose nothing, because the land was already entered by the Doukhobor, and he was in a position to exercise his rights of proprietorship, for it seemed to me it would not be well, as a matter of sound public policy, to abrogate these rights at the time. It was a case in which it was better for all parties that a quiet solution should be arrived at. Therefore, the Doukhobor was allowed to abandon his entry and Ramsland, as the first applicant, was allowed to place scrip on part of it and enter as a homestead for the balance. Now, the reason for the permission being given to place scrip on one part and homestead entry on the other was that Ramsland entering upon the whole of the land as a homestead would be in no better position than the Doukhobor to have the land dealt with as a town site, but if he entered three-quarters as a homestead and placed scrip on one-quarter, if he sacrificed his homestead right for 120 acres and placed scrip on the other 40, he would be in a position to demand a patent for the 40 acres and to place land on the market for townsite purposes. It was with that in view that Ramsland, being the first applicant after the Doukhobor had abandoned the homestead entry, was given the privilege of putting scrip on a part of it in order that it might be used as a townsite, to the advantage as we believe of the railway company and of the surrounding settlement. As is known, the scrip is issued in 240-acre lots—that is, 160 acres and 80 acres. Therefore, we allowed Ramsland to put scrip on 80 acres instead of 40 as originally intended and to homestead the other 80 acres, and a patent was given him, I presume, for the 80 acres placed under scrip. Ramsland was then in the position that he had 80 acres of land under patent and 80 acres under homestead entry. It is true we could have held Ramsland to the position, but I do not know that it would be any particular advantage to the country or any one else to retain him in that position, and, as my hon. friend has said, he was given an opportunity to place scrip on the remaining part and was told, as my hon. friend said, he would thereby exhaust his homestead entry. However, up to that time, we had not arrived at a general policy in dealing with the question of placing scrip upon lands that had been homesteaded. There were cases when it had been permitted and the homestead right had not been exhausted, and there were cases where it had been permitted and the homestead right had been exhausted. It was represented—I assume, as I have not had time to study the matter—that, for one reason or another, Ramsland was entitled to the best treatment, that is to the right of placing scrip upon the land and not exhausting his homestead right. At any rate, that is the treatment that was accorded him. He was given notice, some time in May, I think, that if he placed scrip on the remaining 80 acres he would thereby exhaust his right. But, on June 1 he was notified that he would be permitted to take homestead elsewhere and that the exhaustion of his homestead right would not be insisted upon.

Mr. FOSTER. Why was that ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to answer that question. I have already explained that decision as to exhaustion of the homestead right had depended upon the circumstances of each case. But, shortly after this, we got out our general regulations for the guidance of the department—something that had never been done before, and, under these regulations, we provided that whenever scrip was permitted to be placed upon a homestead, the homesteader's right was thereby exhausted. We have held to that principle, but, up to that time, we had not established that as a principle. I am assuming that there were circumstances—or there were, in our estimation circumstances—in this transaction of Ramsland's to entitle him to consideration to that extent.

Mr. LAKE. The minister has not made any explanation of the sale in advance of the public auction.

Mr. OLIVER. I beg pardon. I am not able to give any explanation to that instance. In the return placed before the House, I think last session, a statement is given of the sales that were made, and this return states specifically that the three quarter-sections in question were sold at auction and the prices are given. I am bound to assume that my hon. friend's statement is correct and that the return is incorrect.

Mr. LAKE. Does the minister's file show that ?

Mr. OLIVER. The file does not show that it was sold at private sale but that it was applied for by Buchanan and that he finally purchased it. The return given to me shows that the three-quarters were sold at public auction.

Mr. CASH. I was present at the sale and the three-quarters were sold at public auction to the highest bidder. One was bid by Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Ramsland was bidding against him.

Mr. LAKE. What price ?

Mr. CASH. One-quarter sold at $17 the other at $5, and the other, at a price between the two, about $10 or $12.

Mr. OLIVER. The figures I have here are $19, $17 and $5 respectively, sold at public auction.

Mr. LAKE. How can the minister account for the fact that in the return brought down, Buchanan's name does not appear.

Mr. OLIVER. Which return ?

Mr. LAKE. Return No. 88—R brought down the 21st April last.

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer that. The file does not show that the land was sold to Buchanan at private sale. It shows that he applied for certain lands and got them but does not say that he got them at private sale.

Mr. LAKE. In the papers there is a memo. by the chief clerk 'land sold to Buchanan subject to homestead duties.'

Mr. OLIVER. These three sales were all sold subject to homestead duties.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister does not seem to have made an explanation which satisfies himself, on account of his not being familiar with the file. He should take the first opportunity of making a thorough explanation to the House.

Mr. OLIVER. Of which part ?

Mr. FOSTER. That townsite sale.

Mr. OLIVER. I suppose it will be agreed that the question of the distribution of the three quarter sections has been settled.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see a complete explanation as to why you told Ramsland that if he scripped eighty acres he would exhaust his homestead rights, and afterwards on June 1, you notified him he would have his homestead rights. The minister said there must be circumstances but did not know what they were. We should have that explained. As to the sale to Buchanan two days before the auction, that ought to be explained.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Cash) has settled that point. He says he was present and saw these three quarter sections sold at auction to the highest bidder, subject to the performance of the settlement duties, and that is in accord with the printed report I have laid on the table.

Mr. FOSTER. But the real explanation should come from the papers themselves. The file ought to give a complete explanation, should it not ?

Mr. OLIVER. The printed report, which has been before the House ever since the latter part of the last session, says that these sections were sold at auction on the 8th August and that they brought $19, $17, and $5 per acre respectively, realizing a total of $6,453.70.

Mr. LAKE. The application of Mr. Buchanan two days before the sale and the statement in the papers show that my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Cash) may have been mistaken. The papers left me under the impression that the entry had been granted Buchanan at that time.

Mr. OLIVER. In order that we could compel the performance of the homestead duties, the homestead had to be granted.

Mr. HERRON. How is the situation of the Blairmore townsite at present? I have heard it reported that the people residing there are not able to obtain patents for their land. Is the owner able to issue a patent at present or how does it stand ?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer at the moment, but I am under the impression that the patent has not yet been issued. There may be some question of adjustment with regard to the grant of land that was to be sub-patented to Pelletier and Lyon.

Mr. LAKE. Another question I want to bring up is the matter of the homestead entries to section 16 of township 24, range 28 west of the second meridian. This is a whole section entered for by a certain Mr. Tanguay and his three sons on the 29th March, 1902. I asked some questions with regard to this particular matter, and the minister will find all that I know about it on pages 3432 and 3433 of 'Hansard.' I asked the minister how many applications there had been for cancellation of two of these homesteads—the two which were held by the sons, namely : the northwest quarter-section and the southeast quarter-section. With regard to the northwest quarter section, the minister said that there had been an application for cancellation on the 19th September, 1903, by W. R. Kane, and that another application had been made on the 4th August, 1906, which the agent had not officially reported. That is to say that the whole number of applications for cancellation with regard to that quarter-section had been two, but that there had been three inspections made by the homestead inspectors of this quarter-section, and that, seven times in succession, extension of time had been given to the holder of the quarter-section.

The date of his entry was the 20th of May, 1902, and extensions were given to him up to the 1st of July, 1907 ; therefore, for considerably more than five years the land was held for him, although he was not performing the homestead duties. Now, in regard to the other quarter-section, another son of Mr. Tanguay, Adolphe, made a homestead entry on the 29th of May, 1902. The minister stated that one application for cancellation had been made by W. R. Kane, on the 19th of September, 1903, and that on the 13th May, 1905, Mr. Robert Brown said that he had applied for an inspection, but this was not officially reportetd. Yet in connection with this same homestead we find that there were three different inspections carried out by officials of the department, that seven distinct extensions of time were given to the applicant to make good his entry ; that he did not put in his residence at all until the 15th of September, 1907, and that after that time permission was given to him to purchase the land. Now the point I wish to make is that there were certain gentlemen applying for cancellation, and that if the persons who had made the entries were not doing their duty, and continued to refuse doing their duty, the persons who had put in the cancellation had the right to get the entry for homestead. I understand that Mr. Brown made an application for the cancellation of both of these homesteads, and he was hoping, up to quite a recent date, to get at any rate the second homestead to which I have referred, that of the southeast quarter-section. I sent to Mr. Brown the answers which the minister had given to my questions in the House, and Mr. Brown stated that they were absolutely incorrect, that his application was still on file, and that he believed that the Mr. Tanguay who held the entry for the southeast quarter had never been a resident. And yet the minister had given permission to have this homestead purchased at $3 an acre, thus depriving Mr. Brown of the right which he undoubtedly had to have that homestead cancelled in his favour. I noticed in some of the correspondence which was sent to me that on the 15th of July, 1907, the Hon. Walter Scott, premier of Saskatchewan, wrote to Mr. Brown in regard to this matter, acknowledging that Mr. Brown and other parties had written to him about the cancellation of these quarter-sections; that he was informed that while permission to purchase was cancelled, further extension had been granted the homesteader until the 1st of November following on condition of cultivation and other improvements for the present season. That letter was sent to Mr. Brown. Mr. Scott further informed him that he did not think any good purpose would be served by communicating further about these cases at that time. So Mr. Brown understood that leave of absence had been granted until the 1st of November, and on the 2nd Mr. Brown put in an application for the homestead again. He was met, however, with the statement that the land had already been sold to Mr. Tanguay. I find in the return which was brought down in regard to the sale of the land that this land was sold to Mr. Adolphe Tanguay on the 21st of October, ten days previously, for $3 an acre, the reason given being that it was his cancelled homestead. Now I would like the Minister of the Interior to give us an explanation of this matter. It seems to me that Mr. Brown had certain rights in regard to this land; it also seems to me that he was done out of these rights, and further, that it is a new departure, according to my idea, that the Minister of the Interior should undertake to sell cancelled homesteads to the persons against whom they were cancelled, especially in cases where, apparently, no residence duty at all had been performed. I would like to ask the minister whether he is prepared to continue these sales of cancelled homesteads in such cases as that, and whether he would make these sales applicable to anybody who chooses to apply for them. It seems to me that the minister must have had very strong reasons to act as he did in this case, and no doubt he will be able to give them to us. I may say further that the following extensions of time were granted to Adolphe Tanguay. It will be remembered that he made his homestead entry on the 29th of May, 1902:

Seventeenth November, 1903, until May 1, 1904. On father's representation and promises. April 8, 1904, until May 1, 1905. August 23, 1905, until May 1, 1906; crop destroyed by hail. May 17, 1906, until July 1, 1906; considerable area under cultivation claimed. June 28, 1906, until August 1, 1906. November 12, 1906, until April 1, 1907. May 2, 1907, until November 1, 1907.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not in a position to give the committee full information in this case and I am sure I will be excused from going into the actual details. I have some indistinct remembrance of it, and I am sure my hon. friend will see that in the stupendous number of cases passing through the Interior Department, some proportion of which come to me for final adjustment, I can hardly be expected to keep in mind many of them, at least, so as to be accurate in regard to details. I have a remembrance of the Tanguay case, but I cannot explain it in detail. However, as it comes to my mind, it is something like this: The father and several members of the family went west some time in 1902. The idea was to settle the members of the family together—the father, two or three sons, and, I think, some sons-in-law. It is frequently the case that a father desires to have his sons and sons in-law settled near him. It may have been that, as the practice of accepting proxy entries prevailed at that time, some of the young men did not enter in person and did not go into immediate residence upon their land. I cannot speak upon that point, but, as I remember the case, Tanguay senior and one or two of his sons and sons-in-law did actually settle on land in this neighbourhood, are settled there yet, are settlers who have made substantial improvements were entitled to their patents and have secured their patents. With regard to these two particular quarter-sections, apparently, for one reason or another, the settlement duties were not properly fulfilled, but, on the other hand, I think the evidence is that a substantial amount of work was done upon these homesteads by the father on behalf of these sons, or by the sons themselves. In so far as I can remember, it was represented to me that when these young men had put in some part of their residence duties and very fully complied with the requirements of the law with regard to cultivation, it had become impossible, in the transaction of their business, to actually settle upon that land, and it was a question as to whether they should lose what they had done, that is lose the value and the advantage of their improvements and residence, or whether they should adopt some means of permitting them to acquire title. There have been many cases in which we have done this: When a settler had, to a measurable degree earned his patent, that is to say, when he had completed practically the duties but had not entirely completed the duties, we were not entitled to give him the patent of a free homestead, and yet it would not be fair, in our estimation to deprive him of the time labour and money which he had expended upon the homestead; we have, in order to clear the account, in fairness both to the government and to the settler, sold him the land. When a settler had resided upon his land to the full requirements of the law, except, it may be, a few days, a week or two, sickness had intervened, he had made a miscalculation, something had occurred, he had fulfilled the duties, except a small portion of the residence duties, we have, in order that we may be able to give that man his patent, in order that he may not lose the time and labour that he has placed upon the land, sold it to him at a dollar an acre. Then again, if he has been short of his residence duties but has performed his cultivation duties to the satisfaction of the department we have sometimes sold to him, in order to square the account, at $3 per acre.

Mr. LAKE. Suppose he has done no residence duties at all?

Mr. OLIVER. In that case our practice is not to do anything but to cancel the entry. Our information is that these Tanguays did perform their residence duties, not to a sufficient extent to entitle them to their land, but that they did their other duties either themselves or through their father in the way of cultivation and improvements to such a degree as would, apart from residence, fully entitle them to their patent. It is on that principle that we have made the sale that my hon. friend mentions and of which Mr. Brown complained. It may be that in this case we have erred by being too liberal in our construction of the practice, but, in administering the lands of the country, in order to secure settlement and development, it has been the practice to give every reasonable consideration to the actual settler who is on the land and especially to the families of settlers. My hon. friend knows that it is a definite provision of the Land Act that if a man has ten sons all may acquire patents for their homesteads without ever living a day upon the land ; but by residing with their father they can complete all the duties upon their homestead. While we refuse proxy entries generally one member of a family may make a proxy entry for the other members of the family. It is considered to be sound public policy to give consideration to the desire of families to settle together and it was in pursuance of that idea that the consideration which we have given to the Tanguays was given to them. Perhaps we erred a little, but we believe we erred on the right side in giving consideration to these people and allowing them to protect the expenditures which had been made on their behalf and retain the land in the neighbourhood in which the other members of their family are located.

Mr. LAKE. I sympathize with the minister in the position which he takes that facilities should be afforded to families to settle together. But, in this particular case, apparently one son, to whom permission was given to purchase his homestead, never performed any residence duties at all until a month before the purchase was permitted. The gentleman who brought this matter to my notice apparently is under the impression that the son has never set foot upon the land at all even up to the present time, although the government state that he had gone into residence just a month before permission was given to him to purchase the land. I think it ought to be understood that if proof can be adduced that no residence duties at all have been done in a case of this sort cancellation ought to take place. The minister agrees to that.

Another point is that Mr. Brown says he made application for cancellation of both these quarter-sections at different times. In one case the minister apparently has no record of his application. In the other case he simply states that Mr. Brown says he put in an application but does not know whether that is the case or not. These applications for cancellation are important particularly in regard to priority, because if a man knows that the duties are not being performed on a desirable homestead, and believes there is no intention to perform them he has a right to expect that the law will be carried out and unless there is a valid reason that cancellation will take place. In these cases, from the government's own showing, cancellation apparently never took place and the gentleman had to go elsewhere. I have known of other cases where there has been strong feeling in regard to this question of cancellation. I have had correspondence with the department in reference to more than one of them. I wish to impress on the minister the absolute necessity of having a complete record of these applications for cancellation because the man who applied for cancellation has rights under the law which should be respected.

Mr. OLIVER. I quite appreciate the view of my hon. friend in regard to cancellation. I hope that he and the House will understand that cancellation is one of the most difficult questions with which we have to deal in the administration of the lands. We have to be guided on one hand by considerations of the rights of the worthy but poor settler, and on the other hand we have to give due consideration to the rights of the man who wants to fulfil the duty which the other man is failing to fulfil. It would be impossible to fulfil the law so as to satisfy both parties when a conflict necessarily exists between the homesteader and the applicant for cancellation. From time to time since June last we have defined our position in regard to cancellation as fully, as completely and we believe, as fairly as has been possible under the very difficult circumstances. I do not know whether my hon. friend is acquainted with the regulations in regard to cancellation, but we find that from time to time the healing of one difficulty is followed by the opening of a new difficulty. It is impossible to foresee the ingenuity of man in protecting his entry when it ought not to be protected or in attacking another man's entry when it ought not to be attacked. We can only try to strike a fair average in dealing with these hundreds of cases and we hope to get fair consideration for trying to do what is right and fair between man and man according to the best interests of the settlement of the country. We do not pretend that we are able to please both sides to a dispute in which only one can win.

Mr. HERRON. I have seen a good deal of this question, particularly in my own locality. I can say from experience that I commend the minister for a great many acts of his in the way of being lenient, while still within the law, to settlers in allowing men to purchase in some cases at a dollar an acre, and in some at $3 an acre, if they have not fulfilled all the requirements of the law. But at the same time I know many cases in my locality where the government has been either very seriously imposed upon by people getting places or else a great deal of partiality has been shown. I know one place near my own town where a man had an entry for a quarter-section. He was not able to go on it for the first six months, but I do not know that he did not get an extension of time for six months. However, before the second term was up he was notified his entry would be cancelled, if he could not show reason why he had not done certain improvements. He was not able to comply with the law and another man got his entry. This man held it about two years. He never resided on it or made any attempt to reside on it, and he was allowed to purchase it at, I think, $3. As soon as he got the patent he sold the land for $20 an acre, but he had never made any attempt to live on the land or improve it. There are a great many other cases of the same kind I have seen. The minister has been lenient and I would recommend him to be lenient with men who have made a conscientious attempt to comply with the conditions.

Mr. LAKE. I wish to ask the minister as to the disposal of the quarantine lands near Estevan. They were disposed of apparently by public auction. What where the conditions of sale, where were they advertised, what time was given to carry them out and what bids were received ?

Mr. OLIVER. This relates to a certain area of land, about two sections, on the boundary line near Estevan, about where the Soo line crosses the boundary. They were reserved for the use of the Agricultural Department for holding stock in quarantine upon them. After a time the Agricultural Department decided that they did not require them any longer and they were released from reservation. In the meantime the land around had settled up and they had become, as we thought, of some little increased value. We felt that if they were open to ordinary homestead entry there was likely to be a good deal of hard feeling about priority of entry. Therefore in July, 1907, they were put up for sale at an upset price of $3 per acre subject to settlement conditions, that is to say subject to cultivation of twenty acres and 12 months residence. No tender for more than one-quarter section was to be accepted from the same applicant. Tenders were received in the department, but the sale was not carried out in view of an irregularity in regard to the highest tender. The cheque accompanying it was not certified or marked by the bank, in accordance with the conditions of the advertisement. The cheque accompanying the next tender had been marked by the bank, but we did not feel justified in accepting it, although it was really the highest that complied with the terms of the advertisement, as the lack of the mark on the cheque accompanying the highest tender might have been only an inadvertence. Therefore we decided that for the time being we would call the sale off and again advertise the lands for sale by public auction, when no mistake would be likely to occur in regard to the cheque. The date of this sale has not yet been fixed, but it will take place some time during this summer.

Mr. LAKE. What are the sections ?

Mr. OLIVER. Half of section 6, half of section 16, three-quarters of section 18, and one-quarter of section 23.

Mr. LAKE. The return brought down says that the northeast quarter of section 16 was sold by tender on the 15th of October to James Rutherford at $3 per acre. How did that tender come to be received ? I understood from the minister that the tenders were called for in July.

Mr. OLIVER. The information I have is that the lands were to be put up in July to be sold on the 16th of December. It may have been that the date was postponed from October to December.

Mr. LAKE. A sale took place on the 21st of October to J. C. Flynn at $3 per acre. The local press stated as much as $7.50 per acre had been offered for the land which had been sold to the lower tenderer. I hope the minister will have an inquiry into the whole matter.

Mr. OLIVER. The House will see that these lands are for sale, not at the highest price, but under settlement conditions, which of course detracts considerably from the price that would otherwise be got for them. The statement that $7.50 per acre was offered must be a mistake. It is quite possible that the land would be worth that figure as a speculative proposition, but I do not think we would receive any such figure with settlement conditions attached. However, the sale did not go through, and the land will be offered at public auction some time this summer.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it an absolute rule that unless a homesteader literally fulfils the settlement conditions, he cannot get his patent, and that all the government can do in such a case is to allow him to purchase at a certain reasonable price? Suppose a man did his settlement duties for three years, doing everything that was necessary in the way of building a shack, breaking his land and putting it under crop, but something occurred to make a break in the performance of his residence duties, would he not be able to get his homestead entry? Is that absolute?

Mr. OLIVER. That is as we understand it. We have no authority to issue a patent unless the requirements of the statute are fulfilled. There is, however, an instance in which we have stepped outside the statute, and in the proposed amended Land Bill I am asking for provision for that; that is, where a settler suffers from some physical disability that absolutely incapacitates him from fulfilling his duty. In one or two instances of this kind we have taken an order in council as authority for issuing the patent.

Mr. FOSTER. After a man has gone on and done his duty faithfully as a bona fide homesteader, something might happen, like the fall from a load, to prevent him fulfilling all the conditions; and it scarcely seems fair justice to say to him, you can buy your homestead for $3 an acre, when other land can be bought at the same price. There ought to be a remedy somewhere, whether by report to parliament or otherwise. It seems very harsh that the result of three years work should be entirely voided because of some unforeseen and unavoidable accident.

Mr. OLIVER. The best we can do in such a case is to sell the land at $1 an acre, unless in a case where the man is absolutely incapacitated and then we get an order in council.

Mr. FOSTER. I think you would have to come to parliament.

Mr. OLIVER. Possibly, but once the patent is issued, I do not think the government is subject to political attack or the patent to a legal attack. I wish to remedy that position by an amendment to the Act, so that there will be no question about the authority. The best we can do is to sell at $1 an acre, and we only sell at $1 an acre when there is merely a trifling difference between the performance and the duty.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that ministerial administration or by order in council?

Mr. OLIVER. It is ministerial. There is a provision in the Act that the minister may sell at $1 an acre, and he exercises that power in that case. In such a case as that mentioned by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake), where we sell at $3 an acre, there has been a substantial failure in the residence, but a liberal fulfilment in the cultivation. We simply say that the man has failed in the essential particular required by the statute, but in order that he may save the money that he has put into the land we make the sale to him.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice by the return that in the aggregate there are a large number of those sales at from $1 to $3 an acre and sometimes more than $3. Is that done on ministerial responsibility or is an order in council required?

Mr. OLIVER. These are dealt with by ministerial authority. In the few instances where the price is over $3 the sales are in British Columbia.

Mr. HERRON. Are there any sales at $2 an acre?

Mr. OLIVER. There may have been, but since I have been minister we have either made it the one way or the other. They are made at $1 an acre in order to save the man who has substantially fulfilled his residence duties, but we sell at $3 an acre to the man who has failed in what we consider an essential part of his duties, the residence. We do not sell to any one who has altogether failed in his residence duties. There must be some residence or there is no sale. There is another instance where we sell, namely, where there are fractional pieces of land adjoining lakes or large rivers—a piece less than eighty acres, the corner frequently of an adjoining homestead. Our practice is to sell that to the owner of the adjoining land, believing that the area is too small to warrant any one taking it as a homestead and believing that, if the adjoining owner wants it it is reasonable he should have it, and we sell it at that price.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister must be, to a large extent, at the mercy of his officials who report to him from all through the country. Does he think that these officials are influenced by political or party considerations? Some of these difficulties may arise from that fact.

Mr. OLIVER. By the time the case comes from the inspector to the agent and from the agent to the head office and runs the gauntlet in the head office, it is pretty well trimmed of anything but its merits, and there is not much chance to hang anything else to it.

Mr. FOSTER. What is Mr. Obed Smith's position now?

Mr. OLIVER. He is assistant immigration commissioner in London, England.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he there permanently?

Mr. OLIVER. As permanent as anything in the outside service. An exchange was made early this spring between Mr. J. Bruce Walker, who was assistant immigration commissioner in London, and Mr. Smith, who was assistant commissioner in Winnipeg. The salary was the same in both cases.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister issue instructions to his land officers throughout the west, by circular or otherwise, forbidding them to engage in the business of buying and selling land or changing or otherwise the homesteads?

Mr. OLIVER. I think there is a provision in the Land Act itself which forbids an employee of the Lands Department from taking part in any transactions having relation to government land. It does not forbid their engaging in transactions with regard to other lands. I do not know that we have issued any instructions, but the Land Act is very definite.

Mr. LAKE. I notice that a number of pieces of land have been sold to the Grand Trunk Pacific for townsite purposes at $1 an acre. Does the minister consider that a proper price?

Mr. OLIVER. The land was sold to the homesteader at $1 an acre and he sells to the company for whatever he can get. The Grand Trunk Pacific of course runs through lands owned by private individuals and other corporations as well as through government lands, and it is necessary that they should not only have stations but conveniences for the handling of grain and other business in order that they may give full benefit and advantage to the surrounding country. In placing their stations where they will be most suitable the company frequently has to select quarter-sections occupied by homesteaders. The homesteaders could not sell that land to the Grand Trunk Pacific and could not make it into a townsite, and it amounted to a hold up of the development of the town at that particular place until he got his patent.

Where the settler got his patent he would do as he pleased with it. Under these circumstances, the railway company, being desirous of getting action for the development of this town as soon as possible, for the sake of the business, and for the sake of knowing definitely where they were, desired to acquire these lands. Now, so far as the government was concerned, the right to the land had already passed, and there was no way by which the government could recover its ownership in that quarer-section. The homesteader had the right to earn the title, and, so far as we knew, he would earn it and would become the owner. Therefore, it was a mere question of allowing the railway company to get beneficial action upon the property or delaying that action until the homesteader earned his patent. In order that action might be had as soon as possible, we sold the land that the railway company wanted to purchase for a townsite to the homesteader and he sold to the railway company for what he could get. I hope he made a good sale. We allowed him to take land elsewhere. It was a fortunate thing for the homesteader, and, I say frankly, I do not regret giving him the advantage, for the government lost nothing and it was not a matter of taking advantage on the part of the homesteader. He was there as a settler, the railway came and made his land valuable in spite of him, and I know no reason why he should not get the benefit. Where the railway saw fit to place its station upon land still remaining in the Crown, the arrangement is different. There we think it quite fair and reasonable that there should be facilities for the establishment of a town, and we sell the land to the company at $3 an acre, retaining one-quarter interest in the proceeds of the sales that may be made. The reason why we prefer to retain an undivided one-quarter interest is that if we were to retain a divided interest the question of municipal taxation would necessarily arise, and we have found that a very difficult and vexing question. It is a generally established principle that the government pays no taxes. We do not feel that we should be warranted in breaking through that rule and paying taxes on the land when it became part of the municipality. Therefore we conclude that probably the best way to deal with the matter was to sell the land to the railway company at a price and simply retain an interest in whatever result might come from the future sales. I think the transaction is one that will commend itself to the House and the country.

Mr. FOSTER. But if you had braved the dangers of municipal taxation, your relation with the railway company would be that you would have one-half the townsite still.

Mr. OLIVER. That would be the usual system of dealing with a railway company.

Mr. FOSTER. Instead of that, you keep one-quarter upon which you pay no taxation. That is, you keep the municipality out of the taxation——

Mr. OLIVER. That is——

Mr. FOSTER. Well, you cut them out of it.

Mr. OLIVER. No, the railway company owns the land and has to pay taxes.

Mr. FOSTER. On the whole of it?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. If it were divided, part of it would not pay taxes.

Mr. LAKE. The minister says that the government charge $3 an acre, but the return shows that the amount paid is $1 per acre. That is why I asked the question, thinking $1 too low a price.

Mr. OLIVER. The mistake must arise in the case of townsites where the purchase is made by the homesteader.

Mr. LAKE. It does not show that in the return.

Mr. OLIVER. I am satisfied that that is how it arises. When we sell to the homesteader we sell at $1 an acre. but when we sell to the company we sell at $3.

Mr. LAKE. In this return, wherever the Grand Trunk Pacific or the Grand Trunk Pacific Townsite and Development Company is mentioned, the price is $1 an acre, and I see no sale at $3 an acre. Sales should appear in the return as they were made? Another question I would like to ask the minister is in reference to one sale by G. H. McKague, 160 acres at $2.50 per acre 'in lieu of cancelled pre-emption.' What is the explanation of that?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot recall the particular point mentioned. But I may say that the question of pre-emptions is one that arises occasionally. The right of pre-emption expired some time about 1889. But, though it is so long ago since this right expired, there are isolated cases where the pre-emption patent has not yet been issued because of the failure of the homsteader to complete his payment for pre-emption or for some other reason. It may be that there is some part of the payment due, or it may be that there is a seed-grain lien, or a lien of some other kind against the land. In any case, every now and again, we come across a pre-emption entry of which the homesteader is not entitled to a patent and the question arises what we are to do with it. In some cases, they have paid part of the price, and it seems hard that the man should lose what he has paid, even though he has not entirely completed the payment. I do not recall the instance my hon. friend has mentioned, but I can imagine that it was of this character. We find in our books an instance of pre-emption the payment upon which had not been completed, and not being able to get into communication with the homesteader or the man who had the pre-emption we have cancelled it. After a time, the owner has waked up and found that he has lost some property. He comes to us with his tale of woe; he tells us that he paid part of the money and could have paid the balance if he had known, that he ought to have it, that we ought not to rob him, and so on. And it may be that we have felt there was merit in the man's case and have met his grievance in the way my hon. friend suggests. I do not know that this is such a case, but I say it is quite possible it may arise in that way. The other day a case came before me where a pre-emption owner had notice that his pre-emption was cancelled. Though he had got it in 1889, and had paid $240 out of $480, he had never been able to raise the balance, and it was only when he got notice that his land was cancelled that he woke up and came back to us, and wanted reinstatement and the privilege of paying up the balance of the price.

Mr. LAKE. I would like to mention another matter that has created a good deal of feeling in the neighbourhood where I have been living. There have been complaints that certain parties are able to get cancellations in the land office at Regina when other parties cannot do so. It is also complained that the government officials are in the habit of taking money from settlers, and giving cancellations which other parties were not able to procure. This was brought to my notice some time last year, and I think I called the attention to it of the Commissioner of Dominion Lands. Later on when I got home, it was again called to my attention. Several different individuals came to see me about it, and told me of case after case. I was not able to go into these cases and verify them. But something did happen which enables me to bring the matter before the minister. I will not give the names, because I do not know if the complaints are well founded ; but the minister will easily be able to identify the case which I propose to lay before him. A certain individual stated that he had been approached by one of these parties who professed to be able to control the cancellations, and had offered to get the cancellation of a certain very desirable quarter-section on payment of the sum of $400. I may say that he was a supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite. This individual went to the land office and found that he could not get a cancellation. But he there and then made an affidavit, which was taken in the land office, and I will read the affidavit, leaving out the names. I think the minister will agree that it is just as well the names should not be mentioned :

I ..... do solemnly declare that the homesteader is not in residence, and has made no improvements. The only improvement on the place is thirty acres broken in 1905 by a party at who told me last year that he could let me have this land for $200. The land was entered for on October 17 last, and the entrant has not started to live on it, but states that he can let me have it for $400. I understand that he has written to have it protected.

The matter was reported to the head office here, and the homestead inspector was told to report. His report states:

I have not discovered any evidence of manipulation in connection with the evidence.

I cannot believe that the homestead inspector could have made the inquiry he ought to have made under the circumstances, because I know from the amount of talk all through the neighbourhood, that he must have been able to get something more than is contained in that report. I would like the minister to make inquiry and see whether there is any ground for this complaint. It is in connection with this same office that I mentioned, as furnishing complaints about cancellations not having been properly recorded.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to follow the incidents my hon. friend has mentioned. Certainly, the idea that there is favouritism in cancellations is very injurious to the standing of the department in the minds of the public, and is therefore an injury to the settlement of the country, because confidence in the administration of the land office must lie at the foundation of successful settlement. It has been my object to establish that confidence. Our departmental regulations in regard to cancellation read as follows:

Application for the cancellation of the entry of a homesteader in default, must be made in person at the land agency for the district within which the land is situated.

Mr. LAKE. How long has that been in force?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say how long it has been in force, but it has been printed and in the hands of all parties concerned ever since the 1st of October last.

Mr. LAKE. That is subsequent to a good many of the cases.

Mr. OLIVER. Then it goes on, a page and a half of provisions intended to guard against fraudulent applications for cancellation. There was, as we found some years ago, a great abuse in the matter of cancellations. There was no restriction, anybody could go into a land office and apply for a cancellation of a whole township for homestead entry. Among some of the other provisions of these regulations, are the following:

An application for cancellation will not be accepted or considered if made within six months of the date on which the homestead entry was granted, unless the application should be made on the ground of ineligibility of fraud. In such case the application may be accepted at any time after the date of entry, and must be accompanied by a statement on oath giving full particulars.

Only one application for cancellation will be accepted against an entry until such application has been finally disposed of.

The applicant for cancellation must be eligible to make homesteading, except in the case of a minor, and eligible to have land reserved for him.

I am aware that circulation of reports such as those my hon. friend has mentioned are injurious, and I will be glad to follow them out to a finish, if he will furnish me with information. I am afraid there may have been matters that were not absolutely correct in the Regina land office some time ago. As my hon. friend is aware, there was a change of agency there over a year ago, and I was under the impression that matters were more satisfactory since. I am not a respecter of persons, I want to have the confidence of the people with regard to the fair administration of the land laws, and if, on investigation, I find that a wrong has been done, wherever the lightning strikes somebody will be hurt.

Mr. LAKE. I am very glad to be able to bring these matters to the attention of the minister. I have been in communication with respect to two or three of them with the Commissioner of Dominion Lands who, no doubt, will bring them to the attention of the minister. I expect that the commissioner knows about this particular matter to which I have just referred. A return was brought down in connection with it. There is just one other matter to which I desire to call the attention of the minister. I have had several resolutions sent to me by boards of trade in the southern part of my constituency, one of which is as follows:

Resolved, that this board heartily endorses the resolution recently passed by the Saskatchewan Game Protective Association in respect to the establishment of a national park and game preserve in the Moose mountains and the placing therein of a herd of buffalo and other wild game.

Has the minister been able to give any consideration to the question of forming a park in the Moose Mountains? I see that a good deal has been said about it lately. It is an ideal spot for a timber and game preserve. I would like to hear from him in regard to the matter.

Mr. OLIVER. When the project of purchasing a herd of buffalo in Montana was first brought up the Moose Mountain timber reserve was the place I had in mind for the location of the herd. But, afterwards, when I heard of the resentment that was felt locally against the removal of the herd from Montana, I thought it would be rather doubtful policy to place such a large herd of buffalo within what you might term easy reach of the boundary line.

Mr. FOSTER. What would the distance be?

Mr. OLIVER. About forty miles which is not a very long run for a band of buffalo. I thought it would be better to place them temporarily where they were placed and afterwards make arrangements for an area of grazing land where they would be practically out of reach of anything of that kind. At the same time I am aware of the advantages of the Moose Mountain country and I quite sympathize with the desire of the people to have some specimens of game there. When we get our buffalo settled down, when we get our principal grazing ground entirely inclosed and our herd installed there I will be very glad to take up the question of pleasure parks, as they may be called, in different parts of the country. As my hon. friend is aware, there is an Indian reserve adjoining the forest reserve at Moose Mountain. We have been able to secure from the Indians the surrender of a piece of land adjoining a very pretty lake there with the view of it being used as a summer resort and I think that in due course we may be able to do something in the way that the resolution suggests, but at the present time we do not feel that we are in a position to deal comprehensively and intelligently with the question of the location or the buffalo beyond what we have already decided. It is an old saying that you must first catch your hare before you can cook him, and I would like to have all the buffalo that we are going to get well in hand before I decide upon the policy of distribution.

Mr. FOSTER. How many are there in the herd now ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are about 400.

Mr. FOSTER. How are they distributed as to sex ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am sorry to say that the majority is against us, but still there is a fair proportion—well, not a fair proportion as breeding cattle are understood—but we have a very considerable number of females and there was some measure of increase this spring although owing to the rough handling last summer there has not been as great an increase as we otherwise might have expected.

Mr. HERRON. As I had some experience of buffaloes in the early days, I have great sympathy with the government in procuring that herd. I think they did well to secure the buffalo which are natives of our land, but I rather think it was unfortunate that they were placed in the northern country where they are at present. Does the government not anticipate a great deal of trouble in securing and removing them from the present place to the new park laid out for them or the place where it is intended to locate them permanently ? I understand that they are in a wooded or partially wooded country. I doubt very much if the government will ever be able to secure the buffalo from that timbered country, get them loaded on the cars and move them to another part of the country. You cannot do that with ordinary domestic cattle in a timbered country. It is impossible to get them out of the timber until they are ready to come. I do not know what is to be done with the buffalo. I feel certain that there will be great disappointment in getting them out. Has the government taken that into consideration ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, the government has taken it into consideration but it is one of those things which is really not for consideration. It is something that has to be done. I quite appreciate the difficulties of it but I do not see any other recourse and I have no doubt that, when we were able to secure so many of the herd as we did under the unfavourable circumstances which surrounded our getting them, we will be able to make the transfer from the park where they are to the park where we want to keep them permanently.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they inclosed at present ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, they are in an inclosure four miles square. As my hon. friend (Mr. Herron) says, part of the area is wooded and part is prairie. It is a very nice location in itself but it is not an ideal buffalo range, but the park which we have now reserved and for the fencing of which we are asking an appropriation, is in a part of the country which is considered to be an ideal buffalo range. We hope to get the park fenced in time to receive the remainder of the herd that we hope to get from Montana this summer and later will make the transfer.

Mr. FOSTER. You have 400 already and you expect to get more ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is believed that there are about 200 more. When we entered into the bargain first we thought that the whole herd amounted to 350, but as they were on a wide range and had not been rounded up it was impossible to ascertain the exact number. But we feel that we are getting them at a price at which we can afford to take the whole herd and if we are able to corner the market by getting the whole herd that fact will appreciate the value of what we have.

Mr. FOSTER. You did not buy them by the number ?

Mr. OLIVER. We got them at so much per head.

Mr. STAPLES. How much per head ?

Mr. OLIVER. $200 per head landed at Edmonton, plus the actual cost of transportation, which amounts to $45 per head. The seller stood the loss until arrival at Edmonton. We paid only for what arrived at Edmonton.

Mr. STAPLES. Who negotiated the purchase?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. H. Douglas, superintendent of the park at Banff.

Mr. STAPLES. Had he any assistance?

Mr. OLIVER. I think so, Mr. Ayotte, the immigration agent at Grand Forks, may have assisted in Mr. Douglas' absence.

Mr. STAPLES. That gentleman was a deputy returning officer in the last Dominion election in Manitoba.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not aware.

Mr. STAPLES. I saw in a western paper that he had assisted in the purchase and had made a clean up of $25,000.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no hesitation in saying that as far as the clean up is concerned, the statement is absolutely untrue.

Mr. LAKE. In reference to the purchase of lands by the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, have all these lands been paid for and the patents made out and have the lands become liable to taxation?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot answer that definitely. If the payments have been made the patents will issue without delay.

Mr. LAKE. Are not the patents completed ?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand so.

Mr. LAKE. And all conditions fulfilled?

Mr. OLIVER. That is our understanding.

Mr. STAPLES. How many acres of swamp land were transferred to the Manitoba government this year?

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid I cannot give that. I think we have transferred in all about 2,000,000 acres ; about three-quarters of a million acres were transferred this year.

Mr. STAPLES. How many acres of Dominion lands are there still in Manitoba?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say until tomorrow.

Mr. STAPLES. Who are the inspectors inspecting the swamp lands in Manitoba?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Dukes and Mr. Ducker are and have been for some years.

Mr. STAPLES. What conditions are required to qualify lands as swamp lands?

Mr. OLIVER. The requirement is set out in an order in council. Roughly it is that some portion, one-quarter or one-half of a quarter-section, must have been at some time under water. Then it can be reported as swamp land and we can transfer it.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister knows that it has been a grievance in the province for many years that according to the Act of 1885 about 7,000,000 acres should have been turned over to the province long before now, and not more than two and a half million or three million acres have been transferred. That land is drying up and what would have qualified as swamp ten years ago would not qualify now. The province is losing a good asset owing to the delay in inspecting and turning over the lands. Before and after the change of government here, Mr. Greenway, then the leader of the provincial government, said that upon the Liberals coming into power in Ottawa these lands would be quickly turned over to the provincial government, but they have not been.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know my hon. friend's authority for the statement that there are 7,000,000 acres which should be transferred to the province.

Mr. STAPLES. That was the estimate in 1885.

Mr. OLIVER. It may be that in all Manitoba there are 10,000,000 acres that would qualify, but the agreement is that the lands are only to be handed over on their being surveyed. As the survey has progressed the inspection has been made and the lands handed over. We have now handed over 2,000,000 acres and there remains very little that has been inspected and surveyed to be handed over. There is, however, an account to be adjusted between the two governments in respect of lands which have been handed over to the province as swamp lands and which have been squatted upon by settlers before being handed over. In the protection of the rights of these settlers it has been necessary to make some adjustment with the province of Manitoba. This account is still open, but as far as the lands are concerned they are inspected and handed over. The grievance that the province of Manitoba is suffering because lands which were not handed over as swamp lands some years ago have become dry and are now not eligible to be handed over as swamp lands, may be a good argument on behalf of Manitoba, but I am afraid that my hon. friend will not receive sympathy from other sections of the Dominion in his complaint, because if it was a loss to Manitoba it was a corresponding gain to the Dominion. But I think my hon. friend's contention is imaginary rather than real. Taking one year with another, the average has been about even, and the province does not stand either to lose or gain by delay.

Mr. STAPLES. I think the province of Manitoba should have its rights; and should not lose this valuable asset by lapse of time. There has been nothing to prevent this government in the last ten years putting on the necessary surveyors and inspectors to survey these lands, so that they could have been handed over to the province; and I am sure that the sister provinces of this Dominion would not consider that Manitoba was getting the best of them. It is generally conceded throughout this Dominion that the province of Manitoba has not been treated as it should have been by this government. I do not think the other provinces want to take an unfair advantage of the province of Manitoba, or make a gain from the fact that these lands, by the lapse of time, are continually drying up and will not qualify as swamp lands. If they had been inspected ten years ago and had been turned over to the province at that time as swamp lands, the province would have got the benefit. I am not making this complaint against this government only, but against the late Conservative government as well. What the people of Manitoba expect is fair treatment, and therefore I would ask the minister to take immediate action to put on the necessary surveyors and inspectors, and turn over to the province what lands will qualify as provincial swamp lands.

Mr. FOSTER. In connection with this item I have a matter placed in my hands which I do not understand very well, and I am going to ask the minister to allow us to take it up on some other of his items, so that we may get the information required.

Mr. OLIVER. What is it in connection with?

Mr. FOSTER. It is in connection with a request of the Robbins Irrigation Company for a re-arrangement of their lands.

Government of the Yukon Territory, $365,000.

Mr. OLIVER. For salaries and expenses connected with the administration of the territory $165,000 was voted for the fiscal year 1907-8, and the same amount is asked for the current fiscal year. The principal items are: salaries, $70,720; living allowances, $40,800; insane patients' expenses connected with transportation to asylum at New Westminster and for maintenance at Dawson and Whitehorse, $15,000; travelling expenses to and from Dawson and the territory, $5,000, printing and stationery, $7,000; advertising mining regulations, proclamations, &c., $5,000; telegrams, telephones and postage, $2,500; expenses connected with collection of export tax, $3,500; to pay commission of 10 per cent to the Royal Northwest Mounted Police on sums collected by them as mining recorders and inspectors, $6,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the minister making any change with reference to living allowances?

Mr. OLIVER. There is no change proposed in these estimates. The living-allowances are the same this year as last, and they were the same last year as the year before.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that Mr. Girouard is no longer registrar, and that some re-arrangement has been made. Will the minister explain what that is?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Girouard has retired, and Mr. Laliberté, who was librarian to the Justice Department, has been made registrar at $3,800 salary and $1,200 living allowance instead of $4,000 salary and $1,500 living allowance which Mr. Girouard received. His salary as librarian of the Jusice Department I understand will drop.

Mr. FOSTER. What was that salary?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to answer that, as it is in another department; but the idea is to combine the duties of the two offices under the one salary, which shall be that of the registrar.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been charged that there are too many officers there at present for the work there is to do. Has the minister looked into that?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend will remember that some time ago there was considerable reduction in the number of officials. I am not able at present, beyond this change with regard to Laliberté, to offer any proposal for reduction. The commissioner of the Yukon was here a little while ago in connection with the reduction that we proposed to make in connection with the government of the Yukon, and I discussed the matter with him, and he informed me that he was not able at the moment to make any suggestion as to reduction. I urged on him the desirability of reductions being made if they could be made, but I regret to say that in one or two instances he seemed to think that more assistance would be needed rather than less. For instance, he says that the surveys are very much behind, and that we should have more assistance in that work.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the duties of F. T. Congdon, who is receiving a very large salary and a large living allowance?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Congdon is not in the employ now. He retired about a year ago. He was legal adviser. When Mr. Congdon retired, Mr. Senkler, who before that was gold commissioner, was made legal adviser at the same salary and with the same living allowance. Mr. Gosselin, who had been assistant gold commissioner, was made commissioner, and the office of assistant was dropped, it being believed that, with The Placer Mining Act, there was not the necessity that formerly existed for a gold commissioner and an assistant.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any reduction been made in the number of clerks in the Gold Commissioner's office? There seems to be altogether too many of them. For instance you have appointed a clerk, L. G. Bennett, gold commissioner's office, getting a salary and allowance of $1,690 for the nine months; Bolduc, a clerk, gold commissioner's office, with a salary and allowance of $1,600 for the nine months ; a stenographer, gold commissioner's office, with a salary and allowance of $1,837 for the nine months ; Aime Dugas, a clerk in the gold commissioner's office at $1,900 salary and allowance for the nine months ; Finnie, chief clerk. gold commissioner's office, $2,625, salary and allowance for the nine months ; another mining inspector, and then you have Fysh, clerk, gold commissioner's office, $2,025, salary and allowance for the nine months ; Gosselin, assistant gold commissioner, with a salary and allowance of $3,900 for the nine months ; Grant, clerk, gold commissioner's office, salary and allowance, $1,800 for the nine months. Then more mining inspectors. Then L'Hereux, clerk, gold commissioner's office, $1,100, salary and allowance for the nine months ; Little, stenographer, gold commissioner's office, $2,025, salary and allowance for the nine months ; Macfarlane, clerk, gold commissioner's office, $1,760, salary and allowance for nine months. Then you have an accountant in the gold commissioner's office at $1,500, salary and allowance for the nine months. Another stenographer and gold clerk, at $2,475, salary and allowance for the nine months. An assistant gold commissioner at White Horse, over $3,000, salary and allowance for the nine months; G. D. Munroe, clerk, gold commissioner's office, salary and allowance, $1,440 for the nine months ; W. C. Noble, clerk, gold commissioner's office, $1,650, salary and allowance for the nine months ; G. Pepin—that is the ministrel, I suppose—clerk, gold commissioner's office, $1,575, salary and living allowance for the nine months ; G. Petre, clerk, gold commissioner's office, salary and living allowance, $1,500 for the nine months ; A. H. Povah, gold commissioner's office, $1,370, salary and living allowance nine months ; E. C. Sinkler, gold commissioner, salary and living allowance for the nine months, $4,875. Another stenographer in the gold commissioner's court, $1,586, salary and living allowance for the nine months ; another stenographer, gold commissioner's office, $1,575, salary and living allowance, nine months ; a correspondence clerk, salary and living allowance, $1,800 for the nine months ; an assistant correspondence clerk, salary and allowance, $1,200. That is a tremendous staff. Does the minister really think all that array is necessary for the work in the gold commissioner's office there ? He himself was there and looked into it. What I am told is that there is an aggregation of men there absolutely unnecessary. Any business man could do the work with a very much less number of men and expense.

Mr. OLIVER. Of the names mentioned, Munroe, Macfarlane and Pepin are not in the employ there at all, and their places have not been filled. Macfarlane is employed as mining inspector on one of the creeks at Granville in the place of another man who has left the service. These are some of the decreases I mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister not think that the pruning knife could still be applied ?

Mr. OLIVER. It looks to me as if it could. I did succeed in getting some pruning done. I have discussed the matter very fully with the present commissioner, and although he may not be as anxious to apply the pruning knife as my hon. friend, still I think he will do what is right, and I hope the staff will not be allowed to remain over the requirements, if it is too large. It does look bulky for the amount of business.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister must take into consideration the fact that the commissioner lives night and day with these people, and the last thing in the world he wants to do is to recommend that any of them be cut down. If the minister waits until that is done, he will wait a long time. I think he ought to exercise his own judgment about that. If it was a large place, where the people were distributed a good deal, the commissioner would have all the more liberty that way, but they form a circle of their own, and it would be like cutting out one of his own family for the commissioner to make recommendations in that way. I hope he will do what is right, but I do not think there is much hope that he will face the live flesh with the idea that he is going to cut down their salaries and living allowance, because I do not think he is courageous enough to do it. As regards Mr. Congdon, the local adviser, he was for a long time the representative of the government as controller or administrator of estates ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it true that, although the law required he should give bonds, he never did give security, all the time he was administrator of public estates ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not aware that he acted twice in that capacity, that is before he was commissioner and after he was commissioner.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, he was in and out all the time.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not aware that he gave bonds on either occasion. I am satisfied that on one occasion he did not.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the papers will show that he never gave either an individual bond or a guarantee bond or anything of the kind. Who is administrator now ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Senkler, the present legal adviser, and administrator during the absence of Mr. Henderson.

Mr. FOSTER. Does he give bond ?

Mr. OLIVER. He is under a bond of $10,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it also correct that Mr. Congdon, all the time he administered the estates as public administrator, never really made any statement with reference to any estate he administered, and that the department has not a single statement made by him of a complete estate—of the transactions from start to finish.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to answer definitely. I am under the impression however, that, so far as our department is concerned, my hon. friend is probably correct. However, I understand that the case is that the administrator of estates—as the practice was there—was under the direction of the local government, the Yukon council. We appointed him and paid his salary, but, as I understand it, his administration was in accordance with the laws and ordinances of the Yukon council, and it was understood that his responsibilities were to them and not to us. For that reason. the statement that he would make would naturally be to the Yukon council, not to us.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not true that the public administrator represented the Minister of the Interior ? If so, surely the minister here ought to have statements of his administration. It does not seem to me that the Bill is not filled when he is simply left to the tender mercies of the council which he himself dominates. Mr. Congdon is a rather dominatingly-inclined man, as shown by his whole history. He went out and went in a good many times, and never went back without having an increase in his salary, a very material increase. He was a kind of character who really controlled and had a dominating influence. He was commissioner some time, and member of the council generally. It would be an odd thing to have the public administrator accountable to himself as a member of the council. Is the minister aware whether he ever made a statement of an estate he managed as public administrator—finished statements and duly audited, before the local government ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, I am not aware how the business was transacted between himself and the local government in that connection. I may say that I have found the position as it was, and I stated it to my hon. friend, entirely unsatisfactory, for practically the reasons which he has placed before the House and because of the divided responsibility, so to speak. The responsibility was not definitely fixed, either with the Yukon council or with the government. We, I assume, took it for granted, that the Yukon Council, having passed laws and ordinances under which the administration was to be carried on, would see to it that the laws and ordinances were properly administered. They, on the other hand, possibly thought that, as we appointed the administrator and paid him we were looking after the matter. I am afraid that, as a result of the examination made last summer by Mr. Beddoe—I think the report has been brought down—the matter was not in a condition that was satisfactory, or, I will go so far as to say, creditable to any of the parties concerned. I propose to cure that difficulty for the future. We did cure it in a measure when Mr. Senkler was appointed, by our requiring him to deposit securities to the amount of $10,000. There was a question raised as to our right to do that, the supposition being that it was the right or duty of the Yukon council to do it. However, we required the deposit of the security. And, in the Bill now before the House in regard to the Yukon, we propose to take the responsibility in regard to the administration of estates, to appoint the administrator, to require him to give security, and, while he administers the estates subject to the laws and ordinances of the Yukon council, he will make an accounting to the representative of the Auditor General. That will be more satisfactory. It is not that we wish to take from the rights or responsibilities of the local government, but we feel the condition in the past was such that we are warranted in future, in such an important and delicate matter, in absolutely fixing the responsibility. We will be quite prepared to fix the responsibility and place it entirely on the local government, but, if we are to assume any part of it, we want to assume it all.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad to hear the statement made by the minister. I assume that, under the new arrangement, we shall not have what appears to me to be such a scandal as has been there for so many years. There is one other question we ought to have satisfactorily at rest ; Is it not the intention of the government to demand from Mr. Congdon an account of his stewardship ? He has been there, he has administered estates, he has acted as guardian for infants and had had charge of trust mattters dealing with the most intimate relations that the government has with its wards; and all the time he has been there, as we have seen, he has not really finished up an estate so far as putting in a statement that anybody could get hold of, properly audited and shown to be absolutely correct. Does not the minister think that Mr. Congdon should be called upon to make a full report of every estate he has had in his charge, thoroughly audited, and that the past negligence should be atoned for, at least by having it as far as can be effected, put in regular shape? I think that is the only thing that can be done to secure the government from the imputation of allowing its representative there to carry on matters of that kind in a very lax way. And I do not think it would be at all improper that Mr. Congdon should be asked to give a thorough and complete statement of every estate that he has managed and to have that statement thoroughly audited if it has not already been audited, and made as plain as it can be made at this late date.

Mr. OLIVER. I feel not at all in a pleasant position in this matter of administration of estates so far as we have been able to reach a statement in regard to them. There is, no doubt, something to be said in favour of the view taken by my hon. friend. The difficulty that might, or may, arise if we decide to take such action is that we may not have the right to call for the statement. The position may be taken that I have suggested—I believe may very well be taken—that the accounting is not to us but to the local government. It does not appear that there is any legislation or any definite delegation of authority that would put us in a position to absolutely demand this accounting.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the minister, is it not the fact that either the government here is in a position to demand that accounting or the government there is in that position?

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, as the government here practically controls the government there by its appointed members, there is no difficulty in the government getting at the matter. I am not stating this to make a point against any one or anything of that kind; but I think it will be quite too bad—to say nothing stronger—that the matter should be left in the position in which it is. For instance, I have the right, I believe, to move for a return, showing the estates administered by the public administrator in the Yukon, and I suppose the House would pass a motion for a return of that kind and that we ought to have it. But that will not be necessary if the minister himself will see that, through their own legislation or through their control of the government of the Yukon, that statement shall be made. I do not know that I ought to press the minister, because I suppose he has gone as far as he can under the circumstances. But as regards the present legal adviser, who is receiving the people's money as an employee of the government, is it proper for him to put himself at the head of a political organization, and fight out political campaigns, strike down opponents, boost up his friends, with all the arts that he can use? The present incumbent of that office, Mr. Senkler, is he disposed to take that line of conduct? If he does and I were in the Yukon, I would never let him rest. Mr. Congdon was legal adviser, he was commissioner, and almost everything by turns, always well paid for it, and all the time he was an ardent partisan, continually menacing, threatening and cajoling in order to work up a party interest. It does not seem to me that men who are paid by the people's money and put in official positions, should be allowed to do that out there any more than they would be here. I cannot conceive that Mr. Senkler would be a man of that stamp.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not understand that the hon. gentleman suggests that Mr. Senkler is taking that course, I think it would be very far from his character. As for Mr. Congdon, I think it is fair to say that in my judgment the hon. gentleman has presented the case in a very extreme light. Mr. Congdon was legal adviser of the government in the Yukon, and on the retirement of the Hon. Mr. Ross from the commissionership, Mr. Congdon was promoted to the commissionership. There may have been an interval during which he was not legal adviser or commissioner, but it was practically a promotion from the position of legal adviser to that of commissioner. I cannot agree that any slur is to be cast upon Mr. Congdon for partisan or political action while he was commissioner. It is true, he retired from the commissionership, and became a candidate as a supporter of the government. In the contest he was unsuccessful. There have been grave statements made as to the methods in which the political contest was conducted which resulted in his defeat. I am not prepared to say whether those assertions are correct or not. But I have heard no such assertions in regard to his conduct when he was reappointed as legal adviser. When Mr. McInnes was commissioner I had no knowledge of any political activity on his part. He was acting as legal adviser amongst the people who had supported him for the position of member of parliament. True, he did not quarrel with those people. But I am bound to say that so far as my observation went while I was in the Yukon, he was not in any sense using his position as legal adviser to advance any one's political interest. He seemed to be attending strictly to the business he was appointed to do. I am bound to say that I know of no person whose qualifications are better than those of Mr. Congdon. Any one who knows him will agree that he is a very brilliant man, with a very good knowledge of law, and a most excellent method of expression. Besides, he is a man of absolutely blameless private life.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason for all these timber men?

Mr. OLIVER. We pay members of the mounted police who are stationed on the creeks, ten per cent on the collection of timber dues. We have one timber inspector, Charles Sylvester.

Mr. FOSTER. I find here that you have Mr. Martin, crown timber and land agent, $2.250 for nine months; you have W. H. Povah, clerk of timber and land office, $2,000 for nine months; you have Mr. Sugrue, timber inspector, $1,400 for nine months, and Mr. Sylvester, timber inspector, $1,800 for nine months. Those are in the timber branch. I do not think that the timber business is very heavy in the Yukon.

Mr. OLIVER. Martin and Sugrue are not now in the employ of the government. Povah is employed in the gold commissioner's office as stenographer. We have only one officer in the timber business; that is Mr. Sylvester.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, that makes it better. It would seem that the gold commissioner's office, the mining engineers and the inspectors might all work together. It is a cognate business. What does Mr. A. J. Beaudette, mining engineer, do?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Beaudette is, in my estimation, the most valuable man we have in the Yukon. His duty is to satisfy the recorders or the gold commissioner, as the case may be, as to the facts upon the ground with regard to any matter of dispute that may arise.

Mr. FOSTER. And is necessary in that regard, I dare say.

Mr. OLIVER. Whereas the other mining recorders and inspectors are local officials who accept entries for mining claims and collect royalties and do other office duties, Mr. Beaudette is the man out on the creek who actually inspects the work.

Mr. FOSTER. Could the collections be made by the gold commissioner's clerks?

Mr. OLIVER. These are the collections made on the creeks.

Mr. FOSTER. I find that the Povahs seem to be quite a family up there. There are three of them.

Mr. OLIVER. There is only one of that family, Mr. W. F. Povah, who is now in the employ of the government. He is a stenographer and he was formerly in the timber office. The others are not in the service.

Mr. FOSTER. Have all the expenses of the Treadgold Commission been paid. I notice $1,000 paid to Judge Britton. Does that finish up the expenses of that commission?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice that the Yukon 'World and Official Gazette' got $3,520, a large part of which was for printing and a part for advertising. Does the minister himself supervise that? The Whitehorse 'Star,' for advertising the mining regulations for twelve months, got $600 and also something for advertising. These payments seem to be large. Then a lot of smaller papers, some of them in eastern Canada, received various sums. What are the reasons for running down here and publishing these advertisements?

Mr. OLIVER. We publish the mining regulations in the Dawson and Whitehorse papers and in some of the British Columbia papers pretty fully. We also publish in some of the leading eastern papers in centres like Montreal and Toronto a synopsis of our homestead and mining regulations and we charge the part of the advertisement relating to mining regulations to this Yukon vote. But that is only a small part of the expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are the insane taken charge of?

Mr. OLIVER. In the New Westminster insane asylum.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the grant for the local council of $125,000 given them in a lump sum?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. How is it audited?

Mr. OLIVER. There is a quarterly audit by the Auditor General. The accounts do not go to the Department of the Interior; they go direct to the Auditor General and are audited by him. Of course, there is a local accountant. The Auditor General is sending one of his officials to the Yukon now to make an audit on the ground. Under the Bill which is now before the House we propose that the accounts of the Yukon, both local and federal, shall be audited in the Yukon by a representative of the Auditor General; that is to say, that the Auditor General shall officially be there for a part of the year to audit the accounts. Without waiting for this legislation the Auditor General has sent one of his men to make such an audit under the authority that he now possesses or believes himself to possess.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, according to Mr. Beddoe's report, it is not a bad thing to have it done.

Government of the Northwest Territories, $9,800.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the services that Mr. Fred White gives apart from the work which he carries on in connection with the Northwest Mounted Police?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. White's duties as commissioner of the Northwest are fairly set out in the items which I have before me.

Mr. FOSTER. There is clerical assistance in his own office?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And schools. Would the minister explain what these are?

Mr. OLIVER. There are a number of mission schools scattered throughout the Northwest Territories and one which is not a mission school, and Mr. White oversees the distribution of assistants to these schools, simply assisting the efforts which are being made on behalf of education.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the minister give us the particulars with respect to these schools?

Mr. OLIVER. The list is as follows:

List of Schools in the Northwest Territories receiving Grants from the Dominion Government through the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories.

Place.	School.	To whom Grant paid.	Name of Teacher.	Yearly Grant.

				2,485 00

Mr. FOSTER. How many children attend that Barrows school?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the numbers here. The school is at a village north of the Canadian Northern which is just beyond the line of the province of Manitoba. The school is in a saw milling village which is outside the jurisdiction of Manitoba and is reached by a short piece of railway. It is not a mission school?

Mr. FOSTER. Do these schools report?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, they report as to their work.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is that report printed.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not imagine that that report has been printed. There will be some mention of it in the published reports.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Is that the only school is Keewatin?

Mr. OLIVER. It is the only one to which we give any assistance and the only public school we have any knowledge of at the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the attendance and such information in reference to these schools should be given in return for the help we give.

Mr. OLIVER. They make a return every three months to the commissioner. It may be printed in the report of the commissioner, but I do not think he has yet published a separate report.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). What disposition is made of insane patients from the Northwest Territories?

Mr. OLIVER. There are only two insane patients at the present time from the Northwest Territories and I believe they are being treated at the Brandon asylum.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). There is no change since the formation of the new provinces?

Mr. OLIVER. No, they have not made arrangements for the care of the insane.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are the prisoners taken care of?

Mr. OLIVER. I think that depends on the locality. The Northwest Territories extend along the north of five provinces and I fancy prisoners will be taken to whichever province is most convenient.

Mr. FOSTER. What is included in miscellaneous expenses?

Mr. OLIVER. It is necessary always to have a small amount to meet contingencies that may arise, but here we are asking an increase of $600. My note says that we now have accounts amounting to about $1,200 in connection with what is known as the Fiddler murder in the Keewatin district.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If you take Supply to-morrow, in what department?

Mr. FIELDING. We will take Railways first, and, if there is time, Militia.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, June 9, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES.

Mr. MONK. The House will remember that a motion was put off till to-day regarding the adoption of a report made on the 20th May last, by the committee appointed to supervise the official debates of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I had hoped that the chairman of the committee would be in his seat to-day, but he is not. Cannot the hon. gentleman wait until to-morrow ?

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 183) to amend the Canadian Shipping Act—Mr. Brodeur.

SALARIES OF PUBLIC WORKS EMPLOYEES.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to renew my request of yesterday to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) with reference to the salaries of employees in the Public Works Department.

Hon. WILLIAM PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works.) I have made inquiries, and I find that the caretakers and the heating engineers in the public buildings at Hamilton have not received their pay. So the hon. gentleman's information was correct on that point.

Mr. FOSTER. When the one-eighth was granted, the minister said that would be sufficient to pay these men for April and May. Is there any special reason why this has been withheld?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I also made inquiry as to the reason, and I found that with respect to the caretakers and heating engineers the vote of last year was not sufficient to pay them for the entire year, and a portion of the one-eighth was used in paying wages for the month of March. Then with the remainder the accountant began in the eastern provinces and went as far west as he could. So the caretakers and heating engineers, not only in Hamilton but in other parts of Ontario and the west, have not yet been paid.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister taken the course of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and issued a circular to the public works employees throughout the country as to their working in anticipation?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, because I have great hope, and the accountant felt, that in the course of a few days a vote for these poor men, who must of course get their pay, as every hon. gentleman will admit, would be available. I did not think it was necessary to issue a circular just at present.

Mr. LENNOX. We are in very good humour now.

ANGLO-AMERICAN TREATIES.

Mr. SPROULE. When may we expect that the Anglo-American treaties and the correspondence in connection with them, will be laid on the table? We were promised them before now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will inquire.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the First Minister to say last week that they would be all ready in a few days.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I did not say that. I said I would lay them on the table as soon as they were printed. They were ordered to be printed at once, and they are in the hands of the printers now.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the government a question in regard to Bill (No. 157) which has been introduced by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith), an Act to amend the Railway Act. Is it the intention of the government to promote the passage of that legislation during the present session ? The Bill is a very short one. it has only one paragraph, which is in the following terms :

No operator, train despatcher, or other employee who, by the use of the telegraph, telephone, or other electrical device, despatches, reports, transmits, receives, or delivers orders or messages pertaining to or affecting train movements shall be required or permitted to be on duty for a longer period than eight hours in any twenty-four hour period, except in case of emergency, in which case any such employee may remain on duty for a period not exceeding twelve hours in a twenty-four hour period, and such excess duty shall not be permitted on more than two days in any seven.

In view of the frequency of accidents on our railways during the past few years, I would like to ask the government if it is their intention to have that legislation passed during the present session?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a public Bill, and must take its rank along with all other legislation of a similar nature. Whether this Bill and other public Bills should be treated exceptionally, is a matter as to which I could not give an opinion at this moment.

THE GOVERNMENT STEAMER 'MONTCALM.'

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) if he has received the report and evidence taken in the investigation into the sinking of the 'Montcalm.'

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, on Friday I moved :

That an order of the House do issue to the proper officer for a copy of the evidence taken in the 'Milwaukee-Montcalm' collision case.

And I presented the return immediately. I take it that that is the return to which my hon. friend has alluded.

DISTRIBUTION OF SEED GRAIN.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). I would ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). whether or not there would be any objection to laying on the table a statement respecting the seed grain supplied in the west, setting forth the amount purchased by the government, the sum paid for it, the amount that has been sold to farmers under the terms of the arrangement either by this government or the provincial government and the selling price. I have forgotten the exact details of the arrangement, but the minister will understand what information should be given.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Of course, the distribution is only just completed. The report is being prepared as quickly as possible to place before the House. It cannot be a complete statement, as the accounts will not be closed by that time. It will be of the nature of an interim report dealing with the subject of purchase and distribution. I hope to place it before the House within a short time but I cannot fix a date for bringing it down.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Would the proposed statement show what disposition the persons to whom the grain was distributed had made of it ? The object of the government in distributing the grain, of course, was to have it sown, and so a complete statement would show how many acres the party had sown. I have heard it said that considerable amounts of this grain had been sold by the parties receiving it.

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid the statement I have in process of preparation would not cover that point, but the point will be covered by a subsequent and complete statement. However, I think there is very little danger that any of the grain has been sold, as the price at which we have been compelled to supply it would not be attractive as a basis of transactions.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Would it cover the point how much of it had been paid for ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, it will show that—absolutely.

FEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON (South Cape Breton). With the leave of the House, I move :

That Bill (No. 185) respecting the Lake Champlain and St. Lawrence Ship Canal Company be placed on the Order Paper for second reading this day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I observe that a great many of the private Bills are going to the Senate in the first instance. I quite approve of that idea. There is no reason in the world why many of the private Bills —and, indeed, public Bills as well—could not be introduced in the Senate. But I would like to call the attention of the government to the circumstance that there is, if I remember the rules correctly, a great discrepancy in the fees required on the introduction of a private Bill in the Senate and those required on the introduction of a private Bill in this House. Besides that, the rules of this House make special provision for additional fees, where Bills are introduced after a certain time in the session. The object of that, as the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will remember, is to have Bills brought forward, and the work on them done, in the early part of the session when the business of the House is not conjested. This particular Bill, and other Bills as well, come to us pretty late in the session. I would suggest that, as the government have entire control of the framing of the rules of the Senate in this regard, it might be advisable to consult with the leader of the Senate with the view to having the rules of the two Houses made uniform on this point. It seems to me an unnecessary incongruity that a private Bill introduced in this House should pay a particular amount, while the same Bill if introduced in the Senate, would pay a smaller amount, or that there should be any such discrepancy in these fees.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). As my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) knows, the Senate is the master of its own rules. The rules prevailing there are of the Senate's own framing. Two years ago, when we amended the rules of this House, we provided new fees for private Bills and I think that, on the whole, the new rule is an improvement on the old. The attention of the Senate may not have been called to this matter. But my hon. friend knows that the Senate desires to do more of the work of the session. I shall deem it my duty to call the attention of the leader of the Senate to this matter.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.). I desire to ask the Minister of Railways about a certain return, ordered by the House some time ago, with regard to the running of two trains a day on the Murray Harbour Railway in my province. I have made some inquiry about it and it has not been brought down. I would also remind the Minister of Marine and Fisheries about a return of licenses for fishing and canning lobster in my province which have not yet been brought down.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I thought the return had been brought down. I will make inquiries about it.

SUPPLY—THE PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (Leeds). I am pleased to see the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) in his place this morning, but am sorry to see that he has 'busted' his voice——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR. What I say is quite correct, for, as the hon. gentleman has attempted to answer a few questions across the floor to-day we have been unable to understand him. He has been out in the country preaching provincial politics, and I would like to inquire why a minister occupying the high and honourable position which the minister occupies would descend so low as to——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw that. But I intended to read from the paper what the minister said, and then I will leave it to the House——

Mr. SPEAKER. That statement, I suppose, is withdrawn.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, I withdrew it. I wonder why the minister cannot go into his own province and talk provincial politics without making use of the following language :

> Starting on another tack, the Minister of Marine asked : 'How is it that a man so ferocious for French Canadians and Catholics as Mr. Bourassa is, has allied himself with an Orangeman of Ontario like Geo. Taylor to get Mr. Cousineau elected in Hull?'

And further :

> Do you mean to say that an alliance between Mr. Bourassa and an Orangeman like Geo. Taylor is not provincial politics? asked the speaker.

That is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I admit that the charge made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is correct, that George Taylor does belong to the Orange institution. He is proud of the honour of belonging to it and he is also pleased to ally himself with the first to make use of this language in the province of Quebec ; Mr. Bourassa said :

> He did not, however, want to raise religious questions, but wanted the two races to remain in peace under the British flag.

Any man who makes use of these sentiments can depend on George Taylor coming to his assistance, because the Orangemen of this country have a duty to perform and they have performed it from time immemorial up to the present. That is to grant free religious institutions all over this country, to maintain and uphold them. We have no objection to our French Canadians because they belong to the Roman Catholic Church and it is our duty to uphold them in their rights. I did go over to Hull to help Mr. Cousineau and I am very glad to say that the French Canadian people of Ottawa county elected Mr. Cousineau to support Mr. Bourassa, to the great discomfort of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. But, I do think it beneath the dignity of a minister of the Crown to go into his own province and among his own people and try to raise religious and race cries. I am surprised at the hon. gentleman descending to such tactics in order to try to defeat a gentleman who, I am glad to know, is elected in the two constituencies he ran for and who will carry Quebec when he appeals again, as he did appeal yesterday to his friends there not to pay any attention to what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries might say and who made use of this language :

He did not, however, want to raise religious questions, but wanted the two races to remain in peace under the British flag.

Further :

Hon. Mr. Brodeur——

Mr. Bourassa said :

—talking about George Taylor and Orangemen, had forgotten to say that he had voted ten or twelve times with Mr. Geo. Taylor for the abolition of the French language in the Northwest.

The minister did not tell them that. But, when he refers to 'an Orangeman like Geo. Taylor' I would like to know what his meaning is ; I would like to know what he means by it ? Why did he not refer to the Orangemen sitting behind him ? For instance, why did he not talk about the hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Finlay) ? Does he think that there are no Orangemen amongst the hon. gentlemen who are supporting the government ?

Mr. FOSTER. They were not worth mentioning.

Mr. TAYLOR. No. But, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, going down into his own province, trying to raise religious feeling and indulging in the language which I have quoted could have mentioned some hon. gentlemen who are supporters of the government at the same time that he picked out 'an Orangeman like Geo. Taylor.'

Mr. LENNOX. Are there any more of them there ?

Mr. TAYLOR. There is quite a number, the hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Finlay), the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson), the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Jackson), the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) and the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley).

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The hon. member (Mr. Taylor) is astray.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, while he occupies the position of a minister, ought to rise above race and religious cries in a local election instead of dragging in the names of men who are just as honest as himself and making references to Orangemen like so-and-so. The Orangemen occupy a high and honourable position in this country, the institution is just as high and honourable as any in this country either in the province of Ontario or of Quebec and we do not like the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to go on the platform and condemn and censure people as if they were not fit to be citizens of this country. They are citizens, they hold high places in this country and they will continue to do so.

Mr. BRODEUR. What is my hon. friend reading from ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I am reading from the Montreal 'Gazette.'

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister cannot deny it. I would like to ask the minister if he did not make use of this language.

Mr. BRODEUR. Not in the way it is reported there.

Mr. TAYLOR. A good deal worse probably in French. Does the government blame the opposition for obstructing when ministers go out and throw out such insults as this ? I ask the minister to say whether he said that Mr. Bourassa had formed an alliance with Orangemen like Geo. Taylor.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Answer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Speak now.

Mr. SPROULE. If the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) does not deign to reply, I would like to say that such language does not come with very good grace from a minister of the Crown and especially from one who has so frequently referred to the fact that he desires to avoid race and religious cries in this country and that he always aimed at putting them down and keeping them under. It is not a very good evidence of that desire and, if the hon. gentleman is correctly reported, I frankly confess that I do not think it is to his credit or to the credit of any minister of the Crown to make use of such language.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Railways and Canals—collection of revenue —Intercolonial, $9,000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) goes on with his explanation I would like to read him a telegram which was sent to me, and if the minister could give us any information as to when the orders were given and what they were meant to signify I would be very glad. This telegram was sent from Moncton on June 5, 1908 :

Hon. Geo. E. Foster,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Following circular No. 490 has been posted in government offices here:

Division Superintendent's Office, June 3.

I have letter from general manager dated 2nd instant which reads as follows: 'I am instructed by department to advise you that the interior partial appropriation votes by parliament for works and staff under control of Department of Railways and Canals will shortly be exhausted, if not already so, and that no further appropriation has been obtained from parliament at the present date, and to instruct you to notify the general members of your staff of the position leaving it to them to decide whether they will continue to work on understanding that no salaries or wages will be paid them until further Supplies have been voted. Please be governed accordingly.' Similar notices have been sent to employees individually. Is there any warrant for this circular?

I think the minister owes it to the House to make a statement as to what he really intended to do by that letter. Did he intend to dismantle the Intercolonial Railway force or was this tantamount to a notice of a discontinuance of service? If it was not meant for that what was the particular purpose the minister had in mind?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The particular purpose the minister had in mind is I think quite clear on the face of the document itself. I do not see how any minister in charge of a department like mine could protect the department and himself under the conditions without doing something of that kind in view of what I will read now. On May 15 the Deputy Minister of the Department of Railways and Canals received the following from the Auditor General which I think will explain the whole situation:

Sir,—Let me call your attention to the fact that of a great portion of the estimates for 1909 only one-eighth has been voted by parliament. Please note that we have no authority to exceed this until further supplies have been granted. In view of discussions which have taken place in reference to the overdrawing of appropriations it would be advisable to notify all your officials charged with the expenditure of public money that they must not under any circumstances exceed the appropriation.

In view of that, the department did what it always does with contracts when the money has not been voted—it notified those interested that their salaries would be subject to supply being voted by the House. Suppose this had happened: Suppose parliament had dissolved and gone to the country it was well to have it understood that the money not having been voted the men could not be paid and until the money was obtained that they were working under that understanding. It was simply that and nothing more.

Mr. HAGGART. Could not the hon. gentleman do as he did before and pay them when there was no appropriation by Governor General's warrant?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend forgets that a Governor General's warrant can only issue when parliament is not in session.

Mr. HAGGART. I know that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Parliament would not be in session under the supposition put by the Minister of Railways, namely, that there would be a dissolution.

Mr. FIELDING. I was speaking of the present conditions under which the circular was issued.

Mr. HAGGART. Are not all the receipts of the Intercolonial at the disposal of the department?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. HAGGART. When was a change made?

Mr. FOSTER. The money goes to the Receiver General now.

Mr. HAGGART. By what Act of parliament was that done? When I was Postmaster General and when I was Minister of Railways the receipts were at the disposal of the departments if they choose to use them. Has the Minister of Railways any information from the Justice Department to the contrary?

Mr. FIELDING. That has never been the case under the present administration, and I think my hon. friend is mistaken as to his own practice. I have not looked into the law, but I presume the practice has been in conformity with the law and the practice is that all the receipts from the public works of Canada go into the consolidated fund and can only be paid out of the Dominion treasury when voted by parliament. I think my hon. friend is mistaken when he says it was otherwise in his day.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not mistaken at all. When I was Postmaster General and Minister of Railways I got an opinion from the Justice Department that all the receipts were at the disposition of the department of Railways and Canals and of the Post Office Department. Unless that has been changed there is no necessity at all for all this complaint about not paying the Intercolonial Railway employees and the Post Office employees. The Postmaster General has no doubt consulted the law officers of the Crown and he knows whether I am correct or not.

Mr. FIELDING. I still think my hon. friend is mistaken, but if there is a law which would allow any department to make use of the public money without the authority of parliament I think it is an unfortunate law. I am speaking of what has been the practice and I rather think it is in accordance with the law.

Mr. LENNOX. The suggestion made by the Minister of Railways was that there would be a dissolution of parliament and if that were so my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) was correct in saying that a Governor General's warrant might issue. That is what the Minister of Railways put forward as an excuse for having issued his circular.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not as an excuse.

Mr. LENNOX. I see fit to call it an excuse. The government might be driven to a dissolution of course, but I don't think they are likely to have any dissolution at the present time. The Minister of Railways has put forward a very poor excuse for the issuing of this circular. He gives the letter of the Auditor General as a reason, but the minister must have known the condition of things without the Auditor General pointing it out to him. Is the government driven to such a position that they must issue circulars to the employees of the government advising them to go on strike, because that is the effect of the circular. It seems like a political dodge and nothing else, and an attempt to relieve the government from the odium in which they stand before the people for their conduct of public affairs. No existing circumstance could have justified the minister in issuing such a circular. I thought it had been issued in some way without his knowledge, but now that he takes the responsibility for it I am amazed that he should have done such a thing. That circular was simply a bid to the men employed on the Intercolonial to creat a political situation which is not in the interests of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to be uncharitable but I incline to the opinion of my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) that it smacks very strongly of being a political move in order to make capital against the opposition. If the minister had been perfectly frank he would have added to that circular that the reason the employees have not been paid is because of the minister's own neglect. The House met in November last and it was not until about twelve o'clock on Friday night, the 5th of June, that the minister deigned to ask the House for one dollar of this vote. If a gentleman who has charge of the Railway Department will sit in his seat for nearly seven months and not ask the House to grant him a vote of what is necesary in order to pay his employees, I think he is estopped from issuing a circular of that kind at this time. He should have explained to them that by some strange mischance or lapse of memory or something of that kind he had actually forgotten that there was some $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 to be voted for them and that he had not during these six months asked the House for a dollar of that money. Does not the minister think he should have added that as a codicil ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Railways being known to be a truthful person could not have made that statement in the circular because it would not be the truth. I am sorry to have again to point out that the Minister of Railways and Canals, through the Minister of Finance, months ago approached hon. gentlemen opposite in the customary way and asked that the various public services of the country, including these particular persons in the Railway Department, might be provided for by a vote on account. We asked that a one-fourth vote might be taken, leaving three fourths to be the subject of debate in later days. Hon. gentlemen opposite, when approached in the usual way, did not concur in that suggestion; they accepted it only in a qualified way and agreed to assist us in obtaining a one-eighth vote. That one-eighth was duly obtained. When it was exhausted the Minister of Railways and Canals again, through the Minister of Finance, following the usual course, proposed a further vote on account, and we were informed we could not obtain the assistance of the opposition in passing that further vote through the House.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Finance wishes to be given a reputation for extraordinary truthfulness.

Mr. FIELDING. Ordinary.

Mr. FOSTER. For never allowing, even by inference, the least idea to get abroad that he is doing a thing not exactly as it ought to be, vide an example not long ago, where the Minister of Finance, when fairly cornered by the member for East Northumberland (Mr. Owen) as to the fact that he had already had voted to him some $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 by this committee stated in effect that he could not be expected to come down for a Supply Bill for every $10 that was voted. That is an extraordinarily truthful way of representing the matter. A Minister of Finance who was cool and truthful and wanted to lay all the facts before the House, who was not unduly excited at the time of speaking, would say : I am very anxious to get the money so that these men can be paid. I have totalled up the items and find I have been voted some $7,000,000 or $8,000,000; here are these poor people waiting for their pay which is in arrears; I think as Minister of Finance I might take my dignity off my shoulders and ask a Supply Bill for $10,000,000 or $12,000,- 000 and so get the money for these public servants. Did he do that? No. He is the minister who says: You people in the opposition have no rights except what we chose to give you. He is the minister who has grown very autocratical—three-fourths of the difficulty in this House is due to his autocratical or aristocratical disposition. Time was, I dare say, when he was a democrat, a democrat down to the hilt, like the right hon. gentleman beside him. Time was when he belonged to the common people and stood for the virtues of the common people. To-day he has gone on in an interrupted course of events politically which he does not seem to have ascribed to anything but his great ability and foresight, whereas, in reality, Providence and favouring gales have been behind him and certainly he would not be in the position he is if Providence and favouring gales had not assisted him. Now he has grown autocratical. He says to these employees: Starve if you like, I have $12,000,000 of your money and I will be hanged if I will ask to have it paid to you until the whole batch of estimates are put through. The minister must take the responsibility for his position in not asking a Supply Bill for nearly $12,000,000. He is not suffering, he draws his salary each month as it is statutory. but these men cannot do that and he holds them up. The minister would have done well if on having $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 voted he had asked for a Supply Bill. He would then have done well for the people who are in need of the salaries which they have earned and which are due to them.

The minister has made the statement, not once but twice to-day, that the Minister of Railways and Canals has through him asked for a vote on two occasions. Of course the other ministers do not amount to much. The Minister of Customs is a small man and the Minister of Railways and Canals is a young man and they are modest and do not like to ask parliament for their votes and so the Minister of Finance says: Through me, the Finance Minister of this great and growing country, a vote is asked for. So when you tax the Minister of Railways and Canals with being too neglectful or having his memory not serve him well in this matter the Minister of Finance hopes to get him out of it by saying: Oh, that does not matter, I as Minister of Finance have asked for a vote on account on two occasions; on one occasion you gave us one-eighth and on the other you refused it. The Minister of Finance would be more truthful, according to his own statement of what he wants to get, if he had given the attendant circumstances of that second asking. The Finance Minister knows and the Prime Minister knows that negotiations have been going on, that there are questions in dispute between the opposition and the government and that every request which has been made for Supplies in that way has been made on the basis of negotiations which at the time were going on, and that there was a reply which might have been made by the Prime Minister himself which would have lightened the situation but that reply was not given.

The Prime Minister is fond of saying that the King's government must go on. Yes, but it is an altogether different assumption that it must go on under the present flag. It is quite possible it might go on just as well under another party. The King's government must go on but that is not the statement that it must go on under the party which at the moment holds the reins of power. There are some things which are public measures and some things are not. This measure which is in dispute between the opposition and the government to-day is a measure which affects the status of members of this House. It is something in which every member is interested. In Great Britain these arrangements of the franchise of the country are matters of consultation and agreement between both sides of the House. You cannot find an instance in the British parliament of a minister undertaking to revise the basis of the franchise and putting it on this ground; I have a right to bring this in. I am going to put it through and you have no right to treat this in any other way than to discuss it and vote upon it and see which side is the stronger of the two. They do not do things in that way in the British parliament, and never have done them in that way. This measure, therefore, fairly regarded, is not in the same category as a public Bill, the Civil Service Bill, for instance, the Hudson Bay Railway Bill, or any other measure of that kind. This is a matter for negotiation and compromise, and in the negotiations that have gone on, the granting of Supplies has been a make-weight. The Minister of Finance should have stated that, and should have stated, if he had wanted to be frank about it, that the negotiations are still pending and that the Prime Minister is the man who has been in charge and has not concluded the matter.

Now, I have been frank in this matter, because there is no use in trying to make out before the country that there is not an issue between us, nor is there any use in trying to make out that the issue is different from what it is. Here you have the franchises of the Dominion; here you have a party in power which, during eighteen years of its history in opposition, maintained a certain view with regard to the franchise. They declared for a Franchise Bill on the lines of the provincial franchises. They canvassed the country on that; they asked votes on that; they got into power on it. So they had a mandate from the people on this subject. They came into power and they revised the law according to the mandate of the people. Now, the Prime Minister has no mandate from the people to make ducks and drakes of the franchise arrangements of this country. Yet, without any mandate at all, they come before this parliament with a scheme which makes fish of one and flesh of another, which looks upon one province as being of a——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. JOHNSTON. What is the resolution before the chair?

Mr. FOSTER. The resolution is with reference to the granting of Supply. And making ducks and drakes of the basis of the franchise, treating one province in one way and another province in another way—

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is wandering away——

Mr. FOSTER.—is not a proper handling of this great question. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance know that negotiations have been on the basis of this difference between ourselves with regard to this franchise measure. Now, is it not possible that this matter can be arranged and arranged quickly? Is it not possible that the Prime Minister himself can take a position which will get rid of this subject and remove the check that exists between the King's business and this parliament? That taken out of the road, there will be no difficulty, as my right hon. friend well knows. We should then have the disputed question put to one side and we could get on without the disputed question always continually obtruding itself and getting in front of the real business of the country.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). How would it do for me to say a word or two just now. that my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) may know that I am in the House. I was away for a day or two——

Mr. FOSTER. What were you doing?

Mr. PATERSON. I was talking about the obstructive tactics of the opposition. Now, to diverge for a moment before dealing with the question which I rose to discuss, I may say that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) might be a little more careful about the speeches he makes in this House. You have heard him, Mr. Chairman, scores and scores of times declare that the Liberals had adopted a platform in 1893, but, getting in power, had not carried out a single plank of it. He says now that we did carry out one at least —we amended the Franchise Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) will allow me. I have heard members of the opposition make a statement on that point, but every one of them that I have heard has said that every plank of the Liberal platform had been sacrificed except one—that with reference to the Franchise Bill.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman has repeated—and 'Hansard' will show—that every principle laid down by us was violated—not one was carried out. Even the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has so far forgotten the facts as to state that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When?

Mr. PATERSON. Many a time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When? Tell me of one time.

Mr. PATERSON. I cannot recall them at the moment. I cannot recount exactly when the hon. gentleman spoke——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) that he is entirely mistaken.

Mr. PATERSON. Then the hon. gentleman has sat in his place and heard his supporters make statements that were untrue and has not contradicted them. The hon. member does not deny that these statements have been made——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I challenge the minister now—he wants to be very truthful —to put the statement before us: When that was made?

Mr. PATERSON. I am not playing this game of obstruction, understand. I cannot be drawn out in that way. I am within the judgment of the House whether that statement has or has not been repeated. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) alluded to the fact the other night that we had carried out this one plank and he has heard the——

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. And now you want to override it.

Mr. PATERSON. I am not going into a discussion of the platform. It is a good platform. There is one plank that has not been carried out—the reform of the Senate. We had the plebiscite. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will not deny that that is another plank that we have carried out.

Mr. FOSTER. I will not deny that the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) had a plebiscite.

Mr. PATERSON. The people——

Mr. FOSTER. The people got no show in it.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, the people voted in it. If hon. members cannot recall matters that have been of such great interest to the country it is a pity. Now, the hon.

member to whom I wish particularly to refer is not present, but some of the others who spoke on the matter with which I wish to deal are here. They spoke of me as having made a statement that was misleading and almost untrue. If I had done that, and my attention were called to it, I would at once take it back. But I cannot take it back and still tell the truth as I understand it. The member for East Northumberland (Mr. Owen) said :

The Hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) is reported to have said: 'In his department there were 1,800 men who could not get their pay because the Tory obstructionists would not vote supplies.'

And that he calls a misleading statement. But it is an actual fact, and so I cannot take back my statement. Any one who contradicts that statement is making a misstatement absolutely. The men are not yet paid. I asked, when I came back, if they had been paid, and they said 'No.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) said that he could send the cheques out if he got the vote put through.

Mr. PATERSON. If I said that, I said what was inaccurate.

Mr. FOSTER. And may be doing the same now.

Mr. PATERSON. It would be inaccurate to state that until these resolutions were embodied in a Supply Bill and passed the money could be used.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman gave me the distinct impression, by explicit statement, that if the vote were put through he would pay his men, and the vote was put through with that understanding. It was on Friday, I think, and the hon. gentlemen pointed out that the vote then under discussion would pay the outside service, and said that if he got the other on Monday it would be in time enough, and the vote for the inside service was passed on Monday.

Mr. PATERSON. I could not get the pay for these men unless that vote passed in committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend deny that he gave us to understand that if that vote passed, he could pay his men ?

Mr. PATERSON. What I gave you to understand was that it would facilitate the paying of the men.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr PATERSON. Let me bring it a little closer home to the leader of the opposition. He knows that they wanted me to leave one item, he knows that when that item was passed they only let it go through the committee on the understanding that it was to be debated on concurrence with the same latitude as that given in committee. Therefore so far as my getting the money was concerned, I was not advanced one step. Hon. gentlemen opposite will not deny that. It is on 'Hansard.' Why did my hon. friend want the item to stand ? It was because, he said, the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) wanted to discuss it. They found fault with me because I went to Brantford. But where was the hon. member for Brantford himself ? He was away when my estimates came up, and the whip of the other side said to me : Do not go on with your estimates because the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) is not here. I said I did not care, that I wanted to get the money. But we did not get my estimates through that night. We did not even get them voted through the committee although we sat until four o'clock in the morning. We were met by obstruction pure and simple—nothing else—obstruction undisguised and deliberate. We were told by the hon. gentleman then leading the House (Mr. Taylor) : Withdraw your Election Bill and your estimates will go through in two minutes. That was the statement made. The statement I made at Brantford therefore was absolutely correct. It accurately described the position to-day.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is the hon. Minister of Customs going to resign ? He made a certain statement at Brantford and has had the verdict of his own county only yesterday.

Mr. PATERSON. But that was given four years ago.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There was a verdict yesterday too.

Mr. PATERSON. It was given four years ago but repeated with greater emphasis, so I am told, yesterday. I have no intention of resigning, at any rate until I have placed this matter clearly before the people as I did up there. The men are without pay because the Supply is not voted. Hon. gentlemen opposite ask, why not bring down the Supply Bill ? But concurrence must come first. When my items came to be concurred in, what would the leader of the opposition say ? He would say : We cannot concur because the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) has something to say on the question, and it will have to stand. That is on 'Hansard.' To say that I made a misleading statement when I said that the government officials could not be paid because of the obstructive tactics of the opposition, is to make an utterly unfounded charge. Hon. gentlemen opposite did not wait until I was present to attack me. I went to Brantford, but not solely to take part in the provincial elections.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Of course not.

Mr. PATERSON. One hon. gentleman mentions the fact that I made no allusion to local politics whatever but only to Dominion politics. I did take the opportunity of meeting the electors and putting before them the conduct of the opposition in this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. You got your verdict.

Mr. PATERSON. No, but you will get your verdict when you go before the people themselves. If there is anything in the minds of the people at present on which, when the government ask for a verdict, they will get a favourable verdict by an overwhelming majority, it is this question of obstruction. I can tell you that the rules of this House must be revised in such a manner that while the amplest time will be given for the discussion of every question and the investigation of every subject, there must be a means devised whereby the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the little clique of men around him will not be able to keep this House sitting indefinitely. That is the issue that will be pronounced upon, and the party which will favour a revision of the rules in order that something within the lines of decency may be maintained and the country's money saved, will be endorsed by the people, and the party which will be entrusted with the carrying out of that reform will be the party that has ever carried out all reforms.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PATERSON. All reforms that have ever been carried out in this country. Does any one suppose that these men could go to the country and ask the people to sustain them on an issue pledging themselves that if they came in they would pass an Act that would limit their own powers of oratory to something like decency? It is hard on the civil servants and on members of parliament, but every day this obstruction continues, it strengthens the Liberal party. Therefore I can take some consolation out of it whilst being compelled to sit here and listen to the long windy harangues made for the sole purpose of obstruction on the other side. My reputation for veracity I have fully established, and I will say no more.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. One does not wonder that my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) should have come back in rather bad humour. Of course we must make some allowances for his spleen, and I trust sincerely that hon. gentlemen on this side will take that into account and not lay too much emphasis upon the display we have had from him just now. The hon. gentleman entered into controversy—and that brings me to my feet—as to whether or not he gave the House to understand that if these items were put through the committee, he would be able to pay his men. He refers to the fact that we asked him to hold over an item of $5,000. We did make that request, but then we let it go through because he pressed us to do so in order that he might have the whole item passed and therefore be able to pay his officers. Either he knew that when he was speaking just now, or his memory stands sadly in need of correction. Just look at what he said on May 29. It will be found on page 8738 of unrevised 'Hansard':

Had you not better let me have this money now? The men need their pay.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are you referring to the first item here?

Mr. PATERSON. It will be of no use to give us that, as it is only part of the item. The cheques can perhaps be issued if the items are passed, even before the Supply Bill.

Mr. PATERSON. I said 'perhaps.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think we will compromise by letting you have the first one, amounting to $1,815,000.

Mr. PATERSON. I will take that, of course, if I cannot get more; but I do not know whether the Auditor General will care to give a credit so that we can issue the cheques unless the whole item passes.

And the whole item did pass. It passed because of the representation of the minister that upon obtaining that item, he would be enabled to pay the salaries of his men. He went away the next day to the ridings of Brant and there he told the people that these men were without their pay because of the obstruction of the opposition.

Mr. PATERSON. Did you notice that I said 'perhaps'? You did not emphasize that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Do not let my hon. friend get any more uneasy than he is at present. He seems to be extremely uneasy.

Mr. PATERSON. Not at all.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I am sure the hon. the leader of the opposition does not want to be unfair. Look at the vote. That particular item referred to is only one of a vote of five items, and the whole vote could not be reported unless that particular item were passed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend need not be afraid, I shall read the whole record. The minister went on to say:

Besides, I want to go away next Tuesday, and it would oblige me if the item were passed.

Mr. PATERSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend is very censorious of the hon. member for Brantford because he was away in his constituency during the time of the local election. We did ask the usual courtesy that the minister would hold an item over until the hon. member for Brantford returned, and we were told by the Minister of Customs that he should be in his seat. But the Minister of Customs did not think it unbecoming his status here as minister to leave his position in this House and go to the ridings of North and South Brant for the purpose of taking part in the very same election. If it was wrong for my hon. friend from Brantford to go to his riding, how much more was it absolutely unworthy of the Minister of Customs to leave his public duties here and go to North and South Brant for the same purpose? The only difference between the two is that my hon. friend from Brantford has come back with victories in the two ridings to his credit, and the Minister of Customs has come back in a somewhat censorious and irritable frame of mind which has led him to make the exhibition he has just made. The hon. minister continued:

I am afraid that if we have two days discussion in order to get into Supply, I will have to go without it.

That is to say he placed his interference in this local election before the object of getting Supply to pay the officers of his department. He had to choose between the two, and he preferred to go to that riding to take part in a provincial election rather than remain here for the purpose of getting through with these items. Then he continued :

Will you give me the next item, which is for the salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors, as well as the salaries and expenses of the statistical branch here in Ottawa?

And I replied :

We will see about the others on Monday.

Mr. PATERSON. What did the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) say between ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am taking the discussion between the hon. gentleman and myself at present. The minister then said :

Will you let us get into Supply on Monday?

And I answered:

Did you ever know us to fail? A man who is not satisfied with a million and a half a day is very hard to please.

And my hon. friend then said:

It is really making a discrimination between the officers. Those of the outside ports will be able to get their money while those in Ottawa will not.

Could anything be more distinct and explicit? Yet this same hon. gentleman, with these words still ringing through this chamber, went to the riding of Brant and said that the opposition had prevented him from paying his officers, and he has endeavoured to impress us with his extreme regard for the truth in the face of these facts. I shall leave the record to the House so far as that is concerned. I then said:

They will get their salaries as quickly as the outside officers if you get the other item on Monday.

Showing the sense in which I most distinctly understood the hon. gentleman and the sense in which he wished to be understood. Yet he did not consider it beneath his dignity as a public man to make the misstatement he did make—I shall use no harsher word—in the riding of Brant. Let me refer to what took place on Monday—see page 9860 of the unrevised 'Hansard.' On the item 'expense of maintenance of revenue cruisers and preventive service, $40,000,' I said:

The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) desired to have some item reserved. Perhaps you will let the last item stand?

Mr. PATERSON. That would stop the whole item.

What was the advantage of passing the whole item? It was in order that the outside as well as the inside officers might be paid, as the hon. gentleman represented they would be paid if these items passed. The hon. Minister of Finance said :

The several items constitute one resolution, so that there would be nothing to report.

I then asked: Will you have any supplementaries? And the Minister of Customs replied

We may have, but I do not like to pledge myself that we shall have. Let the hon. member have the discussion on concurrence.

That was the hon. minister's own suggestion, with which he found fault just now. The hon. gentleman's memory does not seem to be very good. I then asked :

When does the minister expect to be back?

And the minister replied

On Monday next.

I then said

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Suppose the hon. member for Brantford wishes to discuss this on concurrence, I suppose you will not have any objection to his speaking three or four times if it is necessary to answer you?

Mr. PATERSON. If it is necessary to explain himself.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As long as there will be some freedom of discussion.

Mr. PATERSON. I cannot promise about the rules of the House, but I do not think there will be any trouble about that. The fact is, he should be here.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister should not go away.

So the whole item went through on the full and distinct understanding that the money would be available, not only to pay the outside but the inside service as well.

Mr. PATERSON. When?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. At once. Did not the hon. gentleman understand that?

Mr. PATERSON. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Need I read it again? Will the minister endeavour to grasp this: He said

It is really making a discrimination between the officers. Those at the outside ports will be able to get their money while those in Ottawa will not.

Anything more distinct and explicit than that, I cannot imagine. Whether the minister said something he did not intend saying, I do not know; but, his distinct words gave us to understand beyond doubt that if the two items, not only for the inside but the outside service, passed, he would be able to pay his men at once; and because of that representation, we let the item go through, so that there would be no discussion in that committee, even although the hon. member for Brantford had specially come to me and asked that some item should be reserved so that he should be able to discuss these estimates. He had also gone to the chief whip and left the same message with him. But notwithstanding that, I agreed to the hon. minister's request in order that there might be no inconvenience, so far as his officers were concerned. We let the item go through because of the minister's representation that if they did those men would get their money at once.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman has taken a position which is unworthy of him. His position is nothing but a perfect quibble, and he knows it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Nonsense.

Mr. PATERSON. When I asked to have that item agreed to, it was because, as I said, that perhaps if it passed the committee, the Auditor General might give a line of credit for it, but I did not commit myself to that.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why did you not say that in Brantford?

Mr. PATERSON. I said in Brantford the absolute truth, and I stick to it here. The hon. gentleman tries to cloud the issue and make out that I made a mis-statement, but he knows that if these men are without their pay it is due to the obstructive tactics of the opposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. PATERSON. Why then have the men not got their money?

Mr. FOSTER. You have not asked for it.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, I have. If it were asked for to-day, what would be the statement we would be met with? We would be told that the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) was not in his place. And when the item came up for concurrence, the leader of the opposition would say that there was an understanding that it should not go through its final stage until the hon. member for Brantford was here.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you know if he would say that?

Mr. PATERSON. He would be bound to say it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Crawford). This whole discussion is out of order. I have allowed considerable latitude, but now have to insist on the House taking up Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I agree that the obstructive tactics of the Minister of Customs should be suppressed.

Mr. PATERSON. Will you give concurrence on the customs estimates?

Mr. FOSTER. Bring down your Supply Bill on your customs estimates and we will pass it right through.

Mr. FIELDING. We would like to have the railway estimates concurred with it.

Mr. FOSTER. May be you had better not wait too long. After all this dignified discussion, has the Minister of Railways anything further to say in defence of the circular he issued?

Mr. GRAHAM. My conduct in that connection needs no defence.

Mr. FOSTER. It is defenceless.

Mr. GRAHAM. That there may be no misunderstanding about it, I will read these two letters. This letter was received by the department on May 15, from the Auditor General:

Sir,—I have to call your attention to the fact that of a great portion of the estimates for 1908-9 only one-eighth has been voted by parliament. Please note that we have no authority to exceed this until further Supply has been granted.

Now here is the important part:

In view of the discussions which have taken place in parliament in reference to overdrawing the appropriation, it would be advisable to notify all your officials charged with the expenditure of public money, that they must not under any circumstances exceed the appropriation.

That is dated May 15. Then on May 20 this letter was sent by the department to the various officers:

Sir,—I am directed to inform you that the attention of the department has been drawn by the Auditor General to the fact that of a great portion of the estimates of 1908-9, only one-eighth has been voted by parliament, and that until further Supplies have been granted, the expenditure must not under any circumstances exceed the appropriation. Be pleased to see that in dealing with the expenditures for work under your control this limitation is closely adhered to.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the date on which you authorized that circular by Mr. Pottinger ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The authorization of that circular would be the letter I have just read of May 20.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister's explanation does not help him out. I did not know that he has such timely notice, that he was told by the Auditor General on the 15th of May that his money had run out, and that he must take measures to replenish it; and it was not until June 5, twelve o'clock at night, that he mustered up courage to ask that this vote be taken into consideration. How does the minister excuse such negligence? Those on the Intercolonial that are doing their work and earning their pay, come up on pay day and find no money; although an intimation is given by the Auditor General on the 15th of May warning the minister that there are breakers ahead, and to look out. The minister lolls away from May 15 to June 5, that is twenty days, before he musters up courage to come down to the House and ask for money to pay his employees. In all my parliamentary experience I do not know of such a case of lack of provision in a minister. May I ask another question: Has the minister, been paying out of advances made to him by the Auditor General, over and above what vote he has had?

Mr. GRAHAM. Of course we had the supplementary estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. I mean out of advances authorized by letter of credit or otherwise, by the Auditor General?

Mr. GRAHAM. Nothing.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to say to the Minister of Finance, in order to make this matter clear, that if the Minister of Customs really wants to pay his men, and he has not got through committee all that he has asked for, and has not up to this moment taken the additional step to make it available, if the Minister of Finance asks this House to make what the committee has granted available, they will do it in as quick a time as it is possible to put anything through this House.

Mr. FIELDING. That, so far as it goes, is very encouraging, and is a departure from the policy laid down by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who said that we would not get one copper.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said so, too.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Customs has made a statement that I ask him to retract or else make it good.

Mr. PATERSON. I think I can make it good.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I will accept your denial meanwhile.

Mr. FIELDING. I made no allusion to the hon. member for North Toronto in the matter, I am dealing with the official utterance conveyed to this House by that very responsible officer of the opposition, my esteemed friend from Leeds, who stated most positively and emphatically that it was the determination of the hon. gentleman opposite not to allow one dollar to pass until this devilish Bill——

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to correct my hon. friend. I said I spoke for myself, only so far as I was concerned. Turn up 'Hansard,' and you will see it.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is too modest. I am assuming that he spoke, at all events, with the authority of his long experience and great knowledge.

Mr. TAYLOR. You are assuming what is incorrect.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He is only allowing twelve and a half cents on the dollar to go through.

Mr. FIELDING. Then I will take the statement of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) that, although the opposition are pretending that they are not obstructing Supply, all they have allowed is twelve and a half cents on the dollar.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is all the government are worth.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend from North Toronto says they are willing to let the customs officers be paid. That is such a vast improvement upon the conduct of the opposition that I welcome it. Now why does he make a distinction between the customs officer, worthy as he may be, and an officer of the Intercolonial ? Is it fair to say : We are going to let the customs man get his money, but the poor man who labours on the Intercolonial must wait ? I appeal to my hon. friend, if he is so considerate of the other departments as he says he is now, and is willing to pay the customs employees, this vote for the Intercolonial, although it is a large and important vote, is one largely of a routine character ; then why not pay the railway men as well as the customs men ?

Mr. PATERSON. In reference to the remark of the hon. member for North Toronto, I would ask him to look at page 9739 where he will find an interjection made by himself.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a very easy way for you to get them their salaries.

That is like what the hon. member for Leeds said: Withdraw your Bill, and you will get your money, and not otherwise. I am not, of course, a member of their caucus, but I know the papers stated that the hon. gentlemen opposite solemnly met together and determined that Supply should not go through until that Bill was withdrawn. The papers may have been wrong in that, I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister should not reveal what takes place in caucus.

Mr. PATERSON. I have verified my statement.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think if the Minister of Customs makes another record today such as that he has made in Brant, we will be willing to admit him to our caucus.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am anxious to get this vote through if possible. It is $9,035,000 for the Intercolonial, the Windsor branch and the branch in Prince Edward Island. If we are allowed to put this through, it is really being allowed to use the money that we have in the Receiver General's hands. Any discussion on the management can be had on capital expenditure.

Mr. SPROULE. The Finance Minister asked why, if we were willing to let the item go through to pay the customs officers, we should not be equally ready to let this item go through to pay the expenditure incurred on the Intercolonial. There is a very great difference and a very much stronger reason why we should have it. In view of the disclosures which have been brought out by the Public Accounts Committee in regard to the jobbery, connected with the Intercolonial Railway in the last few years in the purchase of land and supplies and other things, we should have full information on each item before it is allowed to pass. With regard to the salaries of customs collectors we know what they are and we expect that they will be paid that money and that there will be no jobbery connected with them.

Mr. GRAHAM. These items are really salaries. We will have a large appropriation for capital expenditure on which these matters can be discussed.

Mr. SPROULE. I was referring to the observation of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As a matter of fact, as I understand, the receipts of the Intercolonial Railway go to the credit of the Receiver General.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And you are not able to utilize the moneys received for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the road?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is the position.

Mr. J. D. REID. How many men are employed on the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. HAGGART. Will the minister tell us why he wants $1,400,000 more and also give us a statement as to what the receipts and expenditures are at the present time and whether they are falling off or increasing?

Mr. GRAHAM. The number of employees on the Intercolonial Railway is approximately 9,000—something under 9,000.

Mr. KEMP. I would like to ask the minister if every one of the 9,000 employees of the Intercolonial Railway got the circulars which have been under consideration.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have no idea. We sent the letter to the general manager.

Mr. KEMP. The minister does not know how many circulars were issued?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not.

Mr. KEMP. Is it fair to suppose that each one got this circular?

Mr. GRAHAM. Probably the heads of the departments got it.

Mr. KEMP. You only want to get rid of the heads of the departments?

Mr. GRAHAM. We do not want to get rid of anybody.

Mr. FOSTER. My telegram said that 'similar notices were sent to employees individually' and from other information we find that the circular was posted up in public places as well.

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot imagine that they would get 9,000 copies of this notice printed and send them to all the employees. I think that must be a mistake. The custom, whenever any change of rule is made, is that the notice is posted up so that the employees can see it. In reply to my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) instead of this being in excess of last year's vote by $1,400,000 it is really the same amount we expended last year, because, in the Supplemental Estimates, we had to ask for $1,400,000. The receipts are falling off as the receipts of other railways are falling off.

Mr. HAGGART. To what extent?

Mr. GRAHAM. The receipts fell off as compared with last year, up to the 31st May, by about $180,000—for two months.

Mr. KEMP. Is the Intercolonial Railway reducing its staff under these circumstances the same as the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have not been doing it to the same extent. In order to find out the position of the railway with regard to its employees, salaries and wages I have asked for a complete list of the employees, the salaries obtained and the date of employment. I might further add that several of the brotherhoods have already asked for increases in what they call the schedule and these matters will have to come up for consideration a little later on.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the minister give us a statement of the receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1908 ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will give the statement to my hon. friend after lunch.

Mr. CROCKET. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to an article which recently appeared in the 'Daily Times' of Moncton in which it is alleged that there has been a great deterioration in the Intercolonial Railway service and I would like to hear what explanation the minister has to make in reference to the allegations contained in this article. The article appeared on the 11th May and is as follows :

Mechanical department of the Intercolonial Railway in a deplorable state.

If the numerous reports being circulated by the railway men are correct, the mechanical department of the Intercolonial Railway is in a deplorable condition. The locomotives and cars are said to be in the worst state of repair known in the history of the road.

For months the Maritime Express trains have almost always been late. This results, railway men declare, more from inefficient locomotives than from bad coal, as recently reported; and as proof of this within a couple of weeks a new batch of locomotives, recently arrived from Kingston, have been running these trains with the result that a marked improvement is noticeable in the time.

These new locomotives, we presume, are like all others purchased for some years, paid for out of capital account. Indeed, it is declared by railway men who know a good deal of the working of the mechanical department, that if it had not been for the additions to the rolling stock supplied the past year at the expense of capital the road would have been completely tied up before this. The policy for the past year has been to skimp everything not chargeable to capital so that Mr. Butler or Mr. Graham may be able to show as large a surplus as possible for the benefit of the electorate in the coming elections. The earnings for February are said to have been very disappointing to the deputy minister and every expedient imaginable was enforced to keep the expenses down to March 31, the end of the financial year. As a result the shops here, and in fact at all repair shops, have not had force enough employed to keep pace with the work. We are informed there are no less than thirty locomotives lying in the Moncton yard awaiting repairs, and probably as many more at River du Loup, Halifax and other repair points. The bulk of these locomotives are said to be of the modern class and fit to do good work if they were only given the necessary repairs. Here in round figures is three-quarters of a million dollars worth of locomotives lying idle for want of repairs, and the minister reporting to parliament that the great development of traffic over the road necessitates the purchase of more locomotives and cars to provide for this increased traffic.

From the information we have there has been for some time sufficient locomotives and cars on the Intercolonial to meet all the requirements of legitimate traffic, if such locomotives and cars were kept in an efficient state of repair. According to the last report of the Minister of Railways, 23 locomotives were purchased between July, 1906, and March 31, 1907, and since that about as many more have, we understand, been acquired on the same account and more expected to be provided for in the pending estimates.

What we have said in regard to locomotives applies with equal force to the cars. Hundreds, if not thousands, of comparatively good cars are lying in sidings along the road awaiting repairs. Some of them have been idle for years and exposed to the weather are deteriorating very rapidly, and more are being purchased every year out of capital to keep the traffic moving. If only a royal commission of independent experts could be had to deal with the mechanical department of the railway, in our opinion a state of affairs would be revealed that would shock the country. A scandal involving the loss of $50,000 or $100,000 to the taxpayers is the subject of comment all over the country. In this case there is a public investment of from twelve to fifteen millions in rolling stock. If a large percentage of this stock is allowed through mismanagement and wire-pulling to lie idle and deteriorate, is it not practically as bad for the taxpayer as grafting on a large scale?

Only yesterday in Montreal I was informed by a very prominent citizen of New Brunswick that there were numerous complaints of deterioration on the Intercolonial railway, both as regards the operation of the trains and the road bed. It was stated that ballasting was neglected, that in many places where ties were absolutely necessary they were not put in notwithstanding that last year the department bought $100,000 worth of ties. It is also stated that several accidents which have recently occurred on the line resulted from deterioration of the road bed. Only a few days ago it was reported in the press that a train had two runs off between Montreal and Moncton. I would like to know what the Minister of Railways and Canals has to say in reference to the allegations which are contained in this paper which is published at the headquarters of the railway in Moncton and contains information which no doubt could be verified by the newspaper writer on the ground.

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman when he says these statements can be verified.

Mr. CROCKET. I said they are in a position to verify them because they are on the ground.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is a reason why they should not make such statements because they are in a position to know better. That article complains we have not a sufficient staff and the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp) suggested we should decrease the staff. Owing to the great increase of traffic all railways on this continent are endeavouring to reduce their expenses and the number of men employed, and some of them have shut up their shops for a considerable time. This article says we have not a sufficient number of men employed.

Mr. CROCKET. I did not so read the article. The article complains that repairs to rolling stock were being neglected, that new cars and locomotives were being bought on capital account while the railway has locomotives which could do the work if they were put in proper repair, and, that this has not been done because it is the policy of the railway to scimp everything except what was chargeable to capital account so that a surplus might appear on working expenses.

Mr. GRAHAM. Let me point out the absolute fallacy of the statement that last year every effort was made not to spend much money out of revenue but to take it out of capital so that at the end of the year we could show a surplus. Now here are the figures: During the 9 months of 1907 we expended on locomotives and repairs to same, $476,210.12; and during the year ending 1908 we expended on locomotives and repairs to same, $476,210.12; and during the year ending 1908 we expended $783,200.72 on locomotives out of the revenue, which is the largest amount that was ever expended out of revenue for this purpose. This shows that that part of the statement in the newspaper is not correct.

Mr. CROCKET. Does that sum you have mentioned not include the purchase of locomitives?

Mr. GRAHAM. On repairs to locomotives we spent more money during the year just closed than ever before has been spent out of revenue account.

Mr. HAGGART. How much did you spend on repairs to locomotives?

Mr. GRAHAM. $783,200, including the purchase of 4 new locomotives.

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, that is a mistake.

Mr. FOWLER. How many locomotives did you repair for this immense sum?

Mr. HAGGART. There is some mistake somewhere there.

Mr. GRAHAM. Let me conclude the statement.

Mr. FOWLER. Surely you know how many locomotives you repaired.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have not that information here.

Mr. FOWLER. That would purchase about 40 locomotives.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will get the information as to that afterwards but the point is that all this money came out of revenue and we expended more out of revenue for this purpose than ever before. On cars and repairs to passenger cars in 1907 we spent $166,813.88 and in 1908 we expended $310,-214.15. Now I am speaking of revenue alone, and take the freight car department—during the nine months of 1907 we spent $327,650.24, and during the year 1908 we spent $604,984.64. This shows we have taken more out of revenue for the maintenance of the road in these three departments than ever before so far as I can find the figures. The statement is therefore not well-founded that we are skimping that department. The excess of revenue over expenditure for the year ending March 31, 1908 was $16,000.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the expenditure on capital account for the year ending March 31, 1908.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Immediately after luncheon hour the minister should give us a statement with regard to the fiscal year just ended for which we have not yet seen the figures. It would greatly advance the items before the House.

Mr. GRAHAM. The difficulty is in furnishing all the data up to March 31, 1908, We have not yet received that information. it has not come from the manager. We have a few items from the accountant which I have given to the House, but the general manager has not made any report and we have not all the information up to the end of the year just closed. I can give the information for the previous year but not for the year closing March 31, 1908.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister might give what he has. That would, I suppose, include a statement of the receipts and expenditures and a statement of the expenditures on capital account.

Mr. GRAHAM. We will give all the information possible.

Mr. FOWLER. I asked the minister a question regarding one James A. Stewart. The parties advising the minister I think know perfectly well the James A. Stewart to whom I refer. But the man described to me was a brakeman of whom I was not asking at all. The James A. Stewart of whom I was asking is a gentleman who goes around on the different trains, jumping on at little way stations, checking up the conductors. In vulgar parlance he is known as a railway pimp.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend was wrong in supposing that we knew the man referred to. There is a James A. Stewart on the road and there is a James Stewart. He asked for information about James A Stewart and we gave it. Now we will try James.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. FOWLER. Perhaps the hon. minister will be able now to give some details about Mr. James Stewart who is a spotter on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. Of course my hon. friend will take back that expression 'spotter.' Mr. Stewart is a very useful officer, such as they have on all railways. He is a travelling auditor who checks up any place, either on the train or at the stations, he thinks necessary. Like all inspectors or auditors he does not notify people when he is going to make his inspection. I think he has been a very useful officer.

Mr. FOWLER. My information is quite different. I think that the term 'spotter' is the one usually applied, but if it be not a proper term, I shall call him travelling auditor. My information is that this man makes himself objectionable indeed, not only to conductors on the road, but very often to others. I do not think you will find on any railway in this country, or in connection with any other work, any better class of men than the conductors on the Intercolonial Railway. That is the universal opinion held of these men. Mr. Stewart is not only objectionable to them, but also to the travelling public. It is said, for instance, that he will go into a pullman car, when people are in bed, draw the curtains and rouse them up, which certainly he has no right to do and which is exceedingly objectionable and improper, particularly in the case of ladies. It does not seem to me that this gentleman is a desirable person for the occupation given him, and I trust that the minister will look into this matter and see if he cannot replace this man with another —if it be necessary to have such a man, and I do not think it is with the class employed on the Intercolonial Railway—who can do his business without making himself objectionable to the employees of the road or the travelling public.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. EMMERSON. I can certainly second the remarks of the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Fowler) with respect to the character and the class of men who are engaged as conductors on the Intercolonial Railway. It has been my privilege and pleasure to give this testimony on may occasions heretofore. We also have a very high class of men engaged as station agents in charge of the stations along the line. Those agents have to submit to a regular audit. It is not an audit which takes place by prior arrangement, but very suddenly and at times unexpectedly. Those men do not complain of this. Men who are properly discharging their duty in any capacity have no right to complain of any audit, and I am sure that the conductors, so far as I have knowledge of those gentlemen on the Intercolonial Railway—and I know pretty nearly all of them personally—do not complain of the audit. I have had occasion to call the attention of the minister and his deputy to the auditor who has been named. Rightly or wrongly complaints are made of the manner in which he performs his duties, and I think that an inquiry has been made. If these allegations be true, he is certainly not a fit person to continue in the government employ, and I apprehend that the department are inquiring into that matter, if they are not, it will be their duty to make an inquiry. Some time ago I called the attention especially of the deputy minister to allegations that were being made, and being made by those who would probably be in a position to know whereof they speak.

Mr. GRAHAM. My information is that if there were certain allegations they have never been substantiated. However, there is no necessity to discuss the matter. It is not necessary that any officer of the Intercolonial Railway should inconvenience the travelling public in the performance of his duty, and we shall not allow that. I shall have inquiries made to see how this man is performing his duty.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If the assertion be true that he opens berths at night, he should not be retained twenty-five minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. I have no personal knowledge, but I have been informed that such in the case. I am informed by most credible authority that that has occurred more than once. I do not want to do any injustice to Mr. Stewart, and I am not speaking from personal knowledge, but I am informed that he is not always in a fit condition to attend to his duty. That is very serious. The ex-minister (Mr. Emmerson) has pointed out that he has also heard allegations against this man and has properly drawn attention to the delicate position he occupies. It is quite different from that of an auditor auditing the accounts of a railway station. This man goes on trains and is supposed to act somewhat in the position of a spy, and I do not use that term with all the meaning attached to it. I do not intend it in that way entirely, but he is there to see that each conductor gives a proper return of the fares paid in to him. Before there is any necessity for that sort of thing there must be a certain amount of suspicion in the minds of those who employ the conductors and set this man as a check on them, and I do not think that the result has shown any defalcation on their part. I should judge from the testimony which the ex-minister (Mr. Emmerson) has given of the conductors, that there would not be very great necessity for that kind of thing, and that it is not likely anything would result derogatory to the men from the inspection by this travelling auditor, as he is called. But it does not seem, from the information at hand, that any effort has yet been made to find out whether these allegations are true, no investigation has been held. It seems to me that the matter has been brought to the attention of the department by a person who naturally would have some influence in the department and whose word ought to be accepted, I mean the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) the ex-Minister of Railways. The ex-minister having made a complaint to the department, and having severed his connection with the department over which he had been for some years the responsible head, his complaint should have received a little more attention than apparently it has received from the present responsible officers. I judge from what the minister has said that no investigation of any kind has taken place, although these complaints are being constantly made and have been made for the last year or more with regard to the conduct of this man. It is said that he is not always in a proper condition to perform his duties. I do not know if that is so, but if it is, surely it is a matter that deserves very careful consideration, because it is one affecting not only the conductor who is doing his work in an unobjectionable way, but it weakens the loyalty of those men towards the department. Then again you are interfering with the comfort of the travelling public, which is another matter for consideration. For these reasons I think the minister should have taken some better measures than he has to ascertain whether these complaints are well founded.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will the minister be good enough to explain what the duties of this man are ? Is he authorized to go along with the passenger train as a detective upon the conduct of the conductors and of the passengers ? It is hardly the proper way to treat a lot of conductors, who are supposed to be honourable men, to engage a spotter of this kind to go along with them.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have to leave in a few minutes, and I would like to say a word. It is but fair to state that I only called the attention of the deputy minister to this matter within the last few weeks, as it only came to my notice about then. Previous to that I had heard no complaints, either from Moncton or elsewhere along the line. When I did call his attention to it he told me that an inquiry would be made at once, and I have since understood from him that he had taken steps to have the matter inquired into, and if the complaints were confirmed he would feel obliged to call this gentleman to account.

Mr. GRAHAM. In answer to the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes), it is the custom of all great railway lines to employ men of this class to accompany the trains. The Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk, as every person knows who is familiar with railway work, have these men. I admit their duties are delicate, and ought to be performed with a great deal of care so as to give no offence, or as little as possible. They can stop at the stations and take a check of the tickets sold, and see that everything is carried on right. They can travel on the trains and check the conductors' tickets and passengers.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why should he intrude upon passengers ?

Mr. GRAHAM. He should not intrude upon the passengers in the way the hon. gentleman complained of. If he has done that, it is quite wrong, it would not be defensible.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister has spoken about the likelihood of an application being made from the employees on the Intercolonial or some of them, for an increase in their rate of pay. I think the minister might give to parliament a list of the various classes of employees and the rate of pay which is attached to each, so that we may be able to form an idea as to whether the rates paid are sufficient. I presume the minister has a list of the rates of pay of the different classes of officials, and he might take parliament into his confidence and let us know what the rate is.

Mr. GRAHAM. I can get a list of that kind, but if I were to start reading it to the House it would be very tedious. I can get a list prepared and present it on any item of capital expenditure we may discuss later.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not quite satisfied with the answer of the minister with regard to this man Stewart. I would like to know what steps have been taken to investigate these complaints that have been already made to the department, and what steps the minister proposes to take. It is a matter of great importance, both to the men on that road, and the people who travel upon it.

Mr. GRAHAM. I understand that some such complaint as this was made publicly against this man in a newspaper some time ago, and on his issuing a writ to sue the newspaper, it apologized. I believe the complaint was made against two officials, and the newspaper apologized. I understand some complaint was made against them for misconduct on a pullman car. The only reply I can give is that this complaint has been shown to be untrue. However, I will make inquiry. We cannot permit that kind of conduct on the train. I cannot think that the newspaper report is true. No official would go through a pullman car and look into the different berths.

Mr. FOWLER. He might look into a berth to see whether it was occupied by one or two people, in order to make his check correct, to see whether the return the conductor was making was correct. I think the minister ought to agree to hold an investigation. You investigate matters of a much more trivial nature than this. It need not be a costly investigation. You have your road superintendents there, and you might charge one of them with holding a court of inquiry. You could very easily investigate by letting the conductors know that, if there were complaints against Mr. Stewart, they should prefer them at such a time. Or, you might do it by giving public notice. Any passenger who wishes to complain of having been misused by this gentleman in the alleged discharge of his duty, would be glad to know that he could go before your investigator and give evidence with respect to the matter. I cannot think it possible that the railway management desires to have one of its employees perform his duties in an objectionable manner. There is no reason why there should not be a travelling auditor, no reason why the trains should not be checked up. I find no fault with that, but I find fault with the manner in which this man is alleged to have performed that very delicate duty. I think the minister ought to tell us that he will hold such an investigation. If he will do so, I shall be quite satisfied—and that should be a consideration with him, I think.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is not customary to advertise for complaints. We might do a large business in them if we took that means. If any person will make a specific complaint of wrong-doing by this officer, giving some idea of time, I will be happy to investigate it thoroughly.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister knows the difficulty there is in getting any one to make a specific complaint. People will put up with a great deal when they are travelling;—they will grumble about it and will avoid the road if they can find any other way to go; but when it comes to making a complaint and making a court matter of it, that is entirely different. The knowledge of this fact probably encourages this man to go in his improper course. And so with the conductors—they do not like to make a complaint, for fear there will be a black mark against them so far as the management is concerned. But this matter can be investigated by the proper officials. It is not necessary to advertise for complaints; but if it were known that such an investigation were to be held, I am sure such complaints would be entered. At the present time, no doubt, the travelling public think that this kind of treatment is part of the policy of the road. It injures the government, of course; and, from that point of view, it would be better for me to have it go on; but I am speaking from the standpoint of the road and the public.

Mr. CROCKET. I notice that on May 18, the minister stated, in answer to my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid), that there were twenty-one locomotives belonging to the Intercolonial lying idle at Moncton awaiting repairs, two at Rivière du Loup and one at Campbellton. That would appear to bear out, to a considerable extent, the article I read before we rose at one o'clock, so far as locomotives are concerned. How many new locomotives were purchased by the Railway Department last year?

Mr. GRAHAM. Does the hon. gentleman mean the last fiscal year—the year ending March 31st last?

Mr. CROCKET. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. The report for that year has not been made-yet. We have been discussing the previous year. But I will get the information for the hon. gentleman if I can.

Mr. FOWLER. While the minister is looking that up, I would like to ask with regard to this amount of $783,000 which the minister says he spent last year for repairing engines. He claims to have two hundred engines——

Mr. TAYLOR. There are 370 engines.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, $783,000 would represent between $5,000 and $6,000 each for 150 engines. Surely, there would not be repairs to more than 150 out of 370. There must be some mistake.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman will see that the point we were discussing was how much we have spent out of revenue. I understand that there are four new locomotives in that amount.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman said it was for repairs.

Mr. CROCKET. Would not the four locomotives be charged to capital?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, these were paid out of revenue. Let me point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) that if he will study the statistics, he will find that the railways figure on spending an average of about $2,200 a year for repairs on each engine.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.). I would like to ask the minister if he has received any complaints of the condition of the road between Painsec Junction and Pointe du Chene?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have had some complaint that the cars were not as good as they thought they ought to have for that section of the road.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Is the minister prepared to do anything to remedy this state of affairs? Perhaps he does not realize the importance of affording good accommodation on that part of the road. Passengers to and from Prince Edward Island pass over this portion of the road. It must be remembered that there is a large and growing tourist travel to Prince Edward Island. It is well known that the province is becoming, perhaps the best summer resort in Canada. It was first taken advantage of by the Americans, but now also by people from all parts of Canada. I have here a letter written by the late premier of the province in regard to this matter. This will show that I am not talking about this in any merely captious manner—the late Arthur Peters, premier of the province, thought it worth while to write to the Minister of Railways and Canals on this subject. The Steam Navigation Company of Prince Edward Island, which is subsidized by this government, put on the route some of the best boats in Canada—some of the best boats in America indeed, affording accommodation second to no passenger boats in the Dominion. Had this government fulfilled their share of the contract as well as the Steam Navigation Company has fulfilled its share, there would be no complaint. But, on this part of the road between Painsec Junction and Pointe du Chene, there is very inferior accommodation. When a man has travelled by palace car from New York, Boston, Toronto, Ottawa or Montreal, he is not likely to be pleased if compelled to ride in a car in which all classes of people ride together. I will read what the late premier of Prince Edward Island said, and I hope the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham will take this matter more seriously.

Minister of Railways and Canals, Ottawa.

Sir,—The attention of the government of Prnce Edward Island has been called to the very unsatisfactory conditions of the Intercolonial Railway connection between Painsec Junction and Pointe Du Chene, over which most of the passengers, tourists, &c., from New Brunswick, the United States and western Canada have to travel when coming to this province. From information furnished to the government and which is known to be reliable, it appears that only one passenger car is provided between these two points to carry all classes of passengers and all kinds and conditions are huddled together—first class passengers (including ladies) being compelled to travel with Indians, Italians and filthy persons of all kinds, the car itself being frequently in a dirty state and utterly unfit for a passenger paying a first class fare to enter and to travel by.

This was addressed to the Minister of Railways and Canals two years ago, and I think it presents a condition that the minister must take into account. This is a state of affairs which interferes with the travelling public in coming to the province in the summer time, and I hope it is not going to continue. I would like the minister to say what he proposes, now that the tourist traffic is beginning for the season, to do to remedy this grievance. This letter is addressed to him by the premier of the province.

Mr. GRAHAM. What date?

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.) Dated the 3rd November, 1906. I would like the minister to say what he is going to do with regard to it.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think, if my hon. friend had read all of that return, he would have discovered that steps have been taken and that we have given instructions to remedy, in so far as possible, the train service, because it is very important and it carries a large tourist trade to, perhaps, the most beautiful summer resorts in the Dominion of Canada. We appreciate very highly the line from Painsec Junction to Pointe du Chêne and we have given instructions to remedy the conditions there, and we will see that they are carried out.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.) That is very unsatisfactory to me. The minister says that the return which I have in my hand contains what the government is going to do. It is not what the return shows it is going to do, but what is it going to do? How many cars is the minister going to place upon that line? Is he going to place a sleeper on that section of road? It is all very well for the government to put me off by saying that they are going to do something; let the minister tell us what they are going to do.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend does not pretend that there has been nothing done for the improvement of that service. If he does he is wrong about that.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.) What has been done?

Mr. GRAHAM. Better cars have been put on, and that is really the gist of the trouble. I think it would be unwise to say that we would put a chair car or a sleeping car on that branch of 14 miles. A first class car has been provided, and that is about all the accommodation that could be expected for that short distance.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.) Is there a first class car and a second class car?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Boston train runs through without any break to the port, and I am not sure how many cars are on the other train. There are some times four and some times five and, I think, always more than one.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.) The Minister of Railways and Canals, some time ago, in this House, told us that they were providing some motor cars to run on short lines, and I would like to know what progress has been made in regard to them?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have purchased four of these cars. I may say there is a difference of opinion and that negotiations are now proceeding between the brotherhoods and the management as to the manning of these cars, &c. Personally, I have been on one of these cars and I am inclined to think they will be very practical, but up to the present time we have run them in but two places—St. John and Halifax. We hope in a short time to have them in service.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.) When the question was discussed in this House the idea was that two of them would be operated on two short lines in my province.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think that will be the ultimate destiny of two motor cars.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.) When will the ultimate destiny come ?

Mr. GRAHAM. When we can conclude certain negotiations now going on about the running of these cars. When we get those negotiations settled I think my hon. friend can rest assured that the proposition to put two motor cars on the island will be fully considered.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.) What did these motor cars cost?

Mr. GRAHAM. About $17,000 each.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.) What is the difference in the cost of operation as between a motor car and a train operated by steam power?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is one of the questions under discussion. It ought to decrease the running expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. When the minister talks about trouble as to the manning of these cars he seems to be very mysterious about it. What is the trouble? I think the House would like to know. The minister has had these cars for nearly two years. Sufficient experiments ought to have been made in two years' time to have enabled the government to come to a pretty satisfactory conclusion, to know how they are to be run and to judge as to whether they can be run as economically as cars operated by steam power. They have been running between St. John, Rothesay and Hampton. What has been the experience of them? I have seen them puffing around there and everybody staring at them, but nobody particularly riding on them and the general impression I got from train men was that they were a costly and not very useful luxury. We ought to have some conclusion that we could tie to.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think that experience has shown that they will be more economical when we have them operating properly.

Mr. FOSTER. Why do you not have them operating properly?

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) used the word 'trouble.' I prefer not to call it that, but to call it a difference of opinion. We have been running a car at St. John and I think every person will agree that it has been a success there.

Mr. FOWLER. For how long a time did you run it?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think for the whole of last summer. I know that they were running them when I was there last fall. The brotherhoods are inclined to think that they ought to be manned with a larger number of men than we think are necessary. That may look to be a small matter, but it is quite far-reaching. We want to start them on a proper basis, if possible. I think they will be a success eventually.

Mr. GANONG. How does the number of men you employed correspond with the number of men employed on American roads that are using a similar car?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am told that the American companies man their cars with one less man than our men think we ought to have on them. Of course, you can understand that there is a little prejudice against an innovation of this kind, and it is not so easy to have it running as smoothly as it might.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there any additional expense entailed by reason of having an engine always ready to haul them into port? They seem to be like the old automobiles ; it was generally necessary to get a farmer with a yoke of oxen to haul them into town. The minister told my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Martin) that it was the intention to unload two of them on to a branch road on Prince Edward Island. There would be no serious objection by the people living along the Intercolonial Railway to having two of them or perhaps the whole four put on the island. You might use one of them between Painsec and Shediac.

Mr. GRAHAM. They have petitioned for one there.

Mr. FOWLER. Better let them have it. To come from the ridiculous to the sublime; how many official cars have you?

Mr. GRAHAM. Does my hon. friend mean in connection with the road altogether?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. We will call them government official cars, there are six altogether.

Mr. FOWLER. By whom are they used?

Mr. GRAHAM. One by the general manager, one by the traffic manager, No. 109 by the Minister of Railways, No. 28 is used occasionally.

Mr. FOWLER. By whom?

Mr. GRAHAM. By the ministers and other people.

Mr. FOWLER. What do you mean by other people?

Mr. GRAHAM. Wait until I get through with the list—No. 139 is used by the deputy minister and by the Prime Minister occasionally when he requires it. The Ottawa is used by Mr. Schreiber consulting engineer when he makes official trips.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you keep that car fully equipped with a porter and all that sort of thing just to be used by Mr. Schreiber when he makes an official trip which is not very often?

Mr. GRAHAM. That car is used by Mr. Schreiber and occasionally by ministers when they require it. It is not kept specially for Mr. Schreiber although he does use it when he goes on his trips.

Mr. CROCKET. Has the minister looked any further into the question of charging tolls for passengers across the Fredericton and St. Marys Railway bridge? I brought the matter to his notice some time ago.

Mr. GRAHAM. We did take that matter up at the request of my hon. friend, but they are pretty slow in giving us a reply and I will jog their memory again.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.). The former Minister of Railways said he would test the motor car service on two sections of the road in my province; one, the section between Lake Verde and Port Vernon and the other the section from Montague bridge to Cardigan. The present Minister of Railways has not carried out that promise. He is testing these cars somewhere in Nova Scotia and if they are a success we won't get them, but if they are not a success he will send them over to the island. If you had a motor car on the short spur between Port Vernon and Lake Verde you would save an hour in time. The minister apparently does not appreciate how slow his trains are on the island. From Murray Harbour to Charlottetown is 50 miles and it takes four or five hours to do that 50 miles. One of the reasons for the delay is this loop line. I hope the minister will devise some means to overcome that delay.

Mr. FOWLER. To return to the official car question—these six cars are exclusive of the Governor General's car and the Railway Commission car?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Are there porters attached to them all the time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Supposing there is a tour of inspection by the Minister of Railways with some of his officials, who pays the cost of the up-keep of the car during the time it is running? Who pays for the eatables and drinkables? Of course water is cheap and we will confine the question to the eatables, presuming that there would not be anything on board but water. Who pays for the supplies?

Mr. GRAHAM. The ordinary travelling expenses are paid by the department. The minister himself pays anything above that.

Mr. FOWLER. What do you mean by the ordinary travelling expenses?

Mr. GRAHAM. The ordinary expenses on the car. After the official work is done I pay my own board.

Mr. FOWLER. Suppose the minister was to start from Ottawa to make a trip over the Intercolonial Railway accompanied by some of his officials, does the government pay the expenses connected with the food supply on that car?

Mr. GRAHAM. The department would pay the expenses of the minister and any of his staff when making an official visit, but if he had any guests with him the minister would pay their expenses himself.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister would pay the guests' expenses?

Mr. GRAHAM. I should think he would; I know I would.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister then has had no experience of that kind as yet so he is speaking theoretically.

Mr. GRAHAM. The minister has never taken any guests with him on one of these official trips except his own wife, outside of his staff, except from one station to another where perhaps some of the members might travel or perhaps I would ask persons with whom I was doing business to come from one station to another.

Mr. FOWLER. That would apply to the other officials too?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister ought to know whether the department in all cases pays the expenses incurred, that is all the expenses in connection with the upkeep of the car during the time the tour lasts, all supplies, &c., for the use of the official car are paid.

Mr. GRAHAM. The railway pays when the official is on official business, or any person is using the car on official business. Then the country pays and it ought to pay, but if it is being used on any other kind of business the users ought to pay it themselves and do, so far as I know. I have no intimation that they do not.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister or some of his officials ought to know. Suppose for instance the Minister of Agriculture should go on a junketing tour, would he pay the cost of the car?

Mr. GRAHAM. He would absolutely pay the cost of the car, every cent of it.

Mr. FOWLER. I know the Minister of Agriculture would want to.

Mr. FISHER. And does.

Mr. GANONG. The minister stated that there would be a surplus of $16,000 this year. It will surprise the country to learn that after the immense capital expenditure they have simply been able to squeeze out a $16,000 surplus. I am not living on the Intercolonial Railway, in fact I have only been on it once in two years. The statements I have heard in regard to the road are from people who travel it regularly, and if these statements are correct the article read by the member for York this morning was none too strong. It is not a question of $16,000 surplus or $160,000 surplus; it is a question of efficiency and safety. If what I hear is correct there is neither efficiency nor safety to-day on the Intercolonial Railway. I have perhaps been in a position to hear more of it than usual during the last six months as my home has been closed and when I have been there I have been staying at the hotels and have come in contact with the travellers, the men who do the great business of this country. You can scarcely talk to a traveller who will not admit that he is afraid to travel on the Intercolonial Railway. I asked one young man about three weeks ago and he shrugged his shoulder and said: Off again, on again, yours again Flannigan. He expressed his opinion of the road as he found it. I have found others who said they made it a rule, if at all possible, to return to Montreal and the west by the Canadian Pacific Railway. If these are facts it is time the country understood it. If the roadbed and equipment are in such shape that it is not safe to travel, the people should know it even if the government cannot force out more than a $16,000 surplus. We know it has been very difficult for the Intercolonial Railway in the last few months to keep up to time. The trains have been behind time almost every day and it is stated the reason is that the roadbed and equipment are not fit to run. It is also stated that the engineers and drivers have direct orders not to run over thirty-five miles an hour. I have heard these things from more than one source, I cannot vouch for the truth of the statements but I am giving the minister an opportunity to deny these reports if they are not well-founded.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have to say that the Intercolonial Railway will compare with any railway in the Dominion of Canada as to its accidents per mile. Its roadbed is equal to any other roadbed on the continent. I know as many commercial travellers possibly as any man in this House; I am very intimate with many of them for many reasons, and four out of five of the commercial men from this end of the country speak in the highest terms of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. GANONG. The gentlemen with whom I talked were principally from points west of the maritime provinces.

Mr. GRAHAM. They must be east by west. If there is one class who speak highly of the Intercolonial Railway, it is the commercial travellers. As to rolling stock I think the Grand Trunk Railway has an average of 13 per cent of its motive power lying to one side for repairs. Ten per cent of motive power is a small percentage to be in for repairs. The Intercolonial Railway at the present time has between 8 per cent and 9 per cent of its motive power off duty for repairs. The management and the people are not afraid to compare the Intercolonial Railway with any other road. I know, of course, that there is a prejudice against a government-run road whatever party may be in power and the question of whether company management with larger rates and a different system of control is not the most satifactory is always a matter for debate, but at the present moment, so far as the rolling stock, roadbed and number of accidents are concerned, I am willing to have the Intercolonial Railway compared with any road on the continent.

Mr. GANONG. Have orders been issued not to run beyond thirty-five miles an hour?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is a customary order on most well-run railways in this hard climate to restrict the rate of speed at the time of the year when the frost is coming from the ground.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know that any member on either side of the House who travels on the Intercolonial Railway entertains the same opinion of that road as the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Ganong).

Mr. GANONG. I have not expressed any opinion of my own.

Mr. LOGAN. My hon. friend has given some opinions which he has heard, although he himself has only been upon the road once in two years. If my hon. friend, who is a fair man, were to travel on the Intercolonial Railway as we do who live on it, he would not entertain such an erroneous opinion with reference to the road, not only as to rolling stock but as to roadbed. The roadbed of the Intercolonial Railway should be the pride of the people of Canada. Anybody who travels over other railways will realize that the roadbed is a level and sound roadbed, that it is kept up in good condition, and that it is a smoother road to ride on than other railroads, in Eastern Canada at any rate. As far as the service is concerned—the courtesy of the officers, the maintenance of the road and the general condition of the roads—it will compare favourably with any railway on the whole continent. I do not deny that there is a shortage of power, not for express trains, but for freight traffic, and there is some considerable necessity for increasing the rolling stock. As far as the express service of the road is concerned—and I can speak as one who uses the road very frequently—I would rather take the Intercolonial from Nova Scotia to Montreal than the Canadian Pacific Railway, even if it took two days to go by the Intercolonial to one day by the Canadian Pacific Railway. So superior is the one service over the other that if the people, in my part of the country at any rate, had to choose between the two, they would not hesitate to give the preference to the Intercolonial. If my hon. friend travelled on the road as much as I do, he would entertain an entirely different opinion and not believe all the stories he hears.

Mr. GANONG. I am simply giving the minister an opportunity to contradict these stories and have his contradictions put in print. I have no grievance against the Intercolonial Railway. I have simply stated facts which I could prove if necessary. I have asked the minister if he can controvert them and he has not seen fit to do so. Has he given an order that the trains shall only run thirty-five miles an hour?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend needs a reply again. I have told him once before that orders are given on all roads, at certain times of the year, in this very severe climate, to restrict the speed of the trains. If my hon. friend travels very much he will find that he frequently travels at a lesser speed than thirty-five miles an hour rather than faster.

Mr. GANONG. Possibly the order, like the letter which was read, was given by some official of the road.

Mr. CROCKET. Will the hon. minister state what amount was expended last year on repairs to the roadbed?

Mr. GRAHAM. On maintenance of way and structures there was expended $1,636,-950. That would include buildings.

Mr. CROCKET. How much this year?

Mr. GRAHAM. For the nine months of last year, $1,112,038, a little larger in proportion.

Mr. FOWLER. In making up your account do you take into consideration the depreciation of your rolling stock? What is the average life of a locomotive?

Mr. GRAHAM. About twenty to twenty-five years.

Mr. FOWLER. And a passenger car?

Mr. GRAHAM. Perhaps a little less.

Mr. FOWLER. In making up your account, by which you show a surplus of $18,-000, do you take into consideration the depreciation of your rolling stock?

Mr. GRAHAM. Railway accounts are not kept that way. We are supposed to spend a certain amount each year in keeping up our rolling stock. We make up in that way what we lose by depreciation. No railway company takes any cognizance of depreciation in the value of its rolling stock because that is offset by the expenditure on maintenance and repairs.

Mr. FOWLER. If the life of a locomotive is twenty-five years, that would be 4 per cent on the cost which you would have to expend.

Mr. GRAHAM. This includes four new locomotives.

Mr. FOWLER. If you have 370 locomotives, and the life of each is twenty-five years, you would need to buy nine new ones in addition to the amount spent on repairs, to offset your yearly depreciation. Last year you only got four new ones and you have used up nine. That would mean five locomotives short, and if a locomotive is worth $12,000, that would be a shortage of $60 000. Where then is your surplus?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is altogether too intricate. If this $700,000 repairs or an amount approximating, is spent yearly, a locomotive will last more than twenty five years. Some of these repairs practically amount to rebuilding the locomotive, and you cannot apply to such a locomotive the twenty-five years limitation. Three-fourths of our repaired locomotives are practically new.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister then misled me when he said that the life of a locomotive was twenty-five years. Surely he does not mean that a locomotive will last twenty-five years straight away without any repairs. What he must mean is that twenty-five years is the average life, when kept in repair. A farmer, who keeps his farm wagon in repair, would be able to run it for twenty-five years, but at the end of that term it is probably no good. If he did not keep it in repair, he could not run it that long. So it must be with a locomotive. Has the minister made a fair allowance for depreciation having regard to the fact that the life of a locomotive is twenty-five years, and that consequently he requires to have nine new locomotives every year?

The minister said it was a matter of bookkeeping. It certainly is. And this whole surplus is entirely a matter of bookkeeping. What is true of the locomotives is true of the passenger and freight car: and the only way by which you can reasonably figure out a surplus is by making an allowance, the same as every other road does, for depreciation of your rolling stock. But the minister buys locomotives and charges them up to capital. I venture to say that the amount charged to capital on the Intercolonial is at least three times what the rolling stock is worth. And that goes on accumulating, because no proper allowance has been made for depreciation of rolling stock in years past.

Mr. CROCKET. The minister has not yet stated the number of new locomotives purchased for the year ending March 31, 1908.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) is perfectly correct in the explanation he has given of what ought to be charged to capital and what to revenue. There are on the Intercolonial, I understand, 370 locomotives. Now, the life of a locomotive is twenty years—that is the time allowed by railways generally. In other words, five per cent of the locomotives need to be replaced each year. In the case of the Intercolonial, there ought to be eighteen new locomotives bought. But, in order to make a good showing, almost all the locomotives are charged to capital account. There are only four locomotives on the Intercolonial charged to revenue, where there ought to be eighteen. The life of a locomotive, the life of a rail, the life of a car—all these things are perfectly well known, and, unless you make the requisite charge to revenue for depreciation, you do not know really where you stand. As a result of the government's method of book-keeping, you have a surplus this year of some hundreds——

Mr. GRAHAM. Of $16,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, $16,000. And this is after the bright promises that were made by the minister's predecessor, and of the charge of $4,380,000 to capital account.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does not the hon. member (Mr. Haggart) think we had better get rid of the road?

Mr. HAGGART. Better manage it properly.

Mr. GERMAN. How did you manage it?

Mr. HAGGART. I did manage it properly. I had no such charges to capital account as you see to-day. I would like to know the receipts and expenditures of the last two months. The minister tells us that there is a loss of $180,000 on receipts. How do these receipts and expenditures compare with those of the same two months last year?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have not the statement of expenditure for the last two months. As ex-minister the hon. gentleman knows that, in the regular routine, we do not get these figures so soon. I have a statement merely that the receipts have fallen off.

Mr. HAGGART. You have the figures for April and May?

Mr. GRAHAM. The receipts, but not the expenditure. That is, I gave an approximate statement of the receipts, but we have not the detailed statement.

Mr. HAGGART. Why, within five days after the end of the month, the minister ought to have the receipts and expenditures. And, more than that, he ought to have from his officials an estimate of the receipts and expenditure of the next month. The officials ought to keep the minister informed on that subject. The minister asks us for the same amount as last year. Surely, he does not intend to keep up the same expenditure if the falling off in business is to be $800,000? He must reduce his estimate of expenditure. What is the estimate of expenditure for the year coming?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will see that it is impossible to make an estimate of the receipts from the present conditions. We hope they will improve, and are rather disappointed that there has been a falling off in the revenue for the last couple of months. As I have said, the difficulty of this discussion is that we are dealing with more than one year. There is the year ending March 31, 1907, the report for which is before the House, then, there is the year ending 31st of March, 1908, the report of which is not before the House, and now my hon. friend wants me to discuss the current year. I cannot give him details which I have not myself.

Mr. HAGGART. But the minister is before the committee asking for $9,000,000 to carry on the Intercolonial for the current year.

Mr. FOSTER. And asking for the same amount as last year.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. And he ought to have the receipts and expenditures for the last two months, and also an estimate of the present month. And he ought to have an estimate for the year for which he is asking this $9,000,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. The only way by which we can judge the business of this year is by the business of last year. Either the hon. gentleman or I, or any body else, can guess at what the business will be, but that is the only way we have of getting at it.

Mr. HAGGART. And yet we had the delightful promises of the minister's predecessor concerning the year just closed. On the basis of the information he had, he estimated a constantly increasing revenue, and a surplus of $700,000, $800,000 or $1,000,000. But I suppose all this work of imagination is finished and is not to go on under the present practical management. Still, the minister ought to be able to give us an estimate whether the revenue is likely to continue as it is or to improve. If there is to be an improvement he ought to tell us about when it may be expected to begin and how it is likely the road will stand at the end of the year.

Mr. FOWLER. In view of what has occurred in the minister's constituency, he must naturally feel depressed and not in a condition of mind to give the sort of statement the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) desires. If conditions had been different in Brockville and throughout Ontario, perhaps the minister would have told us that he would have a surplus of a million and a half next year. Now, I would like to ask the minister the number of first-class cars he has on the Intercolonial, the number of second-class cars and also freight cars, baggage cars, coal cars and flats.

Mr. GRAHAM. This return is up to the 31st of March, 1907, the latest we have. Locomotives, 370 ; first-class sleepers, 40 ; second-class sleepers, 38; parlour cars, 9 ; dining cars, 8; first-class passenger, 137 ; second-class passenger, 97 ; postal and smoking cars, 36 ; express and baggage cars, 60; box cars, 5,596; refrigerator cars, 909; platform cars, 2,780 ; pulp wood cars, 50; oil tank cars, 25; hopper cars, 1,114; coal cars, 471; stock cars, 123; auxiliary and tool cars, 21; convertible dump cars, 130; vans, 119.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, will the minister give me the average life of each of these classes of cars ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I could not give that information definitely. The average life, I imagine, taking all the cars together, would be 20 or 25 years. I am told there are some cars in the service that have lasted 40 years.

Mr. FOWLER. Estimating the average life of a passenger car at 25 years, you have 137 first-class cars, that would be about six cars a year. How many first-class passenger cars did you charge to maintenance?

Mr. GRAHAM. While the deputy is getting the figures, I may say that we spent $310,214 out of revenue.

Mr. FOWLER. That was for repairs.

Mr. GRAHAM. The deputy will get more definite information. On repairs to freight cars, $310,214. This plan has been adopted by the management and the department. Of course the question of capital and revenue is one that we might discuss for weeks and weeks. You may discuss it with any railway on this continent and you will find the same adverse opinion. When railways do a good business there is more to expend out of revenue. We are trying to arrive at a basis by which we would get rid of this yearly discussion as to what should be charged to capital and what to revenue account. A year ago last April we adopted the method of charging each month up to betterment the sum of $25,000; to maintenance and equipment each month, $3,000. We hope in time this will adjust itself so that we may not have the same kind of discussion as to capital and revenue.

Two locomotives—switching.

The following cars were rebuilt in the shops at Moncton: 9 box, 11 platform, 1 oil tank, 2 coal—20 tons.

50 platform cars were fitted with racks for carrying pulpwood.

211 60,000-pound box cars were fitted with end doors for loading rails, making 579 cars in all fitted in the shops to the end of March.

Mr. FOWLER. That is just putting doors in.

Mr. GRAHAM. The following cars were practically rebuilt:

9 box, 11 platform, 1 oil tank, 2 coal—20 tons.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Carried.

Mr. FOWLER. No it is not; we have not got the information. What new passenger cars were bought?

Mr. GRAHAM. I gave my hon. friend all the information I find in the report for 1907.

Mr. FOWLER. Then that means that for the year 1907 there were no new first class cars. There were 137 passenger cars in use and from the statement which the minister has just given us as to the life of a passenger car there should have been added six new cars. None was added. What is the value of a passenger car? We are looking at this elusive surplus and trying to locate it.

Mr. GRAHAM. About $18,000 or $19,000.

Mr. FOWLER. We should have had six new ones and, taking it at the lowest figure, $108,000 more of this surplus is gone. There was only $16,000 to start with, and if we take ten locomotives out of it at $12,000 apiece, that is $120,000, and six new passenger cars at $18,000 make $108,000, so that there are $228,000 gone out of your $16,000. Were there any new second class cars added?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. FOWLER. How many second class cars were there?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think there were 97.

Mr. FOWLER. Would a second class car last as long as a first class car—scarcely?

Mr. GRAHAM. Scarcely.

Mr. FOWLER. We will say 20 years for that. That would be 5 per cent each year and that would represent five new cars. What is the value of a second class passenger car?

Mr. GRAHAM. Between $14,000 and $15,000.

Mr. FOWLER. There is $70,000 more; that is, in round numbers, $300,000 gone out of your $16,000. What is the life of a box car?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is getting into the intricacies of car building. It is somewhere between 15 and 20 years.

Mr. FOWLER. How many of these box cars were there again?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have given the hon. gentleman the statement from the report. If he will refer to page 103 he will find the figures.

Mr. FOWLER. Thirty-six postal smoking cars. What is the average life of a postal smoking car?

Mr. GRAHAM. I imagine they will average the same as the rest.

Mr. FOWLER. Say 25 years. Putting the cost at $15,000, that is $315,000. Express and baggage cars, 60; what would be the average life of this car—20 years?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have told my hon. friend several times, but for his purpose he can take 20 years for them all.

Mr. FOWLER. If we take 20 years that would be three new cars, and what would be the value of an express baggage car?

Mr. GRAHAM. About $7,000.

Mr. FOWLER. That would be $21,000. That is $336,000 gone out of your surplus already. Box cars; what is the average life of a box car? Call it 20 years and there are in round numbers 6,000 of them. That would be 300 box cars to be added each year. How many did you add out of revenue?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will find the whole statement at page 102.

Mr. FOWLER. There were nine added. These were not new cars, they were rebuilt cars. That would not be really worth the full amount of a new car.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will have to look out or he will get tangled in his logic about locomotives if he does not take these as practically new cars.

Mr. FOWLER. Not at all, it will be the minister who will get tangled as to the life of a locomotive.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not at all; it depends upon the point of view.

Mr. FOWLER. Not at all. As a matter of fact these rebuilt cars are not the same as new cars, but we will take them as being the same as new cars, and you have your 291 of a depreciation. What is the value of a box car?

Mr. GRAHAM. $990.

Mr. FOWLER. Call it $1,000 on 290; that would be $290,000 more. That will be $336,000 plus $290,000 out of your surplus. Taking 20 years as the average life of a refrigerator car you have added five of them at a cost of about $8,000. Your large platform cars would cost an average of about $850 each, you have 2,780 of these cars and you rebuilt 11 which we will be generous and say are equal to 10 new cars, and therefore your depreciation on these platform cars would amount to about $126,000. Take that out of your $16,000 surplus and what is left. Then you have 1,114 hopper cars with an average life of 20 years and you did not add on any, and hence we will call that 55 hopper cars at $550 a car which would make about $27,000. The minister will notice how fair I am in giving him the benefit of every doubt in these calculations.

Mr. GRAHAM. The figures are fair but the argument is all wrong.

Mr. FOWLER. I don't think it is.

Mr. GRAHAM. You could not apply it to any railway in the world.

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, yes, you can, you will find an article in the last 'Harpers' Magazine' which shows how this matter is regarded by other railways, and which will prove that it is the practice of other railways. There are 17 Gondola coal cars and 171 other coal cars at an average of about $500 each which would give you a basis of 24 cars to figure on, which would be worth $12,000, and that you take almost the whole surplus for the depreciation of coal cars alone. Then there are 900 stock cars worth about $500 each, and you have auxiliary and tool cars and convertible dump cars which would be worth about $500 each. But taking the whole thing the depreciation of rolling stock would total up about $808,000 on your road for one year.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the cost of the new steel coal cars ?

Mr. GRAHAM. About $1,600 for a 50 ton car.

Mr. FOWLER. If an honest and business like account had been kept showing the profit, and the real depreciation on the rolling stock, a depreciation which should be met every year out of your revenue, instead of having a surplus of $16,000 you would have had a deficit of nearly $800,000. That is the real condition of affairs. In order to put that road at the end of 1907 in the condition it was at the end of 1906 in the matter of rolling stock; in order to make up for the depreciation of your rolling stock between the 31st March, 1906, and the 31st March, 1907, you should have expended absolutely out of revenue $800,000 more than you did, to say nothing of the new rolling stock which must be required on account of the extension of new business and which might fairly enough be charged to capital. I repeat, and I emphasize it that you should have expended in the year 1907 about $800,000 more out of revenue than you did to keep your rolling stock in the same condition as it was in 1906, and in the calculation I have given you the benefit of the doubt in every case and have calculated most generously in favour of the management of the railway. Therefore the Intercolonial instead of having a surplus of $16,000 at the end of the year has a deficit of $792,000 and I challenge the Minister of Railways or any gentleman sitting behind him to controvert these figures. I say that what I have pointed out is the business experience of all railways. The result is that to-day we have charged up to capital account rolling stock to an amount more than double, I believe three times, the actual value of the rolling stock upon the Intercolonial Railway. That is the condition of affairs and I do not see why the minister is not ready to meet it fairly, instead of saying my argument is not in accord with the facts in regard to other railways. Railways are run as business propositions and that is the only business way of looking at it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Railways are run as business propositions but not according to the proposition of my hon. friend. No railway makes up its accounts as he says. They may approximate it but he cannot find any railway on the continent that does it year after year, magazine articles, notwithstanding. In a good year railways expend liberally out of revenue but when the year is not so good they expend more liberally out of capital. Sometimes they raise money by issuing bonds, &c. If the member inquires he will find that is true. As I said, we did start on the 1st of April last year laying aside $25,000 a month in order to equalize, as far as possible, the expenditure between revenue and capital. Let me point out what has been done. We have spent more than $25,000 a month out of revenue in 1907-1908.

Mr. FOWLER. If I am wrong why should you ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. member is wrong because he is extreme.

Mr. FOWLER. Well you are doing something along that line.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not to that extent and no railway on the continent does.

Mr. FOWLER. If we did it at all we should pay all possible out of revenue.

Mr. GRAHAM. In 1907-1908 we have purchased 166 60,000-pounds box cars at $990 each, $156,400 ; 130 hopper cars, $73,060 ; five refrigerator cars, $7,950 ; 100 flats, $87,000 ; 9 stock cars, $81,000 ; 8 conductors' vans $13,120 ; one dining car from the Pullman Company, $27,150 ; one sleeper, $19,500 ; two express cars, $14,000 ; two postal cars, $17,350 four locomotives, ten wheel standard passenger locomotives, and on these we have paid $23,600. Thus in 1907-1908 we have paid out of revenue for the things I have read $443,467.50.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be but was that enough ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think it was plenty.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister has admitted the whole case.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not at all.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, because you have admitted the principle.

Mr. GRAHAM. You can carry a principle to an extreme. The hon. member takes a certain set of figures and argues from them. I can argue him out of doors, I can turn any man in Canada into a bankrupt in fifteen minutes, if I am allowed to lay down my own figures.

Mr. FOWLER. I was practically allowing the minister to make the figures. I was only making the additions and multiplications.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend cannot apply his argument to any railway as he seeks to apply it to the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FOWLER. I say that is the way every other railway is conducted as a matter of fact. Would the stock of any railway be worth anything on the market if it was necessary for the railway, in order to keep up the rolling stock, to borrow from capital?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Grand Trunk last year paid for 455 box cars and 55 furniture cars out of capital account.

Mr. FOWLER. Because they were increasing their mileage.

Mr. GRAHAM. Where has the Grand Trunk increased its mileage in order to get the cars ?

Mr. FOWLER. So far as that is concerned, I say that no railway could possibly buy that out of capital account and keep up its rolling stock.

Mr. GRAHAM. They did it last year.

Mr. FOWLER. The thing is absurd on the face of it.

Mr. GRAHAM. But they did it.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Mr. GRAHAM. You said any railway and I gave the Grand Trunk.

Mr. FOWLER. I started with the statement that it might be necessary to take money from capital account to build rolling stock if there was an increased traffic on the road which required additional rolling stock and that is what occurred with the Grand Trunk Railway. But I defy the minister to show where the Grand Trunk Railway paid from capital account to keep up the ordinary rolling stock.

Mr. GRAHAM. Nor have we. We had an increase in traffic and we bought more rolling stock.

Mr. FOWLER. But you have gone back in your traffic.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is only in the last few months, and so has the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. FOWLER. According to your report you did not require additional power last year. If you had shown that your traffic had increased and consequently it was necessary to get additional rolling stock over and above what the road was supplied with, you would have an answer, but you have not shown anything of the kind, because in 1907 you did not buy any additional cars. You did not buy a single passenger car. You repaired some box and freights and that is all you did.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. FOWLER. I am taking the report here.

Mr. GRAHAM. I read from revenue and that is what the report says. You take the other line of argument and say if the Grand Trunk wants new rolling stock or new business they can buy it from capital. That is what we did. We increased our rolling stock in 1906-1907 not out of revenue but out of capital as the Grand Trunk Railway did.

Mr. FOWLER. You bought 20 new locomotives charged to capital account, increased equipment. If that were necessary on account of increased traffic on the road it would be all right. I did not discuss that point, I was taking the stock you had and showing what you had done in the way of keeping it up from revenue.

Mr. GRAHAM. That has nothing to do with the argument.

Mr. FOWLER. It has. I put exactly on the same plane as the 200 or 400 additional box cars that the Grand Trunk bought by reason of increased traffic, 20 locomotives, 3 locomotives for switching and 115 hopper cars. On account of your increased traffic you bought these but what did you charge to revenue ? Nine box cars, 11 platform cars, one oil tank and 2 coal cars. The others were repairs, fitting flat cars with racks for pulpwood, &c. Where you had increased traffic and by reason of that required more rolling stock, you would have a right to charge that to capital account and I find no fault with that. I laid down that principle when I was making my argument, but when it came to replace the cars you had in the beginning of 1906, at the beginning of 1907-1908 I claim that you did not make the replacement and that your stock was depreciated by nearly $800,000. Those are facts the minister cannot get away from.

Mr. CROCKET. The Minister of Railways, when he made his annual statement to the House, spoke of the claims department, and said it was the intention of the department, as I understood him, to reorganize that department of the service.

Is there any further statement to be made on that subject?

Mr. GRAHAM. The reason I made that statement as to the claims department is that an amendment was moved to the law applied to the government railway, bringing accidents occurring on that road more into line with those on ordinary railways, so far as claims are concerned. But I have been so busy since the session opened that I have not been able to do what I intended in regard to the matter. My hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) will see that it opens up a new avenue as to suits to be taken against the government, for the evidence needed under the old Act was considerably different from that under the new. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), I think it was, brought in an amendment that has gone through the Senate, and, in face of that, I thought we would have to reorganize the claims department. I intend to pay some attention to the matter later on.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Something certainly ought to be done, because if a person has a claim it is apt to be referred to the claims department at Moncton, and it is months before one seems to be able to get an answer from that office. I think the minister ought to put men in there who know their business. The men who are in there may know their business, but if so they are very dilatory.

Mr. CROCKET. At the time to which I refer the minister also stated that he expected to be able to make an announcement to the House with respect to a number of claims standing against the department at the time. I understood that there were many claims concerning which there was no liability under the law as it stood before the amendment to which the minister referred, but which he proposes to open in view of the change of the law, and that he expected before the end of the season to submit a proposal to parliament for their settlement.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know that I would quite call it an 'announcement.' I have been looking into these claims for accidents along the line, cattle killed and that kind of thing.

Mr. FOWLER. People injured?

Mr. FOSTER. Baggage lost?

Mr. GRAHAM. The baggage lost comes under another department and we are trying to reorganize that. Since I made my brief statement in the House, I have received innumerable claims. I am having these compiled. All of them, possibly, will not be good, but some of them may. Looking at it from a financial standpoint, my personal view is in favour of not standing upon the technicalities of the law in these matters. If some person has suffered loss, and it is the government's fault, the government ought not to shield itself behind the technicality. That is the way I feel about it. When I have these claims compiled and am able to size up the list, I shall be in a better position to make a statement.

Mr. CROCKET. Who is in charge of the claims department?

Mr. GRAHAM. Freight claims—Mr. Cameron.

Mr. CROCKET. But there is an officer called, I think, 'chief claims agent'; has there been an appointment made to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Allan?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Layton is doing the work temporarily; there has been no permanent appointment.

Mr. CROCKET. Is Mr. Layton a lawyer? Or what qualifications does he possess for the performance of these duties?

Mr. GRAHAM. I hope my hon. friend will not think I am trying to be facetious about lawyers. I understand that the gentleman is not a lawyer. I may be wrong, but I think that in the settlement of claims such as these, in nine times out of ten, a little practical, hard-headed sense is better as a means of settlement that expert legal knowledge—though the two together would be good.

Mr. HAGGART. They do not generally go together.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would hardly go so far as that. But I have perhaps a peculiar idea as to the settlement of these things. I think that a shrewd business man who is in touch with the conditions would be as competent as a legal man to settle these claims.

Mr. CROCKET. Is it not a fact that the department requires legal advice for the proper settlement of all claims.

Mr. GRAHAM. In case of a question of legal liability, we have a law branch of our department, and that is referred to as a general thing.

Mr. CROCKET. When was Mr. Layton appointed?

Mr. GRAHAM. A couple or three months ago, I think.

Mr. CROCKET. At what salary?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have not the figure before me. I think it is a little less than that of the former occupant of the office. I will give the information to-morrow.

Mr. CROCKET. Is this the same gentleman who was business manager of the St. John 'Sun'?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am sure I do not know.

Mr. CROCKET. Where did he reside?—what county was he taken from?

Mr. GRAHAM. I understand he lived in Woodstock.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to ask the minister once more in regard to a point about which I have been inquiring for six months—the connection of the Intercolonial with the Quebec Central at Lévis. I do not want to annoy the minister about this, but I think he should take the subject into consideration as well as any other. I have been waiting six months and I think I ought to have a reply and that some action ought to be taken in the matter.

Mr. GRAHAM. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Morin) that no question of annoyance arises, because I think the minister is here to be used, in reason, in all these affairs. I took the matter up with the Quebec Central and had some correspondence about it. But we have been unable, so far as the minister is concerned, to bring about the result the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morin) would like. Speaking from my recollection of the correspondence, I think the trains usually make the connection in time for the passengers, but occasionally they miss it. The Intercolonial train is a through train, and in my dealings with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk, or any other road, I have—and I think fairly—taken the ground that we should not do anything that can reasonably be avoided to interfere with the running of through trains on time. The through train has connections to make at both ends, and we ought not to hamper it for local purposes and endanger those connections. Passengers going across the continent take these trains and depend upon making their connections at Montreal, Detroit and Chicago. For that reason, the Intercolonial Railway being a thorough train, we try to keep our trains on time, and if we were to make any more stops we would have to make the maritime express practically a local instead of a through train. If my hon. friend has any more complaint to make about it, he would do well to refer to the Railway Commission or I will refer it myself. I have told him about all the correspondence I had with the commission.

Mr. MORIN. I wish to speak to the minister about the connection of passenger trains at Harlaka Junction. Harlaka Junction is four and a quarter miles from Lévis East on the Intercolonial Railway. The Quebec Central Railway trains running from Sherbrooke to Lévis have to stop at that junction before they can get the right of way to go on to Lévis. When the Quebec Central Railway train reaches Harlaka Junction, the engineer has to go to the office in order to get permission to go on to Lévis. Very often the telegraph operator tells him that the Halifax train has not yet left St. Charles junction, which is nine miles from Harlaka junction. Then we have to wait at Harlaka junction until the Halifax train covers these nine miles, after which she goes on ahead to Lévis. So that we cannot leave Harlaka junction until the Halifax train has left Lévis for Montreal. If we want to go to Montreal, we cannot catch the Halifax train which has gone ahead, but have to wait from one o'clock in the afternoon until nine in the evening. That is in the winter time. All you need to do, to remedy this, is to leave Lévis five minutes later than your schedule time, which will give time for the Quebec Central train to get there and make connection with the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. When you get to Lévis in the winter, the Quebec Central mails are piled up on the trucks at one o'clock, and they have to remain there until nine o'clock in the evening instead of going immediately ahead to Montreal, so that the people between Lévis and Montreal, instead of getting their mails that day, only get them the next day. I spoke to the minister about it and also to the commissioners. The commissioners told me that they have no control over the Intercolonial, but that if the minister would give them control they would have the matter fixed up in one minute because that could be very easily done. I made a draft showing them the location of the country. I do not know whether the minister does not want to make the alteration, but the change is none the less required.

Mr. GRAHAM. Has that occurred lately?

Mr. MORIN. Probably in January.

Mr. GRAHAM. We took the matter up then, and I am informed that the superintendent issued orders that when the Quebec Central Railway was ahead of the maritice express it should run into Lévis and not be detained at Harlaka Junction. That does away with his complaint.

Mr. STANFIELD. Of course with the curtailment of business on the railway, a large number of men have had to be laid off on the Intercolonial, as on other roads, —conductors, engineers, brakesmen and others. Conductors who have been on the road for years are put back to braking, brakesmen are put back on specials, and special men are laid off. We all admit that when business is poor, we have to curtail, but I do not think it fair that this curtailment should be confined to these men. If my memory serves me right, some years ago when the business of the railway increased considerably, a large number of officials were added, and I think that if this rule is to work for the one class, it should be made to work for the both. If you have to lay off the working men, you should lay off some of the petty officials whom you put on when business is good. All I ask is a square deal for the man who draws a small salary and that you should lay off some of the officials who are still drawing full pay and travelling about at the country's expense.

Mr. LOGAN. What officials should be laid off?

Mr. STANFIELD. I can take the book and tell you some.

Mr. CROCKET. How many officials are there in the claims branch ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not seem to have the information here.

Mr. CROCKET. Can he say what proportion of this sum he is asking for to-day is for wages?

Mr. GRAHAM. I gave a while ago the amount of the working expenses for 1907, as something over $4,000,000. We have not got the details. I have not got a complete list of the employees. When you come to working expenses, it is like an office staff running a business. You have a certain staff, and if the work declines, perhaps you could do it for a little less, but you have to keep your organization intact.

Mr. STANFIELD. Who is the inspector of coal and what are his duties?

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot tell who he is.

Mr. STANFIELD. The one I have in mind was a barber. Why can he not be laid off and some engineer appointed who knows more about coal than a barber does?

Mr. GRAHAM. Engineers are a highly paid class of men, and I imagine they would not care to take a position of that kind.

Mr. CROCKET. Is the department putting on the Ocean Limited this summer, between Halifax and Montreal?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Ocean Limited is not altogether encouraging so far as traffic is concerned, but we expect to put in on about July 5.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you an inspector of stationery now?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think there is no person bearing that title.

Mr. FOWLER. I think there was one. I think it was necessary to get rid of the gentleman who was purchasing agent, and a new position was created called the inspector of stationery, and this gentleman was appointed thereto. The position carried with it I think $2,000 a year.

Mr. GRAHAM. That office is abolished, and the occupant is enjoying the benefits of the provident fund organized by the men.

Mr. FOWLER. Why was that important office created, and why was it abolished?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is a matter of ancient history, and I cannot tell. It was created and abolished some time before I came on the scene. I suppose it was abolished because the office was no longer required.

Mr. FOWLER. Would that mean that all the stationery that was going to be required the next ten years was bought under this gentleman's regime? I cannot understand why the situation was created, just what an inspector of stationery had to do. An hon. gentleman here suggests that there was an inspector of window washing. There are inspectors of all sorts of things, particularly about election times. The minister must not shelter himself behind the fact that he has only recently joined the department.

Mr. GRAHAM. I want to place that straight. I have never done that and never will. The hon. gentleman should not make that insinuation.

Mr. FOWLER. I was not saying it in any harsh way, I was saying in a very good natured way, because one could scarcely be ill natured with the minister, he is the very soul of good nature himself. Now it does seem to me that we ought to have a little more information with respect to the need for the creation of this office. When we have a list of these different officials, I think we will find others quite as remarkable as that of inspector of stationery and inspector of window washing. I hope the minister will not fail to bring down a list, with the full titles of the different officers.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister told us this afternoon, in reply to a question with respect to keeping accounts, that it was impossible for him to give the latest monthly receipts and expenditures. He could give the receipts, but it was impossible to give the expenditures for the month of April and the month of May, implying that it took a long period of time to get in the returns. Now I suppose the system of the Intercolonial is kept on the modern railway basis. I understood that the Intercolonial to-day claims that it has just as good form of accounts, just as up to date a system, as the great railways in the United States and Canada. Take the Canadian Pacific railway for instance. The minister knows that the weekly earnings and expenses of the Canadian Pacific railway are given out, and we find them in the financial and trade papers. I do not think it is more than ten days after the expiry of the week when you find a statement of the Canadian Pacific Railway expenditures and income for the week. I suppose that probably about ten days elapse after the end of the week before the statement is published. Now what is there to prevent the minister of the Intercolonial from giving these statements not longer than ten days after expiration of the week? And especially, what is to prevent him from giving us the April statement now, on the 9th June, or the May statement, on the 9th of June? Under a new minister and under a practically new deputy we had got the idea that we were going to get the Intercolonial run on the very best basis possibly in the matter of accounting and the strictness with which the accounts are kept. What is the difficulty that the minister finds in not being able to give us weekly statements if we ask for them ten days from the end of the week?

Mr. GRAHAM. We can give you weekly statements of the earnings of the road.

Mr. FOSTER. And of your expenditure?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not sure that my hon. friend is right as to a weekly statement of the expenditure. But we can give the weekly earnings. The routine is this: The pay-rolls are not all returned from the different places to the head office at Moncton until after the 15th of the month. We lay down the rule that we must have the returns of the last month on the 25th of the following month. I can give the hon. gentleman the statement for April, and I can give him the statement for May on the 25th June.

Mr. FOSTER. It takes twenty-five days after the end of the month before you receive the exact statement of the expenditures here at the office?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is the head office in a way, and it is not the head office.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, at the minister's office?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And it is impossible under your regulations to get this statement sooner unless you urge your officials outside to accelerate their operations by a number of days which would bring it so many days sooner to the minister. It seems to me that with your continuous system twenty-five days is a long while to wait to get in your returns of the expenditures.

Mr. GRAHAM. It might possibly be done in a shorter time by hiring a larger staff, but I am told that the Grand Trunk system is the same.

Mr. FOWLER. What is your pay-day?

Mr. GRAHAM. The fifteenth.

Mr. FOSTER. What has the department been doing, within the last two years, in relation to the reorganization of its system of accounting so as to put the Intercolonial Railway on exactly the same basis as the great railways of the United States?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am informed that our system of accounting is now the same as that of the great railways of the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. I took the trouble a few months ago to get all the reports of the commission in the United States, and I read over the interesting bulletins published as to how they have gradually gone about the work of getting a proper system of accounting in order that every species of expense might be definitely set out, each under its own heading, and I may say it was most interesting though it was a laborious process. They have co-operated with the railway companies themselves. They have not gone on the assumption that they had all the wisdom that enabled them to adopt a form of accounting and have it absolute from the first. They blocked out their system, got into communication with the railway association of the United States and between the two of them they have passed this series of suggestions and propositions, both working loyally together, the commission stating that the railways have co-operated with them splendidly and with the utmost loyalty. But, when you come up to the end of it, what they propose to get at is that the wayfaring shareholder may know, from the reports of a railway company, just whether it is acting loyally in the way of allocating its expenses; first, to get what is to be charged to maintenance out of revenue, what, if anything, is to be charged to maintenance out of capital, what new work may properly be charged to revenue and what new work may and must be charged to capital. With reference to the exact percentage of depreciation they have not arrived at the present time, at a scientific method of calculating the amount but that is what they are all working up to, as I understand it. A government railway has this constant temptation; there is a bag always near by into which the minister may dip his hand and consequently there is not the same carefulness in keeping the proper proportion of the charges for the maintenance of the road out of revenue, and there is a constant temptation to make a good showing to parliament by endeavouring to take expenditures of this kind out of one category and put them into another. I am glad to hear the minister say this afternoon that they were trying gradually to get this matter into such a position on the Intercolonial Railway that they may eliminate any doubt as to the plan of accounts, and so that we can all know whether an expenditure for maintenance is charged properly to revenue and that expenditures are only charged to capital when they should be charged to capital. I hope that the minister will persevere in that until we get to the time when the two men on the opposite sides of the House can go to the railway accounts and satisfy themselves that the thing is actually being done on a business basis and that there is no attempt to charge expenditures to capital which should be charged to revenue. Am I right in saying that the great railways of the United States lay down practically this rule? The building of this road is charged to capital, the interest on construction while it is being built, is charged to capital, the equipment is charged to capital; the road is not running, there is nothing coming in and there is nothing else to charge it to but to capital. Now, the road is finished on a certain date. You have paid for the road, your station houses, your terminals, your side-tracking and your rolling stock out of capital. From that time on every breakage in the rolling stock, the wear and tear of the road must be made good out of the revenue of the road. Am I right in that or not? If I am wrong then the fundamental position needs to be revised, but that is what I have got from my reading and I believe it to be at the present time the rule of all the great roads. Will the minister tell me if I am right in that?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have been reading up this subject myself as my hon. friend will understand and I have learned something about it. The companies do not pretend to try to maintain any number of cars, but they are aiming at maintaining the tonnage of their rolling stock.

Mr. FOSTER. In efficiency?

Mr. GRAHAM. In efficiency, practically. My hon. friend was talking about the number of cars, but you cannot discuss it from the point of view of the number of cars, because the cars that may be built are very much larger than the cars they displace. The idea is to keep up the efficiency and tonnage.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, we will consider the matter according to that. Therefore the road has to have a percentage of the different classes of rolling stock put on each year out of revenue sufficient to keep up the efficiency. The minister is right in that. You might have three box cars one year and you might have next year a box car which has double the capacity. You may double the efficiency by increasing the power of your locomotives but all depreciation must be met out of the revenue of the road, so as to keep it up to its standard efficiency. If you require rolling stock for additional mileage of road that goes to capital unless you have abundant revenue and you wish to take it out of revenue. If there is great increase of traffic the extra rolling stock to accommodate it is taken out of capital, but out of revenue must be taken what is necessary to maintain its efficiency after you procure it. That is the proper principle and the minister has failed to show that he conducts his road on that scientific basis. The minister has also failed to show the House that he took sufficient out of the revenues of the road to maintain its efficiency by providing for loss and depreciation. It would be the best thing that could happen the railway if the policy I have set out were rigorously adhered to, and that no matter what the deficit should be that the minister could show what the railroad actually costs us. That has not been done in the past. The minister would have the support of the country if he put his railway on that basis even if he faced a deficit which he would explain to the country so that the country might come to a conclusion as to what was best to do.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the Auditor General's Report page W—37 there is an expenditure of $5,406.90, for Mr. Schreiber and engineers in connection with the National Transcontinental Railway western division, and amongst other items there is $261 for supplies for the private car of Mr. Schreiber. What has the government got to do with paying expenses on the National Transcontinental Railway western division?

Mr. GRAHAM. The government guarantees the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific for the western division and we have an inspecting engineer with his staff to see that the road is constructed up the standard, and on his report the securities are released by the government to the company. This is for the pay of Mr. Schreiber and his staff.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does the Transcontinental Railway reimburse the government for this outlay?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have to undertake this work for our own defense to see that the contract is properly carried out.

Mr. CROCKET. Can the minister now tell me how many locomotives were purchased in the year ending 31st March, 1908?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not remember that any were purchased but I know some were delivered. I will get the information later.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is the minister reducing the grades on the Intercolonial Railway to a modern standard?

Mr. GRAHAM. All we have recently done is where we are double tracking from Moncton to Painsec junction. Of course the question of reducing the grades is a very important one.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is absolutely necessary.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have some large grades but it is a big question and one which concerns the solution of the transportation problem.

Mr. DANIEL. I see by the Auditor General's Report that $3,751,694 were expended in purchasing supplies for the Intercolonial Railway during the year, and in looking over the names of those who supply these goods I can find none who are not politically the friends of the present government. It may be considered fair by the government to buy exclusively from their political friends, but I think it may be looked upon that it is not entirely a just method of conducting business in connection with a railway which belongs to the people of Canada as a whole and not to the people of one political party. Among those expenditures I find quite a large amount for advertising, but the advertisements appear to be published only in papers supporting the present government. Even if it was considered that the Intercolonial Railway was a fair pasture for the supporters of the government to feed in, what sort of business sense is there in confining the advertising of excursions and the time tables of the Intercolonial Railway, which are for the purpose of inducing as many people as possible to travel by that road, in papers going to only one-half of the people? If these excursions, for instance, have not been as largely patronized as might be desired, I think it is partly the fault of those in charge of the railway owing to this method of advertising. If there is any reason for this I would like the minister to explain it, but if not, I would be glad to see him make a change from a system which I think is inexcusable from every point of view.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would be glad to have this item passed before six o'clock, but I might say I have been for some time thinking over the question of advertising which is larger than it looks. In connection with the Intercolonial Railway it is more important to my mind than some other things, although I may be partial in that respect. I intend before very long to look into the question of advertising; I have not had time to do it yet.

Mr. FOWLER. Who is the purchasing agent of the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Taylor.

Mr. FOWLER. What is his salary?

Mr. GRAHAM. $135 per month.

Mr. FOWLER. I would suppose that it would be his duty to purchase direct from the factories or the wholesalers and not the middlemen, but I find quite the contrary to be the case.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. DANIEL. Before six o'clock the minister commenced to give some explanation of his policy with regard to expenditure on the Intercolonial, especially in connection with the advertising. I took the opportunity to bring to his notice that even in the matter of time tables, excursions and things of that kind, the public were not properly notified, and consequently the Intercolonial lost a good deal of patronage. I was in hopes that when a man from Ontario was made a minister, the Intercolonial would be carried on more as a business proposition and not be so entirely a part of the political machine as it had been. I looked for a considerable change in many respects, more especially in the manner of giving contracts and making expenditures. Take this small matter of advertising, there is absolutely no excuse why these advertisements should not be made general. Surely the minister does not want us to think that the Intercolonial management does not really want the money of Conservatives to help to cut down the deficit. The mode in which these things are carried on—advertising in such a way as to only reach one half of the people—would lead one to conclude that the management do not want the other half to travel on the railway or have any connection with it. The minister ought to let us know whether we can really hope that there will be a change in the future and that the Intercolonial will be run more on a business basis. I am not saying that this government is alone to blame in this connection, but there must be a change somewhere sometime if that railway is to be managed as it ought to be. I shall be glad to have a statement from the minister of the policy he intends following.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did not have the floor when the House rose, but as regards supplies, they are purchased by tenders at present. The policy is to accept the lowest tender, but there is a great deal of myth about this newspaper advertising for tenders and giving the contract to the lowest. If I were a business man, running the Intercolonial or the Canadian Pacific Railway or Grand Trunk, I would not feel myself bound to accept the lowest tender in every case, but in many cases I would go out in the open market, and in nine times out of ten make a better bargain. If I had a building to put up I would do, as other railway managers do, get it put up by a contractor, who had given me proof of his competence and thoroughness, and not necessarily advertise for the lowest tender. It is necessary however for the government to advertise in the case of these large works. That is the system we have adopted and to which we adhere, but a great deal can be said against the acceptance of the lowest tender being an absolute safeguard.

Mr. SPROULE. It is an easy matter in this day for any man to know, when tenders are submitted, whether they are reasonably low or not. It must be apparent to any one, who has to do with public works, that those who tender frequently act in collusion and put up the prices very high. Just look at our contracts for dredging. It must be apparent to any one who knows anything of the cost of dredging, that many of the contracts are entirely too high. Any intelligent engineer knows whether these tenders are too high or not, and the government is not bound to accept any, even the lowest tender, if it is not a reasonable one. Provided however the government exercise proper diligence, the acceptance of the lower tender is the best policy. Accepting the lowest tender is not always a guarantee that good value is had. The tenderers may be in collusion to raise prices, or, for that matter, there may be only one tender. You avoid the difficulty by employing an agent, but, if you pay a commission, as you have done in the case of some land purchases of from forty to sixty per cent, or if you purchase through such an agent as Merwin, who bought goods at a profit to himself of fifty to seventy-five per cent, of course, you are not getting good value for the money. The minister would be much safer if he sent out an intelligent man to buy in the open market at the best value he could get—he could buy better and cheaper than the government can. But, unfortunately, the government relies upon the plea of having accepted the lowest tender, which, often, is only an excuse for great extravagance. Whether the government can or cannot lay down a hard and fast rule that they will buy by tender only, at least they can give a better example of the way business should be done than many of the instances we have had in the last few years in the purchase of supplies for the Intercolonial.

Mr. GANONG. Are the accounts kept in such a way that the minister can tell us the expenditure on coal month by month? For instance, what value of coal has been used for the months of January, February, March, April and May of this year?

Mr. GRAHAM. You might as well put in June.

Mr. GANONG. I am not asking as to the particular date, but whether the books are so kept that the expenditure month by month can be shown?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. Take, for instance, the month of March, say——

Mr. GANONG. February and March say.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have the figures for March only. The amount spent for coal for passenger engines was $32,068.87 and for coal for freight engines $114,332.92.

Mr. GANONG. Can the minister tell me what was the expenditure for March of last year?

Mr. GRAHAM. It was : Coal for freight engines, $81,654.18, and coal for passenger engines, $29,418.15.

Mr. GANONG. There seems to be an increase of about $36,000 or $37,000 for this year. But I understood there was less traffic this year than last.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman is mistaken; we had a slight increase in March —an oasis in the desert.

Mr. GANONG. I think it would be interesting if the minister would bring down a statement showing the amount of coal used each month from January last up to the end of May, giving comparisons with the same months last year and with figures also showing the comparison of the tonnage of freight hauled. I am advised that the coal bill of this year has been very much in excess of that of last year and that this is largely accounted for—of course, I cannot say that I know this, for I am not a railroad man—by the fact that the road bed is not kept in first-class condition and that the engines have not been in shape to steam. That is, I am told the money of the country is wasted because the railway has not been kept in shape.

Mr. DANIEL. On pages W—143 and 144 of the Auditor General's Report, I find charges for legal services by several gentlemen amounting in the aggregate to quite a large sum, having reference to the arbitration with the Grand Trunk Railway with regard to the amounts which may be due to the Intercolonial from the Grand Trunk. So far as my memory goes, we have never had a statement of the results of that arbitration. If so, I think it is only right that the minister should give us the facts and state what amount has been received.

Mr. GRAHAM. This matter is still before the arbitrators, of course. It involves the question of the adjustment of freight, maintenance, &c. There were several cases before the board of arbitration when Judge Killam died. We had expected that the two arbitrators would select a third arbitrator in place of Judge Killam, but they have not done so yet. Speaking roughly, and on information, I may say that the board of arbitrators has laid down certain principles on which further readjustments have been made. Several decisions have been given, and I think on the whole the government has benefited by the awards in its favour to the extent of a balance of between $30,000 and $40,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Have the Grand Trunk Railway paid anything over?

Mr. GRAHAM. They have paid some of these items. There are other items before the board for adjustment, but they cannot be adjusted until another arbitrator is selected in the place of the late Judge Killam.

Mr. DANIEL. On page 142 there seems to have been a large amount of money paid to the Grand Trunk Railway by the Intercolonial, especially at Montreal. Has the Intercolonial no employees in Montreal? Do the Grand Trunk employees do all the cleaning of the cars and things of that kind? It would appear so, from the charges that are placed here: Cleaning trucks, cleaning sleepers, parlour cars and ordinary cars, and things of that kind. I also see quite a large amount paid to the Grand Trunk Railway for Grand Trunk cars, I suppose, that have been smashed or damaged on the Intercolonial; but I do not see any contra account of a payment made by the Grand Trunk and other railways for cars belonging to the Intercolonial that have been similarly damaged. Take into consideration the large number of Intercolonial cars that are scattered all over the country on other railways, I should think there ought to be some revenue from that source, as well as an expenditure by the Intercolonial for that purpose.

Mr. GRAHAM. We pay $140,000 a year to the Grand Trunk for running rights over their line from Ste Rosalie to Montreal, paying in proportion to the expense for maintenance. They supply the men. If any of our cars are broken by other lines, we collect from them, as they collect from us.

Mr. CROCKET. Is the Railway Department buying any coal from the New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company this year?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think some coal is being taken from that company.

Mr. CROCKET. I see last year you bought 356 tons from that company. Where is the bulk of the coal bought for the operation of the railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. We buy from several coal companies, from the Cumberland, Springhill, Maritime, Inverness, Dominion, Nova Scotia, and several companies in New Brunswick. The price is a little higher than it was last year.

Mr. BLAIN. I see an item of $16,000 for advertising. I understand that it came out in an investigation before the committee that the papers in which the government advertised are all of one shade of politics. May I ask the minister if he proposes to continue that policy, or does he propose to broaden it a little?

Mr. GRAHAM. We discussed the question of advertising before six o'clock. The whole question is one which I intend to take up, but I am not prepared to say what I shall do until I see what the conditions are.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the minister still pursue the same line of advertising the railroad by means of pictures and displays at different exhibitions throughout the country, showing the beautiful scenery along the route of the Intercolonial; and is there an officer employed for that purpose by the railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have done something of that kind. We had a very good display at the automobile show, both in Toronto and in Montreal. I think the Creighton Advertising Department is in charge of that.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you an advertising department?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have a traffic manager, under whom Mr. Creighton attends largely to the advertising.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister says he proposes to take this matter up for consideration, and if he is going to leave the impression upon the public that there is no politics in the management of the Intercolonial we shall expect that some of these advertisements will appear in Conservative newspapers. I have before me a long list of newspapers with a very small circulation, but containing advertisements of the government, while papers with three times the circulation in the same city and town, are omitted. I would like to remind the minister that it would be rather difficult for him to make the Canadian people believe that there are no politics in the management of the Intercolonial Railway, when, in putting an advertisement into a newspaper, he selects the one having a small circulation and allows the one having a large circulation to go without any advertisement whatever. I hope the minister will investigate this matter, keeping this point before him and that next year, when we see this large list of newspapers receiving pretty large amounts of money, we will find that advertisements have been published in the newspapers having a large circulation. Perhaps the minister might indicate what he proposes to do on that point. I do not think that it requires very much investigation.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have made a statement, three times, twice in reply to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and once in reply to the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel) concerning that.

Mr. BLAIN. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say that he proposes to look into this matter in the days to come. Surely the hon. gentleman would not require very much time to indicate to the House what he proposes to do on a question of this kind. The minister has not much faith in his own policy with respect to asking for public tenders. He suggests that if he would apply his own mind to the subject he would not ask for tenders in many cases at all. Yet, my hon. friend knows that the people believe that tenders should be asked for. The policy that my hon. friend adopts in putting a number of reformers on the list and handing them a slip asking for tenders is a policy that does not involve the principle of inviting public tenders at all. It is a political policy adopted by the minister for the purpose of distributing public patronage among his political friends. My hon. friend understands that. He has had a wide experience in Ontario and, having brought that experience with him and, I suppose, having profited by the result, I was very much surprised that he should adopt the same policy in the new office he has been selected to occupy. I do not think it will appeal to the minister's good judgment to say that after being several months in the department he would come forward and, on these two points, put himself in opposition to the Canadian people, by saying, with respect to the question of public advertisement, that, if his own opinion were to prevail he would not ask for tenders at all simply going to his own friends and allowing them to put up a building costing $25,000 or $30,000 because they happened to be in the business. He would not give a Conservative in any part of Canada any opportunity whatever to tender for the construction of any public work. These are matters that it would not take my hon. friend a very long time to decide. The only answer is that he must be careful of the interests of his party before he comes to a decision. My hon. friend, who wants to lead in the expenditure of money is not willing to adopt the policies which are adopted by smaller institutions and organizations throughout the country because he says he would not, if he had his own way, ask for tenders at all.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. May I ask the minister whether he accepts the lowest tender in purchasing concrete pipes ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The department accepts the lowest tender in every case unless some reason can be shown why it should not do so.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister be good enough to give us some reason why he did not accept the lowest tender in connection with concrete piping. I asked a question on the 13th April and I had the answer of the minister forwarded to parties who tendered. I will just quote a few words from a letter I received in reply :

> If you compare the prices our is much more favourable, without any discount, but when you deduct 15 per cent I certainly should have had the contract.

This is a most reliable firm. They sent in their tender and their tender was not only lower than the figures which the contract was let for but in addition to that they were willing to take off 15 per cent and they did not receive the contract.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will remember that he is warned every day, with respect to the sale of patent medicines, not to take anything that he is told is just as good. The pipe tendered for in this instance was not the kind that the specification called for. Our engineer of maintenance of ways reported that the other pipe was the pipe we wanted. That is why we did not take it.

Mr. GANONG. Was it because you wanted Wallberg to supply it ?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend, with his usual wisdom, does not know that it was not Mr. Wallberg at all who is interested in this contract.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not think that is a satisfactory answer. I am well aware that these people put in a tender in the same way as the others were put in and that they were ready and willing to manufacture these goods under any specification that was proposed to them. There is no occasion for the minister to make the statement he has made in that regard.

Mr. GRAHAM. I assure my hon. friend that the goods are purchased always from the lowest tenderers unless there is some good reason given to the contrary. I am not so wedded to the tender system, as my hon. friend seems to be, and which he regards as a panacea for everything, as to say that I will take something that I do not want, but I will get the full particulars for my hon. friend and I think he will find that there is no reason for complaint on behalf of his friends.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How can the minister state that the lowest tenders are always accepted when here we have a most reliable company which is not only the lowest tenderer, but which offered 15 per cent off the tender price in addition, and yet it did not get the contract ? I notice from the reply given by the minister in 'Hansard' that this Kemptville Company has been supplying a large quantity of concrete piping for two years. How can he condemn the concrete piping of the other companies when he has made no endeavour to compare one with the other.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not condemning the quality of the piping of any other firm. We wanted a flat bottom piping and they offered us round piping.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not believe that is a sufficient excuse for the minister to throw away the people's money as he has done. This firm if it were given a chance could have supplied the department with flat bottom piping at a great deal less cost than he paid to the other firm.

Mr. GRAHAM. As to the tiling, the hon. gentleman is no doubt speaking from a letter he has in his possession. He evidently knows something of the tile business but not enough to form a correct judgment in reference to it. We wanted flat bottomed piping which is the more expensive of the two and this firm offered us round piping.

Mr. TAYLOR. Were tenders called for flat bottom piping?

Mr. GRAHAM. I imagine they were. The engineer recommended flat bottom tiling and we took it from the Kemptville people on tender and there is nothing extraordinary about it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am informed that this company to which I refer sent in their application in accordance with the tender.

Mr. SCHELL. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) know whether this company tendered for round or for flat bottomed pipe ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. As I understand it they tendered for the pipe called for by the department.

Mr. SCHELL. I put in several thousand tons of this piping last year and I am very familiar with the business. I know that flat bottom concrete pipe for railway culverts will cost from 10 to 20 per cent more according to the size than the round pipe costs. All the railway engineers and the municipal engineers for sewage pipe insist on flat bottom pipe for sizes between 24 and 30 inches in diameter because it will stand a greater strain than the round pipe. It is absurd to say one kind of pipe is the same as the other. The Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Northern all use flat bottom pipe. If the hon. gentleman can tell me the size and what they were bidding on I can show the absurdity of his position if he claims that round pipe is the same as flat bottomed pipe.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. This firm has several branches in Canada and in the United States and they are a responsible firm and are in the habit of furnishing the material for railway and municipal work. I know these men and I am satisfied they would not tender for round pipe if the tender called for flat bottomed pipe and they say they complied with the tender.

Mr. CROCKET. According to the Auditor General's Report, T. McAvity & Sons, of St. John, N.B., were paid $27,896.40 last year for supplies for the Intercolonial Railway. Were tenders asked for the supply of this hardware?

Mr. GRAHAM. Oh, yes, in every case.

Mr. CROCKET. By public advertisement or by circulars to those on the patronage list ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am informed by circular to a very large number of people.

Mr. CROCKET. What other firms were invited to tender for this hardware ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am told there are somewhere in the vicinity of 75 names on the list altogether.

Mr. CROCKET. Were 75 other firms invited to tender for that hardware ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I imagine they would be, all the hardware firms we had the names of.

Mr. CROCKET. Was any other firm at St. John invited to tender ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I could not say.

Mr. CROCKET. Would the McAvity firm be the only one in New Brunswick that would be invited to tender ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think not, but I cannot say as I am not conversant with the location of the different firms.

Mr. BLAIN. What is it necessary for a man to do in order to get on the patronage list ? My hon. friend from Toronto says a good subscription to the election fund.

Mr. GRAHAM. He knows.

Mr. FIELDING. He is thinking of the old days.

Mr. BLAIN. He will not be better informed than the minister himself because he has had experience in these matters. The minister says there is public advertisement, but when we come to the point we find there is a list of friends and when goods are required those on that list are notified and they are asked to give prices to the department.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend has said that I said there was public advertisement. I was perfectly frank with my friend from Fredericton, and said they were asked by circular.

Mr. BLAIN. I said that my hon. friend was trying to leave the impression that these goods were purchased after public advertisement, and then he tried to qualify it.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did not try to qualify it, I made no qualification. My hon. friend should not repeat that when he knows I did not say it.

Mr. BLAIN. It is no use trying to suggest to the House that my hon. friend is purchasing goods after public advertisement by tender. What qualification must a man have to get on the list ?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is not nearly so childlike and bland as he pretends. He is one of the strongest partisans in the Dominion of Canada ; he bends every energy to that point and I do not blame him, and yet he wants the House to believe he is so innocent that he does not know anything about government patronage and never heard of such a thing in his life. He knows that so long as governments are in power in this or any other country and are run on the party system, so long will there be a slight tendency for the government in power, whether Liberal, Conservative or Independent, to have, to use an old phrase, a slight cant so far as their friends are concerned. That is the case with all the provincial governments and every government where the party system is in force. What the country first demands and is interested in is that we get value for our money, not that goods be bought from my hon. friend's friends. When we ask a dozen or more good firms to compete and they do compete and we buy at the lowest price, I think it can be taken that we have received good value.

Mr. FOWLER. In this case I question whether more than one firm were asked to tender, for if more firms in New Brunswick were asked to tender. I do not believe that McAvity & Sons would succeed in every case in getting the order. What other firms in New Brunswick were invited ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I can bring the list tomorrow, but I am sorry to say I cannot give the names as I am not familiar with the locations.

Mr. FOWLER. I am speaking of the firms in New Brunswick. T. McAvity & Sons and McLean, Holt & Company are practically the same firm.

Mr. CROCKET. I see that L. S. Macoun, of Ottawa, who last year sold $74,000 worth of goods to the Militia Department, is now working into the Railway Department. He has been selling wooden water buckets, varnish brushes, fire-clay and lead pipe and managed to get from the Railway Department on stores account last year, $182.31. He, I understand, is very closely connected with a member of the government, and I had his own statement the other day that he did not keep a shop or factory and had no supplies of his own to sell. I take it therefore that this is another case of the Intercolonial Railway buying from a middleman. It occurred to me that Wallberg had better be looking after himself when I found Macoun figuring in the Railway Department on stores account as well as in the Militia Department. I would like to ask the minister if tenders were asked for these goods supplied by Mr. Macoun.

Mr. GRAHAM. Tenders no doubt were asked for and the lowest accepted.

Mr. FOWLER. Is Mr. Macoun on the list?

Mr. GRAHAM. He seems to be on that list. This confirms what nine out of ten business men will agree to, and that is that calling for tenders is not a panacea for everything. It is the only thing parliament will allow a minister to do, but it is not always the best way. Speaking of middlemen, ask for tenders for some item, and you will find the manufacturer giving you a tender higher than that made by a middleman, who is his agent, tendering for the same goods. You ask how that is. They give the agent a commission and he divides his commission. It is cheaper for the government, by the tender system, to buy from the agent often than from the manufacturer himself.

Mr. FOWLER. That has not been shown in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. GRAHAM. I can show cases time and again in my department in which the original manufacturer has tendered at a higher price than his agent for the same goods.

Mr. FOWLER. You forget about Merwin.

Mr. GRAHAM. I was speaking generally. It may seem heresy to say that the tender system is not always the best, but that is the experience of business men on many occasions.

Mr. FOWLER. Did the company advance Mr. Macoun the money before the goods were delivered as was done in the case of the copper purchase?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know to what my hon. friend refers when he speaks of the copper purchase. No money is advanced by this department.

Mr. FOWLER. It is singular that the minister does not know about the copper purchase, but he has been so taken up with the little matter in Brockville that he has not had time to keep himself posted on what is going on in the committees. This copper transaction——

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Order.

Mr. FOWLER. I forgot—there is our censor again. But surely, Mr. Chairman, you will not refuse me the opportunity of giving the Minister of Railways much needed information. I would be most happy to inform him what I meant by the transaction in copper, but I must bow to the decision of my hon. friend from Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Ross) as expressed through you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. That is the first sensible thing you have done to-day.

Mr. DANIEL. I see another firm here which has been supplying blankets and towels and things of that kind called the Peter McSweeney Company of Moncton. Is that the senator of that name?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know whether it is or not.

Mr. DANIEL. It is a good deal like his name anyway.

Mr. STAPLES. I also notice an account of Macfarlane & Thompson. The Minister of Railways seems to be buying from that firm. That is the firm of which Senator Thompson is a member.

Mr. FOWLER. This is dangerously close to a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act. I think the party has done well enough by these senators by giving them a seat for life with a salary of $2,500 a year. Still you continue to load them with benefits by putting them on the patronage list. That is rather unfair to the rest of your supporters. There are other firms which have Liberal leanings as well as the firms of Peter McSweeney and Macfarlane & Thompson. I think that for the services rendered his country Mr. McSweeney was too well paid by putting him in the Senate and I can say the same of Senator Thompson. You put these gentlemen in the Senate, a position to which one would rather be surprised that they would even aspire to, and yet you are not satisfied with that but you put them on the patronage list and give them a large amount of patronage, thus enabling them to make, in addition to their large salaries which they draw as senators, large profits on the merchandise they sell the various departments of the government. On behalf of the other firms which do give you loyal and honest support, I protest against the minister doing this. He should strike these men off the patronage list. I have no personal concern in the matter, but am actuated merely by a love of fair play and a square deal.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Was the iron purchased by public tender or private sale?

Mr. GRAHAM. All the stores are purchased in the same way.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Am I to understand that the large amount of iron purchased, $76,000, page 126—W, and $34,000, page 127—W——

Mr. GRAHAM. From whom ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. From the Nova Scotia Coal and Steel Company and the Portland Rolling Mills.

Mr. GRAHAM. We buy these supplies from the lowest tenderer, and I am very glad to purchase goods from the Nova Scotia Steel Company or any other Canadian company which is developing our resources. We give them no advantage.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If others are not on the list, as I understand it, then they cannot possibly tender. Is it possible that contracts for these large amounts are simply given to those who are on the patronage list? That is a most outrageous piece of business management.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Carried.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. My hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) would say 'carried' to anything this government could propose. Just as long as you can get your hand into the public chest and pull out money, it is all right.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Hand it out to party friends and everything is lovely. Here is a contract of about $125,000 handed over to party friends. Does the minister think that is fair and reasonable? Does he say that these large contracts should be open to tender only by parties who are on the patronage list?

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman will not speak of the capital invested in the Nova Scotia Steel Company as Liberal capital?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am not referring to it as being Liberal capital. But what excuse has the minister for not advertising such contracts as this? Surely, they should be advertised very widely, instead of being open only to a few party friends of the minister.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) allows himself to be led away. He should not feel any sorer than I do. I have been told that I am sore over the result in Brockville, but he should not allow himself to be bad-natured over the result in East Lambton. These things happen to the best of men.

Mr. BLAIN. Not many happened like East Lambton.

Mr. GRAHAM. But it did happen in East Lambton. We cannot help these calamities. As to this contract being given to a friend of this government, I think the hon. gentleman would hardly venture to call the president of the Nova Scotia Steel Company a friend of this government. If he were to do so, he would get into trouble. It is a good substantial firm, with a good substantial Conservative as its president. But, it being the lowest tenderer, we bought the goods from this company.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. But the point is that only those on the list are given the privilege of tendering. As to East Lambton, the hon. gentleman knows that that is one of the ridings in which there is a very considerable overlapping, and the town and township in which I live happened to send something over 400 to add to the majority.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Hon. gentlemen opposite are very much afraid that we may begin to talk about what happened yesterday. Certainly. they can take very little satisfaction out of it. But does not the minister think it unreasonable and unbusinesslike for him, in making an expenditure of over $100,000 for such commodities as iron and steel, that he should not invite tenders widely? Or does he expect to continue to ask tenders from a few political friends?

Mr. JOHNSTON. On this question of——

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Chairman I was asking a question of the minister and I think——

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am not going to obstruct; I will give you lots of opportunity to do that. I was about to say: On this question of purchasing supplies, I would like to say a word or two to the minister. But, before doing that, let me address an observation to my hon. friend from East Lambton. He need not get fussy about the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company or any of the large companies doing business in the eastern part of this country ; he will find that they are doing business in a legitimate way and are neither receiving nor asking favours from this government. When the hon. gentleman says that I am content to have this money go into the pockets of party friends, I want to say that the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company is not a party friend of mine. Its warmest friends have never charged it with being a friend of the Liberal government. Its history for twenty years in Nova Scotia has been exactly the reverse. The president of the company is the bell-wether of the Conservative party in Nova Scotia. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) knows that very well. It ill-becomes any member on that side to charge the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company with receiving undue advantage from any government. There are some of us who might have reasons to complain, but certainly not hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. But, though they are no party friends of mine, or of the government I support, they should receive their legitimate share of the business of the government. I would go so far as to say to the minister that, in a matter of this kind the purchase of bar iron, &c., if there are any preferences to be given, they should go to the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company; and I will tell you why: If my hon. friend (Mr. Armstrong) will take the trouble to inquire, he will find that this company is one of the best customers the Intercolonial has. I am not aware that they have ever asked for any preference, but I say that if the time ever comes when they do, then, in the interests of the road and of the country as well as of the company, he would be very well justified in giving them the preference.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not wish to have words put in my mouth that I did not use. I did not object to the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, as such, receiving this contract. But, as I understand it, when these supplies are needed, tenders are asked for only from a certain number of firms. There is no reason why the minister should not be able to estimate in advance, more or less accurately, how much of these supplies he is going to need in the course of a year. It seems to me that it is not reasonable that so large a contract for such supplies as these should merely be peddled round, as it were, amongst the minister's party friends.

Mr. HAGGART. Was there any competition with the Nova Scotia Steel Company with this order? I understood from the minister that there were seventy-five persons on the patronage list who furnish supplies to the Intercolonial. I suppose that out of that seventy-five there was only the Nova Scotia Steel Company who were able to supply the coal. Is the minister certain that there was competition with the Nova Scotia Company for that coal ?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no doubt of the competition. As a matter of fact, we have all the leading firms on the list.

Mr. HAGGART. Who awards the contracts?

Mr. GRAHAM. The contracts are awarded by the minister and his deputy.

Mr. HAGGART. There has been a change since I was minister. At that time, unless there was some objection to the material the contracts were awarded by the manager of the Intercolonial, Mr. Pottinger. In case there was a tie, or the material was not up to the standard, the decision was left to the scientific branch of McGill University. In the case of oil, for instance, as to which was the best lubricant, the question was left to the scientists of McGill, who always made a report to the department, and on their report the contract was made. But it never came before the minister unless there was a tie, or some question which the head of the department could alone decide.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have followed the system adopted by my predecessors, which I think is a right one. It is better to have the tenders sent to the head office for decision. Being myself responsible to the House and to the country, I feel like seeing how the awards are given every time. I can assure my hon. friend that unless there is some good reason for it the contract is always given to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. FOWLER. I see you bought a quantity of blankets. What need have you for blankets?

Mr. GRAHAM. For the sleeping cars.

Mr. FOWLER. I see an item here for the Peter McSweeney Company, of which the chief is Senator McSweeney. He is in fact the whole company, and he has profited to a large extent in the way of supplying blankets, towelling, cotton and flannelettes. What do you do with flannelettes? Do you make night gowns for the porters, or was it just because there was a desire on the part of the department to give a little patronage to the senator, who is not receiving quite enough in his sessional indemnity? There was a considerable amount of this flannelette, 576½ yards. I think the senator might have thrown in that half yard. It does seem to me that a man occupying so distinguished a position as senator of Canada, should not have charged this government for that half yard. Perhaps the minister will explain what that flannelette was used for.

Mr. GRAHAM. I imagine it was used in the sleeping cars. It also might possibly be used as cushions for the dining tables.

Mr. FOWLER. How about the oil you are buying from the New Brunswick Petroleum Company? Did you buy that oil from the wells, or did you buy it through middlemen?

Mr. GRAHAM. My information is that it was bought from the producers.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you buy your oil in the same way that you buy the flannelette?

Mr. GRAHAM. Not by the yard, no.

Mr. FOWLER. I mean, do you ask for tenders from certain persons who are upon the list or do you buy in the open market? On page W—147 I see you pay a large sum of money for oil to the Galena Signal Oil Company. Then there is the Imperial Oil Company of St. John, I think that is managed by a good Liberal, the present mayor of the city, Mr. Bullock, who figures largely on this list, some $25,000. Then there is the Keenleyside Oil Company. I presume some of this must be lubricating oil, and some of it crude oil. What do you use the crude oil for?

Mr. GRAHAM. For forging work, heating rivets. Our lubricating oil is purchased by tender on a guarantee that a certain quantity will serve for a thousand engine miles. The Galena Signal Oil Company has the contract at the present time. I think we got one or two other tenders. One of the things that we are trying to get down to a practical basis is the cost of lubrication per mile. We buy oil on the guarantee of a certain cost, reckoned on the mileage of the locomotive.

Mr. FOWLER. Did you buy this lubricating oil on tender open to all the world?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think that at one time we had tenders from all the oil companies practically.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you ask for tenders every year?

Mr. GRAHAM. There are not a great many oil companies. The Imperial Oil Company of Canada is really a branch of the Standard Oil Company. We made a contract with it for a term of years.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is the Galena Oil Company operating?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is an American company. I am told that it is practically an offshoot of the Standard Oil Company. It has a branch, I understand, in Toronto.

Mr. FOWLER. There are Canadian oil companies. There is the Canadian Oil Company and the Queen City Oil Company. Why have these not had an opportunity of tendering?

Mr. GRAHAM. They did have an opportunity. This is the only company that gives the required guarantee. We are reducing the cost of lubrication and we are carrying on a test. These people make a specialty of it and I imagine they are supplying the lubrication for 75 or 90 per cent. of the railways of the continent.

Mr. FOWLER. The government should give the preference to the home companies. We have the Queen City, the Canadian Company, and I am told there are other Canadian companies. I do not think you should make a contract for three or four years. Suppose these people were not able, in this particular year, to compete with the American company, perhaps next year they would be able to compete and I think a contract should be made from year to year so as to give our home companies an opportunity.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is a peculiar situation. We have to give the contract for a term of years to get a proper price. My hon. friend will see the importance of it both with respect to the rolling stock and the cost of the lubrication itself. This company make a specialty of it and they send a man around on the locomotives and cars to see that the consumption is kept within proper bounds because they have to guarantee the amount of oil we use per mile at a certain price. Canadian companies should have an opportunity to compete and when our contract runs out I would be very glad to give them that opportunity. Everything being equal, I would prefer the Canadian companies under all circumstances.

Mr. FOWLER. This is a three or five years contract and unfortunately the minister will not have an opportunity of giving the contract to a Canadian company. It will be in other hands.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend may.

Mr. FOWLER. But I do not see how any company could possibly send a man on every engine to see that you did not use too much oil.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not on every engine. They keep a man there a great deal of the time. He is not on every engine but he practically instructs them in the use of oil and keeps his eye on the consumption.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a large purchase of iron in the city of St. John from McAvity and the McLean Holt Company amounting to $51,213. Do I understand the minister that in buying that iron and ironwork from these two firms, which are practically as I understand it, one firm, every one of the other 74 had an opportunity to put in their price for these goods ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think my hon. friend will find, as a matter of fact, that there were quite a number of tenders. My hon. friend speaks of the other 74 ; I did not mean to say that there were 74 iron or hardware men, but of the large number that are on the list all that are engaged in that business were, I have no doubt, given an opportunity to tender. We never invite tenders but the Montreal and Toronto men are keen competitors in iron and steel goods. It is not at all likely that these goods were all bought in one purchase. It would be throughout the year and the total would be made up by portions of the different stores purchased.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it confined to two firms in St. John ?

Mr. GRAHAM. All these purchases which are spread over the year are the subject of competition. They would form part of a large amount of stores that were purchased during the year.

Mr. FOSTER. These were all the purchases that were made from McAvity ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think they would not be bought at one time but on several different occasions.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand it they would be bought in small quantities as they were needed ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think so.

Mr. FOSTER. What I was trying to make sure of was whether there was any competition or not.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. For these parcels of goods bought throughout the year Montreal and Toronto iron firms had a chance to compete ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think my hon. friend will find that is absolutely true.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, I understand this is confined to persons who are on the patronage list.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. I notice you have been buying some railway ties from Pearson, B. F., of Halifax. That, I take it, is Mr. B. F. Pearson, sometimes known as the Eastern Supply Company, sometimes as B. F. Pearson, sometimes as Matthew Lodge, sometimes as Henderson, sometimes as the St. John Sun Publishing Company, Limited, sometimes as the Morning 'Chronicle,' Halifax, sometimes as the Glace Bay 'Times,' and sometimes as the Halifax 'Echo.' He has a variety of names ; he appears in a variety of characters. He is in point of fact a lawyer of the city of Halifax and he sells ties—railway ties—not neck ties—but railway ties to the government. I could understand that it might be reasonable for a Senator to sell flannelette if he happened to be in the dry goods business, but why a gentleman of the legal profession would be around peddling hemlock ties to the government is something I cannot understand. This man does not get out these ties, he is not a lumberman, he has no mills, but he is simply in the same position as regards the Intercolonial Railway as Mr. Macoun is in as regards the Department of Militia and Defence and the Intercolonial Railway. Neither of these gentlemen is a producer of anything, neither of them keeps a shop. In fact, as I understand it, one of them was very indignant when he was asked if he kept a shop. He was horror stricken that it would be put up to him for a moment that he would be engaged in such a business as shop-keeper and I suppose that Mr. Pearson would be quite indignant if it were intimated to him he was a shop-keeper or that he kept a retail lumber yard. For the year ending 31st March, 1906, Mr. Pearson sold over $100,000 ties to the government. Under what circumstances were these ties bought from Mr. Pearson of Halifax, lawyer, proprietor of the St. John 'Sun,' Morning 'Chronicle,' the Glace Bay 'Times,' the Halifax 'Echo,' chief push of the Eastern Supply Company, member of the Nova Scotia legislature, and local government; a man of a variety of titles and a variety of occupations and a many sided man, taking him altogether ?

Mr. GRAHAM. We use nearly 1,000,000 ties a year, and I do not know under what circumstances these particular ties were got. The price has increased materially during the past few years, and one of the greatest difficulties of all railways is to get ties at all. Even if my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) were to offer ties to us I would be prepared to accept them so long as we had not to pay more than the fair market price. We fix the price we will pay for ties and make all the contracts we can. We care not whether we buy from a professional man or any one else so long as we get them at a fair price. We have refused to purchase ties because too high a price was asked for them. The fact that Mr. Pearson may be called a middleman by my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) would not make any difference to me in the purchase of ties if I got them at a proper value.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the minister think one would be straining his imagination if he were to suggest that the person who owned these ties thought it necessary in order to sell them to the department to interest Mr. Pearson who seems to have the ear of the government? I fancy that the man who produced these ties has found it necessary to interest Mr. Pearson by the promise of a commission before he was able to make a sale to the government, and I know that the gentleman who did produce them has political views which are not in accord with the administration. I believe that is actually what occurred. The minister has told us that the patronage of the government naturally goes to its political friends. Mr. Pearson is a political friend of the government, but I believe the government has been more of a friend to Mr. Pearson than Mr. Pearson has been to the government, for I do not believe he has returned dollar for dollar that they have him. He certainly did not in the Halifax land case where he made a profit of $28,000 which he divided with his friends, Mr. Pearson's share alone being $14,000. I have no doubt he got a very handsome commission in connection with the sale of these ties, because I know as a matter of fact that the ties were produced by a man who was not in political accord with the government, and he was only able to sell the ties to the government by reason of the fact that he employed Mr. Pearson as a middle man. That is one of the evils of the system which the Minister of Railways defends. No man along the line of the Intercolonial Railway who is not a political supporter of the government can sell any material to the railway in any large quantities.

Mr. GRAHAM. What about the Nova Scotia Steel Company?

Mr. FOWLER. The Nova Scotia Steel Company stands in a peculiar position because they are the largest patrons of the Intercolonial Railway in the matter of freight and the department would make an exception in their favour, but outside of that and some small things the officers of the department are not allowed to buy from others than political supporters. Here is Mr. S. S. Ryan, who runs a small farm across from Moncton in the county of Albert, who was formerly local member for the county, but he was defeated last election; he sells thousands and thousands of dollars worth of lumber to the Intercolonial which the Intercolonial could buy cheaper from the various mills, but these mill owners being enterprising men they are Conservatives, and therefore they have to sell to the Intercolonial Railway through Mr. Ryan or some other friend of the government. In that way, through political exigencies, the Department of Railways, pays a great more money for all its supplies than it is necessary to pay. That is one reason why the road has to be run at a loss. This new minister coming from the province of Ontario he was not governed by local considerations as a minister from New Brunswick would be, and we did hope on the principle that a new broom sweeps clean, that the political management of the road would end and that it would be run as a business proposition, but our hopes have been disappointed. There is no reason in the world why the Intercolonial Railway should not pay as well as any other trunk line in Canada. Along its route are thriving and prosperous towns and productive farms. There is no better country under the sun than that through which the greater portion of the Intercolonial Railway runs. The minister knows that it runs through a splendid country and that throughout the length of the line there is local traffic. The Canadian Pacific Railway, that great trunk road, for 700 or 800 miles has no possibility of any local traffic of any amount being created, and yet the Canadian Pacific Railway is able to make in some years as high as 15 per cent on its capital stock, which was originally, to some extent, watered. The Intercolonial Railway, on the other hand, running through a better average country than the Canadian Pacific Railway, has a deficit as I proved this afternoon, logically, if not to the satisfaction of the minister, of about $800,000 on the year's working of the road for 1906-7. The minister must see that in order to bring about a change in the results he must effect a change in the manner of conducting the road. I advise the minister if he wants to go down in history as one of the best ministers the Intercolonial has had, to make these changes, to apply the pruning knife, to abolish the patronage system, to cut out the politics and run the road as a business proposition. If the minister adopts that policy and method, the road, instead of being an annual loss to the exchequer of this country, will pay a handsome dividend upon the capital employed. The minister is young and full of vitality and some brains——

Mr. GRAHAM. In a modified form.

Mr. FOWLER. He may not have a long period of office before him but in view of the circumstances of the last few days we will have no election this year so he is at least sure of another year in office, and if he is industrious and earnest and attempts to accomplish these reforms he will make for himself a reputation such as no other Minister of Railways has made, at least since 1896.

Mr. OSLER. I was sorry to hear the minister so strongly defend the patronage system. I thought it was something which while more or less recognized was still something to be ashamed of. I do not think there is a more corrupting influence in public life than the patronage system as carried on in Canada either by the Dominion or any local government. There is practically no direct purchase, every thing has to go through a middleman, unless the man is on the patronage list. If he quarrels with the government he is at once stricken off the list without question and if he has goods which the government must have they can only be sold to the government through a middleman. You cannot get a contract to carry the troops from Toronto to Niagara except it goes through a middleman. I say what I know. There is no more paralyzing system in the world than the system of the patronage committee and the middleman. I am sure that the minister is himself anxious to do what is absolutely right for the country and his department and I commend to him Lord Cromer's book on 'Modern Egypt,' just published, which is one of the most interesting books that can be read. I sent to the library but it was not there. I regret that as I would have liked to read to the minister a paragraph from that book. In summing up the reasons why Egypt has been changed from one of the most corrupt countries in the world to one where everything is honestly administered, Lord Cromer says in the chapter headed, 'Corruption,' that one of the chief influences in overcoming corruption was that when the government came under the control of the English a policy was adopted of letting public works and buying supplies by public tender. That one order did more to bring about a reign of honesty in Egypt than all other reforms put together. If this government will only adopt that principle, they will find that the Intercolonial Railway as many other departments, will run smoothly and at once a different tone will be brought into our public life. You cannot have honesty when you have a system of patronage committees and patronage firms from whom you buy ; it is an impossibility. There must be more or less corruption under such circumstances, and I am sorry to hear the minister so strongly defend the patronage system. I know that this has been more or less the condition under all our governments, local and Dominion, but I appeal to the minister to see whether he could not change that as far as his department is concerned. If he does so he will deserve the thanks of the whole people, and I ask him to seriously consider the suggestion.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am sure we all appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) and I hope the minister will take them to heart. What number of commission agents has the hon. gentleman in the United States gathering trade for the railroad ?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have no agents in the United States. It is a mistake to say that we do not advertise for tenders. Nothing is purchased without tender. The great majority of our goods are bought after advertising in the newspapers. My hon. friend (Mr. Osler)) shakes his head. That is absolutely true so far as the Railway Department is concerned. The stores are purchased in the way I have said. The other materials are purchased after advertising in the newspapers for tenders. I can show my hon. friend the tenders.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot quite understand the minister's statement when he says he has not any one receiving commissions. On W—131 I see that we paid John A. Boak a commission of 10 per cent on securing business, $2,982.

Mr. GRAHAM. I was in error; we have an agent in Chicago.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Ticket sellers as well have received in the neighbourhood of $2,000 commission on selling tickets. How many of these agents has the minister got?

Mr. GRAHAM. People who sell tickets always get a commission on them. We have one man in Chicago and I think the other is in Boston. All railroads pay a commission on tickets sold.

Mr. DANIEL. I see on page 137 that $2.288 were paid under the heading of association fees. There are the American Railway Association of New York; the Association of American Railway Accounting officers, Chicago ; the Canadian Car Service Bureau, Montreal; the Canadian Freight Association, Toronto; the Master Car Builders Association, Chicago ; the Railway Car Association, Buffalo, the Railway Equipment and Publication Company, New York. Board of trade fees: Halifax, Moncton, Montreal, Quebec and Toronto, and sundry association fees. I notice one very serious omission. The Board of Trade at St. John is not mentioned at all and no fees are paid it although it is, I presume, about as important as the majority of the others mentioned. What is the object of these payments and what is gained by them?

Mr. GRAHAM. Like all railways, we join these associations for the mutual benefit to be derived, such as information interchangeable among members of the association. All railways join these associations. It is necessary for the Intercolonial to join them if it is to keep up with the other railways. We get the standards of cars and equipment and all that kind of thing.

Mr. DANIEL. Do they issue publications yearly?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. I notice a payment of $1,312 to the Canadian Freight Association of Toronto, being proportion of expenses for nine months. What expenses would those be?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is some sharing of expenses in connection with that association among the different roads. As to the boards of trade, it seems to be necessary, for the benefit of the railway itself, to encourage the boards of trade in these different places. I do not see why St. John was left out.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope the minister will correct that omission, if there is anything to be gained by correcting it at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have an explanation of W—161, reconstruction of accounting system, paid to Kenneth Falconer, $26,252.21.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is a return giving all the information with regard to that. This firm reorganized our system of accounting, not only at the head office but the different smaller places, and I am informed that their work has paid the railway already. For example, take the fixing of cost, although we thought we had a fairly good system, we were unable before to fix anything as definite regarding the cost of mileage and that kind of thing. We had in addition an expert, who was the controller of the Chicago and Rock Island Railway, who gave us some very practical views. I feel confident that we got full value by that reorganization.

Mr. FOSTER. How much money was spent on that?

Mr. GRAHAM. I gave it in the House not long since and it is in 'Hansard.' I think it was in the vicinity of $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Out of what appropriation was that paid?

Mr. GRAHAM. Out of working expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister think that belonged to the working expenses of the railway?

Mr. GRAHAM. We are charging the account to the working expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly. It is the accounting of your men who are under regular salary for that purpose who are doing it. Here was a special work undertaken by the Intercolonial and you had to pay some $50,000 for it. The country knew nothing about it until the contracts were made and the larger part of the work was done. That illustrates the trouble of having a bulk item of $9,000,000 such as this. It is perfectly possible for the railway department to spend $8,900,000 on one item—advertising, say—and the Auditor General would have no chance to criticise it. This illustration reduces it to an absurdity, but it is only to show what an absolutely blind appropriation this is. On a new arrangement, one not coming up in the ordinary run of the business, the minister committed the country to an expenditure of $50,000, without an order in council or any authority except simply the action of the department itself. And the country knew nothing about it until it came out in the course of the investigation of another department. Has the minister any report from the Falconer firm?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Would he have any objection to bringing it down?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think it has been down for some time. Or, perhaps I am wrong about; it may be before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. But not before the House. Well, as we are called upon to pay the bill, the least we can expect is to have the report. What in brief, were the changes made by this firm in the system of bookkeeping?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not sufficiently expert to give the House a technical explanation. As a matter of fact, I do not know. And no person, unless he were an expert bookkeeper, would know even if he were told. I am assured by the management that the results are very satisfactory. I will be ready to bring down the report. It is a long report and it will take some time to copy. Maybe the copy before the Public Accounts Committee will be available.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the minister think his statement rather odd? It may be his misfortune, but it certainly is not our fault that, when asked what has resulted from an expenditure of $50,000 he is compelled to say: I cannot tell you and I do not know that you would understand if I did tell you.

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, it is true, isn't it?

Mr. FOSTER. You must give the questioner the benefit of the doubt. Certainly, the question is perfectly germane to the subject. We can hardly allow $9,000 000 to go into the hands of the minister to be spent for something that he does not know and cannot tell. I think the minister ought to be able, in consultation with his deputy, to give the main points of the beneficial change if there was a change, in the system of bookkeeping. In the first place, was the former system of bookkeeping on the Intercolonial a double-entry system?

Mr. GRAHAM. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will find fault with me for not answering his question directly—but I am informed that the weakness of the old system was that we had not the detailed results that are required in modern railway work.

Mr. FOSTER. In what respect?

Mr. GRAHAM. As to the cost of the service—cost per mile, and so on. Modern railways must keep these in great detail, in order to report to the commission and governments and to apportion costs. While our system of bookkeeping may have given honest results so far as the country is concerned, it did not give us the exact results necessary in the management of our business and so we had to have the system modernised. I admit that I am not competent to discuss the details. But if I were buying a new style of locomotives—I submit this case to my hon. friend—I would decide on the basis of the reports of my engineers and other officials whom I have there for that purpose. And if it were demonstrated to me, that the engine could go at greater speed, or draw heavier trains I think that would be sufficient for me as head of the department, even though I could not explain the details of the working of that engine. So, in this case, I am not competent to go into detail of this accounting system. But the result of it is that our system is greatly improved. On the sheet that I now have before me, there are ninety items specified, giving expenses on a basis of monthly comparison. Under the old system we had only four or five heads altogether. For instance, with the old system, I could not have given the comparisons I gave this afternoon.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, the minister was not very full in his explanations this afternoon. If he gave us information which he would not have been able to give under the old system I do not know what he could have told us had he not had this new system. I should think he would have been confined simply to nodding his head. Could he not, with that sheet before him give the committee an idea of the difference between the information before and that which is given now? That would illustrate the change of system, I should think.

Mr. GRAHAM. This sheet shows the disbursements for the month under different headings. Under the old system we had four headings, not divided into subdivisions as in this statement. Under this system we have some ninety headings for March, 1908, March, 1907, the nine months ending at a certain date, and the twelve months ending a certain date. Then we have a summary at the end, showing at the end of every month, in each department, the expenses as compared with the corresponding month of the previous year.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a good illustration of what seems to have been done by that firm. For instance, instead of having these expenses divided into three or four large heads, you now run them down into the details. So you not only have a comparison between the whole expenditure, but you run that down into every branch, and find the comparative cost for each one. It is a differentiation of the whole system into a large number of details. But what I wanted to know was if that was done by other railway systems. There was not so much difficulty in adopting it here as to make it necessary to get a firm and pay them $50,000 to help you introduce it. It seems to me that all that would have been necessary was to get the system of this differentiation from one of the great railroads that had adopted it, and get a practical man who had worked it out upon that railway, to indoctrinate your own men with it.

Mr. GRAHAM. The most difficult thing is what the hon. gentleman calls the indoctrination. Men are wedded to an old system, and they often think it is better than a new system that you ask them to adopt. We had to work the system in gradually. The department had practically to keep a number of these men until they did the actual work of installing this new system, and doing it right beside our own men and teaching them as the work went along. In addition to that, we had to send them to different stations. These men were kept for quite a time doing the work with our men.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not disposed to say that the change in the system has not been a good one. But it seems to me it has been effected at a very large expense. Whether it was necessary to spend $50,000 for that teaching is a matter that puzzled me. It seems to me that you could have got three or four experts from a railway that had adopted this system, and these could have taught your own men. Is the system working satisfactorily ?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is giving entire satisfaction.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any clash between the Auditor General's Department and the system that was introduced by these gentlemen ?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no clash with the Auditor General's Department.

Mr. OSLER. The audit system has been adopted by most of the large railways of late years, both in Canada and the States. They have one man reporting upon their system of bookkeeping. I have seen two or three reports of railways about the size of the Intercolonial, and it would not require very much change to adapt the system to the Intercolonial. One of the most valuable features of the report of the auditors is the very strict line that is drawn between what shall be charged to capital account and what shall be charged to expenditure.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the report deals with that very matter.

Mr. FOSTER. If these experts have outlined carefully the different kinds of expenditures, what should go to capital and what should go to revenue, has the department that feature of the report and are you carrying it out?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have the report, and I may say that we are approximating to the principle laid down in that report. As I explained this afternoon we expect, by the new method we have adopted, to shortly be in a position to absolutely follow the lines of the report.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the minister is being indoctrinated?

Mr. GRAHAM. Perhaps indoctrinated with the theory, but the practice is rapidly approximating to the point of indoctrination.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister will have to get a hustle on because some of the sentiments he gave expression to to-night do not appear to be in strict line with these principles.

Mr. OSLER. Will the general report as to the system of bookkeeping and capital account be issued and distributed? I think it would be very useful if it were distributed to members.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have it printed in the instruction book which contains what my hon. friend suggests as to the capital account, revenue and expenditure. I will be glad to send it to my hon. friend.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister bring down the report?

Mr. GRAHAM. It will take some time to copy.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. GRAHAM. In that case I will bring it down.

Mr. FOSTER. Coming down to the item proposed, I would like to ask the minister if he would be kind enough to give us the distribution of the $9,000,000. He has spent $50,000 in getting the indoctrination which brings out in detail what is absolutely necessary in order to come at a proper understanding of the working of the department. Now let us apply this doctrine of differentiation to the $9,000,000. The minister is asking for $9,000,000 and I would like him to divide this into the chief items and give the committee some little guide as to the points within which they should keep for each.

Mr. GRAHAM. That has never been done in the history of the railway. I do not think it has ever been done in the history of any railway. The vote has never been asked in that way. I have not the figures divided in that way and they could not possibly be so divided.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister mean to say that he has had no estimate put before him of the amount that is to be devoted to advertising, salaries and wages and the different amounts that are to make up the large lines of expenditure? Surely no estimate can be made up to give $9,000,000 unless it is just simply to say: We will ask for what we asked for last year. Surely no estimate is made up unless it is made up in detail and by getting the bulk sum by adding the detailed estimates. The deputy minister must have the detailed estimates.

Mr. GRAHAM. If my hon. friend will turn to pages 82, 83, 84 of the report of the Department of Railways and Canals he will find a detailed statement as to where these amounts went.

Maintenance of way and structures, $1,111,888.68.
Maintenance of equipment, $1,180,521.16.

The different heads of expenditure are given there. As a matter of fact, we can only take these items, and I imagine that the only way we can make an estimate upon these is to assume that the equipment will be increased as our business is increased. The only way we can do is to base the business of this year on last year's business, believing and hoping that the amount of business will be up to last year's at least. Last year we spent $9,000,000. We asked for an estimate of something like $7,000,000 and in the Supply estimates we had to ask for $1,400,000 more. Our estimate for next year is absolutely based upon the expenditure of last year.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the minister bears out what I have said, that in making up the estimates for the year he sat down and looked at the report of last year and found it totalled up so much. He came to the conclusion he would want as much this year and put it down. Does the minister mean to say that his officers do not provide him with an estimate, for instance, of the maintenance of way, or how much will be spent for advertising, how much for ties and other things of that kind, which are matters of absolute calculation? I do not ask for the details of everything. It would be impossible to get down to absolute truth in reference to all the details, but I cannot think that it is not possible to make a definite division of an estimate of the moneys voted by parliament.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is one of the difficulties: We have to ask on capital account, more money than we spend every year because we have to provide enough for a certain work. Perhaps we have too much for a certain work. If you divide this up under special headings and tie us to these votes we cannot run the railway. You cannot run the railway in that particular way. We would have to ask for a larger vote than $9,000,000. We give a plain statement of what was done with the money last year, and we propose to do the same this year. If we had to specialize this it would make it impossible for a minister to accept the vote and run the road unless he asked for more money than he needed.

Mr. FOSTER. It means that you do not sit down and carefully calculate what you require for the road, thus setting yourself a limit, and endeavouring to work your road economically so as to keep within your appropriation, if it is possible to do so. The minister may ask a little more than he will probably expend but he decides as nearly as possible what he may require and he may add to it so as to be sure that he does not crimp himself.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend must see the impracticability of applying his logic to the operation of a railway. This railway is hampered as no other railway is in having to come to parliament for supplies. If we had so much for maintenance of way for instance, and some unforeseen occurrence arose we could only use the money voted for maintenance of way and could not take from any other vote. We would therefore be in an awkward position. The only practical way is to hold the management responsible for the way in which the money is expended and allow the lump sum voted to be distributed as the interests of the road for the year may demand. There has got to be elasticity and flexibility in a vote for the operation of a railway or else you simply cannot carry it on.

Mr. FOSTER. There may be something in what the minister says, but so far as his argument goes about requiring money because of an accident or some unforeseen occurrence the minister has always power to get money, and his argument on that ground falls. Does not the minister think that it puts a check on extravagance and tends to good and economic administration that you should have your vote divided into different sections rather than to have it in a lump sum. Of course it is very convenient to take a lump vote and apply it just as you please but the other system is in my opinion the better one. Suppose you take a vote for maintenance of way now and it is found to be insufficient, you can get a supplementary vote when parliament meets next November. Parliament is practically always within reach to give a supplementary vote if it be necessary.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am firmly convinced that if my hon. friend thinks it out he will find it would be unworkable to divide this vote into details so much for each branch. While it sounds all right theoretically it would be impracticable in the working out. I know my hon. friend does not want to hamper the railway.

Mr. FOSTER. No, but I would like to hamper the minister a little in some of his extravagant expenditures.

Mr. GRAHAM. This minister does not need hampering as much as some hon. gentlemen opposite required to be hampered during their administration.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not so sure of that.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is not reasonable to vote money for the working of a railway in detail unless you vote several millions of dollars more than you would vote under the present system, and if you did that it would be an incentive to extravagance rather than to economy in every department. We make as full a statement of our expenditure as any railroad company in the world ; there is no railway in the world so criticised by its stockholders as is the management of the Intercolonial Railway in this House ; there is no concealment, and with all that before the country it is unnecessary and impracticable to divide this vote up into sections.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does not the minister have his officers prepare a general statement on which he bases his total estimate for the coming year ?

Mr. GRAHAM. In making up the estimates they go into the different branches and take into consideration the expenditure of the previous year and the probable increased business of the coming year.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are there no special changes ?

Mr. GRAHAM. There are no special changes to come out of revenue. It is practically the same as last year. It may vary one way or the other. It cost $9,000,000 practically last year and will not cost much more next year.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are you cutting the wages?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have not cut the wages at all; in fact all the men are asking for more.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are you cutting any men out?

Mr. GRAHAM. Some members, as the hon. member for Colchester this afternoon, complains that several men had been what we call set back for a time in order to relieve the condition. That is they are doing other work.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are they not doing that on all railways in the country?

Mr. GRAHAM. All roads are reducing expenditure. It is more difficult for a government road to reduce expenditure than an ordinary road, although we hope to keep the expenditure low.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the policy of the department in this respect, to discharge some men and keep others employed full time or to keep all the men employed on reduced time so as to keep their families in more or less comfort and when conditions improve and there is demand for more men, have the complete staff available? It has come to be recognized that in order to produce stability in service, as well as for the benefit of the homes of these people, it is better to keep the whole staff employed but to run them on shorter hours.

Mr. GRAHAM. The unions all over America govern that, the various brotherhoods of railway workers. As far as I recollect their rules are that a certain standard of salary must be maintained, that the men must earn a certain amount. I think under the rules we would have to drop the men rather than take the position suggested by my hon. friend, although in many cases I believe it to be preferable.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not think in any case the minister should be run by the union. The employment of these men should be made as regular as possible even if they only get one trip or one job where formerly they would have two or three. I do not think that the other method is the proper way to treat the labouring men in this country. There should be some system, and I do not think any road could establish it better than the government road.

Mr. DANIEL. In St. John the Intercolonial Railway is widening two bridges over the railway track at Wall street and Stanley street. These are traversed by the electric railway and vehicles and also foot passengers. Complaints are publicly made of danger to foot passangers on both these bridges as there is no division between the portion of the bridge for vehicles, traffic and the portion for foot passengers, so that skittish horses which are apt to be frightened by the trains passing below the bridges, may run among the foot passengers and injure them.

Mr. GRAHAM. As I understood the bridges were built according to plans approved by the city engineer of St. John and by the engineers of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. DANIEL. The bridges are all right, it is the question of the safety of foot passengers. There is plenty of room to rail off the foot bridge from the other part.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. At page W—123, it appears the Montreal Cotton Company have received some $25,500 for cotton waste. I notice that the prices range from 6½ cents to about 60 cents a pound. Was this by public tender or by private tender?

Mr. GRAHAM. If my hon. friend will explain what he means by private tender?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. As I understand your private tender it can be nothing more than a letter to those on the patronage list.

Mr. GRAHAM. These are by tender, by circular I think. I give my friend the benefit of the doubt and say it is by circular.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. This is a large item for material that is available in many parts of the country, and I would ask how many of those circulars were sent out.

Mr. GRAHAM. There would be quite a number, but I could not tell without having them here.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister will certainly have to get Falconer and his firm on again when the minister is asking $9,000,000 which he will not divide or give any particulars of. Then when the hon. gentleman is asked what was expended last year and how, he does not seem disposed to give the information.

Mr. GRAHAM. What information?

Mr. FOSTER. This very thing we have been talking of.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is mistaken about that as about the other. I tell him there was competition. If I had to give all the information he wants, it would necessitate my bringing over the particulars of every tender for the last year. I can get that information if necessary, but it is impracticable to carry a list of the names of all the tenders and pile them up in the House. If he is anxious, I will get the list and let him have it in the morning.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where is this Cotton Company situated?

Mr. GRAHAM. In Montreal.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Practically all the supplies, the minister purchased by the month. If the minister is compelled to purchase $2,000 worth of this material and $150,000 worth of iron and steel, there is no excuse for his not advertising throughout the country and getting the benefit of competition. If, on the other hand, he is purchasing by the month from these stores, he must expect to pay the highest prices.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an item here for car repairs by other railways $41,000. What check has the Intercolonial on that ?

Mr. GRAHAM. These repairs are paid under the standard rules of the Master Car Builders Association. All railways pay the same tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the judge of the necessity for repairs ? Suppose one of your cars employed on some other road, possibly in the United States, has to be repaired, who is to be the judge of the repairs required ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The representative of the Master Car Builders Association on that railroad is the judge.

Mr. FOSTER. And the Intercolonial, in repairing the cars of other roads, acts on the same principle ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the proportion of idle cars on the Intercolonial as compared with last year ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Last year we were something over 2,500 cars short of the regular supply. This year we are very near to what ought to be our normal supply.

Mr. FOSTER. The difference is measured by the difference between your shortage last year and your having the normal number at present ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister see any improvement on what seemed to be a great abuse as to the number of Intercolonial cars that were outside the jurisdiction of the Intercolonial and in use on other roads?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is remedied this year from the fact that the other roads do not want our cars and are glad to get rid of them and not have to pay the expense. Another idea we have been adopting is getting our pulp wood cars made in such a way, that the roads on the other side of the line will not be able to use them for other traffic.

Mr. FOSTER. When they do use them, they pay a certain rate per day ?

Mr. GRAHAM. All we get now is 25 cents a day. It used to be 50 cents.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that pay for the wear and tear ? There is a chance for great imposition by the bigger roads on the smaller in that respect.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Have they not some regulations in the United States lately, compelling these railways to pay for the detention of cars ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The roads are all members of the same association and the fee is the same. A couple of roads refused to remain in the association if the fees were not reduced and it was reduced to 25 cents. They were probably the chief offenders.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When your cars get over to the United States, do they keep them long before they send them back, if they want them ?

Mr. GRAHAM. That often happens. We send an ordinary box car with pulp wood, and if the other road is short of rolling stock, they will send it on from one road to another and each railroad will keep it awhile. We will find a car sometimes out at the Rockies months before getting it back. We charge for the amount of time it is used, and the charge hardly pays for the wear and tear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who keeps the account ?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have a regular car account.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How do you know how long one road keeps it and then how long another road keeps it ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Each road is supposed to report every day. We get information from the various lines where our car is.

Mr. FOSTER. While they have that car and are running it around from road to road and repairing it when necessary, do they charge you for repairs ? If so how do you make up this item of $41,000 for car repairs ?

Mr. GRAHAM. There are certain divisions as to repairs on different roads. They are under the rules of the Master Car Builders' Association. We are all under the same rules and regulations.

Mr. FOSTER. But the minister does not know whether these are all charged up to the Intercolonial.

Mr. GRAHAM. No, I can give that information to-morrow.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is something in the nature of a clearing house between banks.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is and it isn't.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it all reported to some central accountant amongst the different roads, or do you have to enter this up as between yourselves and fifteen or twenty different roads in the United States?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Master Car Builders' Association lay down rules as to what constitute repairs and what must be done. If there is a dispute in carrying that out, they adjudicate and give a decision.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Suppose a car is broken on a foreign road. Say, for instance, an Intercolonial car is running over the Boston and Maine and is smashed, the Intercolonial does not pay for that?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, under the regulations the road that smashes the car pays.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why cannot the minister run the trains on time? A short time ago the minister gave me a statement of the running of the Maritime Express for several months, and I think he will agree that there were only about two days a month for three or four months when the train was on time. It was late by from five minutes to nine hours.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is a large railway problem why trains do not run on time. In the first place, this is a long run—a thousand miles. We try to run on time, but I regret that we do not always succeed. If the hon. gentdeman will look carefully into it, I think he will see that, in quite a number of instances, the lateness of the train is insignificant—a matter of a few minutes. Of course, a matter of even five or ten minutes is sometimes enough to lose a connection. I remember that, in a matter of causing trains to connect which we discussed this session, we had to make quite an allowance for lateness. My own idea is that perhaps we make too many stops on this Maritime Express. We try, more than a company road would, to accommodate the smaller places. We have petitions from many of the smaller towns on the line, and I am quite unpopular in some of them because I do not have the train stop. There are many reasons why trains are late, but I think that, in this case, one of the reasons is the many stops that we make.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understand that this maritime express is supposed to be a fast train. It should run nearly on time. Take the Grand Trunk's International Limited—I do not think it is late once in a month, but runs sharp on time always. Then take the train to the coast, which has a run of 3,000 miles, and it runs on time practically every day. Of course, a local train carrying express and required to stop often may easily be late. But I am told that one reason why this Maritime Express is late is that there are generally one or two government private cars on.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. J. D. REID. What I am saying is that the International Limited, for instance, will not take on a private car. If this is not the reason why the Maritime Express is late, then I would like to know what the reason is. Out of thirty times in a month, I am sure it was late twenty-five times—I think that would be the average. If the Intercolonial is running a fast train it ought to run it on time, as the other roads do and not have it from ten minutes to nine hours late.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman should know that he is wrong about the Canadian Pacific Railway fast train being on time. It was about nine hours late yesterday, I believe.

Mr. J. D. REID. The limited train?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think so. I am not saying that disparagingly for these difficulties will arise. We have the Ocean Limited which would correspond to the fast train on the Grand Trunk. No official cars are allowed to be carried on that train. But the Maritime Express is a through train and stops at as many places as possible to accommodate the people. It is not as fast a train as the Ocean Limited. I am confident that the lateness—which is liable to happen to any train—is not caused by official cars being carried.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Some time ago I asked about an accident that occurred on the Intercolonial between Montreal and Quebec. The train was off the track twice before it reached its destination. Are such accidents frequent?

Mr. GRAHAM. If the hon. gentleman will look up the record, I think he will find that accidents are not more frequent than on any other road—perhaps they are less than on the majority of roads. I have been on the Grand Trunk road myself and it ran off three times between Toronto and Brockville.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What I want to know is, is the Intercolonial track in good condition?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. We have been here now since eleven o'clock, so far as this item is concerned, we have had a pretty good discussion on it. I think we might pass this item and retire to our virtuous couches.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Crawford). Carried.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend could not open his heart sufficiently to include the next item?

Mr. FOSTER. I think that ought to be discussed. I think the minister should be satisfied when he has $9,000,000 voted.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not complaining. But there will be many items of capital expenditure for the canals—and this is a canal item—on which we can have as full a discussion as hon. gentlemen may wish.

Mr. J. D. REID. The trouble is that, when it is put off, we never have a chance to discuss the matter. I do not think it is fair to ask to have the item slide through without discussion.

Mr. GRAHAM. This item includes the men on the canals, and, if a Supply Bill is put through, it would be well to have the money to pay the men.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the amount?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is $1,016,408 including the amount for staff and repairs. I am not urging it, but I am simply pointing out there are many items of capital expenditure on which I will guarantee that full opportunity should be given for discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not seem like having a meal when you take it off the table.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am simply pointing out the reason why I would like to have this amount voted.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Militia will take up his estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, June 10, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORTS OF DEBATES.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I see my hon. friend from St. James division (Mr. Gervais) Chairman of the Debates Committee, is here to-day, so I will now present the motion which I placed in your hands two days ago regarding the fourth report of the Debates Committee. I moved at that time :

That the resolution adopted by this House on the 20th of May last adopting the fourth report of the committee appointed to supervise the official debates of the House, be reconsidered and rescinded; that the said fourth report of the said committee be referred back to said committee with instructions to inquire into the necessity of and demand for said additional translator, and the qualifications of said E. Charlier to act as such translator and to be appointed to such new position, and to inquire also as to such additional measures as may be necessary to ensure the prompt and efficient translation of the official documents of this House.

I would just say, in support of this motion that there is no doubt—I fancy the House does not doubt—that such a motion can be made. I quote from page 452 of Bourinot's parliamentary procedure, 3rd edition :

Circumstances, however, may arise to render it necessary that the House should reconsider its previous judgment on a question, and in that case there are means afforded by the practice of parliament of again considering the matter. Orders of the House are frequently discharged and resolutions rescinded. The latter part of the thirteenth rule of the House of Commons provides: 'No member may reflect upon any vote of the House, except for the purpose that such vote be rescinded.'

Now, in regard to this particular report, the motion was made by my hon. friend the chairman of the committee on May 20th. Some discussion arose concerning the matter on the following day, May 21st. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said at that time :

That was a good reason and it is only for that reason. It is fair to the chairman of the committee to say that the report of the committee which was adopted yesterday was not open to the same objection as the report which was presented a few days ago.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not yesterday's report involve a charge on the revenue?

Mr. FIELDING. No; the chairman of the committee told me of the report yesterday before it was presented and I said at once: Are you proposing to increase any salaries. He said, No; we are proposing to fill a vacancy, this adds nothing to the expenditure; and I said: If that is the case the objection which was taken before would not apply, and the assurance was given me that it was not a proposal to create any new vacancy or to create any increase in salary.

Mr. FOSTER. But it adds to the expenditure?

Mr. FIELDING. The information given me was that it was to fill a vacancy.

On the same day, my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) who, I believe, is a member of the committee said :

The statement of the Finance Minister shows how useful and necessary it is to discuss these matters. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance is entirely mistaken in his understanding of what was said to him. There is no doubt that the report of the committee yesterday created a new office and a new expense. It was to appoint a new employee altogether and that at a certain salary, and that is the report which was adopted.

And my right hon. friend the Prime Minister Sir Wilfrid Laurier said :

When the report was brought in I inquired from the chairman of the committee and I understood from him that the report did not involve any new charge on the revenue, but simply filled a vacancy, and I understood under such circumstances there would be no objection at all. I may say to my hon. friend and to the House that if the good faith of anybody has been infringed upon, we will reconsider it. I do not want to have the matter passed in that way. There is no reason why this report should not be debated if it is to be debated at all.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said, further :

Lest I should mislead the House, I want to say at once that I have not the slightest doubt that the chairman of the committee acted in good faith, but from what he said I certainly did understand that this was not creating any new office, but filling a vacancy.

And the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in that debate, said :

I most certainly would like to discuss the matter of adding translators before the report goes through, and I think the suggestion made by the Prime Minister should be carried out, to have this report reconsidered and committed to the House to be discussed when the next report comes up.

In answer to which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister said :

I would not like to take this position to-day in the absence of the chairman of the committee, but, certainly, if there is not a proper understanding of the report, there is room for explanation.

There are other references to this report a little later on, I think. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that I have shown that the report was adopted hastily and under a misunderstanding for there is no doubt whatever that it involves an additional charge upon the revenue, as it calls for a salary of $2,000 a year. Under these circumstances, I think it is a case which would call for the rescinding of the resolution and recommittal of the report of the committee in order that the committee should fully investigate the matter as set out in the resolution which I have had the honour to present. I do not, for a single moment, suppose that my hon. friend (Mr. Gervais), the chairman of the committee, intended to mislead the House—nothing is further from my idea—It is merely one of those cases where, in the haste of the business of the House towards the close of the session, such things may occur without any fault being imputable to anybody. I mentioned this matter to my hon friend (Mr. Gervais) this morning, and suggested to him the propriety of allowing this motion to go through in order that the committee might reconsider the question, as it has evidently been a matter of surprise. My hon. friend did not seem to see the advisability of doing that. Had he agreed to my suggestion, that would have dispensed with the necessity of my calling in question the qualifications of the man whose appointment has been recommended in the report adopted by the House. My information is that Mr. Charlier has been convicted before a criminal court of libel and sentenced to imprisonment and then released on ticket of leave. That alone is a grave enough matter for re-investigation by the committee upon his appointment. He is at present under accusation of blackmail. There is an indictment and the jury in the first trial has disagreed. I do not wish to insist on these two points, but in view of the attitude of the chairman of the committee, I thought I should mention them to the House, and it seems to me these are conclusive reasons why the report should be sent back to the committee, in order that the whole matter may be investigated.

Mr. MONK.

Mr. H. GERVAIS (Montreal, St. James). The scope of the motion which has been moved by the hon. gentleman for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is wider than that of the report which was presented by the Debates Committee and adopted by this House. There are before this House two reports, one in relation to the increase of salaries of the official reporters, another with regard to the reorganization of the translation bureau in order to provide that the French edition of the 'Hansard' should be published within twenty-four hours after the English edition; and now the hon. gentleman wants to have the fourth report of the committee sent back to the Debates Committee for the purpose of making further inquiry in regard to the qualification of one of the appointees, Mr. Charlier. Let me call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that nothing was said against another of the appointees, Mr. Girard, whose engagement is also mentioned in that fourth report.

Now I will deal one by one with the objections the hon. gentleman has made to this report. With regard to the regularity of the report, I may say that the meeting of the Debates Committee which recommended the appointment of Mr. Girard as proof-reader, and of Mr. Charlier as translator, was convened in the usual way, proper notice having been given to each of the members of the committee. When the meeting was called to order, there was a quorum present. The resolution was passed unanimously. I never complained of any resolution which has been passed in this House when I was absent therefrom.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Did not one of the members vote nay on the appointment ?

Mr. GERVAIS. Yes, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) did, at the end. I think the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) moved the resolution for the appointment of Mr. Girard and Mr. Charlier.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And the member for Leeds opposed it.

Mr. GERVAIS. Yes, but in such a way that we considered that the report was unanimously adopted by the committee. Everything was done correctly, according to the rules of parliamentary committees, and according to the regulations and rules of this House. On the same day, when the report was read to the House, no objection was taken to it. Then when the motion was made for concurrence nothing was said against the report, and the report was concurred in by and in virtue of rule 32 of the rules and orders governing the procedure of the House of Commons, and reading as follows :

A motion may be made by unanimous consent to the House without previous notice.

This was done by the unanimous consent of the House, in accordance with the rules of parliament which we have adopted from the British parliament. The moment the British parliament unanimously passes a motion it becomes the law of the land. By unanimous consent the British parliament may repeal the Magna Charta if they wish, providing it is the parliament sitting on the Thames embankment, because no other British house being sovereign could repeal such a law as the Magna Charta. But the moment the Sovereign parliament of England pass any law, unanimously, nothing can come into conflict with it. This resolution, as I say, for concurrence in the report of the Debates Committee, was passed unanimously. Some of the members may have been absent, but the government benches were occupied by ministers of the Crown, and no objection was made to the adoption of the report. I may say that before the House opened I showed that report to ministers of the Crown, and nothing was said against it, because nothing could be said against it. If anybody had raised his finger against the passing of that resolution, the report could not have been concurred in. Now, Mr. Speaker, to show the soundness of my contention that the Debates Committee was entitled and is still entitled to make recommendations for salaries, for increase of salaries, and so forth, I will quote a few precedents. Since as far back as 1880 it has been the constant practice of this House of Commons to accept the recommendations of the Debates Committee, both as regards new salaries and increases of salaries, and those recommendations, when confirmed by this House, have been the laws of the land, and have been carried into full execution. In 1880 the staff of official reporters and translators was appointed by the House upon a recommendation made by the Debates Committee, reading as follows :

The Debates Committee recommended; That six reporters be engaged and recognized as officers of the House, subject to such recommendations as may from time to time be enacted by the Commission of Internal Economy of the House or by the Select Standing Committee appointed to supervise the official reports of the Debates of the House.

The salaries recommended were, chief reporter $1,500 ; reporters $1,000 ; assistant to chief reporter $500.

In 1884, as may be seen by the journals of the House, pages 267 and 285, another report was presented to the House, recommending an increase of salaries, including the chief, to $2,000. The report was made on March 21st and concurred in on March 26. Then on the 13th of July, 1905, the Debates Committee presented their sixth report, reading as follows :

Your committee recommends:

1. That the salary of $2,000 per annum at present paid to each member of the staff of official reporters of the debates, be increased to $2,500.

2. That the salary of $1,200 per annum now paid to Mr. Charles W. Boyce, assistant to the chief reporter, be increased to $1,500.

In 1903 there had been some other increases of salaries and some new salaries recommended and confirmed by the House, which went into effect without objection. Therefore I say that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier cannot now raise any objection as it is in the exclusive province of the government to object to increases of expenditure for salaries, and to say that the Debates Committee has been encroaching upon this right of the Crown. As a matter of fact, that fourth report did create a small expenditure, but it was the privilege of the government exclusively to raise any objection and therefore the objection taken on that ground by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier is not well founded. According to the third edition of Bourinot, edited by Dr. Flint, it is within the province of the Debates Committee to recommend new salaries, increases in salaries, &c., and these recommendations, when approved by the House, have to be accepted by all parties concerned.

With regard to the question of the reorganization and improvement of the translation bureau or of the official reporters' bureau, I may say that there is a report now before this House, the third report of the Debates Committee, and all the objections which are being raised now by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier will be properly ventilated in due course. The hon. member is trying to raise a debate with regard to a proposed improvement of the translation bureau which question will be properly debated when the third report of the Debates Committee comes before the House for concurrence. On that ground also I take objection and I say that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier is not in order when he moves that the fourth report of the Debates Committee be referred back and tries at the same time to debate the third report of the committee which has not been offered for concurrence.

Then, with regard to the qualification of Mr. Charlier, I may say that the gentleman is quite competent to do the work of translation. I think there is no man better qualified to do French translation for this House. There is not, on the staff of official translators, one man who is a Bachelor of Letters of the University of France. Let me quote to the House the following certificate which shows that Mr. Charlier has been made a Bachelor of Letters by the faculty of Besançon, as well as an official certificate of Lyons, which shows that Mr. Charlier has been made a Bachelor of Science. I will first quote the certificate from the school of Besançon, which is as follows :

(Translation.)

University of France,
Besançon Faculty of Letters,
Besançon Academy.

The undersigned, the secretary of the Besançon Faculty of Letters, certifies that Mr. Charlier (Gustave Edouard), born in Paris, in the department of Seine, on the 9th of February, 1858, has been deemed worthy of the degree of Bachelor in Letters, on the 25th of July, 1876, after the examinations he has passed before the said Faculty according to the regulation of the 25th of July, 1874.

(Signed.) PAPILLON,
Secretary.

Besançon, 9th Nov., 1876.

Certified for the Rector,
The delegated Academy inspector,
(Signed.) R. DUPARAY.

Then there is the following certificate showing that he has been made a Bachelor of Science :

(Translation.)

The Lyon Faculties of Divinity, Sciences and Letters,:

Secretary's Office,
Palais Saint-Pierre.

The undersigned, the Secretary of the Lyon Faculty of Sciences, certifies that Mr. Charlier (Gustave Edouard), born in Paris (Seine), on the 9th of February, 1858, has been declared worthy of the degree of Bachelor in physical and natural sciences, on the 5th of November, 1877.

(Signed.) C. BECQ,
Secretary.

Lyon, 5th Nov., 1877.
Certified, E. Faivre, Dean.

Mr. Charlier has also been employed in several cities of Europe as a private tutor as well as in Rio de Janeiro, and I will quote a letter from the minister of Roumania, in Constantinople, to ensue any gentleman in Canada to make further inquiry about the character, the honesty and the integrity of Mr. Charlier. I challenge the hon. member for Jacques Cartier to prove anything dishonest against Mr. Charlier. One must be fair and just, and the committee will stand by the man against whom nothing has been yet proven. As long as nothing has been proven against him, this House should stand firmly by him and do him justice. If the hon. member for Jacques Cartier is not satisfied with my statement I will give him a few addresses of people to whom he may go to make further inquiry about the character and qualifications of the new translator. I refer the hon. member for Jacques Cartier to the following letter from Constantinople :

(Translation.)

Legatinunea Romanie, Constantinople,
Royal Rumanion Legation.

I, the undersigned, minister of Rumania in Constantinople, certify that Mr. Edouard Charlier has in a most meritorious way prepared my son Gabriel for the baccalaureata examinations and that I can only congratulate myself upon the relations we had together from October, 1902, to November, 1893.

(Signed) The Minister of Rumania,
MICHER MITILINEU,

Constantinople, 25th June, 5th July, 1904.

He might also inquire about Mr. Charlier from such people as Mr. de Margerie, the French ambassador at Pekin. Comté E. Rodocanachi. Let me also read the following letter :

(Translation.)

Imperial Ottoman High School,
Constantinople, Galata Serai,
January 31st, 1894.

Mr. Edouard Charlier is a professor of great merit who has successfully educated many pupils in distinguished families, more particularly in Constantinople, where he has prepared for baccalaureat examinations the son of H. E. the minister of Rumania, who has splendidly undergone all the written and oral tests and has been admitted with the mention 'very well,' moreover, through his perfect respectability, he is highly recommended to all persons who may apply to him.

The assistant director,
(Signed.) d'HOLLYS.

Mr. MONK. Does my hon. friend suggest that I should go to Constantinople ?

Mr. GERVAIS. Well, let the hon. gentleman remain in Canada and I will show him that he had more to do with Mr. Charlier than anybody in both Houses of parliament. Do you recall the fact that when M. Cresse, K.C., ex-mayor Laporte, Mr. R. Bickerdike, and M. Catelli, your great friend, and you met in M. Cressé's office to organize an international committee for the establishment of a commercial treaty between Italy and Canada—that Mr. Charlier was appointed secretary of such committee. Do you remember that you asked Mr. Charlier to establish a newspaper for your party?

Mr. MONK. I would like to state to the hon. gentleman that I do not know the gentleman.

Mr. GERVAIS. Have you ever seen Mr. Charlier in your office on St. François Xavier Street ?

Mr. MONK. I do not remember.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. Hon. members must address the chair.

Mr. GERVAIS. I do not want to be interrupted because I have to finish my work of showing that Mr. Charlier has been highly appreciated in both South America and France, that he has received a first class education, that he is a French scholar and that he knows more about foreign languages than anybody in my country. Then let me say to the House that when Mr. Charlier was apointed general secretary of that great international committee for the purpose of securing a treaty of commerce between Italy and Canada, he was so appointed because he was perfectly familiar with the Italian language which my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier knows, I confess, very well, too. That was one of the qualifications for which my hon. friend accepted Mr. Charlier as secretary of that international committee. When, I may say that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, having read some articles written in the 'Journal de Genève' by Mr. Charlier, said, to his bosom Friend, Mr. Charles Auguste Corneillier : 'Show me the oyster in which you found such a pearl.' It is clear that the hon. member (Mr. Monk) did not have the same opinion of Mr. Charlier as he now holds. Some ten years ago when Mr. Charlier was preparing a pamphlet for the so-called municipal reform league in Montreal the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) highly valued the competency of Mr. Charlier as a linguist. I might quote letters to show that Mr. Charlier is highly appreciated by men having a universal reputation in the world of science and letters. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier has lived in Italy for some years and he knows the Rodocanachi family. This family name is well known in Austria, Italy, England and France, and it includes amongst its members quite a number of scientists and men of letters. I have here a certificate as to Mr. Charlier's ability dated April 20, 1889, and written by E. Rodocanachi, Greek consul at Leghorn. I have here another certificate to the same effect from Viscount F. Figueiredo, Rio de Janeiro. These certificates are sufficient to show that Mr. Charlier is a man of repute in literature and a man quite competent to do the work of translating.

Let me refresh the memory of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier by asking him if it was not one of the aims of the international committee to establish a treaty between Canada and Italy, to encourage the importation into Canada of such goods as olive oil, wines, material for making cement, pozzolane and what Mr. Cresse styled piles gum.

Mr. MONK. I would say to my hon. friend that I never heard of this committee. All this is new to me.

Mr. GERVAIS. Were you not at one of the meetings?

Mr. MONK. Never.

Mr. GERVAIS. My information is that the hon. member (Mr. Monk) was at one of the meetings at least.

Mr. LANCASTER. He says he was not.

Mr. GERVAIS. I think the hon. member (Mr. Monk) will not deny that Mr. Charlier went once to his office and that at that time he did not think that Mr. Charlier was so bad. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) does deny that Mr. Charlier went to his office on St. François Xavier street, will he deny that he met Charlier in the office of Mr. L. G. A. Cresse, his bosom friend? I find in 'La Presse' of November 10, 1899, that the Hon. Mr. Taillon, Mr. Cornellier, Mr. Charlier and Mr. Cressé spoke from the same platform when the St. James Workingman's Club was established under the supervision and supreme care of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. This report is worth reading.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read it.

Mr. GERVAIS. Here it is:

(Translation.)

Hon. Mr. Taillon speaks at the Conservative Workmen's Club—Liberal deceit—New Cheers for Mr. C. A. Cornellier—a Frenchman from old France speaks sympathetic words.

Last night's meeting of the St. James division Conservative Workmen's Club has been a success, just as every one of the previous meetings of that club. The gathering was presided over by Mr. Azaire Lamarche and the hall was crowded with voters anxious to hear political questions of the day discussed by the orators on the bill.

Minutes being read the following were admitted as members of the club : Messurs. Aza Filiatrault, P. Arthur Côt?, Jas. Champoux, Dr. J. Bte Campeau, O. Rochon, T. Saint-Pierrre, J. Hector Lesage, J. N. Bergeron, A. Houde, H. G. Thibauleau, Arthur Sauvé, E. Neveu, Sr., E. Neveu, L. J. Noël, C. Paquette, J. Ed. Lamothe, Louis Laferriere, J. L. Cadieux.

Mr. Nap. Royal proposed, seconded by Mr. L. T. Frigon, that Mr. Pierre Germain be elected a member of the committee of the club St. Jacques. Carried.

Mr. Joseph Jubinville proposed, seconded by Mr. H. Royal that Mr. J. H. Lesage, advocate, be elected corresponding secretary of the Workmen's Conservative Club, St. James division. Carried.

Mr. Louis T. Frigon, proposed, seconded by Mr. P. Auger, that the name of Mr. R. Wilson Smith, ex-mayor of Montreal, be added to the list of honorary presidents of the Workmen's Conservative Club, St. James division.

That the members of this club take advantage of the present opportunity to assure him that they unanimously join in the hope expressed by the Conservatives of St. Lawrence and St. Louis divisions that he will once more be the Conservative standard bearer in the coming struggle.

Mr. A. Lamarche proposed, seconded by Mr. N. Royal, that Hon. Damien Rolland and Mr. L. G. A. Cressé be appointed honorary vice-presidents. Carried.

Mr. Jos. Venne proposed, seconded by Mr. A. Panneton, that the following gentlemen be added to the list of honorary members : Hon. J. D. Villenueuve, P. Décarie, J. A. David, Arthur Labelle, J. A. Brossard, H. Jeannotte, Frs. Martineau, Jos. Lamarre, A. C. Trudeau, Jos. Letange, E. Pelletier, J. N. Emard, Chas. Grothé, Dr. Racicot, F. Lapointe, Jos. Paquette Toussaint Gauthier.

Mr. J. H. Lesage made a speech and then Mr. Cornellier spoke, and he introduced Mr. Charlier to the meeting and this is what he had to say :

Mr. C. A. Cornellier, whose eloquent voice had been heard many times before in the club, was then loudly called upon to speak. The gifted orator received from the audience a most enthusiastic greeting; indeed the electors of St. James are no strangers to his gift, both as a speaker and an advocate.

I had come this evening, said Mr. Cornellier, to hear the Hon. Mr. Taillon, whom we all regard with veneration and whom we greet with uncovered heads whenever we have the advantage of meeting him.

In a rapid review of the situation with respect to the Transvaal question, Mr. Cornellier then held up to ridicule the defence of Mr. Laurier and his friends in the province of Quebec. 'They contend,' he said, 'that England forced the Canadian government to send a contingent of our soldiers to Africa. That is absolutely untrue. They themselves offered a regiment to England ; the offer was accepted in order not to displease the colony, but a second offer made by Mr. Laurier and his government was refused.'

Here Mr. Cornellier said—I will read it in French.

An hon. MEMBER. Read it in Italian.

Mr. GERVAIS. I could read it in Italian but I cannot speak Italian so fluently as can the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. However, I do understand the Italian language as well as the Spanish language. I will read it in French because I cannot afford the time to translate it.

(Translation.)

Here Mr. Cornellier told an anecdote at which the audience was convulsed with laughter.

In his closing remarks the eloquent speaker said that England might count upon the plighted faith of French Canadians, but that while the latter respected the constitution and the treaties, their love was for France the land of their origin.

I have a surprise in store for you, added Mr. Cornellier; I wish to introduce to you a Frenchman recently arrived but who already loves French Canadians as if he had always lived among them, that gentleman is M. Edouard Charlier.

Mr. Charlier came to the platform and Mr. Cornellier introduced him by saying : —I translate this:—'I want to spring a surprise on you by introducing to you a Frenchman lately arrived in Montreal. but who loves the French Canadians just as much as if he had been born amongst them.' Then came Mr. Charlier's speech, and I quote it from 'La Presse' which at that time was the faithful organ of the member for Jacques Cartier. Mr. Charlier said :

(Translation.)

Mr. Charlier, invited by the chairman to address the meeting, did so in a charming style which captivated his hearers; the patriotic and inspiring nature of his address was such that almost every sentence drew loud applause. He was not yet a Canadian, he said, but would soon really become so. He alluded to the visit made to the province of Quebec by M. Herbette 'that eminent Frenchman and distinguished diplomatist; one of those wise and learned men who modestly labour for the greatness of France, who spare no effort, but devote all their talents and attainments to their country's cause.'

The only thing that Mr. Herbette regrets is that he has been unable to live during some time among the labouring population of this country. Other Frenchmen, said Mr. Charlier would complete his task.

Mr. Charlier expressed great surprise at the manner in which French Canadians adapted themselves to political life and at the interest they take in all public questions.

'You may be truly called a free people' said Mr. Charlier. 'That freedom you have yourselves conquered and you have a right to be proud of it.'

Speaking of foreign immigration, Mr. Charlier said that if we were better known in France, more French labour and capital would find their way to this country. He commended Canadian loyalty and the expansive powers of the race, paying also a graceful tribute to the Catholic clergy that had been the soul of the present greatness of the Canadian people.

The Canadian woman was Mr. Charlier's next theme : 'Among English families' he said, 'one did not find those good Canadian mothers who take so noble a part in the development of the province of Quebec, by their incessant gifts of new citizens, a constant self sacrifice to the greatness of the country.'

This oratorical gem, which we would have liked to be able to print in full, was applauded to the echo.

Mr. Charlier concluded his remarks amid tremendous applause. Then the Hon. Mr. Taillon, ex-Prime Minister of the province of Quebec, spoke and paid a high compliment to Mr. Charlier :

(Translation.)

Hon. Mr. Taillon was received with enthusiasm when he rose to speak. The loud plaudits of the assembly proved that his former electors of St. James division have not forgotten him, but that they still like to hear his manly voice and frank address. 'Some public men,' said Mr. Taillon, 'enjoy great public meetings where large crowds press round the foot of the hustings. For my part, I prefer club meetings where I may get in touch with the labouring classes. It is in such meetings that elections are really won, for there one meets the intelligent, sincere and devoted workers.

Mr. Taillon then gave the history of the Manitoba school question, explaining the duplicity of Mr. Laurier and his friends as evidenced by the conduct of the Liberal government since their accession to power in Ottawa.

'If,' said Mr. Taillon, 'I were to ask you: Are you proud of being French Canadians ? Are you proud of being Catholics ? you would reply that to put such questions would imply an insult. Indeed you have proved that such would be the case by the applause you have given Mr. Charlier, a Frenchman from old France who spok to us in so patriotic a strain.

Nevertheless, in 1896, public opinion was led astray. The true meaning of this question does not seem to have been understood and it was thought that the difficulty might be solved by placing at the head of affairs a man of our own blood and of our religion. Such a feeling was certainly legitimate ; but we the leaders described the pit-falls and thought it our duty to warn our too confiding countrymen. Were we mistaken ? We have seen them at work ; after having used the Manitoba school question to obtain power, after having embarrassed the government of that day by misleading or ambiguous statements, after defeating by obstruction the Remedial Bill, after having ousted Sir Charles Tupper, Sir Mackenzie Bowell and all friends by an alliance with the fanatical element, Mr. Laurier became the leader of the government ; and then, unexampled treason, he allowed his friend Mr. Greenway, to carry out his infamous plot against our fellow countrymen and co-religionists.

Mr. Taillon then drew attention to Mr. Laurier's tour in Ontario. Sir Wilfrid seemed to say to the fanatics of that province : 'True I was so unfortunate as to displease you in the Transvaal matter, but remember how I pleased you in the Manitoba school matter.'

Moreover, Mr. Laurier has done nothing but sacrifice the French race since he has become prime minister. First of all he has reduced to two the number of French Canadian ministers and Mr. Tarte complained of it at St. Vincent de Paul. He has sacrificed the Acadians by replacing Hon. J. O. Arsenault by an English speaking senator ; he did the same thing in appointing a judge. So much so that l''Evangelien,' a Liberal paper, complained bitterly about it.

More than that, the persecutors of our race in Manitoba have been feasted and rewarded by Mr. Laurier and his friends. Greenway was banquetted when he came to Montreal ; Martin was introduced to the speaker of the House of Commons by Mr. Laurier; Sifton is now a colleague of Messrs. Laurier and Tarte in the cabinet; Mr. Wade, a Winnipeg lawyer, Greenway's accomplice, is now an official of the Laurier government in the Yukon.

Mr. Taillon then pointed out that Mr. Laurier had been false to all his pledges. He had increased the expenditure and the debt which he had promised to reduce; he had not altered the protective tariff of which every vestige was to disappear and Mr. Joe Martin had reproached him publicly with deceiving the people.

Hon. Mr. Taillon explained that if the country was prosperous to-day the fact was due less to Mr. Laurier's policy than to good harvests and to different other circumstances over which the government had no control.

He closed by a warm appealing to the labouring population, tricked by the Liberal party in a manner which called for retributive justice.

The speaker received a genuine ovation as he took his seat.

Before closing, the chairman announced that at an early date a special meeting would be called, at which most of the speakers would be workmen.

The chairman also invited the electors of St. James division to attend the brilliant inaugural meeting of the junior Conservative club which will take place at the Monument National on Tuesday, the 21st instant. Hon. Mr. Flynn and most of the Conservative leaders will attend.

I have in my hand the plan for publishing a French newspaper, which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier knows quite well, and which after having read it, he said was a marvel both of intellectuality and of administrative genius. I have now to read to the House further certificates of the competency and the high qualifications of Mr. Charlier as a translator :

Ottawa, 28th March, 1905.

To the Chairman of the Debates Committee.

Dear Sir,—I hear that it has become necessary to appoint a second proofreader to the Debates staff of the Commons.

You would please me by appointing to that position Mr. Charlier, journalist, of Montreal, whom I know to be thoroughly competent.

I hope you will do all you can in favour of this candidate.

Yours truly,

R. PREFONTAINE.

I insisted on having a more mandatory order from the late Minister of Marine. Here it is :

(Translation.)

Honoré Gervais, Esq., M.P.,
Chairman of the Debates Committee,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

My Dear Gervais,—I specially recommend to you Mr. Edouard Charlier, journalist, for the position of proofreader to the French Debates staff which has been talked about for a while. To my knowledge, Mr. Charlier has all the necessary qualifications to discharge those duties in a proper manner.

Yours truly,

R. PREFONTAINE.

(Translation.)

Honoré Gervais, Esq., M.P.,
Chairman of the Debates Committee,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—You ask me whether I believe that Mr. Charlier would be a good translator on the Debates staff. I say yes, and I rely on facts, Mr. Charlier having, this year, translated in a satisfactory manner about fifty pages of 'Hansard.'

I have the honour to be,

Yourst truly,

(Signed.) WILFRID LAROSE,
Chief Translator.

Then the first appointment of Mr. Charlier was made, and he proved to be a first-class proof-reader, because for the first time in the history of the 'Hansard' of the House of Commons, within four days after the date of prorogation all the proofs had been read and all the printing matter had been delivered to the King's Printer, just because Mr. Charlier had been added to the translation staff. I ask leave to read the following certificate of Dr. Dawson, the King's Printer :

Ottawa, July 26, 1905.

Hon. R. Préfontaine,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Every line of the English Debate has been translated into French and the proofs have been corrected and are, except 15 galleys, now in my hands. This is the first time that this work has been done so quickly and it is largely due to the improvement in the proof-reading which has been recently introduced by the Hansard committee and carried out by the appointment of a new proof-reader Mr. Edouard Charlier.

Yours truly,

S. E. DAWSON,

King's Printer and Controller of Stationery.

Then there was some undue interference from some quarter, and the good work which had been started years ago at my instigation has been handicapped and has been left unfinished. If the Debates Committee had been given a free hand in the supervision of the reporting, translating and printing of the Official Debates, there would be no complaints against our committee today, and within twenty-four hours after the publication of the unrevised English edition, there would be a French edition of the Debates for distribution throughout the province of Quebec. But the remarks on that point I reserve until the third report of the committee will come up for adoption.

Now, it is said that Mr. Charlier has been convicted of libel. That is true ; but, Mr. Speaker, please listen to the circumstances of the case. I may say at the outset that there are now sitting in this parliament at least five members and senators who have been in jail either for libel or contempt of court. In that there is nothing dishonourable, nothing to complain of ; because these questions of libel and contempt of court are differently appreciated according to the condition of mind that prevails in different ages. What was a criminal libel in 1840 is considered now to be a subject of free discussion in all the newspapers of the land, because freedom of speech is greater or smaller according to the condition of mind of each age. I may add, as being much in favour of Mr. Charlier the following explanation : When he was convicted in the Assize Court of defamatory libel, the late Hon. Mr. Justice Wurtele asked Mr. Charlier, who was the actual author of the article which was complained of, adding should he divulge such name he would be given liberty. Mr. Charlier said : 'I cannot disclose the name ; I prefer to go to jail.' Then the late Mr. Justice Wurtele said : 'All right ; if you do not want to divulge the name of the actual author, I will pass sentence upon you.' It speaks strongly in favour of Charlier ; there are not many men among my compatriots or among the other citizens of this country who are ready to go to jail just for the sake of standing firm and keeping secret the name of a man who has written something in a newspaper. Charlier said : I accept the responsibility of all that has been published in my paper ; I have been found guilty, I suffer for it,—and then he was sentenced. There is not much to be said upon this. Instead of impugning his character we should praise him because there is so little courage in our day. And, Mr. Speaker, my statement is borne out by the great organ of the member for Jacques Cartier, 'Le Rappel.' When he was sounding the bugle to bring back all his followers, the lost recruits, he established that great newspaper, 'Le Rappel.'

Mr. MONK. I must take exception to what my hon. friend says ; I have no organ and never had any organ.

Mr. GERVAIS. At any rate in the number of 'Le Rappel,' dated Sunday, April 3, 1904, I find a beautiful article upon Mr. Monk headed in large capital letters 'Mr. Monk.'

Mr. F. D. Monk has just raised once more in parliament the most important question of the turnpike roads. He was courting a sure defeat when butting against the stubbornness of our narrow minded ministers, but it matters not as we do not expect the opposition members to win victory, but——

There is a long article in French in which it is said that Mr. Monk has raised once more the great and very new question of the abolition of the Montreal island toll gates. Then in the same article I find:

(Translation.)

The electors of the county of Jacques-Cartier are justly proud of their representative in the Commons. When electing him, they intended to entrust him with their own as well as with the country's interests. Mr. Monk did not deceive their expectations. Nobody else has in so short a time run such a distinguished and fruitful career. His self-devotion and his eagerness for work form a strange contrast with the laziness and selfishness of too many members from the province of Quebec.

Mr. SPEAKER. I can hardly see how this relates to the subject under discussion.

Mr. GERVAIS. I bow to the decision of the chair ; my attention was taken for a moment from the regular debate. I wish to quote an article from 'Le Rappel,' an article relating to Mr. Charlier. When I said that Mr. Charlier went to jail for a compatriot who had written the article incriminated, I spoke the truth. Here is what 'Le Rappel' said about it on the same date :

(Translation.)

1. We must first state that the chief culprit in this case, that is the wretched and cowardly writer of that libellous article knew the proper time to hide himself. His name, which Mr. Charlier refused to mention, has not been disclosed before the court. The name, however, is known; it is whispered everywhere and it will soon, let us hope, be published abroad.

'Le Rappel' says : We have to remark, first of all, that Charlier is not the guilty party. We know who wrote the article. Charlier has been too frank and too true to his friends to divulge the name, but we hope before long the culprit will be brought before the court.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman think it is always a merit to shield the culprit?

Mr. GERVAIS. No, it is not always a merit, but it is not always a sign of demerit. Many men who have suffered on the scaffold have made England free. The hon. gentleman will admit that the men who imposed Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights, the men who made England free, went to the scaffold, almost every one of them.

Mr. LANCASTER. Not for other people's crimes.

Mr. GERVAIS. It is a question of fact. If you read the history of the great quo warranto writ you will find that the sacrifice of the men of those earlier days was for the advantage of their neighbours of this time.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has said that Mr. Charlier has been charged with blackmailing. That charge was tried once, there was a disagreement of the jury after one of the most ferocious trials, and then a nolle prosequi was entered because no conviction could be secured against him. I think in all fairness the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) should withdraw such a charge as he has brought before this House. I have nothing to say about the merits of the charges against Mr. Charlier. The jury has passed upon them. From the point of view of morality, after all nothing has been proved against Mr. Charlier's character. If you look at his competency, his capacity, his capability, everything has been proved in the most conclusive way. He is a Bachelor of Letters and Science of the University of France, and any one of my fellow-citizens who knows anything about education, university degrees and diplomas and sheep skins knows the value of a university degree granted by the University of France. There are not ten men in Canada holding such a diploma. There are not five men in Canada able to translate fluently ancient Greek, modern Greek, Portuguese, Spanish, Italian and English, and now when the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) wants the Debates Committee to make further inquiries about the capacity and capability of this man to be a translator, I think he wants to joke and laugh at the members of this House.

In regard to the question of dishonesty—I repeat that nothing has been proved against Mr. Charlier. It is true he has been convicted for another's crime, for the crime of a gentleman who is highly considered and esteemed. It is true he has been convicted, but there is no disgrace in being convicted under such circumstances. We in the Debates Committee knew at the time of the drafting of the report all the circumstances of the case and the Debates Committee made their report after due knowledge having been conveyed to them and knowing all the circumstances of the case.

I say that the fourth report of the committee should stand as it has been affirmed and confirmed and concurred in by this House—in good faith on my behalf I pledge my word, openly, without any restriction or limitation, having communicated the report to whom the report was to be communicated. Under these circumstances I appeal to both sides of the House to support the Debates Committee, not to handicap their work, but to help them all through in order that their work may be made more efficient and more useful for the benefit of the public in general. I have been trying to do my duty as chairman of the Debates Committee. I have been trying to be fair, just and honest to both sides of this House, and I hope that my Debates Committee will be left unhandicapped, will be left free, being only the servant of the House of Commons. I ask that no internal economy commission policy should be framed to interfere with the good work of the Debates Committee. For the official reporters and official translators, for all time to come, should remain under the guidance and rule—the exclusive guidance and rule—of the House of Commons. We should not make the official reporters and official translators subservient to the dominant party, the tools and servants of the government. But for the benefit of everybody in the land, for the benefit of every member of this House, on the opposition side as well as on the government side, these officers should remain as they are, the servants only of the House of Commons as a whole. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the motion be rejected and that our report stand confirmed.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I think I owe it to the House to express the views which I have individually formed with regard to the motion now under discussion. Some days ago, the Debates Committee made a report to this House which was adopted on the same day that it was presented. This was not exactly regular, for, in such cases, it is usually required that notice be given. However, as is often the case in the despatch of the business of the House, the strict technicality of the rule was not observed. Exception is taken to-day. When the motion for adoption of the report was made, no exception was taken, and the report was adopted accordingly. When attention was called to the matter, some days later, I believe, I took the ground that if there was a feeling that the motion had been carried as the result of surprise, the report should be sent back to the committee on reason therefor being shown. I have listened to the motion and speech of my hon. friend for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and the speech of the chairman of the Debates Committee, my hon. friend from St. James, Montreal (Mr. Gervais). The motion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, as I understand it, is to send the report back to the Committee of the House in order to examine into the qualifications of Mr. Charlier to see whether or not he is qualified for the position to which he has been promoted.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there not another question—as to the necessity for the appointment ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That has been considered by the committee, and, for my part, when the report of a committee recommends a certain course, I take the ground, that the report should be maintained unless some strong reason to the contrary is given. Now, the discussion has been confined simply to the qualification of Mr. Charlier ? If anything else has been dealt with, I have not apprehended it, and I have followed the debate closely. Mr. Charlier, I understand, has been an officer of this House for a number of years. I understand that he has been a proof-reader under the Debates Committee and has occupied that position for four or five years. I understand also that his qualifications as a translator are not questioned, on the contrary, I understand that his competency is more than admitted—that no man could be found more competent than he to translate from French into English or English into French, being familiar with both languages. But, I understand, a question is raised as to the moral qualifications of Mr. Charlier. Now, if it were proposed to take him for the first time into the employ of this House, if he were coming from abroad to be made an officer of the House, there would be some occasion to present this view. But I have to observe—and if I am wrong in this I want to be corrected by the members of the Debates Committee, because I do not know the facts—I understand that Mr. Charlier has been in the service of the House as proof-reader for about five years. Is that so, or is it not so ? If it is, it seems to me that the point raised by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier is not a very strong one. Now, however, coming to the main facts which have been alleged by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, they have been reduced to two, and they should engage, for a moment, the attention of the House. It is contended that Mr. Charlier should not be given the position to which he has been promoted because he has been convicted of libel. I repeat, that position might well have been taken years ago when Mr. Charlier was first taken into the service of this House by the Debates Committee—for, as I understand, this offence was previous to that appointment. But I have to call the attention of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier and of the House to the fact that a conviction of libel does not carry with it any stigma ; the offence of libel is not one of those which carry with them any dishonour. On the contrary, sometimes it has been a merit to be convicted of libel, to denounce an abuse, to bring forward an accusation. I would remind my hon. friend that one of the best, most lovable and purest men of the nineteenth century, Cardinal Wiseman, was brought before the assizes on a charge of libel and convicted, and fined £500. But this was never a stigma upon the reputation of Cardinal Wiseman. I do not know the exact accusation of which Mr. Charlier was convicted, but I understand from the speech of my hon. friend from St. James (Mr. Gervais) that it is acknowledged that Mr. Charlier was not the writer of the article complained of for the publication of which he was convicted, but that he was the editor of the paper, and in manly fashion, took the course of submitting to conviction rather than give the name of his correspondent. I think that is much to his credit, and, in my judgment, a man who could do that is entitled to some consideration on the part of those who have to pass judgment on his conduct. Another point brought forward against Mr. Charlier is that there is a charge against him of blackmail. That is a very serious charge indeed, a very different charge from that of libel, for it carries with it a stigma. If any one of the servants of this House is under indictment for blackmail, I would certainly at least, give him a chance to clear his character. But I understand—and I knew nothing of this until to-day, and I take my information from the speech of the hon. member for St. James—that this charge of blackmail was brought against Mr. Charlier some years ago, that he stood his trial and that there was no verdict, and that after the trial had taken place and no verdict had been reached by the jury, a nolle prosequi was entered and so there is no indictment against him. All this took place five or six years ago. Now, I submit to the common sense and judgment and fairness of the House: Is it fair that charges of this nature should be brought against the character of a man and be held against him, not on the question of his appointment, for he was appointed years ago, but on the question of his promotion to an office for which he is otherwise competent. I speak of him as competent though as to that I have no information of my own, but I understand the facts are not disputed and his competency is not questioned. Under such circumstances it seems to me the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) might withdraw his motion.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). The position created by the motion of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier is not quite clear. The difficulty arises from the fact that two years ago when the Debates Committee made a report, the government, instead of accepting it, privately prevented it from being discussed in the House. The report recommended an increase of salary to the translators, and the government, instead of accepting the report, reversed the entire previous practice, and brought the translators under the control of the Commission on Internal Economy. That was a rebuke to the Debates Committee, it was the first time the government had done such a thing. I was astonished myself, because I knew that the right hon. gentleman had always been in favour of adopting the reports of committees unless there was something in them radically bad. Well, two years ago this report was withdrawn. A few days afterwards the Commission on Internal Economy, under your presidency I imagine, Mr. Speaker, granted to the translators the increase of salary which had been proposed by the committee; but instead of remaining as they were before, employees of the House, they became employees of the government, and they are not to-day on the same footing as they were when they were appointed in 1880. I need not say to the House that I, as a member of that committee, felt offended, and was almost inclined to resign, because I thought that the usefulness of the committee was gone. This year we received from the reporters a long standing request for an increase of salary.

Mr. GERVAIS. Let me remark to my hon. friend, as I said a few minutes ago, that the debate on this phase of the question will come up later as a couple of translators will have to be appointed before long to secure a quick edition of the French 'Hansard.'

Mr. BERGERON. I started out by saying that the position was not quite clear, and I am trying to show the House why it is not. The Debates Committee passed a unanimous resolution recommending an increase of salary to the reporters, who have been getting the same salary for, I think, twenty years. This report was presented to the House, but has never been accepted, nor even discussed. About three weeks after this report had been made, another meeting of the Debates Committee took place. I was not present at that meeting, because the notice was given in the evening, we had been sitting here very late, and I did not get my notice until next morning, and the meeting was called for ten o'clock. But here is where I think the situation is somewhat confused. At that meeting, the recommendation which is now the subject of discussion, was made. The report was presented to the House at three o'clock and went through immediately. My right hon. friend will remember that he has always objected to that, he has taken the ground that the report should lie on the table for two or three days as a notice; and this is the reason, if I understand rightly, why the hon. member for Jacques Cartier is making his motion to send that report back to the committee to be reconsidered. Now my right hon. friend will remember further, that objection was then taken that the adoption of this report was contrary to the course which had been previously followed by the government. Now the government also said: Whenever you bring in a report involving expenditure of money for an increase of salaries, we have decided to take the ground that such expenditure must be initiated by the government. Therefore they have changed the policy that has been followed since 1879, because since 1879 the recommendations of the Debates Committee for increases of salaries have always been accepted by this House. Now the other day without any notice at all, a recommendation of the committee was made for a new salary. It is no use denying that it was a new salary; the Minister of Finance said he had been told there was no increase. Well, he was under a false impression, because it is an increase. Mr. Charlier was a proof-reader, and by that report he becomes a translator at a salary of $2,000 a year. We appointed a new man, and it seems to me the position has been created for no other purpose than to give it to this man. It is not a question whether Mr. Charlier is a good French translator or not, I believe he is a very good one; but he becomes translator, and another man is appointed to replace him. Now is there not here an inconsistency on the part of the government? Are we going to accept a report of the Debates Committee recommending a new salary of $1,500, and are we going to refuse the request of the reporters because it involves an expenditure of money? Certainly there is a contradiction. Now I am going to support the motion of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier that the report be sent back to the committee for reconsideration. My own opinion is that we do not need another translator. I have been told by the translators themselves that they do not need another man. The demand for another man does not come from them, but it comes from another source; and I hope before the session is over we will have an opportunity of discussing that question. There are translators enough. As I say, I am going to vote to send the report back to the committee. My opinion is that the majority of the committee will not sanction the appointment of a new translator, if I may judge from the conversations I have had with some of the members. I am going to vote for the motion of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier in order that the question may be discussed again, because this is undoubtedly the creation of a new policy on the part of the government.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria). As a member of the Debates Committee, and possibly the one instrumental in moving this appointment, I desire to explain the circumstances. At meeting after meeting of the committee my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) had been complaining of the French translation. Complaints have been rife from time immemorial about delay in the French translation. In order to expedite matters this appointment was recommended, and I felt it my duty, as representing the English speaking part of the committee, not to dissent from what was desired by the French speaking members of the committee. With the exception of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who was perfectly within his right, it was the opinion of the committee that this appointment should be made. Accordingly the motion was made, the appointment was carried out and we heard nothing about any objection of this kind. It was known that he had been reported upon most favourably by the King's Printer, and this is the first time that I have heard a word against him. We thought that we were doing a good service, that we were facilitating the French translation. We brought the matter before the House and I have heard nothing this morning which would influence me in the slightest against supporting the original proposition. Certainly no suit for libel would prevent me from supporting a man, because the very best men in newspaper work in the world, have been indicted for libel. I have been in that honourable position myself, Sir, and I have always succeeded in vindicating myself. I am told that the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has also been in the same box; I was not aware of it.

There is another aspect of the case which has been presented by the hon. member for Beauharnois with which I heartily agree. The internal economy commission took out of the hands of the Debates Committee, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Beauharnois some time ago, the right to recommend an increase in the salaries of the 'Hansard' reporters. In other words, they said: We are willing to receive your recommendations, but we are not willing to give you the authority which has been delegated to the Debates Committee from time immemorial by the House. I do not know the details of the matter, but if that be the case, I think there has been a serious mistake made, and I am sure that it only needs to be brought to the attention of the right hon. the First Minister to have it rectified. The debates reporters and translators are the servants of the House and not the servants of the government. I am satisfied that when the right hon. the First Minister looks into the matter he will see that that is the proper view of the case. As far as I am concerned, I do not see that the House will be justified in referring this report back to the committee for reconsideration.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not want to take part in the discussion except on one single point. I am going to vote for the resolution becauseI think the report has been adopted under a misapprehension by the House. Under all the circumstances it went through very hurriedly. We had the assurance of the hon. the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) that there was no cost or charge involved. Well, it is plain that it is the creation of a new translator and that there is a charge involved.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has not the Debates Committee from time immemorial made similar recommendations and have they not been adopted?

Mr. FOSTER. I hear from gentlemen who are members of the Debates Committee that an additional translator is not necessary. I think, under these circumstances, that we had better send the report back to the Debates Committee and let them investigate the question. That is the reason why I propose to vote for the resolution.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Just a word as a member of the committee who was present at the meeting when this question was discussed. I have to say that I agree in the main with what the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) has said. We did have notice of this meeting in question and some of the members attended the meeting. The matter was fully discussed and, as far as I am concerned, I do not profess to have any very great knowledge of the question under discussion, but I was impressed with the complaints which have been made from time to time and more particularly by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) as to the delays which occurred in getting out the French edition of the official report of the debates. It was the complaints of the hon. member for Beauharnois that induced me to take a favourable view of the man named and of the recommendation for additional assistance in that regard. I beg to say that I supported, on the faith of the explanations which were made, the resolution moved by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton and which is now before the House. I may say too that the matter was fully discussed that morning in the committee. There was no evidence before the committee that no additional appointment was necessary. On the contrary there was abundant evidence before the committee that additional assistance was required and that, taken in connection with the evidence that we have had from time to time, for the last few months, convinced me that such an appointment was necessary. Therefore, in so far as I am concerned, I do not see any reason why this report should go back to the committee.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want the House to be under the impression that I wanted to secure the appointment of more translators. That is not the question at all. That has never been discussed in the House. When the report was placed before the House I said that the trouble was not due to the lack of translators, that if you had five hundred translators you would not get the French 'Hansard' sooner. It is due to another cause and it is not due to the fact that we have not enough translators.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. member for Calgary (Mr. M. S. McCarthy) took identically the view which the other members of the committee took upon that occasion.

Mr. MONK. I just wish to say a few words in explanation. The suggestion of the right hon. the Prime Minster (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that this motion should be withdrawn has rather surprised me, because it is a motion which is not made without serious reflection. It is based upon the distinct statement made to this House by the right hon. the First Minister himself that the House had been surprised in this matter by not knowing that it was creating a new charge upon the revenue and that the report ought certainly to be reconsidered. To-day the right hon. gentleman suggests to me to withdraw a motion which I based upon that statement of his. I have already pointed out that the report was adopted on the day following that upon which it was presented. The motion was also based upon a statement made by the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) on behalf of the government that he had supported the motion for the adoption of the report on the understanding and the assurance given to him by the chairman of the committee (Mr. Gervais) that this report involved no additional charge upon the revenue. It seems to me that under these circumstances I was justified in making that motion for a reconsideration of the report and that there would be a failure to fulfil my duty if I withdraw it upon the statements which have been made here.

Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the chairman of the committee, in the very long speech which he saw fit to make to the House on this question, did not suggest that I had any motive in making this motion. I had none at all excepting that I did not believe that the appointment was properly and regularly made and I incline very much to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) that we do not require additional translators. What we require is an efficient staff and I am bound to say, from what I have seen since I have been a member of this House, that considering the way in which the members of the staff fulfil their duties, and the accuracy and the rapidity with which they make their translations, I do not think they are sufficiently paid. Taking that view, I think it is very absurd, when there is no demand no request, no allegation on their part that they are insufficiently manned, to crowd the staff of translators with new names, and it will be almost impossible, if that system is adopted, and when they do not ask for additional strength upon their staff, to give them the remuneration to which they are entitled for the important services which they render. I would like to say a word upon the question of the literary qualifications of Mr. Charlier. After hearing the statement of the hon. member for St. James I must, to a certain extent, correct the statement I made that I did not know Mr. Charlier. I do not know him, excepting that I do believe that upon one occasion that gentleman came to my office, as stated to the House by the hon. member for St. James, but I know nothing of him whatever. I also desire to say that as a general rule we accept too easily in this country newcomers and we give them government positions in the province of Quebec and also on the staff of the federal government without sufficient inquiry. Positions on the translators staff should, as far as possible, be reserved for our own people. We have competent men in this country, quite as able as Mr. Charlier, whatever may be his literary qualifications, and we should give the preference to our own people, rather than give way, too readily, as we do, to the blandishments of those newcomers who are cosmopolitan in their manner and who are able to insinuate themselves into the good graces of the Canadian people.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How long has this officer been on the 'Hansard' staff as proof-reader.

Mr. MONK. I do not know.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Five years.

Mr. GERVAIS. Mr. Charlier has been working on the translating staff for four years and he has proved a very efficient proof-reader. I have just read a certificate from Mr. Larose, the chief translator, stating that Mr. Charlier has already proved his efficiency as a translator.

Mr. MONK. I do not question that. I have heard of Mr. Charlier as a writer and the certificates given to the House sufficiently prove what I never had any doubt about, that he is efficient as a writer of the French language. But I base my motion on the statement made by two members of the government that if there had been any surprise that report would be reconsidered. I do not discuss the technical question whether a report adopted as this was can properly impose a new charge upon the revenue. I think myself that the imposition of any new charge must come from the government. If that principle had been adhered to in this case none of these difficulties would have arisen. Although I have not the acquaintance with Mr. Charlier that my hon. friend (Mr. Gervais) seems to think, I feel that I have rendered him a considerable service inasmuch as I have led the Prime Minister to compare him to that most eminent divine Cardinal Wiseman. It is certainly a statement of importance and would benefit Mr. Charlier for the Prime Minister to say that in certain phases of his existence in this country, Mr. Charlier bears traces of resemblance to Cardinal Wiseman. That is not the way in which I understood it, nor are the circumstances in which Cardinal Wiseman found himself at all the same as those which arose in the case of Mr. Charlier. Mr. Charlier was very severly condemned by the courts for an abominable libel upon a most respectable clergyman of Montreal. It was not one of those cases of political libels or of libels where the imposition of a fine reflects no serious discredit upon the party condemned. This was a most unjustifiable and gross libel and it was for that reason the court condemned to jail the party accused and found guilty. As regards the blackmailing charge, that of course entirely distinguishes this case from the case of Cardinal Wiseman to which my right hon. friend has referred. Did I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Gervais) to assure the House that a 'nolle prosequi' had been filed in that case ?

Mr. GERVAIS. Nothing has been done since the first trial in 1903, in which there was a disagreement of the jury and a 'nolle prosequi' was entered before he was appointed as proof-reader. So I have been told.

Mr. MONK. That may to a certain extent mitigate the matter but we know the jury disagreed in that case and that 'nolle prosequis' are filed every day where the Crown does not find it possible to obtain sufficient proof to establish guilt. Did I understand my hon. friend to say that a 'nolle prosequi' had been entered ?

Mr. GERVAIS. I was so informed.

Mr. MONK. That may be the case, but it was a very grave accusation and the jury disagreed. I do believe that my motion ought to pass, not only for the reason that Mr. Charlier's appointment was irregularly made, but also for the reason given by my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) who is a member of that committee. We have an efficient staff ; there is no doubt that the system of making additional appointments to that staff when they are not asked for by the staff itself seriously interferes with the others getting that remuneration which they deserve. It is alleged by one of the members of the committee that no additional help is required on the translating staff, and I think this is the proper moment to go fully into that question.

House divided on motion of Mr. Monk.

QUESTIONS.

CUSTOMS COLLECTIONS AT RIMOUSKI.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Bergeron—asked:

How much in customs dues, from 1900 to 1907, inclusively, each year taken separately, has been collected at the custom-house of Rimouski?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). The customs duties collected at Rimouski during the years mentioned have been as follows:

Year ending June 30,	1900	$ 1,762 11
" " "	1901	626 18
" " "	1902	1,312 29
" " "	1903	7,524 45
" " "	1904	9,412 47
" " "	1905	16,365 23
" " "	1906	18,020 73
Nine months ending Mar. 31,	1907	10,737 14
Total		$65,760 60

ALL RED LINE—IRISH ROUTE.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Bergeron—asked:

1. Is the government opposed, in connection with the All-Red Line, to the proposed Irish route and the port of Blacksod being used?

2. Has the government authorized the High Commissioner for Canada in London to state that they were opposed to the said Irish route and to the port of Blacksod being used in connection with the All-Red Line?

3. Has the government authorized any one to represent its views to the British cabinet committee in connection with the proposed All-Red Line route?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. It is not the intention of the government either to oppose or to suggest any port in connection with the All-Red Line. This is a question which should be decided on purely business reasons and left altogether to the company which may undertake the service, the only condition to be insisted upon by the government being the service must be between the United Kingdom and Canada.

2. The government is not aware that the High Commissioner ever expressed any opinion on this subject otherwise than stated above.

3. Whilst the Prime Minister was in England last year he and the High Commissioner discussed the All-Red Line question with the British cabinet committee, and the Prime Minister has no doubt that Lord Strathcona has continued to do so.

NEW ICE-BREAKER.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Blain— asked:

What was the date of the signing of the contract for the building of a new ice-breaking steamer for the navigation of Northumberland straits with Messrs. Vickers, Sons & Maxim, Limited, of London, England, and when is the boat to be completed?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The contract has been sent to England to be signed by the contractors. The steamer is to be completed in ten months from the date of signing the contract.

DETROIT RIVER TUNNEL MATERIALS.

Mr. CLEMENTS—by Mr. Blain— asked:

1. What amount of materials of all kinds have been entered free of duty for the construction of the Detroit river tunnel?

2. What amount of duties have been paid to the government on the importation of materials of all kinds for the construction of said tunnel?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1. The total value of materials of all kinds entered free of duty for Detroit tunnel is $229,838.

2. Imported materials of all kinds for the construction of the Detroit river tunnel are free under tariff item 596.

FISHERY OFFICER AT PORT HOOD.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN asked:

1. Who is the fishery officer at Port Hood, in Inverness county?

2. Has the government ever been requested to remove him from office? If so, by whom?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. D. F. McLean.
2. No.

PORT HOOD HARBOUR WORKS.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN asked :

1. What is the width of the northern entrance to Port Hood harbour, in the county of Inverness, where the government proposes to close the same?
2. What is the estimated cost?
3. When did the government begin closing said entrance?
4. What engineers have, or have had charge of the work?
5. How often has the government's engineer visited the work since it was started?
6. What distance has already been closed and at what cost?
7. Does the government intend to complete the work by tender and contract? If so, when? If not, why?
8. Will the closing of said entrance obstruct navigation?
9. Has the government made any inquiry as to whether the construction of the work by slow stages, as heretofore, will divert the course of the tide currents, and cause the accumulation of sand to injuriously affect the anchorage in said harbour? If so, from whom and what information has the government received?
10. Has the government carried out all the recommendations of its engineers with respect to the work? If not, in what instances, and why?
11. Who is the foreman of construction work, and from whom does he receive his instruction?
12. Who is assistant foreman, and by whom was he recommended?
13. Is the government paying rent for land upon which part of the work has been constructed? If not, for what land has the government paid rent to one Isaiah Watts?
14. What plant has the government on said work, and what is the value thereof?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. 4,435 feet on line of work.
2. $215,000.
3. In July, 1903.
4. Mr. E. G. Millidge.
5. Twelve times.
6. (a) 1,297 feet. (b) $62,795.69.
7. Matter under consideration.
8. No.
9. No; the accumulation of sand will not injuriously affect the anchorage in said harbour.
10. The government has carried out the recommendations of the chief engineer.
11. (a) Jas. Macdonell. (b) From resident engineer.
12. Isaiah Watts. I am unable to state what recommendations were made, but I presume the appointment was made on the judgment of the minister after making all necessary inquiry as to his qualifications, this being the practice of the department.
13. No; land is rented from Isaiah Watts and John H. Murphy for use as a service ground for building and launching brush mattresses and repairing scows.
14. Two scows, four derricks, two anchors, chains, blocks, tools and some track, worth altogether about $1,000, and a donkey engine recently purchased for $400.

FINES FOR FISHING LOBSTERS, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. LEFURGEY—by Mr. Blain—asked :

1. Were any fines imposed for fishing lobsters after the season closed in 1907 in Prince county, Prince Edward Island?
2. If so, what are the names of those fined, if any, the amount of fine and the amount collected in each case?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Yes.

2. Name.	Fine imposed.	Fine collected.

RAILWAY COMMISSION COUNSEL, &c.

Mr. MACDONELL—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked :

1. What is the total amount of money expended by the government for counsel fees and other legal services rendered to the Board of Railway Commissioners, since the establishment of such board?
2. What is the amount already paid, and what is the total estimated expense for counsel fees and other legal services incurred or to be incurred by the government in respect of the express rates and charges now being investigated by the Railway Commission?
3. What is the amount already expended and the probable future expenditure for counsel fees and other legal services in connection with the telephone and telegraph investigation now before the Railway Commission regarding rates and charges?
4. Has the government considered the propriety and business advisability of appointing a permanent counsel or legal adviser to the Board of Railway Commissioners at a fair salary, who will devote his whole time to such purpose, and at all times be at the service of the commissioners and the public in connection with matters in which the public are interested, which from time to time come before the board?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. $1,057.50.
2. $6,425.40. The government is not in a position to state what the probable expenditure will be for counsel fees and other legal services in connection with express, telephones and telegraph cases now before the Board of Railway Commissioners, regarding rates and charges.
3. Answer to this question embodied in number two.
4. The appointment of such counsel has not yet been decided upon.

SIZE OF LOBSTERS, ST. JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. DANIEL—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

1. What is the minimum length of lobster allowed by law to be caught in the waters of St. John county, New Brunswick?
2. What is the minimum length of lobsters allowed by law to be caught in the waters of Charlotte county, New Brunswick?
3. If there is a difference, what is the reason for it?
4. Does the department intend to equalize the size in both counties? If not, why not?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Ten and one-half inches.
2. Nine inches.
3. When the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry into the lobster fishery (1898) were being considered and the size limits in different geographical areas were being established, although the commission recommended a nine inch limit for the whole Bay of Fundy, the demands from those largely interested called for a ten and one-half inch limit for the upper portion of the Bay of Fundy, including St. John county.
4. The question of the lobster fishery regulations generally is under consideration.

COAL MINING IN SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA.

Mr. AMES asked:

1. What companies or firms carrying on coal mining operations in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta made returns to the government during the last departmental year, as to the quantities of coal mined by them?
2. What was the total quantity of coal on which royalty was paid, and what was the amount of said royalty, during the same period?
3. What is the total area of coal lands held, having been acquired by purchase or lease, by the companies or firms referred to in paragraph one of this question?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Eureka Coal Mining Company; J. M Spangler and J. Lindner et al; Diamond Coal Company, Limited; Knee Hill Coal Company; Nichols and Bothamley; Gustave Zucht and Gustave Pachel; Pacific Coal Company; Walter Glenn and Raymond Preffer; Canada West Coal Company; William and B. K. Bullock and William Probert; West Canadian Collieries; International Coal and Coke Company; The Great West Coal Company of Canada, Limited; Peter Enzenauer, Amiel Steiner and Harley G. McCracken; Norman C. Butterfield and John A. Hislop.
2. Quantity mined 70,552 tons; Royalty paid $7,065.20.
3. 38,182·78 acres.

FEE ON FENCE POST PERMITS.

Mr. STAPLES—by Mr. W. J. Roche—asked:

Has the government received a memorial from the Union of Manitoba Municipalities asking for the removal of the fee on permits for fence posts from 4 to 1 cent, being the same as charged for the farmer's fee; and also the reduction of the fee on lumber from $3 to $1.50 to settlers?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). No such memorial has been received by the government.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When is it expected that the Civil Service Bill, now on the Order Paper, will be introduced? I wish to make the same inquiry in respect to the Bill concerning the Manitoba boundaries. Is it the intention of the government to bring down any legislation this session respecting the Hudson's Bay Railway? What other legislation, if any, not yet introduced, do the government intend bringing down this session?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). It is the intention of the government to introduce some legislation regarding the Hudson Bay Railway, and, probably, some assistance to other railways. It is the intention of the government also to present the Bill with regard to the civil service and the Bill with regard to the Manitoba boundaries at as early a date as possible. I have already observed that the first duty of the House at this moment is to give Supplies to carry on the business of the country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The introduction of the Civil Service Bill, so that members of the House could read it, would not interfere materially with Supply. However, that is for the right hon. gentleman himself to judge.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) whether or not he has brought down the statements respecting contracts for dredging which I asked for a few days ago ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. I laid them on the table.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) promised to give us a statement on Monday last, with respect to the number of troops who were going to attend at Quebec. Was that statement made ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, I did not make it. Perhaps it will be better when when we go into Supply. I have some statement to give then.

SUPPLY—DUTY ON LUMBER.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Some days ago I drew the attention of the House to the fact that the lumber industry of this country was very seriously depressed. I made the remark on that occasion that I would remind the government at a later date of the matter, and, possibly, if they failed to act, to see what could be done to induce them to take proper action. I would like to ask if the government have reached any conclusion as to coming to the relief of the lumber industry?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am sorry to say I cannot give my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) any answer to-day upon that point.

WHALE FISHERY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens). I desire to draw the attention of the government to a matter connected with the whale fishing industry of the province of British Columbia. In the Act respecting Fisheries and Fishing, it is provided that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries :

—may issue licenses to manufacture oil or other commercial product from whales and to employ boats or vessels in whale fishery, but no such license should issue until,—

(a) the minister has approved of the site of the factory which should not be within fifty miles of any other whale factory, or in such proximity to any inhabited place or places as in the opinion of the minister may cause danger or detriment to the public health.

I put a question on the Order Paper as to the licenses granted for the whale fishery in the province of British Columbia. In 'Hansard' of April 1, the question I asked and the answers thereto appear as follows :

1. To whom in British Columbia have whaling licenses been granted, (a) when were they granted, (b) for what waters, (c) for what term of years, (d) upon what terms and conditions, and (e) what moneys were received from such licenses in 1905, 1906 and 1907?

2. Are any moneys now due from such licenses? If so, from whom and how much?

3. What penalty was provided for not making use of privileges granted and what steps has the government taken to ascertain if the conditions have been complied with?

4. Can license be cancelled in case of non-user?

5. Have any applications for whaling licenses in British Columbia been made to and refused by the government? If so, from whom, for what waters, and why were they refused?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Pacific Whaling Company, May 5th, 1905, annual license ; Pacific Whaling Company, 11th of December, 1905, annual license; Pacific Whaling Company, 7th of December, 1906, annual license; Pacific Whaling Company, 7th of December, 1906, annual license; Dr. Francis Hall, 23rd of July, 1907, annual license, Pacific Whaling Company, 17th of September, 1907, annual license; George A. Huff, 7th of March, 1908, annual license.

(b) The licenses cover the operation of factories ashore and do not essay to cover water areas.

(c) Annual license.

(d) Under the terms and conditions of section 9 of the Fisheries Act, chapter 45 of revised statutes, 1906.

(e) 1905.. .. .. $1,000
1906.. 2,600
1907.. 3,800

2. No.

3. Unless factory is in operation within two years of granting first license, license will be cancelled. The supervision of the inspector of fisheries for the district.

4. Yes.

5. Yes, B. F. Pearson, of Halifax, Nootka Sound; C. H. Lugrin, of Victoria, Virago Sound, Rennell Sound and Tatsoo Harbour, Queen Charlotte islands; Andrew Halcross, of New Westminster, Maculay island; J. P. Livingstone, of Ottawa, Galiano island; George Mackie, of New Westminster, Aristazable island; Peter Birrell, Annieville, B.C., Sooke inlet; Alex. Ewen, of Lion island, Cape Beale; G. D. Brymer, of New Westminster, Skidegate; W. W. Forrester, of New Westminster, Takush harbour; Michael Hays, of New Westminster, Campbell island; E. A. Jakes, of Vancouver, Gulf of Georgia.

Applications not supported by fees and other necessary requirements.

J. O. Townsend, of Victoria, Campania island, Captain Magnesen, of Vancouver, Virago, Queen Charlotte islands.

Required distance did not obtain from nearest location licensed.

The law, as I have read it, distinctly states that the minister has power to grant licenses for whale factories within fifty miles of any other factory. It seems that the minister assumed that he had power under this Act to limit the granting of licenses to within one hundred miles of any other factory. The clause which required regulations to be made under the Fisheries Act is section 54, as follows :

54. The Governor in Council may, from time to time, make regulations:
(a) for the better management and regulation of the sea-coast and inland fisheries;
(b) to prevent or remedy the obstruction and pollution of streams;
(c) to regulate and prevent fishing;
(d) to prohibit the destruction of fish; and,
(e) to forbid fishing except under authority of leases or licenses.

There is nothing in that clause to entitle the minister to change the distance to from 50 to 100 miles. as it is said he has done. Whether that authority was given to him under an order in council or by departmental regulation does not make very much difference, because I believe such authority cannot be given him under the law. He may make regulations as provided under section 54, but he cannot change the distance named in the law. The minister states in the answers I have given that a man named Townsend applied for a license and it was refused because the application was 'not supported by fees and other necessary requirements.' I wish to tell the minister that when Mr. Townsend applied for this license, he paid the ordinary year's rent as provided by the regulation, and he also sent to the department the ordinary plans and specifications required by the law. But Mr. Townsend did not receive any license, because the department saw fit to give a monopoly of this whale fishing business to a favoured group of people in the province of British Columbia, namely, the Pacific Whaling Company.

They have, I believe, five or six licenses to-day in the province of British Columbia for whale fishing, they have practically a monopoly of the business. I would like to know why, in face of this fact, the minister refused to grant a license at a distance of fifty miles, and to make regulations that will apply to one hundred miles, and why he refuses a license to Mr. Townsend on a mere pretext, and then grants licenses to the Pacific Whaling Company and to other persons? In December, 1906, at the request of a friend of Mr. Townsend, Mr. Townsend got an option under the regulations for a whale fishing site. That option was granted on the 11th December, and Mr. Townsend had six months to complete his arrangements. The arrangements were, I believe, that he should pay one year's rent, and sign plans and specifications. On the 3rd of June, 1907, previous to the expiration of the six months for which he had an option, Mr. Townsend sent to the department the first year's rent, together with plans and specifications. There was no intimation from the department that these plans and specifications were not satisfactory. It is, I believe, for the department to define the limits within which the factory is to be erected. All that the applicant for the license has to do is to file plans and specifications showing what his intentions are, showing that he intends to meet the requirements of the law and of the regulations under the Act. This, Mr. Townsend states that he did, and he asked the department to define the limits, he asked the minister to advise him when these limits were defined. Mr. Townsend placed this matter in the hands of his attorneys in Victoria, and instructed the department at Ottawa to send an answer to his attorneys, because Mr. Townsend was frequently away, being captain of a steamer plying around the coast, and he thought it would be more satisfactory if he had an agent so that there might be no delay, and he asked the department to send to his agents in Victoria the answer to the request he had made, and to acknowledge the receipt of the money. It seems that the government did not by letter acknowledge the receipt of the first year's rent, but they intimated to a gentleman in Ottawa who called on the department in his behalf, that the plans and specifications had been received. Of course I do not complain that an oral reply was not sufficient for Mr. Townsend. This matter went on for some time. Mr. Townsend's agent met the minister on the 22nd June, 1907, and Mr. Townsend's agent in Victoria was informed that there was some objection to Mr. Townsend receiving the license, because the department thought that he intended to traffic in the license, and they wished, before granting the license, to make some inquiries, but they would give a decision the following week. Mr. Townsend, I may say, is like a good many other men who go into enterprises of this character, he did not have himself all the money that he needed. It required something like $100,000 to go into an undertaking of this kind, and so Mr. Townsend interested some friends in Victoria and elsewhere in British Columbia, in the undertaking, and he got a subscription of $40,000 or $50,000 from certain gentlemen to back him up. He also secured the interest in this matter of a firm——

Mr. BRODEUR. Let me ask the hon. gentleman a question at this point. Will he be good enough to tell me whether Mr. Townsend did not represent certain Norwegian gentlemen ?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I was coming to that. Mr. Townsend, as I say, had not the whole of the $100,000, he was not a rich man, though he was just as rich as most of the men who have gone into undertakings of this kind. It was necessary for him to interest other people in it, and he canvassed for shareholders, and got subscriptions to the amount of $40,000 or $50,000 in the province of British Columbia. He also interested a firm of Norwegians who do business in London, England, and they were willing to put up the balance of the amount, something like $60,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. Was not the majority of the capital then under the control of foreigners ?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Certainly it was foreign capital, but what difference does that make ? This country is advertising in every country in Europe for immigrants to come here, we are advertising in Norway and Sweden for men to come out here to engage in industries. This Norwegian gentleman had seen in the Norwegian papers that if he put his money into enterprises of this kind he would receive a great profit. But when this matter was mentioned to the government, the red flag was raised, and they told Mr. Townsend that if Norwegians were going to back him up with $50,000, they would have nothing to do with it. Is not that the position in which the government stands in respect to this matter? That is what the minister objects to, because the Norwegian was willing to back Mr. Townsend up, the government would not grant him a license to engage in the whale fishing industry. But that is not the real reason. The real reason is because the minister wished to give this license to his friend, to a gentleman who had organized this Pacific Whaling Company in 1905. On the 5th of May, 1905, they got a license ; on the 11th of December, 1905, another license ; on the 7th of December, 1906, another license. Three days after Mr. Townsend made his application, on the 17th of September, 1907, they granted this same Pacific Whaling Company another license, and they also granted licenses to other gentlemen after they had refused one to Mr. Townsend, and while Mr. Townsend had fulfilled the requirements of the law. What business was it of the department that Mr. Townsend was securing the interest of other men in this enterprise ? He was not selling his interest, he was not trafficking in the business. There is not a particle of evidence in the possession of the government to show that Mr. Townsend had applied for this license in order to sell it to Norwegians, or to any other individual or company. He was acting in his own interest, and in the interest of the people in British Columbia whom he had interested in the enterprise. There was considerable correspondence between the department and Mr. Townsend, and Mr. Townsend's representatives in Victoria, Messrs. Barnard & Robertson. On the 22nd June, 1907, these gentlemen received a letter from their agents in Ottawa to the following effect :

When, therefore, the question of defining the limits under the Townsend option arose, it was impossible for the chief clerk to act unless he could have the special Whaling Company fix its limits at Banks Island and he at once telegraphed for such information as would enable him to properly consider the Townsend applicants and fix the proper limits for the same.

Here was an admission from the government that they would as soon as the Banks Island limits were defined grant the aplication of Mr. Townsend. He goes on further:

It then appearing to the department that Captain Townsend was not acting in his own interests but with the view of selling his rights to other people, which is entirely contrary to the practice of the department and the wishes of the minister, nothing could be done until the minister returned.

He goes on to say :

The minister is here to-day and the chief clerk of the Fisheries Branch, as well as the deputy minister have been going into the matter with him, and so far as we can learn the present position is that no action will be taken until the minister is clear upon the question of whether he is dealing with bona fide parties or speculators. At least this is the inference which we have drawn from our attendance to-day.

No intimation is given to Mr. Townsend in order that he may clear the matter up. Mr. Townsend was not aware that any great obstacles could be put in his way to prevent him from obtaining this license, the same as any other citizen of British Columbia or any other party, no matter whether he was a citizen of Canada or not, might obtain a license. Mr. Townsend's answer was this :

Ask the minister what assurance he requires as to financial ability to build and operate at once. Are prepared to thoroughly satisfy him as to this.

Here, on June 24, when the intimation was given to Mr. Townsend that these obstacles were to be put in the way he replied that he was willing to set aside these obstacles and to satisfy the department of his ability to build and operate this factory. He was able to secure the money and there was no reason why he should not receive his license. On June 24, the agents of Mr. Townsend wrote to Ottawa as follows :

We cannot understand this matter. First of all we inquired and are told that licenses have either been granted or promised covering the whole coast and that Townsend is one of the grantees.

They had been told that Mr. Townsend was one of the grantees and that the whole coast was covered by licenses.

Townsend also produced a letter to the effect that he is to get the license and has until June 11 to make good. We are perfectly well aware that Townsend himself has not the means to build the plant. The department is also probably aware of this.

This intimation was made to the department by Mr. Townsend's agent in the city of Ottawa on June 24. He told them plainly that Mr. Townsend was not able to put himself within the requirements of the law without the assistance of others and still the department goes on granting licenses. The letter continues :

The department granted licenses to C. H. Lugrin and others who are also financially unable to carry out the terms of the Act personally. What does the department mean by granting licenses to these people if they are not to be allowed to take others in with them. We have people here who are able to finance the undertaking and are prepared to go ahead at once. We have wired that we will give any assurance that the minister requires and hope you will see the minister at once and find out what is necessary to satisfy him on this point.

The minister saw the agents of Mr. Townsend on June 26, and the agents write to Mr. Townsend's representatives in Victoria as follows :

We have seen the acting minister but he has very little to say except that there is a rival company making a strong effort to obtain this license.

Here is the secret of the whole business. After Mr. Townsend had been negotiating with them for six months, after he had got an option, after he was told that he was one of the grantees of the whole coast, the information was given that a rival company was applying for the same ground.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Who is the writer?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Mr. Townsend's agent in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. What is his name ?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. The hon. gentleman knows the name ; I need not give it to him. The letter continues :

We have your telegram of the 24th instant, as follows: 'Ask minister what assurance he requires as to financial ability to build and operate at once. Are prepared to thoroughly satisfy him as to this,' and in reply telegraphed you this morning as follows: 'Minister and department have no definite answer, whale fishing license rival company making strong bid. Who are you acting for? '

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I have no recollection of the conversation to which that letter refers. Will the hon. gentleman not give me the name ? I cannot remember.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Mr. McGivern. Another letter from Mr. Townsend's agent in Ottawa to his agent in Victoria, reads as follows :

Ottawa, Ontario, July 4, 1907.

We have seen the acting minister this morning and he has some messages in regard to the matter now before him and is awaiting some further information which is reported as coming from the west.

He states that protests were entered against the proposed action of Captain Townsend in transferring his license to a Norwegian Company, and this matter must be a matter of investigation before any definite answer can be given.

The minister will see that he made some investigation. He told Mr. Townsend's agent on July 12, that he had made some investigation. Mr. Townsend's agent wrote from Victoria to Ottawa on July 12, as follows :

We do not know that there is anything much that we can do in reply except that it appears to us that it is idle for the department to say that they expected Townsend or Kelly either, for that matter to finance the undertaking themselves when they granted them licenses.

Townsend is interesting capital, is to be a director of the company in which from $40,000 to $50,000 of the stock will be held in Victoria. He is doing nothing different to what Captain Balcom did when he got the licenses which were transferred to the Pacific Whaling Company, i.e., getting other people in with him to put up the money.

There is no doubt but that the factory will be commenced as soon as the license is granted and will be rushed to completion and be ready for business by the spring of next year. We are willing to give the department full assurance of this, but they evidently don't wish to be assured, as they refused to tell us what assurance they require. Under such circumstances the contention that the licenses are being asked for for speculative purposes is absurd in the extreme.

The fact of the matter is that the Pacific Whaling Company wished to hog the whole coast of British Columbia. They have now all licenses but two, viz., Townsend's and Kelly's and if they can prevent Townsend interesting other people than themselves in the rest, they will tie him up so that he must come to their terms.

Here is the probable reason why the government have refused to grant this license to Mr. Townsend. They had the assurance of Mr. Townsend, who is a respectable man, that he was not trafficking in his license, but because others objected to the granting of a license to Mr. Townsend the government refused to give it to him. Mr. Townsend wrote to the Hon. Mr. Templeman, acting minister, on the 1st of July, 1907, explaining the whole situation, and I think that explanation should have been sufficient to show the minister that Mr. Townsend was genuine in his application for his license and that he was just as much, if not more, entitled to it than this Whaling Company. He had spent a lot of money endeavouring to interest other people in the enterprise, he was a poor man, and finally he was turned down for no reason at all except the alleged reason—which Mr. Townsend says is untrue—that he was trafficking in the license. He wrote to Mr. Templeman on the 1st of July, 1907, from Victoria, as follows:

Victoria, British Columbia, July 1, 1907.

Hon. William Templeman,
Acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries,

Dear Sir,—On June 3, I mailed to the Department of Marine and Fisheries through Mr. Barnard the plans and specifications along with $800 for the first years' license for the whaling license allotted to me in the vicinity of Campania island and so far we have only an acknowledgment of the money. I have learned since then that great opposition has been made to the granting of the license to me by the Pacific Whaling Company on the ground that I am trafficking with the license, and because it may interfere with the Pacific Whaling Company at Banks island. Holding the option from the minister of the department for six months given to me, so that I could perfect my plans, I have worked hard and spent considerable money on it, working in good faith that if I succeeded in establishing a reliable company that there would be no trouble in getting the license. We have good, strong company and there will be from forty to fifty thousand dollars worth of shares available for subscription in Victoria, most of which is already spoken of. The trouble with the Pacific Whaling Company is this: They wish to control the whole sea coast of British Columbia, and they came near doing that now. Should they succeed in getting this license and one other, they will control the whole coast, and that will be a very large monopoly. The same men who are at the head of the whaling industry, have been largely interested in the sealing industry for years, and they have protested long and loud against the monopoly of the American Fur Company, and now they are doing their best to control the sea coast of British Columbia. As to trafficking with the license I could not handle it alone, but will have a large financial interest in the company and will be one of the directors. Captain Balcom alone did not supply the money for his undertaking. He sold stock wherever he could and was very glad to do so, and it came precious near falling through at that.

It can hardly be supposed that either Captain Balcom, Captain Kelly or myself could have built and equipped a factory with money supplied by ourselves. All I ask is, that I am granted the same privileges as have been accorded to Captain Balcom to form his company, interesting others as well as myself to enable me to hold the factory. I am prepared to furnish any reasonable assurance that you may ask that the factory will be built, and in operation within one year from this date, if the license is promptly issued, the cost to be not less than one hundred thousand dollars and if necessary, provided a cash guarantee to that effect.

I may say here, that the Pacific Whaling Company through one of its agents made me offer to buy my license and I refused to consider it, which largely accounts for the opposition they are making to my application. I am sure you will agree with me that this province is in need of all the industry it can get especially as large a one as this will be, as a large amount will be spent annually for wages. I have no wish to say anything about the Pacific Whaling Company, but I do wish fair play, as I have money in this affair, that I can ill afford to lose, and according to the option given me by the minister I never imagined there would be any doubt about the license. I have met with every success in my financial arrangements, and only await for the license to be issued to commence work. We do not wish to tie the license up for two or three years, but wanted to commence work immediately. We have had a man up to the islands and have selected two places, Barnard Cove on Princess Royal island and Port Stephens on Pitt island, and we will be willing to accept either of these sites. I consider I am entitled to every consideration from your hands.

I think I have placed the matter fairly before you and all I want is fair play, having rested on the minister's assurance that the license would be granted if the terms of the option were adhered to.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) CAPT. JOHN O. TOWNSEND.

What more could the man do than to guarantee the government that the factory would be built at a cost of $100,000 and that all the requirements of the law would be met?

Mr. BRODEUR. I put this to my hon. friend: Two companies were applying for a license; one composed of foreign capital and the other of British subjects and Canadian capital. Would the hon. gentleman say that in that case the license should be granted to the foreign corporation and the foreign capital?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Prince Edward Island). I could answer that by saying that when the Minister of Marine wants to buy an engine he goes over to Erie, Pa., when he could just as well purchase it in Canada. When a man comes to Canada to engage in an honest industry and to help Canadian enterprise he should not be penalized and the minister should not say to him: I will not give it to you because you are a foreigner, but I will give it to my favourite company, the Pacific Whaling Company. True, this man was a Norwegian, but we have invited Norwegians to come to this country and when they bring capital here we should not prevent them from engaging in honest industry.

Mr. BRODEUR. I gave the preference to British subjects.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Prince Edward Island). If this man had been permitted to engage in this industry and to live in Canada, having brought his capital here, he would have become a British subject. He was backed by some of the richest men in London, England. You advertised for these people to come to Canada and then you send them back because you have your favourites. That is the reason and there is no other reason for refusing the license to this man. But what about giving the preference to British subjects? When this government came to power in 1896, we had a Canadian company fully equipped to make our bank notes and stamps as they had done for many years, but the Burlands happened to be Conservatives and this government imported a company from the United States and gave the contract to these foreigners. If the minister thinks he can rely on that argument I can show him item after item of goods imported from the United States for the Intercolonial Railway when just as good goods made by Canadian citizens could be obtained in Canada.

I do not know whether Captain Townsend received an answer to that letter or not, as the record does not show, but he did not receive a license. After he had been told that this coast had been assigned to him, he was refused a license, and the ground was given to the Pacific Whaling Company. I think this was very unfair to Captain Townsend. I do not need to make any further remarks on this matter except to say that I think that there should be no favoritism in the administration of the law, but that every British subject should have equal rights under it, and any one who comes to this country for the purpose of settling and spending his money here should receive just as much consideration as a few favourites of the government.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Would my hon. friend say, for my own information, whether he is founding his charges upon statements made to him by Captain Townsend or Bernard and Robertson? Who is his authority for the statements he has made?

Mr. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.) I have read the letter from Captain Townsend to the minister.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That is not the question. Is my hon. friend bringing this question before the House at the instance of Captain Townsend?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Does that make any difference to the department? If that is all the excuse the minister has for his conduct in this case, it is not very good.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR. I must first thank my hon. friend for having been kind enough to advise me that he was going to bring up this question. I must thank him also for having postponed it until I had time to look into the papers and review the facts which have been brought to the attention of the department. I was absent when the decision was rendered by the then acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries, my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue, but I concur entirely and strongly in the views which he expressed in favour of the decision. The facts are the following. We have a law on the statute-book providing for the issue of licenses for whaling at points not less than fifty miles apart. As my hon. friend has referred to that point, I may perhaps be permitted to read the provision of the law—section 9 of chapter 45, the Fisheries Act, which says :

> No one shall at any time engage in the manufacture from whales of oil or any other commercial product, and no vessel or boat shall be employed in the whale fishery, except under license from the minister.
> The minister may issue licenses to manufacture oil or other commercial product from whales or to employ boats or vessels in whale fishery, but no such license shall issue until the minister has approved of the site of the factory, which shall not be within fifty miles of any other whale factory.

My hon. friend seems to take exception to the position taken by the department to the effect that no whale factory should be established, not merely within fifty miles, but within one hundred miles of any other whale factory. I may tell my hon. friend immediately why we came to that decision. Our law is copied from that of Newfoundland, and I am sorry to find that the Newfoundland whale fisheries, which at one time were a very prosperous industry, are now dying out if they are not entirely dead, and the reason for that is that too large a number of whale fishing licenses were issued. After having discussed the question with the officers of the department who had made a special study of it, we decided that we should not issue any license for a whale factory less than one hundred miles from the site of another whale factory. I may say that all the licenses on the British Columbia coast were so advised during the discussion of the Bill that was before parliament in the session of 1904. Several applications had been received from British Columbia for licenses. These applications stood in abeyance until the Bill should become law, and the parties interested were so advised. After the Bill was passed, a copy of it was sent to each of them. No application was received for a certain time except from the Pacific Whaling Company. That company, if I remember rightly, started two factories on the west coast of Vancouver Island in 1905, and it was the only applicant for a license up to that time.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. They got the whole west coast of the island.

Mr. BRODEUR. They have only two licenses, which were issued for the western coast of Vancouver Island. No more than that number could be issued for that coast.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. What is the length of the coast?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember exactly. The company got two licenses for the western coast of the island. I think one is at Parker's Sound and the other at Esperanzo Inlet. Mr. Townsend applied for a license at a place which was less than fifty miles from either of these places, and of course under the law we could not grant him a license. I am stating these facts because I want to show to my hon. friend and to impress upon the House the kindness with which the department dealt with Mr. Townsend; and my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue put a very proper question when he asked my hon. friend (Mr. A. A. McLean) whether he was speaking on the advice of Captain Townsend or not; because I understand that Captain Townsend knows all the circumstances, and would not blame the department for the stand it has taken on this matter.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. His letter which I read does not indicate that.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, but will my hon. friend tell us where he got information or a letter from Captain Townsend complaining of the action of the government and asking him to bring this question before the House ?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I read the letter to the House addressed by Captain Townsend to the minister in which he complained of the treatment accorded him by the government in the matter.

Mr. BRODEUR. After the decision was rendered ?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Not exactly after, because there was really no decision then.

Mr. BRODEUR. Before the decision was rendered. If my hon. friend had asked for the documents he would have found that we have treated Captain Townsend in the fairest way and that there was no intent, direct or indirect, to hurt him in any way. Going on with the facts I was relating, in the fall of 1906, some time after I entered the department, there were several applications still standing, and the Pacific Whaling Company asked for two or three more licenses. Before issuing those licenses I had a letter addressed to all applicants who had put in their applications some one, two or three years before, asking them whether they intended to proceed with their application, because I did not want, for my part, to give all the coast to one company, although this company was a Canadian company. I shall read that letter in order that the House may see the fairness with which these applicants, including Captain Townsend, were treated. The letter reads :

October 1, 1906.

Sir,—With reference to your application for whale factory licenses on the Pacific coast at —I may say that various and conflicting applications have been filed for such licenses, in the light of which, under the terms of the Act—4 Edward VII, chapter 13—copy inclosed, the minister is unable, owing to the tentative character of the several applications, to decide as to the issue of such licenses.

In order, therefore, that all applications may be properly before the minister, and so entitled to consideration, it is essential that within a month from the date of this letter, all those who have already applied at any time and under any conditions, for such licenses, and who intend to follow up such applications must—

Now we give in this letter the requirements of the law:

1. File the necessary assurance that the factory when completed will be capable of converting any whale captured into commercial products within 24 hours of the landing thereof, and that the business will be conducted in such a manner, etc., etc.

2. File plans and specifications of the machinery to be used.

3. Forward to this department the fee of $800.

I go further in this letter and draw the attention of those applicants to the fact that the intention of the department was to restrict the issuing of those licenses within 100 mile limits. Here is the part of the letter dealing with that part of the question :

Owing to the experience in the industry in Newfoundland waters, and in view of strong representations to the minister as to the probable decline of the new industry in Canadian waters, under similar conditions, he has decided that both on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts no further licenses for whale factories will be granted nearer to each other than 100 miles instead of 50 as contemplated by the Act.

I am, sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. GOURDEAU,
Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

I do not think my hon. friend will take exception to the position then taken by the department. It is of the utmost importance that our fishing industry should be preserved in this country and the only way of preserving this industry is by issuing proper regulations in order to prevent the operation of the fisheries. The whale fishery was in the same position. I thought, and the advise of the officers of the department was to the same effect, that it was necessary that we should be more careful and cautious than they were in Newfoundland and prevent the industry from being absolutely destroyed.

Mr. LENNOX. Was the change from 50 miles to 100 miles made by order in council or by departmental regulation?

Mr. BRODEUR. By regulation of the department, and it was of course binding upon all the applicants. It was intended simply not to have too many whale factories established in this country in order to preserve the fisheries, relying upon the experience in Newfoundland waters.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any regulation which limits the catch ?

Mr. BRODEUR. No. In the law there is a provision, however, that they must use only one boat, that is the only restriction in that respect. It is not to be expected they could catch more than about one whale a day in good weather. I was saying to the House that later on, in December, 1906, the Pacific Whaling Company applied for more licenses and I thought that an opportunity should be given to the applicants who showed some desire to carry out their works to do so, and that we should show them that their applications for licenses would be carefully considered. I refused then to issue any licenses to the Pacific Whaling Company until I had ascertained what Captain Townsend was ready to do, and I gave him six months for that purpose. He made his application which was put in within the six months. I was away at the time but the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) was then acting as Minister of Marine and Fisheries. We got information that Captain Townsend was not acting for himself but was acting for a foreign company with foreign capital and foreign labour.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Will the minister state from whom he received that information ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, and I understand my hon. friend will not deny it, because I understand him to say that a man named Larsen, who was a foreigner I understand from Norway, was applying.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I did not state exactly that. I stated that Mr. Larsen represented a firm of London financiers and that he was a Norwegian and was putting money in it, only a portion of the total.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will my hon. friend state here—because I consider it is important and he must be aware of it—that this company on behalf of which Captain Townsend applied for a license was not a company composed in the majority of foreign capital with foreign labour and foreign vessels ?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I do not think there is anything at all on the record or that the government has any information that foreign vessels were going to enter this industry.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am asking my hon. friend whether he will give us this information. But I have some information here on the file. First, we have a telegram here from Captain Balcom in which he states :

Townsend as it is known as he stated to me himself is negotiating to sell out his license if he should get it, to a Norwegian concern.

I think that is some evidence.

The Norwegians as you know have the right to bring into Canada their vessels free of duty while I had to pay duty having my Norwegian built steamers brought into Canada under English flags and they can without being liable to prosecute bring in alien contract labour signed on as crew of their vessels at rates of wages so far below current wages here as to demoralize rates of wages in the industry to the serious injury of all workmen engaged in it this will give foreigners a great advantage over our company and the ninety-four Canadian shareholders of our company feel indignant about such possibilities and hope that speculators like Townsend who simply will sell out Canadian resources to foreigners will not be given a preference over Canadians who have been the pioneers in this new industry on this coast, and have spent large amounts of money to prove that this industry can successfully be conducted on this coast and have spent large sums for acquiring the process which complies strictly with the Canadian Whaling Act and who have been the first applicants for Banks Island district, and who have made the complete application demanded by law.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Is it not a fact that Capt. Balcom sold his license to the Pacific Whaling Company ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes—that is the Canadian company; ninety per cent of its capital is British Columbia capital, while the majority of the capital of the other company is foreign capital, the vessels it was going to use were foreign vessels which would come here without being obliged to pay duty, and it would employ foreign labour which would seriously demoralize the labour market on the British Columbia coast. I have also to point out a communication from Messrs. Drury & Hall, two prominent citizens of British Columbia, who sent the following telegram to the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) :

We earnestly beg your utmost influence prevent license being granted Norwegian Company operating foreign bottoms whaling off British Columbia coast. This resource should be conserved for benefit of Canadians and Canada.

Besides that I would call attention to a letter we received from the attorneys, Messrs. Barnard & Robertson, to H. B. McGiverin, of which perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. A. A. McLean) would not give us information. The letter is dated, Victoria, June 3, 1907, and says :

We have to advise you that our clients have entered into an agreement with Captain Townsend providing for the acquisition of the whaling license granted to him.

So, it would seem from this letter that those interested in the whaling license was not Capt. Townsend, but some clients of Messrs. Barnard & Robertson, that is the foreign company which my hon. friend has mentioned. I think there is not the least doubt that foreign capital, foreign labour, foreign vessels to be engaged in the whale fishing in this country is to the detriment of our own people, our own shipping and our own capital. The Minister of Inland Revenue, in view of the situation, decided—and decided properly; I strongly support the decision he has rendered—to protect our Canadian people rather than the foreigners. I am surprised that my hon. friend (Mr. A. A. McLean) comes here and attacks the department for having tried to protect Canadian labour against foreign labour, Canadian shipping against foreign shipping, Canadian capital against foreign capital. That is the position the department has taken, and I stand by it, I leave the case in the hands of the House, confident that the House will declare that the department has taken the course which should command the approval of the country.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). The minister is very eloquent over the question of foreign labour and capital. He was not quite so strong on the foreign question when he was getting in the foreigner Falconer here to reorganize the accounts of his department. At that time, it was entirely immaterial, and the minister was quite oblivious for a long time until the opposition enlightened him as to the conditions surrounding that transaction.

Now, what I gather from the transaction is this : It is not so much a question of the foreigner, as it is of giving a peculiar and very unjustifiable monopoly to the Pacific Whaling Company, who have, by some means, got the ear of the department of the government, to the extent even (so far as I can see) of repealing a statute which this parliament saw fit to pass. That is the extraordinary position that the Minister of Marine admits. We have a statute, section 9 of the Fisheries Act, which defines the terms upon which licenses shall be granted and defines the policy laid down by parliament as to the regulation of whale fishing. This section says what the minister shall do and what he shall not do. And, among other things, it provides that licenses shall be granted for the establishment of whaling factories at distances not less than fifty miles apart along the coast. That is as I understand it—I have not looked at the statute. Now, what does the minister purport to do? To repeal this statute which parliament made. Forsooth, because some person wants to come in between the 100-mile-distant stations of the Pacific Whaling Company, the minister promulgates a regulation—it is not even done by order in council,—which purports to repeal the statute which parliament had passed and says that licenses shall be granted to establish factories at distances of not less than 100 miles. This is a very extraordinary position to take. We have had many extraordinary developments under this administration, but none, I think, more extraordinary or more defiant of the law than this. I venture to say to the minister, with a great deal of confidence—notwithstanding that he is a very prominent and able lawyer—that, on consideration he will have to come to the conclusion that he has absolutely no power to do anything of the kind, but that when parliament passes a statute defining the conditions upon which licenses shall be granted, then, upon those conditions and those only can licenses be granted. And when the minister sees fit to send a letter, for which he takes credit, to Capt. Townsend, not only saying that if they want a license they must follow up their application within a certain time—which may be all right, but when he gives the various parties notice that no licenses shall be granted to establish a factory within 100 miles of any other factory, he undertakes to say what was not in contemplation by parliament and he professes to lay down a law which is not the law of Canada. More than that, he does a very unfair thing, because he warns off these men—just as we had a case of warning off by another minister. I say he warns off these men by giving them to understand that they have no chance under the conditions he lays down. This is matter of very serious complaint not only by Capt. Townsend, but by this parliament. For, when we pass a law, no minister has a right to vary that law; only parliament can do that.

I have said, the minister was very eloquent on the question of foreign labour and foreign capital, and so on. I do not know whether I caught the name correctly, but the minister read to us a statement of Capt. Barker, or some such name, against Capt. Townsend, in which Capt. Townsend is characterized as a speculator and so on. The minister will get mountains of evidence of that kind if it suits his mind. You merely want the statement of the rival of a man running in the same race, and if the minister is prepared to decide upon that kind of evidence, he will get any amount of it at all times. But I submit that is no evidence at all. On the other hand, there is no evidence that Capt. Townsend was a speculator, or that he should not receive better treatment than the government gave him, and that his application should be ignored while at least three additional licenses were granted to the Pacific Whaling Company. The minister should have regarded his application in a more favourable light. In Canada we are seeking to induce foreigners, from Norway and Sweden, as well as other European countries, to come here and settle. Some of them bring in capital and others do not. Surely it should not be an obstacle to a man getting a license that his capital comes from Norway. The anxiety of the minister to exclude foreign capital from Canada, to prevent Norwegians coming to settle in Canada and adding to our wealth, is in direct contravention of the policy of his government in respect to immigration, and I think the administration deserves censure for their attitude in this matter.

Mr. BLACK. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lennox), if he has any evidence to show that the Norwegians who have engaged in the coasting trade of Canada have ever invested any capital in Canada?

Mr. LENNOX. I am not at all concerned about the abstract question, but I am concerned with the matter which has been brought before the House. There is evidence given by my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. A. A. McLean), that there was a bona fide application, not only to invest money, but to engage in an enterprise that would be profitable to Canada, and by a class of men who would be a distinct acquisition to the industrial life of Canada if they had been allowed to get the license.

Mr. BRODEUR. Let me tell the hon. gentleman and the House, in addition to what I have already said, that the fishery regulations provide that the licenses shall only be given to British subjects. Of course we have to follow the same rule in this case.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Mr. Townsend was a British subject.

Mr. BRODEUR. But he was acting for foreigners.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Only to the extent of $60,000. There is no evidence before the House that Norwegians were taking their vessels out to engage in this industry, nothing but the word of Captain Balcom who represents the Pacific Whaling Company.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue). Having had something to do with the issue of this license to the Pacific Whaling Company, I may say a few words on the question. Referring to the remarks of my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), he said that the minister had practically changed the law by fixing the distance between whaling factories one hundred miles instead of fifty. Section 9, clause 2, regarding whale fishing, reads :

> The minister may issue licenses to manufacture oil or other commercial products from whales and to employ boats or vessels in whale fishery, but no such license shall issue until,—
> (a) The minister has approved of the site of the factory, which shall not be within fifty miles of any other whale factory, or in such proximity to any inhabited place or places as in the opinion of the minister, may cause danger or detriment to the public health.

I am not a lawyer, but it seems to me that under the clause the minister may issue licenses at his own discretion, or he may, by order in council, or by regulation established by himself, determine that no two licenses shall come within one hundred miles of each other. The minister, according to the advice he received from his officers, and having in view the depletion of the whale fishery on the Atlantic coast, particularly around Newfoundland, decided that for the present, at all events, and until he knew how this industry was going to succeed in the Pacific ocean, decided not to place them closer on the Pacific coast than one hundred miles. I think therefore that the charge of the hon. member for Simcoe that the minister was violating the Act. is unfounded. The hon. gentleman also said that there was a monopoly given to the Pacific Whaling Company. This also is inaccurate, inasmuch as there have been two other whaling licenses granted. They are now in the hands of the parties to whom they were issued, one in March of this year to Mr. George H. Huff, of Alberni, on Vancouver Island ; and one in July, 1907, to Dr. Francis Walter Hall, at Rose Harbour, Queen Charlotte island. Here we have two licenses issued to parties other than the Pacific Whaling Company, which licenses by the way, have not yet been used, though one company I am advised has been formed. I presume it means to secure the capital to build a factory. Now if our Norwegian friends who had so much capital to invest in this business, were very anxious to engage in the industry, why did they not form a company in alliance with Dr. Hall, of the city of Victoria, and utilize his license and start the industry ? They can do the same in respect of the whaling license given to Mr. Geo. A. Huff, on the southern end of Queen Charlotte island, and start a whale industry if they so desire. These gentlemen are probably looking for capital and for experienced men who understand the catching and preparation of whales for commercial purposes.

Now some remarks were also made about the bona fides of the applicants. The application of Captain Townsend was bona fide. He is a well known citizen of Victoria, and captain of one of the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers on the west coast of Vancouver island. His application as made was bona fide. He could have organized a company to start the industry, just as Captain Balcom did before him. Captain Townsend had made several applications, but as they interfered with the others. he withdrew them. Finally he placed before the department an application for a license in the vicinity of Campania island off the north coast of the mainland and not far from the Queen Charlotte islands. The Pacific Whaling Company had, a year or six months before that, put in an application for a whaling license on Banks island, both islands being within thirty or forty miles of each other—probably less. Captain Balcom put in an application for a license for Banks' island on October 20, 1906, and Captain Townsend put in his application for Campania island on June 3, 1907. Before six months elapsed Captain Townsend made his application good under the Act. He put up $800 and he gave assurances in writing to the minister that the machinery would be provided that would dispose of a whale in twenty-four hours.

Mr. FOSTER. He complied with the conditions of the Act ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He complied with the conditions. Captain Balcom did the same thing in respect to his Bank island application. The whaling industry was started in British Columbia in 1904. Captain Balcom is the pioneer of the industry. He was a sealing captain from Nova Scotia who had been engaged for many years in catching seals in Behring sea. When that industry began to go down he turned his attention to whaling. He investigated the possibilities of whaling. He travelled through the east, investigated the conditions in Newfounland, studied all he could about it, applied for the first license, got up a local company and secured capital in the city of Victoria. He invested $150,000 in his first whaling factory at Sechart immediately north of Barclay Sound on the west coast of Vancouver island. His first efforts very nearly resulted in failure. He struggled hard for nearly a year. He found that, with the mechanical and chemical process he had introduced, it was impossible to extract all the oil out of the whale and his venture was very nearly a failure. It was at that time that applications for licenses came in from a great many other people. Captain Townsend is not the only man who has failed to receive a license. There have been half a dozen others. The Pacific Whaling Company, after the first year's operations, very nearly became a failure because of their inability to manufacture the whale oil and fertilizer so that the products would be commercially profitable. They looked around and they found a gentleman named Rismuller, a German, who had a process of his own, the value of which was in the chemicals used as well as in the machinery. The Pacific Whaling Company made a contract with Dr. Rismuller. I do not know whether a certain sum of money was paid or whether a large interest was given in the industry, but I know that it cost the Pacific Whaling Company a very large consideration to get Dr. Rismuller to go into the industry so that his process could be adopted. Dr. Rismuller went into it and the Pacific Whaling Company was a success from that time on. They have been making money since. Now, this is the position : Captain Sprott Balcom was the pioneer of the industry. Ninety per cent of the capital invested in the Pacific Whaling Company is owned by Victoria people. Captain Balcom, in his first efforts, bought a sealing steamer in Norway. A sealing steamer is not an ordinary steamer. It is constructed in such a way as to be adapted to the modern requirements for catching whales. He changed the flag and brought the steamer into Victoria. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) insisted on his paying the duty on it although Captain Balcom thought that as it was a new industry he should be relieved of the duty. But, the Minister of Customs would not relent and this company when it was struggling against many difficultes, had to pay to the government about $7,000 upon that steamer. That was the position when my attention was called to the matter in the department. Let me say that Captain Townsend is not a party to this discussion. Barnard & Robertson, as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) knows, is a good Conservative firm in Victoria. Mr. Barnard is president of the Conservative Association of British Columbia and he very probably sent down here some letters, all of which are on file, to the leader of the opposition who has passed them on to the hon. member for Queens, P.E.I., (Mr. Mc.Lean) and that hon. gentleman has thought to make a charge against this government of partiality in awarding this license to the Pacific Whaling Company as against Captain Townsend. I said, in a letter to Captain Townsend, that I would investigate the facts on the ground. When I went to British Columbia last fall I learned that Captain Townsend had little or no capital of his own. Very probably he had some friends who might have subscribed if he had organized the company. I found that there were Norwegian gentlemen on the ground waiting to get that license. Very probably they would have organized a company if they got it. I am not saying anything against Captain Townsend associating himself with Norwegian capitalists or whaling men; he had a right to do so. But that company could have brought a Norwegian steamer into British Columbia to engage in the whaling industry without paying any duty on her. At that time it was possible to do so under the Act, but since then the Act has been changed and it is not possible now.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there anything in the papers to substantiate that ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No. I learned this on the ground. It was pointed out by Captain Balcom, managing director of the Pacific Whaling Company. That was the danger. It could have been done and Captain Balcom had paid $7,000 duty on his steamer. Captain Balcom had at that time under way his second station under the three first licenses and had purchased a second steamer.

Mr. FOSTER. Where does Captain Balcom come in ? We have heard of his early sacrifices and troubles, but where does he come in now ? Does he belong to the Pacific Company ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Certainly; he is the managing director of the Pacific Whaling Company. I do not know how Mr. Balcom transferred his license to the company, but I know he organized the company and secured the capital. There are over eighty residents of Victoria who are stockholders in the Pacific Whaling Company, of which Captain Balcom is the managing director, and D. Rismuller is the practical man in charge of the practical work at the factories. They have made a great success of the enterprise. The Pacific Whaling Company is absolutely a Canadian undertaking. Captain Townsend proposed to organize a Norwegian Company, and for myself I do not care whether the capital was to come from Norway or not, but there was the danger that they would bring their vessel in without paying duty and that she would be manned by Norwegians. I may say that the expert high-priced harpooners in the Pacific Whaling Company to-day are Norwegians. Captain Balcom, representing the Pacific Whaling Company, applied for Banks island before Captain Townsend applied for the island contiguous to it. The Pacific Whaling Company had made good the year before. We knew that their plant was satisfactory and we knew they had been successful in business and that they had the capital to carry it on. Putting all these things together and after having several interviews with Captain Townsend, I decided that the license should go to the Pacific Whaling Company for Banks island, which being within 100 miles of the island for which Captain Townsend had applied, necessarily under the rule precluded the application of Captain Townsend being granted. I want to say to the House and to my hon. friend (Mr. McLean) who has been primed for this occasion, not by Captain Townsend, but by Barnard and Robertson, a legal firm of Victoria, I want to say that if Captain Townsend was their client, they are acting contrary to his wishes.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.). Do you know that ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. What ?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.). Do you know that your statement is a fact, or is it only surmise ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I repeat that the hon. member is not acting under instructions from Captain Townsend.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN (Queens, P.E.I.). How do you know that?

Mr. LENNOX. The minister stated that this law firm was acting contrary to the instructions of their client. Does he know that ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I say they are not acting under instructions from Captain Townsend, who although not a consenting party to the final disposal of this license, saw the reasonableness and fairness of it. Knowing Captain Townsend as I do, I am safe in saying that my hon. friend (Mr. McLean) in bringing this matter before the House was not acting upon the suggestion of Captain Townsend, who was the principal in the whole transaction.

Mr. FOSTER. That is only a supposition.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Quite true, it is only a supposition, but it is a natural one. It was on my instructions the deputy minister gave the license to the Pacific Whaling Company, and I wrote him from Victoria the following letter :

Victoria, British Columbia,
September 6, 1907.

Lieutenant Colonel Gourdeau,
Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa, Ontario.

My dear Colonel,—I to-day wired you as follows: 'In the matter of whaling license issue to the Pacific Steam Whaling Company at Banks island, if they have complied with conditions.'

I have examined into the case, and I believe on every ground that will be the best thing to do. It will be best in the public interest generally. This company is a purely Canadian enterprise while the rival applicant would be foreign when constituted. The Pacific Company also has demonstrated by successful operation of other stations that it is possessed of the practical knowledge necessary to carry on the business, while its machinery and system of working is superior to that of any other company.

Under this decision to grant a license to the Pacific Company the application of Captain Townsend cannot be granted. His deposit should, therefore, be returned to him and he should be informed that the application of the Pacific Company has been favoured for the reasons above stated, and especially because the plant and machinery of the Pacific Company meets the requirements of the department while those of Captain Townsend do not.

The last words 'while those of Captain Townsend do not' might possibly have been omitted, inasmuch as Captain Townsend had no plant or machinery, although he stated to the department that he would provide such plant and machinery as would meet with the approval of the department. I believe I gave this decision in the best interest of all concerned. I repeat that Captain Townsend did not express himself as dissatisfied when the decision was arrived at and therefore there can be no grievance, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLean) cannot find any condemnation of the department on the action taken.

Mr. FOSTER. How many licenses has the Pacific Whaling Company ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Five.

Mr. FOSTER. Covering what extent of coast line ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. They are obliged to be 100 miles apart. They have three factories now running and they contemplate a fourth. They have the license at Banks island in the north and one on Fitzhugh sound. As I have mentioned there are two other licenses issued and not utilized to-day. I understand that there are others who are making applications for licenses. There is an application for the Queen Charlotte islands. There is one license granted at the south end of Queen Charlotte islands and there is an application for one at the north end.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the whole coast line taken up ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not think the coast line of British Columbia is taken up yet. For these licenses they have to pay $800 for the first year, $1,000 for the second year, and $1,200 for the third year, and this being the second year for Banks island license, this company is paying $1,000 for that license whether they use it or not. If the licenses are not utilized within a given time the minister has power to cancel them so that the public interest is well protected.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot make out from what the minister has said as to whether the number of licenses granted now really pre-empts the whole coast.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I said that it certainly did not take up the whole coast.

Mr. FOSTER. It must come pretty close to it. You have five of them, besides two granted which are not in use, all belonging to the Pacific Company, I understand. That makes seven licenses, which would take up 700 miles.

Mr. BRODEUR. There are the Queen Charlotte islands and the eastern coast of the Island of Vancouver.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I might inform my hon. friend that seven licenses might be placed around the island of Vancouver alone, as it is 300 miles long.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the limit that they shall not be within 100 miles of each other, or is the coast line measured?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I think the measurement is by water.

Mr. FOSTER. What I wanted to ask the minister was this. Does he argue for a monopoly because the Pacific Whaling Company is a Canadian company and has put in its money?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not argue anything of the kind. If the application of the Pacific Whaling Company for Banks island had not been in months before the other, and if they had not complied with all the conditions equally with Captain Townsend, if they had not made good under the law, there is no question that the license would have gone to Captain Townsend, which shows that I had no desire to create any monopoly.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. Why did you say to Captain Townsend that you were going to give him a license and afterwards rescind that by reason of the fact that he was engaging foreign capital?

Mr. BRODEUR. It was simply because information had reached the department that it was foreign capital after the date of the letter of October, 1906.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it intended to discourage the introduction of foreign capital?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, but the great disadvantage in this case was this. The vessels it was proposed to use in the business were vessels to be brought from Norway, and we are obliged to admit free of duty Norwegian vessels which come here to engage in the coasting trade.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not intend to speak in this debate, but I would not think it wise to adopt a policy which would discourage the introduction into this country of capital from abroad, because if there is one thing that Canada needs more than another it is the introduction of capital from abroad in any of our industrial activities.

Mr. BRODEUR. But in this case there is a clause in our regulations providing that licenses shall be issued only to British subjects.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That may be a very proper provision, but I understand that Captain Townsend is a British subject ; and so far as shipping is concerned, any objection on that score must be an objection to the customs law, and not a special objection to the project that was on foot at the instance of Captain Townsend. However, the matter has been debated, and I do not desire to delay the House with any consideration of that. I rose merely for the purpose of uttering a protest against the obvious attempt of the Minister of Inland Revenue to cast some slur or discredit upon Messrs. Barnard and Robertson. Eventually he stated that the matter to which he alluded was a conjecture or surmise in his own mind more than a matter of positive knowledge, as far as these gentlemen are concerned.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I drew an inference, as you do.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think I am in the habit of drawing inferences to the discredit of any gentleman who is not in this House to defend himself. If I have ever done so, I have done it inadvertently. I do not think the hon. gentleman can point to any instance; if he can, let him do it now.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. What discredit?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the hon. gentleman's remarks meant anything, they meant that for political purposes these gentlemen were disregarding their duty to their client.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I said that Captain Townsend was their client and not the Norwegian representative. I said they were acting contrary to the wishes of their client, because I knew the wishes of Captain Townsend in this matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The wishes of Captain Townsend or the wishes of the Norwegian representative or any one else did not make the slightest difference. This was a matter touching the policy of the government, and such matters are not to be controlled according to the desire of Captain Townsend or this Norwegian gentleman or any one else. It is a matter of public interest, not a matter of private interest, that is being discussed on this occasion. That is a sufficient answer to what the hon. gentleman has alleged just now and during his speech. I think it is a matter of regret that a minister of the Crown should make a statement of that kind founded on mere conjecture. He covers it of course with an 'if'; he says if such and such was the case these gentlemen apparently were disregarding their duty to their client and using their position for political purposes. So far as I know these gentlemen, and I know something of them, they are men who stand well in their profession, and their reputation in the community in which they are known is fully equal to that of the Minister of Inland Revenue, and it does not become him as a minister of the Crown to endeavour to cast any such aspersion upon them as he endeavoured to do this afternoon.

Mr. FOSTER. It might be said that the minister's statement was not an inference; it was a presumption.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the motion carries, I would like to say that I understand that the militia estimates are to be considered in Supply. I had intended to discuss these estimates somewhat fully in the House, as to administration and as to policy; but at this hour I thought I would propose to the House, particularly to my hon. friends opposite, whether the real discussion might not be taken up at some future date, and the House go into committee now to pass if possible one or two urgent items. I would suggest, for instance, that the large vote on page 37. $1,300,000, which is not immediately required, might be allowed to stand over, and that upon that item the whole question of the militia might be discussed at some future time. As to the principal militia items, four of them are urgent—pay and allowances, that is, for the permanent force, which is at present without pay; annual drill, which to be of any use must be voted at once and voted in full, because most of the camps will come on in the next few weeks; salaries and wages, which are required monthly; and the Dominion arsenal. I would like to call attention to the item of annual drill.

Mr. FOSTER. And transport?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The annual drill involves the transport.

Mr. FOSTER. Then really the urgent item is annual drill.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. How long will it take to tell about the annual drill?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My officers are here, we have 55 minutes and perhaps I could explain it in that time. If not it would be necessary that the item I mention on page 37 would be open to full discussion.

Mr. FOWLER. We could even discuss the annual drill upon that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Certainly.

Motion agreed to and House went into Committee of Supply.

Militia—annual drill, $1,000,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The understanding is that we will take up item 74 about which the minister will make any such statement as seems to him necessary. So far as the more general statement to which he alluded is concerned, the proposal is that it shall be reserved until some future occasion on some item.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. The amount spent upon the annual drill last year, ending March 31, was $1,085,000. It is not proposed to spend any more on annual drill this year than last year. We intend to make our arrangements in such a way as to keep within that limit.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the increase of $155,000 due to the same reason that was given the other evening by the Minister of Railways and Canals, namely that what were formerly supplementary estimates are now included in the main estimates?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it true that there is a good deal of money owing to some of the militia men for last year? I heard a complaint of that the other day.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, there is not a dollar.

Mr. BERGERON. That is extraordinary. A militiaman told me that there was some owing from last year. I told him we had voted $200,000 this year on account of some balance that remained over from last year.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am informed that every single corps has been paid up to the last cent.

Mr. BERGERON. I am glad to hear my hon. friend say so. I shall send the 'Hansard' to the party concerned to-morrow.

Mr. FOWLER. How many troops do you propose to have at annual drill this year?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The same number as last year. The total number is 45,000 and there will be about 30,000 in camp, the balance will be drilled at headquarters in the cities.

Mr. FOWLER. That is the full strength?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Will you count the trip of those who go to the tercentenary as equivalent to the annual drill?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, that will be so with the rural militia. The city corps will receive their full 12 days' pay which they will use as they choose, but they will not be paid for the four days at Quebec. Of course all their transportation and subsistence will be paid, but the actual time at Quebec will not be paid. They will be given the money for the 12 days' drill. They will drill locally and will go to Quebec free of any further charge except their transportation and subsistence.

Mr. FOWLER. How about the rural militia?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is intended to take one company from each rural regiment. That company will not go to camp but will go to Quebec and will be paid for going to Quebec the number of days that the trip occupies, probably it will be the full 12 days but it will not exceed that.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think I agree with that idea. It seems to me that you should have the annual drill before the tercentary and then make your selection. I suppose the idea of making the selection is to have the very best company, and the best way to find out which is the best company is by observation during the annual drill. You have no other way of testing them, as I understand, in the rural regiments because the company that perhaps made the best showing last year would not make the best showing this year owing to the numerous changes that take place, particularly in infantry regiments, from year to year.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In many cases the drill will take place first, but the matter of selection will be left entirely to the regiments.

Mr. FOWLER. But you say the men who go to Quebec will not go to camp.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend should not tie me up too close. What will happen will be this: Suppose a regiment is 350 strong, and that we intend to send, and I believe it is intended to send, a company of the strength of 45 to Quebec. In that particular regiment the commanding officer will be instructed that he can only take 305 men to camp but we shall not tell him that he may not take to Quebec some of those who go to camp. We cannot afford to pay any more, otherwise we would not be able to send these men to Quebec at all without an extra vote.

Mr. FOWLER. Then I think you had better take the extra vote. That does not seem to me to be the right way to do this thing. Drill the different regiments and then select the very best company from each regiment to take to Quebec. If you require an extra vote for that I am satisfied that the House would be willing to give an extra vote. We want to make a respectable showing at Quebec. I regret that you do not intend to mobilize the entire militia there as at first proposed. I believe that would have proved a splendid test of the strength of the military machine of this country. I think it is an unfortunate thing that the department has decided not to do it. I do not know the causes that have led up to that decision, and, perhaps I may be wrongfully finding fault. But, so far as it appears on the surface, I must say that this seems to be a bad decision. For, as I have said, this was an opportunity to test the machinery of the department. Now, it is a pretty expensive machinery, as the minister himself will admit, and the expense of it has been greatly increased within the last few years. The only justification for that expense would be that it has given us a machine that will accomplish the purpose for which it was designed; and we have no way of judging whether the machine is a perfect machine as far as human machinery can be made perfect—or not, except by some such test as this. The mere fact of creating a certain bureau and giving the members of it high sounding names—generals, full colonels and so on—does not make that a perfect machine. The only way the government have of knowing whether this machine would do what it is designed for or not, would be by such a test as mobilizing the troops for Quebec. I regret very much that, for some reason, the department has seen fit to change its plans, and, instead of taking 30,000 or 40,000 troops to take only—is it 5,000?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Twelve thousand.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, that is not so bad. But still it seems to be a mistake for the minister to change his position.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I made a statement in the House as to the reasons for the decisions arrived at, and I do not wish to repeat it except to say that it was found to be absolutely impossible, with the means we have to mobilize 32,000 or 33,000 troops for Quebec at that time.

Mr. FOWLER. Why ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Because the people who would require accommodatin on the trains going and coming could not be carried if we were to mobilize so many troops. More than that, the Battlefields Commission expressly limited us at the outset to a certain number of days—we must be through with our mobilization before a certain day, and we could not begin the returning of our troops to their homes until after a certain other day. This was all gone into very carefully, and it was found to be absolutely impossible to mobilize so many. We might have mobilized more than 12,000 but we could not do anything like 30,000 properly and with due regard to the comfort of the men. As to how we came to decide upon 12,000, I would say to my hon. friend what I said in the House the other day, I think ; the Militia Department has received from the president —as I think he is called—of the Battlefields Commission a copy of a resolution passed unanimously by that body asking for 12,000 troops. It is upon that request that we are proceeding ; and I think it is fair to assume that these gentlemen are the best judges as to the number of men likely to be comfortably accommodated both on the trains and in Quebec itself.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the proportion of rural and urban ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not quite know yet, but to-morrow I think the general order will be issued. There will be something like equal numbers, probably rather more urban than rural. Now, as to the other point presented by my hon. friend from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler), he may be perfectly certain that each rural battalion represented—and I hope they all will be ; they will all be offered a chance—will have the very best company that can be produced from the battalion. The hon. gentleman is familiar enough with the rural militia to know that a sense of pride will stimulate them to make the best choice, and the department, I can assure him, will co-operate with them in bringing about that desirable end.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, but if you do not drill the regiment before the Tercentenary how are you going to know ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have been drilling troops in this country for the last forty years, and the captains and colonels know where the men are, and, for an occasion like this, there will be no serious difficulty.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the intention to select them individually from the whole of the regiment ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend knows that that is done every year. There is no permanency, no continuity, but every year the men who go into camp are selected about a week before. We are not going to prevent that now.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the minister mean, selected from the general mass of the population ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Those that have been in camp for years.

Mr. FOWLER. But, for the purpose of sending a company to Quebec, are you going to take the whole of Company A, for instance, or are you going to select individuals from the different companies and make a composite company ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is a matter I am leaving in the hands of Brigadier General Otter, an old hand, who is arranging the details with the different colonels. We want to get the best results, and I do not propose to interfere. I have every confidence that Brigadier General Otter will do it in the best possible way, and I think we should give him the liberty necessary to bring about the best results.

Mr. FOWLER. But does not the minister think it about time the general community knew what line he proposes to take ? We are getting very close to the time when these people must go.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No doubt that is what will be done—it will be a composite company.

Mr. FOWLER. If it were known soon what is to be done, it might have some effect upon the men going into camp—it might be an extra inducement for men who have been well drilled to go into camp for that purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. Some companies were drilling expecting to be sent to Quebec—whatever the source of their information, that was their understanding. But since then, I understand, they have stopped drilling. It seems to me a matter of great importance that the men should know at as early a date as possible whether they are going or not. As to selection between the city and rural corps, I think there ought to be a fair opportunity given to the rural corps to share in this celebration. Many of them have been disappointed because of the rumours in circulation lately that they are not to be taken. I know from letters that I have received that they are much disappointed, and very anxious to know how selection is to be made so that it may be known who are to go. It is getting very close to the time, and it seems to me that the Minister of Militia, with the council or whoever makes the arrangements, should reach a decision at the earliest possible moment.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It will be out to-morrow.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Would the minister tell us what officer of the general staff is in charge of the transport?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Brigadier General Macdonald is in charge for the Quarter Master General, but Brigadier General Otter will have charge of the whole mobilization and will command this force at Quebec.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The point I want to get at is whether the Department of Militia and the Department of Railways, and the government generally, are satisfied with the capacity of our Canadian railways to mobilize a force of this size. I have been reading some of the statements made on behalf of the railways and it seems they are rather disappointed. In fact, it does not seem to be so big a proposition as they make it out to be; or, rather, it may show that their ability and capacity and equipment for handling a thing of this kind are not what they should be, and, from the national point of view, it might be worth some inquiring whether our railways are up to the mark of mobilizing our forces. To put the question in another way, any one attempting to invade this country would select a holiday, when the capacity of the railways was tested to the utmost, and there would be no means of moving our troops. That is a very important question, and I hope the minister will give it some attention. He should see that the railways of this country have an equipment enabling them to mobilize the troops under any conditions.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is a great deal in what my hon. friend says. That is a very important point, and it has not escaped the consideration of the militia authorities. It is however only fair to the railways to say that if it were necessary to mobilize a considerable force at Quebec under stress of war or threatened trouble, there would not be much difficulty in doing so. But to undertake to bring to Quebec over 30,000 men, with a proper equipment of horses and artillery, while perhaps 100,000 people are to be brought into Quebec and away from it at almost the same moment, is an entirely different proposition. It is something however that is not likely to happen. In time of trouble, under the Militia Act, pasesd a few years ago, the department can take possession of all the railways, and control them absolutely. In such a case the conditions would be entirely different from those which will prevail at the time of the tercentenary which is shortly to take place.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister said he had not decided as to the proportion of rural and urban militia that would be taken to Quebec.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not quite that. I have not made up the figures. We have decided that one company of infantry from each rural battalion shall go to Quebec, or shall be offered the chance, and we have decided that half of the cavalry force shall go, and they are a rural force, and I think a certain amount of field artillery and garrison artillery. But the figures have not been made up yet.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the cost of transporting 12,000 men?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the whole thing will cost, on the basis we have arranged, about $180,000; that includes food as well as transport.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister says he proposes to take one company from each rural battalion. Now there is considerable feeling in the country that the rural forces are not being fairly dealt with, that partiality is being shown to the urban forces. I do not say the department is doing that, but it is just as well that the point should be called to the minister's attention. I have a letter from the captain of a regiment calling my attention to this matter, and I will read it to let the minister know the opinion that prevails among some, at least, of the country militia. The letter is dated Bradford, May 25, 1908:

As a member of the rural corps of the militia of Canada, I would like to see fair play handed out to all, as I think we have been unfairly dealt with in being denied the honour of going to Quebec.

We learn now that is not the case.

The city and permanent corps are only allowed to go, therefore calling out all of the rural corps that have played so important a part in the history of Canada. I need not tell you that the rural militia are the backbone of the country, and it will be a sad day if the rural corps are told to stand aside and make room for the city corps at Quebec.

The Minister of Militia need not tell the people that the railway companies are to blame in the matter, for as a matter of fact the transportation was arranged until the commanding officers of the city corps interviewed the government. We had orders to go to Quebec fifty per cent strong some time ago, and soldier-like were making arrangements to go without complaint, not like the city corps for they began to howl. . . I am sorry to trouble you so, but as a member of the 36th regiment I want to see my men get fair play, and I am sure so do you, and in standing up for this regiment which is partly in your constituency, you will have the hearty support, not only of the young men who are in it now, but also of the parents and friends of numbers who have been members of the militia in their day.

Kindly take this matter up in the House, and I will await results.

I am, yours very truly,
GEORGE W. STODDART,
Captain 36th Regiment.

Mr. H. Lennox,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

I therefore urge upon the minister to give the rural corps the fullest consideration. I may say, speaking of the militia generally, that there is a strong desire to go to Quebec, a very laudable desire; so I hope the minister, if he errs at all, will err on the side of enlarging the force he proposed to send.

Mr. HENDERSON. Having come into contact recently with military men, I have to say that there is considerable anxiety among them as to where they stand to-day. They seem to be entirely at a loss to know whether they are going into camp at all, not to speak of going to Quebec. I think the sooner the minister makes a definite announcement on this point the better, so as to settle the matter in the minds of the officers and men throughout the country. I know they are waiting anxiously, and there is a great deal of uncertainty as to what they are going to be called on to do. There is another point on which the men are uncertain. At present everybody is looking for some consideration for their time, and there is a feeling that it will be difficult to get men to go to camp unless reasonable compensation is paid. I do not know what the intention of the minister is, but I think he should not treat the men unfairly in this regard. I think fair compensation should be given them for the time they will spend in the military camps. I trust the minister will make a declaration to-night that may go broadcast to the country, and let every captain of a company know where he is when he asks men to join his company.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister is aware that I have urged upon him, publicly and privately, that as many of the rural corps as possible should go to camp. I was not in when he opened his remarks, and did not hear his reason for not taking to Quebec the rural corps to as full an extent as the city corps. I wish to recall the review before the Duke of York in the city of Toronto. The crack regiments of Toronto, Hamilton and almost every other city in Ontario were there. The minister himself will admit that they took second place to several of the rural corps and one rural corps especially with respect to marching, drill, neatness or in every other way that any one could compare them. There were at least three rural corps from the province of Ontario that surpassed the city corps in everything except the fit of the uniforms and I am free to say that the 43rd Regiment of Ottawa was, in the universal opinion, the best drilled regiment and, like all other city corps they were neatly dressed, but in so far as military movements were concerned the rural corps held their own with the best of them, and some of the rural corps surpassed the city regiments. I would like to know why the rural corps should not be recognized in connection with this Quebec review. Why should not the minister adopt the old plan and take a half regiment from each locality to the city of Quebec? I will give him fair warning that he will not have any military camps of the rural corps if they do not go to Quebec. I do not blame them. The men will not turn out to spend a few days in camp and see their comrades, with no greater claim to recognition, taken to Quebec. I am satisfied that the country would endorse the minister and that the transport could easily be arranged. Follow out the original plan, place 27,000 or 30,000 of the boys on the Plains of Abraham in July and the transport can be arranged. The transport can be arranged and I am satisfied that the House and the country will readily stand the cost. All the men want is to have their transport and ration allowance. I am satisfied that they will not ask for drill pay as the city corps are.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The city corps will perform their annual drill in the fall and spring and get their pay for it in consideration of which they will go to Quebec. The rural corps will perform their drill and will go to Quebec and all they ask for is their transport and ration allowance.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The city corps will do their drill without any consideration at all.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Pardon me. They will get their annual pay for doing their drill in fall and spring, and they will go to Quebec and get their transport and rations but they will also have their pay.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. They are entitled to it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Certainly, but the rural corps will go them one better, if they get their rations and transport they will go to Quebec. If the minister does not take them he will not have successful annual camps. Why make this invidious distinction as against the rural corps? I am satisfied that the House and the country will back the minister up in taking the rural corps down there. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), an ardent friend of the volunteer system, I am sure, will join hands with the Minister of Militia in seeking to have this corps represented at Quebec. The transport matter is easily arranged. I will undertake to pick out half a dozen young fellows in the province of Ontario who would lay down a plan in half a day. The troops could be mobilized there without interfering with the ordinary passenger traffic. The militia will find that the rural corps will go if he will consent to give them their transport and rations. The city corps have made a deal that they will go under similar conditions but they will get their annual pay. Why should the rural corps be discriminated against?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) speaks about the pay. The rate paid will be the rate prescribed by law. It cannot be anything else. I will do him the justice to say that on several occasions before the pay was increased he participated in the demand that was made for an increase. Subsequently provision was made for efficiency pay of fifty cents for each militiaman; so much for the first year for efficiency, and so much for the second year over and above the regular pay of fifty cents per day per man. We cannot go beyond that. If a man goes to Quebec who has had three camps he will get a dollar a day and I presume that should be satisfactory. As to the observations of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes). he must have forgotten that we are restricted to 12,000 men.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Because the commission desires us to send 12,000 and no more.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is the commission superior to parliament? The commission is the creation of parliament.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I know, but we have not the means of transportation. We have from 27,000 to 30,000 rural militia so that we could not possibly take even half of them and we must give due consideration to the city militia. The problem is a difficult one.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why should the city corps be singled out? They are no better drilled.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I suppose they are entitled to representation?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes, but not to full representation in view of the fact that the representation of the country corps is but one out of eight.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They will not get full representation. They will all be represented. The two regiments in the city of Quebec, of course, will be taken in full. In reference to the plan upon which we are proceeding I think I had better say a word. In the first place we want an effective demonstration, we want the best show, because that is all it is, that can possibly be made there and we want the best review that has ever taken place in Canada. This will be the largest military review that has ever taken place of purely Canadian troops in Canada. There will be two thousand more men there than at the review at Toronto in 1901 to which my hon. friend referred.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister saw that review in Toronto and he told me himself that three rural corps were equal to any, and that one was superior to some.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am very fond of the rural corps. I have been a member of a battalion for forty years. Secondly, the representative character of this force must be looked at. I want to see representatives from every military district and every corps in so far as it can possibly be done. Due regard must also be had to economy. We have no right to waste money unnecessarily and therefore we should take those troops in the city of Quebec which will not involve any cost to the country and which are available. We should take our cavalry and artillery from the nearest point to Quebec, and it is proposed to hold one of the cavalry camps close to Quebec so that the cavalry can be utilized in the city. It will be composed of the eastern townships cavalry. These are the considerations which have guided us in the plan we have made in the carrying out of this review. From the west there will be two hundred soldiers made up of a composite corps from the whole of the Northwest including British Columbia. We propose in addition to bring the Royal Military College Cadets to the number of sixty. There will be from 800 to 1,000 horses including cavalry and horse artillery. There will be 1,400 officers, non-commissioned officers and men (about one-half) of the permanent force. There will be in all about 10,000 of the active militia; sixty Royal Military College Cadets and two hundred men from the west.

Mr. FOSTER. Where are the Army and and Navy Veterans.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am afraid my hon. friend will be disappointed.

Mr. FOWLER. I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) as to the effect of the latest idea of the department with regard to taking troops to the review at Quebec. I think better of the militiamen of this country than to believe they would cease to belong to the force simply because they did not get a chance to go to Quebec. No doubt every man in the militia would like to go to Quebec, but if that be impossible I do not think Jones will leave the militia simply because Smith goes to Quebec and he cannot. That is not the spirit which animates the militia force in the county whence I come. My natural sympathies would be in favour of the rural corps because I come from a rural constituency, but at the same time it is only natural to suppose that the city corps would be better drilled because they drill more and if they are of equal intelligence with the men of the rural corps they should be better drilled. The minister first announced that he would send to Quebec 50 per cent of the whole militia and I regret he is not doing so.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. So am I.

Mr. FOWLER. If it is going to be a grand sight to see 12,000 troops it would be infinitely grander to see 30,000 from the standpoint of the pageant alone, and it would test our military system in a way that taking 12,000 troops would not. It seems to me the excuse of the railway companies is a flimsy excuse and that they ought to be compelled to take these men to Quebec. You could arrange to take them there a day or two before. I do not believe that the men want to be paid for the time they are going to Quebec. I believe they would be very glad to go if they got their transportation, and their rations and their accommodation. A great many people are going there and paying their way to go and the military would be able to see the pageant even though they take part in it.

Mr. BARR. I agree with the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) that there should be no discrimination between the rural corps and the city corps. I believe that the rural corps are just as well drilled as the city corps even though they do not get so much drill. When they go to camp they go to learn drill and to learn something of the art of war, and we know they make better soldiers as a rule than the men of the city corps. I do not think there has been any valid reason given by the Minister of Militia why the rural battalions should not be well represented in Quebec and I hope he will reconsider his decision in that respect. How many of the rural corps will go to Quebec now ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. One company from each regiment.

Mr. BARR. Who will decide which company.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The colonel of the regiment.

Mr. BARR. The colonel of the regiment has his favourites and I think it would be a fairer way for the men to draw lots.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I wish to express my dissent from the view put forward by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) that we should send the whole militia to Quebec, and I dissent on the ground that the expense of such a course would be enormous. The hon. gentleman seems to have ignored that point altogether.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me?

Mr. SINCLAIR. You will have an opportunity to speak later.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the hon. gentleman refuse me the courtesy of correcting him when he is misrepresenting me?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I have no intention of misrepresenting the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. I will answer you later on.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) stated more than once that he was in favour of taking 30,000 of the militia to Quebec which is practically the whole of the militia of Canada. I cannot sit here without protesting against such an extravagant expenditure of money which in my opinion would amount to more than half a million dollars. I wish to point out to the House and to the people who pay the taxes that the hon. gentleman from Albert (Mr. Fowler) is willing to spend half a million in this way. He lectures us on economy but he is willing to spend half a million dollars on a mere military display which will only last a few days.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman from Guysborough with his usual inability to grasp the sense of a statement and his usual unfairness in presenting his own views, has misrepresented what I said. When the Minister of Militia first discussed this matter in the House he said it was the intention to take 50 per cent of the militia force to Quebec and it was with that proposition I dealt this afternoon. We were discussing only 50 per cent of the militia, and I did not advocate taking the whole militia of Canada to Quebec.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Will the hon. gentleman permit me ?

Mr. FOWLER. No, I wont, just take your seat. I will treat the hon. member for Guysborough with exactly the same courtesy that he accords to me and to other members of the House. I did not make any such statement ; but the hon. gentleman desired to make a political point against me, and he stated that it would cost half a million to take these troops to Quebec and keep them there for two or three days. The hon. gentleman is not able to figure very well, or he would not have made that statement. If these troops went to Quebec, they would have no annual drill, as the minister stated before, so that it would not add one cent to the cost. My friend of limited understanding from Guysborough expresses very much solicitude and regret at this particular item on behalf of the dear taxpayer; but he sits there calmly and votes millions to be wasted in little twopenny-half-penny public works that are only temporary, that go out almost with the next tide, in the province of Nova Scotia. He is willing to vote hundreds of thousands to pay his illustrious friends of the North Atlantic Trading Company for bringing in many cases improper immigrants to this country; and yet he holds up his hands in holy horror because a few dollars are to be spent to enable the rural militia to take part in this great demonstration that is to take place at Quebec. This is the hon. gentleman's idea of economy. If the electors of Guysborough were within the sound of the hon. gentleman's voice when he was giving utterances to these noble, patriotic and inspiring sentiments, I think his vote would be a very small one at the next election; but I venture to say that the hon. gentleman does not talk in that manner when he goes into the county of Guysborough. When his friend Mr. Benjamin Franklin Pearson divided with his friends a little nestegg of $28,000 for which this country received nothing at all, the hon. member for Guysborough swallowed it as a baby would new milk; and yet day after day, night after night—because he is very regular in his attendance in the sessions of this House—he has sat in his place and voted for the expenditure of these huge sums for purchases which certainly do not inure to the benefit of the people of this country as a whole, but only to the benefit of a few favourite individuals.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Talk it out.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. member for Hamilton says, talk it out; but if the hon. member had put a muzzle on the hon. member for Guysborough, so much time perhaps would not have been taken up, and the item would have been through before. I am surprised that the Minister of Finance does not keep a better check on these irresponsible members than he does. Now I think this item had better pass.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I desire to ask the minister what proportion of the city corps and the rural corps is to go?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have not the figures, but I think there is something like an equal balance. There will be certain city regiments, and for the balance of the city regiments one company from each and one company from each rural corps.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Would the minister tell us what Toronto regiments are to go?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I could not say positively. I have an idea, but I think it undesirable to make the announcement at present. It will all be out in a day or two. I think two of the Toronto regiments are going—the Queen's Own and the 48th.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why not the others?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Perhaps they are but these have been mentioned to me.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I again want to impress on the minister that there should be a fair division as between the city corps and the rural corps. Unless the matter is arranged on an absolutely fair and square basis, he will find that there will be very great dissatisfaction on the part of the men who are left out, especially those of the rural corps.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the discussion can go on to-morrow on this same item if we carry it now?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The same discussion can go on upon another item.

Some resolutions reported.

House adjourned at 6.05 p.m.
